community. That's one of the reasons why the workforce strategy became not just something that happened in health but something that the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry led as well. She's actively in the broader workforce strategy helping to provide the opportunity for us to recruit the broad cross-section of people that need to support the whole framework and infrastructure, not just in health but otherwise. So I would agree that we need to focus on that.

In terms of the primary care side and does it use more people, that remains to be seen, but what it does use is the talents that people have in a better way. It does in fact make it possible for more people to devote their talents to the health status of the community. We have people who leave the profession because they, quite frankly, get bored or get tired or want a change. If we can rebalance the workforce so that we're allowing people to work to the full extent of their knowledge, capability, and expertise, we can retain more of those people in the health workforce.

Now, that might cause a problem for someone else who wants them in their workforce, but in fact we can retain more people by making it possible for them to do more. We see that already. We see nurses who have retired and then become parish nurses and work for a church congregation that wants to have someone to visit the members of their congregation. That is good for health status in their community. There are many other ways I could demonstrate that health care professionals who might otherwise be lost to us in the workforce will stay and participate and help enhance health status. We also over time will have the opportunity, if not to reduce the demand, perhaps to flatten out the demand curve a little bit by providing that kind of support so the people can actually be healthier.

On the mental health side it was mentioned that there's no question that there are issues with respect to specialities in the medical profession. One of them is the psychiatric speciality. Jurisdictions are working hard to attract psychiatrists. You mentioned Peace Country health. They've been working to attract people to replace those that have moved. We're also seeing, of course – and this talks to what I've spoken about before in terms of using health professionals to the full extent of their capability – an increase now in the concept of psychiatric nursing. We didn't hear of that for a long time with a lot of emphasis, but now that's coming back, where people are seeing that they actually could be providing a good support for the psychiatric and mental health area from psychiatric nursing.

The trilateral agreement that we've just signed with the AMA and the health boards will help us to target resources into areas where we need to recruit or retain some of those specialities, and I think mental health might be one of those areas, although I don't want to prejudge how that gets applied. But areas of clinical practice where costs have gone up, which makes it difficult for people to continue to practise because, of course, they can't raise the prices – you know, family practice, psychiatric clinics, those sorts of areas – may well be supported by the trilateral agreement.

RHAs this year are receiving approximately $291 million in the mental health area. The Mental Health Board has $58 million and the innovation fund $25 million. We've put an emphasis over the past year on mental health. The mental health framework that came out was a good place to start. The children's mental health framework was published in September; the aboriginal mental health framework, later on in the fall. I think it was in December. Personally, I believe that that's an area that we need to put some emphasis and support into, and I've been emphasizing that.

We've brought forward Bill 31, as the hon. member indicated, with respect to the community treatment orders, but it's not my expectation that community treatment orders will stand by themselves. The regional health authorities will have to engage assertive community treatment to make sure that people have the community supports that they need. That's not going to be easy. None of this is easy. But focusing the resources to help people in that area, because if we can assist people early in the process so that they don't deteriorate to the state where they need to be hospitalized, in itself will save us some resources in the system, which can then be applied to more community treatment.

So there is work to be done in the mental health area both in terms of attracting and keeping the health care professionals but also in terms of allocating the resources that we now have to make sure that the funding is used in an appropriate way, to make sure that the community treatment is there, first of all, of course, to improve the quality of life for the people that are involved and the health status of the people involved but also to reduce the stress and strain on the acute-care side.

There's a lot of stuff in there, but I think the primary piece to come back to – the hon. member was talking about the workforce strategy. It comes back to, as he himself said: there's no easy answer to it. We've got a strong economy, and that makes it difficult to recruit and keep the people who are in the support staff area: the personal care aides and attendants, the people who do the work to make sure that you can open the facilities in the morning, who keep them clean and keep them in a position to be able to deliver the health care services. We've got to work on that. We've got to get more of those people, and we've got to be able to find a pay structure that pays them fairly. We need to continue to recruit the professionals that we need and to retain the ones we have and to value the ones we have so that they can provide their best value.

I'm not as concerned as the hon. member might be that going to primary care is going to increase the numbers that we need. Actually, in my view, it will rebalance it, and we'll get more productivity out of the existing members. That's not being disrespectful to the existing members. The demonstration of that is the bone and joint project, where they clearly demonstrated that by working in a team effort and making more effective use of the team resources and supplementing them with nonhealth resources where health resources were not needed, they could actually do more bone and joint surgery than before, reduce the waiting times, and patients could have access to the service much more quickly with the same coterie of health care professionals, the same group of people. So we've demonstrated that we can get more value out of it and be more effective in the service delivery already. I think we can see much more of that happening.

The key to this whole thing over the long term is health status, making sure that we have in place the supports for people to take responsibility for their own health so that we reduce the increase in demand for health services. That comes back to every Albertan being part of it, every Albertan being part of the health team, and making sure that they're doing what they can to keep their health status so that we can have the acute-care facility and the health care professionals that we need for our parents or our children when we need them.

The Chair: Hon. leader of the ND opposition, I can't recognize you unless you take your seat.

Mr. Mason: Oh, I have to be in my own chair?

The Chair: Now I can recognize the hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Sorry about that.

I wanted to begin by asking some fairly general or some fairly philosophical questions about the government's view of health care and maybe give the minister an opportunity to provide a little bit of framework for where he's coming from as he approaches this ministry and how the government approaches it. I want to deal a little bit with the whole question of private versus public health care. I'd appreciate the minister's views on the new government's approach to health care philosophically.

We had, of course, many discussions and debates in the House with the previous government on its approach to health care, and these sort of came to a culmination in the debates over the third way. There was, of course, a province-wide debate, and there were many debates in the Assembly, and it was a matter of very broad public concern. I understand, based on my following of statements that have been made by the new government and by the minister, that the general approach to private delivery of health care is not a priority for the government. I'd like to know in a little bit more detail the government's philosophical approach to health care and to health care reform and to managing health care costs. Health care costs are an important consideration for all of us and for the public as a whole, and I'm going to come back to that.

There were a couple of elements in the third way that gave a considerable concern, that I understood were taken off the table by the previous minister of health. They had to do with doctors operating in both the public and the private systems and the extension of private delivery of health care services in our province. I'd like to know where the minister sits on that, what the government's policy is, what the government's vision is for health care.

It's interesting, Mr. Chairman, that there's been a real sustained push not just in Alberta but across the country to try and increase the proportion of health care that is delivered privately. In my view, there are many companies that are interested in this because they are in the private health care delivery business, whether it's an insurance company, a private clinic or hospital supported by investors, or drug companies that have pushed different governments and different political parties across the country to move in this direction.

What has impressed me and encouraged me is just the absolute resistance of the Canadian public, including the Alberta public, to that direction. When governments have moved in that direction, the public has pushed back, and they have not been worn down by repeated attempts to introduce greater private delivery in one form or another. So I am modestly encouraged from what I've heard so far, but I do invite the minister to talk a little bit about that whole thing.

The second thing that I'd really like to raise, Mr. Chairman, is directly related, and it's a subject that I'm quite interested in, and that is innovation within the public system. We certainly do not want to see a public system that stagnates, that simply requires more and more taxpayers' money to deliver the same level of service. So looking for innovation within the public system is, in my view, what will save and what can save the public system and make it responsive and meaningful and give increasingly better service.

I want to give the department, particularly, and the health regions quite a bit of credit on this. I think that Alberta has been fairly innovative at the department level and at the health region level. Certainly, the wait time registry has been a particularly good example of how reorganizing the resources and sharing the resources within the public system can substantially reduce wait times and can save considerable costs.

Another one that I'm interested in and would like the minister to talk a little bit about is the whole development of urgent care within the province and what the plans are generally and what the success has been and what is anticipated once that component is more fully developed. Diverting people from crowded and expensive emergency wards is a valuable direction, and I certainly think it decentralizes the system a little bit and brings it more into the community. So I'd be very interested in knowing the government's plans and results thus far moving in that direction.

The minister touched in his earlier comments on another approach that can reduce costs and more efficiently use resources, and that is making sure that the right professionals are doing the jobs and that you're not necessarily putting more expensive professionals such as physicians regularly doing jobs that can be done by someone with perhaps not less training but different training. So that's something that I'd really like to hear about.

The last thing I want to ask the minister about is the whole question of drug costs. Mr. Chairman, the cost of pharmaceuticals in this country is one of the main driving forces of health care costs for the public system. The Conference Board of Canada in 2004 identified drug costs as the fastest growing component of Canadian health care during the last 25 years, and nothing has changed in the last two or three years since that time. Payments for prescription medication account for about 80 per cent of all drug spending in Canada, representing an estimated $14.6 billion as of 2006. Our health system hasn't been immune either. Twenty years ago spending on drugs represented only 8 per cent of health spending, but in 2005 Alberta spent $1.6 billion on prescription drugs, an expenditure that now represents 11 and a half per cent of total health expenditure for that year.

The Alberta NDP opposition put forward a couple of years ago a proposal for a pharmaceutical savings agency, and that would be a government body that would co-ordinate the purchase of pharmaceuticals for the entire health system in the province and would engage in negotiations with drug companies to reduce costs through the bulk purchasing of pharmaceuticals for the whole health system. We already use a significant portion of generic drugs, but there's an awful lot more that can be done.

I should just indicate, Mr. Chairman, that in New Zealand this approach is used, and it's called Pharmac, the Pharmaceutical Management Agency. It was established in 1993. New Zealand has about the same population as the province of Alberta, and since 1993 their pharmaceutical expenditures have only risen by about 3 per cent per year compared to the OECD average of 14 per cent and Alberta's average over the same period of 10 per cent. Some have argued that New Zealand saved $624 million on its drug subsidies in one year alone. That comes from the Conference Board of Canada report Challenging Health Care System Sustainability.

We were told at various times by the Minister of Health at that time that this was a good idea. [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired]

The Chair: I recognize the hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of good topics there to deal with. Let's start with the government's philosophy. I think it's fair to say that this government and certainly this minister espouse the concept that every Albertan should have access to quality care on a timely basis without regard to ability to pay. That's the fundamental piece of the health care system, and it's important going forward. There has been a lot of discussion about delivery. In fact, the whole of last year there was a lot of consultation about delivery, and there was a publication, The Way Forward, I think it was called, with respect to delivery.

A lot of that discussion was more emotional, more heat than light, really. There wasn't a lot of value that came out in terms of how we actually deal with the issues, so I've focused instead on starting where I like to start, and that is: how do we deal with the long-term sustainability issue rather than how do we deal with the day-to-day requirements? We need to deal with the day-to-day requirements, but it's important to know where you're going, and the long term is that regardless of how you calculate or how you cut it, we're doing more things for more people now than ever before with new techniques and new technologies and new drugs.

We're doing hip surgery on 90-year-olds that you never used to do on 50-year-olds. We have MRIs. When I was first elected, I don't think there were more than four MRIs in the province, and that's only 10 years. Now we're doing thousands and thousands of scans per year. So we're doing exponentially more things for more people, for a broader pool of patients than ever had access to the system before. As I say, the heart surgeries and the hip surgeries and the things that are being done for older people who wouldn't have had access to it before are incredible, and we should recognize that we actually have an exceptional health system that does a lot of things for a lot of people.

The question about delivery is not so important as how we sustain the health system long term so that we can continue to do that, so that we can continue to expand the capacity of the system to keep people healthier longer and to improve their quality of life, and that has to come back fundamentally to the question of health status. How do we make sure that we are healthy people living in healthy communities? If all of us need intervention from the acute-care system on a multiple basis over the course of our lifetime and as we age in an increasing amount, we're not going to be able to sustain that level of service. So we need to have fewer people who need the system.

My focus as minister of health, first and foremost, is on wellness, on talking with Albertans about how we can each take responsibility for our health and our health status. Sure, there will be things that we can't avoid. There is sickness and disease and parts wear out and all sorts of things happen, but we can do more, and we need to focus on that end of it first. So rather than talking specifically about the delivery and whether it's public or private, let's talk about how we make the system sustainable over the long term by making sure that Albertans take responsibility for health status, that we're as healthy as we possibly can be so that we can have the acute-care system that we want and need for our parents when they need it, for our kids when they need it, and if necessary for ourselves when we need it. That's the real focus I want to take.

Will there be private delivery? Well, of course we have private delivery. We have physicians and all sorts of other service providers who work for fees. They run businesses. Profit isn't a dirty word in our world. But the reality of the situation we're in now, as we've just spent the last number of minutes talking about, is that we have a workforce shortage. There's no sense really, in my view, talking about whether you have a private clinic set up. First of all, you have to talk about: where are the nurses and the support staff and the other people who are going to have to function in it to come from?

I'm not going to spend an awful lot of time over the next 18 months or two years or however long I have the privilege of serving in this capacity talking about public versus private delivery when the priority for me is getting Albertans to focus on health status and working on things like the workforce strategy. How do we get the healthcare professionals that we need to work in the workforce that we have? You know, if there's a better way to deliver a service, sure, we can talk about that and talk about whether it makes sense or not. I think Albertans are alive to the fact that they want the service.

It's not that big a deal who provides it. But the focus is not there. That's not where I'm going. I'm going on health status, and I'm going on the long-term sustainable health status of Albertans rather than focusing so much time and energy on whether it's public or private delivery.

That piece, I hope, gives the hon. member an idea of the philosophy that I'm bringing to the job at least and that I think the government has at this point in time. In fact, as exhibited by my mandate letter, the Premier, when he asked me to take on this responsibility and gave me the opportunity to do so, really asked that I deal with things like a comprehensive workforce strategy as one of the four identifiable priorities dealing with a comprehensive work strategy, not just for now but for over the next 10 years, and a pharmaceutical strategy.

The hon. member mentioned drug costs. Drug costs are very important. Yes, they are one of the driving costs. Technology and drugs are two things that have really driven the costs of providing service. But in both of those we have to look at what I call the value equation. If a new drug comes on, what is it doing in terms of promoting quality of life, and what is it doing in terms of reducing other costs in the system? You know, is it adding value? I think you can support new drugs coming on even at a huge cost if, in fact, they provide an identifiable improvement in quality of life for the patient or an identifiable reduction in cost to the system by keeping the patient out of using other services because they're taking that drug. So it's not simply a matter of the drug costs, but it's about: what value do they add?

Having said that, the second piece of my mandate is implementing a new pharmaceutical strategy, and that has to be about how we acquire the drugs, whether we do it alone or whether we work with other provinces and can get them to work with us in terms of making arrangements with the pharmaceutical companies to make sure that we get the best price not just for government-purchased drugs but for Albertans. It means: how do we deal with catastrophic coverage, making sure that Albertans have access to the appropriate drugs, the high-cost drugs, notwithstanding ability to pay? It means: what do we do with respect to the orphan drugs, the situations like Hunter syndrome, where there is a drug that could help? It's in its way through the system, but even if it does get through the system, it's not going to make it onto the formulary for general coverage. It's truly an orphan drug, and we have to have a way of making appropriate decisions on appropriate circumstances so that we're giving access to those drugs where they provide real hope and not false hope.

I find it ironic that the hon. member would refer us to New Zealand, for example. I remember a few years ago when people were talking about the fiscal reforms that were going on and the New Zealand model. I think that perhaps even the hon. member was roundly trouncing New Zealand's fiscal model as being a bad place to look for an example. So that's sort of ironic.

Mr. Mason: It shows that we're not dogmatic.

Mr. Hancock: Let the record show that the hon. member said that it shows that he's not dogmatic and that there were chuckles from more than one member in the House.

So the question of drugs, an absolutely important question. It's part of the mandate. We need to make progress on that area, and we'll be dealing with that and hopefully bringing forward a pharmaceutical strategy relatively quickly.

Innovation in the public system is obviously very important, and

I already mentioned one of the improvements. But one of the cost drivers is new technology and new innovation. So we've got so many more things that are happening that we're doing.

One of the most important innovations is the electronic health record. When the electronic health record is fully complete – and by next year most Albertans will have an electronic health record – it'll have, I think, 75 per cent of their drugs, 100 per cent of their labs, 75 per cent of their diagnostics, and those sorts of numbers. So we're getting close to the point where a person can say that no matter where they present themselves to the system in Alberta, the health care provider who deals with them will have access to appropriate information with respect to their diagnostics, the drugs that they're on, and their health condition so that they can appropriately deal with them, whether they arrive by way of emergency or trauma or for some other reason. That kind of innovation has to continue to go ahead. We have to continue to be a leader in that area, and we're doing that.

We're looking at other ways of innovation. [Mr. Hancock's speaking time expired] I'll have to come back to it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I hadn't quite got to the end of my questions either, so I'll pick it up again. When we were raising the question of Alberta essentially establishing its own pharmaceutical savings agency for the bulk purchase of drugs for our health care system, we were told, again by the previous minister, that they were working on this nationally. We did a little bit of research at the time – and perhaps there's more current information than I have on this – and it was our understanding that they had agreed amongst the provinces that some national approach was desirable. But upon closer scrutiny we discovered that, in fact, there was nothing more than an agreement to do a bit of research into the issue and that no substantive progress had been made or was even being contemplated. So one of the things that I would like to know is: what is the status of the negotiations, the national negotiations, the interprovincial negotiations, for the establishment of such a body?

Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that I do believe that there are very substantial savings that can be realized by this approach, and they do not come at the cost of taxpayers. They come at the cost of large pharmaceutical companies, which are, of course, among the most profitable sector in the entire world. The prices that we're being charged, particularly given the framework of patent protection that they receive in Canada, means that they earn very, very significant profits indeed, and that comes at the price of very, very expensive drugs. Too high, in my view.

We're not talking about a regulatory approach or regulating the prices. We're talking about developing some market power so that we can negotiate in the marketplace a lower cost for Alberta taxpayers. I think that's a very important thing to do, and I think it's something that the government ought to do. We ought not to be paying more to those pharmaceutical corporations for the drugs that they're providing our system than we have to. I think the government has an obligation to get the best possible price for those drugs. The best way to do that, in my view, is to do bulk purchasing on behalf of the entire health care system in our province and using, of course, lower cost drugs and generic drugs wherever that might be possible.

I know that the minister didn't really get to the question of the urgent care centres. I know that there's an urgent care centre being constructed in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, at the Cromdale school site, and while that has been the subject of some controversy in terms of the process used by Capital health for the siting of it, I think it is, overall, a very beneficial facility that will directly relieve pressure on the Royal Alexandra hospital emergency room. I wonder if the minister in his answer can deal with that. Also, the question of nurse practitioners, in particular, or the greater use of nurses in the delivery of our health care system would be something he might want to expand upon.

He's touched a little bit on work to assist people with foreign credentials to be certified within the health system. I think there needs to be an acceleration there. The use of midwives is another area, I think, that we could make some considerable progress on. Mr. Chairman, my view is that if we innovate within the public system and work hard at improving it and improving its delivery and increasing its efficiency, it will remain the most cost-effective means of delivering health care services.

I appreciate the minister's focus on prevention and on wellness as a means of reducing the costs of our health care system, but it still remains that there is a substantial amount of hard health care service delivery that is going to have to continue to occur in this province, and it's going to have to grow. It's not just growing in terms of becoming more capital intensive through technology and drugs, but it is becoming more extensive as the population of the province grows.

So the question remains – and it's an important question – about the government's approach to the delivery of those services and whether or not the government sees that occurring within a public system, using innovation, using efficiency but keeping it public, or whether or not the government sees the creation, for example, of privately owned hospitals as, I guess, the most serious example and whether or not the minister accepts the evidence that seems to be fairly pervasive that that approach is more expensive than developing the public health care system.

My time is not up, Mr. Chairman, but my questions are, so I'll take my seat. I just want to end with a little rejoinder on the New Zealand comment that the minister made. I assure him that the approach that was taken here came well after Sir Roger Douglas had left office. As the minister should know, politics is not static in any country or in any party, for that matter, and in fact it is, I think, a very progressive approach.

Contrary to what the minister or some members opposite may feel, we do not necessarily think that the public purse is the measure of first resort. We think that if you can save money and if you can avoid paying too much when you're procuring your services and your goods in government, you have an obligation to do so. You also have an obligation to provide the most efficient and effective and innovative means of providing public services. If government does that and that's part of the culture of the government and part of the values of the government, the role for privatization is substantially reduced, which is part of our philosophical approach, I think it's fair to say.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member is continuing to want to get me into this whole public/private debate, and I've already said that I'm not going to go there. I'm not interested in getting into philosophical debates about what the most effective delivery model is. We've got both long-term strategies with respect to health status that need to be focused on – and I'm going to focus on those – and short-term strategies with respect to current situations which I've been tasked with by our Premier: to implement a workforce strategy; to implement a new pharmaceutical strategy; to implement health care productivity and reforms and long-term sustainability initiatives; to strengthen public health services that promote wellness, injury and disease prevention, and provide preparedness for public health emergencies. That's a fairly significant and comprehensive list of tasks, so to engage with the hon. member in some philosophical debate about public or private delivery is not on at this point in time.

The hon. member did raise some questions about the use of health care professionals and nurse practitioners, and he mentioned midwives. That's at the root of the whole question of finding the right health care professionals to do the right jobs in the right places. When I was articling as a law student and had a course from now Justice of the Court of Appeal Côté, one of the things he said to us is that you should put a sign on your desk that says: does it take an LL.B. to do this? Of course, when I considered that, there wasn't much left for me to do. But what we should be doing is saying: with the credentials that I have, am I making the most effective use of the abilities that I have?

We should be looking to midwives to help with the health care system in the areas that they're appropriately trained to help and to nurse practitioners to supplement and to physician assistants, perhaps. There are a number of physician assistants coming out of the military now, where they've been used for years, and looking for a place in the general community. They could play a fairly effective role. In fact, there could be a role for internationally trained medical graduates who may not have the competencies necessary to get professional credentials here, but they may be able to still serve in the health system at another level, and that could be at a physician assistant's level. There's a role for respiratory nurses.

There are a number of ways in which we can enhance the role of health care professionals to make it interesting for them to continue to work in the field. There can be a laddering, if you will. You could even see a day when people could come into the system as a personal care aide, progress through an LPN process, perhaps into a nursing assistant or a registered nurse and then into the specialty area of psychiatric nursing and those sorts of issues. So, yes, there's room for a multitude of health care professionals and technologists in the system, to make more extensive use of them.

The hon. member indicates, and he's quite right, that we're not going to have the acute-care system decline in service. The best we can hope for, probably, over time is to flatten out the exponential growth by health status. So we should make sure we focus on health status so that we can deal with that side of the equation and try to flatten out that curve. But we are going to need more of the health system, and that means that we need to make the most effective use of the resources that we have in the system.

With respect to the national drug strategy that the hon. member mentioned, I'm given to understand that at one time there was a national drug strategy on the table being discussed by federal/provincial ministers. That did not progress. I'm given to believe that the federal government backed away from the discussion. In any event, there may be some more interest now. We're seeing signs in some particular areas of an intention to co-operate. But we can't wait. We have to move forward.

I've been tasked with bringing forward a pharmaceutical strategy. I'm going to do that. We're going to try to work with our neighbouring provinces and with others to see if we can bring together a larger group, but we need to move forward. We are doing that in some areas. For example, with some of the oncology drugs we're able to do that now. So with respect to the national drug strategy, if there's interest across the country, then we'll be happy to be at the table. We'll work to try to encourage as much co-operation across the country as we can. But we need to move forward on it.

Just briefly on the area of urgent care. Urgent and emergency care are very important. Urgent care centres, obviously, can have the benefit of making access easier for people and, actually, focusing the access in a more appropriate way. For example, you could see in an urgent care centre, perhaps, if there was a large population of older people there, more of a focus on geriatric care. If you had any experience with it, as I have, going to emergency with an 80- or 90-year-old is not always the best place to be because often you're not there in an acute trauma situation, and therefore you don't get served first in the triage process, nor do you necessarily have health care professionals who are used to dealing with frailty. So if you can develop an urgent care centre which has the health care team of people there who, perhaps, have a better handle on geriatric care, you can actually provide better service on a more timely basis.

We do have some good things happening on the emergency side. I've spoken with the head of the emergency doctors in the province, someone whom I've had a lot of conversations with both before and after becoming Minister of Health and Wellness. I've taken the opportunity to take the suggestions that the emergency doctors brought forward with respect to the full-capacity protocol and have spoken with both the Capital health authority and the Calgary health authority.

Capital has moved ahead at four of their sites with the full-capacity protocol, which is not a long-term solution but is a very beneficial process to add because part of the problem that they have is that emergency actually focuses on the door, as they should, the people coming in with an emergency. Their focus is to deal with that emergency. Once they've admitted people or determined that they need to be admitted to the hospital, that's not their focus anymore. So the people who have been admitted but are still occupying beds in emergency, arguably, are not receiving the type of care that they should be receiving, the caring side. With the full-capacity protocol the concept is to move them upstairs into the wards.

Experience in other parts of North America, in New York and in St. Paul's in Vancouver, is that 30 per cent of the people who moved up to the wards had a bed by the time the elevator door opened. In other words, the process actually improved just by virtue of moving the patient. Now, we can't count on that for everything, obviously. But another 40 per cent, I think is the right number, of the people were in beds within four hours. So moving to that capacity to allow emergency doctors to focus where they should be focused and other health care professionals in emergency to focus on the front door, the people coming in with an emergency, as opposed to being bound up by the people who they've already seen and who are waiting for someone to provide the next level of care is a very good step forward. Also, movement to, as I say, build urgent care centres and the Health Link, so telehealth, so that those who don't need to be there can get the advice that they need elsewhere is a good move.

We still have to deal with capacity issues, and we still have to deal with the number of beds and keep up with the growth and those sorts of issues, but we're working at dealing with the issues from an immediate perspective and then also working on the long-term perspective to make sure that we have the right capacities in the system to deal with the flow-through of people in the system. We're working with others across western Canada in that regard with respect to acute care to make sure that we have both the excellence in acute care and the relief valve, if you will, in appropriate circumstances where we need help.

There was a lot of talk in January about newborns in Calgary having to go to Montana or B.C. or other places. Well, at times there's a spike, and you don't have the local capacity. Thank goodness we can make arrangements with our neighbours to help us with capacity needs when we need it, and of course we help them when they need it. So there are a number of things that we can work on in the system to deal with that.

Obviously, development of the primary care networks and urgent care centres is a critical part of making sure that for the vast majority of people who need access to urgent care, they can get it on a timely basis, leaving emergency available to those people who really need the emergency care, the trauma care. That's part and parcel of the system we're developing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and make a few observations on the budget for 2007-2008 related to the Department of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should quickly note that the current minister and I were elected the same year, 1997 I guess, to this Assembly. We've been around for 10 and a half years. He has had responsibility for a variety of departments and portfolios, held portfolios, and this is the toughest one in which to survive. I do wish him well on this one. I also want to thank the staff of the department who are here today to assist the minister to answer some questions that he's receiving from us. It's much appreciated.

The last point I wanted to make in respect of having been around, he and I, for roughly 10 and a half years is that during those 10 and a half years I'm hearing a lot about this government's intention to seek the privatization route to make our health care sustainable. The minister doesn't want to go there, he says now, because it's a purely philosophical question. I just want to note that it's been more than a philosophical question for this government. It has been, in fact, part of its policy. The minister doesn't want to speak about now because the Premier's mandate doesn't call for it. It's something that makes me wonder whether or not the privatization plans have been abandoned altogether because they have been discredited by experience and the record in various places. Or is it just a tactical shift until the next election, and then we are going to see the rhetoric of privatization come back?

So the minister might want to dissociate himself completely from – this is an opportunity for him to go – the privatization route because it's a discredited path. It certainly will not lead to increased sustainability of the system. We need to find other means of doing it, and there are other means available to us. All we need to do is to have a spirit of co-operation and perhaps the political will to get there.

That said, Mr. Chairman, I want to quickly move on, in the limited time that I have, to make some comments on the long-term care front. It's a growing area of our health care system that this minister is responsible for. We have currently close to 330,000 seniors over the age of 65, with approximately 153,000 over the age of 75. I must say, with some regret or with some anticipation, that in less than a year I'll be joining the ranks of the 153,000 who are over 75 and, hopefully, healthy. I would like to ask the minister because of his focus on wellness and on health status and on prevention: what specific strategies and plans are built into this budget to focus on keeping seniors healthy in this province so that they don't have to seek and receive the medical care that he says is increasingly becoming expensive?

I agree with him. It's expensive, and there's no reason. The quality of life is very much impacted by illness, so if you can keep people healthy, it will save money. But it also improves quality of life, so it's a win-win situation in many ways. Maybe he would like to comment on the implementation of his wellness and health status, sort of focus with respect to seniors and the long-term care area.

Mr. Chairman, there are close to 21,000 people living in approximately 400 supported living facilities across the province: lodges, enhanced lodges, designated assisted living group homes, adult family living and family care homes. Similarly, there are 14,500 or so people living in approximately 200 long-term care facilities. Now, the problem of standards in these facilities affecting so many seniors in the province was raised a couple of years ago by the Auditor General in his review of seniors' care programs in his 2005 report. The Auditor General's review drew attention to the lack of maintenance of standards of care and the lack of capacity within the health care system and the department itself to enforce those mechanisms and monitor compliance with those standards.

There is some reference here in the budget to increased capacity for compliance with standards. The introduction of standards has just kicked in, I understand. They come into effect this month. I want the minister to perhaps comment on how the increase in the capacity to monitor and ensure compliance with these standards is being offered by way of the budget that's before us.

The failure of oversight and lack of compliance, Mr. Chairman, have had quite tragic results. We have been told that the Health Facilities Review Committee did an examination of the Bethany long-term care centre in 2005 and recommended that Alzheimer's patients be given private rooms. If such a recommendation had in fact been implemented, it may have prevented a recent death at that facility. Could the minister confirm that this occurrence has in fact happened and if there's a report on it and whether he can share that report on this incident at Bethany Care with us today?

Could the minister tell us also the mechanism by which inspection reports are made available to both residents and their families, and, of course, the general public, including this House, and will they be made available now that we are beginning to focus on improving the system in a variety of respects and the new standards are being put in place?

The longer term wait times are another issue, Mr. Chairman, that I want to ask the minister a few questions about. Goal 3 in the performance measures is about improved access to health services, which includes targets for wait lists for continuing care. My question is: currently how long are people waiting for placement? We know the number of people waiting for it, but what's the maximum time of wait, and what's the minimum? What's the average waiting time for placement?

I also notice that in one of the tables, long-term care placement, the number of people waiting has come down over the years, which is good news, if I read this table right. I wonder: is it because of the expansion of spaces at most places now, spaces in long-term care? Is that what explains the decline in the numbers waiting in an acute-care hospital, the number of urgent cases waiting in the community? It's that table that I'm talking about. In general, the wait times are an issue that we are hearing a great deal about. The minister might want to comment on that as to the budgetary response to this problem.

The privatization issue for long-term care is alive and well, Mr. Chairman, although the minister says that he doesn't want to go there. The problem this year at the Holy Cross hospital illustrates potential problems with privatization in long-term care services. Indeed, the problems at that facility illustrate the devastating impact of creating privatization in continuing care. The profit mode in long-term care leads to the same problem that it does in any other kind of health care service: higher costs and lower quality. That's, at least, what the Auditor General's study showed us.

Private operators do have a vested interest in keeping down the costs of providing service through cutting back on labour and on the quality of services in order to maximize profits for the shareholders, and I don't blame these private investors. That's what they are there for: to respond to their stakeholders' expectations to maximize their returns on their investments. But our responsibility as public officials is to ensure the quality of care and the enforcement of standards to make sure that the proper care is available.

The other concern, the question that's really a growing concern around the province, is the conversion of long-term care facilities to assisted living centres, which translates into shifting the costs of servicing the care onto residents.

Maybe I'll stop here and let the minister respond.

The Chair: The time has elapsed for this order of business on Health and Wellness. Perhaps the minister would want to respond in writing to some of the questions, or if there's time at the end of the debate on Municipal Affairs and Housing, there may be time for some further questions on that.

Now I'll recognize the hon. Minister for Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased . . .

The Chair: You have a point of order, hon. member?

Point of Order Committee Proceedings

Mr. Mason: It was our understanding that the allocation of the time between the two ministries was up to the NDP caucus, and it certainly would be our preference that the Minister of Health and Wellness finish his response.

The Chair: Well, I'm here at your pleasure, but it was my understanding that there was an hour and a half allocated for Health and Wellness and an hour and a half allocated for . . .

Mr. Martin: We haven't had that though. We were short. We were behind time when we started.

Mr. Mason: Because of the confusion about what's going on.

The Chair: Well, the time starts when the committee is called to order. If there are any points of order that are raised and clarifications regarding that, that comes off the time. There's not extra time allocated for that.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Chairman, for the convenience of the third party I would be very glad to sit down and let the hon. minister of health finish his presentation.

The Chair: If that's your pleasure, I'll allow the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to continue.

Mr. Hancock: Just for the record, we tried to put an allocation so that people would have an idea of when they had to appear, but I would agree with the leader of the third party. This afternoon is the NDs' afternoon, and they get to choose their time allocation. We want to make sure that people are ready when they're supposed to be called, and we've worked with them to try and make sure that that happened. But there wasn't any intention on the tabling to cement a time of an hour and a half or that sort of thing.

Mr. Martin: I think the minister over there needs a break.

Mr. Hancock: And he's had a good afternoon already, I understand.

The Chair: The chair would appreciate some notification in the future of what the various parties are intending to do, but go ahead, hon. minister.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hancock: So there are a number of questions that I'll respond to. With respect to the incident that the hon. member referred to at the Bethany, very clearly there'll be a fatality inquiry. That's the appropriate place. There's no value to me speculating on that. There'll be a fatality inquiry, and there'll be a report, and that will be thoroughly investigated. I'm sure that the Bethany centre is already looking at the issues arising from it, but I won't comment further on it until that inquiry has been held.

With respect to long-term care wait times if we have information that's more definitive, I'm certainly happy to get there, but my understanding is that wait times have come down, that sometimes people are waiting because they want their choice of facility, but most people are able to be placed within a reasonable period of time in long-term care.

When you talk about privatization, of course, that absolutely neglects the fact that there's been a history in this province of public long-term care, private long-term care, and nongovernmental organizations, or not-for-profit long-term care. It has been a good mix. It has been there. There are very excellent private providers who are concerned about the quality of life of the residents of their facilities, and the profit motive doesn't take any of the concept of caring away necessarily. So the suggestion that because there's a profit involved, one can't care for the people and make sure there's a quality of life is not accurate. Just to put that out.

There was an incident with respect to the Holy Cross in Calgary. I think that was dealt with by the regional health authority, which happens to be not only a provider of long-term care but a regulator with respect to quality of care and standards and the payer. So when they perceived that there was a safety element that wasn't being taken care of in terms of the service and in terms of the safety codes, they worked with the provider. When they weren't satisfied with the result, they cancelled the contract, and that suggests, I guess, that the system works.

I'm not going to get into the details because there are discussions between them and the provider, but the bottom line is that there are standards. We put in place standards. We're going to make sure that service providers, whether they're public, private, or not for profit, get their people up to those standards and within a reasonable period of time. Obviously, we have to work with them in this environment when it's difficult to get people, but to make sure that those standards are achieved and are adhered to is absolutely important for us.

The first role of government, in my view, is quality assurance. That's our job. The second role is to make sure that there's effective use of the public resources, the most effective and efficient use of the public resources. Where that can be done more effectively using private services as opposed to public services, I would suggest that the hon. member adhere to what his leader said and not be dogmatic about it but look for the best bang for the buck, so to speak, the best care that you can get, the best quality of care that you can get for the dollar.

That's where we're going to be going. I'm not going to adhere to any philosophical issue on whether it's antiprofit or proprofit. That's not the driver of it. The question is: how can we get the best quality of care, how can we get the best access to care on a timely basis without regard to the ability to pay, whether it's in the acute system, or how can we ensure that seniors have the care that they need in the system? When we talk about the care that they need, quite frankly, I'll be working with the minister of seniors and others in government to make sure that we have that continuum of care so that seniors can be healthy in their own home for as long as possible.

The hon. member indicates that he will soon be joining the over-75 club, and I'm sad to hear that he's not intending to run in the next election because the best way that a person can be healthy is to be active, to be mentally and physically active. One might argue as to whether sitting in here is mentally or physically active, but I would argue that it is. So I only hope that he'll find some other way to keep himself mentally and physically active because that's going to be the way that he best improves and keeps his health care up.

We need to be working at ways we can ensure that people can make the quality of life choice, the living choice that they want to make and then support it with the appropriate health care support that they need to have so that they can stay as healthy as possible as long as possible and then die quickly.

The Chair: Hon. member, do you wish to continue?

Dr. Pannu: No, Mr. Chairman. I'm done. Thank you.

The Chair: Now do you wish to go to Municipal Affairs and Housing?

Mr. Mason: Please. We thought he should have a brief rest.

The Chair: I'll call on the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Municipal Affairs and Housing

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present an overview of Municipal Affairs and Housing for the 2007-2008 spending estimates as well as the 2007-2010 ministry business plan. Before I start, Mr. Chairman, I would like to do some introductions of individuals that are here today. As the members of the third party will appreciate, the work that our ministry was saddled with in the last three months has been overwhelming, and I especially want to thank my staff because they have worked so diligently.

With my hand on my heart I really want to thank them and introduce them: first of all, my deputy minister, Shelley Ewart-Johnson, who is beside me and has been my right-hand person all the time; Brian Quickfall, the assistant deputy minister of local government services. Also, I would like to introduce Robin Wigston, the assistant deputy minister of the housing division. We also have Ivan Moore, in the gallery, who is the assistant deputy minister of the public safety division. We also have Peter Crerar, who is the assistant deputy minister of corporate strategic services. It's an honour for me to introduce Tracy Balash, the director of communications. I'd like to again, as I've said, thank all of the individuals, all of the staff, who have worked so hard back in the office and back in the department, because their help is very, very much appreciated.

I'll start my presentation by providing an overview of our 2007-2010 business plan. This will illustrate the basis for our spending estimates. This year's business plan has changed dramatically to include the introduction of housing and libraries and volunteer services. We've identified six opportunities and challenges that have affected our business plan. To achieve this, we are helping to ensure the long-term stability of municipalities through appropriate legislation, capacity building, initiatives, and financial support. We are working with municipalities to provide advisory, dispute resolution, and financial supports. The key to this is enhancing the relationship between the provincial government, municipalities, and municipal organizations. The ministry will continue to work with municipal partners to identify ways to enhance these relationships through various mechanisms such as the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability.

One of the challenges we face has to do with unprecedented economic growth. With growth intensifying in many areas of the province, municipalities are in some cases struggling to address this issue. We've heard from our stakeholders that they want us to work with them to address broad planning and co-ordination issues. This will help us in both maximizing opportunities and minimizing disputes. Tied into this is the challenge of municipal sustainability and predictability. While some municipalities are growing, others are facing economic and demographic decline. Municipal Affairs and Housing needs to work with other ministries to help these primarily small urban and rural municipalities to deliver their needed services within the constraints of their revenue sources.

Mr. Chairman, another challenge deals with Affordable Housing Task Force recommendations. We are implementing approved recommendations from the task force to increase the availability of affordable housing. To do this, we are providing housing support to Albertans who have difficulty meeting their housing needs. We are also encouraging municipalities, private, and nonprofit housing sectors to develop sustainable housing initiatives that meet identified community needs through approved capital funding.

The provincial emergency management system continues to be challenged by evolving risks. These could include health emergencies like the pandemic influenza or the potentially hazardous activities of high-risk industries. Communities across Alberta are also facing a challenge in sustaining volunteer fire services. There is an increasing need to support these communities by providing increased technical assistance and education programs that help prevent fires and emergency incidences. It is also a challenge for municipalities to manage the risks associated with the escalated rate of building and development required to support the high level of growth in this province.

In addition to everything else that we are doing, I have three areas I would like to quickly mention. Our community services community development facilitators work with all communities in your constituencies to deal with community issues such as family violence, drug strategies, Water for Life initiatives, and crime prevention. Mr. Chairman, they support many of our provincial public input processes that result in community activities.

The Alberta not-for-profit volunteer sector initiative will create a policy framework for us as a government to work with community organizations and volunteers in the province that are supporting so many vital initiatives that impact Albertans' quality of life. This is essential as these organizations face many issues that are placing them at risk. Alberta's public libraries are truly something to brag about, as they are an example of a public service that serves all Albertans and contributes to our success as a province.

In terms of our core businesses we are setting our sights on the following goals: a responsive, co-operative, and well-managed local government sector; financially sustainable and accountable municipalities; a well-managed and efficient assessment and property tax system in which stakeholders have confidence; a Municipal Government Board that administers appeals and issues timely and impartial decisions of high quality; an accessible public library service and effectively supported communities and voluntary sectors; low-income Albertans having access to a range of housing options and effectively managed housing programs that are focused on those most in need; a comprehensive system of safety codes and standards that provides an appropriate level of public safety; an effective emergency management system; and implementing the approved recommendations of the Affordable Housing Task Force report.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that, and I appreciate the comments of the minister very much. I want to compliment the minister. He's had a rather difficult two or three weeks, and he has retained an even keel and a good sense of humour throughout. He's wrong. But he's got a sense of humour, and it was certainly appreciated.

I just want to talk in my first 10 minutes about the nonhousing element of the department of municipal affairs. I'm sure that the minister is aware that like many other members of this Assembly I come from municipal government and served as a city councillor with Edmonton for 11 and a half years. So I have a strong affinity to the issues of municipal government and a strong affinity to municipal government. I happen to believe that of all of the orders of government in this country it's the one that is closest to the citizens, and it provides the most value for money. It certainly is, in my view, an efficient order of government, providing a wide range of services, including social services, housing, utilities, public services like police and housing and recreation as well as cultural programs and does so, I think, by and large, extremely well and without, I might add, ever running a deficit, which, as the minister knows, is simply not allowed.

So municipal government I think has an excellent track record in our province and is in many respects an ideal delivery mechanism for programs that may fall within the jurisdiction of the other two orders of government. I think municipal governments generally look at that in a fairly positive way. The problem is, of course, that they often get these responsibilities pushed onto them without consultation and often without adequate funding. We've seen numerous examples of that over the years, whether it comes to child care or housing or any number of programs that the provincial government in the past or even federally sometimes push onto municipal governments. I think there's a greater role for municipal government in our province in helping us meet our challenges. But it is essential that municipal governments be fully consulted about any such programs from the ground up and that they receive full funding for any programs that they are expected to deliver. With respect to housing I will come back to that question. In terms of the financing of municipal governments I think that's an important question.

These are not so much questions for the minister but just a broad take that I have on this issue. When I was first elected to the Legislature in 2000, I attended a chamber of commerce luncheon, and the guest speaker was then the municipal affairs minister, Steve West. He promised at that time to vacate over a period of time the provincial portion of the property tax to municipalities by freezing the take; that is, the total number of dollars that the province takes for provincial property tax. That promise was then broken by the subsequent Minister of Finance, who said that they would freeze the mill rate. Of course, as the assessment grew both in value and extent, the take of the province from the provincial portion of property tax grew fairly substantially as well. So it wasn't quite the same thing. If you freeze the total number of dollars taken from provincial property tax, then the mill rate tends to fall as assessment grows, and it gives room to municipalities. That was one of the first broken promises that I observed with respect to that.

I think it is necessary but not sufficient for the province eventually to get out of the property tax altogether and leave the room entirely for municipalities. That would be my view. Obviously, that's quite a bit of money, and it needs to take a careful and patient approach, but I do think that position is valid.

I also believe, Mr. Chairman, that the municipalities deserve an additional source of funds that is based on the general tax revenue of the province, and particularly that is the income tax, and that is nonrenewable resource revenues. So our approach is to take a fixed amount and put it in legislation so that it isn't a matter of being fiddled with in each provincial budget but that there's a formula that's negotiated and agreed upon between the province and municipalities so that they have the financial resources they need to do their job.

I don't support one of the ideas that's currently being floated of giving municipalities a grab bag of little taxes that they can impose at will. I think that off-loads the responsibility to the municipalities to make individual decisions. It creates a patchwork of municipal financing, and it really doesn't address the question that municipalities are providing a very significant portion of public services in this province, and they do not have access to the main sources of revenue in this province. So I think that when voters see all of the different taxes that have been proposed for municipalities to impose, they're not going to be very happy. I think a greater share of existing government revenue is a more rational and more sustainable way to go.

I wanted to talk a little bit about regional planning as well, Mr. Chairman, because I think this is a really serious issue that has emerged in this province. If we look at the examples of some municipalities south of the border, we can see very, very serious consequences of not dealing well with municipal planning issues, and particularly intermunicipal planning issues.

I served on the Edmonton Regional Planning Commission and its executive committee at the time that the aforementioned Steve West decided to wrap up the affairs of the municipal planning commissions in this province. It was a difficult challenge. You know, the municipal planning commissions may not have been perfect or ideal, but they dealt with something that was very important and provided an important service, and that is to keep the land use appropriate for urban municipalities separate from the land use that is appropriate for rural municipalities and to make sure that everybody had a share in decision-making with respect to planning in a given region and that that share took into account, to a degree, differences in population.

Since that time the bilateral intermunicipal planning approach I think has failed. We don't have to look much farther than the proposals of the county of Strathcona to develop new industrial sites as well as new urban sites on its land on the boundary of Edmonton. That same problem has been replicated in a number of urban and rural centres around the province. When having discussions as I've had with mayors in places like Grande Prairie and in Red Deer and so on, it's pretty clear that they as well as people in the AUMA have a great deal of concern about the strategies being employed by what are ostensibly rural municipalities to ring cities and ring towns with urban development so that all future development takes place in the rural municipality.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I want to compliment the leader of the third party. The reason that I want to compliment him, even though I do not always agree with his philosophies, is that it is indeed very refreshing to have an individual that does understand the challenges of municipalities and that we are able to converse, I believe, with understanding. With that, I'm not sure the hon. member knows that I am giving him a compliment, but I want to thank him for that.

One of the comments that he made is: the most value for their money. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is absolutely right. Local municipalities and the work that they do in their communities are very critical. Their involvement with the communities and at the grassroots, involving the libraries, volunteerism, and really what are the concerns of the individuals, I think is paramount.

I believe that you were talking about the ideal delivery for a program, the discussion of how the delivery took place with this government. It is the delivery of programs. It is the delivery for which municipalities need to have that autonomy, and they have asked for that autonomy.

Now, I guess that I need to talk about it from two different sides, municipalities under the auspices of Municipal Affairs. You know, if municipalities ask for autonomy, then with autonomy needs to come taxation because it is their choice. But I think that when we look in the past and we look at supporting municipalities, then there need to be some guidelines, and I think we need to be on the side of autonomy with support.

Mr. Chairman, there were comments that we do not need to push things on municipalities. I want to say that it is important that municipalities plan locally and plan regionally. I do not want to go back to the planning commissions because I don't believe that they truly worked, but we need to look at co-operation. We need to look at municipalities working together, to making sure that we can eliminate the duplication where duplication only is, let's say, a root of identity. We can have identity within our own municipalities and co-operate on services, co-operate on infrastructure, co-operate maybe even with administration.

The hon. leader of the third party also talked about full consultation. Through the minister's council we did have consultation. There was representation from both mayors of the large cities. There was representation from the AAMD and C, representation from the AUMA, and, Mr. Chairman, they do represent their own and separate interests. We also had meetings with the associations and individual municipalities, and they told us that we need to work together, that we need a regional plan but also that we need support.

Mr. Chairman, municipalities, as the hon. member has said, deserve an additional source of funding. This budget is providing that. This budget has provided $400 million of additional support that will be ramped up after three years to $1.4 billion.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Danyluk: One point four billion dollars. That does allow for some predictability, it does allow for some sustainability, and it does allow for municipalities to be able to work together because they do have some additional capital to try to address some of those very important needs.

I was a little bit concerned when you talked about vacating the property tax. Well, as you spoke, then I realized that you talked about the vacating of the education tax or the education portion of property taxes. When we look at the needs of municipalities, I think a very good solution is that the property tax is still there because, you know, we have individuals, and we do have a responsibility to education. The municipal sustainability initiative provides that balance and takes that education tax or thereabouts, and it's going to be reverted to municipalities.

You made a comment about not supporting grab bags. You know, some municipalities would love the supporting of the grab bag, if I understand it, just to have, you know, a little bit of support here and a little bit of support there. I don't want to call it a system, but let me say to you that we definitely need to have a program that supports municipalities. Do we need to work on the present program that we have? Yes, we need to work on it a little bit because we still need to have the initiative for municipalities to work together. We need to address the needs of municipalities that have very high growth areas. We need to look at municipalities that don't have the equalized assessment yet have the population. We need to look at municipalities who are suffering because, through no fault their own, of not having development. I think that this municipal sustainability fund is going to address those needs. I see it happening, and I see it as very, very positive.

Last, Mr. Chairman, is the discussion of land use, the comparison between the urban and the rural, and looking at two distinct areas and what their role should be. Well, there are different identities in rural and urban areas, but at the same time I believe that the land-use framework that is going to come forward is going to identify individuality yet look at the province as a whole because land use is such an important issue for this province.

So for the next session I'll sit down until you have more questions, if that's all right.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much to the minister for those answers – they were certainly very helpful – and as well for the unusual compliment, which didn't surprise me as much as some members of his side, who I don't think all necessarily agreed with the minister on that point.

I want to sort of pick up where I left off and where the minister left off, and that's on the whole question of regional planning. I don't necessarily think that regional planning commissions were the ultimate answer, but we do need some comprehensive regional planning to solve intermunicipal land-use issues. You know, that can't be solved, in my view, by a series of bilateral negotiations and agreements between municipalities.

I just want to indicate to the minister that I think the problem needs a very direct solution, and it may well be solved by being negotiated, by the rural and the urban municipalities talking to each other, but I think that you need a set of principles to guide the discussion. I think the basic principle that I've talked about with municipal officials is that urban development should take place in urban areas and that rural development should take place in rural areas, and if urban development begins to develop in a rural area contiguous to an urban municipality, then that development needs to become part of the urban municipality.

We don't think that annexation is a dirty word. In fact, I think we need to go back to a policy that has some clear guidelines and says that if there's a whole bunch of high-density housing going into an area or a major commercial development that is contiguous to a city or a town, then that city or town should have the right – and it should be supported – to annex that particular piece so that the urban municipality remains urban.

I also think that rural municipalities have a role. Of course, there's agricultural development, and some of that is fairly industrial in nature. There's also the question of heavy industry, and it may well be that heavy industry is not always appropriate to be located right in or next to very seriously populated areas. So I think that there's an exception there, a special case that needs to be developed.

The minister must be aware of the G7 – now, I guess, it's the G8 – the group of counties that are following a systematic plan, an organized plan to ring urban municipalities with urban style developments so that all further development, then, must take place within their boundaries, and all of the tax revenue thereby flows to those. That should be stopped. We're really clear on this. The minister, I think, needs to take a really clear and a principled stand on this question.

I want to talk a little bit about regional government. I think that where there is a group or a cluster of urban municipalities in close proximity that are incorporated as urban municipalities, then there is a role for some form of regional government. That's different than a single urban municipality with perhaps several rural neighbours where there are unincorporated hamlets and so on involved. In that case I think I would take a rather different approach. I think this needs to be tackled, Mr. Minister. I think that this is an issue that really needs some attention. So negotiation: yes. Municipalities working with each other: yes. But there have to be some principles involved.

I think that another principle is the preservation of agricultural land and good recreational areas in our province. I think that's a role for municipalities: to support agriculture and to support agricultural land and to preserve recreational areas and natural areas. I think that's an important role as well for rural municipalities.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to just switch a little bit to housing and just deal with that issue. I start by expressing appreciation to the minister for his taking the step shortly after assuming office of establishing a committee that was fairly broadly based to look at the housing issue in this province, to look at affordable housing, and for including representatives of the two official opposition parties on that committee. I think that was a good step. It was in many respects a breath of fresh air, and we had quite a bit of hope for it.

I also want to thank the committee, which I think worked very hard under some fairly strict timelines that the minister imposed, met with hundreds of Albertans, travelled around the province, and, I think, developed a very good rapport. At that point there was, I guess, not quite the follow-through that we had hoped for.

I think that in terms of the process, it went off the rails a little bit when the report was not released publicly and the government made its decision about the report's recommendations while the public was unaware of the contents of the report. I think that's backwards, Mr. Chairman. I think that it's important that if we're going to have real public discussion and democracy in this province, if we're really going to democratize the political process in this province, then you let the public debate go on. You listen to it, and then you make your decision, not before. I think that had the government done that, they may have avoided some of the political difficulties that they're now finding themselves in.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to make the general point, which we have made before, that building new housing and providing affordable housing opportunities for Albertans is a high priority. We recognize that the government sees that as a high priority, and we also recognize that it's ultimately the answer to the high rents that people are facing. It's a supply and demand issue. There's an insufficiency of supply. But the supply just doesn't appear because there's a demand. There are long lead times. There are many other factors that are preventing an appropriate supply from coming on quickly. And the government has admitted that it may be two years at minimum, perhaps quite a bit longer, before the supply issue is resolved.

The question then is: what do you do about the people who are being hit by unfair rents? You don't just call them names. You don't just say, "You're being un-Albertan" and all of that because that doesn't do anything. What really needs to happen is some protection for renters in the province. I don't know if there's a different way, if we can call it something else. We didn't want to call it rent controls because we didn't think the government would like that. We'd call it rent guidelines, you know, to try to soften the language a little bit. Maybe we can change the language a bit more. I don't know what you want to call it. Maybe we could just call it free enterprise in housing. [interjection] Then I think the minister of sustainable development might actually support it. But you do need to do something.

You need to resolve this question for people on a temporary basis, and that's all we've ever said: that these need to be in place on a temporary basis and that they shouldn't apply to new units. The argument has been made, of course, that if you put rent controls or guidelines or whatever on new units, then people won't build them. So we're saying: don't. Put it on the existing supply of rental accommodation. Then that should have no particular impact on new investment.

The fact of the matter remains that there is very little investment in rental accommodation now in Alberta without rent guidelines. So what's going to change if we bring rent guidelines in? In Ontario, where they have rent guidelines, there is substantially more investment in new rental units than there is here in Alberta. It doesn't follow that just because you have rent guidelines in place, somehow it affects the investment. I think there are a lot of other reasons why it's not happening in Alberta, but I encourage the minister to relook at that particular issue.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm not exactly sure what the hon. member said: that it can be solved by regional planning. I'm sorry. We need regional planning, and I agree with you on that. And he says that it can be solved by bilateral solutions.

An Hon. Member: Cannot be solved.

Mr. Danyluk: Cannot be solved. Okay. Well, then, that makes more sense. I didn't hear the "not" part. So I think we do need to talk together, and, I mean, we do need to have basic principles. You're right. You talked about: the urbans should have their place and the rurals should have their place, and their developments should take place in their own kind of areas. Right? You know, in actuality, that philosophy, that utopian philosophy, is right, except when we progress through the evolution of our province. Our urban areas are expanding. Regardless if we expand straight up, we are going to also expand in a horizontal fashion. So when we look at that, some of the boundaries – and we talk about annexation – need to be expanded.

Now, the question that arises to me is that I don't have a problem with that development. Being a farmer, my heart is for the preservation of land because it very much bothers me when we abuse land because we just can't make it again, at least not with the technology that we do have. But where I do have some difficulty – and I will admit it to you – is that the development part doesn't bother me as much in adjoining municipalities except when one municipality takes advantage of the opportunity of another.

Let me give you an example where you have a municipality, and they may be an urban municipality – and I'm only using this as an example – that is expanding in growth, and a municipality beside that municipality that is growing, but they snuggle right up to the first municipality and lower the mill rate and try to encourage development just outside. So they're really taking advantage of the large centre yet not having to have the commitment of the services, the community support, that is necessary. I think that part of what we're doing is trying to narrow that gap, that co-operation. I've always had the premise that we are one community and we really need to work as one community.

Should we have independence? Well, you know, I need to reflect back to my constituency when I talk about education. In my hometown of St. Paul and area we have a regional division education board. We have the public and the private in one board, and we work together. There is no other board like that in Alberta. There is none in Canada. There is really none in the Commonwealth. It makes sense for the people to work together. But the identity is at the site-based level, at the school. So if I relate that to municipalities, I would suggest to you that I think we can maintain independence but instill co-operation. I think we are doing that.

Regional government is important. There are opportunities. We need to, as I've said many times, communicate, collaborate, and co-operate. We go to the same hockey games. We shop at the same stores. We go to the same churches. Yet we want to build silos when we are involved in municipal politics. We need to narrow those gaps. We don't need to have so many stovepipes in one house. Working together, working regionally, I think, is a fundamental focus for where this government is going.

Mr. Chairman, let me refer to the housing issues or the housing task force. I agree with you that we must applaud those individuals who worked on that task force. I very much recognize the member who sat on that task force and all of the other individuals – we have the member opposite, member of the third party – who really came to the challenge and committed their time, their energy for 45 days. You did listen to the focus of the task force.

The task force recommended eight immediate recommendations, and we accepted all but one from the first grouping. I highlight that we committed $96 million in 2007-2008, also adding the $100 million for the municipal sustainability fund. We created three new initiatives: the homeless eviction and prevention fund, the transition housing initiative, the direct-to-tenant rent supplement programs. We increased funding for existing programs for the homeless shelters. We made changes to the tenant notices to bring short-term stability to a very much, as we know, heated market.

The task force recommended five short-term recommendations, and at this time the government accepted one, referred another one, and did not accept the recommendations like affordable land and moving towards a block funding because they are already being worked on in a department.

I want to say that the task force recommended an additional 33 long-term recommendations which involved more than just addressing a mandate of the task force to seek solutions but the creation of accessible and affordable housing. These either had been accepted in part, and there were nine of them, or referred to the interdepartmental assistant deputy ministers' committee – I believe we have nine ministries involved – and there were 11 of them. Thirteen were not accepted.

I want to say to the leader of the third party that we took this seriously. We took the recommendations seriously. In this House in question period and numerous other times this government gets criticized for looking in the short term or not looking in the long term when it comes to rent controls. Mr. Chairman, we do need to look in the long term and address the concerns in the short term. In the long term we need to have a continual building of units in Alberta. Last year we had a hundred thousand people come to this province. They need housing. They came to this province without doctors. [Mr. Danyluk's speaking time expired] I'll try to answer the rest of it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's appropriate that we continue the housing discussion, as we will. Again I will say that working with the task force, they were good people, and I know that the minister was serious about it. I would just echo what the leader said, though. I think the mistake is that it came to the Tory caucus ahead of being out there for debate.

Now, admittedly, there are some good things that the minister has talked about. Some of the recommendations they accepted, and we recognize that. The minister in question period talked about the $285 million. Yes, I mean, the problem, though, is that as much as it sounds, when it comes to the other things, that amount of money may not be enough, with the overheated economy. We're always playing catch-up.

What we found as we travelled across the province was that the demand was so heavy. I mean, we heard from a lot of people. Yes, $285 million goes some way, and some of the things that the government has talked about are good. The point that I'd like to stress to the minister, though, is that we saw this as a package, short-term and long-term. The problem is when you begin to look at it without the short term, and that's why we talked about temporary rent guidelines. It wasn't reinventing the wheel. They've had it in Alberta. It's because you just can't keep up. They can't build that housing fast enough.

We did talk about incentives – and we'll come to that – to get developers to build housing. We talked about that a lot. We talked about even trying to get people, first-time home buyers, into the market. But in the short run that would take time, and as the minister knows, today there are thousands of people out there that are feeling the stress of what's happening now. Yeah, it's okay to say that we can only do it once a year, but that may mean, as we're finding out, that some landlords – not all, but some – are just raising it faster than they would ordinarily, so it doesn't solve the problem.

You see, if you put the guidelines in on a temporary basis, as they do in other places, and say to the people, "We'll give you incentives. Build some markets. Put some affordable housing out there," I would suggest then that eventually we won't need the guidelines, as I like to call them, or rent stability, or whatever. But in the short run, I mean, what do we do with all these people that are paying 50, 60, 70 per cent of their income? Mr. Minister, I don't think you can have an office big enough to keep dealing with it in that way. I don't envy the minister, you know, trying to deal with this without the policy guidelines that are there.

That's all we were saying. In fact, the committee put two years on it. Hopefully, some of that affordable housing that you were talking about will be coming onto the market then so that perhaps we wouldn't need them. But I honestly don't know what you do in the short run with all the people that are suffering at this particular time. It's not an easy problem, and I do have some sympathy for the minister because I know his heart's in the right place. I don't think of him as a person that doesn't care. I honestly don't. What we're talking about here is policy, and that's what I think has been missed, a big part of that task force.

I want to say that the other problem without the guidelines, I believe, is the volatility. We've found that that's been a bit of a disaster with the planning, as we now know today because it's not ready yet, even though it was said here yesterday that it was. They took the rent supplement program and increased it to basically what we had said to do, but if you don't have the guidelines, where's that money going to end up? You know, with no guidelines, rent increases carrying on all the time, that money may well end up in the pockets of the people that don't need it, the landlords.

That's why you need to put all these things together as a package, Mr. Chairman. That's the point that we were trying to make. The only other thing – I want to go through the report to some degree, but we won't have time, obviously, to go through all of it. The funding: good; $35 million for temporary emergency homeless shelter spaces. We heard that loud and clear, and I'm glad that the minister is bringing that forward.

One of the things that we heard a lot – and I think the Member for Edmonton-Glenora would agree with me on this – is that that's important: we need the shelters for the homeless and the rest of it, and we probably can't build them fast enough right now. But, boy, did we get an earful about the Alberta transitional housing initiative. We put $2.5 million there, but I don't think that's going to come close to dealing with it. The advocates kept saying: look, it's like a revolving door; we get people in shelters, and then we don't have enough to keep them. We're sort of talking that period of time, one to two years, to get them off addictions or whatever we do, to get established. They said that was just as important as the actual shelter allowance.

I think we could have trumped that up a bit, Mr. Chairman, because we have a growing problem, both with addictions, with homeless people. I think that's something that in that end of it, if we top that up a little more, you could have some real impact there with what you've done, and I'd like you to perhaps take a look at that in that whole area, you know, in the short run, dealing with that end of the spectrum.

As the committee, as the minister is well aware, we were trying to deal with the spectrum, right from homeless through to transitional housing, right to where we sought to help the first-time home buyers. We saw the spectrum. I think there is some good work at that end of it. I think that if we looked at the transitional housing, my recollection – and the minister can correct me – of what we talked about, $12 million rings in my mind, and I haven't had a chance to go back, but that that may have some of the impact that we want at that end. So maybe that's something that we could take a look at, and that would deal with that end of it.

Mr. Chairman, I want to start to go through, though, some of it. We probably won't have time, and I'd like to get my colleagues in, but I want to talk about a couple of recommendations that were turned down, because there were a lot of them. One was the planning in the long term. Well, let's say it was short term and long term: establish an Alberta housing plan and establish an Alberta housing secretariat. The reason that we said that is not because we didn't want the minister to have a job, but what we heard right across the way was that we are in a crisis. We heard that everywhere. It is a crisis. Housing is in crisis. We wanted to bring that forward. In the Lougheed government they established a ministry of housing and established what they wanted to do as a result of that. That's the point that we wanted with this secretariat. I know that the minister is saying that there is some discussion among the various groups that have to deal with housing. But just as an example today, with the minister of employment standing up about a number, and obviously the minister thought that that number was doing something, and they didn't have it.

That's why we were saying that. We are in such a crisis, that a secretariat who had access to the minister – I mean, with municipal affairs, all the other things you do are pretty important, as we've just had that discussion with the leader, that you've got a lot on the platter there. But in the short run at least, if not a housing ministry, like they've had in the past, that's why we're advocating a secretariat that would come out with a housing plan down the way, a 10-year plan or whatever. I think we still need that.

It's nice that there's $285 million going forward, but I think the minister recognizes that in an overheated economy – and we're not prepared to put the brakes on – this is going to be, even with the $285 million, an ongoing situation. So that's why we wanted it. I was sort of curious, I guess, why we would reject that, even if it was done through the present ministry, why that was rejected. All we're just saying is that this puts an emphasis that something important is occurring.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Let me start off by discussing the long term and the short term. I know that the hon. leader of the third party has said that he knows what the answer is going to be. So I will speak directly – I'm trying to answer your question, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: I'll listen in my office.

Mr. Danyluk: You're going to listen in your office. That sounds very good.

Mr. Chairman, in comment to the long term, it is critical that we keep the movement of development, encourage the movement of development of new units. We cannot totally emphasize the short-term solutions without looking at the long term. This government has very much recognized the short term.

The hon. member mentioned the $285 million, so I will respond to the $285 million. One hundred million for new municipal sustainability housing. Mr. Chairman, this funding plus $96 million in enhanced capital to increase affordable housing units is funding that is going to municipalities. Municipalities in high-growth areas are the best to understand their needs. Municipalities can spend this funding in the way that they see fit, that best addresses the needs in their communities, whether it is the building of new units, the renovation of buildings, getting involved in secondary suites, which is more immediate, whether it is rent supplements. Rent supplements have been in place. There has been an additional amount of funds put into rent supplements that does not support the landlord: $9 million goes directly to individuals.

Mr. Chairman, $13 million increase for homeless support, $3 million increase for the provincial homeless initiative, $14 million increase in the rent supplement program, $4.3 million increase in support to housing providers and special purpose housing, $45 million to affordable housing in Wood Buffalo, $7 million for a new homeless and eviction fund initiative, and $2.5 million for the Alberta transition housing initiative. These are incentives and initiatives that came forward from the housing task force. On comments from the member of the third party, "Is this enough; is $285 million enough?" I'm not sure what enough is.

I want to compliment our caucus for recognizing that there is a need, that there need to be solutions. Mr. Chairman, I need to say that solutions that need to be looked at need to be balanced. We cannot only look at the long term. We cannot only look at the short term. The predictability of this province would be a lot easier if we said: okay, from today on there will be no more people coming to this province; none of our children will be looking for housing. What happens is we will cut off any sort of housing increases. It wouldn't be very hard to solve it that way. But we have a continuing influx into Alberta. We have our children who are working, and they are getting involved in the marketplace for new units. At the same time, some of those individuals provide opportunities for others when they build a new home, when they start and maybe move into a new condominium. I guess what I'm trying to say is that we do need to have a balance.

I want to speak just for a moment about the $2.5 million for the new transitional housing initiative. The government clearly heard that building units without having services attached is an issue. This program will assist people in transition to move into more stable accommodations once they are ready. Through the task force recommendation of $12 million – they base this on new units built for five years – we approved $2.5 million, a complement of units that will be created this year. There is also $16 million in new transitional supports to seven major municipalities. That started on April 1, 2007. It's $8 million per year. It's over a two-year program. Mr. Chairman, I stress to you again that it is very necessary to have that balanced approach.

We had a meeting today. This government does listen. The members opposite had individuals come to this House. We met with those individuals. First of all, we had a presentation by those individuals, which included press and members opposite, and then this government had a meeting with those individuals to discuss their direct concerns. Mr. Chairman, it was a very good meeting. We discussed the challenges and the hardships that individuals had, what was happening in their community. We talked about solutions, and I believe that, maybe with the exception of one individual, we understood each other's challenges. We had staff who stayed and met with those individuals one on one because that is what is so important. We need to look at the immediate concerns that individuals have. We cannot forget about one segment of our population. This government, this caucus has looked at a balanced approach and a package deal.

Mr. Chairman, when we talk about doing it fast – and I'm taking their comments – that if they talk about a housing secretariat, that housing secretariat would be another form, I believe, of government. We have in place a ministry that very much understands the issues, the issues that were brought forward by the task force, a ministry that is working hard to deal with the issues.

The Chair: We'll come back to that after we recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak this time on Municipal Affairs and Housing. Obviously, we're all engulfed in this issue. Housing is an emergency situation right across the province, and certainly in my own constituency of Edmonton-Calder I'm receiving literally dozens of calls every single day from people that are in a tight spot, so to speak, with rents going up or eviction notices being served. So I've been reflecting on this a great deal because it comes down to the most fundamental thing that people require to survive and to put all the other elements of their lives together, and that is to have a roof over their head. If you don't have that, you're less able to continue with your education, your health is likely to suffer, the family unit is likely to be fractured in some way, and a myriad of other physical and psychological problems. So it comes down to the most central thing that we are meant to protect here as the provincial Legislature and legislators.

So much is being said about spending so much money, but really in my mind and I think in the public's mind this is a regulatory issue. It's not a question of spending hundreds of millions of dollars. It's taking the official duty that we have here to make regulations to protect people from being gouged in their rents. Mr. Chair, it's a regulatory issue, and we don't have to talk about throwing in hundreds of millions of dollars. Certainly, we do when we are looking at building affordable housing in the long term, but we can't expect those units to be in place for weeks or months or even years, I would venture to say, considering how difficult it is to build something in this province, with the tremendous economy that we have.

What we are faced with now is to put a regulation in place to ensure that people aren't getting gouged and that we're not having this huge transfer of money away from the working people of this province, the middle class of this province, the young families of this province, transferring that money out of their pockets and into the landlord system and the landlord and rental companies that are currently enjoying the situation. That's what it's all about, Mr. Chair. It's not about spending hundreds or millions of dollars. I'm tired of hearing these numbers being bandied about. Certainly, it's fine and dandy, and that's what we're doing, but it is a regulatory issue that will save people money, and that is the distinction that everybody who's getting gouged knows, but we're slow to understand it here in this Chamber, at least on the other side.

You know, again, rental companies want to have some idea about what's coming down the tube, as well, and the confusion that we're creating at this juncture is even making people gouge worse because they don't know if something is going to come down. As a result, the rents go up even further and faster and in a more erratic sort of way. That's what we're facing here now, and we're just throwing gasoline on the crisis by dilly-dallying about and not taking decisive action, the responsibility of this House, to provide regulation and direction for the most essential service and industry that all citizens require in this province.

Moving along with that, you know, as we spoke about earlier today in the House, the rental companies know that they have a huge sector of the population over a barrel. They are the people who have been less able or unable to afford a mortgage because, let's say, in Edmonton houses have doubled in the last year or so. So they are stuck having to rent a little bit more. They want to buy a place, but then they're lined up in the crosshairs of rental companies, who can then gouge them even more. So they get stuck in that spinning cycle.

You know, Mr. Chair, if we don't deal with this now, we're going to have a whole generation of young people who are unable to buy their own homes, unable to buy their own condominiums, and less able to start their own families. Really, that's the foundation, the structure by which we move on and we create a responsible society. Landownership is a fundamental building block to building a stable society. People have ownership, they take responsibility, and they have the stability to have a family and to start their own family.

When I look at young people out there, at my own family, I'm just absolutely sick to see that we're not seizing hold of this situation and putting it back on course. We have the opportunity to do that, certainly. We're not outside of the ability to deal with the situation. We can't flounder around like we have been. We can in fact put in reasonable rent guidelines, stabilize the situation, and focus back on making it possible for these young people to buy their first bit of property, a condominium or a small home or something like that, through some sort of mortgage assistance program.

You know, this same Alberta government – well, it's not really the same because I certainly saw much more responsibility in administrations past – foresaw the requirement of giving some assistance to people who are seeking their first mortgage and putting in place a mechanism by which they can have affordable loans to do that. Quite frankly, you know, this goes past and over ideological grounds right across the whole spectrum because the bottom line is to have a stable population, a stable population who has an investment in the future. Quite frankly, this isn't just talking about people's rents and rent guidelines, rent controls, or whatever. We're talking about the future of this province and where people are going to live.

So I really wanted to say my piece on that. I find it quite offensive that we're wasting the time that's available to us to deal with an emergency situation. I appreciate that the minister is stuck between a rock and a hard place, but if there's anything I can do to move that rock along, to give it a push, just give me a ring, and I would be glad to put my shoulder to it. You know what? This is not something that you have to face alone. I know that there are other members across the way that would like to see some rent guidelines in place too. At the very least, electorally, you know, it's going to be a bit of a tight spot whenever that election comes.

An Hon. Member: That's for sure.

Mr. Eggen: Absolutely. You know, you face the music if you don't, right? There are lots of renters that are going to suddenly start voting, and then see what happens.

I wanted to speak about that, but I also have some other issues that are very important, I think, to this budget coming up. You know, as I've come to realize, really the best value for investment for public monies is running it through municipalities. Municipalities have a degree of efficiency that usually delivers the greatest amount of goods for the most reasonable price. What I'm encouraging, whatever initiative we put forward here for housing and for municipalities in general, is that we consult with municipalities in the most interactive way possible.

I have a very good example of an initiative that took place in the city of Edmonton, actually in Edmonton-Calder, in regard to providing affordable housing. The Ascot Garden complex in the Wellington community in my area is just in the process of probably being rebuilt. It was affordable housing and affordable housing units, so it's a difficult situation, of course, because we're trying to protect those units and then also develop the area, create densification. It's all good. So what the city of Edmonton did was go in and buy a percentage of those places before they were even built, thus ensuring that those are going to be affordable housing units for assisted living and suchlike.

This is just an example of a way by which we can look at a local initiative and perhaps apply it to a broader circumstance and encourage municipalities to do this throughout the province: have a certain percentage of any new building that is earmarked for affordable housing or have that developer pay the equivalent into a fund that will build affordable housing in some appropriate place.

I was down in Calgary a couple of weeks ago. They had a housing and homelessness conference down at the Stampede grounds, and that's like ground zero for, you know, a transition from what used to be quite a lot of affordable housing, albeit not such great affordable housing, to a sort of condo, high-rise phenomenon that's taking place around the Stampede grounds. What a great place to impose such an idea, where in fact each of those units being built as new condos could have a percentage that goes to affordable housing either in that development or somewhere close by. Lots of development is taking place. Lots of building is taking place, and we want to make sure that that continues for the whole spectrum of the population.

Municipalities are at the forefront with being able to deal with homelessness as well. Certainly, we have some new funding in regard to the homeless initiative, and we should work as closely as possible. I would like to encourage the municipalities having a hand in a number of initiatives that we see in both Edmonton and Calgary and in Red Deer as well to ensure that that money is being spent in the most efficient way possible.

Another area of concern that I have in regard to . . . [Mr. Eggen's speaking time expired]

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I need to address a couple of issues. The hon. member talks about the future of Alberta, then feels sick about what's happening because of rent guidelines and the stability situation. I want to inform the hon. member that you cannot turn on rent guidelines or rent controls for a year or for two years and then expect private enterprise to come back in and build. What happens is that as soon as you turn on those rent controls, it adds stability. There is no initiative or incentive to build, and it doesn't turn on the day that you turn off rent controls because those entrepreneurs need stability for investment. That adds to the situation. So you won't have building for four or five years or longer. They need to have confidence in the investment and in the government.

I'm working a little backwards on some of the comments that were made. The hon. member talked about the appropriate place to build, and, you know, he has the direction of the appropriate place. Well, Mr. Chairman, there are so many people who also have the focus of where it's appropriate to have housing, that it should occur in their areas. It's not quite the solution that it looks to be.

Mr. Chairman, how much time?

The Clerk: Two minutes.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Chairman, I need to speak about rent supplements. This government's policy is that individuals should not pay more than 30 per cent of their salaries for housing. Now, the individuals that get support are those who are most in need. We have a set amount of money, so when we look at the criteria and the challenges that people come to us with, the individuals that most need the support get the support most. I heard the other day a member of the opposition, I believe, say that there was an individual who had been waiting for three years to get affordable housing. Well, that could very well be true, but there were probably a lot of individuals that needed it more than the person that was waiting. I mean, we need to look at the individuals that need it most.

Mr. Chairman, the other one is when we have discussions about gouging by landlords. Your interpretation of gouging could be a lot different than the interpretation they have. Landlords are not all enjoying the situation. They have higher maintenance costs. I talked to one landlord that can't get a painter, can't get a plumber in. Maintenance is a problem. Repairs are a problem.

The Chair: I hate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(a) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Municipal Affairs and Housing and Health and Wellness relating to the 2007-08 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I would like to advise that earlier this afternoon while the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing was speaking, perhaps it wasn't the Standing Orders that were breached, but accepted practice in this Assembly was breached – and I didn't want to intervene at the time – when an hon. member walked casually through the centre of the Assembly, which isn't normally accepted practice. I would like to perhaps point out to all members that Standing Orders 13(4), (5), and (6) and Beauchesne's 458(1) might make interesting reading for that hon. member and all hon. members in the future. I know that the rules are a little more relaxed during committee, but I think we still have to maintain a certain level of decorum in the House.

With that, I would recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be sure and check out that reading list over the supper break.

Given the hour and given the fact that we've made good progress today, I would like to move that we call it 6 o'clock and that pursuant to Government Motion 19 we reconvene at 7 p.m. in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; at 5:49 p.m. the Assembly adjourned until 7 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 8, 2007

7:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/08

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will call the committee to order. The committee has before it today estimates for the departments of Health and Wellness, Treasury Board, and Municipal Affairs and Housing. We're going to deal with one department at a time. We'll start with Treasury Board.

The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

Treasury Board

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, good evening, Mr. Chairman. Welcome. I am certainly pleased and honoured to represent the department of Treasury Board with the 2007 to 2008 estimates. I would like to introduce some of the folks that are here tonight to pass me secret notes to answer the provocative if not some stimulating questions that I'm sure are to arise: my deputy minister, Brian Manning; Mike Wevers, the distinguished-looking fellow, just a little more distinguished; Aaron Neumeyer; Lori Cresey; and our communications guy probably thought better of attending and is not present.

The Treasury Board was created to provide a co-ordinated and disciplined approach to managing government spending. It's also responsible for leading government's capital planning process, providing advice and analysis on planning, construction costs, capital spending. During this time of phenomenal growth in Alberta, this is a challenge to say the least. As a new ministry and a new government part of our job is to explore new ways of doing things, particularly in the face of rising construction costs and limited resources. This includes identifying, analyzing alternative approaches to delivering capital projects. The work of the Treasury Board is carried out under the umbrella of the Premier's five priorities, with particular focus on governing with integrity and transparency and managing growth pressures.

The ministry also has a supportive role from a financial and accountability perspective in all of the government priorities. The Premier also gave me three areas of focus in my mandate letter that stemmed from his five priorities. These are to establish a Treasury Board secretariat to provide a co-ordinated and disciplined approach to managing government spending and capital planning, to develop a long-term strategic capital plan, and to explore alternative financing for capital projects.

To achieve my mandate and the goals set out in our business plan, we need adequate government investment in our ministry. Before I share some of the highlights of our estimates for 2007-08, I will talk briefly about our business plan and specifically about the five goals we've set out.

Our first goal is to ensure a co-ordinated and disciplined approach to government spending. This means ensuring that the Treasury Board committee, cabinet, and policy committees are provided information/advice to effectively manage government expenditures and capital planning. This also means ensuring that government's plan for managing growth is sustainable. To achieve this, we will lead a review of the government programs to identify opportunities for more effective spending.

Our second goal is to develop a strategic capital plan to address capital requirements associated with Alberta's economic growth.

Besides allocating funding to help meet Alberta's capital needs, our responsibilities also entail evaluating and prioritizing of these needs as part of a long-term plan. We're talking about a more strategic approach to capital planning than there has been in the past. This includes assessing the impact of approved capital projects on future ministry operating programs.

As part of our strategy to strengthen capital planning we have set up the alternative capital financing office, a new body committed to pursuing new ways to undertake capital projects. Governments will only consider alternative approaches to buildings like P3s where it makes sense from a taxpayer's perspective. Saving from an alternative approach could include fixed prices for construction, fixed completion dates, shorter times to build, long-term warranties on work, and guaranteed maintenance over the length of the contract. The northeast Calgary ring road is an example of how to use the alternative approach and how we can save taxpayers' dollars. In this case we'll save around $350 million.

Our third goal is to ensure a co-ordinated and disciplined approach to managing government accountability. We do this through the office of the Controller, which is responsible for government accounting standards and financial management policies. We also inform Albertans about how government is addressing its responsibilities through open and accountable financial management and performance reporting such as the government's annual report.

Goal 4 is to provide objective, risk-based audit services that improve government programs and services. This involves providing auditing services, advice, and assistance to other ministries as they develop risk management processes in accounting and financial management policies.

Our fifth and final goal is managing growth and development in the oil sands area. We are establishing the Oil Sands Sustainable Development Secretariat in response to recommendations of the Radke report on addressing critical growth pressures brought on by the rapid pace of oil sands development. The secretariat will co-ordinate and approve planning, communications, and service delivery to the oil sands region. It will collaborate with ministries, industry, communities, and stakeholders to find a common approach to address the impacts of the oil sands development.

All five of these goals will help us manage growth in the province while setting the stage for Alberta's continued prosperity. The Treasury Board ministry has been structured to help us accomplish these goals.

In regard to estimates the ministry is made up of eight business areas. I'll go through these areas now and will present the ministry's estimates for the 2007-2008 fiscal year. The overall amount to be voted is for expense and equipment/inventory purchases. The ministry's estimate totals $19,240,000. Of the overall estimate $1,633,000 is for the ministry support services. This includes the office of the deputy minister, strategic financial services, and communications. Ministry support services has nine FTEs.

Secretariat of Treasury Board. The secretariat of Treasury Board is responsible for co-ordinating agendas, documents, decisions, requests for support, and advice to the Treasury Board committee. In conjunction with Executive Council the secretariat also reports to and provides information and advice to cabinet and cabinet policy committee. The secretariat has five FTEs, and the estimate required to support it is $868,000.

Oil Sands Sustainable Development Secretariat. As I mentioned earlier, the Oil Sands Sustainable Development Secretariat emerged in response to recommendations in the Radke report. The secretariat will support the expanded role and mandate of the Oils Sands Ministerial Strategy Committee, which is addressing the many pressures arising out of the massive growth in the oil sands area.

The Oil Sands Sustainable Development Secretariat has seven FTEs. Its share of the ministry's overall estimate is $1,100,000.

Corporate internal audit services. Corporate internal audit services supports government priorities to be governed with integrity and transparency. This body conducts internal audits on a risk-prioritized basis to ministries across government. It improves other ministries' operations and fiscal management by identifying and recommending improvements to ministries' risk management control and governance process. Our ministry's estimate for corporate internal audit services, with 25 FTEs, is $4,932,000.

Office of the Controller. As I mentioned previously, the office of the Controller is responsible for government accounting standards and financial management policies. It supports the third goal of our business plan, ensuring a co-ordinated and disciplined approach to the management of government accountability. The office of the Controller has 24 FTEs, and the ministry's estimate for this business area is $3,057,000.

Spending management and planning plays a lead role in providing a co-ordinated and disciplined approach to the management of government spending, the first goal in our business plan. With 28 FTEs this is the primary contact with ministries for all program budgeting and spending issues, and it reviews programs across government to find ways ministries can more effectively spend money and still achieve their objectives. The ministry's estimate for this area is $3,600,000.

Strategic capital planning has three distinct responsibilities that support our ministry's mandate to develop a long-term strategic capital plan. This area co-ordinates development of both the five-year and long-term capital plan. It ensures that government takes a disciplined approach to managing and controlling capital spending, and it develops common parameters for demographic and economic change. This is essential if we're going to develop strategies for long-term program delivery to meet the ministry's capital needs. Strategic capital planning has 11 FTEs. The ministry's estimate for this area is $2,239,000.

We have established the alternative capital financing office, which I mentioned earlier is a body to support our second business plan goal, to develop a strategic capital plan. The alternative capital financing office is a new body. Its role is to assess opportunities within the overall capital plan for managing capital projects by using alternative financing models. As part of its work the office will work with partners from other jurisdictions that have already developed alternative financing methods, tapping into their expertise and implementing P3s here in Alberta. The alternative capital financing office has six FTEs, and its share of the ministry's overall estimates is $1,711,000. [Mr. Snelgrove's speaking time expired]

Well, I look forward to any questions you might have.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just so that you have clarity on what will happen today, we have a total of three hours allocated, and we are going to deal with ministries sequentially. There is no time limit. We have up to three hours in total. We are going to start with the Treasury Board, and once we're done with them, we'll proceed with Municipal Affairs and Housing and then Health and Wellness.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. I do appreciate the comments that the minister has made. I want to talk on two issues, the first one on the alternate capital financing office identifying and analyzing options for financing capital projects and negotiating P3s where feasible. In Whitecourt the Northern Gateway school division has recommended a modernization of our high school. I know that in our capital discussions to date, we've discussed opportunities for P3s in new capital projects. Has the minister considered or has there been a discussion around P3s with modernization programs, and if not, why not? I think that modernization programs, too, could form good opportunities for P3s, and there may be some opportunities for savings and long-term maintenance of our buildings. I know that some of the modernization programs are $5 million, $10 million programs for their schools.

The second one is goal 5, managing growth and development in the oil sands area. I know that in the spring we had some discussion with regard to developing an Oil Sands Sustainable Development Secretariat, and I just wanted to know what the progress was on that appointment and if the minister has some ideas how that's going to develop and when it's going to develop?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: You bet. Thank you. The situation with regard to the P3s around modernization. Treasury Board would be very, very happy to sit down with the Minister of Education, were he to come forward through the department, and say: we've identified these projects, and we would like your department's help in assessing whether there is an opportunity for a P3 or not. We're still maintaining, the government maintains that the different departments, Education for example, have their allocations of capital dollars, so it's up to them to prioritize which projects would need to be done.

I think there would be a tremendous opportunity because, in fact, many of the schools we're dealing with now in Alberta are of the same vintage, same age, all just about have the same roof or electrical that may need replacing. There probably is an opportunity under the cost certainty part of our thing to say: look, you can do this school in Edson, the same kind of a thing in Whitecourt, and maybe one in Hinton. There may be a tremendous savings in mobilizing these people, and also their becoming familiar with what's required on the project. So I think there is an opportunity, and we would do that if it were identified from the Minister of Education as their priority for their capital.

The oil sands secretariat. We had an extremely good meeting with Mayor Blake a few weeks ago – two weeks ago, I think, now – and it was very reassuring to see Mayor Blake and some of her council and administration say: our biggest problem, quite frankly, is planning. We are in such a tough area here that someone who gets good at that is hired away by either the large oil companies or the other commercial planners, and they lose them, so they're very, very short-staffed. I think the number she used was, in fact, that the city was short over 140 municipal employees.

I know that my colleagues in Municipal Affairs and Infrastructure and Transportation would be happy to sit down with the group from Fort McMurray, look at what their needs are in relation to bringing together a full and comprehensive plan around the issues in Fort McMurray and then be able to communicate back to the people of Fort McMurray: we've finally got a plan that we can understand. It certainly will be Fort McMurray's plan, just with our assistance in developing it. We are interviewing for the ADM position in the oil sands secretariat. But even without filling the spot, we have been working with all of the ministries that were identified in the Radke report and what they will be doing to help alleviate the issues specific to that area.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before you begin speaking, if you can just advise me whether you want to take your time going back and forth with questions and answers. Then we can allocate 20 minutes' time between yourself and a minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much. I'm delighted to have the opportunity to be able to ask the minister a few questions, particularly about his core businesses and his goals and strategies. I'm going to begin with your core business 1. Under 1.3 you say that you're going to "lead a review of ministry programs to identify opportunities for more effective spending to achieve program objectives." I'm wondering if you can expand on that, Minister, and give me some indication of when that's going to start and what you see yourself being able to achieve in that review. I know that caucus will be working on it with you, but I know that you must have some goals that you are hoping to come out the other end with.

Your core business 2: the ministry of Treasury Board is responsible for developing the government's long-term strategic capital plan to address their needs related to growth and assist in managing inflation. I know that inside the capital plan inflation is running, you know, out of control, so I'm wondering if you see anything that you can do that would help to alleviate some of that inflationary pressure, whether by extending the length of the capital plan, or do you have some other ideas that might be able to work in there?

Minister, I know that we're trying to address some of the deferred maintenance through the surplus account, but I would also like to know: if that doesn't work out, how do you plan on dealing with that issue? Is it going to become part of the capital plan on a longer term basis?

The other issue that I have with the capital plan. I would like to know, through the review that you're doing of the capital plan, if you're looking at tying it into the operating budget a little more carefully than perhaps it has been in the past so that we understand more accurately the impact that it will have on our operating budget in the next three, five, seven, or 10 years as that capital plan comes on stream.

In your third core business you talk about the annual performance report, audited financial statements, and other supplementary financial information. My question on this is on outcome measurement. Minister, could we have your views on whether or not it's possible to look at more outcome-based performance measures so that we know inside our programs, when we're spending $10 billion or $11 billion on health care, for example, if there any outcomes where we can actually say that we have achieved something or accomplished something or that we know we're making headway on pretty much anything?

Number 4 is on the control and governance systems while maintaining the independence required by standards of the Institute of Internal Auditors. This is an interesting one to me because I'm convinced that inside this enormous budget of ours there is some overlap and some duplication between some of the departments. I know that one of the things that Service Alberta has tried to do over the years is to try and eliminate some of that by combining under one umbrella the ability to do some of the purchasing. I'm wondering if during the time that you've been minister, you've had any opportunity at all to try and determine if there is an issue there, and if so, what do you see us being able to do about it under your ministry?

Under your fifth goal, managing growth and development in the oil sands, I wanted to make a comment that's a sidebar to this. I truly appreciate the Radke report and what it has pointed out for the Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, Peace River areas, that are tied, in some ways to lesser degrees, to the oil sands. I also come from an area that has had unbelievable growth. So when you're looking at that, I'm wondering if you're looking at the other parts of the province where we've also sustained very rapid growth or are having trouble keeping up with things like getting schools built, you know, as fast. In my riding, for example, we're having right now between 5,000 and 6,000 people a year move into our riding. They're spread out between Langdon, Chestermere, and Airdrie mostly, although Rocky View municipal district is also growing just on a population basis.

So when you're looking at the rapid growth for the north, I'm wondering if you've also tied it into the capital plan and looked at reprioritizing some of the projects that we have to perhaps mirror a little closer where some of the growth areas are. I understand that there are 28 communities in the province that are experiencing high growth. I know that it's not just in my area. They're all stressing out pretty good too. While I recognize that the money that will be going to municipal affairs will help alleviate some of those problems, is there a tie-back into our capital plan and our operating plan so that we can ensure that money is being spent wisely and in the right places?

My last comment, Minister, is this. When we talk about, you know, reviewing programs to ensure that everything is sort of matched up and co-ordinated to make sure that we reduce duplication and issues like that, I want to point out something. When I was going through the budget, I couldn't help but wonder, after listening to question period again today, about how we're not doing anything for anybody ever and that the world as we know it is ending. So I decided that I would do a little review of my own, and I came up with some interesting numbers. For example, in child care, which incorporates family support for children with disabilities, family and community support services, prevention of family violence, et cetera, et cetera, we're spending $971,605,000. Under Employment, Immigration and Industry, where we're dealing with income supports, for example, about $644 million of that department is going to help people who need assistance. Municipal affairs under housing services is spending $309,104,000, and then including capital grants to local municipalities and things is another $415 million.

Seniors and Community Supports is $1,764,000, and that includes everything from seniors' services, disability supports, PDD, community service programs, which includes things like seniors' lodge assistance, senior citizen unique homes, supports to providers of seniors' housing, and affordable housing as well. Infrastructure and Transportation are supplying $1.2 billion in support to municipalities, which has got to help people keep taxes a little bit lower in some of the cities, and we have the natural gas rebates of $477,300,000.

When you do sort of a rough estimate of that portion of our budget, which is directly going to help people who are a little bit less fortunate or need a little additional help, we're very close to $6 billion in those numbers alone out of our budget, or roughly $1,500 for every man, woman, and child in the province. So I'm wondering if you're satisfied. Are we spending these monies in the correct way, or should we, in fact, get rid of most of these programs and just come in with an income support program where we don't have to, you know, deal with all of everybody's personal issues on a day-to-day basis? Maybe we could do more with a lot less. I would just love your opinion on any or all of those things, Minister.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: I've got notes now, I'll tell you. I feel like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek here. I'll try and keep this kind of along the order of the questions, although some of them fit back and forth together.

About cost review and the timelines around it and how I'd like to see it happen. One of the things that I think we need to do – and we're going to be holding a caucus retreat in June. That will give us an opportunity to reflect a little bit on the budget debate here, but I think it will give us an opportunity to kind of set the goal posts out there. I'd like to call it Alberta 20/20, perfect vision. So we'll know where we expect government to be, and it will be very helpful in determining priorities that we face right now if we know what we want this to look like down the road.

Then, with that in mind, as you review the different departments – we have right now a deputy minister's council that is working internally to identify areas that they can work on and to try and come up with some kind of a template that we can hold all government departments to so that you're not dealing with them from different pressures. I think the hon. member would know that you can go through a committee review where you may have people that are not supportive of one department or another, so we need to make sure that we have a consistent approach to looking at: are the departments achieving the goals that are set out for them?

I would expect that in most of this review there is a lot of information that could come internally, and towards the end of summer, September, October, early into the budgeting process, we will be able to have a thorough look at these departments and their relationships with each other, which is critical to: does this fit in this department? Should it go here? We had some major changes in the makeup of our cabinet, and I don't know if that's done yet. We want to have that flexibility to ask all the questions about how it will shake out.

Then controlling costs. One of the things that is so critical for us to do is develop a relationship with our municipal partners around how we're going to deliver goods and stuff in their communities, even as little as saying about competing for contractors in specific areas. I've used this example before: if we're only producing enough paving oil to pave 2,000 kilometres of road, then we ought not tender 2,200. We need to get that information to caucus so that they can make that decision, realizing that if you tender even one kilometre more road than you have the ability to pave, it drives all the costs up. Granted, the Alberta government spends a large amount of money on infrastructure, but we are a very small part of the total Alberta picture that's spent on infrastructure when you include business and the municipalities. So we need to be in sync with our municipal partners, whether it's building resource roads in the rural areas or overpass embankments. That's critical to us, knowing what capacity they have to have.

The capacity is not just limited to road building or paving. We need to try and build capacity into the building industry. Some of the things that we think will help are by packaging up schools, for example, and being able to build schools that are very similar in design. You may be able to go into an area and say: "We've got, you know, five or six schools that are very similar. Does that make it easier for you to bid as a contractor?" I can't tell you if you're better off to do 30 schools and get the big guys, or whether you're able to go with five and develop small contractors into relationships where they may turn into big contractors and increase capacity, or whether we have to look out of the province and out of the country, in fact, to bring contractors into some of the bigger projects by packaging, whether it be a university expansion or a hospital expansion. We need to be able to look at it without committing to things that we don't want to do. That's just about like touching a fan. You might be really close. So we have to be careful because it's taxpayers' dollars, and we'll look after them.

There's a huge opportunity, I think, if we're fortunate enough this year to have unallocated surpluses. We've determined, as was said in the throne speech, that one-third would go to savings and investment and that two-thirds would go into deferred maintenance or replacement capital or things that we have been able to identify that we need to address and possibly create a fund.

The Auditor General has suggested to us quite clearly that we should be addressing the fact that we know that if we build a hospital now, in so many years – maybe it's 10 years – you need to start upgrading. Maybe it's next year. At 20 years, 30 years, and 50 years what are your known costs going to be? If you pave a highway this year, if you build a highway – and the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation is expert at saying: given typical wear patterns, in 15 years you need to do this – that money needs to start to be identified earlier in the process so that we don't box ourselves into a deferred maintenance shortage or a backlog. The Auditor General's other request of us, too, is to ensure that when you're making the decisions as caucus how many schools you're going to build, you have all of this information available to you to know that you've made that decision on good grounds.

I've asked the chair of the capital planning committee to also produce for us maps that will show very clearly. It's easy to have a binder full of all the highway projects in Alberta – and there is an enormous number – but I think that if you can see the plan that says that this backbone of Alberta needs to be completed and these feeder ribs to the skeleton need to be done and here's why – if we just listed off the numbers of secondaries or highways, most Albertans wouldn't know where they are or what their relationship to the infrastructure plan is. So in being able to bring these all together, we can actually look and see the progress we're making on building the plan and having a real plan and not just a list of projects that'll come together. The maps are coming. I think I want them bigger than they were.

One more co-ordinated thing that the government I think will see not only huge dollar savings in but operational efficiencies is the IT co-ordination. Our deputy in government services has been working with IT on very, very good initiatives that the hon. minister of restructuring and efficiencies was before, and we are bringing all government departments onto a common server. We have a very good plan in the works that will show how this system is going to benefit and how it's going to work and what departments may need extra capacity at what level and the relationship to all the rest of government. This will also be the same for the radio communications system that we need, which will work for the RCMP, for Environment, Sustainable Resources, and the municipalities.

But it's really important that before we start down this line, we know what the plan is and what it means to every single department, and then we can bring the book of projects that build the plan. I'm being very careful in that everyone will be able to see: here's the plan, okay? Here are the existing costs, and here are the savings from this plan, and here's how we support going down the road if this thing becomes a priority for it.

When we talk with the Auditor General, my emphasis to him is that this needs to be run far more like a corporate identity than a whole bunch of different corporate structures competing for the same goal. We have to focus on branding Alberta by doing it. I know that it's difficult, but we also need to remove the artificial barriers that some of our departments have put with each other. By making them develop that plan together, I think they'll start to see that this is the approach we want to take, and if we're going to get the projects we need, we have to have that plan clearly laid out.

From that, talk about purchasing. Very, very interesting. I think we can look quite differently at how we purchase a lot of smaller items. We have been given presentations where people can show that we can go out of our system, online, buy what we need. These systems are so fast and so can give us the competitive price of the day, what we've paid before, what it is. Try to start to buy far more strategically and make the paperwork around the purchasing far easier. If you have ever attended a conference on behalf of two ministries and used the wrong credit card, you'd know what I'm talking about with us making it difficult.

From going to common purchasing, without getting into health care but just going into the Service Alberta purchasing and our Treasury Board – we spend around $900 million in government on items less than $10,000 – we estimate between 10 and 17 per cent savings.

The Deputy Chair: Any others for the Treasury Board? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Before I recognize you, I just want to reclarify because somebody sent me a note. When we finish with the Treasury Board, we will proceed with the minister of municipal affairs and then the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Chair. It's a pleasure to stand here today. As with my colleagues, whether or not I ask more questions will be whether or not I get the answers to the ones I ask the first time. Most of them are fairly small, and a couple are points of clarification.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just a second. There seems to be a buzzing sound, and it appears like somebody may have a BlackBerry that's ringing silently, which is being picked up by the sound system. Please look on your table.

Mr. Griffiths: It's coming from outside.

The Deputy Chair: It's coming from outside? Okay.

Well, hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, you may proceed.

Mr. Griffiths: I'll do the best I can. Thank you, Chair.

I'm sort of going to start at the back and work my way forward. Some of the questions I had were under core business 5, managing growth and development in the oil sands areas. I was mostly curious if the intent of the entire plan is to develop a work plan and work with other ministries and industry and communities. I'm wondering what the complete nature of that plan is, whether it's just a land-use development and infrastructure development for housing and for water and waste water or if it will include some components of workforce development. I've argued many times that one of the greatest challenges we're going to have and that the one item I actually believe will hold back development in Alberta and may impact our economy is whether or not we attract the qualified skilled workforce that's necessary. So I'm wondering exactly how large that component is.

On core business 4 I was very pleased to see that one of the challenges the department is undertaking is in evaluating and improving the effectiveness, efficiency, and economy of their programs and services. It tied into another business plan component of the departments. I'm wondering if it's going to deal with regulations. I know that it's probably not the purview of the Treasury Board; it might be more of Service Alberta. But when you're evaluating and improving the effectiveness and efficiency and economy of programs and services, regulations are going to be a critical component. So I'm wondering if it is more related to the purview of another department, if you're going to ensure that the regulations are part of that review.

There are two sections that both relate to performance measures: under goal 1, 1.5, reviewing business plan standards to establish submission requirements for ministries, and then 3.4, participating in the development and introduction of measures to benchmark improvements in the quality of life for all Albertans. Those benchmarks for 3.4 are very critical, and performance measures are in general.

Indeed, in Public Accounts I've argued endlessly and repeatedly that there are three types of performance measures that can be used. The first is satisfaction type surveys that just show whether clients are happy. The second is output measures that just show volume. Quite frankly, I mean, it would be like evaluating how many students graduate from high school. That's an output. But the real performance measures, if you're assisting other departments in improving their measurements and establishing measurements for quality of life, are the outcomes. That's not whether we have, you know, 95 per cent of our students graduating from high school but whether or not they're getting jobs after, that it's a meaningful education that makes them employable in the workforce. So I'm curious about the development of the benchmarks for measuring the quality of life for Albertans and how you're going to assist other ministries by reviewing their business plans and establishing submission requirements for ministries.

Two more questions. One of the government's priorities is to ensure that the spending associated with the government's plan for managing growth is sustainable. I think that's a key goal and performance measure of this department. In this budget we have quite a remarkable increase in spending, and I'm wondering what sorts of protocols you followed to establish whether or not this is a sustainable level of growth and how long it's going to carry on. Assuming it is one thing, or saying it is another thing, but how exactly did you define whether or not it is a sustainable rate of growth?

The final question I had: since this department is about managing the spending and managing performance measures and helping other ministries become more effective, I'm wondering if there is some component that's missing from this business plan that deals with managing expectations. It's not necessarily even the public's but the ministries' expectations of what they're going to be able to do year in and year out, not necessarily assuming that they're always going to get a 7 or 8 or 10 per cent increase but being realistic and accounting and factoring for the population growth plus inflation.

That should do it for now. Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yeah. There are some extremely interesting questions there. I want to go right to the quality of life stuff because I think that's absolutely essential. He makes very good points about surveys and understanding things that we can measure. I do agree that unless you can measure it, it's probably not that important. But we can measure quality of life, and I would clearly like to see the government keeping an eye on sound financial management but changing our measurement to outcomes. I know that I think we live in trepidation of the Auditor General coming in and finding out that we didn't spend what we thought we did, but to me and to the people that I represent, what we spent is very important, how we got our results back from it. What did it mean? Did we educate a whole bunch of buggy makers that are the best buggy makers in the world a hundred years after we quit using horses?

I think caucus would say that we do need that balance in there that says that these quality of life issues are going to be held up to ministerial departments on an ongoing basis. I think it's been quite easy in government to design a project, approve it through the former SPCs, now through CPCs, through caucus, through our department, and then we kind of let it go without continually monitoring and making the department respond back to us that they are in fact achieving the goals. Unfortunately, one of the only tools we have is money. But I think we'll be ready to say, "If you're not achieving those goals or if what you're doing isn't relevant, then money becomes the tool we measure your support from government at."

The regulatory review does work under Service Alberta, but it works for every department and, therefore, does have a large effect on our program delivery because in many ways when you have a government that deals with all aspects of life, you are bound to run into contradictory policy. The minister of municipal affairs was to point out that we have to change some of the regulations around secondary suites. We have a huge issue around housing. That's one of the fastest solutions to increasing capacity for shelters. So we need to make sure that the policy from whichever department, probably his too – you know, that we're not getting in each other's way. We need to make sure that not only policy is co-ordinated, that unnecessary regulation that business tells us needs to be reviewed – and we have an excellent regulatory review member now doing a great job of ensuring that they're well vetted. The regulatory review, the policy co-ordination: all of these things need to come together for us to do what we're doing.

As the hon. member pointed out clearly, growing government at 10 per cent is not sustainable unless the economy and all of our incomes far exceed 10 per cent, and that's probably not practical. We are setting targets out early in the year in our budget that we expect that 4 per cent growth is more realistic in government, and we're going to work very diligently through the summer to try and achieve the goals we've set out in our three-year financial plan. Also, it may mean that we need to reallocate within budgets to address the priorities that the Premier and this government have set out.

As we do all of the things that the hon. member said, benchmarking what we want to achieve but understanding where we want to be, making sure we co-ordinate our departments – this is a huge job, and the Treasury Board will try and co-ordinate with all of our CPC chairs, our other ministers, and in fact all of caucus, who the Premier has clearly said will have the say in how we govern.

How do we measure up around the world? Recently our performance measuring document that we use was recognized by New Zealand as leading in the world. So, I mean, in all honesty our internal auditors, our auditing system, the way that we manage government in an accountability thing is really continually and continuously recognized by the Auditor General as being certainly the best he knows, the best in Canada. I would suggest that just because we know of the situation down the road, we probably are one of the top in the world for being able to identify and clearly account for the money that we spend.

The oil sands approach very clearly will be one of co-ordination in virtually all aspects. It's actually a very good template for us to look at every high growth area and to identify how important it is that the guy building the bridge is also the one building the road to the bridge and to identify where the growth areas are and that the communities and the neighborhoods and the subdivisions have schools in the plan that will be there when the kids are there.

It's really difficult to keep up all over Alberta. The oil sands did recognize Cold Lake, Bonnyville, and some of Peace Country, but the co-ordination will probably be one of the critical steps of the oil sands secretariat. I think we can safely say that the proposed development around the Fort Saskatchewan and Redwater areas should be something we've learned from the Radke report about what not to do. So let's get out ahead of this and set out our infrastructure and identify the stress it will have on the surrounding communities so that we don't get into the same mistake again.

The Deputy Chair: Any others for the Treasury Board? Seeing none, we shall proceed with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Hon. President of the Treasury Board, your staff can leave now if they so choose.

Hon. minister, would you please introduce your staff present in the Assembly?

Municipal Affairs and Housing

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed an honour for me to introduce my staff. They have done so much work not only in order to make this presentation and have the budget in place but also all the great work that they have done in the last three months.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to introduce my deputy minister, Shelley Ewart-Johnson, who is sitting with me on my right. I'd also like to introduce Robin Wigston, who is the assistant deputy minister of housing, immediately on my left, and Brian Quickfall, the assistant deputy minister of local government services. At this time I would also like to introduce Peter Crerar, the assistant deputy minister, strategic corporate services, who is in the gallery. I see that Ivan Moore, who is the assistant deputy minister of the public safety division, has just stepped out for a moment. Also, I would like to thank the staff that are back at the offices of the ministry that have also done so much work.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. I'm going to take a little bit different approach this year with the minister's budget. I recall not long ago when I served 15 years as councillor and mayor for the town of Whitecourt. My comments last week to my mayors in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne were that I wish I was the mayor of Whitecourt at this time with the support that they get from this ministry and the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation.

I want to highlight to the minister, because the minister probably doesn't hear this, from my mayors from Alberta Beach to Yellowstone a thank you for the $14,675,000 in this budget that he and his staff have assigned just in this last couple of weeks to our municipalities. This is for the municipal sustainability initiative, the Alberta municipal infrastructure program, the new deals for cities, the street improvement program, and the rural transportation grant.

I'm going to list them off because my mayors and councils, you know, I meet with on a very regular basis, and a lot of our time we talk about funding from the province. Alberta Beach, $281,201; Birch Cove, $27,656; Castle Island, $25,281; Lac Ste. Anne county, $2.6 million; Mayerthorpe, $597,000; Nakamun Park, $37,000; Onoway, $359,000; Ross Haven, $63,000; Sandy Beach, $91,000; Sangudo, $175,000; Silver Sands, $66,000; South View, $47,000; Sunrise Beach, $53,000; Sunset Point, $85,000; Val Quentin, $69,000; West Cove, $58,000; Whitecourt, $2.9 million; Woodlands county, $1.7 million; Yellowhead county, $5.2 million; Yellowstone, $53,000. Minister, thank you.

When I do have problems – and once in a while, you know, there are problems where a community doesn't feel that they've gotten their fair share – I call Robin, and he resolves the problem for me, and he makes it much easier for me to go back home on the weekends and face the mayor and the community and the radio stations and the Whitecourt paper and my other nine papers that I write articles for each and every week.

I want to thank the minister and the staff once again. I appreciate taking up the time of the Legislature tonight on behalf of my constituents to thank him for a job well done.

Thank you.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I'd very much like to respond to the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne. It is indeed a pleasure to hear those kind words. I want to say that it has also been very gratifying to hear many communities that have talked about the support for this funding going to their municipalities. There's no doubt that there have been some questions about how that distribution was to take place.

I want to quote individuals that came from Canmore and Banff. I had meetings with the mayors of those communities and that area, and they were so supportive also of how this funding will help. I can talk about communities in different parts of the province that have looked and said: you know, we needed a little push, and this push is going to be very instrumental in making our co-operation and regional planning work much better.

Mr. Chairman, that little part, if that's what that does to help communities discuss, maybe eliminate some duplication, then I want to say that, you know, we have succeeded. Are the solutions perfect? No. We are going to work with municipalities, with associations, making sure that we try to get to a stage that municipalities that are in hardship are supported; that for municipalities that have unique situations, whether they be municipalities that are in the tourist industry or in the tourist areas, their challenges are recognized; making sure that some of the challenges that municipalities that are beside large centres have are also recognized; and, yes, also the large municipalities such as Edmonton and Calgary, making sure that some of the focuses that they have can be recognized.

I again stress to you, Mr. Chairman, that we will continue to work having two major focuses, one focus still being that we need to communicate, collaborate, and co-operate regionally, and the second one being that we need to support municipalities so that they can have autonomy yet have sustainability and predictability of funding.

It is very nice to know that I've had many MLAs from both sides of the House give me compliments on the hard work that my staff have done. I appreciate the acknowledgement because they very much have worked very hard and are very dedicated. I know that they had no idea when this ministry started that we would be on the roller coaster, maybe, that we have been, but I compliment them. I also compliment the MLAs for being patient because it is a learning curve for all of us.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few perhaps more comments than questions but in the end, I guess, a question about the direction that we're going. Under your core businesses and goals, Minister, one of the things that you talk about in goal 2 is to contribute to the financial sustainability of local governments, which are responsible and accountable to their citizens. I guess my question is this: when the provincial government is funding so many things inside municipalities, do the lines not become a bit blurred as to who's funding what and who's accountable or responsible for what?

I come back to, I guess, an issue that I know I've raised before, but it's something that I feel quite strongly about, and that is making sure that the taxpayers know who to hold accountable for what they're paying. When I look at the funding for municipalities, we're connecting with them in various places. In ambulance funding we didn't take it all over, but we're funding a portion of it. In library funding we top up some of the things that they pay for. FCSS is in another department, I know, but that type of thing where there's an interconnection between us and the municipality. I've often wondered why it is that if we're going to disconnect ourselves from this $1.4 billion, you know, even if it is just for the 10 years, why we do not disentangle some of the issues that people would find on their tax forms as a municipal tax base; for example, where they would know who to call on which issue.

The recognition, for example, on the ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary. These are not traditionally a provincial responsibility. Urban transportation was the responsibility of the urban municipality, yet we've stepped into that and are spending billions of dollars. Now, I know that they do not have the financial resources to pay for that, and I'm glad that we're doing it. I think it's absolutely essential, but it's once again where we've crossed over lines between what municipalities fund and what we should be funding.

That brings me to affordable housing. Even inside the various departments of the government of Alberta affordable housing, social housing, rent supplements, and things are crossed over between various ministries, and it's very hard to just actually have an accurate handle on what we fund, whether it's the minister responsible for EII or seniors coming back into yours, there's a difficulty, I think.

I guess I have to relate it back to the questions that are asked in question period when the accusation is that we're not doing enough for people or that we should get rid of natural gas rebates or various things so that we can put more money into affordable housing. Is that indeed the direction that we should be going? Should we be looking at every dollar that's spent by this government to help people stay in their homes or to bring their rent down to a sustainable level, various things like that? Minister, is there a way that we could be doing it more efficiently, more effectively so that we can track exactly what we're doing or whether or not it's making any difference?

Years ago there were rent controls in Alberta. They were proven not to work, but there was also, Minister, a tax credit for renters. I'm wondering if that's something that you've looked at in the affordable housing area. Is there a way that we can help people even with a bit of a tax reduction, that would be more effective than some of the things that we're doing?

When you're looking at the affordable housing issue, how do you prioritize which programs you will fund? Do you think that the federal government will be doing another assistance like the Canada/Alberta infrastructure program, where money could be allocated into affordable housing so that we could perhaps leverage some of these dollars out a little bit more than we have been?

I think that probably the key one for me is that I don't believe that the government should in fact be building houses. We went down this road with the Alberta Mortgage and Housing Corporation for years. We helped people get into houses with almost zero down or maybe 2 or 3 per cent down, but at the end of the day when the economy crashed in the '80s, cities like Airdrie, which was just maybe 16,000 people at that time, ended up with 500 empty houses on our streets all owned by Alberta Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It took years for that surplus of houses to be used up, for the people who had stayed there, if they could even sell the house, to try and get back up to what they owed on their mortgage for it.

When government does something, there is an equal and opposite reaction. I'm hopeful that whatever steps we take trying to assist people today, we take the time to look at what the potential reactions are. To unwind ourselves from the Alberta Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I believe the price tag was about $3.5 billion. That was an additional loss to the taxpayers of the province. So I urge in anything that we do to be careful, that we look at the programs that we're delivering, such as seniors' housing, the lodges, and those types of things, to ensure that if we're putting in resources, we're putting resources into the right places for that.

So with that, Mr. Minister, thank you very much for the opportunity to just raise a few of my concerns, and I'd appreciate your input. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much. I would like to say that, you know, the role of government is very much a balancing act. It is: where and how do we support individuals? Where do we get involved, you know, in supporting individuals and to what extent?

When we talked about the support in funding so many things and where the lines are, I want to say that I feel that some of the questions you have are pertinent in the way that we are having communication with municipalities, with the associations, and we have also talked to those individuals. We are having consultation between now and September because I really believe that with autonomy from municipality comes responsibility. There's no doubt that we cannot continue on a patch system. I think you are absolutely right. Not only do the citizens need to have the right to know who is responsible, but municipalities need to know who is responsible.

An interesting comment, and I sort of relay it to the minister of health. Individual municipalities are asking us: where are you going with ambulances? They're at the point of saying: you know, we really don't care if you go to Health or you go to Municipal Affairs or their responsibility; just tell us because sitting in limbo is not working.

The other point that I'd like to make is on the comments that you made about libraries. We have met with the library association. We have gone to the library conference. I have asked them to look at where they feel they need to be and that we have a direction because we cannot go on, for predictability purposes especially and the sustainability of libraries – every year they look at a patch system and say, "Well, we need to go in this direction, and we need to try to address these issues," and then the next year it's something else. So I've asked them a little bit differently.

I've asked them: if you had a utopian world, at the end in that utopian world, in 25 or 50 years, where do you want to be? So when we figure out where libraries should be, then let's work our way in that direction. Maybe libraries should completely be under the auspices of municipalities, or maybe FCSS should be under municipalities. But I think that we need to know where we're going, and municipalities need to know where they're going. We need to find some focus and direction. So municipalities have, no question, especially when they're doing budgets, to wait for us to figure out what kind of money and support we're giving in order to support them. So you can't ask municipalities to have predictability and regional planning if we don't do it ourselves. So I think that we need to do it ourselves. And very good points in that direction.

When you talk about ring roads and sometimes crossing the lines, there's no doubt that municipalities are having a challenge, and the Alberta municipal infrastructure program was to assist those municipalities, but you know, because they continue to have challenges, we continue to support. I think the focus that we're having, especially the focus that we should have at the end of three years – and I say that at the end of three years there should be some definite funding, whether it be infrastructure or whether it be the services that they provide, trying to break that dependency and giving autonomy.

You mentioned affordable housing, that it's very hard to get an accurate handle and difficult to make choices. You know, it is difficult to make choices. It is difficult to make the choices because we really need to look at the challenge in a global sense or a long-term sense. What could we achieve? We need to continue to have housing being built. You're absolutely right. We try to stay completely out of owning houses. I don't think we should get into housing.

I think that in conjunction with private enterprise we should be supporting communities, supporting municipalities and working with them to try to achieve some of the major needs that they have in their area. When I talk about the major needs in their area, I truly believe that a municipality probably knows better than anybody else. Is it our responsibility alone? No. It is a provincial responsibility to provide support. The federal government provides support. But it's very much the responsibility of municipalities to identify how those needs can be best addressed.

So some of the funding that we have given to municipalities very much addresses those areas. It addresses the area from the aspect that the municipalities that are in a very high growth area and have the criteria of having their growth rates over 2.59 per cent and their vacancy rate at, just to be clear, 1.7 per cent and the average cost of a two-bedroom suite at $620 – if municipalities meet those criteria, then they are what we consider a high growth area, and they will receive funding to support housing in their community. What does that need to look like? Well, I mean, we encourage them for immediate support to use rent supplements. It's a policy of this government that if you need affordable housing, you should not pay more than 30 per cent of your wage. I think that's fairly reasonable.

So when we look at that, the President of the Treasury Board stated earlier that secondary suites are one of the quickest ways that we can provide units. I think that is a low or a small investment to provide somebody with accessibility to some stability of residency. So that, I think, works. But at the same time, we still need to look at the long term. We need to support private enterprise or municipalities in their long-term planning to make sure that we do have units that are available.

We are in a circumstance where last year – and maybe it was an extraordinary year because it was one of the highest – 100,000 people came to Alberta. Now, that was an extreme. They didn't come with doctors, and they didn't come with teachers, and they didn't come with accommodations. They came looking for a job, and they needed accommodation. So somehow we need to support that accommodation. We also have our children that are in the workforce that are needing accommodation.

Now, the province is growing, and this year it may not be to that extent. Maybe it will only be 50,000 people. Still, 50,000 people that need residences is a very difficult problem, so we need to look in the long term, and at the same time we very much need to look at support. You know, your comments that we have different ministries that are supporting different areas and we don't have enough communication or . . . [Mr. Danyluk's speaking time expired] Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a number of questions for the minister. First of all, I'll just start by asking a couple of questions about the municipal sustainability initiative, which, as I understand it, is a commitment over four years of $1.4 billion to the municipalities and $400 million starting in this coming year. I wonder if the minister could advise me how the allocation was made between the municipalities which are receiving those funds. As I understand it, the amount of $1.4 billion was predicated upon being an approximation of what the provincial portion of the municipal property taxes were, the education component of property taxes. I wonder whether he could advise how that was allocated between the municipalities. Was it done on the basis of population, or was it done on the basis of how those taxes were collected in the various municipalities?

Also with respect to that same fund, I wonder whether he could advise about the constraints that were put on the spending of those funds. I can certainly understand that some of the municipalities are somewhat concerned about the fact that they are having what they call strings attached to the funds which are provided to them. I think the minister has referred to them as boxes rather than strings. But why are those constraints being placed upon what the municipalities can and can't do with the money?

I can certainly understand allocating responsibilities and perhaps changing those responsibilities and having the municipalities assume certain responsibilities which the provincial government is handling right now, but rather than dividing those responsibilities, we seem to have exerted some measure of control over an elected body of government, which admittedly is subsidiary to the provincial government.

Secondly, I'd like some feedback on the issue of the rent stability. I can understand from the minister's responses in the question period that as a general matter of policy he is not in favour of rent controls. I would certainly freely admit that it's certainly not a cure-all, and it's probably not good policy in the long run, but we are dealing with a situation where there's an imbalance in the free market, and the free market has in a sense not responded in the present situation. Because of the fact that there's less than a 1 per cent vacancy rate, there's not a balance between the buyers and the sellers. It's a seller's market, and this is not something that is being cured by building new houses because those people that are caught in this imbalance are individuals that are at the low end of the housing spectrum. They're people that are living in basement suites, in walk-up suites, in older apartment blocks, and although in the vast majority of cases landlords are giving moderate increases, some of them are being faced with very inordinate rent increases.

I wonder whether the minister could assist me in understanding, given the fact that rent stability guidelines are not in the offing, how this relief that he has proposed in the budget would work. As I understand it, there's some $11 million or some figure in that neighbourhood allocated for helping people who are in need of immediate assistance to keep them in their homes. I wonder if he could advise how much of that money is planned to be spent, how it would be administered, how you would determine who would qualify for such assistance, and how much an individual would be able to access through that program. In other words, how would that program work to assist people who are really being forced to leave their homes because of inordinate rent increases?

[Ms Haley in the chair]

The third area: I wondered whether or not the minister had had an opportunity to talk to municipalities about the issue of development permits. I'm thinking of development permits particularly in the area of things like trailer courts and whatnot. I've noticed that in proximity to the city of Calgary the trailer courts in Balzac and Strathmore and west of the city of Calgary are filled year-round with people. They're seeking accommodations wherever they can get them in the case of camper trucks or motorhomes or trailers, portable housing, and it would seem to me that there is some room there for some immediate response by facilitating or at least encouraging the municipalities to facilitate some perhaps temporary development permits to allow some portable housing to be put up in these areas and increasing that capacity.

I'll leave the minister with those inquiries.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm not going to exactly go in the order, if you don't mind, of answering the questions you asked because I think I need to just change a little bit of the direction. The first answer that I want to give you is how the decision was made as far as the municipal sustainability initiative. Well, we looked at population. There's no doubt that we have challenges with population. We have individual communities who have higher populations but no equalized assessment. If we distributed the funding on a population basis as we did the Alberta municipal infrastructure program and, you know, had a base, I don't think we would be solving anything because all we would be doing is adding money and adding dependency on the government.

We looked at exactly what the Premier had talked about. The Premier said that we have $1.4 billion that is collected for education taxes. We will give that back to municipalities for them to gain some sustainability and predictability. It was decided by this government that the $1.4 billion would be in place after year 3. Just as a matter of point, after year 3 the Alberta municipal infrastructure program would be ended. We are ramping up $400 million the first year, the amount paid in education, pro-rated. So about $400 million the first year, $500 million the second, $600 million the third, and $1.4 billion. I'd like to explain to the hon. member that this program is committed for 10 years. That does provide, I believe, some sustainability and predictability.

Madam Chair, I'd also like to talk about the distribution. As I mentioned before, the distribution is very focused, very focused in two avenues: sustainability, predictability. The second one is the aspect of not only regional planning but investigating and looking at different ways that municipalities could work together. What's very important for those municipalities to work together is to have some communication.

I think that what I should read, first of all, is the criteria, which I think is very interesting for those individuals that are critics about the strings on the program. We talk about the core capital. It's divided up into different areas: the first one, core capital. When you look at the core capital, it says: consulted on or jointly planned.

Now, that means that municipalities can do what they want with 80 per cent of that core funding, but with 20 per cent they need to talk to their neighbour. Why do they need to talk to their neighbour? So that we don't get duplication of waterlines, so that we don't get duplication of roads, so that when we have one municipality having one idea and one having another, that these roads meet, which I think is very important. So if you show us that you have consulted and communicated with your adjoining municipality, that's the only criteria. Is it a condition? Yes, it's a condition. But it's a condition to say that you better have talked for 20 per cent with your neighbour. You know, it doesn't need to be on the outside of a city. It is something that is necessary for that community.

We have done the same with the community capital. The co-ordination incentives are a little bit different. That is really the only one that has strict criteria, which is only $50 million out of the $400 million, strict criteria for planned and funded. I say again: planned and funded. That is where municipalities need to plan and talk and co-operate together.

We have taken $100 million, and we have given it to municipalities, as I stated earlier, the ones that have the challenges of the highest growth pressures. We have delivered that funding by population. You asked the question: why didn't we do everything by population, or how was it done? Well, the reason that we didn't do everything by population, I will say, is that there has been so much discrepancy between so many municipalities about the latest census. We used some of our figures, we used some of the census figures, trying to come up with the most accurate figures that we could. But $100 million was taken from the $400 million for affordable housing. I would like to inform the member that we also added funding to municipalities to support the housing, the $100 million. We added another $96 million for the municipalities to have the autonomy of choice in deciding what and how they should distribute that funding.

As I said before, should it be, first of all, by rent supplements, rent stability? The general policy that we talk about needs to work. The cure is not the building of new homes. Really, if we say, "Well, you know, we have a cure; we need to build new homes," you know, the building of homes does support the affordable housing because there are individuals that move from rentals and build homes. This has to be something that's balanced.

I'm sorry, my notes are probably too short. It says: how would relief work in the new legislation? Okay. Let me say how it would work. The relief would work in two real ways. If we talk about rentals, I would suggest to you that if you have a rent that cannot be increased more than once a year, even though there is some concern, it does provide some stability. But more so, there are a number of individuals that are very concerned about their rentals being transferred into condominiums. We have extended that to a year as well. There needs to be a year's notice so that individuals have an opportunity to look for other places.

Mr. Chair, when we talk about the rental support, remember that there are different areas and different ways that this rent support happens. With the funding that municipalities get, they can use it. Employment, Immigration and Industry deals with rent support as well. They look at supporting individuals in need. When we look at the $7 million that was put into the eviction fund, this supports individuals in need.

I think I'm running out of time. You asked me the question about development.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I guess a couple points I'd like to bring up. If I could ask the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to turn to page 261 of the government estimates for 2007-08. I'm curious and I would like to know why, under line 7.3.1, the Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement, in previous years we had $44 million, and this year we have none. I know that in municipalities like the town of Hinton, the town of Grande Cache we had partners that were going to move forward to obtain some of this money. I was told that there was still some money left over, so I'm sort of curious why you're not showing any for our present year, 2007-08. I guess what I'm looking at is that in one of the municipalities, like the town of Hinton, they are obtaining the land to move forward so that they can integrate affordable housing as well as condos and everything else so they have a mix of homes, so we can make sure that we keep it going that way.

I guess another one that we sort of need help on is in the municipality of Jasper. What we have now is that we have some co-operative housing. If somebody wants to buy one of these homes, they can buy them, and they just pay a set price. When they go to move out, they pay that set price, plus they pay a small increment for interest over the time that they've had it.

But the big thing that's working to their disadvantage is our assessment value. When you look at the assessment value of homes in Jasper national park, as you realize, we can't keep building homes there every day; we just have a certain small footprint. Therefore, their school taxes are very, very high. So I'm just wondering what we can sort of do in that scenario because it really hampers the aspect. As you realize, a lot of the people that work in this area are in the hospitality industry, so we've got to try and make it a little more affordable for them.

I guess one of my other questions is with the off-the-reserve aboriginal housing. I can see that we have moved up to $16,142,000 for this year, and I would like to really thank you very much for, number one, moving into the Grande Cache area, where we have co-ops and enterprises of the Aseniwuche Winewak Nation. It has certainly helped us in that area for the simple reason that we can upgrade some of the homes with mobile homes for these people. They are contributing into society. They're working in the mines and the mills in the area. So I hope we can keep that program going for a while so that we can make sure that we move things forward there.

Then one other aspect that I was wondering about is where you've got the rent supplement. I mean, when I look at this, last year our actual was $14,150,000. This year we're moving it up to $24,317,000. I'm just wondering: what factor did you use to move that up to meet the present demand that we have?

On the other aspect of lodges and that – and I know that's really not too much in your area – I guess the one thing I look at is that we're talking about who should be in Housing and who isn't and that. With the Evergreen foundation, just to give you an insight there, with the town of Grande Cache just a year and a half ago we built a 30-unit there. Now we're moving into the municipality of Jasper and going to build some designated assisted living there and some lodge units, but this is putting stress on the municipalities because they work it on a per capita rating so that they have to pay for the aspects of the construction. Any operational deficit they also have to feed in that.

What I'm looking at is if there is some way that we can sort of work on these different aspects for these communities. I realize that you say: number one, they have to meet all these factors with a certain amount of rent for a two-bedroom home, vacancy rate, and a number of other factors. But, you know, these communities are the same as any other booming community. It's booming in their light. So I'm just wondering how we're going to move forward on that.

With the town of Edson we have more land, and I'm just thinking that we should drill down farther when we're talking to this. You know, some of these municipalities have got some good land. We should work on partnering with the municipalities, with the government of Alberta, and with contractors so that we can bring down the price so it makes it feasible for these contractors to go and build an apartment block or townhouses and still make it feasible for people in the low-income bracket to be able to afford to build these houses.

I really look at the aspect of a co-operative type of scenario because I think that really works well. When the people buy it, they can move in, and then they have to keep it up to a standard so that we make sure that we keep it that way.

With those few questions, I'll take my seat and look for some answers.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I can say to the hon. member that the $44 million federal program that he was talking about did end. The money and the funding of that program were used up. We did have $176 million of old money, that was budgeted previously and that was used as well, which we budgeted again, plus $96 million. So that, I hope, answers that question.

But I need to say to the hon. member that when we talk about the challenges of – and I'll use his term – the hospitality communities, Mr. Chairman, I understand those challenges very much. In fact, I had meetings with Canmore and Banff and Jasper and . . .

Mr. Strang: You were in Jasper, and you never invited me?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I'm just kind of surprised that you weren't there, but I think that you were busy. There were other ministers and MLAs that were there. I'm not exactly sure why you weren't, and I want to apologize.

I will say at the same time that what did take place is that I previously met with the mayors of Canmore and Banff. I think the best analogy that was used was that they have a town of 10,000 people, and at any one given time, especially in the summertime, they could have 40,000 or 50,000 people. So in those communities they need to have the infrastructure, the capacity of the infrastructure, the sewer lines and the waterlines and the roads, to accommodate those 50,000 people. Yet what does take place in our distribution of funds – and some of them are per capita – is that that per capita is very much unfair as far as support goes.

So I'd like to inform the hon. member that what has taken place is that we have made that commitment that we are relooking at those needs. To the group that came to see myself along with the minister of infrastructure – and I'm trying to remember who all was there – I made the commitment that we will look at their challenges and try to address them. Like I said before, this municipal sustainability initiative needs to be tweaked because that is how we make a better program.

Mr. Chairman, if I could talk a little bit about the $16 million that is being funded for aboriginal housing, in the housing task force it was asked if this government would match that funding. Well, what happened is that we didn't per se match it with $16 million. I believe that we matched it with a lot more money because we – I and our ministry – believe that we shouldn't segregate anyone from our community as far as support, so any individual, whether they be aboriginal or whoever they may be, should have accessibility to affordable housing. We didn't want to make that criterion. The federal government made that criterion for transferring funds to us. We accepted that funding, we accepted that criterion, but our funding doesn't have that criterion. It is for anyone that is in need.

I need to mention as well the rent supplement. You asked the question about the $14 million in '05-06. Well, we had the $14 million. We added $19 million plus $24 million plus $14 million. I believe that right now, hon. member, we're at $38.3 million for rent supplement. You know, that's gone up by, I would suggest to you, three times. But not only that, hon. member, we have also told municipalities that are in very high growth areas that they could use some of their funding for immediate concerns that would be rent supplement, so it also is there for support.

Mr. Chair, the final comments in regard to partnering with the municipalities and the provincial government and contractors and industry and the need to co-operate. I want to say that that is exactly where we are going and need to go. We need to co-operate with industry. We need to co-operate with municipalities. Municipalities because they know where their challenges and needs are. Industry because industry, in order to survive, needs to be able to have housing. If we can support industry and municipalities and the private enterprise to make affordable housing for individuals that need housing, I think we're winning, and I think that's very critical.

Mr. Chairman, when we speak about co-operation, as I said before, the housing aspect and the minister's sustainability initiative very much revolve around the communication between our government, the federal government, the municipalities, industry, and private enterprise. We as individuals, we as municipalities cannot step away from the responsibility. We cannot step away and say that it is not our problem or not our concern.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere made a comment as she talked about the role of government. Well, I think that as we look at municipalities and look at housing, the role of government is to provide sustainability for municipalities. It is also to provide predictability. But we need to make sure that we not completely eliminate, because we'll never do that, but that we decrease the duplication, that we plan together, and that we remember that we if are an urban and a rural municipality, an urban and a rural community, we can have that identity at the localized level at the same time that we really are one community.

I said this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, that we go to the same churches, we watch the same hockey games, we shop at the same stores, yet at the municipal level we sometimes want to build silos or want to build stovepipes in the same house. We are one community, and we need to work together. I think there are so many success stories that are happening and that can happen. We need to take that same philosophy into housing because we need to work together. I think that we have great opportunities to support each other as Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Minister, I would like to thank you for the strong commitment that you and your ministry have made to enhancing the sustainability of municipal government in Alberta. Particularly in these times of explosive growth in our communities, I would like to commend you on your response in the report to the minister's council.

As a former mayor and president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and, Mr. Chairman, someone who has spent a lot of time in this building prior to being elected as an MLA, pressing the point on these very issues, I have to say that I'm a little disappointed with some of the criticism that has been lobbed against you and this government at a time when, I would submit, support for municipalities has never been greater.

I wonder if you can elaborate further on your goals for some of the recent new funding announced for municipalities and how you see these funds meeting the growth pressures that the municipal leaders themselves have communicated to us. I would say that it relates because in your estimates on page 246, under Local Government Services, you're showing a significant increase – certainly this isn't relative to the millions of dollars that we're committing under some of the other initiatives – going from $106,000,000 last year to $415,000,000 this year, and I'm wondering if you might elaborate on those two points, Mr. Minister.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm sorry; I'm still trying to find the page. What was the page?

Mr. Rogers: Page 246.

Mr. Danyluk: Let me answer your first question about the roles and how they are going to meet the growth pressures. This will be the quick answer: $1.4 billion added to municipalities helps to alleviate the growth pressures. I mean, $1.4 billion is a lot of money. That's the short answer.

The long answer, of course, is that when we look at trying to alleviate growth pressures, it's very necessary that we look at working together and the communication, making sure that we don't have duplication. Those are little things.

The second one is the working together, the working and planning together to make sure that we put ice arenas in strategic places, whether they be in an urban or rural community, to make sure that both communities utilize them, whether it be big or small communities. It's making sure that we share in libraries and that their serviceability is accessible to urbans and rurals or to different communities. It is making sure that when we look at support for our communities and some of their operating costs, we look at community initiatives that are sustainable. Mr. Chairman, in short, it very much means that we have to talk to each other, and that communication alone means and goes a long way to the solutions of meeting those growth pressures.

Now, I can go into what I said before, and I guess I kind of don't want to do too much duplication. But when we look at growth pressures for housing and providing municipalities with support, I look at Calgary at $77 million and I look at Edmonton at $45 million and those individual communities deciding how they can address the growth pressures in housing and how they can get private enterprise involved and how they can get industry involved and how they may want to be involved to address the growth pressures in housing and how they could work together when we support the homeless, when we support the transitional housing. It all adds up, and it is all a balanced solution. When we look at the MSI and we talk about the core capital funding – you know, they can do whatever they feel is right with their 80 per cent of funding.

But for 20 per cent really the minimum that they have to do is talk to each other and say to the adjoining municipality: we are building a road here, and the reason we're building a road here is because we need to have access to your community. The rural community will say: "Well, that's great idea. We're going to build a road that's going to join here. You know what? We can save ourselves some money." This has happened in communities, where one community builds an access road out of their community, and it's here, and the other one builds an access road into their community which is supposed to join, and it's not joining. Why? Only because they're not speaking with each other. So that is the main issue.

The community capital is just to make sure that when community projects are planned, we understand what the community is. We have a situation in some municipalities – and I want to use a smaller municipality, and maybe what I should do is use my municipality of Lac La Biche, which has just voted for amalgamation, and it made sense. We have a town that has 2,700 people. It's basically locked by approximately 3,000 people from the county that are five miles away from the town or against the town, and they're separate municipalities. There are maybe 2,000 people that are in the surrounding area of the county. That makes sense for those communities to get together, talk about structures, talk about facilities, talk about how they can work together for the betterment of one community.

Finally, page 246, where it talks about local government services. I'm not sure exactly what the question was.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, do you just want to clarify what your question was?

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to clarify. My question was just relative to the significant growth in that line item from one year to the other, going from $106 million to $415 million. I'm wondering if you might share with us some of the assistance that might be provided to municipalities out of that local government services budget?

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. It is completely the municipal sustainability initiative. There was 100 and some million dollars there. Basically, $300 million was added plus some fluctuation. That's where that funding is. If you want me to go into greater detail, I would be glad to, but I think that's all right.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have a few questions about the business plan and some general questions that I hope the minister is able to respond to. One of them was kindly asked by the previous member, so I won't have to go over it.

Strategic business plan 2, financially sustainable and accountable municipalities, specifically strategy 2.1, to assist the local government sector to meet the financial reporting and accountability requirements contained in the legislation and regulations. Now, I'm curious because I've had many calls from municipalities within my constituency, and a lot of them are concerned – I can't remember the terminology they used – with the obligations that they're going to have to meet in three years. Will they have to now account for all of the inventory and depreciate it and put money away against the depreciation?

I know that most of the municipalities are concerned because they're not quite sure what the implications are. They're concerned because right now they're already taxed – stressed would probably be the more appropriate word – to meet many of their obligations for infrastructure for their communities, and they're worried that if they have to bank money to offset depreciation of assets, that will even further limit their ability to provide the services that are necessary in their community. So I'm wondering if the minister can comment on how the municipalities will address that and what your department can specifically do to help municipalities address that.

Now, some of the general questions I had. I wonder if the minister has considered or addressed, because I didn't see anything specific in the business plan, encouraging municipalities, specifically large cities, to develop more smart growth plans – developing more LRT systems, bus systems, better transportation systems – encouraging cities and even smaller centres that will eventually reach the same situation to grow up rather than grow out.

We all well know that it costs about the same amount of money to dig a trench to put water and sewer in the ground. All that really varies is the size of the pipe that needs to be put in there. If you build a city street that only houses 80 people, the cost of putting that infrastructure in is going to be a lot higher per capita than if you had 800 people living on the same block and needed larger water and sewer and structural infrastructure. So I'm wondering if there's something that the minister's department is going to be working on in this year and through this business plan to help cities develop more of a smart growth plan.

I know that the minister's department has made recommendations and addressed the housing situation, but from what I've seen, quite a bit of that mostly addresses the high-growth areas and the desperate need for housing. There are a lot of smaller communities in rural Alberta that face another unique challenge, and that's just having any available housing, not just affordable housing. There are communities, one in particular in my constituency, Edgerton, although the same applies to Chauvin and Castor and Coronation and Consort and Heisler – if they do attract some young family to move into that community, oftentimes there's no place for that family to live, and they have to wait a year for a house to be built. If there was something within the Affordable Housing Task Force or something the minister could do to help address the transitional housing for those small communities so that a young family that moves in would have . . .

Do you want me to stop and then get back up and ask more questions?

Mr. Danyluk: No, no. I just want to make sure that I have enough time to answer you.

Mr. Griffiths: Okay.

. . . some transitional housing. The community could access some funds to build a house so that if a young family came in, they could move into it and rent it perhaps from the municipality for a year until their house got built. I mean, again, one of the challenges that a lot of small communities face is: where are the families supposed to live even if there is a job available for them in that small community?

I know that there was some discussion about intermunicipal governance and planning and that it's part of the business plan. I didn't see anything about incentives and encouraging municipalities to work together, but we know that there are going to be a lot of challenges coming up between small towns or medium-sized towns and counties and MDs. The challenge I find, particularly in my constituency – and I'm sure it's a common plight around rural Alberta – is that a lot of the rural municipalities, the MDs and the counties, actually are doing fairly well with cash. Because they have the linear assessments, they have a lot more tax revenue coming in. In fact, one of the municipalities in this province, I heard, was almost about to rebate the entire tax portion that was paid for the year because they didn't need the money while many of the small towns we have are feeling a real crunch. I know that the minister understands this. They don't have a lot of flexibility and extra room in order to provide services.

So now we're starting to see some disputes between municipalities where a lot of the county people are utilizing the services and rec facilities that are in the town, but many communities feel that they don't provide the same proportionate off-set in pay in order to make sure that service can be provided. I think we're going to find this year that we're going to have more and more disputes, and I'm wondering if there is something for incentives to encourage municipalities to work together or disincentives to encourage them not to work independently and ignore each other. Intermunicipal governance planning and management works but only if the municipalities have some sort of inclination that they'll start off on the right foot.

Another comment that I wanted to make was that I worry about the municipal sustainability proposal. I honestly believe in my heart that every single Albertan in this province is taxed enough by municipal, provincial, and federal governments, and it's not a question of whether or not municipalities have or should have greater access to taxing authorities but whether or not the tax dollars that are collected are utilized appropriately and distributed appropriately between the three levels of government to make sure that everyone has the opportunity to provide services. So I'm wondering if you can comment on that.

Finally, I've said this to the previous minister, and I've said it in Public Accounts when I served as the vice-chair: I believe performance measures are critical to make sure that a department runs effectively. You can have satisfaction surveys, and, I mean, most departments do it. It's an easy measure to use satisfaction surveys. How many clients are happy? I even see in your business plan that there are some outcome measures: you know, how many have gone through the program, or how many have qualified, or what's the output?

But I'm wondering about the outcome. Quite frankly, I would love to see within this business plan an outcome measure of how communities are doing so that we can show or evaluate whether or not the rural development strategy is working or our municipal sustainability plan is working, to show that communities are actually improving, that they're becoming greener, that they're growing up, that their infrastructure costs per capita are going down, that they're attracting more businesses, that the housing costs are going down. Those sorts of outcome measures, minister, are incredibly important, and I'd like to hear your comments on improving the performance measures in your department.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. If I can, I'm going to go a little bit, maybe, backwards. We very much have looked at the performance measures. I think that is very important because, you know, I mean, to write performance measures into our plans, into our visions, into our mission statements, we do need to have outcomes. We need to have the guidance. Have we succeeded? Are we putting funding in the right areas? Are the individuals or municipalities that we have supported being successful? So, you know, we've looked at it. We've said that we're changing. We've changed some. We're going to change others. That's an excellent point, and I really thank you for bringing it up.

The second-last comment that you talked about, that everyone is taxed enough. You know what? You're absolutely right. I heard the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner just pounding the desk when: everyone is taxed enough. But you know, at question period I heard him over and over asking the minister of municipal affairs how we can support his constituency. Mr. Chairman, the situation is that the demands are what guide what taxation is. Are we taxed enough? Yes, we are, but it all is relative to what we as individuals, not necessarily as municipalities but as individuals, want. We put the demands on our politicians, and our politicians, as we know around this table, try to do the best job we can in that support.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to address the tangible capital assets, and that is, without a doubt, a challenge. We follow the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. They set forward the guidelines, and I believe we have three years. Is that right? Three or four years? [interjection] Till 2009 to conform to Canadian standards. So our ministry has put a half a million dollars in support for municipalities. We have had and are having seminars, and we've had meetings on how we can help municipalities not only understand but support each other because at the end of the day somehow we have to have some unity, some standardization.

Trying to figure out how we are going to assess, really assess, pipe underground, linear potential of gravel pits: this is not an easy task. I don't believe that each municipality needs to reinvent the wheel. We need to do some co-ordination because if we try to reinvent the wheel in regard to how we're going to deal with the issue, then we're going to have 360 different assessments. I think we need to co-operate together.

You know, your discussion about the development of growth plans. I want to make a couple of comments. This is very much in conjunction with the work also of land use. We need to work with the land-use – what is it? – framework. And we need to look at how we can save our soil. We need to look at how – it's communication again, you know, where there's this discussion. We have situations in municipalities where we have municipalities that want to develop land, want to develop or have developments where they have two-acre and three-acre and four-acre parcels, and we're just spreading out.

You know, sometimes we boast of having the biggest land mass municipality in Canada. I don't really think that's something we should be very proud of. I think, you know, we need to work at how we can create better densities. We've come from the five units per acre. We've increased it to seven, eight, nine. There are even some examples in Calgary that did a great job in looking at 11 units per acre. We need to look at that density, and we need to increase that density. So I would again say: a very good point.

The housing comment for small municipalities that have that ability to attract but really have no ability to start the project. Well, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to inform the hon. member that we have looked at that, and we have put money aside. We have put $68 million aside for those such projects for small municipalities to be able to apply for so that they would be able to address those needs. I'm not exactly sure how successful, but we know from our previous experience that municipalities find innovative ways, and those municipalities have those concerns. So I hope that that is addressed.

Okay. One question you asked is about the municipalities that are having difficulties, the small municipalities that we talk about in rural Alberta where we have an urban municipality and a rural municipality, and the urban municipality has facilities that they use and the rurals use. What happens is: 60 per cent of the utilization takes place by the urban and 40 from outside, and they have maybe a million dollars' deficit in operating, and the rural community gives them just a little bit of support. Mr. Chairman, in our co-operation that's something that we need to address, and those are some of the things that we're very much trying to address.

I know in the core capital it's for them to talk about where they're going, but – you know what? – if we get them at the table, maybe some of them will say: "You know what? We need to work together on this community initiative, and let us support that community, and let's get together." You know, we've had some great stories where municipalities have told me that 20-some municipalities got together, and they said: "You know what? We're going to pool all our community capital, and we're going to put it to a cause with a committee." What a great idea. Getting together and looking at what's necessary for the community.

As for the discrepancy for small communities as well, there was $12 million that was taken out of the municipalities' sustainability fund, that was put aside, that was used for addressing the small communities, the communities that have mill rates of 30-some or have mill rates that – I mean, we have some municipalities that have an equalized assessment mill rate of three. We have some that have one of 30-some and 20-some. So we've used that funding. For those individuals we have taken that funding away from – I won't say taken away. That's not the right saying. We've taken $12 million and set it aside and given it to municipalities that are struggling.

Is it enough? We're not sure. Are we working towards a more complete focus? Yes, we are, because we're meeting with municipalities and associations and the minister's council to try to address those needs.

I hope that that answers some of the questions that you had, and thank you very much for them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any others?

Hon. members, we will now proceed with Health and Wellness.

Health and Wellness

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, I'm sure that colleagues have heard my introductory remarks, and if they weren't able to be present for them, they must have read them in the Hansard. I'm happy to open myself to any questions that people might have.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few questions for the hon. minister. I'd like to begin by talking about physician services. In this year's budget estimates the price is $2.4 billion. It's $400 million more this year. I'm wondering if the minister could enlighten us as to what it will be next year. What type of an impact does he see it having on the nurses' negotiations, that will be beginning right away?

I'd also like to know if he could tell me how many doctors we actually have now. How many are moving here from other parts of Canada or the United States? Are doctors actually returning from the U.S.? We did lose quite a few for a period of time. I'm wondering what our balancing numbers are like now, minister.

I'd also like to know how many medical students we have and how many of our Alberta students are taking their medical training outside of our country because they couldn't get into medical school here. What are we doing to facilitate their ability to come back?

I wanted to mention that in Australia, apparently, they nationalized physician services in such a way that the criteria for doctors are the same throughout their country as opposed to different provinces being able to have separate physician councils that determine who gets a licence and whether or not they've met the criteria. I'm wondering if you have been working at all with the federal minister and other ministers across Canada to smooth that process out so that doctors that are fully trained and returning here from other countries could fit into our medical system with a little bit more ease.

I want to talk about the regional health authorities. Their mental health and cancer are now at $6.6 billion dollars, which is $600 million more than last year. I'd like to know if the minister can tell me if we've made any headway at all in outcome measurement with regard to the health care system. Specifically, minister: what do they do with the money? I ask this because in the years that I was on the board for the Calgary General hospital, the Alberta health care association, and the Canadian Hospital Association, we had a system, particularly here in Alberta, where in order to comply with an acute-care funding formula, health care facilities had to report to the department of health on a monthly basis the procedures that they had performed. When all of that data was accumulated at the end of the year, it would determine what the health care funding for that particular facility would be the following year.

I know it wasn't a perfect system. But at that time, I believe, it was possible for the minister of health to be aware of how many appendicitis cases had been dealt with throughout the province, how many hip or knee surgeries had been done, just general information so you would know, kind of, where we're at inside the health care system as far as funding goes, what it would cost on a per-unit basis. Does it cost the same amount in Calgary to do a hip replacement as it does in Edmonton, for example? I'm wondering if you have that type of data. If not, will you be making any attempt to try and accumulate that kind of data so that when we're putting an increase into health care, we have a very clear understanding of where it's going and what the people of the province could expect to get out of that?

You know, at that time we were spending about $4 billion on health care. This year's budget, including the infrastructure needs, is around $12 billion. I'm not sure that the system is serving the needs any better today than they were 12 years ago or 14 years ago. So I'd like your views on that and how we're going to improve the system, Minister.

I also wanted to ask you if you could give us an update on the cancer prevention fund. I know that we set aside money, a $500 million fund, on the basis that we would be able to help the research group with $25 million a year, that they were to match. I've not heard anything since, Minister, so if you could give us an indication of whether that organization is now kind of up and running. If they're raising money, are they able to match? What are they doing with those funds?

Long-term care. I wanted to talk about that for just a moment to say that during my time as an MLA long-term care, at least some long-term care organizations, have grown more uncomfortable with their relationship with regional health authorities. They feel that their needs are perhaps a little easily overlooked in light of acute-care funding needs, that perhaps they would be better served if they could be pulled out from underneath the regional health authority. I'd like to know if you've heard that, and if you have, what is your response to that? Is it possible to do something like that, or is that just completely out of the question? Is it something that truly needs to be reviewed with an eye to making sure that their needs are being met as well?

My last question – and you won't be shocked or amazed when you hear this – is about electronic health records and only to say this. Of the last three years, in 2005 we spent $243 million; in 2006 $147 million; in 2007 $102 million. I'm wondering if the minister is prepared to comment on the implementation of that, on how it's coming. What are the regional health authorities spending on electronic health care records? While I'm confident that it is the right direction to go, Minister, I just want to know if we can honestly as a government say that we know where all that money is being allocated. Is it doing what it was intended to do? What was it intended to do? Can any of that great technology that's being implemented be used to get you and the government and the people of the province a little better information on the number of services that are actually being done on a timely basis so that it's not three-year-old data or four-year-old data but something far more recent so that we know where the money is going?

On health care premiums, Minister, I just wanted to ask this question. Have you given any thought at all to replacing the premium with moving it onto, for example, an income tax form so that it's perhaps a more meaningful way of people relating to the health care system as opposed to the premium? I am not suggesting for one second that health care should be in anybody's mind free, because it isn't. It's the most expensive thing we do. In the last 10 years it's gone from 27 per cent of our budget to close to 40 per cent of our budget, and there's no end in sight on that type of an increase.

It's overwhelming other program areas, so there needs to be, in my mind, a tie-back to a health care premium or a health care item on an income tax form that helps people to understand the magnitude of the cost. Tie it to – I don't know – 10 per cent of the total health care cost or tie it to physician fees, but tie it to something meaningful so that people would understand what it is they're actually paying for, a way to help them understand what they're getting in return for that payment.

So any comments you have I'd be glad to hear, Minister. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Some tough questions. On physician services to start with, the physician services budget for this year is $2.4 billion, precisely $2,431,139,000, and that would go up to $2,477,611,000 next year and to $2,525,013,000 the year after, so it increases. Of course, the hon. member will know that we've just signed the latest reopener agreement, and as a result of signing that agreement, there are a number of pieces that are in that compensation package. Two billion, seventy-eight million of that compensation package relates to physician fees. That is an increase from $1,768,300,000 last year, or a 17.6 per cent increase, and that really not only encompasses the 4 and a half per cent increase in fees in each year over two years but also incorporates the volume increase. That's the direct physician fee area. That's the old model, and that's the model we're trying to move away from in so many areas; for example, with primary care networks and alternative payment plans and those sorts of things. But we're still in that model for the bulk of service delivery.

Of course, then we have in that global number about $80 million for on-call services to enhance the fees that are paid so that doctors actually will provide the on-call that's necessary.

Thirty-four million dollars for the physician office system program. This is one of the pieces that would tie into your last question with respect to electronic health records. This is the place where some of the costs of electronic health records are buried. What that program provides is some support to encourage physicians with the transition to an electronic office and attachment to the electronic health record. You know, they may be going along merrily with a paper-based system and say: "Why do I want to change? It's going to cost me money." So built into the trilateral agreement and now continued is the physician office assistance program, where we hope to be able to get 100 per cent of physicians' offices online with the electronic health record within a reasonable period of time. We've actually had fairly decent success. About 60 per cent are on. This is not a program that should be a forever program. It's a program which should fall off once the conversion has been there because it really is about the conversion, not about maintaining the office costs of doctors forever.

Primary care: $92 million. That's helping us with the conversion from the fee-for-service to a primary care model and eventually in some cases to rostering, moving that way.

Clinical stabilization is another interesting piece of the package at $38 million. The purpose of the clinical stabilization was to recognize that doctors get a fee for service, and they don't have the opportunity to increase their fees, so the only way they can increase their revenue is by seeing more patients. Of course, if we're really talking about primary care, we want them to see their patients longer, not see more patients. If you're talking about family physicians, whether it's in downtown Calgary or other places, costs have gone up, and we're losing family physicians, particularly losing them from areas where they can't sustain the costs. The clinical stabilization program is intended to be directed to help support doctors in primary care primarily although there could be other specialties where we need specific support.

Then, of course, the academic alternate relationship plan and the rural physician action plan encompass the balance of that budget, but I thought it was useful to sort of outline that total. As I said, it totals $2.43 billion this year and will rise over the course of the next two years.

The impact on nursing. I would think it should be very clear to everyone that there's a very significant difference between the doctors' budget and the nurses' budget, and that's not because doctors are more important than nurses. That's because they get paid differently. Nurses are by and large on a union-negotiated agreement, a collective agreement, and they're employed. That's a very significant payment process than the business operation of doctors on a fee-for-service basis. So if you're looking at an apples-to-apples comparison, the increase in physicians' fees of 4 and a half per cent year over year is really the measure one should look at. Then even looking at that, you have to look at physicians who are dealing with escalating costs of utilities, escalating costs of rent, escalating costs of office operation that they have to take care of within the context of their 4 and a half per cent increase.

From my perspective, that's the comparison. I wouldn't want to go too much further into it because negotiations are under way with nurses and other health care professionals. But for anyone to say, "Well, the doctors got a 17.6 per cent increase in their budget, and therefore nurses should get a 17.6 per cent increase in their budget," they would be missing the point that there are a lot of other things built into that in terms of how we're changing the nature of the relationship, changing the nature of the payment structure, supporting some otherwise uneconomic situations to encourage doctors to stay in either a resource community or in an area where their costs have gone up dramatically and those sorts of issues.

How many doctors do we have? I don't know the answer to that off the top of my head. We talk about being 1,100 short, and I should have the number. We have now, I think, 135 spaces in each of the U of A and the U of C to train more doctors, 255 spaces at Alberta's two medical schools now for doctors, a total of 4,500 spaces for health care programs across the province. There has been a significant ramping up of that. We've expanded them by more than 4,500 spaces since 2000, so there's been a significant increase.

There are still not enough spaces, as the hon. member mentioned, to admit all the qualified Alberta students who would like to be doctors. I don't have a way of quantifying the number, but we do have a number of doctors, and Advanced Education might be able to get that number for us based on who we support in student loan programs to study abroad. I know that in my own constituency I could identify at least 10 people who are abroad taking medicine. Not only are they going abroad to take medicine, not being able to do it here, at a much more significant cost to themselves, but the tragedy of it is that we don't have a good way of getting them back home.

First of all, once you graduate in a foreign medical school, I would say that perhaps not enough homework is done in the first place to determine whether it's a good school that they're going to, whether their credentials will be recognized back home. We have some work to do to make sure that there's easy access to that kind of information for students who do go abroad. Secondly, we need the residency program in place so that they can come back and get a residency here because if they take their residency in some other jurisdiction, the chances are that they'll stay and practise in that jurisdiction. We know that people who have been educated and get their residencies here stay here.

So that's one of the challenges that we have to try and meet in the workforce strategy that's coming forward. We expanded the spaces for international medical graduates to, I think, 48 residency spaces in the last year, and that was a good start. That has taken us outside the mix of the Canadian residency matching program because we've offered 48 specific spots for international medical graduates. That's a place where we have stepped up, but there's more to do. That's one of the places where we can actually get some of the people that we need. If we can expand the residencies and the mentoring programs and those areas, we can get some of the people we need rather more quickly than even by ramping up the training programs.

We also have to work with the colleges. I'm in the process of establishing a meeting with the colleges. I've met with the College of Physicians and Surgeons' executive director and president. I've also met with the deans of medicine to talk about getting together. We're going to bring them together to talk about how we can do a better job of recognizing credentials, of creating pathways and providing professional credentials to foreign medical graduates, and of getting rid of the barriers because it seems like every time we knock down one barrier, another one appears. We haven't quite overcome that. So I've made the commitment – and I have the commitment from them – to sit down and actually deal with those. [Mr. Hancock's speaking time expired]

I'll have to deal with the rest of your questions in a moment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few areas that I would like to address with the hon. minister. I do apologize if it seems somewhat disjointed. I was expecting that this portion of the Committee of Supply would be taking place tomorrow afternoon, so my notes aren't as organized as they would have been had it proceeded at its original time.

I would like to ask the hon. minister about some of the issues relating to Calgary's health care funding. I believe that the budget for 2006-2007 amounted to a 7.5 per cent increase over last year's base funding although when one considers the in-year operational allocation, it was 9.3 per cent, I think, that the figure worked out to be. The question that I would start with is related to the global population-based funding formula, which, as I understand it, allocates funding based on the population demographics, which reflect things like age and gender and socioeconomic criteria. I gather that it is based on some empirical data. What I would like to know from the minister is what empirical data that is based on, how current that data is, whether or not we could have some access to the basis for that data, and whether or not the data is based on the actual intake costs to the health care system of each of those representative demographic components or populations.

As an example of the effect of this global population-based funding formula, as I understand it, it's not fully implemented and there are what I would call some fudge factors, which are one-time adjustments and growth provisions. If that global funding formula were properly and fully applied, it would result in the Calgary health region receiving an amount of a hundred million dollars or more compared to, as I said, what it actually receives.

My understanding based on the information that I've been given by the Calgary health region is that the average age of residents, in fact, is nearly identical, yet the Calgary health region in the year 2004-2005 reached a population of 1.2 million, and it received, as I said, a hundred million dollars less than the Capital health region with a population of a million. I understand also that this disparity in the per capita funding between Calgary and the Capital health region is actually increasing and that in the past year the Capital health region funding has gone up to $1,310 per capita while Calgary's has only gone up to $1,187. So the disparity seems to be increasing.

The second issue that I would like to raise with the minister is the issue of long-term care. As I understand it, Calgary health region is expecting the demographics to require approximately 125 additional care beds per year in order to meet the needs of its expanding seniors demographic. This current lack of adequate long-term care capacity in the city of Calgary is one of the contributors to the significant problems that that region is facing in terms of its flow through from the emergency departments because they don't have the capacity in long-term care, a result of which more people are getting shuffled off into the emergency departments when they needn't be.

The third issue that I would like to raise is the issue of cancer care in the Calgary region. The minister is certainly aware that the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary is not in any way an equivalent facility to the Cross Cancer Institute in Edmonton. It's not a complete hospital. The Baker centre has no beds to treat patients who require hospital admission; rather, it uses up capacity in the Foothills medical centre. Ultimately, there is a requirement for an additional cancer care facility, whether that be as a stand-alone facility or expanding the capacity at Foothills. I wonder whether the minister could elaborate on what plans his department has with respect to providing that additional needed cancer care capacity in the city; also whether or not he could comment on the necessity to avoid duplication of staff and services in the event that it is decided to support two separate facilities.

Another issue of concern in the city of Calgary is mental health funding. I've mentioned this to the minister on prior occasions. The Calgary health region traditionally receives only 20 per cent of mental health funding. That's meant to serve over 35 per cent of the provincial population. My understanding is that the mental health facilities which are located in Edmonton and Ponoka are funded through mental health funding which is allocated outside of the population-based funding formula. This would allow both Capital health and the David Thompson health region to direct fewer funds to support mental health services than Calgary and the other health regions that are required to use in-patient beds and other resources for their mental health services. It's my understanding that only a small number of the patients from the Calgary area are cared for in the two facilities that I mentioned.

The Claresholm facility is part of the Calgary health region, but it is a very small facility, and it's by no means appropriate in many instances to expect patients from the city of Calgary to travel down to Claresholm to receive their care. The growing focus of moving from institutional to community care is certainly not supported by the present funding model. As I said, there is considerable inequity in the funding at the present time. In the 2006-2007 budget, as I understand it, the Calgary health region is receiving $58.1 million for mental health funding, and Capital health, by comparison, is receiving $105 million.

Another issue which has been brought to my attention is the lack of surgical infrastructure in Calgary in the face of rapidly increasing waiting lists for surgery. In 2002 there were just over 15,000 patients waiting for surgery in Calgary. This had grown in 2006 to almost 21,000 patients waiting for surgeries. The Calgary health region has indicated that their ability to recruit surgeons is constrained by the fact that they don't have enough operating room space to offer them access to in order to decrease the waiting times for people waiting for surgical care. My understanding is that there are some new surgical facilities that are presently planned as part of the Foothills hospital expansion, but it's also my understanding that of the 24 operating rooms which are going to be shelled out within that structure, only eight of those would be completed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again some very good questions.

I do have a couple of questions that were left from the last member that I could just touch on very quickly and briefly. RHA outcome measurements are very important. One of the things that the member will be aware of is that one of the first priorities that I've dealt with is from sitting down with the boards and talking about accountability and board governance. We're putting in place structures with respect to the board governance, but one of the next pieces is: how do we make sure that we're operating in the context of a system, and what accountability measures, what reporting measures need to be in place?

I've met with the Auditor General as well to make sure that we have some consistency in terms of our expectations with respect to reporting. I believe that that's very important, that there be reporting on outcomes and outcome measurements and that we have a consistent reporting framework so that we can do those comparisons across the province, look for where the best practices are and where the benchmarks are, and then have performance expectations with respect to meeting those benchmarks.

The cancer legacy fund provides for about $25 million a year. There's initially some good things; for example, a recently announced colorectal screening program. Those sorts of things will help us to reduce the incidence of cancer or catch things early and be able to deal with reducing the drain on the health care system and, of course, the devastation to quality of life that happens when we don't deal with it. So cancer research is very important, how we avoid cancers is very important, but catching it early is extremely important. I think that's one of the key focuses that we could learn from there.

Long-term care. I've had some preliminary discussions with the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. I think it's very important that we identify a way of dealing with both the housing component and the health component that go into the continuum of care, whether a person is in their own home and needing home care or through whatever form of assisted living that they have until they get into what we would normally call long-term care or extended care. I think it's very important.

We have had concerns from providers that talk about the unfairness of having to compete against the same people that are regulating them and paying them. They're concerns with respect to whether they're being dealt with fairly in their budget. I think that's a fair topic for discussion, and I think we need to look at how we do that.

As I say, I raised some angst early in the system, with people now saying: are you going to move long-term care out of the health authorities? My response has been that we need to have a discussion about where long-term care should be but, more importantly, about how we do the continuum of care and how we pay for the health support to seniors in their choice of living accommodation or lifestyle to support the quality of life. We know that health status is improved if people can be as independent as possible as long as possible. That's a discussion we need to have. It comes right out of the Broda report. It's something that we've struggled with but that I think we need to grasp.

The electronic health record is, in my view, one of the most important innovations and backbones with respect to change in the system, but you're right: we need to know where the money is going and that we're getting good value for our money. I, for one, having been watching this for a number of years, was surprised to come into the portfolio and discover that we were developing three health records: a Capital one, a Calgary one, and RSHIP for the rural areas. I'm somewhat comforted, after looking into it, that each of them is building a system which will encourage participation and use from the people in their regions and that a portal and a hub are being built which connects them to make sure that it will be a seamless provincial health record, but I think that's something that we need to be on top of.

I'm very concerned about the cost. Particularly, some of the rural health authorities that are involved in RSHIP are reporting pressures on their budget as a result of the electronic health record expenditures. We need to be monitoring that and making sure that we're not getting ahead of ourselves. Yes, we want to have all Albertans on the health record by 2008, and we're on track to have pharmacies and labs and diagnostics on those records in substantial amounts and, as I mentioned, doctors' offices tied in. That's very important, but we have to have very clear control of the standards to make sure that they're all building on a compatible platform and that they're adding things that are necessary.

Now, you can see that they've gone a lot further in some of the areas like the Calgary regional health authority than you might need to do in some of the rural health authorities. For example, the bedside package that they've added to their model which they've developed and which works, from what I've seen, very effectively, would be an exotic add-on for many of the RSHIP people. So there are differences in terms of what's being spent on it.

That, I hope, deals with the others. If I've missed some, I'll come back to them.

Now, with respect to the questions from Calgary-Nose Hill on the global funding formula. There's actually a book, which I will send to the hon. member, which outlines how the funding formula is applied. I've promised to deliver that. I haven't done that yet, but I'll get that to you. It does indeed show the way the per capita rates are calculated, the population process. In region 3, for example, with the 2007-2008 projected population of 1,274,796 people, the net per capita rate, rounded, is $1,319. In region 6, which is the Capital region, with 1,070,650 people projected, the per capita rate is, indeed, $1,476. So there is, in fact, a difference of somewhat in excess of a hundred dollars per capita, if you just look at the per capita rate. The reality, as the hon. member acknowledged, is that the methodology is based on a per capita for patients at different ages and stages, so to speak.

The calculation of capitation funding rates assigns health care expenditures to individual demographic groups. The first thing they do is collect the comprehensive RHA patient activity data, and then they calculate a cost per demographic group. Data coverage of regional health services is relatively comprehensive, but there are a few areas of gaps that they have. The acute in-patient care numbers, the acute ambulatory care numbers, the long-term care numbers, the home care numbers, the community lab numbers, the Health Link numbers: all of that data is calculated and then extrapolated into demographic groups. Relative weight costs are added to patient activities to determine expenditure and relative resource weights attached to each of the activity records.

Then the acute hospital in-patient care, acute ambulatory care: they all have a weighted formula attached to them. Then you take it and apply it, scaling it to the pool on the budget size. This isn't actually a funding formula. It's an allocation formula. In other words, you could take all of the costs and put them against the demographics and drive a number, and that number could be higher than we budget. If so, it has to be scaled to the budget. So it's an allocation of the budget dollars.

Then you take the funding formula and you take a look at a number of different categories of people: under one year of age, one to four years of age, five to nine years of age, 10 to 14 years of age, et cetera, male or female; so the whole categorization. Then you look at so-called regular funding, the premium support funding; that is, who is being supported? Who has premium support in the Alberta health care insurance premium plan? Aboriginal: there's a weighted average there because of the higher incidence and utilization of the system. Those who are on income support. So that drives out to approximately 90 different categories of funding that go into the model. Then you apply the capitation rates to each region's projected population, and that drives out the funding formula portion of the budget.

Now, that's one portion of the budget. On that side the Calgary regional health authority would have received $1,763,008,571, and Capital $1,654,157,390. Then you apply the import/export ratios. So each of those health authorities serve broader populations than just their own. The reality is that the Capital health authority serves all of northern Alberta for some services and further into the territories. But for the Alberta people that they serve . . . [Mr. Hancock's speaking time expired] Aw, gee, I had so much more to say.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Two points that I want to talk about: dialysis and health care cards. You know, Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is presently being served by two great health regions, Capital health care and Aspen, and there will be a new opportunity for improved dialysis for the citizens of the constituency. You know, so many of our community members have been travelling at times three days a week. I know the ones that I talk to on a pretty regular basis travel Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays from the western region of the constituency to Edmonton, and these are folks that, you know, aren't in great health. It's quite a job, three times a week travelling back and forth on winter roads, icy roads, to get their four or five hours three times a week hooked on the dialysis machine.

The new opportunity we will have with this new mobile unit, that will be operating three days a week in my constituency and two days a week in West Yellowhead, will provide great access to our citizens. I think that this project will only provide an opportunity for us to learn more about doing things on a mobile basis, and I encourage the minister to follow very closely that progress on the portable dialysis so that he may use that model in other jurisdictions where, other MLAs tell me, similar problems occur.

The second issue is the health care cards. I'm wondering if you have worked with the Minister of Service Alberta to provide a better model, a more efficient model of delivering health care cards to Albertans. If people come to my constituency, if they move from Meadow Lake to Whitecourt to work in the pulp mill, the first thing they do is register their car, and they get new licence plates. They get a new driver's licence and new identification cards, but they can't get a health care card at their local registry office. I just don't know why we can't do that one-window approach and service all Albertans through a model that's worked very well.

I know that we're running close to the time. Firstly, I'd like to thank you and your folks for providing the insight to have the portable dialysis machine for my constituents. But I would like to know if you've worked collaboratively with the Minister of Service Alberta to streamline the health care card system.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, first of all, for the comments with respect to dialysis. I think that the mobile dialysis units are going to be a great boon to people because travelling to have dialysis every second day is just not a great way to have a quality of life. So the new mobile unit that will serve Whitecourt and the Edson-Hinton area I think will be exceptionally good, and I hope that there will be an opportunity to provide that kind of service to other areas. Certainly, we've been dealing with the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake with respect to people in his area that have need for dialysis and how we can provide that in that area, and the Capital health authority has been doing their best to try and make that work. Mobile dialysis seems to me to make a lot of sense.

The health card. I think we need to look as we go forward at the whole issue of having a health card. Quite frankly, some years ago when the new driver's licence came in, I looked at the opportunities to perhaps have a smart card or one card that would serve all purposes in terms of identification. I still think there could be opportunities in that area, although I have to admit that that hasn't been at the top of my agenda yet in this ministry.

So I hope that deals with some of those concerns.

If I may, I'd like to go back to Calgary-Nose Hill and some of the concerns raised there with respect to the funding formula. I just would indicate on the import/export side that the Calgary health authority gained $56,373,000 on import; the Capital health authority, $192,000,000 on import. So that's one of the areas where there's a significant difference between the services provided by the two health regions to people outside their health regions and the compensation they get for that.

Now, there is a factor called a cost adjustment factor. There are lots of technical things that go into the cost adjustment factor. Calgary gets an additional $41.7 million on that, and Capital gets $56 million on that, so a slight difference on the cost adjustment side. Again, in the urban centres the cost adjustment factor is primarily due to the cost of the teaching hospitals.

The mental health funding was raised. We have put in place a new mental health funding formula that's population based this year. So some of the anomalies of the past would be accommodated as a result of the new mental health population-based funding formula. Now, it's not totally there yet because we did have to put in place a no-loss provision. So both Capital and Calgary have contributed to the no-loss provision in a significant amount, Calgary quite significantly more than Capital. Calgary contributed $11.9 million to the no-loss provision, whereas Capital contributed $1.8 million to the no-loss provision.

As the hon. member noted and from earlier discussions that we had, one of the reasons for that difference otherwise in mental health funding is due to major facilities, particularly the Centennial, or the Ponoka hospital as it used to be known, and the Alberta Hospital Edmonton. Those are not facilities which just serve the local population. Those serve a much broader population, a forensic unit in Edmonton, for example. But we have moved to do the mental health funding on a more population-based manner. Then there's targeted funding, et cetera. So I hope that gives a better insight, but I will provide the hon. member with the booklet because it is instructional reading.

In terms of long-term care one of our objectives, obviously, is to expand long-term care capacity so that we can make sure that acute-care beds are used for acute-care purposes, and that's nothing new. That has been, again, since the Broda report. Expansion of the capacity in the long-term care system has been a really important part of how we deal with some of the other urgencies that we have at the front end.

On cancer care the hon. member might be pleased to know that I met recently with both the Calgary regional health authority and Cancer Board representatives in a joint meeting to talk about exactly that issue of how we do cancer care delivery in the Calgary health region and southern Alberta, and I've asked them to work together to come back with a delivery model that each of them can see their role in and what we need to cite in a southern Alberta context. One of the models the member will know and the one that the Cancer Board is promoting is the development of a new cancer facility on the west campus at the University of Calgary so that it has the research capacities and the tie-in to the university research capabilities. That's what needs to be determined as to whether that's the appropriate site and configuration and size and those sorts of issues. If we build that, it'll be a major facility. So we need to know that we're building the cancer care of the future, not the cancer care of the past.

The surgery issue was also raised, and it's an important one. What I can say is that there are number of major construction projects happening in the Calgary health facilities. Significant capital dollars have been provided to build those, and we'll be continuing to work with them to ensure that they can use those facilities to the fullest capacity. Obviously, there are issues with respect to capital dollars and how they're allocated. The new south Calgary hospital will help them with their bed capacity as well as their surgical and ambulatory care capacity that they need.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, you have about one minute.

Mr. Hinman: Excellent. I'll ask one or two questions then. I guess that my first one would be the accreditation of foreign doctors. I see nothing new in there. I'm wondering if the minister is looking at putting forward indemnification for teaching facilities in the province so that they can and will accredit foreign doctors. My understanding – and correct me if I'm wrong – is that currently if they were to accredit a foreign doctor, there is no indemnification and they're putting their facility at risk, whereas they are indemnified with the ones that they've trained themselves.

Also, looking at supplementing specialists who take the time to teach or help accredit foreign doctors, are you looking at putting any compensation in there for those members that have come over and want to do that? Yet the specialists say: well, I'm not going to take time out when it costs me a lot of money.

Again, we've had a lot of talk on health care cards. I think it's important. My question is: what are we doing to reduce the amount of fraud with health care cards?

I'd also like to ask the question that, again, premiums have not been eliminated. I'm very disappointed. I appreciate the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere bringing up the question of changing it. If, in fact, we need to raise the revenue, perhaps we should relate it to our provincial premium.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, but pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(b) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Treasury Board, Health and Wellness, and Municipal Affairs and Housing relating to the 2007-08 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that the House adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I call for a vote on that motion, I just want to remind members that tomorrow morning there will be people in the Assembly. I believe that the Speaker is hosting a group here, so everyone is advised to make sure that the laptops and any other things that they have on their tables are locked or put in the drawers.

[Motion carried; at 10:02 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 9, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/09

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province, our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When you arrived today, Mr. Speaker, you probably noticed that someone had placed a carnation on your desk as well as on the desk of each and every hon. member. These carnations are courtesy of the Alberta division of the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada. It is a symbol of support for those Albertans who live with multiple sclerosis every day. I stand to recognize that May is MS Awareness Month and invite each of you to show your support by wearing the carnation. I would particularly like to recognize the hon. Premier and his wife, who served as honorary MS Super Cities Walk co-chairs.

We are pleased, Mr. Speaker, to have some representatives with us from the MS Society today. I would ask them to stand as I call their names and at the end be recognized by the Assembly. Yves Savoie, the national president of the MS Society of Canada; Neil Pierce, the president of the MS Society of Canada, Alberta division; Garry Wheeler, the vice-president of the MS Society of Canada, Alberta division; Judy Gordon, well known to this Assembly, a former member; my good friend Joan Ozirny, a board member of the Alberta division; Darrel Gregory, the director of communications, MS Society of Canada, Alberta division; Adeline Blumer, director, client services, MS Society of Canada, Alberta division; Scott Rattray, director, client services, MS Society of Canada, Edmonton chapter; Michelle Kristinson, director of government relations, MS Society of Canada. On behalf of all of us thank you so much for what you do, and welcome to the Alberta Assembly.

The Speaker: President of the Treasury Board, do you have a second introduction?

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, I do and thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have a group here from the School of Hope. The School of Hope is literally centred all over Alberta, but its head office is in Vermilion. What a terrific name for a school, for surely it is the hope of all of us that we can learn and develop a life we want. Their teacher today is Mrs. Linda Jacejko. Some of the parent helpers are Mrs. Nancy Perozok, Mrs. Christine Hogan, Mrs. Benita Straughan, Mrs. Hilde Price, Mrs. Ruth Glombick, and Mrs. Harvena Chiacchia, and Mr. Silver Chiacchia. Would they please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of 18 visitors from Bonanza school. You know, this is my lucky week, I believe, or two weeks. This is my second group that I get to introduce and in such a short while. Bonanza school is only a few miles away from Dawson Creek in our neighbouring province, B.C., and certainly they've travelled and spent many, many hours on the road to be with us today. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Randy Carlstad, and parent helpers Mr. Hal Keith, Mrs. Joann Eneyedy, Mrs. Bridget Fedorovich. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Loughheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two folks from EmployAbilities, an organization which helps persons with disabilities find work in our community. Seated in the public gallery is the president of the board of EmployAbilities, Mr. John Ough, and the executive director, Iris Saunders. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent, Charmaine Rose. Charmaine is also going to experience a rent increase at the end of her lease in August. She lives with her cat, and she will sacrifice whatever she has to in order to stay where they are, but she does feel that it will affect her food budget and her basic necessities. So, Charmaine, if you would please rise and allow us to welcome you to the Alberta Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce a constituent today. Her name is Tracey Culley. She and her husband moved to Alberta from Ontario about seven months ago to seek better opportunities for themselves, but they have not been able to find housing. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Ms Tracey Culley and ask that she stand and receive the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a group of people from the Edmonton-Glenora constituency – Della Kerfoot, Bernadette Thomas, Cora Davis, William Crowley, Mary Ladouceur, Paul Neville, Douglas Klein, Mark Fife, Viola Ellard, Pat Ellard, Sherri Rivest, Ken Armstrong, Braden O'Neill,* Chris Swaren, and John Wodak – and Murray Soroka of the Jasper Place Health and Wellness Centre. They're all here to meet with the minister of housing about unaffordable rent increases. They expect to meet with the minister after question period, and I would like to have them all stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you a constituent, Dianne Raymer, who is a single lady – and I'm not sure if that's an offer for those of us in the crowd who may be single or not – living alone. She's concerned that the next rental increase will be the one that forces her out of her current housing situation. She as well is here to hear discussion on the issue of rent controls and hopefully have the opportunity to meet with the minister this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Mr. Eric Lindstrom, a constituent in Edmonton-McClung. Mr. Lindstrom is one of many concerned Albertans who do not understand and cannot believe the housing crisis we're facing in this province. He's here to make sure that his concerns and suggestions are listened to and considered. I, too, suspect that he may even later try to have a word with the housing minister as some of the honourable guests today are trying to do. I invite Eric to please stand, and I call on all members of this House to give him the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of constituents of mine who are here to tour the Leg., some for the very first time and some haven't been since Manning was the Premier. I'd like them to rise when I give their names: Mr. John Bizuk, Pauline Bizuk, Garry Larsen, Anne Peterson, Joe Stepa, Lorna Symic, Beebee Chang, Rema Halabi, and Crystal Grunling. Please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Legislature a very dear family friend from Lethbridge who is sitting in the public gallery. Gordon Koppang is a graduate from the University of Lethbridge. He has cerebral palsy and is on AISH. He does not have any family. Gordon is courageous and a fighter. He's a leader in his church, studies, and writes poetry. He gets to the YMCA to work out to fight to keep himself as mobile as possible. He practises preventive health behaviour just as this government has said he should. His rent went up, but so did his luck. He has finally been accepted into Lethbridge Housing after waiting three years. He will live in 350 square feet. Please, would we welcome him to this House. I would ask him to rise.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mike Woolridge and Dorian Deresh. Dorian and Mike are Palace Casino workers entering the 243rd day on the picket line due in part to this government's inability to protect Alberta workers through the creation of fair and comprehensive labour legislation. Mike is a floor attendant and has been there since 2006. Mike hails from Gander, Newfoundland, and has a long history in community activism. He's been a volunteer firefighter and a first aid instructor. Dorian has been working at the Palace Casino since August of 2001. He works as a custodial staff member in maintenance. They're both accompanied by UFCW 401 representative Don Crisall. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly one of Canada's youngest top-40 entrepreneurs – he was given this award yesterday in Toronto – as well as being a University of Calgary alumnus who just received the award for alumnus of the decade. I'd like to introduce to you Ravinder Minhas, president of Mountain Crest Brewing Company. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a second group to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today. Joining us in the members' gallery are six members of the Personal Support & Development Network. They are Mr. Joel Heidebrecht, Mr. Core Charrette, Mr. Edward Leslie, Ms Grace Jacobs, Mr. Harley Cardinal, and Ms Jillian Glasser. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent from Edmonton-Meadowlark. Majorie Wolf has recently received a rent increase of $350 a month. She's on a fixed income and is concerned about how she will make ends meet if rents continue to rise. I ask her to please rise and accept the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Youth Secretariat

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Youth Secretariat it is my pleasure to share with you and this House the important work being done by the Youth Secretariat, which is housed within Alberta Children's Services, youth strategies branch.

Formed in 1999, the Youth Secretariat aims, engages, and empowers youth to provide feedback and advice on proposed strategies, recommendations, and findings on issues related to youth. Most recently, Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Youth Secretariat I've had the opportunity to work with the staff of the youth strategies branch on the provincial Youth Advisory Panel, which meets bimonthly. The Youth Advisory Panel, as many of you know, was established to provide ongoing youth perspective on all work done by the Youth Secretariat. What you might not know is that with the creation of this panel, Alberta is the only province to provide youth with a unique opportunity and the privilege to be involved in a formal way in advising government.

Mr. Speaker, youth strategies is hosting the Uniting for Children and Youth Forum at Northlands from May 10 to 11 of this week. Service providers, parents, youth, and experts will join together to share their expertise. As chair I will be moderating a youth panel, and this panel will provide delegates with the opportunity to hear amazing stories of struggle, resiliency, and success.

Mr. Speaker, the secretariat will be recruiting new panel members this summer. I would encourage all members who know of exceptional youth between 16 and 22 who may be interested in contributing to this vital work to contact me or Mr. David French of youth strategies in the Ministry of Children's Services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Employment for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you all know, Alberta's booming economy has resulted in a labour shortage in almost all fields of endeavour. I know that employers, business associations, our government, and others are working hard to fill the gaps that exist. However, there is one labour pool of skill, talent, and desire right here in Alberta that remains undervalued and underutilized. I'm talking about persons with disabilities.

The most recent statistics we have show that in 2001 52 per cent of persons with disabilities in Alberta were working compared to 79 per cent of persons without disabilities. This means that up to tens of thousands of Albertans might be working if given the right opportunity and support. I know from speaking to people across the province that there has not been much change since 2001, not enough change to be sure. The gap remains. For the most part, it exists because employers lack an appreciation of what persons with disabilities can do. There is also some resistance to provide suitable accommodation in the workplace. For the most part, these barriers exist because of a lack of education and understanding. For example, most employers do not know that 80 per cent of job-related accommodation for persons with disabilities costs less than $500.

Many organizations are working to improve career and employment support for persons with disabilities, including Alberta Employment, Immigration and Industry. One community organization that I would like to recognize is EmployAbilities, an Edmonton-based, nonprofit organization who launched a television awareness campaign in March. The ads generated a lot of interest and do an effective job of helping to tear down walls that prevent persons with disabilities from getting and keeping jobs.

At a time when Alberta is desperate for workers, it's in our best interest to accommodate all Albertans who want to work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in 1998, from June 15 to 18, a housing symposium was held in Edmonton to address the pressing need for more affordable housing for families, senior citizens, and Albertans with special needs. That was nine years ago. We should have seen this affordable housing crisis coming. For reasons unknown to me we didn't. Had we seen it coming and had we acted on it nine years ago or five years ago or even three years ago, we would probably not have to be talking about what has been the main topic of conversation in this House and across this province for the last several days: rent controls, rent guidelines, temporary rent regulations. Call them what you will.

Rent regulations, protection for renters from outrageous rent increases, are, in our view on this side of the House, now probably inevitable if we are going to allow people to keep the roofs they have over their heads now while we set about the long process of building more roofs over people's heads. But they are only one piece of the puzzle, and that really needs to be stressed, Mr. Speaker, because whether it's rent regulations or any other single solution to the affordable housing crisis, we need not, we must not get hung up on that solution as the one and only solution.

What we need to do is come at this with a whole basket of solutions, tackle this simultaneously on a number of different fronts – short term, medium term, long term, and sustainable – otherwise, we're just going to be pouring more money down the drain, and at the end of five years we won't be any further ahead. But key to this is the province demonstrating a firm and consistent and continuous commitment, something this government has not done yet and which I urge them to get their heads around doing, a continuous commitment to solve the affordable housing crisis until it is solved because, Mr. Speaker, everybody needs a home.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Stavely Indoor Professional Rodeo

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While some Alberta communities search for new and innovative ways of promoting economic development or events, the people of Stavely and district have spent the last 50 years perfecting an exciting event reflecting their heritage. The first professional indoor rodeo in Canada was held in Stavely, Alberta, over 50 years ago, and this last Sunday myself; the Minister of Agriculture and Food, the MLA for Highwood; and the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, the MLA for Sherwood Park, who proudly calls Stavely home, attended the event.

The Stavely Indoor Pro Rodeo evolved by the collective vision of three original families from this famous ranching district. The Schloser, Cochlan, and Streeter families began the event, and today descendants of those families still volunteer their time to make the event a roaring success.

Kim Cochlan chairs the pro rodeo committee, and Greg Schloser, a former two-time Canadian pro rodeo champion, still runs the infield. They are guided by the very active Stavely agricultural society led by Kelly Hall. With up to 50 seasoned volunteers the community event goes off like clockwork. Arena announcer Les McIntyre, Dennis the rodeo clown, the professional cowboys and cowgirls doing their events keep the audience of 1,700 people riveted to their seats with excitement and humour.

Congratulations must go to the entire community of Stavely and district, the Stavely agricultural society, and the event sponsors for over 50 years of community spirit. When it comes to defining the words volunteerism, dedication, innovation, pride, and fun, it can be summed up by the phrase: Stavely annual pro rodeo, first weekend of May 2008. Come and enjoy the heritage and the tradition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

1:20 Esquao Awards for Aboriginal Women

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday, May 3, thousands of aboriginal Albertans came together to celebrate Alberta's aboriginal women's achievements at the Esquao awards held in Edmonton. These awards are the brainchild of Muriel Stanley Venne, president of IAAW, who believed that aboriginal women needed to be recognized for their contributions to society. I was privileged to attend this gala and be the co-master of ceremonies with Andy Popko, vice-president aboriginal relations, EnCana. I'd like to thank the many colleagues from all parties of this House who attended.

Twenty exceptional aboriginal women who have made notable achievements in the categories of science and technology, leadership, justice, health and medicine, community involvement, culture, education, business, social services and advocacy were recognized. These tremendous women have demonstrated the value of having a tenacious work ethic and an ambition for success. In their many capacities they have provided indelible leadership for their communities and this province. They have served as exceptional role models for all those who struggle to overcome societal adversities.

These aboriginal women are part of a broader vision for their communities, a vision that promotes tolerance, inclusion, dignity, and respect. They have faced their challenges with pride, intelligence, and confidence, ultimately leading them to excel beyond their own expectations. Their respective successes represent a positive future, especially for young aboriginal people who look to these women for guidance and to be directed by their strength and perseverance. As an aboriginal woman, Mr. Speaker, I am proud that we are recognized in the matrilineal and matriarchal society that's being revived in our aboriginal communities.

Congratulations to the many women: Mary Kappo, Lena Bumstead, Doreen Lameman, Barbara Courtorielle, Betty Bastien, Ruby Lacombe, Claudette Rain, Margaret Cardinal, Sokaymoh Frederick, Alma Desjarlais, Marion LaRat, Claudia Simpson, Pauline Thompson, Doris Courtorille, Lucille Cook, Doreen Cardinal, Susan Cardinal Lamouche, Leigh Ann Houle, Michelle Morin, Laverne Arcand, Laura McLaughlin, and to the circle of honour recipient, Audrey Poitras. Your innovative spirits have had and will have momentous impacts on our community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Official Gemstone of Lethbridge: Ammolite

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a proud time for me to represent my constituency of Lethbridge-East because recently Lethbridge became part of a rare minority of cities by naming its official gemstone, ammolite. The people of Lethbridge are already proud of their city's unique plant and wildlife, and now they have added the fossil ammolite to be the allure of Lethbridge.

Ammolite was first discovered in southern Alberta in the early 1970s and given its official gemstone status in 1981. It is formed from ammonites, an ancient marine fossil. Although ammonites are found around the globe, it is only in southern Alberta that this deposit produces the gemstone ammolite. Ammolite is mined by Korite International in the St. Mary River, just south of Lethbridge, and coveted around the world. The gemstone is multicoloured, having a complete spectrum of colours in its purest form.

This beautiful rarity will no doubt gain Lethbridge and Alberta greater recognition throughout the world for its natural wonders. I would like to congratulate the city of Lethbridge on its adoption of ammolite into its culture, and I would like to thank Lethbridge city council for the unanimous decision which will bring attention and praise to an already well-deserving city.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am continuing with the tabling of petitions from concerned Albertans throughout the province, this time 469 signatures. The petitions reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents . . . hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the [government] to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the House that we will be accepting written questions 12, 13, and 14.

I further give notice that on Monday, May 14, 2007, motions for returns 5 and 6 will be dealt with. Motion for Return 4 will stand and retain its place on the Order Paper. There being no additional written questions appearing on the Order Paper, there are none to stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an article from the Calgary Herald. It has an amazing resemblance to a speech the other day in the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of an e-mail that I received from my constituent Charlynn Cox, who is concerned about proposed changes to the tenants and landlord act. Her townhouse is changing ownership. She had a rent increase in March of this year. Now she's afraid of becoming homeless if new owners bring in a new tenant at a higher rent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today on behalf of Calgarians Wayne Llewellyn and Robert Gagne, who between them have over 50 years of property assessment expertise. They are concerned about sections of Bill 26 which take the appeal process out of legislation and hide it in ministerial discretionary regulations.

The first tabling is entitled Standard on Assessment Appeal, which was approved in 2001 by the International Association of Assessing Officers.

My second tabling is entitled Report and Recommendations to the Minister of Municipal Affairs on Equalized Assessment in Alberta.

My third tabling is entitled Getting It Right, an investigation into the transparency of the property assessment process and the integrity and efficiency of decision-making.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. The first one is a letter received April 26 from a constituent, Eric Lindstrom, who's here today, detailing his many concerns with respect to the current housing affordability crisis and offering suggestions for possible solutions. Eric mentions rent control, rent allowances, designated housing, and the government still playing a role to help people.

The second one is another Edmonton-McClung constituent, 87-year-old Mrs. Mary Swain. She urges the Premier to rethink his opposition to rent controls and says that she understands why he may not want to call an election right now because many unhappy people will likely not support his party. Her rent is going up to $774 for a one-bedroom apartment, and she can't afford it.

The third, Mr. Speaker, the last one, is again from Mary Swain, a copy of the your rent is past due, submit payment now notice which her landlord uses to notify tenants that they're late paying. She says the bright red notice is customarily placed on people's mailboxes. She finds it offensive, and it's meant to be an embarrassment, not a means to collect payment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate amount of copies of a letter sent to the Minister of Service Alberta from Margaret Linklater from Lacombe. She's appalled by the minister's response to rent controls and feels ashamed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today. The first is from a constituent of Edmonton-Mill Woods, Glenda Murphy, explaining in detail a major concern regarding the proposed seismic testing slated to happen this summer on Marie Lake in the Cold Lake region.

The second letter is from Maxine and Arnold Jol of Spruce Grove. It's a strong request for support for children with special needs by not cutting funding to those children who receive specialized services through the family supports for children with disabilities and the multidisciplinary review board.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a letter that I received from the hon. Minister of Finance dated March 15, 2007, and it's regarding the Government Fees and Charges Review Act.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Rent Supplement Programs

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week we've raised concerns about double standards in public policy when it comes to affordable housing. Well, here's another one. Out-of-town MLAs receive $1,750 a month in accommodation allowance to cover the costs of housing in Edmonton, and that allowance has risen $450 a month in just the past two years. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier understand the anger of Albertans when they see that he and almost all of his ministers receive $1,750 a month in accommodation allowance but are offering nothing close to that to Albertans who are facing a rental crisis? Why the double standard?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, time and time again I got up in this House and I said: examining all the evidence that's been given to this government caucus, rent controls are not a magic bullet, simply said.

Dr. Taft: Well, I imagine people noticed that that was complete avoidance of my question.

The Premier and his ministers keep saying that Albertans facing unaffordable rent hikes should be patient and should wait for the situation to resolve itself. It's easy, of course, for the Premier to say when he gets $1,750 a month in taxpayer-funded accommodation allowance, but it's not so easy for the many Albertans facing huge rent increases. Again to the Premier: does the Premier think it's fair that out-of-town MLAs receive $1,750 a month in accommodation allowance but don't provide anything like the same benefits to Albertans facing a rental crisis?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. leader is talking about rent controls. Again I have to repeat: rent controls will only make the situation worse. We will have less housing in the marketplace by following that kind of policy that they're trying to push forward in this House.

Dr. Taft: Well, this March 19, just this spring, the Premier indicated in this Assembly that he would be willing to debate me "any time, anywhere" on the water transfer from the Red Deer River to Balzac. I'm happy to take the Premier up on his offer. Maybe we can undertake that debate during the Drumbheller-Stettler by-election. Now I'd like to return the challenge to the Premier. Will the Premier agree to a public debate on the affordable housing crisis?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the few leadership candidates that recognized that housing was an issue. We made it a priority for this government, and there will be significant debate tonight and tomorrow with respect to how we deal with the critical issue.

Mr. Speaker, in the first three months of this year over 11,000 people came to Alberta. That's significant. Where did they come from? Net migration from other provinces: the province that lost the most was Ontario. Guess what the label of that government is? And you know what? They have rent controls in place.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. [some applause]

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I appreciate that, everybody.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, though the affordable housing crisis has been building for a long, long time, this government seems to have been caught off guard. Now it seems to be making up policy on the fly. I guess it's their tradition. It has promised millions in programs and even handed out phone numbers for the public to call, but nothing concrete seems to be in place. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: what is the income cut-off level for people to qualify for the recently announced rental supplement program?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the hon. member that this government and our Premier do take very seriously those in need. In fact, yesterday we had 25 people that came to this Legislature. We met with those individuals. Of the 25 people, seven individuals stayed to talk to our staff about eligibility for support, and I'm happy to say that four did qualify.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People working full time at $15 an hour earn a gross income of about $2,400 a month. After paying taxes, health care premiums, food, transportation, and other expenses, not much is left when they face a big rent increase. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: what happens to the many, many working poor who are above the income cut-off but are still facing huge rent increases?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that whole area of what we do for people who are in dire circumstances comes to my ministry. We have several examples of issues that we have dealt with in a very positive way, dealing with them on an individual basis. Let me talk to you about the couple in their 50s who relocated from British Columbia. He came here because he had a disability. He wanted support. The wife couldn't work because she had to stay home and look after him. The rent was $800 a month, and they were in arrears by one month. We issued immediately a thousand dollars in emergency funds with the director's approval, income support for May, job search support for the wife arranged by our department, found a job, made a placement, and found them a place to live.

Dr. Taft: Well, we can play that game, too, now.

Mr. Speaker, a poll in today's Calgary Herald indicated that 85 per cent of respondents are not confident that the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing can deal with landlords who impose excessive rent increases. Albertans want answers and details on government programs, not just vague assurances. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: can the minister give eligibility details for the housing crisis programs? For example, do people have to sell their cars? Do they have to drain all their savings? Do they have to be destitute?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, once again, that is entirely within my purview. A man came to us. He felt that he might have to sell his truck in order to pay for his rent. We can bridge that program. We can make sure that he keeps his truck, which he needs for the job. We also provided him support so he wouldn't be evicted.

Mr. Speaker, I have several cases of things that we deal with on a day-to-day basis, and I would be very pleased to table them.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The worth of a society can be judged by the way it treats its most vulnerable people. This is advice that Alberta's Conservative government needs to take to heart. Cora Davis and William Crowley are two constituents of mine seated in the public gallery today. Both rely on meagre AISH payments to make ends meet. Recently Cora and William each received a $300 rent increase. Both Cora and William believe that their landlord is gouging them because there's no way someone on AISH can afford an extra $3,600 a year. To the minister of municipal affairs: since you have adopted as your strategy meeting with gouging landlords, will you meet with Cora and William today and also meet with their landlord?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to defer to the minister of seniors.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, this government has acted quite progressively over the past years about increasing the monthly rate, acknowledging very much the part that the stakeholders have worked for some time about: how do you help those on AISH, the assured income for the severely handicapped? It's in response to that that we have seen over the last three years substantial increases even to those payments, about $200 a month. With respect to other benefits they might receive, they also qualify, in response, to all the other supports and assistance that are available through all of our departments.

Dr. B. Miller: Bernadette Thomas is also an AISH recipient on a fixed income of $1,000 a month. She just received notice that her apartment building is being converted to condos, and she has to begin to search for a new apartment. After completing a difficult application process with Capital Region Housing, she has discovered that no landlords will accept her because they feel she is too high a risk. One landlord flat out told her that he doesn't believe this government will increase her benefit levels to keep up with rent increases. So to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: will you go on public record today and assure AISH recipients and landlords that AISH benefits will keep up with the increasing rents?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one beautiful thing about our government is that we don't put labels on people and differentiate on the basis of what they've got in terms of a medical condition. If they are low income, if they face eviction, if they are pressured because of various things, including a medical condition – I have a medical condition here that I could cite: severe pain, lower back problems, carpal tunnel syndrome in both wrists, arthritis in his right shoulder, arterial blood clot in his left knee, and migraine headaches – we find these people placements. We look after them, whether they're on AISH, whether they are people like myself who might be down on their luck. We look after everybody.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, Bernadette's problems do not end here. Ms Thomas also suffers from fibromyalgia, which is a painful and debilitating disease. The intensity of Bernadette's symptoms are affected by her environment. For example, Bernadette must carefully choose an apartment with the right conditions. Bernadette is just one example of thousands of people in our province who have special needs. It's not only affordable housing; it's appropriate housing that is their concern. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: can he assure people like Bernadette – and Bernadette is up here in the public gallery – that she can find appropriate housing given her needs? Who is helping her?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, those with severe handicaps: we do a lot to continue to work with them individually. If they wish, there's an AISH phone hotline where they can apply for AISH. We do work with individuals. Everyone has a unique circumstance. It's in that way that we will continue to treat them.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Rental Starts

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the government certainly appears to have circled the wagons today. Nevertheless, I have with me today a copy of the Boardwalk Rental Communities 2006 annual report, appropriately entitled Opportunity Knocks. It indicates in this particular report that "rental starts have fallen, particularly in Edmonton, which will contribute to a further tightening of the market through 2007 as demand exceeds supply." In their quarterly statement they say that the revenue is up about 11 per cent in Edmonton, 17 per cent in Calgary, and 16.3 in the rest of Alberta. To the Premier: what justifies the rent increases that are producing this increase in revenue for this megalandlord?

Mr. Snelgrove: This is a very, very typical approach to dream up what is in the intent – the simple fact is that Boardwalk is a very responsible landlord. Their policy is to increase the rent a maximum of $75 twice a year. They also have an opportunity to assist the tenants who are facing challenges. It is really unfortunate that the leader of the third party wants to stand here and malign a company which in many, many cases is working very hard to maintain a good relationship with their tenants. So to bring in the allegations that they're unscrupulous landlords – and there are, but they're not Boardwalk.

The Speaker: We're dealing with questions of government policy here, not with policies of individual companies. So let's try and put this in the context in which question period is meant to be.

The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, listening to the President of the Treasury Board, it's clearly government policy to defend landlords and not tenants. It's pretty clear to me from reading the annual report that they expect rents to continue to rise. In fact, they state clearly here that they won't build any more units until rents for a two-bedroom apartment reach $1,600 a month. I want to ask the Premier: is it government policy to allow that to happen?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, of 210,000 – 210,000 – housing starts in Canada more than 51,000, close to 52,000 were here in the province of Alberta, more than 25 per cent in a province of only 3.3 million people. So obviously the policy is working.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier would like us to believe that the increase that's taking place in housing is coming here in Alberta, but it's not. Again from the report it says: "Rental starts have fallen" in Alberta, which does not have rent guidelines, "particularly in Edmonton, which will contribute to a further tightening of the market through 2007 as demand exceeds supply."

So rental starts have fallen, Mr. Premier, unlike Ontario, where they're rising dramatically, and it has rent guidelines. When will you be honest with the people of Alberta and tell them the truth; that rent guidelines do not interfere with the market; they just protect tenants?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, the leader of the third party is not very aware of the actual policy in Ontario, and we can debate that at a different time. [interjections] Oh, because you're wrong, and before you get your information, don't let me embarrass you in the House with wrong information.

However, Mr. Speaker, one thing we should remember is that as people move out from rental units into housing, you know, houses that they purchase on their own, it frees up more rental units in this province. So it's finding the balance. It's not only building low-income rental units in the province of Alberta; it's individual housing and looking also for housing for seniors and those that require that little additional care from the government that's very compassionate and caring about Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West-Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Forest Sustainability

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week at an annual general meeting a major paper product company denounced the forest practices in Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Do you agree with the charges that the Alberta boreal forests face destruction from logging?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely not. I do not agree with that opinion at all. In fact, rather than being destroyed, Alberta's forests are being renewed and strengthened by harvesting. I want this House to know and all Albertans to know that for every tree that's cut in this province, four new ones are planted every year, and it's the replanted forests, the new forests, that bring the age balance that protects us against the real threats to our forest, which are pine beetle infestation and forest fire.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. What is your response to the protesters' calls for sustainable forests in Alberta for the long-term benefit of communities, industry, and forest product customers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I certainly agree with that statement that sustainable forest management is the best thing not just for the companies but for communities and the forest, and that's why in this province we require sustainable practice by law. As I said before, for every tree that's cut, four new ones are planted. Forestry companies are required to plan over a hundred-year period. If that's not sustainability, I don't know what is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. How do you respond to the criticism that the Alberta government must set aside more protected areas in the forest for the benefit of wild species and their habitat?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Protected areas are an important part of conserving our wildlife, and that's why Alberta is a leader in Canada in doing this. Thanks to Special Places 2000 12 per cent of this province is protected in various ways. But simply adding more protected areas is not the solution. The solution is a balanced land use. Albertans want balance between recreation, economic development, and environmental goods. That's why we have a land-use framework that I announced last week.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dramatic increases in the cost of housing mean that parents must work harder or children must learn to go without. While Alberta's housing crisis affects everyone, some people are more vulnerable than others. Lone-parent families may find themselves in a vicious cycle because a parent needs to work extra shifts in order to afford rising housing costs but cannot afford the child care that's available if they can even find it. To the Premier: what steps is your government taking to meet this increased demand from shift workers and lone parents who need to work longer hours to pay their rent?

Ms Evans: I could cite another Edmonton scenario. A mother of three left an abusive situation in Saskatchewan. She stayed the maximum 21 days in the shelter but still had no housing. She was provided hotel accommodation through income support for a couple of weeks until she found housing. One she found was over the core shelter rate of $524 by $446, so she got a damage deposit of $524, and while she was able to pay the additional damage deposit, we have the Canada child tax benefit, who also provided her funding for the additional cost for the rent. This is another example of how we would face that situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This housing crisis has already pushed many families to the breaking point. A quick phone call to the Capital Region Housing Corporation confirms that the wait-list for social housing in Edmonton is already over 24 months and contains more than 2,500 individuals and families. When we asked what families should do while they are waiting, we learned that most have no option but to tough it out. To the Premier: how can you ensure that children in these families will not be forced to go without proper nutrition, school supplies, or adequate care while their families tough it out for 24 months or more?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I do care. I think this caucus cares. I think that we have illustrated that not only by the supports we've provided families for children with disabilities. There is no place in Canada that provides children as many supports as we do in this province. Our supplementary benefits for children lead the country. The family that has problems with housing, if they have problems providing for their children, their dental work, their eye exams, school books, anything, they simply have to come to one of our 59 centres, and we will look after them on an individual basis. We'll assess their needs, and we'll follow up, linking them in with the programs that best serve them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituent Tracey Culley is seated in the gallery today. She suffers from MS and is confined to a wheelchair. She and her husband moved to Alberta about one year ago. Although her husband quickly found a great job, they are still unable to find anywhere to live. The fact that Tracey requires affordable and accessible housing makes finding a home even more difficult. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. The woefully inadequate provisions of the residential mobility access program mean that Tracey is on her own to find housing that she can afford and then make it accessible. Is there anything you can tell her today that will alleviate her feelings of hopelessness and despair?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that today in room

512 we have my staff there and available for anybody that is here in case they have some questions in regard to qualifying for support. I would also like to say that we will have somebody on the fourth floor outside of the entrance to the gallery in case those individuals are not exactly sure where 512 is, to assist them. This is a concern for all of us in this House, and we need to work together to solve it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Employment for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Recent public service announcements have highlighted Alberta's untapped resource and attracted considerable positive interest from Albertans with disabilities and employers. Can the minister tell us how her ministry is going to use this heightened awareness to help more Albertans living with disabilities move into the labour market and to get jobs?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we are very pleased with many employers that are stepping up to the plate and providing opportunities for people with disabilities to receive jobs. I have heard of people working in retail industries that previously would never have had that opportunity. We have industry liaison specialists in the Ministry of Employment, Immigration and Industry who work directly with employers and try and link people who need jobs with willing employers to help them not only in receiving an opportunity to work but in adapting work conditions in a way that's suitable for them and work to retain those people in those positions for as long as possible. We have contracts throughout the province to enable people with disabilities to work.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, my second question, also to the same minister. There are many barriers to employment that face persons with disabilities. These include things like employer attitudes and perceptions, workplace accommodation, and also transportation. What is the minister doing to reduce those barriers to employment for persons with disabilities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we've spent nine and a half million dollars. We provide that this year for disability-related employment supports to help Albertans overcome barriers. We pay for things like ramps to access the work site, computers to help people communicate. We adjust their keyboards in a way that's appropriate. We provide tutors and sign language interpreters. There are many programs that we provide to assist employers in making sure that the workplace is safe and a comfortable place for people with disabilities.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, my last question. To the minister responsible for the personnel administration office: what is the government of Alberta doing to show employer leadership for employment for persons with disabilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I need to say that precious few people in this Assembly have done more than the hon. Member for Strathcona to promote awareness for people with disabilities in Alberta, so it truly is my honour to respond to that question.

The provincial government generally hires on merit. We use a competitive process to select the most suitable candidate for positions that are available based on education and skills. We provide an equal and fair opportunity to everyone who has applied for a job with the Alberta public service, but to ensure that the disabled have the opportunity, we've come up with several policy things. The job website has links to information resources that are intended for people with disabilities who are pursuing employment. We also text size our job website ads, and they can be enlarged.

The Speaker: I think we have to move on now.
The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that if people will read Hansard, I, too, have stood up many, many times and worked for people with developmental disabilities.

Temporary Rent Regulation

Ms Pastoor: Gordon Koppang has come to Edmonton today to show his support for a temporary cap on rent increases. Gordon is on AISH and was spending 40 per cent of his income on accommodations. After being on a wait-list for three years, he has finally found an affordable place to live. To the minister of housing. Gordon has come all this way to advocate for himself and all other Albertans on fixed incomes who are truly struggling to pay their rent. Why is the government forcing people like Gordon to advocate for something as simple as an affordable and appropriate place to live in this province that is so rich?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this Premier and this government very much are concerned about individuals that have trying situations, especially in housing. The member made mention that this individual has travelled all this way. I again would like to say that we very much would invite him to come up to room 512 to talk to our staff. It's two floors above where we're at right now. Our staff will meet the individuals and take them to 512.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. The development of affordable rental units is not keeping up with the demand. There are 400 people on a waiting list for affordable housing in Lethbridge alone. What suggestions does the minister have for these Albertans who need a home now? They can't wait for two years for the new units.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, there was $195 million allocated to municipalities for those municipalities to look at the needs of their municipality, the needs that they feel are the most critical. They can use that money in rent supplements. They can use it in secondary suites. They can use it in building new units. But also, I want to share that our government is providing $33 million for a rent supplement program at this time and an addition of $14.3 million, which should add, you know, approximately 2,000 units.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, millions and millions and millions of dollars. What I really want to know are the numbers of units and the numbers of people that have been helped. Why did the government choose to ignore many recommendations made to the Affordable Housing Task Force when they visited Lethbridge, recommendations that would help prevent a housing crisis in southern Alberta?

2:00

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a good question because the rental supplement helps between, I believe, 4,500 and 5,000 people. If the hon. member had heard what I just said, the additional funding – and I know the numbers don't mean anything, but they do provide support for additional rent supplements. In this case I did say in the last answer that we predict it'll help approximately 2,000 additional units.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Land Agents

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. A recent court case in Vegreville highlighted some concerns about the Land Agents Licensing Act, particularly regarding people who charge a fee for negotiating land access on behalf of landowners. Given that a judge ruled that this law should be changed, what is the government doing to address the courts' and rural Alberta's concerns over this legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me review some of the recent events that have made this an issue. The Land Agents Licensing Act requires a person to hold a land agent's licence when negotiating on behalf of a company or when charging a fee for advising a landowner in negotiation. When a person does not charge a fee for giving advice, then in fact a land agent licence is not needed. I know that several Albertans have expressed a concern about issues with this certain part of legislation, and I know that the hon. member is referencing a recent court case that was appealed. While this matter is before the courts, I will not discuss the particulars of that case but just simply say that we await the appeal decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I only have one supplemental, so I want to use it to ask the minister a clear and pointed question. Will you be amending legislation to allow landowners to choose who they want to represent them?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, nothing will be done with this legislation until the appeal has been completed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The role of a government is to facilitate the conditions that create opportunities for citizens and communities to prosper. The opportunities for low-income Albertans, people on AISH, and seniors to have a safe, affordable rental home are being stifled by this government's failure to protect renters from being gouged. My questions are to the minister of housing. A senior living in Edmonton-Centre will no longer be able to retire as planned because of a $265 a month rent increase that she's facing, and Mary Ladouceur from Edmonton-Glenora, who is here today, faces a similar situation. Mr. Minister, does the price of prosperity for Alberta mean seniors having to work well past the age of retirement so that they can afford a place to live?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, once again, what I'm hearing is a hardship case where somebody is really concerned, and I think we all share the concern of somebody who may be pressured and may not be able to be comfortable. Let me talk about a mother with three children, staying at the Sheriff King Home in Calgary as a result of leaving an abusive relationship. She found rental accommodation, and her rent was $1,290 a month. She was obviously not able to accommodate that, but with help from our department of a thousand dollars as a start-up allowance and an additional amount of $300, we were able to help her. I have consulted with the directors through our staff. We have many examples of this kind of case where we can and will help.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the minister of housing. My constituent Jennifer, whose rent increased by $245 a month, or 44 per cent, in the last year, now has to work two jobs to pay for a modest one-bedroom apartment. Does the minister discount her situation as the price of prosperity?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, once again, we look after people who have issues with affordability problems that relate to their lives, like the single, 52-year-old gentleman with a deteriorating eye condition that had rendered him legally blind. As a journeyman carpenter he had to take time off work to undergo lens replacement and eye surgery. His postoperative prognosis was very good, and he fully expected to return to work. Obviously, the cases they compare and want to listen to are their own. They're not interested in these other people. I can't believe it. I'm interested in all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the minister of housing. Many of my constituents who are on AISH are being forced to spend most of their income on rent, leaving little left for food, clothing, transportation, and costs associated with having a disability. Charmaine, who is here today, is facing a $300 rent increase. Will the minister of housing finally admit that a temporary cap on rent increases is essential to ensure that Alberta's most vulnerable people can find a place to live?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, a request for giving some affordable accommodation should come to me, not a request about how to deal with capping or anything else. When people are in need, when people are in crisis, this government and the previous ministry of human resources and employment have a track record of support of almost $100 million to provide housing supports for over 55,000 Albertans, and above that, we provide supports for 20,000 learners. So we provide supports for people in crisis, and we will continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Homeless and Eviction Prevention Fund

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has taken a couple of good ideas from the Affordable Housing Task Force, including increasing the rent supplement program and establishing a homeless and evictions fund, but as usual their rigid ideology gets in the way of doing the complete job. It's clear that without rent stability or guidelines that money is going to end up in the pockets of the landlords. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Doesn't this minister see that these taxpayer-paid programs will end up in the pockets of the landlords rather than helping the people they're supposed to help?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon and tonight we're going to debate just that: a stability program, Bill 34, to stabilize the rents here in Alberta. I look forward to the debate.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm asking about a debate here in this House right now, talking about where that money is going to end up. It's taxpayers' money. My question, again, is to the minister, whoever the minister is over there. They seem to be having trouble deciding who's up and who's down. Would one of them answer the question: what is to say that without guidelines that money will not end up in the pockets of the landlords?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it shouldn't come as a glaring surprise to them that all rent ends up in the hands of landlords. That's how the deal works.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's interesting. The minister has just said, and I quote. I asked the question – the taxpayer money for subsidies, rent evictions, and the rest of it – and the minister said that it's going to end up in the pockets of the landlords. Thank you for that answer.

My question simply is this then. Will he now admit and say that again, exactly the same thing, that this money is going to end up in the pockets of landlords? Say it again.

Mr. Snelgrove: We use many programs to support individuals that are in different circumstances in Alberta. Some of them are direct subsidies to landlords. Some of them are programs that support the individual. Some of them have different things, people with developmental disabilities and AISH people. There are a multitude of programs that we use very effectively to try and help that person achieve a life they can be proud of and live with dignity and respect. That's what this government is all about.

The Speaker: In less than 10 minutes from now I'm going to say, "Orders of the Day," and we're going to start a debate on Bill 34, which will last until at least 6 o'clock this evening. I look forward to a full, enthusiastic House of participants.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Liquid Strychnine

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farmers are very concerned with the federal government restrictions on liquid strychnine to control Richardson's ground squirrels, which cause $200 million in damage to crops each year, not to mention the many injuries also caused to livestock. My question is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food. How much longer will this product be available to farmers in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government Pest Management Regulatory Agency did a three-year study on the effects of strychnine on the environment. As a result of this study the federal government decided to deregister strychnine for pest control after 2008. The government of Alberta did however argue on behalf of the Alberta farmers that strychnine be maintained for pest control.

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the premix version is only available in that premix form and it doesn't have a very long shelf life, what other products are going to be available in Alberta in the near future to control this pest?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal agency has registered a product known as Phostoxin, and we're working with the government of Saskatchewan to test this product and check out its effectiveness and its safety for the environment and for the user. Information on biological control measures can be found on Alberta Agriculture's website.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. minister again. Many would argue that these alternate products aren't nearly as effective as liquid strychnine. Is there anything Alberta can do within our jurisdiction here to ensure that strychnine will be available in the future in this province?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is: no, we can't. But we certainly can put Alberta's concerns forward. This is, of course, a federally regulated product. We will continue to work with other governments and with the industry to look for a safe and effective replacement for control of the ground squirrel population because this is, indeed, a burrowing problem.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday in response to the minister of municipal affairs' utterly false claim that I wasn't concerned about my constituents, I predicted that the minister's office would become very full given this government's despicable treatment of vulnerable Alberta renters. Yesterday following the question period his room couldn't accommodate the number of concerned individuals. To the minister of municipal affairs: did you get their message?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, there were 25 individuals that were in this House that were encouraged by the members of the opposition to come, and I thank the opposition. I thank the opposition for having those individuals come to our office. We did find better accommodation. There were individuals that were in wheelchairs. I mean, if the hon. member wanted them to try and fit into the small offices that we have, I'm sorry; I don't understand that. We moved on to a bigger office. We tried to accommodate their needs and at the same time addressed the ones that had particular concerns.

Mr. Chase: The question was: did you get their message? Obviously not. You didn't get mine.

Fred Bisschop is a constituent of mine. His rent is increasing by 50 per cent on June 1. He's on AISH and can't afford it. He can't make it up here to meet the minister, and as we heard yesterday, the helpline of the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry is completely inadequate. So I'm raising his case for him. Without rent controls he'll be either forced out of his home or the government will have to pay a direct subsidy, hundreds of dollars a month, to his landlord because this government won't do the sensible thing and temporarily control rent increases. Why does Mr. Bishop have to face this dilemma?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, may I respond to the issue of the telephone? Yesterday it wasn't working properly. It was hard to find. But the phone line, number one, as of noon today is indicating to people how to get through on the homeless and eviction policy. So may I just say that they can get through, they can be heard, and we would be anxious to speak to them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I hope their phones haven't been disconnected as they wait to be moved out.

There are many more vulnerable constituents here, Mr. Speaker. They all want action on rent control from this government. Today I heard the story of a family forced to leave Calgary and move to Saskatchewan because their rent increase was so great. The government claims that everyone wants to come to Alberta to work. Well, it's too bad they can't stay. To the minister of municipal affairs: what does he have to say to those many residents of this province who, like that family, can't afford to pay the price of prosperity?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we need to have a balance when we look at housing. Rent controls do not work. For those individuals who are renting now, if we end up in a rent control situation, there will be units that will be turned over to condos. There will be no building that will take place, and it'll be a worse situation.

Mr. Speaker, I need to add a couple of points. The opposition is asking questions and talking about four ministers. Yes, we do have four ministers. There was a housing task force that made recommendations, that directed recommendations . . .

The Speaker: I'm afraid we're going to have to move on to the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Endangered Species

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Media reports continue to raise concerns about the potential impacts of climate change. My constituency is like many others across Alberta where in recent years we saw the effects of a severe drought. Wetlands are just one example of important habitats for waterfowl and so many living things. Indeed, Alberta is renowned for its prairie wetlands across the continent, and they are an important part of our rural economy for hunting, fishing, and tourism. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What system does SRD have to identify how climate change may affect plant and animal species in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for that question. Wetlands and waterfowl are dear to my heart. In fact, I had some for supper the other night. I also flew over central Alberta the other day, and I've never seen our potholes more full of water. I think it's going to be a great year for our waterfowl.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, was a hunter at one time.

My first supplemental question is to the same minister. What process does SRD have in place to identify species that may become at risk of extinction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sustainable Resource Development has a number of programs that monitor this. Every five years we publish a report on the general status of Alberta wild species. Our latest one was published in January of this year, 2007, and it's available on the SRD website now. We also have an endangered species committee, chaired by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, who advises me on this.

Also, I'm happy to report that this is the first year that we're launching our biodiversity monitoring program. It's been in the works for the last couple of years: $4.2 million. It'll be the first year. It'll give us the baseline data. This program is the best in Canada, possibly the best in the world . . .

The Speaker: I think I'm going to have to recognize the hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: My final question: what programs does SRD have in place to reduce the risk of extinction of species in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My department's biologists work with the many stakeholders to monitor these situations. Again, we work closely with the hon. member's Endangered Species Conservation Committee. We also have recovery programs that are advised by recovery teams. We take this issue very seriously, as indicated by our biodiversity monitoring program, which, as I said, is not only the best in Canada, the best in North America but almost certainly the best in . . .

Some Hon. Members: The universe.

Dr. Morton: Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Cited Documents

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move on, the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry during the exchange this afternoon indicated that she'd be prepared to table something. I have to note that if this is a briefing note to the minister, something from her own department, there's no onus for her to table such things. If it's an official document, that's different.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, they are various pages with anecdotal references, not identified by the name of the individual but from my department, that cite the circumstances in various parts of Alberta relative to people who have found themselves at risk.

The Speaker: All I'm saying is that there's no need to table such. If the minister chooses to, then the minister needs five copies. Is she prepared to do it now? I'll provide that opportunity.

Ms Evans: Could I give the copies to be copied? And then we will so do.

The Speaker: Why don't we bring it back tomorrow, and we'll table it that way. Then we'll just deal with it that way.

Ms Evans: Perfect. Thank you.

Bill 34 Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate May 3: Mr. Snelgrove]

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we get to have a discussion about an opportunity to put rent stability into the marketplace and ensure that renters and people who are in a condo that may be subject to conversion have appropriate opportunity to look for lodging elsewhere should it make their lodging either unaffordable or certainly out of their price.

One of the petitions that was tabled today identified the fact that Albertans are looking for stability in the rental market. By limiting to once a year rent increases, it will give an opportunity for people to do that. Mr. Speaker, while the vast majority of landlords are caring and have developed a very good relationship with their tenants, of course there are some that have taken the opportunity of an overheated economy to put rents past where they should be.

There is no simple solution. Certainly, rent controls in the short term might feel good, but they cap an industry that is not responsible to be the one that looks out for people that need help. The people that need help will access other avenues of funding through the government. At this point, Mr. Speaker, we want to have a good, healthy discussion about the requirement of a year to notify for major renovations, condo conversions, rent increases, and we'll help stabilize the rental market. I look forward to the debate.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Taylor: Excuse me?

The Speaker: He was up before you were, sir.

Mr. Mason: I would like to take this opportunity to respond to and debate Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. Mr. Speaker, there are elements of the act that we would have to say are positive. The difficulty, though, is that we have got a bill before us that does not deal with the issues that were laid before the task force on affordable housing. That particular report was in fact put together on the basis that hundreds of Albertans from all over the province came forward and talked to the task force about the issues that they faced in terms of their housing.

Mr. Speaker, rent controls as a broad category were mentioned more than almost any other single issue when this task force heard from Albertans. Now, you have to ask the question: what's the point of creating a task force and sending it out to listen to Albertans about what they need from the government if you're not going to listen to it? Then what happened is that when the task force report was prepared, it was not distributed to members of the task force. It was not made public. It went behind closed doors in an archaic Tory decision-making process that hasn't changed.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just touch on the democratic reform approach of this government because they've made a great deal out of it. They talk an awful lot about how they're going to change the way things are done, and they have changed some things. They have changed some things in terms of how this House does business, and not all of those things are bad. In fact, I think there are some very good reforms that have come out of that, but they don't get the basic question of democracy. They've ruled too long to fully understand how a government that wants to actually be open and accountable and actually be open and democratic operates.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the first thing that should have happened was that the report should have been released, and there should have been a public discussion and a public debate about the report, and the government should have listened to that debate before it made up its mind. Instead, they chose to have the decision-making behind closed doors and to make their decisions before the public even knew what the recommendations from the report were. As a result, I think they made the wrong decision. I think they made the decision based on ideology and the interests of landlords rather than the people that the task force listened to, so they find themselves in quite a mess today. Well, I can tell you that when it comes to committee stage of this bill, we will be providing some amendments that will help the government out of its mess, and all they have to do is accept the amendment to bring in rent guidelines.

Mr. Speaker, the committee recommended to the government a position that landlords should be able to increase rents by the consumer price index plus 2 per cent. That would be, you know, around 7 per cent in perhaps a year, and of course if there were exceptional expenses, the landlords could actually get approval to raise the rents to cover those exceptional expenses. That's a reasonable approach while new housing is under construction.

But the government talks about the lack of construction, or they talk about how rent guidelines would impact rental construction when, in fact, rental construction in Alberta is going down. There are no rent guidelines now, and rents are soaring, yet we are seeing less rental housing being built than in Ontario or other places. If the government is going to commit some funds to building affordable housing, that's not a bad thing, Mr. Speaker. I don't think it's enough, but it's not a bad thing that they do that. But the government has admitted – the government has admitted – that it's going to take at least two years and in many cases three or four years before that housing starts to come online, and that will restore some equilibrium in the market. Until that time, they have left the renters of this province hanging out to dry. So they've created a real problem for themselves, but more particularly they've created a great problem for the very large numbers of Albertans who rent.

I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that not all Albertans who rent necessarily fall in the vulnerable category. There are a great many families, seniors, young people that rent, and even though they have full-time jobs and in some cases very good jobs, they're not in a position to afford the kind of rental increases that have been going on.

So we will be presenting, Mr. Speaker, an amendment to this bill to introduce the concept of rent guidelines, and I would urge the government to give it some serious consideration because I think they've made a very serious mistake both for people who rent in this province and, as well, for their own political futures.

Mr. Speaker, just to move on a little bit, I think that we need to deal as well with the whole question of condo conversions, which the bill does. This is a serious problem. In the last year Calgary lost 946 rental units to condo conversions, and Edmonton lost 533.

The new rules limiting landlords to one rent increase per year have not been clearly explained or publicized, and in lots of cases constituents are getting unlawful increases, but they don't know it. Mr. Speaker, I want to just deal with the whole question of the one rent increase per year, which the government has touted as being something that would protect tenants. There are a few cases where that's actually been the case, where someone has been fortunate enough to have received in the last few months a very small rental increase and then got hit with the big one. Well, the big one is not eliminated, but it is postponed. It is deferred until a year has gone by, and when the year has gone by, they can expect that that rent increase is going to be waiting for them. That's something that the government has not dealt with. So it's an ineffective means of dealing with rent increases. It doesn't deal with it.

The government says that rent guidelines don't work, but Ontario, Mr. Speaker, has had rent increase guidelines for about 15 years. Investment in new apartments has increased by 88 per cent since 2000. That's 2,045 new rental starts in 2000 and 3,848 new rental starts in 2006. Alberta with no rent increase guidelines has seen a drop in new rental starts by 52 per cent. So the argument that rent guidelines don't work doesn't work.

Mr. Speaker, we have made it clear that rent guidelines should be a temporary measure until market stability can be restored. We don't see them as a permanent solution in any way but a temporary measure to protect tenants until equilibrium in the market has been reached and re-established. We also don't want them to apply to new units, and if they don't apply to new units, then it really is a curious question as to how they can prevent the construction of new units because they don't apply to them. That's an approach, I think, that is reasonable. It's not a doctrinaire approach. It's practical. It deals with the problems that people are facing.

Mr. Speaker, it's important that the government realizes that this is a major crisis not just affecting vulnerable Albertans but thousands upon thousands of people who are middle class, families, seniors, students, all kinds of Albertans that are all being impacted by this, and they are watching and waiting to see what the government is going to do. If this bill passes in its current form, those people are going to be left hanging, and they're going to be waiting for answers for a very long time. So this is perhaps an opportunity for the government to get itself out of the hole that it's dug for itself and do something that makes a lot more sense. There is gouging that's going on, and I personally find it hard to accept the Premier's answer that he's going to send the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing down to talk to these individual landlords and that's somehow going to solve the problem.

In fact, the whole approach the government took today in question period on this issue was to talk about a handful of individual cases. They're not dealing with it as a policy issue. They're not dealing with it as an issue that affects thousands upon thousands of Albertans, but they can't help them all individually.

I want to deal with the whole question of the emergency fund that the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry keeps talking about. Mr. Speaker, there's a particular fund to help very serious cases. The question that arises in my mind is why we need to use taxpayers' money to help individuals who get in that position when, in fact, they get in that position because of bad government policy. The government could introduce a policy that protects tenants, that protects renters in this province, that wouldn't cost the taxpayers a dime.

I hear the President of the Treasury Board calling it stealing from the landlords, simply, and he has a unique perspective on this problem, Mr. Speaker. It is, indeed, the perspective of the landlord and the owner and not the perspective of the people who have to find a place to live that they can afford. We're happy to provide that perspective in this House. I happen to think that that's the perspective of the vast majority of Albertans.

The people of Alberta, the tenants of Alberta need some protection in this situation. The government has worked very hard to eliminate environmental regulations and taxes that corporations might pay in order to bring about the kind of economic growth that we have seen in this province. I happen to think that most of the credit goes to high world oil prices; nevertheless, they have done very little, precious little to plan for the impacts of that growth on the people of this province. They call it the price of prosperity, Mr. Speaker, but it's very clear that the prosperous are not bearing the cost. It is the poor, the middle class, and the working families of this province that are paying the price of prosperity. This government has set it up that way, and they don't want it any other way, quite frankly.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to conclude by saying that this bill as it now stands will not meet the needs of tenants in this province, it will not meet the needs of the hundreds of thousands of Albertans who live in rental accommodations, it will not stem the increase in homelessness that we're seeing in this province, and it doesn't really meet the needs. So as it stands, it's not a bill that we're prepared to support, notwithstanding the fact that it has some positive steps. It needs to go much further because without the rent guideline portion, this bill will not constitute a comprehensive and effective housing strategy for this province. It's too bad that the interests of the landlords and the ideology of right-wing conservatism have trumped common sense and the interests of the majority of the people in this province. I think it's a sad day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. And I will follow a rotation here for the remainder of the duration of this afternoon. If there's any other member from the government side that wants to participate, then I'll call them. After the Member for Calgary-Currie I'll call on the hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and join the debate on Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. This, of course, is not a bill that could by itself solve the affordable housing crisis. That should be recognized by all parties, and that wasn't the intention. The intention of this bill was obviously to address a certain part of it. As the shadow minister for Municipal Affairs and Housing for the Alberta Liberals I certainly couldn't object to that because we have said all along that one of the three key things that the province must do in order to solve this imminently solvable affordable housing crisis in Alberta is to change legislation that creates roadblocks for people who have good ideas and otherwise the wherewithal and the ability and the resources to get to work on solving the affordable housing crisis.

In principle this is, I suppose, as good a place to start as any, but you've got to do more than start. When you start, you've got to do it in a comprehensive, well-thought-out approach, and I'm afraid this doesn't even come close to meeting the mark. What this bill does is that it will modify the notice periods and make that amendment retroactive to April 24 of this year and allow for regulation-making authority on any other matter deemed necessary to carry out the act. So the main amendments are to regulate the frequency of rent increases for tenancies to once a year, provide clarification around the start date for the time referred to for rent increases, and make it an offence not to comply with the condo conversions notice period, which again is a one-year notice. That doesn't go far enough. That doesn't go nearly far enough.

In fact, what we have seen happen since April 24 is that landlords, some of whom are unscrupulous, some of whom are taking advantage of a giant loophole, and others of whom are good landlords – because there are many, many good landlords in the province of Alberta. That shouldn't be in dispute. But they're terribly confused and concerned and worried by the way in which the government has introduced this concept and introduced this legislation, so they're saying: well, gosh, if I only get one rent increase a year, given the way my costs are going up and given the market conditions that exist, I better make it a good one. So tenants are seeing their rents skyrocket.

You know, we talked in our affordable housing policy – because everybody needs a home – about need to enhance tenant protection, and we said that our plan would limit rent increases to one per year. So it's a Liberal idea that we're talking about here. We also said that we would do two other things in terms of enhancing tenant protection. We said that our plan would establish a vacancy rate trigger that when implemented would place a two-year moratorium on conversions of rental properties to condominiums, and we put an exception in there: except for those developers who agree to replace any rental units that they want to convert to condos, that would be lost due to condo conversions, with new rental properties. In other words, if you've got a 50-unit rental building that, you know, you can make a really good business plan for turning into a condo, build us another 50 units of new rental accommodation and we'll let you do it, despite the moratorium that exists otherwise.

And ploy 3 was this: we would institute a one-time, one-year-long temporary rent regulation that limits rent increases within that period to a maximum of 10 per cent. This would lessen the risk of tenants losing their homes while giving communities and builders time to create additional affordable housing spaces. Mr. Speaker, what happens when you institute a package of tenant protection is that tenants are protected. What happens when you only introduce one piece of that package is that you can't put the rest of the puzzle together, and tenants are hurt. So this bill, in fact, will do and already has done the precise opposite of what it's allegedly intended to do, which is to offer some protection to tenants.

As for the condo conversions, you know, a one-year notice period is certainly twice as good as a six-month notice period, which is what we have under legislation currently. But we've been talking in my office to some real estate types who wanted us to know that with a one-year notice period on condo conversions and a clause that says that rents can't go up during that period, here's a loophole that would-be condo converters will exploit.

You buy a building, and as soon as you possibly can after the deal closes, you simply raise those rents because there's no cap on rental increases. You raise those rents as high as you can to something that you know the tenants couldn't possibly afford. Then you just wait until the building is empty. Once it's empty, you apply for titling through the city, because titling for condo units is done through the municipality, not through the province. It slows the conversions, yes, but there is still that loophole that makes it profitable in neighborhoods where prices will continue to rise. I don't think anybody, not even the minister of health, who seems to be in an incredibly skeptical, cranky mood this afternoon, nobody seems to think that the price of housing in the province of Alberta is going to go down any time soon.

You know, the government, even the minister of health, who continues to chirp away like one of those returning finches from winter – I have one living in a tree just outside my rental unit here in Edmonton. [interjections] Blah, blah, blah. Nobody wants to throw things drastically out of balance, at least I don't think. I haven't talked to the members of the third party – maybe they do – but I don't think anybody in this House wants to throw things wildly out of balance. Several people in government talk about the need for balance. The housing minister talks about the need for balance. We talk about the need for balance. We agree that there is a need for balance. We think it's absolutely key.

Our policy is about balance. It's about balancing the rights and responsibilities of tenants and landlords. It's about providing stability and certainty for renters but also allowing landlords and owners to increase their rents enough to offset increased costs that they may be facing. Our policy is about balance. Our temporary rent regulation measure set at 10 per cent, which many tenants would argue is too high and many landlords would argue is too low, may indeed balance the pain somewhat by causing a little bit of pain for renters and a little bit of pain for landlords over the short term, but it is designed simply to provide protection for renters while they need it, while we're working on creating a supply of affordable housing. I think that on that point the government and even the minister of health and the minister of blah, blah, blah, whoever said that, would agree with me.

An Hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Taylor: Well, I said it originally, but that was back in question period. As usual, the members opposite have copied me but only partly.

You know, I think that the members opposite would agree that the ultimate solution is to create a sustainable supply of affordable housing at a bunch of different levels, but I think what we need to do here in this House is acknowledge that it is going to take some time to do that. In the interim, between now and then, it is vital that the renters who have a roof over their heads today, many of whom are in imminent jeopardy of losing that, be allowed to stay in place and not lose their homes until we can create an additional stock, an additional supply, of affordable housing. That's what temporary rent regulations will do.

Temporary rent regulations do not apply to new rental units that are constructed. I mean, you know, when we talk about building affordable rental accommodation, that involves a different set of circumstances, different set of regulations, different set of incentives across a number of different platforms than rent control. That's an issue for other legislation and other initiatives, no question about it. Bill 34 doesn't seek to address that. But while we're working on creating that supply of affordable housing, it is vital that we protect renters who have a place to live now. We don't want the affordable housing crisis to get worse. We don't want more people to become homeless.

We cannot use the argument that if we bring in temporary rent regulations, no construction of rental accommodation will occur. First of all, it won't apply to new construction of new rental units. Second of all, it won't last, under the Liberal plan, long enough to affect construction, to discourage construction. It's a temporary measure. Third, no housing construction of rental accommodation, affordable or market priced, is going on in the province of Alberta today in Edmonton or Calgary, none to speak of, nothing significant.

Back in 1978 when this province had rent control – and granted, the government also at that time offered tax breaks to rental property developers – the CMHC's annual report noted that over 17,000 rental apartment units were started in the province of Alberta that year. Seventeen thousand with rent controls in 1978. Near zero without rental controls 30 years later, you know.

So, I mean, the minister of health continues to sing like a canary, chirp away, asking: what were mortgage rates at the time? I believe he said: what were conditions at the time? Well, of course, conditions were somewhat different because conditions are always different. The problem, though, Mr. Speaker, remains the same. The imperative for this House is to address the problem in an intelligent, sustainable, worthwhile way, which, of course, the President of the Treasury Board doesn't get whatsoever, you know. This bill falls so far short of the mark that without serious amendments there's no possible way that we could support it. No possible way whatsoever.

You know, in my private member's statement at the beginning of today's sitting I noted that it was nine years ago that there was a report done on the affordable housing problem in Alberta then, after a housing symposium held in Edmonton. Nine years ago. The government at that time could have and – if it had been a different government not so ideologically wedded to its one-trick pony act of getting us, you know, out of debt and doing nothing else, paying off the mortgage while the roof continued to leak – should have done something about it then. It didn't. It could have done something. It could have seen this problem coming five years ago. It didn't. It could have seen this problem coming three years ago. It didn't. Had the government acted sooner, we would not need to be talking about rent control. We would not need to be talking about limiting the number of rent increases. We would not be needing to talk about moratoriums on condo conversion. Because with nudges at the right place at the right time the market, which has served Albertans well most of the time, would have continued to work. But they didn't do that.

Now, I could stand here – I think I've got about a minute left of debating time – and bash the government for that. But that's not the point of this exercise. The point of this exercise is to take a very serious crisis that we have on our hands and get the job of solving it right, get on with the job of swinging hammers and digging basements and building basement suites and granny flats and changing legislation so that cities and towns can use inclusionary zoning as a way to require affordable housing and using density bonuses as a way to incent builders to build affordable housing, and get on with the job of fixing it. But in the meantime, Bill 34 does not protect those renters who have a roof over their heads today, and many of them, Mr. Speaker, will lose their homes in the time it will take to create some affordable housing.

I thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, the question and answer segment. Hon. minister, do you wish to address a question to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie?

Then there being none, we'll call on the hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, and I'll ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview or Calgary-Varsity to be on standby.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that everyone in this Assembly is committed to the ultimate value of this. If you can, imagine this: someday, a single mom or a senior citizen or a middle-aged family with a couple of kids they're raising are renting a place because they don't have, you know, the capability of owning a place but they are renting. But imagine this: when one of those landlords who have been gouging – and, by the way, there are very good landlords, but there are some that truly are gouging. Imagine this: the actual tenant could pick up and say: "Sorry. I don't like your rent. I'm going across the street, and I'm going to rent this place, which is better quality at a lower price." The reason that actually that person will be able to do that is because we have more supply to choose from in a competitive marketplace.

So ultimately that is our hope. That's why this government has put more land on the market, specifically in my own constituency, where more land means more builders, and more builders mean, in fact, more supply, and more supply means greater competition, and greater competition means a competitive market, that, I think it's fair to say, we do not have today.

I want to share with you what has in the past two and a half years – as much as we're having this debate today, I might say that this rate stability guideline is a very important step in the right direction. It's also important to acknowledge, which has been acknowledged by the opposition, that the principle of what we are trying to achieve, all of us, is helping those who don't own, in fact, an asset, a home, but they actually are in a situation of renting.

Tenant protection is critical in this important bill. Let me just give you an example. History is a wonderful teacher. Twenty-five years ago when the oil sands companies were being built, companies like Syncrude Canada, like Suncor, in fact, demonstrated quite clearly that they have a role and a responsibility in the issue of housing as well. I've made this comment quite public, that it's not just about the government. We all have a role to play. The reason I say that is this: 25 years ago as much as these companies were in the oil business, they were also in the housing business. Syncrude Canada had Northward Developments, where they built thousands of homes. In fact, Suncor, Great Canadian Oil Sands, called Athabasca Realty, built thousands of homes in helping our community. They did it because they saw it as their corporate social responsibility.

What has happened in the last two or three years? Let me give you the example. We have newer players of oil sands companies who come into my community of Fort McMurray and haven't built one home. Do you know what they have done? They've decided in their wisdom to grant living-out allowances of $3,000 to $4,000 a month. None of that amount of money that has been granted to employees in the oil sands, in fact, has ever built a home. What they have done, ultimately, has turned the market absolutely upside down in terms of what was taking place. So they give someone $2,000 or $3,000, and how do you think the market would have responded? I want to say when I hear of the $150 today, which I still empathize with, that in my community two and half years ago rents had gone up by over $500, $600, $700, $800 based on this extra money that was floating around in the marketplace.

In an unprecedented move as the only cabinet minister in the history of Alberta to present at the Energy and Utilities Board at the time, I talked about corporate social responsibility. I said to them that they have a responsibility in a mature housing market. Just like the private sector has a responsibility, so does industry, and so does government. In fact, back 25 years ago the government had what was referred to as AMHC, Alberta Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and at that time they were there because we had a young community of 8,000 that could never have ever kept up with what was happening in the private sector. That's why industry was involved. So, really, it isn't about ideology. It was then about doing what was right to help grow the oil sands in a way that could provide housing in a responsible manner.

Twenty-five years ago, I might also add, there were 1,500 people living in tent farms at the Lions Park in Fort McMurray. Fortunately, we will never be at that crisis that we had seen 25 years ago in terms of where we are today because we are collectively working together.

I'm also encouraged by this: the chancellor of the University of Alberta had made a comment that industry has a responsibility, and they demonstrated at the time where they backstopped, and they mitigated some of the risk. So if you have now, 25 years later, a mature market that is building homes – an unprecedented number in Fort McMurray – and rental accommodations, and you add to that some backstopping of the risk by the oil industry, that can play a role in helping as well because they have a responsibility, combined with this rent stability guideline.

I believe that what this government is doing is the appropriate, responsible action in ultimately having everyone play a role in getting more rental units on the market so that single mom or that senior citizen or that middle-aged family can say to those who want to gouge: "Sorry. I'm leaving your rental accommodation because I'm going across the street to a competitor who's offering it for $300 less than what you're doing."

Now, ultimately the market will work with this type of ingredient of everyone coming together. That's what this stability guideline is intending to do to help towards that end and achieve that vision that I have in terms of people enjoying this quality of life, and specifically in my community where, in fact, as much as we're talking about it today, it's been taking place for the last two and a half years. Wherever it's happening, it's unacceptable. This guideline that wasn't there two and a half years ago, I'm pleased to say, is there today because we have a plan, and ultimately that plan will work, and it will assist people who are renting in the private market.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is this under the question segment, Calgary-Varsity?

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the member from Wood Buffalo, who is in an area that is probably suffering the most extreme of circumstances. The member pointed out that oil companies and their northern allowances are allowing at least oil workers to be able to afford the Fort McMurray high rents. Does the member think that this is a good move, or does it cause problems for his community?

Mr. Boutilier: Let me very specific. As I made the comment at the Energy and Utilities Board, it is not acceptable, and this is the private discussion I've had with CEOs. I have indicated that Northward Developments, which was a subsidiary of Syncrude, and Athabasca Realty, which was a subsidiary of Great Canadian Oil Sands: that was a proper, responsible approach they took many, many years ago because they were ultimately building, and the ultimate solution to this is about greater supply. We all have a responsibility, but just putting more money in the market does not in any way help, in fact, in putting more supply in the market. It just turns the market upside down.

Mr. Chase: Yes, if I may. Thank you. Thank you for that clarification. I would suggest that what the government is doing by subsidizing landlords who are gouging vulnerable individuals is the equivalent of what these oil companies do by increasing northern allowances. The money goes to the unscrupulous landlord as opposed to helping out the individual, and it's the taxpayer in this case that's funding that extra allowance. Is that a reasonable comparison, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Boutilier: I guess what's really important – because as you know, we want to have nurses in our community of a hundred thousand people, and we require what we refer to as essential workers. So the government has taken the appropriate action in the short term, and this is only for a year or two, where, in fact, nurses are receiving $1,040. I want to thank the minister of health, who, in fact, came up and made that announcement, where he indicated that they will of course be helped. Really, that was intended to help retain professionals in health care services and others, because they were leaving to go to bigger cities where rents were, believe it or not, less than what they were in my community. So I thought that the minister of health took the appropriate action. I want to say that the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, the action the government took, in fact, of enticing them to retain and stay in our community was helpful.

Now, we're presently with the President of the Treasury Board, working closely with the Radke report, where $400 million are going into our community. A part of that is being recognized. We have over 900 teachers. We are trying to work with them so they stay in our community because the 20-some schools we have require teachers, who are renting to be able to stay because of the youthful population of our teachers. They're very young, and the majority of them are renting, and we're trying to help them as well.

This is in the short term. It's my hope in the long term that our entire province will continue to be competitive so one community doesn't steal another professional from another community, which, in fact, has taken place in my community.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, and I appreciate the clarifications from the hon. minister. The minister talked about the need for stability and that these increases, which are much appreciated and are much necessary to achieve the stability in the community – he's hoping that they're of a short-term nature. Obviously, we hope, regardless of our political affiliation, that we can bring long-term stability. The minister also used the word "ultimately," as in: ultimately the market will solve the problem. I know that this is asking you to foresee the future, but do you see a time coming in the next two to three years where stability will take place? Could you provide a vision for that ultimately?

Mr. Boutilier: I think it's a very good question, and I think, obviously, you're talking about a community that perhaps is the epicentre of what's taking place, even though it's taking place, as I mention in my submission to the EUB, in many other areas, be it northwest or up in the Peace Country and other areas as well. If I could give you the best example of that: the oil sands were projected to have $20 billion of investment over 25 years. I might add that our former Premier, when the comment was made about a plan, his comment, clearly, was this: no plan could ever keep up with the unprecedented growth that was happening.

The Speaker: I'm afraid that we've now exhausted that section of our agenda.

So I'll now call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, to be followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, to be followed by the hon. Minister of Public Security and the Solicitor General and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. First off, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to compliment you on your tolerance today for allowing questions that hovered around Bill 34. As a Liberal caucus we attempted to very carefully word our questions such that they would be allowed to be asked and discussed and answered in the House, and I appreciate your tolerance today for allowing those discussions to take place.

Calgary-Varsity is quite a diverse community. I have some rather expensive real estate in the Calgary Varsity Estates part. I also have throughout my areas a number of very rundown duplexes and fourplexes, and I'm sure that a considerable number of the basement suites in my area are of the illegal nature.

Nevertheless, people are desperate, and as a result they'll put up with some questionable environments just so that they can survive. I had one constituent who raised such a ruckus about the terrible state of his landlord's failure to renovate or provide any support for the leaking into the basement. It was just a very, very sad circumstance, but because the individual had a very weak physical system, he stayed within this area so that he could access the health provided from the Calgary Foothills hospital. However, when things became so bad and his landlord doubled his rent without providing any kind of renovation or any reason for doing so, the individual applied to the government, and the government came through for this particular individual. Rather than have him continue to be a burr under their saddle or a thorn in their side, it was worth $21,000 for the Alberta government to move this individual and his belongings, which were not very many, to the province of Ontario, where he was able to set up and begin his life again.

In the Calgary-Varsity constituency there are a terrific number of tall apartment buildings and very tall condominiums. An apartment building that is just around the corner from my constituency office – I brought up the story of the residents of the 298 units, who were facing a variety of rent increases, all of which approximated 50 per cent plus. These people had a series of difficulties in the sense that some of the stories I brought up were individuals on AISH. I brought up stories of fixed incomes.

Today I talked about an individual, a wonderful man. He's a giant of a fellow. His name is Fred Bishop, and Fred Bishop's rent will increase by 50 per cent on June 1. That rent that he'll be paying – he'll be asked to pay over a thousand dollars, and of course you realize that AISH is approximately $1,050 – is for a 550 square foot apartment. Fred doesn't have a whole lot of options. Fred has a very severe heart condition, high blood pressure. Despite his difficulties he remains a very cheerful individual, and Fred, when he can, when his health permits, will come into the constituency and provide a voice for those 298 individuals in that complex.

It was Fred who first came to my office and reported the unfortunate suicide of an individual living in that complex. The individual had a series of instability incidents prior to this time, but it was the increase in rent that was indicated in the note that was left that, unfortunately, caused this individual to take a very drastic action. The following week Fred came back to the office and recounted the story of another individual who in that same building had committed suicide.

These are desperate times, and we need to have long-term and short-term solutions. Bill 34 does go a way in terms of addressing long-term situations. It provides $285 million worth of affordable housing stimulation. I think, however, that we're all aware of how long it takes to get a home up, particularly with our building and builder shortages. The concerns that are brought up by my hon. colleagues from the NDP and my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie I want to echo, and that is that there is no provision in Bill 34 for the here and now.

My colleagues from Calgary-Currie and from Calgary-Mountain View and I last spring all participated in the homeless count in Calgary. We found that in the period of two years homelessness had risen by 40 per cent. My belief is that if we went back to the 2004 statistics and we carried out that same homeless count this spring, I would guess that the increase in homeless population is probably approaching 60 per cent. Now, to put that into terms, I believe it was approximately 3,600 individuals that were counted on that particular night. That doesn't include the number of young people who are doing what is called couch surfing, where they go to one friend's house and the parents put them up for a couple of nights, and then they go on to another person's if they have the good fortune to have that family connection.

Besides the vulnerable seniors, the people on fixed incomes, AISH, the individuals who are requiring support because of cognitive disabilities, live in homes that are not subsidized to the extent they should be. I talked to one individual. Because she has two dependent adults living in her home, the government in its wisdom suggested: "Well, it's one roof, two people. We'll just halve the amount of your allowance because it's a single roof."

So the types of individuals who are experiencing stress are growing in Calgary-Varsity. I'm sure that my area isn't a whole lot different than everybody else's, at least who are in a municipal circumstance, and it's the municipalities where people are initially drawn to to, hopefully, make their fortune. Unfortunately, that's not happening.

Another group in my constituency that is having a really rough time of it – and the same could be said for Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Currie because we're all postsecondary bedroom communities – is the number of students who are trying to pay their tuition, go to university or go to SAIT or the Alberta College of Art and Design or, in the downtown area, Bow Valley.

They're doing their best. They want to get out there. They want to participate in the Alberta economy. They want to contribute. But what's happening is that their whole educational experience is being stretched out because they cannot take on a full course load. They cannot afford the cost of the full tuition. They cannot afford the time that it takes to go through a complete course load because they have to work at least one to two and, in some cases, three – I've talked to a number of students – a series of jobs. So they're trying to juggle their studies. They're trying to juggle paying the rent.

The increase in demand at the University of Calgary's food bank is tremendous. The unfortunate state of affairs is that it's not just the students. There are members of the university staff. And I found this very hard to believe, but I was assured that this was the case, that there are even professors who, on occasion, have to resort to going to the food bank.

Our economy is so out of whack and our balance is so much missing that the need for an interim measure is absolutely essential. This is where Bill 34 fails us. Bill 34 does not consider the need for a temporary – and I emphasize "temporary" because that's what our deputy shadow minister for municipal affairs suggested. [interjection] Well, our deputy leader, our shadow minister for municipal affairs, just in case there was confusion as to how I was labelling the MLA for Calgary-Currie. What he pointed out and our Liberal proposal is for one year, enshrined in legislation with a sunset clause, that would see a capping of rent at the 10 per cent mark. Interestingly enough, the housing task force came up with a very similar recommendation. I think it was inflation plus 2 per cent.

All these suggestions have been out there about some sort of a reasonable cap. We don't expect landlords to be philanthropic. You know, we're realistic. Some landlords do everything they can at their own personal expense to shield renters from experiencing large increases. Yesterday there was an individual, a landlord, who came to speak to the minister, and that landlord had done everything he could to shield the individual from rent increases. In some cases it was at the expense of the other tenants, but they agreed that keeping this person with a disability within their complex was important. So there was kind of a family attitude: the whole family suffers so that the individual who is most vulnerable can be supported.

I do not understand why not, other than for purely ideological reasons, the notion of a temporary rent control, one that has a sunset clause of a year, which could then be discussed further if our economic imbalance continues. It could be reinstated, or we could change the percentage. What it would do is keep people in their homes. As soon as we take a person out of their home and put them on the street or institutionalize them, the cost of that individual rises threefold. So there's an economic argument as well as sort of an ethical argument for keeping people looked after. There's an ethical argument for making sure that they have clothes on their back and that they have food in their stomach. It's economic; it's ethical. I, again, fail to understand why this government does not see that need.

Now, on the other side of things: the instability for landlords. They don't know what the rules of the game are either because the education/information portion of Bill 34 has not been clearly communicated. We've heard through the papers, and I'm sure individuals have had the threats that there will be class-action suits for the intervention . . .

The Speaker: I must now advise that we're into Standing Order 29(2)(a), if there are questions for the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

There being none, then I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. If there's a government member who would like to participate, kindly notify me.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on this piece of legislation, that deals with a very, very important and serious problem in the province, a problem that has been growing for several years. The investors in rental accommodations have known about it. The government should have known about it. We on this side of the House, certainly, have been hearing about it for a long time. All the arguments in the House that have been going on during question period over the last couple of weeks and the excellent work that was done by the all-party committee on housing, the housing task force, all revealed that the problem is really of crisis proportions, and something immediate needs to be done as well as planning for the longer future in trying to address the problem of the shortage of affordable housing.

Now, this bill, Mr. Speaker, is about the transition period, but over the next two years what do we do while we wait for the supply of affordable housing units to increase, to strike a new equilibrium between supply and demand in the housing market? One thing that's been known and should in fact be underlined is the fact that the market in the case of housing supply in this province has failed. We are dealing with a failed market situation. To therefore entirely again argue in favour of reliance on market forces to correct the situation is clearly the wrong way to go. I think the task force report recognized the weakness of this market argument, that the market automatically, given time, will fix the problem. In fact, the task force report recommendations call for short-term intervention, intervention in terms of controlling rents, putting some cap on those rents.

This bill seems to very, very minimally pay attention to the very first step that the task force on housing recommends. For example, the introduction of a two-year rent stability guideline is one of the recommendations that it made. The first bullet under that heading says: "would stipulate rental rate increases once annually." The second bullet: "be in place for a two-year period only." That's important, Mr. Speaker, because much of this criticism of us, of our position that some cap should be put on, is somehow based on the assumption that this will be there forever. We are following the task force's recommendation, a recommendation made by the all-party committee, that two years is what we have in mind here. The rent control or the cap on the rent increases is not forever. The third bullet says, "keep rental rate increases within a guideline of [consumer price index] plus 2%," which translates, according to the report here, to about 7 and a half percentage points, so a 7 and a half per cent increase.

Now, if this was done and the bill was about that, that would really provide both stability and predictability in the market over a short period of time, stability to renters. With this open-ended, no cap increase once a year proposal that's part of this bill, renters will get whatever increase they get this year. It could be 20 per cent, 50 per cent, 100 per cent. They don't know what the rent increase will be next year. It could be another whopping increase, thus creating a great deal of uncertainty in their own household budgets.

We know that in Canada if a family spends more than a maximum of 30 per cent on housing, then it hurts the family's ability to provide other necessities that families need. With this bill there's absolutely no way for a family to be even mildly certain that 12 months from now their family budget won't be thrown into another crisis because this bill fails to put any cap on the rent increase that they should expect. It's impossible for them to plan their family budgets from year to year. So that's one of the serious problems with this.

With the failure of the government to recognize that, in fact, the problem that we face today is the result of market failure and therefore to argue that they want to protect the market forces to correct the situation seems to be a very false and faulty argument, Mr. Speaker.

The leader of our caucus made the point of the undemocratic nature of the debate, the controlled nature of how this report has been dealt with. First of all, the task force was asked to go to the people of Alberta, hold public hearings, but then the government receives the report and doesn't release it so that the public in general can participate in understanding what the recommendations are or whether or not there is general support for it or how that set of recommendations can be supported.

Mr. Speaker, there are close to anywhere between 35 and 45 per cent of Albertans who rent accommodations in the various communities across this province. Only a small number of them will be able to take advantage of the so-called protection against rent increases because it's income-contingent. The vast majority of the renters are, in fact, young, middle-class, working families trying to earn enough income, waiting for a few years, making some savings so that they can buy their first family house. Now, these are the people who will not be protected by any of the measures that the government has taken. They will not be protected from exorbitant rent increases by way of this bill. This bill will fail to either protect any certainty or predictability for the large majority of the renters in this province, and it will not bring any modicum of stability to the market forces.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the second part of this bill is about condition conversions and giving one year's notice. My fear is that this bill will in fact expedite the rate at which rental properties are converted into condominiums in order to avoid the one-year limitation. What that will do is put more people at risk of losing their homes while those conversions are taking place.

Mr. Speaker, this is a flawed bill. I think it can be fixed to some extent. We'll make every effort on behalf of our caucus, the NDP caucus, to bring forward amendments to address some of the difficulties and problems that we see in this bill, but as it stands, it will not solve the problem. It will only exacerbate the difficulties that currently confront a very large number of Albertans who are renters and help very few, if any, only because the government has now put in place a way of subsidizing the so-called renters. I submit that that actually should be called subsidization of landlords. Many of them seem to be engaged in studying the market very carefully, know that there's a serious market disequilibrium, and are ready to take advantage of that.

I don't blame them because they're in the business of maximizing the returns on their investment, but the government has a responsibility to protect the public interest. It has a responsibility to protect the interests of middle-class families first, before it protects the interests of a few investors who may be disgruntled if any cap is introduced on a temporary basis in order to stabilize the market situation in this province with respect to housing and bring equilibrium back to that market.

Mr. Speaker, in my constituency, certainly, Edmonton-Strathcona, thousands of students return every year for an eight-month period to go to their postsecondary institution of choice. There are many NAIT students who live in my constituency as renters. There are a very large number of University of Alberta students who live there as renters. They are the ones who are going to be terribly badly hit come August when they return to school here. These are students who, in fact, come from outside of urban centres. These are rural students who will be coming here. When they find that the rental accommodation for them has really become extremely expensive, that the rent increases are in the range of 50 to 100 per cent if they're lucky to get an accommodation close to the university, in that area, they'll find that the government policies have failed to protect the very large number of young, vulnerable students who come from the rural areas and small towns into big cities like Calgary and Edmonton as they pursue their education. Their ability to pay for these increased costs of their education will have to be borne by them through borrowing more money from student financing and other sources. This will only increase their debt levels and create more serious problems for them as they move through the education system.

This bill will hurt a very, very large number of people, including very young, industrious, earnest postsecondary students, who are, in fact, the future of this province. So I don't know whom this bill is really designed to help: very few people, in my view, if any.

Mr. Speaker, another advantage of the rent cap – and we can always argue about the scale of it, whether it should be 7 and a half per cent or 10 per cent or whatever, although I think that in its wisdom the task force made the right recommendation, that the increase be in fact capped at around 7 and half per cent for the next two years as a temporary capping. If we did that, I think this will dampen speculation among people who buy and sell rental property and, in fact, bring more tranquility and more stability to the housing market, rather than the other thing. The impact of this is going to be perverse, as a matter of fact. It's going to increase speculation. It's going to increase pressure on the prices and the cost of purchasing and then renting that property. That will further jack up the rental rates.

Mr. Speaker, a point has been made, and I think the NDP caucus had drawn the attention of this House to the fact, that a company like Boardwalk – and I don't make this an accusatory reference; I'm not accusing them of speculating. This is something normal. I think it's normal corporate behaviour that a corporation would take advantage of the market situation to the best of their ability. Now, Boardwalk says, in fact, that with the skyrocketing increase in the prices of new houses, there'll be more demand added to the existing very high demand for rental properties. More and more young families won't be able to purchase their first house because the prices of new houses have skyrocketed. So they predict that there'll be a pool of people in Alberta, without making any projections for the increases coming in from outside, who'll be looking for rental accommodation, and it will increase and increase quite rapidly. They see it as a good opportunity, therefore, with respect to the prospect of their investors earning an even enhanced and larger return on their investment.

The Premier, on the other hand, keeps drawing attention to the 52,000 housing units that are under construction. Well, who's going to buy them? Boardwalk is saying that many young Alberta families, middle-class families, won't be able to buy these houses. They will therefore add to the demand and create an even more serious disequilibrium in the relation between the supply and demand situation. Therefore, the market left to itself, as this bill does, in my view, will not address the problem of hot prices in affordable housing in this province in the short run, and it remains to be seen whether it will do anything to encourage investment in this area in the long run, Mr. Speaker.

So with that, I want to just reiterate the position that my caucus and I have taken on this bill. We are concerned that the bill fails in addressing the problems that need to be addressed in the short run. It fails because it refuses to introduce caps on the rental increases on an ongoing basis.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Snelgrove: I have a question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board under section 29(2)(a).

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. Just a question on how many more units the hon. member thinks we might need to bring into balance the supply and demand. From April 1 to May 5 the call centre that's strictly dedicated to tenancy issues received, according to your numbers of 35 or 40 per cent renting – and I'm just going to use a million renters, which would be the bottom end of your estimate. Less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of renters called that number to talk about rent increases, and that number is 906 calls.

Now, I'm not saying that these people aren't in dire straits. We've seen those examples. But what increase in housing numbers does the hon. member think we need to achieve an equilibrium that would put the supply and demand back on an equal footing?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for the question. The information about the government plans to address the crisis that the all-party task force has drawn attention to is just beginning to get out. Just wait for a few more weeks and the number of calls that you will receive, which you want to use as an indicator of the scale of the crisis, I think will become clear to you. Don't rely on your number. We called some of these numbers ourselves over the last few days, and they don't provide any information to people who call. So that discourages more people. News that gets out that these numbers really don't provide any information. Perhaps that discourages a lot more people. They say: well, what's the point of calling if there's no information to be had at those numbers?

So, Mr. Speaker, I say to the minister that it is his responsibility to listen to the work done by the task force and the task force's own words. This is an all-party committee. There are Conservatives on it. There are NDP on it. There are Liberals on it. It has listened to hundreds and hundreds of Albertans, and based on that, they are the ones who say that there is a serious housing crisis in this province. The minister seemed to suggest from the way he asked me the question that he thinks there's no real housing crisis. There are only about a thousand people that he needs to deal with. That would be very disappointing if that's the understanding of the minister.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Then I'll call on the hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, due to our booming economy, where we have 100,000 new residents coming to our province every year, yes, we do have a rental unit shortage. This shortage creates a unique challenge, and I would encourage all members to support Bill 34 because it addresses this challenge in a very positive manner. Limiting rent increases to one per year will assist many families with budgeting by providing certainty over a 12-month period and will also reduce the number of increases they will be facing.

The one-year notice period for converting apartments to condos also provides renters with time to seek other accommodation if that option does become a necessity. The members opposite have also expressed concern about rental facilities being converted into condos, Mr. Speaker. Landlords exercise this option for financial reasons, and rent controls would only speed up this process of these conversions. Government intervention in the marketplace will have a negative impact on rental housing investment and make the problem of availability worse than it is today.

Mr. Speaker, this government has programs in place to help renters who are in need, and they will be helped. Bill 34 will also help, and I encourage all hon. members to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise under 29(2)(a)?

If not, I recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to debate on what is obviously a timely and important bill and one that's going to get a lot of attention in the next few days, on an issue that's already getting a lot of attention.

I need to start just by expressing how widespread my experience of this concern is in travelling around the province over the last couple of years. The reason I want to do this is because I'm just surprised that this government seems to have been caught off guard by what's going on here. I'm going to give you a handful of examples. Last Calgary Stampede I was at a major barbecue and was approached by a young lawyer at the time who said, "You know, Kevin, everybody in my building was just given a huge rent increase." And he said: "I can afford it because I'm a lawyer in a big firm, but there are all kinds of people in my building who cannot. You folks in the Legislature have to do something about these rental hikes."

Obviously, Fort McMurray comes to mind almost immediately for everybody talking about affordable housing issues. I'm sure there are many of us here who have been up there. You meet with the school board. You meet with the police. You meet with the college. You meet with all kinds of people there who aren't directly in the oil industry, and virtually the first thing that comes to mind are concerns around affordable housing, to the point where, if memory serves me right, the RCMP and the school board are sharing and constructing a facility to house new recruits coming to Fort McMurray, and on and on it goes. Of course, the situation there hopefully will improve over the next few years, but it took a real step backwards a few weeks ago with the big fire.

Hinton and Edson both are struggling terribly with housing problems, to the point where services in those cities are having difficulty recruiting staff. I heard a detailed account in Hinton many, many, many months ago about efforts to recruit a physiotherapist there from out of province, who loved the idea of living in Hinton close to the mountains, the outdoors, all of that sort of thing, but the cheapest rental accommodation, I think, that could be found in the whole town was something like $1,800 a month. Well, the person chose not to come because of that. Likewise, in Edson there are those kinds of challenges as well.

Last summer, I was touring around the north, Athabasca. Big challenges in Athabasca. They're in the shadow of Fort McMurray now in the oil sands development, and people are living in Athabasca and putting their families there and working in the oil sands. You know, I remember being interviewed by the radio reporter in Athabasca. He was living in a hotel at the expense of his employer because there was no place for him to rent.

Slave Lake. I pulled into Slave Lake, just went mainstreering, talked to people in the cafeteria at breakfast time at the hotel, and they spoke about starter houses in Slave Lake being $300,000 and $400,000.

Lac La Biche. Same kind of thing, huge spike in housing costs causing real challenges for renters.

Red Deer. Red Deer has been booming. Red Deer, actually, to their great credit, like Medicine Hat, has taken real leadership on affordable housing issues and on homelessness, and I think Red Deer has a target of zero homelessness within several years.

Medicine Hat has an outstanding program and, I think, may be a model for other parts of the province on how to provide affordable housing. But, again, they're finding it's a real challenge.

Drumheller, of all places. You know, you'd never think of affordable housing and rental accommodation as a challenge in Drumheller, but it is.

Of course, as severe as anywhere is Grande Prairie, where we had a town hall meeting perhaps two months ago now. The only topic people wanted to talk about was housing, and we almost literally had people in tears as they told stories about problems trying to find any kind of rental accommodation, of people living weeks and even months at a time in the cab of a pickup truck because there was nowhere else for them to live.

Of course, we have the situation in Edmonton which is I think being particularly forcefully played out in the Assembly this week, where we have dozens of people a day coming to meet with the minister to address these issues.

This is a widespread problem – north, south, east, west, big city, mid city, small city – and it has been building for a long time. So I have to confess real surprise and disappointment that we haven't seen action sooner and much broader and more effective action than we've seen from this government so far.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I'm holding in my hands right now a comprehensive policy developed by the Official Opposition on exactly this issue that's been out for months. Where has this government been on this issue? Aren't they getting the phone calls? Aren't they hearing the concerns of the residents of Alberta on this issue? We sure are, and we've done something about it. I could take the time to just read our whole policy into the record, but I won't, and I'm sure that's to the relief of the minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Grandstand: that's what you've done. You haven't helped.

Dr. Taft: The minister is suggesting that we're grandstanding and that we haven't helped. Well, perhaps I should read our whole policy into Hansard.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, takes a small step in the right direction. But the problem I find with the government's approach is that it's trying to take half a step when it should be taking a full step. I think this can be attributed to this government's failure to understand some basic dynamics of marketplaces. You need in these circumstances to wade in boldly and comprehensively and address the imbalance on both sides of the marketplace.

When you do half a job, which this bill does, you actually create instability for landlords. You create confusion for landlords, and they do the predictable thing in many cases, certainly not in all – there are all kinds of great landlords in this province, but many of them are doing the predictable thing and saying: "Well, gee, we don't know what the government is going to do. It looks like they're limiting us to one increase a year. Who knows what'll follow on that, so we're going to go for the max." That's what we're seeing playing out, and the victims in that are the renters.

Governments intervene all the time in marketplaces, Mr. Speaker. This government intervenes all the time in marketplaces. We brought out some examples in the last few days on regulated requirements on utility companies, regulated approval on auto insurance, on subsidies for natural gas prices. Many, many times this government intervenes in the marketplace, and governments across the country intervene to manage markets, to manage the economy itself. I mean, it's considered a basic responsibility of a government at a national level, for example, to manage an economy through raising or lowering interest rates, through controlling the monetary supply, through controlling its spending, stimulating or pulling back on the economy by controlling spending. This is what a government does. For this particular Alberta Conservative government to be saying that governments shouldn't do that, that governments shouldn't intervene makes no sense.

An Hon. Member: Hypocritical.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. It's a double standard, as we've been saying over and over.

Mr. Speaker, my view on market forces is that in the right circumstances market forces are exactly the way to go. They're exactly the way to go. Markets can be creative. They can be efficient. They are dynamic. They're incredibly productive. We achieve things through market forces that no other society in history has achieved. So if circumstances are right, let people be free. Let producers produce and consumers consume and negotiate and create and invent and so on.

But when market forces aren't right, you don't just back away. You step in. That's a government's basic responsibility. There are all kinds of examples where market forces don't work, well-known standard procedures, standard theory in economics: market failure. Markets can go wrong for lots of reasons. What we have here in the case of the housing market is a market that's out of balance because the demand has far exceeded the supply, so government needs to intervene. I think we would all agree – even the minister here and the Treasury Board president would agree, I hope – that the long-term solution to this problem is more supply. We have to bring on more supply of housing. We have to stimulate that, and we are in our housing policy proposing a range of ways of doing that: changes to zoning so that we can bring on secondary suites, incentives to builders, all kinds of other options that we could see.

I think that we could learn from the past as well. There was a time when Canada had some of the best housing programs on the planet, and they worked well. There's still lots of housing built in Alberta that dates back to the 50s and 60s, when these programs were in place. They brought on supply, thousands and thousands of units, through, for example, low mortgages for developers in return for constructing affordable housing. But that takes years. All of those solutions take years, and people are getting huge rent increases today. So we can't just sit on the sidelines, or at least the Alberta Liberals can't in any good conscience, and just let seniors on fixed incomes or students or single parents trying to get going be casualties of bad government policy in a failed marketplace.

So that's why, Mr. Speaker, we have brought forward a proposal for a temporary rent cap. Stabilize rents, and look after the people that are going to be victims of an imbalanced market until the market can be corrected. It's reasonable economics, it's by no means unprecedented, and despite the unrelenting claims of the Premier and other members of his cabinet there are examples where rent controls have worked perfectly well to protect people. Bringing in rent caps on existing rental units is not a huge discouragement to new rental units being constructed, for example.

So, Mr. Speaker, this bill fails. It fails for not going far enough. It fails for not doing what needs to be done, which is to protect renters from unlimited rent increases. It fails for a lack of vision. It fails for a lack, in our view, of an understanding of the humanity of the housing crisis, and it fails, in our view, for a lack of understanding of basic economic forces.

Now, I know that I'll get debated on that, disputed on that, but all you need to do is go out and listen to the people, go out and take the phone calls to your constituency office, not just from the landlords but from the renters. Put yourself in their shoes. Remember what it's like to live without an accommodation allowance. Imagine what it would be like to live on your CPP and face a $300 a month rent increase and have nowhere else to go because there is nowhere else available.

This comes down to a compassionate view, to an understanding that government isn't just about the law of the jungle. We don't want a province in which it's strictly the survival of the fittest and the rest fall to the side. We need to bring everybody along. Everybody, Mr. Speaker, needs a home, and the Alberta Liberals understand that. We accept that as a basic principle. We'll do whatever we can to bring the government along to understand that same view.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Snelgrove: Would the rent controls cover both existing and new units if you were to impose them? Would they cover existing relationships between the landlord and tenants, or would they also cover all new contracts?

Dr. Taft: Good question. A great question, and a serious one. I appreciate that. We've worked this through. Our rent caps would apply to existing units, and it would be limited, as we make very clear in our policy, to 365 days. At the end of that, as the Member for Calgary-Varsity said, we could review it.

We agree with the government, I'm sure, that the solution here is to get more supply on board. The problem is that in the couple of years that that's going to take, there are just too many people falling to the wayside. So for those people who are in their homes now, renting, we propose a 10 per cent cap on rent increases per year.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Just to follow up, if that's the case, what would stop the landlord from simply evicting their tenants and then saying: "It's a new deal. My rent goes up"?

Dr. Taft: Well, we thought through these angles. These are all good questions, absolutely. Part of our policy, actually, is very similar to what's in this bill, but our concern is that taking a half-step, like this bill does, isn't sufficient. So, for example, in our policy we would prohibit apartment buildings being converted to condominiums unless the owner agreed to build an equivalent number of rental facilities, rental units. For each action, there is a reaction. That's the dynamic of the marketplace, and we need to think through each of those. Our belief is that this situation can be managed with a comprehensive policy that steers us through to a point where there is a surge of supply, and that'll address the problem. So there we have it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

If not, on the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to this bill today in this House of Assembly. You know, there are some interesting flows in the economy that we've seen in the last little while. We've seen shortages of this type in Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie and from time to time in other centres when they have boomed. The CMHC statistics have shown that, really, Edmonton, for example, only showed up in statistics as coming – for example, in 2005 it was at 4.5 per cent in terms of vacancy rates for private structures with three or more apartments, but it fell by October 2006 to about 1.3 per cent. Calgary was at a bad vacancy rate before that, close to 1.7 per cent, but then fell to 0.3 per cent, so a very, very difficult vacancy rate. Much of these vacancy rates have been exacerbated and made worse in the last year and in the last six months.

It's clear from many economists that in the perfect sense – and other speakers have talked to this – rent control as a long-term policy does not work. That is why, for example, the NDP government in Saskatchewan in 1992, I think it was, killed rent control. That's why the Alberta government killed the rent control that it had at one point in time. The nature of rent control in a market economy is that it does inhibit new construction. It does contribute to the deterioration of existing housing. It does reduce property tax revenues. It does increase administration costs substantially. It does reduce consumer mobility. It does increase consumer entry costs.

It has social implications that are problematic. The social costs of rent control fall mostly on the poor. They have a drop in the quality of existing rental housing. There's a marked decline in the numbers of housing units available to poor families. It creates substantial disadvantages to poor families in finding new housing because there begins to be a preferential treatment by landlords of those who can find housing and sometimes in other ways. It goes to families. It goes to whatever.

We've seen these things in New York City for a while. I had some experience with trying to get my sister a place there some years back. They've had rent controls there for many years. In New York City, for example, a study of rent control found that rent-controlled households with incomes greater than $75,000 received nearly twice the average subsidy of rent-controlled houses with incomes below $10,000. So there are some really odd anomalies that come into place when we're looking at trying to help disadvantaged families. It promotes, like I said, housing discrimination. It brings about problems in the construction of units. There are alternatives. I think the government has looked at measures other than this bill as alternatives to creating much additional supply.

I'll table that document on the high cost of rent control in the Legislature tomorrow. I'll also table the document on how rent control killed affordable housing in Winnipeg. I'll also table the rental market report from CMHC. By the way, CMHC will be coming out with a report in June looking at the local market, as I understand.

Nonetheless, the importance of looking at the marketplace and how our market here is not a perfect market right now really brings about a need to — I put out a press release yesterday saying that there needs to be some rent stabilization in the short term if we're to look at the fact that our market . . . [interjections] I've been getting lots of heckling here from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. He was heckling, Mr. Speaker, even introductions the other day and even tablings. You know, it's amazing that this would happen.

But I think that what we have to do in terms of looking at the whole rental market is look at areas. There is certainly not the reality of the need for stabilization of the rental market in — for example, one of my researchers from Daysland says that there is no need to stabilize the market in Daysland, and there's no need to stabilize the market in Fort Assiniboine. But we do see the potential for some increasing real difficulties in the Edmonton market and certainly in the metro Edmonton market as we see the upgraders coming in and the influx of new people increasing in the next year, two years, and three years. We'll have the need for tens of thousands of new people even over and above what we have right now, and we're going to see a greater destabilization of that rental market.

Maybe it's not rentals that we have to look at. You know, what happens is that you have to look at vacancy rates in a larger area. The vacancy rate should be the key to looking at when a market is not working correctly. Something like 2 per cent, 1 and a half per cent and below, that sort of a market range is where we should be looking to monitor rent and to try and increase the supply and have effective ways of really increasing the supply in the short term.

What McMurray had to do when they had this real shortage of supply was look at loosening the whole situation with secondary suites. Well, I was up in McMurray a couple of weeks ago, and the McMurray council had to pass a bylaw saying that there could be only two people staying as boarders in houses because there was no parking in the streets in some of the lower income areas. You're having five and six and seven people staying in trailers. You're having lower end condominiums with five and six and seven people, and there's no place to park on the streets. You get other problems when you try to look at those as the only solutions.

The need to look at the supply side is the key. Having worked in construction a lot in the past, you know, the best short-term solution — sometimes it's not nice, and nobody wants it in their town but maybe nearby — is that you've got to have some camps for the people that are coming in from outside. You've got to have some ways to deal with housing for people that aren't going to have housing. These are the ones that are coming in and, as the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo said, are able to pay because their employer is giving them living allowances of $3,000 and $4,000 a month. They will take away any apartment and outbid anybody, and they'll do that just to have it for the week. They won't even have it for the weekends. They might only be there for two weeks of the month. And that's what has happened in Fort McMurray.

We have to look at targeting existing programs not with a broad brush yet but just those areas that really need it. The government was right in responding to the Radke report and doing that for Fort McMurray. There may be a need to really look seriously at doing something for the Edmonton and area market in the near future, to look at what will be happening with the heartland upgraders and other things that are being built in our area. Certainly, Grande Prairie is having similar pressures.

The people that really do have the worst problems with this are those on fixed incomes, those on AISH, those that cannot move easily. Those are the ones that I've seen, that have come to me. We've done a survey of a high-end apartment building in my riding, and we've done a survey of some low-end ones, and the ones in the high end didn't really respond much. They didn't really care that much. They didn't really make all that many complaints. Many of them said that they're going to be moving and buying a house, even though it costs a lot of money, because they're doing well in a boom-time economy.

But the ones that are on AISH, the ones that are on low incomes, the seniors that don't have much of a pension: those types of folks are the ones that are having the problem. Those are the ones that are coming here today. They're a smaller part but a very significant part of our population and ones that we cannot forget. Something in this whole package needs to address more some of the things that the minister of employment and immigration spoke of doing. I don't know if they really do the whole thing for most of those people. Many of them have come to my constituency. It is a problem in the cities.

We should look at other ways to ensure that the pressures on the market are kept to be less on our students, as was talked about by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. But, you know, it's a funny thing. I believe it was last year that the Grant MacEwan students' residence wasn't even fully taken up by Grant MacEwan students, and they had to open it up to students from NAIT and other areas. They were renting other accommodations because they wanted to. Well, there will be pressure, I think, as these prices rise and as we see the market go forward, to see that they have some additional accommodation open to them. We might be opening other sorts of things to them in order to take care of that pressure on the market.

It's bodies coming in from outside, it's people seeking accommodation, it's people seeking new accommodation that are exactly the problem. The monies that have been put forward will bring things in the next two to three or four years. But as the city said, here in Edmonton it may be difficult to find the 2,500 spots to build. It will be difficult to affect that market. We do not have a perfect market, and we do not have in that housing construction sector — not in all sectors but in the housing construction sector it's very difficult to find qualified people that will do that in a timely and experienced basis in terms of the trades that are necessary. So we're not going to get those people in those units built in that time. We're going to have an imperfect market because of an imperfect labour market right now.

Nonetheless, rent control does not work in the long term, and it does not work well even often in the short term, but there should be some area caps in order to do that. I'm not sure if one year goes far enough. I support the bill, but there may be a need for some real supply-side factors to be looked at in other ways and in the short term.

There may be a need to look at enhanced home ownership, which I think is the best solution in the long term, to look at some of the projects that have been done in other areas such as some of the high-rises that have been built in co-operation with organizations like Habitat for Humanity, that bring about home ownership, that bring about pride in people's homes because they do in fact own them, because they do in fact have a stake in them, and because they do in fact know that they will be there for many years to come. I think home ownership is what many people in Alberta are very happy with, with the prices going up, because they've got equity that's increasing. Those are, in fact, the majority of people in Alberta. But it does pull those that are in situations that are not the best into a difficult quandary right now because they do in many instances have the problem that they may be losing their home. Many have come to my constituency. They are out there.

That's all I have to say. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise with a comment or a question under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, on debate I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 34. I'd just like to say that that was a very good speech that the Member for Edmonton-Manning just gave although I'm fearful that his application to join the government caucus might be in the shredder as we speak because he's just spoken out against the caucus that he wishes to join in terms of favouring some sort of rent stabilization.

Mr. Speaker, I have several comments that I'd like to make this afternoon. The first would be to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing and the hon. President of the Treasury Board for taking the time yesterday and then again today having their staff meet with the residents that came down to the Legislature to have their specific questions asked and their concerns heard.

I have always said that when I'm a minister – and I'm quite confident that I will be someday – I will always meet with Albertans that are here to have their concerns heard. I believe that that is a big part of the responsibility of any minister. I congratulate these two ministers for having done so yesterday, as I did congratulate the current Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry when she met as the health minister with people that were here to complain about the third way. It's important that they do so.

However, there is always a proviso, and there is here too. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing accused us today of grandstanding because we wanted the media in the room. We didn't see, in the case of a government who claims to be open and accountable, why the media shouldn't be there to hear these individual residents when they're telling their stories. The other day he accused us of grandstanding when we brought these people into the House. So I'm not sure what he wants. First he doesn't believe the stories, so we bring them in the House; then we're grandstanding. Then they meet with the media, and that's grandstanding. So I'm not sure what he wants, but I do commend him for at least having taken the time to meet with them.

Mr. Speaker, I would submit that, unfortunately, in some cases the ministers just don't get it. They're out of touch with what's really happening in this province. As an example, the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry this afternoon came out, in response to opposition parties bringing in real-life cases into the Assembly, and cited some cases without naming any names. So I'm assuming they're real-life cases. She cited some cases of stories where her department has helped Albertans that desperately needed some assistance. Good on her. I would expect that she would have those instances and many more to share with this Assembly. In fact, I would suggest that if the minister didn't have those success stories, she wouldn't have been doing her job. This is what the department is there to do, and I fully expect that there would be many hundreds, if not thousands, of cases that she could cite where the system has worked.

The whole point is that there are still many, many instances where it's not working. You can't just talk about where it works. We have to look at where the problems are and make sure that Bill 34, for example, addresses where the problems are. As we've heard this afternoon from several speakers, there's not a lot of confidence on this side of the House that Bill 34 is going to address the specific problems that we've been hearing about day after day this week in the Legislature.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, Mr. Speaker, continues to trot out the $285 million in additional funding. Believe me, the people that are desperate, the people that were up in the committee room this afternoon meeting with his staff are thankful for that. There's no question. But it's not about the dollar figure. It could be $485 million. It could be $685 million. If it doesn't help the people that need help today, the numbers really are meaningless, and I think the minister referenced that in his response to one of the questions this afternoon. It's really about the people, and I think everybody in this Assembly understands that. I hope we do. If we don't, then we're here for the wrong reasons. It's about those individual instances, and one person – one person – that is forced out of their home because of this out-of-control market is one too many. So it's not about the $285 million. I appreciate that initiative, as do others, but that's not what it's about. It's about the people.

Mr. Speaker, I would submit to you that from the moment that the Affordable Housing Task Force made their presentation to the minister, this government has dropped the ball, has bungled this entire file. I really and truly believe that. The first problem, as has been outlined by our shadow minister for Municipal Affairs and Housing, as has been outlined by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who sat on the task force, is that when the housing task force made those recommendations to the minister, it was meant to be a package. Included in that package were temporary rent guidelines, yes, but there were 50 recommendations in that package. It was felt by the members of that task force, including the chair of the task force who comes from the government side, that those recommendations had to be adopted as a package, that that is how they would be most effective in addressing the crisis situation that we're experiencing in this province right now.

That didn't happen. As we know, they adopted 12 out of 50 recommendations; 38, or 76 per cent, of the recommendations of their own task force were left on the sidelines. It's just not good enough in terms of taking a comprehensive package and addressing this situation.

Next, we had the government's response to the task force recommendations trotted out a couple of weeks ago, and it created even more chaos in the market, as we saw. Clearly, landlords did not understand what the rules were that they were working under. They didn't understand what their responsibilities were to their tenants under the proposed regulations. That's why we saw dramatic rental increases, condo conversions, major renovations all being announced within hours or days of the legislation being announced in a press release and of the government's response to the task force recommendations coming out. Clearly, landlords did not fully understand the implications of this press release of the government's response to the task force recommendations.

It's not entirely the landlords' fault. They're left wondering: what the heck are the rules? They feel – and I have heard from many of them, and I'm sure the government members have and the ministers have heard from many landlords as well – as if the rules were changed in the middle of the game. That's a very difficult situation for a landlord to be in. I'm not a landlord currently, but I have been a commercial landlord in the past, and I know that you like to know what rules you're operating under. Whether it's accurate or not, Mr. Minister, they do feel as if the rules were changed in the middle of the game, as if the rug was pulled out from underneath them. So that is a real problem for landlords.

Now tenants, I don't have to tell you, are panicking. Across this province tenants are panicking with these most recent announcements.

An Hon. Member: You're scaring them.

Mr. R. Miller: No, I don't believe we're scaring them. Somebody across the way says that we're scaring them. They're scared. The government has scared them. Their landlords, in some cases, in a few cases – I'm going to talk about the greedy few in a minute. In some cases the greedy few have certainly put the scare into their tenants. I don't believe it's at all accurate, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that the opposition is scaring people. The opposition is doing its job as an opposition, which is bringing to light the issue, making sure that the government is aware of what's happening.

As far as I can recall in the last several days, we have yet to hear a member from the governing side ask a question on rent controls. That's astounding to me. They have, I think, 20 members or 19 members from the city of Calgary. Nobody's asked a question on rent controls. We've got instances of $1,000 rent increases in Calgary, and not one member from this government has asked a question on rent controls.

We've got three members of the Alberta Legislature that represent Edmonton ridings. No questions about rent controls. Is it just that the Albertans that are experiencing dramatic rent increases happen to live in opposition members' ridings, and if they're lucky enough to live in a riding that's represented by a government member, they don't have that happening? I don't think so, Mr. Speaker, but certainly their side is not getting up and representing their constituents.

The minister the other day accused one of our members, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, of not representing his constituents. I haven't heard a lot of representation coming from the government members of their constituents that are facing dramatic rent increases.

The other point I'd like to make. Mr. Speaker, you'll know that the Official Opposition has sponsored a petition urging the government to look at a series of measures, some of which are included in Bill 34 and others which are not, to address this situation, and I have found, personally, going around asking people to sign this petition, that there are people who are afraid to put their name on a petition urging the government to take action. Why? Because, as you know, if they sign a petition, their name does become part of the public record, and they are fearful that they will face repercussions. This is absolutely accurate. I find it astounding that members across the way don't believe that this is true, but I have had people tell me flat out that they are afraid to put their name to a petition because they are afraid of facing repercussions from their landlord if they do so. That is a fact.

I think it's frightful that in our province today there is that much fear in people, that they are so desperate to hang on to whatever housing they've got now that they dare not sign a petition asking their government to take action on this crisis because they're fearful that they might lose their home. That's how bad it's gotten, Mr. Speaker.

I mentioned the greedy few. Perhaps the biggest single problem with Bill 34 is that it does absolutely nothing – and I have yet to hear any solution offered by the government – to address the situation of the few greedy landlords who are gouging. I shouldn't say that there's been nothing. There was some intimation that perhaps the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing would speak to them. Now, I don't know if that means he's going to put on his dark sunglasses and carry a baseball bat and speak to them or if he's going to call them into his office and have tea and crumpets. I don't know. What I do know is that it's not in legislation, and it's not going to change the fact that some landlords are gouging.

It's been suggested – and I believe it's true – that some landlords are taking advantage of the fact that they know that this government is going to have to step in and address the situations of the 75- and 80-year-old grandmothers that are getting 100 per cent and 200 per cent and 300 per cent rent increases. They know that they're going to have to address that situation, so some of these landlords, I'm guessing, are actually thinking that they're going to get away with that increase because somebody's going to have to step in and make sure that that grandmother doesn't lose her home, and it's probably going to be the taxpayers. So I have no doubt in my mind that there are a few, a greedy few, that are taking advantage of that.

There's been nothing said by this government yet other than for, as I said, a talking from the minister to say how Bill 34 is going to stop that from happening. Sure, Bill 34 contemplates some time periods and extending some time periods. That doesn't mean – as an example, a $1,000 rent increase – that that person isn't going to get a $1,000 rent increase down the road. I've got some specific examples that I would like to cite. I hope I have time, Mr. Speaker, to cite some specific examples.

There's nothing in this bill that will deal with that, and if the answer isn't rent controls, Mr. Minister, okay, fine. But then please tell us: what is the answer? What are we going to do to make sure that people don't gouge their tenants? There's been nothing said yet that's going to protect people from that.

Now, one of the solutions that the government continues to trot out is: "We're going to let the market prevail. We believe in a free-market system. We must let the market prevail." Well, I'm here to submit to you that I believe the market will prevail. It always does. Anybody who studies economies knows that markets prevail. That's what they do, no question.

The problem is, Mr. Speaker: how long will it take? What happens to those that are most vulnerable while you're waiting for the market to prevail? How many people in this province are you going to allow to be hurt while we wait for this market that is out of control to correct itself? How badly are you going to let them get hurt while we wait for this market to correct itself? The other thing we all know, because many of us have experienced it in the early '80s, is that when you allow a market that's out of control to correct itself . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a). Does anyone wish to speak? The hon. member for Edmonton-Decore.

An Hon. Member: Oh, this could be good.

Mr. Bonko: Stand by.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member alluded to specific examples, but he did not cite them, so I would like him to give those specific examples.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I allow that, I have another member that has a question. Then, at this time he can respond.

Mr. Snelgrove: Two briefly. One, the hon. member suggested that we were changing the rules in the middle of the game by putting in . . .

Mr. R. Miller: I suggested that landlords feel like it.

Mr. Snelgrove: That's right, and they might. So my question would be: what on earth, then, would rent controls be if they weren't changing the rules in the middle of the game? Two, he suggested that they only accepted a certain number of regulations or recommendations of the report. Could he tell us how many of the recommendations were rejected because they were either already done or in progress?

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to respond to both?

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I suggested was that many of the landlords who have contacted me have suggested that they feel as if this government changed the rules in the middle of the game. I never said that that was the case. I said that they feel as if that's what happened. I do believe that when you read the government press release, it was not clear in pointing out to landlords that the one increase per year in rent was retroactive to 12 months prior to April 24, 2007. That, I believe, is quite evident from what we saw in the hours and days following the government's press release where many landlords who had already given an increase in the last 12 months were dumping big increases on their tenants. Clearly, they didn't understand that they were not allowed to do that. That was not made clear in the government's press release.

I've asked several times in this House: what are you guys doing now to make sure that these people who are confused – and there's chaos out there. It continues today. I continue to get examples in my office today of landlords that do not fully understand the rules.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, then let's get it passed.

Mr. R. Miller: Absolutely. The minister suggests that we should get it passed, and it is our intention to pass that bill today. The bill absolutely does . . .

An Hon. Member: Thank you. I totally agree.

Mr. R. Miller: Okay. Well, we might not get it done today, but certainly our intention is not to hold up the bill, Mr. Minister, if that's your point.

Mr. Speaker, there were other questions, and I would like to answer them.

Mr. Bonko: Do you want me to re-ask the question?

Mr. R. Miller: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Did you want to respond to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore's question, or do you want him to ask it again?

Mr. Bonko: Under 29(2)(a) did you want me to ask the question again?

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Bonko: The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was going to quote specific examples within his constituency. He has not done that yet.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you. I'll try to be really brief because I'm sure I don't have much time. I had a gentleman in my office on Monday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, Mr. David Scott. His 93-year-old mother is living in an independent-living building. She does have some savings – and I asked this question the other day – but her rent is exactly 100 per cent of the income that she has from her savings. One hundred per cent of every penny that this lady is making is being used to pay her rent. So the question that David wanted to know is: what assistance is there for renters? The government always says, you know, if it's more than 30 per cent of your income, then there's some sort of assistance. There are all sorts of examples of people like this who have assets, so as a result of that they've got income from their assets. In this lady's case the rent is taking up 100 per cent of her income.

I had a lady in the public gallery today, Dianne Raymer, who had a $100 increase in December, so under this legislation, when it's passed, her next increase will be in December of this year. She believes the next increase will be the one she can no longer absorb. She's on a fixed income. She has, you know, issues that are facing her. What income she does have certainly doesn't keep up to increases in rent and hikes in gas and food and car insurance and so forth. She believes that the next one will be the one that puts her out.

Mr. Speaker, a dramatic example that I first raised in this Legislature last Thursday: a gentleman who lives in Yellowbird House. His name is Mohamed Deria. He was given a notice on the 30th of April that his rent would increase from $710 to $1,195, an increase of 68 per cent. Now, we know that when this legislation passes, that will actually be deferred two months. Instead of August 1, now it will be October 1 because he signed his lease in October. So there's two months' protection there for him, but at that point his rent will jump 68 per cent. My question to the minister is simply: what is gouging? Is it 68 per cent? Is it a thousand dollars? Where do we draw the line and say: that's gouging?

The Deputy Speaker: Back on the debate, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a great deal of interest to speak on Bill 34 here this afternoon. You know, this bill certainly has an interesting sort of framework. It does move towards some of the things that need to be done in regard to this housing crisis that we're seeing here in the province of Alberta right now, but it stops short of having the clincher, the argument that would actually make accommodation more affordable and make the rest of the framework function as it's described here in Bill 34 as well.

Of course, having to limit increases to rents to once a year and forcing landlords to give one year's notice before condo conversions are fine steps that we do need to take here in the province, but if you don't have a limitation to rein in the out-of-control rent increases that are taking place, then these two provisions actually function to make rental accommodation even more expensive and to make condo conversions even more of a distortion and a liability to the people who are living in rental accommodations or trying to buy condo accommodations.

Without the rent guidelines to put things back onto the rails, these two provisions as they stand alone here in Bill 34 are actually serving to exacerbate the problem. Unfortunately, we were expecting something more. Perhaps during the course of the afternoon and evening we certainly have the opportunity to create more and to perhaps put this thing back on track. I know that there are people who are sympathetic toward some temporary rent guidelines on all sides of this House, and certainly the vast majority of Albertans are onside with the idea. So, you know, perhaps lightning will strike or a miracle will rain down, cooler heads will prevail, and in fact we can during the course of this afternoon and evening come to some resolution or to some compromise solution on this. But as it stands, as a piece of legislation on its own it's not functioning, it's nonfunctional, and as I said before, it in fact would exacerbate the problem, Mr. Speaker.

You know, it's interesting. When we had that all-party housing task force, the recommendation that came out from all quarters, all different parts of the province and certainly ran to agreement in a very interesting group that was the composition of the Affordable Housing Task Force was that, you know, the rent increase guidelines should be temporary so that the housing market can in fact stabilize. I think that's probably the most reasonable thing we could possibly come up with if we were trying to solve something on a microlevel. But here on a macrolevel suddenly different elements of ideology or sort of, I would say, entrenched special interests are a big factor in distorting this argument, entrenched special interests for people to have that default right to change the rents or their rental rates as they wish.

You know, that's not unreasonable, I suppose, as a parlor game argument to make, but we're talking about tens of thousands of people that are in a crisis situation across the province here with undue rental increases or having that undue rental increase hanging over their heads, made worse, probably, by this being entrenched into law. Then you'll see a whole wave of these rental increases. Then I think we have to go beyond that and look at realities and come to a compromise solution that works in the best interests of everybody. Certainly, if we're putting in some moderate rent guidelines, let's say the consumer price index plus 2 per cent – this is what the Alberta New Democrats are suggesting and, I think, pretty much what the Affordable Housing Task Force recommended as well. Is that correct?

Dr. Pannu: Exactly.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. The member right here has first-hand knowledge. Very good.

You know, that's not to say that that's the only increase you can have. Certainly, in looking at rent guidelines around different parts of the country or around the world, you can make special application to exceed that amount. Let's say that you need to put in new elevators or the roof blows off or what have you. You can make application for that increase, and probably the tenants understand that since they actually use the building as well, and away you go.

So it's not as though we're putting people in an untenable situation in regard to running their businesses. Certainly, that's the last thing you would want because, of course, you want the rental market to keep on its merry way. You know, it's interesting. This is probably, I find, the most annoying part of this argument that we've been having over the past days and weeks here: that rent controls or rent guidelines or whatever will stifle the market from building new units. That's just simply not true. We can look for examples around the world where not just a city grows up but a whole society starts to move into, you know, sort of the industrialized, urbanized culture.

Then, of course, people are moving into the cities. You have cities of more than a million. It's much more the rule than the exception in a modern western industrialized country that you have some rent guidelines because people need to live in the densified urban centre. You can't just force people out and have a city of millionaires or billionaires. You have to have all of the other service industries that make a city function, and they have to be living in reasonable proximity to where they're working. That makes for a good mix of urban centre and for a healthy community, and it's just a reality as well.

You know, to say that rent guidelines are like the sky falling and that the Earth will stop turning – I mean, it's just utter nonsense. I defy anybody to show me examples of how rent controls over a period of time have in fact stifled the building of rental accommodations. I can look no further than just outside the door here to see that rental accommodations have not been built here in the city of Edmonton or in the city of Calgary over the last 10 or 15 or 20 years to keep up to the population increase at all, with no rent controls. In fact, who's to say, but I would venture to say that after the last boom, which I did see function as well, that we had here in this city and across this province, lots of rental accommodation was built.

I get this feeling that somebody has talked and said: "Look, let's not do that again. This time when it does increase, we can all rise up, and hopefully the government won't have the backbone to put in rent guidelines, and we can all make a lot of money." That's what's happening now.

You know, we look at this information that we saw from Boardwalk here and lots of other rental companies. Certainly, we don't begrudge them the right to make money for their shareholders and to increase their market share and their value and all of those things, but we are the people who have to provide the regulation side over a long period of time. They are in fact looking for us to provide that regulation side. They know that that regulation side is going to come down, so you see this explosion of rental increases.

You know, with Boardwalk saying, "We can move up to 50 per cent of the income of our average renter, and we can move our rents up to $1,600 a month" and all of these things, sure, that's what they see because they see that opportunity. The door is left open, so to speak. It's our job to make sure that people are not getting gouged, that we can function on all levels of the economy here in this province and not just have it functioning for the fortunate few who can profit from this distorted situation. For a good, balanced society everyone has a right to have a roof over their heads, to have a safe and secure place to live, and this current situation is putting thousands of people in jeopardy of not having that basic right. So as members of this provincial Legislature I think it's incumbent upon us as a responsibility to ensure that we stabilize the situation.

I mean, we're not going to put on draconian measures. You know, we might have to, mind you, if we don't start dealing with this properly. But we can certainly simply put in reasonable guidelines: CPI, the consumer price index, plus 2 per cent. It's like 7.5 per cent a year. If people want to make application to exceed that, certainly they're welcome to do so. It's not like we're setting up something that's going to destroy the rental market. The rental market is not functioning here anyway. Let's try something different. Maybe people will start to build when they see a long-term, stable situation being put in place by a responsible government here in the provincial Legislature. We can do that here this afternoon.

You know, there are lots of examples I have here. Ontario has had some rental increase guidelines for the last 15 years or so – certainly, we don't necessarily need to have it for 15 years – but investment in new apartments in the province of Ontario increased by 88 per cent since the year 2000. Alberta, with no rental increase guidelines, has seen a drop in new rentals by 52 per cent. I mean, what more do you possibly want in terms of statistics proving that anything can happen?

Certainly, you can have a decrease with rent controls, too, I suppose, but we're going to put in other provisions to make sure that that doesn't happen. We can encourage builders to build new rental units. We can encourage new families to buy condos and to buy their own homes because that is a basic foundation that we believe in, I think, on all sides of this House: that people are not just entitled to a place to live but that it increases the stability of the society to allow people to get that first mortgage and make an investment into the ownership market. So there's just a whole basket of possibilities that we could work with here, but we need to stabilize the rental situation in this province, and we owe it to each of our constituents that are in a tight spot at this juncture.

The other part of Bill 34 that I don't hear a lot of people talking about is this condo conversion issue. In 2006 a thousand rental units were converted to condos in Calgary and in Edmonton a similar number, we found, last year. When a rental unit is converted into a condo and then rented out again, which is often the case because people are buying these as equity investments – right? – the average increase in rent is 30 per cent or more because of people trying to recover their costs. So without rent increase guidelines, without limiting the percentage, in other words, by which the landlords can raise the rent in an annual increase, the status quo or worse will prevail, Mr. Speaker. Unscrupulous landlords will use the annual rental increase to gouge renters, and we'll continue to see increases that are unaffordable for the renters that are there.

The logic of this bill is that if it does not include limits on the rate at which the landlord can increase their rents, a one-year notice period on condo conversions with a prohibition on rent increases in the period is in line with the recommendations of the Affordable Housing Task Force and, in fact, Mr. Speaker, is in line with probably trying to stabilize the situation somehow.

This housing crisis is a symptom, Mr. Speaker, of an overheated economy and the inability or the lack of stomach, I suppose, on the part of the government to make some moderations to that overheated economy. People are starting to see this as a housing issue, but then it also becomes a development issue. It becomes a development issue and an industrialization issue. We all want the very best. We want to use the resources that we have at our disposal to serve the population in the best way possible and in the most equitable way possible, I would say, as well and with basic responsibilities in regard to social justice and in regard to the environment.

This is just symptomatic, Mr. Speaker, of the larger problem of dealing with the pace of development in this province. I know that people don't want to touch the brake and away we go and let's see, a no-tomorrow sort of attitude, but when you're living with that no-tomorrow sort of attitude, you start to see pieces fall off. This is one of the biggest pieces that I've seen fall off in this time that I've been in the Legislature, and it's the one that really does make me realize that we have to in fact have some moderation on the pace of growth in this province of Alberta because this will only be one thing.

The next thing we'll see is inflation, rampant inflation for people to try to pay for these rents, people having to get second jobs. You'll have an increase – already we see it, but just wait – in prices on consumer goods like food and on fuel and a whole range of other things. What you end up with, Mr. Speaker, is runaway inflation, and nobody wants that. It doesn't help anybody. It only creates the spiral that will turn a boom into a bust, and, you know, I don't think any of us wants to see that. We want to see proper, maintained rates of growth over a long period of time, and that's exactly the opposite direction that we're going here right now. This is a symptom of a spiral in the pace of development. It's hurting thousands of people across the province. Bill 34 starts out so great. You know, it's like buying that book that you read about, that you've been hoping for and looking forward to, and then, boom, it finishes four chapters before it should have done. The part where you have to have rent guidelines, CPI plus 2 per cent: the Alberta New Democrats support that, the Affordable Housing Task Force supports that, and I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of the population of Alberta supports that too.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Just a brief question. The hon. member is obviously comfortable with reaching into the landlords' pockets and rolling back their rents and taking the money from them. If it were shown clearly that one of the biggest impediments to affordable housing was the cost of the tradesmen that are building these units, would the hon. member also support going back to the trades and saying: you're going to have to roll back your salaries to help us look after the housing problem?

Mr. Eggen: Well, no. I thank you for that. I appreciate it. I've actually heard this argument before as well. You know, it's not a question of us reaching in and rolling back the landlords' money but, rather, simply looking for a compromise place where we can stabilize the price. Okay? When you're building new units, all of the problems associated with building in this province are going to be there when we try to build new affordable housing units too. I'm under no illusions. I mean, it's great that we have that new money for affordable housing, but we all know how much longer than we think a project is going to take it actually does take in this overheated economy. Right? So when you're talking about the new units coming online and the cost of those things, that adds to the urgency of the whole situation.

So, you know, you're not taking money from the landlords when you're doing this, certainly. You're just moderating the whole thing so that you can in fact create an atmosphere where you can build new units. A big part of the cost of doing business is the labour associated with building these new housing units. That's part of what we're going to have to swallow too.

I understand what you're saying, but they're two separate things following on a parallel track.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I've got to tell you that it's a lot more fun asking questions than answering. It really is.

You would support price control. What conditions would it take for you to support wage control?

Mr. Eggen: Well, certainly when you've got wage and price control going on, I mean, that's the worst possible scenario. The last time we saw that, you know, it was an unfortunate thing. When you're putting in a price guideline on one specific commodity, it's a whole different ball game than the wage and price controls that the Liberals brought in back in the late '70s, I believe. Right? That was detrimental to everybody. I would never want to see that.

When you're putting a price guideline on a single commodity, that's a whole different game. Okay? When somebody wants to build some new places or you're expanding or you're doing renovations or whatever, we're not writing this in stone. We're not saying: "Oh, okay. Sorry. You can't fix the roof. You can't put another 50 units on the back or what have you because you're only allowed the 7.5." Under rent guidelines you can apply for an exception, and it's not such a big deal. Right? I mean, you're making people in poverty apply, have to beg and say: please, sir, we can't afford our rents. I mean, there's nothing wrong with making a simple application on the landlord's side. If they want to increase the rent a little bit or increase their rent beyond the guidelines to pay for trade costs or whatever, that's not a problem.

So we're not advocating a broad-based control over the economy. I mean, nobody wants that. A single commodity, which happens to be the most important commodity that people need, which is a house over your head – stabilize the situation. Let's move on from there. Everybody is happy.

Mr. Snelgrove: This is just so much fun.

Under any conditions we're only going to look after this one control, rental housing. Good deal. Would the hon. member consider ever putting controls on the energy sector?

Mr. Eggen: Well, I mean, it seems a bit vague. You have a market that deals with the energy sector, right, in the broadest possible way. We have the application process, the EUB, a very finely tuned system, which could use a little bit of help – but that's okay – which moderates the energy sector, and we have a royalty regime and a rate that also has an effect on the energy sector, plus the myriad of other taxes, including gasoline tax and whatnot, that we put on. I mean, all of those things are in place. I think they're all fine mechanisms by which we help to deliver energy at the affordable price and money for the province. That's what you do.

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today in second reading of Bill 34. I just want to say a few things that I haven't had the opportunity to say before because of the fact that nobody's ever asked me. What I say that nobody's ever asked me, I'm referring to the media and the fact that ever since this report has been distributed out to the government and released, I've never been asked by the media any questions at all whatsoever.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, it's been a pleasure to work with you on this task force along with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, along with all the other 14 task members. They were wonderful people, hard-working people, and they truly wanted to do something good with this report. Again I just want to go back to the fact that I have never been asked, and I wonder why. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview stole all the thunder, so I'm here today now to take some of that back.

I first want to say that, yes, I chaired this committee, the Affordable Housing Task Force committee. Yes, I did. I chaired it, and again I want to say that the members on this committee were wonderful people to work with, but we had some differences of opinion. We had some different thoughts, a lot of debate, a lot of arguments on certain recommendations. A number of people didn't agree with some recommendations. Others did. It came down to a vote around the table.

When we travelled around the province, Mr. Speaker, we heard from a lot of people, a lot of people from Hinton to Lethbridge, Medicine Hat to Elk Point, and a lot of these individuals that we met with suggested that rent control is the way to go. We heard from people on AISH, seniors on fixed incomes, and low-income individuals. A number of them indicated that rent controls were the way to go.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we did hear from a lot of individuals, a lot of organizations who thought otherwise, who thought rent control was not the way to go. Land developers indicated to us that if there was any type of rent control in place, basically that would halt all further development. I know that the opposition members will say to me: well, there is no development right now, so what difference is this going to make? I would say that, yes, there is no development right now, and there hasn't been for a while, but I think that the government has to provide other incentives for land developers to build low and affordable housing units.

Rent control is not the answer, Mr. Speaker. History indicates this, and this was something that I did produce during our task force consultations. But, again, we had the vote on the recommendations, and of course the hon. member from across the way and other individuals on the task force who thought the same way were in the majority. So that's why it made it into the recommendations of the report.

Now, I continually hear, and I have heard throughout the past few weeks since the report was released, from the opposition that this is what the task force indicated, that this is what they said, that this is what we've got to do. That's true; that's what it said in the report, Mr. Speaker, but again it was not the majority of the task force members, and I just wanted to make that clear to you.

An Hon. Member: It was the majority.

Mr. Webber: It was the majority. Yes. Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. It was the majority. That's why it made it into the report.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased with Bill 34 and the amendments that are going through with this bill. There was certainly a lot of talk about condo conversions and the moratorium on condo conversions for a year also with the task force. That was another area that we had difficulty with. When I say "we," I mean myself as the chair. But I can live with that. I can live with what our government is putting forth in Bill 34 on the condo conversions along with the rent stability guideline of one increase per year. I, again, struggle with that myself, but I can live with it.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to say that I support Bill 34 and the amendments to it. Thank you. [some applause]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the debate.

Mr. Martin: You're going to give me a standing ovation, too, are you? Mr. Speaker, the only time that I can remember getting an ovation is when I came in and walked in for the first time. I never had that experience in the Legislature, and probably you'll never get it again.

An Hon. Member: You've got to retire sometime.

Mr. Martin: It's like Ed Broadbent said: there's nothing so popular as a socialist that's retiring.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make a few comments about Bill 34. I want to first of all say to the chairman of the task force: it was a pleasure to work with you. He was a great chairman. He allowed everybody to have their say. We couldn't have asked a person to do a better job as the chairman of that task force. I also want to say, as the hon. member from Foothills did say, that the task force was dedicated. They worked hard, and there was a lot of discussion.

We were all over the province. I want to come to what I think we all agree we heard across the province: the fact that we're in a crisis situation. We heard that right from Grande Prairie to Fort McMurray to Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, everywhere we went. I was surprised, frankly, that the problems were as severe as they were in southern Alberta. We hear about northern Alberta all the time, but when we went down there, we saw the same sorts of problems, and there was a crisis.

We were told in Medicine Hat, for example, Mr. Speaker, that eventually the population of Alberta – the mayor said that the economic development department told them that in the next number of years the population was going to be double, 6 million people. Now, I don't know how we'll ever keep up with that pace if that's the case. Now, that's just speculation, admittedly, but we know the amount of people coming into the province. I would suggest that Calgary has different figures than even the 100,000. They say 97,000 people came into Calgary last year. So I don't know. There's a lot of people coming in.

The point I want to make and stress is that it is a crisis situation. It's not only true in housing. It's true in health care. It's true in education. It's true everywhere. But it's the government's economic strategy that's saying: okay, we're not going to put the foot on the brakes; therefore, we're going to move ahead. So for at least the foreseeable future we're going to be facing these same sorts of problems. That's what the task force heard.

Now, admittedly, last summer I was advocating rent guidelines when we started to hear the stories out of Calgary that in the short run we need them. I understand the market, having worked in the private sector for a number of years. The market works well when there is a market, but when there is not a market, it doesn't work very well. That's the point. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that we heard from people.

Sure, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills is right. Boardwalk came and quoted Milton Friedman and a bunch of supply-side economists, and that was supposed to impress us. The Calgary Apartment Association came and said that they didn't want rent controls. Well, if I was them, I probably wouldn't want them either. But the vast majority of people came to the public hearings, and they said: "Look. We're in an emergency situation. Something has to be done." This is not new, what we're hearing here in the Legislature just in the last couple weeks. We were hearing this right across the province. I think it started in Fort McMurray, and certainly, now, Calgary and Edmonton, it's the same sort of thing. People are under stress. They're worried.

I want to say to the hon. President of the Treasury Board, who is sponsoring the bill: it's not only the people that are the most vulnerable, the people on fixed incomes. There are growing numbers of people that are what I would call the working class or middle class or whatever that are also very worried because they see the possibility that they're not going to be able to afford to buy a house, yet there's no control on how fast the rents are going to rise for them. So it's not just the most vulnerable. That's bad enough, but there's a growing situation out there, and I'll come back to that.

Now, I want to say that I told the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, and I did tell the minister of municipal affairs: do the right thing. It will be easier for you people if you do the right thing. Ultimately, I accept that the government has to make decisions. I don't think they've made the right ones here, but I understand that they're the government, that for every task force that goes out, they don't necessarily have to accept every recommendation. That goes without saying. But what I said to them both at the time – and I think the Member for Calgary-Foothills probably would agree with me – was: "Get this out. Then you guys can at least debate it. It's out there. You can go and talk to your caucus or whatever, but make sure it's out there in the public so that there is that debate." That's what people wanted. There were a lot of expectations on this committee. I think the members opposite would agree with that.

The advantage to that is that it would be out there. People could debate it. They could talk about it. It could come back to the government, and they could make some decisions then. But when it put it behind closed doors, it looks like – and I believe this to be the case – it was so that we could put our political spin on it in case we didn't like some of the recommendations. Well, it didn't work. You know, there are certain key things that people look at. There are a lot of things in the report that are good that have to deal with the other end of it, that people haven't talked about. We knew that there would be certain things that they'd look at.

Now, I want to be fair. The minister talked about it. It was not unanimous to support rent guidelines. I don't think it's any secret that I was pushing it, but I want to say to the member that I wish more government members had been with this. I don't think the majority of the people that started off on that task force would have been for rent guidelines. I'm absolutely sure of that. In fact, I know that one of the members said: "Look. Philosophically, I'm against this, but we were told that we had to go out and listen and to make recommendations from what we heard." He said, "I can't ignore what thousands of people were telling me, that we need temporary rent guidelines." And again I stress temporary because in an ideal market we don't need it. That's where it started.

Yes, it was not unanimous, but it was a big majority that voted for it on that committee. I recollect – and I think I'm right – that it was 10 to five of the 15 people that were there. It was after a thorough debate, you can rest assured. I honestly don't believe at the start of that that it would have been that way, so that was after listening. It's too bad that more of the government members weren't there with us to listen to what was going on.

That's what was somewhat disappointing. I knew that the government would have some difficulty with the ideology. I jokingly call it Adam Smith here, but the reality is that we asked for temporary guidelines. Now, the argument always is – you know, everybody else has alluded to this – that it'll hurt investment. We won't get rental units on. Well, how could it get any worse? But at least we'd be protecting some people that are there from unscrupulous rent increases.

The other argument we hear is that you never get rid of it. Well, the experience that we had back in the first boom is that they did get rid of it. They had it there for a while, and they did get rid of it. As you recall, you may have read in the paper that Councillor Cavanagh was the one that took the rent controls out at that time because they weren't needed. He said that it was easy, very easy. But he also said that now we need them temporarily again. So this idea that you can never get rid of them just doesn't fly in Alberta history. This is not New York City. This is Alberta. Those people that believe that the market can solve everything should have some faith that when the market is there, we can get rid of these things in this province. That's the reality. We can.

This is precisely the CPI plus 2 once a year. That's what is already happening in British Columbia. You know, that's a reasonable profit. You're guaranteed that you can go out and do that every year, CPI plus 2. The point is that rather than a strict control, because I understand that there could be, you know, all sorts of circumstances, labour if you like or whatever, where there costs have just ramped up, they can apply to the board for whatever reason, and that often is passed on. We've talked to them. So they're not just stuck there if they've had extra costs that are driving up the problems, but at least there's some semblance. That, to me, is a pretty good profit, and that's the security. Now, we called for two years. Whether that would be enough time or not, that was a reasonable compromise. We said temporary and the two years, Mr. Speaker.

Now, there's a carrot and the stick here too. If you look at the other parts of the task force, we tried to look at how we get more rental units onto the market. Clearly, if you look at it, we were talking about some tax incentives, if you like, to bring the markets on. Remember, it's been stated before that in B.C. or Ontario new units aren't under controls. It's only the units that are already built, so that's a bogus sort of argument. The reality is, Mr. Speaker, that they can move ahead and build the units, and they won't be under controls. But we have to look at other things. There's no doubt.

A couple of issues that I would like to deal with. Number one, inclusionary zoning. This is working in many parts of the world. There are some examples in Toronto and Montreal, all sorts of examples. Inclusionary zoning says: look, if you're in to build in a subdivision, then you have to put a little bit into rental units so that we don't ghettoize people, and we have it there. You get tax breaks to do that. If you're prepared to do that, we'll give you a good tax break, and that will help your bottom line. I notice the recommendation was that we'll look at it down the way, but that's an important issue. So there's the carrot and the stick there, too, to bring units on.

The other thing we suggested – I was surprised that the government didn't accept this one because there was some experience with mortgage relief for people in the previous boom. We suggested, as the minister would be aware, $100 million for mortgage subsidies, and that would stimulate the market to get people in. Clearly, they both tie together. We were looking at the continuum, you know, from the homeless right through to young people especially, trying to get into home buying, and it's become very, very difficult to do that. Some sort of mortgage help would get them out of rental units and into their own homes, whether it be condos or whatever, and that would free up some space for the rental units again, creating a little better market. I thought that was one that the government would actually accept. I was surprised when they didn't. I think that that would have had a very stimulating impact in terms of getting some of the units on board.

Mr. Speaker, last night I was at a function in my own riding. The city of Edmonton is trying, as the government is aware, an innovative project with the school boards and the government and the city to try to get first-time home buyers into some of the vacant school areas that have not been used. In my community – and I'm very proud of them – the Homesteader community said: "We don't like the way that it was brought at us. We didn't know about it. We want to be involved. We'll do it, but we want to be involved." So the meeting was there with Mayor Mandel and the councillors, and I attended.

One of the stories that came forward was from a couple. They were both young working professionals. He said: you know, I'm really excited about this project because the city of Edmonton is going to, as the minister is well aware . . . [Mr. Martin's speaking time expired] Sorry. I'll come back another time.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) does anyone wish to add any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. I would very much like the last hon. member to perhaps elaborate on that last point that he was making.

Mr. Martin: I love this. I feel like I'm a minister here.

Thank you. I'd be glad to. This is a young couple, both professionals. All this person was saying is: "I'm excited about this project. How do I get into it?" The mortgage subsidy was going to bring it down to where he might be able to qualify. He says: "Without this I have no chance of owning a condo, a house, anything. I've been looking around. I make a good salary. I tell you honestly that if I can't do this, I have to look to Saskatchewan or somewhere else."

The point that the mayor said at the time is that that's exactly the people we can't afford to lose, that whole group of teachers, nurses, in that area. I think that that's another important part of this affordable housing. That's why I was surprised that we didn't look at that end of it with the mortgage subsidies for five years or whatever, which it is with Edmonton. There are controls on that. So I think that would've been some help with the rental units too.

Thank you for that chance, hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, back on the debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to speak to Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. We have had much discussion throughout this past week particularly as this crisis has come to a head. All of us care deeply about this amendment. Many of us have friends and family members who have been affected by the explosive growth in the province.

I would have to begin by making some general comments about the changes in the province and how they reflect failure on a couple of levels. The housing crisis is a symptom of failure of the market, on the one hand, to protect people and on another level the failure of government to balance growth, to manage growth in the province, looking at the economy in the context of a sustainable environment and social support systems.

I guess the key operating phrase is sustainability. When we talk about sustainability, what indicators are we using to establish whether we are making decisions that are not compromising the future, that are ensuring that infrastructure is in place to deal with growth as it's happening, that we attend to the social supports that people need, and indeed that we have comprehensive, cumulative environmental assessments to know what we're getting into and make judicious decisions to limit growth where it is appropriate?

It's very clear that the role of governance is more than simply opening up the market to do what it does best, which is to produce and to develop. Governance involves the hard work of analysis, looking at trends, looking at prices, looking at options, looking at the scope and pace of how we want this province to develop, and this has not been done. It has been absolute failure and negligence, I would argue, in terms of a tremendous resource-based economy that has only been going one way in the past decade.

There's a need, then, for a larger plan, for good science, and for a recognition that the public interest should determine how and how fast we develop, not the market, and a plea for a longer term vision, a longer term plan, and a recognition, especially now with climate change crashing in on us, that we have to balance the market with more sustainability indicators around social, infrastructure, and environmental values.

I acknowledge many good parts of the bill and some changes that have already been made that will over time bring about some remediation of a very unfortunate situation, where so many people, especially disadvantaged people but even middle-class people and, certainly, seniors on fixed income, are in a serious emotional as well as economic crisis as the result of unpredictable and unsustainable rent changes and, in fact, rent gouging.

That seems to be the key issue that we're dealing with in a market that's gone awry. It's puzzling a bit to me that the government doesn't mind intervening in some ways in the market, including limiting to a once per year rent increase and limiting development of condo-ization and rent increases associated with a plan to condo-ize, yet they have difficulty making a decision on a similar intervention, which would be a rent cap, and in the short term allowing people to have more security and establish a better balance in our housing and human needs market.

This is a fundamental human need, and when we allow the market to threaten that fundamental human need, we pay hugely in terms of mental health, indeed, physical health issues resulting secondarily from that, social problems. What we fail to do as government then ends up being dumped into the health care system, where I have seen lots of evidence that these kinds of situations are extremely bad for individual and family and community health. So it's a bit puzzling to me why this one issue, capping rent, has created such a furor on the opposite side since other interventions are seen to be reasonable.

The Liberal plan from January 2006 indicated that secondary suites and the promotion of secondary suites would be another key short-term assistance measure. We would also limit rent increases to once per year, but we would add the cap in the short term, that we've talked about so often here, preventing gouging and increasing people's security.

We also talk in our plan about land trusts and ensuring that some public land is set aside each year in a long-term plan to ensure that there is availability for affordable housing. That's something that I haven't seen discussed or seen in the plan under Bill 34.

We would also ensure that the allowances that we're giving to people struggling with affordability would go to the renter rather than to the unit, and that seems to be an area where we're missing some opportunities here.

Another element of our plan is microcredit, where we would provide interest-free loans with a time limit to enable people to do more in terms of home ownership and independence. We would also strengthen the student loan and housing aspect of this crunch, that's hit students as well in a very serious way, that adds tremendously to students who are struggling with classes and independence and all kinds of adjustments in the postsecondary state.

I was puzzled to see the rejection of a housing plan for the province. I'm not sure why this government didn't adopt that recommendation. It seemed like a very reasonable longer term solution. We'd be interested to hear a discussion about why that was not felt to be an appropriate decision for this government and why we would not be indexing funding based on inflation. We do a lot of things on the basis of cost-of-living increases, including our own salaries. Why would we not include an aspect of indexing funding on the basis of inflation for affordable housing as well?

I haven't heard much discussion of the revisions needed in the Municipal Government Act to allow for more flexible zoning. That seems to me to be another part of the mix, the complex of actions that would help, both in the short term and in the long term, to really turn this situation around.

As the shadow minister on Environment I would also express some dissatisfaction with the rejection of green construction as being part and parcel of new construction. We are saving money in the future with energy costs if we invest now in green construction, more environmentally sustainable and tight buildings.

Another issue for me is the brownfield sites that continue to persist in the province. It's cheap land. If it's reclaimed and remediated, it could be available for affordable housing. Why are we leaving that year after year and decade after decade when this land could be extremely valuable and useful and cheaper than the average land for affordable housing?

Another area that was recommended by the task force, a client-focused service model, was rejected. Again, this doesn't reflect a government that sees a priority in individuals and families and their particularly unique needs in terms of housing. I'm puzzled as to why one would reject that kind of positive policy that focuses on individual needs and family needs. The goal of governance fundamentally is to create healthier, more sustainable communities. Surely we have to look, then, at balancing the market with the interests of individuals, families, and communities.

With those comments, I'll take my seat, and I look forward to further debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like the hon. member to perhaps elaborate on what he would consider green buildings and how that would actually fit in to how we would look at Alberta in the future.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you for that question. Indeed, climate change has changed everything about the way we have to live our lives and govern this province. We now can no longer sustain the kind of focus on fossil fuels and the squandering of our resources, whether it's water or the use of fossil fuels, to individually drive our way around to various venues and keep lights on and fail to insulate properly.

There are some wonderful examples around the planet of sustainable housing, green housing, that would ensure tight buildings, that would ensure more energy-efficient use, that would have automatic monitors within buildings that turn lights off and on and that adjust the temperature when people are in and out of the building, that would ensure an appropriate mix of renewable energy: solar, microwind, even geothermal, and even the biofuels that will in some ways incent more of our farm community with products that will not only benefit the economy but also benefit the climate change issues that we must be so cognizant of and attending to.

Green buildings and the LEED system have increasingly been adopted by progressive companies, by individuals. Government can play a leading role in moving these forward. Part of our technology fund should be fronting the costs of some of this remarkable energy saving and renewable energy as part of the standard package of building, whether it's new buildings or new housing. There should be a standard package that includes at least gold, if not platinum, LEED environmental design and construction, minimizing our environmental footprint. These are just awaiting government leadership, policies that set a standard for ensuring that we are being responsible stewards, we are thinking about our global responsibility, and whether it's affordable housing or standard housing, we are taking seriously our commitment as a government to provide leadership on climate change issues and reducing carbon in our day-to-day living.

Thank you for the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Mason: I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View about what would constitute, in his view, a reasonable size of a rent increase in light of current conditions and whether or not he thinks that the current legislation will accomplish that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A reasonable rent increase I think is an important question for us to discuss. A cost-of-living increase plus something for profit seems to be a reasonable way to think about it. Obviously, people who are going into the business of rental accommodation have to get something to keep themselves going, and surely we have to address the cost-of-living increases.

We gave ourselves a 5 per cent increase this year. Why wouldn't we use that as a basis and add something reasonable for profit, at the same time confronting extraordinary increases that are simply usurious and corrupt, in many ways abusing the market, using the market in ways that will damage our social fabric? Perhaps a 10 per cent maximum one year to the next would be a starting point. I'm interested to hear what others on all sides of the House think is a reasonable rent increase.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just very curious from what we heard in the House today whether the hon. member thinks that the out-of-town rent allowance is unreasonable.

The Deputy Speaker: The time for Standing Order 29(2)(a) has elapsed.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the debate.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is obviously a crisis in this province. The market system is a great system to work by. It's something that has built our country, it's built the North American economy, and it's certainly something that we live by in the western world. Part of it is wonderful because it creates huge creativity in the people that are involved in it. Part of that creativity is based on the fact that there is so much competition: we have to look at a better way to build a mousetrap.

The object to make the market system work well, of course, is supply and demand, but that supply and demand really has to be balanced. What I'm looking at right now, I don't see balance. This is what we in this House are supposed to be doing. We are supposed to be governing. We are supposed to be creating rules that will keep that field level that people play on in the market system so that everyone basically has a good chance not only to compete but also to be able to reap the benefits. What kind of a society do we have if we cannot look after the ones that are the most vulnerable in our society?

So that is our job. It is our job to make the rules. It is our job to protect the rules that would ensure that we live in a civil society. I fear that I see some of these going by the wayside. I fear that we're ending up in a society that really is not very civil. It's certainly the survival of the fittest, and the fittest appear to be getting to be a much smaller segment of this population and certainly of the population of Alberta.

Seniors have worked all of their lives. They have done. They have played by the rules that the governments have established over these many years. They've paid for their homes. They've educated their children. They have paid their taxes. But, more importantly, what a lot of these seniors have done is put away dollars for their retirement, and now they're finding that over the time not only has inflation eaten up what they thought would be their retirement, but some of the rules have changed so much that they are now at a disadvantage, and it had nothing – nothing – to do with their not playing by the rules.

One of the things that, of course, has affected them is tax assessments, the way the market value changed. Yes, they could sell their homes for a tremendous amount of money, but where are they going to move? It's going to cost them just as much to replace it. One of the things that can't help them stay in their homes is the increase in taxes. They had no idea the taxes would be going up that high, and they simply can't afford it and look to move. They've got nowhere to move.

Many seniors have not had the advantage of working for a company that's had a pension plan, or in fact they didn't work for a union, or in fact they often worked from paycheque to paycheque and still managed to put some money away. But it's not helping them now. People are saying: well, you should have put more money away. That's not fair with what we are trying to download onto our seniors. They did do their best, and there are many people out there that have done their very best. It's not their fault that they didn't work for a company that had a pension plan or that they didn't belong to the union so that they have the advantages of some of the others.

One of the things that I'm concerned about that has been part of the discussion is that I'm not sure I have ever heard a clear definition for the word "gouging," and I believe that the hon. member previous to me perhaps touched on that. What could be considered a fair profit? Of course businesses have to have a fair profit – that's what their mandate is – but what's fair? What's fair in a civil society? And is that where gouging comes in? Anything over and above what would be considered fair: is that gouging? I haven't heard the definition.

Also, we would need a clear definition of what is low income. Some people have very low incomes at this point in time, but because over the last number of years they've saved their money, they actually have assets that are worth money, and that's often held against them, which I think is most unfair.

One of the other solutions that we've talked about is secondary suites, and I think that they're a wonderful idea. I certainly know many people who already have secondary suites. They're rental accommodations. More people are looking to put in secondary suites. I would suspect that because there is no real control, the majority of these are what we would consider illegal suites. They have to have a legal egress, and certainly fire prevention is one of the big criteria. We've been talking about relaxing those rules, and I think it's a wonderful idea.

However, I'm not sure that it's going to create secondary suites that will actually appear in the newspaper. If you have a home with a secondary suite that is illegal, more often than not because you don't have the 220 wiring – you can't really find out if it is a secondary suite. Rather than use a stove, they'll use hotplates and microwaves and toaster ovens. People are getting money, so to speak, under the table, probably not declaring it in their income. So I'm not altogether sure that a lot of these secondary suites will ever surface in terms of actually being able to accommodate people looking for help in that area.

If the rules that were brought in would then help owners with secondary suites, I think it's a very good idea. However, I've asked a couple of people about secondary suites in their neighbourhood. Now, the average cost of their home was $400,000. I can assure you that they said: not in my neighbourhood. And I said: "Why not? You've got a monster house here. I know somebody that has a rental unit that's probably the size of your bathroom, so why wouldn't you have a secondary suite?" I think we would certainly run into a lot of the not in my backyard sort of stuff.

Mr. Rodney: NIMBY.

Ms Pastoor: NIMBY. Thank you very much to my hon. knowledgeable colleague that is sitting beside me in this House.

An Hon. Member: On which side?

Ms Pastoor: Well, isn't that amazing? He's on my right side.

Mr. Rodney: Quite far to the right.

Ms Pastoor: Quite far to the right, so he said. I'm not sure he's as far right as he thinks he is, but never mind.

I really think that secondary suites could be an amazing answer because certainly they are the answer for many, many students. In fact, I didn't have a secondary suite, but I did have boarders. It was my pleasure to have some baseball players stay with me. They were baseball players for the Prairie Baseball Academy, which is a very prominent academy in Lethbridge. One of the things that I learned by having young baseball players in my home was that I had no idea that there were that many teenage girls in Lethbridge. They all showed up on my doorstep. Believe it or not, these young men actually appreciated the fact that I kept those girls away. The house was really to study in and live in. [interjections] Believe it or not, I really do not look as good as Susan Sarandon in Bull Durham, so none of that stuff happened.

Besides secondary suites, actually the suggestion that had come from the other side was that families do take in other family members. I remember that years ago in Lethbridge granny suites were the big thing that we actually talked about in terms of zoning. I think it is a wonderful idea because there are many, many lonely people out there who would love to just be able to live in proximity to their family but not necessarily be a part of it when what they do with their lives is so different.

So there are any number of really creative things that can happen out there. I think it takes the will of the government to come up with some good legislation, and I believe it's our duty to come up with legislation for this housing crisis. But I think one of the things that we have to admit out loud is that there is a crisis. It is going into catastrophic atmosphere.

Rent control: I don't like that word. But I think that if you sit down and talk to some of these landlords that I've spoken to, they actually are in favour of something that is fair. The real estate agents that I've spoken to are saying: just tell me what it is. Even the real estate market is in chaos out there because they don't know what to do. If this bill passes, it will go back to April 24. They're saying: "You know what? We almost don't care. Just tell us. Just make the rules." We have to stand up and be counted. That's what we're getting paid for.

I think that I will stop there, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My colleague from Lethbridge-East talked a lot in her speech about secondary suites. We know, of course, that secondary suites are a potential solution or at least a part of the solution to the current housing crisis. However, one of the concerns that I have – and I've had others express it to me as well – is that there are currently an awful lot of secondary suites that are operating illegally. My concern is that there may not be as much potential for secondary suites as is suggested by the government because, in fact, a lot of those are already operating. We just don't know about it. They're not legitimate, as it were, right now. So my question for my colleague would be whether or not she has the same concern, that we won't realize as many secondary suites as the government is suggesting we will because, in fact, a lot of those are already operating. We just don't know about them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I agree totally that secondary suites can be a really good solution, but I also think there are a lot of things that have to be ironed out ahead of time. As I think I mentioned before, I really feel that a lot of the secondary suites that are illegal will have to have some kind of an incentive to be able to come forward so that the owner of the illegal, soon to be legal, secondary suite is not penalized by losing the money that they actually were getting from those secondary suites to begin with. I'm not sure how we can handle that in its entirety, but I think it's something that has to be looked at in terms of a problem with secondary suites.

Secondary suites also could really be considered in any of the new buildings that we have. We absolutely have to build. There is no question in this province that we must create more units for living. So when developers come forward, perhaps there should be an incentive for them to build a duplex that would lend itself to a secondary suite. Even fourplexes could also lend themselves to secondary suites if they were more like townhouses, up and down. Even townhouses could be secondary suites with some very creative architecturally designed units.

I think that's something else to look at. When we build these new units, perhaps create an incentive to the creative designer and architect that would create buildings that lend themselves to secondary suites, and when the secondary suite is not needed anymore, when the supply catches up with the demand, then they could be turned very easily back into one-family homes.

Thank you for that.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Yes. I just have further questions about secondary suites. It's my opinion that most Albertans are law-abiding citizens and that they would very much hesitate before building and before, you know, developing a secondary suite within their building when it's against the law. So I think that the number of suites that would become available if we were just to allow it, if we were to make sure that that opportunity was available to them, is actually higher than what we're thinking.

Ms Pastoor: Well, thank you for that. There was just a little bit of Pollyanna in there, I'm afraid. For many years I've actually done census, and let me assure you that when you do census, you find more illegal suites and more stuff that – I'm not going to go on to that one. I've probably only got a minute. I've got great stories, but never mind. When you do census, you really do find where all of these illegal suites are, and you also find out how many places really have boarders.

I agree with the hon. member that we can look at the new developments, but if these are developed as new, then the secondary suite would automatically be recognized, and it wouldn't be illegal.

The Deputy Speaker: Back on the debate, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Normally I'd be kind of pleased to be able to speak to something like this, but this is probably one of the tougher subjects that we're debating here within the House. It's up there with the third way, or the alleged third way that was supposed to come. This is a particular thing. It doesn't matter what side of the debate you're on. There are no winners. There are no losers here. It's a tough one, and that's just the bottom line.

I recognize that if I was an apartment owner or if I was a developer, the bottom line is that I'm in a business to make money. I recognize that. I'm not in it to give out charity. That's the bottom line. But not all of them are like that, have a cut and dried attitude.

I think that if we were going to have a real impact with this Bill 34, we would have to sit down and talk with them as, apparently, the task force did. But put in a sunset clause: two years maximum. Two years does fly by quickly. It may not seem like it. You know what? Say that the sunset clause will hold you into the rent regulation. Call it a cap, whatever you want to call it. Two years. It's a short period. The boom is not going to end in two years. After that time the sunset clause is done. You can put in the rent increases. But that'll allow at least time for the $285 million to try and catch up to the market. But I'll get back to that amount.

I think the $285 million is going to be short from the amount that we'd like to see. We were hoping for I think it was a number of about 10,000 units. But if you even look at the cost of building a high school, and we're talking about trying to put in living quarters for people, we're going to have to do some juggling of some numbers because the economy is on fire. The cost has gone up. You're not going to be able to make 10,000 units for $285 million. I don't see it. I mean, I don't know what kind of conditions we're hoping these people to be able to live in, but they've got to be reasonable conditions here.

But getting back to the sunset clause, I think that if you put it to the owners in that sort of context, that it's guaranteed that it's going to be short lived, that it's a two-year period, then you can let them decide after that whether they want to, you know, put in 100 per cent increases, 700, 500. We're hearing all the stories right now. Right now this bill is saying: one year. Don't put anything in for one year. But it doesn't regulate as to how much that increase can be. So, really, it's still open, and there's no protection for the renters whatsoever. They know that they can't have anything for one year. Well, you know what? For some it's coming up right away, or it's month to month.

The bottom line is that this bill does not provide anything that they were hoping for. If they did put any sort of a cap or a 10 per cent guideline on here, that's again going into the regulations or into the caps. The committee was supporting it, but that's what the government and their members during the convention have said: "Absolutely no way. We don't want anything like that. Let the market prevail." So it's not going to meet the needs of the renters.

I've got a unique area, an old area which is at least, you know, 50, 60 years old, and I've got it stretched right to the new area, which is newly developing. New lots are still springing up, and houses are still breaking ground. There's a big disparity between the haves and the have-nots. In the old areas of Killarney or Glengarry you have basementless homes, and at one point they were going for $90,000. It's basementless. It's just about a thousand square feet, if that. But now, you know, with the market switching the way it has, to be able purchase, that same place has gone up to $200,000 to $250,000. It's not worth it, but that's what supply and demand is getting for it. At the other end of the spectrum you've got $700,000 to a million dollars for some places.

Caught in the middle are the renters. I've got a lot of rental properties along, like, the north end, up into Castle Downs, up towards Manning. The whole north end. There are a lot of rental properties scattered. I hear people, and I see them. They come into my office, and the stories are heart wrenching, absolutely heart wrenching. You've got seniors there that are on a fixed income. Whether they're on disability, whether they're on their pension, whether they're on AISH, they're on a fixed income. They look, you know, below the cupboard underneath the plumbing, and there's a hole in the wall. They can talk to the other neighbour and exchange horror stories as to what the rent is going to be.

I'm hearing these particular incidents. They're now getting the increase, and it's going to be at $1,050. They said: "There's no way that I can make $1,050 on my income. What am I supposed to do?" There's a temporary rate regulation going in. It doesn't matter. There's $7 million for interim funding for people being evicted. That's for two months. In the meantime it may take two, three, four months to be able to find something that's affordable.

Even seniors. They're the newest group that's going to be going out there, leaving their homes, trying to find something that they don't have any maintenance on. Those have got a two- and three-year waiting list on them, so I'm thinking that I've almost got to put my name in right now if I'm going to be able to find something at seniors'. I mean, there might be hope for something for the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, but, you know, right now I've got a long way to wait before something's available for myself.

An Hon. Member: Are you going to take that, Ray?

Mr. Bonko: I'm thinking about you. You're always asking: am I thinking about you? I'm thinking about you.

Mr. Martin: I appreciate that.

Mr. Bonko: Again, you've got some buildings – my son just recently moved: $700 and it's a small bachelor suite. It provides power, water, and utilities, but it's $700. It's not very fancy, but it's a roof over his head. He's excited about that particular point. But the building right behind him suddenly now went up for sale, and they're converting them to condos. Now, that particular thing could happen to him, and he is nowhere near the position to be able to buy at $154,000 for the starter to $164,000 to $174,000. Those are the increments.

Well, you mean this to be beneficial to the people that are in there right now, but people are going to buy those, and they're going to turn around. They've got to cover the mortgage. They're going to have to ask at least $1,000 when other people there probably aren't paying $1,000. They're going to have to ask at least $1,000, and then you pay condo fees on top of it. So when the whole thing rounds out, you're going to be at least at $1,400 to $1,500 for the same place you maybe were paying $800 for.

So this begs the question: at what point does this bill serve to protect anybody? The condo conversions can still happen. You're still going to be saddled with an unmanageable debt: 50 per cent of a person's income, 60 per cent, 70 per cent. It's just not reasonable. I mean, we're wanting people to have a quality of life. For the longest time the catchphrase here was, you know, the Alberta advantage: "Come to the advantage. Have the advantage. Share, eat, breathe, live, work it. It's going to be here for you."

An Hon. Member: Now it's the price of prosperity.

Mr. Bonko: Well, yeah. They call it the price of prosperity, but now we're hearing that this is a disadvantage. The military: we're hearing the stories. A lot of people are perhaps getting posted here or are potentially going to get posted in Alberta. They don't want to. You know, I'm not trying to plague on that one, but it's an example that we have. People that are serving afar and abroad don't want to come to Alberta. I'm hearing stories that people are going to hand in their resignations if, in fact, they have to come here because there is just nothing affordable. Myself, if I was forced to buy something right now, I couldn't buy the same home I'm living in right now, not at, you know, almost $500,000, half a million dollars. I couldn't do that. It's just unthinkable.

Then when you have the development that's going to take place in the northeast section of the city, in the neighbouring areas like Fort Saskatchewan, you're going to have that upgrader alley. That's going to further impact the north, northeast, north-central areas. They're going to add at least another $100,000, $200,000 because of just the proximity to all that work. You're going to have people coming over and just buying it right now because they want a place to live.

Getting to something that we could do right now – you need to change it to have instant suites right now – is change the Municipal Government Act to allow a little bit of regulation-changing for the basement suites. We were just talking about that. I mean, basement suites go on right now. People are talking about it: "Oh, all Albertans are honest. They wouldn't do that." I think some people are of the opinion: "Oh, it's on my property. It's on my land. It's my business. Mind your own." A lot of people are like that too: "What takes place on my side of the fence shouldn't concern you. If I'm subletting my place or I'm supplementing my mortgage, that's my problem. It shouldn't bother you."

In some cases – and I know it happens – they're purchasing a $300,000, $400,000, $500,000 home, and you have two and three families in there. That's the way they're making it. Is that called sublet? You're subletting to your family. You know, you can say absolutely not, but they're taking up the space, and they're all pitching in to make that mortgage. That mortgage is $2,500, $3,000. Now, with a two-income person they might be able to do that. For how long? That's the big question. But when you get three and four families doing that in there, they're able to make it. That's considered, I would say, the same thing as a basement suite. Is it legal?

An Hon. Member: Is it safe?

Mr. Bonko: Well, is it safe as well? But, I mean, they're making it, and they're not complaining. They've got a roof over their head. That's the whole thing. So if we were going to do something like this, we could have brought in a complementary one under the Municipal Government Act to allow the municipalities to have this easement here. They said: well, they have the ability right now. I don't know. There need to be some changes here. Everything may not be exactly up to code: I'm not going to go put another $25,000 into my place to cut in a separate entrance, to install another furnace, to install any more windows. That's the whole thing. People won't do that.

So are we saying, you know: live in there, and take your chance? Well, people right now are taking their chances. Some of the positions that people are in aren't great. I know people that are renting storage units. I shouldn't say that I know them; I hear stories. That's right: storage units. They're inside. They're out of the elements. They're heated. They have running water. They're very, very small. But you know what? For $300 or $400 they've got a roof over their head. These are the people that are the working poor. It may not be pretty, but it's working for them right now at this time.

Mr. R. Miller: But it's not a home.

Mr. Bonko: No, it's not a home. But you know what? A roof over your head is not a home. A shed is not a home. People in a tent city, that they had up on the Fort Road only a few months ago: they endured the entire winter, and it was a bloody awful one. There was a lot of snow, colder than we've been used to. They were out there, and they endured it.

An Hon. Member: Tell them about south Edmonton.

Mr. Bonko: Well, in south Edmonton, I know, just outside of Freedom Ford there's a guy living in his van right on the street. Just to the west of it there's a guy living in his tent. Now, the owner is very kind, and he's not calling on it. But he does feel sympathetic to the people that are out there right now. This is going to be a growing, growing concern.

You've got a little park there. It's Rainbow Valley park in Edmonton. As soon as it's ready to open, you're going to have the people camping in the river valley as well as that park. Is that acceptable? I don't think so. That's not a long-term solution. Not at all. I mean, this is just Edmonton. I haven't even brought the whole thing with the rest of the province. You know, you've got McMurray. You've got Grande Prairie. You've got everywhere else in a province that does have its hot spots, but the bottom line is that this bill in the short term isn't going to fix that particular problem.

We need a long-term, viable solution or at least to be able to have the market catch up. The $285 million is in no way going to be able to accommodate the needs that we have coming in here. We have people flooding in here on a monthly basis, thousands and thousands of people, and we're expected to take care of them as well as the people here in Alberta a long time. We had yesterday the Sexsmith man, who is a veteran that was up talking to the minister of the treasury as well as the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. That's a story. How do you tell that man, "I understand. I have a roof over my head, but – you know what? – I understand?"

There are people who have disabilities. They definitely need unique housing situations. They need to have elevators. They need to have that ability to get up and down. Other people with cerebral palsy or MS are here. They are not able to make the stairs. They need something that is perhaps one storey, but they've got to have the affordable housing. They've got to have something that's got the elevators or the ability to deal with the people who are on disability. You're going to have more and more of those people because they're not working on a regular basis, and a lot of these people don't have the ability to supplement their income because it's clawed back.

If we had something, perhaps, in there so that they would be able to earn a little bit more, but that money would go into an account. How do you control that? I'm not sure, but you've got to be able to give a little bit of flexibility here for these people who definitely need it. Right now under this bill it isn't there, and that's exactly why I couldn't support it. It doesn't work. It's not going to work. It's just a government exercise. They've gone through the task force, and this is their way of coming up with a solution that's going to be able to balance the needs. But it does not balance it. In fact, it's going to continue to worsen. The compound situation is out there, and it's not getting any better.

We had people from Rwanda here yesterday. We have new immigrants coming in all the time, and they're caught in the opportunity here that's the price of prosperity. Well, you know what? That's unfortunate, but if that's the answer we're giving to the people, that's the answer given. Yeah. The economy is on fire. There's good, and there's bad. You don't often hear about all the good stories because – you know what? – that's what the newspaper doesn't report on. They only report: if it bleeds, it reads.

You know, I used to be with a newspaper for a long time, and that's exactly it. You don't want to hear about all the great stories because that doesn't sell. It's the heart-wrenching stories of the woman who gets $1,000 increase who's standing out there and can't afford it. Those are the ones . . . [interjections] and I recognize that. Those are the ones that they're continuing to highlight and sensationalize. In a way it is sensationalism, but it's reality.

An Hon. Member: They're real people.

Mr. Bonko: They're real people, and those are the ones that are getting the real attention right now. I had Peter Tyleman, who came in yesterday. He's a veteran. He's 55. He figured that he'd have the Freedom 55. He's lived in the Lake District for a number of years, and he was thinking that he'd be able to retire. Well, now that place that he's in is going to be in condo conversions.

The Deputy Speaker: The Assembly stands adjourned until 8 p.m. I'd just like to remind all members who have guests with the Forum for Young Albertans to join them for supper at the Leg. cafeteria.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 9, 2007

8:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/09

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

[Debate adjourned May 9: Mr. Bonko speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to stand up and address the Legislature this evening on Bill 34.

The thing that I really want to address more than anything tonight, Mr. Speaker, is more the philosophy of it. We've debated lots of different probabilities, and the one that I guess we're rehashing over and over again is to put in this temporary cap. I need to speak against this cap. I know that the amendments are going to come forward to do it, and there's been lots of debate on it. The reason why – and that disturbs me the most – is that it's always easy to say that we're going to put in a temporary cap, but once it's in place, you've set the precedent, and when the precedent has been set, that is an ongoing problem that you live with for the next 20 years. And we're never going to know when the government is going to waiver again at the pressure.

But the real question is that after one year or two years, as those are the two numbers that are most prevalent out there, we could be in a real dilemma because we still might not have enough housing. Then what do we do? The people counted on the cap the first time, and now the pendulum has swung further. It's going to be a bigger watershed moment, and more people are going to be hurt. As painful as it is, I still would argue and go along with the Premier in the fact that our problem is that Alberta is the place that people want to be. People are moving here by the thousands, and that's causing the dilemma on where we put up the houses.

So the first thing, like I said, that I really want to stress the most is that we don't consider a cap because once we've done that, we've set the precedent. The waivers go through the investment market, and it's just not in the best interest of Alberta in the long term, and it's certainly not in the best interest of renters, who we are wanting to help and protect here.

I wanted to go over a few of the other comments. In going back, you know, what is the real problem, and why are we faced with this shortage? As I mentioned, to me it's the Alberta opportunity. People are coming here from all over the country, all over the world, wanting to be here. I had asked the questions for those people who want caps. Well, then, why don't we just cap the number of people that can come to Alberta and say that we won't recognize anybody else to come here? We understand that that goes against our Constitution, and there have been limits put on in the current time.

Mr. Martin: Firewall.

Mr. Hinman: I don't see him. He's missing.

I also want to address the extra suite, the granny suite, the grandfather suite, and what are we going to do there? There have been many ideas, and I was disappointed to hear that Fort McMurray has passed legislation saying: only so many people in a unit.

The problem that we're really dealing with in many of the communities is the extra vehicles that come in. Edmonton has already done that in different residential areas because we do have a lot of extra suites because of the university, and it's a simple way to address it by putting parking permits on those different streets. You could allow two permits if the street room is there per house, and people know when they go in there that that's all that there's going to be. There is no car parking spot unless they're going to park on their own lot.

So I would really like to see the rules and regulations eliminated on whether you call them secondary suites or on the number of people that live in the house. I find it very ironic that a family with 10 kids is allowed to set up house and live there, yet if 10 university students wanted to go in there, are we going to pass legislation that prohibits them from sitting in there?

Again, government rules, government regulations are upsetting the market and magnifying the problem. So I would encourage the government to continue looking at that and urging municipalities to eliminate this desire to take census and to put quotas, put caps, put numbers on those areas.

The other thing that I'd like to mention and speak a little bit about is the fact that what we need, in the evaluation that I've done, is higher density population and that if we were to take the approach as the provincial government and tell some of these municipalities that if you were to allow these condos, these high-rise apartments to come in, we would actually pay the property tax for the first five years, perhaps, on a structure. Maybe if the communities would waive just the incentive and, say, the first five years of any high-rise apartments or sixplexes or what have you, the investment people would jump in to take that opportunity. Just like they did with the oil sands when they realized that they could use their capital to have a long-term project, they'd jump in there. But what we really want to do is to kick-start the housing economy and to have some way that the initiative is there.

Another area that we've been looking at – and it's interesting to talk to people – is the urban sprawl and to see the way that it continues to go out further and further. Maybe we should be looking at a tax, that the further you are from the centre and the more congested the roads are becoming, maybe that's where the higher taxes should be. I'm a firm believer that in these new subdivisions that are going up, the full cost should be paid by those subdivisions because as that cost goes up, all of a sudden you look at it and you realize that the costs are much more economical.

The good Member for Battle River-Wainwright talked about the cost of putting a trench in, you know. It's static, yet the size of the pipe is a nominal amount, and it's very easy for us to service in different areas of the city where we have the capacity to increase the density. We should be looking at that and helping municipalities and encouraging them to do whatever they can to get the higher density population.

It's the same if we're to have the different bus routes or the rapid transit, whatever we're going to have in our different communities, to realize that we can set up and want to have a good system where people can move back and forth. There's an incredible amount of work that's been done in North America on sustainable communities and seeing that there's the business section there, that the schools are there. They're subcommunities, yet they're a community unto their own. Those are other areas where we should and could be looking at giving the proper tax benefits to set up a sustainable community that's going to actually enhance the quality of life for our families and those that are in it.

Again, I want to talk about the sunset clauses that are being mentioned so many times. I think there's appropriation for sunset clauses. For example, if we're going to give a concession for five years on the property tax, that should be a five-year sunset clause, and every year we should look at it and re-evaluate it and say: well, is this something that we only want for five more years? But the notice is there, and the builders know that it's five years, and when you quit, they know that time frame. But to just be able to put these clauses in, you know, this week, not next week, and not knowing the sustainability, sunset clauses are very important, especially if we're going to give tax concessions so that people will decide to put their money into an investment and know that it's there.

The other area that a lot of people have talked about is the actual benefit that if these people want to put up a low-cost housing, we should really evaluate how we are going to tax those areas. It is all about economics. We can't think we're going to tax an area, much like our basic tax exemption – we understand that those people can't make ends meet. So if the municipalities could somehow look at having those basic tax exemptions on those areas, and perhaps again maybe the provincial government needs to put some incentives in place to get them to do it. But there are many innovative ways that we could and should be looking at in order to enhance our housing. The last thing we want to do is to put in more rules, more regulations, more caps, and to put that through the investment community, especially in homes, to say: "You know, it's just not worth it. We don't know what these guys are going to do." That's the part that we want to avoid the most.

I guess my last and final point that I want to make is that I've known several individuals that have moved to different communities. I know of two that went up to Grande Prairie on January 2, 2003. They went up there with a pickup truck and a camper on the back, in minus 40 weather, and they survived two months, and they brag about it. It's one of those achievements now in their lives. Much like the settlers who came to this country a hundred years ago, they didn't come in here expecting the government to give them a house. Many of them dug into the riverbank, only to be flooded out the next spring, to move up a little bit higher.

But the people that are moving here to Alberta understand that this is an opportunity. They don't always think it's going to be an easy one, but we need that free enterprise, that entrepreneurial spirit, that desire to survive where you can't survive, as in the Palliser Triangle. The challenge was out that this is not habitable, yet we achieved it. [interjection] That's the Palliser Triangle.

We can and we will survive, but government's job is to realize that we're civilized. With Fort McMurray I felt when I went up there two years ago that if the government was to open up 1,280 acres like they did in the early days and say: "You know, there are five-acre plots here. Come up; set up, whether it's your tent, camper, what have you" – they don't expect anything other than a place to put their piece of property on and protect it.

Then our job is to make sure that we have the policing, that there isn't any looting, that there isn't any pillaging. We can keep it civilized. It's a matter of having the proper policing authorities to be there, and people can set up and know that they're there, and we'll get out of this.

Once again, caps are not the right way to go. It's going to be interesting as the evening goes on. We'll see how the amendments come forward and what happens. I appreciate the time, and I'll let the next member get up and share their two bits' worth.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Shall I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for a question?

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm curious. When the hon. member was doing his debate, he put out a number of different suggestions, one of which was to charge the outer suburbs in the cities more taxes than the inner cities. I'm just kind of curious if he's going on the record and stating that, in fact, he doesn't believe in market value assessment. I'm wondering how he plans on justifying the extra taxes when, indeed, those new suburbs don't come equipped with fire halls, police stations, schools, or even hospitals, and he expects them to pay more. I'm really wondering where his reasoning is coming from.

Mr. Hinman: That's an excellent question, and I'm happy to expound on that a little bit. When I say increasing the taxes, that of course would be for full services. We have a lot of bedroom communities, and with the continued contention, especially here in the capital, on who's paying for what infrastructure, I'm a firm believer in pay-as-you-go.

If they want to set up and they're a long ways and we have to change our pipeline from a six-inch to a 12-inch and it's going to cost us $3 million to put that pipeline out there, I don't believe that the old citizens should have to cover that cost of that new area. If that's the cost of development, then the full pay should be there. [interjection] Oh, I'll get to it. You asked several questions there, hon. member. So if you have the full cost involved, then all of a sudden it looks like – you know what? – it's cheaper for us to develop high-rise apartments here, and you don't have the urban sprawl.

Market value assessment. You asked on that. It's something we're still doing a lot of research on. If I was to point a finger today on what I've found so far, I think that's inflationary. I think that it's caused some of the problems, and we'd be far better off if we'd not gone to that, but we'll continue going down that. That's what we're debating tonight, market value assessment, but I'm not a fan of that. I hope that answered your questions.

The Speaker: Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General, do you want to participate in the question portion? Proceed.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to thank the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner for his insight into the Conservative approach to addressing the rental unit shortage. I thank him for supporting Bill 34. But I got the impression that his philosophy kind of changed a little bit there when he spoke about new subdivisions and giving property tax breaks for up to five years on a new subdivision. I just wondered if he could maybe comment on that. It seemed like a different view on that type of situation.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate the question, and, yes, it's always hard. Sometimes we're not as clear as we want in our words. No, what I was looking at: it's the same as the oil sands. We wouldn't have the development we have today if we didn't give those tax concessions to become economically viable for those companies to come in. It's the same with high-rise apartments and those things. If we were to look at it in the inner core and areas where we want them and say that we're going to waive the property tax for five years, it will actually be a windfall situation, just as we are with the oil sands. The revenue that's going to continue to come in, because those facilities are there and they've got their capital paid off, will be a benefit. It would be the same with high-rise apartments, that after five years we would leapfrog ahead, and it would be a benefit to the community.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated hearing part of the speech of the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. I listened with interest to his discourse on the role that government might play. I wonder if he sees a role for government beyond merely the prevention of looting and plundering.

Mr. Hinman: Well, the reason I brought that up, hon. member, is because many people are afraid to move into these new areas because that policing isn't there. The reason why we come together and form government is for safety and security. I believe that's the first role of government, to ensure that pillaging and plundering doesn't go on.

Gouging isn't part of that. It's the free market, you know, that other people will come in. I think that we can actually address the gouging. If we didn't have market value assessment but actually had purchase price assessment, that if, in fact, a condo owner wanted to raise that, and once it was raised, immediately that was the new purchase price, all of a sudden their property value assessment would go through the roof. They would consider that. But when you have market value assessment, someone can raise it up there, yet it's distributed amongst the other ones, so he gets that advantage. But immediately if he changes rent from $500 to $2,500, a fivefold increase, that new purchase price or rental price would reflect in his property tax, and it would be a disincentive to say: oh, maybe I better rethink this.

The Speaker: Well, alas, we've now expired that segment of our agenda.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. The object of Bill 34 is to amend the Residential Tenancies Act and the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act. The main substantive amendments are to modify the notice period set out in the acts to allow for only one rent increase per year. The bill applies to both periodic, month-to-month, and fixed-term tenancies. Three months' notice will still be required before increasing rent on periodic tenancies.

This bill doesn't say anything about rent control. This bill doesn't say anything about the cap. One year's notice must be provided before ending a periodic tenancy for the purpose of converting a rental unit to a condominium or undertaking major renovations to a rental unit. No rent increases will be allowed during that one-year period. The notice for converting a mobile home site to a condominium unit or for other uses continues to be one year. The changes are retroactive to April 24, 2007, and there is a punitive clause also included to apply a $5,000 fine per tenant for any landlord that violates the legislation.

While these amendments make changes limiting the terms for rent increases to one . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, sorry. Please sit down. We're in second reading of the bill, dealing with principles of the bill. We have no amendments before the House. The chair is having a difficult time following the debate. There are no amendments before the House.

Mr. Agnihotri: Okay. That's fine.

Mr. Speaker, my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie is a diverse riding: lots of immigrants, seniors, people living on fixed incomes, low-income people, artists. They all are facing a very serious problem. This bill does not provide any comfort for them.

Basic economics, Mr. Speaker, in this bill, you know, is the law of demand and supply. It's very simple economics. When we have less supply, the higher the rent, the higher the prices of houses. If we have more supply, low prices of houses and less rent. A long-term solution for this critical issue is that we need more supply. Most people agree that short-term relief is needed, and the sooner the better.

Many of the landlords, Mr. Speaker, are good people. They are very co-operative, very reasonable. We are not against them, but when I talk to some of the people, they are saying openly that they oppose this bill because it's not protecting the majority of the tenants if this bill passes. You know, the condition of the apartments, their properties, will deteriorate very soon if this bill continues. Some people are taking advantage of the hot market, and they charge too much rent. This is not good news.

First of all, I want to talk about the all-party task force. The government established a task force, and out of 50 recommendations they only accepted 38. Most of them they ignored. I just want to say that if we ignore the majority of the recommendations of the task force, we spent lots of money and time on the task force. Some members were part of the task force, and they spent a lot of time. You know, if they don't implement all the recommendations, it's a waste of time, a waste of money, hard-earned taxpayers' money.

I think the more time we take, the situation will deteriorate and the problems on this issue will rise. I think the government should right away consider temporary measures. I mean, I'm not saying, exactly, that it's because of the party on the other side, their ideology. Maybe personally I believe that free enterprise should flourish in our province. But sometimes when the situation is worse, it keeps on getting worse because of the lack of policies from the present government.

Another thing I want to mention in this policy, Mr. Speaker, is subsidized homes. You know, I've been all over, especially in Europe. Every year all the civic, provincial, and the federal governments have a plan. They build some subsidized homes for the low-income people. I don't see that planning here in Alberta, even though we are one of the richest provinces.

Actually, last year two women came to my constituency office. One of them was a widow, and the other was permanently disabled. They were crying. Their children had kicked them out. I tried to reach Capital Region Housing, and they told me, frankly, you know, that the waiting list there is two and a half years and they can't help. In that situation I don't know if the children kicked their parents out. Relatives sometimes can't afford to help them. I mean, for a short time, maybe a week, two weeks, they can help, but if it's more than a month, it's very difficult for them. The waiting time in my constituency is about two and a half years now. This is not acceptable to my constituents, and it's not acceptable to average people in Alberta. We should do something about this.

I think that the civic government as well as the provincial and the federal governments, all three forms of government, should sit down and plan accordingly for the future, 10 years, 15 years, and they should build some subsidized homes. This is very important. I mean, even though we build some houses here, affordable homes, it's not going to solve the problem for the long term. I'm sure that the way the economy is going in Alberta, we'll need more and more homes in the future, and we should be prepared right now. This is the time for proper planning, and if we make the planning right now – I know that we are late already, very late. This government could have planned about three years ago and had at least 1,000, 1,500 houses already built by this time. Now people are suffering because of the lack of the government's long-term policies on housing.

Mr. Speaker, another thing I want to mention. There are lots of people in Alberta – not only in Alberta, maybe all over Canada – ready to help in the construction of new homes for needy people, for people who don't have that much income. They are good people, and they are always ready. I'm proud to say that in Canada we have 3 million people volunteering.

Rev. Abbott: Three point three million.

Mr. Agnihotri: Sorry, 3.3 million. Maybe 3.5 million now because a hundred thousand people already arrived in Alberta. The population is increasing, so are the volunteers in Canada. We all should be proud of that. They are ready to help those people. Good people want to come forward. In this Bill 34 I don't see anything like that, how we can use their expertise. Some are tradespeople, some can help financially. It doesn't talk about this in this bill. They are ready to help. How can we approach them? You know, this is something we should consider very seriously and bring them forward. They are ready to help. What they need is just the right approach.

Mr. Speaker, another thing I want to mention. Every time we ask the question to the minister concerned, he says that we have $285 million dollars. The way the trend is going, more and more people are becoming homeless. Maybe that $285 million is not enough. We should be ready for that. I ask the government to make a note in case that money runs out. We should plan right now because it's very important. Lots of people are in a really critical situation.

Mr. Speaker, I think some points in Bill 34 are good. I mean, I commend. But what I find is that this bill is still not doing what needs to be done. In this bill there's still not a vision, not a good understanding. Economically, especially, there's a lack of a few things. That's one of the reasons I'm not going to support this bill, especially the conversion of buildings into condos. Like everybody is saying, one year's notice should be given to the tenants when they convert the buildings into condos, but it's really hard for the tenants even if it's one year because life is so busy. You know, it's not hard to find suitable accommodation at this time of the year, especially for people who are disabled, who are earning less money, who are less fortunate, people on AISH, PDD. We should definitely have some programs. Some money should be allocated for them to make sure, you know, that they can live their life happily. If we can't do something for them, who else can? We are the best province in Canada. We can afford that. So this is the time.

If we had a proper vision, if we had had a proper policy about 10, 15 years ago, we wouldn't have problems like this. Some people agree with me. You know, even the former Premier admitted before he left: we never had a policy on surplus revenue. They were not expecting a boom like this. This is not a good sign for a province like ours.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you have a question?

Mr. Chase: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker, of my colleague. I would like to get a sense of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I mentioned in second reading this afternoon that Calgary-Varsity was an established area with a number of apartments, fourplexes, duplexes, single-family homes. In Calgary-Varsity there have not been any affordable housing or new apartment complexes built. I'm just wondering: given the boom, in Edmonton-Ellerslie have you seen any kind of affordable housing projects, any new apartments being built that persons at the lower end of the scale could afford?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, do you wish to participate?

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for asking me the question. No, we don't have any development going on for affordable homes. Actually, lots of people are calling me and sending me e-mails. You know, most of the time their questions are about – I think the majority of the MLAs sitting here don't know the full details of the plan. People are asking me: "On which sites are they building the housing? How big will the affordable housing be? How much of an initial deposit will we make? If we make the initial deposit, maybe the government will give us a loan or something." We don't know anything. Sometimes I feel helpless answering my constituents. The government is talking about affordable homes, and the majority of the members don't have the answers. This is what I have to say.

Mr. Speaker, if you allow me, I want to mention that a rent cap is also disturbing news for my constituents. They are saying that if they require a one-year notice for moving from one place, the landlord has the right to increase the rent, and there's no cap. The cap is a big problem for them. I mean, the landlord can increase the rent maybe 100 per cent, 200 per cent. Nobody is sure, and they are worried, and we should look at that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't help but notice that the hon. member seems to be saying "um" a lot, and it almost seems like it's some kind of a Liberal filibuster here. This is very important legislation that we're trying to get through to help people who are in the rental market.

In the beginning of his speech the hon. Liberal backbencher mentioned that there were landlords that were in favour of rent controls. I'm wondering, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Liberal backbencher could just table some of those documents from landlords who are in favour of rent controls or if he could maybe elaborate and be specific on some of those people because I'm really having doubts that he has some factual information there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie can respond if he chooses to.

Mr. Agnihotri: Yes, definitely. You know, I will ask the people I talked to, the stakeholders, to give me in writing what they believe. Then I definitely will table those letters here.

One thing more I want to tell the hon. member. Maybe the PC government has backbenchers; we don't. We don't. We are more aggressive, and we have more opportunity to speak here than 99 per cent of the PC MLAs sitting on the backbenches or the front benches.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, and I appreciate the opportunity to ask a question of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. He was talking about the former Premier's admission that there wasn't really a plan with respect to how to accommodate the growth in the province. As we know, this has caused a great deal of chaos and suffering in the province. I was just wondering if the hon. member would care to elaborate on that.

The Speaker: I'm sure the hon. member would. Unfortunately, time has left us.

I'm prepared to do some rotation in here, but do I see another member? Then we're going to go to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I speak in second reading. It gives me an opportunity to reflect on the significance of this bill in light of the issue of rental housing in Alberta. If this Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, is meant to respond to the government task force report on affordable housing, which is entitled Housing First, it's weak. I mean, it only responds to one item among the task force recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, you know, before we even began our work as a task force, we collected information, statistics about the situation of housing in Alberta, and of course we depended on members of the Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing to provide many of the statistics. The statistics were quite startling. Alberta had a 10.4 per cent increase in total population since 2001, double the national average, and many people have referred to that.

So many people are coming to Alberta, which puts a lot of pressure on our housing situation. The strong economy has helped spur migration to the province, which contributes to a rental vacancy rate of about .9 per cent, the lowest in a generation. With so many people coming looking for jobs, it's too much for the limited inventory of housing that we have.

You know, I don't understand how the different programs jibe with each other. The Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry is apparently communicating with the federal government to establish a new agreement in terms of getting more immigrants to come to Alberta because there are so many jobs. Yet we don't have the housing, and there's no integration, and there's no overall systematic plan.

According to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation the two highest rent increases in Canada last year were in Calgary and Edmonton: in Calgary 19.5 per cent and in Edmonton 9.9 per cent, well above the national average increase of 2.4 per cent. So rent increases are just overwhelming.

We hear so many stories from people. I'm sure all of our constituency offices throughout Alberta have been receiving e-mails and phone calls and people coming into our office to complain about the tremendous increase in rents. It's very sad to hear a lot of the stories. There was a group here today who were in the public gallery. They met afterwards with some members of the Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing, and they went around the table and shared their stories. It's just very upsetting to hear such heart-rending stories of suffering.

Mr. Speaker, actually, you know, we talk about the homeless, and there are plenty of homeless people in Edmonton and Calgary and Fort McMurray and other places, but there's a new category that's emerging. We should call it the nearly homeless: those who are one rent increase away from not being able to afford to stay in their apartment. Suddenly there's a new category: the near homeless. I think we should have a response on the part of the government that's going to be much greater in dealing with the crisis than what we have here in this bill.

Now, just to go on. A recent Royal Bank of Canada report indicated that home prices rose 50 to 60 per cent in Calgary last year and close to 40 per cent in Edmonton. Actually, in Edmonton it was almost 50 per cent last year, and in the first few months of this year, 2007, it's up another 16 per cent. There are just so many pressures on housing. People just can't afford rents. They don't have enough money to save to buy any homes, and homes have gone up so far in price. What can they possibly do?

I think that as a task force we were very much concerned about people moving through the housing continuum from emergency housing to transitional housing to social housing to affordable housing, but what we're seeing too much of in Alberta is a reverse flow, that people are going the other way. They can't afford the high increase in rents, so they are the nearly homeless. They are one rent increase away from losing their apartments, and where are they going to go?

Mr. Speaker, with those statistics, which were quite startling, the task force then went on the road to listen to people all through Alberta. We heard the same stories everywhere. Relevant to this bill in terms of the issue of rent increases, we heard the same stories whether we went to Fort McMurray or Hinton or Elk Point or Medicine Hat or Calgary, Lethbridge, Edmonton. We heard the same story over and over again, that people don't have enough income to be able to handle the huge increases in rent. Low-income families, people receiving social assistance: it's quite tragic that people just don't have enough money to be able to handle the huge rents.

Having heard all the stories, then we're faced with: well, what should we do? What would be a proper, sensible solution, response to this crisis that we're experiencing in Alberta? We wanted to take a systematic approach, looking at all aspects, not just one, looking at the whole housing continuum and looking at all the possible solutions and putting it all together in an integrated way and saying: "Okay. If the government is serious about dealing with the crisis, then they should respond to all the recommendations that we've made."

Now, the government has responded to some of them and has put a considerable amount of money into things like emergency shelters, and they keep talking about $285 million for affordable housing. That actually is only half of what we asked for. We wanted $480 million for affordable housing over the next few years because to build 10,000, 11,000, 12,000 units at approximately $200,000 a unit, we need a lot more money than the government is deciding to put into it.

But when we come to the specific issue of rents, we thought that there should be a mixture of sticks and carrots. There should be regulations that would be put into effect to kind of manage the rental situation but also carrots, incentives, especially to encourage the building of more affordable housing, more rental accommodation. I thought that our proposal was something that was quite reasonable. Not just insisting that landlords not be able to increase their rent for a year: that was only one part of what we wanted to suggest. We called it rent stability guidelines. One aspect is controlling how often rent increases should be made, but we also included a cap, a guideline that would keep the increases to a certain level; namely, the level we suggested in the task force was CPI plus 2 per cent.

Also, we would allow owners to apply for an increase over the annual guidelines to recover actual costs; for example, if a landlord had special needs in terms of repairing buildings. A lot of our rental accommodation is in bad shape, and landlords need to catch up, so that might be something where an increase over the cap would be allowed to allow that to happen. I think what we need in Alberta is a whole way of managing this through some sort of board that landlords could appeal to to ask for a waiver of the cap in their specific cases. We have those kinds of regulative boards in other sectors of our economy. Why not this sector?

It's not a question of intervening or not intervening in the economy. It's a question of how we manage the economy. I think that what the task force recommended was a nice package, so it's a puzzle to me that the government responds by only taking one specific item out of the package of recommendations that were made and makes that into a government bill. I think it's going to cause all kinds of problems because without some sort of cap on the amount that a landlord can raise the rent, what's going to happen a year from now? So there's no raising of rents for one year. Then after a year they're free to raise the rent as far as they can. Well, we're going to have a huge crisis a year from now, and a lot of people are just not going to be able to manage. Again, it's going to stimulate a reverse flow of people going the wrong way on the housing continuum.

Mr. Speaker, we want people to move towards independence and self-reliance. You know, some people choose to stay in apartments their whole life, and that is their choice. Many others, especially young families, would love to move out of apartments into being able to buy homes, but if the rent increases go up the way they've been going up, and even if we delay it one year and they skyrocket next year, young families will just not be able to have the extra money to come up with the down payment so that they can move into market housing. So we're not encouraging people to move towards the self-reliance, the independence that we want them to have.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very disappointed that we don't have more of a solution, a broader array of sticks and carrots that are offered to deal with this huge housing crisis in Alberta. It's disappointing, you know, having done all this work for 45 days. The task force really worked hard to come up with solutions that they thought would really work given the Alberta context.

Mr. Speaker, that's all I have to say right now in second reading. I hope to return and say a few more words when we get into committee. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I assume that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity is rising under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Chase: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I very much appreciate the work of my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora on that task force and my NDP colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. They gave up much more than just 45 days away from their families, being on the road. I appreciate that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora pointed out the effect of bringing more people into an already overheated economy. I wondered if you could elaborate on what you see as the social and economic impacts of not addressing the affordable housing crisis that is occurring now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in terms of social development what could be more important than having a home? Really, when we look at what the negative effects might be, you know, when people don't have a place that they can call home, then there are all kinds of problems that develop from that, especially homelessness and people getting into trouble. Actually, it will cost the economy and all the services huge amounts of money if this housing issue is not dealt with. I mean, there have been studies in the States of homeless people, who were a tremendous burden on the system. It costs the system millions of dollars in terms of dealing with crime, dealing with all the support services, the health, the hospitalization, and so on. Having a policy that's going to make it possible for everybody in the province to have a home is certainly important for social development in this province.

I think we've got it all out of kilter. We go full speed ahead in terms of economic development, and social development falls behind, so we deal with a housing crisis. Somehow we have to develop policies that are integrated together so that, you know, it's not just making money from the tar sands and so on. It's also support for people so that our people are able to grow and to have a home and are able to develop.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity again.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm very well aware that prior to the MLA for Edmonton-Glenora being elected, he was a United Church minister. An analogy that's frequently used in ministerial practices is the idea of a good shepherd. Do you believe the government has a role as the symbolic shepherd, steward, or protector of the people? How do you see the government's role and responsibility?

Dr. B. Miller: You know, I think the problem with this government, Mr. Speaker, is that the ideological approach of this government is that everybody is an individual, that they should fend for themselves. Well, that doesn't work in a province where we have these kinds of huge rent increases and so on. The government has a social responsibility. In terms of the image of shepherding, that could be appropriate in terms of identifying the sense of social responsibility. Surely the government has to be concerned about the common good. You never hear that term very much, but surely housing is an issue of the common good. There has to be a greater response, I think, to the crisis that we have in the province than just this patchwork approach, which is doing a little here, a little there. We need a systematic, integrated approach to dealing with a crisis of this magnitude.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Right. I'd ask if he'd contemplate apologizing for suggesting that we're not shepherds on this side because we truly are shepherds. The suggestion that we just look out for individuals and don't care for the greater good really is simply not true. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his comments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we'll have to wait for that answer another time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is quite an evening we're having here, and I'm really pleased to be participating in this debate. This is one of the most animated nights I've actually attended in this House, and I think it's bound to get even livelier.

Bill 34, Mr. Speaker, is dealing with one important issue, that every Albertan is thinking about. We're talking about residential tenancies. Bill 34 is called the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. And for one reason: people are concerned about the housing crisis that is going on in this province. I would argue that it is one of the most serious crises that has besieged and beleaguered this wonderful province. It is quite serious, to the extent that an announcement was made to try to deal with it, and then within two weeks a bill was tabled to try to deal with it.

Now, how serious is the issue of affordable housing or lack thereof? It is quite serious. People are talking to government MLAs, they're talking to opposition MLAs about the need for, one, affordable housing to be brought in, new affordable housing units to be built, and two, which is more important in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, protecting those who are already renting, those who are already tenants, allowing them to maintain their places of residence and, hopefully, protecting them from joining those who are on the street, those who are homeless.

I have argued in this House and outside, Mr. Speaker, that those who are at risk of becoming homeless outnumber those who are already on the street by a factor of at least 10 to 1. In Edmonton, for example, when they counted the homeless two or three months ago, they counted about, if I remember correctly, 2,500 or 2,600 people. I would argue that in this scorching hot housing market with the rents going up the way they are, 26,000 people in Edmonton are on the verge of joining those who are already on the street. So dealing with homelessness is important, but what's more important, in my opinion, is dealing with those who are just one paycheque away or one assistance cheque away from becoming homeless.

It is really fascinating in question period, for example, when members from the opposition ask questions pertaining to housing. We direct our questions to the cabinet, and some of the backbenchers, as has been referred to private members in this House, heckle and say little things across the way that they're not hearing the same concerns as the opposition is. I would say that perhaps some of them are speaking the truth. Maybe they're not hearing these concerns because, in my opinion, it tends to be a big cities' issue, and we know how heavy the current cabinet is on rural representation. So maybe they're telling the truth. Maybe they're not hearing these concerns in their rural constituencies. But I bet you that every MLA in Edmonton, Calgary, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, and some of the other major centres are hearing these concerns. Lethbridge is no exception. I would say that Red Deer definitely is hearing them. We need to deal with this issue.

Now, how do we deal with this issue? How do we be fair to landlords and also to tenants? It's an issue of fairness, and I think Bill 34 does not really address this angle of fairness. Bill 34 is intended to appear to be attending to the problem. Bill 34 is designed in such a way that it actually gives the impression that the government is coming to the side or to the aid or to the rescue of renters because this is an overheated market, like I said, and the government is trying to assure people that the government is on their side.

What is Bill 34 doing? It is amending two or three minor things in the residential tenancy statutes. One is the period of notice, basically how frequently a landlord can raise rent in any given period of time, and number two, fines for breaches of those acts. That's great. Actually, I like the direction. However, I have questions that I think deserve consideration and deserve answers.

In 1998 there was a housing symposium in this province, and that was excellent because they probably had a similar situation back then, I would argue, not with the same magnitude, not with the same gravity, but they came together, and they said: okay, let's study ways to increase supply and, you know, maintain the affordability element for those who are renters. The symposium had recommendations, as any symposium sponsored by this government does.

In 1999 the then minister of housing, who is currently the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, promised members in this House and promised members in the media that there was going to be something loosely called the apartment development board. The minister back then promised that this board would be comprised of landlords, developers, members or representatives from the provincial government, representatives from the municipal government, and also consumers; in brackets, you would say, tenants. So you would have a fair representation from all these sectors coming together to say: what is the issue at hand, how do we deal with it, and where do we go from here?

My question is: what happened to that idea? Where is that board, if in fact it actually did get established? What work came out of that board, and why hasn't that work been looked at or given attention to? I don't think the board ever saw the light of day. I think it was just luck that the government's, you know, concern during that time either went away or something happened that it didn't warrant further consideration. Now we're suffering from this lack of action six or seven years ago.

My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie briefly talked about the lack of a plan, the lack of a vision. I would probably supplement that by saying that notwithstanding the fact that any new money for housing is appreciated and, I would argue, is sometimes long overdue, simply throwing money at problems doesn't necessarily fix them. As a matter of fact, sometimes throwing money at certain problems adds to the inflationary element and makes things worse.

The other questions that I had, Mr. Speaker, have to do with what assistance is available for people who are currently renting, tenants who are already living in units. Some of them have occupied these units for decades and now risk being thrown out either because their unit is being turned into a condo or because their landlord is nervously jacking the rent so high that these people can no longer afford them. I would tell you that most of these people that we're talking about are either seniors on a fixed income or they're pensioners. They're probably, you know, even students on or near campuses in this province. We're looking at people who are on social assistance, disabled people, and on and on. So these are people who don't see their incomes really grow or increase by that much from year to year.

With a vacancy rate that is this low, if someone were to be forced to leave the apartment that he or she has occupied for so long, where do we expect them to go? There's nowhere to go. Also, the government keeps boasting about, you know, programs to assist renters, programs for subsidized housing, programs to deal with homelessness. Well, that's fine. What is the wait time? When somebody puts his or her name on that registry, the housing registry or whatever you call it, how long does it take? In question period today we heard that sometimes it takes 24 months, sometimes even longer. That's two years, Mr. Speaker. If somebody's kicked out today, where do they go in the interim?

How much is the subsidy given? Is the subsidy enough? You know, when somebody's rent goes up from $800 to $1,600, are we giving them $800 in subsidy? The answer is no.

I also would like to ask: how many new rental units were added or built, say, over the last two decades? I would bet you, Mr. Speaker, that the number is very low. So the argument from the government that if we interfere in the market, if we intervene and dictate what private business does, it's going to kill all new development of affordable housing – I find that hard to swallow because there hasn't been a lot of affordable housing units built over the last two decades, with no government interference, with no controls. So the argument doesn't stand.

When the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing promised to speak to landlords and to try to talk to them or negotiate with them or reach an agreement with them about what they should and shouldn't be doing, what is his and his government's definition of gouging? I would like to know what constitutes gouging in his book, that these would be the landlords that he would be talking firmly to.

Also, in his opinion, in his book and this government's book, what is an allowable percentage of increase? Would 10 per cent a year be allowed? Would 20 per cent be allowed? Is it okay for 30 per cent? Is it fine for 40 per cent or more? We need to know what they consider fair and what they consider reasonable.

The other thing I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, is: shouldn't this be the time that we also talk about renters and tenants having minimum standards in the quality of their units, of their space that they live in? How big should this space be? I mean, should somebody be confined in a space that is 50 metres square, or should somebody be allowed to, you know, have three people living in a bachelor suite? What do we consider adequate? What do we consider appropriate, healthy, and, to be honest, humane? What do we consider for Albertans who are renting?

Now, I have some statistics which I tabled, Mr. Speaker, in this House. The statistics are meant to shed some light on the crisis for those members who are not aware of the gravity of this situation. One of the tablings I made was with respect to the Canadian Housing Observer report on the average rent for two-bedroom apartments, just a statistic to give you an indication, for the period '92 to '05 – that's about 13 years, so it's quite telling – detailing the Canadian average, province by province, and then the major metropolitan areas. Of note, of course, is the fact that between '92 and '05 the figure for Alberta rose from an average of $553 to $765, which represents an aggregate increase – that's year after year – of 38 per cent. Now, some people today are getting 40 per cent in six months.

So if average rents rose by 38 per cent over 13 years, and now people are getting 40, 50, and 60 per cent in six months, that's telling you something, and that's totally unfair. I'll use the simple Excel sheet, which I also tabled, demonstrating that the highest jump from year to year over this period was 7.43 per cent, and the average change over 13 years was 2.57 per cent. So you take the highest, 7.43, and you take the average over 13 years, 2.57. So when the Alberta Liberals recommended a 10 per cent temporary rent increase regulation to protect renters, we were not being unfair to the landlords.

The other thing I tabled, Mr. Speaker, is the Rental Market Report: Alberta Highlights released in December '06 by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The first page I tabled showed, again, vacancy rates for the two years 2005 and 2006, and the numbers show a clear decline in vacancy across the province, which dropped from an average of 3.1 per cent to .9 per cent in just one year. That is nine units out of a thousand. So when we tell people, "Okay, fine, leave the unit that has been yours for so many years because you can't afford it anymore; we wish you luck finding another one," that's a joke. Only, these people are not laughing.

The second page from that report showed that the average rental costs in the major centres in this province rose again from '05 to '06, about a 12 per cent increase, from $694 to $781. So clearly a sign of an overheated market.

Now, we talked about balance, trying to achieve balance between landlords and their expectations, which are fair, to make a buck, to be profitable, to be sustainable so they can actually have a reason to maintain the property that they own and to allow people to use it as residential units. Not all landlords are bad, and not all landlords are greedy. The majority of them are reasonable, and they're fair. Few, Mr. Speaker, go above and beyond what's considered reasonable and fair, and these are the ones that legislation such as this and other things that we should be looking at in this House should be targeting.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I thought about this issue together with my caucus colleagues as far back as July and August of last year. You know how private members' bills and motions have to be submitted way in advance, even before the fall session of the prior year. So we came up with ideas that we presented, and we thought, you know, that when the time came, this government was going to be receptive because all we should care about here is the people of this province, and the housing issue should not be dealt with from a partisan point of view. So one of the things we did was come up with the idea for a consumer advocate. If you remember, Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 was defeated, unfortunately.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is this: do you think that renters have a greater sense of stability, are better able to provide a long-term plan for themselves and for their families by knowing that their rent can only be increased once a year, regardless of what that increase is?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the answer, to be very brief, is no. People need the assurance and the guarantee and the security of knowing, you know, how much their income is going to rise by, if in fact it does, and also knowing how their expenses are going to increase over time. It's called a budget. People need to budget.

I'm actually blessed to be owning my home, and I'm really, really blessed to have actually bought my home in 1998, when the market was fair. The market was reasonable. The market was behaving, if you want. What we're suffering from now and what we're experiencing is something that is totally out of control. It is an overheated bubble that is bound to burst some time. We know that in this province we have suffered from a depression after there was, you know, a big boom and then the boom disappeared. It got frittered away. Luckily, I didn't experience this myself, but people told me how their mortgage interest rate was, like, 18 per cent or more. I hope this never happens, but who knows? History sometimes has a tendency to repeat itself.

I think people need the assurance that, yes, once a year you're going to see a notice for a rent increase, but they also need to be assured that, you know, it's not going to be 200 per cent or 250 per cent of what you're currently paying just because someone who's moving into this province from a different province or a different part of the world who's coming to work in our tar sands can afford it. They need to be assured that, okay, if it goes up, it might go up as much as inflation. Or if this landlord needs to do major renovations and stuff, this landlord might actually appear before a certain board or a certain agency, like our pilot project for the residential tenancy dispute resolution board, and say: "You know what? I can't customarily agree to a 10 per cent increase. I'm changing my boiler," or "I'm actually adding a security system or something, and I need to raise the rent by 15 per cent." The dispute resolution board might actually have the ability and the mandate to say: "You know what? That is fair." There has to be a mechanism to accommodate those renters who might be adversely affected.

People need the guarantees and the assurances, like we do. Every Albertan budgets. I mean, theoretically, most of them do. They know how much revenue is coming in from, you know, their salaries or their wages or assistance from the government or their pension cheques, and so on. They also know how much they pay for food. They know how much they pay for utilities, and they know how much they pay for their accommodation.

So the answer to the hon. member is no. Just telling them it is only going up once a year and not telling them by how much it might be going up is totally unacceptable, and it's not fair to these people who really struggle now in this market that we're living with. Again, when members of the cabinet say: "Okay. People are moving here, and everybody's employed, and everybody's finding a home," what they're not realizing is that people are displacing people who are already here. They're taking their jobs, and they're taking their houses, their places of residence. So I think that careful consideration should be awarded. Protecting consumers should be a priority of this government.

I mentioned that Bill 202 got defeated, and I also highlight Motion 513, which is in my name, again calling for one rent increase per year. I would be very interested to see if members from this government vote against it because that's exactly what they're doing in this Bill 34, Mr. Speaker. So that will make an interesting discussion: how they vote on that one. Again, only limiting it to once a year is a half-measure. Also telling landlords, "This is what we expect you to be doing" is the other half that's missing from this picture.

Like I say, Mr. Speaker, it's an issue of balance. We need to be arriving at this balance, not taking sides. Allowing landlords to raise rents with no maximum and no limit is not fair, and if we allow them to, as this government seems to be advocating, then maybe we should do a mandatory code of practice.

Currently government services, or Service Alberta, has a voluntary code of practice for landlords. I think: okay. If we allow them to have their say and raise rents indefinitely and with no maximums, we should force them to have a mandatory code of practice, where these landlords are looked after when they ask for a light to be changed, when they ask for a toilet to be unplugged, when they ask for all these things to be done, for their front door to be fixed, and, you know, for the people peeing in the elevators to be dealt with. We have to have a mandatory code of practice.

The Deputy Speaker: Back on the debate, the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The affordable housing issue has caused a great deal of stress for my constituents in St. Albert, particularly seniors and people just starting out. Let me just tell you why that is. It's because properties that have been used for other purposes, recreational properties surrounding seniors developments there, are now being impinged upon or possibly being taken over for affordable housing. This has caused the seniors in my constituency a great deal of stress. I think it's reflective of maybe – excuse the expression – the age they're in but also the things that they were promised when they bought their houses and their condominiums, their townhouses: that they wouldn't be subject to this problem of affordable housing around them.

So it's probably a lack of planning due to a lack of land development. I think this is a serious situation which we have to recognize. People have been made promises, and their word to keep these properties around their developments has been changed, and it's very stressful for them. Now, I think what's happening – and I have to give the government some credit here – in St. Albert is we have recently received new lands in the Badger area. I think this is very important for us because this will help us develop, hopefully, a proper plan when we do a municipality in terms of developing part of a municipality and developing proper affordable housing.

I think the thing that I'm getting at this evening is that when we do things like affordable housing, it's important that we have good regional planning, the acquisition of proper lands, and that we plan for affordable housing so that the people that are going to be using it fit into the community and are accepted as part of the community. I think that sometimes when we do these things after the fact, it affects our seniors, especially, again, in St. Albert.

I haven't mentioned people starting out. Our affordable housing for seniors and people starting out is not easily accessible in St. Albert and very difficult. It's a very difficult issue. So I just thought I'd point that out, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for letting me speak on this.

I want to just say one other thing, Mr. Speaker, if I can. I must pass an accolade to the minister of municipal affairs. This afternoon I was going home, and I was thinking how well he handled the issue in the House today. I think that's not an easy thing to deal with with all this stress on. I think all of us want to see affordable housing for the good people of Alberta and to do the best we can for them. I want to commend him because today was a difficult and trying time for him, and I thought he handled it very well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Snelgrove: I listened very carefully, but what I think I heard the hon. member say was: solve the affordable housing problem but not in my backyard; keep all these people away from our community or where our seniors are. I find that quite remarkable for someone who shows a great deal of compassion. Could he clarify that?

Mr. Flaherty: Yeah. Maybe I was so nervous that I probably did say that. I'll have to check the Hansard. What I was trying to say, clearly, to the House was that in St. Albert we have seniors' housing. When they bought this housing, they were promised that the land, the parks around would not be touched, that it would be that way forever, you know, when they bought the land. Now what's happening: they're worried that affordable housing is going to come in and take that land that was not going to be touched. It does affect their thinking. They feel that the promises have been broken. That's the thing they're worried about.

Now, I don't know if I'm clarifying that for you or not. I'm not suggesting that they're not concerned about other people, but I'm saying that they're concerned that when they bought, the parklands around them were going to be like that for their lifetime, and now it's possibly not going to be that way. That's what I was saying.

Thank you.

9:20

The Deputy Speaker: I have four more that wish to participate under this standing order: the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. minister of intergovernmental affairs, followed by the hon. leader of the NDs.

We have Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all are talking about apartment owners, rent gouging. What about all natural gas companies? They are gouging prices more than 50 per cent, so what measures is this government going to make?

Another question I want to ask. The Alberta government subsidized for higher gas bills, and also I think that in the '80s they helped the banks to give some percentages of, you know, mortgage compensation. Why can't they help the renters now?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question would be to pose this question. The comment relative to seniors – and I appreciate the comments he made about the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. I think that certainly shows his balance in terms of this approach. But he did mention in terms of what people were promised in their neighbourhood, based probably on other municipal governments at the time. Clearly, it was without question probably a zoning issue that he's making reference to. Even with that in mind and in the changing world that we live in, I pose this question. You know, if in fact today there is land in his community or any community that ultimately could be allocated for affordable housing, which is so very important, even if residents that vote for you or anyone is saying, "Well, no, we don't want it here," would he accept the fact that maybe they would have to suck it up and that it would go there because of helping the greater need of people who are less fortunate in having a place to live?

Mr. Flaherty: Well, if you're asking that question, I think it's a matter of – and I don't want to pick on the realty companies. But I think that's probably where the promises were made when they bought the property. I think you're absolutely right. I think it's a question of education and being able to accept other people and the way they live. I think that's what we have to do. But it's very hard to go to seniors that have invested this amount of money in these homes and tell them that because it's such an emotional issue. I think we have a matter of education to do here, and, yeah, I think we have to suck it up.

It reminds me, quite frankly, if I may be honest, of when I was working as a regional director in Peace River. I could not believe it, but when we were asked to put a group home in Peace River, we found that it created such a furor that we had to move the home down the road, about 30 miles west – I think it was Fairview College – and that's where we put the home. There was such a rebellion about putting it in the town of Peace River and the community we wanted it to go in.

Mr. Boutilier: Is there a supplemental on the point?

The Deputy Speaker: No. I have another member, but the time has run out.

Are there others that wish to participate in the debate?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

Bill 34 Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Before I ask for any comments or questions or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill, I've been advised by the Official Opposition and the government that shorter bells would be in order and agreeable. Is that agreeable? It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, what a treat to be here to continue the debate on Bill 34, changes to the Residential Tenancies Act and the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act. I guess what I would like to say is that this is a bill that talks about stability in rent increases. It talks about getting kind of a standard approach or a longer approach that would identify or connect us with our neighbours, British Columbia and Saskatchewan and others. That's asked for here. I think that's a reasonable thing.

If someone's in a condo and someone wants to move them out, it can take a year to find another place. Giving them notice that they're going to move out with no rent increase certainly gives them an opportunity to start to shop around for where they would want to live, or someone that's going to be subject to major renovations also has a year with no rent increase to deal with. In fact, Mr. Chairman, most people deal on a yearly basis with their income adjustments. So holding the landlord to the same kind of fair assessment – once a year is a reasonable time to identify what their costs might be.

Mr. Chairman, there's nobody in this House that either likes or justifies extreme rent increases. There's nobody in this House that doesn't want to see all Albertans have the opportunity for affordable housing. There's nobody in this House that doesn't hope that their kids and their grandchildren have an opportunity to buy a home or a condo or a mobile home if they choose or to rent if they're coming in to school.

You know, we are promoting in this government how important it is to further your education, but I think everyone in this House would agree that there's not a lot of point in sending students to Edmonton to take courses if they don't have a place to stay. So it is a very, very complex problem that will require a lot of co-ordinated effort from all the departments, including agencies like universities, technical schools, and colleges that are going to have to admit that if we're going to take in these students, we may be required to have a place for them to live.

We may have to revisit how we approach major developments in our areas, be it close to major centres or Fort McMurray, that will say if you're going to come in and require a workforce of 5,000 or 6,000 or 7,000 people, you might be required to provide housing. Like the hon. Member for Fort-McMurray-Wood Buffalo has said, they used to do that.

In my community of Lloydminster when Husky Oil Ltd. came in to build the upgrader, they sat down and built residences that they were able to use for their staff while they built the upgrader, and then they turned them over to Lakeland College as residences. It was a very successful, be it ahead of its time, public/private partnership.

When we say that this bill isn't the answer to all of the ills that are facing people out in the workforce now and all the people that are looking for housing stability, this is one component of it. You can try and make it more than that, but that's not what this bill is about. This bill is about rent stability that says: "Give it a year like our neighbours in B.C., like our neighbours across the country. A year's notice to increase your rent is fair."

I might be accused of being right wing occasionally, and I might be accused of being heartless or whatever. Actually, one person that probably doesn't know me at all even accused me this last weekend of being lovable. I can't believe it myself.

The fact is that I can understand why a year is fair to either evict somebody from their mobile home site or from their condo or to give them a rent increase. That's a practical, common-sense approach to putting stability into the marketplace. Yes, there is an opportunity at the end of that time to raise rents to what might be far past what that person has, but there is a fundamental difference in many ways that we look at things. One of them that we have here is a respect for your right to own and use your property.

I know that you can blame our ideological differences and say: "It doesn't matter that that's the landlord's money invested. We feel so strongly about these people without homes that we're going to take money that you built into a system, that you built into an investment." We're going to say: no, you can't do that. But, you know, when the stock market was going great and people were making 22 and 23 per cent returns, like some of you might have done in your RRSPs, nobody got up and said: boy, that's too much; the government ought to step in and take that back. That was the market at work, and you made a good decision to invest.

Some of the landlords have made a very good decision to invest in houses. I lived through the '80s. I saw what happened to a lot of landlords who invested then, who lost everything because government spending and other forces drove interest rates far past their ability to ever, ever pay for that lodging, and they lost it. The government never went and saved them. We said: you took a risk, you invested in that sector of the business community, and now you have to live with it. Some of them made good decisions. But by far and away, most landlords are conscientious, diligent providers of lodging for their tenants, and they truly care about them.

What we're saying in this bill is: let's put stability into those increases; let's put stability into the notices around condo conversions. Slowing down condo conversions is a stopgap. It's still lodging. These condos that are being converted are not empty. The only answer – and you know it; I know that you know it – is to increase the supply of units. That's the answer. No matter what you think, with a magic waving wand or whatever magic dust you want to wave, we can't magically create all these units overnight. We have to work with every single opportunity we've got to support the people that are looking for it with every program this government has. The Premier has made it an absolute number one priority, and that's what we're doing.

In Bill 34 we're simply saying: doesn't it make sense to take a year, put on notice? Let's keep it consistent, and then we will work very carefully. You know, we've heard so much from the opposition about how nothing has happened, yet if you were to look into the affordable housing strategy, the RASL program, starting in 2005 – and the hon. member from Lethbridge would surely know – two of the projects were in there: 2,103 units starting in 2005.

So the suggestion that this just fell on this government, that we're just reacting, is simply wrong, and I know that you know that. It's a lot easier to make the headlines in question period, but the fact is that it's going on; it's happening. Many of these projects that started in 2005 and 2006 are opening this spring. Now, that was Albertans' money that we were fortunate enough to be able to redirect into affordable housing all over this province in recognition of what was going to come.

Ms Blakeman: Tell the truth. It came from the feds.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, strangely enough, on this side of the House we do. It certainly isn't catching, I can tell you that.

The fact is that this bill merely puts rent stability into the program. It's one of the tools, certainly not the only tool. But we can sit here, and the longer you want to debate, you need to know that you can keep it here till the middle of July. You're the ones that talk about uncertainty in the marketplace. Yes, there is. And if they listen to some of your questions, I can understand why. The fact is that this makes it very clear: give your notice, and then you have a year. It's as simple as that. You can make it out to be whatever you want, but that's what the bill is.

I look forward to the debate, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, the problem that the hon. member is talking about is stability. I suppose that's the right word to use. We want stability in the marketplace. But the hon. member admits that this is only one component. What are the other components? There's not a complete package here. We need to have a complete package to be able to handle something as serious as this issue and not just the one component.

That was the intention of our task force on housing, to suggest that there should be a package of components, ideas, tools that can be used. I mean, if you're going to intervene in the marketplace, you are intervening by having this particular bill. The one year: that's an intervention. Is it the right kind of intervention? Shouldn't there be more in terms of regulation of the whole rental sector?

Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an amendment to this bill, especially to focus on the need for a guideline in terms of the rent increases.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, do you have the amendments with you, or are they at the table?

Dr. B. Miller: They're at the table.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We will make sure that they are circulated. We'll just wait for a moment while the pages circulate them, please.

In the meantime may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a great pleasure for me tonight to introduce two of our colleagues from Saskatchewan. They had a dinner in Edmonton for their leader, Mr. Brad Wall, and they've come down to watch how we work here in Alberta. It's very nice for me because I share Lloydminster with an MLA from the Saskatchewan Party. He's a wonderful man. The two that are here tonight are Mr. Ken Krawetz and Mr. Don McMorris. I would ask them to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, you may proceed.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move that Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 1(4)(b) by adding the following after the proposed subsection (8). This would be subsection (9).

No increase in rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement shall be greater than the rate of inflation as measured by the All-items Consumer Price Index for Alberta published by Statistics Canada for the immediately preceding year, plus 2%, for the period April 24, 2007 to April 23, 2009.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is exactly what the government task force on housing recommended. It was a part of their suggestion about a rent stability guideline, which the government has chosen not to pay any attention to. I think that it's very serious that we have some sort of cap. This is similar to what is present in B.C. The cost of living is around 5.5 per cent, so plus 2 per cent is around 7.5 per cent. Surely many landlords would find this acceptable, that they can put up rent increases, then, once a year with a cap of CPI plus 2 per cent.

People often say that, you know, if you have this kind of rental guideline, it's interfering too much in the marketplace and it doesn't encourage new rental accommodation to be built. Actually, CMHC, Canada Mortgage and Housing, did a study some years ago about the effects of what they called rent controls. In fact, they studied this over a couple of decades, and their conclusion was that there's no convincing evidence that rent regulations as they've existed in various provinces in Canada from the '70s through the '80s and into the '90s had significant effects on the construction of rental units. It didn't have any effect on the market in terms of rental units being built or in terms of rent increases and so on.

But it did have an effect on the people who are the most vulnerable. Where rent controls, rent guidelines, as we're calling them now, are in place, it's a protection of the renter. It's a protection of people who are on a limited income, people who are on social assistance, low-income workers, people who are vulnerable, especially single- or lone-parent families. One-quarter of families in Canada are lone-parent families, so that means that there's only one wage earner in the family. They can't possibly absorb the tremendous increases in rents that we have.

We owe it to this huge population in Alberta to protect the renter. Now, this doesn't have anything to do with the supply. It won't have any implication for the supply, and CMHC has pointed that out, that wherever these kinds of guidelines were in place, it didn't affect the building of new accommodation one way or the other. People still continue to build rental accommodations, and that will happen in Alberta too.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is the best thing. This really strengthens the bill because the missing component is exactly what we suggested in our task force. I mean, we thought long and hard about this because it's a serious thing when you start to establish regulations with respect to any kind of economic sector, so we debated it back and forth. We had people on our task force who were close to the housing industry, and we had people who represented people in the inner city of Edmonton and other places. We had an array of representation on our task force. We talked long and hard about this, about whether we should have such guidelines or not, but we all agreed. Because of what we heard everywhere we went in the province, we responded to the plight of the renters, who were losing their homes right now. That's why we need something like this in the bill to strengthen the bill, to make it possible for people to stay in their homes, especially those who are the near homeless, who are just one rent increase from losing their apartment. There's a tremendous worry about what's going to happen to those people. So I think this is the kind of thing that would really strengthen this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the debate on this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. President of the Treasury Board, did you want to respond?

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to speak on I believe it's part of amendment A1. It has become clear that the government's response to the affordable housing crisis has failed to address a critical issue. What are renters supposed to do in the short term until more affordable housing units come on stream? The only way to protect Alberta renters from rent gouging in this out-of-control housing market is to introduce temporary rent regulations limiting the amount that rents can be increased. It's the government's responsibility to listen to Albertans and respond to help them. This is especially true when the market fails to provide stability as is the case today. Albertans have spoken clearly on this matter. They desperately need short-term protection, as my colleague has just commented on. It is the government's duty to address these concerns even if the solution falls outside their political ideology. It is important to act in the best interests of the citizens, not in the best interests of the political party's ideology.

The rationale that the market will solve the crisis in time does nothing to help people now, Mr. Chair. The market does work effectively most of the time, but there are extraordinary times, like now in Alberta, times like we have in this province, when the market is so destabilized that it cannot provide the stability people need to keep their homes. There is no disputing that the extreme growth pressures in Alberta have distorted the market to such a degree that the government needs to intervene in the short run to create artificial stability until market conditions improve. When that happens, rent regulations will disappear. These are temporary measures and will end on a defined date in the prescribed period of time. This is the most balanced approach that the government can take to solve the crisis.

Perhaps the clearest explanation of why temporary rent regulations are needed is found in the government's own Affordable Housing Task Force report. To quote the report directly:

The decision to recommend this protective measure was a very difficult one for this task force. There was clear concern among many members about the impact of rent guidelines on overall new rental supply, and on rental rates once guidelines are removed in two years. At the same time, the task force was confronted everywhere with the plight of renters who were losing their homes right now.

Right as we speak.

These people have few other affordable housing options in today's overheated [economy]. The task force understood that keeping people in their current homes wherever possible is essential while dealing with the urgent situation Alberta is facing.

The report clearly articulates why temporary rent regulations are needed. Albertans, thousands of Albertans everywhere and from all walks of life, need them, most importantly of all, because everybody needs a home. That is why the Alberta Liberal caucus is introducing amendments to introduce temporary rent regulations. We believe that the government must respond when the citizens they represent demand action. We urge all members to please listen to the desperate cries of Albertans for help and amend Bill 34.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak to the amendment by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. He is moving that Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 1(4)(b) by adding the following after the proposed subsection (8):

(9) No increase in rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement shall be greater than the rate of inflation as measured by the All-items Consumer Price Index for Alberta published by Statistics Canada for the immediately preceding year, plus 2%, for the period April 24, 2007 to April 23, 2009.

Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate that I certainly support this amendment. I think it's a very good one and, in fact, has formed the core of the debate that we've seen over the last several weeks in this province as it is based on the Affordable Housing Task Force recommendation. I just want to indicate that it was pretty clear that that task force heard from hundreds and hundreds of Albertans and that this was one of the major issues that they addressed as they travelled around the province and that the kinds of things that they heard were not just limited to a couple of centres but, in fact, were expressed by Albertans in all corners of the province.

The government, of course, took that report and made decisions about which recommendations they would support and which ones they would reject behind closed doors, in secret, hidden away from Albertans who were not privy to the contents of the report and could not join in the debate. So the government chose deliberately to exclude Albertans from the debate until after the decision was made.

Mr. Chairman, that is unacceptable as far as I'm concerned, certainly from any government that claims to be reforming democracy and becoming more open and more transparent and more accountable. It is really unacceptable and, frankly, quite disturbing that a government would continue to operate in that way while attempting to convince Albertans that they had really changed their spots. Well, I don't think this government has changed its spots at all. You know, it's pretty hard for a leopard to change its spots or a skunk to change its stripes. I don't know, but there is a certain smell about this particular approach that is fairly pungent.

I want to say in response to the President of the Treasury Board, who argued that this brings rent stability, that I would argue that without an amendment like this there is no real stability. In fact, you're replacing a series of significant but smaller increases over a period of time with gigantic, single jumps. How that increases the stability, Mr. Chairman, is beyond me. In fact, it sounds even a little less stable because people go along for a year and then they just hit the wall.

The minister indicated that a year is enough time to make a move. The question is: where do people move to, and why should they have to move in the first place? Mr. Chairman, there's always mobility in terms of housing, and mobility is higher among people who rent than people who own, obviously. Nevertheless, it is clearly the case that people should not have to be moving all the time, even if they've got a year's notice, because landlords are charging rents that are unfair and unaffordable and particularly so when there is no alternative housing at an affordable rate that people can move to. So you've got a year to look for housing that doesn't exist, and that is not doing the job for the renters of Alberta. That's why we don't support this bill. It doesn't really give stability. It is, in our view, an example of false advertising.

Now, I indicated, Mr. Chairman, that we would be supporting this particular amendment. It is similar to an amendment that we talked about this afternoon, that we'll be introducing later if this amendment should tragically be struck down by the tyrannical majority opposite. I want to indicate that it is very similar to the task force report recommendation. It's also compatible with NDP policy with respect to this issue.

Mr. Chairman, there is a slight deviation, however, from the Alberta Liberal policy, and I'll just read that. It says that an Alberta Liberal government would enact temporary rent regulations. The Alberta Liberal housing policy, Because Everybody Needs a Home, which was released in January, calls for a "one-time, one year long temporary rent regulation measure that limits rent increases within that period to a maximum of 10%." So the Liberal policy is a 10 per cent increase with a limit only of one time, one year. This particular amendment from our Liberal colleagues talks about a consumer price index for Alberta plus 2 per cent. That's based on the task force report, and of course that's also based on the Alberta NDP policy.

So, Mr. Chairman, how can we not support this amendment, which clearly reflects our policy with respect to this? We've always felt, quite frankly, that this is fair. This is fair. It allows an increase for the landlord. It allows an increase of not just the increase in the consumer price index, but 2 per cent on top of that because we are, in fact, generous and well-balanced and not dogmatic, unlike the members opposite. We know that costs go up. We know that there is a good market for landlords.

We also – and I want to make this clear – actually think that this kind of approach makes a lot of sense, frankly, because we do believe that the majority of landlords are well-meaning people. There are many people around Alberta who are small landlords, Mr. Chairman, who maybe have a basement suite or a small duplex or something like that that they rent out. These are people just trying to make their mortgage payments. These are not big, evil people that are out to screw tenants, but in the kind of market the government has created there's going to be substantial upward pressure on rents across the board.

Nor do we think that people like Boardwalk are actually evil, Mr. Chairman. We heard that response from the opposite side a little bit earlier today in response to some of our questions. You know, how can you pick on poor Boardwalk? Well, we don't pick on Boardwalk. We simply quote from their annual report because they're reporting to their shareholders in an honest and straightforward way. What they say, to paraphrase, is that people can no longer afford houses and that they can't break into the housing market, so they're forced to rent, and it's increasing the demand for rental accommodation. There's a shortage; therefore, there's a higher market value associated with the rental accommodations. Like good free enterprisers they understand supply and demand. They know that there's a shortage of supply, that there's an extra amount of demand, so the price of the commodity, in this case rental accommodation, rises very dramatically. And that's fine. We have no problem with that.

We also accept what the government has said, that the only real solution in the long run is to increase the supply of housing. The government has taken some very modest steps to do so, and to the extent that they're prepared to do that, Mr. Chairman, we have supported them, and we will support them, but we know that it's going to take more than the government is prepared to do at this time to actually meet the needs of the people for a supply of housing. But until that housing is built, it is not going to affect the market. The government has said itself that the minimum period of time is two years. We've asked this question over and over again: what do people do in the intervening two to four years before the additional housing comes on the market? What are they supposed to do?

The government claims to have a balanced policy, but the only answer they've got for those people is that if they get evicted, then there's this fund that they can apply for. Well, why should they be applying to the taxpayers for relief from rent increases that shouldn't happen in the first place? Why is this government subsidizing the landlords by letting them charge whatever they want and then saying, "Well, if you get kicked out, you know, if the inevitable happens, and you've got no place to live, we've got a whole bunch of taxpayers' money that we're prepared to provide to you"?

Mr. Chairman, I don't really think that that's the approach that the people of this province want because it involves the use of their hard-earned tax dollars to support the landlords who, in many cases, are charging, of course, what the market will bear, but because of the government's mismanagement of the economy and the lack of planning that's taken place, there's a severe shortage of housing, and I consider that a mismanagement of the economy.

I know that the hon. President of the Treasury Board thinks that as long as everything is booming, how can you say that we've mismanaged the economy? I didn't hear him say that, but at this point I can almost read his mind, Mr. Chairman, and I just got a psychic flash from him that that's exactly what he was thinking. And you know what? It is mismanagement. It is mismanagement.

You can pull all the stops out to get as much economic growth as you want, particularly when you've got a commodity in large amounts that the world needs and is desperately short of. Then, of course, you can have very rapid economic development. If you take away most of the environmental regulations, if you take away a lot of the regulations around rights of working people in the province and if you take away any real burden of royalties and you cut their taxes as well, it's pretty obvious that the economy is going to roar to life, and that's no great accomplishment under the present circumstances. What they didn't do was take into account the effect that this rapid economic growth was going to have on the people of this province. They did not prepare the infrastructure. They did not make sure that new schools would be in place, that there were enough hospitals, that there were enough ambulances, that there were enough trained personnel. They did not make sure that we will have enough water to support the economic growth that's taken place, and they certainly didn't take any steps to make sure that there would be enough housing. So of course, Mr. Chairman, we find ourselves in the current situation where people are losing their homes, ending up on the street, and the government is very proud of its economic record because they don't think that those things are part of economic development or economic growth.

Well, Mr. Chairman, we on this side certainly disagree with them. The Alberta New Democrats believe in economic growth and economic development, but it needs to be balanced, and it needs to take into account the human needs of people and the needs of communities. They need infrastructure, and they need access to health care and education, and they need roads that aren't going to break their axles when they drive down them. I have a couple of bones to pick with whoever is the infrastructure minister at the moment about the state of the roads in this province. It's not just in Edmonton. It is getting very bad because the government, of course, has neglected our infrastructure so badly.

But I want to come back, Mr. Chairman, to the whole question of housing and to this particular amendment. It certainly seems to me that a reasonable increase for landlords is fair. This amendment would set out a fair increase that would be available to all landlords. I certainly think that the intent here is, well, that if there are extraordinary expenses that are required by a landlord as a result of renovations or necessary changes to a building code or fire code or something like that, that are extra costs, there needs to be a mechanism where they could come forward and justify those costs in order to get a rent increase beyond this approved. We would support that as well.

Mr. Chairman, you know, I just want to conclude by saying that we have always argued that rent guidelines should be a temporary measure and should be put in place only as long as they're necessary to bring on a sufficient supply of new housing so that the market again reaches an equilibrium point. We have also made it very clear from the beginning that we do not believe that these guidelines should apply to new housing units that may be being built now or built in the future so that they don't provide any disincentive to developers or landlords for the development of badly needed new housing. But I certainly think that with those limitations on rent guidelines the government's arguments against them really lack validity. They keep repeating that rent guidelines don't work almost as a mantra, almost as if they just can clutch a religious artifact closely to their breasts and really, truly believe and chant that that's true no matter what the facts show.

Mr. Chairman, there are cases where rent controls have had a negative impact, and there are also cases where rent guidelines have worked very well and have provided protection for tenants while not interfering in new investment for rental housing. We don't have to look very far to find examples of that. In particular, we know that in Ontario, which has had rent guidelines for some time, the number of starts on new rental units has risen quite dramatically. Between 2000 and 2006 it's risen 88 per cent, whereas in the same period in Alberta, which has no rent guidelines, it's dropped 52 per cent, Mr. Chairman. These are facts. The government can look them up. I see that some of the ministers opposite are looking at a computer, and I'm assuming that they are googling statistics in order to confirm what I'm telling the House. Sometimes I can't read the minister's mind as well as at other times.

Nevertheless, those facts are out there. There is a track record that can be checked. If you go across the country, British Columbia has rent guidelines. Manitoba has them but, interestingly, only in Winnipeg, Mr. Chairman, because they're not needed elsewhere, and if you don't need them, why would you bring them in? And then Ontario. So they are far more common than people would think, and, you know, they are not toxic. They may be un-Conservative, but there are many Conservatives in this country that are realists. Unfortunately, they are not in the majority in the government caucus. I think that there are some there, and I would certainly hope that those members that are realists would support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On this amendment, I find it interesting in the discussion tonight that the leader of the New Democratic Party indicated that they support economic growth. I find that, of course, very, very shocking based on the fact that ultimately, they really have wanted to shut down the oil sands sweet blend in terms of what they're producing.

So I need to be absolutely very clear. If you support economic growth, you don't want people in Fort McMurray being without jobs producing energy for the entire country and, for that matter, part of America as well. I think it's really important for the oil sands capital of the world that ultimately – I recall, having had the honour of serving as its mayor, in fact, during economic growth. Before that we actually had a bridge to nowhere. We overplanned, the province, and spent $50 million on a bridge to nowhere, and now it's a bridge to over $80 billion of economic growth.

The province, in fact, at the time built a hospital of five floors, and two of them were empty. They sat there, and the government was criticized for overplanning. We actually built, as the mayor, a city water treatment plant for 85,000 people. There were only 35,000 of us paying for that, and we were criticized for overbuilding. Furthermore, we built and paved roads with fire hydrants and street lamps where we used to teach our kids how to drive, but there were no homes there. We overbuilt our infrastructure. This, believe it or not, was only eight and a half years ago. So there's economic growth.

And you know what we had? We actually had landlords that used to give three months' free rent on furnished apartments for $400. At a time when their mortgages were $1,000, they were collecting rents of $400. So on the amendment one question I would ask: would it be appropriate, then, to suggest that during those times when there is no economic growth, there is a role in terms of that balance, in terms of the fact that they're paying a mortgage of $1,000 and only collecting $400? What should we be doing? It appears that in those times everyone is silent about that, yet we still want to attract more supply to get more housing on the market.

I know that as a mayor and an alderman back then – in fact, the hon. member at the time was an alderman himself and did a very good job with the city of Edmonton – we were saying: how do we move to get more supply in the market? In fact, I believe there is a comment about geniuses seldom differ. But at the same time – what is the comment about fools? What is the term? Well, I think the term is that basically we can either all agree or maybe all disagree.

Really, if we think about that balance today on this amendment, Mr. Chairman. I think it's important that we take an approach that is balanced, that is practical, and that can serve, ultimately, what we both want, and that is getting more supply on the market, providing certainty to help those families, be it seniors or middle-aged or young people, to ensure that they have a way to earn a good living and are able to live in a proper accommodation. Going back 25 years, we had tent farms of a thousand in Fort McMurray. I'm very pleased to say that we don't have that today because of the reinvestment of over $400 million.

Striking that right balance is something that I believe – I take him at his word when the hon. member says: we support economic growth. I just want to let you know that in the future we are going to have a variety of economic opportunities in the oil sands. We're actually supplying energy to Ontario and to other provinces. Ultimately, if we're going to continue to do that and provide great jobs to Albertans and to the new Albertans that come here, we need to continue to provide them homes. But we don't want another bridge to nowhere. We don't want another hospital with two empty floors and another water treatment plant almost, like, 50 per cent underutilized because we overbuilt.

This government not only overbuilt; we planned ahead. We had a very good plan that not even the market could keep up with, and I give you the best example of that in housing. There were homes in Abasand in Fort McMurray, in my city, that were selling for $30,000 and renting. You know what? If the market was so smart in all of this – and here I am as a Conservative saying: the market could never have imagined what was taking place. The government certainly had to plan, which we did, but no one could have imagined that fact that $30,000 homes then are now selling for over $300,000, that people are buying and renting because the market will bear it.

So even when private businesses suggest that, you know, well, the government could not keep up with the plan, you're right. They couldn't. But I also want to say: nor could the market, based on the unanticipated incredible growth that is taking place in this province.

I admire the hon. member when he says: we support economic growth. I can assure you that that is what's happening in this province based on the excellent principles of this government.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Blakeman: I know that my colleague really wants to get up and rebut him, and I'm sure he'll get an opportunity.

Mr. Mason: I will. We have all night.

Ms Blakeman: That's true. We have quite a bit of time ahead of us.

I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak in favour of the amendment that was brought forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, which is seeking to amend section 1(4)(b), essentially bringing into play another of the recommendations that was brought forward as part of the task force. Essentially, this is supporting a critical component that would make this bill workable and would start to move towards creating stability in the housing market.

What we have now is instability. I would argue that the single component in this bill of a notice period has, in fact, created great instability in the market, even chaos, and certainly we're seeing that from the individuals who have come down to the Assembly. Some of them have met with the minister of housing. Clearly, from the stories that are pouring into our offices, that's what has been the result of what the government has done.

I think the situation goes much further back, Mr. Chairman, because I am seeing two ongoing deficiencies from this government. One is a lack of planning, and with that is a lack of research, a lack of monitoring, a lack of forward planning and thinking by the government about where we're going, what we can expect to see out in front of us. What are the statistics telling us? What are the demographics going to be? Really, the largest collectors of that kind of information are the governments that we have in this country. They're the only ones that are capable of amassing that data and interpreting it and then using it and using the analysis to plan how we are going to provide government programs and services to the people. This government has failed to do that and particularly around this issue.

Now we have government members standing up in complete shock and amazement at how we managed to get to this point in time. I say back to them: "Well, you shouldn't be shocked and amazed. You're the government. You're the one that had your finger on all the possible studies and plans and analysis. You should've seen this one coming." Boardwalk saw it coming. It's in their annual report. They were able to tell in their annual report exactly what was anticipated for growth in the market, what the vacancy rate was likely to be, how far they could push the rents. They certainly have done that analysis. Now I'm hearing that the government didn't, that they're surprised and shocked and amazed that we got to this point in time. That, to me, is much more telling about the condition that this government is in than almost anything else that they've said or done.

The second major ongoing deficiency that I see from this government is a lack of forward-thinking ideas. What is your idea about housing? What is your plan for the future? Do you have a vision, like the Alberta Liberals do, that says that everybody needs a home? It doesn't seem like it. Do you have a plan or a vision that says that you want to see, you know, X number of units established in the rental market? A certain percentage of people would be in the rental market; a certain percentage would own their own homes. This would require X number of units to be built on both sides of this by a certain period of time, adding on X number of units for each year in the future as our population reaches different amounts.

I don't see that. What I see is that the government doesn't have any ideas. They put together a task force. They rush it through 45 days of consultation and research. The task force comes forward with ideas, and then the government doesn't take the ideas. They cherry-pick one idea off dozens of recommendations that were brought forward by that task force.

Just a quick look at what was put forward under the immediate situation, the eight immediate measures to tackle the shortage.

One, we'll establish a homeless and eviction prevention fund. Well, I think the government is going to do that but not right away. Every day they get up in this session and try to make the public think that this plan is in place. They actually read out a phone number. When people phone it, they're told: "I'm sorry; this actually won't be in service for two months. This program doesn't exist. Call us back in two months." Well, that's darn cold comfort to people that have been given a rental increase of several hundred dollars and have to be out in a month. That fund is clearly not going to help them. It won't be established in time to help them.

Two, stabilize volatility for renters. Under that is, first, introduce two-year rent stability guidelines. Well, that's where we're getting part of this. We're getting a notice period, but we're not getting a rent cap. That's why supporting this motion, which essentially puts in place a rent cap, is so important because it ties it to what is likely to happen as we move forward. Second, use capital grants to stimulate rental construction. Well, absolutely nothing said about that. We get all kinds of numbers – millions of this, gazillions of that – thrown at us in question period, not tied to anything specific. Once again this government is basically abdicating responsibility for involvement in building new rental units or in building affordable housing. Third, introduce new guidelines for condo conversions. Well, we're getting part of that in this but not the rest of it.

I mean, those are two points out of eight from what was recommended by this task force.

Three, there are things like increased funding for temporary emergency shelter spaces. Under that, shelter allowances and the Alberta homeless initiative.

Four, establish and fund an Alberta transitional housing initiative. Now, that's one I've asked questions about in the House because a number of the people that I work with and that I continue to represent are people that are really trying to improve their lives. They are women and children who have experienced domestic violence, who have gone to an emergency shelter. They're trying not to go back home into that situation. They're trying to move into transitional housing. Do they have transitional housing? Can they access it in this province? No, they cannot. So they end up going back into the same situation, and that costs us money. As taxpayers all, that situation costs us money. It costs us in lost productivity. It costs us in health care. It costs us in long-term effect on the children in those families. It's an enormous cost.

I have this government across from me that goes: oh, we're tough Conservatives; we're fiscal managers. No, you're not. You waste money all the time, and you waste it because you don't pay attention to stuff like this. Instead of investing in transitional housing for places like WINGS and the work that the Lurana Shelter does and WIN House and the WIN House transitional housing, no, they're not going to bother with that because, heck, you know, they'll save the money. Well, it's very short-sighted thinking.

Five, increase Alberta's rent supplement program allocation.

Six, enhance capital to leverage a maximum supply of housing: stimulus for transitional, supportive, and affordable rental housing; home ownership support over five years; aboriginal housing trust.

Seven, enable greater flexibility in the use of capital grants.

Eight, ensure quick release of suitable Crown lands, surplus provincial lands, and surplus school sites.

So there are their eight points for an immediate situation, of which we're getting two. We're getting a notice period on condo conversions and a notice period on rent increases. The rest? Well, it's coming, but it's not in this legislation. It's not part of what we're looking at here.

You know, again, this situation should have been no surprise to this government. The Alberta Liberals saw it. We saw it last summer. We went and held a town hall in the fall. As a result of that, we did a draft of a housing policy. We circulated it over a period of time. We came back and did a final version of that and released it on the 15th of January. So that housing policy has been out there for four months now, yet the government here is surprised that we're in this situation.

I guess my question is: did the government know this information and ignore it, or did the government not even see it coming? I would argue that either of those scenarios is a pretty frightening thought around a government that's supposed to be managing growth because, clearly, they're not. We have unmanaged growth, and we have no planning.

Government ideas for the future? We don't know. You know, we have the task force, and as I said, they've ignored most of the work that was done, which was carefully thought out with a series of interlocking incentives and punishments where those incentives didn't work. So it was meant to be an interlocking package, and the government has essentially cherry-picked through it.

I mean, what was the government thinking? That they would announce a one-year moratorium without the rent cap that goes with it? What did you think was going to happen? How could you not foresee that landlords would turn around and go: "Oh, my goodness. I can only do one rent increase a year. Let me slam through a $500 a month increase or a $400 a month increase or a $265 a month increase"? What did you think was going to happen? Did you honestly think they were just going to say: "Right. I'll just stick to that $35 increase, and I'll only do one a year"? Of course not. They were going to go for the maximum amount of money that they could, knowing that they were now limited to a one-year period.

What were you people thinking? Of course that was all going to fall into place, and it did, and now you're all surprised at the consequences. What kind of planners and managers are you? Pretty bad, in my opinion. What it has done is it has caught out some of our good landlords who were trying to do small, incremental increases that people could manage, and it has enabled the gouging landlords. That's what has been the result of this government's planning system. Wow. Not very impressive.

I asked in question period: what is the government's definition of gouging? Now, we've got the minister of housing, that's willing to meet with these landlords, you know, having created the situation where landlords could gouge. Because there's no rent cap, they can put in any amount of an increase that they wish. Well, then they're shocked and appalled when there's a $1,000 increase, a $500 increase: goodness, that's gouging. Yeah. Well, what percentage of increase is gouging? At what point are you going to meet with people? At what point aren't you? How do you plan on doing this? Are you just going to talk quietly to them in a back room somehow, to every one of them? Wow. I would have thought that as a cabinet minister you would have had other things to do, like plan and market analyze, but clearly that wasn't happening. So I guess that did free up the time for you to meet with individually every gouging landlord in Alberta.

I want to talk about the theory of the marketplace, this argument that the marketplace manages itself, that invisible hand that looks after it all. We do not have a functioning rental marketplace in Alberta at this point. We absolutely do not. That invisible hand has failed completely. The marketplace has failed to regulate itself. The marketplace is supposed to be about supply and demand. What we have now is a situation where people are going: absolutely; we're not going to put any more supply on here because we get to keep raising our rents as long as the supply is really tight. So that marketplace that you all keep depending on so much is absolutely not working. Go and talk to the dean of business at the university, that you so love to quote, because he'll say that that marketplace is not functioning. We don't have a real marketplace in play at this time. It's not functioning. It's a complete breakdown of that marketplace. It's a complete failure of that marketplace.

What we have are extraordinary circumstances, and extraordinary circumstances require action from government, and this is where we really have the ostrich response to the situation. Instead of looking at the work that was done by the task force and implementing that comprehensive package, we have: well, we'll do the one-year notice period. Then we have the resulting gouging landlords, that are such a problem in some places. I think that with those extraordinary circumstances, this government has allowed a larger social problem to start to create itself. When you have a wealthy province like this, where you have working people that are homeless and on the street, you've created a much larger social crisis.

Now, I was very interested to hear a number of times the government say: this is not a crisis; quit calling this a crisis. Really? Well, your own Affordable Housing Task Force right in the executive summary, the second paragraph down, says, "Alberta's housing shortage is a 'crisis'." Right there. Your own task force. I'm assuming that it's still your own task force. You commissioned it; it had your name on it. You were supposed to take their recommendations. Are you now saying that it's not your task force? They're calling it a crisis. How can you say, "No, no, it's not a crisis"? When you're creating a situation – I mean, never mind talking about the vulnerable in our society. Never mind talking about people that are on assistance, that are on AISH, that are low income, that are vulnerable, that have a disability or something. Never mind talking about them. We're talking about working people who are homeless because they cannot afford rental accommodation. We've created a much larger problem.

Let's talk about those economic implications. When we start looking at the issue of what homelessness causes, now we start to move into the social determinants of health. As the shadow minister for Health and Wellness this is something that I've looked at a lot. If we're trying to contain the costs in our health care system or if we're trying to create a healthier population, housing is key. Every time you look at the social determinants of health, no matter which ones you use – and they have been developing over the years. You know, when they first started, I think the WHO had five of them, and there are 11 or 15 now, depending on whose definition you're actually going to use. I mean, the Ottawa Charter for Health Promotion identifies the prerequisites for health as "peace, shelter, education, food, income, a stable eco-system, sustainable resources, social justice and equity." That's the World Health Organization, 1986.

Health Canada outlines various determinants of health. Again, they are social determinants of income and social status, social support networks, education, employment or working conditions, physical and social environments, biology and genetic endowment, personal health practices and coping skills, healthy child development, health services, gender, and culture. Health Canada, 1998.

A more common list that you get now is aboriginal status, early life, education, employment or working conditions, food security, health care services, housing – there it is again – income and its distribution, social safety net, social exclusion, and employment security.

So housing turns up on every single one of those lists. Without housing that system starts to break down, and you start to create poor health. You start to create the situations that keep a population in poor health. So it all starts to intermingle. When you've got a crisis in housing, you're starting to create a crisis in other places. We shouldn't be in that position. We're a wealthy province. We've all kinds of opportunity here. This is a great place. We've got all kinds of stuff that works and should work. So how could we possibly have a government that is knowingly creating a crisis in housing, which then starts a domino effect and creates crises in other areas? How could a good manager, a good steward of all of that magnificence, all of that wealth, all of that luck and opportunity that we have here – how could they mismanage that so badly?

If we really are serious about trying to get a handle on this immediate problem that is in front of us, that we should have seen coming – some of us did see it coming. This government didn't. So the government didn't see it coming. They got behind on this. We've now got a situation where rents are skyrocketing, where the supply is very narrow, and the best the government can do is give a one-year notice period and a notice period on condo conversions. But without that accompanying rent cap, this will not help. We've got to have the rent cap in place with it as well as all the other things that were outlined by the task force.

So I am speaking very much in favour of amendment A1, that was moved by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. We have to have that in place. It also acknowledges that the work of the task force was meaningful, that it was worth while everybody investing in that, that it was worth while the Liberal caucus losing the services of one of our members for 45 days and beyond because I think they then invested time in writing the report. You know, we all contributed to that, believing that it was going to lead to something useful. I think the disappointment in not having that become a useful exercise has been very frustrating.

So I urge my colleagues to please support A1.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on Bill 34 in its debate in committee and specifically on the first amendment that's under debate, amendment A1. In speaking to this amendment, it's important to go back a bit and reflect on the comments that were made by the President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta. He claimed that this bill deserves our support because it will bring what he called rent stability.

I've thought hard about this claim and whether or not this bill will in fact deliver on what the President of the Treasury Board called stability. During the debate this afternoon on second reading of the bill I tried to dissect that claim, draw attention to the false nature of that claim, and I've had some more time to think about it. I think that if this bill does anything, Mr. Chairman, it will in fact for sure destabilize family finances and budgets for tens of thousands of families in this province who have to rent a place to provide a home for themselves. It will be the one sure, statutorily guaranteed source of destabilization of family finances.

Why do I say that, Mr. Chairman? Because this bill, if passed unamended, will give legal authority to landlords to increase the rent, albeit once a year, to any level that they want or that they can get away with. It could be 10 per cent. It could be 50 per cent. It could be 100 per cent. It could be more. There's no ceiling whatsoever under any circumstances anticipated by law in this bill. Because it doesn't anticipate any limit whatsoever to the increases in rent that can be introduced by landlords, this bill, in fact, is a rent increase deregulation bill. It deregulates.

There is even social pressure, because of community expectations, on landlord behaviour with respect to how much rent increase is a reasonable rent increase. This bill will legally in fact take the sting out of those informal community-based expectations that landlords very often have to keep in mind when they are sending notices for rent increases. So this bill gives the legal authority, frees the landlord entirely from any consideration of the community expectation with respect to what is a reasonable increase in rent.

So to claim that this bill, in fact, will bring stability and sanity and fairness to the housing rental market is a joke, Mr. Chairman. This really is a bill that should be retitled, in my view, and maybe if the opportunity permits, I'll bring in an amendment tomorrow for a change in the title of the bill. It should be called a rent increase deregulation bill. That's exactly what it is. So the minister, I hope, will allow this opportunity by extending the debate in the committee on this reading to tomorrow so that I can get such an amendment ready and introduce it in the House to make that point.

Mr. Chairman, one other concern that has been expressed very briefly by one speaker before has to do with how this bill will in fact inadvertently, perhaps, in an unanticipated manner, set in motion a whole train of other developments, including upward pressure on wages. If wages increase by 4 per cent, 3 per cent, 5 per cent a year, 6 per cent a year, in that range, but rents go up by 20 to 30 per cent, imagine what that will do to family budgets. Our middle-class families will have no protection whatsoever from the funding schemes that the government says it's bringing in to protect some most vulnerable families from unreasonable rent increases. Most of the families will not have that protection available to them. This will drive them, first, to cut back on their other necessities.

Housing is only one of the necessities in the family budget. There are many others, from food to clothing to recreation to education to health and whatnot. This will generate pressures at the level of wage negotiations in this province, which will set off inflationary forces and bring them into action. Whether someone works as a nurse or a teacher or a sessional lecturer at a college or an accounting assistant or whatever, these are people who are already having fairly tight budgets to live with, to deal with. You add more costs to their housing side of the budget and you generate pressures on them to ask for more in the form of wages, take-home pay, in order to pay for the increased budget.

The government may be playing with fire here by introducing this kind of legislation, which will in fact increase pressures on family budgets, force a large proportion, a very large number of families in this province to have to seek additional income in order to pay for all the bills. The costs are going up everywhere, but a disproportionate increase in costs to part of the budget that not only constitutes close to 30 per cent of those budgets anyway – imagine, if you increase that part of the cost by 50 per cent or 30 per cent, what it does to the rest. So this is an invitation for unleashing inflationary pressures in the economy, in the wages and salaries that people will necessarily think that they need in order to meet these increasing costs.

Mr. Chairman, there was a reference made here in this House, I think, either in response to a question asked in question period or perhaps in the earlier stages when debate on this bill began. Someone on the government side of the House said: what's so sacrosanct about saying that the housing costs as part of the family budget shouldn't be more than 30 per cent? He said: why shouldn't it be 50 per cent? If that's something that the government believes is desirable, then they should say so. The experience of the last 30 to 40 years in this country has shown that when family budgets are set so that more than 30 per cent has to be paid just for housing costs, those families are unable to meet other basic needs. That hurts both children and adults and their ability to live well and grow well.

So 50 per cent of the family budget just to pay for housing I hope is something that the government will not promote as an idea that is worth considering. If it does, then it should say so so that Albertans know what the underlying assumptions are when they deregulate rent increases, as is the case with respect to this bill and the way it does it.

A couple of other comments, Mr. Chairman. The whole notion that markets will take care of everything is something that I think needs some reminders. Only in the economists' textbooks are markets perfect, that they seek and achieve some sort of a balance or equilibrium. In the real world markets are more often than not imperfect markets.

We have learned from experience over the last 200 years that real markets are not perfect. Sometimes they can be so imperfect that they can bring disaster to visit on all of us. Economies can be destroyed. We learned that during the Great Depression of the last century. As we learned something from it, we brought, in fact, some strong regulatory legislation, which remains in place to this day. Empty trust legislation is designed precisely to provide that social regulation that markets need; otherwise, they spin into chaos, lead to booms and busts and depressions, and millions of people suffer from that. People in the Canadian prairies know better than anyone else what depressions can do. So markets are not perfect tools; they're imperfect. That's why they require social intervention, social regulation, social monitoring.

Antitrust laws. Is anyone around this House willing to say that we don't need antitrust laws? No. We learned this. We accept this as something natural, as something necessary. Yet when it comes to dealing with the housing crisis that we have before us, we are saying: "Well, just relax. Give us two years. The markets will take care of everything." They won't. They have not. If that were the case, why would we not have education exposed entirely to markets? Why would we not have health totally exposed to markets? Why would we not have policing put at the mercy of the markets? Why would we not do the same thing with firefighters? Why would we not do that with public health? There are so many areas in modern life, in modern societies, where we accept and, in fact, think it's unwise and inappropriate to leave those social services and social programs to the markets. Markets do not deliver. Markets fail in those areas.

Mr. Chairman, housing falls somewhat into that category of services. As we have seen, if you leave it to the market when there is no government attention paid to housing, housing for people who can't afford to buy into this very hot market, government neglect in this area over the last 15, 20 years has led to the present crisis. It's not just hordes of, you know, Newfoundlanders and Ontarians invading our province that has caused this. The problem has been there for years. It has become worse now. It's the neglect. It's the total reliance, blind faith on the fact that the markets do the trick that have caused the problem that we are here dealing with as we debate this bill and other measures that need to be taken to ensure that Alberta families are not let out on the street because they cannot pay the exorbitant rents that have been increasing for some years now, and have now, of course, picked up speed.

So, Mr. Chairman, markets are tools. Like any tool you have to be careful how you use it. You have to learn to use it better and improve the tool, not just let it be and see it as something that corrects itself or regulates itself. Markets do not. They're self-regulating only in an imaginary, abstract model that an economist has. The real markets are somewhat different and sometimes very, very different from that.

The last point, Mr. Chairman. I just want to briefly use the minister of intergovernmental affairs' intervention, that the NDP caucus members do not recognize that economic growth is necessary. That's a falsehood. That's a travesty of what social democrats stand for. That's such a gross oversimplification that I hope the minister was just joking and having fun by presenting himself as someone who doesn't know or fully understand. The minister has a good economic background, good economic training. He went to Harvard to get his degree in accounting, so I'm sure he knows better. I hope that he will not so exaggerate what he says here so that what he says becomes comical and laughable. That's what it is when you say that New Democrats and NDP members of the House do not support economic growth.

Economic growth and income distribution are both very, very important. We see now the 200-some million dollars being allocated to help the very needy, the vulnerable. That is income distribution. That is a way of taking social action on the part of people who need help, to provide them help, and that certainly is what I would put in the category of income distribution.

When you have growth, growth doesn't necessarily translate itself into household prosperity for everybody. That's why we need governments. That's why we need social programs. Social programs are a way of indirect distribution of income, where people don't have to buy education, where people don't have to buy health for their families, but they get this because all of us say that these are necessities in a civilized society, they are necessities in a modern society, and we are all willing to pay the progressive taxes in order to generate enough revenues, if necessary, to pay for these services for everyone.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise to speak to amendment A1 for the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. I must speak against this amendment. I believe that it's poor economics. In trying to tie rent increases to the rate of inflation, you really must be very, very careful. It is absolutely the wrong trigger if one is to look at any sort of way to deal with rents and rent increases.

It also has a very difficult period with the two-year period, and it locks it in for all of Alberta if it were to pass. And who knows what will happen, especially if we're looking at some of the forecasts, which say that we could have reduced oil prices in a year and some problems in terms of surpluses and all the rest of it? All of a sudden we'd be in great difficulty in trying to increase stocks, especially for the poor. Mr. Chairman, it is clear that these types of inflation-triggered rent increase controls decrease housing stocks for the poor, and it's probably the last thing that we want to see in this system. It's far too broad a brush.

Not all sectors of our economy boom at the same time. We can look at what happened the last few years after 9/11 and what happened to tourism in Alberta. It went down, and then there was difficulty in some of the towns that depended on tourism. All geographic areas just do not boom at the same time. All sectors of the economy do not boom at the same time. We've got to be very careful about this type of a measure.

You know, the wording in this is very difficult. It may apply to any rental unit in a complex even if somebody is renting it to a new tenant. It doesn't seem to be absolutely clear on that factor. Realistically, any new development should be free from any rent controls, and this is a rent control measure. It's far too broad a brush. I must speak against it.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's absolutely amazing to me that the President of the Treasury Board could suggest that stability can be found by picking a number. It doesn't matter what that number is, but once a year whatever that number is, when it rolls around, that's going to provide stability.

I speak in favour of amendment A1 to Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, that was put forward by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora because what it does is provide a specific number. People know what that number is. There's nothing to guess about. Contrast that specific number of inflation plus 2 per cent with the keeper of the provincial purse's idea of accounting: "Pick a number, any number. Roll the dice. Whatever the dice shows, that's the amount of rent you pay." Luck of the draw. Russian roulette. Fortune cookie philosophy.

There is no stability unless you set aside a particular number. It just absolutely amazes me: guess, landlords, what you can increase your rents by? Renters: break your piggy banks or hold on to them because one year from now we're going to do it to you again. You know, bend over and kiss your fortunes goodbye.

The government seems to be caught up with imaginary numbers, whatever they may be. A number that they should pay attention to is that at noon today the Calgary Sun poll showed that 95.3 per cent of the individuals who took time to answer that poll were opposed to the Premier's housing policy.

The situation we're in right now, the idea of opportunism versus opportunity, a lack of stability, reminds me of post civil war America. The opportunists at that time were called carpetbaggers. They came in and took advantage of the fact that there wasn't stability in the marketplace. In a lot of the southern States the infrastructure was gone. When the north came through, basically, a lot of the old houses and the towns were torched. So these carpetbaggers from the north came down and took advantage of the situation: they charged, and they pillaged, and they plundered, and they got whatever they could. That is the role the government is playing right now. It's playing the role of the carpetbagger: no concern for renters, no concern for constituents, no defining, no laws, no expectations for landlords, just go for it.

What is happening in the apartments in Calgary-Varsity, the particular apartment where 298 individuals and suites are affected, is that with the government's lack of regulation there's no such thing as a one-year contract for renters anymore. It's been reduced to six months at best so that the landlords can participate in market speculation, and at any time within the end of that six-month period they can start to convert to condominiums, whatever they like. But any sense of stability for those people is absolutely gone.

Sharing cases in this House on Monday, I was accused of grandstanding. It was suggested that I hid my constituents' letters under my desk. These were the false claims, the charges that the minister of unsustainable and unaffordable housing made. Well, I see my role as being the spokesperson for my constituents, the advocate providing their words to this House. So that's what I'm going to do.

Dear Mr. Chase,

I am [a] tenant of the Varsity Square Apartments on 4515 Varsity Dr. NW. I am greatly concerned with the rental increase, of approximately 45%, in our building as well as in the City of Calgary. I am a Receptionist working for Alberta Research Council located in the University Research Park. As a Government, AUPE union employee, I do not have a monthly income to handle the increasing cost of living in Alberta. My question to you and other members of Parliament is, "What about the working poor?" Albertans do not share in the wealth that is being generated in the Province and it's about time that changed.

Trudy Hill concludes:

I look forward to your reply on this matter.

Of course, I replied very quickly. That letter came into the office e-mail on April 25.

The Chair: Hon. member, are you speaking on the amendment?

Mr. Chase: Yes. If you'd like, I'll keep referring to amendment A1.

The Chair: I'm having a hard time finding your comments relevant to the amendment. One further comment: reference to members in the House as dishonourable members is not parliamentary.

Mr. Chase: I don't recall saying dishonourable. I said the minister of unsustainable and unaffordable housing. And if that's offensive . . .

What A1 does is talk about stability; it talks about percentages. And that's what I'm talking about: stability and predictable percentages. What my constituents have noted is that there is no predictability. That's what A1 tries to address. I will try again with another example.

Dear Mr. Chase,

I received last night a printed invitation to let you know of particular concerns that any of us who are renting in Varsity Square Apartments. Although I am only 59, I am on a fixed income and have chronic pain. I am living on CPP disability (700 per month) RRSPs and my savings. I am also paying for treatment of my chronic pain, as I wish to re-enter the workforce. My rent will increase on July 1 by $400 per month. I have to find a place which rents out at no more than $900.00 per month. This is very difficult to find in the City of Calgary at the present time.

It's these comments from my constituents that cause me to support amendment A1 because what A1 does is provide the type of stability that renters need. They need to know, as this amendment suggests, that whatever the inflation is – and they can't deal with the inflation, but they'll know that whatever the inflation is, given that time period, no more than 2 per cent beyond that inflation will be added to their rent increase. What it does is allow individuals to budget.

Candace goes on to say:

I could move and have my rent go up after considerable expense moving. The building I might choose may go condo.

There's no provision, although the housing task force suggested that there should be a provision, to limit condo-ization.

Without rent controls and a moratorium on the conversion of rental units into condos, I will most probably find myself in this situation in a year. I know that you have been pushing for this in the legislature already.

What my constituent is recognizing is what amendment A1 is suggesting. She's looking for predictability. She's looking for a regulatory process that can guarantee her stability. She notes that one year from now, if there's no regulation, any amount of increase wherever she goes can take place because there are no limits, there are no expectations.

I'll share information from another individual. This individual also lives in that same apartment complex where a lot of the concerns have come. Of course, there are 298 suites, so it's not surprising that there are a number of concerns. This person begins: "I live at 4515 Varsity Dr. N.W." I'll not mention the apartment number.

An Hon. Member: You might as well. You said everything else.

Mr. Chase: Well, it was indicated that I might as well give the person's apartment number. I want to contrast the specific names that I have been given permission to express in this House to the creative fantasies that we saw earlier during question period, where people who had no first name, no last name, no city reference were mentioned as examples of how the government was looking after people. Creative stories, to say the least. And I don't hold it against the minister. When she was supplied this information, she probably believed that the stories that she had received were accurate, and she probably didn't have time to go and check the accuracy of those documents. What I'm doing is what my constituents have asked me to do, and my constituents, by asking for specific percentages, are showing their support for this amendment.

So I'll continue.

I live at 4515 Varsity Dr. N.W. . . . and have just spoken with Mr. Fred Bishop who was on CBC Newsworld Sunday discussing his rent increase at said apartment and was advised to contact you regarding my 45 per cent increase in rent. I received my rental renewal March 01 for an increase in rent effective June 01. My rent, including underground parking, is going from $765.00 per month to $1115.00 per month and only with a six month lease.

I brought up the need for having a fixed increase in amendment A1 as the Member for Edmonton-Glenora proposed. That's what this man who's on a fixed income is looking for. He needs the stability of a fixed percentage.

He goes on:

I am perhaps fortunate that I am still young enough to get another job in order to cover the additional cost; however, I believe that the whole plan here is to convert this complex to condos which means I will have to move eventually.

So this poor man is getting hit, first, with a 45 per cent increase. He only has the instability of a six-month contract, and over him rests the possibility of another increase at the end of the following year or a condo conversion because he has no stability. This government has not provided him with any stability.

When I received my notice of increase I did write [the Premier]. His response was less than satisfactory. He advised me that his government believes that rent controls don't work and that they prevent new apartments from being built. I replied to him last weekend and expressed my thought that without rent controls over the last ten years that very few, if any new apartment buildings have been built in Calgary and that if one takes into account condo conversions that the number of rental apartments has probably decreased.

And that is the evidence. That is why amendment A1 is so important. It provides specifics.

. . . a fact the CBC confirmed Sunday in the program I was watching which stated that over the last year the number of rental units had dropped over 2 per cent.

I have also heard a very disturbing story regarding an elderly senior in my building who committed suicide as a direct result of these rent increases.

This type of behaviour by a landlord is totally unacceptable. It is just another example of the abject greed which has become so pervasive in our society today.

[interjection] I find nothing amusing from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo about an individual having committed suicide. These aren't stories I'm making up.

Mr. Cenaiko: What's the name? Give us the name, then.

Mr. Chase: Name the individual who committed suicide?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, please, through the chair.

Mr. Chase: May I continue?

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that.

Another letter, this one from Diane Shelley.

Dear Premier,

I feel I must voice my opinion regarding the current rental increases. Why do landlords have the power and freedom to increase our rents by $300-$400 per month?

Well, I can answer her right now: because the government permits it. That is what we're trying to address in amendment A1.

It's a disgusting abuse of tenants in the name of greed!

At present, I am paying $725 per month for a 500 square foot so called 1-bedroom apartment in the NW . . .

And it's the same address: 4515 Varsity Drive.

. . . and have signed a 6 month lease. One year leases are no longer available here. When my lease expires in April, I have been advised my rent will increase to $1050.00 per month for another 6 month lease, or $1090.00 per month on a month to month basis!

So here's where the speculation comes in. That is why amendment A1 is absolutely necessary.

Diane goes on to say:

Needless to say, I must try to find cheaper accommodations which is sure to be a challenge, since all the landlords in this city seem to be in the same money grab mode.

Now, I would disagree that all landlords are in that position, but the frustration she is experiencing I can appreciate.

I am 64 years old, and on a fixed income. At the new rental rate, that would leave me with approximately $200 per month to live on. Does this seem fair? I know there are many many other people out there faced with the same dilemma.

As our premier, please, please put some controls in place, bring down rents and stop these uncaring landlords from gouging us!

I hope that the laughter from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is not at the expense of my constituent.

Mr. Cenaiko: No, it's not.

Mr. Chase: Okay. I appreciate that qualification. I am pleased to hear that.

The next letter I received was sent to me on April 27. It comes from a lady by the name of Roshika Khanna. It says:

Dear MLAs.

My name is Roshika Khanna, and I am a Program Coordinator for Calgary Scope Society. Calgary Scope Society has been committed to improving lives for persons with developmental disabilities in Calgary and area for over 23 years. This letter is in regards to the growing concerns of finding affordable housing for our clients. In my efforts to find a two bedroom place for a client that we support, in the past two months I have encountered many obstacles.

- Due to limited income our clients are unable to afford most of the places for rent in the Calgary area.
- The waiting lists for Calgary Housing Company and subsidized housings run up to anywhere from 4 months to 2 years.
- The moment the landlords learn about our clients' mental/physical disabilities their applications get rejected without any valid reasons.

Unfortunately, in Bill 34 there is nothing that recognizes the degrees of vulnerability of individuals.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to be able to get up and speak on this amendment A1, that basically is wanting to impose an interest cap, or to have it indexed to CPI plus 2 per cent. I want to stand up and speak against this. I feel that it's very important to do so.

What's very interesting tonight, Mr. Chair, is that there's nothing more exciting to a coach or to a teacher or to a friend than when you're trying to enlighten someone and have them discover a better way. It was kind of interesting. My hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning was able to speak before . . .

Mr. Elsalhy: You said: my hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Well, as you are as well, hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: But not yours.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. Well, our hon. members here.

Anyways, as he was saying that he was going to get up and speak, he leaned forward and said to me: I'm speaking against it. He had this glitter in his eye and a smile on his mouth. He caught the vision, Mr. Chair, of the fact that, you know, we don't live in a perfect world. The market isn't perfect. He understands that.

Often it's argued that, you know, competition is a ruthless and cruel process. One can argue that, but the fact of the matter is that government and government intervention is far more ruthless. It's far more damaging, and it hurts the economy to a greater extent. What we're talking about here in this great government of ours in Canada and from reading from the constitutional act – it says that we set laws that are justified in a free and democratic society. This is the root of freedom. Freedom doesn't come at no price. One has to pay the price for freedom.

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province.

In any province. And that includes Alberta.

When government wants to intervene and say, "We're going to impose a cap here, or we're going to restrict interest on this end," as soon as government steps in and interrupts the free market, it just ends up in a catastrophe.

We're in a very sad situation. We're struggling right now with a shortage of housing. But the fact of the matter is that there are far too many other Canadians and other people in the world that look at this as the bastion of freedom, the land of opportunity, and they're flocking here by the thousands. There's no government that's going to be able to say: "You know what? We've got 11,000 people moving here in the next three months. We've got to get out and build the houses so they have a place to be here."

I spoke earlier that those first settlers that came to this province didn't come here with the thought that government was going to build and provide houses for them so that they could come here and move forward in their economic dream of what they're going to achieve.

Once again, if we were to pass this amendment and look at putting a cap on what they could charge, the increase on the rent, eventually we would hit a greater waterfall that would cause more damage, and we'd have to ask the question: well, do we continue to step in? At what point would we ever try and step out? As I've said, history has shown us many times that when government steps in and thinks that it knows the market better or some leader thinks that he can lay a better path to say that this is the way to go, we end up losing. We can just look around the rest of world at those countries where they want and where they do control the market. They control the housing. They control the jobs. They tell people where they can and where they can't come from. If we were to pass this amendment, we would again be moving into that area of government intervention, where we have no business to be.

There's no question that we're in a problem, and I want to go back to, you know, what we should be doing. One of the problems that I see: as government intervenes more and more in these areas and wants to control our lives, we as citizens look to the government and say, "You know what? It's not my personal responsibility to look after people anymore."

The one hon. member talked about a progressive tax, that this is good, that if we have a progressive tax, then we can meet the social needs of our people. A1 is a progressive tax that's going to cost us more. It will turn the industry against wanting to come in and put up housing because this is a fairly high-risk venture, to put up a bunch of buildings to want to sell or to want to rent and to think, you know: what's going to be the next restriction that the government comes in with? Once again, this is the precedent that we've set, that is to say that we're going to intervene if the market gets too extreme.

Who is ever going to be the government or the people in government that can set down a number and say, "Well, this year it's 7 per cent"? I realize that this is to the consumer price index and want to say that, but it takes a lot more than: this year, you know, what are we going to be, 5 per cent, 7 per cent? No one's going to go and want to develop housing knowing that that's the rate of return. It just isn't going to stimulate the market. The unfortunate part of human nature is that the two greatest driving forces are fear and greed.

Mr. Mason: What about sex?

Mr. Hinman: I'm talking about the market right now, Brian.

Anyways, with that in mind, we see the shortage of the housing and where it's going. People are already sitting there saying: well, what can I do to get in and to capitalize on this shortage of supply? We'll reach an answer far quicker if we don't interfere than if we start continuing to tinker with the market and say: "Oh, we've got to jump in here. We've got to jump in there." I appreciate the good intentions, though. We all want to make it better. That's why most of us are here, I believe. Unfortunately, we know what road is often paved with good intentions.

We need to look at those unintentional consequences of government stepping in and saying: government knows best. The biggest thing is that government is the people, and the people are the market, and the government is no wiser, usually less wise, than those people that have the freedom to choose: "I'm going to invest. I'm not going to invest. The government's stepping in." There are just too many places in the world where we see government intervention in the market, in the economy, and those governments and those economies are not progressive. They don't go forward, and the quality of life for those individuals is not great. I still would challenge anybody who says that there is a place that's better where the government is stepping in.

As I read earlier, you have the freedom to enter and the freedom to leave, not only the province but the country. Go there, and make one of those places better that thinks the economy can be controlled by government, because it doesn't happen. So I speak against the amendment A1, that it isn't in favour, and it won't be a benefit to those renters that are struggling now.

I look forward to listening to further debate on this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Elsalhy: Aah. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. [interjections] Yeah, it's a sigh of frustration. It's not a sigh of relief.

I'm standing here to support my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, who moved amendment A1 to Bill 34. I have to commend him for coming up with this amendment to a bill that was very carefully drafted, Mr. Chairman. We heard some comments earlier tonight from the government side talking about geniuses. I really have to say that in my two and a half years in this Assembly this is one of the most creative pieces of legislation that I've seen in this House. Its creativity is basically in such a way that it doesn't contain anything, and it also doesn't allow a lot of room to manoeuvre with respect to amendments and things like this. It's meant to give the public a false impression of stability, which is the term I keep hearing in this House, and it also portrays a false image of a government that is basically rescuing tenants or renters or coming to their aid.

What the amendment is trying to do, Mr. Chairman, as you've heard seven or eight times tonight, is basically bring in that stability which is missing in this bill, which really achieves nothing. When you say, "You guys," to those landlords who, I've mentioned, are a few – it's a small group of landlords. Not all of them are greedy. Not all of them are bad. But to those ones who are: you cannot raise rent more than once a year. So we're talking about the frequency.

Amendment A1 is talking about the magnitude of that increase. It's basically calling for an allowable rent increase which is matching inflation as dictated or determined by the consumer price index and then adding 2 per cent to offer that cushion because sometimes the costs incurred by landlords might slightly exceed inflation. And when you have inflation, Mr. Chairman, that is at about 5 and a half to 6 per cent now and you add 2 per cent, that's an 8 per cent increase.

Tell me: which industry, you know, legitimate and legal industry, gets an 8 per cent increase every year? Some of them actually do, but they do it by negotiation. They negotiate with the government because they're basically paid by the government. We have many different examples where certain sectors and certain professions are regulated by the government, and they receive money based on negotiations and contracts. This should be no different. Landlords are offering an essential service, and essential services have to be treated as such. Housing is not a luxury. It is a necessity, and everybody needs a home.

Now, am I surprised that there seems to be an ideological divide between members from the opposition and then members from the government? No. I'm not at all surprised. Even with the member from the Alliance Party, I'm happy that sometimes we agree, and we have areas where we have common ground; for example, democratic renewal and things like this. But today I'm also not surprised that he's standing in support of the government and in opposition to amendment A1 because, again, that's what he believes, and that's what his party believes, and this is what the Progressive Conservatives believe: that nothing needs to be done, the market should not be interfered with, and that the market fixes itself. It looks after itself. It can rectify or correct, given time, and let's step back and watch it at work. This is where I disagree, and this is where my hon. colleagues on the opposition side totally disagree.

Now, one of the reasons why we have this ideological divide is because the government and now, as determined, the member from the Alliance Party think that whenever you interfere, something bad happens. There is usually an adverse outcome. There is usually a negative result. But I would like to remind members from this government and, actually, colleagues from all sides that this very government – and it's not new; this is a government that has been here for 36 years – does interfere.

An Hon. Member: Thirty-six?

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, 36 years. And they do occasionally interfere when certain situations warrant such an intervention by any government.

You know, Mr. Chairman, people elect governments to look after them. They elect governments to represent them and to protect their interests. So any government anywhere on this earth has a role to play, and whether this role is big, whether it's small, how much, and how frequently are to be determined. And now is a crisis. This is the time that any government should really sprint to its feet and do something to help the people.

Now, I have examples where this government has found it necessary and justified to step in, to come to people's aid, to be on people's side. Take, for example, the regulated rate option. When we as citizens of this province woke up one day and we were told that deregulation is coming and there is nothing that we can say or do to stop it, the government found it necessary to bring in some sort of mechanism or measure to protect those people who did not really fully buy into the brand, the ideology that deregulation is great and it's the best thing since sliced bread.

So the government stepped in, and it allowed those customers who did not want to go with the deregulated structure to stay on the regulated rate option. When the regulated rate option was slated to expire, Mr. Chairman, myself and many members of my caucus asked for the extension of the regulated rate option, and I also have to highlight the effort by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar on this front. Former Premier Klein agreed. He said: "You know what? I think the regulated rate option should be extended." I felt very grateful that day because here is a Premier who not frequently enough but at least occasionally listens to the people and agrees with what the people said.

Take the government stepping in and regulating the maximum cap on soft tissue injury claims. Why didn't they leave the market to operate the way it pleased? Well, they came in, and they said: "You know what? Four thousand dollars is your cap, and this is it." Now, whether we agree or disagree with this decision in particular, at least they came in and said: "This is what we think is fair. This is what we think should be done." It's an example of a government that is basically stepping in and regulating. So the word "regulation" is not that evil. It's not that bad. It is done. It's the very same government. We're not talking about governments in different provinces or jurisdictions. It's the same one.

Take the NRCB, for example. Mr. Chairman, if you own or if you want to start a feedlot or a livestock operation, you go to who? The NRCB. And what do you do? You ask for permission whether to start a feedlot or a livestock operation or to expand an existing one. Now, isn't that a form of regulation? Governments have a role to play, and this government plays that role when it finds it necessary and when it's pleasing.

In late 2001, early 2002 there was a lot of uneasiness and there was a lot of concern with respect to the high-pressure sales tactics and other unfair practices by travel clubs in this province. So what did the government do? The government surveyed Albertans. They asked Albertans what they thought, and Albertans overwhelmingly told the government that they were not happy with the way travel clubs were operating. How did the government respond? The government regulated travel clubs in this province on May 17, 2002. Isn't that an example of a government stepping in?

Now, you learn two lessons from this, Mr. Chairman. You learn that the government actually played a role, and then you also learn that at that time the government decided to listen to the people. They surveyed the people. I keep maintaining that the Public Affairs Bureau should be a two-way communications device. It should be there to ask Albertans what they think, not only during election years and not only to ask them, you know, how they like the government and why the government is so wonderful. They should be there to ask Albertans what they think.

This issue, this particular concern, the housing concern, the housing issue, the crisis, should be one that is a survey or a poll that goes to every Albertan in this province. Ask them what they think. I know my honourable colleague from Calgary-Varsity was commenting on a survey that he came across, and it indicated that 95 per cent of those polled disagree with the government's position. They don't approve of the government's direction on this particular issue. Now, 95 per cent is a significant sum, and it actually signals a growing opposition to where the government is coming from on this particular issue, notwithstanding that, you know, in the Tory convention the members there indicated their support for that position. Albertans at large, people all over the province should be surveyed. Let's see what they tell us.

Take another example, Mr. Chairman. In the mid-1990s the provincial government of the day increased its commitment to West Edmonton Mall from $75 million to $440 million. Even the Premier at that time had no difficulty signalling to at least two of his ministers to come up with what was called an Alberta solution to the West Edmonton Mall's financial woes. He had no difficulty interfering in the market. If we come to the support of a commercial enterprise, a private business, and say, "You know what? You do wonderful work. We want to support you, and we want to come to your aid," then we should at least grant the same treatment and offer the same courtesy to citizens, to individuals, who might not have that level of support otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, here's another example. In October 2003 the Premier at the time, Premier Klein, told Albertans that he was frustrated with the auto insurance situation and the skyrocketing premiums. Against division in his own caucus, he implemented a one-year freeze on premiums. Now, the Premier said, you know, that in his opinion it did not either raise or lower premiums. What it did was just freeze them for a year for that situation to be evaluated. He wanted to sort out that issue and he wanted time to do it and he didn't want people breathing down his neck saying: do something; do something. So he froze it for a year.

Now, we're not asking to freeze rents, Mr. Chairman. We're asking to allow rents to increase, but reasonably, and amendment A1 does just that. It basically follows the recommendations from the task force, the task force which was all-party and which toured all corners of the province and listened to people from industry, from tenants, from advocacy groups, from financial institutions. It did a lot of work, and it did a lot of good work. We need to implement all the recommendations or the bulk of the recommendations, not just select one or two aspects and leave everything out. It should be a package. The task force was entrusted to hear the stories and to come up with solutions. We should really adopt and embrace what the task force came up with. This was one of the recommendations in that report.

It really follows what a province like B.C. does, you know, when they have rent guidelines. The only difference, Mr. Chairman, is that this amendment is asking for a temporary rent guideline to allow the market to catch up, to allow it to equilibrate, to settle, you know, for new units to be added. We need to wait, and people cannot wait. They have nowhere to go. This basically offers that stability in the interim, till that new supply comes on board, comes on the market. So it is not indefinite. It is not forever. Again, to be fair to the landlords, we're not just talking inflation. We're talking inflation plus a little differential, plus a little margin on top, which is in this case 2 per cent.

Now, how else can we be fair to the landlords? Let's say that a landlord, really, justifiably wants to raise the rent over inflation plus 2 per cent. Well, if you remember the deliberations on Bill 202, Mr.

Chairman, the Consumer Advocate Act, which I brought to the House and which was unfortunately defeated by the government, we wanted an advocate to adjudicate these requests, to basically reconcile the two positions and to say: you know, we anticipate that the average allowable, predictable percentage increase is this. But let's say that a landlord can prove that this particular landlord needs to raise the rent by 20 per cent. Well, there should be a mechanism where this particular landlord appears before a designated board, and I would suggest the residential tenancy dispute resolution board, which is in its pilot year here in Edmonton. We should extend it to cover the entire province, and it should be mandated to reconcile these things, to adjudicate these things. [interjection] You don't want that board? Fine.

There is a tendency by this government to put things in regulations. Name a board that is existing or start a new one that just sits there and approves rental rate increases that are exceeding the allowed average. We're only doing this during the period when we have this particular rent regulation. After the sunset, after the end of that particular regulation period, fine, you can switch off that board and say: "You know what? You guys do what you want." By then, hopefully, the market would have settled and would have equilibrated.

You know, you should allow good landlords who have incurred a lot of expenses to raise rents, again fairly, and if they want to exceed what is agreed to or what is deemed to be appropriate or fair, then fine, we should give them the mechanism. If you ask me, Mr. Chairman, the reason why we didn't do it with this amendment is quite simple. I go back to my first comment. This bill is very carefully drafted to not allow us to do this. We wanted to put this mechanism in place. Take this as well: we wanted to allow a landlord, by agreement with the tenant – they both agree that this particular unit should be turned into a condo – to waive the notice period. Let's just say, "Okay, I agree; I want to buy it today," and the landlord says, "I agree, and the price is fair." Let them do it as long as it's done by agreement. But, again, there was no place in this bill to allow us to embed this provision.

We're not being unfair, and we're not taking sides. What we're saying is: allow landlords a fair and reasonable increase and allow them to recoup their expenses and to recover some of the costs that they incurred but also look after individuals who otherwise cannot fend for themselves, especially now with the low vacancy rate and no place for them to go and with subsidies and assistance from the government that take forever for someone to actually move up the pile and for their name to be, you know, on the top of the pile for them to be processed. Then, even as such, those subsidies are really small when you take into consideration the frenzy, the madness that is happening in our housing market.

I hope I still have time, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to talk about something that the government has on its website. It's called the core needs income thresholds, or they actually call it CNIT. The core needs income thresholds assist in distinguishing households requiring social housing assistance. Today, when we had the guests in the gallery and then we went to room 512, hoping to meet with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, his assistant told us that unfortunately he had a prior engagement and he couldn't make it to that meeting, but the staff there were trying their best to help those people who were there.

One of the records that they showed us was the CNIT. It talks about, you know, that households with annual incomes equal to or less than that figure are said to have insufficient income to afford the ongoing costs of suitable and adequate rental units in their area. I want to underline suitable and adequate because if you ask someone to live wherever just because that's what they can afford, that's not being fair to them. I would call it un-Albertan.

Now, taking CNIT in 2006, for example, it covers all the municipalities in Alberta. I heard the comments from the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. Obviously, he's not hearing the concerns that we are on this side of the House. Take this, Mr. Chairman: in Cardston the value is $18,500 for a one-bedroom unit. I'm not going to talk about two-bedroom units or three-bedroom units or four-plus. I'll just take the smallest one because that will be the most affordable, and we'll use that to extrapolate. So in Cardston it's $18,500. In Taber it's $18,500. You have a range. Take a place like Bow Island: still $18,500.

Now take Edmonton. Edmonton is $24,500. So if you have equal to or less than 24.5 grand a year, for a one-bedroom unit, you're deemed to be worthy of assistance. How many people qualify? How many people meet that requirement? I want an answer to this question. Take Calgary, for example. Calgary: $27,500. Okay, so you divide that by 12. That's the monthly income that anybody should have to afford even a meagre one-bedroom unit. How many people fit that description? Now take Fort McMurray. You'll find that it's very interesting, Mr. Chairman, at $47,500. So anybody who wants to even afford one bedroom in Fort McMurray needs to make at least 47 grand.

How many people are below this level? How many people have to work two jobs or three jobs or the husband and wife both working to actually at least afford a one-bedroom unit? These questions need to be answered, Mr. Chairman, and this government is not giving us the answers.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A1 is precisely the same amendment, as mentioned, that we've had as a party policy for a long time, plus the fact that the task force brought it forward. I want to lay out, again, why we need to put this as part of the package here today. The government's economic strategy has created an overheated economy. That's why we're facing the problems that we are. It's their economic strategy that wants to do this. They're the ones that are saying: let's get in there; get the oil and gas out to the American market as fast as we can; get the oil sands out as fast as we can; everything full steam ahead; don't put the foot on the brakes.

We disagree that that's what we should be doing, but we can't control that. If you do that, Mr. Chairman, then you have to provide the proper backup for it. Housing is just one example. We've talked about health care, education, infrastructure. You name it. We're falling behind. We can't keep up. I would suggest that even though the $285 million is a lot of money, when we looked at it in the task force, that probably wouldn't even be enough money to keep up. That's the reality of what we're facing. I just want to put it in perspective because this is from the government's own paper from Alberta Employment, Immigration and Industry. On the side it says, "Alberta Advantage." Well, what we and I think even the hon. members across are talking about here is that for a lot of people it's becoming a big, big Alberta disadvantage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let's just take a look at this. Economic Outlook for Alberta, Spring Update, from Employment, Immigration and Industry, "Alberta's Economy – in a League of its Own."

An Hon. Member: Mr. Chairman, this is not relevant.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is very relevant because what they're saying – I'll come to housing here, and you'll see how relevant it is. Just pay attention. Stay tuned. You will learn something. I guarantee it.

Mr. Snelgrove: Not from you.

Mr. Martin: It's from your own government paper. Surely, you'll learn something from there. [interjection] Well, okay. Listen to what they have to say.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, once again, please, I know it's getting late in the evening, but if you were to make your comments through the chair, that would truly help.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I'd love to make comments through you.

It says here:

- "Alberta is booming and this is certainly not a temporary phenomenon but a more permanent structural change in the economy" – Conference Board of Canada . . .
- Alberta had real GDP growth of 6.8%.

They say that the outlook for 2007 is still going to be strong, 4.0, but "this growth is not sustainable," and,

- Downside risks include labour shortages, and increasing construction and housing costs.

They talk a little more about housing specifically, and I won't read the whole report. I know that the minister would love me to do that, but time is of the essence here, so I want to move it along, Mr. Chairman. The Alberta housing: it says, "Economic pressures to persist," and this is looking ahead into the next year.

- Rapid growth in energy investment, especially in the oil sands, is creating growth pressures . . .
- Housing shortage is driving up costs of owning and renting a house.

Alberta's housing crunch. It goes on in this chapter:

- In February, province-wide MLS resale prices were 34% higher than a year [ago] . . .
- New housing prices rose 38% in Calgary and 42% in Edmonton.

Now, here's the key.

- . . . The (rental) vacancy rate . . . declined from 3.1 per cent in October 2005 to 0.9 per cent in October 2006 . . . the lowest vacancy rate for the province on record.
- . . . Since the start of 2005, housing affordability across the province has been eroding at an aggressive pace.

Now, through the chair to the hon. member: you see my point? This is going to get worse before it gets better. Admittedly, we had 109,000 people roll in, they say, but every indication is that this is going to go on because of the economic policies that this government is following, Mr. Chairman.

So what do we do in the short run? Being a member of the task force, we tried to take a global look at it, Mr. Chairman, and we tried to fit the package together. As I said earlier on, most people on that committee didn't start off thinking that we needed, you know, rent guidelines or rent stability, but they came to that realization. Many of them said that when we finally had the debate because they didn't see any alternative when they started to listen to people and listen to the crisis across the province. And this would indicate that it's going to get worse.

That's why this talks about, you know, CPI plus 2 per cent, which they have in British Columbia. But as they do in B.C., I would take it that if there are extenuating costs – and we talked about this – landlords can apply to pass that along, whether it's utilities or whatever. This is not a real market right now. This is a market out of control. I believe that even Adam Smith would have trouble with this one, Mr. Chairman. So I don't see what the hang-up is so much about in a temporary way putting some sort of guidelines, knowing these economic forecasts coming from the government.

What are we going to do? Just let more people be homeless? Or are we just going to say to young people: "Forget about ever owning a house. Don't worry about it because we believe in the market. Just let it do whatever it wants."

Surely, even this government must understand that there are times when an uncontrolled market doesn't work. They will still make a lot of profit, Mr. Chairman. They've had guidelines for 15 years in Ontario. They're building more rental units than we are without them. And that should be the proof of the pudding, but it doesn't seem to get across to this group that there is another way to do it. Again, it seems to be the triumph of ideology over common sense.

One of the things, Mr. Chairman, to tie it into why we need the guidelines is because this is impacting everything. As the rents go up, housing prices go up. We've talked about the people at the other end of the spectrum, the most vulnerable people in society, and we know what's happening to them. There's enough evidence here, and we've seen it in the Legislature, but it's also impacting a lot of what we might call the young professional middle class.

When I was with Mayor Mandel in my own riding, I alluded to this. Edmonton is trying a very innovative project with first-time homebuyers. The city is taking out second mortgages to try to keep these people here in Edmonton because some of them are talking about moving to Saskatchewan, where they can afford a house. How can that be an economic advantage? We're going to need these people in the future, Mr. Chairman.

So we're getting caught in two ways. Less and less people can afford to buy a house, and the rents are going up. So they're sort of caught in a double bind. And that's true of the middle class right now. It's true of young professionals. It's true of a lot of people here, Mr. Chairman. I can't see why the government has to be so hidebound about this particular issue. I know that there are some people in the caucus – they've told me, and it's been reported publicly that some of them say that there's a need for this. I wish they'd stand up and speak here tonight. They know who they are that talked about it. Now's the opportunity to say what your constituents are saying and what you've said publicly. This is the time to vote on it.

An Hon. Member: Not me.

Mr. Martin: Well, I have no hope for you, so don't worry about it. But that's the point. We have to do what's right. [interjections] I've known you for a long time. I didn't have hope for you from the start, and I was right. I'm sure we can go back to who you used to work for. I doubt that he would stand up here and say that this is good enough, to just let the market go. The first time that the boom came, they at least had a social conscience and did bring in rent controls and did bring in mortgage subsidies, did do a lot of things that helped people. They did.

Mr. Liepert: Interest rates were 20 per cent. Are you going to wait for 20 per cent again?

Mr. Martin: Yeah. Well, what do you want to do? Does it matter, if you're out on the street, how you got there? Does it really matter? If you can't afford a house, does it really matter what the interest rates were? The ultimate thing is the same. I would argue that he would stand up here today, Mr. Chairman, and he would say that we have to do something, that an uncontrolled market just doesn't work in this situation. He's talked about the rate of growth as being unsustainable, so I'm just saying that we should do the right thing.

The other argument about guidelines is so far out of kilter, the idea that if we bring in guidelines and rent stability, we're not going to build the units. Well, how can it be any worse? We're not building rental units now.

An Hon. Member: It can always get worse, Ray.

Mr. Martin: It couldn't get any worse. They're not building them.

The point is that in Ontario, where they have guidelines, they're building them. Now, what should that tell us? Get off the ideology, and start to do what's right for people. And I know that some of the members over there feel that way.

The point that we make is that rent controls – you know, they say that we can't take them off. Well, we did in Alberta. This is not New York. We did get rid of them before in Alberta when we didn't need them. I said earlier on today, and I repeat it for some people that weren't here, that Councillor Cavanagh was the one that got the job of bringing the end to controls at the time, but he also said that we need them now again. So it's not impossible. Well, he's a Conservative. He got the job because he was a Conservative, so it wouldn't have been anybody else.

Mr. Chairman, as long as we're in a situation with a market that's totally out of control, unfair, and there isn't the competition there, I just don't understand why we can't do this on a temporary basis and do what's right for thousands of Albertans.

We talked about the other part of the report: building the units. Now, the member asked about how many units. Probably, you can't keep up. That's the sad fact. Even though it's admittedly a lot of money and some of it will do some good, as long as we continue with the type of growth that they're talking about here, that probably still won't do the job. We were talking in the task force about 12,000 units in the next few years to try and catch up. That probably won't be enough. So I don't know. In the meantime we have to try to put more on the market. No doubt about that.

We talked in the report – and I hope this isn't going to be done. I think some of the members have talked about inclusionary zoning, tax incentives to do that. All those sorts of things are important, but in the short run you can't get away from the package. The crucial thing is that the rent guidelines have to be there in the short run. I just for the life of me cannot understand – I really cannot understand – this ideology that would make even George Bush blush, I'm sure, Mr. Chairman, this ideology that we can't do anything to help people, that there's somehow a market here when there isn't a market here. I mean, it's just unbelievable.

The government says, "Well, you come and see us." Telephone calls don't even work, and the eviction fund isn't there. You know, it shows you how disorganized they are. Even the things they brought in, people can't access them. That's somewhere in the future, and there are people suffering now, and I stress that it's not only the most vulnerable. That's sad enough, and that's a very sad story. We've heard many of them here. But it's impacting the ordinary people.

I was at a meeting yesterday, Mr. Chairman, and people came up to me: "We have a house, yes, but we're worried about our sons and daughters. They don't. How are they ever going to have a house? And the rents are going up. What are we going to do?" There was anger there, palpable anger. I think the government underestimates this issue, underestimates it totally. They think that they've voted Conservative all their life, and that somehow no matter what they do – they can do whatever they want; the people can suffer – they’re still going to vote for them. Well, they’re going to find that there’s going to be a wake-up call very soon. From what I’m reading – and I’ve been around this game for a long time – this is an issue that really rings home with people, not just the most vulnerable. A lot of people have sons and daughters trying to get in the market.

To take bits and pieces, to cherry-pick a report – you know, a key thing we had to do was a continuum along the way from the homeless right through to the first-time homebuyers – and say that, well, we can’t do rent guidelines, as I said earlier on, Mr. Chairman, I thought that at least this government would look at helping first-time homebuyers with mortgage subsidies for five years, like we did in the past, like the city of Edmonton is trying to do on a pilot project. But they couldn’t even go that way. When they did the secretariat, they said it’s such a crisis. That’s what we heard from Albertans on the task force: a crisis. That word “crisis” came up time and time again. And that’s why we’d suggested the secretariat pull all these things together from a package. The government says that, well, they’re doing all this consulting among each other. Well, nobody out in the public knows anything about it. If they’re consulting so well with the eviction fund, they’d get up in the House and say: call 1-800, and there will an eviction fund, and we can deal with you there. When you phone, it’s busy, or secondly, they say: “Well, gee. We don’t know.”

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps we could try at this hour of the night.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. That’s right. We had it on the line. If we could have used it, we would have. “Well, I don’t know what’s going on. I guess I’ll get around to it,” and they stand up in the House. That shows you how disorganized it is. Is that the amount of consultation that’s going on over there with that group? When you’re in question period, you don’t know who to ask. There are four of them popping up and down like yo-yos, Mr. Chairman. [interjection] Oh, we woke up the House leader. I’m glad. You know, I thought you were falling asleep there. Then I know the hon. member is going to give me a standing ovation after his colleague.

Mr. Chairman, I want to come back to say: this is your document. This is what they are predicting. It’s going to get worse before it gets better. Why can’t you take off those philosophical blinders and do what’s right for the majority of the people of this province? Why can’t they do that? I don’t know. I can’t believe that they don’t care about what’s happening to people. Maybe that’s the case. But I do believe that somebody taught them Adam Smith in grade 6, and they think that that’s where they have to go for the rest of their lives without dealing with the real issues.

The former Conservative government, the first generation of Conservatives in the boom, had a vision. Maybe it’s just that they’ve been around too long. I suggest that in the first boom they didn’t do everything perfectly, but at least they tried to help people deal with that boom, unlike this bunch. Unlike this bunch, Mr. Chairman. They sit there and say: well, let the market work. They’re going to build all these rental units. No evidence of it. In fact, we have evidence that they’re not going to till the prices go up.

They say: well, that’s just the way the market works. Well, that’s small comfort – small comfort, Mr. Chairman – to people who are struggling, the most vulnerable, the middle class, young people, older people. Then we’ll have students coming back in a little while facing the same sorts of problems. That’s why this shouldn’t have taken much.

There’s a conservative government in British Columbia called Liberal, and they can live with this. They seem to be our TILMA buddies. You know, if they think it’s okay and we think they’re okay to be in TILMA and it’s working for them, why couldn’t we be able to take a look at it? Again I stress that it’s not like these people aren’t going to make money. That’s a pretty good profit when you make the consumer price index plus 2, but if you have extenuating costs, you can apply to the board and pass it on; i.e., utilities, those sorts of things.

I’m waiting for my standing ovation.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Agnihotri: Good morning. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m pleased to rise to speak in support of the amendment moved by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Glenora that Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 1(4)(b) by adding the following under the proposed subsection (8):

(9) No increase in rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement shall be greater than the rate of inflation as measured by the All-items Consumer Price Index for Alberta published by Statistics Canada for the immediately preceding year, plus 2%, for the period April 24, 2007 to April 23, 2009.

Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Liberal Party always believes in fairness and sustainability in the market. I mean, if we are fair to both investors and tenants, then we can make progress. That’s why fairness in the market is very important, and this is what we are trying to do. With Bill 34, if we pass that bill as is, I don’t think it will be fair to both of them. You know, some investors are gouging on the rent, and this is not the right thing to do. We must have some sort of temporary relief immediately, which is missing in this Bill 34.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very important for vulnerable people. Especially in my riding, you know, they are facing a serious problem. Yes, the leader from the third party is right. The Alberta Liberal Party believes that 10 per cent is reasonable in a year for temporary relief to catch the market and for sustainability in the market. This amendment is recommended by the task force. It was one of the 50 or so recommendations made by the task force. I think that if all members in this House agree on this, it will be something that at least will help some of the tenants who are desperately looking for some help from the elected officials, from the government.

Mr. Chairman, Alberta needs short-term protection on this issue. It’s very important because who knows when 1,100 apartments or houses – you know, affordable homes – are going to be built? In the meantime, we need protection for those people. This is very important to give them a break on this issue. Albertans have spoken very clearly on this matter, so it’s time for the government to act and act very fast. Otherwise, we already know that the social deficit between rich and poor is increasing, and if you don’t act fast, then the gap between rich and poor will increase so fast that it will be hard for us to catch up that gap. So we should address this issue very seriously, I think the sooner the better.

Most of you have already seen some of my constituents yesterday. The picture of one of my constituents was on the front page of the Edmonton Journal. He is 80 years old, and he has a medical problem. He was so worried after he met with the minister concerned and the President of the Treasury Board, and I saw him crying. He said, you know, that he never wanted to go and see them. This was the first time that he came to the Leg., and somehow he felt like he was begging to the government. He said that this is a thing he never wanted that way, but he has no other options. Nobody in his family was there to help him. So he came over there, and after the meeting he told me that he really appreciated that the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing spent some time with him and some other people. They really appreciated their time. He said to me just to convey my message, and I'm just telling them, after meeting with the minister, that people who are in need always appreciate it. I think the minister has listened to their stories. It's really helped them, at least for the time being.

Mr. Chairman, those people are facing hardship, and it's the responsibility of the government to do something and to do something sooner than later. Otherwise, this situation will deteriorate, you know, in the coming time. It has become very clear that the government response to the affordable housing crisis has failed to address the critical issue. So what are the renters supposed to do in the short term until more houses are built? It's a big issue for vulnerable people, and it will be very hard for them to survive in a year or two years' time. There's no certainty at all. Nobody can say that the 1,100-some affordable homes are going to be built and, if they are going to be built, where they are going to be built. Nobody knows what size the houses or the apartments are, whether those apartments or affordable homes will suit their requirements. Those are lots of questions in their minds.

Another thing that I already mentioned: the initial deposit. Nobody knows if they even get a chance to have an affordable home somewhere and how they will get it. Will the government give them a loan or something to pay the initial deposit? Who are the builders building the houses? I mean, some people still believe that some big builders will get a chance to build those big projects, and they are the people who are making money. There are so many things in the air. I told them that I can't answer, you know, because I'm not certain who is going to build the houses and how big the houses are, which area they're going to build the houses in. This is not certain. This is not a clear picture so far. If we listen to at least the recommendations of the task force, that would be the right step at this moment, but it's still not clear.

Those people, for the time being, are facing rent gouging by some of the investors, not by all but some of them. Some of them are playing some games with the tenants. Especially sometimes they change the ownership. When they change the ownership, the tenants expect another year's notice, you know, according to the old rules because we haven't passed the legislation. Sometimes they get only three months' notice, and within three months, if they find a new place, they have to pay even double the rent. It's a very, very difficult situation for those vulnerable people. Even the people who can still afford it, when their rent is doubled or more than doubled, it hurts them. I'm sure that the majority of, you know, the members sitting in this House understand. As I said, it's the government's responsibility to listen to Albertans and to respond and to help.

Once again I would say that they have failed to provide sustainability because of uncertainty. The government only cares about their political ideology at this stage, I think, rather than the interests of Albertans. So under the circumstances it's very important that we should set aside the principle or ideology that we believe in and try to help those people who elected us. They put trust in us, and our priority should be to listen to them. You know, our priority should be: how can we help those in need? I mean, they need us now, and we should find ways of how we can help them as soon as possible.

Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Liberal Party has introduced this amendment for temporary rent control. I want to add one more thing because this issue is huge not only in Edmonton but all over Alberta, especially in Calgary. I mean, I read some articles in the Calgary Herald and the Calgary Sun, and they are facing the same problem. Recently some journalists are blaming the government, that maybe they are leaning more towards Edmonton. I don't believe that. The problem is there too.

So if the problem is all over Alberta, then we should set aside our ideology and listen to them and solve this problem as soon as possible. It's very important under the circumstances. I urge this government to listen to their conscience, to listen to their constituents, all Albertans, not only Edmontonians or rural Albertans, I should say. Listen to them because at this moment they need our help at a moment that cries for help. I request all members to vote to support this amendment. A vote against this amendment would allow Albertans to lose their homes. The decision is all in your hands.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I appreciate an opportunity to speak to amendment A1 to Bill 34. As I was speaking about earlier this afternoon, I consider something that resembles amendment A1 to be the missing piece that makes Bill 34 an effective piece of legislation and the piece that's missing that would in fact protect people during that one-year period that the rest of Bill 34 aspires to set up.

You know, it's very fine and dandy for Bill 34 to exist as it is, covering at least two major issues in terms of condo conversions and in regard to rental increases trying to create some sense of regularity for the thousands of renters in the province of Alberta. But without this amendment Bill 34 is rendered quite useless. So I'm glad to speak in favour of this amendment. It certainly is a reflection of the recommendations from the affordable housing commission.

We're seeing developments almost by the hour in regard to this issue. It's a good thing we're all bright-eyed and bushy-tailed here this evening to deal with them as they come in because I'm just noting as late as a quarter to 10 this evening a number of members of that affordable housing commission, besides the ones that sit in the House here today, the outside ones, now starting to speak out. It's being reported at 10 o'clock this evening that a number of them are speaking out in favour of the essence of this very amendment that we are dealing with here tonight.

So that's great. It gives us a sense of purpose here this evening. It's a reflection of public will to see this through to create some stability in the rental market with temporary regulations that will serve to create some consistency and a sense of something that renters can hang their hat on and not feel that imminent possibility of having to move or look for another place.

You know, quite often this debate has been characterizing a sector of the population that's sort of on the edge, where they don't have a dollar to spare and they're going to end up out on the street. Really, there are thousands of different permutations and declinations of that same thing happening with people that are not going to be forced out onto the street, but they're going to have to try to find another place because when you get your rent jacked up by even 15 or 20 per cent, most people don't have it in their personal monthly budget to accommodate that. Remember, we multiply that by 12 and all of the other inflationary pressures that people are experiencing here in the province of Alberta at this time. We have one of the higher inflation rates, probably, on the continent at this point. So combine all of these together for the average working person, and you create an unstable situation.

I would venture to say, Mr. Chair, that A1 is not just a sound piece of policy to help augment Bill 34; it's a sound piece of addition to policy in our arsenal to help stabilize a large sector of our population so that they don't have to move or live with that uncertainty of having to move and dance around and think about how to balance their budgets every month. So as we are all invested here with the authority to create regulation, certainly this is not an unreasonable thing that the public would expect from this very Legislature.

Let's try to look at it that way. It doesn't have to cross over into the land of innuendo and ideology and back and forth but rather a reasonable compromise. I'm sure that we can find it somewhere in our hearts to find a reasonable compromise here to impose some sense of regulation for a finite period of time and ease the uncertainty of thousands and thousands of Albertans. They can wake up in the morning and find that we have come to our senses here and have imposed some temporary regulations, as A1 suggests, using the consumer price index, which gives you a healthy increase in your budget, certainly, plus 2 per cent.

Let's not forget, as well, that we can certainly have a mechanism by which people can apply for an additional increase in rent in any situation, given extenuating circumstances that the physical plant might require, the apartment, or other things like that. Certainly that's the way we've seen temporary rent guidelines operate in the past, and those applications are processed in due course of time and are accepted. It's not a big deal. Right? If someone needs a new elevator or a new boiler or a roof, these are parts of doing business. The cost of doing business certainly has increased in regard to providing rental accommodation, and we should recognize that. That's not a big deal.

The rest of this, though, the rather stubborn refusal to put in some small temporary regulations, to me speaks of something larger and at the same time something slightly illogical. If we are going on and on – and we have done so over these past few weeks – about unscrupulous increases and gouging and all the rest of it, then certainly none of us will stand behind that. But the implicit message behind not putting in temporary regulations is that, in fact, we do stand behind that, and we do condone that as some sort of freedom of property.

I would venture to say that if we follow that argument a bit further, Mr. Chair, you know, we're not imposing on people's freedoms to suggest that there has to be a fair price for a certain commodity, in this case housing. Instead, we are freeing the people who otherwise are being cornered into a rent trap that has been slowly set over time here in the province by a singular lack of development of new rental properties over the last decade; two, an unbelievable, unprecedented increase in the value of property across the province . . . [interjection] Yes, indeed. Wait for my number three, please. I'm trying to educate you there, Mr. Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Number three, you have so many more people moving into the province. So you've created a situation where people want that property. People want to buy a condominium, lots of people do, or they want to buy a home, perhaps those starting a family and whatnot. But then there's a whole sector of the population where that possibility has been entirely removed and entirely removed in the last 24 months or so, which is quite unbelievable, quite astounding, I would venture to say.

I don't have to think back too far to when my family and myself were just thinking about entering into the home market and whatnot. You're evaluating that equation. You're saying: "Okay. I'm paying this much for rent, but then of course I can put some equity into a home, and perhaps that will work for me." But if that rent is so astronomically jacked up during that period of time when you're making that decision, then at the same time the cost of any potential properties go up through the roof, those two equations quite literally work together to create that rent trap that so many thousands of people are finding themselves in here today.

I for one believe that as part of our responsibility to the stability of society we should create a mechanism by which (a) people can have affordable month-to-month rent but also (b) are able to perhaps have some assistance to make that first foothold into a mortgage where they can invest in property and, in fact, create some equity for themselves as well.

So to move back to the immediate problem at hand, then, certainly if I take this Bill 34, which is a fine piece of introductory information perhaps, and simply insert A1 onto the back part, which is needed, that is the first stepping stone to solving both of those problems that I've just suggested, Mr. Chair. You know, it's an issue that a lot of people are following, perhaps not exactly as we are, that's unfolding here this evening. They're certainly going to wake up in the morning and say: "Okay. Well, what do you have for us? What do you have for us and how can we provide some peace of mind so that we can move forward on this issue?" That's not what we're doing now. We're not moving forward. If Bill 34 stands in half, like some members are suggesting here this evening, then all we're doing is creating this licence to have instability for the next year coming around.

You know, I'm not one to try to assist with the planning of other political parties, but if we have this happen in the 365 days and you get all your retroactive whatnot that you try to do here, which I highly doubt by the way because the very first thing that these large rental companies are going to do is sue. They're going to say: "You can't retroactively do this back to April 24, la-di-da-di-da. What on earth are you doing?" We'll end up in litigation for one thing, I would suggest, which is hardly the best place to spend public money.

This is also going to create a situation 365 days from now with our calendars. It's going to put us to next spring when people are going to be hit again with these massive rental increases and more instability and whatnot. I don't really think that that's the best political thing to do.

Once again, I'm not giving out free unsolicited advice to other political parties, but really this thing is not going to go away. This is not like where you can just go with natural gas and say: oh, well, we'll give everybody more money, and they can pay their natural gas bills next winter when it gets cold. You know, turn on that subsidy, and away we go.

We're talking about qualitative and quantitatively much larger economic forces here, a much larger sum of money, and if we're going to go to subsidies, we're going to be talking about hundreds of millions of dollars of public money being thrown into some half-baked plan to subsidize rents that are flipping up and down like, you know, so many flags in the wind. That's certainly not a good use of public money, and the subsequent instability, I'm sure, is not going to cause people to be deactivated from the political process. I think quite the opposite. Again, you're creating quite a volatile situation.

You know, we're social democrats, and we believe in very certain guiding principles that are very important to all of us as a society. Personally, I'm quite conservative in regard to not having unstable situations being imposed upon the public where they don't know what is going to happen the next week, the next month. That's what you're doing over there. You guys are creating a situation where people don't know what on earth is going to happen from month to month, and that is not good conservative policy, conservative in a personal sense, and that extends into the larger sense.

Once again, unsolicited advice: if you want to go with the name, if you want to talk the talk, you have got to walk the walk. Right? Make sure that you're creating long-term stability so that people know what's going to happen next and they can plan based on that. That works on a micropersonal level and a macroeconomic level as well.

So here I am with amendment A1, and certainly I think we have more in our arsenal to help to move this forward. Once again, I ask: all people know in the back of their minds that they're facing a big problem amongst our constituents, right? This extends not just to urban areas but also, you know, smaller centres as well wherever there's rental accommodation. This is not going to go away.

By simply accepting some small compromise in the spirit of democracy – and if you flap your wings like that, you're not going to fly there, Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, no matter how hard you try – then certainly thousands of people are going to be happy.

It's not as though rental agencies and rental companies – I mean, they make corporate decisions, or you make individual business decisions. They know that some sort of regulation is going to have to come into force because, you know, things are working out, and they like to have stability in their rental accommodations as well. You get some nice tenants in a place, and away you go. You develop a relationship, and to have people being forced around and moving here and there and everywhere all the time, that's not good for the management side of rental accommodation either. So certainly we can help to be more responsible in that regard too and create a long-term stabilizing situation here for a year or so, and let's see what happens after that. Really, I don't think that's an unreasonable thing to think about.

You know, when I look at the larger forces that have brought us to this point, where I have Bill 34 in my hand and amendment A1 in my other hand here, we're going to have to face that this is a symptomatic problem of a much larger issue that we're going to have to face here sooner or later. Once again, looking at using basic principles of social democracy – right? – and that personal sense of conservatism, I like to see things stable, certainly, and everybody does.

Let's see what some of the reasons are that we're facing this at this point in time. We have to say it – and certainly it's becoming abundantly obvious – that we have an overheated economy that's creating all sorts of economic distortions, of which this is one. Until we face up to that fact – I mean, it's not so hard to inflame the economy somehow if you suddenly just take out certain elements. You let everybody go gangbusters on a commodity that has strategic importance for North America right now, and you try to remove as many regulations as possible. You know, it's just like throwing all the conditions for a great flame-up of a bonfire, and that's what seems to be happening to our economy now.

But as you concentrate so much economic activity into a single industry and you bring in so many people and you bring in so many requirements for that population in regard to infrastructure and education and health care and housing, you have a recipe for disaster. You know, it's not like this hasn't happened in different places in the world at different times. It's not as though we can't learn from the very same things that have happened in other parts of the world, where a single commodity has inflamed the marketplace and people have rushed in from all over the world and everything gets distorted and it all goes up in a big puff of smoke eventually.

Personally, I've made a point of deciding to live in this place and put down roots and have a family here. I refuse to let that happen. You know, this housing thing with distorted rent prices is symptomatic of a larger problem that I don't want to visit on my children or the young people that are around us here today. I have a personal sense of responsibility that tells me that a sense of stability, a sense of moderation in all things, and above all a sense of decency, that each person is entitled to a roof over their head, a sense of equality, a real piece of the economic pie that we have here, and above all a sense of social justice so that we're not starting with smaller problems here that will simply bulge out and create much more serious problems in the not too distant future.

Mr. Chair, I certainly am excited and invigorated to see that Bill 34 is being strengthened by this first amendment, and I would encourage all members to consider supporting it because, you know, I think we have a responsibility to put these things in place. It's not as though we're breaking the bank with it. Right?

You know, this whole notion of prying money out of the landlords' hands by putting in some small regulation is absolutely patently false because the money is from the renter in the first place, right? This whole notion that the landlord is going to get all the money eventually, I mean, that's somehow quite a dark view of things. When we heard that this afternoon, I almost fell out of my chair with shock and horror. This idea that the landlord gets all the money there, and they're going to get it all eventually anyway, well, maybe we can let it sort of trickle through so that this inevitability doesn't happen all at once and, in fact, will come over time, and eventually, maybe, if you want to get it all, you can pry the last few pennies out of my cold hands.

Mr. Chair, I was delighted to watch through the tender light of dawn here the first amendment, A1, slip through and find support amongst my colleagues on both sides of the House. Let's do the right thing. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with interest that I participate in the debate this evening on amendment A1 to Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. Certainly, when we look at this whole crisis that has been created because this government has no plan, no plan whatsoever, this is a consequence: a rental market that is totally out of control.

Now, where it's completely out of total control is in the municipality of Wood Buffalo, and it has been under this government's watch where not only tenants but landlords have also had other costs to deal with. One of the costs that our office receives constant complaints on is the cost of electricity.

An Hon. Member: Enron.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, the high cost of electricity brought on by the electricity deregulation plan was designed by Enron and adopted by this government.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Mr. Snelgrove: And that's why the rents are so high.

Mr. MacDonald: That's one of the problems that renters have and one of the problems that landlords have. But we do know that landlords such as Boardwalk had their electricity prices stabilized. Their costs were stabilized.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there's one reason and one reason only why this government should adopt this amendment, it's because of history. The recent history of this Assembly is that not once but twice this government put a cap on electricity prices because of another plan and another scheme that was devised and adopted by this government that didn't work, and that's electricity deregulation. Before the 2001 election, in the fall of 2000, there was a crisis with electricity. We capped the price of that, and then we gave out big-time subsidies to consumers to hide the level of incompetency of this government.

Mr. Boutilier: You mean the natural gas rebate?

Mr. MacDonald: No, hon. member, I don't mean the natural gas rebate. I mean the caps on electricity prices.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I apologize, Mr. Chairman.

So when we look at this amendment and we look at the good intentions of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, let's have a look at the past history of this government. The government had no qualms, no problem with caps. So in my view and the view of many others there shouldn't be a problem with this amendment. This amendment reads, hon. members:

No increase in rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement shall be greater than the rate of inflation as measured by the All-items Consumer Price Index for Alberta published by Statistics Canada for the immediately preceding year, plus 2%, for the period April 24, 2007 to April 23, 2009.

The hon. member should be commended for this amendment.

Now, the hon. Member for Wood Buffalo . . .

Mr. Boutilier: Fort McMurray.

Mr. MacDonald: Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. You'll have to excuse me at this hour.

But I would remind all hon. members before they vote on amendment A1 to have a look at the convention resolutions from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, their 96th annual conference in 2002. I'm sure the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was in attendance.

Mr. Boutilier: I was the minister of municipal affairs.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister of municipal affairs at this time.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, through the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, absolutely. Now, here's what the municipal district of Wood Buffalo wanted to do for rent stabilization, and this is why we should support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora in his resolution. The Wood Buffalo community had this to say: the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, like other municipalities in the province, is experiencing a lack of affordable rental accommodation for its residents. Rents have increased 42 per cent since 1999 in our municipality and continue to rise. We have experienced accelerated residential developments in single-family dwellings, duplexes, and condominiums. In addition, existing rental accommodations are converting to condominium and all-adult accommodation.

There has been a minimal development of rental accommodations. Throughout Alberta there has been a 10 per cent decline in affordable residential development, coupled with a 10.3 per cent increase in population. Our region has experienced a 38 per cent increase in population since 1997.

Now, this is in 2002. Did this government, Mr. Chairman, do anything between 2002 and the current housing crisis?

An Hon. Member: No, but the . . .

Mr. MacDonald: No. The hon. member is absolutely right. They did not do a thing.

This is, again, from resolution A(2)(1) from 2002. This is the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. They want something done. Five years later, nothing. Now, if I could proceed, Mr. Chairman. For every job in the oil sands industry there are three jobs created in the service sector. Due to the high rents in Fort McMurray our service industry is experiencing shortages in staff and high turn-overs. Residents cannot afford the rent when their wage is minimum.

A ministerial advisory committee review, chaired by Mr. Thomas B. MacLachlan, conducted in 1991, indicates that rent control has benefits such as protecting the poor, stopping inflation, preventing arbitrary eviction, and preventing rent gouging. The Residential Tenancies Act, the RTA, which governs landlords' and tenants' rights inclusive of rent increases, is a legislation that was up for review in 2001. To date, Alberta government services has not initiated public forums or consultations with respect to the review of the Residential Tenancies Act.

Now, that's the background from the municipal district of Wood Buffalo. They resolve, Mr. Chairman, that the Residential Tenancies Act be changed to reflect the following, and this is why, hon. members, we must support amendment A1 this evening on Bill 34: rent may be only increased once per year for monthly periodic tenancies with at least three tenancy months' notice, and rent may be only increased on the basis of the annual cost of living, as determined by Statistics Canada, plus 1 per cent.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is talking about 2 per cent, Mr. Chairman, but this is a resolution that was before the AUMA in 2002. This is a very respected, progressive organization with the best interests of Albertans in mind. This resolution alone, five years ago on rent stabilization, is reason enough for this front bench to finally realize that there was no plan. They were given ideas. They were given lots of good, sound ideas on this side of the House. They were given lots of good, sound ideas.

The stabilization fund is one, hon. President of the Treasury Board, and you know it. You have $7.5 billion to spend now as a result of the prudent fiscal ideas coming from this side of the House. I can't imagine – I wasn't there – but there must have been quite an arm wrestle between yourself and the Minister of Finance on what to do with the $7.5 billion. I'm sure that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation was the referee in that. I'm sure that he was, and I know who he was hoping would win too.

But anyway, I'm getting off, and I apologize. The Residential Tenancies Act should have been changed in 2002 to reflect what was proposed by the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. It wasn't. But we have a second chance here with amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. Many of the hon. members in this House this evening didn't have the good fortune of the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to attend the conference that was held in the fall of 2002 in Calgary, but there is still hope. That's why I would urge all hon. members to give serious consideration to the amendment as proposed. If it was good enough for the AUMA in 2002 to be in the resolution book, surely, five years later, after this crisis has escalated . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: I think you're right. So let's have a vote.

Mr. MacDonald: We should have a vote, yes. We will have a vote. There are other resolutions in this booklet that also support the hon. member's amendment A1. Certainly, when we look at our own compensation packages, we are protected from inflation. Tenants should be. Now, landlords, they may have a different idea. I have a brother who was a landlord, and he has certainly had his experiences with bad tenants. I've cleaned out his place on occasion with him after a tenant has skipped town, and it's not pretty, to say the least. It certainly isn't. I have a lot of sympathy for landlords, but landlords are like tenants: there are good and bad ones, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Boutilier: So you have sympathy for landlords.

Mr. MacDonald: I certainly do for good landlords. But in light of this government and its inaction and its lack of due diligence and lack of good planning over the last five years when resolutions like this should have been adopted and were not by this government, we need on a temporary basis the measures that are proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

We had a look at Fort McMurray. Let's have a look at Red Deer.

An Hon. Member: Okay. Are you going to go around the whole province, Hughie?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I hope to get to Rocky Mountain House too because the good citizens of Rocky Mountain House also had some good ideas.

Now, Mr. Chairman, regarding amendment A1, the residential tenancy agreement, let's consider what Red Deer had to say, again at the AUMA convention in Calgary in the fall of 2002. They indicate that this is their definition of affordable housing: the definition of affordable housing used by people working in the field is housing that is generally accessible to most people with low income. The present homelessness and transitional housing programs initiated by the federal and provincial governments address the emergency situations which people with low or no income are facing in most cities and many towns. One could understand why a government would begin with programs to assist the persons in most dire circumstances; however, the final year of three years of homelessness funding has begun and work now needs to begin on the continuum of housing and supports for the long term.

This is in 2002. This is the city of Red Deer. The approach must be on two fronts: the affordable housing stock must be increased at the same time as the financial resources which people have to pay for that housing is increased.

Now, this amendment A1 would certainly apply to the second front, Mr. Chairman. Many groups, including many groups that the hon. member heard when he was on the housing task force, have advocated for supplementing the shelter rates for people receiving supports for independence and assured income for the severely handicapped. The difference between the shelter rate for an individual receiving SFI, $168, and this is in 2002, and the rent for a one-bedroom apartment in Red Deer, for example, $548 in June of 2001, means that the person will always be in an emergency situation because more than their income will be spent on any shelter that they can find.

There's a gentleman that lives in my neighbourhood that's on AISH. He got an increase in the budget, 50 bucks a month. He got a $400 a month increase in his basement suite. There went the modest increase and a lot more, and this gentleman is not in a position where he can pick up a little bit of extra cash by working part-time.

In order to support the affordable housing initiative that was initiated by the city of Red Deer, they went on to say here, Mr. Chairman, that the income of individuals and families who are not in receipt of social program funding for shelter needs to be increased. The average salary for a female in Alberta in 1996 according to Stats Canada was $28,000. That's 2,300-plus dollars a month. For a male, $42,000 or $3,500 a month. Obviously, many people were below the average.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion in the debate on this whole bill and the discussion during question period, I sit quietly, and I listen, and I hear the pledge of over $200 million. I think it's in total $285 million that is going to be set aside. What amounts are being set aside for people in this income bracket? There is a modest initiative for SFI and for AISH people, but how do you tell these people? Do you tell them when they come home from work and they have a $400 or $500 rent increase slipped under the door, maybe they should work more overtime or get a second job? Is that the answer, hon. minister of the Treasury Board? [interjection] It happens all the time, unfortunately. [interjection] Well, it's going to be heat and light and rent. It certainly will. People are going to have to make a choice because it's getting unaffordable. The hon. minister knows that, and I think he's just poking tease at me and trying to provoke me.

Now, the city of Red Deer is quoting Linda McQuaig. I'm sure the hon. members across the way read her books with interest. Linda McQuaig, the keynote speaker at the year 2002's Canadian housing and renewal congress held in Ottawa, reported that the top earning group in Canada has experienced a 16 per cent increase in earnings whereas the bottom earning group has experienced a reduction by 3 per cent. As this gap widens, market rents and owned housing become out of reach for a significant portion of Alberta and Canadian citizens. In 1968 the government of the day declared that all Canadians deserved adequate housing whether they can afford it or not. These are the comments and the background that are provided by the city of Red Deer.

The city of Red Deer through the AUMA is asking that it be resolved that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association requests that the government of Alberta provide new funding combined with the government of Canada for affordable housing and that the funds be approved and programs be developed to produce affordable housing for households with low income. That's one. That's one thing, and it has been neglected. It has been neglected by this government.

Further, they say: let it be resolved that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association requests the government of Alberta to work with the private sector. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

Mr. Boutilier: Well, I sense this Assembly needs a bit of energy, so I will take the appropriate time to do that. I want to first of all say that I appreciate the comments and the history from the AUMA dating back five years, but that's five years ago. In fact, the members of that council were not re-elected based on some of the advocates that they have put forward. So I think it's an important footnote. But isn't it true that your relative, the landlord, also said that rent controls don't work?

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order, please, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a point of order.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives

Mr. MacDonald: I'm rising under 23(i) and (j). I'm asking the hon. member to retract that. I did not say that, and it was not implied, and I want him to withdraw that comment, please.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chairman, my comment was this: isn't it true that your relative had said that he did not support rent controls as a landlord? That was my question that I posed to him rhetorically in what I had said. So I've posed that just like many other landlords have posed, saying that rent controls do not work.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry. I cannot accept that. I know clearly what the hon. member stated, and that is not what I said in my remarks. It's not what I said in my speech, and I'm asking him, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw.

Mr. Boutilier: I did not say . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you had your opportunity to speak.

Hon. minister, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar feels that you made a statement that implied he had said certain words. I don't have access to the Blues, and I know that it's quite late in the evening, early morning now.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr Chairman, if the hon. member thought I said that's something he said, I did not say what he had said. Just to make that perfectly clear. I hope that clarifies this to the . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, sit down.

Hon. members, I do not have access to the Blues, so I cannot kind of go back and forth, but certainly the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar indicates that he did not say what the minister is alleging to have been said. We are all hon. members in this Assembly. We all trust each other, you know, that when you say that you did not say that thing or you did not mean to say that thing, we have to be respectful of that. So it would certainly help if the minister would just retract those remarks and then proceed with whatever else he has to say.

Mr. Boutilier: I am sorry that he misunderstood what I had said that he did not think that I had said. Having said that, I would like to move on with what I am saying.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Debate Continued

Mr. Boutilier: Now, getting back to the more important point that rent controls do not work, Mr. Chairman. I can see that the hon. member is shaking his head, and I can hear that he is agreeing with me in terms of what he is saying, and I appreciate that, to the hon. member and through the chair.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, as we go forward, I think that what is really the fundamental principle of this – and the amendment I cannot agree with – is that we want more supply. I'm quite certain that the hon. member would agree that if he thought for one moment that dollars would not go towards building more units and more supply for renters to help our citizens and our voters, he would never want to have a rent imposition that would be a detraction to in fact creating more supply. Because the ultimate solution, as the honorary chair of Habitat for Humanity, is each of us being out on roofs building, in fact, more supply.

In fact, if we were to take all this energy in here today and in the last couple of weeks, we could have perhaps gone out and added to supply and truly helped our citizens that vote for us, in terms of getting more units on in the marketplace. So let us not lose sight of, not the political rhetoric that goes on, ultimately: what are we doing to increase and help supply? So any time you talk about rent control, you're sending uncertainty. You're sending messages saying: we believe that we should be able to control.

I have to ask you this, hon. member. What about when you were going back to those years when the landlord was in actual fact at the time paying and collecting rent of $500 and their actual mortgage on their rental property was a thousand dollars. I didn't hear the Liberals back then say: by the way, we want to step in and help those who are helping renters. My question is: is that what you would be suggesting in your amendment? Maybe your amendment is actually only half of what it should be.

In order to be consistent and balanced in what you're saying, I said that I suggest to you that at a time when renters were paying $500 and people who owned the rental property were paying mortgages of a thousand, what about the gap then? I didn't hear the Liberals say anything or add any amendments at that time, and ultimately if we are to be adding a balanced debate in terms of this important issue, we want more supply so that renters can someday, I envision, stand up and say: "I'm sorry. I'm not renting from you with your $300 rent increase. I'm going across the street, and I'm going to be in another competitive market where my rent is actually going to be lower." That is the ideal situation for me, and how do we get that? By getting more, more, more supply on the market. Your amendment will not do that. It will slow that down so that there's even a slower supply of units, and ultimately you're hurting those who are renting today.

I say to you that your amendment is as much a noble attempt at rhetoric, but ultimately you know and I know and even some Liberals know – I'm quite certain in my own mind that you're over there saying that rent controls don't work. In fact, I'm certain. Think about that some time. You know that they don't work. So ultimately supply will be hurt. Why would any political party of any political stripe want to hurt having more supply to help renters on this market?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise. I wanted to respond to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. I don't think he's the minister of affairs; I think he's the minister of relations. I just wanted to indicate to the minister that when he says that he's shocked that the Alberta NDP is in favour of economic growth, you know, he's really misread us and we're deeply hurt. I want to indicate to him . . .

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chairman, I stand and apologize if the hon. leader of the third party is deeply hurt about anything I have said.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the floor.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. You know, what the Alberta New Democrats favour is balanced long-term growth which provides full employment for all Albertans and, indeed, for Canadians who want to come here and make a life or just want to come here and work for a while, and we believe that this can be accomplished in a much better way than what's happening now. You see, unlike the government we don't feel that we're responsible to provide employment for the whole world, and certainly housing is a very important part of this, and I am going to come to it.

The whole question of a more rational pace to the economy of this province and particularly for the development of the tar sands makes a great deal of sense from a lot of perspectives. Not only do we preserve the resources for Albertans and Canadians and develop a good strong export market to the United States and other countries, but we have a chance by going a little bit slower to catch up with our infrastructure, which even with the record spending of this government we're not going to be able to keep pace with if things keep going. We make sure that we can protect the environment, and we make sure that we can provide housing for people. You see, I was going to get to the housing.

When we talk about housing, we need to talk about supply, but we also need to talk about demand. The present course of this government is going to multiply and compound all of the problems we have in all sorts of areas, including housing, because it's a reckless approach to the economic development. So if we have a little bit more of a rational pace, then we preserve our resources for longer and make sure that they're around for future generations and that we don't just leave the next generation a giant hole where northern Alberta used to be and a multibillion dollar environmental liability where the tar sands used to be. But that's where the government's going.

So dealing with the housing question, I urge all hon. members, including the minister, to support this approach. We think the government could have done a lot in the past in different places if it had played a little bit more of a role in balancing supply and demand and making sure that housing was brought online or, for that matter, that land was brought on in a timely fashion. The government owns a lot of land. The government owns a lot of land in the hon. minister's community, yet it has some of the highest housing prices in the entire province, indeed the entire country, which could have been alleviated if the government had brought that land forward to the municipality in a timely fashion, as in some years ago. It may be that the municipality overplanned when the minister was the mayor. But, you know, overplanning, underplanning: it's all not very good planning.

We think we could do better, so we certainly think that the people of Alberta deserve the opportunity to hear from us and from other parties without, you know, just trying to distort our position when it's presented to the public and to create a caricature of the position that we take or a caricature of the position that other parties take. That's all very important to us.

So, Mr. Chairman, just to conclude, I would urge all hon. members to support this amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora as it closely conforms with NDP policy and, therefore, would be highly beneficial for the people of Alberta as a result. We certainly support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My pleasure to rise this morning and speak to amendment A1 on Bill 34. This amendment, as the hon. leader of the third party pointed out, is not only similar to NDP policy but, in fact, exactly reflects the policy that was promoted and recommended by the housing task force. I think that's the most important thing for the NDP members to understand. I know that they mentioned earlier that this is not exactly in line with the Alberta Official Opposition policy, and I will acknowledge that that is in fact the case, but we felt as a caucus that our first amendment would most appropriately be in line with that of the task force because of the good work that they had done and recognizing that the task force brought together members of all three parties in this House as well as a number of people from social agencies that deal directly with this issue. So it's not in any way denigrating the Official Opposition's policy but, rather, a recognition of the good work that the task force did and, in fact, supporting their position and understanding, as we've pointed out many times over the last several days, that the task force recommendations, in order to be fully effective, at least in the minds of those who served on the task force, have to be adopted as a package and that you can't just cherry-pick here and there, you know, individual pieces to make them work.

The minister earlier today challenged me to identify exactly how many of the 50 recommendations were already adopted or taking place or being worked on by the government and said that that's why they weren't in fact adopted by the government when they made their response to the recommendations. I would challenge the minister. If that is their position, then, quite frankly, Mr. Minister, I really don't understand why you wouldn't have just adopted them anyway. If you're already doing those things or if you're working on them already, why wouldn't you just adopt them?

I mean, right now – and I'm sure many members opposite would admit that – this has become a public relations disaster for this government. The chaos that they have created in the marketplace with the mishandling of this file over the last several weeks has created a public relations disaster for this government. We've seen that quite clearly in the extraordinary response that they've made over the last two days to the individuals that have come down to this Legislature to have their concerns heard.

There's no question that this government is now in full damage control mode trying to somehow – somehow – extricate themselves from this mess that they've created. Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, I'm not sure that they're capable of doing it. I don't know what they're going to do because they've backed themselves into a corner on this one. They know they're on the wrong side of the issue, and there really is no good way out for them at this point.

You know, love him or hate him, one thing that you could always say about former Premier Klein was that he knew when to back up the truck. He knew when to acknowledge that his government had made a mistake. He knew when to admit that the people had spoken and that his government was wrong. Clearly, that is the situation this government finds themselves in now, but unlike the situation when, as an example, they wouldn't allow the sterilization victims to sue, this government has not recognized yet how badly they've misjudged the public sentiment on this particular issue.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to you that for whatever reason this government is out of touch with the views of the so-called severely normal Albertans, the Marthas and Henrys that they've touted for so many years now as being the gauge, the moral compass of this government. They've lost it. [interjection] They are so out of touch – to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar – that, as I say, they're taking extraordinary measures this week to try to deal with the public relations disaster that they've created, even to the point where this afternoon I understand that a memo was issued reacting rather violently to the inclusion of the media in a meeting with those constituents that were here today. I find that quite interesting given that they tout time and time again the openness and accountability of the new administration. Yet all of a sudden the openness aspect of that certainly seems to be in jeopardy.

Mr. MacDonald: Did they close the doors on some of them?

Mr. R. Miller: They not only closed the doors, but they had asked the media to leave the meeting. Then they were apparently upset when the constituents – the constituents – that were here to have their concerns heard expressed that they would like the media to be present. In fact, the media was then invited back in, and they were quite upset about that. So I think, as I say, this pokes a bit of a hole into the claim about openness.

Mr. Chairman, as I was listening to others debate this amendment this evening, I was also checking a number of news websites, and it's interesting that today, finally, a number of members of the task force are starting to speak out. I'm not sure exactly why those members have been relatively quiet since the release of the report on April 24.

Mr. Elsalhy: It's called the fear factor.

Mr. R. Miller: Somebody beside me suggested that it might be the fear factor, and that is a real thing in this province. We know that for a fact. I encounter it almost daily in my role as the shadow minister for Finance and Service Alberta, so that might well be it.

As an example, there's a quote attributed to Michael Farris, who is the executive director of E4C, formerly the Edmonton City Centre Church Corporation. Mr. Farris says directly: it disturbs me that at this point the province does not have the same appreciation of how critical this is. So as I suggested a minute or two ago, clearly this government is now out of touch with those severely normal Albertans that they always considered to be their moral compass.

Another member of the task force, Mr. Chairman, Mary Ann Eckstrom, a councillor from the county of Grande Prairie who I met with when we were up there a month or two ago, says: there is a problem with not having rent controls when you have gouging going on.

I said earlier today in debate, and I'll ask the question again. If rent controls are not the answer – and that is clearly this government's point, their position tonight. I see the Solicitor General nodding his head. If it is their belief that rent controls are not the answer to the gouging, then what is?

Mr. Lindsay: Bill 34.

Mr. R. Miller: Bill 34, Mr. Minister, does not address the gouging, and you know that that is a fact. The Solicitor General has indicated that Bill 34 will address the gouging, but there is absolutely nothing in Bill 34 that addresses the situation of gouging. Absolutely nothing. You know, there have been some intimations that perhaps the Housing minister may chat – may chat – with the landlords. I'm not sure just exactly what that means. I have a vision of what that might mean, but I'm not sure what it means.

As I say, there's nothing in this bill that addresses the gouging, and the gouging is happening. In fact, the government is taking a lot of heat over the gouging, and whether you like it or not – and I will concede that there are an awful lot of great landlords in this province that may be impacted by temporary rent guidelines – the bottom line is that this amendment would address the gouging. Nothing the government has offered up so far addresses the gouging. Nothing.

Nothing, Mr. Solicitor General. There's nothing that you folks have said that addresses the gouging, and that is the number one issue that people are facing right now. Somebody is asking: how much is gouging? I cited an example earlier today.

Mrs. Jablonski: How much gouging is going on?

Mr. R. Miller: Does it matter? Mr. Chairman, the Member for Red Deer-North is saying, "How much gouging is going on?" as if to somehow indicate that some is okay but that more might not be okay and that if it reaches a certain amount, then it's totally unacceptable, and the government will have to step in. Is any gouging okay? Is that what you're suggesting?

We had an example the other day that was raised by the leader of the third party where a grandmother – and this was verifiable; she was in the gallery yesterday – 75 years old was given a $1,000 a month increase. The Premier acknowledged at the PC convention last weekend that that is un-Albertan. Okay? I don't think there's anybody in this room tonight who wouldn't agree that giving a grandmother a nearly triple rent increase is gouging. Of course it is. We all understand that. That's gouging.

So now we know that the line has been drawn at $1,000 on a $600 per month rent, that that is gouging. So the question, then, is to the Member for Red Deer-North. Her question to me was: how much is happening? Well, if that was the only case in the province, is that okay? How many of those examples do you need? We know there are more. There have been verified instances of $1,000 a month and more increases taking place in Calgary. How many do you need before it becomes a problem for this government?

I cited an example earlier today – and since you bring it up, I'd like to mention it again – of a gentleman who lives in Yellowbird suites. He's taking English as a Second Language and raising three children, working a part-time job as he's doing all of this, trying to make a life for himself and his family in a new country. His rent went from $710 – it went up $485 – to $1,195, I believe. I'm just going to get the exact numbers here. Yes, from $710 to $1,195, so this is an increase of 68 per cent. Now, in my mind, that's gouging. I don't know if that is gouging in the mind of the government or not.

Ms Blakeman: It doesn't matter. They're not going to do anything.

Mr. R. Miller: As the Member for Edmonton-Centre has suggested, it doesn't matter because you're not going to do anything.

In fact, the leader of the third party pointed out a minute ago that despite the fact that the 75-year-old grandmother is getting a $1,000 rent increase, you're not going to do anything about that either. Sure, the Premier has acknowledged that it's un-Albertan, but there's no legislation to deal with it. There's nothing in Bill 34, despite what the Solicitor General says, to deal with the gouging that's taking place. Until this government offers up something else that will deal with it, you're going to keep seeing amendments like this, and we'll stand here all night and all day tomorrow if we have to debating it because you have to do something to address those particular instances.

As far as I'm concerned and as far as this caucus is concerned, one instance of that is too many. One instance is too many. You have to find a way to deal with those, and until you do that, I'm willing to spend as long as it takes to stand here and debate amendments to protect those people. I put the challenge out to the government again: if rent controls are not the answer, please tell us what is. You have not given us anything yet, and I'm still waiting. I will wait, and I will wait, and I will wait.

Now, since I mentioned the instance of Mr. Deria, I'd just like to point out some of the specifics around this. To the minister of municipal affairs, who challenged us the other day to bring him real examples: he's going to be sorry he ever spoke those words. Mr. Deria is one example of 300 at the same school that he's attending. His instructors are telling me that every day their students are coming to them with stories like Mr. Deria's, so this is not one instance. You're going to have people streaming through here day after day, week after week, month after month, as long as this House sits, with these examples until you come up with legislation to deal with the gouging. I hope that the Member for Red Deer-North is going to begin a tally and keep track because it's not one example, unfortunately. It's not two or three. There are going to be many, many, many examples of this.

We know that if Bill 34 passes, it doesn't deal with the gouging. Sure, it will limit increases to once per year, and those are retroactive, 12 months prior to April 24. So that means, as an example, that if somebody had an increase last October 1, they'll get an increase this October 1, and there's absolutely nothing that this government is doing to control how much that increase will be.

Mr. Elsalhy: Even that is not in the bill itself.

Mr. R. Miller: This is a really good point that I've been meaning to bring up. I'm not sure if anybody has mentioned it yet, but the Member for Edmonton-McClung mentions it now, so I'm going to put it on the record. There is nothing in this bill that specifies the timelines despite the fact that the government has trumpeted the fact that this legislation is going to protect people by giving them only one rent increase per year and a year's notice for condo-ization or major renovations. There is nothing in this legislation that specifies those timelines. It's all in the regulations.

My Lord, I shouldn't have to go here again, but here we go again talking about how often this government puts important stuff in regulations that can be changed in backrooms with cabinet ministers only: no public debate, no public scrutiny, no public consultation. So here we go again with the government promising relief to renters, promising them a year between rent increases, promising them a year's notice for condo-ization or major renovations that might see them evicted, yet it's not in the legislation. There's absolutely no guarantee that this government wouldn't come back three months from now or six months from now with an order in council and change the rules all over again, and what people thought was going to protect them for a period of time is suddenly gone, without any public consultation, without any public debate, and without any public scrutiny. I will say it again. I've said it before. Every member across the way should be ashamed for doing that. If this legislation is so important in the government's mind and it's going to go so far towards protecting tenants, then let's do it right and put the numbers in black and white tonight in front of people so that they can see that you're good for your word. It's not even here in printing for them. They have to trust that this Premier and his ministers are going to do what they say they do in the backrooms away from the public eye, and that is just not good enough. With a government that claims to be open and accountable, they're continuing to do most of the work in regulation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one of the arguments in the past for doing this has been that the House doesn't sit often enough, and there may be a need to change, and they have to be able to react quickly. Well, with the new House sitting rules we know exactly when the House is going to be sitting next year, in the year 2008. We know for sure that there's a guaranteed fall sitting. I would submit to you that there is absolutely no reason for this government to use that excuse ever again.

Mr. Lougheed: The Committee of the Whole will still be going on then.

Mr. R. Miller: The Member for Strathcona suggested that this Committee of the Whole may still be meeting at that point, and do you know what? Unless we can talk some sense into the government, he might just be right.

I said I was going to outline some of the specifics surrounding Mr. Deria's case, and I would like to do that now. Mr. Deria came to Canada in 1990, lived in Ontario until the year 2006. Right now he's on a monthly rental agreement since October of last year. The good news for Mr. Deria is that this increase notice that he was given to be effective August 1 – well, actually, when this legislation passes, this increase will be deferred to October 1. So he'll buy two months before his rent goes up 68 per cent. I'm sure that provides a modicum of relief to him but obviously not near enough.

A new property owner purchased the unit last fall, and as I say, once the deal went through, immediately the rent from $710 to $1,195. I had mentioned earlier that he's a married man with three young kids nine, eight, and four years old. He's attending the Metro Continuing Education English language institute, taking English as a Second Language, in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, Mr. Chairman.

I think I had mentioned before that there are currently about 300 students that these two instructors that I'm speaking to are dealing with. They say to me that most of the students are on learner benefits while they're taking their ESL training. Many have come to their instructors to let them know about the substantial rent increases that they're dealing with. The instructors indicate that a rental increase makes a huge difference in their ability to pay their bills and has a huge impact on their family lives, as one can only imagine if you look at a case like Mohamed's, where he's raising three young children, trying to work a part-time job and go to school and suddenly a 68 per cent rent increase, Mr. Chairman. Again, nothing in this legislation will address his problem.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the vote on amendment A1?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Chairman, I was standing. You probably weren't able to see me.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the chair has already called the question, so I'll proceed. We are still in committee, and you'll be able to speak to the bill.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 1:50 a.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I know that individuals who are experiencing sleepless nights and have been listening in to our debate tonight on A1 and amendments are rather anxious to hear where the story ended, so I will continue with the need for stability.

I left off with Roshika Khanna, who is the program co-ordinator for the Calgary Scope Society. She had indicated the difficulties that people with disabilities had in finding places. She noted:

It has been a very discouraging experience speaking with a lot of landlords who fail to see that our clients are respected members of our society, who deserve a fair chance to all opportunities. I am hoping that this letter may help increase some awareness in the challenges that our agency and other agencies like ours face. With your position and authority it is evident that our voices may be heard and changes might occur.

I will assure Ms Khanna that her voice was heard tonight.

We are in desperate need of a change in attitudes and perspectives to provide equal opportunities.

Another constituent, by the name of Donna Logan, wrote to me.

As a Calgarian, I am truly concerned about the increase in the number of people experiencing homelessness in our city. According to the 2006 Count of Persons Experiencing Homelessness conducted by the City of Calgary on May 10th, 2006 . . .

And, of course, that's the homeless count that I was able to take part in along with the members for Calgary-Currie and Calgary-Mountain View.

. . . there are currently 3,646 people living on our streets and in shelters. This is an increase of 32 per cent in two years. This number does not include those people that are staying with friends and family, as I pointed out during second reading of Bill 34.

I urge the Albertan Government to take a leadership role in addressing homelessness and poverty in Alberta. Specifically, I urge the Alberta Government to review and address the following provincial policies to ensure that they support Albertans in not only moving out of poverty and homelessness but that also help to prevent people from entering these situations in the first place.

And, of course, that's what Bill 34 fails to address. It fails to keep people from ending in a homeless circumstance because the subsidies are very specific and they're very limited. While they keep a roof over the individual's head, they very much line the pockets of the landlords at taxpayers' expense.

As Mrs. Logan said, these are the areas that she would like to see improvements in:

- Policies around Child Care and available Child Care Subsidies

- Availability, accessibility, and affordability of housing
- The Child Welfare Act
- Social Assistance and Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped (AISH)
- Minimum Wage.

She concludes:

Having a home is a right in Canada, not a privilege. I urge the Alberta Government, at all levels, to ensure all Albertans have access to this right.

My next communication is from Rob Lerouge, and his concerns go right back to early March. He has a number of wonderful ideas, only a few of which I'll share with you.

To address the housing crisis Alberta is in the midst of, there are many external/exogenous issues that need to be tackled concurrently. The housing crisis does not exist in isolation but is related to the lack of social infrastructure and program cuts made during the last 10 years that have not been replenished. This issue cannot be addressed in isolation but in conjunction with many programs that are under severe pressure from the exploding population.

Why are huge fiscal surpluses of $7B being reported when there is absolutely no spending on building subsidized housing in the budget?

Keep in mind that he wrote this letter in March. Bill 34 does indicate that there will be $281 million available, and eventually houses will be built.

Regardless of the surplus amount, I am very disappointed this government has not budgeted any funding for the construction of new housing for those unable to afford. Leaving the supply of housing to market forces does not work when many jobs remaining open do not pay a living wage. Unless if low or free cost housing is provided for those willing to take low wage jobs, there will still be a labour shortage. Much of the problem is rooted in this province's right-wing attitude of supporting the rich with tax breaks and bashing the poor arbitrarily for being lazy (which is totally false). Yet supporting the have-not population will have greater benefits by easing the burden off of health care, schools, and social services. Face it, if money is not spent on providing housing for those lacking, it will have to be spent on health care, justice, policing, social services, even at school when these people incur problems attributed to being homeless. The homeless are more likely to become sick, be less healthy than average, be addicted, lack skills and education (perhaps from not being able to afford schooling or college), and suffer irreversible effects of unemployment. In fact, someone who has been homeless long term often lacks social and presentation skills and the longer they lack these the harder it will be to educate them up to standard. Being socially isolated has very damaging effects that are irreversible in the long term if not corrected.

Also, this province is too caught up in decision making that is rules/laws based as well as too financially based. It has become cliché that "we cannot go overbudget or cannot borrow" for projects. Homelessness cannot wait for the sun to shine and does not disappear during booms nor busts. Too many so-called task forces during the last ten years have failed to address the problem, especially since they are behind closed doors. It is time to walk the talk and practice what you preach. Enough studies, let's take action, such as following your own task force recommendations in their entirety rather than piecemeal.

Even if a project goes 100% overbudget, it is not a failure compared to the many successes it potentially has.

Witness the southeast hospital in Calgary that this provincial government has delayed.

This province cannot measure success solely by budgetary means. It needs to measure success by qualitative measures such as skill generation, crime decreases, health ratings among low-income citizens, education credentials acquired, etc.

Yet the province will need to spend a lot more on social programs for the have-nots and quit giving big business and the rich huge tax breaks on the backs of the middle class. Since no rent controls exist, why are the rich developers not building more rental units given the demand.

And this is what Bill 34 fails to address. If they haven't built them in the past when there were no restrictions, what makes you think that they will continue to do so when they can gouge individuals in the current existing facilities without having any requirement to build new? The gouging continues with the government's blessing.

How high do rents need to increase before landlords will build again? If market forces should dictate the supply of rental housing, why does the province not step up to providing sufficient rent subsidies to low-income people. Alberta has a tendency to arbitrarily choose which goods and services should be unregulated and yet related programs (for subsidized housing) are restricted in terms of the number of recipients or the funding amounts which fail to match the free-market rental rates.

Mr. Lerouge obviously had great passion. This is his conclusion.

In closing, solving the housing crisis will take more than building new homes. Many social and infrastructure programs need a lot of catch-up funding and reinstated regular funding. The cliché of meeting the bottom line needs to be reformed and the measuring of success to be done differently. What this province needs is balance to prevent extremes from emerging and enact laws that facilitate moderation and balance to keep all facets of this province in check.

The government has an obligation to run this province to be fair to everyone and to help the underprivileged.

This is an individual who has a home, who is not experiencing a rent increase but has a social conscience, and he is calling upon the government to try and find one. That, unfortunately, is something that this government lacks: any kind of recognition of the needs of the wider mass of Albertans, singling in on only the needs of the landlords.

This back-and-forth, ping-pong we were being accused of earlier: well, when there were low rental rates, why weren't we helping the landlords out at that time? Now that rent is rising through the roof and there are so very few accommodations, is the answer just to let it happen? Does the government not have any stewardship role? Does the government not provide the balance that is necessary to help individuals, especially the most vulnerable?

It absolutely amazes me that individuals such as the MLA for Calgary-Fort, whose constituency brought forward the idea of rent controls for discussion at last week's Conservative convention, would stand up in this House, going against what his constituents brought forward. I give him credit for at least bringing the concerns of his constituents to the convention, but when it comes to standing up for them here in this House, it doesn't happen.

I have somewhat greater expectations for more recently elected members to this House, who have not been caught up in the dogma that has been a part of the last, basically, 36 years of Conservative rule. I suppose that I'm being ungenerous in going back 36 years because during the times of Peter Lougheed and during the times of Mr. Getty there was a recognition that in times of crisis some government intervention was necessary. They, I suppose, to a degree were the progressive part of Progressive Conservatives.

We have a number of newly elected individuals that came along in 2004 with myself who should not be so weighted down by past ideology. It concerns me that they for whatever reason, fear of retribution from their colleagues or potential sanctions from the whip, refuse to stand up on behalf of their constituents. I find it hard to believe that the other MLAs in Calgary have not heard from their constituents about concerns over rent control. I would suggest that when they return to their Calgary offices tomorrow night, they will probably find that they have received a tremendous amount of correspondence on the subject of rent controls, and I'm hoping that they'll table those correspondences in this House and that they will stand up for their constituents, especially those who are suffering the no-limit, once-a-year rent increases. I would be very pleased to hear from these members from Calgary, whom I've challenged to say that they haven't heard these concerns from their constituents, that in fact no e-mails, no letters, no phone calls have been received. I challenge them to stand up and refute my concerns.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. [some applause] Thank you. At least it's a start. We'll work on it, and maybe we'll get it right.

Mr. Chairman, I want to come back to talking about the need for rent guidelines and the fact that we don't have them here. The government is suggesting that it's the supply side and we have to get more housing on the markets. Nobody disagrees with that. What we're talking about is in the short run, till that happens. Obviously, they rejected a perfectly logical amendment a while ago, CPI plus 2 per cent. They say that this would somehow stifle development.

Let's look at the supply side. Part of the task force's job, Mr. Chairman, was to take a look at all aspects of it, including, if you like, how we get more rental units on the market. If they say that they can't put in rent guidelines and they've got to work on the supply side, well, let's just take a look at some of the measures that they turned down to deal with the supply side. As mentioned many times, the task force tried to present this as a package, you know, that the guidelines were there on a temporary basis for two years, CPI plus 2. We've had that discussion. We also said that there had to be the other side of it to try to bring more units on. The fact is that we don't have rental units being built. Well, according to the government this should be happening now because we don't have rent controls or guidelines or whatever you want to call it, rent stability.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I look at some of the recommendations that were made. First of all, just to do with the supply side: the new Alberta home ownership assistance program. In the task force we saw the other end of it, that if we get more young people, especially first-time home buyers, buying houses, that would open up rental units. It was done in the past, and it worked very well. But government does not accept this recommendation. The creation of more rental units is a better way to address housing issues. Well, they're not doing it. It's not happening. So they reject that, and they say that creating more rental units is a better way to do it. It's not happening. So there is one recommendation they didn't look at.

The other, going back, is recommendation 3: move to block funding in allocating capital dollars. The government accepts that block funding will be made available to high-growth, high-need municipalities through the municipal sustainability housing fund, but the government does not accept the recommendation to index funding based on inflationary pressures. Well, in an overheated economy inflation is a reality. How are you going to build anything – the hospital in south Calgary is a good example of that – if you don't cover inflation? That just seems to be self-evident. How are you going to increase the supply if you're not prepared to do that, Mr. Chairman?

Moving along, here's another one: develop flexible incentives to stimulate supply-side responses. Well, I would have thought that they would have loved that, that even that term they might have accepted. But, no, the government does not accept this recommendation. The Municipal Government Act allows municipalities to use innovative financing methods to address redevelopment. Well, municipalities don't have the money to do it. That's the whole point. So there's the supply side that they could have accepted to get more units on. They refused it, Mr. Chairman.

Improve efficiencies and reduce duplication among government and non-profits. Well, they're going to refer that. That was a tough one. They referred this recommendation. Well, I would have thought that that would be self-evident, Mr. Chairman.

Improve government responsiveness to specific timelines: the government does not accept the proposed timelines and agrees to improved government responsiveness. So they're not even going to worry about timelines, Mr. Chairman. They're not even going to worry about that. So how is that going to help put on more housing.

Now, here's a key point, though, that we're talking about. Under better integration of planning and policy we said: "Adopt a consistent definition of 'affordable housing' for policy and program development." Well, the government accepts that a consistent definition of affordable housing is required but does not accept the task force definition. Well, pretty well all across North America the common definition, Mr. Chairman, is: no more than 30 per cent of your income should go towards accommodation. Now, the government says that they reject that, but they don't say what else. So we're not going to accept what everybody else in North America talks about. We're going to set some figure. But they can't even do it. Well, what is it then? Is it 40 per cent? Is it 50 per cent? Is it 60 per cent? Okay. I know why they don't want to do it: because it's embarrassing because when they start to look at the rent subsidy program, with the amount of people spending more than 30 per cent of their income, we're looking at a pile of cash. There's no doubt about that. But that's the reality of the economy that we're in right now, Mr. Chairman.

Another one: develop an inventory of underutilized or unused public infrastructure for affordable housing opportunities. Well, you know, there's a way. Right? There's a bunch of underutilized and unused public infrastructure sitting around the province. I would have thought that that would have been an easy one. But no. Listen to this. The government does not accept this recommendation as there are existing mechanisms in place to identify and disperse land to eligible stakeholders. Well, what are they doing? Where is it, Mr. Chairman? We had examples all over this province where this was not happening. So, you know, that would be another way to get rental units on quickly, but they rejected that particular recommendation.

Now, the other one is inclusionary zoning under the ongoing supply and improved access to affordable housing. One that has to come that everybody's talking about and that they're talking about, and I know that in both Edmonton and Calgary they are for sure, is for the municipalities: release available surplus land for affordable housing, five- to ten-year regional housing planning, proactively acquire land, and get on with it. That was the recommendation.

Well, the government's tough-minded approach to show that they were listening was: we will refer these recommendations to the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability. Well, time is of the essence, Mr. Chairman. Time is of the essence. We're trying to say that we need to bring out a lot of housing quickly – right? – to get the market back in order. That seems to be the government thing, but now they're going to refer this recommendation to a bureaucracy.

So all the things that they talk about in the task force, when we tried to look at the other end, Mr. Chairman, they just didn't bother doing the right thing. So we don't have guidelines, yet we have no urgency to bring on more rental units. How can things not get worse than they are right now? They will. If you really believe that it's only the free market and that you can't interfere with it, then surely there's an obligation to get on with building the units, to build that up.

So what is the choice for people, Mr. Chairman? What is the choice? Even if we did get on with some of these things to bring the rental units on, it's going to take at least a couple or three or four years. But by the time they refer it to all the bureaucracies, it would probably take 15 years before they got on with it.

So in the short run what do the people do as the rents skyrocket? No big urgency to get more rental units out, not enough money, inflation going rampant. So what do we do for the vulnerable that we've talked about and, as we say, for the middle income? Now, Mr. Chairman, as I say, at the very minimum, then, if you're going to dither around and not build the units, you have to provide some protection. I said it before, and I'll say it again: this is not a real market. In market economies there should be some competition. There isn't competition with this. You can set your own standards, and too bad; let the devil have the hind leg. That's what this is all about.

So, Mr. Chairman, it boggles me that they talk about bringing on units, they talk about no need for rent guidelines at this particular time, yet nothing's going to happen in the short run.

I go back, Mr. Chairman, to their own documents again, and I just want to repeat the one from Alberta Employment, Immigration and Industry talking about the Alberta advantage. Well, this is very good reading. They say on housing affordability: "Since the start of 2005, housing affordability across the province has been eroding at an aggressive pace." Now, with all the things that they've rejected here, how can it get better? Surely, even this ideological hidebound government should see that we need something temporarily in terms of what's happening with the housing market.

Always willing to help, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to bring forward another amendment. You know, frankly, with Bill 34 the once a year makes it even worse because people get gouged faster than they were before. So I'd like to bring in an amendment. You have it there at the front, Mr. Chairman; you have copies of it. I'll read it. It's under the name of the leader of the NDP, Brian Mason.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we just want to make sure that it's the right amendment that we're dealing with.

Mr. Martin: I'll read it.

The Deputy Chair: Oh. Okay.

Mr. Martin: It says: Mr. Mason to move that Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended . . .

Some Hon. Members: It's the wrong one.

Mr. Martin: No, it isn't. It's the only one we have here. [interjections] Let me finish. That Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 1(4)(b) by adding the following after the proposed subsection (8):

(9) A landlord shall not increase the rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement by an amount greater than the percentage increase in the Alberta Consumer Price Index published by Statistics Canada for the previous calendar year plus 2%.

Now, we're giving the government a change here. Maybe, Mr.

Chairman, they were worried that two years was not the right amount. They might've wanted five years. Maybe it was the two years that bothered them. But even at this stage we'd be willing to negotiate one year. Anything would be better. Maybe they were saying, "Well, we were being too timid," and they actually wanted it for five years or 15 years like in Ontario. We'll allow the government to put their own number on it and figure out the date that they would like to bring in CPI plus 2.

I would hope that we could have a good debate on this particular bill. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2. While the amendment appears very similar to the one that we just dealt with, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is correct that the previous one had specific timelines; this one does not.

Does anybody wish to participate in the debate on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on amendment A2, which is the one that my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview just brought forward in the name of our leader and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Certainly, this gives us an opportunity to speak once again on the importance of setting up a reasonable range of increase that can take place in Alberta in regard to rental increases. I guess it has the distinction as well of providing the flexibility to either work within as narrow a parameter as to extend. So the language of this amendment is differentiated from the last one in that it does give us a little more flexibility in being able to use this as a tool, longer or shorter, depending on the circumstances that we're confronted with in the rental market here in the province of Alberta.

There's a volatile situation out there at this point with the rental market, and I guess the New Democratic caucus recognizes the importance of alleviating the concerns of the landlords in that we're not putting in rent controls over a necessarily longer period of time, but it's something that's subject to dealing with the circumstances as they present themselves. Certainly, in the immediate past here in Alberta and across other jurisdictions rent controls and guidelines have been brought in and then just as reasonably been brought out.

I had the opportunity to speak to the former mayor of Edmonton, Mr. Terry Cavanagh, and he had the distinction of presiding over the phasing out of rent controls as they were placed here in the province of Alberta probably some 30 years ago. He said that the benefit of bringing in a reasonable amount of regulation and then phasing it out again in a reasonable and timely fashion actually helped to build more rental accommodation across the city of Edmonton and across the province of Alberta but also fostered lots of goodwill between the various developers and apartment owners and the population, which was experiencing a parallel although somehow smaller economic and population boom than we are now experiencing here in 2007. The point is that working with regulations in a timely fashion, in fact, does create the stability that we need to meet the needs of renters and to meet the needs of landlords as well.

One difference that I certainly recognize from the last economic boom in the mid-1970s into the early '80s here in the province is that there was certainly more accommodation to build rental accommodation than there is here now with the second boom, 30-some years later. So I think it's important for us to recognize the differences that occurred from that period of time to now and try to learn from them somehow. Certainly, one of the differences was that there was a lot more sense of optimism on the part of people who would build rental accommodation and lots more entrepreneurs, I think, entering into building rental accommodation on a smaller scale. You got a lot more people just building a walk-up here and there and some encouragement from the provincial government to do so.

You know, it makes a huge difference that from the provincial side 30 years ago there was a sense that people were going to be looked after both on the rental side and on the landlord side so that people felt as though they could make that financial risk to actually build those accommodations. That's what we're asking for here now in 2007, to put in place an arrangement that is stable using the structure of Bill 34 augmented by amendment A2. Really, I think we're creating a nice starting point for renters to feel some sense of stability but landlords and entrepreneurs to have some sense of stability as well, to know what to expect and to build around those things.

You know, if you are making a return on your investment that is ranging between 7 and, say, 10 or 12 per cent, that's not a bad investment. You know that the economy in the province of Alberta, with a little bit more stewardship and a little more care on the part of the provincial government, is in fact going to continue to provide a growing population in any given city you decide to build rental accommodations in, coupled with a nice stable number in real terms of between 7 and 10 per cent, not to mention the increase in value of that property as a piece of equity in the first place, which is bound to continue to increase considering the development of industrial upgraders here in the city of Edmonton. Those two together, by any stretch of the imagination, make a pretty sound investment in regard to building new rental accommodation or any accommodation here in general. That's what we're trying to do here. The sense of stability certainly works well on the landlord side as well, as I had mentioned previously, with having stable tenants and also providing accommodation for not just families and working people but for students as well.

Let's not forget that this whole housing crisis is only going to be inflamed when we have a turnover of the new school year in all of the cities that have major postsecondary educational institutions across the province, when suddenly there's not only a shortage but the affordability question for postsecondary students will loom over the horizon and rear its ugly head and just seek to compound the crisis that we're now facing.

So we're putting amendment A2 into place with the flexibility of not having a fixed time on it. It could be shorter or it could be longer. We're not presuming anything. It gives us that flexibility, and quite frankly I think that when Albertans wake up tomorrow morning, which is coming sooner than we think, and they see that we have in fact combined Bill 34 with amendment A2, we'll have created a circumstance that people can not only just live with but also will create some stability for a long-term future for rental accommodation in the province of Alberta.

You know, there's been a lot of speculation about doing something in regard to this or not doing something. I think we all have to try to buck up a little bit here and not just entrench ourselves in the positions that we've created over the last hours and days but, rather, look for some degree of flexibility. Certainly, on our part we are I think demonstrating a great deal of flexibility here with amendment A2 because it can function for as short or as long as the government might choose to do. So it's not as though we're putting in some great five-year plan here that will lock us into rent guidelines for a long period of time. Things can turn around on a dime and turn around quickly, and away we go. We can make adjustments to this amendment and feel comfortable in doing so.

You know, I was so happy when we did have this Affordable Housing Task Force report that finally came out, really addressing this situation in a very practical way, looking at the population and how it's growing so quickly, looking at some of the crisis stories that came to the task force's attention as they travelled around Alberta. I was very, very encouraged as well to see the machinations of the debate that the task force had into building their plan and coming to a majority situation – right? – coming to a majority decision to in fact support this idea of CPI plus 2 per cent. I know that that was an educational experience for the members that were involved in the task force because I know that lots of people had preconceptions about the negative potential ramifications of having rent guidelines in place, but then during the course of the 45 days they came to realize that in fact this was a positive thing to bring forward, supporting it as part of a package.

That's the key message that I would like to leave this fine Assembly with, that Bill 34 must work in consort with an amendment like A2 here; otherwise, the two of them are dysfunctional on their own. If you put them together, then it becomes a harmonious one-two sort of legislative punch that will serve renters, add stability and some reassurance to landlords and to rental companies, and ultimately stabilize the population and give people a place to live and some hope for the future.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

With that, Mr. Chair, I offer my encouragement to all members to in fact support amendment A2. Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wasn't going to speak on this, but after listening to the rhetoric, I felt compelled to speak to this one. This one is even actually worse than the one that we've already defeated. Let me point out some of the flaws in it. First of all, I don't know what the 2 per cent is. It's 2 per cent of what? If it's 2 per cent of the Alberta consumer price index as published by Statistics Canada, then of course that's a minuscule amount and really doesn't amount to anything. Let me explain why I believe we're going in the wrong direction with these if we would pass this kind of thing. It's no question that as soon as government interferes with the private sector this way, you just completely blow out any kind of stability or any confidence that the government is not going to continue to meddle.

Now, let's look at this. Let's look at this. With the way that the province has got pockets that are hot and pockets that are not suffering the same and not getting the same kind of increases in the past, if you were to put in something like this that applies across the province – look at what's happening. Just take, for example, the taxation. In the city of Edmonton I understand that our taxes are going to be going up about 5 per cent this year. The mayor apparently today said something about next year being 7, 8, 10 per cent. Well, just compare that with the consumer price index plus the 2 per cent of whatever that is 2 per cent of, and add those together.

But there's another big factor in here that you've got to also consider. We've gone to a system on the taxation side of assessing on market value. Well, when you get into the hot areas, the attrition on the property is increasing your actual tax bill considerably more than the percentage increase in the mill rate. So I can see cases where a landlord with a rental accommodation, that we're wanting more of – and that's where our problem is; we don't have enough of it – in fact could be losing money.

Just think about it. If you put this in now and there has been one of the landlords that hasn't been gouging, if we determine what that is, when they've made the raise, they can't do it again this year. If they made a moderate raise that is reasonable, then we plant this on top of it and stop him next time from recouping what probably is his added cost, why on earth would anybody invest in more housing? Why would they do it? Go build a condominium, and you'll make a lot more money on it.

This nonsense about affordable housing: I wish somebody could explain to me what that means. I have never been able to understand it because affordable housing in Rocky is an entirely different thing than an affordable house in Edmonton. Or move up to Fort McMurray. Compare the numbers. What's affordable housing in any one of those places? We keep on talking, but I don't know what that means.

Mr. Chairman, I think that if we want to have an even worse problem a year from now, just adopt this kind of nonsense.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I rise in support of amendment A2. It's substantially similar to the one that was brought forward by my colleague, and I'm willing to support it based on that.

I was interested to hear once again the argument from the government that somehow they're creating stability when clearly what we have right now is a state of chaos, and that was entirely created by the government's choices in how this was not managed. I'm always interested in where they choose to interfere in the marketplace and where they choose to not interfere in the marketplace.

Mr. MacDonald: Electricity. Insurance.

Ms Blakeman: Exactly. We've had them interfere all over the place: muddy little government handprints in electricity deregulation and in regulating that marketplace, not to the benefit of the citizens of Alberta, I can tell you, because, boy, are we paying substantially higher electricity rates than we were 10 years ago. Yikes. They happily got muddy little paw prints all over automobile insurance. There are the applications through to the EUB. What are some of the other marketplaces that they get into here and interfere with all the time? Those are a couple of them.

Mr. Elsalhy: Travel clubs.

Ms Blakeman: Travel clubs.

Mr. MacDonald: Road construction with their P3s.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, the P3s. Yeah, that's another way that they get into interfering with all kinds of things. Yet when we really need them to help to modify a market place on a temporary basis – now, you've never heard any of us say that these should be brought in and left in forever. That's never come out of the Liberal caucus. We've always talked about temporary, and we've even put timelines, dates on what we were proposing. You know, the only ones that just have this run forever and ever in this state of chaos seems to be the government.

The other thing that I find really interesting about what the government has been talking about with this . . . [interjection] I can see that the Minister of Health and Wellness is really eager to get in on this discussion. I look forward to his contribution to the debate.

I find it really interesting that the government doesn't seem to understand the difference between affordable housing – in other words, ownership of a home or of a condominium in some way – and rental housing. They seem to flip back and forth between the two as though it was the same thing, and it's not. It clearly is not. Trying to create a rental marketplace or to help that come into existence and find some stability is entirely different than telling us that you're creating housing that people can purchase. Some renters are going to be able to move into a purchase market, and some never will. You will always need some kind of rental accommodation, and they're not the same thing.

While I realize that government members, you know, with all the extra committees they're on and all the extra pay they make – I understand that most of those folks or all of you can afford to buy condominiums. Actually, you'll probably make a pretty fair deal. By the time you leave public office and sell your condo, you've made a good amount of money here, but most of the other people that we're talking to these days are in a rental market, and they're never going to make it into a home ownership or a condo market.

I find it really interesting that the government doesn't seem to distinguish between those two marketplaces, and it's important because the people that we've had coming into these galleries, that we've been introducing – we've been asking questions on behalf of them – are in a rental marketplace, and that's where the problem is right now.

Yes, we also have a problem with enough units everywhere, and I've talked about transitional housing units. We've talked about emergency accommodation units. Yeah, there are problems in those housing markets as well. But there is a difference between how many rental units are going to be available and how many ownership units are going to be available.

You know, in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre – I've told this House – I started to get letters about significant increases in rental costs more than a year ago, and there has been not one new rental unit that has been built in Edmonton-Centre over the last year. Yet according to what the Conservatives keep saying, that was an optimum marketplace for that to be happening. Because the supply was very low, we should have had lots of people running to try and build new rental accommodation. It never happened, not one unit.

Mr. Hancock: Look at all the rental accommodation that was made available when renters moved into their new houses because of the low mortgage rates.

Ms Blakeman: A good strategy, not connected to reality in Alberta.

We keep being told: oh, that rental marketplace will work if you just stay out of it, you know; they'll build more units. Well, they didn't. That situation has been in place in Edmonton-Centre for more than a year, and nothing has been built.

When I look at who, for the most part, owns those rental units in there, they are not developers. They didn't build the accommodation that they own and manage now, and they probably will not ever build it. They are in a different business entirely. They just own these buildings. They buy them already built. Most of the housing stock in my constituency is pre-1970. The guys that are making the money off those rental increases right now have never built an apartment building. Never. They just bought it as it was, and they bought it, in all likelihood, in the last 10 or 15 years, and they're just making money on it. So don't tell me that there are developers out there who would, but for interference, be building rental accommodation. It's simply not true, and it has not played out in my constituency at all, and I've got a lot of apartments.

Out of all the people that I have now, there are 500 single-family units left in my constituency. Five hundred. Everybody else lives in high-rise or apartment rental accommodation or condominiums or in a townhouse situation. That's the kind of marketplace that we have for housing in Edmonton-Centre. So all of this mythology around how this will work has simply not played out in Edmonton-Centre.

You may be able to show me examples – and I invite you to show me examples – of other places in Edmonton where there have been new rental units built in response to this incredible lack of supply, but what we're really seeing play out is what we see in the annual report from Boardwalk, which is saying: "This is great. Very low supply. We're going to make money hand over fist. Let's keep going. We won't build any new units. We'll just keep, you know, raising the rent on what we've got because it's a very limited supply, and it's a supply and demand market. We're going to make more money." So what I keep hearing from the Conservatives about how this is all supposed to work is simply not happening.

I'm more than happy to support the amendment that's been brought forward as amendment A2 because what we need to see here has got to go forward with a two-pronged approach to this. It's got to be about a notification period, that it can't be increased more than once in a 12-month period. Frankly, this has got to have an end date on it, and with that must go a rental cap because otherwise you end up with exactly what we've got right now, which is chaos and instability and no end in sight for when there would be some kind of stability come back into this.

So that's what I would like to see. That's certainly what my constituents want and need to see. I think it's irresponsible of this government to keep talking about a nonexistent marketplace. It's completely dysfunctional. What you've got are extraordinary circumstances. The public looks to the government to take action in cases of extraordinary circumstances. What are we getting from this government? "Oh, well, gee. No idea. Um, um. Let's have a task force and then not pay attention to what they say and put one thing in place that really creates chaos in the system" because they won't put the second thing in place that goes along with it. You know, I was always skeptical about Conservative money management, marketplace philosophy, but, boy, I've seen nothing but dumb ideas play out over the last couple of years flowing from that stuff.

I recommend that we support this amendment. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know, I'm a forester, and I spent a lot of my life counting trees, so maybe I'm just simple or something. I don't know, but at some level this seems like you can reduce it to a fairly simple argument. We have a short-term problem, and we have a long-term problem. I think that, very obviously, everybody would agree that the long-term problem is that somehow we have to get more housing units built or chase some people away. Nobody has mentioned that as a possible solution, so probably we need to build some housing.

I think we also all agree that we have a short-term situation here, which is the reason we're standing here tonight. It's the reason that the government initiated a task force that the Premier mandated in his letter to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. We have to do something. We have a task force, our government has responded to that task force, and here we are tonight standing and debating this.

Keeping in mind that we have a long-term problem and we have to bring some housing on the market, does anybody in this House think that it would be a good idea in solving the short-term problem to absolutely kill the construction of new units? I kind of find it hard to believe that anybody would say that that would be a good solution. Surely, you know, if you were sitting here with some money to invest and the government tonight were to send you a signal that – guess what? – your rent is controlled and you're not going to be able to increase it by more than the inflation index and confiscate your property, is anybody over there willing to invest their money in an apartment complex? I don't think so. While we're trying to solve this short-term problem, we have to figure out how we're going to get the long-term problem moving, which is incenting people to build apartments, not disincenting them.

Ms Pastoor: Just what you're waiting for.

Mr. Oberle: The point of that comment is lost on me entirely, Mr. Chairman. I'm not sure what is meant by that comment.

We've got to work in parallel here. We have to solve a short-term situation while solving a long-term situation. The long-term situation, again, is to put housing on the market.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has pointed out that nobody is building apartments in her constituency. I would point out that that's not true across Alberta. Peace River just brought on a new 70-unit apartment building – that translated to the population of Edmonton would translate into thousands of apartments – quite a big building for a town the size of Peace River. There are other communities across Alberta that are building apartments. I don't know Edmonton-Centre, and I'll allow that the member is correct in that, but again I'll point out that it's not across Alberta.

But if nobody is building apartment units in Edmonton-Centre, then maybe somebody should ask themselves why that is, and I'm just betting it's not because they don't have rent controls. I'm betting that if we put rent controls on, nobody's going to wake up tomorrow and say: darn it all, I'm going to build an apartment. It's not going to happen. It's a disincentive. It's most certainly not an incentive to build apartments. We need to figure out what it's going to take to bring units into the market in the long term. In the short term, in the crisis that we have, I think the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, the minister of seniors have outlined over a hundred million dollars of aid available to people that find themselves in crisis. That's what we have to be focusing on right here. Let's not get the long term wrong by focusing on the short term. That's cutting off your nose to spite your face.

That's all I have to say, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak against amendment A2 as moved by the leader of the third party, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, that Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 1(4)(b) by adding the following after the proposed subsection (8):

(9) A landlord shall not increase the rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement by an amount greater than the percentage increase in the Alberta Consumer Price Index published by Statistics Canada for the previous calendar year plus 2%.

Mr. Chairman, as I said before, the Alberta Liberal Party believes in fairness, sustainability in the market, but I also said that we believe in temporary relief control, not a long-term solution. A long-term solution – I agree with the hon. member – is to build affordable homes. Some owners are no doubt gouging renters. It's not right, but we must have some temporary relief control, which is missing in this bill although it's important. We believe in temporary relief control, but a time limit is missing in this amendment A2. The amendment may be helpful only to the tenants but not to the investors.

We want to keep investors in Alberta. That's why we support short-term relief programs, but the long-term solution is more affordable houses in Alberta. This is my point of view, but still, you know, the major flaw with Bill 34 is the failure to introduce any kind of rent regulation. There should be some sort of relief, but we don't want an amendment like this one without any particular time limit, which would discourage some investors in Alberta. As mentioned above, there's nothing in the bill to protect renters from massive rent increases while they wait for the market to stabilize, which could take two years to see the first evidence of new units.

What is needed and where this bill fails is to introduce renter protection measures in the short term. We cannot support a bill that has such a fundamental flaw. The evidence overwhelmingly is that Alberta renters, mostly in the cities, are being subjected to unreasonable rental increases due to a destabilized market. This is not a new problem. There have been many instances of rental increases that are simply rent gouging for over a year. The failure of the government is to not recognize that sometimes in rare instances the market does not work. In those instances temporary measures must be taken to protect citizens in the short term.

Bill 34 fails to provide a temporary rent regulation to protect Albertans; thus, it cannot be supported. The only way to support this bill is if they amend it to include, I again repeat, a temporary rent regulation, not the one mentioned in amendment A2. We will be introducing amendments to Bill 34 to accomplish just that.

The two options available are what the Alberta Liberal's policy advocated, a one-year, one-time temporary rent regulation that limits the rent increases within that period to a maximum of 10 per cent. The second option would be to implement the recommendation of the Affordable Housing Task Force that called for a two-year rent regulation that would keep rental rates within the guidelines of the CPI plus 2 per cent. The task force also recommended a mechanism to allow owners to apply for an increase over the annual guideline to recover actual costs.

The bill fails to provide protection for renters in the short term. This is critical to any plan to address the affordable housing crisis. Without this measure this bill fails Albertans. The entire substance of the bill is in the regulations. Once again the government is hiding behind regulations, making authority that allows the minister discretion to change these amendments at will. This does not provide stability for anyone if the rules can be changed behind closed doors at the discretion of the minister. If the government was confident in its amendments, it should have clearly put the substance of them embedded in the legislation. If changes were being contemplated at any time, a bill would have to be introduced in the House and opened for debate and scrutiny – this is what a government with nothing to hide does – something this government has failed to do here.

I again say that we support a temporary rent regulation only. If we amend that one, I'll be more happy and I will support that bill if we make the right amendment on that.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members? We have the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, my pleasure to rise this morning to participate in debate on this . . .

Mr. R. Miller: Actually, it's still last night officially.

Mr. Elsalhy: Officially it's still last night, but it is 10 after 3 in the morning of Thursday.

Mr. R. Miller: Except it's Wednesday.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yeah, except it's recorded in Hansard as Wednesday. Nevertheless, it's indeed a pleasure.

We have an amendment before us, amendment A2, Mr. Chairman, which, as is every member from the Alberta Liberal caucus, I am going to urge all members of this House to not support, and I'll tell you why. In amendment A1 we were asking for temporary intervention, a temporary measure to bring some degree of stability to the housing market, which, as we argued time and time again, is extremely inflated and is inexplicably scorching hot. The amendment before us from the NDP caucus is basically calling for a permanent or an indefinite rent increase cap. It basically calls for a cap that is here forever, here to stay. It's calculated by adding the Alberta consumer price index, the inflation figure from year to year, and then adding 2 per cent on top, very similar to what we recommended in amendment A1. The only difference, as I mentioned, is that this is indefinite. This is forever. We are totally opposed to having a permanent rent cap in this province, and this is something that the members of the Alberta Liberal caucus have been quite clear on in our own internal discussions and in our printed policy that we're sharing with Albertans.

Now, the reason why we are opposed is because we feel that temporary rent measures are fair to both landlords and tenants. When we bring in a permanent cap, then it's not fair to landlords and, to a degree, also not fair to those tenants because some of the arguments that we've heard in this House earlier, Mr. Chairman, will come true. So we're not in favour of a permanent cap on rental increases. We only advocated what the task force on housing advocated, and that is to bring in a short-term, temporary rent cap, not even a freeze. We're basically allowing rents to increase but only for a very short period of time, two years, Mr. Chairman, to allow the market to equilibrate and to settle.

So, in my opinion, amendment A2 is extreme. It should come as no surprise to you, Mr. Chairman, that the Alberta Liberal position is halfway between the extreme request from the NDP caucus to have the market permanently controlled, and then the other extreme is you have the PC caucus, where, actually, no control is advocated, and they want to leave the market to decide for itself. So we're basically advocating a position of balance, a position of sort of holding the middle ground and fairness to both landlords and tenants as indicated by my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Now, I want to go back, Mr. Chairman, and use this opportunity to highlight other areas where this very government, the same government – they refer to themselves as the new government, but they're not – intervened or stepped in and regulated or came to the aid of certain sectors or industries in this province. They do it all the time, but they do it selectively. My argument is that tenants should be really looked at as one of those groups of people that receive support and assistance from this government.

I'm going to first of all talk about a little excerpt from Hansard. The former minister from Drumheller-Stettler said in Hansard on May 16, 2001, in estimates:

Our agricultural community is faced with some very serious difficulties related to input costs and world prices for products and the potential for weather problems, and that's a subject that we could probably spend the whole next hour just discussing. Hence, highlighted in this budget is assistance for the agricultural industry.

She goes on to say:

This budget contains programs to assist the industry with rising input costs and other items.

Then further down she says:

That's an increase of $255.5 million when compared to the last year's budget. Of course, the largest budget increase appears in the farm income support allocation.

So this government didn't leave the market to decide for itself. They actually stepped in and supported our farmers, who were having difficulty making ends meet. The farmers were having a tough year, and the government had no problem and showed no hesitation stepping in to support them.

Another example, again from Hansard, March 6, 2002. The then minister of gaming, who is now the hon. Minister of Justice, was moving Bill 16, the Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002. I quote from Hansard. "Mr. Speaker, horse racing has a long and colourful history in Alberta. Bill 16 is intended to assist the industry and Alberta's agricultural community in their efforts to revitalize this proud tradition." So, again, they deemed it to be a worthy cause to warrant attention and support, and they stepped in and helped the horse racing industry.

Again, less than a year later, on April 9, 2003, Mr. Chairman, the same minister, the minister of gaming then, indicated in Hansard, "The line item relative to horse racing is a commitment that this government made to Horse Racing Alberta in 2001, so it's a fulfillment of an obligation that we have to that particular industry." He mentioned that the commitment that was made "was to assist the industry through racing entertainment centres that were connected with racetracks throughout the province." Again, they deemed it important to look favourably on an industry that was struggling, and they came to its aid. They stepped in and supported an industry. They didn't leave the market to decide for itself. If that industry was destined to fail, they didn't allow that to happen. They stepped in.

This government interferes all the time. They have no hesitancy. They have no trouble coming to the aid of certain select groups and also selectively leaving other groups behind.

Another example. Mr. Chairman, I can go on and on about examples of how this government at times finds it necessary to do this. On May 11, 2004, the deputy Premier back then was responding to a question from my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. He was asking her about BSE compensation payments. I'm quoting from Hansard again.

What I can tell him, again, is that I am proud of the beef industry in this province, who designed the programs to assist the industry.

Now, this is important.

I will remind the hon. member that the people who designed all programs were some 65 individuals from small and large packers, from small and large feedlots, from the five organizations that represent the total beef industry in this province, including the retail industry and, at times, the people who convey these animals. Mr. Speaker, this was truly an industry/government partnership, and it was successful.

What they did here is that they brought in some people from the industry, and they said: "How can we be of service today? What would you guys like?" The people came up with BSE subsidy programs, which the government automatically rubber-stamped and said: "Fine. We're going to give it to you." Then a minister of the Crown stood up and defended that decision and said how wonderful it was and how successful it was, how great it was. I don't dispute that the farmers needed assistance because of the BSE crisis. But the fact is: why is this industry any more important than another sector of society, renters? Let's count how many people are captured under that definition of a tenant, or a renter, and let's see if they need assistance just like any of those industries and sectors.

Mr. Chairman, like I say, you have to be fair to both landlords and tenants. In my opinion and in my caucus's opinion to be fair is to bring in a temporary, short-term with a clear sunset clause, a clear expiry date, measure to allow the market to settle, to rest, to deflate if you want. If we're talking about inflation, the opposite would be a deflation, something to bring it back to normal. Having it for two years like we suggested or, in fact, as the NDP highlighted, our printed policy of 10 per cent for one year allows some of that supply that we're asking for to be brought in.

I have to again disagree with the government that temporary rent regulations dissuade or disintices people to build new units. You know what? We haven't had a lot of new units built over the last two decades. So that argument is not particularly strong, Mr. Chairman.

Now, another example which I found quite interesting, selectively making decisions and arbitrarily picking winners and losers. In 2002 the Tory caucus of the day selectively banned controlled hunting of elk on private property, but guess what? They did not control any hunting of bison, wild boar, or game birds, for example. Now, wasn't that a form of regulation? They chose elk, and they said that this was not allowed, but they left everything else. Wasn't that interference with private business? Wasn't that interference with property rights?

The government claimed that it listened to Albertans, who in a survey conducted that year, in 2002 – and the minister of agriculture is probably aware of that survey; he probably has it in his archive – overwhelmingly opposed so-called pen hunting. Okay, fine. What it shows here is that this government occasionally listens to the people of this province, and they occasionally poll them and survey them, and they ask them what they think.

Why not go to the public and ask them what they think on the issue of rent regulation? Why take that decision, you know, behind closed doors and not listen to, one, the people of this province and, two, the task force that was entrusted to solicit that kind of feedback. The task force was fair, and it was well structured. They had representation from all three parties in this House, and they also had experts from the community and the industry and economists and people like this. They heard the pros and the cons. They heard the for and the against.

Why not listen to the people? Why not listen to the experts? Why not listen to some of their own MLAs in their own caucus, who advocate some sort of rent regulation. Again, I find it quite puzzling that they have no difficulty indicating their support for some measure to bring back stability to the market. They say it, you know, in the media, for example, but in this House they remain quiet. As a matter of fact, when an amendment is being discussed, they just vote in unison and en masse. I find this quite puzzling, and I find it disturbing that what they say outside of the House is different from what they do and say inside the Chamber.

So this government interferes in the market, and I actually have about eight or nine other examples, which I'm going to hopefully bring to your attention for your interest, Mr. Chairman. I know that you're quite interested in this. You've been a member of this government for quite a while. There's a ton of stuff in Hansard here that we should be referring to from time to time because history has lessons for us to learn, and sometimes it has a tendency to repeat itself, but then sometimes these lessons are forgotten. We have to remind ourselves, the new members who came in 2004 and some of the old members, too, because sometimes their memory fails them, that this is what this government has always done.

A government is elected to protect people and to serve people, and if the government says, "We're not interfering in this, we're not doing this, we have nothing to do, and there's no reason for us to butt in," then why do we need them? Why do we need this government? Let business run the province. They can all retire and get their severance packages and transitional allowances, and let's get it over with.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to take my seat. I voiced my unhappiness with this amendment, and I want to again emphasize that it's an issue of balance, holding that middle ground between an extreme like the NDP and an extreme like the PC government.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I feel compelled to get up and to speak against amendment A2. There have been some interesting new twists to the discussion that's going on, and I guess that I feel, like I say, obliged to get up and to counter some of those thoughts and to hopefully continue the deductive reasoning on why we should not be looking at putting a limit on the increase that's in line with the Alberta consumer price index plus 2 per cent with no time limit or anything else.

As has been said earlier, this is, perhaps, even a poorer amendment than the last one. What has amazed me in the discussion is the concern that there haven't been any new apartment buildings being built, but there are condos being built. Quite often it's talked about and been referred to that 7 to 10 per cent is a good return and a sound investment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has often referred to and told me about his years in the investment business, and he understands it well, so I would recommend that perhaps the third opposition party should go out and start raising the money so that they can get the investment. It's a sound investment, according to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. Go out and get those 93,000-plus votes. I'm not sure about the Liberals, whether they've decided that this is a sound investment or another one. It's amazing to me that people talk about sound investments, yet they're unable to raise the money.

The hon. Member for – I want to say Peace River.

An Hon. Member: Peace River.

Mr. Hinman: Just Peace River, that's all? Such a nice, short, beautiful title. Some of us have three handles, and we've got to look after them.

He brought it down to a simple equation, which is what it's about, that we need more housing. How do we get it? You will never get it if you start putting caps on, start putting in interference.

I want to refer to a story that I remember reading during Hurricane Katrina. An entrepreneur loaded up his truck with generators and drove for, I think, 36 or 40 hours to get there to sell those. When the first ones arrived, there was a great need for it, and there were people with money. He was charging, I believe it was, sums like $3,000 per generator. People came running up that couldn't afford it, started complaining and saying: "This is gouging. This is un-American. We shouldn't allow this." They actually confiscated the generators and took them out so that they couldn't even be used there. The other people had thought: "This is great. We're going to go there because of the shortage." Yes, when you first arrive in these crisis situations, things really are out of whack, and everybody agrees that it's out of whack. By stepping in and having the law use the heavy hand and say, "Well, this is too much," stopped the flow of generators, and then none arrived. Everybody says: well, where are they going to put it where it's legal for me to take something and sell?

The fact of the matter is that we have a huge influx of people wanting to come to this province. They're coming here because they think it is a better opportunity for them. I go back to the same argument that I brought up earlier on the other amendments. If this government wants to control, we've got to go against our own constitution, which is the freedom of mobility to come here, and say: don't come here. We could change all this. There is a price for freedom. The market does swing back and forth, but we don't want to make that pendulum swing further and magnify the crisis.

So once again I've got to speak against this amendment. Realize that it isn't in the interest of those that are suffering the most, which we need to think of the hardest. We want building to go forward.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung went on for a long time about all of the past assistance that was given to industry, so I'd ask the hon. member: are we going to give assistance to the builders? There's a difference between industry and consumers, and we have to look at that. I don't agree with the assistance. I believe that the market squeeze is going to continue to push building. We've been building at an unprecedented rate. You can read in every city that the building permits are up; they're up; they're up. The building is going on. There's a problem with a shortage of land and the zoning and those types of things that should be expedited and moved forward quicker, but to put a simple cap on the increase on the rent payable will not solve the problem. Therefore, I need to speak against amendment A2.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

3:30

The Acting Chair: Well, thank you, hon. member.

We now have the hon. leader of the ND opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to speak in favour of amendment A2, which will put in place restrictions on the amount of rent increase a landlord can implement. It can be no greater than the percentage increase in the Alberta consumer price index published by Stats Canada for the previous calendar year plus 2 per cent.

I want to begin by addressing the comments of the Member for Edmonton-McClung, to which I took great exception. The Alberta New Democrats have been clear from the outset that this particular approach would be one that is of a temporary nature, and the Liberals know that. In fact, I want to indicate that in the last Liberal amendment, which we supported, it was pretty clear that it mirrored the recommendations of the Affordable Housing Task Force and also the policy of our party and caucus, and that included the time limitation.

It also, Mr. Chairman, had other aspects that were not contained immediately within the wording of that particular amendment. For example, we have also called, as has the task force, for a mechanism to allow landlords that have extraordinary expenses to be able to apply for an increase beyond the 2 per cent above the CPI. That was not included in the Liberal amendment. It was not included, but they stated that in their debate.

Similarly, we have always intended that the rent caps should be of a temporary nature. The government has indicated that it will be a minimum of two years before some of the housing that they have planned will come onto the market, but it may well be more than that. So for the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to attack our motion because it doesn't include specific timelines is equivalent to someone attacking their motion because it doesn't provide a mechanism for extraordinary rent increases.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I appreciated the support of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on this amendment. It's unfortunate that some of her colleagues went out of their way to try and break what unity there was around the whole question of opposition to the government's bill and the lack of rent guidelines. I take exception to the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. The actual Liberal policy bears very little relationship to the motion that they put forward, and I'll just read the section from the Liberal website. It says: "Our plan also limits rent increases to once per year. We will institute a one-time, one year long, temporary rent regulation measure that limits rent increases within that period to a maximum of 10%."

Mr. Chairman, we know that it's going to take more than one year before new housing comes on the market. If the Liberal policy, then, is to limit it to one year, then in the second year nothing will have changed. In fact, the situation likely will have worsened. So there is a serious deficiency in the official Liberal policy, which quite clearly also is very different from the motion that was put forward originally by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. I appreciated his motion. I supported it, and I believe that it is the right approach.

Our amendment is somewhat less extensive, but it is almost exactly the same, so for some members on the Official Opposition side to turn around and attack our position for being extreme is completely invalid and unacceptable as far as I'm concerned. Mr. Chairman, their motion may be fair, but that motion by Edmonton-Glenora doesn't represent the Liberal policy position, so I would hope that they would put forward an amendment here that corresponds to the policy on their website.

Having said that, I think that we've made considerable progress working together with respect to this issue, and we need to focus our attention on the government.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to come back to the annual report of the Boardwalk Real Estate Investment Trust.

Mr. MacDonald: How much of the market do they control?

Mr. Mason: They control a considerable portion of the market. Of course, they don't brag about that in their annual report to their shareholders. It's interesting. [interjections] And what is the percentage in Calgary? And what is the percentage in Edmonton? I'm not sure. We'll have to check. We'll have to check the hon. Justice minister's figures on that.

Here's what they say, though, Mr. Chairman. In the three months leading up to December 31, 2006, their revenue in Calgary went up 16.9 per cent; their operating expenses went down 6 per cent. In Edmonton their revenue went up 10.9 per cent; their operating expenses went down 4.2 per cent. In the rest of Alberta their revenue went up 16.3. Their operating expenses in the rest of Alberta went down 5.3 per cent. So the argument that some members of the government have put forward that, in fact, the reason for these rent increases is to cover additional costs is simply not true. Their costs are actually going down according to their own quarterly financial report.

Now, there are certain things, you know, things that are under the government's control, that are actually rising, but I just want to indicate that their report, appropriately entitled Opportunity Knocks, has some very revealing information about the future for this province and something that I wish the government had done some forecasting on. They go on to say – and this is in the absence of any rent guidelines – that "rental starts have fallen, particularly in Edmonton, which will contribute to a further tightening of the market through 2007 as demand exceeds supply." What does that mean, Mr. Chairman? What it means is that rents are going to continue to rise. The kind of trend that we've seen now, this upward trend in rents that is causing so much trouble, is going to worsen as we move through the year 2007.

So more people are going to be affected than have been so far. What does the government offer for those people? Well, they may offer a delay in the rent increases, if they do as they have indicated they will, and that is to pass a regulation that requires a year's notice for rent increase. I'm sure the landlords will be lobbying them like crazy to stop that once this legislation is passed, if it is. But eventually that year will be up, and people will have to pay up or move out, and that's unacceptable.

The report goes on to say that "demand for rental accommodation also remains high as affordability for home purchase continues to decline and prospective first time home-owners are increasingly priced out of the market." This gets us into a whole secondary issue relating to housing, Mr. Chairman, and that's the fact that young families can't afford to buy houses in Alberta anymore. According to Boardwalk – and they should know – those people have been priced out of the housing market and are forced to rent, and they're forced to rent in a tightening rental market with increasing rents and no protection from a government that lacks compassion.

Mr. Chairman, government member after government member has suggested that if there is some sort of rental cap, it's going to prevent the construction of new units, but we've said over and over and over again that, in fact, no cap should apply to new units that are being constructed. Of course, they have no logical explanation for why rent caps would in any way interfere with the investment in new apartment units, so their basic argument against rent caps simply has no validity.

Of course, this is borne out in other places where rent caps are in place and there is considerably more investment in new rental units and development of new rental units than there is in Alberta where it's declining. All of the statistics show that it's declining. There is an increase in condo construction, Mr. Chairman, but not in rental units. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is quite right: there are almost no new rental units that are being constructed. Her constituency is the centre of . . .

An Hon. Member: The universe.

Mr. Mason: Well, I know. Please don't encourage her, hon. member. I think she probably represents more MLAs than anyone else.

It's the centre of the rental market in Edmonton, and there are similar constituencies in Calgary. Those people are all faced with dramatic rent increases, and there is not a lot of new rental accommodation that's being constructed in those places. That, I think, is proof that the government policy is failing. I mean, it would be just as logical to argue that the lack of rent guidelines is preventing the construction of new rental units as it is to argue that even talking about rent guidelines is somehow preventing investment or would impede investment in new units to which the rent guidelines don't apply. So, Mr. Chairman, the logic on the other side is really, really quite lacking.

I want to say as well, Mr. Chairman, that the very large rent increases have not abated. They are continuing to flow into my constituency office, and I'm sure that they are flowing into others as well. We have another fairly dramatic rental increase which we want to address tomorrow.

Mr. R. Miller: Today.

Mr. Mason: Whether it's today or tomorrow or whenever it is according to the rules of this House.

There continue to be some very, very dramatic rent increases against people who are completely unable to pay, that are unjustified by any standard much less even by market forces. They are so extreme. The problem is that the government has never defined it. The Premier talks about certain types of rent increases as being un-Albertan and threatens to send in his housing minister to have a little chat with the apartment owners and the landlords that are doing that, but he won't back it up with any legal action, which he should do. Mr. Chairman, he should put his legislation where his mouth is. In other words, if it's un-Albertan, if it's not right, then he has an obligation to back that up with legislation and not just talk.

That's been the basic problem of this government since it got elected. It talks about being open and accountable. It's not. It talks about being compassionate and caring about people. It's not. It talks about housing being a number one priority. You'd never know it. Mr. Chairman, if housing is their number one priority and this is how they deal with it, we are in a lot of trouble because you can just imagine how their third, fourth, and fifth priorities are going to be handled. Obviously, they're having a lot of trouble coping with this issue.

Mr. Chairman, it comes back to, you know, a real lack of understanding of the whole idea, the whole nature of democratic and open government, which is another one of their claims or their promises. They got it a little bit, I would say, when they decided to strike a task force, even put some opposition people on it, even put on people from nonprofit organizations that are working in the field, and so on, and had them go out and talk to Albertans. That part was good. But then when the report came back, they reverted to their old ways and took that report behind closed doors where they made the decision without the benefit of public input or discussion. The result, of course, is that they made the wrong decision. They made a bad decision, and they seem to be almost deliberately digging themselves into a deeper hole with every step they take.

The government doesn't look very good on this issue at all. I'm really curious about how they're going to get out of it. If Boardwalk is right and the rental market is going to tighten further, that means that rents are going to go up more, and more people are going to be forced out of their homes. Even if they put in place the regulation for a year, then when that year is up, people are going to be faced with very large rental increases. Why doesn't the government just admit that it made a mistake, admit that it has no plan to help renters, and admit that they have to change course and put something in place that actually will do the job?

Our amendment, Mr. Chairman, will do that. Our amendment will limit the rental increases that landlords can charge and allow them actually to make an increase beyond inflation. They will actually be able to raise their rents by more than the inflationary increase, but it will provide protection for tenants. So we think it's balanced.

We also think that it should be temporary. Notwithstanding what some other hon. members have said about the motion, it's very clear that the intent is temporary. But we don't know how long they will stay. The task force recommended two years. The Liberal policy book says one year. I don't think that's enough. Certainly, I haven't heard anyone in this Assembly say that they would object to taking these rent guidelines off if equilibrium was restored to the housing market and some stability to rents had been achieved. If that happens, you know, we will make the motion. I will pledge this to the House: we'll make the motion.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member, for your comments.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, just a couple of short comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has just spent the last 15 minutes criticizing our logic: we don't get it, we don't understand, we're not compassionate. While certainly we have to allow that we're talking about differences in philosophy here, you know, I don't think it's fair to malign our intent here. I will certainly allow that the intent on the other side of the House is to solve a problem here. The intention is to address people that are in need and to solve the housing crisis.

The difference is in philosophy, and I don't think it's useful to wade into a debate which is essentially: "Did not; did too. My dad is bigger than your dad." It's really not all that productive. We should be talking about the problem. But having descended to that level, just allow me to point out for a minute the flaw in the logic over here.

First of all, the hon. member is arguing for temporary rent controls when the amendment says no such thing, I might point out. So whether it's one year or two years over on the Liberal side, it's no years or how many years on the NDP side. So there's a flaw in the logic. The amendment says no such thing. It's open-ended rent control.

Now, the hon. member pointed out that the third party here has argued that, you know, obviously, there should be no rent controls on new construction, interestingly thereby conceding that rent controls on new construction will eliminate new construction, which is the argument we're making. So I guess the next logical question would be: how many landlords does that hon. member know would build a building for that first month's rent from that first renter, and that's their profit? I strongly suspect that with the next renter it won't be new construction anymore. It's old construction the day after somebody moves into it. If that's not the case, then maybe the hon. member could explain to this House under what logic it would be that some landlords are going to be able to increase their rents, and others aren't. That doesn't make any logic either.

Mr. Chairman, it's not just a simple blanket solution. The member has already conceded that. Again, it's a long-term problem of getting housing on the market, and it's a short-term problem of being compassionate.

The approach over there: Swiss cheese has fewer holes in it and, frankly, smells better.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Now I'd call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. If there was the opportunity to clearly indicate what the NDP amendment A2 would like to state, in other words, if it were possible to provide such a thing as a friendly amendment, which I realize it's not, the intention would indicate: plus 2 per cent until the market stabilizes. I believe that's the intent of the amendment, and I would have no problem supporting that intent. Possibly, if we continue on, and if this day becomes a 36-hour day, we could get that amendment to be considered.

However, to talk about Bill 34 and comment a little bit further about what the MLA for Peace River has recommended and to provide an analogy. The House here is burning down, but Bill 34 says that we're going to provide $280 million to rebuild it. I would like to think that we'd have some immediate money, and somebody would go out and get a fire extinguisher. That's what we're talking about when we talk about temporary rent controls, sunset-claused rent controls.

It's not an either/or circumstance. Yes, you need to promote housing in the long term, but you need a series of what I'm calling co-ordinated solutions in order for that to happen. You need to have immediate stabilization, and I think the Member for Peace River recognized that fact through the subsidies. I don't think the Member for Peace River would want those subsidies to go on ad infinitum. There would be a defined period, and that's where we kind of agree.

At the same time, where the disagreement comes in: is it more expensive – and I believe it is for the taxpayer – to subsidize the landlord's profits rather than to subsidize the individual so that they could move and so that the money followed them from place to place? As opposed to putting the money into the landlord's pocket, if we put the money with the tenant so that they could do whatever limited shopping there was an availability for, I think that would improve things. As it is, we're not encouraging any long-term construction if landlords can do rather well at the moment without any new construction just by simply raising the rent to such a point where they're making their profit. There's no maintenance, no renovation, no refurbishing going on; it's strictly a profit.

Now, for the government, in terms of a series of co-ordinated solutions, one of the obvious things is to provide land. You've heard me in this House talk about the dollar deals and the lack of co-ordination or the lack of rules for dollar deals. This is a place where the province could through a variety of organizations, such as donating land to the Calgary Land Trust, that's recognized as a reputable organization that works in co-ordination with groups like Habitat for Humanity – the government could provide land at a reduced price to a builder who guarantees to bring online a series of affordable housing, whether it's in already established districts or whether it's in outlying districts. Of course, part of that affordable housing, because we don't want to extend our footprint, would be in the form of apartments, some would be in a series of row housing, and so on. There would be a degree of variety to it.

I know that we've heard presentations from a builder in Medicine Hat who basically does things with premoulded concrete and is able to reduce the price of affordable housing considerably. So the government, if they want to speed up the process, could do so by incenting the private industry, which does things in a rather efficient manner, to get these houses up and running and with some kind of a leasing agreement whereby, you know, the residents at some point in their mortgage payments will get to own the actual housing.

Back in Calgary in the '70s we had such a thing as co-op housing, and that worked well for those individuals that were interested in it. Part of the co-op housing had common rooms. What happened was that you got a variety of ages of people who supported each other, from retired seniors to young families. It seemed to be an initiative that could potentially have value in a market that seems to have no limits, at least a market the government is not willing to stabilize even for the moment.

I believe what we need to be looking at are not either/ors but a whole series: stabilize, build long-term, provide the supports for the individuals who are in that housing not just in terms of cash incentives, but in some cases it's providing counselling so that they can stay in the house, providing the affordable health care, and look at an entire package that will provide the stability that is currently lacking. To a degree we have to put out the fires of raging inflation, and the only way we can do that is by a temporary measure.

We encourage long-term building through wise investment. It's not an either/or, but right now Bill 34 does not address the here and now. It looks down the road, and unless we address what is a crisis at this time, that crisis is only going to get worse. We cannot keep going to the taxpayer to fund the landlord.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I think we have the hon. Member for Peace River wishing to enter the debate.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, based on the comment just made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, I'm starting to wonder if I've misunderstood this entire problem. If I heard the hon. member right and, as well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, now that I think about it, I'm starting to wonder if members opposite view this problem as the government, the public sector, is going to build this housing, is going to solve this long-term crisis, that we the government are going to build all this housing to meet this housing crunch, lower vacancy rates, all those things. I don't think that's what the government is thinking, and therein maybe lies the conflict that we're in tonight.

If that's the case, these hon. members here have seen the budget. It's under debate right now. They understand the pressures that we're in in Alberta, not just housing but across the board. So in suggesting such a thing, maybe they should also consider which schools, hospitals, roads, bridges we should start cancelling so that the government can do this.

Mr. Chase: We have the money to do it all.

Mr. Oberle: I see. Well, now the division is clear to me. Now it's clear to me.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, a lot of time has passed since I've had an opportunity to speak on Bill 34. Considering that we're on amendment A2, proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I would be willing to support this amendment. But before I give an explanation as to why – since the last time I had an opportunity to speak in this House, the Minister of Justice has finished reading the red book and has now gone on to The Rise and Fall of the Great Powers. I'm sure that the author of that – I can't see from here – wouldn't be Mr. Dinning.

Now, the hon. Member for Peace River spoke several times, and I really appreciate that. It's an interesting exchange to listen to. He talked about short-term problems and long-term problems with this issue. He's absolutely right. The short-term problem, in reality, is that this government has not had a plan to deal with this matter for the last five years, and the long-term problem is the fact that this government has been in power for 36 years and for the last 20 years has been operating under this divine right to govern attitude, which has led to this major housing crisis to start with.

Now, the hon. Member for Peace River also suggested that we have a look at the budget. Well, I would encourage members, while they are deciding whether or not they're going to vote on this amendment A2, to have a look at the budget and have a look at the dismal failure of this government. I would refer the hon. Member for Peace River first to page 122 of the fiscal plan for 2005, the budget for 2005. The year that we're dealing with specifically here is the data from 2004. It's quite interesting, and it's quite telling. It tells not only this hon. member but it should tell this House and Albertans, clearly, how this government has failed.

Mr. Chairman, if we look at housing affordability – and this is for the year 2004 – it is home ownership costs as a per cent of pretax household income. These home ownership costs include mortgage payments, utilities, and property taxes. The source of this data is the Royal Bank of Canada. Housing affordability in 2004 in Alberta is the best among the provinces as home ownership costs take up only 25.5 per cent of a typical pretax household income. "More balanced housing market conditions, record-low borrowing rates and good household income gains contributed to Alberta's solid housing affordability in 2004." Alberta, with that 25.5 per cent of typical pretax household income, is the lowest in the comparisons that have been issued in this budget document. Atlantic Canada is next, followed by Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Quebec, Ontario, and of course B.C. has the highest home ownership costs as a per cent of pretax household income.

If we go ahead to this year's budget document like the hon. Member for Peace River suggested, we get a different story. We get a totally different story, and we get the truth about the inaction from this government. I can understand why the government has tweaked this a little bit. This is on page 125 of the fiscal plan for the budget of this year. I can understand their embarrassment. Housing affordability in 2006, quarter 4, home ownership costs as a per cent of pretax household income: this government knows that it's gone up dramatically, from 25.5 per cent of pretax household income to over 37 per cent. That's an increase of 12 per cent to make a home affordable. Again, the home ownership costs include mortgage payments, utilities, and property taxes. The source of this data again is the Royal Bank of Canada.

In here the government states, "Despite Alberta's hot housing market, housing affordability in Alberta remains competitive among the provinces and regions." It does not. We have gone from the lowest in the country to the second highest. Only British Columbia's affordability index is higher. We have gone from the lowest to the highest in three years. This is in your own budget documents.

There certainly are indicators that would lead one to believe that the former Premier was absolutely right when he candidly admitted that we had no plan. When you have a close look at the budget documents and you compare them to previous years, it's not working out. If homes are less affordable for individuals, of course, more individuals are going to be in the renters' market. That's why Bill 34 needs to be improved, and this amendment A2 is an improvement. It certainly is an improvement. This government intervenes in markets all the time, but in this case, for whatever reason, they won't, and it is unfortunate.

The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House talked about a definition of affordable housing. Again, I would remind him, Mr. Chairman, before he decides which way he's going to vote on this amendment A2, to have a look at the definition of affordable housing that was provided to the AUMA at the 2002 convention.

We can also look at the 2001 convention, Mr. Chairman. It's interesting to note that the town of Rocky Mountain House had a resolution in 2001 at the 95th annual conference of the AUMA in Edmonton, from November 14 through 17. They had a resolution on homelessness and affordable housing. This is what they suggested: Be it resolved that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association requests the government of Canada and the government of Alberta to commit financial support, similar to the funding program provided to seven cities in Alberta, to smaller municipalities to begin to address these communities' homelessness and affordable housing needs.

Now, the town of Rocky Mountain House was suggesting in 2001 that the government get involved in this. Of course, the government has to get involved. Everyone but this front bench seems to realize, Mr. Chairman, that the government has to get involved in initiatives to provide affordable housing in some circumstances. They have to build it.

I can assure the hon. Member for Peace River: if the government builds it, the tenants will come. There are long, long waiting lists for affordable housing initiatives. I would encourage the hon. member to have a look at that and to consider the Out in the Cold. This is a count of homeless persons in the city of Edmonton. There are many people that are homeless in the city of Edmonton. In fact, daily through the neighbourhood that I reside in, at about 10 to 8 this gentleman travels through. He's a middle-aged man. I think he's off to work somewhere. He's on a bicycle, and he's got a bedroll on a nice basket on the back. My neighbour pointed this gentleman out to me, and he said: look; there goes the man with his Stelmach suite, off to work again. That's what my neighbour referred to this situation as. It is quite unfortunate.

Have a look at the Out in the Cold, a count of homeless persons in Edmonton. This was conducted last fall. I had an opportunity to participate in this homeless count as did the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora was involved in it as was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. I'm sure that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was there, too, with his clipboard and his pencil. I admire their commitment and their support to get this job done. It's done every second year. This is one reason alone why the government should get involved and do the right thing and finance and organize some initiatives for the homeless people affordable housing.

In fact, I would remind the hon. Member for Peace River that the taxpayers commit on an annual basis over $2 million in property taxes to the federal building. Now, the federal building is vacant. It's been proposed to be used any number of times for affordable housing. If this government had common sense, it would turn around and renovate that building. We're already paying megabucks in taxes on it on an annual basis. If you look at what the tax bill was over the last 10 years, we could have had the asbestos removed and had it converted. We're converting buildings around Edmonton-Centre all the time for housing. Why not this one? Why not turn it into homes for many people? It's close to transit. It's in the centre of the city. Many people want to live in the centre of the city. But, no, no, this government won't do it. It's asleep, this government.

Whenever you think of the tax bill every year – and I had the opportunity to go to city hall and look it up. Mr. Chairman, I can't remember precisely, but last year the assessment was well over $2 million. I can't find the line item in the public accounts, but I don't think it's there because of how public accounts is presented.

We need to have a look at this. Out in the Cold: this was the seventh count of the homeless. It found over 2,600 homeless persons in the city of Edmonton, and this is last October. Of these, over 1,700, 1,774 to be exact, were absolutely homeless. Those are individuals having no housing alternative. Eight hundred and forty-four were sheltered homeless; in other words, living in emergency accommodations.

The Homeless Count Committee organized the count – and this is why the government has to step up to the plate here – and the major findings were:

- There has been a substantial increase in the number of homeless in Edmonton. There was an overall increase of more than 19% in the total homeless counted. The number of absolute homeless increased the most substantially (approximately 22%) and the number of sheltered homeless increased by approximately 14%.
- In terms of gender, 70% or 1,820 of the homeless were observed to be male and 23%, or 608 were female. Of the remaining 7% (190), 151 were children and caregivers in families whose gender was not observed. The gender of the remaining 39 was not recorded or was unknown. The relative proportion of the number of men to women is comparable to the 2004 count results, however in total there was an increase of 523 [men] and 100 [women].

- There was a significant increase in the number of turnaways in 2006.

And the hon. Member from Edmonton-Centre has talked about this in question period a number of times.

Approximately 2.4 times as many individuals were turned away in 2006 than in 2004 . . . In addition, the number discharged with no home to return to increased to 113 over the previous count of 54. Turnaways are not included in the homeless tally.

- There was a significant reduction in the number of families enumerated in 2006 over 2004 . . . This is attributable to improvements in the survey forms, which clarified the definition of dependants, caregivers, and their housing status.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

This is unacceptable. There are a number of reasons why this is going on. We have to look at the categories of total homeless, single homeless, family status, homeless in families, homeless by observed age, and you can see where there is a significant increase. Before we dismiss amendment A2, let's consider the plight of some of these individuals. Those between age 31 and 54 were the predominant age group, or 56 per cent of all the people identified. The next largest was the 17 to 30 age group, at 678 individuals, or 26 per cent. Of those up to 16 years of age 79 of 194 were sheltered with a caregiver. For those 17 years of age more were in absolute homelessness than sheltered, over 1,600 compared to over 700. Now, that's significant.

Whenever we have a look at the number of shelters operating and the shelter-by-shelter numbers and the registered and the turnaways, we recognize that we do have a problem. If you look at the shelters, you've got the Herb Jamieson, the Elizabeth House, the George Spady, the Urban Manor, the Lurana, the protective safe house, the CSS safe house, inner city youth housing, the Youth Emergency Shelter, the Seniors' Safe House, emergency hotels. These are on an as-needed basis, and they are provided, thankfully, by Alberta human resources and employment. There's no set number of spaces. That's under EII now. It has changed.

Whenever one looks at this homeless count for the city, it is shocking. Mr. Chairman, it is a reflection of the work that we need to do. It's not happening as quickly as we would like. The caregivers and the staff at these facilities can give a very valid, rational explanation as to why we need more housing. I would urge the hon. members from across the way to visit more of these centres. I think that if they were to visit more of these centres and perhaps participate in the homeless count as well, as some of them I'm sure have, they would be more supportive of amendment A2 here. When you look at whether individuals are single or whether they're in a family unit or whether they're a one-parent family with children, we've got to do better, and we've got to have government support to do it.

Thank you.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I'll start just by briefly pointing out to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that he's not going to find the line item for the taxes that we pay on the federal building in our budget because if he has ever delved deeply into a municipal budget, he would know that the government doesn't pay property taxes. We pay grants to municipalities in lieu of tax, so there is no line item for taxes in our budget.

It is remarkable here tonight that this problem becomes simpler by the minute in that if, as we propose – and, you know, I certainly don't dispute the statistics of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Clearly, there's a problem here. He said: if we build it, they will come. They're already here. That's why we're here tonight. We have a housing shortage and a housing crisis in effect in this province right now. That's why we're here tonight. So I'm not going to dispute his figures.

But the problem has just become simpler by the minute in that now it's apparent that both opposition parties believe that the government is going to do this. We're going to build all the housing.

An Hon. Member: No. No one said that.

Mr. Oberle: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity said exactly that.

I don't dispute for a second that the government has a role to play in seniors' housing, for example, in affordable housing. If anybody has been following the budgets for the last three years, we've spent hundreds of millions of dollars in that area. I don't dispute that the government has a role to play, but the government cannot do it all, in my estimation. Now, the opposition parties believe that they can, or at least a couple of members over there, a few members. Maybe we have a division within that caucus, then, if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar doesn't agree with that viewpoint.

Really, why wouldn't we have rent controls? We don't need to be the slightest bit worried about what message we send to the private sector out there because we're really not expecting them to do anything, are we? So why wouldn't we have rent controls? We're not concerned about the signals we send out there because the government's going to build it all anyway. I would ask the question: "Hey, why don't we go farther? Why don't we put controls on the sale prices of houses? Why don't we drive the housing price way down just by a stroke of a pen, by legislation?" Then we can get all these newcomers into houses. We get them paying taxes. Everything's wonderful, and by that time everybody will be working for the government anyway.

This hon. member is suggesting that we can do all that without cancelling schools, roads, bridges, hospitals. We can do all that, and might I point out that they're going to save 30 per cent while they're at it. My goodness, what a wonderful little world we live in, Mr. Chairman. It absolutely boggles the mind. There are trade-offs involved in government, and you can't do everything for everybody.

Now, if you want to talk about how compassionate this government is or isn't in addressing the things that government needs to be responsible for, have at 'er. Let's have that discussion. But there is no way the government can do it all, and it's irresponsible to suggest it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'll recognize Lethbridge-East, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and we'll see who else wants to respond then.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just a couple of comments that I'd like to make, and I'd sort of like to put myself as the developer or the apartment owner or the manager. In other words, I'm on the side of private business. Now, I'm thinking to myself: "I know that there is a tremendous demand out there, and I know that there isn't enough supply. I know that I am going to get fantastic rents." Why would I not sit on that? Why would I not wait for the demand situation to become so bad that I will get marvellous incentives from the government to build more units? I could win either way as the private businessman, and that probably is okay because that's what business is all about.

However, I think that I've heard that the government can't do it all, nor do I think they should. What I think the government should do is to make sure that there is a level playing field for all these people that are in business who will wait until the time is right so that they will make money when they develop more units. Business will not go into something unless it can make money.

One of the examples that I would use against the argument of buildings won't happen is Wal-Mart. I remember having a little go-around with Wal-Mart. Wal-Mart said in the backrooms and tried to threaten that if they couldn't get their way at such a latitude and such a longitude where they had decided that they were going to go, they might move to the county. It's garbage. Once Wal-Mart decides that they are going to go into a certain place, that's where they're going to go. You have to have people that are strong enough to say to the Wal-Mart: "If that's where you want to go, we know that you're going to make tons of money, but you're going to pay your way there. Why should the taxpayers have paid for that?"

That's my argument on this as well. As long as the rules are created on a level playing field, business will look after itself. If there's money to be made, they'll be there. If there isn't money to be made, then why should the taxpayers pay for that? Certainly, the government should help towards, as has been mentioned, seniors' housing and affordable housing, but there isn't a great deal of money to be made in that until later on, down the road.

Real estate developers of today, especially the younger ones that are becoming involved in the industry, are no different than everyone else in society today. They're looking for instant gratification. That's not how the real estate market works. You have to have years and you have to have time to let the market forces play themselves out and to let the supply and demand balance out. It takes time. You cannot have instant gratification unless, of course, you're gouging.

Again, I have never exactly heard that definition for gouging. Which percentage is it above, and what would you use as a benchmark? I believe that with a formula using a benchmark, if you wanted to use CPI or if you wanted to use gross national product, whichever benchmark you used as long as everyone was using the same benchmark, you could then negotiate for the interests that would be above that, and everybody then is playing on a level playing field until the supply gets caught up again.

One of the things that I think would create a tremendous amount of houses on the market is if, God forbid, the interest rate would go up 3 per cent. There would be a lot of houses out on the market because people would be priced out of the market. Many people are going from paycheque to paycheque. They may be mortgage rich, but certainly they're cash poor. That certainly is not something I would want to see, but it could happen with an increase in interest rates.

One of the other things that I was going to mention, I thought was a little bit discouraging about the task force. There were many people – I believe 15 – who put in many, many man-hours and certainly the goodwill and effort that was put into that task force, not to mention the dollars that it cost to have these people go all across the province, plus the staff that had to put together the report. I think it would be very discouraging to work that hard, put forward that many recommendations, and certainly have that many rejected. It's almost as if the plan for the government had been pretty much laid out long before the task force went out to do its work.

The other part of it was that it took a while to get it out. I don't know why that would be because I really feel that probably a lot of this was in the can before the task force went out.

One of the other comments that I think I heard made was something about: why would you accept 38 recommendations when, in fact, you were already working on them? Well, I would like to know how I am supposed to know what you're doing. The way the task force report was laid out, if that's any indication, it came from behind closed doors. It was rolled out. Interestingly, I wasn't even given the courtesy of receiving a copy of the report, which I found probably insulting. [interjections] It probably was. It probably was. But if this bill has been laid out the way the task force was, it comes from secret places, and I don't think that that's a good way that it should come. How could I possibly know what you're doing with those 38 recommendations if it's all secret? [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has the floor. Hon. Government House Leader, if you want to participate, the chair will recognize you, but currently it's the Member for Lethbridge-East who has the floor.

Mr. R. Miller: She's almost done.

Ms Pastoor: How do you know?

I received two lovely boxes from the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, which I think were very valuable. In fact, it is part of the land-use strategy from the government side and a workbook to go with it, which I think were very valuable. I have suggested to groups that I have met with that it should also include our land-use framework because, to go off topic a bit, I don't believe that the land-use framework should be a partisan issue. If we don't get it right, the next 50 years will be very, very difficult for our children to be living in. However, having said that, in receiving the five boxes of these wonderful books, I just assumed that I would receive the task force report on housing automatically. Silly me. [A snore was heard] I know that everyone isn't snoring because I just heard some laughter.

One of the other things that I found rather interesting today was that I attempted to meet with people who had come to the gallery to share stories about some of the difficulties that they're having in their rental situations. Because I'm trying to be open and transparent, I thought: for sure, why would we not have the press and the media, who would be most interested in having these people share their stories with them? These people were more than delighted to do that. However, I seem to have upset the communications department, of which I have no idea how many there are, so tomorrow might be quite an interesting little conversation about who exactly sort of runs things. Now, do the MLAs actually have precedence over public employees? I'm not sure. I will try to find out the answer to that question. I would think that that discussion could probably almost be as interesting as this one about housing.

So I will sit down.

Mr. Elsalhy: The minister of health is going to speak after this.

Ms Pastoor: Oh, he is? How wonderful. I'm sure we're looking for some eloquence at 20 to 5 in the morning.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Good morning. It's interesting. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who stepped out, unfortunately, spoke quite eloquently . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you know the rules of the House.

Mr. Lindsay: I retract that remark, Mr. Chairman.

He spoke quite eloquently, actually, about the number of homeless there are in the city of Edmonton and talked about the government stepping up to the plate. I just want to remind the hon. member that Bill 34 is a home run, so we've already been to the plate and around the bases. Interestingly, he also talked about the homeless and not enough housing, yet rent controls will in all likelihood stymie more construction.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East spoke, I believe, about profits and gouging and talked about Wal-Mart, yet I remember reading an article recently which indicated that Wal-Mart saves the average Canadian family between $1,200 and $2,400 a year. So it would appear to me that the free-enterprise market does indeed work, Mr. Chairman.

I want to say that considering that free enterprise works, we certainly don't need short-sighted and short-term rent controls. All they're going to do is stymie more growth, Mr. Chairman.

With that, I'll sit down.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was going to sit back and have the vote, but the Member for Peace River has caused me to stand up. Now, the member seems to have sort of this minimalist view of government. That's all right if you have an economic strategy that goes along with that, but we have this overheated economy, created by this government, that's causing the problems that we're facing. To say, then, that you can just walk away and say, "Well, that's just the way it is, and maybe we'll do a little bit here for seniors housing or this or that, a little bit; that's all the government can do," that's a cop-out in terms of responsibility. It's the government here that's setting the economic strategy. It's the economic strategy of this government not to put the brakes on – that's very clear – to move ahead as fast as they can with the oil sands, with moving oil and gas, getting into the American market as fast as they can, forgetting about the environment and the rest of it.

When you do that in a boom economy – we should know this – you have to plan ahead. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said, former Premier Klein admitted that he didn't have a plan. Well, if you're going to move ahead this fast, you can't do it on the cheap. The social and physical infrastructure has to be there. Remember that back in the mid-90s we did all the cuts. All we did was move the economic deficit to an infrastructure and social deficit. That's all we did. Then we create this boom, and we've got more problems, so we can't keep up.

We have a responsibility here. You know, the hon. Member for Peace River says: well, governments can't do it all. No, they can't, but as I've said, rent guidelines on a temporary basis don't cost the government money. It gives us a little bit of time to try to work on the supply side. [interjection] Well, they're not building rental units here now, so how can you lose? That's the point. I wonder what it takes to get to these guys that they're not building it now. How can it stop the building of rental units when they're not doing it? It at least keeps some people in the housing market right now. It keeps them in their home now. They might not be there. There might be more out on the streets after that because how many other people can take $1,000, $400, $500, $600?

So that's the responsibility of government. You're creating the boom because of the economic strategy, because we happen to have oil and gas here. You can't just walk away and say: "Well, too bad. It doesn't fit into our free-market philosophy. That's all we can do. Maybe we can spend a little bit on, you know, housing here and there and everywhere else." You can't do that. It just doesn't work. The problem is going to get worse, as I mentioned from the government's own documents.

Now, the other things we talked about in the housing task force – and I've gone through it, Mr. Chairman. They've rejected all the other private-sector initiatives in terms of giving tax incentives to build affordable housing. That doesn't cost money. You can do that. You can do inclusionary zoning and build affordable housing. Other places are doing it around the world. It doesn't take a genius to figure that out. We've got to do something, but that's going to take time. Even if we did that – and the government rejected that, or they're studying it. They rejected almost all of the supply side things to put on more with the carrot and stick approach. They rejected most of those.

So tell me, please: how are we going to deal with this when every indication says that it's going to get worse? Sure, the government can't solve it all, but the government could slow down the pace of development. Even the mayor of Fort McMurray and others have asked for that, but they're not going to do that, so we're going to keep having these problems. One hundred and nine thousand people, although there's some debate about that – in Calgary they said that they had 97,000 last year. But it's a lot of people, period. That's going to continue. From every indication we have, it's going to continue.

So what is the responsibility of government here? Is it just to say: "Well, too bad, middle-income people, that you may never own a home. Young people, students, too bad that the rent has gone up. Too bad. Nothing we can do about it. It's not our responsibility. Too bad, seniors on fixed incomes. Not our fault. Nothing we can do about it?" Well, Mr. Chairman, what is the responsibility of government in all of this, then? What is their responsibility?

Mr. Mason: Stopping pillaging and looting.

Mr. Martin: That's right. Stopping pillaging and looting, yes, Mr. Chairman.

You know, it's the economic policies of this government that's creating this. You can't then expect to do it on the cheap. Infrastructure falling apart, you know, the health care system overcrowded, people not having houses: it's all real out there for people. As we said, Mr. Chairman, the so-called Alberta advantage that they talk about is becoming for a lot of people a huge disadvantage. The Member for Peace River seems to say, "Well, we've just got a minimalist thing here in government. There's nothing, really, that we can do."

Well, I think that's a cop-out. I think that there are things we can do, as I said, moneywise: rent guidelines for a period of time to get those markets on. Tell us how you're going to get all this building in then. They're building condos because they can make a quick turnover in that, and we're converting to condos, but we're not building rental units. So how are we going to get that done? How are we going to get it done? Without controls or rent guidelines or rent stability, they're not doing it now. Why are they going to start doing it when they haven't been doing it?

So tell us what the answer is. Do we just say to thousands of people, "Too bad. It's not our fault. Let the devil have the hind leg.

Move over, and just enjoy the Alberta advantage, you know, as you're sleeping on the street"? Is that what we're really saying? We can surely do better than that. We have a responsibility to do better than that. And if you want minimalist government, then don't accelerate the pedals so much that it's creating the problems that it has. That's the responsibility of government. If you're going to do it, you have a responsibility to deal with the social and physical infrastructure, and you have a responsibility to a lot of hard-working Albertans, for whom this is, as I said, becoming a huge disadvantage.

So we have to do something here. Surely, we're elected in this Legislature to do more than just say: "Well, things are great for some people. Too bad." Surely we're elected to do more than that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Snelgrove: This is getting just more interesting as we go. You know, it's really strange. My dad used to say to us when we were at home and the kids were around him: if you're not a socialist before you're 30, then you have no heart, and if you're still after 30, there's something wrong with your head. I passed 30 a while ago.

If you listen to the opposition, all the ills of the world are in Bill 34. We've got to take a bill that allows us to limit rent controls to once a year, and now we've got to start fixing Wal-Mart and all of the things that have ever happened. It's incredible. I can tell you why most ND governments couldn't solve a road map problem: because they can't see what we're doing.

Of all you've talked about, what relates to Bill 34? No one has ever said that it was the only answer to our housing problems. It has never been suggested on this side that that miraculously would cure it all. We've said that that's one piece of the puzzle that will help put stability to the rental. That's what we said. All of a sudden: da-do, da-do, da-do, da-do comes out of there, and the whole world, the whole Alberta economy rests on Bill 34. You'd think that if we were going to wreck the world, we'd get a bigger bill. We'd at least make it thicker and with fancy language. All we're trying to get you to understand simply is: this is one tool. This is what we're going to do. We consider, apparently, all types . . .

Mr. Martin: What are you going to do?

Mr. Snelgrove: We listen to you come up with the most cockamamie things that I've ever heard of. It's entertainment, but it's not productive. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: I would love to recognize all. I'll begin with Lethbridge-East, and then Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I just had a couple of things that I wanted to add to my remarks from before. What I can see happening here is that it's Albertans that are ending up on the streets and ending up in these difficult positions. It's seniors that built the province that are ending up in the difficult positions of trying to find affordable housing – never mind affordable, any kind of housing – because these people are being replaced with those thousands and thousands of people that are coming into the province that the other side is always talking about. You're right. They are coming in, and they are taking the apartments that these Albertans, who probably have built this province, are being basically forced out of. So the people that are coming into our province are willing to go into huge debts just so that they can have housing. They're dreaming of all the riches that they're going to make by coming to Alberta. So the point is that it's Albertans that are being displaced.

I also have one question. If an owner has a unit and raises the rent for the one time that they're allowed to do in that year, if that unit is sold and it is now a different owner, what prevents that new owner from raising the rent again? Does this rule apply to the unit or to the tenant? So that would be a question that I'd like answered.

4:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I can't, I'm afraid, provide that answer.

But I did want to respond to the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and also the Member for Peace River. You know, I think it's important that we realize that the New Democrat opposition, contrary to the position of the hon. Member for Peace River, has never said that we expect the government to build all of the housing. Certainly, we know that the government expects a significant amount of the housing to be built by municipalities and has provided money to municipalities for that purpose. We believe in a mix of housing. We think that the private sector has to contribute, but there's also a role for government to provide low-income housing, co-operative housing, municipal housing, housing for special needs. There's a wide range of ways that that housing can be delivered, and certainly the private sector has to play a role.

I want to just indicate to the Member for Peace River – you know, he said that he had a revelation about the opposition wanting government to build all of the housing, and, you know, that made things make a little more sense. I just had a similar epiphany. I just had a moment that I realized what the government is probably doing. The government doesn't want rent controls because they want the price of housing to rise, the rents to rise in the province to what Boardwalk says they want to see before they're prepared to build more housing, which is $1,600 a month for a two-bedroom. If I'm wrong, correct me. But it really seems to me that if the government is expecting the private sector to build all the housing, and the private sector wants $1,600 a door, then the government policy makes sense. Suddenly it makes sense because if they're single minded in their determination that the landlords are going to be able to make money in this short market, and the landlords are demanding $1,600 a door for a two-bedroom apartment, then what the government is doing makes absolute sense to me. It makes sense to me from that point of view.

If you want the landlords to have $1,600 a month for a two-bedroom unit and you think that that's going to make them build new apartment housing because that's what Boardwalk is saying, then it makes perfect sense to not have any sort of rent regulations. Then, you know, we can all pay. All the renters in this province can pay through the nose in order that the government can make their system work. [interjections] I see that the hon. President of the Treasury Board seems to be – I don't know if he's agreeing with me or, you know, at this point would like to take a vote.

I suspect that we might be a little closer to the truth than I thought. I thought there was no rationale for the government, but this one seems to make sense, that they do want housing built by the private sector, and the only way they think that will happen is if the rents keep getting jacked up. Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, it just doesn't make much sense.

I just want to indicate that we've had lots of debate. I actually want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do appreciate that several members of the side opposite actually got up and engaged in debate, and it's too bad that we have to go so long before that actually happens. Actually, I find that it's a little bit useful, from my point of view and understanding, what the government is doing.

Mr. Snelgrove: As opposed to what you're doing.

Mr. Mason: Well, it's too bad that there's not the same open-mindedness on the other side. They've just made up their mind about what's going to happen.

So you know, Mr. Chairman, things haven't really changed all that much in terms of the approach of the government and the attitude of the government. They like to talk a lot about how we have a new game in town, that they're going to listen, going to care, and so on, but it's the same story. It's the same story.

I remember we went all night in this Assembly – oh, I think it was probably four or five years ago – and a very similar pattern exhibited itself, you know: the sort of disdain on the part of some members for actually having discussion. Some of them get kind of stirred up and get up and let off a little bit of steam, but they're not really listening. I think it's sad. Don't you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

Mr. MacDonald: It's sad and disappointing.

Mr. Mason: It's sad and disappointing. We're all sad and disappointed on this side, Mr. Chairman. This whole evening has been a roller coaster of emotion for all of us as we've tried to come to grips. [interjection] Well, that kind of sums up a lot of attitude, doesn't it, Mr. Chairman?

It's sad that you can't go into a capitalist world and make a go of it. You know, it really exemplifies an attitude, which is also an attitude that seems to be aimed at tenants in our province: it's sad that you can't go out and make it; it's sad that you can't, you know, pull yourself up by your bootstraps and invest in your own apartment building, because if you did that, you would have shown that you can make it in the brave new Alberta. But I think that most Albertans rise above that. Most Albertans believe that regardless of what walk of life you come from, you have the right to basic shelter. You have the right to a job. You have the right to those things. People have the right to work. [interjections]

5:00

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I just want to remind everyone. We are currently dealing with amendment A2. I know that it is 5 in the morning, and it's been a long, long, evening. It's already morning now. I understand that, but we're dealing with amendment A2.

You may proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will resist the attempts of the Government House Leader to pull me off topic.

I will get back to A2 and just indicate to members opposite that it would certainly make a great deal of sense from our point of view, from our perspective to amend this legislation, to amend it so that it's very clear what kind of rental increase is permitted to landlords. It gives certainty. It gives certainty in the market to landlords, which is something that they want, you know, in private business. They want certainty. This would certainly give them certainty, and they would be allowed to increase their rent and exceed the consumer price index by 2 per cent. Of course, Mr. Chairman, as we've said many times, we see this as a temporary measure, and we see it as not applying to housing that is under construction. So it shouldn't be a disincentive.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate, just to come back to what's at stake here, that there are tenants, in some cases seniors and in some cases people who are vulnerable but, in fact, many, many thousands of Albertans who are middle-class people, working people, families that are faced with rent increases that they cannot afford, and the government has yet to say what they're going to do about that. They've said that they want to increase the supply of housing. That's good. We agree with that. We think that's important. But they've also admitted that it's going to be a long time, years in fact, before some of that housing starts to come on the market and have an impact on the market. They haven't provided answers for those people, and there are a lot of them. There are thousands, I would say hundreds of thousands of people who live in rental accommodation in this province that are going to be affected. This is a big, big problem, and it won't be compensated for by the fund that the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry – I wish we could go back to single department titles.

Mr. MacDonald: It's the department of temporary foreign workers.

Mr. Mason: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar says: the minister of temporary foreign workers.

Anyway, that particular minister has talked about her emergency fund. She has talked about the emergency fund that she has available, Mr. Chairman, and that she's going to help people. The problem is that when you create a mass problem that affects hundreds of thousands of Albertans by bad policy, you can't fix it by individual approaches, on an individual basis, no matter how compassionate the minister would like to be. You know, no matter . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: As I indicated, hon. Government House Leader, I'd be very happy to recognize you next, but currently the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the floor. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, please, through the chair. That would really help.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to say, through the chair, how can you do it? How can you create a problem by bad policy on the part of government that affects hundreds of thousands of people and then solve those problems on an individual basis by the minister dishing out money from a fund or another minister inviting people into his office?

You know, this is not the right approach. What it is, Mr. Chairman, is window dressing. It's window dressing. It is setting up programs that the government can say are there to help people, but in fact if they really wanted to help the people in the first place, they would create a policy that didn't disadvantage so many people in this province. That's exactly what the government should do. That's exactly what this amendment is calling on the government to do: solve the basic problem. Don't create a terrible situation for many, many people and then try to convince the public that you'll be able to solve their problems on a one-on-one, face-to-face basis. That's exactly the government's approach, and that particular minister has had that approach before in other portfolios, when she's been dealing with people in the health care system and children's services and so on.

You know, I don't think people should buy that approach. It's not a really straightforward approach. It's not something that I think is entirely – well, I think it's a bit disingenuous, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman. It's disingenuous to say: "We may have a bad policy. We may underfund children's services, or we may allow massive rent increases, but, you know, if we hurt people, they can come forward on an individual basis, and we'll hand out some taxpayers' money to fix the problem" instead of really fixing the problem at its root.

You know, I just want to indicate to the House that I really do think that the amendment to Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, is the right approach because it fixes the bigger problem. It fixes the problem at its source. It's not a band-aid approach. It just makes a lot of sense for a lot of people. Of course, it doesn't make sense for people who are landlords that are charging in excess of rent that is affordable. I just don't know why the government is so keen to protect the landlords of the province at the expense of the tenants. I mean, they've made a choice here. There's a choice to be made. You have to stand up and be counted sooner or later, and in this particular case the government has chosen to stand with big companies like Boardwalk and other large landlords.

The particular one that is causing a great deal of difficulty in my constituency, which is Alliance Realty Management, is responsible for some of the most outrageous rental increases that we have seen, $1,000 or more, Mr. Chairman, to people who are low income or people who are not able to work, a massive tripling of rents. This is the kind of thing that's going on, and it has been enabled by this government's policy. In fact, it's been encouraged by the policy because the government has announced that they are going to limit rent increases to one per year. So what exactly did they think was going to happen?

Ms Blakeman: That was exactly my argument about 12 hours ago.

Mr. Mason: Yes. I recollect it now. You know, I think it's a good argument because you've got the landlords – and we've read it. We've read it from annual reports that rental companies know that the market is going to tighten further. Rents are going to go up even more. So the government, God bless them, stand up and say: "Well, you know what? We're thinking we'll probably just only let you increase your rent once a year." What do their accountants think? Well, you know, if you want to maximize your cash flow, you'd probably better get in a big, fat rent increase right away, so they do.

Now, you know, there's a saying: beware of unforeseen consequences. That applies very directly to this government. They figured: "Well, you know, we can't bring in rent increases because it's very un-Conservative, not un-Albertan but un-Conservative. It's a very un-Conservative thing to do, so we're not going to do that. We will let them increase the rents, but we'll look like we're doing something, so we'll just limit it to once a year and require them to give a longer notice." What do they think is going to happen? The companies are still going to try and obtain the maximum rental increase that they can, and the government has left them a loophole that you could drive a Boeing 747 through or fly it through. They're taking advantage of it, and the government is acting like, oh, they're surprised, and the Premier calls them un-Albertan and so on. What did he expect them to do? It's not un-Albertan to be a smart businessperson.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm propelled to my feet after listening very intently for several hours to the debate. You know, sometimes you just wonder what province these people who have chatted before me are from. I don't understand when anyone in this House stands in opposition to something that is intended to improve a situation. Clearly, this Bill 34 is an attempt to do that, and here we are, listening to a bunch of folks on the opposition side standing and doing the usual thing – grandstanding and filibustering and so on – and trying to make it sound like there's some sinister motive behind this particular bill. Nothing could be further from the truth, and the surprising thing is that they all know it. Every single one of them knows it. These are intelligent people. They know it. I think they do. But, you know, the shell game ought to come to an end soon, and I'm sure it will.

We recognize that there are people who are experiencing some difficulties, and that's why we have some of the best social programs anywhere in Canada. We've travelled across this country, and we've seen those. I'll tell you: from the years that I spent helping people in the PDD programs, for example, the parents of those children who are now adults will tell you that some of the reasons that they came to Alberta are exactly those I've just enunciated. We do have the best programs. We've built them, and the people are coming. And that's not just economic programs; those are social programs.

We have the lowest taxes anywhere in the country. We have the best health care system anywhere in the country, the best education bar none, one of the best if not the best postsecondary systems anywhere, the highest quality of life, and here we are trying to maintain that because we've suddenly experienced an unpredictable influx of people from all over the country, from all over the world. Why? Why have they done that? They've come here because of these incredibly successful programs, because there's a government here that does care, that does listen, and reacts and responds responsibly, not just with quick, short-term fixes but with sensible programs that do help in the long run.

Yes, there's a little bit of short-term pain out there that some people are experiencing. We're aware of that, but there is a longer term gain to be built and to be experienced if we go about this properly, and I think we're doing that. It's a difficult situation, and it's awkward on both sides. There are some awkwardnesses for certain tenants, not all but some, and there are awkwardnesses as well for certain landlords, some but not all, and we've heard from them. We've heard from them. This happens to be a time when some landlords have procrastinated in the renovations, perhaps, that they were wanting to do. Perhaps they wanted to replace – I don't know – a boiler system or a roof or the windows or whatever, and they didn't do the increases to rental rates over the last few years. They waited. Now that the economy is a little stronger, they're playing some catch-up. So I have some sympathy for the landlords. I have equal sympathy for the people who are the renters, who suddenly are being faced with some sharp increases. In most cases the landlords are doing their best to explain that.

However, what has happened in the last little while, Mr. Chairman, is that we as a government have introduced some very significant new initiatives to help out. There will be, for example, situations where a landlord and a renter can't get their act together or are disputing with one another or whatever the case might be. There will be a capacity built into the new system that allows for a landlord/tenant dispute officer, an independent person, to come in. This is a new thing, and it needs a little bit of time, perhaps. I'm not immune to the fact that anything that's being tried that's new might take a little bit of time.

You know, I look at this amendment that's before us, and I fail to see how this is going to do anything but bring in some type of price-fixing, which we don't do. We don't interfere with what Safeway or Sobeys or whoever charges for food, and those are necessities. We don't interfere with what Shell or Esso or Mohawk or whoever wants to charge or have to charge to recover some of their costs. We stay out of that, and we're doing our best to stay out of this as well.

For those people who are experiencing trouble – and I recognize that this amendment was intended to help fix and address that – there are all kinds of new initiatives that have just been introduced: 285 million brand new dollars over and above, whatever it is, the billion or more in all the different programs that assist. This includes the establishment of the new municipal sustainability housing fund. That's going to pump $100 million per year over the next three years to address part of this situation. There's a $14.3 million increase for the rent supplement program, which will bring the total funding for that one particular envelope up to $33 million a year.

It doesn't end there, Mr. Chair. There's the establishment of a brand new $7 million homeless and eviction prevention fund. There's $96 million more to create partnerships between all levels of government and nonprofit groups and the private sector, who will help create 11,000 – let me say that again in case they didn't hear it – 11,000 brand new housing units over the next couple of years. Of course, there's the establishment of the province-wide residential tenancies dispute resolution service, which I mentioned just a little bit earlier.

You know, one of the greatest disservices that we could do to the situation that we face is if we were to get involved to the point where we were interfering and creating disincentives for the people who are most able to help solve this problem, and those people are the private investors, the builders, the construction folks, the developers, and so on. We need to make sure that we stay very stable with our economic policies and our social policies so as to attract more of them into the business of building some of these units. That's the only way this will happen. No government anywhere is ever going to be able to build enough of these so-called affordable housing units without creating a total collapse. If you want proof of that, go visit the former Soviet Union, and you'll see exactly what I'm talking about. That's exactly what I hear so many people on the opposite side try to allude to. We don't want to get involved in that.

You know, we're accused of either not participating in a debate or not giving information or not giving answers. I listen to question period every day. There are more answers than enough being given. There are even more dollars being given. There are new programs being given. There is all kinds of good information being given. I listen to some of the criticisms from members opposite, and with due respect, some are blowing and some are sucking. Some are trying to blow and suck at the same time. We understand how the game works, but the danger is when they don't know that they're blowing and sucking at the same time. That's what part of that danger is.

I want to just conclude my comments by saying that there are some issues that need to be ironed out. Some of them have to do with mandatory higher rates when vacancy rates are high. We know what the business cycle – well, at least those who know business know what the business cycle is all about. We know that there's going to be an ebb and a flow to this, that there are going to be high points and low points. I fail to see how this particular amendment will address some of those points. There are issues with respect to no guarantees for owners that taxes will not be increased, except in Alberta, where we have said that the only direction taxes are going is down, and we've stuck to that. There are no guarantees for owners that utility costs might not increase. There have been some tough times out there on both sides of this equation. We just need to work our way through this, and that's what we're attempting to do.

It just absolutely baffles me that we would have to sit and listen now for – what is it? – 15, 16 hours of in many cases some serious stories but in other cases a certain amount of piffle with respect to a very serious issue that we have some solutions to. I think members opposite know that and ought move on with this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise this morning and speak to amendment A2. You know, it's not often in this Legislature that I agree with the leader of the third party, but he certainly made a comment a little while ago that I agree with, that one good thing about being here as long as we have this sit-in is that it does occasionally cause members opposite to get involved in debate. That is a good thing because so often, unfortunately, the arrogance that has set in with this government causes them to believe that as long as they've had the discussion in their caucus room, there's no real reason for them to get on the record in this Legislature. They do a disservice to all Albertans when they behave in that manner because all Albertans deserve to know their thoughts on these issues, where they stand on these issues. This is a really, really important issue.

It was really good to have the President of the Treasury Board stand up a few minutes ago and share his thoughts on this issue because, otherwise, Albertans would have no idea where he's coming from on this. So here we are. Now it's almost 5:30 in the morning, and it took that long to engage them. But it did happen, and that's good. We had the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Creek, and he spoke very passionately about what he believes in. You know, I don't agree with him, but at least he's on the record, and that's good.

There are several MLAs in this House that have been here throughout the evening that have yet to speak, and I'm disappointed in that. I think if you were to look on this side, if not all of us, almost every single one on the opposition side has spoken this evening and some of us many times. But there are a lot of members on the government side that have yet to tell their constituents where they are on this issue. So the fact that amendment A2, Mr. Chairman, has caused some debate and sparked some ministers and some backbenchers on the government side to get up at 5:30 in the morning and finally share with Albertans their views on this very important issue is a good thing.

Now, I'm going to reiterate a challenge that I made several hours ago in response to the comments from the President of the Treasury Board. He referred to Bill 34 as being not the solution to the rental crisis that is taking place in this province right now but a single piece that will help to address the situation. I agree. There is some good stuff in this bill that will help to address the situation. Ultimately this bill will pass, and ultimately it will take some positive steps towards addressing what has become a very serious situation in this province and, as I said earlier, a very serious public relations problem for this government. My challenge to the President of the Treasury Board is for him to stand up now and tell us which piece of the puzzle addresses the gouging that we are seeing currently. Please do that. You know what? This debate would be over a whole lot faster if the President of the Treasury Board would do as I ask: stand up and tell us, tell the people of Alberta which piece of the puzzle is going to address the gouging.

Mr. Snelgrove: That's a good, fair question because I think that, ultimately, it is one of the problems you have, that there may not be a legislative ability to say that this is gouging and that that is not. I think we've all agreed that it would be difficult to say that $900 is not; $1,000 is. The particular circumstance would have to be judged to really know. I mean, honestly, if you're in a basement suite where you're only paying $400 and somebody goes to $650, that might be gouging for what it is. You can't tell. [interjections] Well, just hang tough. Work with me. I like to get up just about this time in the morning. It's when I do my best work.

There is an opportunity for us to work and develop the landlord/tenant dispute mechanism, which in the future could be the tool we use to address that situation. Unless you have an opportunity for both the landlord and the tenant to sit down in some kind of a forum like that so that each individual circumstance can be addressed, it won't work. You will never, I don't believe, address it by putting it in a legislative framework because you know how complete all the legislation has to be in its frame, in its form, in our leg. review to address all of the issues. With all due respect, hon. member, this bill was never intended to solve all the problems. It was to put stability into rent increases per year and into condos. So that goes on a separate stream.

Over here in government we will work. We are expanding the tenancy dispute program. I'm meeting with the board next week or as soon as we can – at their convenience, not mine – to sit down and get a handle around: is there an opportunity to work with the industry and with the tenant associations to develop some kind of a framework that might work? Then we'll deal with it. But it is not going to happen in this legislation because it won't work in a tight, legislative form. One year is pretty easy to define. One rent increase a year is legally easy to define here. That's what's in this bill. That's what we're debating. The landlord/tenant stuff is not in here. You're trying to debate it as if it were.

Mr. R. Miller: The one year isn't in here either.

Mr. Snelgrove: That's exactly my point, and it's taken this long for you to realize it. We are debating this bill, not the solutions to the landlord dispute. How can you put it into a bill when you haven't sat down with the groups to even know if it's possible? You are trying to take all of the solutions and wrap them up under the context of Bill 34, and that's just not possible. You've already said: "Nothing can be done. Have to do it in Bill 34." We have said consistently that this is one piece of the puzzle. Quite honestly, this bill should have gone through, and I think most renters out there would have said: "Okay, we got that much. We got that ratcheted down. Now at least we know for a year."

This government has evolved for 36 years, and we have worked through problems. Albertans have worked through problems. It's you guys that are putting up the roadblocks around this, not us.

Mr. R. Miller: There's no roadblock.

Mr. Snelgrove: I'd say that it might not be a roadblock, but you've got a pretty big bump.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you very much. This has just been a fascinating piece of political theatre. It's been a lot of fun to watch. For the first time ever it's actually been fun to be in here.

Mr. Snelgrove: You don't know if it's a tragedy or a comedy.

Mr. Tougas: No. Well, that's a good question.

The real tragedy is what's happening to a lot of people in Alberta, and this is what I'm hoping to hear from anybody opposite. When somebody comes to me, like the lady I had here the other day, with a $350 a month rent increase: what do I tell her? Can anybody over there tell me? What do I tell this woman? There's no answer there. Three hundred and fifty bucks for kind of a rundown place. Is she supposed to move? Is she just supposed to give it up? Is she supposed to pay for it? She's never had a rent increase remotely like that in all the years she's lived there. I don't know what to tell these people. Can somebody please tell me: what's the solution? What do I tell this person? Anything, really. There's this homeless and eviction prevention fund or something like that. Is she supposed to apply to that? It's not established. You know, I understand all this long term and the business about: okay; we don't want to deter people from building and all these kinds of things. That's fine. I understand it all. But you try to explain it to someone who has got a massive rent increase and doesn't know what to do. What good does it do? It does nothing. I mean, I don't know what to tell these people. I've had a lot of people come into my office with this problem, and I just go: I'm sorry; I don't know what to do for you. Anybody? Suggestions?

An Hon. Member: We have programs.

Mr. Tougas: Programs? What if they don't qualify for the program? What if they just fall underneath it? What's the criteria? Where is it, you know? A lot of these people will certainly not fall under the criteria. And why should they have to do that? Why do they have to go on what's basically a form of welfare or something? I mean, they're proud people. They've never had to do that before, and now all of a sudden it's: well, you have to go there and get money from the government just to survive. That's insulting to a lot of people.

I'm glad to hear, finally, some explanation from the President of the Treasury Board about gouging. I'll have to read it in Hansard to figure it out.

Ms Blakeman: A thousand is; $900 isn't.

Mr. Tougas: Well, apparently. I don't know what it is. That's another good question. We really have to have that answered.

But please, if anybody – not just: oh, apply for this, apply for that. It doesn't work for people. I mean, they're hurting, and they want to know what to do. I'm open to suggestions, please.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The President of the Treasury Board has admitted that Bill 34 doesn't contain all the answers. He's also admitted that Bill 34 doesn't even include in the wording the one-year timeline. My question to the President of the Treasury Board is: what's the point of proposing something imperfect in the meantime? How does that help the individuals whose rents have been raised at this moment? What's your solution for the interim?

Mr. Snelgrove: The bill will be retroactive to the day the government announced it, April 24, and you know that. The bill is a bill to change the regulation-making authority. You know that. That's in the bill, if you've read the bill. Nothing – nothing – will go back before that and set back these people's rents. Nothing. We have programs for people that qualify to help them if they're in that circumstance.

But for a government to do that, you are saying that it's within the purview of this government to go into someone's private business and arbitrarily take out what they believe to be their right to charge for their product without compensation. That's what you're saying, and we just don't believe it. It might not be all the wonderful gold dust you put on it, but if you've read the bill, you will know that it is a bill to enable the regulation-making authority of the minister to set the date of increases in rents. That's it. That's all the bill is.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I'm going to speak on amendment A2. Now, certainly, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. members from all sides of the House. We're talking about: we don't have the authority or the interest or the ideology to interfere; we're going to let the market solve this problem. The hon. Member for Peace River talked earlier about his involvement with the forest industry and how we can't get involved in any solutions to provide housing for those who cannot provide for themselves.

[Mr. Lund in the chair]

My question in this debate would be – and we're talking about the $285 million. Well, it's less than 10 years ago since this government relaxed a loan, just wrote it off, of over $200 million to a major player in the forest industry, Millar Western.

Mr. Snelgrove: You said that you were going to deal with the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: I am going to deal with the amendment, but we've got to clarify a few things first and correct them on the record, hon. minister.

If you look at the budget, you see the loans and advances that are made here on a routine basis to the Agricultural Financial Services Act, Student Financial Assistance Act, the Ridley Grain company, Vencap, Farm Credit Stability Act. Alberta Housing Act gets $20 million.

Mr. Snelgrove: So you were fibbing. You're really not going to deal with the amendment. You were just teasing us.

Mr. MacDonald: No.

We look at this and we see how conflicted this government is. You see them say one thing in debate, and when you look at their record, there's another thing on paper. That's why we have to give this amendment or a similar amendment a chance. What we have forgotten about here is the people that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark talks about. The people are confused. They're scared. They don't know which way to turn. Everyone needs an affordable, safe, and secure home. I realize that the whole housing structure has gotten out of hand because of this government's lack of attention, but it has to be fixed. This bill has to be fixed, and amendment A2 is at least a start – it's at least a start – because people need some kind of protection.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

We can talk about anyone in any neighbourhood in this city. They can look out across the street from their two-storey house, and they can see homeless people. They can see people living there under the mature spruce trees. That's not part of the Alberta that anyone wants, but the reality is that's what's going on. Working people, hard-working Albertans, seniors, students, those who are on government programs, whether it be AISH or whether it be SFI, are affected by this. I don't think we get that. If you were only to come to our constituency office, I think you would understand that. I thought last night it was understood. I watched the news, but I don't think the message is getting through, and that is unfortunate.

This amendment A2 is certainly a step. I have other issues with this bill, but at this time I have nothing further to say on amendment

A2, but I certainly have a lot to say on certain sections of this bill as we proceed through committee. I'm hopefully going to get an opportunity to get the statute from the cupboard and just have a look at this Regulations Act and see how this is going to work in the interests of renters.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I promise to be brief. I wanted to thank the hon. president of the Treasury for his willingness to investigate means to empower the residential tenancy dispute resolution board or some other board or agency that the government deems appropriate to referee those disputes between landlords and tenants. As it stands now, the dispute resolution mechanism in Edmonton, at least, as a pilot project is limited in its capacity and its scope. So I'm hoping that after this one-year test period finishes, then the government might really evaluate ways to offer the mandate and the tools for the employees of the dispute resolution board to do more than what they are currently asked or mandated to do.

Now, my question to the hon. president of the Treasury. Would he find it a suitable compromise, something that he might be willing to at least investigate, if we bring in a temporary rent cap – we're not saying to freeze it, but we're allowing it to increase by a limited amount, let's say 10 per cent or inflation plus a percentage – and then we allow the residential tenancy dispute board to adjudicate or to handle requests from landlords for amounts that exceed that percentage? Would that be an allowable middle ground? Would that be a compromise that he's willing to at least study?

What I'm saying is: in those circumstances a landlord can appear before the board or whatever else the agency is determined to be and justify and provide evidence as to why he or she needs a bigger increase, and then the board can study the case or evaluate it. Then they say yes to this particular landlord because of a certain maintenance or a certain cost that he or she is incurring. Doing this, would that be a suitable compromise where the president of the Treasury and his cabinet colleagues would be willing to, you know, be a little more flexible?

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, I wouldn't want to impose or to put a parameter around what the landlord tenancy board and the tenant representatives might want to look at, so it's really irresponsible for me to even suggest that 10 per cent plus the cost of living or 50 per cent or 1 per cent. If we're going to approach this situation with an open mind and be able to sit down with the ownership groups and with the tenancy groups, you can't tell them what they're going to decide before they sit down. I'm not telling you that's a bad situation, but certainly I'm not going to ask them to come in when I've already decided what they might recommend to us as an appropriate route. It's just that simple.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Snelgrove: Is it on the amendment, Hugh?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, it is, and it's about the comments of the hon. Minister of Service Alberta and the Treasury Board. Is the hon. minister confident that this bill as it's currently written, and with this section that is allowing the bill to come into force on April 24, 2007, as the hon. minister had stated earlier, would survive a legal challenge? I understand that there are landlords that are not satisfied with this date of April 24, 2007. When this bill was drafted, was that taken into consideration? Is the minister confident it will survive a legal challenge? That's my question at this time, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: This bill went to the review, and it's handled by people that are far more able to deal with legal issues than myself, so I put my faith in the good judgment of our staff.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A2?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:43 a.m.]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think we have the solution. It's the answer. It's been in our Liberal statement on housing long before the task force. It's our solution in terms of a way to handle the problems we've had today. I think this will be the answer, and it's the next amendment that I would like to make.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A3.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has been fixated on our website, the Liberal caucus website, and has referred to the Liberal policy many times. I don't look up the Liberal caucus website very often, not as often as the hon. member. I don't know why. I guess they're always constantly checking to try and figure out how to keep up with our wonderful policies.

You know, we tried to promote the task force's recommendation of the CPI plus 2 per cent, which failed. If you look at CPI plus 2 per cent – and the CPI is about 5.5 per cent – that’s about 7.5 per cent. Now, this amendment suggests that it should be 10 per cent. So I move that Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 1(4)(b) by adding the following after the proposed subsection (8):

(9) No increase in rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement shall be greater than 10% for the period April 24, 2007 to April 23, 2008.

This is, obviously, a temporary measure to help get through this year. It’s at 10 per cent. That’s about the average of rent increases in Alberta. So this is obviously a solution in terms of preventing gouging. That’s our real concern and the concern of those people that have come to us. It’s not increases around 10 per cent that are really serious; it’s the big increases.

I had one person from Baywood apartments here in Edmonton, where his rent went from $650 to $950. Now, that kind of increase is just overwhelming. If we just leave it up to market forces – the market is not working. It’s not working, so we need to have some kind of cap like this. This, of course, is a lot more generous than the one that was proposed before, and I’m sure that lots of landlords would be in agreement with this kind of measure. I think this is the right way to go.

I’ll just maybe make more reference to the wonderful Alberta Liberal housing policy which was put together some months ago, actually at the end of last fall. It has a number of sections; first of all, creating affordable housing, so a lot of suggestions about supply, supply side. But the most important section for dealing with what we’ve been hearing from all kinds of people that have come to us is the section that’s called Protecting Renters. In this section, along with lots of suggestions like portable housing allowances and rent supplements and microcredit for low-income renters, is a section called Enhance Tenant Protection. There we suggest that we will institute a one-time, one-year-long temporary rent regulation measure that limits rent increases within that period to a maximum of 10 per cent. This will lessen the risk of tenants losing their homes while giving communities and builders time to create additional affordable housing spaces. It seems to me that that makes sense.

You know, the problem is that when we in the task force looked at this whole issue, we called it a housing-first philosophy. First, have people be able to stay in their own homes. Housing first. Then you wrap appropriate services around them so that they can move through the continuum. But with the huge rent increases and the gouging that are occurring, people are not moving forward; they’re moving backwards. That’s where there is, I think, tremendous concern on the part of everybody. The unaffordable rent increases especially that lead to paying much more than 30 per cent of your monthly income – sometimes 50 per cent, sometimes even higher – mean that people are not moving forward; they’re moving backwards. That’s a tragedy. A cap like this enables I think keeping the gouging, the huge rent increases down so people can stay in their homes, and they’re not one rent increase away from being near homeless.

Mr. Chairman, that’s all that I would have to say right at this point, and I invite others to participate.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to point out that I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora said it before, and I know for sure the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East said it sometime right around midnight, I believe it was, if I remember correctly. The question of gouging and the inability to define that term: what exactly is gouging? What’s an outrageous amount of rent increase?

Mr. Chase: Now we’ve defined it: anything over 10 per cent.

Mr. Oberle: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity just plucked one out of the air, but nonetheless a couple of people on that side have said: how do you define gouging? I wonder how it is that we can’t define what gouging is, but apparently we can easily define what an acceptable rent increase is.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora just said that he’s sure that most landlords would be accepting of this, and I would kind of have to question that one as well. Where’s the polling data on that? I’m getting letters in my office too. Most of them are from landlords.

Mr. Chase: Yeah, and they’re form letters.

Mr. Oberle: No, they’re not, actually, member. They are not.

Mr. Chase: They are in my constituency.

Mr. Oberle: Well, good for you.

Anyway, a couple of points. One is that you can’t define gouging, but it’s easy to define an acceptable rent increase for some strange reason, the second one being that I fail to see where you’re getting the data that would suggest most landlords would agree because I don’t think that’s true.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to rise and speak in support of amendment A3. As my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora has already said, this amendment reflects the policy that we had developed through the Alberta Liberal housing policy.

My most specific concern right now is: how do we get our constituents through this current situation, and how do we in the best way possible with the largest number of landlords possible bring them along with us? Clearly, we don’t want to have an all-out war happening here. People need a place to live. There’s an opportunity for people to make money if they have spaces to rent. How can we make the best out of the current situation that we have? It’s not a good situation. I think even members opposite would admit that what we have currently is not a good situation. It doesn’t look good on anybody when, you know, a 74-year-old grandmother is getting a $1,000 hit as an increase in her rent per month. That doesn’t help anyone.

I brought forward all kinds of examples of people where – and the rents in the older housing stock that I have in Edmonton-Centre have been lower. I have hundreds of three-floor walk-up apartments, sort of four apartments on each one. There’s usually a dozen to 15 apartments in the little block building. They’re not particularly energy efficient, they’re not particularly attractive, they’re a reasonable size, but they’re old housing stock; let’s not kid ourselves. It’s old plumbing. It’s old wiring and everything else. They were built, some of them, just after the war and some of them up to about 1970.

Those people who were paying rents of sort of between $400 and $600 or $700 are looking at their rents increasing by, most of them, in the $300 range and sometimes $265, $235, $275. Most of the ones I’ve seen have been in that range. So they’re going up by 50 to almost 100 per cent of what they're paying. This is a stretch for people. I've talked about people taking extra jobs to try and cover their rent so they can stay where they are. I've talked about the hardship of people who, you know, have a beloved pet, and if they are forced to move, the likelihood they could find a place where they could take the pet along with them is a difficulty.

So how do we get through the situation we have in front of us? What's a better possibility for us to work with? I think that's included in what this amendment is putting in front of us. We did go back and look at what rental increases had been on average over a long period of time. What we found was that the increases tended to be in the sort of 4 to 6 per cent range if you averaged them out over an extended period of time. I think we looked over 38 years or something, so we were looking over a very long-term period. Our thinking at the time as we developed this was: okay, if we looked at that 4 to 6 per cent and we took into consideration that there was a difficult housing market, a special housing market, an inflationary housing market, however you want to term it, could we satisfy some sector of the landlords with a 10 per cent increase? Would that be enough to keep them working along with us, to make enough money on their investment?

Again, my situation may well be different from everybody else's because we're not looking at landlords that are trying to recoup enormous recent building costs. This is old housing stock. At the most what we would have is major renovations that have happened. But, frankly, in a lot of those cases where they were looking at major renovations, they were also looking to condo-ize, to turn it into condos. So that actually ended up in a different kind of situation.

I can live with the 10 per cent. I think it's the best solution that I've seen to try and be reasonable to people looking at rent increases. I think it's a better solution to have a period of time involved, which is clearly laid out in this amendment. It's only one year. We may have to look at a second year, but I'm very reluctant to start out by saying that two years is going to be appropriate. I sure don't want to leave it open ended, and I don't want to see it be three years or five years because I think you're in trouble then. It's very hard to remove a rent cap when you've had it in place for three or five years.

So I'm more comfortable in supporting this amendment, where you're trying to work something that is certainly reasonable for a lot of the landlords that I've worked with for the kinds of increases they're expecting if they are trying to recoup from problems with electrical rates going up, some modest repairs and maintenance, that have gone along in trying to keep buildings in a reasonable state of repair and not overburden people that for the most part are paying a fairly reasonable or even a low to moderate range of housing possibilities.

I have some very good small landlords that own one building and look after a small number of units and have tried to do the best they can with those tenants. Certainly, I have no reason to want to try and penalize them. I've heard from two of them who were very upset with the choices that the government had made because they had been going along incrementally raising the rent. It wasn't even 10 per cent, you know, in the sort of $35 range. It was more like in the 5 to 6 per cent range that they were raising once every eight months or so. They really feel that they got stuck because they had planned to go along on that kind of increment, and now they're looking at a much longer period of time than they anticipated. They're, you know, very angry, those folks that I've talked to.

I've also had a number of anonymous phone calls left on our answering machine in which they didn't identify themselves and a couple of form letters. Frankly, if the landlord is not going to tell me that they are actually the landlord functioning in my constituency and they won't identify themselves, then unfortunately I'm going to have to discount them. I wish that I didn't have to do that, but if they won't identify what they have to do with my constituency, I don't know what I'm supposed to do with that information. They've got to tell me who they are and sign the letters, or it's not very helpful to me. At least give me, you know, an address of the building that they own even if they themselves are not living in the constituency.

I'm trying to work with those landlords that are running reasonable operations, that are trying to offer a reasonable product at a reasonable price and not get caught as a small businessperson. I understand that. I'm more concerned at the situation that I have been seeing in Edmonton Centre for more than a year, and that is where people are paying extraordinary rent increases, and it's truly putting them in hardship. These are people – and you've heard me talk about them in question period – on AISH, seniors, students, working low-income people. Those are the people that are mostly affected by rent, who really feel affected by these rent increases.

Having said all that, that's why I'm willing to support, and I'm actually looking forward to supporting amendment A3 with what's being proposed here. I think it's going to help the people in my constituency both on the tenant side and on the landlord side.

Thanks for the opportunity to stand and speak in favour of that amendment.

Mr. Snelgrove: Very briefly, the problem that I don't see the solution to in this thing – and I do appreciate that it is a brief amendment, so it's very easy for the chairman to keep us on topic because this is very clear – is that if a landlord is not going to make his ends meet with a 10 per cent increase, he's just going to evict the people that are there. There's nothing to address that. So if it's $500 a month rent, you're going to allow only 10 per cent. If the landlord needs $80 a month more to break even, we've taken that out of the opportunity. We've evicted this person because we picked 10 per cent as the arbitrary number.

Granted, in the huge bunch of landlord/tenant relationships it wouldn't have any effect for many of them. But the ones that are in that would simply evict the people, put the rent to whatever level they wanted, and start again. So the unintended consequences of having to deal with an issue somewhat in isolation from all of the other parameters makes it really difficult to consider supporting this because, in fact, I think you'd end up with far more people evicted and create tremendous amounts of stress and uncertainty just so landlords have to use a backdoor method to raise rents rather than be up front. I think that this probably isn't the solution that we're looking for here.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I take the point that the minister is raising, but this is where we have the impasse because, frankly, you don't want any kind of a parameter or a definition put on this, and when we challenge you to put any kind of a definition on something like gouging, you're unable to do that. So somewhere this has got to meet in the middle because we are not serving our populations here. There has to be a way right now – right now – for us to come up with some sort of notice period and to come up with some sort of . . . [A ringing sound was heard] We'll just wait for that cell phone to get answered.

An Hon. Member: An alarm clock.

Ms Blakeman: I'm so sorry: an alarm clock. Well, I guess that at a quarter after 6 that would be appropriate.

You know, we're not serving our constituents here, whether those constituents are landlords or whether they're tenants, and frankly the people that I'm most worried about on this side of the equation are the tenants. But to say, "Well, we won't put any kind of a limit on the amount of money of the rent increases that they would be getting for fear that they would be evicted" and to therefore open the door to the kinds of rent increases that we've been experiencing in this Assembly for the past week and that I've been experiencing in my constituency for the past year is equally unacceptable to me. There has to be some way that we are going to figure out how to meet in the middle. It's got to be a term of notice period, and it's got to be some kind of rent cap because one thing does not work without the other, and we've got a situation that is not helping people in Alberta right now.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. What we attempted to do in a very simple, clarified circumstance, which I'm pleased that the President of the Treasury Board noted, was define a percentage, and above that percentage we'd consider it gouging. Now, the President of the Treasury Board suggested that landlords would simply evict people and force a raise, but my understanding is that if this legislation is in place, that would be illegal. That's the point we're trying to make. What we're trying to do is create stability. We're trying to create predictability both for the landlord and for the tenant. We're recognizing that inflation is running, I believe, right now around 6 per cent. So we're leaving a margin of profit for the landlord but not an extreme hardship for the tenant although there will be a number of tenants who are on fixed incomes like AISH, like seniors' pensions, and so on that are still going to need some form of government subsidy to get the difference between the current rate and a 10 per cent increase for them.

This is the most simple, reasonable declaration that we could possibly come up with. What it does is provide the definition that Bill 34 lacks. Bill 34 says: any increase is acceptable providing that it's done once a year. We're saying: the only increase that is acceptable for this experimental time period, defined as April 24, 2007, through April 23, 2008, its sunset clause, is a limited percentage. It's definable. It's predictable. It's a stable alternative. We're putting ourselves out on a limb, but we're defining the length of that limb and the amount of weight you can put on the limb whereas the government is saying: go for it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It would be hard to support this amendment. I could perhaps live with the 10 per cent although I think we know what works in other parts of the country, the CPI plus 2, but that's obviously not there.

I'd point out that with the other boards where they have the rent guidelines, it's not a hard and fast control. I'm sure that the President of the Treasury Board is aware of that because we checked with them. They can pass them on if there are extraordinary increases in municipal taxes and charges in utilities. They can apply to pass that on. If they have capital expenditures such as roof replacement, they can pass that on. Operating costs related to security services: they can pass that on. Perhaps if you had the guidelines, that would be something, then, that the – what did we call it? – landlord tenancy dispute act mechanism could be involved in.

Again, the problem that I have, mainly, with this amendment is that we all recognize that we have to put more supply out there, and I think we can all agree on that in the House. How we do it is a combination of ways, but one year is not going to do it because there's at least a two-year lead. Everybody told us that in the housing task force, that it would be at the minimum two years to have significant impact in terms of supply. So I would say that with one year we wouldn't even be there, and then if all of a sudden we pull it off with that sunset, it could make it worse. It could absolutely make it worse.

So my problem is not so much with the 10. By the time they pass that on – I don't know. The problem is the one year. If you see that there is, frankly, a need for guidelines – obviously we on this side do; obviously the other side doesn't – then we have to at least do it for the two-year period because the two years is a minimum, the absolute minimum time that it would actually take to bring some housing on. So with one year, regardless of what we do with CPI at 2 or 10, I would suggest that at the end of that, with the sunset of April 23, we wouldn't have any more supply on at that particular time. If we pull it off, I think that then the rents will even rise higher in that second period. The 10 per cent would be temporary help for people, but the following year, if you pull it off with the sunset, it would be even worse. I think that for that reason, Mr. Chairman, at least from this side, we could not support it.

I just want to stress – and I'll be short here. I might lose my voice here eventually. [interjections] I thought that would get a good reaction, Mr. Chairman.

You know, again, in an ideal world we don't need them. I think we all agree on that. But the fact that Ontario has had it for 15 years – and I'm not suggesting that. The stats just came out. We got them from Canada Mortgage and Housing. They have investment in new rental units: 3,848 new starts from 2,045 in 2000. That's an 88 per cent increase. We've had condo increases in the market when we see that expanding. It's condos; it's not rental units. In contrast, Alberta, with no rent increase guidelines, has seen a drop in new rentals by 52 per cent. Now, mind you, condo starts in Alberta have jumped from 6,214 in 2000 to 10,210 in 2005. That's about a 40 per cent increase. So, you know, that's fine. I have no problems with that, but that's still not building rental units for the people . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: They could be rental condos.

Mr. Martin: Yeah, but they're not building the rental units for the people that we're talking about. That's the point.

As the minister is well aware, the prices of condos have shot up like everything else, so there's a growing group that can't even begin to hope to buy or to own condos, and I talked about that group earlier on. You know, then we have the condo conversions. I know we're trying to deal with it here. It's interesting that when condos are put over and then rented out, there's a 30 per cent increase in condo conversions right away. Now, hopefully what we're doing in that part of the bill will have some impact on that, at least for a year.

But the point that I'd make, Mr. Chairman, is that without some sort of protection in this temporary, crazy market that we're in – and I would suggest that it has to be longer than one year because I think that one year would make it worse for the second year.

With the task force it was a compromise. We talked about two years, and that seems to be the minimum time we were told that it will take to bring significant building into the market. So for that reason, Mr. Chairman, we would not support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I, too, would like to echo my colleague's reservations about this particular amendment, albeit somewhat reluctantly on my part because, you know, I still hang on to some slim hope that we can enter this long evening, that we've all invested a fair bit of time on, in the spirit of negotiation. So if I was to see someone biting onto some point where we could define what is a reasonable or unreasonable increase – and I think that comes down to the crux of what we've been trying to talk about here. We've cajoled and joked and bantered and yelled a little bit, yet the government, which, of course, has the majority, is unwilling to say what is unreasonable. Until we can define that, I think that we're just dancing around this issue. As I've said before, Bill 34 provides a framework that only goes to the initial problem that's occurred here and is not resolving the problem.

You know, there are just so many thousands of people that are asking and hoping that we do come up with something that resembles a solution, defining what is a reasonable or unreasonable increase in somebody's rent. So, you know, in the spirit of that, certainly if I saw some signs of life opposite with any of these amendments – and this one has its problems certainly.

I can see, for example, that without the provision of the cost of living, the CPI provision – of course, we're not entirely sure where that inflationary number is going to go here in Alberta during the course of this next calendar year because we have this unprecedented growth that is creating inflation in some regions of the province, which, I would suggest, approaches over 6 and a half per cent. So that would cut into the functioning of this amendment, you know, to allow a provision for a reasonable return for the landlord, and that would be a problem, I think, that we would have to fix on this.

Of course, let's remember as well – and we've said this again – that we've put in a mechanism within the statutes or the regulations of this bill and through the landlord and tenants act, I suppose, too, that would in fact allow for someone to bring forward a reasonable case why rents should exceed whatever guideline we eventually come to. I truly believe, although we seem to have hit sort of a roadblock now, that eventually we are going to be doing this. We are going to be putting a guideline in place, and of course whatever that guideline happens to be, whatever that number emerges to be, there will be a provision for extenuating circumstances.

So, you know, if a landlord deems it necessary to exceed the guideline, then that's fine too. This is not something we're putting in that's going to change the course of the relationship between landlords and tenants in any fundamental way. How the market is supposed to work is that you come to an agreement that is reasonable to both parties. I mean, that's how the deal usually works, and that does not apply just to rent but to all sorts of contractual agreements.

The situation that we have now, Mr. Chair, is that the tenants are at a decided disadvantage in making an agreement to which both parties can truly agree. It's more like you need that thing so bad – that is, a roof over your head – that, of course, you are kind of forced into perhaps an unreasonable increase for the sake of having that roof over your head for yourself and your family. So that's the distortion that I'm sure most people in this room do recognize. You don't want to force people into contractual agreements that put undue stress and strain on one's budget and perhaps create distortions and problems in other areas that you're obliged to pay for to make ends meet. Your food and your fuel and education or even health concerns: all of these things have to perhaps be looked at a second time if your budget is suddenly hit with a giant rental increase.

So that's what we're dealing with. It's a very practical concern. It's not as though we are trying to impose the will of some foreign or alien ideology on the province of Alberta. I think that the voice of reason should prevail; that is, that we make sure that everybody has a roof over their head in some reasonable way that's affordable to the income that they have. You know, most people are working very hard in this province to enjoy the fruits of their labour, and we should presume that and encourage that to continue to be the case.

Specific to this amendment that we've had here, I do have some problems with the cost-of-living index not being built into it and the short duration of its mandate. As I said before, if you're doing a little bit of fishing and you haven't caught anything all day and you get a nibble, then perhaps, you know, that's a good thing. So if I saw any sign of life from opposite, I would be certainly interested in reconsidering my reservations that I have about this particular amendment. Is it A4, or is it A5? I can't remember.

Mr. Chase: A3.

Mr. Eggen: Amendment A3, there you go.

Giving it some concern, but certainly as I say, if we saw signs of life from opposite, we would be willing to take a look. Thanks so much, Mr. Chair, and I look forward to the continuation of the debate on this fine morning.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The government's current Bill 34 legislation rolls the timing of the placement of the bill back to April 24. Today is May 10.

Mr. R. Miller: Actually, it's May 9 still.

Mr. Chase: Oh, well, according to the transcript it's May 9 in this fantasy warp that we're currently in.

What we're trying to accomplish with this one-year sunset clause – another phrase we could use is trial run – is to protect people for that year, get the start-up of the affordable housing going with a variety of different forms of subsidies, incentives, philanthropic contributions. There is a whole variety of things that lead to housing taking place.

The intention of the Liberal amendment was that on April 24 in the Legislature – the timeline ran out on April 23 – we review: has this worked? We debate it in the House: was this a good suggestion? Did it accomplish the goals? Was there a significant number of new houses built, et cetera, et cetera? And if necessary, through the legislative, democratic debate process we could set the next time frame. I would suggest, as the very first amendment noted, that possibly at that point we'd go for another year, but what we wouldn't do is guarantee that there would be some form of rent manipulation into the distant future. We'd deal with it one year at a time, but in so doing, we'd provide stability and predictability for, as I indicated before, the landlord and for the renter. It would give us a chance to test out what is somewhat hypothetical and theoretical. But we would apply a number, and that's the difference between this amendment and Bill 34. Bill 34 simply says that any number is acceptable as long as that increase is just once a year. Here we define it. We experiment with it. We have a mechanism where we can bring it in again the following year if it worked or amend it, change it. But we've got a template, and that's what A3 is trying to provide.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of amendment A3, moved by my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, that Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 1(4)(b), by adding the following after the proposed subsection (8):

(9) No increase in rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement shall be greater than 10% for the period April 24, 2007 to April 23, 2008.

It's one year's time.

Mr. Chairman, one of the options that must be discussed in this debate, in any debate on affordable housing is the issue of rent control until an adequate supply of affordable housing is built to increase supply and lower demand. The Alberta housing market is currently experiencing a massive boom due to population increase, wage increases, and the exploding oil sector. The result of this is that the demand for housing is skyrocketing, but the supply cannot keep up. This is having an effect on the rental market as less rental units are being built and existing rental units are being converted to high-end condominiums. The reality is that there is more money to be made selling houses and condos than there is in renting or being a landlord of a rental property.

In Calgary, Mr. Chairman, the rental vacancy rate as of February 2006, according to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, CMHC, was 1.6 per cent, well below the average across Canada of 2.7 per cent. Edmonton was at approximately 4.5 per cent. This rate has fallen since then and appears to be heading towards a zero vacancy rate. This situation is primarily affecting the two major metropolitan areas, Calgary and Edmonton.

There is a precedent. That was undertaken by the government in the 1970s to deal with almost the exact same situation. A temporary period of rent control was initiated in order to implement temporary measures to deal with the extremely low vacancy rates. The Temporary Rent Regulation Measures Act was introduced in the Legislature on December 10, 1975, by the minister of consumer and corporate affairs. This was in response to the anti-inflation program instituted by the federal government in Bill C-73, effective October 14, '75.

This program, Mr. Chairman, made the following reference to the rents: the provincial governments are being asked to undertake responsibility for implementing a program of rent control based upon the following principle, that increases up to a certain percentage would be permissible, that increasing above this percentage must be justified on the basis of increased costs, that new structures where rents have not yet been established would be exempt from control for at least five years after the completion of the building in the event that rent controls should be in effect for that length of time; this is to ensure an adequate incentive for the construction of new rental accommodation.

The provincial Temporary Rent Regulation Measures Act was brought in in response to this. The provincial government concluded that so long as incomes are controlled under the federal bill, then rental increases must be controlled and that while acknowledging that the free market system had served Alberta well in the case of rental units, it would be very difficult for the market system to effectively control rents until there was an excess supply of rental accommodation. The TRRM Act, Temporary Rent Regulation Measures Act, was temporary, was retroactive to a certain date, would cover the unit and not the tenant, and would exclude new construction. The rent control would be limited to approximately 18 months unless subsequent conditions warranted an extension. Mr. Chairman, a temporary rent control initiative could be implemented for a defined period of time until the rental market supply catches up to the demand.

As I said before, you know, we've always believed in a balanced approach, and 10 per cent is a very reasonable amount for both parties, landlords and tenants. It's very reasonable. That's the reason that we support this amendment.

Thank you very much, sir.

The Deputy Chair: Hon members, just before I recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, I just want to acknowledge and recognize everyone who has been up all night long and has worked very, very hard and stayed awake. We are going to continue working until the business is finished. I thank you so very much, every one of you.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Once again I feel compelled to stand and speak to amendment A3. There's no question in my mind of the sincerity of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora in his desire to come up with what they want to say is a compromise in order to try and solve the shortage of rental units here in the province. I feel that we're trying to – what would I say? – get over this bump in the road when in fact we want to say that there is no bump in the road, and the crevice is perhaps greater than we can leap. But the question that's been brought up, you know, is: define "gouging" or define "fair." I think that therein lies the problem. You can't define either one of those in a free and democratic society because everybody has a different idea of what is fair and what is gouging.

I can't help but go back to the debate earlier this year about the gouging of bank machines in what they are charging for people to use them. It's a totally free option to go to a bank machine that isn't part of your group and to pay an exorbitant price of $2 or $3 or $5 to pull out a $20 bill, yet that person wants to complain about being gouged and wants to put in restrictions to stop that. It's the same as a person who seems to think there's no problem, though, to go and pay $5 for a cup of coffee when he might be able to make it at home for 50 cents. For some reason they have their freedom to go and choose and to buy that cup of coffee. With rent we're definitely not talking about those options. It's a much more critical issue for someone who's living in those rental units and being faced with these huge increases, but it goes back to the basic question: is it or is it not government's responsibility to intervene and to put in parameters on what is fair and what is gouging?

So I really have to speak strongly against this again in that we're breaching the principle of what is the responsibility of government and the supposedly divine wisdom that we as a collective whole seem to be able to receive all of a sudden because we're legislators over the common person out there, who's counting on us to bring forth responsible and good and equitable laws for each individual.

In my younger years and perhaps having a foul mouth and my mother saying what was and wasn't acceptable, you know, that you need to be clean at all times and not use such language – she would set what was and wasn't acceptable. But I always wanted to debate and argue about things, you know: "Well, this is just a little bit. It's okay to do this. Maybe it's okay to cheat a little bit on your homework or something else." My mother was always: "No. It's black and white. You do what's right, or you don't." So she had a demonstration one time when we came home. She made very good brownies, and everybody wanted to come home and always eat them. The one time when we came home, she said: "Well, you know, the cat jumped up and made a little deposit in here, but I cooked it up anyways. It tastes very good, and you can't tell that there's any contaminant or anything wrong with this, so go ahead and eat it." Then she says: "I made two batches because I knew that some of you would be finicky and others not, but now I can't remember which batch it is." That set of brownies stayed on the counter the whole week because nobody wanted to touch it. It's the same with this situation. Once we step in there, there is no coming back. We've disturbed the market. The question always is: is or is not the government going to come in? At what point are they going to come in?

I talked earlier about the gouging incidents with the generators going to an emergency situation. I absolutely and I think everybody absolutely understands the importance and the struggle that people are having in trying to stay in their homes, but to try and define what is going to be fair and what is not going to be fair is not going to be accomplished. We need to accept the fact that it isn't government's responsibility to step in and put parameters on the rental units and say that this is the right amount. I mean, we have all kinds of exceptions when something happens, where the rental units can go up, but what if they're in a situation just like the common problem with energy, that could spike through the roof and go beyond the 10 per cent? We just seem to be the dog chasing the tail here when trying to come up with these parameters when the fact of the matter is that we shouldn't be setting any parameters because as soon as we've done that, we've crossed the line on what is ethical and what isn't ethical for government to do.

So I need to vote against this amendment A3 in that it is not in the best interest for the long term. Yes, short term it has the possibility to interrupt the market and to give some stability for a year, but short term is not going to address it. It's going to be short-term gain, long-term pain, and nobody wants more pain than we already have. That's what this will do in all likelihood: magnify the problem and come back to haunt us. Like I say, once you've stepped in and become the referee, become the judge, when do you step back? People are now expecting it, saying: "Oh, it's going to be regulated. We don't need to worry about it anymore." Those regulations will continue to haunt our economy, haunt the people, haunt the investors who want to go forward and start doing something. The fact of the matter is that we're like the individual that's a hundred pounds overweight, been smoking for 20 years. We're on the doctor's table there and saying: make me better tomorrow.

This is not a quick fix. There is no such thing as a quick fix. I have to ask the question: if the government is all knowledgeable and somehow has this collective wisdom to be able to figure it out, and let's say we need 11,000 new units put up for rental – I don't know. If we want to use $150,000 a rental, it's going to cost $1.61 billion. If it's $200,000 a unit, it's going to cost us $2.2 billion. So do we go to the people of Alberta and say that we're going to step in, that we're going to fix this problem to ensure that the people that don't have a place to stay have a guaranteed rental unit, and raise our taxes from a flat tax of 10 per cent to 12 or 13 per cent and then say that things are well and fine? It sends up the flag: keep coming to Alberta. We're going to keep taxing the people, and we'll build the homes, and we'll get back to the position that many members have referred to earlier.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

The best example, though, is Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and the home problem there. The economy can turn around, and we're caught on the wrong side, and then how do we go back to the taxpayers and say, "Well, you know, we've built all these homes. I don't know why people don't want to be here"? Taxes are no longer an advantage to be in the province. We have to work longer hours to do all these things. The bottom line is that we don't have a right to go to the people and tax them because collectively we think that we can solve the housing problems, build a whole bunch of units and have a place for these people to go with a guaranteed rental price.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down and let the discussion continue on this. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's again a pleasure to have the opportunity to try to convince hon. members of this Assembly to take another look at rent stabilization in this form. Certainly, whenever you follow the business of this province in the last few weeks, you can see where there's a need. I think the hon. member has brought forward a very good amendment again. This would limit rent increases to 10 per cent for a period of one year, and of course, as he articulated, it's part of the Official Opposition's comprehensive housing platform.

We've been discussing for quite a few hours now the reasons why we got into this dilemma, this crisis. Certainly, we will have time to discuss that even further, I hope, but when we look at stabilizing rent increases, dramatic increases, through this amendment, Mr. Chairman, I think one of the options that must be discussed in any debate on affordable housing is the issue of how rent controls could work.

Now, in this case rent controls would help until an adequate supply of affordable housing is built to increase supply and lower demand. Earlier we saw in the comparison between 2004 and 2006 just how unaffordable housing has become for Albertans. This is in the budget documents from the government. You only have to look from the fiscal plan that was tabled with the budget to the fiscal plan of 2005 for the 2004 year to clearly see that we have gone from the jurisdiction with the most affordable housing to the one that's right next to British Columbia, that has the highest costs in the land. So when those costs are that high and people can no longer afford to purchase a home, of course they're going to be in the rental market, and this increases the demand.

Now, if we were to adopt this proposed amendment, it would give us time, and that's what we need. Alberta's housing market, as we all know, is currently experiencing a massive boom due to population increases as a result of a very active energy sector. The result of this is that the demand for housing is increasing dramatically, but the supply at this time is not keeping up. Whenever you look at the rental market, as less rental units are being built and existing rental units are being converted to high-end condominiums, we have a significant problem. This was apparently not forecast or foreseen by anyone on the government side. Certainly, our Member for Calgary-Currie was very active in the last number of months, almost for a calendar year, Mr. Chairman, in developing our affordable housing policy for Alberta. And if I had known when we were having discussions last summer that this spring we would see people with $200 and $300 and $400 and $500 rent increases, I would have urged the government to sit down with the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, take his ideas, and run with them because I'm confident that they're better suited to our needs right now than this bill. Again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is to be commended and thanked for bringing forward this amendment to Bill 34.

Now, the reality, Mr. Chairman, is that there is more money to be made selling houses and condos than there is in renting or being a landlord of a rental property. Currently in Calgary the rental vacancy rate – and this is as of February of last year – according to CMHC, was 1.6 per cent, well below the average across Canada, which was 2.7 per cent. Edmonton was slightly different. But this rate has fallen since, and we're virtually at a zero vacancy rate. This situation is primarily affecting the two major metropolitan areas of Calgary and Edmonton.

There was an undertaking by the government in the 1970s to deal with almost the exact same situation. A temporary period of rent controls was initiated in order to implement temporary measures to deal with the extremely low vacancy rate. It was done then, and this amendment would go a long way towards doing that now. The introduction of these rent controls through the Temporary Rent Regulation Measures Act – this act was introduced, it is interesting to note, in the Legislature on December 10, 1975, by the minister of consumer and corporate affairs. This was in response to the anti-inflation program initiated by the federal government in Bill C-73, effective October 14, 1975.

Now, it is interesting that this is the same Progressive Conservative government, the same one who this evening or tonight or this morning told us that ideologically they're opposed to any sort of rent control or any program to stabilize the dramatic rent increases, that it can't be done; it can't be done. But their fathers and their mothers, if I could say, in the Conservative party did the exact same thing. They did it, and it is interesting to note that the provincial governments are being asked to undertake responsibility for implementing a program of rent control based on the following ideas.

Increases up to a certain percentage would be permissible. This is certainly in effect in amendment A3. Increases above this percentage must be justified on the basis of increased costs. Perhaps this is where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder has reluctance to support this amendment, but hopefully I can persuade him to change his mind.

New structures or rents that have not yet been established would be exempt from control for at least five years after completion of the building in the event that rent controls should be in effect at that length of time. I don't think we would need rent controls for five years. I certainly hope not. This was done to ensure an adequate incentive for construction for new rental accommodation. We talked about that earlier this evening.

The government at the time, the same Progressive Conservative Party, brought this act in in response to a rental crisis. Now, the provincial government then concluded that so long as incomes are controlled under the federal bill, then rental increases must also be controlled. While acknowledging that the free market system had served the province well in the case of rental units, it would be very difficult for the market system to effectively control rents until there was an excess supply of rental accommodation. The act was temporary. It was retroactive to a certain date. It would cover the unit and not the tenant and would exclude new construction. The rent control would be limited to 18 months unless subsequent conditions warranted an extension.

A temporary rent control initiative could be implemented for a defined period of time until the rental market supply catches up with demand. This is exactly what is being proposed in A3. This is certainly, Mr. Chairman, along the same lines as what was done in 1975. There are some differences. But I think as we discuss this bill line by line, detail by detail, section by section in committee, all hon. members will see that what is being proposed to change Bill 34, not only with this amendment but with others that have been drafted, would be along the same lines as what was implemented in 1975.

I talked earlier about the work that the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has done in response to the growing crisis in affordable housing. It's affordable housing not only for clients of SFI or AISH but also for hardworking Alberta families who are, unfortunately, at the end of some months coming home and seeing that dreaded slip of paper under their door where their apartment rent is going up. The apartment rents, unfortunately, are going up more than wages or take-home pay.

Now, I realize that this government was sort of paralyzed due to the leadership race, but through the good work of the Member for Calgary-Currie and others in the caucus the Alberta Official Opposition caucus promised and delivered an affordable housing policy. While the government here was choosing a new leader, we were choosing an affordable housing policy. The guiding principles of our policy are based on the fact that every Albertan needs a home. An effective government uses the legislative tools and financial resources at its disposal to make it easier for builders and communities to create affordable housing and, again, for Albertans to find a home. Good solutions balance the rights and responsibilities of renters and landlords, encourage home ownership, and empower municipalities.

I will remind you of the fellow who peddles through my neighbourhood about this time of the day on his bicycle with his bedroll on the back frame, strapped on there with a bungee cord. We've got to stop that. Whenever people in the neighbourhood see him going by, they refer to it as a Stelmach suite. We've got to work very hard.

Mr. Snelgrove: I think we outlawed bungee cords, didn't we?

Mr. MacDonald: No. Usually, if you keep your eye open, hon. minister of the Treasury Board, you can find bungee cords along the road, but you're probably driving too fast to get stopped in time to get it.

Now, our housing strategy would create 10,000 units of affordable housing in five years. It would ensure that Albertans who need it have access to safe and affordable housing, and we would protect tenants from rent gouging while respecting landlords. I think this is the intent of amendment A3. We have to make home ownership more affordable for Albertans.

We need to change Bill 34. I know the government has worked fast. I know they realize now that they never did have a plan for the last five years, and Bill 34 is a poor excuse for a plan. This amendment is essentially, Mr. Chairman, instituting a one-time, one-year-long temporary rent regulation that would limit rent increases to a maximum 10 per cent. I believe this is a balanced approach that provides stability certainly for renters, but it also allows landlords and owners to increase rents in order to offset any increased costs they may be facing. We've all got to realize that landlords have taxes to pay. They have maintenance to do. Some of them have clear title on their properties. Others would have mortgages to pay, of course. Our policy, in my view, and this amendment is about balance.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Now, certainly we know that after the government selected a new leader, we received through the mail ourselves on our side of the House the mandate letters that the Premier sent to all his new ministers. For the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, the mandate letter on the housing file was to establish this housing task force to develop a plan to increase the availability of affordable housing. Well, I made a presentation to that task force, and in that presentation I was hoping that the government would free up a lot of the land that they have. Some of this land they deem to be surplus. This land, particularly around the ring roads in Edmonton and Calgary, was purchased 25, 28 years ago and is now deemed surplus. Some of this land could be used for affordable housing initiatives.

In Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie the same thing would apply. It's interesting to note that there was one initiative at Four Mile Corner in the county of Grande Prairie No. 1 where a considerable parcel of land was sold for a dollar. A dollar. But in the city of Grande Prairie the government didn't sell the city a parcel of land for a dollar. No, they sold it to them for significantly more. It was a smaller parcel, but on a per-acre basis I think it was around $80,000. I could stand corrected.

Fort McMurray also has a housing crisis. This is why I thought, Mr. Chairman, that we would be generous with the organizations that are willing to build affordable housing units. The Alberta Gazette indicates that the government is very generous with some individuals and corporations in regards to land. In the last session we had significant discussion around some of the dollar deals and some of the land that exchanged hands around the ring roads, prime development land that was sold for very little money. The taxpayers purchased this land, as I said, sometimes 20, 25, 27 years previously for millions of dollars.

So I went to the housing task force. I sat patiently waiting my turn, and I was listening to people from all over the city, all over northern Alberta, making presentations and doing a very good job of it. They were making passionate, eloquent presentations to the task force as to why we need at this time significant investment in affordable housing.

Now, when you look at Fort McMurray and what has happened over that period of time, how would the citizens of Fort McMurray feel this morning about having the knowledge that they could count, in the next calendar year essentially, that rental increases would be capped at 10 per cent? We can see just from the Report of the Auditor General on Alberta Social Housing Corporation – Land Sales Systems, of October 2005, that this government was essentially asleep at the switch. This crisis that we're facing now is in direct response to inaction and a lack of a plan.

In the summary here at the front, Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Social Housing Corporation could not demonstrate that it met its objectives for four of nine land sales. The public offer process was used for six of nine sales. There was no independent review and challenge of sales. There were also questions, and I'm quoting here: "The public has questioned whether there was interference by the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo in one land sale."

Now, there are a lot of issues to be discussed here.

The Chair: Sorry. Your time has elapsed, hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm disappointed in that. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm really, really excited about rising to speak to the amendment. We are on the third one, are we, Mr. Chairman? Okay. Yes, that's great. I'm glad that we're at A3. You know, I do want to indicate that I really have enjoyed the debate so far and have learned a great deal both from members on this side and, indeed, from the side opposite as well.

Mr. Chairman, the whole question that we have before us really is: what temporary or bridging measures can we take to protect tenants until some stability is restored in the market? That's the basic question that we have before us. The government has put forward a bill, Bill 34, which they claim will provide rent stability. By stability what they mean is that there will be a long period of time, a long notice period for rent increases that may be desired by a landlord and, in fact, a limit on the number per year, which is one per year. I just want to indicate that, you know, to call that stability is not right because it's not really providing the kind of stability that people need. What people need is not a timing of massive increases but actually some moderation of massive increases, and that will give people some stability.

What the government is really proposing is simply a time to move. That's what it amounts to, Mr. Chairman. That's what this government is offering renters in this province: time to move, no protection from rent increases at all. You simply are given enough warning that, hopefully, you can pack up your belongings and find another place to live.

The real question, though, that the government hasn't dealt with is: where do they go? Where do they go? If they're raising rents in constituencies in parts of Edmonton or Calgary where rents have been low, then there's not any place for those people to go because there are no low rents left. They take the area of low rents and they raise them quite a bit higher, and of course the places that have moderate and high rents are seeing rent increases as well, so there's nothing left for the people. They essentially are being evicted except they get a year's warning. That's the flaw. That's really the flaw in the government's approach, and that's why it doesn't amount to real protection or real stability for renters.

As I've indicated earlier, Mr. Chairman, the rental companies are quite aware of the opportunity that they have before them thanks largely to this government. It's not an accident that the Boardwalk Real Estate Investment Trust annual report is called Opportunity Knocks. Opportunity is certainly knocking for Boardwalk and, similarly, for other large housing and rental trust companies and corporations as well. It's interesting that when the people of Boardwalk are talking to their tenants, they are clearly saying that it is possible to predict fairly accurately what the market is going to do and how it's going to affect rents and, therefore, the revenues.

Here's what they say about that, Mr. Chairman: "Unlike the volatile energy market our industry's driving forces are relatively calculable and consistent." You would have to assume that if they're calculable and consistent for this company, they are calculable and consistent for the government and its Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing, whatever the department was before it was rearranged, which should have been able to predict this. Obviously, the government has the resources and should have been able to predict this, and it ought to form part of the government's planning. But I forgot that the former Premier, Mr. Klein, indicated on his way out that there wasn't any planning, so I just misspoke on that point.

If you look at the Boardwalk report, they go on to say, "As demand fundamentals continue to be strong and supply stays relatively low, Boardwalk remains well positioned for the future." They also say, "Our market fundamentals are based on simple supply and demand forces which are fairly easily predicted." What they go on to say is that "rental starts have fallen, particular in Edmonton, which will contribute to a further tightening of the market through 2007 as demand exceeds supply." Mr. Chairman, clearly the rental market is going to tighten, and rents are going to continue to rise in this province for a long time before they fall.

Now, the amendment that has been put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora says that "no increase in rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement shall be greater than 10% for the period April 24, 2007 to April 23, 2008.” In other words, the proposal here is consistent with the information that I did find on the Liberal website, which is to permit a 10 per cent increase in a period of one year and to limit the restriction on rental increases to one year. It’s a one-time only according to the website, not to be repeated. It’s not per year; it’s just that one year. Then it lapses, and you go back to the market. That’s certainly what the website says. What I understand this to say is between April 24, ’07, and April 23, ’08, so a one-year period, and then it lapses.

Now, I don’t have so much of a problem with 10 per cent. Our proposal was CPI plus 2 per cent, and I think that that would be in the range of 6 or 7 per cent, somewhere in there. So this allows a bit bigger rental increase than the NDP’s proposal or the housing task force’s proposal. I won’t make a big deal about what’s a slightly larger increase for landlords than we had in mind. The difficulty I have with this, Mr. Chairman, really, is the one year because the government has said that it’s going to take at least two years to bring on new housing. If we freeze it for a year and then unfreeze it – I shouldn’t say freeze. If we freeze it plus 10 per cent or only allow a 10 per cent increase over a period of one year and then remove it, we won’t yet have the new housing on the market, and that, I think, is a flaw in the proposal.

So we’ll be returning to a dysfunctional market. We’ll be returning to a market in which demand far exceeds supply, and I think that that’s the difficulty with this. I don’t think that there’s a fundamental problem with the intent here. It’s clearly an attempt, I think, to try and force the government to put forward some more meaningful legislation and actually tackle the issues that are facing our tenants today and the challenges facing renters.

Let’s not forget, Mr. Chairman, that the government has not defined gouging. I have to assume that that’s because they don’t want to define gouging. If they actually defined it and they nailed it down, then they’d have to do something about it. So the Premier would like to talk about gouging as an abstract concept – it’s bad; it’s un-Albertan – but he won’t define it because if he did, there would be no excuse for not dealing with it in legislation and prohibiting the practice. The government doesn’t want to do that. They’ve made it perfectly clear that as far as they’re concerned, when it comes to gouging, they’re only prepared to talk about it. They’re not prepared to do anything about it because if they were, they’d pass this amendment, or they would have passed one of the other previous amendments. They’re clearly not prepared to do that.

Mr. Chairman, we have to say that in this entire debate one of the things that we’ve heard clearly all night long despite the Premier’s words about sending the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing down to talk to the bad landlords – in fact, they don’t really want to deal with gouging. They’re going to permit it to take place as a policy. That’s the policy of this government: gouging is okay from landlords. It’s similar to the position of the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, who believes that government’s role is primarily to prevent pillaging and looting but that gouging is okay.

Mr. Martin: Plundering.

Mr. Mason: Plundering, not pillaging. I apologize to the hon. member.

So that’s also the position of the government in a nutshell, isn’t it? It is. Their position in a nutshell is simply to say: you know, gouging is all right; plundering, maybe not. That’s not good enough. That doesn’t meet the needs of people in this province. It’s not just a handful of people. There may be a handful of really extreme cases, and there are lots of people that are seriously disadvantaged and vulnerable that are put in this position. But let’s not also forget that there are hundreds of thousands of renters. There are middle-class working families, there are seniors, and there are students.

I haven’t heard one thing yet in this whole debate – well, I have heard it in the debate but not from the government – about what they’re going to do when the students arrive in September. They’re already facing rent increases, and when they arrive at postsecondary institutions this September looking for a place to live so that they can go to school, there’s going to be a profound crisis that the government hasn’t even talked about yet. I want to just indicate to them that that’s something they should starting thinking about right now because if they don’t, they’re going to have an even bigger mess on their hands. People are going to be forced to interrupt their education because of the lack of foresight on the part of the government.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate with respect to this particular amendment that I appreciate its intent. I think it would be a step forward with respect to what the government has proposed. But because of the one year, I don’t think we can support it because I think that when the year is up, the new housing won’t be built. As a result, it’s not going to fit the bill as far as we’re concerned, but we appreciate the amendment, and we appreciate the spirit in which it is given. Clearly, some attempt to improve on this government’s dismal approach to the rental crisis has to be applauded by all Albertans.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Are there any other comments, questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I, too, have an amendment, that is at the table. If we could get it distributed.

The Chair: We will call this amendment A4. Does everyone have their copy?

Okay. You may proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will recognize the pages that have been with us for most of the night and the security people that have spelled us off, who have been pressed into duty delivering all of the various amendments we've dealt with over this night.

The amendment that I am proposing here is essentially the same thing in two different sections. What I'm looking to do is raise the fines portion in both sections: in 1(5)(b), increasing it from $5,000 to $10,000. That is the section that's dealing with condo conversions. The second is section 2(5)(a), which is essentially the section around the mobile homes, where their land would be sold for development, so a very similar situation.

This section of the Residential Tenancies Act is to deal with notice, particularly for the condominium conversions. Its intention is to provide a mechanism that is punitive in nature. It's meant to be a warning. It's meant to be a punishment for not conforming with the legislation, that requires a one-year notification period when you take a rental unit and convert it to a condominium or if you undertake a major renovation. People are being evicted from a rental accommodation to make way for either a major renovation but in most cases for a condo conversion. It just struck me when I looked at this in the bill that $5,000 was really not a very high amount of money, especially when we're dealing with the number of condo conversions that we're experiencing, I would argue, in most of the urban areas these days but also the amounts of money that are involved. I dug up a couple of figures. According to the Calgary Real Estate Board in August of '06 a condo was selling in Calgary for the average price of about $275,500. In March of 2007, so not even a year later, the average price, again in Calgary, was $301,777, so a significant increase in even less than a year. I think that if we went back and looked now, there would probably be another difference, even in the five or six weeks that have passed. So this figure is clearly going to increase.

It just struck me that what we were dealing with here for a number of landlords is essentially the cost of doing business. Five thousand dollars tacked onto a condo conversion unit, you know, doesn't seem like too much, and frankly it's probably going to get passed along to the purchaser. It would just get rolled into the price, so it really wasn't much of a deterrent or a punishment for someone who was not taking those notification periods seriously. I thought: well, if we're going to make it more than just the cost of doing business, which I think the $5,000 amount is, let's make it serious. Let's try and make it more punitive. I find that if you go too far, if you made it $20,000 a unit or $100,000 a unit, you have real problems with the courts, with the test for the courts to impose that high a punishment. The courts are very particular, and you find out that the test is too high to be met, and you end up with the punishments not being levied by the courts. I wanted to make sure that this was effective, so I thought that by doubling it, from $5,000 to $10,000, you'd nail it. You would actually make it more of a deterrent and less of a cost of doing business, so that's why I've brought forward the amendment that I have.

I think, you know, that if you looked at a number of the apartment buildings that I've got, for example – they are 10 floors, with 10 units on a floor – you're dealing with 100 units there. If you start talking $10,000 a unit, now you're talking a million dollars if you decide to, you know, stiff people on that notification period. I think that's far more significant, then, and that would eat enough into a profit margin that it would make it worth their while to comply, and that's what I was seeking.

So a pretty straightforward amendment. I hope I can get the support of the government to accept that and to put it in. I think it's fair but firm, and I look forward to support from the Assembly in passing amendment A4.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I can agree with the hon. member. I think the fact is that some of the condo values far exceed what the $5,000 penalty might be, and I think that to truly send a message that is fair but firm, I could support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I, too, would like to rise and speak to this amendment. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has been studious in her review of this. I would agree with the $5,000 that they could recoup almost immediately.

I guess the one thing that I would like to see, though – too often the victim never gets compensation. I don't know if the courts would allow it, but there should almost be that $10,000 compensation to the victim of the removal. So often it just seems to go into general funds.

Anyway, I too am in favour of this. I would like to see it a little bit higher, but I would trust her judgment. Perhaps the courts wouldn't tolerate that, but it definitely would send a better signal, and I'm pleased to support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's good to rise on this Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, amendment. I also stand in support of this amendment. Clearly, we want to send a message to those that would subvert a system that's creating vulnerabilities and stresses and breakdown for people and give them an opportunity to hold accountable those that would try to not only undermine the good laws of the province but also do so in a way that would harm the individuals. So I stand in support of this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased that this amendment has been brought forward. I think the fact that the government after all these long hours of debate has finally seen a glimmer of light is something that encourages me. You know, perhaps the sun shining through the windows up there has served to enlighten. I want to indicate that I appreciate the fact that the motion has been made and that the government has indicated that they're going to support it. I also indicate that we, also, will support this amendment.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A4?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A4 carried]

The Chair: Are there other amendments, comments, or questions pertaining to this? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I know that at the table there is a final amendment from the Liberals under the name of my colleague from Edmonton-McClung. I would like to move that amendment on his behalf at this time and have it distributed, please.

The Chair: We will refer to this amendment as amendment A5. We're just going to wait a moment for the pages to distribute the amendment.

It appears that everyone has a copy. You may proceed, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-McClung feels very strongly about this, and I know that he'll be eager to speak to it. Essentially, the reason behind this amendment is to amend section 1(4) by striking out clause (a) and substituting the following: that in subsection (4) we strike out "since the last increase in rent" and substitute "which shall not be less than 1 year." The point is that this actually embeds what we understand to be the objective into the bill itself. What we've heard is that the government's intention is to have that notice period be one year, but that's actually not stated in the bill. It appears as a regulation, which allows the minister that's designated as responsible for the act under the Government Organization Act to in fact implement that regulation. But it actually does not appear in the bill, which struck us as a bit odd because that's what the point of this bill was: to get that one-year notification period enshrined. In fact, it doesn't actually appear in the bill.

So we thought we would bring it forward and see if we could actually get it written into the bill. This is part of my ongoing point about the difference between writing it in the bill and putting everything into regulation. As I often kid my fellow House leader, this is sort of the Gary Dickson memorial clause because he often raised the point that policy changes should be in legislation and that if they're not in legislation, the regulation should be brought to the floor to be debated by the Legislative Assembly.

That's the situation we have here. This is a policy change from the government. The government says that it wants to see a change in the period of the notification. It is responding to the pressures that we're all experiencing. We have supported the government in that all the way along, but this government does have a propensity to write what I call shell legislation, which essentially creates a situation where everything is about: and the minister can make regulations about. Then there's a long list of what they can make regulations about. That's the situation we have here. We don't actually have the purpose of this bill and the reason that we all got into this and, frankly, the reason we've all spent so much time together in the last 12 hours talking about this bill. It, in fact, does not appear in the legislation.

I think that particularly because we've spent so much time talking about the purpose of the legislation, we feel that it's appropriate to actually write it in. It would then require that the legislation come back before the Assembly if the government were to decide to change that period of time or to renew it in any way, shape, or form. I can understand that the government won't agree to do that because they like the flexibility that they get to be able to change things through an order in council. They can do it at their own time. They can do it without further debate and without a lot of discussion and colour commentary from members of the opposition. But I would think that given the point of this bill it would be helpful to find it in there.

The Speaker has often heard me talk about how difficult it is for members of the public to be able to track what we're doing when it's not written in the bill, and we are really quite good about getting our legislation really accessible on the website at www.assembly.ab.ca. It's easy to hit that button for bills and motions, print it off, read it online but much, much more difficult to find the regulations. You've got to really know what you're doing. You've got to be regularly checking the Gazette or tracking the orders in council as they come out to be able to follow what the government is doing. So it's not easy to find it. It's not easy to watch the timing. It's a lot of effort from the individuals. I think that with this affecting so many people – basically, it affects everybody that rents – it needs to be much more accessible, and I find that accessibility is through the legislation, not through regulations.

I note that my colleague from Edmonton-McClung is ready to speak to this, and I will certainly cede the floor to him. It's his motion, and I know he has some pretty strong feelings about it, but I'm delighted to have had the opportunity to introduce it on his behalf and to urge everyone to please support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, the background noise is getting such that it's very difficult to hear the person that has the floor. I recognize that there's a shift change going on, but if we could keep the background noise down, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Snelgrove: I feel myself strangely overwhelmed because, in fact, what you're intending to do is what we would've intended to do in regulations, which is standard with other provinces. So, Mr. Chairman, the only downside might be that you would have to go back to the act to change if you were to go shorter. My expectation is that a year is a reasonable amount. I would just say this: I could also accept this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is indeed a very fruitful and happy day for myself and members from my caucus. It is not frequently that we introduce motions in this House and the government generously or graciously agrees. I'm indeed thrilled and excited to hear this from the hon. minister, and hopefully, you know, this will be the start of great things to come in this House. [interjection] Yes. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark is talking that this might signal a beautiful friendship that will emerge in this House between members from this side of the House and members from that side of the House.

I want to thank, first of all, Mr. Chairman, my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre for her assistance, for introducing this amendment A5, and I'm really pleased that the hon. Minister of Service Alberta has agreed to accept it and has signalled his members on this side of the House that they would as well. I thank you for this opportunity. This way we can guarantee at least some degree of, you know, protection for those tenants that we're all trying to protect, Mr. Chairman, and I thank you for that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. All this love is getting to be too much for me. I want the mean old Treasurer back. Just too much love there.

I'm not going to get carried away that this changes the bill in any dramatic way, but at least it's clear. We will certainly support it, but the bill is still not what we want, Mr. Chairman. In fact, one year,

I said in the past, could make it worse in the short run because people could get the big increase for one year instead of over a period of time. But at least it's clear in the act, and we certainly will support it for that reason.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A5 carried]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. You know, when the government starts accepting amendments, it sort of confuses our map. We feel like migratory birds that are going east instead of south.

Perhaps just to restore a note of normalcy to these proceedings, I have another amendment, Mr. Chairman, and I'll ask a page to distribute this.

The Chair: We'll wait a moment to have the amendment distributed to the members.

All the members have copies, so you may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would move that Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 2(4) by adding the following after the proposed subsection (7):

(8) A landlord shall not increase the rent payable under a residential tenancy agreement by an amount greater than the percentage increase in the Alberta Consumer Price Index published by Statistics Canada for the previous calendar year plus 2%.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that this has similar wording to a previous amendment that we moved today, today in the legislative sense.

The Chair: It's amending a different section.

Mr. Mason: But it amends a different section.

I just want to indicate to members that we believe that this comes to the basic question that we've been debating all night long, which is that there is no protection for tenants from massive rent increases. There is protection in Bill 34 in terms of giving them some notice. We consider that to be completely inadequate to deal with the present rental crisis, and we are proposing here that guidelines be established similar to the guidelines that were proposed by the Affordable Housing Task Force and something that the NDP opposition has been pushing for nearly a year, and that is that there is a limit on the percentage of increase, guidelines for landlords that allow them an increase of the Alberta consumer price index plus 2 per cent, which we believe is reasonable and which we believe that most tenants can manage.

It's quite unlike the massive rent increases that have been coming forward to MLAs in the last several months of $500, $750, or $1,000 or in some cases even more. We'll be talking later today in question period about a massive rent increase that was received by one of the constituents of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. These kinds of things seem to be creating a considerable problem.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that what the government has done has not addressed the rental crisis in the short run. They are taking steps to increase the supply of rental units, and that is a good thing. It may not be enough, but at least it's a step in the right direction. What they have not done is provide rent stability for tenants in the period of time that it will take for the new construction to take place, which the government itself has estimated at a minimum of two years.

What the government has proposed to do, which is require a year's notice of a rent increase and limit it to one per year, will not adequately address this issue. It will simply give individuals who receive a very large rent increase a year to find a new place to live. But the question once again, Mr. Chairman, is: where will they go? As rents are being driven up in lower rent areas in parts of Edmonton and other centres, including Calgary, those people are being forced out of their accommodation, but there's no new accommodation being built. The government says that if we do this, it will prevent new rental accommodation from being built, but the fact remains that there is no rental accommodation that is currently being built in Alberta or none to speak of. Also, what we're proposing will not affect new rental units, so it is not a disincentive to the construction of new rental units.

It's very important, as far as we're concerned in the NDP opposition, that in fact some real protection for tenants be provided. We think this is a temporary measure. It only applies to new housing, and it's a responsible approach to a very serious problem for hundreds of thousands of Alberta families. It's not just a handful of people. It's middle-class and working families with children that live in rental accommodation in this province. It's seniors. It's students. It's a whole range of Albertans, a whole cross-section, a very, very large number of people.

As I've said earlier in the debate, which has gone on for many hours now, Mr. Chairman, the rental companies themselves in their annual reports to their shareholders are predicting a further tightening of the rental market in Edmonton and other centres in Alberta, which means that rents are going to continue to rise, yet the government continues to put its head in the sand and reject proposals that would protect those hundreds of thousands of Albertans who live in rental accommodation.

Mr. Chairman, there's absolutely no reason, in our view, for the government to reject this amendment. This amendment would provide modest protection for tenants on an interim basis. We are prepared to negotiate with the government or to accept any kind of time limit that they suggest. We think two years is a minimum that this should be in place because that's the time that they've given us for the construction of new housing that may affect the rental market. So a minimum of two years would be our preference, but we're prepared to be flexible. The important thing is that there have to be some guidelines to protect tenants in this province. If there are no guidelines, then the gouging is going to continue.

It's unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, that the Premier has talked about gouging as being un-Albertan, but he hasn't backed up his words with action. This gives the government a chance to back up the Premier's words with action. If rent gouging is un-Albertan, then it's the responsibility of the government to step in and provide legal means to stop it. Simply sending the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to have a little chat with a landlord is not a serious approach worthy of a serious government, and it's not a policy that's going to work or is going to be taken seriously by landlords or by tenants. It's not an approach, I think, that really shows that the government is serious about helping renters. If they are serious about helping renters, they'll pass this amendment. They'll set some reasonable time limits. This has always been intended to be temporary protection for tenants, and it's always been intended only to apply to existing units and not to new construction, so it should not in any way interfere with the construction of new units, which, as I've indicated, is not actually occurring right now in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, I really want to appeal to the government that this is a chance to take some real action that's going to affect and protect hundreds of thousands of Albertans, families right from one end of the province to the other. Please, I would ask the minister to accept this amendment. This is an opportunity for all of us to do the right thing: to provide protection for tenants and at the same time ensure that new units come on and ensure that landlords get a fair and reasonable return on their investment but prevent them from taking advantage of an extremely tight rental market.

So, Mr. Chairman, those are my comments with respect to this amendment, and I would certainly hope that the government will accept this amendment. Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: I guess that this would be official notification: the group hug has been cancelled, just so you know. Mr. Chairman, for all those that, unfortunately, weren't able to listen to the 12 hours of debate about this, the by-product of this simply means people are evicted. They don't negotiate a rent; they're evicted so the landlord can bring in a new tenant at whatever rate she wants. So instead of helping – and I truly believe that they think they're going to, and good on them – the simple fact is that this would simply put people in the streets. It's better to be under some financial stress than under a dumpster.

So, Mr. Chairman, I couldn't accept this.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. I find that unfortunate although not unexpected.

Certainly, this is a similar set of numbers that we've been putting forward here over the last few hours or so, but you know we didn't just pull these numbers out of the air. It is, in fact, the reasoned and reasonable deliberation of the affordable housing commission that came up with this number of CPI plus 2 per cent. So considering how the CPI portion of this is a flexible number, because it is a reflection of the inflation rate within the province of Alberta, of which we are seeing quite unprecedented high inflation rates coming in for this fiscal year, you've got that covered off already. That inflation rate, in fact, is a reflection of the increased costs that a landlord might incur as a result of the usual running of a building plus meeting probably a good portion of the inflationary costs associated with maintenance and increased labour and what have you. That number goes up and down with the cost of doing business in Alberta, so to speak.

Remember that we're talking about a temporary measure here. It's not as though we're putting something in stone that will be shackled about us forever, but rather it's a stabilizing number due to extraordinary circumstances of unprecedented increases in rental agreements that we've seen here this year, probably, I would say, unprecedented in modern times in this province.

So for the sake of providing stability for the hundreds of thousands of renters that live in the province of Alberta – many of these people have just come within the last few years to the province, so we're extending a welcome that we do in fact want them stay – let's not forget other factors of unprecedented growth which have caused us trouble, not the least of which is a labour shortage. So, certainly, we have to stabilize the labour population that's just come in to live in these rental accommodations and make sure they can stay and feel welcome to be staying as well. It's a way to do that.

It's also a way by which we can provide relief and some sense of stability for families, working families that are undergoing a lot of rental increase stress at this point. It provides stability for seniors, who are a very high proportion of our rental population. Remember that we're not just talking about people who are renting an apartment or walk-up or what have you but also people who are entering into the full stream of care, seniors' facilities that are popping up all over the province, Mr. Chair, and, in fact, are providing an important service. People are choosing to go from owning a home for a good portion of their lives back into the rental game at the later stage of their life, and we don't want to unduly destabilize those retirement plans for seniors across the province. This is just a way to extend a measure of security, a measure of regulation, and, above all, a measure of assistance to these people.

You know, it doesn't cost the government. So often when we debate, we run into a problem with the willingness to pay for a certain program or what have you, but this is a classic case of using the Legislature as it should be used, which is as a regulatory body that simply goes in and puts a bottom line onto something so that a certain sector of the economy or the population can function better. We're not taking public money and shovelling it out the door. We are just putting a stabilizing regulation into place, which is perfectly reasonable. In fact, that's what we get elected to do here. That's why they built this building in the first place, and that's why they sent the 83 of us to sit in these chairs: to provide regulation. It's not such a big deal. It's a good thing to do.

This whole concept that I've heard at various times during the evening about: oh well, you're taking money out of the hands of landlords. That's absolutely, patently ridiculous. What we are doing is flowing the rental monies through the system in a more judicious way and in a more reasonable way, and as time goes on, of course, that money will just keep on moving.

It's a question of whether you want to get a fast rate of return off something and perhaps burn out the whole system – it's like driving your car at maximum speed for short period of time: you have a great time, but then it's a goner – or if you are looking for the long gain, the long investment, where you have a stabilized population, you have a stabilized set of renters in a given building, and you are providing a good, reasonable rate of return for your investment over a longer period of time.

I can't help but think of this as a larger analogy which, in my mind, is a problem, by which we are not managing the economy properly. It's the same kind of deal. Let's try to get as much as we possibly can in the shortest period of time, and damn the torpedoes, so to speak. Or are we going to perhaps set up a structure by which we can enjoy the fruits of the economy over a longer period of time and, in fact, have a more equitable distribution of the wealth and the profit that is subsequent to that?

Somehow I think we have a parallel thing going on here, Mr. Chair, where the rental economy in this province is red hot, and people are suffering as a result. It's a reflection of a red-hot economy in general in which not everyone is getting the fair shake that they deserve.

Those two things, looking at them together, at the very least we've put in really three – I wish there were more – sets of amendments that carry these very reasonable figures of the Alberta consumer price index, which otherwise is inflation – there's your up and down – plus 2 per cent. Let's not forget that certainly we would have a provision for a landlord to make an appeal under extenuating circumstances to exceed that. That's not a big deal. That's a normal part of having temporary rent regulations in place.

Mr. Chair, it's been a wonderful experience running this through. We're not finished yet by any means. Bill 34 and all of its potential, I guess, we still have a chance to salvage. We've seen a couple of amendments accepted. I think that this one is just the ripe one, the cherry on the cake, the pièce de résistance, the apex of the evening and the following morning here.

Mr. Elsalhy: It's the highlight.

Mr. Eggen: A highlight, as well.

Certainly, it's not just me and the members of this Legislature that would walk away happy, but hundreds of thousands of Albertans will get some degree of justice as a result of this amendment going through in concert with the rest of Bill 34 to provide a measure of stability to the rental market in Alberta.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to be able to rather lately join the discussion with respect to Bill 34. Mr. Chairman, I have to encourage my colleagues and all members of the House to not vote in favour of this amendment. We've been accused from across the way that this government has its head stuck in the sand. I would suggest that on this particular issue there may be some individuals in this Assembly that could have their heads stuck someplace else.

Mr. Chairman, indications that there are hundreds of thousands – hundreds of thousands – of Albertans that are suffering at the hands of unscrupulous landlords: I can't understand how that can be. I represent a city that's one of – and there are number in the province of Alberta – the fastest growing communities in Canada. With respect to rent control I have had one communication to my constituency office – one; one communication to my constituency office with respect to rent control – and I would submit that we have dealt with the issue. That particular gentleman happens to be a supporter of the opposition, which is fine; we understand that. But one communication. The other e-mails that come, the bulk e-mails, all come from the city of Edmonton and some from the city of Calgary.

And another thing, the suggestion that there is no rental accommodation being built in the province of Alberta: Mr. Chairman, that is just not true. There's rental accommodation being built as we speak in a number of places in the northwest and, most certainly, in Grande Prairie.

To suggest that this government is doing nothing to help Albertans that have a situation where rent is outstripping their ability to pay: again, we've had a number of programs that I'm sure over the course of the last number of hours here have been discussed at length. But I might add, again, that this government has a rent supplement program in place, delivered through Alberta Municipal Affairs and Housing. Mr. Chairman, it will provide assistance to households in need, households that require affordable housing. They can access this assistance in eligible rental projects: $24.3 million assisting 4,600. These are real numbers. These aren't pie in the sky: hundreds of thousands of Albertans. These are real numbers. These are real people that this government is assisting, 4,600 households.

An additional rent supplement funding $9 million provided from local management bodies directly to tenants. The accusation that this government does nothing for tenants and everything for landlords: again, Mr. Chairman, patently not correct. Nine million dollars directly to local management bodies to tenants.

Homelessness and eviction prevention. For whatever reason, the hon. members across the way feel that this is not a program that helps Albertans. I really can't understand that. The criteria that are listed: eligibility criteria to receive emergency housing assistance. They talk about the hundreds of thousands of people with an emergency; there's an emergency housing assistance program. These are the eligibility criteria, Mr. Chairman: a person facing eviction or having significant rental arrears, an Albertan requiring assistance to establish a residence, or a person that has limited resources.

Mr. Chairman, there are more programs that we can stand here and discuss ad nauseam. This particular amendment does nothing to resolve this issue. We're working to resolve this issue. I'm encouraging my colleagues to not support this amendment.

Thank you.

8:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise to speak on this particular piece, the amendment. I was listening with great anticipation as the Minister of Energy was speaking and was not in support but was in opposition towards this particular amendment. We as an opposition were up into Grande Prairie and the greater area, and I heard from more than one person, so perhaps he has to put his ears a little bit closer to the ground. He did point out that it was a person who supported the opposition. It really doesn't matter. That's being partisan. It doesn't matter. I was elected to represent all of my constituents, and I would hope that the member does as well.

This is not partisan. This affects everybody. It affects the rich. It affects the poor. It affects people who don't vote and people who do vote. That's not the point of it. The point is that everyone needs to have representation, and I made sure that when I took the oath, I would do that.

I do support this. I said yesterday, when I was speaking with regard to the original bill with no amendments on it, that I'm not really in favour of rental caps, rental regulations, but in this particular case it's an extenuating circumstance of the economy. People need guaranteed protection. This particular amendment is putting in a sunset clause, exactly what I was speaking about last night. It has a definitive term as to when it's going to shut down, and things will continue.

Last night I said that two years go by rather quickly. We've been here, it seems like, more than two years, those that have been on the night shift. But like I said, it does go by rather quickly. Then people can find new accommodations. They can move. They've got two years to be able to get their lives in order to be able to make up their minds or go back to the quiet town that they came from down east, Ontario; it doesn't matter. They've got two years to figure it out. They know that they're in it, and they know that the regulations will come off and that it's open market once again.

I know, like I said yesterday, that there are good landlords, and there are those that are taking full advantage of the opportunity right now. They said: "You know what? We've had an awful long time that we haven't had the ability to raise the rents and bring it up to accordance with everywhere else." But, quite frankly, I think that in some cases they're taking more than advantage of it. What they're trying to do is to let the market bear the brunt.

More people are coming in because of the economy. They know that they're going to have the ability to pay because, perhaps, more than 50 per cent of the people are within the oil and gas industry, and they may have that flexibility. Some get offset through their employers – they have the ability to have top-up with accommodations – but a lot don't. We're talking about those that are on fixed, those that are on AISH, those that are on welfare, families, single income, single parents. Those are the ones that don't have the ability to make this choice. If they had the choice, they'd have probably bought years ago.

I do support this particular piece with the consumer price index as well as the 2 per cent in the amendment here. I think it's fair. I think it's reasonable. It's not a perfect solution, but in the meantime it does provide that protection, something that the original bill does absolutely nothing for. One year with no increase. Well, again, when they do get that increase, it could be 100, 110 per cent. So they can completely double. This at least provides some modest protection for the renters.

As I said, I do see no reason why this couldn't go. We've already accepted one. This would be at least a palatable one for all. I mean, go back to the associations, those that are lobbying on the government side. Tell them. Say: "You know what? It's not a perfect thing, but give us two years. Give it the sunset clause." After the two years, as we discussed yesterday, it'll go down. We'll shut it down after that. That's a different story. But in the meantime give us the two years.

We've never had this type of economy. Even back in the '80s I don't think things were this hot, when we were doing it at 18 and 22 per cent mortgage rates and people were losing their houses. The economy was doing very well, but all of a sudden it just dropped right out. Right now this is different than that point right there. The point is that we've got an influx: too many people, not enough accommodations. We're hoping to build the accommodations, as we said yesterday, for 10,000 people with the $285 million, but that won't come anywhere close to providing the upper limit to what you're trying to find here. We continue to get more and more migration in from other provinces, so that need could easily increase to 20,000 or 30,000. I don't know. But if we're going to start with a modest number, say the 10,000, we're not going to meet it. We're not going to meet it whatsoever.

As I mentioned yesterday, even the cost of high schools or bridge construction, something that we all know about, has gone up considerably, and we're not able to in fact recognize how much because the government has put in a bump for it. They said: "You know what? We recognize that things are expensive, so we're going to add a little bit of inflationary cost with regard to tenders." So we have that flexibility. Municipalities have that flexibility to anticipate the out-of-reasonable costs, the unforeseen costs.

Look at the cost of concrete, how much it has gone up. I mean, everything is requiring concrete, so we're going to add an extra 25 per cent. If I was a contractor and I knew that I had ability to cushion my bid by an extra 25 per cent, you know I'd go for that. Why not? It's easy money. The government has pretty much said: I've got the money here.

An Hon. Member: That's un-Albertan.

Mr. Bonko: You know what? There are a lot of un-Albertan people, Tony. [interjections] Sorry about that. There could be a lot of Tonys here today.

Mr. Boutilier: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Chairman, I retract the particular piece. I recognize that I shouldn't single out people like the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Like I said, like the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar said, we have a lot of guys out there that may not be on the up and up. There are a lot of guys out there that may not be as true to form. There are people that are going to take advantage of it. That's just human nature. Absolutely. You know, I call it the Robinson Crusoe theory. It's every man for himself sometimes because they all want to get ahead. They all want to be able to make their money and then get out. Everyone is looking for that magic opportunity to be able to sit on a beach or buy their condo in Cancun or something, and right now is the opportunity to do it. But it shouldn't be on the backs of renters. That's the unfortunate way and the unscrupulous way.

Mr. Chairman, those are some of the comments, but I do look forward to hearing more and taking part further with the debate, and I'm sure the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo does as well.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak on the amendment to Bill 34 proposed by the leader of the third party. I think it is rent control dressed up in another way. The bottom line that we look at is that in Alberta today we have a booming market. Our economy is red hot, and there are more and more people coming to the province.

This is a very easy target for the opposition to focus on. They can always say that it is the fault of the government, and somehow the government has to take more action on this thing. There is no doubt that more action is being taken to deal with the shortage of housing. It is a demand and supply issue. Like a big man trying to cover himself with a small blanket, if you dump more money into it trying to have a short-term fix, all we do is squeeze somebody out of the current housing market. If we help somebody on this side, then somebody on the other side will be in that position. The best way to solve this issue is to increase the supply of housing in Alberta. However, we have another problem compounded on top of that. We are near full employment these days in Alberta.

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

For us to be able to attract more workers to build more housing units is not a simple solution even though, as you know, we have pumped hundreds of millions of dollars into addressing this. There are short-term and there are long-term solutions to this issue, but rent control is not the answer because all rent control will do is send a very chilling signal out there to potential investors who can build more housing units in Alberta, and that will only make the problem worse. Today the vacancy rate in Calgary and Edmonton is around 1 per cent. That's almost zero per cent. That is why the rent has increased substantially. If you have people out there who need these units and you try to control the market by stopping people from raising the rent, you don't solve it. The shortage of housing is still there.

For the short-term solution I think that we have to look at two ways. One is to increase the number of living spaces quickly by allowing investors, manufacturing companies, and renters to bring in additional mobile homes. That will help increase the number of housing units available on the market. Secondly, we look at the regulations to deal with the secondary suites, basement suites, to allow people to rent out their basements so that we can instantly increase the number of housing units available on the market.

In the long run we have to work with the private sector and the municipal governments to bring in more incentives so that people can build more housing units. We have to address the shortage of labour because today in Calgary in a poor neighbourhood an average housing price for a new home is as high as $500,000 or $600,000. It is certainly not affordable. We have to somehow bring the cost of building down by allowing more labour to come into the market, and that is one of the reasons why the opposition is in a very interesting position. On one hand they attack any incentive from the government to bring in additional workers through the temporary foreign workers program, for example, and on the other hand they are blaming us for not coming up with solutions to address affordable housing and the shortage of housing situation.

In the long run the only way we can deal with this thing is to bring in more workers, more new sources of workers, to help build more housing units. If we can address the supply and demand question, if we can bring up the supply to the point where it can meet the demand of the people of Alberta, then we can get the rental and the housing prices to a reasonable level. To do grandstanding and to parade one victim a day doesn't do anything to address the real issues that we are facing today, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Nice to see a change of shift there, a smiling chairman in charge.

I rise to speak in support of the amendment before the House introduced by the leader of the NDP opposition just a moment ago, which calls for putting some restraint on rent increases for residential rental property temporarily over the next two years. The rate of increase that is suggested here would seem to be most reasonable, and in fact the rate that's suggested here, the CPI plus 2 per cent, is flexible in that from year to year CPI could change. Any change in the CPI would certainly lead to increase in the permissible rate of increase in the rents that the landlords can charge their tenants.

What I want to emphasize is the following. I just heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, I think, arguing that this amendment will stop the landlords from increasing rents. Quite the contrary, Mr. Chairman. This amendment is not about stopping rent increases. It is about moderating rent increases, and that's something that needs to be borne in mind. Not only will it moderate rent increases; it will moderate these rent increases only for a certain period of time. This amendment is not about putting this change in stone so that it can stay there forever. It's only two years that we are calling for.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think that this is a most reasonable way of dealing with a very difficult problem. It's an amendment which is very fair towards tenants, and it's equally fair towards landlords. What we need is a certain moderation in the rate of rent increases in the province. We need to bring some sanity to the residential rental market, and this amendment will go some way in providing that moderation.

Mr. Chairman, the Affordable Housing Task Force listened to hundreds and hundreds of Albertans, visited dozens of communities, listened to individuals affected by exorbitant rent increases, listened to volunteer organizations that are trying to help those who are either already on the street or face the threat of being on the street very soon. So there is a strong voice there in our provincial community that is expressed in the recommendation made by this task force, which represented all sides of this House. The recommendation related to rent increases is precisely the one that this amendment proposes now, and I hope that the House will approve this. That is the voice of our provincial community leaders. That is the voice expressed, I think, genuinely by the Affordable Housing Task Force. That's one side.

There is the other voice, and we recognize this, and that's the voice of landlords, who want no controls, no capping, no moderation in the rate at which they can increase the rents for their tenants. We all know the problems that this creates for families, for people who already are in Alberta, people who are coming to Alberta, people who we want to come to Alberta in light of the fact that we face a very serious labour shortage. We hear this around this House all the time.

I want to share with you, Mr. Chairman, an anecdote. My wife had befriended a lady from the Philippines, who came here four years ago as a nanny and served in that capacity for three years while she went to school to upgrade her nursing qualifications. For about eight or nine months, since she got her landed immigrant status and fulfilled the requirements that are associated with coming here as a nanny, she is now working as a nurse in a seniors' residential complex. She came to visit us just two or three days ago. She's leaving for the Philippines to fetch her family, that's she been away from for four years. I happened to be home when she came in and wished her a good journey back home to bring her family back. I asked her: "What about housing? We've been hearing a great deal about this." She said, "Look, after four years of work I've been able to afford to have now a one-bedroom apartment for myself." She pays about $670 or $680 for it. I said, "What's your family size?" She said, "I've got two kids and a husband to bring." I said, "Are you going to be able to have reasonable accommodation for four of you?" She said, "Absolutely not." That one-bedroom apartment is all that she can afford, and she's worried that the rent even on that one-bedroom, modest, and inadequate accommodation for the whole family will be increased while she's away. She worrying how she's going to take care of the family when she comes back and where she's going to find the money to pay for it.

Now, that's one instance which illustrates the problem of people who are already here, who have worked very hard to improve their lives, who contribute to the communities here by way of the services that they are providing, services that we so badly need, services which have to be provided only by people that we invite to come in from outside. So that's only one small example of a much larger problem that you're dealing with.

Now, if the House in its wisdom does in fact consider this amendment seriously and decides, given its flexible character, given that this amendment is in fact a very flexible formula, that it responds to the fluctuations in the CPI rate increase plus adds another 2 per cent to make sure the landlords are compensated in a reasonable fashion while, at the same time, there's a predictability to the rate of increase in rents the tenants will face over the next two years while the problem in the market in housing remains so volatile – once we have gone over this very volatile period with these measures, that will moderate rate increases and compensate fairly the landlords, on one hand, and provide fair protection for tenants, on the other, I think we will be in a good position to lift these regulations and allow the market then to operate as it should. Hopefully, there will be a healthy equilibrium between demand and supply so that the rate increases won't be running out of control.

So, Mr. Chairman, I said that there is that clear voice that Albertans as a community have expressed through the recommendation made by the Affordable Housing Task Force. The other voice is the voice of landlords. They have obviously lobbied. My constituency office has received lots of e-mails, bulk e-mails from landlords urging us not to bring in rent controls because the sky is going to fall if you bring in some sort of moderating legislation with respect to rents. That, to me, makes no sense at all. I think that's fearmongering. That's trying to create panic among the public in general that if any attempt is made by this Legislature to bring in some modification to existing legislation to moderate rent increases, that's going to simply discourage completely and push the investors out of this province. I think that's nonsense, Mr. Chairman. It simply is not going to happen.

So if I'm being lobbied with such intensity, I'm sure that the government side of the House has been lobbied as well and lobbied, it seems at this moment, rather successfully and effectively. When I heard the President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta over the last 12 hours and over the last two weeks as we've been going back and forth in this House during the question period and debate on this matter, he seems to have been totally swayed by the arguments made by lobbyists on behalf of landlords.

It's too bad that we don't have the lobbyist legislation in place already so that Albertans would know to what extent lobbyists on behalf of landlords, in fact, have been lobbying. That information, hopefully, would be on record if that bill was passed. That bill is on the Order Paper, but it's not passed. It's nowhere near passing yet. So we do not know how many, what associations, what lobbyists on behalf of landlords have been lobbying the government side and how and why they've been so successful in persuading the government that it shouldn't take any action and that any action that it does take be in the form of deregulating any controls on rents.

So, Mr. Chairman, I submit to you and to the House, respectfully, that it should give very serious consideration to the most reasonable amendment that's before it and vote in favour of it. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before I recognize the next speaker, I just want to point out that it's not accepted practice in this Assembly for members to occupy the space between the table and the bar. I mentioned this the other day, and hopefully I don't have to mention it again.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It will not come as a surprise that I'm going to support the amendment. I'd like to go back and talk about what this debate is all about. We had a task force that was set up to go out and listen to Albertans. That was the purpose of it. We all did that, including the hon. member there, and we were told to listen and come back with recommendations.

One of the things that we heard the most – I think it was the second most brought up item, and I think the member would agree with me on that – was that there needed to be some sort of rent stability because people were hurting. It was a crisis. I said at the time and I believe it to be true that many people on that committee didn't start off thinking that you needed rent guidelines, but after they listened to the people of Alberta, Mr. Chairman, they felt that they had to bring through this recommendation. There seemed to be no other alternative because it was clear that there was a crisis going on out there. That was so clear to us, so clear.

You know, there are some good things that have come forward, but the $285 million I don't think is going to cut it. All we were saying here is: give a temporary time for rents for people to have some stability in their lives. We've talked in this Chamber many times about the vulnerable, but there are more and more people that are falling in and having difficulty paying their rents, with rising rents.

Now, I think part of the problem, Mr. Chairman, has to do with what the task force called for: adopt a consistent definition of affordable housing for policy and program development. We've had this discussion many times. People say: "Well, what's affordable housing? What is need? What is gouging? What's all the rest of it?" But, you know, then the government says that they accept that a consistent definition of affordable housing is required but does not accept the task force's definition. Well, it's not the task force definition. This is a common definition across Canada and, as far as I know, in the United States, where they say that no more than 30 per cent of your income should be taken up by accommodation.

I believe the government's problem is that they know that with rising rents and people not being able to afford that, that's becoming thousands more people out there, and that's why they don't want to accept that particular guideline. Well, if you think it should be, as I said before, 40 per cent or 50 per cent, say it, but at least let's have a definition. We can't begin to deal with this problem. I would suggest here that the real definition is 30 per cent on this, Mr. Chairman. But the problem, I think, is that the government sees that there are thousands of people that are going to fall below that. So is it 35 per cent? What is it, then? We're certainly getting a lot of calls. I'm surprised if people say that they're not getting calls because we certainly are in the cities of Edmonton and Calgary.

Mr. Chairman, I don't understand. The government recognizes that it's going to take time to deal with the supply side, and we all agree that there needs to be more supply. We've talked about incentives to builders to build affordable housing, inclusionary zoning, all the rest of the things, but the government is not moving there. So let's say we start now. If we're building more supply – and we talked in the task force about needing 12,000 units. Well, we're not starting, and things are going to get worse before they get better. The point of the guidelines is to say, "Okay, let's do the other things to increase the supply," but we're not doing it.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, this will get worse before it gets better even if we start with the $285 million and start doing some things with the lead time.

I want to bring back again what they're saying from the government, from the ministers here, from Alberta Employment, Immigration and Industry. They're saying that in the next year Alberta's economy is going to continue to be hot. They say: downside risks include labour shortages, and increasing construction and housing costs. They talk about the housing area. Again, I want to keep stressing this. They talk about the Alberta housing crunch. They say: housing shortage is driving up costs of owning and renting a house. Well, that's self-evident.

Then they talk about the MLS listing: resale prices were 34% higher than a year ago; new housing prices rose 38% in Calgary and 42% in Edmonton. They say: the rental vacancy rate declined from 3.1 per cent in October 2005 to 0.9 per cent in October 2006, the lowest vacancy rate for the province on record. It's a historic low. Then they say: since the start of 2005 housing affordability across the province has been eroding at an aggressive pace. Now, there's the reality. It's bad enough now, but they're predicting that it's going to get worse with the economy.

So what do we do? What do we do, then, if we reject rent guidelines? There's no market there, particularly. That's what the government's own document is saying, that there's no real market there. So what do we do with the renters, with the most vulnerable people that could be out on the streets? We've had lots of discussion there. Mr. Chairman, again I want to stress that there are a lot of working people that ordinarily would be looking to buy their first house. We rejected help there too.

So what are we going to do? I still haven't got an answer from this government about what we're going to do. Somehow the market hasn't been there. We've pointed out, again, that Alberta has had a big increase in condo development. Condo starts have gone up big time, a 40 per cent increase, but Alberta with no rent increase guidelines has seen a drop in new rentals by 52 per cent. The argument was that people will build. You know, the old saying is: don't bring rent controls, and they will come and build. Well, Mr. Chairman, they're not doing it.

What do we do? What are we going to say to thousands of people there? Just suck it up and spend 50, 60, 70 per cent of your income on accommodation; tough it out; this is so-called free-enterprise government. Is that what we're going to say? What are we going to say to the homeless? You're out there; too bad; that's just the way it is.

You know, if the government could say to me that there is something that will happen in this next year that will stop the bleeding and the anxiety for thousands of people in this province, I'm prepared to listen. But we haven't heard anything other than that the magic marketplace is somehow going to solve this. Well, the point is: there is no market there. It's distorted. It's out of kilter. Even their own documents are talking about that, Mr. Chairman.

For the life of me I can't understand this hidebound reason not to do what's right for people, Mr. Chairman. I mean, what's the alternative? Again, I keep asking people: what's the alternative? What is the alternative? I'd again say that there is one last chance here, I would think, to at least do the right thing: consumer price index plus 2 per cent. Remember that that also gives them the right, if there are costs like utility bills, maintenance, all the rest, to pass it on. So it's not a hard and fast control. Let's move on and do it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. This particular amendment that's before the House right now, as has been acknowledged by the third party, is very similar to an amendment that was defeated earlier in the evening or the morning or however we describe this marathon session that we're in. The reason it was defeated at that time – at least, as far as I'm concerned, the reason that members from this side of the House voted against it – was because it didn't have a timeline. As has been articulated by many members in the Official Opposition over the last many hours, we do believe that this particular crisis in the market demands temporary – and I underline the word “temporary” – rent guidelines.

The amendment that we have in front of us right now does not have a limit, so unless we can have the House agree to a subamendment that would establish a timeline, this amendment would once again not receive our support. With the help of Parliamentary Counsel and staff back at the Annex building, I've now placed before the table and would ask that we distribute a subamendment to all members present. This subamendment would amend the amendment before the House.

I'm not sure if I should now wait for that to be passed out or if I should describe it first.

The Chair: We'll have the pages distribute copies to all the members. We will refer to this amendment as subamendment A1.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chair. For clarification, did you wish me to wait until the subamendment is completely distributed?

The Chair: Yes, we'll wait. Just give the pages a moment to distribute.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you.

The Chair: You may proceed, hon. member. I believe everyone has a copy.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll just read it into the record if I could. Subamendment A1 would amend amendment A6 by adding “for a period of 18 months, or until the rental market stabilizes” after the words “plus 2%” that exist in the current amendment before the House.

Now, as I indicated, Mr. Chairman, the amendment as it was before the House, without any sort of a time limit, would not meet the favour of the Official Opposition. We've had some discussion over the past many hours about a 12-month time limit and we've had discussion about a 24-month time limit under various scenarios that have been contemplated in a number of other amendments. So this, I think, is a nice middle ground. We've seen some good work during this debate in terms of finding a middle ground with the government and making what was a good bill, but not a really strong bill, a little bit stronger. I would like to take this opportunity to thank members of the government for seeing their way to agree to two amendments so far because it does move things along in the right direction. We're proud to have been a part of that and certainly pleased that the government saw fit to work with us on those amendments. I'm hopeful that we might see some similar co-operation on subamendment A1.

Now, I've had the opportunity over the last several hours to articulate a number of times the reasons why I believe that some form of rent stabilization guidelines are required. The President of the Treasury Board rose at some point in the early hours of the morning, and for the first time since we really began discussing this crisis in the House this spring, he gave an answer to my question of what is gouging and what steps the government will take to address the gouging issue, which is really, I think, what this entire debate has been all about. The President of the Treasury Board did respond to that, and I appreciate that. It's unfortunate that, you know, we had to sit through the night and into the wee hours of the morning and into the sunlight before we actually had somebody from the government side respond to that question, but that was probably the most important question, so I'm glad that we went there.

Now, unfortunately, I don't think it's good enough yet. He talked about taking this to the landlord and tenant dispute panel. As the shadow minister for Service Alberta I continue to hear stories about that panel not working the way that it is intended to work. It's a pilot project at the moment. It's not even across the province. It's in the Edmonton area only. The feedback that I'm hearing from people who have been involved with the panel is that it's not accomplishing what it was set out to accomplish. Despite the fact that the minister has said that there will be discussions with that panel and with landlords' and tenants' representatives to try to come up with some way to address the question of gouging, we're not there yet. We need these answers, and we need these answers soon because as many members, specifically the leader of the third party, have outlined earlier in debate, these horror stories are coming at us daily. Literally every day there's another one coming into the office, another phone call, another e-mail.

I referenced the Metro – I'm not sure if I can recall the name of the college that my constituent is attending.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, it's Metro. It's in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. R. Miller: Yes. It is a college in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. There are approximately 300 ESL students attending there right now, and these students are bringing their concerns about the lack of some sort of rental guidelines to their instructors on a daily basis. I know that we've had several dozen visitors in this Assembly over the last few days expressing their concerns to the minister and to the minister's staff about the lack of rental guidelines in Bill 34. I know that those numbers are not going to wane. I know that this is going to continue and continue and continue on a daily and weekly and monthly basis until some effort is made to address this situation. We're not there yet. We're moving in the right direction, but we're not there yet, Mr. Chair.

Subamendment A1 is another attempt to find some middle ground that the government members might be comfortable with and that landlords could live with and that tenants would certainly appreciate in terms of providing them the protection and the stability that they need and deserve in order to accomplish the goal of the Official Opposition and, I believe, all members of this House, and that is to make sure that everybody has a home.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the availability of new affordable housing in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford because we've talked a lot over the last many hours about whether or not there's any new housing being built in Edmonton-Centre, as an example, or whether or not Edmonton-Glenora is seeing new rental accommodation or whether or not Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is seeing any new rental accommodation. When I look at the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, I cannot say for a fact, but in my recollection I cannot think of any new rental accommodation that's been built in the two and a half years that I've been the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford.

There is, as many people will be familiar with, a major complex of housing being built on the old Heritage Mall shopping centre site: Century Park. This complex, when it's completed, Mr. Chairman, will accommodate somewhere between 8,000 and 9,000 residents. One of the things they've talked about is availability of housing. We know that with the influx of new residents into Alberta, this is a crucial issue, and indeed this developer is going to provide between 8,000 and 9,000 residents with housing over the next several years. That's a good thing.

There is, however, as there usually is, a catch, Mr. Chairman. The first sale of units in that particular complex took place sometime before Christmas, and they sold $86 million worth of real estate in about four hours. They had people camped out, standing in line. It was probably a record in terms of local real estate sales. The smallest single unit, under a thousand square feet, sold for $375,000, and the prices went up to, if I remember right, somewhere around $900,000 for a 2,000 square foot unit. Now, you know it's a wonderful compliment to the developers that they had that much interest in this development. There are, obviously, many new residents of Edmonton-Rutherford in the next year or two when that first building is complete that are going to have lovely homes, but this is not affordable housing in any way, shape, or form.

That is the only instance of new housing that I can think of in the time that I've been the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. Clearly, it does nothing to address the issues that we're discussing in this debate here. I'm not suggesting for one second that rent guidelines are going to provide new housing. I'm not suggesting for one second that rent guidelines are going to be the solution to the problem, although as we had the discussion earlier today, I do believe that as a temporary measure they can be a part of the solution. They can be one piece of the puzzle.

Yes, I've also received the mass e-mails that the Energy minister was referring to a few minutes ago when he was debating, and by far the majority of those mass e-mails that I'm getting are, in fact, from landlords, the same ones that he's getting, because they outline right in the header of the e-mail that they've been sent to all MLAs. So there's no question that the landlords have a powerful lobby under way right now to all MLAs to address their concerns, and they do have some legitimate concerns. We've discussed that in here.

Clearly, it's not all landlords that are gouging. In fact, I'm sure it's only a very few that are gouging, but once again it is happening. There is gouging taking place, and this Assembly must do something to protect those that are most vulnerable from those landlords that are taking advantage of this situation. We can't allow anybody to be taken advantage of in that way, whether it's the 80-year-old grandmother that was in the gallery the other day or the young mother from Rwanda with a baby child or my gentleman, Mr. Deria, from Yellowbird suites. My colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie indicates that he's got many like that as well. So we can't allow anybody to be taken advantage of in that way. As the Premier himself said last Friday evening, that is un-Albertan.

It's incumbent upon all of us to find a way to make sure that we protect those people, and I do believe that subamendment A1 to amendment A6 would accomplish that. I think it's fair to landlords. We've discussed previously the fact that by allowing them a market-basket measure plus 2 per cent, there is certainly an opportunity for landlords to keep up with inflation in the short term, in the temporary period that this covers, as well as giving them a cushion of 2 per cent. I think that by having a period of 18 months or – and this is key, I think, to this subamendment – until the rental market stabilizes, perhaps in six months or eight months or 10 months or 12 months if the market has stabilized, we can remove this temporary guideline sooner rather than later. Perhaps, Mr. Chair, it might be longer than 18 months, and we may have to leave that in place. I'm not sure exactly what the answer is.

That's the point of this: that we don't necessarily have to have all of the answers, Mr. Chairman. We can provide the government with some flexibility to respond to market conditions. If, in fact, we could do some of the things that have been discussed in this House and some of the things that are reflected in the housing task force and some of the things that are reflected in the Official Opposition's document entitled Because Everybody Needs a Home, then perhaps we can open up some secondary suites sooner. Perhaps we can give the municipalities the versatility to mandate that a certain percentage of affordable housing be provided in every new development. If we can do some of those things, maybe we can get some of this affordable housing on-stream, online a little quicker than in the five years that we seem to talk about most of the time. If in fact, Mr. Chairman, that happens, then we can remove the temporary guidelines sooner than anticipated as well.

So this subamendment would in fact provide the Legislature and the government with the flexibility to respond to market conditions, and I think that goes a long way towards addressing some of the concerns that the government members have expressed this morning.

I think that with that, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to allow other members to comment on subamendment A1. As I suggested earlier, I do believe this strikes a middle ground that accommodates the needs and requirements of tenants, landlords, and this Assembly in terms of the flexibility required to respond to market conditions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. I mean, obviously we've had this debate most of the night, but it would be really difficult. We've mentioned to the hon. members that we intend to bring in the board with the landlord and tenant people, and we want to work to have some kind of a constructive dialogue between the groups and bring that together. I don't think that you want to deal with someone and tell them in good faith that we want to sit down and talk about this but: oh, by the way, we've just taken away your ability to use your property how you want for the next 18 months. You can't have it both ways. If you want them at the table to come to some understanding – because there is no legislated way to deal with them. So you simply can't have it both ways. If you want them to deal in a reasonable manner, then we also have to be reasonable back with them.

I'm suggesting that we've had the debate on the rent controls all night long. We don't accept the way they look at it. It's just that simple.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to indicate that the Alberta NDP opposition is going to support this subamendment, and I just want to indicate that it fits very well and completes the motion or the amendment that I made earlier this morning. Again, we come to the basic question before us: that there is no protection and no stability for tenants in this province. Renters in this province are faced with a very, very difficult situation. Hundreds of thousands of Alberta families are faced with rent increases that they may not be able to afford, and this government has rejected every attempt to provide some protection and some real stability for them.

I think it's unconscionable that the government is failing tenants. It is favouring landlords. Instead of setting direction, the minister is talking about: "You know, we can't set direction in this province. We can't pass legislation, or the landlords just simply won't talk to us and won't co-operate." Well, I hate to think that that's the situation, but if it's so, then it really indicates that the government is just not prepared to provide the leadership that's necessary on this issue.

Mr. Chairman, what we've seen here is, I think, an attempt by this government to ram through legislation dealing with rents in this province that does not support renters, does not give them the protection they need, and to do that under cover of darkness through the night. In fact, I think the opposition by working together has co-operated in stopping that so that we now have the final debate on the amendments to this legislation taking place in the light of day, when there are people around to witness the actual position of the government.

I want to just indicate that the subamendment, which would enforce rent guidelines for a period of 18 months or until the rental market stabilizes, is a good one, and it's very supportive of what we're trying to do here, which is to limit rent increases to one per year and to be no greater than the Alberta consumer price index published by Statistics Canada for the previous calendar year plus 2 per cent. That's a reasonable rate of return, Mr. Chairman.

I would urge all hon. members to support the subamendment and then support the amendment so that we can give this legislation real teeth to protect real people, real renters in this province, who've been abandoned by this government.

Thank you.

The Chair: I wasn't wanting to interrupt the member, but the noise level is getting high in here, and it's difficult for the chair to hear. So if we could keep the background noise down, I would appreciate it.

We have the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would certainly like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for his subamendment and for his tenacious interest in this very important topic. I would also like to sincerely thank all the members who have given so much of their time to this discussion and the debate and particularly the members that have sat through most of the night and a lot of those members that are still here. I had the privilege of going home and getting a few hours of shut-eye, but I do want to commend all the members for their hard work through the night on debating this rather important issue.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for recognizing a good bill. It's good to hear someone from the other side recognize that, even though we may not agree on how to get to the end of this debate and the solution that we're looking for. I think we're all in here with the same intentions. We have the same attitude: to make the best effort that we can on behalf of our constituents and recognize that we have a situation that does require some serious attention.

Mr. Chairman, I have to say that a few unscrupulous landlords gouging their tenants is appalling, and I repeat: it is appalling. But this does not constitute a crisis. I have to say that I look forward to the efforts through the Minister of Service Alberta and the Landlord and Tenant Advisory Board taking a very serious look at the situation and, I would hope, bringing swift action – swift action – to bear on these rather unsavoury individuals or companies.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that this subamendment at best, although well-intentioned, would add a level of ambiguity to the situation, and I have to say that I'm at a loss to even imagine what terms or what learned body would determine when the rental market is stable. I believe that this will be a matter of opinion for a number of individuals in terms of determining what is stable. I mean, what I consider stable, what the members opposite and many others consider stable, I would suggest to you, is something that's going to be open to a lot of interpretation. So the whole point of this subamendment that talks about "or until the rental market stabilizes" – I think we could discuss that for many nights on end in this Chamber and many other parts of this province.

Mr. Chairman, I have to say that I cannot support the subamendment, and I would encourage all reasonable members to defeat the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak in support of subamendment A1 to amendment A6. You know, as I said before, we believe in fairness and sustainability in the market. This amendment definitely will help with rent gouging. We still believe that we should do something temporarily for the tenants as well as for the investors because we want to keep the investors in Alberta. If we don't give them the fair share, they will move somewhere else. So I think this amendment is very fair, especially timewise. Before, we tried, you know, a one-year time. Now it's 18 months, which is very reasonable, and it will definitely help investors as well as tenants. We support the short-term relief program. This is temporary, and it will definitely help the market to stabilize.

Thank you very much. I support the amendment.

9:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to add my congratulations to all of those who were here throughout the night and who are still here this morning.

You know, in the 13 and a half or almost 14 years that I've been representing Calgary-Egmont, my constituents have never supported legislation that intrudes on the free market, especially when the marketplace may not have exhausted all of the means available to it, but I really hear from my constituents when they perceive that politicians are creating problems where no problems exist.

Mr. Eggen: Oh, come on. Give us a break.

Mr. Herard: The hon. member across the way thinks I'm referring to this issue. There have been a number of issues in 13 and a half years, hon. member.

What we're debating here today are measures to control rents, rent increases, and issues around notice for condo conversions and penalties for failing to act within the act. That's clearly rent control no matter how you slice it.

I believe that there is strength in numbers, and we've seen condominium associations, for example, you know, work in a reasonable fashion with landowners and so on to get the issues that they have resolved. I think also that renter associations could do the same.

I heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity in the wee hours of the morning, as I sometimes get up in the wee hours of the morning, read letter after letter of complaint from his constituents from one particular building. I believe that if the 280 tenants in that building – I think it was 280 that he referred to – were to act with one public voice, the landlord may well be persuaded to change his mind.

On a lighter note, most of us probably have had a chuckle or two in the past from the David Letterman top 10, but I doubt that offending landlords would find much humour in being on the top 10 gougers list day after day, week after week, especially if the beneficial owner of the property were named instead of just the management companies that manage these things.

Here we are tinkering around with amendments and subamendments, tinkering around with the marketplace. I don't believe this is about affordable housing. I believe it's about income support, and we have programs to provide a hand up to those who need it. We've got programs to ensure that people don't get evicted. But when does a hand up become a handout and an entitlement? Where do you draw the line?

Mr. Chairman, I think that we'd be much better off working with tenant associations, working with landlords to see if there wouldn't be a way for them to allocate part of their inventory to low-income housing, being assured that government has a program to top up the income of those who need it. That's what this government has been doing for years and years and years, and now all of a sudden there's a major crisis. We have the programs to help those who need help.

Mr. Chairman, I can't support that amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, it breaks my heart to hear that the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont is not supporting this subamendment, but I kind of thought that he wouldn't in the first place since he prefaced his remarks with such a great vat of sort of ideological claptrap. I certainly expected him not to do that.

What we've been debating here all night is a way to define exactly how much is it before somebody is being gouged. You know, at the end of the day the only people that have actually come up with numbers are over on this side. You have to define what is too much before you can put any of these other things in place. Otherwise, you can have all the good intentions in the world, but if the barn door is still open to allow somebody to make an increase in someone's rent that is beyond what they can afford, then the whole system breaks down. It's no longer a contractual arrangement between individuals on a reasonable sort of agreement, but it's someone who has to fall into this rental trap that's been created and has no choice in the matter because the increase in the real estate prices across this province coupled with the increase in the rental rates that people have been forced to pay has created a trap into which thousands of people are either falling or going to fall. Quite frankly, Mr. Chair, we have to be able to stabilize that situation. We're not talking about setting up something that's going to be here in perpetuity. It's a way to stabilize the situation for this immediate circumstance that we find ourselves in.

The subamendment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford brought forward to us here is just a nice way to cap it off. It's a nice way to add those figures in there that have come from the rental review commission, the numbers that have been placed in regard to using the cost-of-living increase plus 2 per cent plus a provision to increase even more if that's what needs to happen. There's just a whole range of ways to be flexible with the approach that we've been bringing forward here this last evening and into the morning. That's what people are looking for when we walk out of here today. They're looking for a way to stabilize their rents so that they can have the security and confidence to know that they can stay in their homes this next month, that they're not going to have to break the bank and overhaul their monthly budget. How many people have $100, $200, $300, $1,000 extra in their monthly budget to cover these things? That's the sort of emergency approach that we're trying to put together here, Mr. Chair, and this is the key to it. Otherwise, quite frankly, Bill 34 without some temporary regulation in place is not worth the paper that it's printed on, and that's an unfortunate thing.

We've spent a lot of time on this, but I think that at least we've come to crystalize the situation. We've heard from people who we haven't heard from before. I've quite frankly heard some appalling exaggeration and ideology from the other side. The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky went way, way out of his way to deliberately slam and misrepresent the reasoned arguments that we've been putting forward here all evening. I would expect that if he bothered to listen, he would show some remorse in that regard. I just can't stand it when people start making things up, putting words in people's mouths, and resorting to blunt-fisted ideology as opposed to talking about some reasonable thing. [interjections] Yeah, right. Okay. Well, you know, I'm just trying to catch his attention. I'll send him a note later; that's for sure. I'll visit him in Grande Prairie. I'm sure he'll see me there.

Anyway, I certainly appreciate the assistance that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford gave us to give us this last chance to do this.

You know, at the heart of this issue, Mr. Chair, I have a very serious concern about how this circumstance is a transfer of wealth from the working people, from the middle class, to the very few people who are in a position to be able to take advantage of this situation right here, right now. You know, the job of this Legislature is to provide regulation to somehow even out those circumstances. When it happens that there's such a huge shift to such a distortion in any given market, our job is to create some measure of regulation, some measure of moderation, and that's what the people of Alberta are looking to this Legislature to see come true right here and right now. There's no opportunity for appeal here right now. It's very arbitrary, it's very undemocratic, and, I would say, very blunt fisted as well.

So without some measure of regulation on a temporary basis in Bill 34 certainly the whole thing is going to go down in flames, and we're going to end up having to do this again. Dollars to doughnuts I guarantee some measure of regulation will have to come into the market, and it's a shame that we can't do that here today instead of later on down the road.

With that, Mr. Chair, I would like to close my comments. It's been, actually, quite an interesting time and lots of fun for those of you who've been here from yesterday to today. Regardless of the differences in opinions that we might have in regard to this bill, I've certainly enjoyed the debate, and I look forward to continuing on with Bill 34 here this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I anticipate that we're nearing the end of this debate this morning, but I also have a sense that there may yet be a division or two. So I'm going to ask under Standing Order 32(3) if we might have unanimous consent to shorten the bells to two minutes and thereby expedite this whole exercise.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll keep my comments relatively brief. Again, congratulations in respect to everybody who's been here through the night. There's still a lot of energy in this room. I could tell everybody here that there are not a lot of people out there who appreciate the kinds of demands that members of all parties are under, even though some of us are yawning, and the energy that goes into these kinds of debates.

Specifically to the amendment that's under discussion right now. You know, I would put forward that this is a gesture of balance between two extremes here, which is no rent caps at all versus permanent rent caps. What we're proposing here is bringing in some mechanisms to stabilize rents but with a time limit on them. It seems to me that this is kind of an olive branch, almost, to both sides of this debate to say: okay, well, we can take some steps, but they aren't forever. I would ask that the spirit of this gesture be respected and that it be accepted, in fact, as a way to work our way through this challenge both legislatively and in the marketplace, that there is a need for some regulation or control on the marketplace at the moment, but it's not a forever kind of thing. I think the spirit and intent and effect of this particular amendment is reasonable. It brings balance. It puts a time constraint on regulation, which should make it somewhat more palatable to landlords, but it does at the same time protect tenants from short-term surges in their rental accommodation.

So in the spirit of conciliation, in the spirit of respect for all sides of this debate I think that this amendment is well worth supporting, and I would hope that other people on all sides of this debate would agree with me.

Thank you. That's my full comment on this, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to the subamendment moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to the amendment before the House by the leader of the NDP opposition. The effect of the subamendment, Mr. Chairman, is to make clear, make it absolutely clear, that the amendment before the House is only for a period of 18 months. The amendment's effect will be that the rents will be moderated, using the formula CPI plus 2 per cent, for 18 months. I think this specification is an attempt to clarify that the period for which this very moderate constraint that's put on the ability of landlords to increase rents is temporary, that it's only for 18 months, and that this Legislature will certainly have the opportunity, ability, power to revisit the issue if necessary at that time, depending upon how the housing situation evolves during that period.

Mr. Chairman, the subamendment and the amendment which it attempts to amend are really an attempt to provide a predictable situation for hundreds of thousands of Albertans who have no option but to rent accommodation for their families to live. It is important that the voices of hard-working, regular Albertans be heard in this Assembly and respected in this Assembly. I'm grateful to the Affordable Housing Task Force for showing that sensitivity, for showing that respect for the concerns of these hundreds of thousands of Albertans who are exposed to this unpredictable, volatile rental housing situation.

The task force did not discourage landlords to come before it. On the contrary, I'm sure it kept its doors wide open to give opportunity to landlords to come before it in a public forum to make their case. I don't know how many of them chose to avail that opportunity, but the task force's job was to receive submissions, receive presentations, and encourage landlords and tenants and other concerned citizens to come before it to express their views and to give advice to the task force, so I'm assuming that the recommendations of the task force reflect a balanced view of both the tenants and concerned citizens on the one side and landlords on the other. If the landlords chose not to avail this opportunity, a democratic forum at which to present their views, to have their say, then too bad. They missed an opportunity that was given to every Albertan to come to an open, democratic forum for discussion, debate, and for offering input.

Mr. Chairman, I think it's important for this Legislature, for the Assembly, to not lose sight of the fact that the task force did its work. It did its work in good faith. It provided opportunities to all Albertans. It had an open-door policy, and as a result of the deliberations through that open-door, democratic forum that it provided to Albertans, it received I think most valuable input, and that input is then reflected in its recommendations.

One of those recommendations says precisely this: at this particular moment in time when the residential rental market is out of control, there is need for some regulation. There's a need to provide some direction. There's a need for the House to recognize its responsibility. There's a need for this government to step up to the plate and say: "Yes, we have heard you, Albertans. We did provide you with an open forum. This is how democracy works. This House is a democratic House, and we're going to listen to what you had to say."

Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased that this task force was an all-party task force, that this task force wasn't a partisan group that advocated on behalf of landlords or that intended to advocate on behalf of just tenants. It was a task force, an all-party task force, and it gave due consideration, I'm certain, to all views that came before it. Out of that serious and due consideration it gave to those submissions and to that advice followed the recommendations that are before us. One of those recommendations is the amendment before the House, put forward by the leader of the NDP opposition, which is under discussion.

Mr. Chairman, it's time that we listened to the advice of the task force. It's time that we respected the views that were canvassed and put together in the form of the recommendations by the task force to this House. I urge all members to support the subamendment, and then we can forward the amendment before the House, which is very consequential. If we approve it, I think we'd bring stability, we'd bring relief immediately to tens of thousands of Albertans. This House will be able to offer assurance that we are concerned, that we are a caring house of democracy, that we listen to the voices of regular, ordinary Albertans in the tens of thousands.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before I recognize the next speaker, hon. members, after almost 14 hours of debate on this bill, it's good to see so much enthusiasm still in the room. It's also good to see that one of our members has chosen to take in the debate on the day of celebrating his birthday. I would just like to extend happy birthday wishes to the Premier.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, this will be the shortest speech I've made of the night. [interjections] I knew you'd appreciate that.

Mr. Chairman, I want to come back and just ask the question to the government, plain and simple: with the overheated economy, the predictions for housing in the future, in the next year, what are Albertans to do without the rent guidelines? What do we do with the people? Even if you build the houses now, it will take two, five years. It's bad enough now. According to their own records the housing crunch will be worse. It's a simple question: what do we do without guidelines? What is the alternative? I don't know what their alternative is in the short run. I have no idea how they're going to handle this. That's the big question that thousands of Albertans want to know.

I will just conclude by saying that, and we will see. Without the guidelines, Mr. Chairman, I predict that this issue is not going to go away. This issue is not going to go away. Eventually it will come home to roost with this government when there are more people out there that have lost their homes, more people who can't get into affordable housing, and they'll be asking: why? Why didn't you do something here today?

Mr. Chairman, we haven't got an answer. After all this debate, all this night, we still haven't got an answer, what their alternative is, because there is no alternative other than blind faith in the markets. Even the members admit that it's two to five years down the way. I don't know what's going to happen to people, and I wish we could have gotten an answer about that, but obviously there is no answer, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others on subamendment A1?

Mr. Snelgrove: They've got answers, Mr. Chairman. They just don't get the answers they'd like. That's the difference.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've been having so much fun that I almost hesitate to ask. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 34.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 34. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: All those in agreement, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, say no. So ordered.

Bill 2
Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate May 2: Dr. Brown]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege, I think, to rise and speak in second reading on Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007. It's an important piece of legislation, and along with Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, it represents the government's response to the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, of which I was a member. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for his leadership on the review committee and his work in crafting Bill 2. This bill has many specific parts responding to the many recommendations of the review committee, recommendations which have the intention of strengthening the act. I think we need to wait until we move through Committee of the Whole to deal with all the different recommendations and all the sections in the bill, so my remarks are fairly general in second reading.

[The Speaker in the chair]

This bill is the next step in a long, evolving history, which began in 1989 when a panel was commissioned to investigate conflict-of-interest rules. The panel's report, known as the Wachowich report, led to the legislating of the Conflicts of Interest Act and the establishment of the office of the Ethics Commissioner in 1991. Another report was published in 1996, known as the Tupper report. It recommended that the Conflicts of Interest Act be reviewed every five years. This was an important decision because all of the basic values and concepts that we hold to be important change. Our interpretations of them change. Even concepts like public interest and private interest, those concepts, our understanding of them changes through the years. I, for one, am not a fan of the idea of absolute values. I think values reflect the culture. Political culture has changed through time. The expectations of the public also change and evolve through time. So what was tolerated 50 years ago is not tolerated today.

A good example is the behaviour of a famous cabinet minister in the Mackenzie King government during the early 1940s who was responsible for Finance. It was not unusual for him to leave a cabinet meeting and immediately phone his stockbroker with insider tips. That may have been tolerated in the early '40s, but it certainly is not tolerated today.

The principles underlying the conflict of interest rules are "impartiality" and "integrity". Both those words, important words, are used in the preamble of the Conflicts of Interest Act. The words "public confidence" and "trust" are also mentioned in the preamble. Really, that is the main reason why amendments of Bill 2 are so important: public confidence and trust. I mean, public confidence has really been undermined in recent years in all political jurisdictions across Canada, and we're no exception. On any list of professional people, politicians are toward the bottom of the list. So it behooves us as a community of politicians, as legislators, to work hard at tightening the rules, improving the conflict of interest rules. If we don't do that, then we don't deserve the public confidence.

In today's world governments continually intervene in all areas of life through regulations and taxes and so on. We've been having a discussion of that for the last 14 hours, about the pros and cons of intervening in the economy. Governments do intervene, so it's important that we have legislation to deal with our own involvement as politicians in the general economic interests of all citizens. We are some of those citizens, so there are bound to be overlapping interests. In most cases there is an unavoidable kind of representative interest because as legislators we share the general interests of the wider population.

In many points in Bill 2 there is a recognition that we "come from a spectrum of occupations" and "participate actively in the community." In fact, these are words that are going to be added to the preamble of this bill, and this is a positive good, a recognition that as legislators we are active in the community and we share the same interests as all of our constituents and all Albertans. The Conflicts of Interest Act is not in any way intended to prevent us from being involved in our constituency and representing the interests of our constituents and of all Albertans. That is our job, to represent Albertans. But when interests or assets or liabilities or financial interests or family business interests affect the independence of the legislator, there must be clear rules.

The usual methods of controlling conflicts of interest are, first of all, disclosure, and we do that through the Ethics Commissioner's office; avoidance, by divesting ourselves of interests that might impair our judgment; and withdrawal, refraining from acting or being involved in matters in which we have a personal financial interest.

Bill 2 tightens various aspects of the conflict of interest rules. For example, Bill 2 tightens the rule prohibiting a member from using his or her office to influence a decision of the Crown to improperly advance not just their own interests but anyone's private interest, and I think that's very good.

Bill 2 extends the cooling-off period for former ministers from six months to 12 months. There are provisions concerning the limit on gifts – it's going to be $400, not $200 – and provisions in respect to disclosure. When a minister has violated the act and has profited from the violation and another person has suffered a monetary loss, then there are provisions for restitution.

There are areas that still need attention, I think, but maybe that will come in the future, when we review it next time. I personally would have preferred to see a positive code of ethics included in the Conflicts of Interest Act as the House of Commons has it, but I lost that one in the review committee. I didn't get very far with it at all. I think there's a need to distinguish a real conflict of interest, where a person has knowledge of a private economic interest that is sufficient to influence the exercise of their public duties, and an apparent conflict of interest, where there is a reasonable apprehension that a reasonably well-informed person could properly have that a conflict of interest exists. So I think it's important to distinguish between real conflicts of interest and apparent conflicts of interest. I don't think Bill 2 deals with that.

To properly evaluate the provisions of Bill 2 – and there are lots of them – I recommend that members of the House read the final report, a very good report, May 2006, of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee. This will be our guide to see how Bill 2 stacks up in responding to all of the recommendations.

I look forward to watching how this bill moves through second reading and through Committee of the Whole. Perhaps it can still be strengthened even more. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Good morning to you. It's good to see you back here in the House early in the morning.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and make brief comments on Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007, that's going through second reading. First, some general observations. Conflict of interest as it relates to the activities of public officials, publicly elected representatives in a democracy as well as people who work closely with cabinet members and others, is very important. It's important for us to make sure that we respect the trust that our electors place in us, that we respect the trust that society as a whole places in the democratic integrity of our institutions. We also need to be cognizant of the fact that there is some degree of a crisis of confidence and trust in elected officials. There is a great deal of cynicism about the way our business is conducted in our democratic Assemblies and parliaments. There is a sense of apathy and indifference that grows out of this cynicism.

So there is, I think, a need for us to recognize that we need to do a whole lot of things to restore confidence in the work, very important work, very important responsibilities that we as elected members of this Assembly and Assemblies like this across the country undertake to perform on behalf of and in the name of our constituents. We need to make sure that we put in place conditions, pieces of legislation, codes of conduct, expectations with respect to our daily behaviour inside and outside the House that will restore the confidence of our electors in our work, in our own integrity, and in the general integrity and the respect for the democratic decision-making and democratic institutions that represent a very rich history of democratic reform and evolution over more than a century in this country and beyond. So this bill, which will update and strengthen existing legislation related to conflicts of interest, is in that sense a welcome step.

We undertake to take a very close look, give it very serious scrutiny clause by clause, item by item, to make sure that the intentions that the select special committee on conflicts of interest of this Legislature explicitly embodied in their report of May 2006 are in fact translated into legal and legislative language and are true to the spirit of those recommendations made.

Mr. Speaker, on a personal note, when I first got elected and came to the Assembly, in the spring of 1997, the Tupper report was all around us. There was a debate in the Assembly. The then Ethics Commissioner, Bob Clark, took a very close look at the Tupper report and made some recommendations of his own, asking the Assembly to make legislative changes. So I am certainly quite familiar with the attempts that have been made in this Legislature by many of the members of the Legislature and officers of the Legislature to move in the direction in which this bill seems to be taking some steps.

Incidentally, I ran into Allan Tupper, the author of the so-called Tupper report, just the other day. He was in my constituency at a drugstore buying something, and so was I. He asked me how things are going, whether we made some progress on the report, and if so, in what form. I told him that the Assembly now has before it a bill that is dealing with strengthening our conflict of interest legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I haven't taken a very close look at the contents of this bill as yet, but we'll have that opportunity as the bill moves into the committee stage for debate. We will certainly take a very close look and give it the scrutiny that it deserves, and where we think it's necessary, strengthen the conflicts of interest guidelines to make sure that the bill serves both to enhance the integrity of the work that we do and prevent us as legislators from erring in ways in our conduct and behaviour that will cast a dark shadow over the Assembly, as such.

Transparency, integrity, and avoidance of conflicts of interest are very, very important concerns of mine, and I know that they're shared by all members of this Assembly. Hopefully, this bill will serve to strengthen our ability to ensure and give assurance to Albertans that we are taking appropriate steps that will lead to avoidance of conflicts of interest on the part of members of this Assembly, the members of Executive Council, and some public officials who work very closely with the Premier or, perhaps, cabinet members.

I'll close, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I looked at the list of former political staff members that's included in the bill: chief of staff, office of the Premier; deputy chief of staff, office of the Premier; director, office of the Premier, southern Alberta; executive assistant to a minister as defined in Order in Council 192/98. This list may or may not be exhaustive. I certainly am going to take a close look at it and see if there's a need to in fact expand this list.

The second concern that I had, that emerged from a very quick look at the bill, is the cooling-off period that this bill allows for former political staff members, which I think remains at six months, whereas for the members of Executive Council it's extended to one year. I have asked myself: why is it not appropriate to have the cooling-off period for the former political staff members the same as for the members of Executive Council? But these are matters that will come up for, I'm sure, good discussion and debate in the House as we move to the committee stage.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I close my remarks. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions.

Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and speak in support of this bill. Before that, I'd like to thank the mover and the Minister of Justice for providing very good briefing on this bill and doing some great work on it.

This is a very important piece of legislation that speaks to some questions that I've raised in the Legislature in past sessions, and I expect that this will provide some greater support from Albertans and ensure that our democracy works better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to close the debate or call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Bill 33
Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh
Water Authorization Act

[Debate adjourned May 3: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak to Bill 33, an important bill, clearly, for the people of Ferintosh, central Alberta. A dry area, increasingly so.

I want to say that the overriding issue in our decision-making consciousness continues to be a concern about climate change. Here is another example, the third example I'm aware of in the last four years where we're making an interbasin transfer and coming to the Legislature to discuss this because we are concerned about any interbasin transfer, as we should be, and moving water from north to south. From all appearances this is going to be an annual event here, if not more often, to look at increasing drought conditions, water shortages, and problems with water sustainability and water management in the province. I think more and more people in Alberta are anxious to see a long-term vision and a plan for water management in the province, something that addresses what is going to be an increasingly urgent and frightening aspect of life on the prairies, especially in south and east Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this transfer is an acknowledgement of the failure of water management planning again in the province and a recognition that we don't have a land-use framework in place. We haven't, especially now, got a framework in place that will allow us to set priorities for development to ensure that we are, wherever possible, moving people to water, industry to water rather than water to people, to ensure that we are using the best of science to assess the capacity of water systems, and a long-term management plan that will ensure the best and highest use for water, that's the lifeblood of the province.

A third dimension needed is a serious public consultation about how we will develop this province: at what pace, at what scope, and how particularly this is going to impact our water supplies for the future. We have to establish priority uses, and we have to place limits on growth. This is not something this government wants to hear, that we have to place limits on growth, but in my background in medical practice anything that doesn't stop growing is malignant, and anything that doesn't recognize limits is going to face crisis and disaster in many respects.

It's clear that this community has no capacity to deal with its own water needs. It's in a particular location where even the groundwater has diminished in both quality and quantity. It's incumbent upon the Department of Environment to find out more about what is happening to our groundwater, with increasing shortages of groundwater across the province and, by all scientific accounts, increasing problems of shortage of surface water with glacial loss over the next couple of decades. Water management in a sustainable way, limits to growth, conservation measures, storage measures: we have to explore the gamut of issues before lurching to the crisis management which is represented by a water transfer from north to south.

I think it's impossible to consider rejecting this because these people are in real need. But it's also impossible not to comment on the lack of planning and the lack of sustainable thinking about our water management in this province. This is only going to get worse. We are going to be facing this increasingly and without recognizing the risks associated with interbasin transfer, not the least of which is the biological transfer of organisms and ecosystems that were never in that water basin from one basin to another, with predators and unexpected and unpredictable consequences that we cannot predict and that will potentially have devastating consequences for certain biota in a unique ecosystem, which each river system represents.

There's also a huge cost to this, not only the capital cost of piping and pumping the water but a cost in terms of whenever we move water from another system: increasing vigilance, risks of contamination, and potential for serious health consequences. We have to begin to look more seriously at demand management rather than simply reacting with supply wherever it's needed.

I note with some concern that there's no discussion in this bill of putting limits on growth in Ferintosh. It's as if whatever they want to do they will continue to do, and we will continue to supply water inevitably. If they fall short, then we will bring our technology to play, and we will provide whatever they need. This doesn't reflect a government that is thoughtful about the future, that is thinking about limits, that is looking at long-term consequences of continuing to pump water from north to south as we fall short in these different regions.

Mr. Speaker, those are my concerns, those are my comments, and those are the comments of increasing numbers of environmental experts and water experts in the province. We are going to be transferring water from the South Saskatchewan, ultimately, to the North Saskatchewan River and without a lot of thought about what in the land-use framework is going to change, what science we are going to apply to some of these decisions, how we are incorporating climate change realities into the future, and what we are looking at in terms of requiring some limits to growth in this trend towards repeated interbasin transfers.

In all honesty, there's a clear need in this community. We will be supporting this bill but with great and serious reservations about the unwillingness to look at the longer term and plan for a very serious water shortage in our near future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

If not, then who shall I recognize? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

10:40

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View did raise some very, very important points that are not considered within the overall piece of the bill with regard to the Ferintosh interbasin transfer. I'm hesitant to support the bill but probably would because I know that people's overall health and standard of living depend on being able to get the water. I recognize the need for the village of Ferintosh and, as I said, hesitantly support the bill, but I'm concerned with the practice, as the other colleague was, of interbasin transfer. It doesn't make sense to continue to grow and expand knowing that you don't have the very need of water to support that.

I mean, I would be more comfortable with this bill if it did have some sort of limitation with regard to expansion. We have that in some of our national park areas such as Jasper and/or Banff, where they've put a moratorium on growth just from the fact of trying to keep the pristine area intact and the integrity of it, but here in this particular case it's almost similar to that of Balzac and the proposed building of the horse-racing piece. You know, you don't have an immediate source of water, but you're still wanting to have growth there.

It doesn't make sense to bring the water to the people. You should be doing it the other way around, bringing the people to the water and establishing towns and municipalities based on that instead of the other way around. The guiding principle that, you know, we bring the water to the people: people truck in water all the time. That's obviously what we're trying to get away from. They need a steady and guaranteed source here, but for how long if they're going to continue to grow? It's like providing a bailout for people with regard to a bank loan, and they go out and spend it on renovations again. They haven't learned anything.

I just wanted to get some of the specifics about it. The government has not handled water issues in the past and present very well. Our knowledge of how much we need and where it's located is still not there. We need to do a much greater job of mapping as well of our surface water and our groundwater to be able to sustain our economy because a lot of the industry depends on water. As well, our people depend on water.

So I just wanted to get in those particular pieces. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise in support of this bill. It's an important bill to provide infrastructure for the people of the Ferintosh area. This issue was actually raised in my constituency by some constituency activists in the community who have relatives in the area. It's very important, they said, that this move forward quickly. I must commend the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for the diligent work he did in informing all interested parties about all the various factors of the issue. He answered all of my questions about trucking, about the volumes, about any potential right-of-way issues, local support, and other issues.

With that, I must say that I support this, and I move adjournment, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Wednesday having been a very productive day, I would move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. on Thursday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:45 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 10, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/10

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce a former colleague and a special guest who's seated in your gallery this afternoon. Mr. Drew Hutton served as the MLA for the Edmonton-Glenora constituency in the 25th Legislature. I'd ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through to all members of the Assembly the hon. Mr. Ken Cheveldayoff, MLA for Saskatoon Silver Springs, who's seated in your gallery today. Mr. Cheveldayoff was elected to the Saskatchewan Legislature in November of 2003 and has been one of the hardest working men in the business ever since. He's the opposition critic for Finance, deputy critic for postsecondary education, a member of the Public Accounts Committee, and has served as deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Human Services. He was educated at Carleton in Ottawa, the U of S, Newport University in southern California, earning several degrees, including his master's.

Mr. Speaker, you may be pleased to know that Mr. Cheveldayoff was a parliamentary page in the House of Commons and has won the prestigious Queen Elizabeth II scholarship for excellence in parliamentary studies. Ken has served as senior business adviser with Western Economic Diversification and has built a solid reputation both as an entrepreneur and as a humanitarian.

The last thing I'll mention about Ken today is perhaps the most important. He has a wonderful wife named Trish and two super children, Carter and Paige.

Now, with a resume like that, Mr. Speaker, I believe Mr. Cheveldayoff would make a great addition to our caucus, but if his Saskatchewan Party has the right kind of luck in the next election, I believe Ken Cheveldayoff will be Saskatchewan's next Finance minister.

If Ken will please rise, please accept the best wishes of all in our Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 23-plus members of the Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council, or ACTISEC.

ACTISEC represents student associations from 14 colleges and technical institutes in Alberta, more than 200,000 students province-wide. The students with us today come from all regions of the province and represent Lakeland College, Mount Royal College, Grande Prairie Regional College, Lethbridge College, Medicine Hat College, Keyano College, SAIT, and NAIT. They're in Edmonton this week to attend an ACTISEC conference for newly elected student leaders, and I look forward to meeting with them later today. I would point out that included are the chair, Jon Hoffman; vice-chair, Jonathan Hill; executive council Jeremy Duenk, John Blomme, Carrie Creaser. I believe they are in the members' and public galleries, and I would invite the students to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again this year it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of students from Crestwood elementary school in my constituency. This school I think probably holds the record for the most miles travelled to and from the Legislature because to the best of my knowledge they have been making an annual trek from Medicine Hat to Edmonton for in excess of 20 years. This year is no exception. If I could, I would like to introduce three groups of students who have joined us in the members' gallery along with teachers and parents: Mr. David George, who's the principal, Mrs. Van Maarion, Mrs. Karen Irwin, Mrs. Maria Thompson, Mr. Gary Ziel, Mrs. Wendy Smid, Mrs. Kathy Western, and Mr. Wade Lawson, also parents Mrs. Jennifer Martin, Mrs. Tracy Lawson, Mrs. Nicole Petersen, Mrs. Sharon Pudwell, Mrs. Tracy Klein, and Mrs. Denise Yates. I'd ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and acknowledge the presence of 30 students from Madonna school. It's an exemplary community school, a Catholic school in Sherwood Park. Teacher Ray Rudanec and assistant teacher Nicole Gallo accompany them. I wonder if the students would now please rise, and we will give them a warm acknowledgement and welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly three guests: Maureen Geres, my executive assistant, who does a tremendous job in my ministry, and her sister and brother-in-law, Julie Geres-Brydie and Jim Brydie, who have come from the Lake District in England to visit family in Alberta, and they're also taking the opportunity to visit our Legislature. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly Dr. Glen Roberts, director of health programs for the Conference Board of Canada, visiting us here today from Ottawa.

Under Dr. Roberts' direction the Conference Board has completed several landmark reports since 2004 that have significantly informed health policy direction in Alberta, indeed across Canada. These include Understanding Health Care Cost Drivers and Escalators; Challenging Health Care System Sustainability: Understanding Health System Performance of Leading Countries; and Healthy Provinces, Healthy Canadians: A Provincial Benchmarking Report.

Mr. Speaker, it's interesting to note that the last time Dr. Roberts was a guest in this House, in 2004, he was here, in fact, because one of my predecessors, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, wished to acknowledge Dr. Roberts' outstanding research on health system sustainability and the importance of public and community health and wellness.

Dr. Roberts is accompanied today by my executive assistant, Mr. Fred Horne, who himself is no slouch in health policy, having in excess, I think, of 20 years in the health policy field and also, it might be interesting to note, a candidate in the last provincial election on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party.

An Hon. Member: Did he win?

An Hon. Member: Next time.

Mr. Hancock: He will, indeed. But, in the meantime, the public of Alberta is having the benefit of his wealth of experience.

I'd ask, Mr. Speaker, that all members of the House acknowledge Dr. Roberts and Fred Horne and say thank you for their contributions to public health. If they would rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through to members of the Assembly representatives from Parents Empowering Parents, an outstanding group that works to support communities through work with families dealing with addicted youth. We have today Audrey Bjornstad-Holliday, Tina Dow, Lori Jones, Dawn Fannin, and Maralyn Benay. I'd ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is certainly my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you my executive assistant, who is here from Lethbridge, a young lady who also served a former member of this House, Dick Johnston, and also served her MP in Ottawa. I'm delighted to ask her to stand. Yes, her name is Bridget, and yes, she is my daughter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Jessica Fox and Shawn McKinlay along with their beautiful three-month-old daughter, Angelique. Jessica and Shawn recently moved to Alberta to seek a better life but were stunned to receive a $1,200 a month rent increase for a one-bedroom basement apartment here in Edmonton. Jessica and Shawn are in danger of losing their home because of this massive rent increase. Because of Shawn's inability to work due to an injury, Jessica has had to take on two jobs to support their young family. They're currently looking for a new place to live. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Gerry Hryschuk and Paul Buckler. Gerry and Paul are Palace Casino workers on their 244th day of strike due to this government's failure to protect Alberta workers with better and more fair labour legislation.

Gerry has been at the Palace Casino for seven years as a dealer. He came to the casino for a career change from industrial sales. In his spare time Gerry is active with various charities and nonprofit organizations. At the moment he's working hard to ensure that his son, who is in culinary college in New York City, and his daughter, who is studying arts at the U of A, get everything that they need to complete their education.

Paul has worked at the casino since only four months prior to the strike commencing. Paul is very active in the Ukrainian Catholic church as a lector. He helps his priest with the services each Sunday and serves the faithful. Paul is a very active and effective voice for his and his co-worker's cause within the gaming industry.

They are joined by UFCW local 401 representative Don Crisall. They are in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the 2007 recipients of the human services worker award. Each year this award recognizes two Children's Services employees who have made significant and positive impacts on the lives of Alberta's children, youth, and families. These front-line workers are some of the most dedicated, talented, and caring people in our province. and children, youth, and families depend on their outstanding service and support every day.

I'd like to ask the following recipients and their guests to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Marlene Proctor of Fort McMurray, Carrie McGillivray of High Prairie, and their guests, Harry Andrews, Carrie's husband; Judy Delorme, nominator and casework supervisor; Janet Fizzell, acting CEO of region 10; Heather Edelman, nominator and supervisor/manager; Ron Benson, CEO of region 9; and Irene Milton, Children's Services human resources manager. Please join me in welcoming them today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members would want me to introduce and congratulate the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane and the hon. Minister of Children's Services. Twenty-nine-and-a-half years ago, she entered the world. Happy birthday.

Project neuroArm Surgical Robot

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 17, 2007, the Calgary health region together with the U of C unveiled the world's first MRI-compatible surgical robot for brain surgery. The need for improved precision and dexterity and stamina in surgery inspired a talented team led by Dr. Garnette Sutherland to embark on this life-changing project. This six-year, $30 million project called Project neuroArm is the most advanced MRI-compatible robot available to date.

As Project neuroArm is now out of its lengthy design and testing stage and into manufacture, delivery can be expected within the next 20 months, after which neuroArm will rapidly incorporate into surgery. Once incorporated, neuroArm will revolutionize neurosurgery and other branches of operative medicine by liberating them from the constraints of the human hand while significantly improving the way brain surgery and other microsurgery is performed all over the world.

Once in full operation the surgical robot will deliver less invasive and more accurate brain surgery and will afford the ability to shift surgery from the organic to the cellular level. Using neuroArm's image guidance system, surgeons will be able to practice virtual operations before the actual procedure, resulting in fewer mistakes in real operations. The use of this new technology will strongly impact our society by decreasing postsurgical morbidity, illness, or complications. Patients will experience higher survival rates and reduced recovery times and shorter hospital stays as a result of the new surgery method.

It's important to acknowledge Dr. Garnette Sutherland's team for the lead on this neuroArm. Their undeniable dedication created a milestone in medical technology. As an Albertan I wish to congratulate the successful completion of neuroArm and recognize all those individuals whose efforts and dedication contributed to making this project a reality.

So, Mr. Speaker, if you ever need brain surgery, you might want to ask for the Sutherland neuroArm. Thank you very much.

Parents Empowering Parents

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the closing of the First Session of our 26th Legislature the then Minister of Education made this comment on the all-party co-operation to pass Bill 202.

I've been in this House for 12 or 13 years, Mr. Speaker, and I've yet to see such tremendous co-operation. [If] it were so on so many other important pieces of legislation we do in this House, we could change the image of democracy as we know it in this entire country.

Today I pay tribute to the citizens' group that launched that initiative and is still working to address issues of addiction. Parents Empowering Parents is, first, a self-help group. It's not a band of experts with solutions, not a crusade to change society. It is there for those who are bewildered and anguished, who have no one to turn to but others who have shared the same experience.

Second, PEP is an educational group. I use this word in its original sense of drawing out what is there. PEP draws out experiences and strengths from its members, resources they didn't know they had. PEP is persevering. Its members don't just work office hours, don't keep public and PEP lives separate, don't quit when things get tough. They believe in a cause and they live it, which makes them powerful.

Margaret Mead said: "Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, committed citizens can change the world. Indeed, it is the only thing that ever has." Mr. Speaker, Parents Empowering Parents contributed to the initiative of Bill 202 and through it to renewing our democracy. I commend this organization to my fellow members, and I'm proud to say that PEP now has a chapter in Edmonton-Mill Woods.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Jeff Toews

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to express this Assembly's support to the Toews family, the majority of whom live in my constituency of Grande Prairie-Wapiti. I'm sure members of the Assembly are aware of the tragedy that occurred to Jeff Toews as he vacationed with family and friends in Mexico earlier this week. While the details are still under investigation, the fact remains that a very upstanding, hard-working, and very highly respected constituent met a terrible fate while on this vacation.

I know that our Ministry of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations has been in touch with the federal government and the RCMP, encouraging them to seek answers to some of the outstanding questions surrounding this tragedy.

On behalf of the constituents of Grande Prairie-Wapiti and Grande Prairie-Smoky I offer our condolences and support to the Toews family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every spring thousands of Albertans come together to fight multiple sclerosis, a serious, life-threatening disease with painful symptoms. There is no cure, but Albertans are working to change that. I am proud to say that many of those Albertans live in my constituency, including Donna Romanuk. She is the Edmontonian who has organized hundreds of people to form the Munnky Krunchers, Canada's top fundraising team.

Together the Munnky Krunchers have raised tens of thousands of dollars to fight MS, bringing us closer to a cure as well as helping pay for services and equipment that improve the quality of life of those people suffering from MS, Mr. Speaker.

Donna herself is currently fighting her own case of MS, and despite how devastated she was by the diagnosis, she refuses to give up. She is a truly inspirational human being. She reminds us of how privileged we all are to enjoy our time on Earth. When I met her in person, I felt compelled to sign up for the Munnky Krunchers myself. I will do my best to help the team fund a cure for MS, Mr. Speaker.

Donna's story reminds us all that our constituents, the citizens of Alberta, are the most powerful force for good in this province. Their hard work, compassion, and goodwill are leading us forward to a better tomorrow.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

1:20 Southesk Collection of Aboriginal Artifacts

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week marked the coming home of rare aboriginal artifacts that are on display at the Royal Alberta Museum. After nearly 150 years Albertans now have the opportunity to view the Southesk collection, one of the world's most significant collections of northern plains ethnological artifacts, in a new feature exhibition entitled Stories from the Southesk Collection: A 150-year Journey. The Southesk collection represents a vital part of the story of our First Nations and Métis people and of Alberta and western Canada.

The First Nations and Métis artifacts had been collected in 1859 and 1860 by James Carnegie, the 9th Earl of Southesk, during a trip to western Canada. The collection had been kept in the family's castle in Scotland for 147 years before being offered for sale in May 2006 at Sotheby's auction house in New York. With support from First Nations and Métis representatives the Royal Alberta Museum was the successful bidder for 33 of the 43 objects at the auction, for a total price of $1.1 million Canadian. This would not have been possible without the financial support of the federal government and the Alberta government. Without this support we would have lost an important part of Alberta and western Canadian history.

Among the artifacts purchased by the museum were a Blackfoot dress made of mountain sheep skin, a rare finger-woven Métis sash, a beaded Plains Cree pad saddle, and the earl's journal. The acquisition of these artifacts will enhance the history galleries of the Royal Alberta Museum and provide research opportunities for scholars and students throughout North America. For Albertans young and old the Southesk exhibit represents a wonderful opportunity to learn more about the story of Alberta and our aboriginal culture.

Mr. Speaker, the Royal Alberta Museum should be commended for its initiative and determination to acquire these artifacts and bring them back to Alberta. Like many of the museum's past feature exhibits, Stories from the Southesk Collection continues the proud tradition of presenting us with a story that talks about our past and helps shape our future.

Mr. Speaker, it is fitting to conclude my statement by saying: welcome home, Southesk.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Community Policing

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that rapid growth in population without the proper infrastructure and services can pose serious challenges to building and maintaining safe communities. Alberta's police services struggle to keep up with the pressures of our rapidly growing province.

To cope with new challenges, Albertans need creative solutions to guarantee that our communities are safe. However, under this government the property and violent crime rates in the province remain above national levels. Tellingly, Alberta continues to have the lowest number of police officers per capita west of P.E.I.

Community policing is an effective and creative strategy for preventing and solving crime, but this has been systematically neglected by our government. Community policing involves developing closer interaction between the police and the local communities to properly deal with such problems as prostitution, drug trafficking, and gang violence. We must provide municipalities with the legal and financial means for both expanding and promoting good police practices as well as for hiring significantly more neighbourhood/community officers over the next few years. This requires increased provincial budgetary support for municipalities and improved enforcement measures.

Furthermore, Alberta's police services must reflect the diversity of our communities to improve their interaction with the citizens on the local level and to build lasting, trusting relationships. Police officers should work proactively with neighbourhood associations, aboriginal organizations, and other groups.

We also need to enhance crime prevention programs to better tackle the root causes of crime. Such programs must include cracking down on slum housing, pawnshops, and triple-X video stores and enforcing tougher measures to prevent alcohol and drug abuse. Providing affordable housing and a living minimum wage are very much needed as part of the crime prevention strategy. Youth at risk must be supported and encouraged to actively participate in the life of the community.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, we can all agree that Alberta communities should have all the proper conditions to develop their potential.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My voice is going. [interjections] I'll get it back; don't worry.

I'm tabling the text of a speech given by Mary Ladouceur at an affordable housing protest held just outside the Legislature last week. She notes that Alberta's economy does not help poor people and that her hard-earned savings shouldn't be given to greedy landlords.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from Bruce Magyar of Edmonton about the process that children with autism are funded by or how the government determines how much money each child receives to pay for professional consultants to come and help the children learn enough skills that they can be a part of their community.

The second is from Natalie Weller of Beaumont, an e-mail with an article from the Halifax Daily News regarding the child care crisis and the need to retain high-quality, trained early childhood educators.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and that's a letter dated May 7, 2007, that I received from the hon. Minister of Energy. This is in regard to Sessional Paper 250/2007 regarding the royalty rates and the comparative take between Texas and Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today intended to improve the transparency and accountability of Bill 26, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007. The title of the tabling, originating from Alberta Municipal Affairs, is Detailed Assessment Audit Manual.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one is the city of Edmonton brochure titled Mother Nature is Looking After Me! The message which follows this label reads, "But you can help if you find wildlife orphaned, injured or in distress." I was given this wonderful brochure when I attended the trade show at the John Janzen Nature Centre last Sunday. A good read and very useful.

The second one is another brochure from that trade show. This one is produced by the Wildlife Rehabilitation Society of Edmonton. Their phone number is 914-4118, and they offer unique referral, nanny, transport, and education services. Again, very worthy of attention.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings, and these are ones I mentioned in debates last night. One is the Rental Market Report from CMHC, which shows a 4.5 per cent apartment vacancy for Edmonton in 2005. One is an article, How Rent Control Killed Affordable Housing in Winnipeg, and the other is The High Cost of Rent Control, which shows how rent control limits housing for the poor.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Melchin, Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, response to Written Question 10, asked for by Dr. Pannu on May 7, 2007.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the Government House Leader to please share with us the projected government business for the following week?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday evening from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. under Committee of Supply Energy and Environment would be called, and the ND caucus would be the presenting caucus.

On Tuesday, May 15, after Orders of the Day in the afternoon Committee of Supply with Municipal Affairs and Housing and Seniors and Community Supports, and the Liberal caucus will be presenting. In the evening Infrastructure and Transportation; Employment, Immigration and Industry, with the Liberal caucus presenting. In the afternoon, time permitting, possible government business could be Government Motion 20, Government Motion 21, and bills 31, 32, and 33.

On Wednesday, May 16, under Orders of the Day in the afternoon a cross-ministry initiative presenting the ministries of Children's Services, Seniors and Community Supports, and Education, and of course all caucuses participate. In the evening it's actually a Health cross-ministry, and it's Energy, Environment, and Health. Again, in the afternoon, time permitting after Committee of Supply, second readings of bills 31, 32, 33, and, time permitting, potentially government referral motions.

Thursday, May 17, in the afternoon in Committee of Supply Education and Agriculture and Food, and it would be the Liberal caucus participating; and again government business as per the Order Paper, should time permit, Government Motion 22 and bills 31, 32, and 33.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, Motion 19, which was assented to by the Assembly on May 8, included the following words: "and that a revised Committee of Supply schedule be tabled forthwith." Has that been accommodated now in your report?

Mr. Hancock: The report does indicate the changes that were made with the exception of the portion of supply that was moved from the 16th, which will, as I understand it, be presented on I think it's Monday the 4th, but that hasn't been nailed down yet, and I'll let the House know as soon as that is.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Temporary Rent Regulation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and his government want to claim that the affordable housing crisis is, quote, the price of prosperity. Well, it's not. It's the price of the failure to plan, and the price is too high for too many Albertans. Angela Grainer, for example, is a single parent making a moderate living, an average salary of over $43,000 a year. On July 1 her rent will increase from about $800 a month to $1,200 a month. To the Premier. After Angela pays for just the basics, she'll be $40 in the hole every month and in danger of losing her home. Can the Premier explain why this government refuses to put in place temporary rent regulations to help people like Angela?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we debated the bill all night and to early this morning. The bill was lifted from committee and now is in third reading, and this bill will go a long way in protecting Albertans also with almost – well, more than a quarter of a billion dollars invested in affordable housing in this province. That's a substantial amount. We want to move forward to build more units so that we can accommodate more Albertans in decent accommodations.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. But those efforts aren't going to help people like Angela and the thousands like her. The Premier should know that Angela and those others won't qualify for the assistance under this government's very flawed housing policy, and indeed the much more efficient thing to do is to bring in regulations. To the Premier. The Premier pledged that his government will help "anyone that requires some assistance in housing." Will the Premier now commit to revisiting his plan and finding a way to help people like Angela, people who are working hard but who are getting left behind?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have a number of programs in place to assist Albertans. One, of course, is the emergency shelter benefit program, the other is the rental supplement program, and the third the homelessness and eviction prevention fund. For specific details any minister can answer those in question period later.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and his government have attempted to dismiss this crisis as isolated incidents, something that can be fixed by the minister of housing having a chat with the landlords, and no doubt he's going to be having a lot of those chats.

Mr. Stelmach: Might be having a chat with you, then.

Dr. Taft: Is that a threat, Mr. Premier?

The Speaker: Whoa. Through the chair, please, everybody.

Dr. Taft: To the Premier. Will the Premier finally admit that this housing crisis is a widespread problem, a genuine crisis affecting thousands of average Albertans that his government's policies will not help?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I've mentioned this in the House numerous times. During the leadership campaign I recognized that this was a priority for government. It is a priority for government. We put money into affordable housing. We also have millions of dollars in protection for Albertans. We'll continue to work. We do have compassion and care for Albertans. And you know, Mr. Speaker, continually – continually – every month, new people come to Alberta from other provinces, other countries because there is some hope that they have a job here and they can continue with their life here in the greatest province there is to live in, Alberta.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Rent Supplement Programs

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier and his cabinet have stumbled in trying to respond to the affordable housing crisis, and everybody in the province can see that. Programs have been announced without clear rules, and before they're ready to be implemented, phone numbers have been offered that provide no help. They admit that rent gouging is happening but offer no policy to stop it. I think Albertans would like to know who's in charge, that somebody – anybody – over there is in charge. To the minister of municipal affairs, and I want an answer from this minister, who is responsible, not someone assigned to come to his defence: can he tell us what the eligibility criteria area? What are the eligibility criteria for the rent supplement program administered by his ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would assure you that I don't need anybody to come to my defence, but I want to explain to you – and I think that has been tried many times – that if we do have individuals that are in emergency need, that is under the jurisdiction of Employment, Immigration and Industry. If individuals have concerns or challenges with the rent supplement, it is under the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing. If you want to talk about the support that we are giving to municipalities, working with municipalities . . .

The Speaker: And we'll probably be able to get to that more later. The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll repeat my question. I believe that the rent supplement program is under this minister. My question was this: can this minister tell the Assembly the eligibility criteria for the rent supplement program administered by his ministry? What are the criteria? Who qualifies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The criteria for rent supplement and the policy of this government is that individuals should not pay over 30 per cent of their salary – 30 per cent of their salary – for housing.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then, just in the spirit of making some progress here, does that mean that all Albertans who pay 30 per cent or more of their salary for housing should be contacting you for assistance?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about affordable housing, and this affordable housing and rent supplement deals with individuals in need. If the hon. member of the opposition wants to rent a facility and he wants to rent and pay let us use an artificial figure of $50,000 a year, we are not going to support him. This is affordable housing for people in need.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before and during the debate on affordable housing this government maintained that they could not interfere in the market, that the market looks after itself. Well, not true, at least not all the time. When Alberta faced the BSE crisis, the government immediately stepped in with many programs and subsidies to protect farmers from losing their farms and homes. In July 2005 the six-point BSE recovery plan was brought in to rescue the struggling beef industry. They even set up a 1-800 stress line to counsel farmers in distress. Farmers were not left to fend for themselves. Can the Premier explain why his government acted so decisively to aid farmers in a crisis but refused to help Alberta renters living in big cities by bringing in temporary rent regulations? Why the double standard?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the member isn't listening to the answers. I just listed a number of programs, including more than a quarter of a billion dollars for affordable housing, millions more in terms of protection for Albertans. And I'm going to make it very clear that what the hon. member is talking about was something as a result of a health issue in animals between trading partners. It was a major issue at that particular time. This issue in terms of housing, more people moving to Alberta: that's why we're putting, as I said, more than a quarter of a billion dollars into housing and protecting Albertans with a variety of programs.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Speaker, I think some of the divide here is that many rural members of this Premier's cabinet aren't hearing these stories and cries for help in their constituencies, so I'm going to give them an example that they understand. In 2002 the government took over the function of regulating confined feeding operations. Now the NRCB controls and regulates livestock operations and feedlot sites. Isn't this an example where this government interferes in the market and private business? If you want to establish a new site or expand an existing one, you go to the NRCB. To the Premier: why not have the same approach for those few landlords wanting to jack rents over and above an allowed, accepted provincial average? They can appeal to exceed the cap if they can justify why. Tell me and the renters why this is any different.

Mr. Stelmach: This is another example of a member who sat here for some period of time, knows nothing about, obviously, the role of the NRCB. But you know, Mr. Speaker, the more I listened over the last few weeks, this must be the new Liberal way: pitting Albertans against Albertans. That's all they know. That's all they know.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October of 2003 former Premier Klein told Albertans he was frustrated with the auto insurance situation and the skyrocketing premiums, and for that he implemented a one-year freeze on premiums. He said to reporters, quote, it doesn't lower or higher insurance rates. It just says everything is on hold until we sort this thing out. End quote. To the Premier: your former boss reacted to a public outcry over auto insurance gouging and sided with the people. He was also admired for backing down when found wrong. Will you be as decisive as he was in those instances and ensure fairness in the marketplace? This time we're asking for a cap on rent hikes, a temporary cap, not a freeze, and it is not too late for an about-face. Will you or will you not?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, first of all, not everyone across the way there is asking for rent controls because, obviously, there were noticeable absences when it came to the final vote. The issue is completely different. However, we are being decisive. We are being decisive, because . . . [interjections] Oh, boy. What a reaction. That really gets them going. I guess you must have had a little bit of a lack of sleep last night. A little bit of lack of sleep, and you sure get irritated.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that we are decisive as a government. That's why we put over a quarter of a billion dollars into affordable housing and millions more into supportive programs to support Albertans in need. We are caring, and we're compassionate. We'll continue to be so.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know what? I'm proud to say that every single member of the NDP caucus was present for every single vote, and no other party can say that. No other party can say that.

Mr. Speaker, this Conservative government has turned its back on Alberta's renters. The Conservatives would rather side with the landlords than with the hard-working renters of this province. Here's another example where the Conservative government's lack of compassion is hurting Albertans. We have Jessica Fox, Shawn McKinlay, and their three-month-old daughter, Angelique, in the gallery. They've been hit with a $1,200-a-month increase, from $495 to $1,695 for a one-bedroom basement apartment. This is their first rent increase since last year. Why has the Premier turned his back on these people?

The Speaker: And the Premier is going to have a chance to respond.

Mr. Stelmach: Yes. Mr. Speaker, once again, the government is not turning our back on any Albertan. That's why we have a number of programs. If this is an issue with this very specific person, the minister has heard the individual's name. We have staff in place to look after that. It's one-stop shopping, one phone call, and three departments – EII, also municipal affairs and Treasury Board, Service Alberta – will look after Albertans in need.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, while this may be an extreme case, there are hundreds of thousands of renters in this province, most of whom are seeing significant increases in their rent. The government's programs will not help all those Albertans, and the Premier knows it. This is not a case of just a series of one-offs where you help people individually. You've got to fix the problem, Mr. Premier. Why won't you bring in rent guidelines?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, because evidence time and time again no matter what jurisdiction you study, whether it's in those provinces that have been governed by a socialist government, a Liberal government, has proven now that rent controls have not worked. They've actually decreased the number of spaces available for rent and also put such tight controls that no new housing was built. We don't want to get in that situation. That's why we're putting money up front, working with the municipalities, working with the federal government, and looking after Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, Jessica and Shawn may be forced to return home to Nova Scotia or Ontario, where they come from, because they can't find affordable housing here in this province. This government prides itself on attracting people from all over Canada, but in fact people are leaving this province in greater numbers than ever before. That is because this government does not care. There are more people leaving the province than ever before because they can't find a place to live because this government doesn't care. My question is to the Premier. Why doesn't he care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this Premier cares. This government cares. We care about all Albertans. In fact, we care about all Canadians. In fact, because of the tremendous economic growth in the province of Alberta other provinces share in about $40 billion worth of goods and services. All this economy spreads across all of Canada, and if you pull the economic growth out of Alberta today, most of the other provinces will see their economies almost flat. So Alberta does care. It does share with other provinces. It does contribute to equalization. To make a ridiculous statement like that is absolutely not true. In fact, we just contributed handsomely again this year to the equalization fund. Where are you getting all your information from?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Steel Fabrication Plant in Tofield

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Temporary foreign contractors and owners hire their own temporary foreign workers. They do not look to Albertans first to employ or to train. We have Alberta laws, but these companies don't always follow them. Now we have KNM looking to bring in temporary foreign workers. They say they can't find 2,500 skilled workers in the Tofield area. Go figure what that labour market opinion will be. My question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. What has your department done to ensure that Albertans are hired first, Canadians second, and foreign temps after at the Tofield site?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me state that before temporary foreign workers are allowed to come to Canada, a business must prove – must prove – that there's no Albertan or Canadian available for that job. Because this is a federal program, the employer must prove to the federal government through a forum on a labour market opinion that no Albertan or Canadian is available, and that's a serious process. Through our labour force strategy, Building and Educating Tomorrow's Workforce, we have a multi-pronged approach to help ensure that Albertans have an adequate supply of labour: first of all, getting Albertans educated; second, giving the employers information; third, keeping workers in the job longer; and finally. . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how will the government ensure that Alberta contractors who hire Alberta trades, technicians, and engineers have a real chance at bidding and winning the construction work at KNM?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it is not the role of the provincial government to ensure that one company successfully outbids another company. It is our role to provide an environment where businesses can thrive and to attract investment to our province. It is a priority for this government to give Albertans the job first and Canadians second. All Albertans considered first; Canadians second. Ultimately, the market will decide who wins the opportunity to successfully be engaged in the projects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Thousands of Albertans work for the 17 large vessel manufacturers in our province. These employers include some of our best trainers of trades apprentices, both union and nonunion. The Tofield temps will distort our industries' competitiveness in Alberta and will result in the training of fewer Albertans. What will the government do to ensure that the Tofield development does not undermine Alberta's industry?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's been very useful to have the hon. member's question because clearly we can keep a watchful eye on the kinds of things that will happen in Tofield, particularly relative to this industry. Our government's role is to make sure that the province remains globally competitive. This involves training opportunities for workers and attracting business investment in the province.

Mr. Speaker, our labour market strategy, in fact, includes actions to increase apprenticeship here in Alberta, and many of these RAP programs are highly acclaimed by the leaders in postsecondary. Our Budget 2007 gives a $15 million boost to apprenticeship.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

1:50 School Construction and Renovation

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I was able to attend one of four grand openings of brand new schools in the city of Calgary, the Chapparral elementary school. It was a delight to be able to see children performing with violins, song, and dance and to talk to parents that were thrilled to have a school in the heart of their community. But not all communities have that, and they are looking for their school. So my questions are to the Minister of Education. Can the minister please share with this Assembly what plans he has to allow schools to be built in these new communities?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there is some tremendous good news in the area of new schools being opened in this province. In the current school year, which I guess is winding down very quickly, we will have either opened or will be opening some 16 new schools throughout the province, and about an equal number will be on stream in this next school year. However, saying that, we also recognize that there's still, despite putting about $1.3 billion into school construction over the next three years, a very large amount of infrastructure and modernization required. So I'll await the supplemental question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. We're hearing a lot about alternative financing. Some call it P3s. Can the minister describe to this Assembly what the advantages are if we go down this road?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, as I said, we have some $3 billion worth of need throughout the province for new schools and for modernization, and although $100 million was put into our budget in this current year for additional school infrastructure, it will come nowhere near to meeting that need. So we have to look at a whole variety of ways of getting schools in areas where students live and learn. We're just in the process of looking at that now, and I'm open to all suggestions by all members of this House.

Mrs. Ady: My final supplemental to the same minister: that's good news, Mr. Speaker, but parents want to know when. They want to know when this can come to be. They want to know if it'll be there when their kids go to kindergarten or university. Can the minister share when this could be?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very valid concern. In talking to parents that are waiting for a new school, basically what they're saying is: we recognize that it can't all happen at once, but at least lay out a plan for us so that even if it's in the year 2010, we know that we'll be getting our school at that time. I think you're aware that there is a small committee of cabinet, chaired by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, and we're looking at all capital projects in the province. Hopefully, in the near future we'll have some good news to announce.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Youth Addictions Treatment Programs

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recognizing the stress and isolation many parents face in dealing with children who have substance abuse problems, a group of parents in Sherwood Park got together and formed a support group known as Parents Empowering Parents, or PEP. They are here with us today to raise some of the concerns they have with treatment for children addicted to drugs in this province. My first question is to the Minister of Children's Services. PEP has identified several problems for families in remote communities who would like access to services. There are few rural treatment beds and no service dedicated to transporting children apprehended under PCHAD. What is the minister doing to address these service gaps?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that you've raised this issue. There's also the bill that the hon. Member for Red Deer-North put forward and was implemented last year. As well, I'd like to thank the Parents Empowering Parents for supporting that bill because I know that they were a huge part of garnering support to get it passed in the Legislature. I will say that my understanding is that that program has been very successful. It was only implemented last summer. I understand that 350 children and youth have gone through that program with their families. Fifty per cent of them have voluntarily moved on to treatment, which is unbelievable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. Parents involved with PEP have expressed concern over the shortage of drug treatment beds in Alberta. They point to both a lack of facilities for youth and adult patient waiting lists of over two months long. Drug addictions require immediate action. Forcing families and people in need of treatment to wait for prolonged periods is simply unacceptable. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what is your department doing to implement the recommendation of the Task Force on Crystal Meth that 300 additional beds be made available for detox and substance abuse treatment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. After the Task Force on Crystal Meth was presented, a cross-ministry committee was set up of deputies from a number of departments who were affected, I think the Solicitor General, Health and Wellness, Children's Services, I think Municipal Affairs and Housing. The cross-ministry deputies committee looked at the task force report, looked at what we were doing, and looked at what needed to be done not just with crystal meth but for youth addictions. They've brought back a report to me as the lead ministry. I'm currently reviewing that report and shortly will be forwarding it to government for further discussion as to what needs to be included in business plans and where we go from here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. PEP has identified several problems associated with access to effective treatment for different groups. In particular they're concerned about the need for increased resources for young adults in the 18 to 25 age group. The burden drug addiction places on addicts and their families is just as severe whether the individual is 16, 17, 18, or 19. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will your ministry agree to provide targeted treatment programs for young adults aged 18 to 25 in order to create a transition period between services aimed at youth and those designed for adults?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the concept that we need to have in place addiction treatment and the transition programming, but I will ask the hon. member to be just a little bit more patient. I am working thoroughly through the youth addictions report that the deputies have prepared. They've done some very good work, and it's on my desk now – in fact, I think it might even be in my briefcase with me here today – to read thoroughly and to see how we can fit it into our current business plan with the current budgeting and what things might need to be brought forward within another business plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Skilled Workforce Training Programs

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Due to the continued economic activity within Alberta, there is a growing need for skilled workers, and this is expected to continue for the next 10 years. Of course, this occurs in a myriad of areas and sectors. Would the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology please outline his strategy to address this high demand to ensure that Albertans get a chance at any job availability?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Addressing Alberta's labour force challenges is going to require a partnership and collaboration amongst not only the postsecondaries but with industry, with the associations, with all of those groups working together as part of the overall plan to manage the growth pressures that we have. We want solutions that ensure things like apprenticeship training and the industry and the system, that we're meeting those needs, so we're working on a long-term labour force strategy with industry, with the postsecondaries. We're adding more apprenticeship training spaces and recognizing prior learning experience where it's possible. We're offering a wider variety of delivery models in terms of either in-class training or distance learning or bringing the job site to the student or those sorts of things. We're doing as much as we can.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's fine and dandy, but some of the apprentices are unable to even attend apprenticeship technical training because there are no spots available at institutions to accommodate them. So what is it that you're going to be doing to address this very problem?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're already starting to address it, and in a very big way I might add, larger than any other jurisdiction probably in North America. We recently, in this budget, added 3,000 new apprenticeship spots, and this House may recall that a couple of months prior to that, we added an additional 3,600 apprenticeship training spots to the system. No doubt there are probably some apprentices out there who are looking at where they can go to get their spot. As part of Campus Alberta and the roles and responsibilities mandate we want to make it easier for students to find the spot. We want to make it easier for employers to work with the students to get them into the apprenticeship training program, and we will continue to add capacity, add space, and add instruction to make it affordable and accessible for all students.

Ms Calahasen: We have a rapidly growing aboriginal population, and these Albertans are currently underutilized. I would like to ask the minister: what kind of training programs have you got available to make sure that these available Albertans are going to be able to take advantage of the Alberta advantage?

Mr. Horner: Well, Advanced Education and Technology, Mr. Speaker, provides a number of programs and services that are specific to aboriginal Albertans. We are encouraging more aboriginal Albertans to pursue their postsecondary learning. The ministry supports a number of programs targeted at aboriginal learners and leaders in career opportunities, like the practical nursing program at NorQuest. We also have transitional training programs that are focused on those. There are now more than 1,200 aboriginal apprentices in Alberta. That's an increase of more than 400 per cent since 2002, when the province only had 238. We also administer several bursaries for aboriginal learners. We have the Alberta aboriginal apprenticeship program, which links aboriginal apprentices with employers. All part of building a stronger Alberta.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was mentioned earlier, KNM, a global manufacturer of steel process equipment, is setting up shop in Tofield. Tofield, as we all know, is in the Premier's riding, but unfortunately the constituents from the Premier's riding will not have first crack at the jobs that are going to be created. The process equipment is eventually going to find its way from China and Malaysia all the way up to Fort McMurray, but it's going to stop in Tofield for final assembly. My first question is to the minister of exploitation, immigration and industry. Why is the Alberta government allowing this proposal to mobilize . . .

The Speaker: Whoa. Please. There is no such minister known as the minister of exploitation. Perhaps the hon. member would like to rephrase that.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I forgot. Employment. The minister of employment and immigration.

Why is the Alberta government allowing this proposal to mobilize over 2,000 temporary foreign workers without first forcing KNM and their affiliates to hire workers in Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, previously the hon. colleague from Edmonton-Manning asked the question, and I gave the response. Perhaps I can abbreviate question period by referring the hon. member to the response previously given.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. I'll start with a quote. This is from the Malaysian Star.

It said while the cost of labour in Canada was expensive, the group was likely to leverage on its plants in China and Malaysia for prefabrication works before shipping them to Canada for final assembly.

My question: how can Alberta-based steel fabricating shops compete with this operation, which relies on low wages and substandard working conditions in China and Malaysia? How is our local fabricating industry to compete?

Ms Evans: We have a global economy. There are many things that are built offshore. There are many other countries that participate in the Alberta advantage every day by either engineering or creating products that are used. The development of Syncrude and Suncor is attracting people from Ontario. Businesses from out of Canada, as well, are competing on many jobs. Mr. Speaker, it's the global economy we live in. That's totally to be expected.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The executive of this outfit, KNM, admits that wages are cheaper in China and Malaysia and that they're higher in Canada. He's taking advantage of it at the expense of our local steel industries, and you're allowing it to happen. My question again to the same minister: why is this government selling out the steel fabrication industry here in Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in my previous answer I replied that this is a federal program, the temporary foreign worker program. The program on the labour market opinions and the issues around labour market opinions are things where there has to be an illustration, before workers are actually brought over, that there are no Alberta workers available to do the job. I look forward to discovering more about the company's plans. Maybe there'll be a further response to be given later, but I'm not clear why this hon. member continues to pursue this line of questioning.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Regional Municipal Planning and Development

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his state of the city address Mayor Mandel stated: "The inability of Edmonton and its regional partners to pull together is our biggest challenge. Working in silos is not just silly. It's destructive. One region of 1 million people should not have 23 answers to every question." To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: in response to rumours that the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability's report has now been shelved, to those who claim that a report which advocates for regional co-operation and planning and sharing of revenues and expenses has no support from this government, what say you?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No, there is no truth to that rumour at all, about this government shelving the minister's council on sustainability. Last Tuesday, I believe, when CPC was scheduled to deal with the minister's council report, I was summoned to Committee of Supply at the same time, and I asked if we could just pull that part of the agenda, that report. I have asked the chairman of the CPC for rescheduling.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mayor Mandel further stated that the Premier has been definitive on this issue. He promised that government would deal with these issues once and for all. This issue demands that a decision be made and made to stick. To the same minister: following years of studies and several reports later, will Albertans and particularly Edmontonians have a definitive response from your ministry to the report and on the matters of regional co-operation?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been numerous reports that have been presented. There have been numerous reports and analyzations that have been done by the city of Edmonton and also by the surrounding area. There was also a report that was presented to us by the minister's council on sustainability. We have taken that report. We are moving it through the process. It is critical that if a report of such comprehension has come to this government, we need to do it right. To rush it through would not be the right focus.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I agree: we need to do it right, and we need to do it right now.

To the same minister: can I then assure Edmontonians that anticipated growth in the capital region will result in equitable sharing of the benefits and burdens that come along with such sudden growth?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are working together with the municipalities. At present we are arranging a meeting with the surrounding municipalities, 23 municipalities. I very much believe that we need to work with the municipalities as a provincial government, and our position, as shown by the budget, stands true.

We need to have regional planning. We need to work together. We need to have communication, collaboration, and co-operation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Assistance for Student Housing

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By failing to introduce rent stability guidelines, this government has turned its back on tens of thousands of tenants and, in so doing, created a new indirect tax on postsecondary students. This new Tory tax will hit rural students particularly hard. Many students come from rural areas to go to universities, colleges, and technical institutes in our cities and regional centres, and they'll be hit hard by the huge rental costs that await them. Will the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing explain to this House why there is nothing, absolutely nothing, in the government's response to the Affordable Housing Task Force report to protect tens of thousands of students from being gouged by landlords?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the recommendations that we received from the housing task force and those responses very much included individuals that have challenges in housing. I have had discussions with . . . Is it CASS?

Mr. Horner: CAUS.

Mr. Danyluk: CAUS. Sorry. Abbreviations. . . . CAUS talking about the possibility on how we can improve student housing.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, the minister clearly is out of touch with the realities that students face in this province. It will now cost students even more to pursue postsecondary education in Alberta. The 14 per cent increase in living allowance for students, which is, in fact, an increase to student loan limits, will not help except to increase their debt. Will the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology explain to this House what he has to offer to students to help to offset their skyrocketing housing costs besides a higher debt burden?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the affordability of living accommodation is one piece of the affordability piece in the overall student financial picture, if you will. I am also a parent of two individuals who are attending our fine postsecondary institutions this fall, one of which . . .

Mr. Martin: You've got lots of money.

Mr. Horner: No, I don't have lots of money, hon. member. I wish I had lots of money.

To get to the answer that you're looking for, the point is that the cost of living increase that we put into the student finance program is not just loans because as the hon. member well knows, a good part of our student financial system is bursaries, is grants. The federal component is all loans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is in the grip of a serious affordable housing crisis. There's no doubt about it. Postsecondary students will be among its many victims as they return to school this fall. Students will have to take on extra debt thanks to this new Tory tax which effectively allows landlords to gouge students. To the President of the Treasury Board: is the government going to pick up all the additional rental costs for all affected postsecondary students, and if not, why does it not care?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, Mr. Speaker, as someone who has a son attending an institution right now to try and make a better life here in Alberta, I understand very well about the investment in the future. I find it somewhat frustrating that if a student is spending his own money on his education, somehow that's a bad debt, but when government does it, it's an investment in the future. Well, I'm very proud of the fact that my son has chosen to work in time and invest in his future. He understands that there's a cost to education. There's a cost to all we do, but he looks at his as a true investment in his future. Alberta is providing probably the most opportunistic area in the world to receive great instruction with a great future, and then they can really invest in their future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Elbow River Watershed

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend a group of very concerned residents of Calgary area and Bragg Creek will be fighting to protect the Elbow River and pristine eastern region of Kananaskis park from logging. They will be tagging trees with the words Save Kananaskis: It's Worth It written on tags made from a slice of fallen trees. This is an area that is vital as a watershed, as a water source for Calgary and other communities east, a habitat to threatened species, a recreation area for thousands of Calgaryans. It's an area that should be left natural. To the environment minister: given that 28 per cent of the area will be clear-cut over the years, will the minister provide assurances that the water quality will not be adversely affected?

Mr. Renner: Well, first of all, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that it's nice to actually get a chance to answer a question. I thought we'd forgotten about the environment for a little while. Let me just say that this particular issue is primarily the responsibility of the minister responsible for Sustainable Resource Development. However, like so many other issues, there is overlap between his ministry and mine, and I can assure the hon. member that any impact on long-term sustainability of our water supply is very much at stake and a concern to this minister. I will assure this member that we'll be working hand in hand in ensuring that what needs to be done from the sustainable side does not adversely impact the environment side.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, at a time when moratoriums are affecting all of the southern rivers for water licensing, five years after the implementation of Water for Life why is there still no comprehensive plan for the watershed of the Elbow River?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, such a plan that the member refers to actually does exist. That plan has to do with the implementation of WPACs, the watershed public advisory councils. That plan has to do with the ability for us to study the capacity for storage along that river basin to invest in the necessary infrastructure to increase the storage capacity of that basin. At the end of the day the plan is very much contingent upon us dealing with the allocation of licences in a basin that is fully allocated at this point in time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of climate change and the threat to growing water quality and quantity problems in the area, jurisdictions such as Vancouver and New York have bought back the watersheds to protect in perpetuity the water for those regions. Will the minister consider buying back this vital watershed?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a significant difference between the two jurisdictions that the member refers to and this one. The biggest one is that in most cases we already own significant portions of the watershed. Our watershed is primarily the Rocky Mountain basin, and most of that already is Crown land. So I would suggest to the hon. member that it's probably not necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few weeks, day in and day out the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing has been telling us about the $285 million allocated for affordable housing projects in the province. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. How much money out of that $285 million is going to help seniors facing rent increases and when?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the hon. member that the $285 million is new money that has been added to our budget. We have $143 million that has been allocated to municipalities for them to make a choice in what the needs are in their communities. It is up to them to decide how much of the $143 million should be used in the direction or the focus of seniors. Also, there's an allocation of $68 million on a per project basis for other municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. How much money out of that $285 million is going to help AISH recipients facing rent increases and when?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess I could give the same answer for the second question because the municipalities do have that option to decide what they feel the most important needs are in their communities.

But I would ask the minister of seniors if he'd care to supplement.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we work very closely with respect to these funds being available to all Albertans: seniors, AISH recipients. This certainly would be accessible to every one of them. They are equally applicable as with anybody else. But we do work closely with those on AISH and seniors to provide subsidized housing for both of them, actually.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister:

how much money out of that $285 million is going to help homeless people in Calgary, Edmonton, and around the province and when?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have increased our assistance to the homeless to $35 million this year. The provincial homeless initiative increased to $6 million. The Alberta transitional housing initiative received 2 and a half million dollars, the homeless and eviction fund, that has been discussed, $7 million. The rental program that caps rents at 30 per cent increased to $33 million. All of these programs and funding have increased to continue to have a positive impact.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Tourism Industry

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tourism is a sustainable industry that does not receive enough attention from this government. This government needs to start thinking about the long-term prosperity of this province and take advantage of the opportunities to diversify the economy and support communities. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Members of the tourism industry are concerned that there is no way for them to provide criticism or input to improve tourism in Alberta. Is this what the minister considers governing with integrity and transparency?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We value tourism, and certainly we want to have that particular industry grow. I need to say that the tourism industry in the province of Alberta ranks about number 4 at this stage in terms of economic activity for the province. The industry has had all sorts of opportunities to participate. Certainly, my office is always open. In my past activities I have met with a number of service providers. We also have our strategic marketing council, that administers and makes recommendations to me on the tourism side.

Mr. Agnihotri: I don't know why the stakeholders are not happy.

My question to the same minister: what changes has the minister made in the last six months to ensure that all voices are being heard?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, I've spent the last four, five months actually meeting with a lot of industry representatives. My door has always been open. Certainly, I've talked to industry representatives. We have our Strategic Marketing Tourism Council that we work with. We've got some staff that are appointed. I work very, very closely with Travel Alberta to ensure that our tourism industry is growing and expanding.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: the Leitch report identifies gaps in the accountability in the current tourism framework and recommends options to close those gaps. This report has not been released yet. Will this minister make this report public immediately?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly we're always reviewing the governance structure of Travel Alberta. You know, we are reviewing various options as to how we can best improve the tourism industry in the province of Alberta, and we will keep on reviewing those and making adaptations and changes as we see fit.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 84 questions and answers today.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 34
Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's a tremendous pleasure to move third reading of Bill 34.

We had quite an exciting and stimulating conversation that, obviously, lasted far past its usefulness. However, that's part of our democratic process. We look forward to probably a more concise and focused debate at third reading, and we would like to proceed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon. I think it's afternoon although I must admit that the way I feel right now, I'm not exactly sure what time of day or night it is.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, third reading is meant to discuss the effects that the bill will have when passed. I have some members across telling me that this is the perfect bill and that it's going to solve a lot of problems, and I have other members on my left telling me that it's not going to have any effect. I don't think that either one is the case.

Clearly, there are some measures in Bill 34 that are going to go some way towards addressing some of the situations that we've heard described in this Assembly over the last several days, go some way towards addressing some of the challenges and troubles faced by some of the visitors to our galleries over the last several days, and that's good. I hope that, in fact, the bill does accomplish some of the goals as outlined by the minister.

There is, as I suggested, a crisis in affordable housing in this province right now, and there is, as I suggested, a crisis in the public relations management of this issue for the government right now. So not only is it important for the government that this bill accomplish some of what it set out to do, but clearly and far more important is that it accomplish some of what it is intended to do for the renters of this province and particularly for those that are most vulnerable.

As I had suggested there would be, we had examples in the galleries again today of gouging. I don't know how you could describe it as anything but that. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing and to the President of the Treasury Board: if the example that was introduced in the public gallery today is not gouging – we talked a lot last night about what is gouging. I would submit to you that the example that we had up here today is gouging. There's no question about that. There's no black and white. There's no disputing whatsoever that an example such as what we heard today is gouging. I think that it is important to note that even though this legislation is going to pass this afternoon because the government has a big majority and it will go through, this legislation is not – and I repeat and I underline “not” – going to address the example that we had in the public gallery this afternoon.

If we're going to talk about the impact that the bill is going to have in third reading, let's also talk about the impact that it will not have. It will not address the situation that we had here today, and that is a major problem.

I heard the President of the Treasury Board speaking in a scrum when the marathon sitting, which started yesterday afternoon at 1 o'clock, ended this morning. I heard the minister in a scrum saying that he's going to sit down with the landlord and tenant dispute board and discuss with representatives from the landlords and discuss with representatives from tenants some sort of a mechanism whereby the landlords would police themselves and whereby they would agree to self-regulation so that these examples that we saw again in this Legislature today will not happen.

I'm going to submit to you right now, Mr. Speaker, that I don't believe that that will be good enough. I appreciate where the minister is coming from. Frankly, I hope he's right, but I don't believe that what he suggested to the media this morning is actually going to happen. I talked the other day about the greedy few landlords that are out there that are going to take full advantage of this marketplace, of the fact that there is no legislation that prevents them from doing so, and I don't think that a little bit of peer pressure is going to change that. I hope he's right, but I'm fearful that he is not right. I suppose only time will tell, and you can bet that we'll be lifting a page from the government's playbook where they always talk about how they're monitoring.

Well, I guarantee you that this member on behalf of all Albertans will be monitoring very carefully the few greedy landlords who have been imposing these dramatic and, as the Premier said last Friday prior to the Conservative convention, un-Albertan increases on their tenants. That, I can assure you, is something that I will be doing and that I know my colleagues in the Official Opposition will be doing on behalf of all Albertans. To those members that are in the gallery this afternoon and to all of those who've been down here all this week helping us bring the attention of this most serious crisis to the ministers of the government and to their staff, that is my commitment to you, and you can hold me to it.

Mr. Speaker, the government has talked a lot in the last few days about the need to create additional units, and there's absolutely no question that that is desperately required. Again, I would submit to you that this legislation is not going to create additional units. It does certainly provide some additional protection to renters in terms of notification periods for eviction notices in the case of condonation or major renovations. It provides additional time periods for notification in the instance of rent increases, and those are good things. We all know that those are part of what the housing task force recommended.

Clearly, as the minister himself described in the wee hours of the morning, those are pieces of the puzzle, and I'm hopeful that they will go some ways towards addressing the situation. They're not going to accomplish everything that's needed. On behalf of the Official Opposition and even, Mr. Speaker, I would submit to you, on behalf of some members of the government who have spoken previously yet did not allow that to carry through to debate in this Legislature over the last 24 hours and did not allow it to carry through to the standing votes, the many standing votes that we had on the various amendments, that clearly there are members in the government caucus that are hearing the same concerns from their constituents, and some have even expressed either publicly or privately over the last week or two their acknowledgement that temporary rental guidelines are necessary in this out-of-control marketplace.

I appreciate that they've shared that with us either privately or in some cases publicly, but I am disappointed that that didn't carry through to putting themselves on the record during the last 24 hours while we debated this bill, and I'm disappointed that that didn't carry through to standing up and having themselves counted when it came to a recorded vote in this Legislature, because I think it's important for those members to show their constituents that, in fact, they're standing up for them and for what they've heard in their constituency offices.

I know that this government is ideologically committed to anything but any sort of rent controls or rental guidelines, and I can appreciate that. There's been a lot of talk over the last 24 hours about that philosophical difference between that side of the House and this side of the House. But, Mr. Speaker, you're one to always remind us that we are all, first and foremost, here to represent our constituents. You always remind us that we choose to align ourselves with a political affiliation but that it is really the constituents that put us here and that our first and primary responsibility is to represent those people.

I have to tell you that I cannot imagine doing anything but supporting temporary rent guidelines based on what I have heard in my constituency office, and I'm going to guess that at least those members that represent large urban constituencies have all heard the same things that I've heard. This is not a problem that's specific to Edmonton-Rutherford by any means, and it's certainly not a problem that's specific to Edmonton-Centre or Edmonton-Mill Woods. This is a problem that is rampant throughout Calgary. We know the horror stories that we've heard from Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, areas in Red Deer. I see now the Energy minister, Mr. Speaker, is giving me a little waggle of his finger, suggesting that perhaps it's not true in Grande Prairie, but I've been in Grande Prairie.

Ms Blakeman: He's had one call.

Mr. R. Miller: He's had one call. Well, I can tell the minister that the gentleman that I spoke to that's living out of the back of his pickup truck doesn't have access to a telephone or the Internet, and he probably doesn't even know where the minister's office is.

Mr. Knight: He's probably making $150,000 a year.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, you know what? If he is making $150,000 a year, and he can't find a place to live – he can't find affordable housing – that just exactly illustrates the problem that we've been discussing in this House over the last couple of days.

You know, whether you're talking about Lethbridge – and I know that there are certainly some instances of this happening in Lethbridge, not to the same extent, perhaps, that we see in Calgary and Edmonton and Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray, but certainly it's there too. There are instances in communities across this province.

This afternoon in question period we had the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar discussing a steel manufacturing plant that's going to go out in the community of Tofield, and there are going to be about 2,000 workers suddenly living out there. Mr. Speaker, I know Tofield quite well. There's not accommodation anywhere near capable of housing 2,000 workers in the area of Tofield. So I'm not sure where that's going to put that community in terms of their housing situation, but I'm going to guess that there will be a housing affordability crisis in the Tofield area as well, if there isn't already.

For us to sort of stick our heads in the sand and somehow think that all is good because 55,000 new residents are coming to this province every year, we're missing the point. In fact, I think the reality is – and actually the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Affairs spoke to it quite well yesterday when he discussed the fact that a lot of the larger oil sands companies used to provide company housing, and now instead of that they provide living-out allowances. He discussed how that has had a major impact on the housing shortage in Fort McMurray and these sorts of things we're seeing across the province.

The Energy minister would well know that in Grande Prairie, as an example, there are oil companies that are buying up apartment blocks. Now, to their credit they're not just en masse evicting the residents, but what they are doing, Mr. Speaker, is as residents move out, they're moving their workers in. This is certainly reducing the availability of housing to the average worker that's looking for affordable housing in Grande Prairie.

We heard that the health authority, for instance, in Grande Prairie is buying up houses and offering those houses as incentives to doctors and nurses to come to the Grande Prairie region. Again, you know, this is symptomatic of a situation where . . .

Mr. Knight: Solutions. We have solutions.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, the Energy minister seems to think that that's a solution, Mr. Speaker, but I'm going to suggest to you that it's not. It does certainly address the concern of helping to bring in qualified professionals, whether it be doctors or nurses or x-ray techs or whatever, which Grande Prairie needs desperately at this point. They don't have a psychiatrist, so clearly there's some demand for this. But what it is also doing, when you have the health region buying up housing, is that it's taking those markets – I mean, let's be honest, Mr. Speaker, the average single wage earner probably can't compete with the health authority in terms of affordability, so it's driving up the price. There's no way that an individual would have the same resources that the health authority would to purchase housing. So it's all part of this out-of-control market where we see prices being artificially inflated, and this Bill 34 is not going to address that situation.

I talked about Edmonton-Rutherford, where we've got a development going in at the old Heritage Mall site. In excess of 8,000 residents are going to be moving into there. You know, this is a wonderful initiative, although there was some controversy about the height of some of the buildings, but overall it's an urban village. Instead of going out in urban sprawl, we're going up, and there's going to be an LRT station right on-site. I think this is probably a very good model for the future. But, Mr. Speaker, this is not affordable housing. These units start at $375,000 and run up to $900,000, and this is in a lower to middle-income community, $375,000 starting prices. Clearly, people that are having trouble finding affordable housing are not going to be looking at that as an option.

There are times, I've said before – and I think it's worth repeating in third reading of Bill 34 – when the market does not work. Despite ideology and despite the fact that this government insists on, you know, the Premier's own words – full steam ahead; we don't want to interfere with any investment; let the market go where it will; it will correct itself – I said in debate that it will correct itself. Markets always do. We understand that. In a free-market economy the market will always correct itself. That's what markets do, Mr. Speaker.

The challenge for this government is: while you're waiting for the market to correct itself, how many people are you going to allow to be hurt, and how badly are you going to allow them to be hurt? That's the challenge for this government and any government that is faced with a situation like this, where the free market is out of control. How many people are you going to allow to be hurt, and how badly are you going to allow them to be hurt? How long are you going to wait for the market to correct itself? We understand – and many of us in this Assembly have lived through it – that if you let a market that's out of control correct itself, it will peak. I'm not sure how far we are from that peak right now, but I sense that we're not that terribly far. It will peak, and it will peak higher than it should, and then it will come crashing down.

I don't want to be a fearmonger, but I am concerned. When I look at what's happening in this province right now and the lack of management of the growth and the runaway market that we have, there's potential for a major downturn. These peaks and valleys that we talk about often in the Official Opposition and the sustainability gap that we talk about in terms of the government spending last year – $2,200 more per man, woman, and child than we realize in sustainable revenues, and that number is growing every year, Mr. Speaker – we're setting ourselves up for an ever bigger fall.

You know, the one situation that that might address when it happens is the housing affordability question. But does anybody want to go back to 1983, when you had people walking away from their homes for a dollar? I certainly don't. I lived through that, as did many members of this Assembly. That's not where I want to go again, and I don't think anybody in here does. Yet that's what happens when you allow the market to run amuck the way it is right now and then you allow it to correct itself, which it inevitably will do.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 34, as has been described many times, cherry-picked a few recommendations from the housing task force, and it will go some modicum towards addressing a few of the problems that were faced, but it certainly is not going to solve the problem. The government has admitted that it's not going to solve the problem. In fact, the biggest problem with this bill and the reason why the Official Opposition does not support it is that it does not address the biggest single problem that's facing this government right now, and that is the issue of the few greedy landlords who are taking full advantage of the situation that the market is in right now. They're taking full advantage of the fact that they know that this government is on the wrong side of this issue with the public and that they have no choice but to step in and provide assistance to the tenants that are being unduly harmed by the few greedy landlords, so they're gouging.

As I've said many times over the last 24 hours, that is the primary problem right now that the government has yet to address, and as I said at the beginning of my comments this afternoon, there is nothing in this bill that addresses that. I for one do not have confidence, as the minister apparently does, that landlords will self-regulate themselves and that suddenly these problems of gouging that we've seen and heard over the last couple of days are going to disappear.

In fact, I do believe that as people reach the end of the 12-month period during which they cannot have a rent increase, knowing that that increase can be as high as any landlord can get away with, there will be those few greedy landlords who are going to take full advantage of that, and we're going to continue to see on a daily or perhaps weekly basis thousand dollar increases like we saw again today.

The government's problems in terms of the public relations exercise are going to continue. Those are not going to go away, because there's no legislation to stop them. The government has said this and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing said this, that there will always be those that will take advantage of it. It's human nature. If you allow people to do that, there will be those that will take advantage of it regardless of peer pressure, regardless of self-regulation from their fellow landlords. So, ultimately, the government has to decide. You know, the minister rhetorically asked the question back: "What is gouging? Is it a thousand dollars?"

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Is the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition going to participate? If so, I'll recognize him after the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Dr. Taft: Sure. That would be great.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been a long time since I've had the opportunity to speak to Bill 34. I need my Bill 34 fix here. I mean, after the debates that we've had, what more can we say? But we will say it.

I guess the frustration for me, Mr. Speaker, is having been on the task force and having heard what people were saying. I see that the minister of municipal affairs is here today. We travelled across the province listening to people. Some of the recommendations we have accepted; others we didn't. But, clearly, what we heard time and time again everywhere, through the Internet, through all the public hearings, was that people were feeling afraid about the rent increases and feeling that something had to be done because the horror stories were starting. They were starting last summer. They were starting last summer in Calgary, as I recollect. That's when we decided that we needed to call for rent guidelines, 4 plus 2, because of those stories. Then pretty soon we heard it right across the province, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing is that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is correct. I can't understand why people say that they're not getting calls about this. What is it about our constituency offices in the opposition that we are getting all these calls? We're getting call after call after call after call: 10, 15, 20, every day. So, yeah, tie the two things together. I tie the two things together.

First of all, from what we heard on the task force and what we're hearing in our constituency offices, we say that we have a crisis. Mr. Speaker, the government's response is: well, we've increased the rental subsidy, and we have the eviction fund, and that's going to solve all the problems. Well, hopefully that will help some people that are the most vulnerable, but it's not just those people. I explained that there are renters all over – young people, professionals – worried about it because at the other end the housing prices are going beyond them. They can't buy a house and get out of the rental market because the housing prices are making that impossible, and at the same time their rents are skyrocketing.

You know, I understand the reason that people don't want any rent stabilization, Mr. Speaker, but if there's a market there, you don't need it. I've said this before, and I've got to keep stressing it: there is no market there. I think that even the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has heard the same calls that we have and knows that there's no market there. You can say that the subsidy program will help some people, and we can call them about the eviction fund, but the eviction fund is not ready to go. But that's just a small group of the people that are struggling right now. It's some people that are making even more money. They wouldn't be really at the bottom end, but they can't keep up with the rents.

You know, Bill 34 is saying: well, we can only do it once a year. They did pick that up from the task force. But that may just possibly make it worse. I think that's what we saw today, the $1,200 one, because they're going to try to get it all at once rather than twice a year. So it may indirectly – I don't think the government means this – make it worse. It may make it worse because they bring in the big lump sum right away rather than twice, if that's what they figured they were going to get, the $1,200 today. Regardless of that, it still doesn't solve the problem.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know the government, and we're not going to change their minds here. Hopefully, enough people will keep complaining. The politics will become more difficult. They'll start to get the calls, and they'll continue to get them, and maybe eventually it will force them into doing the right thing, or they can pay a political price for it. Either way, I guess that's okay from the government's perspective, but unfortunately a lot of people are going to be hurt in the meantime. So we in the opposition are going to keep fighting this particular issue. I don't see any way around it.

I asked the government, Mr. Speaker, many times last night: what is the alternative? They always went back to the rent subsidies and the eviction fund, that aren't set up yet. But the reality in this overheated economy – and I quoted that even the government's own documents indicate that this is going to continue and that housing is going to be a major problem into the next year.

So when all is said and done, hopefully the $285 million will help and is going into some of the things that we on the task force asked about. But ultimately, if the rents keep going up in big chunks, like what we heard today, what are the options for people? What do we do? Now, individually they can maybe go to the minister and hope that they can get some help, or they can move out of the province. But is that what we want? You know, how many people do we want out there that are one rent away from being homeless? How many other people do we want to hurt?

One of the things that we really suggested – Mr. Speaker, you will recall the boom before. I mentioned that I thought this is one that the government would look at, you know, to try to stimulate the market: the mortgage subsidy. That did work well. As you're well aware, in Edmonton-Norwood it almost lost me the election the first time I got elected, when it was brought in, because it was such a popular program. But it did get some people into the market, and that would create rental units. So we have to look at the supply side, no doubt about it, and we need to give tax incentives for rental housing, no doubt about that. But even if we do all these things, it will take – and the government acknowledges this, at least the officials that we dealt with in the task force – a minimum two years, probably longer, to bring that sort of housing on board because it's just not being built.

Again, I stress that I just don't know what we do with all sorts of people that are facing this problem, Mr. Speaker. We're not going to win this debate. That's pretty clear. The majority is over there. [interjection] Well, I don't think that the leopard will change his spots from afternoon to evening. Maybe I'm wrong; one can only hope. But it seems that the ideology is that we can't interfere with the market. Well, that's assuming that there is a market to begin with, and that's the point: there isn't. There is not a market.

So what do we do? I asked the government many times last night and this morning: what do we do, then, with all these people that are going to be facing these problems? They can't all go to the eviction fund and get money, and many of them won't qualify for the rental subsidy because that comes down to another problem. The minister today said: what's the standard for people that need affordable housing; you know, trying to define that?

One of the things we said in the report is that there had better be a definition, and the government said: yeah, we accept that there has to be a definition. But they reject what we had said in the affordable housing report, which is interesting because we said 30 per cent. That's what the minister said today. That's sort of a standard measuring block throughout North America, that people should be spending no more than 30 per cent of their income on their accommodation.

You know, I understand the government's dilemma because I know now that if they opened that up to over 30 per cent, there would be a lot more than $33 million in terms of people qualifying. Therein lies the dilemma. But if they can't do the 30 per cent, then what is it? They've agreed that there has to be a definition. Is it 40 per cent, 50 per cent, 60 per cent of your income? What is it, then, Mr. Speaker? We have to grapple with that. Otherwise, the subsidy program doesn't mean anything.

Mr. Speaker, I fear that in the short run in the next two years there's going to be a lot of misery out there: a lot of stress, a lot of anger, a lot of frustration. It's already there. It will get worse, if we believe the government's projections on the economy coming up, because they say that housing is going to be a bigger problem.

Some of the housing will come on, hopefully, but when we talk to municipal affairs to really deal with the housing problem, we'd need 12,000 new rental units. Twelve thousand. Right now it would probably be more. There would be different ways of doing it. Certainly, the government, I recognize, can't do all of the public housing, but we have to have the carrot and the stick with tax incentives, with zoning, higher density, and all sorts of things. My point, Mr. Speaker, is that all those things will take time, and many people don't have the time. That's the hard reality.

So I say, Mr. Speaker, that that's why we don't think this bill really solves it. They took a couple of half measures without doing what they really needed to do, and that's unfortunate. That's unfortunate for a lot of people in this province. But hope springs eternal. Maybe the leopard can't change its spots in a day, but if enough people complain and listen and enough calls are made, maybe, just maybe, the leopard can change its spots in a month or two months or three months. Time will tell. We in the opposition will certainly do our job to bring the issues here to the Legislature, where they belong.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you wish to participate?

Mr. Eggen: With the standing order.

The Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Eggen: I would just like to ask the hon. member. There's one area that we have not pursued, and I believe that it's very much parallel with solving the larger housing problem, and that is providing mortgage assistance. You mentioned that the Affordable Housing Task Force explored this to some degree. How do you see that unfolding? Similar to the program that was around 15 years ago or so?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe some hon. members were there. [interjections] Yes, we know some hon. members were there. I remember the Premier of the day, Premier Lougheed, announcing it in the '82 election. As I said, I thought I had a fairly good ride in Edmonton-Norwood. I could see after that program was announced that I was lucky to squeak through by 84 votes. But it did work. It did work after the mortgage program came in. It was a mortgage subsidy. It was an attempt to get young people into their first time to buy homes. Of course, that springs it open: if we get them into home ownership, that's good. The more home ownership we have, the better it is, frankly, whether it be condos or townhouses or houses or whatever. It had a major impact, I think, and it did get some people into homes that wouldn't have been there.

Now, we in the task force said that we were looking at the spectrum – you know, from the homeless right up to that sort of level – of how to get people into home ownership. I honestly thought that this was one the government would buy. We said: okay, let's take a hundred million and put it into mortgage subsidies to precisely get sort of our young professionals. That's a bit of a problem right now: professionals, nurses and other people, technicians – you name it – people that are making a relatively good salary. But with the housing prices going up, they can't afford to buy. I've talked to a number of people there, that this would have got some people into the market. A hundred million, we think, would have been a good investment by the government, and it's not a giveaway. Obviously, it's a second mortgage, and they would get it back. So I was, frankly, a little bit surprised that the government didn't take that one up. That's one I thought they would.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others? There were a couple of others, in fairness. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you had a question?

Mr. Cenaiko: Not a question.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, do you have a question, sir?

Mr. Herard: I just want to ask the hon. member from the other side: with respect to mortgage assistance what is the interest rate difference between those days and today?

Mr. Martin: No doubt that was a time of very high interest rates. The impact was the same, though, because the people couldn't afford to buy the houses because of the high interest rate. They now can't afford to buy the houses because of the high cost of an overheated economy. I can tell you precisely that in Edmonton right now the provincial government is involved with the school boards. They're looking at school sites. I was at a meeting, and the city of Edmonton is going to go, precisely, into mortgage subsidy to keep some of the young people here. So they certainly see the need. The bottom line is: people can't afford houses and home ownership. We want to get them into it. So that's the bottom line.

The Speaker: Additional questions?

Then we're going to proceed with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak in third reading of Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, and to have the opportunity to be on record with some thoughts here.

This bill is an omnibus bill that amends the Residential Tenancies Act and the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act. The purpose is to respond to the recommendations of the Affordable Housing Task Force. The main amendments are to regulate the frequency of rent increases for fixed-term tenancies to once a year, to provide clarification around the start date for the time referred to for rent increases, and to make it an offence to not comply with the condo conversions notice period, which is a one-year notice.

This means that amendments are to modify the notice period set out in the acts to allow for one rent increase per year. This will apply to both periodic, month-to-month, and fixed-term tenancies.

Three months' notice will still be required before increasing rent on periodic tenancies. One year's notice must be provided before ending a periodic tenancy for the purpose of converting a rental unit to a condominium or to undertake major renovations to a rental unit. No rent increases will be allowed during that one-year period. The notice for converting a mobile home site to a condominium unit or for other uses continues to be one year. These changes are retroactive to April 24, 2007. There's also a punitive clause included to apply a fine per tenant for any landlord that violates the legislation.

The major flaw with Bill 34 as I talk to my constituents is the failure to introduce any kind of rent regulation, either permanent or temporary. There is nothing in this bill to protect renters from massive rent increases while they wait for the market to stabilize, which could take two years to see the first evidence of new units. What is needed and where this bill fails is to introduce renter protection measures in the short term. I cannot support a bill with this fundamental flaw. The evidence is overwhelming to me as I speak to my constituents and other people in Alberta that Alberta renters mostly in the cities are being subjected to unreasonable rental increases due to a destabilized market.

We know that this is not a new problem. There have been many instances of rental increases that are simply rent gouging for over a year. I do believe that it's just a handful, a very small group of individuals that are taking advantage of the instability and actually gouging. Unfortunately, it gives all landlords a stigma of being unfair and unreasonable and unkind. However, it is the failure of the government to not recognize that sometimes, in rare instances, the market just does not work. In these instances, we need temporary measures taken to protect citizens in the short term.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The only way I could really support this bill because of the effect of it is to include a temporary rent regulation. This bill fails to provide protection for renters. This is critical to any plan to address the affordable housing crisis. I just think that this bill fails Albertans.

The other concern I have is that the entire substance of the bill is in the regulations. It seems to me that once again the government is hiding behind . . . [interjection] Yes. I'm going to get there. Thanks.

Once again there are regulations here that we can hide behind, making authority that allows the minister discretion that I think is undemocratic. It doesn't provide stability for anyone if the rules can be changed at a whim. If we're confident that these amendments are good, then they should be debated in the Legislature. I believe that a bill should have to be introduced in the House and open for debate and scrutiny if it's really to protect Albertans.

So to me it's clear that the government's response to the affordable housing crisis has failed to address the critical issue. What are my renters supposed to do in the short term until more affordable housing units come on stream? I had a guest here yesterday who has been looking for appropriate housing for seven months. They came from Ontario, got a really good job but no place to live. They're moving from place to place. People will put them up for a period of time, and then they have to move again. This instability is causing a lot of distress as the lady has medical issues.

I think it's the government's responsibility to listen to Albertans and respond to help them. We've heard numerous examples this week. It's especially true when the market fails to provide stability, as is the case today. I think Albertans are speaking clearly on this matter. They desperately need short-term protection, and it is this government's duty to address those concerns even if the solution falls outside of what the ideology would be.

I look at the Affordable Housing Task Force's own report.

The decision to recommend these protective measures was a very difficult one for this task force. There was clear concern among many members about the impact of rent guidelines on overall new rental supply, and on rental rates once guidelines are removed in two years. At the same time, the task force was confronted everywhere with the plight of renters who were losing their homes right now. These people have few other affordable housing options in today's overheated market. The task force understood that keeping people in their current homes wherever possible is essential while dealing with the urgent situation Alberta is facing.

The report clearly articulates why temporary rent regulations are needed. Albertans, thousands of Albertans everywhere and from all walks of life need it, most importantly of all because everybody needs a home.

I'm proud that the Alberta Liberals proposed four amendments to Bill 34. Two amendments regarding temporary rent regulations did not go through. Two others were passed this morning. One amendment, A5, writes into the legislation a once-per-year limit on rent increases. The other, A4, doubles the fines to $10,000 for landlords who violate the rules on condo conversions. So now we have the limit on rent increases set out in the legislation, and it provides some clarification. This has been a good, democratic process. It's about standing up for Albertans who are living in fear of losing their homes because of unaffordable rent increases.

That is why the Alberta Liberal caucus has introduced amendments. We've tried to have the voices of our constituents heard, and we believe that governments must respond when the citizens they represent demand action. The price is too high if we do not. Albertans will continue to suffer, and the government responsible cannot let that happen.

I hear over and over, this week especially, about people coming to Alberta and facing housing problems, and I have those people in my own constituency. At the same time there are many long-time Albertans, long-time taxpayers who have worked hard, who have built this province, who have sacrificed, and who have wanted to have a home here that they could feel stable with, that they could feel comfortable with and have some assurance that they were safe. Bill 34 does not do that for them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. I just wanted to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods about the frequency and the amplification of these calls that are coming into your constituency office because, you know, some people are saying that they have not received one single call about the housing issue. Not that I think that I'm incredulous to that possibility, but I'm just wondering, maybe, if I just have such a different constituency. Do you get a lot of calls on this housing thing?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you very much. My office is overwhelmed with the calls. I have, actually, extra staff in right now because the calls are nonstop. We have hundreds – hundreds – of names on petitions, and we are holding a town hall on the 17th to give these people another opportunity to voice their desperation.

The Deputy Speaker: Others?

The chair now recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the debate.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to speak to this bill in third reading. I listened with a great deal of intensity last night and over the evening and into the early hours this morning. There was a lot of discussion, a lot of compassion and empathy shown in this House by all members of this Assembly. I represent an inner-city riding in the largest city in Alberta and one of the largest cities in Canada and have to deal with the issues that we're debating and bringing forward to the Assembly with new legislation that is there that will be protecting Albertans.

I want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, issues that we've discussed. Even looking in the 2007 budget and business plan issues related to seniors: that seniors in need have access to financial assistance, Albertans with severe and permanent disability have access to financial assistance, seniors and persons with disabilities have appropriate access and finances to living, and health and related disability supports and services enhance independence and well-being. This is just out of the seniors. I mean, I could go through this budget ministry by ministry.

It does show that this government has in the past and will continue in the future to assist those individuals throughout the province, and there are areas in Alberta right now that are more affected than other areas. This government has addressed these issues in the past five, 10, 15 years, but in the last three weeks this government, this Premier's government, has provided a quarter of a billion dollars – a quarter of a billion dollars – of new money that is going to assist in all of these programs, whether they're for seniors, for individuals that are on low income, for individuals that need that financial support. No other province with a population of 3.1 million people has got that kind of assistance. No other province in this country provides that kind of funding support of approximately $10,000 per Albertan for services in this province. No other province.

Now, I wanted to stress another point, Mr. Speaker, that there are solutions being worked on as well. I'm sure the opposition is well aware of the work that's being done here in Edmonton with homelessness. As well, in Calgary I'm honoured to sit on the Calgary Committee To End Homelessness, which is chaired by Steve Snyder, the president and CEO of TransAlta. Its membership includes individuals such as Rick George, the president and CEO from Suncor; Tim Hearn, the president and CEO of Imperial Oil; Mayor Bronconnier; Bishop Henry; Steve Allan of the Stampede board; Ken King of the Calgary Flames; Hal Walker, president and CEO of the Calgary Chamber of Commerce; Dr. Kabir Jivraj; Jack Davis, CEO of the Calgary health region; and a number of other very important people from the city of Calgary that have made a commitment to Calgarians and to Albertans to develop the template to end homelessness, not to manage homelessness but to end homelessness in the province of Alberta but especially specifically in the city of Calgary.

This committee has met. It has developed five subcommittees that meet on a regular basis: the prevention subcommittee, a housing subcommittee, a services subcommittee, an implementation subcommittee, and a communication and outreach subcommittee.

The work has been done, and it was actually announced in January, with the final report being drafted in December of this year and going to be available to the public and reported to the public in January of 2008. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this is one of the most energetic and exciting committees I have ever had the opportunity to sit on, with these types of individuals that have placed their names and their organization names on the line to say that we will end homelessness in this city and in this province within 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, the issue related to individuals that are in dire need of affordable housing, those individuals that have addictions issues and require treatment and detoxification, those individuals that are moving into Alberta that don't have a place to live, those individuals that may have been down on their luck and that don't have a damage deposit and can't meet the next month's rent: these solutions are being worked on right now. I'm not sure if the hon. members – no one from Calgary has mentioned this. Now, whether they don't read the paper, whether they're not sure of what's going on in Calgary, I can tell you that there's a huge community commitment from all the major stakeholders in the Calgary area to provide solutions regarding all of these areas.

So when we're going to be looking at individuals that have these special needs, we're going to be looking at, one, their medical assessment and their medical health, their dental assessment and dental health. We're going to be assessing them to determine what their mental health issues are, how their addictions issues may be related, and then look at being able to provide an advocacy component to it so that we can address the issues of that individual by not just plopping him into a residence, saying: here you go; live a good life. It will be to ensure that this individual will have the proper care, that he can learn life skills, that he can get employment training, that he can get a bank account. A lot of these people – and I have 2,500 homeless in my riding – don't even have a bank account.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of solutions that are being worked on, but none of the opposition members want to talk about solutions other than fixed rent controls. That's it. They just want rent controls but forget about assisting them with detoxification, about assisting them with treatment, about assisting them regarding mental health issues. I never heard that last night. In fact, I heard the Member for Calgary-Varsity say that one of his constituents committed suicide because their rent went up. I was astounded to hear that. Why wasn't he there to assist any of those individuals in his riding? That's his job. He's the MLA. The question is: what do you do as an MLA, and what are you responsible for as an MLA? You get out and you talk to your city housing component. You talk to the apartment association. You find the contacts. That's your job as an MLA. You don't put them off to government, saying, "The government's got to find you a home."

I can guarantee you this, Mr. Speaker. Any of these ministers that are responsible for any of these projects: their doors are open. Any MLA, not just the government MLAs but any MLA, whether it's from the NDs or the Liberals, can go and see a minister with a client if they want to. They can set up an appointment like any of us can, and I can guarantee you that that minister will be there to listen and will be there to help them with any issue that they have. So I'm saying that as an MLA I was elected to represent my constituency, which is a lot different than other suburban MLAs. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has the floor.

Mr. Cenaiko: I'm suggesting that there are a lot of MLAs, and from what I heard over the evening . . .

Mr. R. Miller: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: What's your citation?

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. R. Miller: Standing Orders 23 (h), (i), and (j), Mr. Speaker. Quite clearly, this member in his comments about my colleague – you can sit down now – from Calgary-Varsity is trying to incite disruption in this Assembly. He has clearly suggested that my colleague from Calgary-Varsity is not doing his job as an MLA in representing his constituents. He clearly illustrated with his comments that he does not understand issues surrounding suicide. I would expect that as a former police officer he should know better, and I would ask him to withdraw his remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: On the point of order.

Mr. Cenaiko: I would like to remind the member that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Is this on the point of order?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, obviously, there are no solutions to what the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity was talking about last night. He didn't provide solutions. He provided issues related to why people are going homeless but no solutions to what, in fact, he did for any of those constituents. Not one solution was provided last night, from what I heard, and so far today.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on the point of order? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmr.

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I'm pretty surprised because the member that stood up on the point of order has misinterpreted and misquoted our Standing Orders. He said that 23(h), (i) and (j) concern riling up the House, and certainly they do not. In fact, (h) talks about making allegations against another member, which this member did not point out. It also talks about imputing false or unavowed motives, which he did not cite. It also talks about using abusive or insulting language, which he did not cite. So there is no point of order here.

As a matter of fact, what the Member for Calgary-Buffalo was doing is the exact same thing that every single member from that side of the House has been doing for the last 20 hours, and that is trying to point out some of the issues that need to be fixed and that this bill is attempting to fix. There's obviously no point of order here.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmr almost took the words out of my mouth. There has been back and forth over the course of the last number of hours on this particular bill, this arguing back and forth of who works harder than the other. I'm sure that all MLAs work their very hardest on behalf of all their constituents. Those types of arguments aren't productive on either side of the House. I would say that if everyone spoke through the floor and waited their turn to get up and speak, we would have a lot less disruption in the House. So in my mind there's no point of order.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, I'll try not to incite the opposition.

Debate Continued

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, what I would want to say, though, is that we do have a responsibility as elected officials. We have a responsibility to our constituents. Whether they have homes, whether they don't have homes, whether they have addictions, whether they have mental health issues, or whether they're seniors, our responsibility is to assist them in any way. When they walk through the door of our office, when they give us a phone call, that's our job to assist them. Whether we assist them through Calgary

Housing, for example, and assist them in trying to find a home, whether we assist them by looking at the Calgary Apartment Association because we've made contacts there: that's part of our job, to assist individuals doing this. Whether they need to increase their employment skills by knowing where they have to go and who to contact in the community, who they should be meeting and talking with to get that employment training: these are issues and real solutions that we as MLAs, as all elected MLAs are responsible for.

I want to move on, though, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, ministers' doors as well are always open. They're always open, whether it's one of my constituents or whether it's a constituent from Edmonton or from Ponoka or from Vermilion or from Edmonton-Mill Woods. The doors of the ministers' offices are always open, and they're there to assist. If these ministers can provide them with a contact number for an individual to be assisted in any way, that's their responsibility when they take that oath to be a minister of the Crown.

Now, I wanted to move on, Mr. Speaker, and just let you know of some of the things that we're doing in Calgary regarding the Calgary community and homelessness. For example, a subcommittee on implementation is looking to develop a business plan, a specific action plan to avoid simple platitudes, to ensure that plans are integrated based on solid information and economic analysis.

Encouraging favourable collaborative approaches regarding all of the agencies. There are thousands – thousands – of not-for-profit organizations that receive provincial funding every year. What we're doing in Calgary is getting those groups together. In fact, tomorrow I'm going to be announcing in Calgary that a number of agencies that work with individuals that are addicted to drugs and alcohol and gambling are going to get together, and they're going to now, when they're assessing individuals, have that ability to say: which would be the best facility to assess this individual and provide treatment? So these things are happening in Calgary. I'm not sure about Edmonton, but I can tell you that this is what we're looking at in Calgary.

The Calgary Committee to End Homelessness is looking at a housing trust that individuals can actually flow money into, that they can have wills and estates go into a foundation that will be there for the long term, that funding could be provided through the homeless foundation. They're looking at issues related to secondary suites and working with the city of Calgary regarding issues related to secondary suites. They're looking at a management information system so that we can track individuals so that we know what individuals need wherever they are in the community, whether they were homeless to begin with, whether they had addictions issues, a way that we can track them so that we know what we've done to assist them and/or what the next step is for them as they move to becoming healthier in our society.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many. This is a huge community that we're working on. We're looking at, as I mentioned, the case management approach, case managers that are accountable not just for issues related to housing but, as well, issues related to health through the Calgary health region, developing an integrated database that will be able to compile this information and share that information with all of these individuals, and assessing the inventory and service needs on a level of the demand of these services.

There are hundreds of not-for-profit organizations out there providing services. It's the issue of bringing them together and integrating them so that we can provide the best service to individuals. It's about looking at those agencies becoming the advocates for individuals by taking them and finding them an apartment to live in, providing the damage deposit for that individual, providing the first month's rent for that individual. And if they damage the apartment, then that agency will be responsible, possibly, for fixing up and/or paying for the damage that may have occurred in that building. But the issue is that there needs to be someone as an advocate for the individual as they go through the process of cleansing themselves to become healthier and/or ensuring that the mental health issues that they have are being dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, we've worked on drafting the communications plan that's going to be required because, again, this is going to be a huge plan that is going to focus on all three levels of government: federal, provincial, and municipal. As well, the private sector is going to be involved because they want to be involved in the Calgary community and in the surrounding areas because they want to give back to society. So these are some of the things.

I won't go on for much longer other than I did want to say that even though we were debating one small piece of legislation over the last number of hours, there are other things happening throughout Alberta. There are other organizations that are working on solutions. They're not all debated in this Assembly because there are individuals that are volunteering their time to work with not-for-profit organizations because they have a social responsibility. We all have a social responsibility because we all are compassionate, and we're all empathetic regarding those issues related to those less fortunate.

So I just want to end, Mr. Speaker, by saying that this legislation is the first step. I don't think anyone heard the President of the Treasury Board say that we're not going to do anything else. I think you heard the President of the Treasury Board say that this is the first step, that this is what we're going to do regarding this. But there are a number of other areas that each of the ministries is working on, and those programs are in place.

As well, again, a quarter of a billion dollars of new funding: no other province in this country or, I think, any state in the United States of America has ever seen this kind of funding go into affordable housing.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Does anyone wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Yes. I really appreciate the comments from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo regarding the roles and responsibilities of MLAs and the comprehensive list of services that he's run through that are available for constituents. I am a new MLA. I'm learning. I have lots to learn yet, I suppose, but I believe I'm working very hard for my constituents. I'd like you to tell me what it is that you think other MLAs may not be doing from that list of services that you've suggested.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, that's a good question. I think the issue is that it might be a little different for those that live in Edmonton versus those that live in other parts of the province. My assistant, of course, takes part in all of the training that's provided by the LAO, which I think is tremendous and a tremendous opportunity for them to learn regarding what's available from government.

But it's not just government programs that are available to our constituents. There are a number of programs out there that are provided by a number of organizations, whether it's the Red Cross or whether it's Samaritans, whether it's, you know, a number of the seniors' facilities that may be in your community. So it's the issue of not just yourself but, as well, your staff that you have in your office are there to assist you because you can't be there all the time. They're there more than you are, and they probably know your constituents better than you do. It's your responsibility as the MLA to ensure that they have looked at all the services out there, whether they're government, whether they're federal government, and/or whether they're municipal, and/or whether they're not for profit.

It's, again, building that contact list that you have out there to ensure: can we assist them with this issue or this issue or this one? Who's the contact person that could be reached here or here? Who are the contact persons in the ministries' offices that are going to be essential to finding out and/or providing you with the assistance that you may need? Each of the ministries have, you know, those contact people that we may need. Whether it's issues related to mental health or issues related to the Calgary regional health authority, they have a government relations person there that's willing to help you. I'm sure that Capital health has the same. They're there to help you regarding issues related to mental health, so we can be there to assist them and ensure that services are provided, whether it's issues related to seniors' supportive housing, seniors' programs regarding benefits, dental benefits, or housing, some housing benefits. There are contact numbers out there. Those are the things that I learned, and I've only been here six years. But those are critical if you want to ensure that you're providing service.

3:30

This isn't about getting re-elected, although I think some MLAs think that's what it's about. It's about an opportunity to serve the community. By serving the community, you're going to be using those social agencies all around you to be able to provide the best services for your constituents.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw first and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to ask the hon. member: I know that he has been involved with the committee in Calgary with some of the best minds in Calgary looking at some of these issues and talked a lot about the social agencies and trying to network and make those more available, but has your group or committee discussed at all the idea of rent controls, and what thinking have they come out with if you've discussed this issue?

Mr. Cenaiko: The topic of rent controls has come up, but there's been no discussion regarding it. The issue is that we're looking for some quick wins, obviously, and to be able to pick that low-hanging fruit in the next few months or so. But this committee's goal is to end homelessness, so it's long-term, sustainable solutions. With funding that is coming now from the province, obviously this is going to be assisting us. Obviously, we have to work with the federal government because they have a responsibility as well, and the municipal government as well is in place. So it's issues related to long-term solutions. But as well there are opportunities to increase capacity within the city. There are opportunities to increase treatment and detoxification for those individuals.

Seventy per cent of the 2,500 homeless that I have are addicted to drugs or alcohol, 70 per cent. Of those same 2,500 approximately 40 per cent of them are involved in criminal activity because of the fact that they have an addiction to drugs or alcohol. So they are active in the community. As Chief Boyd from the Edmonton Police Service – if we could in fact stop the cycle of criminal activity, if we could stop the cycle of the addictions of alcohol and drug abuse, you could actually reduce your crime rate in your community by 40 per cent. That's huge. Now, you have to remember, too, that only 6 per cent of the criminal population is creating 94 per cent of the crime in your community. So it's again targeting those 6 per cent.

There are a number of strategies that have to be worked on in the future. Again, it ties in with long-term goals and long-term vision, but as well this is about ending homelessness, not about managing it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to try and zero in on some comments on Bill 34. First of all, I think the government across the way is to be commended on setting up the process to hear Albertans about housing across the province in the nine locations. And the results that were achieved is the report on housing. But I think one of the things that the government has to recognize: in setting up the task force to do this, they created, I believe, an expectation on the part of Albertans. The expectation, of course, is to meet with people across the province and listen carefully to their suggestions.

Then, of course, there is an expectation on behalf of the people that are participating that many of their suggestions are going to be implemented. I think that's probably one of the things that's caused this whole matter of housing to be such a contentious issue because, you see, when you listen to people and they make suggestions and then you have recommendations and only 12 of them are implemented, people are wondering if they've been jeopardized and their time has been wasted.

I think it looks at the whole question – I'm kind of a Frasier. My wife and I watch Frasier a lot. And when I was listening to the debate across the way from Calgary, I was thinking of Dr. Frasier Crane's favourite comment: are you listening? And, you know, I remember the old days of the Social Credit, which I was part of and was honoured to serve Mr. Ray Speaker. We use to send out task forces to listen to the people of Alberta. I was very blessed with Ray. He really believed you had to listen carefully. If you set an expectation on the part of people, listen carefully, and make sure that you have got the content that they're talking about, and then take some risks and implement the suggestions.

I think what I'm saying: when you create a democratic environment in which you get people to talk about their interests and needs, I think then it sets up an expectation. If people are not being listened to and not listened carefully to, I think they get very, very upset, and they tend to be turned off. So, anyway, I'm just suggesting that's something that you may want to look at in terms of processing some of the information that you're getting in across the province.

The Deputy Speaker: On a point of order? Please take your seat. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Herard: It's more a point of clarification. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member's conversation because I probably could have done the same thing to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but it seems to me that third reading is about what's contained between the front page of this document and the back page of this document. It's not about consultation processes. It's not about all sorts of programs that we might have in the city of Calgary. It's about the bill that we have in front of us, not the bill we could have had or should have had.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you calling a point of order?

Mr. Herard: Yes. I want clarification as to whether or not, Mr. Speaker, you go by those rules.

The Deputy Speaker: What's your citation on your point of order?

An Hon. Member: Beauchesne 489, Denis.

Mr. Herard: Yeah. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on the point of order?

An Hon. Member: He didn't give a citation.

The Deputy Speaker: I didn't quite hear exactly what the hon. member was saying except for, was it relevance?

An Hon. Member: There wasn't one. No point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, hon. members, as I listened to this debate for the hours that I was in here through second reading and committee and now third reading, I guess relevance could have been called pretty much on every speaker, as could Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j), as was previously raised. If the Assembly wants zero tolerance and has these Standing Orders and the rules administered to that level, this Speaker could very happily do that. However, the tradition of the House was to allow for some flexibility, and unless things get difficult, that has been tolerated. So I don't believe there's a point of order in this case under the traditional sense of the way we've been operating in this Assembly.

I would ask the member to continue on with his speech.

Debate Continued

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try and continue and try and be a little more specific in terms of housing now. I'm trying to sum this up with about five points based on the discussion I've heard somewhat this afternoon and last night. There is currently across the province an imbalance of supply and demand when it comes to the question of housing.

The second point I'd like to make: the best solution is to increase supply. However, we recognize that that will take time. In the interim, there's an issue with how people are going to be accommodated with housing needs across the province. I think that's the big question: how are people going to be accommodated? So that's a major. The MLA for Calgary-Buffalo talked about some of these ways people are going to be looked after. I think that's what the tension issue is. People are unsure, it seems to me, of where they're going to go, how they're going to fit. I'm encouraged by the fact that we are going to have something for them.

The third point I'd like to make in terms of trying to sum up what I've been hearing over the last year: in the interim many people, as I've just said, are getting squeezed, particularly the low-income, the disabled, people on fixed incomes, and the working poor.

I had a situation in St. Albert. This is a lady with two children out of wedlock. She's an aboriginal lady, lovely lady, and she really wanted to get back in the work stream by going to MacEwan and taking a year's program in hotel management, I believe it was. The Salvation Army presently, I believe, is helping her live in her accommodation. I'm hoping, with what I've heard, just talking about this question of housing again and getting the right accommodation for her that with one of these new programs – and I've asked my constituency manager to get the information because she's worked with her and get back to her to see if she can fit into one of these areas and get back on that program. It's a little more complicated than I've let on today, but I'm encouraged that some people are going to be helped. That's what I'm trying to say.

I think one of the things that has really come clean to me across this issue is that there seems to have not been in the past a plan. No plan. There now is an indication that there is planning. Unfortunately, because there hasn't been a plan, people are getting hurt, and I think that's difficult.

The fourth thing that I want to make in terms of my position was that I supported temporary rent caps, and I was hoping we could get a time limit on that.

The other issue I must talk about is the question of landlords. I have received a lot of feedback from my constituency on the landlord issue, and I want to say this very clearly: I think there are a lot of wonderful, good landlords. I found that out when I was the regional director in social services. We have a lot of good landlords, and I think they have been blacklisted by some of the discussions that we've had in the House. I don't think it's their fault. I will even go out and say that the majority of our landlords are good people, private enterprisers, good people trying to make a dollar. I even know of some that have talked to me on the phone that have said that they have reduced the increase they could have had in order to accommodate people that are in low-income situations. So I think the landlords maybe have taken a little bit of a kick on this one.

I'm really saying, too, that it isn't the fault of the renters. I think the problem lies solely presently with the government. I'm not being overnegative, and I'm encouraged that they're going to do something about it. I think that's fine. I think that we've failed to create affordable housing, and the problems that we see are a result of a strong economy. I'm, hopefully, going to see some changes in the near future.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there anyone who wishes to add a comment or a question on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for this opportunity to speak on Bill 34 in third reading. The House has had a rather detailed debate over this very important piece of legislation over the last 24 hours, and that's for the good. I think it's important. That's what this House is about. That's what the House should be about: to engage each other, to challenge each other with respect to the pros and cons of a piece of legislation that's before it.

I have a question before I proceed further. I don't want to forget this. Maybe the President of the Treasury Board will have the answer for me on that. The question is a kind of afterthought or reflecting on, now, the consequences that will follow from this bill and how it will be implemented, what kind of regulations will be developed to ensure that its very limited objectives can indeed be achieved through its careful implementation through the development of regulations.

The question that I have specifically, Mr. Speaker, for the President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta is whether the requirement that there can only be one annual increase in rent applies to a building, a site, a suite, or whether it applies to the owner or the landlord. Lots of rental property is being flipped back and forth, unfortunately, and that's causing the prices to go up and not reflecting necessarily the substantive value of the property. It's the rental increases that encourage people to engage in this. They simply hike their rents up, show a higher cash flow, and then put the property back on the market for someone else to take care of it.

Therefore, I think that when it comes to Bill 34 and what kind of constraints it generates for rent increases only once a year, there's no clear answer to my question in the text of the bill itself. Will there be specific attention paid in the writing up and drawing up of the regulations to clarify that the one increase a year applies to specific sites or suites and not to the owner? The reason I raise this question is that the penalties seem to apply to the owner who at the time of the rent may be not in compliance. That owner, however, could change through sale or purchase. I have no answer that I can find anywhere in the bill which tells me who will be held responsible, who will be responsible to pay those fines. So that's the question.

That's just a specific question that I find is a loophole, you know, in the writing of the legislation. Even if you take the legislation seriously and say that it will be of assistance and help to lots of Albertans, which I don't think it will be, but that's a different issue, within the parameters of the bill I think there are some questions that need to be addressed. I'm sure that the minister will pay attention to those. I would like to hear from him either here or later, sooner rather than later.

So to go on from there, Mr. Speaker, much has been said on this bill from this side of the House, from the NDP caucus side, which draws attention to how disappointing the bill has been with respect to what the task force recommendations hoped such a bill would achieve in moderating the rate of increase in rents, which a very large number of Albertans face under current market conditions. The President of the Treasury Board the other day in conversation with me during the debate acknowledged that there are at least a million people, 1 million Albertans out of 3.1 or 3.2 million, who live in rental residences and accommodations.

Certainly, these are rough estimates. I hope that the government and this minister and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing will pay more attention to that so that we have a more firm grip on the number of Albertans who in fact are in the rental market as tenants or potential tenants. My suspicion is that the numbers would be anywhere from a million to about 1.2, 1.3, 1.4 million Albertans that will be affected by it.

This bill and the provisions in it and the associated programs which help renters through subsidies or through protection against eviction will help only a very small proportion of this total number of renters. Most of the renters fall above the income level that would be qualifying for subsidies. These are middle-class, middle-income Albertans, most of them young, most of them former students who have just entered the labour market as accountants, as teachers, as nurses, as town planners, what have you. These are the people who are coasting, as it were, for the next few years. They are renting whilst trying to save in order to buy their first house. They will not be assisted through this rent subsidy program that you have because it's income contingent.

There was an interesting letter today by a single mother who is looking after a child and has a job that pays $44,000. She gives exact figures, and her take-home pay, including everything, you know, including all kinds of child benefits and so on and so forth, is about $2,300 a month. Then she gives a list of the different items in her budget and how she is finding it extremely difficult and, in fact, now is unable to go to sleep, saying: "What can I do? How is this Bill 34 and its provisions going to help me." She says, "It's not going to help me."

So it is these people who would fall just a little above the cut-off line for qualifying to get this subsidy that this minister and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing have drawn attention repeatedly to as a way of seeking some help and protection against this intolerable situation. These people are the ones who are really going to be hurt, who don't qualify for the subsidy. Their ability to save is going to be undermined seriously by the rate increases that they face. Their hope to buy a house down the line is going to evaporate in conjunction with the necessity for them to pay rents, which can become intolerably high for them. They have no recourse, no appeal, no review as provided in this bill to seek a redress to their concern that their rent increase is unreasonable, that it's exorbitant, that it's gouging.

Given that there's no redress, no opportunity to appeal, this very large number of middle-class Albertans, mostly young but not just young, are being thrown into, I think, a very difficult situation, and they are likely, in my view, to find themselves being deprived because of the weaknesses of this bill from being able to build a financial capacity to have enough money to put as a down payment to be able to buy their first home. So, Mr. Speaker, that's the problem with this piece of legislation.

The second point that I want to make in this third reading about the bill is the provisions that it has for condominiumization. I've been around in this city for a very long time. I know of investors who buy a property – and this has been going on since the mid-70s. I have known people from that time who tried to benefit from it. They're investors, but they don't create real value. They don't create any real commodity or add value to something that they have when they buy a rental property, apply for condominiumization, very quickly turn that property into condominium property, and then sell to people who want to own their first house.

During this process the value of the property shoots up. As purchasers they benefit from that rise in value through the conversion to condominiumization, without having created added, recognizable, substantive value that adds to the GDP or the wealth of the community in general – we call it in terms of GDP provincial wealth – but is essentially speculative activity, not benefiting either tenants or potential owners.

So this flipping activity, as sometimes it's called in the housing market, a quick purchase and then trying to flip it over to another person who wants to buy quickly and then sell again or convert it into condominiums, is not going to be discouraged by this bill. It is that kind of activity that doesn't really create any real value, a new commodity or new article from which as investors, as entrepreneurs they would have the right to benefit and is what is also contributing to the escalation of rents and the problems of affordability, whether you are a tenant and therefore renting or whether you are someone who hopes to become an owner sooner rather than later by hopefully being able to save while you're renting a property. It's a chain of events here, a succession of decisions that people make on either side of the line, which will not by virtue of this bill becoming law necessarily help alleviate the pressures related to very rapid escalation in the cost of purchasing a house or in the cost of renting a house.

Mr. Speaker, the third point I want to make is that it exposes lots of people who are income earners to feel that simply buying a house, having a decent rental property even, a residence, is getting out of reach, and that leads to frustration. That leads to hopelessness. One particular group that I fear I will be dealing with fairly soon, in the next two months, is the very large number of postsecondary students who flock to our universities, colleges, institutes, and so on, in big cities as well as in regional centres, such as Grande Prairie or Red Deer or Medicine Hat or Lethbridge – you name it – Fort McMurray. These students are going to find themselves in a very difficult situation because there is no cap, there are no limits within which rents can be raised by landlords. Already most students, these students particularly who had to move away from their towns and villages and farms to come to these big cities, bear this disproportionate . . .

Mr. Speaker, I think I'm out of time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Leader of the Opposition I think I'm entitled to 90 minutes on this? Thank you very much. [interjection] A good sense of humour, Harvey. Thank you.

I've always felt that the point of debate in third reading is to talk to the effects of a bill that's making its way through the Legislature, and I think that's well worth considering here because the effects of this bill are going to be felt for months and, I would say, years to come very acutely by some people. I worry about what happens over the next several months as all the people that are getting these large notices of rent increases have to make their decisions, because this bill will not have the protection that they would have if there was a rent cap in place or that they would have in a normally balanced market. I think most of us in this room will agree that a normal, healthy market needs a minimum of regulation. I guess that where we disagree is that when a market is totally out of balance, as it is right now, it is the place of government to step in.

So what are the effects going to be over the next several months? Well, I think it will depend on different sectors. For seniors you may see some moving away from the province to take up with family in other provinces where they can afford to live or, you know, moving back to live with their children within Alberta. For students – in particular, I'm sensitive to the plight of postsecondary students because the University of Alberta is in my constituency – I think you're going to find, come August and September, a real sense of panic among students as they realize that the cost of postsecondary education, which is already daunting, is just going to become some hundreds of dollars a month more costly. That may well discourage some students from actually seeking postsecondary education, or else it'll drive others to take a second or a third job while they are attending university or college or technical school and as a result get less out of that learning experience and perhaps even fail or get discouraged. So students, I think, will see things played out.

Young professionals or young middle-income earners – and I'm thinking of teachers, nurses, physiotherapists, firefighters, police officers, all those kinds of people – I know already are really struggling to find places to live, are in fact leaving the province or are not coming to this province because of the cost of housing and, again, because of this bill's failure to provide the protection that's needed.

I think we're going to see a lot of human casualties here.

Mr. Danyluk: Eleven thousand in three months.

Dr. Taft: I'm getting comments from the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

So over the next several months I think we'll see this issue escalate, and barring a really sharp downturn in the market, I think that escalation could continue for a couple of years. One of the frightening things, for us in the Liberal caucus at least, is that the number of rental units being constructed is not showing signs of any surge. In fact, it's tailing off. The number of rental units in the market is tailing off. So instead of a solution looming on the horizon, it's going to be six or eight months until all these units are opened up. There is no solution at all. In fact, the solution may be receding into the sunset. So I need to emphasize that there are going to be human casualties over the next several months.

There's also, in my view, going to be a real hit to the economy.

I mean, we think we have a labour shortage now. It's only going to get worse because people moving to Alberta from other provinces aren't going to have a place to live. Even if they could find a place, they wouldn't be able to afford it. I know this is happening because I hear these accounts every week as I travel around the province and speak to businesses who want to bring in, say, chefs for restaurants, staff for restaurants, for example. A big challenge. Reporters for media outlets coming in from other provinces: a big challenge. Health workers, of course, construction workers, all of those kinds of positions are going to be more difficult to fill than ever because the people who would come here to fill them and take the job can't find a place they can afford to live, unfortunately, again, another negative side effect of this bill.

I also think that an unanticipated economic problem that this bill will create is to increase economic instability in Alberta. What we're seeing now is a dramatic spike in the cost of housing. Dramatic spikes are typically followed by dramatic collapses. We've lived through that in Alberta. Just about any resource-based or commodity-based economy in the world faces that, and because this policy does not dampen the spike, it's going to mean that the risk of a dramatic fall is that much more great, and therefore the risk of instability for the economy is increased.

I also think that an unintended effect of this policy will actually be greater cost to the taxpayer. We're already seeing, as the minister so frequently reminds us – what is it? – $285 million or something in additional taxpayer funding over the next two years, I believe, if I've got the figures correct. But I don't think that'll be the end of it. I think that once this crisis really, really starts to peak, starting in the fall, the public demand for more subsidies and more spending will grow and will be irresistible, particularly as we head into the red zone before a general election. So I could well see this government pouring tens and tens and tens of millions of additional dollars into this issue when simple good regulation would in fact allow the same problem to be corrected without a lot of expenditure. So I think this is going to be costly to the taxpayer.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there's the social cost to the cities, the big cities, Edmonton and Calgary, and the mid-size cities, Red Deer, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, that carry the lion's share of the problem for homelessness and affordable housing. As those problems increase, as homelessness itself increases, and as the number of people who can't afford housing increases, well, the cities are going to have to bear the burden.

I think we will see an even greater number of people out on the sidewalks, living in the parks. In fact, I heard a term yesterday, and I might as well put it on the record here. This is not something we created ourselves, but it was in reference to a homeless person walking through the streets carrying a sleeping bag just before 8 o'clock yesterday morning. In fact, it's a regular occurrence for this particular person. He's living somewhere in a park or river valley, and just before 8 every morning, when he would get chased out, he rolls up his sleeping bag and walks through a particular neighbourhood. One of the people who has watched this turned to one of our caucus members yesterday and said: have you seen that homeless fellow go by every morning just before 8 carrying his Stelmach suite on his back? I think that term might begin to get some currency here. I'm not using it in an inappropriate way.

We're going to see a lot more people living that way, and the burden of that's going to be on the cities. As I walk down Stephen Avenue in Calgary or as I walk down Whyte Avenue or Jasper Avenue in Edmonton or as I go to Grande Prairie or other places, the number of homeless people is shocking. Who has to pick that up? The cities. So this is going to be yet one more strain between this government and the municipal governments.

Ultimately, I think the highest cost and the most tragic cost will be visited on families and children. When I'm in Grande Prairie and I have people in tears speaking to me about families living in trailers, not proper trailers in trailer parks but little holiday trailers, trying to make it through the winter or families living in the crew cabs of pickup trucks and, you know, lucky if they get a shower every few days, I know that this problem is out of control, and that is occurring. I ask myself: what's happening to those families? Is it any surprise that those families split up? Is it any surprise that those kids don't do well in school, kids who move several times through one school year because their families can't find a home? Where are those kids going to be in six or eight or 10 or 20 years, Mr. Speaker? Everybody needs a home. We owe it to families, we owe it to children, we owe it to every citizen of this province to take whatever steps we need to take to make sure that they have an affordable home. This bill, in my view, fails utterly in that respect.

So what will be the effects of this bill, Mr. Speaker? I think the effects of this bill will be a series of problems: short-term problems, economic problems, higher costs for taxpayers, problems for municipalities, and ultimately and, I think, most severely and tragically a series of problems for families and children.

I'm disappointed in this bill. I'm disappointed in this government. There was middle ground that could have been taken. We don't have to get into rent caps for all time. The Alberta Liberals put forward a position: one year, 365 days, 10 per cent. Not even a rent freeze. A 10 per cent rent cap. And it goes nowhere. I find that's a telling sign of a government that has lost heart, is failing to look voters in the eye, is failing to sit down with the people who've turned up here in the dozens in the last few days and listen to those stories and take those stories to heart. I think this is a government, as I said, that's lost its heart and is well on the way to losing its soul. It's a sad comment on what has been a proud political dynasty for so long, Mr. Speaker.

With those comments, I think my message is clear, and you can tell where we're going to be voting on Bill 34. We'll be voting against it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Questions or comments?

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Speaker's Ruling

Referring to a Member by Name

The Deputy Speaker: Just before the hon. member starts, a member's name was raised by two different members in this House in unique ways, and we don't allow members to be referred to by their proper names. It was used on both sides of the House this afternoon. I just caution members that it's best to edit those out of your speeches and be on the safe side.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the debate.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief because I know that I was here all night, and many of the people here have certainly shared our thoughts with each other during the night. But I'm really delighted that my colleagues from Rocky Mountain House and Stony Plain are going to actually be able to hear me now.

There are a couple of questions that I would have liked to have had answered. The minister has said that he is considering 30 per cent of income to evaluate who would be eligible for help with the housing part of it. That's fine, but clearly he's not going to worry about 30 per cent of, as he mentioned, say, $100,000. What I wasn't clear on is: exactly what is the cut-off? Where are they going to create the criteria and then look at the 30 per cent?

Another question that I would have liked to have had answered was: does the year criterion go with the unit, or does it go with the tenant? For instance, if a landlord raises the rent on a tenant in January and the unit is sold in February, it now has a new owner. Is that new owner then allowed to raise the rent one more time? Who is protected? Is it the unit that's protected for the year, or is it the tenant that is protected for the year? I never really had a clear answer on that.

The market system works very, very well. It's very creative because it's competitive, but I think it has to be balanced to work, and I think that we've all agreed in this House that the major problem we have is supply. Is it the government's job to create incentives to ensure that we have those units being built? It's probably half and half because I don't believe for a second that if a developer would be able to build something and make money, it wouldn't be built now.

Perhaps the government has to be able to put in rules that would be an incentive for private developers to certainly go into what would be considered either transitional housing or affordable housing. I've heard that we don't want to interfere in the market, and I basically agree with that, but I do believe that it's the government's job to make the rules that level the playing field so that everyone is on the same competitive basis.

This bill has helped with the timeline and certainly the enforcement mechanisms, but I don't believe that it truly protects against immoral rent raises. For that reason, I will not be able to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on the bill?

Mr. Hancock: A point of procedure. Would the chair believe it was appropriate to ask for a shortening of the time for the bells? I don't believe many of our colleagues would be concerned about it, but I'm a little reluctant to even ask because we have no way of letting them know that the bells will be shortened to one minute.

The Deputy Speaker: I can put the question to the House before we take the vote. It has to be unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:18 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

The Deputy Speaker: Just for clarification, members, the one minute is the time between the first bell and the second bell.

For the motion:

Abbott	Ducharme	Lindsay
Ady	Evans	Lund
Amery	Goudreau	Melchin
Calahasen	Hancock	Ouellette

Second Reading

Bill 31
Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate May 1: Mr. MacDonald]

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to speak on Bill 31? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking on the Mental Health Amendment Act, the members from my constituency point of view would support this act. We believe it will create an improvement in the current systems that is needed.

There are cases both for and against the proposed community treatment orders. This is a complex issue that has supports and opponents. While CTOs are intended to provide a more structured approach to treatment, there is a legal and ethical dilemma of potentially violating a patient's rights as well as inconsistency with today's medical philosophy around the right to refuse treatment and evidence-based decision-making on the use of the least invasive alternative. But as a whole, from the perspective of my constituency, there are more that support than are against this particular act. Therefore, with some of the reservations that have already been expressed about the bill, I will be supporting it, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to close debate? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar

Rev. Abbott: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been some great comments, and during Committee of the Whole we look forward to answering some of the questions that have come up. I would just like to thank all of those who participated in the debate on Bill 31, and I move second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

Bill 32
Animal Health Act

[Debate adjourned May 1: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of questions that I would like to ask on this bill. I'm a very strong believer in definitions so that we're all talking off the same page and singing out of the same songbook, so to speak. The definitions of a reportable disease and notifiable disease seem to be open ended to me, and I'm not exactly sure that I understand the total difference in those. How frequently do new reportable or new notifiable diseases arise? Over the past decade how many of either one of these has emerged as a concern? I would leave anything like BSE aside, which was certainly an anomaly.

Another question that I have that would raise a flag for me as a professional health care worker. Section 6(3) states that "the chief provincial veterinarian may appoint individuals who are not registered veterinarians as inspectors." I would suspect that that is a very solid piece of knowledge that everyone should have, certainly to be an inspector, when they have such great responsibilities and significant authority under this bill. So I just wondered if the minister could perhaps quickly elaborate on that issue. I think it's a very important one. Perhaps they'll be using vet techs; however, I'm not sure that I think that that's a high enough level with the authority that they carry.

They speak of control zones. It would prevent the importation or movement of animals into Alberta from neighbouring jurisdictions, and they would have the authority in neighbouring jurisdictions be present. So they're talking about animals moving from control zone to control zone. How would this process really unfold? I think my main question on that one would be: what effect will TILMA have on animals that are coming from B.C.? Do we have higher standards or lower standards, and which standard would be looked at in terms of TILMA being assessed against that question?

The last one. I believe that when we're speaking of the appeal board, it really should be somebody who is not directly affected by the decision that is being made. I think that anyone who has listened to me talk about continuing care, long-term care, et cetera – I really believe that independent, outside eyes are the ones that actually see in a clearer, unbiased way exactly what is going on. Perhaps someone could record those questions, and I could get the written answers. I see the House leader nodding.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

4:30

Mr. Prins: I was just going to say that I had a big long speech that I could read on this. I'm going to refrain from doing that now, but we can answer in writing to those questions.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have had a robust week of democracy in this Chamber, and I think that we all deserve the opportunity to call it 6 o'clock. I would so move that we adjourn until Monday the 14th at 1 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 4:31 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1 p.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I'm now going to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I'd like all to join in in the singing of our anthem in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 21 bright students seated in the members' gallery from Fort Saskatchewan Christian school. Today they are here with their teachers, Stacey Paulsen and Mrs. Karen Maslanko, and parent helpers Mrs. Renee Goodbrand and Mrs. Caroline Bartz. Fort Saskatchewan Christian is one of the many exceptional schools in my riding, and it is wonderful to see these eager young students in our Legislature learning about how government works.

Before I'd ask them to rise, I'd also, Mr. Speaker, like to share with you that Ms Stacey Paulsen, who is, of course, one of the teachers I introduced, is marrying a young lad that's well known to our caucus, our caucus director, Mr. Michael Simpson, this Sunday.

With that, we extend to you sincere congratulations and ask all of the students and teachers and helpers to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly on behalf of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security students and teachers from the SCOPE home-school in the Stony Plain constituency. Accompanying the students today are teachers and parent helpers Rosemary Lee, Jenny Stone, and Christine Clements. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a visiting class from Springbank, Alberta, in the district of Foothills-Rocky View. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Scott Sharun, Mr. Dickson Morris, and Ms Tammy Hodgson. Please join me in welcoming them to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Wetaskiwin-Camrose I'd like to introduce to you and through you a group of students and adults from the Gwynne school, which is in the Wetaskiwin-Camrose riding. There are 25 students and their teachers, Mrs. Char Fraser, Mrs. Kathryn Weremey, and Ms Lisa Roasting, and parent helpers Carol Senz and Terri Pawloske. I'd ask these people to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two parents of children who are autistic, Kierstin Hatt and Eleanor Mui. I would ask that they please rise for the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House an outstanding artist who lives in my constituency – in fact, she lives with me in our home – my wife of 37 years, Rhea Jansen, and her sister who's visiting from Ottawa, Bertha Lesage. I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Nikolai Lubchenko and Don Durocher. Nikolai and Don are Palace Casino workers entering their 248th day on the picket line due in part to this government's failure to protect Alberta workers from unfair employers.

Nikolai was born in Ukraine and came to Canada in 1992. Before coming to Canada, he worked in the research institute in Kiev. He's been working at the Palace Casino since 1999 as a dealer. Nikolai is very involved in the Latin dance community and enjoys getting out with the music and ballroom dancing every opportunity he can get.

Don Durocher has been a worker at the Palace Casino since 1992, shortly after its opening, and has been in the casino industry for over 20 years. Don, a pit boss for 10 years, served in the former Palace Casino Staff Association as president prior to the merger with UFCW. When he's not working, Don loves to sing and dance. He runs a karaoke show out of Calmar every weekend, and people come from miles around to participate in his show. In addition to his singing talents, he has a great enthusiasm for dance as well, and he was formerly a dance instructor.

They're joined by UFCW local 401 representative Don Crisall, and I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, did you have an introduction? Please proceed.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure and honour today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this great Alberta House of democracy Sonia Donaldson. Now, Sonia is the president of ACTRA Edmonton. She's the owner-operator of her own small business, ProSound Productions. She's a Big Sister mentor with Ben Calf Robe school, a tremendous Edmontonian and Albertan. Sonia, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly Mr. Will Broome. Will has a passion for politics, having recently been active in the provincial PC leadership. Before that, he was special assistant to Lee Richardson, MP, Calgary Centre. These days Will focuses his efforts as a public relations consultant in Calgary. He recently joined the Calgary-Glenmore board of directors, and I look forward to working with him. Will is here today in the members' gallery. I would ask for him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Cities of the Future Awards for Edmonton

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to congratulate the city of Edmonton for winning three North American cities of the future awards. The awards were presented by an independent index published by Foreign Direct Investment magazine out of the United Kingdom. The publication listed Edmonton as having the best economic potential of any large North American city between a population of 500,000 and 2 million people.

The strong economic potential combined with a growing infrastructure, high standard of living, cost-effectiveness, and good human resources gave Edmonton the number 4 spot. They also determined that Edmonton is in the top five large cities with the best development and investment promotion. The independent panel of nine judges used seven selection factors in making their decision that included 108 cities with more than 60 criteria used to determine the potential of each city to attract business prospects.

With the Edmonton Economic Development Corporation promoting the city, Edmonton has the distinction of being the only Canadian city to appear on the top-10 large cities list. All of Foreign Direct Investment's 2007 North American cities of the future awards will be displayed in the magazine's April/May issue. I would like everyone to join me in congratulating those who made it possible, including our provincial government, for Edmonton to become a city of the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

1:10 Municipal Safety Award for Slave Lake

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I liked Maya Angelou's statement when she said how important it is to recognize and celebrate our heroes and 'sheroes.' Today I want to identify a few heroes and 'sheroes' from the beautiful constituency of Lesser Slave Lake.

At a time of tremendous growth and industrial activity safety is of utmost importance to the continued quality of life of all Albertans.

The town of Slave Lake has worked and is working hard at being proactive in keeping its residents in the town secure. So it is with great pleasure that I congratulate the town of Slave Lake for being honoured by the Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing for its outstanding safety practices on May 4, 2007, in Banff. Her Worship Karina Pillay-Kinnee, the mayor of Slave Lake, on behalf of the town of Slave Lake accepted the municipal safety award.

Receiving the award is a special honour because it signifies remarkable performance and dedication to safety. Gaining this recognition is no easy task. The municipal safety award is presented annually to municipalities which have reached a five-year accreditation milestone in providing safety code services under the Safety Codes Act. The town of Slave Lake marked its 10-year accreditation anniversary in 2006 and is now being formally recognized. This is a very impressive track record.

I am proud to recognize this important milestone for the 'sheroes' and heroes – Mayor Karina Pillay-Kinnee; councillors Elaine Carmichael, Valerie Tradewell, Laura Ross, George Snider, Rob Irwin, Doug Bolan, and the staff from the town of Slave Lake – and their dedication to ensuring that the safety of its residents is upheld. Keep up the great leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Team Canada World Hockey Champions

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday Canada's men's hockey team did something no team has done since 1937, going 9-0 to win the world hockey championship in Moscow. Alberta's contribution to this championship team was substantial, from star players to role players to behind the scenes. On the roster were Chris Mason from Red Deer, Cam Ward from Sherwood Park, Mike Commodore from Fort Saskatchewan, Jason Chimera from Edmonton, Dion Phaneuf from Edmonton, and an unsung hero of any team, equipment manager Robin McDonald from Didsbury.

Certainly, no Albertan contributed more under trying circumstances than Shane Doan from Halkirk. Doan was the target of a scurrilous attempt at defamation by federal politicians who alleged that Doan uttered anti-French slurs during an NHL game in 2005. The fact that Doan was cleared by the NHL of uttering the slurs and is widely regarded as an upstanding citizen did not deter self-aggrandizing, publicity-seeking federal politicians from dragging his name through the mud to elevate themselves.

No federal party covered themselves in glory in this rush to judgment, not the federal Liberals who joined in the charade, not the federal New Democrats who expressed their usual knee-jerk outrage, not the federal Conservatives who sat back and allowed this sorry spectacle to be played out. Of course, the leaders of this crew were the Bloc Québécois, the merry band of hypocrites who accept their fat federal government paycheques while trying to destroy the federal system that feeds them. Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians hold their politicians in such low regard?

While his name was being sullied for the benefit of cheap headlines, Doan went about his work captaining Team Canada. Happily, Shane Doan gets the last laugh. The ultimate revenge for Doan is the gold medal that he will have in his possession long after the Ottawa politicians who tried to score points at his expense are gone from the scene.

On behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus congratulations to Chris Mason, Cam Ward, Mike Commodore, Jason Chimera, Dion Phaneuf, Robin McDonald, Shane Doan, and all members of Team Canada for their world championship victory. You did yourselves and all Canadians proud even if some politicians in Ottawa did not.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Excellence in Teaching Award for Don Steenwinkel

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to recognize the recipients of the 2007 excellence in teaching awards. For almost 20 years the excellence in teaching awards have recognized the innovative and outstanding teaching that takes place every day across our province. Since its inception in 1989 over 400 teachers have received an excellence in teaching award, and an astounding 7,900 teachers have been nominated. I had the pleasure of attending the awards ceremony on Saturday evening, when the recipients were honoured, and I'm proud to say that one of those recipients is from my constituency.

Don Steenwinkel is presently teaching instrumental music, choral music, and musical theatre at the Leduc composite high school. Don was honoured for his ability to encourage students to be the best that they can be. Over the past 12 years under Don's leadership the music program has doubled, Mr. Speaker, and he has set up a recording studio where students can record their own music. I can personally attest to his qualities as all three of my children have been members of his band. In the words of his students: there is no substitute for the wisdom passed on by Mr. S. and no comparison for the passion with which he teaches.

Don reflects the passion and the commitment of great teachers all across our province. Alberta's teachers do more than instill knowledge and information; they breathe life into the curriculum to ensure that students succeed. Every day Alberta teachers motivate our youth to achieve their individual dreams, dreams which become the foundation of Alberta's future.

The excellence in teaching awards are a wonderful way to say thank you so much. It is an acknowledgement from the teacher's local school, community, and the province that they are held in high esteem for their valued contribution to the lives of their students.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this government and all Albertans I would like to say congratulations to all those teachers who have been recognized through this year's excellence in teaching awards program and to say to them all: thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. The Canada/Alberta agreement signed by this government last week intends to facilitate the entry of foreign immigrant workers even though there is massive evidence that such programs have been abused by some employers in order to keep wages artificially low and to undermine Canadian workers.

While there are thousands of Albertan union members waiting for a well-paid job, this government focuses on bringing cheaper workers for short periods of time. Most temporary workers come in on six-month to one-year visas. They often face language barriers, a lack of proper preparation, and have no access to a social support system. They are very vulnerable because they do not know their rights and do not have access to agencies that can help them when employers might mistreat them. Additionally, they have no mobility, as other Canadians might, since they depend on their employers to stay in the country.

By enhancing a policy of temporary workers, the government prevents many Albertans from receiving skills training and from having access to the jobs that our economy is generating. At the same time, this policy is creating an underclass of workers who live in precarious situations and who are not well protected. This is another example of the lack of long-term planning that characterizes this government. A larger workforce requires more houses, more schools, and more hospitals. Temporary workers live thousands of miles away from their families and are not provided with education or proper living conditions. If there is a labour deficit, it should be solved by promoting higher wages, proper housing, better training, and long-term immigration.

If these workers are good enough to work here, they should also be good enough to stay here as residents of the country, to enjoy the complete protection of federal and provincial laws, to join unions and defend their rights, and to fully develop as part of this community. A policy that pits immigrant workers against Albertans might be made in Alberta, but it is not in the public interest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Team Canada World Hockey Champions

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without political comment I rise today to recognize the 2007 men's world hockey champions, Team Canada. En route to the gold medal Team Canada defeated Germany, Norway, Belarus, Czech Republic, Sweden, Slovakia, and – to the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, if she's here – the United States of America, Switzerland, and finally, Finland. This team was led by general manager Steve Yzerman, coach Andy Murray, and captained by Albertan Shane Doan.

Mr. Speaker, not only a gold medal, but we also have on the world team the most valuable player, Rick Nash, and a two-time gold medal winner from Winnipeg, Jonathan Toews. He played also in the juniors this year, winning the gold.

This is Canada's third gold medal in five years, and this year, 2007, we won the men's gold, women's gold, and the juniors' gold.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition with 93 signatures. The petition calls for province-wide inspections and enforcement of health facilities and urges the government to "immediately establish a public inquiry into the failure of the health . . . system to protect the safety of patients in its care and to provide recommendations to correct the situation."

1:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 35 people asking that remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities be standardized across the sector, regardless of whether the workers are employed by government or by community-based or private providers, that they are fairly compensated and that they remain competitive with other sectors to reflect the valuable and crucial service they provide, that they have professional development opportunities, and that province-wide service and outcomes-focused level-of-care standards are introduced.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair is tabling with the Assembly the report by the Ethics Commissioner into allegations involving hon. members – and I will mention their names because that is title of the text – Ed Stelmach, Premier; David Hancock, Minister of Health and Wellness; and Lyle Oberg, Minister of Finance. The report is dated May 11, 2007, and this report was distributed to all members earlier today.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to table five copies of the program that was part of the excellence in teaching awards on Saturday evening. I would suggest that members take a look at the program because it outlines the 27 recipients and some of the great stories of teaching in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three today. I'm pleased to table responses to the questions raised during the debate of Bill 32, the Animal Health Act.

As well, I am tabling four annual reports for the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council for the years 2003 to 2007 and also the annual report of the Farmers' Advocate of Alberta for the year ended March 31, 2007. This report also includes details for the farm implement compensation fund for the year ended December 31, 2006.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have copies of a rent increase notice that the leader of the third party referenced in his questions Thursday. The notice was given to Jessica Fox and is dated a week after the government announced that it closed the door on rent guidelines. The increase is for $1,200, bringing the total rent for the young family to $1,695.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling two sets of documents. One is an article about ACTRA: ACTRA has taken a lead role in just about every major cultural issue concerning performing arts in Canada.

Another is a letter from Betty Ganert in my constituency about the difficulties in staffing home care in our province and the great problems she has had in gaining consistent home care for her husband, Ernie, who has MS.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today. The first one is from Anna Cooper of Red Deer, in which she is expressing concern that her nephew is going to have his specialized services, funded by Children's Services' family supports for children with disabilities, cut up to 75 per cent "because he failed to demonstrate enough growth to justify the level of service he had." She says that this error needs to be corrected.

The second letter is from Stephen Renaud of Edmonton, and it is concerning a disturbing matter where he believes that the quality of support for our most vulnerable citizens, those with developmental disabilities, needs to receive far more attention.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is the program of Isabella's Renaissance, a wonderful both historic and comedic theatrical treatment of the Italian Renaissance by grades 8 and 9 students of the Calgary Arts Academy, which my wife and I had the pleasure to attend last month at the Vertigo Theatre in Calgary.

My second tabling highlights another in the enjoyable May-long series of ImaginAsian events. String Fever combined the individual talents of Aarti Shankar, Mei Han, Amir Amiri, and Pham Duc Thanh with the multitalents of the Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra this past Friday, May 11, at the Jack Singer.

My third tabling is the Saturday, May 12, program of a marvellous Meals on Wheels dinner and fundraiser with a 1950s theme entitled Cuisine & Concours d'Élégance. Meals on Wheels is celebrating its 42nd year of serving a variety of special Calgarians, from seniors who are able to live independently through the supports provided, to high-needs elementary schools and daily bag lunches for the working poor. Meals on Wheels has raised almost 6 and a half million dollars for their much-needed new facility.

My final tabling is the tag from the tag-a-tree event which began at noon hour in Bragg Creek this past Saturday, May 12, to raise awareness that the clear-cutting in the Kananaskis scheduled to begin next month would have a much more devastating effect on the watershed, the flora and the fauna, and the recreation and tourism than the pine beetle.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter from Kierstin Hatt and Brian Small of Camrose, Kimberly and Brian Hockin of Wetaskiwin, Jody and Tomi Heiskanen of Red Deer, and Eleanor and Andy Mui of Edmonton. These are parents of children with autism. Their letter is to the Minister of Children's Services, presenting evidence of ministry failures to follow regulations and existing procedures within the FSCD program, as adult children with autism are denied treatment that they need and to which they are entitled under the FSCD Act. This also results in enormous additional burden to the families, to say nothing of the waste of ministry resources . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the required five copies of my letter and receipt regarding my donation to the Interfaith Food Bank as per my pledge in the Assembly on April 2. This pledge constitutes half of my indexed pay raise. The Interfaith Food Bank assists 1,400 people every month. I believe that I am making a point in public, not grandstanding.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Calgary Municipal Funding

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has decided to treat the city of Calgary and their duly elected local representatives as children of the province by micromanaging municipal funding. Of course, this is not what the Premier promised during the leadership campaign. The fact is that municipal governments are closest to the people and know what needs to be done in their communities. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us why his government does not trust Calgary city council to make the right decisions?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I just want to point out the fact that this Premier does keep his promises. In fact, during the election campaign I talked about a $1.4 billion fund to go to municipalities. This, of course, is to be based roughly on the amount of money that is paid towards education through property tax. We also fully understood and understand as our caucus that municipalities are facing pressures on a daily basis, just like we are in government, in terms of growth, more people moving into the province. We want to work in partnership with all municipalities to find a way we can distribute these funds and be accountable at the same time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing met with the mayor of Calgary to discuss municipal funding. The minister apparently promised the mayor that he would take to his caucus a proposal to define Calgary as a special municipality and allocate municipal funding on a population model. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: is this minister prepared to grant Calgary the special status that they have proposed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I invited the mayor of Calgary to meet with me if he so desired. The mayor of Calgary accepted that invitation. We had numerous discussions centralizing around funding. I had at that time told the mayor that I would bring his requests and some of his challenges and basically report about the meeting that we did have to caucus, which I did.

Dr. Taft: Okay, Mr. Speaker. Well, a major consideration in the debate over special status for the city of Calgary is of course: what about the city of Edmonton? The city of Edmonton also faces unique challenges and, therefore, would deserve the same consideration as a special municipality. To the Premier: is the Premier prepared to give the city of Edmonton the same consideration as Calgary?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again I think the hon. member has a few so-called facts mixed up. There are many municipalities that are looking at what is the most equitable way of allocating funds from the $1.4 billion. He's saying that the city of Calgary is talking about population base. Actually, that's not true. All I know from previous history, and Alberta history at least, is that there was one special municipality – and that still holds – and I believe it's the county of Strathcona that participates both in the AUMA and the AAMD and C. But this is an issue of the best way to try to allocate the $1.4 billion.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Temporary Rent Regulation

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government doesn't want to be seen to be flip-flopping on the need for temporary rent regulations, so they're tying themselves in knots, creating among other things a new landlord/tenant body that will attempt, rather feebly I am sure, to do what rent regulations could have done simply and effectively. To the Premier: can the Premier explain specifically how the mandate of the new landlord/tenant body announced by the President of the Treasury Board is supposed to mesh with the existing residential tenancies advisory committee and with the existing tenancy dispute resolution mechanism? It's quite a dog's breakfast, isn't it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think that the only person that was in knots last Thursday was the Leader of the Opposition.

Quite frankly, the ministers are being proactive, looking at different ways of bringing in landlords and seeing how we can work through this particular situation. For the second question the minister responsible will respond.

Dr. Taft: Which minister would that be?

Instead of establishing temporary rent regulations for existing buildings, this government is proposing to shame landlords through a public website. Responsible, competent governments set policy and enforce it. They don't attempt to punish behaviour that they continue on the other hand to defend as perfectly legal. To the Premier: can the Premier tell us what legislative authority the rent fairness standards will have and whether it's appropriate to publicly expose or shame landlords for doing what this government maintains is perfectly legal?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the advisory board was created back in 2003, so unless there are ministerial powers that I didn't know about, that they could think that's right, they've been there offering positive suggestions to the government for years. They are actually proactive in trying to come up with solutions that work, rather than simply hiding behind the fact that unless we have rent control, nothing will work. These are a group of dedicated Albertans who have asked to sit down and talk about how they can best work together to solve the problem we're facing, not into grandstanding with different individuals here.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among those dedicated Albertans are a number of housing experts in particular communities, including, for example, places like Red Deer, who have already commented that the government's new scheme would not be effective in their communities. To the Premier: what is the Premier prepared to do to prevent rent gouging in the communities where the proposed mechanisms clearly won't work even as admitted by the members the Treasury president just referred to?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, to suggest that this new body or that we have come up with new schemes is simply irresponsible. We have asked to sit down with them, and they have asked to sit with us and look at if collectively we can come up with some solutions to these problems. So to prejudge or presuppose what they might suggest to us is simply reading their own press releases and coming to the conclusion of what might happen. I think it's laudable that this group is willing to come forward and actually work to help some of these people who need our help in the difficult times that we all face, not this kind of help that they're offering.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Media Access to Premier's Office

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Accounts have surfaced recently of the Premier's office attempting to muzzle and intimidate members of the provincial media on their coverage of the affordable housing crisis. For example, one reporter from a major news organization was denied access to an interview with this Premier due to the critical budget coverage that was deemed, quote: a betrayal to the government. My question to the Premier: is it the Premier's policy to award favourable reporting with access and to freeze out those who point out that this government continues to stumble?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I would think that reporting in the newspapers and in the television media would be fair and recognize, of course, at some point the good strengths of our government and maybe even look at those areas where we need improvement. So I don't know what the leader is getting at here.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, thousands of Albertans rely on the provincial media as their source of information on affordable housing. These Albertans would surely be concerned to know the facts: that there have been widespread reports of the Premier's office intimidating reporters over critical coverage on the government's handling of this crisis. Will the Premier admit that in refusing media access because reporters may criticize this government's performance, he is breaking his promise of governing with integrity and transparency?

Mr. Stelmach: You know, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's ever a Legislative Assembly that the media – and the media is watching over there; they're watching these questions here – is going to the Leader of the Opposition to say that the media has been treated unfairly. So I suppose that you're supporting a hundred per cent what the media has been saying. Guess what? The answer will be yes. I can hear it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks. I'm glad we can get the Premier in giggles. The fact is, if the media can't report on the unfavourable record of this government, there won't be much left for them to report on.

Given the Premier's giggles on this question, to the Premier: does this mean that the Premier has his communication staff implementing a policy on muzzling reporters that he knows nothing about?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's well known that as Premier I have numerous media availabilities. Most of the time here in the House, the media availability, the two opposition leaders are there. I answer the questions that are given to me. I do media scrums. We interviewed, in fact, over the weekend. Last week I don't know how many times, so I don't know what the leader is getting at. If there is a specific concern, you know, you've got the protection of the House. Bring the name forward of this so-called media person. Don't hide it. You want to be open and transparent? Just tell me: who are you talking about? It might be based all the way back in those secret deals that you were supposed to give us about – what? – three months ago.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Federal/Provincial Fiscal Relations

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Alberta Premiers have established a long tradition of standing up to Ottawa to protect Alberta's oil and gas resources. [interjections] Wait for it. From the days of Peter Lougheed Albertans could count on a vigorous defence of Alberta's economic golden goose. Not anymore, Mr. Speaker, not anymore. The current Premier has been standing by while Ottawa has been helping itself to our birthright, first by cutting capital costs allowance and then by a carbon tax on Alberta resources. Not a peep of protest from you, Mr. Premier. Why not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, his caucus are the ones that are supporting capital costs allowance because they want to slow down the growth. We've been talking about it the last three months in this House. Make up your mind: do you want it to go or to reduce?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. A very serious matter, Mr. Speaker. There's a long tradition in this province of Premiers standing up to Ottawa. This Premier has failed to do it. Perhaps it's because of his federal cousins being in the shop, but his finance minister made a statement last week to Bay Street who used the federal cash grab as an excuse for potentially not raising our royalties. Is that a deliberate policy on the part of this government to let the federal government help themselves so that we don't have to raise royalties ourselves?

1:40

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in the last five months we've accomplished a number of things with the federal government. The first time in a long, long time being recognized as Canadians, meaning that equal per capita funding, finally, for all of the social transfers. That's phenomenal. That's phenomenal.

Last week we signed an immigration agreement with the federal government. It's only the second time in history. The first one was to Quebec a number of years ago, the second one here in the province of Alberta. That is outstanding, and that just shows the kind of co-operation.

With respect to the issues tied with transfers of wealth in this province, Mr. Speaker, we took a very firm stand in this Assembly. We said that any transfers for greenhouse credits will stay in Alberta to be invested in the province of Alberta. Period.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we need no evidence that this government is very cosy with their cousins in Ottawa.

Current royalty rates were set in the day of $15 a barrel of oil. Now it's $60 and going up. We're still collecting only 1 cent on the dollar for most tar sands production, Mr. Speaker. The rest goes to big oil or to the federal government. To the Premier: why doesn't he stand up for Albertans? Why is he selling us out?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, some of the information that the hon. member has given is not true. With respect to the 1 per cent there are different stages in terms of royalty paid to the province. However, what we are doing is thoroughly reviewing the royalty regime, both for oil sands, conventional oil and gas, and also coal-bed methane. That information will be presented to the public sometime towards the end of August. All Albertans will have a look at the information and determine if we're getting a fair return.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many families and communities are having a difficult time making ends meet, and the direction and the policy of this government are making it tougher. Premier Klein always said that the only way taxes are going in Alberta is down, though his actions were many times different. This government continues to increase family taxes each year through market value assessment on unrealized gain on their property. To add insult to injury, this government is now through conditional funding forcing municipalities to consider new taxes to sustain their communities. My question is to the Premier. Albertans want to know this government's policy on taxes. Which direction are they going to go: up or down?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as evidenced in this budget, taxes are going down, and the Minister of Finance may give further detail to that.

Mr. Hinman: Well, we're talking real taxes, not the numbers.

Mr. Speaker, conditional funding policy is affecting more than just the municipality of Calgary. Municipal leaders were anxiously awaiting additional funding from municipal sustainability initiatives, only to be bitterly disappointed to find that this government had been misleading them all along, thinking that this was unconditional funding. My question again to the Premier: did the government use conditional funding for municipalities because they know the needs of communities better than local elected people, or does this government just think municipal leaders are incompetent?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, sometimes it's really difficult to find a way of allocating new money to municipalities. We recognize that there are so many differences amongst municipalities based on assessment levels, based on needs, based on kilometres of roads, and some of the social issues in various municipalities. We're looking at addressing those, but at the end of the day the money is being transferred from the global taxpayer to the municipalities. As the Legislature we have to be accountable. We are looking at what we can put in place, in agreement, so that when the money is transferred to municipalities, we can be accountable to this House.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, they're addressing local needs and missing out the rest of the province.

The Canadian Taxpayers Federation gave our Premier's leadership campaign a generous D plus, the lowest mark given to our leadership candidates. Now with the budget and the talk of implementing new municipal taxes, an F for failure will be more in order. This budget and the Premier's policy on conditional funding is an attack on our families and their communities. This is a blatant case of he who has the gold makes the rules. Again to the Premier: will you do the right thing for our families and our communities and renounce the new taxes being discussed with municipalities and remove the conditional funding to municipalities?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, just for the purpose of those people watching and listening, the municipal sustainability initiative, the report, is the report given to us by municipalities. The municipalities collectively, AUMA, AAMD and C, and the two city mayors have a number of proposals. I believe five of their recommendations are to look at ways of us giving the municipalities the power to tax certain things. It's not coming from the government. It's in our hands today to fully discuss. The minister responsible for municipal affairs will take that back to municipalities to have a look at and again chat with municipalities. But in light of the fact that we're giving new funding, a lot of those tax powers may not be necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Capital Region Municipal Planning

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All my questions are to the Premier. The city of Edmonton and its regional partners are smack in the middle of the unprecedented growth pressures Alberta is facing. The sheer scope of all the development has the potential to cause major problems across many sectors if planned wrong. What is obvious is a need to plan for future growth potential in the capital region in a co-ordinated manner. The capital region tried but failed, and the province has been silent. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us why the government refuses to establish a regional planning mechanism for high-growth areas that has the authority to make binding decisions?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the government through the ministers responsible, but especially the minister of municipal affairs, has been meeting with the municipalities. I can assure you that ACRA, the Alberta Capital Region Alliance, has shown great leadership in years past in terms of sharing all of the ideas and thoughts on how to get the best value for the infrastructure. That's one of the reasons why the city of Edmonton and the communities around saw the Anthony Henday expedited, the number of bridges that were built. This all came as a result of co-operation amongst all of the municipalities, that they should be congratulated for.

Mr. Bonko: The current planning system that serves a million residents of the capital region allows discussions to be made in isolation, with 23 approaches to every question that only adds mass confusion. Apparently, the provincial government believes that this is the way to plan. A new report by the Northeast Capital Industrial Association states that the position that the city of Edmonton is pushing for for mandatory regional planning is wrong. The report advocates voluntary co-operation in the regional planning, but the mayor says, you know: "It just isn't working. The municipalities have tried, and it's just not working." So to the Premier: can the Premier tell us if he agrees with the report of the Northeast Capital Industrial Association and if he refuses to support the city of Edmonton's call for regional mandatory planning? Who are you backing, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in this particular area of unprecedented growth, especially in the areas around the industrial heartland, we're going to require not only planning in terms of the province sitting down with all of the municipalities but also intermunicipal because there are issues tied to roads, bridges, as well as where the new housing initiatives will occur. I'm confident that the municipalities are working towards this goal. Of course, it will be further expedited by the minister of municipal affairs, who is getting all of the municipalities together. He'll be present to put something down on paper, a direction we can take over the next few months.

Mr. Bonko: There's no disputing the mounting evidence that the long-term future potential of the capital region is jeopardized by the lack of regional co-ordination. The government's own Radke report, the Percy report, and the 50-year-old McNally royal commission all call for regional co-ordination. Public opinion states that 89 per cent of the capital residents want more regional co-operation, yet when regional planning for the capital region gets to Executive Council for discussion, it disappears. Someone doesn't want the discussion to take place. Will the Premier inform us who in his government is blocking regional planning for the capital region?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, you can see how they try to sit on both sides of the fence in terms of the opposition. First of all, they're arguing the fact that we shouldn't have any accountability for the dollars that are going to municipalities in terms of regional co-ordination, regional planning. That's a no-no. We shouldn't be going that. Yet, on the other hand, they flip-flop the other way and say: well, you should do something. Well, we are. We're putting money on the table, creating incentives for municipalities to get together and do long-range planning. What better plan than that can you put together? It's a great incentive.

Electric System Operator Review

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that it's been announced that the Market Surveillance Administrator is reviewing the practices of the Alberta Electric System Operator. My questions today are for the Minister of Energy. Can he inform this House exactly what this review is about?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's the AESO's responsibility to provide safe, reliable, and economic planning and operation of our electricity system. Part of this involves a purchase of ancillary, or backup, power services, which act as an insurance policy at all times to ensure system reliability. As part of the AESO's ongoing review of practices, certain activities related to the transactions were identified as unsuitable and were immediately stopped. As the body established to ensure fairness and open competition in the market, I look forward to the MSA's findings in this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can he inform this House as to what steps he has taken to address this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once this issue was brought to my attention, I asked the department to consult with the AESO and ensure that appropriate steps were being taken. Since then AESO has conducted an internal review of all their purchase practices and introduced new training processes. The AESO also forwarded this matter to the Market Surveillance Administrator for review. The MSA has legislated authority to investigate and take appropriate action into matters such as this. The system and its checks and balances have worked as they should.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the same minister. I know that my constituents will be wondering how this affected them. Can the minister inform us: are consumers affected by these practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, I've been assured by the AESO that there is absolutely no evidence that would indicate that consumers were affected in any way. There's also no evidence of any personal impropriety or personal gain by AESO's employees or that of AESO itself, since it's a not-for-profit group. In the spirit of openness and accountability, it's important to allow the MSA to conduct its independent and external review, the results of which will be made public. Appropriate responses have been taken to date, and any additional steps recommended by the MSA will be addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Support for Families with Autistic Children

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Autism spectrum disorder places a substantial burden on families with children affected by it. In Alberta these families have been pushed to the breaking point by the process in place for assessing the eligibility of autistic children for specialized treatment. Every single year parents must travel often far distances to prove that their children are indeed deserving of treatment. Local multidisciplinary team processes are family-centred and meet the requirements of the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. To the Minister of Children's Services: will your department ensure that families can engage in the multidisciplinary team, MDT, process with professionals in their own communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I want to say is that we understand in Children's Services that raising a child with a disability can be very challenging. I'm really proud to be part of a government that believes that these families deserve our support and our help. I'd also like to point out that the Alberta family support for children with disabilities program is unique in Canada, and in my short time here I've heard that from people right across this country. So just to start with those comments.

With respect to the eligibility process regarding autism, I will get back to you with more information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have heard several complaints from families that are seeking funding for relationship development interventions. They're very concerned because department regulations are not being followed, and they feel they have been forced into unnecessary and expensive appeal processes. To the Minister of Children's Services: if your department has agreed to fund RDI for one child, why is it later forcing some parents into painful appeal processes to demonstrate that RDI meets FSCD regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding with respect to autism is that the multidisciplinary teams provide expertise. They try to determine a child's needs in order to provide the level required. So I do know that we are looking at different delivery of services for the spectrum of autism. Once again, I will get you more information on the eligibility process and get more details for you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I emphasize the need for local input. Two parents have made the trip to Edmonton again today to seek a fair resolution for their particular situations. Their children cannot go without needed treatment any longer. These parents have brought with them substantial documentation of instances where ministry staff have failed to follow department regulations and procedures. To the Minister of Children's Services: the concerns of these parents are reflective of larger problems with the way this department treats people and families with autistic children. Will you agree to meet with these parents today and to hear first-hand how abusive the MDT appeal process can be?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will say is if you could please ask those individuals to forward the documentation to me, I will take a look at it as well as follow up and get that information I told you earlier.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When demand outstrips the supply costs and prices rise, government needs to help the increase of supply to dampen the rising costs and prices. With the tremendous growth in Calgary and everywhere in Alberta the demand for human resources has outstripped the supply. Given that last Friday, May 11, in Calgary our Premier and our Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry signed an Alberta/Canada immigration agreement, my question today is to the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Minister, what does this agreement mean, and how does it affect Alberta businesses?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it was a great pleasure to have the Member for Calgary-Fort and the Member for Calgary-Lougheed in attendance while we signed the agreement. It will put the right person with the right skills and the right supports in place. We have labour shortages in Alberta. That is acknowledged. This agreement, a made-in-Alberta solution, expands our efforts during the provincial nominee program and gives us an opportunity to do more consultative work with the federal government in marketing, in other points where people might be considering Alberta. It adds resources. It puts in place additional supports for integrated settlement services that will be unique to Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. It's great news for businesses.

To the same minister: what does this agreement mean to the employees? How does it ensure priority employment to our local Albertans and our work safety standards?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, before foreign workers can be retained for employment in Alberta, it's necessary for the company or the corporation in question to illustrate that they are not able to fill that job with an Albertan. That is the first part of the labour market opinion.

The temporary foreign worker, Mr. Speaker, is also subject to the same capacities, the same rules and regulations that are applied to everybody else in terms of occupational health and safety and has the same rights and privileges. It gives an opportunity for that foreign worker to fill a much-needed position, especially where we have situations which haven't been filled by other people here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you. That's great.

To the same minister: given that the Canada/Alberta immigration agreement has been signed, when can employers expect its implementation and the processes for them to follow?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there is certainly going to be more interest in the provincial nominee program. As an example, that program will give an opportunity over the next 15 to 18 months to increase significantly the numbers of academic and skilled workers. The federal government has agreed to contact anybody that has indicated a desire to work as a physician, as a nurse, as a pharmacist, or as a physiotherapist. They will contact them by letter, find out if they're interested in being in receipt of a job opportunity, and with that particular pilot project it will give us an opportunity to encourage more people. Provincial nominee numbers will go up. We will be continuing to work on the annex to the agreement on the temporary foreign workers side so that employers will be abundantly clear on all of the things they must do to make it comfortable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

2:00 Safety of Temporary Foreign Workers

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. News reports over this weekend confirmed that yet another tank has collapsed at the Canadian Natural Resources Horizon oil sands project. Fortunately, no one was injured this time, but the collapse of two tanks in such a short period of time suggests that safety standards are being ignored. Unions on the site have confirmed these fears, and there's reason to believe that yet a third tank is on the verge of collapse. The Horizon site must be shut down until the Chinese contractor building the tanks adheres to Alberta safety standards. My questions are to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Surely there's enough evidence to indicate that workers' safety on the Horizon site is at risk. Will you act quickly to protect Alberta's workers and halt construction on this site?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, in actual fact, there is a stop-work order on this site. The investigative team has been there. Occupational Health and Safety has hired an engineering company to consult about whether or not the previous terrible and tragic accident was the result of one factor or another, either environmental or engineering standards. They'll look at the full gamut. Very fortunately, there was nobody on the site when the tank collapsed on the weekend. So we already have a stop-work order, and at this present time until we are satisfied and the inspectors are satisfied that safety is prevalent, that it's been addressed, we will not open . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, this contractor, actually, is slated to build between 10 and 12 more of these huge tanks. Without intervention on the part of the government this contractor can continue to build the remaining tanks with the same design, construction principles, materials, and work crews. So to the same minister: will you shut down this construction site until we can prove that no more workers will be injured by faulty design?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm rather confused because I did just say that there is no work going on on that site, and until we know exactly why there's been a problem, then I don't think that we will be reinstating work. So we have to find out that information before anything starts again. I think we're doing exactly what the hon. member is asking.

Dr. B. Miller: What about the other 10 or 12 tanks in the future?

Anyway, the situation at the Horizon site, which last month saw the deaths of two temporary foreign workers, raises all sorts of questions about the provincial program to bring temporary foreign workers here. More recently I have heard from other workers in this program who have been subjected to abuse by their employers and recruiting firms. Many workers come here to Edmonton only to discover that the jobs that were promised no longer exist. To the same minister: given that the temporary foreign worker program forms a very large part of your ministry's made-in-Alberta immigration strategy, how can you refuse to take responsibility for the treatment of these vulnerable workers, who are in our province at your request? Why is it that the Alberta Federation of Labour sets up an advocacy office, and your government . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, people who come under the temporary foreign worker program come because there's not a worker from Alberta to work there. They've already exhausted that supply. The company, in actual fact, applies to the federal government. A labour market opinion is done.

Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned about the safety of all workers. Whether they're temporary foreign workers or permanent Alberta residents, if they're working on a job site, we're vitally concerned. We are no less concerned about people who come as temporary workers than absolutely anybody else.

Mr. Speaker, we look forward to getting further reports. The hon. member has alleged that this program opens the doors for people to be poorly treated. May I please state . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Affordable Housing Solutions

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative government's housing policy shows a total lack of compassion for renters. It's disorganized, and it's leading to chaos, and that sums up a good day for this government and its housing policy. In the wee hours of Thursday morning the Minister of Service Alberta concocted some sort of toothless tribunal rather than come up with good policies that stop the abuse of renters in the first place. My question is to that minister. How will this rent review panel, dreamed up by the minister when he was asleep, stop renters from being gouged?

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, probably if I had enough time here to think up a bunch of goofy suggestions, I could put them in a book and sell them. Oh, but that's been done. Sorry.

Mr. Speaker, this advisory board was created in 2003. They're a group of people involved in both sectors of the industry that are willing to come forward and help the government and all the departments of the government come up with real solutions to real problems involving real people, not some hypothetical namby-pamby that the NDs think will be the solution. It's really simple. We are proactive. We are looking for innovation, and we are looking for industry involvement.

Mr. Martin: I feel hurt being called namby-pamby – namby-pamby – and all these quotes from the minister. That's what you're going to send out, I take it, Mr. Minister.

The bottom line is that we should have got through over many hours to this minister that renters are being hurt now, that they are being gouged, and that this particular tribunal has no teeth at all. So my question is to the minister. How is it going to work to protect renters from being gouged? Tell us how?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I feel that it's somewhat like an old Johnny Carson show here, where they know the answer before we put the question. We've got opposition members that accuse ministers, that haven't even set up a program yet, of giving it to top Tories. We've got the NDs telling us what this board is going to do before we've ever even met with them. We're going to sit down with them and ask them what they can offer. Is it your point that we shouldn't meet with these groups, that it doesn't matter what they say?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Minister, it should have even crossed over into this side of the bench that we have been offering alternatives. There's a simple one that we've tried to get through to this minister. Rent guidelines work in other provinces. What you could do with the board is that if they had extra costs, whether it be utilities or maintenance or security or whatever, have them come to the board and ask to pass it on then. This is my question to the minister: why won't the minister do the commonsense thing and do that instead of this namby-pamby thing that he's doing?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to quote, and I'll table this document when we're done, from the Concise Encyclopedia of Economics. "Economists are virtually unanimous," now, only 98 per cent of them, ". . . that rent controls are destructive." It's all backed up. It simply doesn't work. You can live in the past and pretend. The fact is that in the short term it might make you feel good, but in the long run it just takes longer to create the spaces that we need to put these people in. So please try to come up with something new or, maybe, meet with the group that actually knows what they're talking about, like I'm going to do this afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Calgary Municipal Funding (continued)

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing met this morning with the mayor of the city of Calgary. The mayor has expressed concerns in recent weeks over conditions attached to the funding under the municipal sustainability initiative. To the minister: have the conditions been altered or removed so that Calgary can get on with its life?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The conditions as stated by the hon. member have remained in place for this year. In our discussions about the conditions and their focuses I believe that the Calgary mayor understands better the flexibility that can take place. I have committed to the mayor to write not only to him but the rest of the municipalities throughout Alberta to maybe better describe some of the possibilities of the flexibility and to clarify the guidelines that are in question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the economy remains strong, the city of Calgary may grow by another 300,000 people over the next 10 years, so it's very critical that the government commit to a long-term funding arrangement that will allow the city of Calgary to plan around priority infrastructure projects in anticipation of this growth. To the same minister: what long-term funding commitments can the government give the mayor?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in our Committee of Supply we have been discussing the budget. This year – I believe that adds sustainability to the budget – we have presented $400 million for the sustainability of municipalities. Next year it'll be at $500 million. The year after that it will be at $600 million. I've always said that that formula is for this year. We are going to consult with municipalities, with the association, with the minister's council and look at how that money should be distributed to municipalities, having their input, making sure that the flexibility addresses the needs of sustainability and predictability.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, the engineering of the west leg of the LRT is substantially complete. The mayor has said that Calgary cannot proceed because of the perceived strings to the municipal sustainability initiative. Did your meeting this morning clear up, remove any barriers to this project moving forward in the city of Calgary?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I recognize the need not only by Calgary but by other municipalities for stability and predictability. Also, we need to look at accountability. Our discussions this morning very much revolved around the city of Calgary having some assurance that there will be funding in the future. It would not be, if I can say, responsible of myself if I tried to predict from year four to year 10, but I can say that in the three-year plan we do have money, as I stated before, and at that time we're asking the chair of the Calgary caucus to meet with the Calgary council to discuss some of those . . .

The Speaker: And we'll hear from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Long-term Care Funding

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Accessible home care programs are needed to ensure that seniors can remain in their homes and communities while getting the quality care that they need. It has been estimated that in 10 years 15 per cent of Alberta's population will be seniors. My question is to the minister of health. In the 2003 first ministers' health accord Alberta agreed to make home care a priority initiative in our province. Years later home care is understaffed, underfunded, and underrecognized as an essential part of the health care field. Does the failure to follow through on the goals of the Canadian health accord represent yet just another promise?

Mr. Hancock: Well, no, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member would know, because she's been part of the process, that there's been a considerable review of standards of care and the provision of long-term care in the province and that the government has moved to implement the standards of care and to ensure that there's training and accreditation for workers in the area. Yes, we still have a lot of work to do in terms of being able to attract the workers that we need, but that's not exclusive to the health field or the long-term care field. That's an issue right across the province, and we've been working very closely with the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry on that issue. But this is very much a high priority.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that answer. Again we're into this business of continuing care, long-term care, et cetera. What has the minister done to improve home care and really prove that home care is a priority for this government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, I've met with, I think, most of the organizations active in the province – organizations representing seniors, organizations representing the home care association, the long-term care association, and others – to make sure that I was fully up to speed with respect to the various perspectives of all of them, and I'll be working carefully with the health authorities and with the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports as we go forward to make sure that we have that continuum of care that's necessary so that seniors can choose where they live and have the necessary health support to do so.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that answer. I'm delighted that you're speaking with the health authorities, and hopefully they were all at the same table to hear the same message.

My next question would be to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. An estimated 90 per cent of home care is provided by nonprofessionals, creating immense physical and emotional pressures for families. Professional home care services would relieve this burden and assist people in need of care to remain in their homes instead of being confined to hospitals, yet the level of support given to home care by the government doesn't suggest that this important service is a priority.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the member, having worked on the continuing care standards, would and should re-emphasize that home care is one of the very, I think, long-term opportunities that we ought to continue to support and pursue. Those types of options that we have from Alberta Aids to Daily Living are part of the pieces to the puzzle. Also, working with health and ensuring that the staffing and support services could be there in their own homes is an outstanding direction that we want to continue to pursue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Community Initiatives Program

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of the volunteers and nonprofit organizations in my constituency are very concerned by the criticisms of unmatched grants to the community initiatives program. Some of these organizations would not be able to carry out the good work they do in our community if they're required to match the funding required through the grants. They simply can't raise enough funding for all their projects. When the Medicine Hat Volunteerism in Action Association needed funding for worthy projects, they were able to get support through your CIP program. My first question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Can the minister provide these groups with some assurance that nonmatching grants will still be considered for community projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member highlights an excellent example of one of the very important community projects that received nonmatching funding through the community initiatives program. My department has just completed a review of all the projects that received grants valued at more than $10,000 without matching funds. I can say that all of the projects involve good community initiatives, dedicated volunteers, and eligible nonprofit organizations. In several cases the CIP funding made it possible for these organizations to get through temporary setbacks and get back on a solid foundation. I believe that these grants should continue to be available to support worthy community projects even if . . .

The Speaker: We'll ask the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Did your review of the grants turn up projects that shouldn't have received funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The short answer to that question is no. No rules were broken. The guidelines were followed in every case. The organizations were eligible to apply for funding. Their applications met the requirements, and they made a good case for the funding they received for their community projects. To this end I will be tabling the existing guidelines for the CIP programs and a summary of the projects that were approved for unmatched funding over $10,000.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Can the minister tell this House what he's doing to improve communications and transparency around lottery funding programs so that everyone – everyone – will have the same understanding of these guidelines?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before, the information regarding grant recipients and the funding they receive is already available on the Alberta lottery fund website. The guidelines I'm tabling today reflect the requirements and process for the review and approval of grants.

Moving forward, our department plans to certainly increase our communications about lottery grants and recipients to the public and the Legislature on a more regular basis. We are also consulting with the Auditor General on the guidelines as a matter of course, and we'll continue to do that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 84 questions and answers today.

We have one unfinished matter of business. Hon. President of the Treasury Board, you have sufficient copies of the document that you wish to table to wrap that up today?

Mr. Snelgrove: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I do: five copies from the Concise Encyclopedia of Economics.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

FOIP Requests

Q12. Mr. R. Miller:
For each of the fiscal years 2001-2002 through 2005-2006 what percentage of requests for information under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act were met within 30 days of the initial request?

Resource Rebate Program

Q13. Mr. R. Miller:
As of April 11, 2007, what is the total cost of efforts to recover cheques that were sent to people who did not qualify for the Alberta 2005 resource rebate program?

Resource Rebate Program

Q14. Mr. R. Miller:
What was the total cost associated with administering the Alberta 2005 resource rebate program?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the balance of questions appearing on the Order Paper stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: 2:20 Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Wednesday, May 9, motions for returns 5 and 6 will be dealt with today. The remaining motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper will stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

Mountain Pine Beetle

M5. Mr. Bonko proposed that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including studies, reports, and environmental or economical impact assessments, relating to the effects of the presence of mountain pine beetles in Alberta forests from fiscal years 2002-2003 through 2006-2007.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am rejecting Motion for a Return 5, concerning documentation relating to the mountain pine beetle. The difficulty is that the request was for all documents – all documents – over a four-year period relating to the effects of the presence of mountain pine beetle in Alberta forests since 2002. The request is simply too broad, as there are numerous documents, studies, reports related to the presence of mountain pine beetle in our forests. We can only provide those documents that are available to us.

I appreciate that many Albertans seek more information about mountain pine beetle and our action plan, and I share their interest in making this information public, but it only makes sense to provide documents that were used in my department to shape our mountain pine beetle plan. Fourteen public documents and studies available to Sustainable Resource Development were referenced and billed in our action plan. I will table a list of those 14 public documents in the Legislature with details about where they can be accessed. That list will be tabled tomorrow.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others?

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, then, to close debate?

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not surprising. I'm a little disappointed, considering it has been declared a state of emergency. If the minister felt that the piece of information I was looking for was a little bit too broad, perhaps he could have made an amendment allowing myself and Albertans to have some more pertinent information, then.

[Motion for a Return 5 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Foster Parent Campaign

M6. Mrs. Mather proposed that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a detailed breakdown of all expenses relating to advertising and promotional campaigns encouraging Albertans to become foster parents in each of the fiscal years 2002-2003 through 2006-2007.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Foster care in Alberta is under significant pressure on a number of different fronts. Lack of adequate funding for social workers negatively affects recruitment and retention and puts additional strain on the staff monitoring and assisting foster homes. The shortage of available foster families leads to overloading and hotel stays, puts additional strain on a system that is already stretched. This is an unsustainable solution that makes it more and more difficult to protect Alberta's most vulnerable citizens. We are hearing about cases where foster children are either being placed in families that are overloaded or being housed in a hotel while waiting for a foster family who can take them in. This is a clear sign that the system as it stands is unsustainable.

In the past year 19 children have suffered an injury that resulted in hospitalization or death while receiving protective services, and the percentage of aboriginal children in care who suffered injury resulting in hospitalization or death has doubled. One death is too many. There's a clear need for immediate action to protect Alberta's children. I'm sure that most foster families in the province are doing great work, but we need to have consistent monitoring and better support for foster parents to ensure the safety of children in care. If the government can't accomplish this, even more children will slip through the cracks, and this is unacceptable.

We need to encourage fostering by families. The fostering process can be very upsetting for the child, and being suddenly moved from home to home can cause emotional trauma for the children we are trying to protect. We should have policies in place to ensure that the transition to a new home is as smooth as possible. This also includes addressing the critical shortage of foster homes that we have.

The recent budget included an increase of $7 million for foster care, which is earmarked for training and recruitment of foster families. This funding is desperately needed, and I'm really happy to see that increase, but the number of foster families in Alberta is decreasing in the capital region and across the province. There were about 850 families in the Edmonton area last year, but the total dropped by 12 per cent to around 750 families this year, and the downward trend has existed for the past five years.

The Children's Services' business plan 2001-2005 shows that the shortage of foster families has been identified and recognized by this government for years. It's crucial that we have a plan to do everything that we possibly can to encourage more families to become foster families. This motion is to look at what we have actually done in terms of advertising and promotion so that we can make a decision to do even better so that more families will feel that they do have the support they need if they take this important step.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Motion for a Return 6. First, I'd like to thank the member for her concern about foster homes in our province, and I can assure her that I share this very same concern in this area. Recruiting new foster parents and caregivers for children in government care is an integral part of our business at Children's Services. In fact, it's built into so many of our larger initiatives.

At Children's Services foster parent recruitment is a collaborative effort between the department, our child and family services authorities, delegated First Nation agencies, the Alberta Foster Parent Association, 24 regional foster parent associations, and a number of contracted agencies. All these agencies are required to recruit foster parents as part of their contracts and work tirelessly to ensure that children in government care have a safe, family-based setting where they can go in times of need.

We do not track foster care recruitment, including promotional campaign material, separately, on its own budget item, because it's considered an integral program activity as opposed to a stand-alone activity. Therefore, determining a figure for total dedicated expenditures for foster parent recruitment is not possible given the collaborative and the integrated nature of recruitment activities across Alberta.

Although figures for foster parent recruitment expenditures for the requested time periods are unavailable, I can inform the Assembly that this year we'll be investing $650,000 in addition to our regular contracts to recruit more foster parents and aboriginal caregivers for children in government care.

Given that accurate figures for foster parent recruitment expenditures in the requested time periods are unavailable, I recommend that Motion for a Return 6 be rejected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We often talk of family as a pillar of society, and so it is, but families the way we usually use the term are simply biological bonds, and looking out for one's clan or next of kin can be seen simply as a matter of self-interest. Those who foster take kinship to another level of inclusiveness, that is the bedrock of civilization, another way of relating to each other: to take on care for community.

The Speech from the Throne set the quality of life as one of the government's objectives for Alberta. That is a welcome balance to the preoccupation with economic development that has driven public policy for the past decade. A nurturing quality is one of the things that is needed to make a physical house a home. This is found not primarily in putting up big facilities and funding programs and having more agencies but in the simple gifts of life that we offer each other.

We hear a lot of praise of family values in Alberta. Often these words are spoken by those who fear for their own families and feel that they'll be adversely affected by someone else's choices. We hear much in support of children and their right to security, love, and a good start in life. Words can be inspirational, but they're not enough.

I know the challenges of adoption. I respect those who face these challenges not just once but in succession with different children. Foster care goes beyond providing the basic necessities of life. The word "foster" is usually used as an adjective. It is also a verb, a word that describes an action or a state of being. To foster is to encourage qualities, to nurture our humanity, to offer the gifts of life that we all deserve simply by being alive.

So when we look at what we're doing in Alberta, I'm glad to hear that it is a priority and that we're looking at ways that we can encourage more parents to foster. I think this is such a huge issue that I can't stress enough, so I'm going to use some words that were written by a foster child, a 16-year-old girl. She began:

Happy are those children that have railroads in the hall
Painting in the kitchen and stories when they're small.

And she ends:

Sometimes kids are fortunate, and people can be found
To foster them and care for them and always be around
All these people ever ask is just a chance to share
With all the kids who need it, their Castles in the Air.

So I urge our Children's Services ministry to do all that is possible to promote that fostering and support fostering once we do have foster families in place.

Second Reading

Bill 207
Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act

[Debate adjourned May 7: Mrs. Jablonski speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to once again join the discussion on Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, 2007. Once again, I also wish to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for furthering discussion on this topic as I feel that this is a subject most worthy of attention. Our children are Alberta's most precious resource, and it remains a priority of this government to address the well-being of our young people.

While increasing spaces and improving access are key initiatives being undertaken by the government, we are always seeking to not only improve quantity in terms of child care spaces but also to improve the quality of the spaces that are provided. As the first piece of legislation in Alberta to focus entirely on child care, Bill 4 aims to create new licensing categories that will generate more options for parents, especially in rural areas. It will provide for more effective monitoring to ensure that operators are in compliance with the act, and it will reward excellence by allowing child care operators to obtain a multiyear licence. By reducing the time and effort child care operators spend on paperwork, this government will enable those operators to put more effort into providing quality child care.

With Bill 4 this government is following through on a commitment to Albertans. We recognize that part of managing growth pressures means addressing the well-being of our children. While I support the spirit of Bill 207, I feel that it is not necessary to enact this legislation as its legitimate concerns are already being addressed by new government legislation in Bill 4.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that child care is a critical issue in Alberta, and we need to see dramatic action to remedy the years of neglect, particularly in space and funding. The new funding is less than the increase that we would have liked to have seen when the federal government agreement on child care was in place, but we are pleased to see that there are no cuts to child care and that funding has gone up.

I was at an annual general meeting of a daycare in St. Albert. One of the things expressed by the people there was a need for a longer term type of funding to give them the feeling that they can plan and do their staffing and attract more people into utilizing their service. Another issue that is particularly important in St. Albert is the question of affordable child care spaces. For example, in the particular child care that I was at about three weeks ago, there are no spaces available in the fall, and this is of particular concern to me.

In the past Alberta was a leader in terms of child care, and now we seem to be losing our leading kind of role that we played. Considering the wealth of the province, there is no excuse, I think, for the government's failure to show leadership in this very, very important issue. I remember that at one time they showed tremendous leadership. In fact, I think Minister Hyndman was one of the initial ones that initiated child care in the province, if I'm not mistaken, but I may be wrong on that. But I know his wife and himself were very, very interested in child care across the province.

Families should be free to make the best choices for their children, be that having one or both parents stay home, leaving children in the care of relatives, or placing children in safe, regulated care. But if there is no child care space available, many families are forced to make bad decisions for their children. I would again urge the Minister of Children's Services to look at a process of education for parents. I think that's a very, very important thing to do so that when they are looking for child care spaces, they can do it with some idea of what things to look for. I think this would be very, very important to do that.

Again, I'm concerned with the lack of space and the lack of good choices made by parents for children's services in this way. I'll leave it at that, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon caught my eye. The hon. member has already participated. He can't do it again.

Mr. Rogers: To speak?

The Speaker: Yes. You can't speak twice.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and join the debate on Bill 207, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. I want to say at the very outset that I support the bill. The issue of child care is of critical importance in this day and age. Everyone pays lip service to the importance of early childhood care and development, particularly for children who come from underprivileged families and groups, who need very special care very early on in order for them to prepare themselves for schooling and adult life following that. Success at school, success as responsible citizens and as part of the society depends very much on the experience the children have early on, and developmental experience, in particular, is very, very important. So I cannot overemphasize the importance of child care, its availability, affordability, quality: all of these are concerns that are, I think, now shared across political lines and partisan lines.

The point is: what do we do about this? I know that the government, under the new minister's leadership, is beginning to pay more attention to it than has been the case for years. Bill 4, that was discussed in this House some time ago, certainly will help move us in the direction of improving the quality of care and the availability of care to some extent. Mr. Speaker, what we need to do is to measure our success through some sort of an ongoing mechanism which allows for accountability, which allows us to monitor – in fact, obliges us to monitor – issues of accessibility, affordability, availability, and quality.

That's what I think Bill 207 is about. It calls for the government to prepare a 10-year plan and the minister who has the responsibility to monitor on a yearly basis every year starting, say, in 2008 to 2017 progress made to move towards a set target of making the spaces available. Bill 207 proposes that the number of spaces available by the end of this period should approach 30 per cent of all the children up to the age of 12. Now, one can certainly debate whether it should be 30 per cent or 35 per cent or 32 per cent, but certainly I think there is merit in identifying a target such as the one that's identified in this bill and then start working on achieving that set target and seeing how much progress we've made from one year to the next over the next 10 years.

Progress reports, as the bill proposes, should be made available to this Legislature on an annual basis when the House is in session. When it's not in session, Mr. Speaker, through your office that report can be distributed to all members even when they're not meeting at that time in this Chamber under this roof. Then at the end of the 10 years the bill proposes to have a full evaluation done with respect to the stages of daycare and child care – reference is made here to daycare facilities in particular in the bill – and have an overall report card prepared with respect to the performance of the government. I mean, that's a good way of ensuring that there will be some accountability and also with respect to accessibility, affordability, quality, and availability of care.

We do want to make sure that every child who needs this service gets it. Parents of young children who want to work and are desperately looking for child care spaces that they can put their trust in in terms of the quality of care provided there and their ability to afford to send their children there should have these places accessible and available to them, but there is no such thing at the moment. There is a very severe shortage of daycare spaces in the province. Parents have to wait for years sometimes to get their child placed in a daycare facility, and the costs are exorbitant. In many cases most parents can't afford them. The quality of care remains still a big challenge that we have to pay attention to. In addition, of course, refocusing child care on the developmental needs of children when they're very young is an issue on which we are just barely beginning to make a start and progress.

So, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I think that Bill 207 does not overlap anything that's offered by Bill 4. It deserves the support of the House, and I'm certainly very pleased to express my support for this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and then the Minister of Agriculture and Food and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and then Edmonton-Meadowlark.

I have another piece of paper here which lists some certain speakers. It comes from Executive Council office, but it lists speakers for the Liberals. I've been using the sheet that was provided to me by the Official Opposition House Leader, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak in support of Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act. There have been a number of good points made over the last few minutes today and the debate that took place last Monday.

I do have a few thoughts that I would like to add to it, but before I do that, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to echo the comments of my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods when she was referring to foster care and the need for foster care. In a way, it is relevant to child care as well. I grew up in a family that had a number of foster children go through our home. I think the total number was 16 if I remember correctly. I'd like to credit the person that I am today to a large extent to having had the experience of having children from many different cultures and backgrounds go through our home. I think the comments that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods made were most appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207, as has been outlined, aims to increase the number of child care spaces for children under the age of 12 to 30 per cent; that is, to make that a target, to have 30 per cent of children under the age of 12 have spaces available to them and to accomplish that over a 10-year period. I think one of the things that has to be stressed – and others may have made the point already, but I think it's really important that we keep this in mind – is that while this bill speaks specifically to child care spaces and accessibility and accountability for those spaces, it really is timely in terms of the debate that's taking place right now in this province regarding labour shortage and also, I suppose, has a connection to the current housing situation and the debate that took place in this Assembly last week regarding affordable housing. One of the things – and I'm sure I don't have to tell members opposite this – is that all of these issues are tied together and very much interrelated as a result of the unprecedented economic boom that we're experiencing and, I would submit, the lack of planning on the part of this government to somehow control that growth.

What we've seen is skyrocketing rental rates as we discussed and had individual examples of in the galleries last week. We've seen a dramatic shortage of not just skilled but unskilled labour in the province, and we've seen a dramatic decrease in the availability of child care spaces. All of these sort of feed on each other, and you end up in this vicious cycle where, you know, one causes the other to be worse, and that causes the other to be worse, and it just keeps exacerbating the situation. So I think the need to pass Bill 207 and set some firm targets in terms of how many spaces would be available is very, very timely not just because of the current shortage in child care spaces but also particularly as it relates to labour in this province.

One of the things we know for sure is that for particularly, I suppose one would say, two-parent families where the stay-at-home parent is considering entering the workforce, a primary consideration always is child care and (a) of course would be whether or not reasonable child care is available and then (b) whether or not it's at a price that can justify to the parents both of them going to work. If, in fact, the child care isn't available or if the cost to access that child care is such that it just doesn't make it economically feasible for both parents to work, then you have removed a potential worker from the workforce. These, as I've suggested, may be unskilled workers, or they may well be professionals that, you know, we desperately need and aren't fully accessing. So I think that that is a very important thing for all members to note when they're considering whether or not to support this bill.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, talks about increasing the transparency in terms of annual reporting about the type, cost, and location of the spaces that would be created. Boy, is this ever a timely thing to note given the report out of Ottawa this week regarding the lack of accountability for the federal child care dollars that have been passed on down to the provinces. I understand that Alberta is one of the provinces that the federal ministry is having difficulty getting access to information on. So, clearly, anything that we can do that improves the accountability and the reporting of dollars that are being spent on child care is something that we know for sure the federal Auditor General would like to see, and I'm going to guess that the provincial Auditor General would be fully supportive as well.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the other thing that has to be noted in discussions with the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, who is proposing this bill, is that this is the first part of a broader strategy to address child care initiatives. I know that she has spoken to me personally about the need to develop a comprehensive plan that would work in conjunction with this bill to support parents who choose to stay at home and look after their children. She has assured me that that is the next part of the plan that she's working on.

You know, for myself as a parent who chose to make the sacrifice to keep one wage earner at home and look after the children while they were young, I know what a big sacrifice that is, and I recognize how important a contribution that is. I don't think that we as a government do enough to accommodate those parents who make that difficult decision. So I look forward to working with the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods as she moves forward to the next step of this process. I think that that's really important as well.

I clearly support this bill and the measures that are outlined in it in terms of making more spaces available and making the reporting of those initiatives to build those spaces more accountable and more transparent for members of the taxpaying public to access. Certainly, as I said, having a target of making spaces available for 30 per cent of those children I think is wonderful.

One of the things that I would like to point out, when I talk about how all these issues tie in, is a specific case that I was made aware of on Friday. I had a young mom and father come into my constituency office with concerns about their child care. They have a young child that's in preschool and another child who is in an after school care program. The mom is going to school, trying to further her education so that she can get back into the workforce as a nurse, if I recall correctly, and they've just been hit with two rather large increases for their child care expenses for both the preschooler and the older child, who is in after school care.

Now, because the mom is in school and taking some upgrading courses, this family is receiving a supplement, but fees for the preschooler, as an example, Mr. Speaker, went up from approximately $500 to approximately $800, and the supplement is only going to cover $27 of that. So in one fell swoop the family is facing an increase of nearly $300 in their monthly expenses. That's dramatic on its own, but in light of the conversation we had in this Assembly last week on out-of-control rent increases, I can only imagine the difficulties that this family would face if they should happen to be hit with a large rental increase any time in the near future. You know, they're trying to absorb a large increase in child care expenses, and if you top that off with a large increase in rental expenses and gasoline, which, as we all know, is now $1.12 or $1.13 a litre, it just goes on and on.

Mr. Speaker, as the former Premier was once very fond of saying, there is only one taxpayer. Well, I would submit to you that that one taxpayer is finding it very difficult to keep up with cost-of-living increases in this province right now. You've got families like this one that was in my office on Friday absorbing, in this case, a rather large increase in child care. I'm not necessarily suggesting that it's gouging, but from $500 to $800 is a 60 per cent increase, and that's going to be very difficult for that family to deal with.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate on Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, which proposes to establish a 10-year target for the creation of new child care spaces for no less than 30 per cent of the children under age 12 in Alberta. Bill 207 fails to identify the need or cost of providing child care to 30 per cent of Alberta's children. There is no evidence to support this target.

Work is under way by Children's Services to identify the supply and demand for spaces so that we can determine Alberta's need for child care spaces from now until the year 2016. According to what we heard from Alberta's consultation on the creation of child spaces, completed in September 2006, parents want more child care choices. Respondents in this consultation noted that creating spaces within a regulated child care system will not meet the needs of many children and their families. They felt that the government should provide parents with the funding they need to access child care programs of their choice.

Mr. Speaker, the government is improving the quality of child care services for children using three key objectives: regulating and monitoring the quality of child care services for families in Alberta and ensuring that children's safety and development needs are met, subsidizing the cost of child care for families in need or in circumstances where parental participation in the workforce must be sustained, and introducing child care standards of excellence and linkages to accredited child care options.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 4 enables the creation of new licensing categories, one being a new group of family daycare for seven to 10 children in approved private homes. Operators will also be able to make better use of their spaces. Spaces for school-aged children that would have previously sat empty during school hours can be used for preschool children.

In 2007 the Alberta government is investing close to $16 million towards creating more child care spaces, attracting and retaining qualified staff, and making child care more affordable for low- and middle-income parents who want to work or, indeed, go to school.

Two million dollars will be put towards a new space creation innovation fund that will help cover the start-up costs of creating more child care spaces across the province. Children's Services will begin accepting space creation innovation fund proposals for one-time start-up grants of up to $1,500 for each new child care space from people interested in starting up new child care programs or expanding existing spaces.

As of August 2006 there were 69,267 child care spaces in Alberta. Of these, 59,269 were located in licensed facilities, and 9,998 child care spaces were available in agency-approved family day homes. Between October 2005 and September 2006 332 additional child care spaces were created.

To promote excellence in child care settings, Alberta Children's Services is supporting high-quality child care through the accreditation of child care programs. Accreditation is a voluntary process that objectively assesses child care programs that meet child care standards of excellence. Alberta Children's Services contracts with the Alberta Association for the Accreditation Of Early Learning and Care Services to evaluate, assess, and approve child care programs for accreditation. Accreditation provides daycare centres and family day home agencies with assistance in the recruitment and retention of trained and qualified staff through grant funding, and 168 programs have been accredited with another 353 working towards the same goal.

Qualified staff, Mr. Speaker, are essential to maintaining existing child care spaces and creating new ones. Most operators determine the availability of space by the availability of staff. The Alberta government has recently invested an additional 13 and a half million dollars to address staff recruitment and retention. This helps address a serious issue for day homes, daycare centres, contracted agencies, and women's shelters. This funding is also available for Alberta operators to maintain the availability of 29,000 child care spaces. This year $2 million will be invested to increase staff support funding for child care professionals working in preaccredited and accredited child care programs retroactive to January 1, 2007.

The government is already providing additional funding for child care and has proposed Bill 4 to give Alberta parents more child care options.

I do not support Bill 207 as it does not explain the need or cost of increasing child care spaces to 30 per cent of Alberta's child population, and I would ask my colleagues not to support this bill as we have Bill 4 in the wings, in waiting. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to stand and speak in second reading on Bill 207, Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act. I thank my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods for crafting this bill. As it says in the bill, "The purpose of this Act is to increase accessibility to, and government accountability for, universal, affordable and high quality child care." All those words are very important words – accessibility, accountability, universal, affordable, and high quality – in establishing criteria for looking at child care in this province. The goal of this bill is to make sure that we provide "sufficient child care spaces for not less than 30% of the children in Alberta who are 12 years of age or younger."

Well, Canada lags behind other countries, especially if you look at the OECD countries, the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. Those countries that comprise OECD are convinced that care and education are inseparable. In most countries of the European Union, for example, children by the age of three are a part of the universal public education system, and in many cases two-year-olds are also included. I quote from an OECD document: "The trend in all countries is toward full coverage of the three- to six-year-old age group, aiming to give all children at least two years of free publicly-funded provision before beginning compulsory schooling."

Mr. Speaker, other countries offer a child care guarantee to their citizens. Why? Because most people in the field know that early childhood education ensures very positive developmental outcomes. If we invest money in our youngest children, then there are tremendous dividends down the road. An OECD report entitled Starting Strong states:

Research shows that participation in quality, centre-based [early childhood education and care] programmes can have important and immediate short-term impacts on the cognitive and socio-emotional development of disadvantaged children.

Policy-makers in Canada and especially in Alberta seem to be deaf to the evidence-based research. If they read that research, they would be determined to have just the best possible system for child care that we can possibly have in Alberta. The typical Conservative approach of giving money to parents in the name of equality of opportunity pales in comparison to the universal, affordable, high-quality approach which we have in European countries, which is all about equality of results, not just equality of opportunity but equality of results.

This bill, Bill 207, is geared to results, to outcomes. It proposes that there be a 10-year action plan that will increase child care spaces in this province. In order to achieve the results we need, there should be an annual review conducted by the minister which should focus on the availability of child care spaces, on the affordability of child care spaces, and on indicators of quality and indicators of accessibility. Mr. Speaker, providing child care spaces is not simply a question of just spaces. People are not interested in just custodial care, in a kind of superbabysitting. They want quality care. I mean, we're talking about our youngest children.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

This is what the QUAD child care principles are about. In November 2004 ministers from federal, provincial, and territorial governments with the exception of Quebec agreed on four principles to guide the development of a national system of early childhood care. QUAD stands for quality, universally inclusive, accessible child care with a developmental focus. Those are just terrific criteria and principles that would undergird a child care philosophy and program in this country.

European countries, including the United Kingdom, have been developing child care strategies focused on quality, so I really stress that. Quality is what we need. There must be a system in place, as this bill is suggesting, where we monitor the quality, that we look forward to what the outcomes, what the results might be if we focus on quality. Research identifies three characteristics of quality for child care: low child-to-adult ratios, highly educated staff with specialized training, and the availability of adequate facilities and equipment.

I had the chance to visit a facility some time ago, and I was distressed when I heard from teachers, from caregivers that because of low wages and the inability to keep staff, the child-to-adult ratio keeps going up. I think it's quite a shame that in our rich province we don't have enough money to support – well, of course, we do have the money to support, but we're not channelling that money into providing high-quality child care.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other points I could add in terms of quality. The bill does a good job in outlining the indicators of quality: training requirements, staff qualifications, staff remuneration, and so on.

I think this bill is very important, and I want to see it continue. I think it might be an appropriate time for me now to suggest that we should amend this bill in second reading and refer it to a committee, so I would like to do that now. I have the notice of amendment here, and I'm ready to distribute it.

The Deputy Speaker: If you would hand them to the pages and then just give us a moment until we get them distributed.

Dr. B. Miller: Right. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there someone wishing to rise on a point?

Mr. Chase: No, just to the amendment when we have the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member on the amendment.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that Bill 207, Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill stand referred to the Standing Committee on Community Services in accordance with temporary Standing Order 74.2.

Mr. Speaker, I think members of the opposition were quite elated to be able to move ahead with these field committees that are now established under our Standing Orders. There are four policy field committees. The first one listed in the Standing Orders under 52.01 is the Standing Committee on Community Services, which has the mandate "to relate to the areas of health, education, children's services, seniors, supports for the disabled, tourism, parks, recreation and culture." So this is the appropriate committee to refer a bill like this since this committee deals with children's services.

You know, I've had two very good experiences of being on all-party committees. One was the select review committee that looked at the conflict of interest legislation. There was representation by all parties on that committee, and I thought that our work was very good and is proceeding through the Legislature now. I was also appointed to the Affordable Housing Task Force, and as an all-party committee that was very successful also in promoting the recommendations and doing analysis and suggesting excellent recommendations for the government to act on.

I think this bill is very worthy of further discussion, and it seems to me that it's appropriate to refer it. I notice that in the Order Paper there's a resolution to refer Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, to a field committee. A government bill is being referred. Why not a private member's bill? I mean, it seems appropriate that we would be able to refer this particular bill for further consideration by this committee. That's my rationale for making this amendment. I look forward to the discussion on this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, support the amendment. We have put forward the idea that through all-party participation in the policy field committees, there will be a greater coherence, a greater transparency, a greater accountability. The mover of the bill, from Edmonton-Mill Woods, is extremely dedicated and concerned about the well-being of children in the province of Alberta. She has heard from other representatives of the government that have questions with regard to Bill 4 and the proposed bill.

What we are proposing is that the whole committee put their collective wisdom to the task of coming up with the best possible outcome, which is what this bill attempts to provide. The amount of time that we would spend in committee as a whole compared to the collective wisdom that could be brought to it in the standing committee, upon which there is representation from all committees, would provide a sort of a litmus test, a sort of a situation whereby we could judge not only the value of the bill but also the value of the committee and the exercise. Can we have the transparency, can we have the accountability, the camaraderie, the colleagues working together that the standing committees now open to all parties hope to accomplish?

Therefore, I would strongly recommend that all members of this House support the amendment and support the idea of a thorough examination of the bill and that whatever changes are necessary be recommended at that time. Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the idea of all-party committees, as everyone in this House knows, is relatively new. As one of the members has already indicated, there is on the Order Paper a provision that Bill 1 will be referred to the committee for detailed study. The Lobbyists Act, being referred to the all-party committee, is one that has broad implications. This particular act, Mr. Speaker – and I happen to have a fair bit of experience in this field – is one that has very narrow connotations to it. In addition to that, the Minister of Children's Services has dealt with a number of issues that this bill would propose to deal with, and I don't believe that all-party committee study would enhance in any way this particular act. I would suggest that the House not approve the amendment at this time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I have to respond to the Minister of Education and his comments about Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, being so much more broad than this bill, which deals with child care accessibility and accountability. I'm going to suggest that there might be an awful lot more families that deal with child care issues than there would be lobbyists, even with this government, that's been in power for so long. So I'm not sure it can be interpreted as not being broad enough. I think this bill probably impacts almost every working family in the province.

But having said that, really, the issue is whether or not this particular Bill 207 is one that would be suitable to refer to the standing committee. I think there are a number of reasons why this is a good candidate to be referred but in particular in response to the comments made earlier this afternoon by the Minister of Agriculture and Food. He raised the question as to the costing of this bill. I think that's the perfect reason and the perfect opportunity to refer this bill so that that can be explored.

I'm happy to inform the agriculture minister that in fact this bill has been fully costed as part of the Liberal policy. He should know that any policy proposals that we bring forward in this Legislature have been fully costed and all fit within our funding Alberta's future plan, as this bill does. The reason that it's not in here – and he's been in the House long enough that he should know this – is that private members' bills cannot compel the government to spend money. We cannot introduce money bills in this Legislature. That's the reason that there's no reference in this bill to dollar figures, Mr. Minister, but it has been fully costed.

I'm pleased to tell you that over the first three years of the program the costing is about $30 million. Now, that's a relatively small amount in terms of the overall budget that the government has just proposed, so I'm sure that it wouldn't be too hard for the government to come up with $30 million over the next three years to fund this bill were it to be passed. But as I suggest, this is a really good opportunity, I think, to explore the work that the Official Opposition has done in terms of costing this bill and making sure that it fits within our funding Alberta's future plan. If the minister is so interested in learning how those numbers were reached and exactly what the cost to the taxpayer would be, then I'm assuming that he'll be glad to lend his support to this amendment and refer the bill to the standing committee. We can have that discussion there because, as I've already pointed out, under the rules of this House we were not allowed to include the costs in the bill.

So that would be my submission, Mr. Speaker. I think also, as was pointed out by my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, just in the spirit of opening up democracy in this province and greater co-operation between both sides of the House, that this is an excellent opportunity to have a government bill sent to the standing committee and to have an opposition bill sent to a standing committee. Let's show how we can work together in making bills from both sides of the House better. That would be my hope, that the government will see the logic in doing that, and I look forward to further debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this amendment. However, I would encourage all of my colleagues to vote against this amendment. I really do think that this is a little bit premature, trying to refer this to the policy field committees. The policy field committees are just being set up, and they do have a lot of very important work to do with regard to government bills. In fact, I know that there are actually a lot of groups lining up in order to appear before these policy field committees. Certainly, with regard to some of the bills, like Bill 1 and Bill 2, that I think we've already referred to the policy field committees – and I know that there are other bills that are going to be referred to policy field committees that are again government bills. I think we really need to spend our time majoring on the majors, focusing on the things that, you know, the Alberta citizens would like us to focus on.

Mr. Speaker, I think that Bill 207 is a very worthy bill. It's a good bill, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for bringing it forward. But I think that the time to debate this bill is right here and right now. We have a certain amount of time that's allotted for private members' business here on the floor of the House. I know that this bill has been before the House for several weeks, was introduced several weeks back, and now we have time to debate it. Certainly, all of the members here have had time to look at the bill, to read it over.

I have the bill right in my hands here, and it's a great bill. It's about three pages long, and it certainly focuses on about 20 to 30 per cent of the ministry's objectives. As a private member's bill goes, it's a good bill, but, like I said, I really do believe, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of this bill can be debated and taken care of right here on the floor of the Legislature. I think that to try to refer this to a policy field committee will only delay the passage or the defeat of this bill, and I think we would like to deal with this bill on an immediate, expedient basis.

Like I said, there are some good things here. The bill is very clear. The members can certainly read this bill and understand where the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods is coming from. She's given some good debate on the bill already in, you know, the beginning comments on second reading. I would encourage the members to listen to those comments and to vote accordingly in accordance with their conscience and what they've heard their constituents say.

Mr. Speaker, I would speak against this amendment because I don't believe that it's necessary to refer this on to the policy field committee's time and to delay the voting or the proceedings on Bill 207.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I look at this notice of amendment to move that Bill 207, Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act, go to the Standing Committee on Community Services, I think about the history of amendments and motions. Often, some amendments have been made to refer because they were attempts to sidestep. It was said of William Lyon MacKenzie King that when steering around a controversial issue, the height of his ambition was to pile a special committee on a royal commission to let Parliament decide later.

This is not an amendment to do that. Some amendments to refer are attempts to avoid an otherwise inevitable outcome, to buy time rather than face certain defeat. This is an amendment for more time but not an attempt to stave off or defer one outcome as much as to allow another to take shape.

Bill 207 needs time to be considered, to be discussed, to develop a consensus and support from all sides of the House, and to pass. The process by which it is accepted is as important as the provisions of the bill itself, and it is for this reason that I support this amendment.

Standards and spaces for child care is an important issue for us all. It is not a Liberal issue or a Conservative issue, an Alliance or a New Democratic Party issue. It goes with the turf of being parents and grandparents, uncles and aunts, Albertans and human beings.

What is proposed in Bill 207 is not a motherhood issue, one of those polite affirmations we can sandwich between the weightier matters of budget and ballooning growth. It is an issue and an area that if we can effect change here, many other things would change as well, and for the better.

Alberta leads the country as a debt-free province. It leads the continent as an energy producer. It leads the developed world in the achievement levels of many of our students and educational institutions. If Alberta were to lead as a child-friendly society, a quality and a distinction that must involve many policy sectors and most of our citizens, the impact of that leadership would be truly lasting.

This is a matter for municipalities, for the province, and for our country. That is why I support this amendment for consideration of this bill in committee: to allow its importance to dawn on us and its possibilities to move us into action. That is an achievement well worth waiting for.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just speak as my hon. colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmar has regarding the advisability of sending this Bill 207 to one of the policy field committees that have been set up. I would agree with him that it's probably not the type of bill that would be profitable to send there because I think that there are some broad issues of philosophy and policy in there. There are obviously very divergent views. So if we're going to spin our wheels and send this off to a committee, I'm not sure how much further we would be ahead. It's a fairly simple bill. It's black and white, and I think that it would be prudent for the House to discuss it fully today, to have a vote up and down on it, and not to send it to one of these policy field committees.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't believe what I've been hearing. Probably it's my old age.

Mr. Johnston: Agreed.

Mr. Flaherty: Shut up. You know, for the sake of our kids and our families I think day care and child care is so important, and I think we have to open the doors. I think this would be a wonderful thing to take on by the task force because we'd get the public involved – the people, the parents – that are most directly affected by this. There's no disrespect to the good work of my colleague – she's done some wonderful work – but I think she's laid the foundation to do something like that.

There are a number of things that I think could be looked at in terms of the questions of spacing, funding, inspection, and choices that parents make. So I think to enhance the quality of child care services in this province, we should open the doors and ask the parents and ask the community at large what they think about this bill and what they are thinking of child care. I guess I will go back to my comments during, I guess it was, Bill 34. What is the government going to use these committees for? Are they not going to open the doors to listen to people about some of their concerns? I can't think of a more important issue right here than the sake of our kids and our families, to look at them and see if we're doing a perfect job. We've laid the foundation. Why not take it out and see what the public thinks and then make it even better than what it is now?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to speak to the amendment and to oppose the amendment for many of the same reasons that have already been identified. I need to point out that Bill 207, while it has the best of intention, is very, very specific, and the bill itself is confined to the creation of this 10-year plan and then the annual reporting requirements. I would suggest that that is not as difficult as one might think to deal with in this House. We do have a good deal of time that's allocated to deal with the Bill at second reading. Should the bill receive the support of the members in the House at second reading, it would go on to Committee of the Whole.

The kinds of bills that I envision turning over to the policy field committees are those kinds of bills that will generate a broader discussion than what is very specific in this bill. I would suggest that there very well may be some appropriate ways that the minister may bring forward and suggest that the field committee look at various policies related to child care, and that would be very appropriate for the committee to do. But I believe that if we were to send this bill to committee, we would really be handcuffing that committee, and we would be restricting the kinds of discussions that they would have, and at the end of the day all they can do is come back to this House, refer the bill back to this House, perhaps with one or two amendments attached. But, frankly, we would still be dealing with a very, very restricted part of the overall issue of child care.

I'll give you an example, Mr. Speaker. As Minister of Environment I'm working right as we speak with officials in my department to bring forward to the relevant field committee a review of the regulations respecting beverage container recycling. It's a very broad issue. The regulations are about to come to the point where they need to be renewed, so I think it's appropriate that we deal with that at one of the field committees so that they can hear from all of the various components that are involved. They can hear from recycling associations; they can hear from the consumer; they can hear from the manufacturers: get all of that general context and then provide some advice to the government on what our future regulations should look like, whether we should simply re-engage what's already there or we should bring some new ideas to the train.

3:30

The same kind of concept maybe could apply within Children's Services, but it needs to be very broad in its context. I have concern that by referring Bill 207 to the committee, we will be far too restrictive on the kinds of issues that the committee can deal with, and for that reason I encourage all members not to support this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened with interest to the Deputy House Leader's explanation, and I would say that, of course, the policy field committees are a work in progress. We're not sure at least on this side of the House how they will be used, when they will be used. I think that to begin with, it would seem appropriate that a bill like Bill 207 could be directed from the opposition – we talked about transparency – to be looked at. Now, it seems to me that just because that one particular bill is sent to the policy field committee, it does not rule out taking a broader look at issues in Children's Services. I don't see that there has to be an either/or sort of situation. If all of a sudden you had sent Bill 207, that's specific, to be looked at, that does not stop the policy field committee from reviewing other areas in terms of Children's Services.

Just as the minister was talking about, you know, he's got some ideas about how a policy field committee might operate with recycling. Fine, but there might be some other views, too, that the policy field committee would want to do. I think it would be appropriate from the Legislature, not always just flowing from the minister and things. It might be very valuable to look at, but the idea of a policy field committee is that the opposition would have some say in the types of things that were coming forward. That's why we have all-party committees.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that from time to time we should from the Legislature say that this is something we want to look at. Maybe it's not something the minister particularly wants to look at, but the policy field committees should not just be under the purview, if you like, of the minister. I think the left hand and the right hand sometimes can give you two different things, so I don't think it rules out.

Let me say, Mr. Minister, from the example that you used, that somebody wanted to look at CO₂ proposals that had come forward. Why couldn't the policy field committees look at both areas? You know, maybe they need two or three more or four or five more meetings, but that's the purpose of policy field committees. To say that we reject this Bill 207 going to a policy field committee because it's not broad enough, that we couldn't look at other things: of course we can.

So I would say, Mr. Speaker, that because it is a work in progress, we should allow some of these things to come forward from the Assembly if in the spirit of openness and transparency we really want these policy field committees to work. Otherwise, the policy field committees will be just things that the ministers want, and we have to deal with it. Then the vote will come, and the Conservative members will vote one way and the opposition the other, and we won't have accomplished much. I don't think that's the purpose of them.

So I would say to the government and the members of the governing side that if we really want these things to work, we should be a little more open in terms of how they come to the policy field committee. It seems to me that Bill 207 is a bill that could have some good work done at those policy field committees. So let's not say that it's either/or, that there's only one thing that these committees can deal with. They can deal with a lot more than that, and I think the Legislature should be directing somewhat the things that they want to speak about.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 207 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Back on the bill.

Dr. B. Miller: I think I have a couple of minutes.

The Deputy Speaker: No. Your time has elapsed, Edmonton-Glenora.

The next person I have on the list is the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to address Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act. I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for bringing this act to the Assembly. I have some concerns with the prescriptive nature of Bill 207. It only supports specified types of child care: licensed daycare centres, approved family day homes, and licensed out-of-school care centres. It states how many child care positions should be available in Alberta.

As children are the most cherished parts of parents' lives, selecting the right child care option is an extremely personal decision. Child care providers are trusted with helping to raise, educate, and care for our kin. Different parents seek different qualities in care providers. Parents can care for their children in the manner in which they see fit. Albertans have many different lifestyles. Some live in remote areas of the province, work irregular hours, are single parents, or have special needs. Because of this variety no one child care type is right for all Albertans.

The government recognizes the personal nature of child care. This recognition has led to Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act. The bill allows Albertans to get the special service they need from child care by allowing for greater program choice and flexibility. Bill 4 provides parents with options. However, there are still more parents who prefer to use alternate means to raise their children. The Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act unevenly supports one type of child care. Albertans actually have more child care options which should be addressed. For example, this bill does not acknowledge the possibility of hiring a nanny to watch children in their own homes.

While Bill 207 is very well intentioned, it is at the same time very prescriptive. It goes as far as stating a specified target of placements to achieve. Bill 207 calls for the creation of enough child care spaces for 30 per cent of Alberta's children aged 12 years or less. There is no evidence indicating that there is a need for this many child care spots in Alberta. There could be enough demand to fill the spaces called for today, but what about tomorrow? Supply versus demand.

It will be difficult for a province facing a labour shortage to ensure that sufficient employees are available to accommodate the child care positions this act calls for. As it now stands, we are working hard on staff attraction to encourage people to promote child care as a profession of choice to meet today's child care needs.

Albertans should be free to take care of and raise their children the way they see fit. That can be at home with a dad or mom, at another family member's home, through an employee's workplace program, or in a licensed child care facility. While consulting with Albertans, the government found that creating spaces within the regular child care system will not meet the needs of many families. They felt that we should be providing funding to access the child care program they choose.

We need to ensure that parents have access to affordable and high-quality child care. The way to achieve this is not by prescribing the number of child care spaces. I urge the members of this Assembly to contemplate the type of message this bill sends to Albertans and how it could affect their child care choices.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak in favour of Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act. First, I would just like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for bringing this bill forward. I've had the pleasure of knowing the hon. member for the last two and a half years, and I can tell you that she is the most dedicated MLA I know. She works long, hard hours and is doing an outstanding job in this position, and I thank her for all the work she's done on behalf of Alberta children and families.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 has two clear, straightforward goals: increase the number of quality child care spaces available to Albertans and increase the level of governmental transparency and accountability regarding child care in Alberta. I don't think that anyone can argue that Alberta doesn't need more high-quality, affordable child care spaces. As much as it would be nice to believe that we can go back to the days when mom stayed at home and tended to the child rearing while dad went to work, for an increasing number of Albertans that is simply not realistic. In a province where house prices are doubling and rents are going through the roof, even those who want to have one parent stay home are finding that it is truly an impossible dream.

Bill 207 would give the government a clear and obtainable target of achieving 30 per cent access for children 12 years of age and under over the next decade. Right now we only have child care spaces for about 10 per cent of children, so clearly we have a long way to go. By requiring the reporting of where spaces are being created and what type of space is created, the bill will enhance the quality, universality, accessibility, and developmental focus of child care in Alberta. It is important to note that this bill does not tell the government how to achieve the target number of spaces – this gives the government lots of room for out-of-the-box thinking in regard to the issue – and it doesn't tie the government to any particular spending amount. It gives the government a goal that it must reach within a reasonable time frame.

Bill 207 seeks to address the quite surprising numbers regarding child care in Alberta. In Canada's richest province regulated child care spaces are available to only about 10 per cent of our children. Only Newfoundland and Saskatchewan fare worse. Even more surprising is the fact that the number of daycare spaces in Alberta has actually dropped from 1992 to 2004. The situation has become so dire that some parents are putting their children's names on wait-lists even before they're born. Wait-lists now stretch for years.

The lack of child care spaces in Alberta is not just a social issue but an economic one. The unavailability of child care spaces is robbing the Alberta economy of thousands of people, both men and women, who could be lending their expertise in a red-hot employment market but instead are denied their opportunity to participate in Alberta's booming economy, that is crying out for workers.

Mr. Speaker, that's all I have to say. I'm fully supportive of this measure. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to commend the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for introducing Bill 207, the Child Care Accountability and Accessibility Act. Everyone here can agree that Alberta's children deserve the very best care. Bill 207 is intended to increase accessibility to child care through legislated space creation and requires the minister to report annually on child care availability, affordability, quality, accessibility, and expenditures. It is quite similar in intent to the government's Bill 4, which will increase accessibility to child care by allowing the establishment of innovative child care programs and by allowing child care operators to make better use of their child care spaces.

Beyond the actions of Bill 4 the government has recently brought down a budget that includes significant support for child care. These measures are sure to improve the quality of life of young Albertans and parents with families. Child care is receiving significantly more funding to help address growth pressures, like a lack of affordable child care spaces in growing communities and the difficulty of attracting and retaining staff members to work with children.

In 2007-08 Children's Services will invest $972 million in Alberta's children, youth, families, and communities. This is a 7 and a half per cent increase from the 2006-07 forecast. A hundred and thirty-four million dollars of this funding will go to expanding access to quality, affordable child care options. This is an increase of $16 million, almost 14 per cent, in addition to the 51 per cent increase provided in '06-07. Five point six million dollars will improve subsidies for parents and help child care programs cover the costs of processing these subsidies. Two million dollars will go to a space creation innovation fund to help cover the costs of creating more child care spaces.

Children's Services' very first strategic priority for 2007-10 is to ensure that parents have access to quality and affordable child care options. Children's Services is going to continue to implement the five-point child care investment plan that was developed in response to consultations with Alberta's families in 2005. The government does not need to develop another 10-year plan to increase child care spaces, as Bill 207 proposes, because we already have a plan that we are implementing.

Two of the points of this investment plan are important to this debate: firstly, helping low- and middle-income families access affordable child care and, also, improving the quality of child care and increasing wages and training opportunities for child care professionals. Since this plan was introduced in October 2005, 30 per cent more families are accessing child care subsidies, and staff wage top-ups have increased by 40 per cent. The government is offering $400,000 to fund incentives to encourage people to re-enter the child care workforce and promote child care as a profession of choice. We're offering 1 and a half million dollars in a new Children's Services child care bursary, which offsets the cost for education for leaders and aspiring leaders working in child care.

Bill 207 would require annual reporting, which would be redundant because the ministry already reports its progress in child care. For example, it already reports annually on the number of child care programs that have received provincial accreditation. This voluntary process sets standards of excellence, promoting each child's early growth and development, which improves outcomes for children, families, and staff in Alberta's communities. Under the 2007-10 strategic plan the ministry has set a goal that in 2007-08 42 per cent of licensed day care centres and contracted family day home agencies will receive accreditation. In '05-06 only 16 and a half per cent of these facilities were accredited. The ministry has set a target for nearly two-thirds of these facilities to be accredited in 2009-10.

Mr. Speaker, the first years of a child's life . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of the private member's bill to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close debate on Bill 207.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have studied carefully the comments made in debate by colleagues on all sides of the House, and I've considered their various opinions. I want to thank you all for your consideration of this bill. While I shall defend the turf that goes with Bill 207, it is my preference to deal with the overarching and more enduring issue of Alberta's children, for that is where this discussion began.

I'd like to turn to the points being made in opposing this bill. Here again, it appears to me that there are two issues, not to be confused with the two positions from which the criticism is coming. The first is the allegation of overlap, that Bill 207 is unnecessary because it duplicates the provisions of the government's own Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act. The second is the argument of ideology, that this reflects a Liberal mindset of intervention at the expense of freedom of choice. Before I deal with each of these in turn, I point out that they cannot both be true at the same time.

If in fact Bill 207 duplicates Bill 4 in its provisions, as the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon suggested, then there cannot be between the two bills the great gulf of status versus free enterprise philosophy that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has found. If there is a great philosophical gap between the two positions, then the opposition to Bill 207, by which I mean the government, cannot claim that it says the same thing as their own Bill 4.

The well-being of our children is a human issue that concerns us all, and therefore even the differing strategies we may pursue to achieve it are ultimately compatible as we seek the greatest good for the greatest number. Freedom of choice, which we all support, cannot exist without choices. The mandated child care spaces which Bill 207 provides are one of those choices and a necessary one for those who do not have access to the extended-family, in-house option that others have. This situation applies to many new Albertans who do not have other nonworking family here in sufficient numbers to provide the option that more long-standing Albertans may enjoy. So to mandate spaces, as Bill 207 does, is not to intervene in people's private lives but to create a level playing field in offering an option to more Albertans that only some Albertans have at present.

For fellow members who still believe that there's something sacred in an ideological stance here, I point to our history. The founding government of Sir John A. Macdonald was a liberal Conservative one: liberal in its generosity and intentions; conservative in its upholding of timeless values. People saw no contradiction in that. Let us leave the ideological debates to the annals of history, where they belong, and turn to face present realities together.

I'd like to devote the rest of my comments to reply to what I consider the greater challenge: the argument of overlap, that Bill 207 duplicates the government's own child care initiative and is therefore unnecessary. I do not believe that this is true. Bill 207 is intended to safeguard access to child care for those who need it and do not have access to it through other channels.

Even if this were provided under the government's Bill 4, adoption of Bill 207, which is designed to strengthen the aspect of available spaces, makes the message clearer, broader, and stronger. Adding standards for the number of child care spaces no more duplicates monitoring of programs than measuring height duplicates measuring weight. They are two complementary aspects to give us information about a whole.

What are we building for Alberta's children? What we are building for Alberta's children is bigger than any one party, person, or point of view. As long as it does not conflict with pieces of the structure put in place by others, additions that support and enhance a larger picture should be allowed and encouraged. So I put forward this measure not simply to score points for my own party and not to make any other party look bad. I do so because it addresses the needs of Alberta children.

I'm going to assume that the government will not surprise us and will simply vote this bill down. If it takes this course of action and votes the bill down, my next question will be a simple: why? If it's because the government intends to bring in something better of its own, I will await its action and applaud if it is due. If it claims that it's rejecting the bill because the timing is not right, I ask: how much longer? How many more incidents? How many deaths will it take until we learn that too many people have died, to quote Bob Dylan, while we continue to blow in the wind? What will it take before the government is prepared to act? This is not an issue that is going to go away. It is not an issue that is going to get any better, any clearer, any more evident by leaving it.

[Motion for second reading of Bill 207 lost]

Bill 208
School (Restrictions on Fees and Fundraising)
Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of this bill is to eliminate school fees and fundraising for all curricular activities. The Department of Education will be ultimately responsible for ensuring that public education is funded adequately following this change. Fundraising will not be allowed for educational materials but is allowed for extracurricular activities, including clubs, school sports, and extracurricular trips.

Eliminating school fees will divert responsibility for school fees from parents back to the provincial government where they belong. Eliminating school fees would also ensure that quality of education is not determined by the wealth and willingness of parents to pay. The impact of this change will be determined by the willingness of government to replace this lost resource revenue with government funding. The bill requires that the ministry report to the Legislature with a strategy to ensure that school programming and instruction will not be negatively affected by the reduction of school fees. To ensure that students and school boards are not negatively affected by the loss of revenue, the Minister of Education must make a report to the Legislature detailing how the department will ensure that restricting school fees will not negatively affect the quality of education.

Article 26 of the United Nations' declaration of human rights states that "everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages." School fees can create a financial burden for families and for low-income families, in particular in Edmonton. Through its own documents the department is saying that 20 per cent of kids and families are in the poverty domain. Higher school fees for some curricular activities, including things like band and class field trips, can be prohibitive for some students, leading to a situation in which the students obtain different educational experiences based on their financial resources.

The refusal to introduce a cap on fees and fundraising or to provide a province-wide guideline on these activities leads to confusion and vast differences from school board to school board. Currently students enrolled in public school face different school fees based on where they live and what school board their school is in. This creates inequality in the level of financial contribution parents are expected to provide for their children's schooling based simply on the place of residence.

School fees are charged to make up for budgetary shortfalls in the education system. In Alberta there is no cap on school fees, and the provincial government has refused to take any action on this issue. Currently fees can be charged for supplies and materials provided for the student's personal use or consumption. This includes things like workbooks, locker rentals, art supplies, and calculators.

School fees and fundraising activities are generally determined by local school boards through consultation with school councils and the ministry, and they have been trending upwards in the past few years. School boards have traditionally been protective of the right to raise funds. This is likely a result of continual financial pressure of being asked to do a lot with inadequate government funding.

If this initiative is going to succeed, the government will have to step up and provide the funding necessary to have a high-quality and equitable education system across Alberta. School fees can present an unreasonable economic burden on low-income families. School fees and fundraising allow governments to pass on the costs of delivering public services to parents and communities. Higher fees attached to specialized programs can affect who can and cannot attend or take part based on family income. Educational opportunities may differ from region to region based on the relative wealth and willingness of parents to pay.

School fees and fundraising put school boards and staff in the position of having to raise money to pay for public services. This takes time and energy away from educating and administrating. In fact, we have a principal in St. Albert that has given up her position because of the time spent on other things rather than education.

Currently the School Act allows school boards to charge fees to cover the cost of instructional supplies and materials. Tuition fees are not allowed. In 2005 the Alberta School Boards Association released a report showing that while income from school fees remained relatively stable from 2000 to 2003, around $31 million, they began increasing thereafter and reached $40 million in 2005. This amounts to an average fee of $70 per student each year. There is currently no cap on what school boards can charge in terms of fees. This means that students in one jurisdiction can pay fees that are entirely different from students in another. Furthermore, there's no unified policy on how to address parents who are unable to pay. Recently there was some controversy in Alberta when a school board directed a file to collection agents.

The government has firmly supported the right of school boards to raise funds through school fees but has also refused to provide adequate funding to school boards. Fully covering the amount of funding gained through school fees would represent only .78 per cent of the current education budget.

The Alberta Learning Commission made the following recommendations regarding school fees. Recommendation 95:

Set province-wide policies on school fees that would:

- Prohibit fees to cover the costs of basic education items
- Detail what charges can be levied and set maximum caps on school fees
- Allow reasonable fees for extra-curricular activities.

Following these recommendations, the government pledged to define and set province-wide policy on what is considered basic and what are considered extras in relation to fees. This has not been done, and we're still waiting.

Provincial comparisons. The government of Newfoundland and Labrador increased the education budget to cover the revenue previously gained through school fees. The province decided to take this step to reduce regional inequity, reduce confusion, and ease the financial burden of parents with school-age children. The situation in British Columbia is quite different from that of Newfoundland because the change to school fees came about as a result of a legal challenge rather than a change in government policy.

In Alberta a situation could not happen because the School Act gives the school boards the right for instructional materials. The preamble lays out that children should have access to the same basic level of education regardless of their income or region of residence and that the government is ultimately responsible for funding public education. That's the layout of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Section 49.1 is amended to clearly prohibit school boards from charging school fees or fundraising to pay for any programs or supplies required to complete recognized courses in the public education system. Section 49.1(2) of the bill allows school boards to charge fees or fund raise for extracurricular activities. Sections 49.1(3) and (4) provide protocol and a timeline for schools to repay funds that were raised for purposes that contravene the act.

Section 60(2)(j) is repealed. Section 60(2)(j) previously allowed boards to "charge a parent of a student fees with respect to instructional supplies or materials." This is now disallowed.

Section 147.1 is added. This section will ensure that the revenue lost from school fees will not negatively affect the quality of education in Alberta. Following the passage of these amendments, school boards will submit a report to the Department of Education detailing the effects of lost revenue from school fees. The minister is then required to develop an action plan to ensure that revenue lost does not negatively affect the quality of education in our province.

Mr. Speaker, I'll stop there. I have some other things here. We'll open it for further discussion.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It does give me, actually, great pleasure to speak today because it gives me a chance to correct some of the misinformation that this member and his colleagues have been spreading far and wide across the land. As with many Liberal proposals this one on the surface seems maybe okay, but if you start to peel back the layers of the onion, it is fraught with lots of problems.

First, let me talk a bit about charging of fees and about the fact that the hon. member says that public education should be free. Well, we happen to believe on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, that nothing in life is free, and certainly education and health care are not free. They're public and accessible to all, but they're not free.

Let me give you an example of why that should be. Let's take the example of textbooks. Now, let's assume for a moment that we are charging fees, which is really a rental of textbooks, and if all of a sudden school boards didn't charge those fees, what incentive would there be for students to bring back those textbooks to be used again and again? What incentive would there be for students to simply not bother remembering where they happened to leave their textbook? Because it was free. So, Mr. Speaker, I think one of the reasons that we have fees is to ensure that there's some accountability in the system.

But I think what I'd like to spend a little bit more time on is the whole area around comments that this particular member and his colleagues happen to be making consistently, words like inadequate funding for education, underfunding for education, starvation diet for education. If those were the words that actually described our education system in this province, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the following questions: why do school boards across this province have combined accumulated surpluses of some $220 million, why do we have the highest paid teachers in Canada, and why are our student achievement results ranking among the highest in the world? That is hardly underfunding education.

So then we get to the $70 million that fees and fundraising actually contribute to education. I hear a lot from these guys over here about the Liberal plan. Well, let me say, Mr. Speaker: what they want is they want us to take away the ability for school boards to raise fees and fund raise. So that's another $70 million that we need to spend on education.

I just heard a few minutes ago in the debate on the last bill that the government should be spending about that much money again on child care spaces. That's not to forget about the constant request for full-day kindergarten and junior kindergarten. Then the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has the audacity to say that the government should write a cheque out of the heritage fund for $2 billion to cover the unfunded pension liability of teachers. Then, finally, there's the Member for Calgary-Varsity, who never wants to look at any alternative methods for funding school construction. He wants us to write a cheque for $3 billion. Where is this money going to come from, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Groeneveld: And we're going to put 30 per cent in the heritage fund.

Mr. Liepert: Yes. As my hon. colleague says, before we do all of that – spend more money on health care; spend more money on seniors' programs; spend more money on this, roads, high-speed rail – first, we're going to put 30 per cent in the heritage fund. Now, talk about booga-booga economics. Blowing and sucking at the same time. There is one way to accomplish what they say: raise taxes, bring in a sales tax, and go into debt. We are not going to do that, Mr. Speaker, so take your pick. If you like the Liberal plan – I've just laid it out for you – vote for it.

However, I think the real issue with this bill is where decision-making should be made. Should it be made at the local level, or should it be made here in Edmonton by 83 elected people and a number of people working in the Department of Education? I happen to agree that it should be at the local level, Mr. Speaker. What the current situation allows is for school boards to make decisions that apply at the local level. I don't want the Member for Red Deer-North to come to the Minister of Education and say: "You know what? A school in my constituency has a band, and they want to go to a competition, but because the Liberals wouldn't allow us to raise funds, Mr. Minister, would you approve some money so that my band can go to a competition?" I don't want to do that. I want the school board to make that decision.

So to quickly wrap up, Mr. Speaker, I would like to encourage all members of this House to not support this bill for three reasons. Number one, school board associations are currently reviewing this issue, and they are going to come forward with some recommendations soon. Let's let them do the job that they were asked to do. Secondly, this is bad legislation based on bad policy, and third, the system we have in place actually works because we let local people make the decision.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Oh, boy. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, support local autonomy, and that is true local autonomy where school boards would actually get the funds that they need so that they can make the decisions at the local level. At a time of year when all of us are looking forward to spring, schools across Alberta are planning for fall. Principals are being appointed, staffing levels and enrolment projections for next year are being analyzed, and school fees are no doubt being looked at so that schools can make up the difference between what they receive from the province and what they need to operate their programs so that all children can learn.

School boards across this province have the goal of educating all young Albertans. I see it in the mission statements of every board and school that I visit, yet boards and schools continue to have to dip into that often shallow well of parents' pockets. There seems to be a commonly accepted feeling that parents can, quote, pay for the extras, and this has been sold to the public as anything that is an enhancement to the basic programs that schools offer. What are the extras? How are schools to know who can pay and who cannot pay?

What are some of these fees used to pay for? Textbook upkeep or deposit fees are requested by many schools to pay for the worn or destroyed texts. Schools ask for field trip money to teach through experience. Student activity fees are often requested to promote school community and positive interaction. Some schools even request parents to buy and pay for Kleenex. The list goes on and on depending on the school one attends.

Are these items really an enhancement? Is it an enhancement to ask that textbooks be provided in a reasonable condition without having to pay? Is it an enhancement to provide hands-on experience in different settings that will help children learn? Is it an enhancement to have children learn to build a healthy school community and fun activities? Finally, is it an enhancement to have a ready supply of Kleenex in the classroom?

Should children from low-income families have to take money away from their food, rent, or transportation to pay for school fees? Should schools that sympathize with these families be forced to absorb the costs of these fees from their regular budgets and forgo maintenance, professional development, or school supplies such as Kleenex? Should teachers be told that their budget for sick time is dwindling because of paying for programs and that teachers need to limit time off when ill? Principals are being asked to make tough decisions to pay for the essentials to run a comprehensive program that seeks to educate all children while trying to enhance the educational and life experiences of our children.

If we are to support the mission of our schools to educate all children equally and not penalize all school budgets that try to support low-income families, we have to look at how to support parents in their difficult job and schools that are trying to teach our kids curriculum but give them the life experiences that teach them to be strong citizens and contributors to the future of our great province. We often tend to overlook this latter point of building strong citizens in favour of strong test results on provincial achievement tests. It is almost as if we feel that achievement results exclusively translate into a strong community. There's no question that students' achievement is important and contributes to citizens who can innovate, invent, and become productive citizens; in other words, contribute to our economy and quality of life.

But our economy is only one important piece of what it takes to build a strong human being that is able to interact positively with others, be a good spouse, care for their children, serve the community, and be productive economically. By providing many of the extras, we are building our children into strong human beings, and surely this will have positive impacts for all of us.

How many of the members here today can think of instances where they learned many of the great lessons of life from our experiences outside of the classroom? Most of us will say that these experiences changed our lives fundamentally. It might have been an experience that led to an interest in public service or an interest in law or teaching or health care or the environment or engineering. I believe we all recognize the need to build our children in a variety of ways and even more so in the increasingly complex world we live in. As the role of the family has changed over the last generation or more, our schools have taken on many of the responsibilities that the family had in the past. Whether we support this notion or not, schools are taking on many of the roles of the family. For many of our children the school is the family.

This bill calls for the end of school fees for all children and families in Alberta. If we are to truly leave no child behind, as our cousins to the south are fond of saying, we need to provide the opportunities for success to all of our students, and this means that principals should not have to take money from necessary programs in order to subsidize families that cannot afford to pay. In a Chamber such as this, where all of us speak of the future with great hope for what we can achieve, we need to take the lead and eliminate an obstacle in reaching this future. We can leave no greater legacy.

As schools now plan for September, many parents wonder whether they will get the money to give their child what all the others have while others dread having to pull out their wallets yet again to pay for things we should all be able to count as valued. If it is important enough to be happening in our schools, it should be important enough to be funded appropriately. By passing this bill calling for an end to school fees, I believe the government can lead us to a healthier education system and stronger communities.

This September holds the opportunity for families to see the new face of an education system that values the actual needs of children and the experiences that will provide for a healthier and stronger Alberta. Is it the case or is it not the case that every student of every economic status has the right to a quality public education free of charge in Alberta? If this is the case, then we must ask why it is not in fact happening in public schools throughout the province. If school fees are needed in order for schools to meet the cost of providing basic services and supplies to students and replace used or abused texts and equipment, then the gap between what is being funded and what needs to be funded must be bridged, not through the levy of extra fees or through the vehicle of fundraising but by the implementation of adequate funding for all provincial public schools.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege today to be able to rise and speak to Bill 208, and I'd like to thank the hon. Member for St. Albert for bringing forward this bill. I think he's put his finger on a very important subject area, and it's one that I'm glad to contribute to the debate on.

As I look at the preamble of the bill, it says, "Whereas every person has the right to public education." I don't think there is a member in this Assembly that does not believe that. I mean, I've always felt very blessed to live in a country that valued education and had public education accessible. Last week I was meeting with somebody in my church congregation as they described to me living in a country where that was not available and how blessed they felt to be able to come to a country where they did not have to worry about that for their children. So sometimes I think we lose track of what a great privilege and how happy we are that in this country we believe in it, that we know that it's the right thing to do.

But as I look at the bill, I see it as having two different issues. The first is fundraising, and the second is school fees. In the bill the member says that it would restrict a school operating by a board from raising funds for extracurricular activities offered by the school, or if you go to 49.1(1):

No school operated by a board shall charge a student or a student's parent or otherwise raise funds for services or supplies required by courses of study or education programs prescribed, authorized or approved by the Minister under [certain sections].

Now, I was a parent council chair and involved in parent council for many years, and I know as I visit with my parent councils today that if I was to say to them tomorrow that I was supporting this bill, I would probably get some push back from my constituents. They, fundamentally, as parents have organized under the rules that we've placed, and they have told me on many occasions that they participate because they want to, that it is their choice, that there are things that they would like to provide for their children above and beyond what is provided by a public education system.

I look at things like, for example, school band programs. There are very, very well-organized parent groups that help support school band programs, send kids on band trips. My own children – I have four of them – participated for many years in a school band program that I helped fund raise for. I also know that there are other things that they provide.

Now, I often hear people say, "Well, we have to fund raise for textbooks," and I've heard many superintendents of school boards tell me and assure me that parents do not have to fund raise for textbooks, that those funds are provided. Often that is used as, I call it, the red herring of the educational debate. I would say to you that when I was in the parent council chair position, we did not fund raise for textbooks. Now, sometimes school curriculums changed, and it did create pressure because there were all new textbooks required. But, generally speaking, we never raised for textbooks.

That being said, I would say to you also that the entire world is changing in the textbook world. I mean, I hear teachers tell me now that they don't want one textbook. They want a chapter from one textbook and a chapter from another. The technology is starting to allow them to make and create innovative programs for their students.

So the old debate about whether we're fund raising for textbooks I think is a red herring. But I will say this to you. I know that the parents that I represent would resent my coming in and making laws that prevent them from raising money or choosing to raise money on behalf of their children for extras. They would. I know that they would. I know that they would push back. It's one of the reasons that I have a bit of an issue with this bill.

The other is this idea that fees haven't existed. I remember carrying boxes of kleenex to school. I remember carrying school supplies to school. In fact, I remember the day that I graduated from high school and going across the platform and opening up my diploma, and it said: you owe $10.35, and you will not receive your diploma until that fee is taken care of. So I had to go and ransom my diploma for $10.35 in order to get it.

So fees are not new. They have existed over time. This suggestion that suddenly they're curtailing education or that there's some new piece because we're not funding properly I would suggest to you is not true. They have been around for a long time. When it comes to school fees, I would like to spend just a moment and talk about that.

As I said before, I think of education as the right investment and a good investment. For my four sons I had a variety of learners. Some needed more help than others. Some needed more supports than others. I could find lots of ways to support my boys educationally and in other areas of their life, but at some point there was an income line there that I had to live with, so we made choices as we do in everything that we do. The hon. Education minister talked about the funding that we do provide: a lot of funding. I think we decided that it was some 32 per cent of the provincial budget that is spent in this area.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Are school fees fair, or are they not fair? Under the act we give school boards the right to charge fees for supplies and materials. I think that if I were listening to my constituency, they would say to me that sometimes they think school boards go too far with fees. What they want from us as government is a more clear definition of what a fee should be and what it shouldn't be. I think I have some sympathy for them in that area, that it should be very much a clear direction from us as government as to what is and isn't a fee.

Could we do some better work around the definition? Yes. I do believe that we can and that sometimes, as parents show me the extent to which school fees have gone up today, they do have an argument, particularly when they have multiple children.

While I agree that there should be fees – and as the minister said earlier, things that are free are often not valued – and I do think that it does prepare and make people participate, I think a clearer definition would be one good aspect to this bill and one that I would love to see the minister take a longer look at. But at this point in time I can't support the bill because I don't believe my constituents would want me directing them about fundraising in their world.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Strathcona, then Edmonton-Decore, then Peace River.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in favour of Bill 208, but to begin with, I want to refute some of the allegations that have been brought against the provincial Liberal Party in general and Liberals in particular.

The hon. Minister of Education talked about Liberals and the clichéd phrases of tax-and-spend Liberals. Then he went on to say – and it was sort of echoed by one of his members – that if you don't pay for something, you don't value it. These are the standard sort of Fraser Institute responses, but the statement that I found the most amusing is the one: we let local people make the decisions.

Nothing could be farther from the truth than that statement. All you have to do is go back to 1994, when this government in its wisdom decided to take away the ability of the board to raise half of their operating budget through the education portion of the property tax. At that point, any individual discretion, any autonomy that boards had was taken away by this centralist government, which does not like to be interfered with in their day-to-day process by the federal government in Ottawa but has no problems reaching in, tying strings around, micromanaging every part of, whether it's the school boards' or the city councils', budgetary decisions.

It is the equivalent of a spider web. Every allotment that is provided comes with so many restrictions that the word "autonomy" is absolutely lost for local school boards. That's a shame because they're the local individuals whose decisions should carry the greatest amount of weight, but unfortunately they have to go cap in hand to this minister for any types of funding decisions.

Now, public education also involves separate education because the Catholic boards are part of the public board. Bishop Henry has made a very strong statement – and he had some difficulty with some of his parishioners, and some trustees initially took offence, but I think those offences and fences have been mended – when he said that he was against schools having to go out and take part in casino fundraisers or even the former traditional Catholic form of fundraising, which was the local church bingo. Bishop Henry spoke very strongly on this issue that it is the province's responsibility to fund education and that parents should be at home assisting their children or attending mass, as the case may be, but not attending casinos and other fundraisers to pay for the basics of education.

I agree very strongly with the bishop. If ever there was a tilting of the playing field, it's only those parents who are in well-to-do districts who have the time available because of their economic well-being to donate their time to attend casinos where the schools prosper. In those socioeconomic areas where the parents are forced by this government's minimum wage policy to have two or three jobs, they don't have the luxury of going and carrying chips or looking at the VLT and slot revenue that is funding education. This is a sad circumstance.

Now, the phoniness of the education portion of the property tax remains. The government collects this tax in the name of education. Does it go to education? No. It disappears into general revenue. So, please, hon. Minister of Education, don't ever talk about tax-and-spend Liberals. It's the phony tax and underspend Conservatives that delight in punishing people, including seniors, with property tax. Now, some of the seniors on fixed incomes get a break in that their increases don't show up on their tax bill, but they are still being taxed.

The other difference between members of the Liberal Party – and I believe I can speak somewhat for the ND Party, although they're very capable of speaking for themselves – is the idea that education is an investment. The money we put into education produces at least a threefold return.

Now, I would like to think that I know something about education, having spent the better part of my life, 34 years, as a teacher, and it was the lack of support for education that forced me to become more involved in the politics of education, first within the Alberta Teachers' Association, where I served as a member of the economic policy committee, the teacher welfare committee, from 1988 to 1998. I have worked with a variety of trustees, including the group that formerly was a member of the SPEAK group, support public education, act for kids. I worked with a number of individuals on that campaign because I saw that they had the best interests of not only their parents but their children in place.

Now, this government that claims to be concerned about the well-being of education represents – we've got 20 representatives in Calgary, the area where we're short 40 schools. We've got 40 districts without schools. We've got kids who spend a hundred thousand kilometres on buses. So this government is quite willing to spend money on gasoline. It'll spend money on buses, whether they be the city buses that are involved in a transit strike potentially now or whether they spend the money on the yellow buses. But when it comes to spending money at the school level, they have other concerns.

When I taught at F.E. Osborne – and I also, like the member across the way, was a member of our parent council for a number of years – we did a variety of fundraisers. We sold the entertainment books. My leadership kids as part of an environmental and economic circumstance recycled. What we found out was that with the exception of – and I'm not including the money that goes towards teachers' salaries, which is a large portion of the budget, but for everything else the money that the government provided for the basic operations, the day-to-day operations for the school accounted for only one-third of our total budget. When we looked at what parents contributed either to the cafeteria, to the junk food machines, to the casinos, any of the external fundraisings that parents were involved in, that accounted for two-thirds of the operational budget of the school. Out of that extra fundraising, out of that extra basic operations . . .

An Hon. Member: Table the numbers.

Mr. Chase: I'd be glad to. Thank you.

Out of those basic operations parents did the majority of the work. Parents got tired, whether they were Catholic or public parents, of trotting off to the casinos, but they wanted the best for their kids, and they understood that the government wasn't providing it. So they felt, morally and ethically, that they had to go out and achieve the best education results for their kids.

Now, since the early 2000s I have attended meetings with a group called Parents for Public Education. Dennis Locking is the chair of that group. His group has been extremely opposed to parents having to pay school fees. He sees this as another tax on parents that are already paying, as are all other property owners, the education portion . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

Thank you. I look forward to Committee of the Whole.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, then Peace River, then Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In listening to the Member for Calgary-Varsity and recognizing that some of my experiences are somewhat similar to his, having been involved with the economic policy committees and negotiating on behalf of the local teachers, I'm somewhat astounded how we have such diverse conclusions from similar experiences. We will differ quite greatly on this.

Mr. Speaker, probably no one likes fundraising less than I do. I have always been reluctant to be engaged in that activity although, certainly, when people do come along and they've got something that they're fundraising for, I'm always happy to participate in that, but not from the other side, not to be out fundraising and seeking to raise funds. So on the surface it might be quite simple to say: let the government pay for everything, and we'll do away with that fundraising.

I'd like to start at the back end of this bill where it talks about reporting on the impact of restriction on fees and fundraising. I notice in that part that the fundraising is quite absent from the reporting mechanism, and I'd like to talk briefly about the fallacy of the time spent fundraising, trying to put together a few dollars to support some school activity.

Oftentimes I hear about administration and staff in schools spending huge amounts of time fundraising. One hon. member just mentioned a minute ago that some vice-principal quit because of the time spent on things other than education. What a travesty: administration and staff out there fundraising for a few dollars when they could better spend that time teaching a class, reducing the time spent – wasted, I would say – fundraising. Rather, put it into the staffing component, reduce the costs that way, and contribute that money to whatever this other project is that would be of value to the school. It's a false economy to go and spend that time fundraising – and I will use the term “wasting” judiciously – wasting time fundraising when it could be better spent doing other things.

Certainly, fundraising is important for all sorts of things that people want to spend money on: to take off on a band trip or field trips of some sort or going here, going there. There are all sorts of things that kids are involved in that are very, very beneficial to them, so in many cases they fund raise to make the costs to the individuals less. In many other cases those are just paid for. If it's not in the school setting, people are paying for it all the time, whether it's minor hockey or whatever else, and nobody goes to the government with a request that those be funded.

It disturbs me a little bit that there's an absence in the bill about reporting on the impact of fundraising. I would also suggest that if there was reporting on this, it would be very difficult to get that information. Several years ago there was a great deal of hue and cry in this Assembly, and the Minister of Education at the time was asked: how come in Elk Island public schools the average fundraising was – and it was a huge number, like, maybe in the order of $400 or $500 per student. I had just left the school system at that time, and $400 or $500 seemed like an awful lot for every student, including the elementary.

Well, when I investigated further, I found out that the numbers that were being reported included things like cafeteria receipts, graduation fees, any money that came into the school system that was to pay for things like that. It was all wrapped together and inappropriately reported. It was a very negative attempt to tag the government with some kind of an underfunding scheme that the parents were paying several hundreds of dollars for each student to compensate for.

I agree with the Minister of Education when he talks about the claims being made about how badly underfunded education is. You know, for years we heard from the opposition and other folks that chronic underfunding – that was the watchword for years: chronic underfunding of education – yet we're the highest funded, our teachers are the highest paid, and we have the best results. This term gets repeated over and over again perhaps in an attempt to have people believe that. So I think it's lacking that we don't have in this bill: report on fees and fundraising. I would like to see that cost-benefit analysis of how much time is spent – and I used the term before: wasted – on fundraising when, in fact, that time could be better spent doing something else.

I think, too, that I agree with one of the members who talked about: “What if there was no more fundraising allowed? What if there was a blanket statement made that you will not fund raise for any school activity?” What would the parents feel about that when they would be unable to fund raise for all sorts of other things that might be happening?

I'd like to look next at the restrictions on fees and fundraising. That's part 3 in this bill. I've underlined here the word “required.” They can't raise funds for services or supplies required by courses “prescribed, authorized or approved.” A great many courses – and let's take some examples like the locally approved courses, the 25s and 35s. Those locally approved courses in many cases are completely outside of the offerings of other schools. So they offer these courses, and students in many cases will pay extra for them because they're some special course. Maybe it's phys ed 35, and they're going to do some special phys ed programs.

How about those hockey schools that are offered these days? We've even got some baseball schools. I think one of them is in southern Alberta. I forget the community that hosts it. What happens with those kinds of courses? Will there be no extra fees for promoting and sponsoring in a school system that particular course?

Now, to some extent what happens here in this definition where it says “required,” I think, is that largely this refers to what might be supplied by the school board. There are all sorts of things required for courses, from pens and paper to the textbooks themselves and to other things that might be required. What if a student has decided to take one of the shop courses and they have all sorts of wood that's required to make their projects? Who pays for the wood? Who's going to take care of that? School boards have assigned for those courses some extra fees, and they have to be paid for by somebody.

It was mentioned a little while ago this inaccurate statement about budgetary shortfalls and the estimate of the inadequate funding. At one point it was mentioned that it would be .78 per cent. I don't know whether that was of operating or total expenditures for the school board, all the school boards, but I think that that would require a little bit more investigation. I'd be really interested to see how much it would amount to.

In fact, it's not like this is going to come from – who knows where? It's going to have to be acquired from someplace. There was talk about property taxes a minute ago. What would be the impact on school property taxes to supply this extra shortfall? Somebody is going to have to pay for it. It's like it was going to be supplied by the government and would just come along at no cost to anybody.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are many parts to this bill where there are many questions I would have. Extracurricular activities: there's nothing restricting a school operated by a board from raising funds for extracurricular activities offered by the school. But in the first part it talks about the "prescribed, authorized or approved" courses. What about those courses offered by dance schools, where they get a credit-equivalent unit? There's some payment to those schools for courses offered in what would be definitely an extracurricular context. You're outside of the school system, yet this funding comes from . . .

The Speaker: I'm afraid we'll have to move on. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River, then Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've been listening, and there have been some interesting viewpoints on both sides of the House. The member was just speaking here with regard to band and sports schools. Well, having been with Edmonton public schools and a trustee for many years, approving some alternative programs because those are natural drawing cards to a variety of people as well as broadening the educational base, those specific programs – and we had hockey, and there were other sports ones – wouldn't have been considered as extracurricular activities because that was part of the ongoing, I guess, recruitment or activity that that person wanted to excel at, such as skiing.

They adjusted their school year to coincide with that activity so it wasn't prohibitive. If they were going to excel or perhaps go on to become Olympians or baseball players professionally as well as football or hockey, the school made those arrangements so they could fit it in as well as time for practice. So that wasn't really considered extracurricular; it was part of their educational experience, part of their out-of-school aspirations and dreams. So it wouldn't have been, you know, a part of this particular bill. It wouldn't have had an extra fee associated with it. They knew that the equipment and all the other services with it were just part of the program that they were trying to take, that they subscribed to, that they signed up for. So that was above and different.

With regard to band, well the band in itself – my son was at Wellington, and that school was known as being phenomenal fundraisers for the band. Again, that was part of the program that the people went into. That wouldn't have been extracurricular. They could still fund raise for that particular type of program. That's not what this bill is intending. It's not saying that you can't fund raise for the band. You can still fund raise for the band because that was a concern with the member across. In some of the cases the instruments cost thousands of dollars. They have textbook rentals as well – and I'll get on to that one – but for the band, they did it for offsetting some of the costs. Because of constant usage, you have to repair them, and they break down. So that wouldn't have been considered as part of this bill as a fee but perhaps as a user fee, which would be, I think, not subject to this bill.

We talk about doing fundraisers, period. Some of the times when the schools or parents were doing fundraising, they'd be raising for library books, not textbooks but library books, to be a complement to the overall experience of school as well as raising for computers, and they would do the big casinos. That would be considered essential services that would be supplied by the school, but somehow the parents always added and topped up because they knew full well that the schools wouldn't be able to provide $75,000 for a library of computers or to have another computer classroom.

One of these black holes that the schools continually fund raise for is computers. The technology changes so rapidly from year to year that the things are obsolete in a couple of years or the ongoing upkeep and maintenance of it. So that's what some of the parents are constantly and currently fundraising for.

When I was on the board – it must have been about four or five years ago – the now Minister of the Environment, I think, was charged with the task of determining what were school fees, and I thought that he had done a great job on that. But we are at the same thing about the question of fundraising. This is something that a lot of parents have angst about. I can't say that any of them are particularly supportive of, you know, going out there and doing it, be it the chocolates if they still do that occasionally, which I know they do, or the Mundare sausage, or it's going and doing bingo and casino nights. It is getting out of hand in some cases because you're also then doing the sports for the community as well, so some parents are at your door for three different events. But the point is: let's try and make sure that we know what fees are considered for textbooks or for essential rentals and what are just user fees.

When the kids go into junior high and high school, they end up paying fees for textbook rentals, the replacement costs. The school does the original purchase of the books. Say they're $85 to $115. They have a shelf life of so many years, but as the kids use them, they pay a textbook rental fee, and providing they give the book back in good repair, they get their fee back. [interjection] That's exactly it. So I'm not against that because that's fair and that's right. The kids know that, and the parents know that. That's altogether different than what this bill is trying to propose. [interjection] Well, again, all these varying opinions on this. We'll read it. We can read a book and come up with 15 different conclusions of it. It all depends on how you read the thing. But in this particular piece I don't see it as being prohibitive against that.

It's prohibitive against the basics, for parents using it to raise funds for essentials that the schools should be providing, such as, as I said earlier, the library fees and/or for computers. It shouldn't be included. Band is different because that is an extracurricular activity which you support such as outdoor education when they go on canoe trips. That would be fine as well because they know that that's an added experience for the kids overall, you know, in high schools where they do that. That would be separate, and that's not included within this bill, not included. So that would still be allowed, as far as I know.

So, again, Mr. Speaker, there's a lot to still contemplate in this. I would support this bill, but it maybe could use some tweaking or some amendments from both sides to have it completely palatable. I think the intent of it, reducing the burden on Alberta families as well as the fees, would certainly be appreciated by all families here in Alberta and, I know, those within the Legislature who do have kids as well that are experiencing it. So I would urge, you know, both sides of the House to be receptive and at least hear and be mindful of what some of the members are trying to propose for this because it isn't all bad. Some of it is actually quite good.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just rise briefly partially in support of the Minister of Education and his comments on Liberals and Liberal philosophy and maybe on a couple of members opposite. I do agree that you can't do it all. The members have argued: we're going to do all of this plus we're going to save 30 per cent. The other night in the housing debate a few members in the ND caucus as well as the Member for Calgary-Varsity argued: yes, we can do all of that; we can supply all of the housing, and we'll still save 30 per cent. At some point, you know, you have to understand that there are trade-offs in governance because the taxpayer is not an endless funder of all the things that we might like to do in this Legislature. So we have to keep that in mind.

With regard to Bill 208 I support the minister in that I don't think this should be supported. The hon. Member for Strathcona pointed out that basic education is already covered, and the minister himself pointed out that we have quite possibly one of the best education systems in the world. We do.

Mr. Speaker, when I was young, I had a principal in school that I used to visit occasionally, and he said that probably the best thing you could do for the education system would be to bulldoze a school every five years. The reason for that, he said, was that upon bulldozing it, we should force parents to participate in the reconstruction of the school. In his experience the most successful schools and the most successful school programs were those which had a very strong component of parent involvement, some ownership. The minister, I believe, pointed out that if you give it for free, there's no valuing or no ownership in that and no incentive to partake or make it better.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods spoke long and eloquently about her beliefs on this bill. Certainly, it's not for me to question her passion on the issue of children and child care and education. She's devoted hours to the topic. However, she debated not whether we should be allowing fundraising activities for schools but what the school curriculum should be. She talked about citizenship and values, a very large broadening of the definition of basic education, as I understand it, in this province. Maybe that's a debate worth having. It's not a debate worth having while we're discussing a bill on whether we should be raising funds. That's not a backdoor way to talk about changing the whole education system.

I believe we have a good system in place, Mr. Speaker, and I support the minister. I believe we should defeat the bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that the government members are talking about local autonomy. Having been a school board member, I remember when we practised some local autonomy, as did the Member for Edmonton-Decore. After the provincial government got involved in terms of arbitration with the teachers' strikes, in fact, we waited for some help, and then when we went public with that debate, we were told: oh, we must be wasting all our money, that we needed to be audited, that obviously we weren't responsible enough. So it's all right to say that it's for local autonomy. It's local autonomy to do all the least desirable things that the government wants us to do. That's what local autonomy means to this government.

This debate has been going on for a long time about what is essential. You know, in terms of what is extra, the bill very clearly says that fundraising for extracurricular activities can be allowed. I read that very clearly. But, Mr. Speaker, we have not come to grips – and we've been trying to do it for four or five years – with what is essential in terms of the school programs. We still haven't come to that definition, and until we do that, we're going to have this particular debate.

Are computers in this day and age part of the program? Some would argue yes; some would argue no. A lot of the fundraising that I saw going on as a public school trustee had to do with computers in the schools. The schools and school councils felt that they were an absolute necessity to bring in.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, but the time limit for consideration of this business has now escaped us.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

High-speed Rail System

507. Dr. Taft moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately begin assembling land and/or negotiating rights-of-way for a high-speed electric rail line between Edmonton and Calgary with additional stops as warranted.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview in his capacity as the Leader of the Official Opposition has a speaking time limit of 20 minutes.

Dr. Taft: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

This is a very timely motion, in my view, Mr. Speaker, for a whole range of reasons. It is one that every member of this Assembly will be at least generally familiar with: the idea of building a high-speed rail link between Calgary and Edmonton quite possibly with a stop in or near Red Deer and other stops along the way, which could include the Edmonton International Airport and the Calgary International Airport. So you could get on a train in downtown Calgary, have one stop at the Calgary airport, one stop in Red Deer, one stop at the Edmonton International airport, and one stop downtown.

Indeed, I believe there's already provincial land available for such a terminal in Edmonton very close to the Legislature, just across 109th Street, which would be handy indeed. I also understand that the minister of infrastructure has recently overseen the purchase of land in central Calgary, in downtown Calgary, for an equivalent potential terminus there. That is, in my view, a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, the whole point of this motion is to keep that process moving because even as we speak, given the rapid development of land in the Edmonton-Calgary corridor we are losing easy and inexpensive access to the necessary rights-of-way for a high-speed rail link. Businesses are expanding on lands which would be right on the right-of-way. Subdivisions are expanding on land which would be right on the right-of-way, other infrastructures coming and overlapping that right-of-way. Every time that happens, it makes it just that much more difficult and that much more expensive to fulfill the dream of a high-speed rail link between Calgary and Edmonton.

In fact, something for us all to keep in mind is that it's common for the greatest expense in constructing rail links not to be the railway itself and not to be the cars and the engines or the stations or anything else. It's common for the most expensive portion of these projects to be actually just expropriating or purchasing the rights-of-way for the line to be built. So this motion is intended for the government to get on quickly with assembling the land or negotiating the rights-of-way for that rail line so that that can be undertaken before the opportunity gets too expensive.

Now, I'm sure that every member of this Assembly has carefully read this motion. I can see various ministers smiling at the idea, but they will have noted that this actually would not commit the government to constructing or financing the railway itself. This is a more prudent motion than that. We're simply saying: let's keep this option open; let's assemble the land and the rights-of-way now so that whether we choose to proceed with a high-speed rail link next year or in 10 years or in 25 years, the option will be there for us. That's why I think this is an important motion for all members of this Assembly to support.

The question is, I think: what vision of Alberta does this motion support? Certainly, it's how the opposition – I might say visionary opposition – foresees the future of Alberta. We see a future in this province where the big cities are linked, where all Albertans are linked, or at least many Albertans are linked through a rail system. We see a future in which there's an integrated transportation plan for this province that works at many, many levels. It works right from the level of local neighbourhoods where there might be public transit stops or smaller arterial roads feeding into larger systems like rail transit, LRT, or C-Train in Calgary, which would in turn feed into something like a high-speed rail link. Those would also have to, in our vision ought to, interlink with airports, with truck terminals, with roadways, a fully integrated transportation system. This, Mr. Speaker, could be the absolute jewel in the crown of that transportation system, but the only way we can achieve that jewel, the only way we can make it shine in all its glory would be to begin now by setting aside the rights-of-way and negotiating the land.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the possibilities from this project are genuinely exciting. There's every possibility that, for example, a student at the University of Calgary could take the C-Train there down to the terminus of the high-speed rail link, zip up to Edmonton; could leave right after breakfast and be in downtown Edmonton, here, observing the proceedings of the Legislature, for example, to write a paper for a political science course – all right; I'm getting thumbs-up from various members here – and be back at home before supper.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Or I think I could imagine an engineering technology student from NAIT working on a specific project that actually requires collaboration with a lab at SAIT and those people being able to zip back and forth on a high-speed rail link in a way that is safe and that is efficient and that is environmentally very friendly.

A couple of months ago there was a very exciting ballet program in Calgary featuring the music of Joni Mitchell. There's no reason in the world that people from Edmonton couldn't, with a high-speed rail link, zip down in an hour and a half, take in the ballet, and be back at home before midnight.

Once that high-speed rail link is established, I can imagine a kind of liftoff occurring for this province, in which the spinoffs, the synergies, the cultural enrichment, the intellectual energy in this province just goes to a higher level. I think that's the kind of future we need to look to for this province because if we just stay with the same old plans that we've had for the last many decades, we're going to end up in the same old places. So in a general sense a vision for this province with a fully integrated transportation plan featuring, among other things, a high-speed rail link.

Now, I realize that there are serious economic questions to address with a high-speed rail link, and I don't want to rush into this. It may be that it's not initially feasible. There are people who say it is, and there are people who say it isn't. I've frankly found myself wondering: if we have the rights-of-way secure, do we have to go immediately to a high-speed rail link, or could we just have any old passenger rail link? I mean, why is it impossible to get from Calgary to Edmonton by train?

Mr. R. Miller: Well, you can do it, but you have to go to Vancouver.

Dr. Taft: Without going through Vancouver. It just doesn't make any sense. It used to be that there were Dayliners; there was rail service.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the traffic on highway 2 and the wear and tear on highway 2 is huge. It seems to me just basic logic that we need to be looking at passenger rail service between these two cities.

The current rail system poses a lot of problems. It was constructed many, many decades ago. It runs right through the middle of all kinds of small towns. There are a tremendous number of level crossings. There are huge safety issues. All of us who remember the old days of the Dayliner and what seemed like a crash a month will remember that. So that would not be acceptable, but there have got to be other ways of doing it. There are cities around the world that are linked by train.

One of the reasons, of course, that people are going to train use more and more is the environmental concerns about heavy use of the automobile. [some applause] That's getting stirring applause from the Assembly. Many of us will be alert to the fact that the climate change issue is beginning to overtake many, many other issues, and I think we're only beginning to feel the impact of that. While it's often said in here that burning coal and exploiting the oil sands generate all kinds of greenhouse gases, as they do, so does transportation, Mr. Speaker. The transportation sector is one of the largest contributors to greenhouse gases and, therefore, to climate change. As climate change accelerates, we're going to see greater and greater pressure to get away from gasoline-powered and diesel-powered cars and trucks, and the obvious choice is to train.

You will notice, in fact, in this motion that we specify "high-speed electric rail line," and there's a reason for that. In our view, an electric high-speed rail line has the greatest potential to have the least environmental impact. We can imagine at some point electric generation through various means. It could be clean power. Maybe it could be nuclear power in the dreams of the Tories. It could be something else. But electrical generation doesn't produce greenhouse gas emissions and therefore a high-speed train from Calgary to Edmonton that has absolutely minimal environmental impact and carries thousands of passengers a day.

So I think the environmental issues here are going to ultimately force – force – this project to go ahead. We're going to see the price of gasoline and diesel get higher and higher, the price of the carbon generated from those fuels get higher and higher, and at some point people will absolutely insist on a rail link between the two cities. So let's get on today with acquiring the rights-of-way to establish that link.

We also need to compare the cost of the railway with the cost of maintaining and expanding highway 2. Many of us here will drive highway 2 many times a month, sometimes several times a week. All of us will know that many stretches of highway 2 are in poor states of repair. I should be, perhaps, more correct in my term and call it the Queen Elizabeth II motorway, the QE II. Anyway, it's got many names. We all know it as the road from Calgary to Edmonton.

It needs expansion. The traffic loads are enormous. It needs major repair. All of that is going to cost a tremendous amount of money. Adding an additional lane in both directions to that highway would cost hundreds of millions of dollars or perhaps more. I mean, we can't even get highway 63 to Fort McMurray twinned. I can only imagine the cost and delays in expanding highway 2 between Edmonton and Calgary. So if we're going to put money into that, maybe we should instead consider putting some kind of support into an improved rail link for passengers between Edmonton and Calgary. I could go on at length on this.

There are two competing bids for this project, Mr. Speaker. There is one which is, I believe, being advocated by one of the major railways – I don't need to name which one – which would use the current rail line between the two major cities. As I indicated a few moments ago, there are a lot of concerns with that. That line runs right through places like Ponoka and Wetaskiwin and Hobbema and many, many other centres. That's okay, perhaps, for freight traffic, but if you're getting high-speed passenger traffic, it raises a lot of concerns. It's also a less straight route, and if we want to have the potential for a true high-speed rail link, we want to have as few curves as possible on this line.

There is a competing proposal, which would see a brand new line constructed with only a very, very small number of curves in the entire length of the line. It would bypass or avoid, I think, virtually every town between the two cities, except those where there were scheduled stops, so that would be in some ways a better option.

The question is coming up, and it's a very important question: what cost? I will be forthright here and say that the costs I've seen from the backers of either proposal don't convince me that they're right on top of this one. We all know how much the costs for construction are escalating. There's no reason to think that costs for railway construction won't be escalating as well. So we do need to be very careful for the cost. But I can tell you that the quickest way for us to secure the cost of this in the long run is to get on today with this motion, with securing the rights-of-way for the high-speed rail link.

So, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to some animated debate on this motion, and I look forward to an open vote on this. It'd be fun and good for democracy to have a free vote on this motion, given that it is a motion. It's not binding on the government; it simply urges a general action upon the government. So I will do my best to respond to questions, and I will be paying close attention to any comments that any members of this Assembly might have.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened attentively to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview's comments. He preceded his comments by saying that his vision for the future and the Liberal Party's vision for the future on this particular topic, on the topic of a high-speed train, is 20/20.

Well, I hate to tell the member that his vision may be 20/20, but he needs to turn around because he's looking back. If he checks the records carefully, this issue has been debated in this House not that long ago. As a result of the debate in 2004 the Van Horne Institute performed a feasibility study on the issue of a high-speed train. That was in 2004; this is 2007. Van Horne indeed indicated that perhaps such a mode of transportation would be feasible, but there would be a great deal of taxpayers' money involved if this government was to proceed with this particular project.

A prudent thing to do any time spending government dollars on a project of this scale would be to find out, one, if Albertans would actually use such a mode of transportation between Edmonton and Calgary. The second one: why not find out how much they would pay to use such a mode of transportation and which technology is best for this project? As we all probably will agree around here, there are many different variations of high-speed trains that could be implemented. [interjections] It is great that the members for Edmonton-Rutherford and Edmonton-Decore are so enthusiastic about it, but maybe if they just listened, they may learn something.

Before acting on this particular project, it would be reasonable to consult on this study. After debating the high-speed train in 2006 in this Assembly, the Assembly decided that this government was not in a position to fund this mode of transportation exclusively, and that is the reason why then Motion 501 failed. Well, the objections to Motion 501 have not changed since that time, and just to refresh the members' memories, some of the objections included the source of funding for a high-speed rail – no answers have been found yet – which train and rail type should be used, how long it would take the train to travel between the two centres and how many stops should there be in between, how Albertans living close to the line would be affected, how much a ticket would cost, and Albertans' desire for this type of transportation. Those questions have not been, to date, answered conclusively. Hence, perhaps the motion is premature at this time, as 501 was in 2006.

Notwithstanding this, it is important to stress that this government has not set aside the idea of a high-speed train, because I agree with the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. A train between Edmonton and Calgary would open up many possibilities. First of all, on a world scale a population of 3.2 million people: we are hardly a medium-sized city in Asia or Europe. Now, with a high-speed train, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview indicated, a student could actually live in Calgary and attend NAIT or vice versa. We would become more of a centralized market and have more of a combined economic power on a world scale. However, the results of the market assessment are not yet in, and we are awaiting the results.

Notwithstanding this, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has indicated, this government has been taking steps in securing land, and the most recent acquisitions were the ones in Calgary. The rights-of-way are being protected, as we speak, throughout the corridor between Edmonton and Calgary. More problematic issues arise in Calgary, I understand, than they do in Edmonton as we do have some corridors that have been vacated by other rail lines that would make it possible for us to proceed.

So is there work being done? Definitely there is work being done. Rights-of-way are being secured. There is a feasibility study in progress of which we will receive results in the short, forthcoming future. We are consulting with Albertans to find out what mode of transportation they will be using, how they will be using it, where the stops should be, and how many of them should be in between here and there. Hence, Mr. Speaker, reading the motion as stated right now, one would conclude that nothing is being done because it urges government to commence work on this project where the work is more than in progress. We're in the midst of studying this particular issue.

What I will do, Mr. Speaker, is table an amendment to the member's motion, and the amendment shall say:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue assembling land and negotiating rights-of-way for a high-speed rail line between Edmonton and Calgary with additional stops as warranted.

I will table the appropriate number.

Mr. Speaker, indeed, I am glad that the Liberal opposition is on the side of this government and will support this government in continuing its work to study and acquire rights-of-way if, indeed, this train system becomes a feasible and desirable project.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll just distribute the amendment, and if you want to, you can use the remainder of your time to speak to the amendment. Hon. member, did you wish to continue to speak on the amendment?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as circulated, the main variations in my amendment will include that we will be striking out “immediately begin” and substituting it with “continue”. Also, we will be striking out “/or”, section (b), and striking out “electric” because we do not have conclusive studies at this point whether, indeed, this source of energy and this source of propulsion is the most appropriate one. But, indeed, I am glad to hear that the opposition will be supporting the continuing work on this topic.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the amendment.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the spirit of collaboration and because I think it’s an important project and I wouldn’t claim to have all the answers, I think I can live with this as an amendment. My most specific concern is that the word “electric” has been struck out because I think that in the long term that is, as far as we know, the preferable way to go for reasons I outlined earlier. But if it’s a matter of getting this motion passed, then I’m happy to accept this amendment because I think it’s at least generally in the same spirit as what we were proposing. So there we go. I’ll accept the amendment.

Thank you.

5:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the amendment, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. Well, it doesn’t matter much to me whether it’s the amendment or we talk about the particular motion. Mr. Speaker, I think that in principle we agree that the high-speed rail link between Calgary and Edmonton probably down the way at some point makes some sense. I know that this debate has been going on for at least for 30 years that I can recall, so it’s ongoing. When is the right time? Who knows.

I would like to say, though, that we should take it in a broader perspective. The member talked about an integrated plan, and I agree with that. I think that’s where we should start as a province-wide plan. We’ve got a huge infrastructure deficit right now, and if we’re trying to build all the schools that we need and all the hospitals, some of them that are blowing up, and the roads that are falling apart all over the province, we need to deal with that too. It has to be put in some sort of priority.

The other thing that we need to do – and I think the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the Leader of the Opposition, was alluding to this. Our transportation in this country and generally in this province doesn’t make any sense at all. We could learn from what Europe does, for example. Everything works together. That’s why I say that we need a little broader approach than this. We should say: “How are we going to get people from Medicine Hat to Calgary and Edmonton? How are we going to get people from Grande Prairie, from Fort McMurray, certainly from other smaller towns? How do we work all this in an integrated way?” I think, then, the high-speed rail becomes part of that.

The problem that I see is that we have to again get all modes of transportation working together. It makes no sense at all environmentally or economically to have airplanes that fly between Calgary and Edmonton. They get up; they come down. And flying between Lethbridge and Calgary, for example, makes no economic or environmental sense in this day and age. Airplanes should be there for longer distances, trains for mid-length distances.

This is where the rail link between Calgary and Edmonton makes sense. But it should also make sense from other parts of the province, whether it’s a high-speed rail link or not. We probably need rail links between a number of places. Then buses coordinating their times, getting in there at the same times from the rural areas. This is what they do in Europe. They move millions of people very quickly because all of these things work together. Of course, this would take probably a federal approach for it to work, but we could begin to do some of these things in Alberta.

The member talked about environmentally, and we are buying up some land, I suppose. What that cost would be tomorrow in terms of supplying land is another thing. But I think we need to broaden the approach with transportation and look at right across the province and put it in perspective with dealing with the infrastructure deficit that we have. What priorities do we maintain?

Now, I know that we don’t have to make a decision, but I guess we are if we’re buying up land. At some point down the way we’re going to do that. In principle I have no particular problem with that, but I think the problem is broader than just the rail link between Calgary and Edmonton. It’s how a province grows immensely in population. There’s some speculation that we could be 6 million people if we go the way we’re going, if we don’t put the foot on the brakes. Six million people. The economic development department has said publicly to people that they expect 6 million people here in a very short period of time, you know, 2 million in the Edmonton area, 2 million in the Calgary area, 2 million in the rest of the province. We need to begin to do some long-range planning about infrastructure, about transportation and see how the rail link fits into all of it, Mr. Speaker.

As I say, in principle I have no particular problem with the motion as read, but I really do say that we have to take it in a broader context than just the rail link. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The debate on Motion 507 involves contemplating a whole new way of connecting the province of Alberta, and I’m very pleased to speak to the amendment. A high-speed rail connection between Edmonton and Calgary is something this government has been exploring for a very long time, and I appreciate that the opposition recognizes this. As we speak, the demand for such a project is being determined, and I’m eagerly awaiting the results of the market assessment study. The government has been proactive in taking the steps necessary to ensure what land is required for a high-speed rail system in the event that such a project is agreed upon.

Mr. Speaker, I’m convinced that a high-speed rail connection between Calgary and Edmonton would bring many benefits to our economy and to the environment and to the quality of life of all Albertans. Having travelled on high-speed rail on a number of continents for personal and professional reasons, I’m convinced that this is an idea that’s long overdue. A high-speed rail connection between Alberta’s two largest economic centres could help the flow of commerce driving Alberta, facilitate tourism, leisure and business travel, and be a reliable and expedient way to travel, especially if the trains were to go directly into the two city centres.

This sort of communal travel could be environmentally friendly. Fewer vehicles would be used, and high-speed rail represents an alternative to using one’s own vehicle. The train also has the potential to alleviate traffic pressures on the QE II by lowering maintenance costs, presenting an alternative to expanding the highway, and decreasing accidents on the highway. Depending on the type of service provided by this mode of transportation, Albertans in rural areas also could be presented with a choice of easily commuting to the larger cities to work.

In a report to Mr. David A. Martin, chair of the Alberta Value-Added and Technology Commercialization Task Force, which is dated April 16, 2007, there are a number of quotations I would like to bring to the attention of the House. Firstly, they mentioned that “Edmonton firstly, and Calgary secondly, were the first two cities in North America that built and operated Light Rail Transit systems.” Interesting that it’s Alberta that Americans came to when they were looking to learn how to build and run an LRT system. We were ahead of the curve, and we need to stay there.

They go on to mention five important points. One is that Calgary and Edmonton are less than 300 kilometres apart, and that’s the ideal distance for an HSR service anywhere. The second point is that the combined population of these two greater Alberta metropolitan areas is over 2 million people. That’s a watershed mark for successful HSR service. Number 3, successful high-speed rail service requires a dedicated roadbed. Number 4, successful HSR service is designed for the markets it intends to serve. And there are many, many different economic benefits.

They actually refer to an editorial from the Calgary Herald which reads:

Some may question the economic feasibility of building a high-speed rail that links Calgary, Red Deer and Edmonton, but the real cost is in doing nothing. Alberta is growing at a record pace and can no longer afford to sit back and watch this train pass it by. Linking the three cities by high-speed rail would create a massive economic unit that would put the corridor on the world map.

However – and I think that our Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor may agree – while there are many possible benefits to this sort of project, there are some issues that have to be kept in mind when determining the feasibility of the project. The Alberta government is leading by example by analyzing the situation before starting any large projects. Of course, cost is a huge mitigating factor. Capital costs are extremely high, and they are not known for certain. In our ever-expanding economy it’s hard to determine the exact cost of any large project of this sort. We’ve seen estimates anywhere from $2 billion to $8 billion, depending on which type of technology is used. We are all very, very well aware of the labour and material costs that are rising every day, as are real estate prices. But I will remind members that it could easily be argued that these prices will only increase, so now, indeed, is the time to do this.

Mr. Speaker, it’s worthy to note that while Europe and Japan have electrical systems – and I’ve ridden on them – they are subsidized. As has been mentioned, the Van Horne study showed that such an endeavour would not be viable without government funding. The role of government must be made clear before any action is taken. We have to be very clear on that. For high-speed rail to be viable in Alberta, the cost of a ticket, in the minds of the consumer, I’m sure, would have to be less expensive than a bus ticket or a flight or a tank of gas in order for people to see the link as an attractive alternative.

5:30

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the idea of a high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary is an interesting and exciting idea. The technology for this kind of travel is expanding every day. Some members may be aware that last month a French high-speed train broke the world record for conventional trains, reaching speeds of 574 kilometres an hour. It wouldn’t take long to get anywhere in the province. That being said, I’d like to further the idea of having a high-speed rail link between Calgary and Edmonton, but I’d like it to go further than that, of course to Red Deer, with a stop there, but other destinations. With time I’d like to see a high-speed rail link to Fort McMurray, Medicine Hat, and Lethbridge as well as Grande Prairie and Banff, just to name a few. Those are future plans.

In the meantime, I’m glad that Infrastructure and Transportation is studying the possibility of creating a high-speed rail link while it’s acquiring land in case it’s needed for the future. It’s very prudent. It’s very proactive. So I believe that the current government action is all that is currently required.

I look forward to seeing and hearing further debate by other members. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise and contribute to the Motion 507 debate this afternoon. I’d just like to point out to the Member for Calgary-Lougheed that we currently subsidize high-speed horses in this province to a rather extensive dollar figure.

Mr. Speaker, I would applaud the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for bringing forward this amendment, which looks like it has the support of the government. My concern, like that of my leader, is in taking out the word “electric.” Let me tell you why taking out the word “electric” causes me some concern. The reason why “electric” was included in Motion 501, which was debated in this House last year, and the reason why it was included in Motion 507 this year is because by using the word “electric,” for all intents and purposes you remove the so-called brownfield option; that is, the idea of following the current right-of-way with the CPR line, which, as the Leader of the Official Opposition pointed out, runs through a number of communities like Ponoka and Hobbema and Crossfield and Carstairs.

Not only does that put a high-speed train running through built-up residential areas and brings in all sorts of concerns, whether it might be noise or people violating the security fence and that sort of thing, but the other thing that it does for sure, Mr. Speaker, is it negates the possibility of keeping that line as straight as possible. In fact, we understand that as soon as you start adding curves and hills, then the speeds have to come down. When the speeds go down, the travel time goes up, and when the travel time goes up, the ridership goes down.

If you read the Van Horne Institute report, it’s built on attracting sufficient ridership to make it feasible. As soon as the travel time goes up, then the ridership goes down, and then we have a problem. So it’s important that we manage to keep the travel time down as much as possible, and that is the reason why “electric” was in the motion last year and appears in the motion again this year.

Now, I’m pleased to see that the government is willing to move forward on this motion with some amendments. One of the things that I noted when I was reviewing the debate from last year, is that two of the ministers of the day spoke out strongly in favour of land acquisition, and I’ll just quote very quickly from Hansard. The then minister of economic development, the Member for Lethbridge-West, said:

I do agree with the minister and others that have spoken in terms of making sure that we have the rights-of-way protected. In some cases we’ll have to go out and gain ownership of those rights-of-way, and I think that we should of course do that.

Then later on in the debate – or perhaps it was earlier in the debate – the Finance minister said in response to a previous speaker:

The hon. member does choose a good time to bring this up because the other point that we have to consider very strongly is protecting the right-of-way into downtown Calgary and into downtown Edmonton before it gets bought up.

Clearly, there's been support from the government in the past on this initiative, and it looks like we'll have it again if this amendment is successful in passing.

Now, I would like to point out that in the Van Horne Institute report, for a greenfield right-of-way – that is, the straight line that would accommodate high-speed electric or perhaps even maglev if somebody wanted to spend that much money – the total cost for land acquisition in 2005 dollars was $47.8 million.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. R. Miller: Forty-seven point eight million dollars only. In terms of the amount of money that flows through this treasury, clearly that's easily feasible and, in fact, less money – less money, Mr. Speaker – than is currently used to subsidize high-speed horses. So I think that even with the little bit of inflationary pressure that undoubtedly has taken place since Van Horne released that report, it's still very doable.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about the number of developments that are taking place already that are interfering with the greenfield option. I had a call not that long ago from the Red Deer airport authority indicating that on a farm just outside of their property, directly in line with where the high-speed train would have gone, a local resident just built a $2 million home. That sort of thing is going to continue to happen the longer we wait in terms of making this land acquisition, so it really is important that we do this and do this as soon as possible. I think the comments that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed made were bang on when he referenced a report that said: it's not how much it's going to cost us but how much it's going to cost us if we don't do it. That is a very valid point.

Also, there's been some reference this afternoon to the economic output. I've read a number of reports that show that both Edmonton and Calgary in terms of North American economic output right now rank somewhere in the low to mid-50s in terms of their GDP, yet when you put Edmonton, Calgary, Red Deer, and that power corridor together in one economic unit, as a high-speed rail system would do, it actually moves us up to number 16 or 17 North America wide. I'm sure that even when you look at major cities across Europe, that would rank us very favourably. So there are good arguments for doing that.

Another thing that I think is important to note is a softening in the position by the Edmonton airport authority over the last couple of years. With some new management and new direction at Edmonton airports there isn't the vehement opposition to the inclusion of a station on Edmonton airports' property at the international, as there once was. At their annual general meeting just two weeks ago the question was raised. Their concern is that they don't necessarily see this as something that's imminent, but they did indicate that they have spoken with the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, and they'd like to keep those communication lines open. They are very interested at this point in being part of whatever might eventually take place.

I would certainly urge the government and, in particular, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, as he's continuing to look at possible land acquisition, to please dialogue as much as possible with Edmonton airports. Certainly, although there was a time that they were not at all supportive of high-speed rail, with it becoming more evident that this is an idea whose time is coming sooner rather than later, I think there's a realization on their part that they would rather be a part of whatever does take place than be bypassed by it. So I would certainly implore the government and the minister to keep them involved, however possible, with that.

Mr. Speaker, there is, unfortunately, so little time when we do private members' motions to debate this, so since we've had a couple of speakers already speak in favour of the amendment, what I'm going to do at this point is ask if we can put the question on the amendment and return to the debate on the motion, if that's all right.

The Deputy Speaker: I have other speakers that have indicated their desire. Is the Assembly in favour of the amendment being put now? This would require unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: On the debate on the motion as amended, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'd like to support the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, who has realized that the light at the end of the tunnel is indeed a high-speed train, which he wants to get on board.

This is a case of all-party wisdom. This isn't a Liberal idea or an NDP idea or a Conservative idea. It's an idea whose time has come, as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed recognized. For once we can be ahead of the game. There was a time back in the late '70s when in Fort McMurray there were actually sewer lines and roads before there were houses. We're in the midst of a boom that we want to continue, and the high-speed rail will provide us with that economic connective opportunity. I do again reference the wisdom of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed in saying that this is not just a north-south potential. I'd like to add the east-west link.

While I'm not as well travelled as the member, I did have an opportunity this past fall to ride on the jet train or the speed train in France, which I took with my wife, first west to the Loire Valley and then back through Paris and down to Aix-en-Provence, and it was a wonderful ride. This was an electric train that approached speeds of 300 kilometres an hour. While I regret the fact that the electric part has been taken out of the amendment, I think that upon looking at all the studies, that electric option will probably be brought back. The diesel option is not environmentally sound. The magnetic option is considerably more expensive than the electric. So I think we'll get back eventually to the electric notion.

I've spent considerable time with Peter Wallis from the Van Horne Institute, which is located at the University of Calgary. Peter is also a member of the Calgary Airport Authority. I've heard him explain the values of the various systems. I've also heard from the independent group, that has a different approach to financing. They also have a different route, which basically parallels highway 2, the cost of which was previously listed at approximately $46 million, and I think those were 2005-2006 figures.

This train basically has us join the rest of the world in terms of realizing the economic support and potential. One of the beliefs that I have about this train is that under no circumstance should it share any part of the line with freight trains. The accidents that have occurred, such as in the States with Amtrak and so on, have occurred when passenger rail and freight were on the same line. I would envision a there-and-back circumstance so that the trains could be passing each other, so a double electric line would be my preference.

I'm very pleased that this House has the vision of getting ahead of the game instead of playing what we've been doing for the last 14 years, and that's been catch-up. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to join my colleagues in speaking in favour of the motion as amended. I believe that the economic feasibility of this line right now may not be there, but there will be a time in the not-too-distant future when the economics will certainly justify such a line. That may be in 10 years, it may be in 20 years, it could be in 60 years, but if we can look at some of the lessons from geographic development in places like Europe and Great Britain, I think we can learn something from that. The population of Great Britain only 200 years ago, at the time of the Napoleonic Wars, was about 11 million. It's now close to 70 million on the island of Great Britain.

I think that if we look at the population of Alberta, in the 1901 census the entire population of Alberta and Saskatchewan combined was approximately 159,000, and here we are now in the province of Alberta with a population of somewhere around 3 million. So if we care to extrapolate into the future, I don't think it takes much imagination to imagine a time when this population density in the corridor of Calgary-Edmonton would certainly justify a high-speed rail line. Therefore, I think it is prudent for us to proceed with accumulating the necessary land that we need in the future.

Again looking back to some of the examples in Europe, when the channel tunnel was implemented between France and Great Britain, there was a great deal of consternation, a great deal of difficulty in establishing that high-speed line across the densely populated countryside of Kent into the city of London. Of course, the longer we wait and the more that development and density build up, whether it be industrial or farms or residential, the harder it's going to be to accumulate the necessary land and the more expensive as well.

So I would just conclude by saying that I am very much in favour of this. I think it's a very forward-looking motion, and I would encourage all my colleagues to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to speak to the motion as amended. The original motion asked us to start, but of course, as we discussed, we started many years ago. The amendment says to continue, which is great, and we appreciate the Liberal support for our foresight.

Motion 507. This motion is laudable. Albertans wish to have environmentally prudent transport options and less congestion on our highways. Persons travelling between Calgary and Edmonton would certainly appreciate another affordable and reliable transit option. The ridership and therefore profitability of a high-speed rail line is still uncertain and therefore demands further study. A market assessment study is currently under way and should be completed in July.

Alberta can consider the feasibility of this system by also looking to the operation of high-speed trains in other countries. France, Germany, and Japan have convenient, reliable, and comfortable high-speed rail systems between their major cities. These systems succeed only because of their population densities and their dense intercity rail networks. These densities make the use of public transit a viable option for an entire trip. While Alberta does not yet have these sorts of densities, growth will possibly produce them in the future. By assembling land and rights-of-way now, Alberta will be able to construct a high-speed rail line when it is viable.

Without dense intercity transit options people want to have their vehicle when travelling in a city. This makes them more likely to drive for the entire trip. Further investment in light rail transit in Edmonton and Calgary may be needed before a high-speed rail link is built. Investing in light rail transit will help make a high-speed rail line a success.

Recent studies have indicated that there may currently be enough demand for a Calgary to Edmonton high-speed rail line. However, experience elsewhere indicates that forecasting demand for a nonexisting rail service is often difficult. Populations, employment, incomes, and economic linkage between cities are hard to predict. Costs of using other types of transportation, like airline fares and gas prices, are also difficult to forecast. An expensive undertaking like a rail link requires reasonable certainty that there is enough demand to justify the investment.

Traffic on the Queen Elizabeth II highway has increased dramatically in recent years. The construction of a high-speed rail link is one way to reduce this congestion and its environmental effects. If congestion or bad weather conditions on the Queen Elizabeth II highway are a significant concern to travellers, there are already mass transit options in the Calgary-Edmonton corridor. Both Greyhound and Red Arrow offer daily limited stops and express bus services. Airline service is available for those who require faster transit. However, Albertans may appreciate another transit option.

The government's potential role in the high-speed rail link is yet to be determined. The current policy is that the rail should be a private-sector initiative, but that does not absolutely rule out government participation. A high-speed rail link is a nice idea whose time may not yet have come, but we should be prepared for the future. This motion encourages the government to continue to be forward thinking and innovative in preparing for the time when this link is clearly feasible. I encourage all members to vote in favour of this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:50

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you. We might as well all get on the official record as on-board. Right? It is – are you going to stand, Mr. Speaker, and tell me that I'm out of time?

The Deputy Speaker: Have you spoken on this motion before?

Mr. Bonko: I have not.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you for allowing me to continue.

I think it is a good opportunity here for us to be able to acquire the necessary land. We're not talking about actually building the high-speed rail, but we're talking about the acquisition of the land, which is very important to be able to have the rail. One day, 10 years from now maybe at the latest, we would be able to have that thing, but it'll take a lot of time to be able to construct it. But first and foremost, what the motion talks about is acquiring the land, and apparently we're already doing that. It would be great to have detailed updates as to how successful or unsuccessful or what sort of obstacles we're facing currently because, as we say, as land becomes more and more valuable, as the population increases, as Alberta's opportunity continues to expand, that's the number one concern.

So I'm glad that we are so far meeting very little opposition with regard to this. It looks like everyone is in support. I again would like to lend my support to this as well. I know that we are going to run out of time here quickly, so I just wanted to get on record as saying that I do support the motion, acquiring the land. Let's see where the residents of Alberta go from there with regard to their support for actually supporting the rail. So far, I would encourage all members to support the motion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others?

Then I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to close debate.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Boy, it's a privilege to participate in a debate in this Assembly where lots of good ideas come up. It's all in the spirit of co-operation, and I thank all members for participating: Edmonton-Castle Downs for bringing forward an amendment that passed without a whisper of objection, the members for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Calgary-Lougheed, Edmonton-Rutherford, Calgary-Varsity, Calgary-Nose Hill, Calgary-Hays, and Edmonton-Decore.

I do notice that all those members who participated were from either Edmonton or Calgary, and I hope that doesn't indicate that this project is seen as strictly serving the two big cities because I think that it would be a great boon to the whole province, Red Deer most notably. If there was a stop in Red Deer, it could benefit very directly.

But as some of the ideas that have come out have been described, this could be the beginning of a very long-term rail network that connected Medicine Hat and Lethbridge and Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray and Banff or Jasper. It could be the beginning of an entire long-term transformation in transportation in this province. So it would have been great, if we had more time, to hear from members from outside the two big cities, but we don't have more time.

Some of the points that were brought up. We all agree that this is about looking at the future. This is about having a plan, having a vision and taking the province in that direction, and if we take the right steps now, we can move to that future much more smoothly and much more economically than if we just go willy-nilly and let the chips fall as they may. So it's great to see a spirit of planning and looking to the future in here.

I agree with the Member from Edmonton-Decore that it would be useful once in a while for the government, perhaps the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation if he's the one overseeing the acquisitions of the land or acquisition of the rights-of-way, to give some updates, or maybe if his officials are following this debate, they would from time to time provide the Assembly with updates on how those acquisitions are going.

There are, of course, lots of ways to structure this. One model is as we do with roads, which is that the public pays for the roads, and the users of the roads pay, of course, taxes, and they cover the costs of their own vehicles. Maybe, therefore, there should be public support for the infrastructure and a private-sector operator. Maybe it's all public. Maybe it's all private. I have no idea. There are lots of options. We don't have to sort those out any time soon. But we do need to continue purchasing the land and the rights-of-way for this to ever even be a possibility.

So, Mr. Speaker, I close by thanking all members for the good-spirited and well-intentioned discussion here. I look forward to the possibility of this motion passing with the full support of the Assembly. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 507 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that we call it 6 p.m. and that when we reconvene at 7 p.m., we do so in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:58 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 14, 2007

7:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/14

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

Energy

[Mr. Knight introduced the following departmental support staff: Mr. McFadyen, deputy minister; Mr. Borland, director, financial services; Ms Denman, associate executive director, electricity division; and Mr. Rodgers, business unit leader, gas development]

Mr. Knight: They're accompanying me, and we will, certainly, I think, Mr. Chairman, have an opportunity to have some very good debate tonight. We had, of course, one opportunity earlier with respect to our main supplements, and we're looking forward to, again, you know, a good debate and to bring forward some of the issues with respect to Energy's budget.

So with that, I think, Mr. Chairman, we would proceed.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, good evening and thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise with great interest in regard to the Energy budget because, of course, the ministry really is a significant driver of our budget here in this province. It is generating a very large single portion of our expenditures, so it's absolutely incumbent for all of us to ensure that that budget is functioning in the most efficient way possible. Rather than on an expenditure side we're looking at more of a revenue side in regard to Energy. The New Democrat opposition is very concerned and watches with a close eye what developments do take place in the Energy budget because this is the money that provides us with the ability to supply public health care and education and infrastructure and just a whole range of important public institutions.

I would like to focus this evening just, first of all, on the royalty rates because we are discussing royalty rates at this juncture now, and of course there is a review of the royalty rate system. I think it's important because the public has an interest in where our royalty rates go, but for the average Albertan it seems a bit complicated. But, you know, with a little bit of understanding and clarification here this evening I think that we'll actually be able to shed some light on the royalty structure and, hopefully, have a more informed public, with this very important debate, as I said, providing a good portion of our expenditures.

My understanding is that back in 1996 a new generic royalty system was brought about that affects the production agreements in common terms. This did not affect previous agreements that were grandfathered into the current structure. Oil companies do not have to pay more than the 1 per cent royalty on recovered oil until they have recovered all of their capital costs, usually in six or seven years. This, of course, is in regard to the tar sands. After full cost recovery the royalty rate jumps to 25 per cent. The provincial government instituted the 1 per cent royalty rate in the 1990s, when oil prices were below $20 a barrel. It is viewed as an incentive for companies to invest and to develop the oil sands. Previous to this reform the royalties were at the 30 per cent mark.

So, you know, my first question that I would like to ask the ministry, please, is: where do we want to see these royalty rates going? It's the view of the Alberta New Democrats that the royalty structure has lagged behind, first of all, the windfall profits that energy companies have been enjoying over these past few years. Also, the royalty rate has in fact been out of step with the production of energy because, of course, we're shifting our focus from conventional crude sources to the tar sands.

In doing so, it seems anyway that there's some loss of expenditures in our royalties. In fact, it seems like our share of the royalty rates has actually gone down in these past couple of years. So I would like to ask for some clarification as to why specifically that has taken place and why we have not taken measures, you know, in the last three or four years to correct that. Of course, even if you made a modest adjustment to royalty rates to reflect the windfall profits that energy companies are enjoying now, I think we would see a significant increase in our revenues from royalties.

A calculation that the New Democrat caucus developed based on a very modest increase that increased along with the price of crude oil and decreased if the price went down: we estimate that with a modest adjustment we would be realizing an increase of at least $3 million per day for royalty revenue coming into the province. So, you know, if people got wind of this or started to think about it in terms of daily expenditures, $3 million per day, Mr. Chair, is quite a significant loss. In fact, I think we developed those numbers almost three years ago now, so that would be probably significantly higher.

So that's my first focus of questions, in regard to royalties and building a structure that would ensure that, in fact, we are going to realize an appropriate level of monies from our royalty structure.

The second question that I would like to ask and invite comment on is in regard to bitumen. You know, the bitumen, of course, is a product that is partially refined from the tar sands process yet not entirely refined. It's certainly refined to the point where it can travel. The Alberta New Democrats, again, have a very serious problem with the export of bitumen out of the province of Alberta because we believe – and I think that our understanding is becoming more widely shared by Albertans – that this is a nonrenewable resource that is mined here in the province at considerable cost. We believe – and others believe as well – that it should be refined here in the province as well so that we take advantage of all of the secondary jobs that come downstream from the processing of bitumen into a more finished product, even up to the point of different lubricants or gasoline in the petrochemical industry.

You know, we had some great foresight, I believe, in regard to the natural gas industry here in this province more than 40 or 50 years ago, when the natural gas was here and plentiful and affordable, and the government encouraged industrial development of that natural gas to break it down into the fertilizer and plastics industries that we see in Fort Saskatchewan. So here we are probably 50 years later with a similar opportunity, but if we start to set up the mechanism by which bitumen is exported out of the province, then, in fact, that is a lost opportunity. It's a loss of high-paying jobs, and it's a loss of revenue because, of course, when you make a value-added product, you can charge more money for it and increase your revenues once again.

You know, in concert with this, then, I would like to just emphasize and seek comment from the minister again on just how we are going to control the rate of development in this province if we are moving at such a breakneck speed to mine and process and export as much bitumen as we possibly can here in the province of Alberta right now. In fact, wouldn't it be more logical and perhaps reasonable to put a self-limiting factor into place, where we only mine as much bitumen as we can process with upgraders into a higher grade finished product? This would be a natural limiting process that certainly wouldn't limit the economy because, of course, you're building a diversified secondary industry base based on upgrading and refining of bitumen and all the jobs that are associated with that, but then also you are perhaps putting a small limiting factor on how much of the raw bitumen is extracted at any given time. You mine it here, you refine it here, and you do that within the confines of the labour realities in the province, the infrastructure realities in the province, the environmental realities within the province, especially concerning water. Of course, there is a tremendous demand in both the extraction of bitumen and the refining and upgrading of bitumen into different oil products for using fresh water that's involved in those processes.

This is perhaps a nice sense of symmetry about the whole system. We're not just distorting the economy, digging these vast holes, and processing the bitumen to a very minimum amount to just be able to ship it down the line to refineries in the United States; rather, it's sort of more of a unified unit, we could say, where Alberta is enjoying all of the benefits that can be had from this wonderful natural resource that we have.

So I invite comment from the minister. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I certainly want to thank the member opposite for very constructive questions with respect to issues that our department faces and deals with on a daily basis. You know, the issue of the day, without a doubt – and I think the member brought it forward on a very constructive basis – is the idea around the royalties and the relative importance of this business, the energy industry, with respect to the province of Alberta.

I would support his comments by saying that the province of Alberta has a GDP somewhere in the neighbourhood now of $200 billion a year. Mr. Chairman, about 50 per cent of that, somewhere between $95 billion and $100 billion, is relative to the energy industry. So the member opposite is absolutely right that this is a very critical piece of business with respect to how Alberta develops in the future, and the decisions that we make today relative to that industry are extremely important.

Mr. Chairman, the royalty system: again, the member is correct. He goes back and talks about the generic system that was put in place in '96/97. The question that he had is: where are royalties going? I think that in order for me to answer that question directly, I'll have to qualify that the present royalty review is being conducted. The Ministry of Finance is the lead with respect to the royalty review, so where royalties are going will depend upon how Albertans respond to the review. We will take into consideration the outcome of the review. Most certainly, this government is going to be very responsive to Albertans with respect to that issue. That will be addressed at a point in time when some indication comes to us with respect to the completion of the review.

Certainly, there are issues around the whole royalty system. Again, the member indicated the 1 per cent and 25 per cent after payout and a certain number of years, you know, that it takes these people to reach payout. The average now is about five years. The system responds quite well to most economic circumstances. We have a situation now where there are rising costs and considerations like that that need to be taken into consideration. Part and parcel of this revenue stream is the land sales that we have in the province that are rather unique to our industry and, again, our tax structure with respect to this industry.

So the royalty review: you know, I've been asked this a number of times, and really, Mr. Chairman, what I would suggest is that it's not going to be my opinion. It's not going to be the opinion of the government that determines where royalties will go. As the member said: where are royalties going to go? We will be very consistent, I think, in respect to this review. We've been consistent all along and said that it will be open, it will be transparent, and at the end of the day we will listen to what Albertans and particularly what the panel have to say with respect to their report.

There was a question, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the business of bitumen, the mining of bitumen. Again, I think that it's fair to make some comments relative to bitumen because the resource base in bitumen in the province of Alberta is a world-class resource. A large portion of the bitumen production that takes place today is most certainly mining.

But, Mr. Chairman, as we move ahead with these projects, of course the member opposite knows very well that mining is actually the smaller end of that piece of business that will be conducted in the province over the next long number of years, I would suggest decades. Certainly, the in situ recovery of this resource is at least as important a piece of business and probably in the outgoing years would be a more important piece of this business than the mining is although, again, it's understandable that the mining today is relatively upmarket with respect to its visual context and that sort of thing. People have more of an opportunity, I think, to relate to the mining activity than they would do with in situ, which is, really, closer to what we would do with, you know, recovery of other resources.

There are kind of two questions here, I think, and I'll give a couple of answers. One was with respect to the natural gas, and I believe that was actually a question inside of this question. But on the idea that bitumen upgrading should be in some way directly connected to whatever bitumen production there is so that we would not produce more bitumen than we were able to either upgrade or refine in the province of Alberta, I would have to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that although it may have some attraction to certain individuals in Alberta, the idea really can't hold water, quite simply.

I think, again, the member would probably know that we produce about 1.1 million barrels, something in that neighbourhood, today: 700,000 barrels of it are upgraded; 400,000 barrels a day of this bitumen leave the province of Alberta as a bitumen product that's either diluted or it could be synbit, which is a mixture of synthetic oil and bitumen or bitumen and some kind of a diluent. That is a major piece of our business in the province of Alberta. If we were to go out today and say, "Well, you can't ship it; if we can't refine it, you can't produce it," we would shut down 400,000 barrels of production from the province of Alberta. I'm afraid that I would not be able to support us doing that.

I think also that it might be worth while to point out here – and perhaps we can discuss this a little bit more. Mr. Chairman, I think that if we're going to get value maximization in the province for these resources, we have to provide a basket of products that we can supply to clients in Alberta, in Canada, in North America, and certainly beyond our borders and internationally. So the whole concept around the proper balance with respect to developing these resources is also value maximization, and that means developing a whole basket of products that would take us into the integrated energy strategy, from bitumen to synthetic oil to synbit to bitumen that's got diluent, to the idea that bitumen upgrading refinery off-gases would end up in the petrochemical industry, and these again would produce value maximization and additional products for the province of Alberta to ship to Albertans and North Americans.

Certainly, some of our products, of course, as you know, Mr.

Chairman, already reach international markets. The idea that natural gas is being expended at a rate that is not sustainable with respect to what's happening in the oil sands industry: again, I would suggest that when you look at the conventional natural gas, conventional methane resources in the province of Alberta, these resources, like any hydrocarbon resource, I think, globally are finite. But there isn't really anybody that I know – I mean, there are all kinds of people that have theories about how long and at what rate you can produce for how long and that type of thing. The comments are well received, and we're aware . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the time allocated has elapsed.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the minister's comments. You know, this is a very critical issue that I just want to touch on very briefly, this bitumen export, because people understand that it's a nonrenewable resource, and so many people have a job that's associated with the oil and gas industry.

It's not a question of an either/or. I mean, certainly the scale to which we have exports already is clear, and I'm not advocating that you just shut off the tap. That's certainly not realistic, nor would it be practical. But you set in motion a mechanism by which you increase the percentage that does stay here, and you look twice at whether you need to approve five or six or seven new big projects up in the tar sands to continue that process because what we've set in place is the mechanism by which export is becoming the norm.

You know, this will only be exacerbated by the continuous approval of new projects once again, a tripling or a quadrupling of tar sands production in the near future. So we're suggesting that we just change the course, the trend, not shut off the tap of bitumen exports but change the way in which we approach this. I think the basic idea of mining it here, refining it here, be that in situ or the actual mining, resonates with the public, not just for insignificant reasons. They know that that is their product. They own that product. We want to make sure we get the maximum value for it.

My second set of questions and focus will move to electricity then, please, if possible. I've been watching the unfolding of the development of our electricity grids and production very closely over these past few years because, of course, we are in the midst of rebuilding or redefining how our electricity system is going to function here in this province. Indeed, the choices we make now are what we're going to be stuck with for the next 20, 30, or 40 years in regard to electricity production. I think it really is an important point to take a step back and decide on a course of action that is sustainable and that is going to be in keeping with the changing conditions of our province: increased population and the like. Certainly, again, the New Democrats are not advocating somehow reducing people's electricity consumption overall in the population but, rather, looking for a different way by which we produce electricity and deliver electricity too.

My first question, then, is one that we've discussed before, and I'm hoping that the public are going to hear something good here very quickly. When are we going to take off the wind cap on electricity, and how are we going to help facilitate the wind industry to produce sustainable electricity? This is something that we recognize. I'm not sure exactly why the decision was made to put a cap on the wind production. Certainly, most of the arguments were quite spurious, I would suggest. We know that there is a tremendous amount of investment interest in wind production in the province of Alberta and investors waiting to make that move. But, you know, we all know that investment capital doesn't stick around forever, and the wind is pretty much around in different parts of the world. It doesn't just blow in Alberta. It's so important to seize this opportunity while there is interest and not scare them away with the cap. I know that we are going to in fact change or remove that cap for wind production, and I think everyone is waiting with bated breath to know exactly when.

My next question is in regard to other sustainable energy production, and remember that we're talking about a basket of electricity production here. Certainly, we're not suggesting that we can just supplant coal production in one fell swoop and move on to sustainable solar panels or what have you all at once but, rather, that we set in motion the process to let those sustainable resource developments produce a better percentage of the electricity.

I've been following with great interest what's happened in Ontario recently and what they've been doing in Germany for quite a long time, and that is having a variable price on different forms of electricity according to how it's produced and how clean it is. This is the logical next step for the concept that we've been batting around, which is net metering, right? Certainly, we're all waiting, again, with expectancy to see when the net metering regulations will be in place. What you really want is the ability for people to produce that electricity on a local level and get the price that makes it profitable.

I wondered why, when I visited Germany several years ago, in the whole village that we were staying in with my wife's family, almost everybody had solar panels. I thought: oh, isn't that great? But then I only realized recently why that is so. Solar electricity has a different price than electricity produced from hydro or nuclear, and it's a higher price. So it becomes more valuable to produce that solar energy, and people can make money off it.

That's the way, so often, the world turns. It's not such a bad thing, really, to have that self-interest built into the production of microelectricity and make it worth people's while so that you're not just saying: oh, well, I can't put in solar panels or geothermal or wind because the electricity is only worth, whatever, 6 cents or so. If you make a variable pricing, where the wind is that much more and the solar is that much more, then suddenly people will look twice at these things.

Wouldn't it be a wonderful legacy for us to look across our great cities here in Alberta and see solar panels on people's roofs not because they're just feeling morally conscious about this but are actually making money from producing this electricity and because we've set up a way to strengthen our electricity grid in the widest possible way, not just saying, "Well, we need to build more coal plants" but because we have literally thousands of electricity producers here and there and everywhere helping to strengthen the grid.

So this is, I think, a fascinating thing that we have to look at here in Alberta: opening the door through net metering, which I was so happy to see the minister making some positive overtures about. This is the logical step to make net metering actually work. The Alberta New Democrats fought very hard, of course, for net metering, and we're happy for that, and we're welcome to take it to that next level, where people will actually be able to take advantage of it.

My next question – sorry to have so many here in such close succession – is talking about building and strengthening the grid. You know, one of the most important things about electricity production is that you want to produce the electricity as close to where it's consumed as possible because, of course, you have line loss of electricity. The further away the production is happening, I think people are removed from where the electricity comes from as well. Even just here in Edmonton – 40 or 50 kilometres away is where we produce so much of the electricity – ask the average person, and they have no idea where the electricity comes from. Having better education, a closer connection to your power, I think, increases people's education and consciousness about it.

So I'm asking: do we really need to build so many big long-distance lines like the 500 kV line between Wabamun and Calgary when we could potentially have the capacity to produce electricity more locally in southern Alberta? Certainly, the city of Calgary and southern Alberta are growing tremendously. I was just overwhelmed, as I always am, when I was in Calgary this past weekend to see the growth in the economy. It's all quite wonderful. You know, why would we have to burn coal all the way up here in Wabamun to ship that electricity all the way down to Calgary? It doesn't seem like the most efficient way to serve the needs of southern Albertans.

Of course, we've been working with the residents and people who have been raising concerns about the 500 kV line. You know, I just really wonder if we actually needed that 500 kV line or if it was really excessive. So the next logical question is that if we did increase that line so much, to a 500 kV line, what percentage of that kV line is designed to in fact export electricity as a merchant line? Considering that the tie-line to Montana is being put in place, then are we looking at electricity production here in Alberta to export electricity to the United States? Certainly, that doesn't seem like an efficient use of our natural resources. Of course, burning coal here in Alberta to produce electricity to ship to the United States just doesn't seem to be a logical use of our resources.

You know, the whole issue about building these lines as well: people have a big concern in my constituency and across the province about who's going to pay for them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, good comments and good questions. The member kind of started his second round of questioning with respect to bitumen exports. I suggest that perhaps I should open that comment with a little history here. The province of Alberta has exported oil since 1947, 60 years that the province has exported oil, and all kinds of other products followed along after that. Certainly, it is not a new business. We are producing in the neighbourhood of 2 million barrels a day currently, and we export about 1.1 million barrels internationally. About half a million barrels a day, I believe, is consumed in other areas of Canada, and of course the remainder is domestic with respect to Alberta.

So, Mr. Chairman, as we move ahead with the development of this resource, certainly I think it's only fair to say that the oil sands are one more piece of Alberta's continuing success story with respect to the hydrocarbon industry. When we start to look at things like carbonate plays and deep, tight gas, the possibility of coal-bed methane playing a role – and again there were some suggestions about natural gas. I sort of ran off the end there, didn't quite make the end of my statement. We've got about 40 tcf of conventionals in the province of Alberta that has been delineated at this point, but certainly the geological survey would suggest that there could be as much as 500 tcf of methane in coal in the province of Alberta. So as we move ahead and develop some of these resources in a very environmentally sustainable manner, these pieces, again, as I suggested earlier, will begin to fit together pretty well.

[Mr. Prins in the chair]

Mr. Chairman – and a new Mr. Chairman, I might add – getting into the questions with respect to electricity, the grid, the generation, the restructuring, and so on, the member indicated that we would not want to make decisions that we are stuck with in the future. Again, you know, I would have to agree with that. We don't, and we won't. Most certainly, the restructuring and the new Electric Utilities Act, that came in in 2003, offer many advantages with respect to not being stuck because areas in that legislation, like any legislation most certainly, can be brought forward and altered to meet the requirements as we move ahead.

The restructuring. I would suggest that when we go back and take a look at where we were prerestructuring and where we are today, the province of Alberta itself has changed very dramatically. Certainly, I would suggest that although people see increases in the cost of their energy, I wouldn't argue with that. It's true. You know, I would again say that in any of these discussions leading up to where we are today and leading up to my responsibility now with respect to this issue, there was no point at which I would have suggested that we could somehow make the price of energy go down. It's a reality.

What we have done with the restructuring is indicate to Albertans that this system is pay-as-you-go. We will not leave energy debts for future generations to pay. So the cost of your energy is open; it's shown to you. If you consume it, you pay for it. Again, you know, there can be all kinds of discussions around whether that is or isn't proper social policy, but I'm suggesting to you that this government believes that we should not leave these kinds of bills behind for future generations to pay.

The question came up: when does the wind cap come off? Again, a very good question. In fact, what this government has done – through the Alberta Energy Research Institute the wind industry has put together a committee to study the wind resource in the province of Alberta. So we're going to study this for a year. When we're finished, we'll know where the wind blows and when, 24/7, 365 days, and we'll figure out what the proper balance is and how much of this wind energy can sustainably and reliably be added to the grid.

The only reason that the cap is there now is quite simply that we have to be responsible to all consumers and to all users of electricity in the province. It would not be, in our estimation, responsible at this point in time to lift the cap when we don't know what effect that would have on the grid. You know, give or take 10 per cent, at the moment we use just under 9,000 megs a day. The cap is at 900 megawatts, and by the way, we're not close to that. We're somewhere around half of that capability actually being generated now. But this government is looking forward to in a year's time and a bit, when we have an opportunity to get the information from this study, moving that cap.

Would we remove the cap and throw it wide open? I would suggest to the member again that that may not be the most responsible way for us to deal with this situation. However, we do see that wind energy has a very important role to play, and we will maximize wind energy with respect to electrical generation in the province over a very short space of time.

Mr. Chairman, there was a question on sustainable electricity. Again, a good question, a positive question. What I can tell you is that on the biofuel and biogenerating side these things are right now in one of the programs that we have. They're connected together. We have a $239 million program that's come forward this year. We've actually given out the first amounts of money with respect to that initiative for biofuel and biogeneration. So on the biogeneration side there's 6 cents a kilowatt hour available for people that get into the production of bioelectricity.

I might also say that we're working with the regulations. We'll have regulations with respect to microgeneration and the business of – you know, we’re considering net metering, but net metering is really only applicable when you get to a certain scale. Net metering for people with two or three solar panels or one of the small homeowner’s wind generators is not really a very viable solution. So what we’re looking at there is net billing so that you would build or run your meter one way or the other, and at the end of a month you would be billed for the net that you took off the grid, if that’s the case.

I might also say that a number of years ago the province was very proactive with respect to the generation of bioelectricity and renewable wind energy. The province contracted for renewables in wind and, certainly, biomass generation in Grande Prairie. As a matter of fact, the biogenerator that’s operating now in the city of Grande Prairie – it’s about a 20-megawatt facility – would not be there today if it weren’t for the fact that the Alberta government through Alberta Infrastructure made a long-term commitment and purchased electricity from that biogenerator.

It gave them the opportunity then to go to their financiers and say: “Gentlemen, this is what we have. We have the government of Alberta; the province is behind us. They’ve contracted this power.” We’re continuing to work with that industry in that way and in others. We have programs in place and, certainly, solid contracts in place to support that industry.

There was a question on distributed generation and whether or not the 500 kVa line that is in front of the EUB, proposed to be constructed between basically Edmonton and Calgary . . . [Mr. Knight’s speaking time expired]

The Acting Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. It’s a pleasure to rise and address the Minister of Energy with respect to his estimates. I want to pick up a little bit where my colleague from Edmonton-Calder – well, not where he left off but where he went with respect to the whole question of tar sands development and the issue of bitumen. I know that the minister would prefer oil sands. That’s a nice, sanitized-sounding word that’s been carefully chosen by the industry to replace the original term that was more commonly used: the tar sands. So you say tomato and we say tomato. They mean the same thing, but it does have a little different connotation.

Now, with respect to that, I wanted to follow up with the minister on a comment that he made in the first round of questions, and I wrote this down. He said: it is not the government that will determine where royalties will go. I would appreciate it if the minister would elaborate a little bit on that statement. If not the government, who? Perhaps he was referring to the committee that’s looking at royalty structures right now in the province, but I certainly assumed that they’re going to be giving a report to the government, much like the housing task force did, and that the government will make some choices and some decisions with respect to that report. But if not the government, then who?

Now, the minister also indicated that we have about 700,000 barrels per day of oil sands production – did I get that number correct? – and 400,000 a day which is not upgraded. Are those approximately the numbers? I just want to make sure. The plans to increase the amount of unprocessed bitumen that’s exported out of the province: I was looking at some information about the Alberta Clipper project, which initially would increase the export by 450,000 barrels a day and, eventually, up to 800,000 barrels a day of bitumen exported to the United States, as well as the Keystone project, which will increase the amount by 430,000 so that’s about 1,000,230 barrels a day increase on top of the current 400,000, so basically four times as much by my calculation.

So the question is: is there an upside limit that the government is prepared to enforce with respect to the amount of unprocessed bitumen that can be exported from the province? Are they prepared to take steps with respect to either of those two projects or future projects to limit the export of unprocessed bitumen from our province?

The minister also indicated that we need to provide a basket of products to maximize our value from the resources of the province. My question with respect to this is: how does including a steadily increasing proportion of unprocessed bitumen within that basket increase or maximize the value on our resources? I think that statement needs some explanation. It certainly seems to me just as a layperson intuitive that if you maximize the value-added in your natural resource, you will increase or maximize the value to Albertans of the resource. So those are some of the questions I had with respect to that.

The minister also indicated that he didn’t want to leave any bills unpaid. I think he was making that reference in connection with the energy prices paid by consumers in the province if I’m not mistaken. There is another issue of bills unpaid, and that has to do with the environmental liability left by these projects and whether or not the government monitors those things, calculates them, tracks them, and what the formula is for allocating the costs for environmental liabilities as a result of oil and gas exploration and tar sands development as well as coal-bed methane. So I would be very interested in knowing just how the government keeps track of environmental liabilities, clean-up costs and so on, and how great those are.

I believe it was in last year’s Auditor General’s annual report, Mr. Chairman, that indicated that the environmental liability for cleaning up conventional oil and gas exploration environmental liabilities was about $2 billion, and that, in fact, there were no plans in place to fund that. I would like to know how that’s handled.

Now, I want to talk a little bit about natural gas. This is, perhaps, one of the most valuable resources that we have as a province. It certainly produces the greatest proportion of royalty revenues for the provincial government. One of the things I was surprised to learn when I first was elected to the Chamber and started looking into some of these things is that we get the lion’s share of our nonrenewable royalty revenue from natural gas, not from oil. So it’s very significant.

I also remember seeing a few years ago some lists of the proven reserves with respect to natural gas. I’d be interested in knowing how the government policy with respect to allowing export of gas or development of gas relative to proven reserves is calculated and whether or not that’s changed in the last decade or so. The recollection that I have is that we are running down our proven reserves of natural gas very, very severely. I would like to know what the minister’s view is of that and how that relates to the export of natural gas from the province and how much of our natural gas and at what rate it’s being shipped south and how long we will as a province have supplies of natural gas available to the people of this province.

I would also like to know the minister’s view with respect to the continuing use of natural gas in production of crude from the tar sands projects. I know that a recent document I’ve seen relating to a conference in Houston about the future of Alberta talked about getting off natural gas. Kicking the habit of natural gas I think was the title of a section of the report. I’d like to know what the government plans with respect to that and what some of the issues that they’re struggling with might be.

I'd also like to know from the minister what his view is of the viability of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, where that is, and when and if that pipeline or the other pipeline is built, the impact that that's going to have on natural gas and supply of natural gas in this province.

Another point that I'd like to ask about is the extraction of the volatiles from natural gas. I know that under the Lougheed and Getty governments there was a requirement that the various chemicals that were useful for a petrochemical industry had to be stripped out and that only the methane gas would be shipped for export south. That's been changed. I wonder what's behind that and why the government made that change and if they would be prepared to consider changing it back again so we could promote a petrochemical industry in this province.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I guess I'll go a little bit quicker because I want to make sure that I catch up to the questions that I didn't quite finish with the previous speaker. Most certainly, the thing that I want to get to is the idea around whether or not the transmission system in the province of Alberta needs to be fortified and whether or not the fortification of that is or isn't good for Albertans, generally speaking. I would suggest that we, in fact, do a lot of distributed generation in the province of Alberta. However, some of our major generating facilities are not, not dissimilar to many other places globally, as handy to the load as we might like them to be. So, most certainly, a transmission system is, in fact, not only desirable but critical for us.

The city of Calgary's Enmax Corporation have indicated recently that they're talking about distributed generation in southern Alberta, about 1,200 megawatts of capacity. They came out with a statement, a news release, one day last week – I can't remember; I think it might've been Tuesday last week – that indicated their full support for the grid strengthening, the 500 kV line, and the fact that whether or not there was distributed generation in Calgary, that strengthening was absolutely necessary.

Mr. Chairman, Montana Alberta Tie, the MATL, is not part of any discussion around providing electricity for Calgary or southern Alberta or, for that matter, really, the situation with respect to internal power in the province of Alberta other than that we know that we are very, very weak with respect to tie-lines into and out of the province of Alberta. We believe that MATL, which is, by the way, a merchant line, would be very advantageous to Albertans because of the fact that it can provide us with a higher degree of reliability in our system.

The questions that came. I'll try to get through all of these. Hopefully, the member opposite will bring some of them back if I don't get them all. One sentence had about four questions in it. I didn't catch all of them.

How does bitumen export maximize value? He keyed on to that, and I'm glad that he repeated: maximize value. In fact, other than the statements that have been made around value-added, which are good statements, it's a bit of a catchphrase that we in the Department of Energy feel now doesn't really cover what it is that we want to say. What we want to say is that these resources for Albertans will have a maximum value for the people of the province of Alberta.

How does exporting bitumen fit into that picture? Well, indeed, it fits in very well, Mr. Chairman, because one thing that is difficult to do with bitumen the way the system has evolved is to actually get good valuation for bitumen. So if can get merchant purchase in bitumen exports, that gives us a much better ability to set a base as to what valuation we can place on bitumen and, of course, as the member very well knows, this is crucial to us with respect to our royalty system and collecting the revenues that the owners of this resource deserve. So, most certainly, that's one of the areas.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The other thing is if you have an ability to supply a range of products to customers rather than saying: the only thing that we would give you is something like syncrude or something like transportation fuel. It's not too hard for us today in Alberta to imagine what would happen with respect to the bitumen production if you have a situation where you're going to say: any bitumen that's mine in Alberta will be upgraded and refined in Alberta. We've heard these statements, and they're good statements. The only thing is that bitumen or any upgraded product that might come from that, like kerosene, jet B fuel, transportation diesel fuel, are all marketable. They're all good products. They're all good commodities.

But like every other commodity – for instance, I can just use barley or wheat as an example. If the province of Alberta is knee deep in wheat and you can't move it, what's wheat worth? To us, nothing. If we were standing knee deep in bitumen – and good Lord help us because we'd need some fairly tall rubber boots. Bitumen valuation and the fact that this product can find markets and those markets help us maximize the value of this particular resource for Albertans, the ability to supply markets with a variety of products: those are the reasons that bitumen export helps maximize the value.

Mr. Chairman, there were suggestions that the environmental liability in the province of Alberta is large and growing. Again, I think that to the greatest degree possible environmental liability is part of the consideration with respect to approvals, and no approvals are given for any projects to move ahead in the province of Alberta without proper environmental assessment and environmental approvals.

Lease remediation. I believe that that was perhaps where the member was headed. I don't know if it's a question with respect to oil sands per se, but lease remediation in the province of Alberta has been, you know, successful to date. We have of course got leases in the province that become homeless for one reason or another, and there is an orphan well program that we have in the province to address the situation with respect to leases that need remediation and there isn't a responsible party at the other end. So, in fact, the province isn't on the hook for this. We collect from industry and put this money aside in an orphan well program to do those types of remediation.

Certainly, with respect to natural gas: why do we export natural gas, and we're definitely running out of natural gas, and all of that. Again, those discussions take place daily. Daily you hear people on both sides of the issue: "We're running out of gas. There'll be no more gas. Pretty soon methane's done." Well, I think I can let the member opposite know that methane, which is the basis of the natural gas we're dealing with, Mr. Chairman, is arguably one of the most common compounds on this planet. There's no shortage of methane. The unfortunate part for us, I suppose, in certain places where consumption of methane is high: the methane isn't where we want it, and it's not necessarily in the form we'd like to have it in. There's no shortage of methane. As I indicated, just from our coal-bed methane alone, there is – not our numbers – geological survey indicating probably 500 tcf of methane in coal in the province of Alberta. So, certainly, not a shortage.

Gasifying coal. We've got literally hundreds and hundreds of years of coal available, and gasification of coal is another way that we can bolster the methane production in the province of Alberta if that's required.

The member very correctly brought me up short with respect to a comment that I made, that the government won't determine where royalties go. My statement should have been – and I will stand corrected. This department is what I was expressing, that our department doesn't determine where royalties will go. My colleague is absolutely right. With this situation with respect to royalties this government has a responsibility with respect to the royalty structure in the province. What I intended to indicate was that the Department of Energy and this minister would not direct where royalties will go.

I think that we've covered most of the issues.

Mr. Chairman, the amount of upgrading certainly that takes place in the province of Alberta or generally speaking, I would suggest, in North America is dependent to a degree on refining capacity. Of course, refineries are constructed specific to their supply, to their feedstock, and to a degree there is some requirement for us to attempt to match those refinery feedstock variabilities.

The Hydrocarbon Upgrading Task Force, Mr. Chairman, provides a forum for government and industry stakeholders . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, your time allocation has now elapsed. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that we're covering a lot of ground in fairly short time frames. If the minister doesn't get to anything and wishes to, you know, provide us an answer later in writing, that's perfectly all right as well.

I want to just go back and deal with a couple of things. The question of the export of bitumen and the dramatic increases in the export that are in the works, that are planned: is the government going to develop a very clear policy with respect to this issue and how decisions will be made in the future and instructing the AEUB or its successor bodies with respect to the amount or the percentage or the value of unprocessed bitumen that can be exported? The question that I would have – and I know that the minister in a previous response talked about it not being advisable to just, you know, cut off the 400,000 barrels per day that are being exported now, but could we not set a cap? Could we not say that this is the maximum that we're going to allow and deal with it in that way?

Certainly, the argument that we need to find a way to determine the price of unprocessed bitumen is an interesting one, but I really question why we would be making decisions to permit a quadrupling of the export of raw bitumen to the United States from our province simply in search of a price. That doesn't make sense to me, Mr. Chairman, but what does make sense to me is that we're having limits on the ability to process it here and we're in a rush or the Americans particularly are in a rush to maximize the amount of oil that they receive from Alberta and they don't mind building some industrial infrastructure and creating some jobs in the process. The question I have is whether or not that's in Alberta's interests or just in the interests of the United States market. I think that's enough on bitumen.

I do want to come back to natural gas a little bit because I didn't feel I got a very precise answer on the whole question of proven reserves. I assume that the department has a method of calculating reserves and pays quite close attention to that, so I would be interested in knowing what the department's approach is to that and what their numbers show in terms of the proven reserves of natural gas. The minister didn't have time, obviously, to deal with the stripping of the volatiles from the natural gas and that policy and whether or not that policy is under consideration again or the use of natural gas in the production of synthetic crude oil in the tar sands. Also, I had asked about the viability of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline and how that would affect our industry.

I just want to touch very briefly on nuclear power. My colleague from Edmonton-Calder may wish to raise this some more, but the question of nuclear power has come up, and I would like to know if the government has any programs or plans in place to support nuclear power in the tar sands or elsewhere, whether or not it's received any specific proposals from any proponents of nuclear power and just generally what the minister's view is with respect to the problems and the benefits of nuclear power.

I want to talk a little bit about district energy, which is an issue that I had something to do with in my previous life as a city councillor with the city of Edmonton. District energy, of course, is the use of waste heat in order to supply heat energy to urban developments, primarily urban, and it's most commonly used in northern European cities. Entire major cities in northern Europe are heated through the use of district energy. There's also an alternate form, which is district cooling, where sources of cold water, generally, are available. They provide air conditioning to major downtown centres in many cities in the world. This approach is environmentally very beneficial. It makes maximum use of our available energy sources, and in certain cases it's very cost-effective. The technology in Europe is quite advanced with respect to this. I would just ask if there are any district energy programs under consideration or if the department has really looked at this.

I know that NRCan has a program to promote district energy. They actually organized tours of municipal officials and some provincial officials to northern European countries to tour their facilities. There's a wide range, from small biomass-type situations right up to major developments that heat and cool major cities like Stockholm or Copenhagen or Helsinki. I just would encourage the minister to take a look at this because I think it would help us meet some of our obligations with respect to greenhouse gases as well as make effective use of our existing sources of energy.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that covers the points that I want to make, and I would be happy to turn my remaining minutes, however few they may be, over to the minister, if that's allowed under the rules, so that he can answer all the questions in full. Thank you.

Mr. Knight: The member opposite is so accommodating – it just makes me feel warm all over – with respect to the energy business.

I'm going to get to every one of the questions, I think, this time, Mr. Chairman, but I'm going to start a bit at the back and kind of move to the front of the questions. The situation around district energy and district heat, most certainly we're very aware. This government has been working with the city of Grande Prairie for about three years. They have, as I had indicated, a biomass-generating facility in Grande Prairie that produces about 20 megawatts of power. Along with that, they produce enough residual heat to provide heat for probably eight or 10 of the major buildings in the city of Grande Prairie. This government being proactive and working with the city of Grande Prairie and with other people in the district heat industry has changed the Natural Gas Price Protection Act so that it will allow for district heat offsets, for that heat to be offset the same amount that rebates would be under a situation where they would have burned natural gas for the same amount of heat produced. So, indeed, we're working with proponents with respect to that. The city of Calgary also is working on a district heating system, and again we will be interested in working with them with respect to that issue.

The nuclear power question is a big question. Most certainly, I've said this many times and will repeat it here again tonight: we as a government are not a proponent for nor a detractor from any energy proposal that may come forward. There have been proponents with respect to the nuclear issue, looking a number of years now, I believe, but most certainly it came to my attention about a month ago. I've met, not dissimilar to meetings that I might have had with any of the other industry players, all the way from service companies to the majors, Mr. Chairman. If they ask for a meeting, if they want us to listen to their proposals, I'm open to doing that. I have listened to one particular proponent of a nuclear proposal, and I would presume there are more. This government will not get involved in any nuclear facilities in the province of Alberta until there have been open discussions with the constituents and the residents of the province of Alberta. So we're not in the business of doing anything at the moment. We watch and listen, and if people want to come and speak to me about the issue, I am open to those discussions.

Natural gas reserves came up again. Most certainly, one of the things that I'd like to point out to the member is that – and he'll remember this. Prior to the Alliance line being constructed in Alberta – and we got an awful lot of flak over some parts of that particular situation because we were exporting gas and exporting jobs from the province, and again, you know, it's a commodity – and having us connected to the areas in the Midwest, where that commodity was useful, we were standing knee deep in natural gas in the province of Alberta. I can tell the member quite honestly – I was in that business in the middle of that, and it wasn't pretty. It was very, very difficult. If you want to check the records – well, I'd suggest even six months prior to the Alliance line coming on stream and six months to a year later – and then calculate the difference in the price of that commodity and the royalty that Albertans received in the meantime, that piece of business, quite honestly, Mr. Chairman, was a huge win for Albertans. It provided, probably, as the member has stated, the largest portion of revenue from royalties for Albertans certainly in the ensuing years from the time the Alliance was put on because it made the whole commodity from Alberta sensitive to a commodity price internationally. It restructured our whole pricing arrangement and, by doing that, restructured the amount of royalties that Albertans receive.

Alberta's basin still has a lot of life. We've got reserve additions that come on continuously. They're price sensitive, and when you get prices in that $4, $5, $6 range, we don't see a lot of additions. When the price of natural gas rises to the $7 or $8 range, people get more interested. Most certainly, drilling increases, and we get an increased amount of reserve additions. The last couple of years we've sustained our reserve base. New additions and depletions are pretty much balanced, and that includes our conventional reserves and CBM.

We're back to where we started from, hon. member, with a little bit of a discussion again at the end here with respect to bitumen and bitumen exports and a suggestion that there's nothing planned here and that, you know, we should at the very least perhaps cap the amount of bitumen exports. Again, I think that for this government that is probably not an option that we would entertain.

We certainly understand that there are many plans by industry players with respect to the movement of product. A pipeline, you know, can move more than a single product. So on the connection with respect to pipelines and somebody coming along and saying: "We'd like to build a pipeline to move 180,000 barrels a day. We'd like to build one that can move 320,000. These people would like to build one that can move 400,000 barrels a day," those are projects that people are bringing forward. I would suggest that, to my knowledge, they're not approved. Those projects aren't approved today; they're in process. Most certainly, we will be very diligent and vigilant with respect to the owners of the resource that would move in any form in those pipelines.

To suggest, I think, that this piece of business, again, may not be good for Albertans, I've got to just go back to the situation that I discussed with respect to the gas pipelines, dissimilar in many ways but similar in some ways. We have just come forward with an incremental ethane extraction program so that with the value of the natural gas liquids that are in the system, generally speaking, in the province of Alberta, not in any one particular piece of pipe or another but in the system, we can find a way to work with the petrochemical industry, with suppliers, with producers, and arrive at a situation where we can maximize the value of those natural gas liquids for Albertans. I find it very exciting. I think that we'll be able to move ahead.

Of course, as the member knows, the petrochemical industry in the province of Alberta is the largest in Canada. Certainly, in our integrated energy strategy, in the way we see these pieces fit together as we move ahead, we're certainly keen on maintaining that, and we're confident that not only will we maintain, but we will continue to build on that.

On the idea of a cap on exports I think that with all due respect to the member, it would be my opinion that it is not well founded because you have a situation where there may be times when certain customers that we would have for our product would be able to receive more and sometimes less of a particular mix or blend of a product. When you start trying to put artificial caps in the way and you begin to tinker with the natural market that develops around these types of products, I think that in most cases what you see happening is restriction and restrictive practices, and you end up creating situations where our players are disadvantaged in the marketplace. Therefore, at the end of the day Albertans are disadvantaged with respect to the maximum value that we can garner for them with respect to any of these resources.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I got to the questions that we had. I want to just add that the hydrocarbon upgrading demonstration program that we're doing . . . [Mr. Knight's speaking time expired]

8:20

The Deputy Chair: Are we done with Energy? Would you like to move on?

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Maybe what I'll do is just ask five minutes of questions, and then we'll bring it around.

Well, you know, it's interesting what the minister is suggesting here, Mr. Chair, because we have a situation now with natural gas and potentially with bitumen where, yes, you let full-steam rolling of that product across the border for export – and certainly we're not opposed to exporting per se – but this full steam ahead approach creates a number of problems: (a) you're not getting that value-added back here, (b) you are creating an expectation in the market, especially south of the border, and (c) there are provisions in NAFTA which will actually compel you to continue to produce and export at that level.

So once you lock yourself into that model, aren't you creating a situation where we are going to lose that value-added component? Aren't you in fact not getting the maximum value for that raw material because you're letting it go without having that value-added processing stamped onto it? That makes it more valuable. I think that's a question we need to answer and answer very quickly because, of course, once we set in motion that level of bitumen export, aren't we going to be compelled to continue to do so under the provisions of NAFTA and under the provisions of creating that market direction? So that's, I think, a big question we need to ask ourselves here this evening and otherwise.

You know, like I said before as well, this is the revenue that drives so much of our budget here, so we can't play games with it. This whole notion that we'll take some time and we'll dilly-dally about with this royalty review: maybe we need to in fact not increase the royalties because of the provisions that the federal government are putting in in terms of tougher environmental standards. I'm sincerely hoping – and I think all Albertans are – that we will keep that extra value through royalties here in the province instead. By not doing anything, taking action or delaying, is the federal government not in fact moving in on that same revenue with great speed and disadvantaging Albertans potentially?

There seems to be a lack of co-ordination here. People can see where the golden goose is. We're not going to let them kill the golden goose by any means, but are we going to sell off portions thereof through the federal government's initiatives and not keep the money here at home through moving quickly on the royalties? You're always going to get complaints about royalty rates being changed. Certainly, the industry is not going to greet it with open arms, but they also know that this change is imminent. So isn't it better to move quickly and prudently on the royalty rates so that we get their maximum value?

There are two questions there. Number one, by setting in motion this massive increase in export of bitumen and natural gas to the United States, aren't we endangering our revenue stream and locking ourselves into an untenable situation in regard to NAFTA?

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know, we've got about five minutes here to kind of conclude. What I'd like to do first of all is get something on the record here that I had intended to do to answer this member's question and, certainly, the leader's question as well, and that is that we have a hydrocarbon upgrading demonstration program going forward in the province of Alberta. We're going to invest a hundred million dollars in demonstrating new technologies that help our energy system to more efficiently convert energy resources to value-added products while minimizing environmental impact. So I think that what I'm suggesting here is pretty much what the members opposite have indicated they would like to see, and that is that we will find ways to continue to increase the amount of value maximization and the refining and upgrading of these products in the province.

With respect to the royalty system, again, to just go back to that, the member opposite has indicated that we're kind of doing this little review and that it's nice and comfortable and that we're dilly-dallying. I'm going to try to address that situation by indicating, Mr. Chairman, that this thing was engaged in January this year, and we're looking for a report to come forward in the August/September time frame.

Mr. Chairman, you know that this is not a slow process. We're not dilly-dallying. These folks have gone out, and they're taking a very concerted effort to come up with the answers. They've already gone through three, I believe, of the public consultations with respect to this issue, receiving very good input, and certainly we look forward to those results.

The situation around us kind of sitting on our hands and moaning and groaning while the feds move in: most certainly, again, the only way that, I would suggest, there's anything anywhere close to the feds moving in would have to do with the most recent situation around carbon taxes and that kind of thing. I'd like to just point out to the member that we were first in this business, and there's no doubt about that. The federal structure mirrors a lot of what Alberta has already done. We do have some concerns and are addressing concerns with them on a continuing basis with respect to how they're implementing their program, and we will continue to fight for Albertans with respect to that.

I'd like to say that there's co-operation there as well. We have a carbon capture and storage panel, a blue-ribbon panel, that NRCan and the Department of Energy in Alberta are jointly sponsoring. Our deputy minister sits on that panel, and we're certainly, again, moving forward with respect to the issue. We really believe that this is a way forward for absolute reductions in greenhouse gas emissions in the province of Alberta. Mr. Chairman, we believe in this, and we are having good co-operation with the federal government with respect to that issue, and we hope to continue to do that.

Although I wouldn't argue that the feds are interested, I'd suggest to you that every province and certainly the countries in North America and globally are very interested in what's happening in the province of Alberta. We have leading-edge technology, we have the expertise, and we have the people power and the knowledge in the province of Alberta. That, coupled with our resources, makes this an absolute powerhouse in the energy industry globally. Mr. Chairman, this department is going to continue to support our government with respect to the development of these resources in an environmentally sustainable manner that's in the best interests of all Albertans.

Mr. Mason: One final question, Mr. Chairman, before we leave the Department of Energy. There's been some talk about restructuring the administration of the electrical system in our province, and I would like the minister to maybe outline those changes and the reasons behind them and whether or not the government is considering changing its position with respect to electricity deregulation in this province.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. There are a number of questions in the question, but the answer to the first one, on the restructuring of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, is quite short: yes, we are. We're going to restructure it.

The reasons for it. Certainly, when you look at the numbers of applications that have come forward with respect to the energy side, not the electricity side but the energy side, it has, I would suggest, gotten to the point where although the EUB is managing on a timely basis to deal with all of these issues, I believe there's a requirement now for the old ERCB to come back, the Energy Resources Conservation Board, and there will be more of a focus from that group of people on those energy projects that we are faced with. As the member knows, there are many of them. It's certainly very, very important to the province of Alberta.

But on the other side of the issue, Mr. Chairman, we intend to put in an Alberta utilities commission. As you know, in 2003 we brought in a new Electric Utilities Act, and it continued the restructuring of the electrical industry in the province of Alberta. I believe that we now need an Alberta utilities commission that looks at those utilities, and it's external or not directly connected to what was the EUB. Folding those two regulatory entities together at one point in time may have seemed like the best fit for Albertans. It's my opinion that now is the time for a new fit, and the new fit would give the proper consideration to the utilities in Alberta. So this is not only the utilities with respect to electricity, but of course the natural gas utilities in the province of Alberta would also be housed there.

As the member knows, under the new structure in the Electric Utilities Act we've got the AESO, Alberta Electric System Operator; we have the MSA, the market surveillance administrator; we have the Utilities Consumer Advocate; and we have the Balancing Pool. What we want to do, Mr. Chairman, is have a focus on the electrical industry in the province of Alberta from the point of view of a regulator that's focused on that piece of business for Albertans. All of the things that we've talked about tonight, all of the development, all of the fact that we'd like to upgrade, we'd like to do more petrochemical: all of those issues cannot move an inch without electricity. It's extremely important for all of us, and I believe that it's important enough that it should have its own stand-alone regulator.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, are you finished with Energy?

Hon. Minister of Energy, thank you and your staff for your presence here today.

Environment

Mr. Renner: I was going to introduce my staff, so as soon as they get here, we'll introduce them. They're on their way in.

The Deputy Chair: Well, Mr. Minister, we don't stop the clock for that purpose, so if your staff are not here, you can proceed unless somebody is directing them, or we can proceed with one . . .

Mr. Renner: Well, they're here. Is 30 seconds a big deal to you? It's not a big deal to me.

Mr. Eggen: No. We're all friends in the morning. We're here to help you.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to be here tonight to speak about Alberta Environment's business plan and budget. I will be accompanied by a number of members of my staff. I would like to take some time to introduce the executive team that works with me. Joining me very shortly will be deputy minister Peter Watson. Peter provides leadership and support to a team of about 800 that we have in Alberta Environment and oversees the department's daily operations.

I'm also joined by Alberta Environment's four assistant deputy ministers and the director of finance and administration. Bev Yee is the assistant deputy minister of environmental stewardship. Bev has the responsibility for environmental strategies, environmental relations, conservation and education and outreach programs. For example, Bev is leading the update of Alberta's climate change plan and is partnering with her colleagues to develop and pilot Alberta's cumulative effects regulatory framework.

John Knapp provides leadership for our environmental assurance division. He joined Alberta Environment in 2005 through an executive mobility program. Interestingly enough, he came to us from Agriculture, and many members, I'm sure, will remember John for the work that he did in Alberta Agriculture. In Environment, however, he has the responsibility for drinking water, environmental policy, environmental monitoring and evaluation, as well as information management branches.

Jay Nagendran is the assistant deputy minister for our newly formed oil sands environmental management, and he has responsibility for oil sands strategic policy and innovation and oil sands operations.

Jim Ellis is the assistant deputy minister for the environmental management division. Jim is responsible for the Alberta Environment support and emergency response team, our water management operations, and regional integration in Environment's three regions.

Finally, Mike Dalrymple is the director of finance and administration. Mike provides leadership to Alberta Environment's finance, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, administrative services branches.

I want to just say that since I've had the pleasure of being in this ministry, I've come to appreciate the expertise that each of these individuals brings to Environment, and I can assure all members that each and every one of them is very professional. But, more importantly, they're very much devoted to their responsibilities as stewards of the environment, and the passion that they bring to the job, I'm sure all members have noticed, is passed on to the minister. I'm pleased to say that much of the passion and knowledge that I have is as a result of the excellent relationship and briefings I have from the various folks that are now seated around me.

Alberta Environment received an increase of $9.8 million in this fiscal year, bringing the total for the year to $164 million. This budget will help to ensure that Alberta is an environmental leader, able to respond to increasingly complex environmental challenges and risks.

Alberta Environment staff work every day to safeguard public and environmental health, promote environmental stewardship, and enhance our regulatory systems and infrastructure. I'm confident that Alberta Environment's budget is well resourced and will meet our environmental priorities. This year we will add approximately 38 new FTEs to our staffing, of which 30 are committed to the oil sands environmental unit. This brings us to a total of about 842.

We will use the increased budget dollars to support the development and implementation of the Premier's priorities for Alberta's environment. For example, the lion's share of the increase, some $7 million, will help us to manage growth pressures related to cumulative environmental effects and the development of the oil sands.

I've already introduced assistant deputy minister of oil sands environmental management Jay Nagendran. Jay is overseeing the development and operations of a new division within the department. Alberta Environment created the oil sands environmental management division in February to help us effectively manage the unprecedented growth in this area. One of the division's priorities is to respond to the recommendations of the Oil Sands Ministerial Strategy Committee on environmental impacts and development in oil sands communities.

Another priority of this division will be to effectively manage the cumulative environmental impacts of oil sands development and upgrading in our province. Alberta Environment recognizes that we need to look at the whole region to develop an environmental management approach that protects the air, land, water, and biodiversity of our province. In fact, developing a new environment and resource management regulatory framework to enable sustainable development is one of the initiatives outlined in my mandate letter from the Premier. This initiative is under way, and Alberta Environment will pilot some elements of this new approach with the development in the industrial heartland area.

In addition, $1 million this year will support another of the Premier's priority initiatives, renewal of Alberta's Water for Life strategy. Alberta will use the funding for groundwater mapping, a key part of the renewal. We've committed $12 million in new funding for groundwater inventory work over the next three years. This includes initiatives to assess coal-bed methane groundwater impacts, conduct a provincial groundwater risk assessment, complete basin groundwater mapping, evaluate and upgrade groundwater monitoring and data. Later this year the Alberta Water Council will consult with Albertans on updating the Water for Life strategy. All Albertans have a stake in the Water for Life strategy, and its review will include opportunities that involve all stakeholders. This review will include an evaluation of current activities identified by the strategy as well as discussions of what additional activities may be required in the future. In the meantime Alberta Environment is committed to moving forward with the actions identified in the strategy in order to ensure that Albertans continue to enjoy a sustainable quality and supply of water.

My department is also moving forward with updating Alberta's climate change plan. We've recently completed climate change public consultations in 10 Alberta communities, and we received input from more than 2,000 Albertans. We are beginning stakeholder consultations and intend to have a draft plan developed by the fall of 2007. We have budgeted $3.6 million for climate change in the coming year. We believe this is enough to implement our current policy commitments.

Not all environment-related spending comes from Alberta Environment. Some examples that are located within other budgets: Infrastructure and Transportation is spending $422 million in capital grants to support municipal water supply and treatment and wastewater treatment and disposal; Advanced Education and Technology has dedicated $25 million to research to enhance water management; Health and Wellness and Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture are allotting $13 million to expand water testing monitoring and emergency response support.

In addition to those that I've already mentioned, Alberta Environment has many other initiatives under way, including three partnership actions and an internal action plan to support staff. Alberta Environment recognizes the benefits of working closely with our partners, and this year we're partnering with the Clean Air Strategic Alliance to develop comprehensive air quality strategy. Clean Air Strategic Alliance is a well-recognized multistakeholder partnership which recommends strategies to assess and improve air quality in Alberta.

We'll continue to work with Sustainable Resource Development and Energy on our vision of being the best natural resource and environment managers in the world. To do this, we're taking a new approach to our work. We're working together to achieve agreed upon natural resource and environmental outcomes.

We're also working with Sustainable Resource Development and other government ministries and Albertans to develop a long-term land-use framework. The land-use framework will help to address a wide range of land management issues identified in consultation with Albertans. It's also one of the Premier's priorities under managing growth pressures.

One of our department's top internal priorities is to provide the support needed to enhance staff capability. Part of this initiative includes implementing the ministry's workplace culture, learning and development, and succession management frameworks.

For the first time in history the environment is topping Canadian lists of priorities. It's also one of Alberta's top priorities, and, Mr. Chairman, it's my priority. Alberta Environment is committed to working with all Albertans to protect our land, our air, our water, and our biodiversity now and into the future.

Members, I ask for your support for Alberta Environment's 2007-2008 budget and business plan so that we can continue to enhance environmental protection, environmental stewardship, and the quality of life in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, on a personal note I want to say that I'm here tonight at considerable personal hardship. I won't say that I'm here under duress, but I am experiencing some latent anxieties because as we speak, my Medicine Hat Tigers are on the TV playing the Vancouver Giants, and I hope everyone will keep in mind that . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the time allocated has now lapsed. We wish the team well, though.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. Certainly, I will keep in mind that the hon. minister has some latent anxiety already. I won't necessarily do anything to alleviate that, but I wish the Medicine Hat team all the best as well.

I'm very happy to work with the Environment budget here for this year. It's with considerable interest that I take a look at the budget because, of course, I've been watching this. This is the third one that I've seen come through, and each time my biggest concern is that this ministry is underfunded in relative and absolute terms. Once again with this budget I'm asking why, in fact, the ministry only received a $9.8 million increase, which is, I believe, only about a 5 per cent increase from last year, when the scope and the responsibility that the ministry has has increased many more times than that. Certainly, 5 per cent doesn't even meet the rate of inflation. You know, you consider all of the responsibilities this ministry has in regard to managing our water systems and overseeing all of these new projects that are taking place. I know that the workers in the ministry are very dedicated and work very hard, but there are simply not enough of them. The workers in the various areas of this Ministry of Environment simply can't reach the places to which they need to go to look, to be responsible, and to execute the policy that the ministry has.

I'm seeing this as a significant problem because, you know, we can come up with the best-laid plans in the world here and in the ministry. Indeed, we do have some very good policy in regard to the Water for Life strategy, say, and some aspects of Climate Change Central. But all of those things are so seriously undermined by a lack of funding to put in place monitoring capacity that I fear that the ministry has once again been hamstrung by an insignificant budget increase and an overall budget that doesn't allow it to do its job.

I think that at this juncture the environment in general needs stronger stewardship and more of a policing element to the ministry where we're directly watching and making sure that we're providing a third-party monitoring of what's going on in the environment, but it's just not there. We're not able to do it. You can have the best intentions in the world, and if you don't have the capacity to be there, then it's just not going to happen. So I'm very concerned about that, and we're seeing the ramifications of this all over the ministry and its responsibilities.

An interesting place that I would like to ask about specifically in regard to this is this oil sands management initiative that the ministry is initiating. What I'm seeing and hearing from the environment industry is that, you know, there's a shortage of people that you can get to focus on this oil sands initiative. So, in fact, some of the corporations are offering to pick up some of the pieces, to do the research for them and to do the monitoring and the job that the ministry was to be responsible for.

Again, this is a trend that I'm very concerned about, and I'd like the minister to tell us about what the policy is here in regard to self-regulation. If you allow it to self-regulate to such a great degree, eventually we lose track of the whole thing in the first place. If we're putting in a new oil sands/tar sands management section here to focus on the tar sands area, but then we say, "Well, we can't really do it ourselves," and we just get the companies to do it, then you lose a degree of credibility. I suppose people will take a second look at that and say: well, how reliable is that information and that data if we're only allowing the industry to regulate itself?

A good example of that, I think, is in regard to the downstream flow issue on the Athabasca river below the big tar sand projects. You know, what we're getting is a lot of confusion about that information. What is the minimum flow that should and could ensure to retain the ecosystem of the Athabasca river? Are we meeting those expectations? What are the implications of leakage and seepage from the massive tailings ponds that have been there for 30 years and the whole bit? What's been there at present has been a self-regulating system that obviously has not satisfied the requirements of that ecosystem, and it's not just the natural areas that you are endangering but, of course, all of the populations that live downstream from these massive tar sand projects.

So my basic first round of questioning is this: the integrity of the ministry is certainly there and a lot of the policies that we have, but would not the minister agree that again, for at least the third year in a row, we've been chronically underfunding this ministry? That has to undermine the capacity of the ministry to actually do its job, that it's mandated to do. I guess that I would like to help the minister in regard to lobbying to increase that budget and to supplement the staffing. If we have a special tar sand initiative, perhaps we can look for special funding for that to ensure that we do in fact put in ministry officials that are not working for the oil sands companies but are working for the ministry to actually execute that initiative. I think that Albertans would expect no less in regard to that and in regard to executing other initiatives that the ministry is responsible for.

You know, another area, just briefly, that is in the same situation is water – right? – being able to do the water testing and monitoring throughout the province. We've put in some very stringent initiatives, putting the moratorium on the southern rivers and whatnot, but we just simply don't have a way to measure and to regulate to see that it's being executed. All right? So if we have a moratorium on new water licensing and we're trying to set up a system to conserve the water, I mean, isn't that the very best time to put extra monies into the ministry to have people on the field to actually execute that plan? If it's all just on paper, then it's all fine and dandy, but we have to ensure that there is compliance, and the compliance has to be protected through the work of the ministry and the workers in the ministry.

So those are my first sets of questions. Hopefully, in the spirit of having more of a dialogue, I'll sit down and allow the minister to reply. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I guess that I'm dismayed but not surprised at the tone of the member's remarks. I think the Member for Edmonton-Caldor knows very well that this jurisdiction is a leader among provincial jurisdictions when it comes to ensuring that the environment is adequately monitored and regulated. It is dismaying to have someone stand up – and he's not the first one that's done it. It happens repeatedly, not only here but outside this House, by people who simply don't take the time to understand exactly what it is that we do, to make statements that are based upon fallacious assumptions.

You know, the fact of the matter is that it doesn't take hundreds of millions of dollars to do a good job of developing policy. It takes a significant amount of intelligent people who have the necessary expertise, who have the support of their minister, and who have the support of this executive team that you see in front of you, who develop the tools that we use to ensure that we are in fact doing our job as stewards of the environment, ensuring that the issues that the member makes reference to don't in fact exist.

I want to point out that, for example, the member talks about the chronic underfunding that this department has and then talked about water. Well, this year alone we have an additional $4 million that is allocated to groundwater: groundwater mapping and research related to groundwater. In my books, in anyone's books, $4 million is a lot of money. It buys a lot of expertise. It buys a lot of people, and it buys a lot of work. So I take great exception for anyone to say that we don't have sufficient dollars in our budget to do the job that we need to do.

The oil sands management unit, as I mentioned in my opening remarks, will eventually consist of about 38 people. Bringing those people into this unit will accomplish a number of things. Obviously, one of the most obvious is that those people will be fully immersed on a day-to-day basis in issues related to the oil sands, so they will develop the expertise that's specific to that particular case to a much greater extent than we've been able to do in the past. Because the development of oil sands policy, the ongoing compliance mechanisms, the necessary quality assurance programs that we have in place for the oil sands tended to be housed within other divisions in the department, people would be working on oil sands for two or three months, and then they would be moved and work on something else for the balance of the time. By bringing everyone together, by consolidating this unit in one, the people that are working in that area will concentrate almost exclusively on development of issues for the oil sands.

I want to talk about this statement that industry is picking up where the department leaves off. You know, nothing could be further from the truth. I was up in Fort McMurray myself not more than about two months ago. I met with a number of our staff, and I also met with a number of people that are involved with the Wood Buffalo Environmental Association, WBEA. That's one thing that I am learning in this department: acronyms are everywhere, and until you learn them, it seems like they're speaking Latin all around you.

The other thing that I've learned is that if you want to do a good job of protecting the environment, you can't have a policeman on every corner. So when we talk about safe neighbourhoods, what do we talk about? We talked about safe communities, community-based policing, Neighbourhood Watch, all of those kinds of programs. If we're talking about public safety, everyone says: "Government should be promoting this kind of a program. It's an excellent program. You can't have a policeman on every corner."

Well, hon. member, I'm here to tell you that the same thing applies to the environment. The best way to ensure that you have compliance with environmental legislation is not by going out and hiring more policemen, because you'll never have enough policemen on every corner. It's by involving the community and ensuring that we have community buy-in so that everyone in the community knows what the environmental standards are, knows what their responsibilities are as an individual, and knows how they can participate.

That's where we get – whether it be an airshed organization like WBEA or we get WPACs for watershed, or in this case we're actually going to be combining the two, air and water, into one organization – a community-based organization. Yes, industry is involved in it. Industry should be involved in it. They're part of the community, but so are the NGOs; so are the First Nations; so is the man on the street that has to live in this environment and is interested enough to participate in these kinds of organizations.

Yes, they're volunteers, but they're not acting in isolation. They're supported, I think, very well by support staff from Alberta Environment. They have funding that comes through to them internally through our department and through the industry, who by the very nature of the fact that they're there, there is expectation that we place on them to say: "You should be contributing to this. You should be part of this monitoring, an ongoing process."

So it comes down to this: Alberta Environment's job is to set the standards, to develop policy, to give us the tools so that we can ensure that we're protecting the environment. We do have a compliance component as any organization should have. We do from time to time some spot checks, some audits, to make sure that the systems that we've put in place are working. But we feel that it is a much better use of our resources to be developing policy, to be developing forward-looking policy so that we can continue to have leading-edge policy when it comes to managing the environment. Put our emphasis there, and then have a process in place where we've got the community watch; we've got people that are in place knowing what the expectations are, having our people from a compliance perspective deal with (a) complaints – and we follow up on virtually every complaint – and (b) spot checks. If we see things through either complaints or through spot checks that are not consistent with the policy, not consistent with the standards that we've set, then we are prepared to and we have not hesitated to come down very heavily and very severely on those that choose to blatantly ignore the standards, pollute and contribute to the environmental degradation that we absolutely do not put up with.

So, hon. member, I guess the bottom line is that I am not going to accept the fact that because in some people's opinion we should have had a larger increase, then therefore we're incapable of doing a job of protecting the environment. I think it's quite the contrary. We have $160 million-plus to devote to protecting the environment, and $160 million is plenty of money in anyone's books. It's not how much money we have; it's how we use those resources in the most effective way so that we know and are confident at the end of the day that we have fulfilled our obligations, our commitments to society and to the environment to ensure that the standards that we set are, in fact, the standards that are kept.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll save the debates about CO₂ intensities and absolute reductions for my colleagues, but I want to go into a couple of areas, one that potentially impacts my constituency. I want to talk just generally about reclamation and the problems that are out there from the past, i.e. service stations or other areas. I haven't had time to look tonight, but the Auditor General has talked about this, that there's a severe cost out there, and I think we might agree on this, that the polluters should pay. But how you go back and do that is another situation, of course. I would be interested in the cost and the scope of the problem that the minister sees out there with some of these places that have been left. You know, the ones that are most common are service stations.

The one that I want to talk about is the banned Domtar plant in northeast Edmonton, which impacts my constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and certainly one of my community leagues, Homesteader, has some concerns about this. I know that there's been some contact with the ministry, and I know that they sort of said, "Well, it's up to what the city wants to do," and the city is looking perhaps at some zoning that would allow I think playgrounds or some sort of situation in there, obviously not housing. But many people have said that they're not even sure about that, that this could have leaked into all sorts of places. Now, I don't know if this is the case or not, Mr. Chairman, but I know that there's a lot of concern in the community, and this could be a bigger issue.

I guess I'd want to know – and if the minister doesn't know about it, I would say that if he can't answer it here today, because he may not be aware of the situation, certainly a written reply would be okay in the future. But I do want to get some feedback about what the Environment ministry says about this particular site. Is there any possible danger? What could be put there without some sort of danger? How are we working with the city? My residents say: "Well, this is all well and dandy. We've heard about safe sites before." Then all of a sudden they find out something down the way, you know, that just wasn't appropriate and shouldn't have been there. I mean, I guess I question why Domtar isn't picking this up and cleaning it up themselves. I know that they've been sold, but it seems to me that they did a lot of business there over a lot of years, and the polluters should have paid. I wonder why they haven't been asked to go back in there and do a more thorough cleaning up so that it's not left with the government here or the city to deal with that. So if the minister is not updated on this – I don't expect that with every little problem he is – that's fine. I wouldn't mind a written reply about it after.

The third – and I'll give the minister an opportunity to comment; it's something that I think he would like to comment about because he was mentioning it in debate today – is the recycling industry. I believe, if I'm not wrong, that we've seen sort of a dropping off in the number of people that are recycling, and that's created some concern about why that's happening. I believe the minister talked today – and I'll allow him to expand on it a little bit here – about the possibility of this going to a policy field committee or something to look at what is happening in the whole recycling industry. So I certainly would be interested to hear his thoughts on that and see what he says and if that is possibly going to a policy field committee.

So, Mr. Chairman, those are just a couple of very specific issues that I wanted to bring up today, broadly talking about reclamation but specifically about Domtar. Then maybe the minister can talk about some of the concerns he has about what's happening with the recycling industry. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me talk a little bit on the reclamation of the downstream sites: retail sites, service stations, that kind of thing. The role of Environment is twofold. First of all, our expectation, as the hon. member mentioned, is to ensure that the polluter pays. So where there is a clearly identifiable polluter, then we're doing two things. We're monitoring the situation to ensure that the contamination that is within the site is not moving, is not spreading onto adjoining pieces of property and also that the owner of the site has got an ongoing management plan so that over time they are in fact remediating and cleaning up the site.

There is work to be done on this whole issue of reclamation and remediation. Let me be honest; the way we have the existing legislation does not have a whole lot of incentive in place to encourage the owner of a former service station site that's got contamination due to leaking petroleum tanks or something – while I think it's valid and it's good and it's proper that we have the philosophy that the polluter pays, our legislation now says that not only does the polluter pay now but the polluter continues to pay in perpetuity. So when someone cleans up a site today and we issue a reclamation certificate, if 20 years down the road technology changes, the state of the art changes, and we find that there still is contamination on that site, the original polluter could still be held liable. So people are looking at it and saying: look, if we're going to be perpetually held liable for this, if we can never sell this piece of property and we can never actually take this potential liability of our books, why should we bother?

So I think that is an area where we have a lot of work to do. There is and we in fact are working on a process whereby we can issue a reclamation certificate and, barring huge exceptional circumstances, reasonably be able to say to the owner of that land: yes, you have cleaned that up to the satisfaction of government, and that obligation of polluter pay has been fulfilled. It's not as easy as it might sound, and we don't necessarily want to have a massive transfer of liability from the private sector to the public sector, but it's an area that I think, until we resolve that problem, we're constantly going to be dealing with these kinds of issues.

When I was minister of municipal affairs, we often ran into situations where we would have a small town in rural Alberta where all four corners on main street, right in the middle of downtown, are now vacant, and the reason that they're vacant is because they're owned by giant oil companies that used to retail gasoline on those sites, and it's cheaper for them to continue to pay the property taxes every year, to do minimum maintenance on that property than it is for them to do the reclamation. Even if they did the reclamation, there's no guarantee that they would be held blameless should something else turn up at a later point in time. So it's an area that we have work to do on.

That being said, we're making some really good progress. The areas that we're making some really good progress on are some of the sites that were held by independents, that were held in the hands of municipalities. As the hon. member knows, also in my former ministry of municipal affairs, there is the petroleum tank program that has recently been funded to allow for some further work to be done to deal with the small-property owners that have potential to have significant problems. They're not able to sell their property because they can't get financing. Banks won't issue a mortgage on property until they've got a reclamation certificate in their hands. So we are making some very good progress in that manner.

I want to talk just slightly about the Domtar site. I do have some information about this site. Again, it's similar to what I've been talking about with respect to a service station. Only this is on a much larger scale. Our priority with a site like this is to ensure that the highest risk areas are dealt with so that if there is obvious contamination that is posing a significant risk to neighbours, that area is dealt with first. I'm advised that all of those high-risk areas on that site have now been dealt with. The rest of the site is being risk managed, which means that the owner of the site has to supply Alberta Environment with their risk management plan so that it shows over time that they are continuing an ongoing program that is going to reduce the amount of contamination on the land. Most importantly, we are satisfied that none of the contamination that's on-site is migrating off the land.

What has to happen now is that combined with the city and the owner, there need to be some decisions made on: what is the future use of that land going to be? Depending upon what the future use of that land is, Environment will then have to become involved and set various levels of decontamination for the land. If, for example, the land is going to be converted into a parking lot, paved over in a parking lot, and a caveat put on the title that it can never be developed, then basically what we would be concerned with is that any contamination is stabilized, that it's not moving and it's not going to migrate and it's not going to cause any problem to groundwater or adjoining land and it's not going to be posing a risk to anyone. If, on the other hand, someone decides that they should build a school there and children are going to be on-site every day and playing and rolling around in the dirt on the playground, then obviously the level of decontamination is going to be significantly higher. So we'll work in conjunction with the municipality to ensure that the designated use of that land is compatible with the degree to which the decontamination is taking place.

A good example of that is a project – and I don't know how familiar the member is; it happened a few years ago – in Lynnwood Ridge in Calgary. That was an ongoing process where what happened was that there was inappropriate use of an industrial site that we are now still in the process of cleaning up after the fact. We don't want to allow ourselves to get into a situation like that again, so we're not going to approve any development on that site until we know what it is and what the degree is to which the decontamination plan has been put into effect.

It works with, really, a three-way communication: the owner of the land, the municipality and their long-range plans, and Alberta Environment. I think it's probably a pretty good system when we allow it to work and everybody uses a little bit of common sense. It would be pointless to say that this has to be in pristine condition if it is in fact going to be paved over for a parking lot. On the other hand, there may be cases where it makes a whole lot of sense that for various reasons it does need to be returned substantially.

Finally, let's spend just a little bit of time talking about recycling. The member is absolutely right – oh, Vancouver 2, Medicine Hat 2, seven minutes left in the game. Thank you very much. It could be into overtime.

The recycling is troublesome.

Does somebody else want to talk? Then I'll get back to you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the time allocated has now run out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I appreciate the comments so far of the hon. minister, still Minister of Environment.

I'm just wondering how the team is doing. I don't know if your officials are keeping you apprised of the score.

Anyway, I wanted to talk a little bit about the government's climate change act, which was previously known as Bill 3. As the minister knows, we fundamentally disagree with the intensity approach which is contained in that bill. I would like to sort of deal with it in terms of the recent federal initiatives that were announced with respect to climate change and to greenhouse gas emissions nationally.

Now, the federal plan also begins initially with an intensity approach, but within a few years the plan shifts towards absolute caps. This has not been part of the approach that has been expressed in what we've seen from the provincial government. So it seems to me that there is a period of harmony for a number of years while the federal government deals with intensity targets but then a shift to hard caps, not part of the policy that we at least have heard this government express. Yet there was a certain amount of comment which we observed in the media and otherwise about the two approaches being somewhat in harmony. I guess my question for the minister is: what impact does this federal plan have on Alberta's long-term approach to greenhouse gas emissions, and what does it do to the climate change act, or Bill 3?

It seems to me that there's at least an argument that could be made that the federal plan renders Alberta's act almost a dead letter and, in fact, renders it almost irrelevant. I'd like to know the minister's view on how the federal plan and the provincial legislation interact with each other and what validity into the future the climate change act actually has, given the federal move in this area. If you could focus on the jurisdictions of the two orders of government with respect to this issue and which one takes precedence, I would be most interested in hearing that in a little detail.

Then it gives rise to the question of whether or not the provincial government envisages moving toward some hard cap at some point into the future. If not, then how much absolute emission does the government think Alberta will be producing, you know, in 10 years or 20 years?

The other questions that I have have to do with the federal government's carbon tax and how that fits in with the government's plan to have emissions-based intensity trading within the province and whether or not that also has been rendered essentially null as a result of the federal action. I just wanted to deal with that at this point in terms of emissions.

I want to talk a little bit about water and the supply of fresh water. I wonder if the department has looked at the state of the glaciers that feed the major rivers in Alberta, including the North Saskatchewan and the South Saskatchewan river systems, and when the melting or degradation of those glaciers is going to significantly impact the supply of fresh water in our rivers and what impact that's going to have: whether or not, in fact, there's some long-term planning. Has the department looked at those glaciers and what the supply of water is going to be when those glaciers become essentially degraded? Are they following the melting back of glaciers and the impact on the rivers and the supply of fresh water in Alberta?

I'd also like to know in terms of the rapid growth that the province is experiencing – and particularly the city of Calgary, I think, in this case is one that I'd like to focus on – how sustainable the current population or projected populations of that city and I guess southern Alberta as well as a whole are, given a reduced supply of fresh water in the future and what steps the government is going to take to limit growth or to manage the insufficiency of fresh water into the future. So the whole question, Mr. Chairman, of the rapid growth in Calgary and southern Alberta versus the potential decline in the amount of fresh water that's available.

Also, of course, there is the agreement with Saskatchewan that we provide them with 50 per cent of the fresh water that we receive, whether or not that particular agreement with Saskatchewan is being adhered to and whether or not the department believes that we will be able to meet that obligation to the province of Saskatchewan given the rates of growth that are taking place in the province. If not, well, then there's the broader question of the government's policy relative to growth in general, which is not this minister's specific responsibility but which we would, you know, certainly be raising with the Premier and with other ministers, perhaps at one of the cross-ministry sessions.

There's also the question of the availability of fresh water to support development in the Athabasca tar sands. There has been a lot of discussion in the last couple of years about the supply of water in the Athabasca River and how that river is going to be impacted by continued growth of industrial development in the tar sands around Fort McMurray, whether or not some severe damage to that river is going to take place, whether or not the government is prepared to accept that, what analysis they have done, what studies they have done to estimate the impact on the Athabasca River and other water bodies in that area of the ongoing development of the tar sands, and whether or not the plans for the economic development and the Department of Energy for continued rapid growth and not touching the brake, as the Premier puts it, letting the market decide, whether or not those approaches and the projections arising from that have been married to projections of freshwater supply and the wildlife habitat that exists there.

I want to ask also, Mr. Chairman, if I can about the quality of water in the lakes, particularly in central Alberta. There has been a certain amount of discussion around that, a certain amount of concern that has been expressed in some studies and in the media and so on about the quality of the water in those lakes: Pigeon Lake, Gull Lake, Sylvan Lake, and a number of other lakes in central Alberta. I'd like the minister perhaps to give us some indication of where we stand there.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just an update: the game is in overtime, in intermission as we speak. So maybe we'll answer a whole lot of questions really fast, and then we can watch the overtime. I don't think we'll make it.

The leader of the third party talked on climate change and water, so let me have my comments around the same two issues. The federal plan is really in many ways a reflection of the provincial plan, and when the member asks what impact the federal plan has on the provincial policy with respect to CO₂, we see it to some extent as being complementary. There's a significant difference between the federal plan and the provincial policy, and that is that at this point the federal plan is just that: it's a plan. It's not due to take effect until three years from now.

The provincial plan comes into effect three months from now, the 1st of July. We will have had a significant amount of practical, hands-on experience in dealing with what are substantially the same mechanisms that the federal government is dealing with. In fact, the federal government has been quite straightforward in saying that they plan to harmonize and work with provincial jurisdictions wherever possible. So we believe that what we accomplish over the next three years can very much feed into and complement the federal plan.

There's a great deal of detail. These kinds of situations are never black and white. It's never as simple as it might seem. A lot of the disagreements over interpretation that we anticipate over the next couple of years will have been resolved, and I think that by that time the federal government will realize that rather than having to fight the same old battles over and over, they may learn from the experiences of those same battles fought in Alberta.

The issue to keep in mind with the federal plan – and the member points it out, and I've heard it pointed out before – is that the federal plan contemplates caps, absolute caps. Well, in fact, it doesn't. It talks about targets that are caps, but it doesn't talk about absolute caps. It very deftly, however you want to put it, goes from intensity-based targets that are industrial in nature, and then flows through very nicely, almost without having taken a breath, into absolute targets that are economy-wide in nature. All of a sudden now we're including vehicle exhaust and building heating and everything else. While it's relatively simple to deal with the technicalities around intensity-based targets for industrial emitters, it's not nearly so simple to start to make promises around fulfilling commitments to absolute targets for vehicle emissions and everything else. The best that we can do is to set some targets.

Alberta has never said that we were not going to achieve some absolute targets. We've just said that it'll be done on the basis of investment in the necessary science and technology so that at some point in time we will have the ability to do a better job of managing our CO₂ emissions than what we're doing right now. That's why we believe that by bringing our mechanism into play in July of this year, we're going to get a significant head start on the rest of the country when it comes to having the necessary expertise to deal with the science.

Where we differ, quite frankly, with the federal government is that I think the federal government is being a little overly optimistic when they expect some pretty massive organizations to turn things around as rapidly as they seem to think they're going to be turned around. Yes, there are wonderful opportunities, and we believe that there are huge opportunities for carbon capture and sequestration, but it doesn't happen overnight, and it doesn't happen in a one- or a two-year window. It happens in probably a 10-year window, where you begin the process, you have the opportunity for the capture to be incorporated into the design plans, and at the same time you're dealing with the transportation of CO₂ and how you are going to be moving CO₂. All of these things have to happen in the proper sequence.

I'm concerned that the federal government may be abandoning investment in the technology far sooner than would be prudent and far sooner than will allow industry to make the necessary changes. What the federal government is proposing that the province is not proposing is to move into emissions trading and those of kinds of instruments to a much greater degree than the province is. The province believes that we should be dealing with our problems here in Alberta, not simply paying, as the member calls it, a carbon tax so that we can merrily go on polluting and not deal with the situation that we have here.

Let's make it very clear: the intensity-based targets that we have in Alberta are designed to create the opportunity for absolute reductions. In fact, if you're one of the operators anywhere in Alberta right now that's subject to the legislation, it is, in reality, an absolute target. It's not intensity based. You cannot avoid the compliance mechanisms by simply turning down the tap. We've already established what your base is, and we expect you to be more efficient in producing whatever it is that you produce with respect to CO₂. What makes it intensity based as opposed to absolute is that we're not putting up a sign at the border and saying: anyone who wishes to work in Alberta need not apply because we've closed the door to all future development. We're not prepared to do that. We never will do that because we don't believe that that's the role of government.

That is a good segue and leads me into the discussion around water because the member was making similar kinds of statements around water. A typical NDP way of looking at the world is: "We won't manage our resources. We'll simply manage the business. We'll just determine how many businesses we can have in this province, and then when there's enough, we'll just send the rest of them away." We, on the other hand, feel that it is our job and our responsibility to manage the resources wisely and to set the outcomes.

So when we look at water basins, for example, like we did in the Athabasca – we've determined what are the in-stream flow needs of the Athabasca River, and we've determined what is the maximum that we are going to allow industrial development to impact on those in-stream flow needs. At this point the amount of water that is actually being used is minuscule. Less than 2 per cent is allocated. The difficulty is that the water doesn't necessarily flow at a uniform rate 12 months of the year, so we have periods of the year when there are massive amounts of water such that you wouldn't even notice that there's been any withdrawal, and then in other parts of the year, particularly in the winter, the flow is significantly diminished. So we have to set the maximums at different levels depending upon the flow rates, and that's what we've done through the IFN.

The same thing applies in southern Alberta. We've now closed off the South Saskatchewan River basin to further allocations on the Oldman and the Bow, but that doesn't mean that there can be no more development on the Oldman and the Bow. It means that we have to do a lot better job of using the water that's already there. There's plenty of water there. It's just a matter of ensuring that we use it wisely, ensuring that we conserve water wherever we can, that we recycle water wherever we can, and that's how we're going to continue.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm happy to raise some more questions with the minister. I think that, you know, in a rather partisan way he misrepresented the intent of the questions around water. The questions were: what impact will a shortage of water in the South Saskatchewan basin in particular have on urban growth, and what impact will industrial development in the Fort McMurray area around the Athabasca tar sands have on the Athabasca River? It's not, as the minister tried to suggest, an attempt on our part to say that you need to control the businesses. I said nothing of that sort whatsoever, so I didn't appreciate that very much.

I don't think that the minister actually answered the question: what kind of limitations on growth? Let's take Calgary. Let's take the South Saskatchewan River basin and the Bow River in particular. What impacts on the growth that's projected for that city is the shortage of fresh water going to have? Not trying to control any businesses or anything. That's a serious question. It's a very important question because Calgary is growing very, very rapidly, and at some point a shortage of fresh water is going to act as a brake on that development. I'd like to know what this minister and what this department has planned for that situation. The same with the impact of continuing development in the tar sands and the Athabasca River. I'd like to know about that as well as the impacts of the melting of glaciers at the headwaters of a number of Alberta rivers and whether or not the government is planning for that and what they're planning for that.

I want to talk a little bit about carbon sequestration, Mr. Chairman. I would like to know what studies the government has with respect to the viability of this approach, where in Alberta this approach is being considered, what developments in technology need to be achieved before this technology is viable, what capital costs the government has in mind for developing this system, including spending a considerable amount of federal money, potentially, on a pipeline for the transportation of CO₂, where that project is at, and how the government plans to spend that money.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that there are many depleted or partially depleted oil fields in this province. The use of CO₂ in order to replace fresh water as a means of getting the final 10 per cent or so of the oil from these fields is probably a very good idea, mostly because we'd no longer have to consume fresh water, which is then permanently lost. I believe the province of Alberta has about 100,000 holes drilled in it. I could be way out, but that number seems to stick in my head as a ballpark figure. The question then is:

if you're going to push CO₂ under the ground into these fields, and there are thousands of holes in a given field that have been drilled, and all of the subsurface strata has all been punctured, how are you going to keep the CO₂ down?

Now, just in case I get reprimanded here by the minister, I understand that CO₂ is heavier than air and won't float up into the atmosphere like it was helium. But I also think that if you want to store substantial quantities of CO₂ underground, you're going to have to put it under some pressure. If that's the case, it will come back up through a strata that, in this province, I think is more akin to a pincushion than anything else. So it strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that if they're going to use this approach, which is, in my opinion, quite untried, they're going to have to do a lot of work to make sure that specific sites are valid or are going to work. You just can't start pumping this stuff into some of these major underground formations and expect it to stay permanently down.

So the real questions are whether or not this is a valid approach, whether it really is workable, whether it's economic, what the costs are. I'd like to know the state of the government's research on some of this. Are there some specific areas where this can be done today? What percentage of the subsurface fields are suitable for this? Have they looked at that?

Those are real questions, Mr. Chairman, that I think need to be answered before we put all our eggs into the basket of what is essentially landfilling CO₂. This is the approach that the government thinks is going to save them and allow ongoing increases in development in the Athabasca tar sands and other industrial development in this province. These is the magic bean that is going to save the government's industrial strategy, so they're putting an awful lot into it. They're postponing any significant action on reducing CO₂ production in the hope that one day this particular approach is going to become viable.

So I'm very interested in just how real it is and what steps the government is taking to make sure that it is going to be a viable strategy for dealing with CO₂ emissions and how much that's going to cost and whether they know if it's going to be reliable and when it's going to be significantly available.

Mr. Chairman, those are my questions. There are some, as I mentioned, that the minister didn't get to last time, about glaciers melting and so on, so I would be happy to give him the remaining few minutes that I have of my time added to his 10 minutes so that he can do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that given the fact that we're following the rules to a T tonight, it would be best if you stood up and said "30 seconds" and then sat down again, and then it'll be my turn again.

The issue regarding water and glacial status is one that is certainly under consideration. You don't have to be a scientist to be able to see that there are receding glaciers. How long the water will continue to flow from those glaciers: we're going to have to learn that over time. I don't know that anyone at this point in time can give any more than an educated guess on what is the actual issue with respect to the actual numbers involved with glacial melt. It's dependent upon the temperature, the climate over the next few years, and it's also dependent upon the degree to which global warming and climate change progress. Both of those are variables that are very hard to predict.

What can be predicted with relative certainty far enough into the future is that the amount of water that comes from glacial melt is going to be diminished, and that's why it's absolutely imperative that we begin now to plan for how we're going to have water storage mechanisms in place. The net amount of water may not change that much over time. It's just that it's going to come in different forms. It's going to come in the form of rain, and it's going to come in the form of snow. So when we get the tremendous amount of flush in the spring, if we don't manage to keep some of it behind, then we're going to be just simply sending it off either to the Arctic or to Hudson Bay, which then leads me to the questions that you brought up earlier with respect to our commitments to our neighbours to the east.

We have a very firm commitment that 50 per cent of the water flow from Alberta goes through to Saskatchewan. We've never even come close to that 50 per cent except for one year, 2001, which was the driest year that we've had, and in that year it was 59 per cent. Most years it's well over 75 per cent and, in fact, even more; it's over 80 per cent. So it's simply not an issue.

What is an issue, though, is how we manage that water so that it continues to flow all season long. Much of that flow goes through in the spring. So if we can capture some of that water in the spring, have off-stream storage facilities of one kind or another, it will allow us to release it over time and keep that water flow constant for the downstream users.

I talked briefly about the in-stream flow need and the Athabasca River. How we're dealing with that river is by setting the maximum that can be withdrawn by industry. That same philosophy will apply again in the south. So, again, to answer the question that the member had – how is the shortage of water going to affect the growth of Calgary? – it's not my question to answer. I'm not the one that's going to be making the decisions on whether there's going to be economic growth. I'm the one that's responsible for managing the water. I'm going to be saying: "This is how much water is available. You're going to have to learn to live with this much water."

As an example, the average water consumption in Calgary, I'm told, is about 400 litres per person per day, which is probably double what many other North American and European cities have. So if you want to talk about economic development, we could double the economic development if we only conserved water to the same extent that everyone is already doing everywhere else.

There are ample opportunities for us to do a better job of managing the resource. To suggest that we're going to restrict economic development because of a shortage of water is simply not true. What we are going to do is manage the water better. We're going to put the priority on managing the health of the stream, and we're going to do everything that we can to facilitate the water users sharing that water, using it two and three times over so that the municipal wastewater from one becomes the feedstock for another. An industry that needs water for cooling, for example, can use municipal wastewater. They don't need to have a separate licence to take water out of the river. There are opportunities for irrigation to use municipal wastewater. There are all kinds of opportunities for us to recycle and reuse the water, and we don't have to even reinvent the wheel. They're being used the world over in other places. So that's the role and the leadership position that Alberta Environment needs to take.

On carbon sequestration the question was: where are we going to have carbon sequestration? Alberta is unique geologically in much of North America in that we do have the geologic formations that are conducive to storage of CO₂. Those do not exist in other places, nor do they exist in all places in Alberta. The formations that are conducive to carbon sequestration are dotted all around Alberta, but there is some work being done right now in central Alberta, some pilot projects and some smaller projects that Glencoe Resources in the Red Deer area is currently working on. We're also participating in a pilot project in Weyburn, Saskatchewan, that's perfecting the issue of carbon sequestration.

AERI is working, as is Alberta Environment, on devising – one of the things we have to do in policy development is understand the regulatory regime around carbon storage. The member asked: "We've got a whole bunch of holes in all of these various wells from former wells. How are we going to ensure that we've sealed it?" Well, we do have a regime in place that says that when a well is abandoned, it has to be sealed off. Again, we're going to have to be sure that we follow up, that those kinds of things continue to take place, that wells that are currently in use are sealed, and we will have to have a plan in place to ensure that all of the abandoned wells in a particular formation have been appropriately sealed so that we don't have risk of contamination.

The costs that are associated with it are some of the questions that will be answered by the committee that is currently looking at this whole issue. They're looking at economic viability; they're looking at costs. Those kinds of answers we will have shortly.

What development needs to take place? We need to perfect at this point a couple of things. We need to perfect the capture. There is technology in place now to capture CO₂. That technology only applies for capturing CO₂ that is a consequence of a chemical reaction. So it happens inside a steel container. When you talk about gasification of coal, for example, one of the results of that is that you get pure CO₂ that's already captured in a vessel, and we don't have to worry about capturing it. We then just have to go: now that we've got it, what do we do with it?

There's another aspect of CO₂ sequestration that we have a lot of work to do on, and that's: how do we capture the stuff that's coming out of a stack? How do we capture CO₂ that's a result of combustion, that's being created by heat? That's the area where most of the research will have to be committed to the sequestration side.

On the storage side the member has pointed out one of the issues. The other issue is: what is the most economical way and the best way to move it? As the member points out, it's heavy stuff. It's a lot heavier than natural gas, for example, and to put it into a pipeline requires a significant amount of horsepower to keep it moving down that pipeline. There's probably going to have to be some additional work done on that.

All that being said, the technology exists today. It's not science fiction. It exists in pilot plants in North America, in Africa, and in Canada. What we have to do is learn how to scale it up to commercial size, and we have to learn how to do it in an economically viable way because there's no point in storing CO₂ if the cost of storing the CO₂ is higher than what the returns are that you can get from creating it in the first place.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, we have about two minutes.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. I'm just jumping in quickly. Perhaps I can get an answer in writing for a couple of questions here, and then away we go.

I had a question in regard to air monitoring. There are new federal standards that are coming on in regard to nitrous oxide, sulphur dioxide, and particulates. I wanted to ask how the ministry was going to deal with these and try to get ahead of those as they come online. It's certainly going to be an ambitious target though something well worth pursuing.

The second thing that I wanted to just ask about quickly is if the ministry is looking at: what's the threshold for the North Saskatchewan River vis-à-vis water extraction? We have a lot of upgraders being planned for the North Saskatchewan, so has the ministry done some projections as to how many upgraders and plants they can approve so that the North Saskatchewan still can be maintained as an ecosystem and to meet our obligations to the downstream flow to Saskatchewan?

Then the third one. I just wanted to get back to the budget itself. I wasn't trying to be fallacious, as the minister tried to describe me as being. Rather, I would say that perhaps a more appropriate word would be "felicitous" because in fact I'm making a well-reasoned argument. The numbers don't lie, right? I mean, we go from year to year. We've only had an increase in the budget of 5.2 per cent, which maybe meets the rate of inflation but probably not. Regardless of what the intention of the ministry is, if you're not funding it from year to year to expand or to even meet the rate of inflation, then does that not constitute really maybe a lack of commitment to the environment from the government in general? I know that the minister must be, at least secretly, disappointed that he didn't get more money from his budget.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you still have about 30 seconds if you want to.

Mr. Eggen: Oh, I'm sorry. I was just getting down to get my pen.

An Hon. Member: You were not.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, I was. Here, I've found it.

I guess, you know, that it's a question of priority in relation to other ministries too. Let's say, for example, that the grant budget went up by 66 per cent this year, and this one only went up by 5.2 per cent. That is indicative of priority, I think . . .

10:00

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, but pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(b) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Energy and Environment relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the House now stand adjourned until 1 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:03 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 15, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/05/15

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a few of Alberta's greatest assets. Joining us today from St. Marguerite Catholic school in Innisfail we have 25 grade 6 students, and accompanying them are their teachers, Andrea Woods, Sister Marie Clarkin, as well as parent volunteers Sue Haddow and Mrs. Tammy Orom. I am pleased that they could make their way up to Edmonton today on such a beautiful day for travelling. They're joining us in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to all stand, and we'll give them their warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce seven of the best employees that this government has in this Department of Seniors and Community Supports. We're delighted that through the public service orientation they have time to come and visit and see the proceedings of the Legislature and acquaint themselves with this part of the public policy. I'd have them stand as I read their names: Heather King, Lee Ann Kucheraway, Cathy Wood, Kara Boucher, Christine Jimenez, Sharon Presisnuk, and Janette Spilak. If we could all give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I introduce to you and through you nine students from l'école Desrochers school in Jasper. These nine students came by train yesterday. They're with their teacher, Roxane Thomas, and parent helper Diane Hayes. At this time I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In May it's wonderful to see women that are braving the elements with beautiful hats. Today we are graced in the public gallery with the presence of the Rose Buds Red Hat chapter of Sherwood Park. Queen Lorraine is here with several other guests, Lorraine MacDonald and the Rose Buds of Sherwood Park. If they would rise, please, we'd give them all a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly this afternoon Mr. Sean Schaffer. Sean will be working in my constituency office this summer. He has a passion for politics and government, and that's reflected in the fact that he is enrolled in the bachelor of applied policy studies program at Mount Royal College in Calgary. In his free time he is a youth vice-president of the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta for Foothills-Rocky View. Sean is here in the members' gallery. I would ask Sean to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Audrey Luft, chair of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts; Mr. Robert Sirman, director of the Canada Council for the Arts; and Mr. Amir Alibhai, Canada Council for the Arts board member. This morning Ms Luft, Mr. Sirman, and Mr. Alibhai announced the new partnership that will result in tremendous benefits for Alberta's arts community. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts and the Canada Council for the Arts are joining forces to form the Alberta creative development initiative, which will provide $6 million in grants to Alberta artists and arts organizations over the next three years.

The Speaker: That sounds like a ministerial statement. How about we go with the introduction.

Mr. Goudreau: I'd like to thank Ms Luft, Mr. Sirman, and Mr. Alibhai for their continued efforts in support of the arts and will now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 67 great kids from my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. They hail from the school of St. John Bosco elementary, a brand new school in the area, and it's already full. In fact, they're already needing more spaces. I'd like the kids to rise with their teachers as well: Denise Adolf, Mr. Paul McNeely, and Miss Donna Rankin. They're also accompanied by a parent helper, Mrs. Linda Doan. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two new members of the executive of the University of Alberta Students' Union. Michael Janz, a history major, is the new president of the University of Alberta Students' Union, and Steve Dollansky, a science student, is the new vice-president external. Mr. Dollansky is also the vice-chair of the Council of Alberta University Students. They are accompanied by Don Iveson, advocacy director for the students' union. I ask that they all now please rise and accept the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two very special people who are joining us today, two individuals who are truly representative of this House. One is my nephew Steve Mather, and the other is the Premier's niece Bonnie Stelmach. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I had the pleasure on behalf of the Premier to host a couple of very special individuals, who are in your gallery, and that is Governor Jan Zahradnik and Governor Jiri Sulc, who are visiting Alberta from the Czech Republic. They are also accompanied by Jerry Jelinek, the honorary consul of the Czech Republic; Lenka Vostra, a director; Karel Hofman, chairman of the Czech Business Association; and Marian Ivan Liska, vice-president of the Czech and Slovak Association.

Mr. Speaker, it was a pleasure to host these governors at a luncheon earlier today. They will be visiting our province to sign a co-operation agreement with two Alberta cities. Governor Sulc will be signing an agreement between his region and the city of Calgary for co-operation in the area of petrochemicals, and Governor Zahradnik will sign an agricultural co-operation agreement between his region and the city of Lethbridge.

I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure, sir, to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Burn Johnston. Burn is a young man who's travelled here from Calgary to watch today's proceedings. I had the opportunity to host him at lunch today to talk about public service, and it wouldn't surprise me if some day Burn were on this floor sitting as a Member of the Legislative Assembly. I'd ask that he please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Trina French and Tina Moore. Trina and Tina are Palace Casino workers on their 249th day of strike due to the failure of the government to protect Alberta workers through fair labour legislation. Trina French was born and raised in Edmonton and has worked at the Palace Casino for six years as a dealer. Tina started at the casino on her birthday in 2000 and has been a dealer during her time there. In addition to being a full-time mom and a full-time dealer at the casino, she helps organize community sporting events that her children are involved in. She has two children who are 23 and 17 years old. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Medicine Hat Tigers

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today and recognize and congratulate a team from my constituency who has shown great heart, spirit, and perseverance.

In a pulse-pounding game 7 of the WHL championship the Medicine Hat Tigers scored in double overtime to emerge victorious. They defeated the Vancouver Giants 3-2 on Monday night in their hometown of Medicine Hat. The overtime hero was Brennan Bosch, who scored the final goal just seven minutes and 16 seconds into the second overtime period of the game.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a great fan of the Tigers, and I would argue that there's no other team in the province with stronger supporters. The people of Medicine Hat have a devout passion for Tigers hockey, and many wouldn't dream of missing a single game. The team has a proud history that includes two Memorial Cup championships and alumni such as Lanny McDonald, Trevor Linden, and Kelly Hrudey. I have no doubt that they will continue to build on this history as they head for Vancouver this Friday to play in the Memorial Cup. At this tournament they will once again meet up with the Vancouver Giants as well as the Ontario Plymouth Whalers and the Quebec Lewiston Maineiacs.

I'd like to wish the Medicine Hat Tigers best of luck in the 2007 Memorial Cup tournament. This team has great owners, coaches, and players, and I'm proud that they call Medicine Hat home. When it comes to hockey, southeast Alberta is most certainly not the forgotten corner. This group has made Medicine Hat and the region proud as well as the entire province of Alberta. Congratulations again to the Tigers on their big win, and good luck to them in their battle for the Memorial Cup.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Hobbema Cadet Corps

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had the opportunity to speak to the Assembly on a number of occasions about the Hobbema Cadet Corps. This innovative program involves nearly a thousand children in the Hobbema community. Supported by the Hobbema RCMP detachment, the cadet program helps kids to engage in positive activities. It builds the self-esteem of these young people and gives them opportunities to be with their friends in a safe and welcoming environment.

Recently the Hobbema community gathered to view a documentary about the cadet program called Shades of Blue. Filmed by Toronto filmmaker Susan Poizner, the documentary is intended to be a tool against gang violence in First Nations communities. The film takes a look at the outstanding success of the program. Tracing its growth from a few members to the well over 900 that it has today, the documentary captures how this community is actively working to provide a constructive activity for youth. To spread the message of success of the Hobbema Cadet Corps, 1,000 copies of the documentary film will be sent to schools across Canada. Hopefully, other communities struggling with drug abuse and gang activity could use Hobbema's example and develop similar programs to give their own youth an opportunity at a successful future.

Mr. Speaker, I speak for all members of my constituency in saying that we feel great pride about this very successful program. This is good news that should be shared to counter the negative impressions that are left because of drug abuse and gang activity. The Hobbema Cadet Corps has been very effective in filling the vacuum created by illicit activities.

In closing, I want to recognize cadet instructor RCMP Constable Richard Huculiak and to thank him for the great work that he and other leaders are doing with the Hobbema cadets.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Excellence in Teaching Awards for Edmonton-Rutherford Teachers

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday evening 23 Alberta teachers were honoured with the 2007 excellence in teaching awards. I am proud to inform you that there were seven finalists this year from schools in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. Nominated were Ms Denise Pridmore from Richard Secord school, Mr. Theron Lund from Harry Ainlay high school, Ms Iris Frankiw from Greenfield school, Mr. Timothy Cusack from Louis St. Laurent, and Mrs. Simone Desilets, Ms Melissa Spenrath, and Ms Sarah Federation, all from l'école St. Stanislaus.

The cream of this crop, Ms Sarah Federation, was chosen from among 33,000 colleagues to receive this prestigious award. Sarah's contributions include the development of a new and innovative approach to teaching literacy skills to English-speaking students enrolled in a French immersion program. The nomination package presented on her behalf tells a story of a professional who is adored by her students, parents, and colleagues alike.

An excerpt from the nomination reads:

Albert Einstein once said that "it is the supreme art of the teacher to awaken joy in creative expression and knowledge." In all that we have seen, heard, and experienced from the beginning of this school year, we as parents of students in Ms Sarah's class echo these bold words and use the essence of this quote to highlight our own experiences and those of our children in support of an educator who has invested herself in the art of her teaching.

Sarah's principal, Carmen Stuart, says, "Sarah has a profound understanding of children, socially, academically, emotionally, spiritually. She loves children, and that shows."

Mr. Speaker, the kids at l'école St. Stanislaus are blessed to have Sarah Federation for a teacher, and the residents of Edmonton-Rutherford are proud to have her serving in our community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Sheriff Highway Patrol

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2005 466 Albertans lost their lives on our province's highways. This is a tragic and unacceptable number. Last fall the government of Alberta strengthened its commitment to traffic enforcement in the province with the creation of a sheriff highway patrol. This program complements enforcement efforts by the RCMP and allows them to focus on more serious crime issues in the communities they serve. Budget 2007 provides $7.5 million for 42 additional sheriffs, and today the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security announced that 20 of those sheriffs will be on the road in time for this May long weekend.

We now have 60 sheriffs patrolling our highways, targeting aggressive drivers and speeders to help reduce collisions and fatalities. They have handed out almost 25,000 tickets and have helped take more than 50 impaired drivers off our roads since September. Sheriffs have also worked closely with law enforcement agencies in their regions on joint enforcement programs. For example, a four-day joint-forces operation with the RCMP in April netted more than 1,000 speeders on the Queen Elizabeth II highway. Just this past weekend sheriffs pulled over a vehicle near Grande Prairie for speeding. They noticed open liquor, and a search of the vehicle resulted in the RCMP laying drug charges against the driver.

I want to commend the sheriffs for the work they're doing to provide safe and secure communities. I'd also like to remind Albertans to take the time to drive safely this long weekend and to make sure everyone arrives alive.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Telus Cup Midget Hockey Championship

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year the best midget triple A minor hockey teams in Canada come together to play in the national championship, the Telus Cup. Every year hundreds of volunteers offer their time and expertise to plan and execute the best championship ever. This year for the first time the tournament was held in Red Deer, Alberta. Tournament organizers, including more than 200 volunteers, worked hard for two years to make the Telus Cup a great success. Players, coaches, parents, volunteers, referees, hockey fans, and sponsors gathered for one whole week to watch the best midget hockey in Canada and broke attendance records with standing-room-only crowds.

The fast, tough, and aggressive Red Deer Optimist midget triple A hockey team had a near perfect record. The only loss they suffered during the tournament was to the Prince Albert Mintos, who set a record by winning back-to-back national championships. The Red Deer Optimist lost to the Prince Albert Mintos in the gold medal game in double overtime with a score of 3 to 2.

Thank you to all the sponsors, Red Deer Minor Hockey, Hockey Canada, the 2007 Telus Cup steering committee, the coaches, the parents, and the many volunteers who helped to make this year's Telus Cup a huge success. Congratulations to the outstanding Red Deer Optimist midget triple A players – goaltenders Adam Gingras and the tournament MVP, Marc Boulanger, Darren Windle, Jeff Einhorn, Casey Mitchell, Kaare Odegard, Trevor Bauer, Colin Archer, Kyle Maas, Elliot Marion, Corey Campbell, Jordan Hale, Matt Fraser, Landon Hiebert, Erik Slempe, Cass Mappin, John Digness, Chase Schaber, Kyle Reynolds, Dallas Goodrunning, Bowen Fraser – to head coach Brent Fudge, assistant coaches Jason Nevins, Tanner Murray, and Wynne Dempster, to their trainers, Peter and Crystal Swales, and to their team manager, Gord Yake. Thank you all for making Red Deer and Alberta proud.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

All-night Debate on Bill 34

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rent reliability. From 8 p.m. on Wednesday, May 9, until almost 11 a.m., Thursday, May 10, representatives of all parties wrestled with Bill 34, the Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. While deeply divided on the issue of rent controls, we all recognized the urgent need for affordable rental accommodations. It was frequently noted throughout debate by members of all parties that Bill 34 was only a part of the answer, a first step rather than a final solution.

Members of the Liberal and New Democratic parties called upon the government to intervene by introducing amendments proposing temporary rent caps to halt a wave of unjustifiable rent increases. Our Conservative counterparts were asked to define what they perceived as gouging but instead held fast to their sincere belief that the market would eventually sort itself out. Regardless of our party stripe we believe that the vast majority of landlords and tenants are honourable individuals. Where our views diverge is on how we would address the crisis of rent spikes anywhere from 45 per cent to 400 per cent.

The first amendment, that was proposed by the Liberal MLA for Edmonton-Glenora, was to restrict rent increases to the CPI plus 2 per cent over a two-year period, thus providing a breath of calm in which affordable rental accommodation could be brought online. While unanimously accepted by both the Liberal and NDP representatives, it was resoundingly rejected by Conservatives, the member of the Alliance, and the independent.

Two important amendments proposed by our Liberal MLAs for Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-McClung which required the one-year single increase to be put into legislation rather than regulation and a doubling of the fine from $5,000 to $10,000 for landlords who contravene the condo conversion section of the act were accepted late Thursday morning. Unfortunately, renters continue to be left hanging in the wind by this government, which courts the unscrupulous few at the expense of the vulnerable many.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition sponsored by the Alberta Social Credit Party. It has 2,498 signatures. The petition calls for the Assembly to urge the government to "introduce legislation to eliminate health care premiums for all Albertans."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition with 66 signatures on it. The petition calls for province-wide inspections and enforcement at health facilities and reads: "urge the government to immediately establish a public inquiry into the failure of the health care system to protect the safety of patients."

head:

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today arising out of questions raised in Committee of Supply. I'd like to table responses to questions raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a list of documents and studies requested by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore concerning my department's mountain pine beetle action plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings this afternoon. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of a news release: Alberta artists set to benefit from the new $6 million partnership. It provides further details regarding the new Alberta creative development initiative.

The other tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of the guidelines for the community initiatives program, which were approved in 2004, and five copies of information regarding unmatched grants in excess of $10,000 which were used to help nonprofit community groups provide valuable services to Albertans across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies from a woman constituent of Bragg Creek, Lucy Curtis, who expresses concerns about the logging plans for the Kananaskis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today. The first is from Neil and Maureen Bleakney, who live in Fort McMurray. They are worried about the cost of housing, particularly because high rents are hurting seniors.

The second is from Jacques Francois Boulet. Mr. Boulet and his family recently moved to Alberta but are now planning to move away after being given notice that their apartment is going to be converted to a condominium, and they see no possibility of securing affordable housing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a document describing the organization GOPAC. That's the Global Organization of Parliamentarians Against Corruption. It is now into its third year. It is chaired by John Williams, a Member of Parliament from Alberta, and it has membership now in over 90 countries.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five letter tablings today outlining the infrastructure priorities of five school districts. The first is from the Wolf Creek school division No. 72 indicating the need for school facilities in the town of Ponoka over the next 25 years as well as the modernization of Iron Ridge elementary campus in the town of Blackfalds and modernization of Rimbey junior/senior . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member. Three ministers provided tablings today where they could have gone on for a long period of time. Let's just table and move on, please.

Mr. Chase: Okay. My second tabling is from the Calgary Girls' school, looking for support for a 600-student middle school.

My third is from the Calgary board of education, and it represents the needs for Coventry middle school, Northwest senior high, and Piitoayis family school.

The fourth letter comes from the Edmonton Catholic schools looking for major modernization of Archbishop MacDonald, Archbishop O'Leary, and the construction of an elementary/junior high school in Windermere.

The final letter is from the Edmonton public school district, which requires 16 new construction projects. The three highest priorities: Palisades elementary, Burnewood/Meadows junior high, and Terwillegar Heights elementary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hancock, Government House Leader, final copy dated May 15, 2007, spring calendar, Committee of Supply.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Affordable Housing

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's response to the affordable housing crisis raises serious questions about its competence. At a time when Albertans desperately need clear direction and a solid plan, we get confusion and disarray. The Premier has lost control of this file. Questions posed to one minister get answered by another. At least three different ministers have programs, funds, websites, or committees at various stages of development. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier tell Albertans why the government's response to the affordable housing crisis is so confused?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our response to the housing issue in the province of Alberta is very clear. It starts with a huge capital investment: $285 million for affordable housing. It's followed up with legislation that was passed in the House. There are also rent supplement programs in place and also a safety net in place for those families that cannot find accommodation. That safety net, quite frankly, accommodates families of different sizes to ensure that we can find appropriate accommodation for them in the location of their choice.

Dr. Taft: Well, despite the Premier's assurances the confusion continues to grow. First, the Minister of Service Alberta announces a rent review panel, chaired by the Member for Calgary-Foothills, to establish a code of conduct and a public website to shame landlords who gouge tenants. Now it appears that he's backtracking and just looking to sit down with an existing committee to discuss solutions. To the Premier: is his government proceeding or is it backtracking on these flawed plans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the government is moving forward on any initiatives with respect to housing. This issue came up during the leadership campaign in the province of Alberta, and it's multifold. It's not only homelessness but also low-income rental units and families wanting to buy single dwellings. There are, of course, issues in all those categories. We're meeting with various authorities to make sure that we continue in our plan and build the number of units that we require to house all Albertans.

Dr. Taft: Well, this government's actions show that it's completely out of touch with the will of Albertans. A poll released just this morning indicates that a huge majority of Edmontonians and Calgarians, including 78 per cent of homeowners, not renters but homeowners, support government limits on rent increases, something this government has opposed. To the Premier: how does this government so blatantly ignore the wishes of an overwhelming majority of Albertans on so fundamental an issue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, clearly, affordable housing is an issue for all Albertans. As I said earlier, we have a four-point plan. We're proceeding on that plan, and of course most important is to provide as many housing units as possible in the province of Alberta. We've discussed this a number of times in this House. We are proceeding with a plan, and we will see more construction, more starts in the province of Alberta to help accommodate Alberta families.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

1:30 Capital Region Municipal Planning

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, this government is out of touch with the public on all kinds of issues. A public opinion poll on managing growth in the Edmonton region revealed that 89 per cent of people across the whole region believe there should be more regional co-operation in the capital region. However, this government once again is not providing leadership on this issue. To the Premier: why is the Premier so out of touch on another important issue affecting so many Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, Mr. Speaker, we are working with all municipalities in the province of Alberta towards better co-ordination of planning. There is a focus, of course, in the capital region because of the huge growth. Many of the plans that are announced or will be announced shortly are in Sturgeon and the county of Strathcona, but they will impact all the municipalities in the area. That's why we're meeting to find out exactly the kind of infrastructure that's required, also the kind of follow-up on various social issues that may result from more people moving into the area and the various impacts on individual municipalities. That's the path we're taking, and we're going to keep those discussions going and build a plan for the capital region.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Keeping the discussions going is not working.

Yesterday in this Assembly the Premier said he was, quote, confident that municipalities in the capital region are working effectively together, but I know from going to ACRA meetings and from talking to Edmonton city council that they're barely talking to each other. Clearly the municipalities are in chronic conflict. To the Premier: how does the Premier justify his confidence that mandatory regional planning is not needed for the Edmonton region?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned in the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce speech I delivered a few weeks ago that we are going to work with municipalities to build a consensus on a plan that will roll out well into the future a lot of the major questions with respect to infrastructure, with respect to some of the social needs of the various municipalities. I did indicate at that time that it's not my wish to use a big stick because I have tremendous confidence in the elected municipal officials, but if after a period of time we cannot reach agreement, then we will have to step in. There is a huge risk here of a significant loss of investment if we don't have a very predictable, stable regulatory planning regime in place.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is right, at least, in saying that there is a huge risk here if there isn't strong regional planning. The Member for Sherwood Park is known, in fact, to oppose the interests of Edmonton in having strong regional planning.

My question is to the Premier. Given that so much of the proposed development in the capital region is in his own backyard, is he also opposed to mandatory regional planning?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. leader doesn't know where I live. I live south of Andrew and not in the northeast industrial heartland. Anyway, with respect to this whole issue of further development, we are privileged in the province of Alberta because through very good planning on behalf of the province in previous years most of the synergy of all of the plants that will be built, especially petrochemical plants, will be built in one industrial area, which will reduce the amount of footprint across the province of Alberta environmentally. Here's a conveyance of pipeline. We'll have additional transportation lines, rail lines built in that area. Now we have to take the next step and see how having so many workers in one area affects neighbouring municipalities, and we are doing that.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Rural School Closures

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Schools are crucial to the health of communities everywhere, and this is especially true in rural areas. Last week we heard from the Minister of Education that this government is committed to keeping schools in places where people live and learn. Recent news of four potential school closures in the rural area of east Wheatland demonstrates that this government is not practicing what it preaches. People in Rockyford are very worried that their K to 9 school will close. To the Minister of Education: the village of Rockyford was promised last year by the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks that under no circumstances would they lose their K to 9 school. Will you confirm that this promise is still valid, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I've not been informed by the Golden Hills school division of any plans to close that particular school.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Understandably, town officials were caught completely off guard by the announcement of this possible school closure. With the assumption that their K to 9 school would not be in jeopardy, the village of Rockyford has begun work on a 40-house subdivision to help grow their community. Town officials fear that no one will move to Rockyford now if they have to put their children on a bus for over two hours each day. To the Minister of Education: can you explain the rationale this department has for looking at closing these schools, especially in the cases where school closures threaten the survival of these rural communities in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member continues to spread untruths, how does he expect that people are going to move to those communities? There is no plan that I'm aware of to close the particular school.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I was just cleared by confessional.

Really, what this comes down to is the survival of Rockyford and other villages in the area that are threatened by school closures.

Alberta's rural development strategy, A Place to Grow, identifies schools as the heart of rural communities. Allowing four schools to close will deprive communities of any hope for long-term vitality. This is not acceptable, Mr. Minister.

The Speaker: If there was a question there, proceed.

Mr. Flaherty: To the Minister of Education. [interjections] Excuse me; I was getting nervous.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I've already recognized the minister.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I will anxiously await the 2007-2008 capital plan of the Golden Hills school division.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, you wish to raise a point of order at the conclusion of the Routine with respect to comments made earlier by the Leader of the Official Opposition, is that correct?

Ms Evans: At the end of the Routine I will.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Temporary Rent Regulation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A new Ipsos-Reid poll provides more proof, if any was needed, that this Tory government is out of touch with Albertans. More than 90 per cent of renters and 70 per cent of homeowners polled say that rent guidelines are needed to protect renters. But not this PC government. Rent increases of $1,000 a month or more are just fine with Alberta's government for the gougers. My question is to the Premier. Is it the Premier's position that the vast majority of Albertans are wrong and only the government knows what's best for them, or is he setting up a nanny state for landlords?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as a response to previous questions in the House with respect to housing, housing is, of course, a major concern for all Albertans. It's reflected in our government priorities. We made this a priority very early in terms of the five priorities of government. As I said before, we're progressing with a huge investment, more than a quarter of a billion dollars for affordable housing followed up with legislation, and we have two safety net programs in place, both rent supplement and also a safety net for families to make sure that we can find accommodation for them.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this government's answers fall very short of meeting the needs of renters who are being gouged on a regular basis. It's all talk, no action. The Minister of Service Alberta cooked up a new plan for a rent review board at 4 a.m., and I don't know if he was just having, you know, a bit of an hallucination. Maybe the Premier can tell us the status of the rent review panel that the minister cooked up and put a member of the backbench, who didn't know anything about it, on. Who's making policy, Mr. Premier? Certainly not the government.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, regardless of the kind of rhetoric before the questions, this is a major concern for us, and we are working. I mean, when we talk about comments made with respect to I think he said small talk or whatever it was, $285 million is not small. It's a huge investment. That's going to put a lot of affordable units on the marketplace. We're working with municipalities to deal with the issue of homelessness. I've met with a number of the executive directors. They're very pleased with the plan in terms of funds going to deal with the critical issue. Again, we're working with the municipalities to free up more land for development. They are clearly moving in the right direction.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. We certainly hear otherwise from renters in this province. There are hundreds of thousands of families that are not being served by the government's constant talk.

Yesterday the Minister of Service Alberta tabled an excerpt from the Concise Encyclopedia of Economics entitled Rent Control, written by Walter Block. We checked his website, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting. He describes himself as a libertarian/anarchocapitalist philosopher. You know, I just want to indicate that while the Alberta NDP opposition listens to the people, this government is listening to libertarian/anarchocapitalists, something that might just well describe this government's policy so far. My question is to the Premier. Is the policy being set by the people of this province in the interests of the people of this province . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what those anarcho things are, but I know that ignorance is bliss.

Let's put some of the quotes in here from the document tabled yesterday.

. . . Swedish Labour Party's welfare state, on the "left." Myrdal [a socialist] stated, "Rent control has in certain Western countries constituted, maybe, the worst example of poor planning by governments lacking courage and vision."

This is another socialist economist from Sweden, Assar Lindbeck: In [most] cases rent control appears to be the most efficient technique presently known to destroy a city – except for bombing.

Mr. Speaker, that is not the author. Those are quotes from other economists who have actually studied what they're doing and have an idea of what they're talking about, completely contradictory to the question.

Rail Transport of Grain

Mr. Graydon: Some of these performances are hard to follow, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents are voicing concerns over rail service levels to smaller grain companies in Alberta. They are finding that reduced levels of service provided by CN Rail are adding extra burdens and costs to these small grain operators. My questions are to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food. Can the minister tell us what impact lower rail service levels are having on Alberta farmers, particularly in the north?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important issue for farmers and grain shippers across western Canada and especially those dependent on CN services in northern Alberta. Low service levels and a lack of rail capacity from CN are preventing Alberta's smaller shippers from moving their grain to market in a timely and orderly fashion. This is creating added costs and making challenges to many grain farmers in northern Alberta and across western Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you. To the same minister: can the minister tell us what specifically the Alberta government is doing to improve service levels to these farmers?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, my department has been working very hard on the issue for several months now, and we commissioned a study of rail service problems and sent it to the federal government. I've also written a joint letter to other prairie ag ministers and to federal agriculture minister Chuck Strahl asking for a full review of this issue.

Just last month, Mr. Speaker, I wrote to the Canadian Transportation Agency making it clear that the current railcar shipment is not acceptable for smaller shippers. I asked the agency to use its powers to re-establish a competitive balance for shippers and a reliable and effective car allocation system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you. A second supplemental to the same minister: can the minister tell us when small shippers may see an increase to rail service in those areas?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, the situation has gotten so bad that the farmer groups across western Canada have put their support behind Great Northern Grain, also known as GNG. Last month GNG launched a major complaint to the Canadian Transportation Agency against CN Rail. While CN continues to oppose the Alberta government's participation in this matter, for the protection of our farmers we have put forward a plea of supporting GNG in this case. The Canadian Transportation Agency must rule on this complaint by July. If the response from this complaint is inadequate, I most certainly will be having further discussions with the federal government and the Canadian Transportation Agency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Heavy Oil Upgrading Capacity

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 the Department of Energy received a report on heavy oil production in Alberta. This report recommends that the EUB and the Alberta government revisit this issue. The lost profits and the lost opportunities are simply too large to ignore. This report gathered dust in the Legislature Library while this government hibernated for an additional five years. My first question is to the Premier. Is it the policy of this government to create a shortage of upgrading capacity in Alberta to force down the price of heavy crude paid to local producers and make the upgrading facilities located in the U.S.A. even more profitable?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, well, 65 per cent of bitumen that's mined in the province today is upgraded. We want to move further, to add to that, and that's part, of course, of the discussions that are going on and looking at the royalty review as well. There are ways of encouraging more value-added because the products coming out of the value-added can be used in synergy with other petrochemical industries. So this is one way of further diversifying Alberta's economy rather than just concentrating on the sale of raw bitumen or natural gas. We look forward to adding to this industry with further value-added.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why, then, does the report made for the Department of Energy estimate that the total value lost to Alberta is well over a billion dollars per year because of a shortage of upgrading capacity?

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. MacDonald: A billion dollars a year.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to this particular issue on upgrading, as I said, about 65 per cent – we want to move those numbers further. There's also the issue, of course, of how we do this in a way that the synergy of the industry will come together, also of course moving finished product out of this province to markets in North America. I'm looking forward to the final report coming from the royalty review because it will have in detail a lot of this information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Let's talk about the other 35 per cent of that bitumen, which is exported. Given that at least 380,000 barrels of bitumen are upgraded outside the province each day, how many jobs and how much revenue is being exported down the pipeline daily because of this government's five-year hibernation and their continued inaction?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, just in this session you can see the contradiction from both sides of that bench there. On one hand, they want us to stop immediately. They said: put the brakes on all development; no more development in the province of Alberta. On the other hand, in the very same session the other side is saying: oh, but you have to keep upgrading more. So where are these concerns from the opposition with respect to responsible environmental planning in the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: Hon. leader of the third party, I gather you rose on a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We'll deal with it later.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Logging in Kananaskis Country

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe all Albertans may agree on the following statement, that Kananaskis Country has always been a jewel in Alberta's crown. For decades now K Country has been a multi-use zone that allows for a wide variety of recreational and industrial activity, but recently opponents of forest management in K Country have accused the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development of not caring about their concerns about the area, particularly when it comes to watershed impacts that they say occur from logging. My question is to that minister. Can he please clarify his position on logging and water quality in K Country?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the Assembly that protecting water quality and water quantity is a priority requirement for all forestry operations in this province. The hydrological assessments that have been done in the Bragg Creek watershed indicate that timber harvesting has had no appreciable effect on the water quality in that area. I'm happy to report that during constituency week, on April 27, I had the opportunity to spend half a day in Kananaskis inspecting some of the reforested cut blocks, and I can confirm that the integrity of the watershed was well protected by that reforestation effort.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Logging opponents also say that he doesn't care that natural habitat for wildlife will be, quote, wiped out by harvesting. What is the hon. minister's answer to that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I assure the Assembly that I do care. In fact, I'm sometimes criticized for caring too much about wildlife habitat.

1:50

An Hon. Member: No way.

Dr. Morton: Yes.

I want you to know that the Department of Sustainable Resource Development is pursuing initiatives under the land-use framework that are intended to protect habitat on both public and private lands. We're looking forward to doing more of that in the coming year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what's his position on the website statement that he's, quote, not impressed by the public's concern about the impact of harvesting on recreation in the region?

The Speaker: Look, I hope that you'll deal with government policy questions, not personal innuendo. Go ahead.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's well known that I do value recreation. In fact, I've hiked and camped and skied and fished in Kananaskis Country for the last 25 years with my family, and that's why I'm personally committed to protecting K Country against pine beetles and the attendant risk of forest fire.

We require the replanting of four new trees for every one that is cut. This is a responsible approach, a balanced approach in protecting the integrity of the forest and also the long-term use for all Albertans of Kananaskis Country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Community Initiatives Program

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. CIP guidelines state very clearly that up to $10,000 will be considered on a nonmatching basis. Not over $10,000. Up to $10,000. Documents tabled in this Assembly show that rule 7 was broken 43 times, totalling over $2 million. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. How dare you say that rules were not broken 43 times?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly there were no rules broken, as I indicated. The rules indicate as well that the minister has a fair amount of discretion to deal with the applications. We need to recognize that we probably approved during the time frame in question over 6,000 applications through the CIP process, and 43 were where we showed a lot of sympathy to groups and organizations that really needed a lot of help.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. A month ago the minister admitted that he broke the rules. Why does the minister have rules if he doesn't follow them?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, again I need to maybe quote a few of them. One of them was support to the Alberta Native Friendship Centres Association. Another was the Centennial High Parents' Society. There was the Alano Club. Those are all groups that are doing a tremendous amount of work and needed some support. They could not provide matching funds, and we decided that they were sufficient and doing good enough work to be able to get those additional funds.

Mr. Agnihotri: Well, you were paying five times more than they deserved anyway.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans support the CIP program, but all groups should have the same opportunity to apply for the funds. Why should Alberta taxpayers trust this government with their money if the minister picks favourites?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, again I must re-emphasize that we use a lot of flexibility in this. I want to talk about the Grand Cache Transition House. This one was a group of ladies that needed a garage to conceal the location of abused women's vehicles so these individuals would not be followed. They needed this money very, very rapidly. They did not have any matching funds. We showed some sympathy to them and provided them. I can go on and identify a lot more in there, but I don't think I need to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Groundwater Quality

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Groundwater is the only source of potable water for many people in rural Alberta. Some of these people have concerns about the availability of water for themselves. Because of the various types of geological subsurface formations throughout the province, the water that is found in their aquifers may have vastly differing quantities and qualities. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Do we have a good understanding of the current state of groundwater in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that the answer to the question is yes. Generally speaking, we do have a good understanding. That being said, there's still much more that we can learn. That's why over the past five years we've spent $8 million on ground mapping and research. In the estimates that I had under discussion before the House last night, we committed to an additional $12 million for further research in groundwater mapping over the next three years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From time to time when people drilled wells in rural Alberta they would encounter methane gas. To the same minister: could you explain why methane gas is so commonly found in water wells in rural Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is quite right. It is quite a common occurrence to find methane gas in water. Some of that is because the gas itself is sharing space with the water, and as you reduce the pressure in the water source, you release the gas. Depending upon how rapidly you draw down the water in any particular aquifer, you can actually create a small gas well, and that's what happens in some cases. It's not uncommon at all.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question: what can rural water well users do to maintain their water wells to ensure good water quality?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of things that people need to do. One is to ensure that they do not draw down the water too rapidly if they find themselves into an aquifer that contains gas. More importantly, much of the gas issue comes as a result of bacteria that can develop in a well, and it's absolutely imperative that an ongoing maintenance of bleaching, chlorination, happens on a regular basis, at least once a year. I would encourage anyone who has a privately operated well to contact experts in the field and find out how they can properly maintain that well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Confined Feeding Operations

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are on confined feeding operations, the first to the minister of agriculture. In September the government changed the regulations governing confined feeding operations in this province. The distance those operations must be from their neighbours is governed by the minimum distance separation. The government dramatically weakened that restriction. The only neighbours considered now are residences. That means that schools, community centres, and churches would be exempt from that minimum distance separation, and confined feeding operations can move in. To the Minister of Agriculture and Food: what possible benefit does this change have for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NRCB is totally in control of this. The right to farm is under my purview, and of course the other one is under SRD. The setbacks have been established, and they're certainly adhered to. They're checked out by the NRCB, and they absolutely make the recommendations on the approvals.

Dr. Swann: That was no answer at all, Mr. Speaker.

Also in the regulatory changes, slipped in without debate, is a weakening of groundwater protection. Formerly all groundwater needed to be protected from animal waste with liners. Now this condition only applies to usable groundwater. The Rosenberg report on water commissioned by this government states very clearly that the province does not know enough about nor does it adequately protect groundwater in this province. This government doesn't know what groundwater is usable and what isn't. To the Environment minister: why are we weakening protection for groundwater under confined feeding operations?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with the specific regulations that the member is referring to. With respect to usable groundwater I think there's a logical explanation, and it's not confined feeding operations. It's, in fact, the deep well disposal of materials that is done on a standard basis. That is something that I think makes perfectly good sense. In that case, the groundwater in question is saline and is not usable water, and that's an explanation as to why such a regulation would exist.

2:00

The Speaker: There was a third point of order being recognized. We'll deal with that at the end of the session.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Cuff report in 2005 describes the poor functioning of the Natural Resources Conservation Board, that it doesn't offer a fair or effective forum for resolving conflicts between industry and concerned residents. There is a widespread perception that when big business wants it, the government provides it, and regular Albertans pay the price. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: what is the minister doing to increase Albertans' confidence in the NRCB and its processes around CFOs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very familiar with the Cuff report, and I'm happy to report that my ministry has undertaken a review and a reform of the Natural Resources Conservation Board. We've separated its adjudicatory and administrative functions. I'm very confident that the decisions that come out of this reformed board will meet the mandate, which is to make balanced decisions in the public interest about the economic, social, and environmental good of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Disclosure of Leadership Campaign Contributions

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ethics Commissioner Hamilton's investigation into the Premier's leadership campaign fundraising says, "Political campaign contributions are often viewed . . . as potential conflicts of interest and even [political] corruption." He adds that questions about the political donations invariably reflect "a desire to know who is contributing and what the contributors may expect in return." Why won't the Premier admit that disclosing campaign contributions is crucial – absolutely crucial – to governing with transparency and accountability and put in place new rules to address this very real concern that the public has about transparency and integrity?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there's absolutely no question that this Premier is committed to governing with integrity and transparency and has shown that. He has also moved to bring forward conflict-of-interest guidelines around campaign contributions for leadership raises. I think he's made it perfectly clear that, quite likely, you'll be going through one before us, so we look forward to your input on just how those campaign contributions could be used.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, we are not getting clear answers from this government. The federal Ethics Commissioner was quoted in this report, saying that "without disclosure of all contributions . . . there may be concerns that the Minister had undeclared future obligations to those who contributed to his or her campaign." That's exactly the concern we have raised in this House before. Again to the Premier. The federal government, British Columbia, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan all have disclosure rules for leadership campaign contributions. Why don't we? Don't Albertans deserve the same respect?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we are bringing forward legislation that will address campaign contributions to the leaderships. The issue is certainly not as urgent for this party as it would be for yours, so we look forward to pressure from you to speed up this legislation in order that your leadership campaigns can be addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, thank you. My last question to the Premier. The Premier says that for he and his government the top priority is to govern with integrity and transparency, but the legislation to guarantee it is missing. The Ethics Commissioner's investigation into the Premier's fundraising notes that our province lacks basic laws to ensure integrity and transparency in leadership campaign fundraising. Again to the Premier: given the public desire for the disclosure of contributions to political leadership campaigns, why doesn't the Premier strike an all-party committee to deliberate and report to this House in the fall?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the Ethics Commissioner also said that all of the leadership people dealt with themselves in ethical manners, and none of them breached the things. Then he suggested that maybe we should develop guidelines around leadership campaign contributions. We agree, and we will work through the legislative process to ensure that you have full input so that your near-future leadership aspirations can be addressed under a legislative framework.

Speaker's Ruling Decision of the Ethics Commissioner

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair tabled the report yesterday. The chair wants to make it very, very clear that the reputation of no member has been challenged, I understand, in the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The Ethics Commissioner's report made it very clear that no member violated any principle that's in existence in the province of Alberta and recommended no sanction whatsoever, so there's no innuendo here at all possible on any hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Northeast Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Wednesday at McDougall Centre in Calgary the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation and MLAs from northeast Calgary met with about 30 representatives of community groups and business owners who were concerned about the plans for the northeast Calgary ring road. It was a very good meeting, and I would like to thank the minister for listening to people's concerns. My question today is to the minister. Many of the people are worried about approaches to the intersection at 16th Avenue and 68th Street, which could significantly limit access in and out of northeast Calgary. What are you going to do to address this problem, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first thing I'd like to do is thank the hon. member for the question and all of the MLAs from the northeast quadrant of Calgary that's being affected by the ring road for getting all of the community leaders together at that meeting. They do have a real concern, and I heard some excellent information that night. We are working on the engineering of the off-ramps, but remember one thing: this government's biggest priority is to make sure that all the people driving those roads in Calgary are safe. We are working with the city of Calgary on trying to address what we can do at that intersection.

Mr. Pham: Before directing my supplemental question to the same minister, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross for setting up this important meeting.

Mr. Minister, people who live along this new ring road are very concerned about the traffic noise from the freeway because it is very close to their homes. What can you do to ensure that a proper berm is constructed and that it does not destroy the natural beauty of the area?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I understand their concerns very clearly. The residents of that area have spent many years looking after having a beautiful backyard, a beautiful area that backs onto the ring road, and we are planning the best that we can to put berms where they're needed. They mentioned that they didn't really like the concrete attenuation walls. We do have a policy on vegetation, and we're going to put in those berms and work the vegetation and keep the existing beauty of their backyards to the best that we can. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I keep hearing a funny noise from the opposition side, and I can assure you that it is one of the most important issues facing residents in northeast Calgary. I have never seen a meeting with more than 30 community leaders having the same concern about this topic.

I would like to ask the minister. They have a concern about access to the ring road, especially the business owners along 84th Street and the residents of Chateau Estates. What is your ministry going to do to address these concerns, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have to reiterate how important safety is. This is going to be a freeway. We have to be very, very cautious about adding extra interchanges. We can already see, with the main freeway through Calgary, that the amount of interchanges there have created great congestion every day at rush hour. I understand that these people want to make sure they have access for their customers. We want to make sure that we address safety and that we don't back cars up into the freeway. Again, we are working with the city of Calgary on addressing some of these issues, and we're going to do what we can. The ring road is proceeding, as you know. The contract has been let. The work is being done. We're working on what we can to address these issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Spring Grizzly Bear Hunt

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In 2006 the government finally suspended the spring grizzly bear hunt. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development stated that further study was needed. Well, there has been a year that has gone by, and we're wondering about the DNA census study with regard to the population and the recovery team. One of the members from the recovery team was quoted that the figures are actually being kept secret from Albertans. They do not show the healthy population of the grizzly bears. So my questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How many grizzly bears are there between highways 1 and 3, where the census was taken?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member might have seen yesterday that our grizzly bear research program is going forward. There was a good story about the model forest with the bear that had the GPS and the camera around his collar so we can see not only where the bear goes but what he's doing. The grizzly bear study project goes ahead. We declared a three-year moratorium. We're at the beginning of year 2, and we'll make our decisions about the grizzly hunt when all the results are in, based on good science.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's wilderness is our province's greatest attribute. All too often the government puts exploration of our natural resources before preservation. Will the minister continue to put a moratorium on the spring grizzly bear hunt until we're certain that we have a viable, sustainable population? More than one with a camera.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had listened carefully, he would have heard me say that at the end of the three years, when we have all the scientific data in and we know what the grizzly bear population is across the province, we'll make our decision.

Thank you.

An Hon. Member: Stick to the script.

Mr. Bonko: That's right. I will stick to the script.

The inaction of the government is unacceptable. Without the protection of endangered status, grizzly bears and grizzly bear habitat will get choked by development, and their existence gets more and more serious each and every day. What more information from his own ministry would it take for the minister to actively and decisively declare the grizzly bear as an endangered species?

Dr. Morton: Like almost every other subject, Mr. Speaker, the hon. members on the other side always hit the panic button and want to make a decision before all the facts and figures are in. We'll wait until the end of the three-year study and make a decision then.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Good Samaritan Pembina Village

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The unsubstantiated claims made by the Official Opposition that work and safety conditions at the Good Samaritan Pembina Village continuing care facility in Evansburg are not adequate for the patients or staff have gravely upset and concerned my constituents in Whitecourt-St. Anne. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister explain what the opposition's allegations are and provide a more accurate account of the situation at the Pembina Village?

The Speaker: Well, it's not the minister who is responsible to explain something on behalf of another one, but there was a second part of the question, so perhaps the minister would want to deal with that.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is important, not to explain the opposition's claims but to explain how wrong they were in those claims and how it has seriously affected the citizens who are resident at the Pembina Village. There were serious accusations about the health status and the quality of care, and that created a great deal of concern among residents. They had a residents' meeting May 3 this year and were very concerned about the allegations that were raised. It's important to say that the issues that were the substance of the concerns that were raised were construction issues which have long since been dealt with. Long since been dealt with. The quality of care is not in any way affected by them, and the safety of the residents is secure.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister. The minister said that these issues have been dealt with. I want to know how and when these issues were dealt with if they were issues at all.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Health Facilities Review Committee went through that facility fairly early on. They made a report. They met with the Good Samaritan Society and the Capital health authority, who own and operate the facilities, and the report was done in February of 2004. Any of the issues arising out of the construction of that building, which was constructed in 2003, were dealt with, as I understand it, on a very immediate basis. There have been facility reviews since then, and any issues that arose from the initial construction have been dealt with. So I've taken the opportunity to write a letter to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who raised those concerns in the House, giving her a chronology of the issues, which she would have known if she'd asked about it earlier and not scared people, and I've asked her to apologize to the residents of that facility.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. [interjections] The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has the floor. Okay. For the third time, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has the floor.

Federal Child Care Funding

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Governing with openness and transparency means absolutely nothing if governments refuse to be held accountable. This week the Child Care Advocacy Association of Canada published a list of five errant provinces that have failed to report on how they spent federal child care money. The list includes Alberta. To the Minister of Children's Services: can you tell us how Alberta spent its federal child care funding last year and the year before?

Ms Tarchuk: The first thing I would say is that we were never required by the federal government to actually report back to them on the child care dollars. Having said that, I'd like to make the point that we are accountable to our public, and our dollars are annually reported in both our business plan and our annual report.

Mrs. Mather: First we hear that last year this department failed to spend over $30 million of its budget even while facing a shortage of badly needed spaces, and now we learn about this issue. It seem that there are major financial management issues that need to be addressed in the Department of Children's Services. To the Minister of Children's Services: can you explain why Alberta failed to file not only its report from last year but also its report from 2004-2005?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I think I already answered that. We do not have a responsibility to report back to the federal government. We certainly are accountable and have a responsibility to be accountable to Albertans, and we do do that on an annual basis.

Mrs. Mather: This year the federal government has promised to give $25 million new dollars to Alberta in order to help create new child care spaces, yet the main estimates for the Department of Children's Services indicate that the budget increase for child care this year will only be $16 million. To the Minister of Children's Services: what accounts for this discrepancy, and how can the minister assure us that all federal dollars targeted to child care will indeed be spent there?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That answer is very simple. We have not heard back from the federal government as to confirmation on the amount of money as well as any conditions attached to it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 88 questions and answers, and today is day 31.

There has been a trend recently, though, hon. members. There are a lot of questions having to do with personal opinions, which is really not the main purview of the question period. And it's hardly likely a minister would really know exactly how many grizzly bear are located within this quadrant and that quadrant and that quadrant. That's why we have this mechanism called Written Questions and Motions for Returns.

But today we're going to have a very interesting afternoon now because we have three points of order to deal with. I haven't had one or two of those for the last couple of days, so this should prove entertaining as well as informative and very, very serious. So the first one, the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry on a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Ms Evans: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Today in a preamble to a question to our hon. Premier the Leader of the Opposition, in my view, breached Standing Orders, section 23(h), makes an allegation against another member, and (i), imputing false or unavowed motives to another member.

The reference to me representing Sherwood Park, describing me as opposed to regional co-operation is not only false, but I think it's typical of the kind of innuendo, Mr. Speaker, that you deplore. My record as minister of municipal affairs is one in which I brought in a co-operative model as well as introduced all-member votes for the Anthony Henday and introduced the Hyndman report to this Legislature. Through my tenure as an MLA as well as my recent funding of Edmonton Economic Development, this false allegation, which has been ascribed from a couple of periodicals, is one which I intend to challenge. So I would submit that the hon. member opposite should withdraw that reference.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is how the exact wording will turn up in the Blues: the Member for Sherwood Park is known to oppose the interests of Edmonton in having a stronger regional planning mechanism.

2:20

The Speaker: Well, before the hon. member goes on, I'll give the hon. member the actual quote.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you.

The Speaker: I quote: "The Member for Sherwood Park is known in fact to oppose the interests of Edmonton in having strong regional planning."

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Sherwood Park has cited for the point of order – I'll take them apart one at a time – 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives." There is no mention of any motive whatsoever in the sentence in question, so I cannot imagine that there's any basis for a point of order on imputing motives. I never imputed any motive at all.

As to 23(h), making allegations against another member, Mr. Speaker, I made that statement on the basis of not only printed media reports, which I'm sure the member is aware of, but also on the basis of conversations among a number of members of various councils in surrounding areas around Edmonton with our team. So that was why I made that basis. I think the member's position or attitude towards strong regional planning mechanisms for Edmonton is fairly clear.

However, Mr. Speaker, in the interests of moving along the business of the Assembly, I will withdraw those comments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Normally that would suffice. Hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, are you satisfied?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in fact, I will accept that, but I would still say that in the statements that have been iterated in the withdrawal, it would appear that the hon. member gets his facts about me from other unidentified sources. It leaves a shadow, but I will accept.

The Speaker: The chair will thank the hon. minister for raising the point, will thank the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for withdrawing the comment, and will just provide a caution once again that hon. members in this Assembly are members of integrity. Hon. members should talk to an hon. member to find out exactly what the hon. member has said, stands for, or what their position is, and we should not govern ourselves or be led by what's reported in the media or in personal statements in third-party sources that can never be tracked down. This is a place of honour. Let's deal with it on that basis. So thank you for that one.

Point 2, the leader of the third party on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am raising a point of order under Standing Orders 23(h) and (i), making an allegation against another member and imputing false or unavowed motives to another member. The Premier in question period was responding to a question, and he indicated that the parties on the opposition side had different positions and clearly indicated that our party, the Alberta NDP opposition, claimed that we would stop all development. I wrote that down. I'm sure you have a more accurate accounting.

Our position has been very clear, and it is on the record in Hansard. The Premier knows that the position of the Alberta New Democrats is not to stop all development but to call instead for a temporary moratorium on new approvals for tar sands production until such time as a rational strategy for the development of those assets of our province can be developed. We've indicated on several occasions that that would be of a fairly short duration of one or two years and would only apply to new approvals. It would have no significant impact on Alberta's economy, as existing approved projects will continue apace, and it will take many years before those are concluded. So the Premier is imputing false motives to our caucus, which I believe he knows not to be correct.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in order to have, I guess, a hearing, one has to have a basis for having a hearing. So let me quote from the Blues exactly what was said by the leader of the government.

Mr. Speaker, you know, just in this session you can see the contradiction on both sides of that bench there. On one side they want us to stop immediately. They said: put the brakes on all development; no more development in the province of Alberta. On the other hand, in the very same session the other side is saying: oh, but you have to keep upgrading more. So where are these concerns from the opposition coming from with respect to responsible environmental planning in the province of Alberta?

No member is mentioned, no caucus is mentioned, and the rules very clearly state under 23 that you'd have to have allegations or motives against another member. Parties are fair game, but that wasn't even mentioned in here. So that's not a point of order.

We're moving forward now to the purported third one.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the exchange this afternoon in question period the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View made a comment relative to the Rosenberg forum, which I had the honour of attending in Banff, Alberta. The province of Alberta was the first province in Canada to ever host an international forum, with 14 countries from all over the world, because Alberta specializes in water.

An Hon. Member: Citation.

Mr. Boutilier: The citation is exactly the citation that the hon. member meant, hopefully with greater success, 23(i), but I might also add 484(3).

In that, I believe that it's critically important that Alberta was selected to host this international forum. I attended the forum, the panel discussion, and at no time in my recollection did I ever, ever hear anyone from the Rosenberg forum say that Alberta was terrible when it came to water management.

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, once again we have to start off with a basis if we're going to continue it. The chair, unfortunately, does not see a basis, hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. In looking at the quote in here, I'll just quote part of it.

The Rosenberg report on water commissioned by this government states very clearly that the province does not know enough about, nor does it adequately protect groundwater in this province. This government doesn't know what groundwater is usable and what isn't. To the Environment minister: why are we weakening protections for groundwater under confined feeding operations?

An hon. member may disagree with part of the statement, but that would afford the hon. Minister of Environment to respond if the hon. Minister of Environment chose to respond, and the hon. Minister of Environment did.

Secondly, hon. members may all go and attend and hear the same speech and walk away with different interpretations of what was said. If there are disagreements, misunderstandings between members with respect to policy, that does not constitute the basis for a point of order. So we're going to say: eliminate that one.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Motions

Continuation of Statutory Enactments

20. Mr. Groeneveld moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly approve the continuation of the following enactments:

- (a) section 33 of the Agricultural Societies Act,
- (b) section 2 of the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act,
- (c) sections 3 and 36 of the Rural Electrification Loan Act,
- (d) section 2 of the Rural Electrification Long-term Financing Act, and
- (e) sections 32 and 33 of the Rural Utilities Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to move Government Motion 20. I'm going to speed through this pretty speedily in the interest of time because I know that we have a tight schedule. The purpose of this motion is to continue the following five statutes: the Agricultural Societies Act, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act, the Rural Electrification Loan Act, the Rural Electrification Long-term Financing Act, and the Rural Utilities Act. The intent of this statutory agreement is to allow the debate in the Legislature whether the statutes should be continued or repealed. I'm seeking the support of all hon. members to continue these statutes.

I will briefly overview these associated government investments in loans and loan guarantees and why the statutes should continue. The Agricultural Societies Act provides for the issuance of government guarantees to local societies offering activities such as an agriculture exhibition. The principal amounts guaranteed under the act are capped at $50 million in total. Mr. Speaker, guarantees have not been used to agriculture societies under this act for more than 15 years. Alberta's financial investment is a small fraction of the maximum amount allowed. Currently there is only one loan guarantee issued under the act that is still in effect. That loan guarantee is reported to Alberta Finance annually. Continuance of the legislation is needed to maintain this loan guarantee.

Loans and loan guarantees issued under the Rural Utilities Act, the Rural Electrification Loan Act, and the Rural Electrification Long-term Financing Act support the installation of rural gas and farm electric utility services. Loan and loan guarantees have not been issued to rural utility associations in more than eight years. However, continuance of the legislation is needed to maintain outstanding loans and loan guarantees.

Specifically, the Rural Utilities Act provides for the issuance of government guarantees for loans issued by financial institutes in support of the construction of natural gas services by rural gas co-ops. Loan guarantees were last issued in 1998. Outstanding loans have approximately two years remaining on the repayment schedules. Mr. Speaker, Alberta's investment is secure. These loans are backed by a lien on the property.

Regarding the Rural Electrification Loan Act and the Rural Electrification Long-term Financing Act, these statutes provide for lending to rural electrification associations or to the individuals for the construction of farm electric utility services. Loans were last issued in 1997. At that time a decision was made by the government to discontinue loans and loan guarantees under this legislation. Outstanding loans have 15 years or more remaining on their loan repayment schedules.

The fifth and final statute, and probably the most important one, listed in motion 20 is the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act. Mr. Speaker, this statute is particularly important and, like the other four, wholly worthy of our full support. This government, along with Albertans, values the contribution of the livestock industry to our economy and our way of life in this province. The Feeder Associations Guarantee Act is important to the strength of the livestock industry through the issuance of government guarantees.

The livestock industry has seen both good and trying times since this program came to be in 1936. For more than 70 years this program has supported livestock producers and the growth of the feeding sector in Alberta. I am seeking the full support of all hon. members to continue this valuable program for our livestock industry. The government loan guarantee is provided to financial institutions that lend money to local feeder associations. Title to the livestock remains securely with the local feeder association, not the individual, Mr. Speaker, but animals are fed, managed, and marketed by the individual feeder association's members, who receive the net profits at the time of sale.

The loan guarantee program has provided many farmers the opportunity to diversify their farm operation and add value to farm-grown feeds. Features of the program have made commercial lenders willing to finance cattle at less than prime interest rates. Approximately 20 to 25 per cent of the annual calf crop is currently fed under this program. The program is community based. There are presently 59 feeder associations in Alberta, representing approximately 6,500 members who benefit from its continuance.

The total amount of loan guarantees issued under the program is approaching the cap of $55 million. The government guarantee is a fraction of the total amount of credit issued by the commercial lenders to the local feeder associations. The government guarantee has been called on only a handful of times over the program's 70 years of operation. This has been a sound program, Mr. Speaker, as the members of the feeder associations have received total benefits of $6.29 billion in livestock finance over the 70-year history. This program makes a significant contribution to achieving the government's goal of supporting industry competitiveness and growth by enabling farmers' better access to capital.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to highlight the benefits of these five continuing statutes. I look forward to the debate.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to bring forward some questions that I was asked by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to bring forward as part of this debate. I have been able to look over some notes that I think were provided by the minister's department, and I thank him for that, and my colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar thanks him for those notes. Just a few questions that did come up.

My concerns are alleviated with the continuations of section 33 of the Agricultural Societies Act and section 2 of the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act, but there are some sections in the Rural Electrification Loan Act, the Rural Electrification Long-term Financing Act, and the Rural Utilities Act that I have some questions about.

The Rural Electrification Loan Act: what is the total amount of the payments that were made out of the general revenue fund under section 3, and who still holds these loans? I did hear the minister say that the loans were amortized over a considerable period of time, and really the point of allowing the continuation of these enactments is to allow those loans to in fact run themselves out. I understand that, but I am interested in having that particular question answered on Government Motion 20(c).

Also under section (c): under section 36 how many loans are outstanding under this section, and were all of those loans interest free? "Notwithstanding Part 1, loans not bearing interest may be made to associations or persons in accordance with requirements of this Part." So were these loans, in fact, interest free?

With 20(d), the Rural Electrification Long-term Financing Act, section 2: who has applied for and received loans under this section?

Finally, under section (e), sections 32 and 33 of the Rural Utilities Act. Under section 33: how much has been guaranteed and to whom? Could you provide a list of any guaranteed sums that have not been repaid? Under section 34: a question about why section 34 was not included in the continuation agreement that is contemplated by Government Motion 20. It's not included in this, but I'm wondering on behalf of my colleague why that was.

Essentially, we have clauses in all of these statutes that require that every fifth calendar year, if during that period the subsection has not been repealed and a government bill hasn't been introduced that has the effect of repealing it, we must have a motion before us on the floor that continues it. It makes sense that it's being continued for the purposes of allowing these organizations and/or individuals to pay out the loans, but I know that my colleague had those questions. Perhaps if you could supply some additional information in writing, that might satisfy my colleague.

I appreciate the opportunity to have been able to raise those concerns on his behalf. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion. If I recognize the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food, that closes the debate. Is any other hon. member wishing to participate?

Shall I recognize the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Minister, close the debate.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for asking those questions on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Of course, I don't have a lot of those minute answers. I know that they're all available. I certainly will respond to those written questions to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. So I'd like to close the debate and see if we can move on with the motion.

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order. The committee has before it estimates for the departments of Municipal Affairs and Housing and Seniors and Community Supports. As per the agreements the first two hours will be allocated to Municipal Affairs and Housing, and the last one hour will be allocated to Seniors and Community Supports. Today is also the Official Opposition day.

Hon. members, before I recognize the minister, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce a former member of this House. Dr. Lorne Taylor was the MLA for Cypress-Medicine Hat from 1993 to 2004. Besides the numerous committees he sat on, he was also the minister of innovation and science and later the Minister of Environment. He's also the father of Alberta's Water for Life strategy. He's accompanied today by Ms Laurie Beverley, the vice-president of the Alberta Mental Health Board, and they are attending meetings with various ministers today at this Legislature. I'd ask them both to rise and ask my colleagues to join with me to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, Dr. Taylor was a colourful character in this Assembly. I recall that whenever I was chairing these committees, it was tough keeping him under control, but it's nice to see you here today. Welcome.

Main Estimates 2007-08

Municipal Affairs and Housing

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to begin.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I want to acknowledge that this House has gotten much quieter since the individual – and I will just leave it as individual – from the south is no longer here. Anyway, it's good to see him back.

Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to be here to present an overview of the Municipal Affairs and Housing 2007-08 spending estimates as well as the '07-10 ministry business plan.

Before we begin, Mr. Chairman, I'd very much like to introduce my departmental staff: first of all, the deputy minister, Shelley Ewart-Johnson, who is beside me; Brian Quickfall, the assistant deputy minister of local government services. We have Robin Wigston, the assistant deputy minister of the housing division; in the members' gallery we have Ivan Moore, the assistant deputy minister of the public safety division; and we have also Peter Crerar, who is the assistant deputy minister of corporate strategic services.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to thank all of my staff, that have worked very hard in the last few months not only in the preparation of this budget but for all of the work that they have done because it has been very busy around our ministry.

I'll start off my presentation, Mr. Chairman, by providing an overview of the '07-10 business plan. This will illustrate the basis for our spending estimates. This year's business plan has changed dramatically to include the introduction of housing and libraries and volunteerism. We have identified six opportunities and challenges that have affected our business plan.

Mr. Chairman, the first is our relationship with our municipal partners to promote well-managed local governments. To achieve this, we are helping to ensure the long-term stability, predictability of municipalities through appropriate legislation, capacity-building initiatives, and financial support. We are working with the municipalities to provide advisory services, dispute resolution, and financial support. The key to this is enhancing the relationship between the provincial government, municipalities, and municipal organizations. The ministry will continue its work with municipal partners to identify ways to enhance these relationships through various mechanisms such as the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability.

One of the challenges we face, Mr. Chairman, is to do with unprecedented growth. With the growth intensifying, in many areas of the province municipalities are in some cases struggling to address this issue. We've heard from our stakeholders that they want us to work with – with – them to address broad-based planning and co-ordination issues. This will help us in both maximizing opportunities and minimizing disputes.

Tied into this is the challenge of municipal sustainability. While some municipalities are growing, others are facing economic and dramatic decline. Municipal Affairs and Housing needs to work with other ministries to help these primarily small urban and rural municipalities to deliver their needed services within the constraints of their revenue resources.

Mr. Chairman, affordable housing is a challenge. Maybe I should say it in this way: affordable housing is a challenge that all Albertans feel. To deal with the housing task force recommendation, we're implementing the approved recommendations from the housing task force to increase the availability of affordable housing. To do this, we are providing housing support to Albertans who have difficulty meeting their housing needs. We're also encouraging the municipalities, private and nonprofit housing sectors to develop sustainable housing initiatives that meet identified community needs through the approval of capital funding.

The provincial emergency management system continues to be challenged by evoked risks. These could include health emergencies like the influenza pandemic or potentially hazardous activities by high-risk industries.

Mr. Chairman, communities across Alberta are facing a challenge in sustaining volunteer fire services. There is an increasing need to support these communities by providing increased technological assistance and educational programs that help prevent fires and emergency incidences. It is also a challenge for municipalities to manage the risks associated with the escalated rate of building and development required to support this high level of growth in the province.

In addition to everything else that we are doing, I have three areas I would like to quickly mention. Our community services community development facilitators work with all communities in your constituencies to deal with community issues such as family violence, drug strategies, Water for Life initiatives, and crime prevention. They support many of our provincial public input processes that result in community activities.

The Alberta not-for-profit voluntary sector initiative will create a policy framework for us as government to work with community organizations and volunteers in a province that is supporting so many vital initiatives that impact Alberta's quality of life. This is essential as these organizations face many issues that are placing them at risk.

Alberta's public libraries are truly something to brag about as they are an example of a public service that serves all Albertans and contributes to our success as a province.

Mr. Chairman, in terms of core businesses we are setting our sights on the following goals: a responsive, co-operative, and well-managed local government sector, financially sustainable and accountable municipalities, a well-managed and efficient assessment and property tax system in which stakeholders have confidence, a municipal government board that administers appeals and issues timely and impartial decisions of high quality, an accessible public library service and effectively supported communities and voluntary sectors, lower income Albertans to have access to a range of housing options and effectively managed housing programs that are focused on those most in need, a comprehensive system of safety codes and standards that provides an appropriate level of public safety, an effective emergency management system, and implementing the approved recommendations of the Alberta housing task force report.

We will achieve this with unprecedented financial commitments that will lead to the development of new affordable housing that will strengthen communities, a comprehensive safety system that will provide an appropriate level of public safety, an effective emergency management system, and effective fire and emergency services that will reduce fire deaths and injuries.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to the Municipal Affairs and Housing budget debate. I want to begin also by acknowledging that my colleague the Member for Calgary-Currie is not able to be with us because of illness in his family; otherwise, he would be the lead person to begin this budget discussion.

It was a great privilege for me personally to be on the task force on affordable housing. I think it's one of the most rewarding things that I have been involved in throughout my career, and it was quite astounding. I want to acknowledge and thank the minister for taking the initiative to set up the task force, and I also want to acknowledge the help from members of the Municipal Affairs and Housing staff: the deputy minister, Shelley Ewart-Johnson, and the assistant deputy minister, Robin Wigston. I'd also like to acknowledge Don Squire from housing services. I think that Don is a walking computer. Every question that I could think of in terms of wanting more statistics, he was able to provide. Also, I want to acknowledge the help of Phil Goodman, the special adviser, who was just tremendous.

I'm really proud of this report. I think it's a fantastic report. It was a bit of a shame that the report was released on the same day that the government released its response, so in a way the task force couldn't have its day in the sun, so to speak, where we could just focus on the tremendous contribution that this report makes, apart from the government's response. I wish that it had happened like a press conference, where the members of the task force could have talked about their experience and about the report. It was excellent work. But as I went to the press conference where the government's response was given, I was handed the task force report. That's the first time I had seen it, the day when the government gave its response, so that wasn't very good.

It was a tremendous opportunity because what we heard in terms of stories from people throughout the province and also the statistics all added up to the fact that there is a huge crisis in affordable housing in this province.

I wanted to say first of all that I acknowledge that the government's response is meaningful because, obviously, you're committing a great deal of money to affordable housing: $285 million in new funding, all of which in general is expected to lead to the development of 11,000 affordable units of housing over five years. At the same time, our task force actually recommended that in order to produce 12,000 affordable housing units over five years, it would cost $480 million. So your commitment is about half of what we came up with, and we were just going by the statistics that the department provided. We were thinking that at about $200,000 a unit, 12,000 units, over five years we're going to need about $2.4 billion. I mean, it's a huge, huge challenge that we face in Alberta. By committing just half the amount of money that the task force recommended, I think we're going to see a crisis year after year until we catch up. The housing inventory is way behind, and we have a lot of catching up to do.

There are a lot of positives in the government's response, and I wanted to just mention a few. The new $7 million homeless and eviction prevention fund was one of our recommendations. The task force wanted this for damage deposits, first month's rents, emerging rent shortfalls, and so on to keep people from losing their homes. I noticed that this has been recommended to go to Employment, Immigration and Industry, but I don't like what I'm hearing from that department, that maybe this fund is going to be used for skilled workers coming to Alberta to get some money before they find a place to live. That's not what we intended, but, anyway, that's another department.

I appreciate the fact that there's increased funding of $35 million per year for transitional housing and homeless shelter spaces, the doubling of funding for the provincial homeless initiative to $6 million per year, and the increase of rent supplement programs to $33 million. That is fantastic, all of those things.

You also accepted the recommendation of the task force on the establishment of the Alberta transitional housing initiative of $2.5 million in funding to go to support services for residents in transitional housing. Well, the task force asked for $12 million annually. Now, this raises a question because the task force philosophy in writing the report was: housing first. The idea was that when we look at the continuum of housing, first we need to have people in homes all along the continuum whether we're talking about shelters or transitional housing or social housing or subsidized housing or affordable housing. But if people are going to be unable to move along that continuum, they have to be wrapped around with appropriate services.

Now, what I'm receiving in terms of feedback from people who are working with agencies in the inner city and so on – and there was one person on our task force who represented that kind of element – is that they're saying that they feel let down because there doesn't appear to be enough of a commitment for those wraparound services. I was just wondering, Mr. Minister, if the department agrees with our housing first philosophy that we communicated in our task force report.

Well, just moving on in terms of looking at the budget for housing services, $810 million, from the government estimates on page 261. That's point 7. It's very hard. You almost need a map somehow to figure out where all the money is coming from and where it's going. I mean, I understand from discussions with staff when we were working on the task force that the Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement is finished, the $44 million. Now we have something called the affordable housing trust, which I understand is about $81 million. This is from the federal government over three years, which I understand is split between Municipal Affairs and Housing and Seniors and Community Supports. But it's hard to figure out whether that money is actually being matched by the province. I mean, I assume that it is because when you look at the amount of money – for example, the press release names the $100 million that's going to municipalities, the municipal sustainability housing grant, also the $96 million for enhanced capital support, and the $45 million for Fort McMurray. It seems to me that that's a lot more than just matching that $81 million over three years that the federal government provided.

I really appreciated Mr. Wigston's PowerPoint presentation at the task force. I think I need another PowerPoint presentation to figure out just what the programs are and how much money is in each of the programs and how that reflects in the budget. For example, I didn't appreciate the fact that in the press release the headline was, "Government responds to task force report with $285 million in new funding," but listed on there is the off-reserve aboriginal housing program's budget of $16 million, and I know from discussions that that $16 million is from the federal government, $16 million over three years, so that's not new money. I know that one member of our task force, because he's part of the Métis community in Alberta, really pleaded for that $16 million to be matched. I raised that in the House and during question period. It doesn't appear that that's going to be the case. It is a bit misleading to list it there as if it's new funding. It's not.

There are lots of other issues. The rent stabilization thing: I mean, we have 110 pages in Hansard from the all-night session of debate about rent stabilization. The task force presented a package of suggestions about rent stabilization, both rent guidelines, on the one hand, and incentives, on the other, what the task force called sticks and carrots. The government's response was to take one item – namely, that landlords are not allowed to raise rents for a whole year – but didn't accept all of the other elements in that package. Well, I'm not going to get into that debate because there's plenty of material to look at. [Dr. Miller's speaking time expired]

Maybe I can come back in a few minutes and raise a couple more questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I need to start out, first of all, by thanking our hon. colleague opposite for sitting on the task force. I know that it was a job, basically a task, that we asked the task force to accomplish in 45 days. You went to nine communities. You had different individuals from all different walks of the housing world, and you came up with a report, recommendations. For that I want to thank you so much. You made mention of Phil Goodman and Don Squire, who also basically spent a month and a half on the road, and I want to thank them as well because they did work very hard in trying to assist the task force in the best way that they could.

Mr. Chairman, the task force did take 45 days. The hon. member opposite talked about, you know, the responses to the recommendations and, I would gather, having some public input or having some public viewing or some public debate. This government did recognize some of the urgencies of the housing issue, of affordable housing, of homelessness, recognized the urgencies of some of the recommendations that were brought forward by the task force, and we did respond in 35 days. We did acknowledge, as you have as well, that there were needs and there were challenges, and we responded with $285 million.

You made mention at the end of your presentation of the $285 million. You talked about the $15 million matching for aboriginal, and you also made mention of the $16 million for the homeless. Mr. Chairman, that was talked about in the news release, but that was not part of the $285 million. The $285 million was new money. Also, I do need to clarify the aboriginal component and the matching of the aboriginal component. I felt that it was not the right focus to match aboriginal funding. I felt that we should match that $15 million with all of the funding that we did because I don't see a differentiation between Albertans for this, for housing. Albertans should be equal, so if you want to look at it, we matched approximately $196 million with the $15 million. So that's where the matching took place.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to talk about the $480 million out of the task force report that asked for 12,000 units. We felt that the amounts used, $200,000 a unit, was high and that we could effectively and efficiently achieve very close to the same levels, probably, as you mentioned, with half of the money. We have predicted that we can reach 11,500 units with approximately $200 million. How is that being achieved? I mean, we need to look at different avenues. We need to look at some short-term goals. We need to look at secondary suites. We need to look at units that can be immediately put on the availability list quicker than building units. I'm not saying that that is not important, but I think our focus was trying to address immediate needs as well. As the hon. member has said many times in this House, we need to look at some immediate challenges as well as looking at some of the long-range views.

The hon. member also talked about the money that has been transferred to EII, the $7 million for the eviction and homelessness prevention. There is no doubt that that funding is on an emergency basis. We need to make sure that those individuals who need support get that support. The $7 million for the homeless and eviction fund is a fund that's going to help Albertans who are renting and have the potential of losing their homes because of a rent increase. We worked very hard with Employment, Immigration and Industry to get this program in place so people can apply by the end of the month. We currently have, you know, housing staff in an office in Edmonton and Calgary for those individuals who feel that they have some challenges in being able to pay rent or in having access to a place to live.

Mr. Chairman, $2.5 million in transitional – and a comment was made that the housing task force had asked for $12 million. The housing task force, as I understand it, had asked for $12 million over five years, not for each year. We had proposed $2.5 million, and we are looking at ramping that up by $2.5 million for the next two years. I mean, next year would be at $5 million, the year after that would be at 7 and a half million dollars. I think we're very close. In fact, we're trying to address the needs just a little quicker.

I'm trying to deal with your questions. You started to have discussions about rent controls. I know that's the Department of Service Alberta. Mr. Chairman, I very much recognize and Albertans have shown that they believe that housing is a concern. We've talked about the poll during question period that happened by your hon. leader. This government recognizes that housing is a concern. It's not a black-and-white issue. We need to deal with some of the challenges in the short term, and we need to look at the long-term solution as well. This government has chosen and tried to make sure that we have some longevity in the focus of trying to make units available for people who need them.

What have we done? We have I believe tried to protect, tried to provide some sustainability to renters. Is it perfect? Of course not. Is it going to work for everybody? It may not. But for those who are really having a challenge, we will go on.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. With regard to providing predictability and stability for renters, the government's actions have provided none of the stability that renters are requiring. Suggesting that rents will only increase once a year but that increases can have no limit, reasonable or unreasonable, provides no predictability, and it provides no stability. I'm not going to go into the specifics of the stress felt in my community because I've dealt with that. That's on the record.

What seems to be missing in this Conservative caucus's understanding is the reality faced by individuals who primarily, when they're seeking jobs and seeking the Alberta opportunity, end up in the cities. I'm not at all suggesting that because an individual comes from a rural community, they're not intelligent, that they don't have a big heart, that they don't care. I know that a number of members from the government have previously served as trustees. They've served as councillors. I'm sure that they've got a very good handle on their rural circumstance, but they don't seem to have any understanding of the magnitude of the homelessness that is occurring in the cities of Calgary, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, and Fort McMurray, or they would take some sort of intermediate action. This $11 million eviction fund, I believe, is going to be eaten up so rapidly that the government will then be going back to the taxpayers and out-of-budget requesting that more money be put into this fund.

Of course, this fund, while it has a degree of hope and intermediate intervention on behalf of people who are finding their chesterfields out on the front sidewalk, doesn't address the problem over a four-month, a six-month period. It doesn't begin to address the problem of a series of homes, whether they're approaching the 12,000 number of new homes that are supposedly going to be affordable.

There is a gap between the people that will be helped by the immediate eviction fund and the people who are at that lower end of the economic scale but are working. Quite often it's both the husband and the wife that are working and maybe some of the children to contribute to the family's well-being, but they won't qualify for that $11 million.

I also realize that we have to live within our means, and the government does provide subsidized housing for the people who are in the worst financial circumstance, providing they qualify. But those individuals who are going to be out of their suites or out of their houses that they're renting but earn over the poverty amount are not going to have anything to compensate them because they're above the poverty category.

The government, by putting on temporary financial band-aids which for a moment stop the flow of blood and stress, is only acting for that particular moment, and the long-term approach is not happening. So my prediction is that approximately 70 per cent of the individuals who are experiencing these rent increases will not get the support that is necessary because their financial circumstance will not be subject to them receiving the support.

I started earlier to talk about living within our means. There are a number of people who are willing to spend all kinds of money and, you know, have lawn chairs in their living room so that they can have a piece of property. It's not financially responsible for them to undertake that kind of mortgage expense while not being able to provide food and clothing for their children. I'm not suggesting that the government intervene on their behalf, but there are a number of people who are renters who are just at the coping end of things, who are spending well over 30 per cent of their budget on a legitimate attempt to have a roof over their heads, and this will not help them because they won't qualify.

There seems to be a long-term vision, $285 million, that will hopefully bring a series of homes on within a two-year period, but the short-term vision is lacking. We're heading into the summer, and it won't be as severely felt as what happened this past winter in a variety of the larger cities, where the government was slow to react in terms of providing shelter for homeless individuals.

We're reversing the trend that we're trying for. We want to have people supplying the Alberta boom and having worthwhile jobs and a secure circumstance in Alberta, but it's not just members from Calgary-Varsity that I've heard are packing up and heading back to where they came from. This past Friday, for example, I was door-knocking in a part of Calgary-Varsity that has a number of low-rental areas, but their rents are escalating dramatically. I spoke with people from Manitoba. I spoke to people who had recently moved from B.C. Basically, their suitcases are still by the doors because of the instability that this government has provided. They have come in search of a better wage, but what they're finding is that their wage is rapidly being eaten up by rent increases.

In part of the area where I door-knock, there's subsidized housing where the government, true to its word, covers anything above the 30 per cent of the rent for these individuals. I've never been to a Third World refugee camp, with tents and barbed wire and the flies and so on, but what I have seen in portions of Calgary-Varsity is a housing unit that is becoming decrepit, that has not been painted, that has not been maintained. Yes, these people are grateful that the government provides a roof over their heads. But we're talking Alberta. We're talking an area that has the highest per capita income, if you divided it among the individuals, within North America, yet these people are not living in that kind of a circumstance.

Yesterday Mayor Bronconnier on behalf of a million Calgarians came up to Edmonton at the request – and I appreciate the request – of the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, and he laid out his case. There has been literal and rhetorical head-butting going on, but the mayor came forward. He was looking for a commitment as are the citizens of Calgary and other cities throughout the province.

Now, when the Premier first talked about the matching of the educational portion of the property tax, that gave Mayor Bronconnier and mayors of municipalities throughout Alberta a degree of hope. Mayor Bronconnier, previous to his visits up here, did a series of forums around the districts in Calgary where he got first-hand input from a number of individuals concerned about the lack of infrastructure, the state of roads, how Calgarians were going to pay the bills, and the increases. So on behalf of those Calgarians, who the mayor . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

I'll come again.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to say that I take a little bit of offence to a couple of comments that the hon. member opposite made. First is the abilities of individuals in rural Alberta to be able to make decisions on housing for urban Alberta. I want to stress to you that housing is something that has commonality to everybody in Alberta. We in rural Alberta also live in a house. We also communicate. We also have most of the technologies that you may have in urban Alberta. I also would suggest to you that when your comment came forward about not having the experience or knowledge, well, myself in particular, I would suggest, born in Calgary: the only rental experience I had was in an urban setting. When we talk about issues, we can talk about philosophies, we can talk about ideologies, we can talk about focus, but I have never stood in front of this House to say: you don't have the knowledge. I would never stoop to that level, hon. member.

Mr. Chairman, rural circumstances of housing are very similar to urban. When the hon. member talked about stability for renters, that is exactly what this government has looked at. We need to look at stability. We need to look at predictability so that there is the availability of rental units. If there were – and I want to say again that we don't get up in the morning and say, "Well, okay, let's just have rent controls" without thinking about the impact that it has on Albertans.

Let's talk about what impact this government believes could happen. If you have rent controls and you lose the confidence of builders, then there are two things that take place. Those individuals will not invest to increase the units. Secondly, what happens is that the individuals that may have units may find more stability in converting their units to condos. Yes, we gave some stability. But, in essence, that instability could incite individuals to the conversion of condos. So what does it do? It really provides fewer rental units. What have we done? We have taken the individuals in need and have provided them with a rental supplement.

Now, you have made the comment in your comments about the ability of rural members to make the right decision. Mr. Chairman, that is precisely why we have transferred support to municipalities, and in the situation of Calgary $63 million: to look at and address the needs of their municipality. You know what? You are right. There is no way, sitting in this House, sitting in my community that I understand the situations of Calgary better than Calgary does. That's why we gave the money to municipalities: for them to make that choice, for them to isolate what they feel are the most pressing needs and how they can deal with affordable housing and also homeless even though there is the homeless funding on the side.

Mr. Chairman, those municipalities have the availability, the accessibility to be able to decide whether they should allocate funding towards rent supplement or whether they feel that they could use secondary suites, which would be an answer. I would suggest to you that secondary suites is a big solution, especially for university students or for seniors. The other is that if they believe that there are units that need to be built, that need to be erected because of a declining need, they have that ability, and they have our support.

Mr. Chairman, the $7 million fund, as stated by the hon. member, would be a short-term approach. We need to have a balanced approach. For lack of a better term – and I know that this isn't the right term – let me say that we need to have a flow-through approach. There should be a seamless transition for an individual going from an emergency situation to a rent supplement situation. I would hope that that transition could continue on to an individual having rent that he could pay and then maybe moving on to a condo.

You also made mention about the effects – and I'm trying to understand – on Albertans as a whole. The programs that we have brought forward of affordable housing are for people in need. This program is not for people that make $70,000, $80,000, even if they are paying 40 per cent. This program is for individuals in need. Two hundred and eighty-five millions dollars, as stated by the hon. member that was on the task force: it's good, but is it enough? We're trying to address the issues as best we can and have a very balanced approach.

But we do have a basket of options. Two hundred and eighty-five million dollars: $100 million for the new municipal sustainability housing program, $95 million dollars in enhanced capital to increase affordable housing units, $45 million for affordable housing in Fort McMurray, a $13 million increase for the provincial homeless support, a $3 million increase for the provincial homeless initiative, $14.3 million for the increase in the rent supplement program – and that's only the ones that the province administers; that does not include the funds that were given to municipalities for them to decide – $4.3 million in support for housing providers and special purposes housing, $7 million for the homeless and eviction fund, which you had mentioned, $2.5 million this year for the transitional housing, and I would say: only increases in rent once per year, and one year's notice for condo conversions.

Mr. Chairman, we are trying to provide some stability. Is it enough? I don't know if it will ever be enough.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There are two issues I would like to address with the minister today as part of the supply budget discussion on the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing. The first is around regional planning and growth management, and the second, if I have time to get to it, is disaster planning.

We are certainly experiencing an issue in the Edmonton area right now around regional planning and growth management. This has been a'coming for a long, long time, I think you could argue decades, because I remember some discussions about this from when I was a girl. I'll make no apologies for being an Edmonton booster. It's the city where I was born, where I grew up. All my schooling is from here. I went to the university here. I'm proud of this city, and I'm going to stick up for it.

At the same time, I'm a legislator, and I recognize that we have to make choices that build, wherever possible, a stronger Alberta. Sometimes that's by concentrating in a particular area, and sometimes that's by taking a step back and going: we have to build and take a much broader brush; we have to work on strengthening and building capacity across the province. But this strikes me as an issue that needs government attention, and it just has not been there. We've seen a little bit of fiddling, a little bit of tinkering; meanwhile, Rome burns or is getting close to it.

The Alberta Capital Regional Alliance was what essentially was permitted under the MGA because the MGA is not prescriptive; it's permissive. What we got from that permissiveness under the MGA is the Alberta Capital Regional Alliance, which is essentially a voluntary coming together of the region – I think it's 23 municipalities – to try and work out some kind of arrangements. It hasn't worked. Voluntary often doesn't work. As much as I love the voluntary sector, I find that their lessons often don't translate well into other sectors, and here's a good example of it because this unlegislated set-up with the alliance just didn't work. It seems to have just spun apart now.

We need something else that's in place. I think that there's a funding model that is an issue as well, particularly to this region. I think many in Edmonton feel that Edmonton is paying for the infrastructure that is used by a million people in the region. We're in a situation where we're where people live, and we have the costs. We carry the costs for what those people who live here need, and those people service an area that has a different access to funding.

If I look at what the reports that have been done recently are telling us, I can't find one that's telling us to do something else, actually. They're all telling us that we must get a regional planning group that works. The government has to take leadership on this and put it into place, or we run the risk of losing development dollars that we should be getting in the Edmonton region.

Some people call it Upgrader Alley. Fine. Not a very attractive term, but we are looking at having significant industrial growth in the area around Edmonton. There is money that comes with that but also money that has to be spent for that, and if we have those industrial developers looking at us, going, "These guys can't provide us roads to get the workers to us. They can't provide the workers. They can't provide the people that help the workers or deliver the services for the workers," it's a problem, and we lose that business. I think Edmonton is the greatest, and I think it should continue to be the greatest. I don't want to see it caught up in a lack of leadership from the government, and that's where I bring this back to you.

We definitely need a growth management plan. Now, there were a couple of different reports that were done. There was the Hemson report and the Percy report, and then there was another one. If you like history, there was the McNally royal commission from 50 years ago, that said that regional co-operation was necessary to deal with future growth issues. Boy, did they have it right on. Even the Radke report, which again is a recent one, indicated that lack of regional planning in the capital region was going to cause problems in terms of infrastructure, transportation, environmental considerations, particularly around water use by the upgraders and lack of knowledge around our groundwater quantity, and the government's lack of involvement in regional planning could have serious implications here for the future of the capital region. That's a report that was commissioned by the government, so it's about leadership.

Questions that are going to flow from that, then, are: why is the funding under the municipal sustainability initiative being offered with so many strings attached? Does the minister believe that municipalities are incapable of knowing what their communities need and acting responsibly with that money? What I'm trying to get at here is: according to the Constitution the municipalities have to respond back to or are created by or are put in place in many cases by the provincial government, and from the provincial government come the legislative structures and the funding bodies.

So we've got the provincial government funding with strings attached, and then when we look at the structural requirements that are put in place, they're missing. Why has the government not put any meaningful mechanisms in place to mandate regional planning? Are there any considerations in place to amend the MGA to incorporate a regional planning structure? Is there anything coming within the next six months, within the next year, within the next 18 months or two years?

Part of the municipal sustainability initiative is the conditional operating grants, and these funds are supposed to be contingent upon land-use planning projects, that would facilitate intermunicipal co-operation, so delivering services jointly, et cetera.

Now, it seems to me that the government is trying to use this as a fiscal incentive to get some municipalities to work together. Can you tell me what's going to happen to this funding if the Alberta Capital Region Alliance cannot reach any mutual agreements? Will this funding be forfeit? Will the funding be offered to a majority of the municipalities if they come to agreement? What are the criteria? At what point do they get the money, and who gets it? If 20 agree but three don't, will the 20 get a piece of this money, but the three won't, or they'll all get a reduction? How will that money be worked out? Will anybody be able to access the $40 million because a few municipalities won't come in on it? Is it an all-or-nothing deal or partial, and if it's partial, what are the criteria around that partial?

Those are the specific questions and concerns that I wanted to raise around the regional planning. I really think there is leadership that is needed, whether it's a change in the MGA, whether it's specific kinds of funding incentives. But so far we have a big nothing, and I think that's not good enough for this region. It's not good enough for Edmonton. It's not good enough for the capital region. I think the capital region itself is largely a creation of this government, and it's not serving us well at this point. Either the government has to step in and do something, which is what I think should happen, or step away.

I want to talk about disaster planning now. The government's core business 4 says, "Leading and managing the provincial emergency management system and making communities safer."

This appears on page 244 of the business plan. Under this, specifically, goal 8 states, "Continually enhance an emergency management system that enables prevention and mitigation of, preparation for, response to, and recovery from major emergencies." But when I look at page 261 of the estimates under this same line item, Emergency Management Alberta, this year's budget is actually down. It's a decrease from what we saw in the previous budget. If you actually look at last year's budget forecast, it was at $14.8 million. We're now getting $9.9 million.

Thanks for the opportunity to raise some of those issues.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Chairman, I need to start my comments by answering and suggesting that $400 million this year, $500 million next year, $600 million the third year of our three-year plan is not a big nothing. That is the statement that you had made.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to say that the hon. member talked about wanting to see planning and that the government should get involved and in the same breath suggesting that the government should not get involved in planning or incentives, and she called it strings to municipalities.

We heard over and over again from municipalities that there needed to be planning. When you are dealing with – I don't want to say municipalities. When you're dealing with people, when you're dealing with kids, you don't take out the bat or the axe and beat them into submission. Mr. Chairman, you give them an opportunity to communicate, to collaborate, to co-operate, initiatives to have discussions on how they can work together. We have built silos in this province since the regional planning commissions, and I think they have gone too far the other way. I think we have municipalities that have looked at autonomy without communication or planning.

We have duplication, number one, that this province, even though it is a very wealthy province, cannot afford. We have areas where municipalities have an opportunity to work together but don't. If you look at the municipal sustainability incentive, it does exactly that. If you look at core capital and you look at community capital, they says two things: consult or jointly plan. Consulted or jointly planned. What does that mean? It means talk. It means get together. It means have a plan on what you may be doing. I don't think those are big strings to ask for when you're supporting municipalities with new money, $400 million.

I agree very much that we need to plan, that we need to look. In fact, my mandate letters talk about regional planning. They also talk about the minister's council on sustainability, and my mandate letter discusses regional planning or dispute resolutions. You know, dispute resolutions would not be necessary if we did the planning. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member specifically isolated Edmonton and her support and her community. In the surrounding areas and Edmonton there are 23 municipalities. We need to work together; they need to work together.

What are we doing? We are providing them some opportunity, first of all, to work together. We are having meetings with those municipalities. We are looking and asking where they want to go. If you heard the answer of the Premier as late as today and if you could check Hansard, the Premier said that we need to provide some sort of support or initiative, and if it doesn't work, then I guess we need to have the hammer, and that's exactly what we will do.

Mr. Chairman, you cannot look at these municipal sustainability initiatives as strings. There are some conditions for the focus and direction of support. The major focus is planning. The major focus is working together.

On the comment about getting involved, I think we are involved. On the further comment of saying that legislation could be necessary, we have a minister's council on sustainability. That minister's council gave us 12 recommendations. Some of those recommendations will need legislation. Mr. Chairman, we are going through, at this time, the government processes, looking at those recommendations and looking at responses. With that, I want to say that we are going to consult with municipalities because I do not believe the right direction is to implement what I think the solution should be, but I do believe that we need to work together with municipalities on finding a solution on how they can work together with our support.

When you look at municipalities that work together, there are so many opportunities. There was mention made on one of the previous questions that the request was made by ourselves for a meeting with His Worship the mayor of Calgary. There was no request to meet, Mr. Chairman. There was an offer to meet. I didn't say to the mayor or to anybody else: you will come and meet with me. If you have any questions about the funding, my door is open, and that is exactly what happened.

The definition of head-butting. Mr. Chairman, the mayor supports his community. He needs to support his community in the best way he knows how. Our government also needs to support municipalities, not only one municipality but, as mentioned by the hon. member, other municipalities as well. We need to support all municipalities in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, the municipal sustainability initiative was designed for two purposes, sustainability and predictability, and the other one being that we have some planning for communication, collaboration, and co-operation. That is the essence of the funding. That is the focus of this ministry and the focus of this government.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I wanted to speak on the financial sustainability towards the municipalities, but the minister said a word that usually sets me off, so I would like to address that first. Of course, the word was seniors. Mr. Minister, with all due respect, secondary suites, as I certainly know them and have been exposed to them, are primarily in basements. I do not want mama in the basement. She can't go up and down the stairs. It's dangerous for a fire. The other thing is that seniors are prone to depression, and living in a dark basement is not where it's at. If you're talking about a granny suite that happens to have decent light and is probably on ground level, I'm with you all the way. I do believe that secondary suites, particularly for students, or even just a boarding situation is the answer to that. But even the thought of seniors being in a basement is sort of a trigger point for me.

Having said that, on page 239 of the business plan, strategic priority 5, you say that it's a priority to bring forth a response to the recommendations from the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability on the roles and responsibilities and new long-term funding arrangements. The operative term, I believe, is "long-term" and not over a three-year period of time. The government's had this report for some time, but as far as I know, we have not had access to that or seen exactly what's going on in that. Could the minister provide some clarity as to what's happening and how this may roll out over many, many years to come?

The other thing is: can the minister provide any indication as to what revenue-generating instruments the government is looking at in terms of increasing the dollars to the municipalities, and could he give an indication of some possible tax tools? Now, I know that there are a couple of things that have been mentioned to be able to give that power back to the municipalities. The property tax transfer tax is one of them. Certainly, anyone I've spoken to is more than opposed to that.

Now, the minister's council is the mayor of Calgary, the mayor of Edmonton, the head of AUMA, and the head of AAMD and C, but many of the people that I've spoken to in mid-sized towns, cities, and certainly in some of the smaller cities are not even aware that some of those conversations have gone on. I do believe that there's a great discrepancy out there over who actually supports giving extra tax responsibilities to the municipalities.

As a former municipal alderperson I'm not sure that that is the proper way to do things. I think what would be proper is that if the dollars that had been taken away in the first place by the provincial government would be restored, that would help a lot because a lot of the infrastructure responsibilities plus the social responsibilities that are truly the mandate of the provincial government have been downloaded to the municipalities. The responsibility is there. Neither the authority nor the dollars to do anything with them are there. They have had to change mill rates accordingly, and it's because the provincial government cut back those funds to begin with.

I agree with the minister in terms of sitting down at the same table and talking things through. I also agree that I think the province has become very siloed, particularly in terms of the health care boards. But by giving dollars to municipalities with strings attached, you're still not recognizing municipal governments as a true level of government. You're still going along on the Municipal Government Act, which is still legal and in force, as if municipal governments are the children of the province.

I believe that that would have to change. Certainly, the Liberal caucus would look at a constitutional amendment to enshrine in the Alberta Act that municipal governments are a legal level of government. This also is a conversation that has been going on at the Federation of Canadian Municipalities level, certainly for as long as I've been around, and it's probably 11 years. I think it's something that warrants deep consideration because municipal governments truly are the front line and can understand.

Sitting down with the provincial government I think is a good idea, but one of the places where the municipalities should be allowed to sit down – and again I'm not altogether sure that it should be the minister's council – is at the budget table in some fashion. When municipalities need a budget, they should be able to tie into the provincial budget by being able to say what their budget needs are, and then it could be adjusted accordingly. I believe that's where good input could be given. In strategy 1.4 at least you're talking about sitting down and talking to municipalities, but where does the equal part come in?

The Canada West Foundation in the 2004 report Sustaining Prosperity Together wanted the creation of the Alberta infrastructure council to drive the commitment to eliminate the massive municipal infrastructure deficit. That deficit didn't happen overnight as we all know. We're talking about the last 12 to 13 years. Again, it was because the dollars were not coming from the provincial government. We the Liberals believe it's a strong mechanism to work with the municipalities directly on infrastructure needs.

You were talking about regionalization. To a certain point I think that some groups are working together. Certainly, the economic development portion is working in terms of regionalization, and it appears to be fairly functional. They have goals, and they are getting closer to them. What do you envision when you talk about bringing municipalities to the same table?

I don't believe that the province should ever give money to the municipalities with strings attached – that promise of no strings, actually, had been made by the Premier – because it isn't fair. They're the ones that know how to deal with it. I come from a rural area where people, I think, perhaps get along in a different manner because there aren't as many of us. We don't have that same problem that you have in Edmonton as you're trying to bring everybody together. Anyway, I just think it's very important that there are no strings attached.

Again, I believe that I've said this about treating municipalities as the children of the province. Those days really have gone by, and I haven't seen an attitudinal change with this particular Premier. I think that democracy is not well served when each level of government doesn't have its own freedom to do what it sees best for the people that it's responsible for and who they answer to.

One other concern that I might have is how municipal powers would be directed under TILMA. If the provincial government gave dollars to the municipalities to do A and TILMA came along in terms of investments and said, "No, you can't do it," how does the government protect those dollars that they've given to municipalities if they give it to them with strings? How does the provincial government protect that mandate, that they've given it to use it for such and such a thing, if TILMA is against it?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Let me, first of all, clarify that when I spoke of seniors and I talked about secondary suites, I never at any time mentioned basement suites. Secondary suites can mean a suite that could be located on the bottom floor; it could be located on the main floor. It is a suite that is accessible for rent, that an individual can rent out. I mean, you can twist it however you want, but a secondary suite is a secondary suite. So don't make those changes. Seniors can also create some revenue and, I would say, the opportunity for companionship with students by offering up secondary suites.

Mr. Chairman, the report that was identified was the minister's council on sustainability, and there were twelve recommendations. If I can make reference to the hon. member that had the questions, this is the recommendation – and maybe I need to make it very clear that this report was the recommendations of the four individuals that the hon. member had mentioned to the government. That report you have availability to. You said: I haven't seen it. Well, it's been available, I believe, since the end of March. It's available on the website. It's available in hard copy. Let me read to you – you mentioned the municipal revenue sources. This comes from the report.

The Government of Alberta should enact enabling legislation to authorize municipalities, at their discretion, to levy and collect additional own-source revenues as a means of strengthening municipal capacity to address ongoing operational sustainability and better respond to growth pressures. The specific additional own-source revenues recommended are:

- a. Amusement Tax;
- b. Tourism Tax;
- c. Property Transfer Tax;
- d. Vehicle Registration Tax;
- e. Expanded Scope for Development Levies in Support of Directly Related Local Services; and
- f. Limited Split Mill Rates within the Non-Residential Property Class.

This is what they have asked for. This is not what the government has said.

Ms Pastoor: What four people asked for. Four.

Mr. Danyluk: This is not four people.

Ms Pastoor: Yes, it is.

Mr. Danyluk: Hon. member, these are representations of cities and representations of associations.

Ms Pastoor: That's not what they're telling me.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, it would really help us if you spoke through the chair.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to do that, and I thank you for that suggestion.

I would also suggest that in any group there are presidents. There are chairmen, as you have very eloquently pointed out, so I will speak through you to the whole body, no different than speaking through the president of the AAMD and C to his body or the AUMA to that body.

I can also say that the hon. member had talked about members not having access. Well, I happened to be at the AAMD and C convention when the recommendations were released. This was passed out to all of the members. I attended two AUMA regional meetings. There was, by the way, at the one in Red Deer a member from the opposition at that meeting, which discussed the recommendations from the minister's council. Mr. Chairman, they are aware.

The hon. member opposite also talked about downloading and that funding should be provided to municipalities based on what they need and put into the budget. Mr. Chairman, we have continuing consultation with the municipalities, a $3 billion support, $600 million a year: the Alberta municipal infrastructure program, $776 million to municipalities for support; $400 million on the municipal sustainability initiative. That does not include the amount that is put in for other infrastructure supports.

Mr. Chairman, if we took the city – and I'm not sure exactly which city would be used, but let's take Calgary, for instance, in '07-08: $5.2 billion in support. I'm not sure what the hon. member would like and how much they would like to see. All of Alberta has a challenge with the growth pressures. We are trying to as a government support those municipalities the best that we can.

The hon. member also made comments about not having the legislation. Mr. Chairman, the Municipal Government Act is available, I'm sure, from the Library, and it is good bedtime reading for all of us. It does very specifically point out some of the focuses, some of the authorities that the municipalities and also the provincial government have. The budget needs to be worked on together, and that is what we've done.

We've talked about strings. [interjection] Very good. The hon. member, you know, says elastics. That's absolutely right. The phrase "strings" came from Calgary. [interjection] The Calgary mayor. I'm very sorry.

It is not any kind of strings. It provides opportunity for funding with some conditions. What are those conditions? Those conditions are to ask municipalities to get together and talk about some of their projects and how they can work together, how they can plan together, maybe, with the opportunity of collaboration or co-operation. Mr. Chairman, our budget in municipal affairs very much talks about the sustainability of municipalities, giving them predictability for the future so that they can plan, so that they can work towards the future in a sustainable manner. We need to work with municipalities. We need to work together as we are.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'd like to pick up where I left off, which was with some questions on disaster planning. I had just outlined for the minister that the budget allocation for this year is down from what it was last year and significantly down from the year-end forecast for the '06-07 year, which had a year-end forecast of $14.8 million. The budget for '07-08 is $9.9 million. Can the minister tell us how the government would feel they are enhancing their ability to respond to disasters when there's a decrease in the funding?

Along with that, can the government explain why they are downloading the responsibility for disaster planning onto the local authorities without providing adequate support to go along with that to make sure that the municipalities have the resources needed to develop and maintain effective emergency plans?

I'd also like to know what funds are being allocated to allow municipalities to adopt the recommendations of the Environmental Protection Commission. Now, this was a critical report that the government commissioned in response to the Wabamun disaster, and I would like an update or status report on where the government is on implementing these recommendations.

What steps is the minister taking to implement a provincial 911 system? How is the minister expecting municipalities and others to build an emergency management framework and to train people to respond effectively when there is so little money allocated for training? Perhaps he's got a different way of looking at this, but I would be interested in what's happening there because I think emergency and disaster planning and response are going to come into play and be very important when we look at things like pandemic response, which we are expecting within the next one to three years. It's particularly important around business resumption, around public service recovery for, for example, utilities, waste treatment, sewage, you know, repairing and getting all of those systems up and working again, delivery of local governments, plus all the other disaster service training that's going along. I'm interested in how this is all going to happen with a corresponding cut in the budget.

I'm going to go on to some specific issues around inner-city housing. Now, I'll briefly outline this by saying that we have sort of three levels of housing. One is the emergency shelters, also called a mat program, which are really dealing with people between one and three weeks. That area of funding and policy also covers battered women's shelters and detox facilities. Then we have transitional, which is usually between three weeks and three months, and that, of course, is covering some transitional housing, again for battered women and their children – battered spouses in some cases, I suppose – but also for people segueing between detox and treatment programs for drug and alcohol use. Then we're looking at sort of a third stage transitional, which is beyond that to a year.

I noticed in the responses to the task force on homelessness and housing on page 6 of 12, recommendation 3: increase funding for temporary emergency homeless shelter spaces. The government does say that it will allocate $35 million per year for transitional housing and homeless supports, and $30 million would go toward operating costs for 25 emergency shelters throughout the province, that this is an expansion of the program. I'd like to know if this money was in the budget last year, and if so, how was it allocated? If it is new money, where did the money come from, and is the money matched? Is it corresponding with any federal housing homelessness programs? I'm wondering if there's any attempt here to leverage money out of the rest of the community.

Recommendation 4 is on establishing and funding an Alberta transitional housing initiative. It does say, "Government will establish the Alberta Transitional Housing Initiative and provide $2.5 million in funding for support services for residents in transitional housing." When would this program be operational? Is the $2.5 million expected to be start-up money, or is it expected to be annual operating money? What is the performance measurement that would be put in place to be able to judge whether this was a successful use of money?

Is the government planning on developing a partnership with organizations working in the community? For example, I think it's called the champion centre, which was operational in Lethbridge, and I think they might have also been working in Medicine Hat, very good group, providing concentrated support services for hard-to-house. Two point five million dollars is not a lot of money for transitional housing initiatives, so I'm wondering exactly how the government thinks this is going to be successful and whether it's looking at the same amount of money in the future or adding to it.

I'm also looking at recommendation 5, the Alberta rent supplement program allocation, and note that the government will increase funding for the rent supplement program to $33 million, with an expectation that this would assist up to 2,000 households per year. Could the minister please provide us with the exact criteria of eligibility or qualification for getting people into these programs? Is it income tested? Is it asset tested? This is an existing program. My understanding is that it's for either unwaged or very low wage.

But I also note that out of this money, the $33 million, $1 million is going to be directed to Fort McMurray to assist essential workers – included in that are nurses, police officers, teachers, et cetera – with a rent supplement program to allow them to obtain affordable housing. What are the criteria under that million dollars? How do you qualify for it? Where do you apply for it? How much money is available to each individual? Is it asset tested? Is it income tested? Will it be based on a monthly allocation, a monthly rental cheque they would somehow get from the government? Is it applied directly to a landlord? Is it based on the space, or is it based on the individual? If you could answer those questions, that would be helpful.

I'd like to go to page 10 of 12 of the task force report, under strengthening the nonprofit sector. I would like to know why the government is not accepting the recommendation to stabilize and enhance operating funding for community-based nonprofit groups. The government says in its response: "Government does not accept this recommendation. Government follows a three-year planning and budgeting process." So perhaps the minister could explain exactly how that comment answers the task force recommendation to stabilize and enhance operating funds for community-based NGO groups. You're saying that because you've got a three-year program, you can't work with nonprofits to stabilize them? It's very fuzzy thinking. I'd like to know what the minister had exactly in place.

What we are seeing in the NGO sector is a hollowing out of their capacity to deal with anything new or unusual. Because the government is consistently funded on a line item funding without any ability to build capacity in the organizations, they're hollowed out. They have no additional capacity to deal with new things.

I'm also interested in the explanation of why the government did not accept the recommendation to provide a guide or facilitator in the public service to assist smaller communities and not-for-profits.

I'd also like to know the reasoning behind why the government did not accept the recommendation to "create a non-profit service provider to encourage regional alignment, minimize duplication and create synergies for similar non-profit groups." The government says, "Strong support networks already exist." Could I have a listing, please, of the support networks that the minister feels are filling this criteria, that they would not have to give any additional support to the not-for-profit sector? Could you give me a list, please, of all of the organizations that the minister believes are fulfilling this? I would be eager to share that with the organizations and support networks that the minister thinks are already doing this. The ones that I'm talking to are saying that they don't have the additional capacity to step out and to help the government with anything else beyond what they're already doing on a voluntary basis or a charitable basis or through a contract position with the government.

I believe my time is almost over, so I will take my seat again. I look forward to a very thorough explanation to my questions. If the minister is not able to provide them verbally, I would expect to receive them within two weeks in writing. I thank you for the opportunity to ask the questions of the minister.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I don't think we need to put anything in writing. We'd be glad to answer all the questions right now.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I need to refer the hon. member to page 261. Page 261 very specifically talks about the question that she has on a decrease in the budget. This government does not plan for disasters in such a way that we say that we pay for disasters. If she could refer to page 261, line 4.1.2, disaster recovery, that funding there was money that was spent on disaster recovery that was not budgeted for.

In fact, we added $1.7 million to the budget. The addition of that funding is in actuality to deal with an emergency management body or agency. I can say that at present we have hired a director for that management body, emergency management. That, by the way, is one of the recommendations that came from the report. His name is Dave Hodgins, and we're very happy to have him on board. I want to make it very clear to the hon. member opposite that the funding that is being allocated in that direction is very much going to answer some of the questions that she had, to deal with municipalities. We need to deal with search and rescue; we need to deal with fire departments; we need to deal with the fire commission and for them to work together with our provincial ministries to make sure that we have a one-window approach.

Mr. Chairman, we've also had discussions with our federal counterparts, in discussion on mitigation, in discussion on a national alert system, in essence preparing our citizens in case a disaster happens, saying: no, the funding is not less; the funding is more. Maybe I should mention just a little bit on the mitigation aspect. We are looking at the province and looking at some of the areas that have experienced flooding and looking at how the federal government and ourselves could work together in trying to mitigate that possibility of flooding happening.

Let me also go to housing. The hon. member divided the housing into three categories: the one to three weeks and who was included in that category, the three weeks to the three months, and also maybe the long term. You talked about the $2.5 million, which is a new program, the transition program. Are we expecting that funding to increase? I mean, I would hope that it does. Is $2.5 million, you know, enough money? It's a new program. We need to get it started. We need to get it going. We put $2.5 million in that program. We just can't throw money into a program and hope that it works. Our focus and our direction are to continually increase that program and assess what the needs and demands are going to be.

You talked about what the criteria were for some of the homeless programs, and is it income tested or needs tested?

Ms Blakeman: Asset tested.

Mr. Danyluk: Asset tested. Well, you know what happens, Mr. Chairman: the homeless usually don't have money, and that's, I guess, acid tested. I mean, they don't have anything, so you tell me where you're supposed to go with this.

You talk about the rent supplement: yes, it is income tested. Hopefully, that can provide that answer. When I say, with the homeless, to have asset tested, is if an individual has assets, they usually won't qualify for the criteria that's necessary for the homeless.

Mr. Chairman, we provide $143 million for housing through management bodies throughout the province, through municipalities. We provide them with financial support on an annual basis. We also provide legislation through the Alberta Housing Act, and we provide support services directly from our staff in the housing division. The hon. member talked about fuzzy thinking, and I am not sure exactly what that meant, but we provide funding to municipalities. Municipalities are the best judge of where and how funding should be allocated in their areas. Those municipalities have asked for that autonomy, and we have granted that autonomy because they know best as to where funding should go.

Mr. Chairman, we have supported the homeless support, increased the shelter support to $35 million, up from $23.1 million. We have increased the homeless initiative to $6 million, up from $3 million. The funding will enable the department to extend the initiative to additional municipalities and increase funding to seven identified communities currently receiving through this initiative. Now, the program is delivered through community-based operators. We have also allocated $68 million through the municipal sustainability housing initiative, that gives the opportunity for municipalities that have needs in their communities, for them to apply on an individual basis or a project basis for funding from our department.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we have taken a very balanced approach, from emergency to housing. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I have exhausted the list that was provided to me. If there are no further speakers, we could go on to Seniors.

Okay. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'd just like to wrap up a little bit. First off, I neglected to say that I thank the task force for the work that they did. I was privileged to sit on a task force, and I realize just how much work is involved in that. Travelling around the province and making sure that all of your concerns are heard by that task force and actually reported out is really a lot of work, so I do thank them for that.

Just one other thing too. Again, I would like to go back to something that the minister and I have been talking about. I would respectfully ask this minister to please check the numbers of secondary suites that are below ground. Now, the unfortunate part is that I would suspect that a lot of these suites that are below ground, or even suites above ground, really – a huge portion of those are illegal. I'm not sure how you're going to identify them, but I would appreciate him trying to look up those numbers.

The minister has also talked about millions, billions, and what sounds like a gazillion dollars that are being thrown at many of the problems that have come forward. Again, I think that we have to go back to the principles of democracy and, in fact, that the elected people make the proper decisions at their level. Some of the business of having strings attached really boils down to the golden rule, and it's: he who has the gold makes the rules. I'm not sure that that really is the best way to govern a province.

I'm going to repeat this. I really do believe that it's true that there has been created a massive municipal infrastructure debt through huge cuts in transfer payments over a number of years. The government of the day attempted to put the provincial government on the backs of the cities and towns by cutting those transfer payments. If those transfer payments were put back to what they were, restored, I think municipalities would have a much better crack at it.

One of the other things is that the funding comes tied to priorities downloaded from the province, such as Water for Life and affordable housing. I'd like to sort of speak to the Water for Life initiative. I would like to see more dollars from the department of advanced education put into that because this is a huge issue, and the universities and certainly Lethbridge College are addressing that. That comes under education, so I'd like to see some dollars go into that.

Affordable housing. I think that under Bill 34 we have pretty much gone around the merry-go-round on that one, but the problem remains that there is a crisis. The crisis is now. There is no inventory for people to move into. The other big concern that has been mentioned is, in fact: where are temporary foreign workers going to live? My understanding is that we'll be getting 2,500 in the Tofield area. Where are they going to live? More importantly, who are they going to displace if the company can afford to buy the condos and put these people in? Who are they displacing? Are they displacing Albertans?

The other thing that certainly the Liberals would do – and I've spoken about it before. I think there should be a separate ministry or certainly a separate deputy minister in charge of housing. Moving housing from Seniors to Municipal Affairs I believe was the right thing to do. In fact, I think that your deputy minister and I were at a conference together at the Delta hotel, I think it was, when that conversation came up, and I'm glad to see that it's happened.

The other thing that I see that I think has to be addressed in a much more aggressive fashion, really, is emergency funding. It isn't just flooding. Who knows what our emergencies might be? We hear nothing but pandemics, and certainly when we had the BSE crisis, it showed just how important it is that we are ready to move, and right away. If anyone has read the book on the SARS crisis, they will realize that actually it was very poorly handled and partly because they weren't prepared.

One of the other things is that we have an increase in population, which is no surprise to anyone in this House or to actually anybody in this province when you speak to them. One of the things that immigrants use – and there are huge statistics to back this up – are libraries. There aren't any extra monies to cover what libraries are really struggling with throughout this province, not just in the big cities but certainly in the smaller centres, where many immigrants are coming to to begin their lives. Some of them certainly migrate into cities, but a lot of them are coming to smaller communities, where they've either been church sponsored or sponsored by local social groups or, in fact, just sponsored by other families or the families that have come ahead of them. They are using libraries. The libraries are strung right to the end, and this is part of helping immigrants integrate into our society.

Libraries need money. But like everything else libraries need staff, and staff has to be highly trained in libraries. Throwing money at problems in this province I don't think is always the answer. I would like to see some reviews of where this money is being spent. As I said, we're talking about million, billions, gazillions, but where is it really being spent? We have to go back and see, and I would like to see that libraries would be at least be part of that conversation. Where is the money going? Does it actually filter down, again, to those front lines?

Some of the other emergency services don't have to be huge that would be large enough to attract the federal . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the time allocated for the estimates of the Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing has now lapsed; however, the minister is requesting, if he receives your consent, that he would take about a couple of minutes at the most to respond to the last questions that were presented. Is that agreeable?

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We will then request the minister to provide them in writing.

We will now proceed with the Department of Seniors and Community Supports. The hon. minister.

Seniors and Community Supports

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We're delighted to be here this afternoon to talk about the estimates for the Department of Seniors and Community Supports, the best department in the government with some of the best, finest employees among any of the departments, none excepted. So all those other ministers around here, take a good look at the fine quality of personnel. That's true, actually. I must admit that I've been very impressed with the quality of people that do work in our public service in all of our departments and this one not to be excepted.

I'll introduce Tim Wiles, our deputy minister. I've got Reegan McCullough right beside me, our assistant deputy minister, disability supports division. Chi Loo is the assistant deputy minister, seniors services division. We've got, let's see, Susan McCulloch, the senior financial officer of corporate finance. Then we have Bruce West, director, supportive living/long-term care development branch, community support programs in strategic planning division, and then Jim Menzies, executive director of finance and IT services. I might also mention that in the members' gallery there is Pam Livingston from my office and also Janice, who's our communications director for the department of seniors.

Oh, yes. Last but not least and certainly one of the greatest inputs and support of this is the chairman of our Seniors Advisory Council, the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, who does an outstanding, superb job. Could I say that one more time? The Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is just a tremendous advocate on behalf of seniors and their issues, and it's enjoyable working with him specifically.

An Hon. Member: How good is he? How can you relate?

Mr. Melchin: He is really good, and if you want to know how good he is, then we can put that on record. Did I mention the Member from Whitecourt-Ste. Anne?

Seriously though, this department really provides some outstanding services and supports for seniors and those with disabilities. It has actually been very insightful for me to have this opportunity of working with our group of people, going around those with various disabilities, really, the work that we're trying to do to see that they have equality in access and participation and the ability to be part of our communities, one that our department very much supports in direction. We know of the seniors' great contributions to this province, making it the place that we have, the structures and institutions that we support. We thank them so very much for their ongoing contribution to making this province an ongoing great place to live and work and raise a family, all of the things which are priorities of not just this government but clearly of Albertans.

The department itself, the estimates that we have before us, has a program expense of almost $1.8 billion. This is a 7.8 per cent increase since last year's budget and, actually, just under a 10 per cent, 9.8 per cent, increase since the 2006-07 forecast, once again a substantial increase responding to the needs of a group of individuals where there are substantial needs that we're trying to address and ensure that we can help all of these people to seek the degree of independence and strength and ability which they can achieve.

I might just touch on a few of the services that are included in this department. I'll be happy to answer any questions as we go through as well. The first area is the estimate for the seniors' services division, $389 million. It includes a number of programs that we are well familiar with. For example, 40 per cent of seniors, 142,000 seniors out of 358,000, received monthly assistance through the Alberta seniors' benefits program. Now, they might receive varying amounts depending upon their income. It's an income-tested program, but it has responded to trying to ensure that there's financial assistance to those in the greatest of need, and it was really designed for that purpose. In that respect it encompasses $275 million of the $389 million. The large percentage of our seniors' programs are about providing financial assistance based on an income test.

We also have an education property tax assistance program. That has been in for a few years now. Any increases in the education property taxes will be covered so that seniors are no longer subject to any escalating challenges to being able stay in their own home, trying to facilitate that they can live in place and the education property tax not being one of the barriers. This was put in so that they would be relieved of that.

The other area of seniors, the dental and optical assistance program. These are things very much in response to being able to live in place and receive the health benefits required. In fact, many of the seniors do receive further supports, among them Blue Cross and also the waiver of Alberta health care premiums, to ensure that they do receive the health benefits that they might need.

The other one of the main areas of our department, the disability supports, has a budget of $751 million. Encompassed in this group would be the AISH program, one of the largest, most significant portions of this budget, that provides assistance to 36,000, this year estimated to grow to, likely, 38,900 individuals that might qualify for assistance under the assured income for the severely handicapped.

This has been increased, as has been previously announced, from $1,000 to $1,050, which represents the substantial portion of the increase in the budget. That was in relation to some work that's been done for some time, looking at and working with those on AISH over the last three years. There's been continued support for increasing that amount. It was $850 just a little over two years ago. This is the third year in a row where there's been an increase, and it's really an acknowledgement of just that, that they might be able to keep pace with the rising cost of living.

In addition to the monthly financial payment of the $1,050 a month, there's the health-related assistance to address issues with respect to all the health benefits for those that are on AISH. So it's a very comprehensive health benefit program: premium-free Alberta health care, prescription drugs, eyewear, dental care, emergency ambulance services, essential diabetic supplies for AISH clients, their spouses, and dependents. That would take up about $162 million of the supports.

The Alberta Aids to Daily Living budget has increased another $2 million to $86 million. That's really to supply aids not just to those on AISH but to Albertans to assist in their daily living. Another program, the brain injury initiative, helps about 2,500 Albertans that have acquired brain injuries, and that budget has been increased to about $14 million this year. A third area of community support programs is strategic planning. This budget estimate of $604 million includes such areas as public guardian services and protection for persons in care, supportive living and long-term care, and other seniors' housing programs. Finally but very significantly, the persons with developmental disabilities program itself.

There are a number of increases in all of these areas, both to the public guardian and the protection for persons in care, but the one of most significance of this department is the program for persons with developmental disabilities. This budget is $526 million this year, up over $18 million from last year. It provides supports for about 9,100 individuals with developmental disabilities. A very substantial resource, and it has increased about 90 per cent in funding since 1999. There has been a very large, rapid growth in funding to accommodate the needs of a group of people who have very substantial disabilities, some of them multiple disabilities, and we acknowledged the challenges and pressures.

We'll be delighted to answer the questions as they come forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I neglected to perhaps clarify how we're going to do that, and I can't remember. Was that 10 minutes, 10-10, or do you want to do 20-20?

Mr. Melchin: As you wish.

The Deputy Chair: Just advise the chair, and we will do it.

Ms Pastoor: Okay. Let's do 10-10, then, if that's okay.

Mr. Melchin: Sure.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Sorry. I should have had this arranged ahead of time. I did for the last one, though.

I want to certainly thank the minister for coming in and having all his staff. Maybe he'd like to loan me a couple.

I'd like to start with the continuing care part of it. One thing that I would like to get right off the bat is the definitions. I know that this is something that we've gone around the merry-go-round not only within Seniors but certainly within Health because there is so much overlap. So I think that we are aware that when we speak of some of these things, there are overlaps between those two departments.

When I speak about continuing care, I will go back to my mantra that I've used for two and a half years, which is that I'm speaking about anyone that's in care, that I want provincial standards that are enforceable. I don't care where they live, and I don't care who delivers the care. So it's anyone that's in care. It could be from the brain-injured 18-year-old to the 42-year-old mother with MS or the 95-year-old that is living in what is long-term care. Long-term care, in my mind, comes under continuing care, and it really is what we would recognize as the old nursing home that then became deregulated into sort of the two different departments.

I know that the government has said that they want to increase long-term care beds. I'm not sure what long-term care they're talking about. Are they talking about continuing care or long-term care? Long-term care, again, is not necessarily defined in each region as meaning the same thing. I can certainly speak to the Chinook region because that's where I worked. It really is saying that it's someone that needs 24-hour RN assessment. I agree with that.

However, I think that where the problem may lie is in the actual assessment, how people are assessed to go into wherever they are. These assessment tools, called InteRAI, which I'm sure you're all familiar with, after a fashion, although it really falls under Health, can be used to say: this is the care you need; therefore, this is where you'll live. Families are often not involved in that process, and I'm not sure that that is a fair process. Where it overlaps into Seniors is that then they go into the housing that Seniors is responsible for. So it's pretty complex.

On page 26 of the government's strategic business plan, it explains an updated plan to expand long-term care and improve standards of care that would be brought forward: "Government will work with stakeholders to promote seamless health and accommodation services for seniors and persons with disabilities, through an updated plan." I wondered if I could have, perhaps, a little bit more clarification on that. Again, back to the overlap, how closely is the minister of seniors working with the minister of health to develop this plan? What strategies are being considered? How many employees are working on the plan? How much money is the strategy receiving? When do we think that that strategy may be finalized and implemented? Would those strategies fold in under the standards that are now being rolled out in terms of housing? There are some standards being rolled out for the care side of it, but that's another issue.

Also, what was mentioned was introducing training plans for operators. I'm not sure that I'm clear what that means. What's involved with the training plans for operators? The operators on the housing side really end up with the housing, which would include everyday living sorts of things. Sometimes it includes the physical help to the person, and other times it just includes the physical environment that they live in. The cost for the training: is it covered by the government, or is it covered by the operators? Would that be mandatory? Who would be creating the criteria for that or the curriculum?

I would assume that one of the things is the safety, the fact that the building would be built to accommodate equipment. When I say that, I of course worked in an old building and worked in a new building, and the lifts and the equipment that we use now are so much bigger than they used to be. The doorways for sure have to be bigger. The doorways to the rooms have to be bigger, and the doorways to the bathrooms have to be bigger. It's those sorts of things that are safety factors.

On page 281 of the estimates, line 4.1.5, it shows that there's a 165 per cent increase, $4.8 million, to supportive living and long-term care. What I always hear from the government is all the millions and billions and gazillions of dollars, and it doesn't really mean anything to me. I really want to know what the end outcome is: what is that going to give me for those dollars? The other thing that I'm very interested in – I think I spoke to the minister ahead – is that this is one 'schwack' of dough that we are putting out there. Before we put out even more, I would like to see some really in-depth reviewing of where this money is going because I really don't see it getting down to the front lines, where I think it's necessary.

What is the breakdown of the funding for long-term care compared to assisted and supportive living? Again, here we go into definitions. In the Chinook region, of course, we have designated assisted living, which does have that little extra level of care that would be provided by the Health side of it. The breakdown of this money: is it the breakdown in how many people we're serving or how many units are involved with these dollars?

Has the minister of health handed over responsibility for long-term care to the minister of seniors? It would be passed over as a complete package. It would be very difficult to do, but I think it might be a good thing to look at. Then again, are we talking about only seniors in long-term care, or are we talking about seniors in continuing care, that could well have Down's syndrome? Down's syndrome people are living much, much longer. One of the things that they've found out lately is that as Down's syndrome people age, certainly beyond the ages of 45 and 50, more often than not they end up with severe Alzheimer's. So they end up being very, very high care, not necessarily needing nursing care other than for the assessments but certainly require a lot of personal care, personal direction, and as far as I'm concerned, they need a lot of love. We need time to love people.

Real enforcement, in my mind, is something that doesn't exist in Alberta. It's a deficiency that was identified by the Auditor General and the MLA task force, and improvements have widespread support of the public. There's a huge fear factor out there in some of the public that I speak to and have spoken to. They actually are afraid to come forward and complain because (a) they're not treated with respect when they do it or else they have some kind of confrontation, and they're thrown out of the institution of where their loved one is. Then we get the police involved, and it just deteriorates from there. We need strong, strong support for people when they come forward and that they're not afraid, that their concerns are addressed. Having said that, I do realize that it's very difficult for people to put loved ones into long-term care, and sometimes their expectations are way beyond what possibly can be delivered because the staffing component isn't there.

When might the minister support the introduction of legislation as recommended by the Auditor General and the MLA task force that outlines standards, monitoring and enforcement, and clear lines of accountability in continuing care?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In response to the questions from the Member from Lethbridge-East, there were a lot of detailed questions that have come up, many of which we are going to have to respond to in writing later. There were a lot of questions about various quantifications of beds and people and the like, so we will respond to those in due course.

I would say this, though, with respect to the continuing care issue that – and you've been involved with the standards that have been set – as of April 1 we have implemented a number of standards for ongoing care, and this fits into both facilities and for the care itself. There was some discussion about the enforcement of those standards, and I would concur with that. If you're going to set some benchmark in standards, you need to ensure that there is a compliance and enforcement of that. That's the only way you can gain some confidence in any system. Be it for you or I or our parents or anyone else involved, you need to ensure that there is an enforcement and compliance to the standards that is met.

A lot of work has gone into it, as you're well aware yourself having participated, Member for Lethbridge-East, a very good contribution on those standards that should be implemented not just for long-term care but for all facilities. I'd say from the feedback we have from the service providers that those have been well received. A lot of work has been done to implement them. They've just come into effect as of April 1.

This first year is going to be an interesting one. We're just trying to make sure that we get around through the year to ensuring that people are both educated and up to date and work with them on the compliance questions. I think part of our work this year is to ensure that we do just that, that we do get around to all the facilities, monitor the progress that they've made, certainly give them all the accolades we can for compliance, and/or if deficiencies are there that some plan of action is met so that we can ensure compliance of all facilities. Then the enforcement will come for those that choose not to comply or are faulty in those standards. Thus far I'd say that overwhelmingly it's a very good response to that standard of care.

That said, when you mentioned if it has been transferred from health to the department of seniors, this still remains a shared responsibility. It is work that I'd suggest we'll forever have to work on, whether long-term care becomes fully in one or the other. There's probably no perfect or utopian solution to whether it should be entirely in one department or the other or be a shared responsibility. I know from our own department that while you have many of the issues of housing and seniors, one of the greater challenges, really, is the care component if it's really a health delivery portion of it. Those are the things that people have responded to more than just, you know, the standard of the facility though we have to ensure that they meet the specifications and door widths, and you mentioned some of those kinds of accessibility questions.

Therefore, I'd say that there certainly is an understanding of the need for both sides of it, whether it could meet specifically under the jurisdiction of one department. We have had a number of meetings already in that regard. Both the minister of health and myself have met as well as our department and officials. Whether it ever gets to a resolution – it should rely on one – it's too early to prejudge though it is something you can't choose to just ignore. There needs to be a tremendous amount of facilitation and ongoing co-operation so that we don't miss who's ultimately responsible for the various tasks. But I would tell you that there is a high level of support for ensuring that for seniors and those in long-term care facilities as well as any form of supportive living facility, whether it's long-term care or various supportive living care, that both the health and facility issues would be attended to.

I concur with your thought about it really doesn't matter what facility they're in; the standards ought to apply uniformly. I guess that's a question we'll have to think through in the rollout of all the facilities. If there's a standard of facility that's requisite, maybe if it's long-term care because of a health issue, they may require some specialized equipment and/or a structure or facility to accommodate that, but other than that, most of them should be pretty common as to an expectation regardless of whether it's a lodge or supportive living or any other form of housing.

You mentioned also about outcomes. And you're right: we get into talking in hundreds of millions of dollars that are spent, and it becomes difficult to translate that. I, too, would focus in on what the right outcomes are that we ought to address. I support that thought. That's the real challenge. The ongoing struggle, I guess, is making sure we've defined the right outcomes and the benchmarks. How do we then report against them, and how do we ensure that we are making progress against that? We'd be welcome to any suggestions and thoughts as to those that could be improved or those that might be added. I think an emphasis on all of our budgets has to continue to be driven towards outcome. These are individuals. What is it that we would want for you or me or our parents or anybody else that's in any form of care or under the supervision of anyone else? There is a standard of outcome that we would demand.

The other ones. I wasn't clear on one of your questions upfront. I know that you were addressing primarily long-term care. We have a range of facilities, everything from living in your own home all the way through supportive living like our residential living: the lodges, assisted living, and the enhanced assisted living, through to the long-term care facilities. Those are far more defined by level of health need. In fact, that is more the definition. It's really a health issue defining the requisite need of attendant health care that would then designate them to the need of a higher level of care with an option.

I would say that, uniformly, people are looking more and more to support that direction. How do we help facilitate people living in their own home, living in their own facilities for as long as possible for a variety of reasons? It's what most people prefer: to live in surroundings that they know and understand and feel comfortable and have some confidence with. How do we integrate the health to support the people living in place and in home as long as we can and then even more integration amongst some of these other facilities?

I must admit that one of the confusions I've had is going through and looking at: what makes this a facility? We have some different ones called unique homes. What makes it a lodge? What makes it assisted living? You go into some complexes that are integrated, and they have them all. The only thing that I could really define as being different wasn't so much the building structure most of the time. Sometimes, but mostly it's not the building facility; it is the level of health care that's a requisite for that person in that setting.

If that's the case, there's much that I think we could do in moving towards: regardless of where they are, how does a person live in a place longer in whatever description of a facility that that might mean? There's going to have to be a lot more collaboration with Health and with the regional health authorities as to following the provision of health services to where they are versus just moving a person from place to place to place. I think, though, that a laudable goal and direction that I would fully support, not just me but from what we've heard from various stakeholders: much more thinking of the facilities that we support, of the integration of that from the outset. How do you prepare for that facility being able to support maybe a range of services?

That said, we'll respond to the more detailed questions you have in writing because some of them are very specific in nature. I'd be happy to entertain some more questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. As the minister may or may not be aware, I have a very high percentage of seniors in my constituency. I know that there are some centres in Alberta, like Lethbridge and Camrose, for example, who are at 15 per cent or even higher than that. My constituency is also at about that level. By far most of the seniors in my constituency are independent. We have one long-term care facility, and that's the General hospital, which is now climbing towards 400 beds, I think, if I've got my memory right. Overall my people live independently and are trying to stay that way.

I have a couple of specific questions for the minister. He referred to the denture program when he was doing his opening comments. We're finding that that is not working as well for our people, but perhaps I've missed something. So could he, please, explain how that denture program works and how it's an improvement? I'll tell you where it's failing for us. Dentures are expensive. You're looking at, you know, sort of $3,000 to $6,000 for a set many times, especially for people who have additional complications. Of course, many folks of that age do. They're dealing with some kind of chronic ailment as well, which complicates matters.

It used to be that they could get assistance through the special needs program for dentures, but then the special needs program was changed to specifically exclude assistance for dentures, and they're somehow supposed to get it through some other program. We've been struggling with this. Now, I know that people need to get permission in advance, and they need to have this all filled out in advance. Yes, yes, all of that. But I'm more concerned that what we're seeing is increasing numbers of seniors who are not being successful in getting dentures because they actually can't find the funding anymore. The new program that's in place actually is not as helpful as the old program was. I'm happy to find out that I'm wrong and that the new program, in fact, is an improvement. So, please, tell me exactly how this program works and how people that need dentures, that are quite expensive, would be able to access assistance to do this.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

I'm going to move on to a new category. I really have a wonderful constituency because I also have a lot of people on AISH supports. Of course, they're living downtown because they want to be close to both the community supports but also agency service support for what they need. So I always get questions. I understand that there was another AISH review done somehow, behind closed doors or some MLA committee. What we would like to know is: when is the next increase scheduled for AISH? If the ministry does not have a scheduled time for an increase in AISH, why not?

I would like to know, as well, what government policy it is that will not consider an indexing of AISH for any kind of annual review. Whether that's a COLA or rate of inflation or the Alberta weekly wage index, I really don't care. The MLAs' salaries are linked to the Alberta weekly wage index. I don't care which one it's hooked to, but I'd like to know what government policy it is that is precluding the indexing of AISH to anything on an annual review basis. If there is no policy, then why isn't the government indexing AISH every year?

I'd like to turn now to the business plans for budget 2007. I'm particularly concerned about what's happening in the long-term care workforce. It's interesting because I was talking to some folks in health sciences today, and they're really concerned about a lack of staffing. They mentioned – and they're not the first ones – in particular, care facilities for seniors. If you move away from what we're calling a long-term care facility now, which is one in which there's a medical portion assigned to it, and start talking about supportive living and designated living and enhanced living and all the other versions that we seem to hear about, in fact you are dealing with staff who do not have any medical training, for the most part. Then we really are competing to get staff into those facilities. We're competing against Tim Hortons and other groups like that.

I note that under Significant Opportunities and Challenges appearing on pages 251 and 252, you identify as opportunity and challenge number 2, work opportunities, that we have an increasingly tight labour market . . . resulting in difficulties attracting and retaining skilled workers, particularly in the health and human services sectors. At the same time, high employment rates encourage options to retain mature workers, such as flexible work arrangements and pension programs.

But what we're hearing is that, you know, hourly wage people don't get pension programs. So even if they are a mature worker, it's not enticing them to stay when they could go across the street and work for McDonald's for 15 bucks an hour or Starbucks and get a share of the corporation. In here you're seeing it as, I suppose, an opportunity when I quote you as saying: "There are increased opportunities for underemployed groups, such as persons with disabilities, to participate in the labour market."

I also note that you get quite specific in item 7 under the same category, entitled Changing Environment for Caregivers. You're noting there that "fewer paid caregivers results in increased pressure on unpaid caregivers," which, of course, are family members for the most part, occasionally friends. There is "reduced quality of life, increased financial burden, and economic loss from increased absenteeism and stress-related health impacts." Of course, our guardians and parents are aging, themselves, and will die, and we will lose that volunteer, unpaid workforce very quickly.

So I would like to know: what are the detailed health workforce, care workforce plans that the ministry has? Are you working with the Minister of Advanced Education for spaces in postsecondary institutions for personal care attendants? Are you looking at any kind of standardization for employment criteria in these designated, supported, enhanced living arrangements? What is going to happen here? Clearly it's going to be a challenge to get people in here and pay them. What is the ministry doing specifically to attract, train, and retain a workforce in these spaces for our seniors?

In addition, what programs is the ministry looking to either create or enhance with existing programs that offer respite to families? I mean, there are a few programs, like changes, for example, where we're dealing with Alzheimer's and dementia in patients. You can take them in for the day, and that offers some respite to family members who are caring for them. But we need a whole bunch more of these, and we're going to need them pretty quick, and I'm not seeing the ramp-up in activity out of your department that would tell me that there is significant activity happening there to deal with the opportunities and challenges that you're looking at.

I note as well under challenges and opportunities in item 3, the rising cost of living, where you are noting that many of your clients "have relatively low or fixed incomes." I'm wondering how the minister relates the government's refusal to put on a rent cap into this particular opportunity in that issue that you've identified here as a challenge. In many cases, low income or not qualifying for rent subsidies in any way, they're just hooped. Why are you not an advocate for a rent cap, particularly given item 3 there, rising cost of living?

I'd also draw your attention to number 6, shift to community-based supports, which notes that increasingly people are coming out of facility care to community-based care or home after shorter hospital stays, and their care needs have to be met in the community. Now, this shift is requiring Albertans to "absorb a significant portion of the costs of equipment, supplies, drugs, transportation and other items that would have previously been covered by facilities or through the acute care system." It's another download onto the individual. How is the ministry expecting the vulnerable people that they deal with – and I would specifically note people on AISH, PDD, and seniors – to recoup these costs? So question 1: are you expecting those vulnerable people to take over these costs? Question 2: if you're not, where is the corresponding increase in programs and financing in your department that you are going to cover these costs for these individuals?

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Okay. Thank you. We'll attempt to get through a number of those. If we miss some of the questions, we'll be happy to supplement them in writing as well.

I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioning that her constituency has a high number of seniors, mostly independent. I think that's an outstanding statement to make, actually. That's a good sign if there are a high number of seniors independent. One of the challenges we have is a demographic planning commission as one of the mandate letters in helping not necessarily this generation of seniors but even future seniors to plan for the time they retire. We live longer. It's going to be an enormous challenge, really. How do you make sure that you have the resources necessary and the ability to retire and maybe get rid of some of those barriers if people want to continue to work? But I congratulate her for having a lot of independent seniors in her area.

The dental program that's mentioned: I just want to mention dentures. There was a change, I guess, in the Blue Cross coverage plan that was put in for a dental program, but that just broadened the coverage. Dentures are included, so they do qualify for dentures. There's a cap, though, that says the maximum benefit is $5,000 every five years.

With some of the service providers, there's a fee schedule that's identified with most of the dental programs, and that's pretty typical of most insurance coverages, to have a fee guide. Some dentists charge more than others. It's five years in particular, but the dentures were a program really responding to the fact – I'd say a very good step forward with the five years kind of a question. I'd be happy to have that in discussions with our Blue Cross people when we're looking at the plans: what are the best priorities for positioning the funds available for a plan? I'm certainly willing to take that under advisement as we look at and review these kinds of plans. All I can say is that to date that's what it is. There is coverage for a variety of basic services. It includes X-ray, polishing, scaling, extraction, root canals, and procedures related to gum disease and dentures.

As I've mentioned, actually with a number of seniors' programs there's much that we can do. The challenge gets into, I would say, in many respects prioritizing that which we should do and targeting which seniors might be best targeted. It's hard to accomplish meeting the demands of an ever-growing number of seniors that are going to come and accommodate doing everything.

So I'd say that the budget has been increased and will continue to be increased over the years. That would be the support and direction still of this department. So it gets into priorities, really, of selecting. Out of all the things that we can do, where would you best position the funds that we should? I think that's part of the discussion that needs to happen among the groups. Yes, there's opportunity to change and improve benefits, but it's not that easy to increase and improve benefits for all the range of things, of everything that could possibly be asked. To me that would be kind of coming back and working with the seniors groups: where would they see is their best and most urgent need?

The next area was with respect to AISH. As you know, in the last three years there has been an increase in each of those years for the monthly payment of AISH. There's a question with respect to indexing and tying it to index. I'd say that it is and has been the commitment in each of the budgets that we have done. That's one of the significant areas for looking to increase on an annual basis. That's what we have been doing, and that's the direction we've certainly been following.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

As to tying to, like we do as MLAs, an index or something, that is the ongoing work that I guess we'll have to assess as to if that's the best way or not, but certainly I don't mind that we have those types of considerations and thinking through what's best. It is and has been the direction of the government that we've been increasing it over the last three years. The requirement was for us to do an ongoing review. That was one of the recommendations that came, to say that we would have a biennial review.

Therefore, it does get into that we will be continually reviewing. This isn't something that will be looked at and then put away for a long time in the future. It is a matter that we will review every year, every budget. Really, that's a commitment we make. Every year when we put out a budget, we will be considering this as a high-priority issue, with regard to those that are on AISH. I fully support that that would be the expectation, don't have any difference of opinion on that. Therefore, we will look towards that area.

One of the things that I would say that we're also trying to do – and you get into a lot of the opportunities and challenges. Maybe I'll segue a little bit into this. As I've gone around and we've met with many of the service providers and those under the various programs or the various range of disabilities – be it PDD or AISH, it doesn't matter; they may not even qualify for one of our programs because there are many people with disabilities beyond those that qualify for AISH – as I hear the feedback, they want to be included. They want to have the opportunity to be included, barrier-free access being one, those kinds of things, accessibility being one, but also the opportunity to be included to the extent that they can in those things that we do: having work and being able to contribute.

One of the things we did identify as a priority we wanted to work on was: there are 36,000 people on AISH, and it's a growing number. I really do worry. These are individuals for whom the best way that we could help to work with them is to help them reach the maximum amount of independence that they could possibly attain themselves. In some ways I think reframing it from thinking about this as a permanency – now, for some it might be temporary; it might be forever. I don't mean to say that some will get there, but having the hope and the aspiration that everyone can attain and achieve more regardless of the level of their disability and the hope that they could rise to whatever extent they can.

Work is one of the greatest values that we all have by which we sustain our lives and from which I've heard and really been inspired by many success stories. That's what we're really trying to encourage one by one. This isn't about massive numbers of 36,000 going to 38,000. But how do we help that one person get to a measure of greater independence that they possibly can rise to and the hope that this isn't something that we will put into a dependency category? We might sustain the life, but I really do worry at times about how to help them sustain their strength as an individual of abilities.

5:30

In fact, I've been really encouraged by some of the service providers thinking about not focusing in on their disabilities – and I'm glad that we don't focus in on all of our weaknesses – but focusing in on the abilities that they have, the talents, and the interests, and it's in that way that I think some great things are being transformed. I'd just say that because of the low unemployment one of our great opportunities is to start getting people, employers, and all of us to rethink about those with disabilities and how to engage them and have them part of our community rather than abandoning them into a life of dependency. It's in that that we will work as individuals. These are unique, and they'll have their unique circumstances, and we're going to work very hard and very proactively on assisting them to earn.

Part of the AISH program that we don't focus on at times is that we improved the exemptions a little while ago up to $400 before there's any cutting back of any AISH. We want to ensure that we get flexible in helping those individuals when they think about the opportunity for work, and that's going to be very uniquely positioned. They will have different strengths and different capabilities to offer, but we need to engage, I think, more of society, employers, and everybody alike to look at how we can better integrate those with disabilities into our communities.

So it's as an opportunity that I view it. Is it a challenge? An enormous challenge but we want to look very proactively at that.

Those are really the solutions. They all want and all of us want an opportunity to contribute, to explore and develop our talents to the extent we can, and have that ability to provide the income and sustain our own life to the extent one could.

That said, underpinning all of that will be the programs there to support them, and they'll still be there. They aren't being taken away other than to help the system go forward.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. About two and a half years ago when we were elected, I can remember that my House leader would say to me, "I need you to talk for 10 minutes," and I would absolutely panic. However, 10 minutes is nothing now, so I'm going to try to go really fast. It'll sort of be a shotgun approach on some of this stuff. [some applause] Thank you. I know that you're just waiting for everything I have to say.

Just a couple of comments about dentures. Good dental care for seniors is probably one of the most important things that can be done because it affects their eating habits. Certainly, people have been known to quit eating or just go on liquid diets because their mouth has not received the care that it needs.

You spoke about the demographic planning commission. What would the cost of that commission be, and what exactly are your measurements? What are you looking for out of this commission? Other provinces like B.C. have set specific, measurable targets to increase the number of long-term care beds by 5,000 by 2008. What targets have been set in Alberta, and is the minister of seniors collaborating with the minister of health to set those targets? Again, we're down to the definitions of long-term care because, in my mind, we don't have enough of what I consider to be long-term care because they're being pushed out.

The Liberals are certainly concerned about the deregulation and the unbundling of health support and housing services, but we all understand how we're going around the circle on that one. Changes by this government over the years have redefined the complex health care needs of the seriously compromised, high-risk, ill people as housing. It goes back to: how are people being assessed? Should they be assessed for care first or housing first? Again, the chicken and the egg. But often they are assessed for housing with basic health care services that go with them.

Given that the ministry appears to support that shift towards supportive living, what steps are being taken to prevent the trend of having more and more costs of those long-term care services shifted onto residents and their families when, in actual fact, long-term care services are often medical and are being delivered by people who truly aren't trained? I'm thinking about tube feeds, people that are on trachs. Yes, once you've learned those skills, you're right. But you still have to have those assessment skills, and again you're looking at the proper handling and sterilization of those pieces of equipment that you use, particularly in invasive services.

I'd like to switch over to PDD. There are approximately 9,200 adult Albertans with developmental disabilities, and it's obvious that it's essential for these people to have quality supports. As you have said yourself, we're trying to get them to live and be able to perform to their very highest ability in terms of their independence. But it appears that this is an awful lot of money for a small number of people, and according to the disabilities community, funding isn't adequate. So, to me, there's a huge disconnect between these numbers and that particular question.

Are there ways to ensure that this money is being spent in the right places like front-line staff? The question that I would ask is: how is this money being spent? I'd like to look at it line by line because the money goes from the province to the health authorities to the PDD boards to the contract operators, and then it finally gets down to the front line. So I think that a total review of how these dollars are being spent is in order.

When the PDD board was restructured, $11 million was turned back into the department, but that $11 million, I think, came back out in the last go-round. It was $11.3 million that was put back into PDD. When that board was eliminated, could not some of that money or that staffing also have been eliminated? How was it distributed through the rest of the department? Has the minister reviewed the effectiveness or the benefits of these reforms? I realize that it's probably just a little under a year, but I'm wondering just what measurements are being used in terms of that evaluation? Have these changes really improved service delivery? Have the changes resulted in any cost savings?

The increase was 3.5 per cent, but of course we know that inflation is higher than that at 5 per cent. Would this small increase accommodate the caseload growth and the agency staff retention pressures? The caseload growth, I think, is a question that has to be looked at very closely because some of the criteria that have been put out lately actually stop people from being put into the system that perhaps should be.

One of the things we were talking about was people meeting their highest level. Some of the complaints that I've had are that before, when there were PDD supports for people, often they helped people go to Special Olympics, and now that's been cut back. So that's one less program that people can access that really does help them keep up their physical mobility. In terms of PDD people moving forward, we certainly have different levels of cognitive abilities, and again a program that I think has been hit is the one where there is help for going to college or university. I have a young man in Lethbridge who would not have gotten through college and become a taxpaying member of society had he not had that continual help to get him through what he was trying to do.

Service providers have been eliminating day programs, and I think that's part of where the one-to-ones come in. When they don't have that one-to-one and they go into larger programs, that's not a bad thing, providing the same level of cognition is put with the same groups. I think sometimes where that comes out wrong at the other end is in group homes. It's so difficult to place people in group homes where the levels are exactly the same. One care worker may be able to look after three people if they have almost the same level of care that's needed or the same cognition, but if you've got three people with high needs all of which are different, it's very difficult for just one person to be able to look after them. That's where, again, of course, staffing comes in.

I think that you probably have seen that report A Human Resource Crisis in the Disability Services Field – I'm sure that it has been given to you – where they're actually identifying a crisis. I think we're almost at catastrophic crisis now because people really are being left by the side of the road. As I know that you're more than aware, staffing has fallen down. In fact, our college doesn't even offer the program anymore.

So, again, we should be looking at the department of advanced education. What they can they offer? How can they offer it? Should they perhaps be looking at the same thing as the health care workers, where, in fact, they can learn on the job. I think it's Bow Valley College. I'm sorry; I can't remember the name, but there actually are distance learning programs where people can learn on the job, and perhaps that would be a help towards getting more people into working. It's not an easy job, and you really have to have the heart for it. You cannot go into this kind of field only for a paycheque. It just doesn't work, and it certainly puts anybody at a disadvantage.

I know that you're aware of the inequality of wages for government positions and community positions, which I think is something that certainly has to be addressed.

What is the minister doing to ensure that these qualified, experienced staff remain in the sector, and how are you recruiting staff?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you have just about one minute left.

Mr. Melchin: Dentures are good. Demographic planning commission: we're working on it. PDD: there are 9,200 adults. I agree that there's an enormous challenge here and disconnect in my mind, too, about the amount of money versus the numbers of people being served. As you actually are aware, today we even have some meetings with kind of some brainstorming sessions. We're starting to take a look with some service creative people: how do we improve this? It's one that should help address in the end that dollars can get down even to those that are providing the service. The most important benchmark to me is the person, those 9,200 people with PDD. It's all about them, and it's less about supporting all of our structures. So, to that end, that'll be part of the outcomes that we have.

How much time do I have? Very limited.

Caseload growth . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, but pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(a) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Municipal Affairs and Housing and Seniors and Community Supports relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we do now adjourn until 7 p.m., at which time we reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:47 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 15, 2007

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. The item for discussion tonight is the estimates of the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation. The members may have staff on the government side, provided a list is given. I don't have a list or a day's notice that was required for the opposition. Does the hon. member have an explanation?

Mr. Chase: The information was walked over on Monday to the appropriate departments. Why it hasn't been received, I have no idea. When I spoke with the Sergeant-at-Arms, he suggested that he would very much like to receive a copy of the notification. I would be very pleased to provide you with that notification. But if it puts you in a position of compromise, I can go it alone. I would prefer not to, but I am prepared to do so.

The Chair: The first day the notice came out requiring one day's notice, I allowed unanimous consent because there was no opportunity for a day's notice, and from that point on it was intimated that a day's notice would be required. But I'm here to serve the Assembly.

If I could recognize the hon. Member for Peace River. Did you want to speak on this issue?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, not to interfere with the rules of the House and your ruling on this matter, but the government party certainly has no objection and no idea what happened to the notice. We're not going to object to the presence of a researcher.

The Chair: Well, with that, I will allow for unanimous consent of the Assembly. Are there any opposed to the hon. member having his staff member there? Hearing none, when the opportunity arises for you to speak, would you introduce the member.

head:

Main Estimates 2007-08

Infrastructure and Transportation

The Chair: I will now introduce the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Before I begin, I'd like to introduce members of Infrastructure and Transportation's executive management committee and senior officials present. To my left I have Jay Ramotar, my deputy minister. To my right I have Winnie Yiu-Young, executive director of finance. Next to her I have Rob Penny, the assistant deputy minister of policy and corporate services. Up in the balcony I have Steve Callahan, executive director representing transportation safety services. Maybe you could wave so they'll know who you are. I have Larry James, executive director representing the department's properties division, and I have Barry Day, the assistant deputy minister of capital projects. And everybody knows my assistant, Warren Chandler.

Alberta has one of the best transportation networks in North America, and our province also has one of the strongest economies in Canada. The link between transportation and economic prosperity is clear. It is also clear that the ability to move people and goods safely and efficiently is vital to our prosperity. Roads and infrastructure play a critical role in the success of our province and Albertans' quality of life.

Alberta has experienced phenomenal growth over the last few years. Since 2001 more than half a million people have moved here, and since 2002 more than 300,000 vehicles have been added to our roads and highways. This has put significant additional pressure on transportation routes and accelerated the wear and tear on our roadways. As the province grows, so do the challenges faced by the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation.

The state of Alberta's core infrastructure and our roads and highways has become a high-priority issue for this department and for this government. Building and maintaining roads is directly related to the Alberta government's priorities of managing growth pressures and providing safe communities.

The Alberta government recognizes the important roles that infrastructure and transportation play in the success of our province. It demonstrated its support with unprecedented funding for infrastructure in last year's three-year capital plan and again in this year's plan. The estimates I am presenting today are closely tied with the capital plan. Thanks to ongoing support from the government, the ministry continues to undertake a number of programs and projects in '07-08. I'd like to share some of these with you as I present the ministry's estimates for the '07-08 fiscal year.

This year the ministry's estimates to be voted will be approximately $3.2 billion for expense and equipment/inventory purchases, a nearly 16 per cent increase from the '06-07 forecast. Of the $3.2 billion, $372 million is for noncash items such as amortization, nominal sum disposals, and consumption of inventories.

When the noncash is excluded, the ministry has a $2.8 billion spending target for programs. This includes more than $421 million, primarily for highway rehabilitation and maintenance. Approximately $297 million will go towards provincial highway maintenance and systems and $124 million into highway rehabilitation. Nearly $41 million will go into transportation safety services. This funding supports vehicle and driver safety programs, monitoring of the commercial carrier industry, and a number of traffic safety initiatives, including implementation of the new traffic safety plan, which is one of Infrastructure and Transportation's three mandates.

The traffic safety plan is designed to reduce deaths and injuries on provincial highways. It outlines key initiatives to help prevent collisions, build safer roads, enforce traffic laws, and better educate Albertans about traffic safety. Some key aspects of the framework being developed for the plan include a focus on community traffic safety, co-ordinated enforcement, legislation based on best practices, and an emphasis on the safest engineering practices. More than $1 million will go towards the Transportation Safety Board.

A key element of the ministry's program expense is capital support to municipal infrastructure. More than $1.2 billion in grants will be provided to Alberta municipalities in '07-08. These grants will allow municipalities to target funding at infrastructure pressures that they deem to be priorities. Using these funds, local governments can direct funding at projects, including roads, bridges, public transit, water and waste water, and emergency services.

One of the notable programs under municipal support is the Water for Life strategy, which provides cost-shared grants to eligible municipalities to assist in the construction of high-priority municipal water supply and treatment and waste-water treatment and disposal works. Over the next three years the ministry will provide $422 million for the Water for Life strategy, of which $103 million is specifically for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. A hundred and fifty-nine point three million dollars was approved in the '07-08 budget, $35 million of that, again, for Wood Buffalo; $174 million was approved in the '08-09 budget, another $34 million for Wood Buffalo; $88.3 million was approved in '09-10, another $34 million for Wood Buffalo.

Also included in the ministry's voted expense category is $360 million for government operations. This funding enables the ministry to maintain the day-to-day operations and maintenance of government-owned properties as well as leases, the Swan Hills Treatment Centre, and capital and accommodation projects.

In addition, funding for natural gas rebates in '07-08 is budgeted at $477.3 million, a $114 million increase from the '06-07 forecast. This reflects the projected increase in natural gas prices.

The ministry's capital investment budget will be nearly $1.5 billion in '07-08, an increase of $549 million over the '06-07 forecast.

Approximately $201 million will help fund several major projects such as the Royal Alberta Museum's renovation and expansion, the first phase of the construction of Edmonton's new remand centre, and the Brooks crop research greenhouse. Notably, Infrastructure and Transportation will invest in provincial highway systems and the strategic economic corridors: $626 million is allocated for the strategic economic corridor investment initiative, including the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads and the north-south trade corridor.

At this time I'd like to take a minute to clear up any possible misunderstanding about the cost of construction on Anthony Henday Drive southeast. The '05-06 provincial budget provided $83.3 million for this P3 ring road, but the Infrastructure and Transportation annual report for that period shows an expenditure of $118 million. The additional $34.7 million recognizes the actual amount of work completed by the end of March of '06. The $34.7 million does not represent a cost overrun as the cost of this project was fixed. This amount will be reduced from future budgets to stay within the project cost.

Continuing with program expenses, more than $385 million will be used for provincial highway systems. To clarify the funding for provincial highway systems, it includes buildings and enhancing provincial highways and bridges so that we can continue to meet the transportation needs of Albertans and others who drive through our province. For example, this funding will accelerate the construction of the highway 4 bypass by Milk River, the interchange on the Trans-Canada at highway 1 and highway 9 near Strathmore, and the new bridge on highway 49 over the Smoky River west of High Prairie. The funding will also help build projects such as the highway 2 north Innisfail interchange upgrade, the highway 2 median widening from Crossfield to Acme road interchange, and the twinning of highway 779 in Stony Plain.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: I'd just remind all members that the time allotment for this item is an hour and a half. If a person is occupying the floor at the time, I'll allow them to finish their time, but that will take time off the next item of discussion because we do rise and report at 10 tonight.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I know all about time off for bad behaviour, having been a teacher for 34 years.

I'd like to begin by introducing my esteemed assistant, Sam Lyon. I want to thank the minister and the deputy ministers and the array of assistants both on the floor and in the gallery for being here to answer questions, and I look forward to those questions being answered.

I also want to indicate – and I apologize, Minister, for not remembering your assistant's name – that I did appreciate the phone call clarifying the $34.7 billion. He explained to me that it wasn't a cost overrun, as you've indicated tonight. It was, rather, a requirement of the Auditor General to list it in that format. We had a brief discussion: is this the best way to do it? But that's the way you've been asked to do it, you did it, you've clarified it, and I appreciate it.

What I would like to do tonight is give you a sampling of some of the communities who have indicated their infrastructure concerns to me, and if you could sort of provide me with an update: "Yes, that's in the works," "No, that hasn't been approved," or "We've got a 2008 schedule for beginning construction" and so on.

One of the qualifications I would appreciate right off the bat – you know, at the end of my first 10-minute segment – is what your Department of Infrastructure and Transportation believes to be our current infrastructure/transportation deficit and how you calculate it. We all know the province's history. We know the cutbacks of 1994. When the Premier announced that the debt was paid in full, we had a different opinion: that a large part of that debt, rather than being addressed, was basically downloaded in the form of an infrastructure deficit. It's something that the municipalities are struggling to overcome. But when I sent out letters to all the municipalities and to the school boards – and just while I mention that, a bit of clarification. Something that I had been pushing for and the Liberal opposition had been pushing for was the return of the responsibility for infrastructure and transportation at least to the ministries of Education and Health. I think that for the most part that's been accomplished. A question that I would have is: is there any sort of chain of approval whereby the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation has to sort of cosign the cheque, or are the ministries of Education and Health and Wellness able to operate independently? Our feeling was – and obviously the government recognized the wisdom – that in order for the departments of Education and Health to have any degree of independence and get on with their projects, they needed to have control of their infrastructure budget, and I believe that that's the case.

When I sent out the letters to the various municipalities, the overriding concern, the most common concern that I received was water management, whether that was water treatment or whether that was water being supplied by pipeline or by sewer. There was a concern that the infrastructure, whether it was a small summer village or whether it was a large municipality, was experiencing difficulties with old water systems that were requiring upgrading. I know that, for example, the cost of upgrading another filtering system in Calgary doubled over the time period because of inflation and the fact that we'd been waiting for the funding to come in.

Anyway, I'll start with some specifics, and as I say, if in the response you could tell me if it's been addressed or where we're at and at what stage. Sorry; one more little bit of delay. There were a number of municipalities who were reluctant to give me permission to table their information, and therefore the examples that I'm using have given me that permission. It's very important that that be realized because I would not be bringing forth their cases should I not have had their permission or should I not have had direct discussions with the mayors or councillors involved.

Municipality of Jasper. Their top three infrastructure priorities were upgrades to the municipal water supply systems, development of new water wells and treatment; number two, modifications and related energy efficiency upgrades to the community's recreation centre – they note that the facility is almost 30 years old, is in need of modifications and modernization – road and street infrastructure improvements, sewer collection, water distribution, utilities repair, and upgrades to meet design capacity.

The municipal district of Lesser Slave River. Their priorities were funding to cope with resource traffic on municipal district managed roads that is not only sufficient but allows for the municipal district to engineer projects, to receive funding for the engineering so that projects can be staged and let to tender at opportune times; i.e., remove the requirement to fund the whole project over a limited period of time. Secondly, ensure funding for water and waste-water facilities and a collection and distribution line. Number three, ensure provincial regulations regarding vehicle heights; give consideration to the fact that haulers eventually leave the provincial highways to travel on local roads built in a different era. Heavy vehicles and increased heavy vehicle volume led to the deterioration of roadbeds and shortened life cycle of roads. This begets cost to the local ratepayer. Their fourth priority was to include driver education in the Alberta high school curriculum, which sort of falls under the recommendations of the McDermid report for improving driver safety.

The second most commonly referenced concern of municipalities after waste-water treatment was the deterioration of roads from heavy equipment that was travelling to and from oil and gas sites or, in the case of Fort McMurray, up to the oil sands. It was felt that there should be some form of charging or recognition of these vehicles, which were not from the local municipality but were travelling through, whether it's through Drayton Valley or Trochu or Three Hills or any other district, that the wear and tear should be recognized and supported.

The village of Longview. Their priorities are – and they provided me with several charts, but I brought it down to five – off-site levy assessment, a water treatment study to produce a capital plan, maintenance of sanitary manholes, sanitary flow testing and video inspection, waste-water treatment plan evaluation.

Now, I had a great meeting with the mayor of Norris Beach summer village on Pigeon Lake, and he opened my eyes to a series of problems that summer villages such as his face. I believe that there are either 10 or 12 summer villages around Pigeon Lake. They have rather unique problems. Their small population means that they don't have a large tax base, but what happens is that the way the province funds the summer communities is that they only recognize those that are there year-round. So while every single individual who has a property on the lake is taxed and contributes and pays into the coffers, the only ones that get recognized in the grant program are those that are there on a permanent basis. Because of the small pockets of population, they sort of get treated in a one-off manner rather than taking into account the entire population. If that entire population were taken into account, then the support for waterlines being hooked into the sewage programs instead of having their local . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

Mr. Ouellette: I might have to jump around a little bit here before I remember which part you went to. I think I'd like to start off, then, by maybe addressing the Water for Life strategy portion: how important water is to this government and how important we all believe clean water for everyone is. I mean, I'll go to an old statement. I don't know who actually said this statement: whiskey is for drinking, and water is for fighting over. I'm sure you've heard that many, many times.

I will say that to address water amongst all these priorities that you were talking about with all the different municipalities, we have what we call the Alberta municipal water/waste-water partnership, and in that it provides cost-shared grants to eligible municipalities under 45,000 population to assist in the construction of high-priority municipal water supply and treatment and waste-water treatment projects. This program ensures that Albertans have access to safe water supplies and environmentally acceptable waste-water treatment. I will tell you that the program that we have and the amount of money we have in our budget is way oversubscribed, as you would know, a lot. Again, it goes to our very, very hot economy, to how strong our full economy is in Alberta and the amount of people moving in here.

All the municipalities are reaching that. Are we almost at our limit of what the waste-water system we have now can handle? Is our treatment centre enough? As a government we definitely do say that regional systems are a great way to go. Whether or not we can afford to fund them all or help them fund them, it may take a little time, and we do have to, like all the rest of our programs, prioritize them and see who needs the help the most. We try to help as many people as we possibly can. If summer villages developed a regional strategy for supply of water and treatment of waste water, Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation would certainly be willing to work with them and help them. We try to help all of our municipalities with everything, whether it's engineering on their roads, planning all sorts of different things. We try to supply people from our ministry to help them with that.

It took a while to get us on the same page on: why did the Auditor General make us show this extra $34 million? I'm really glad that you've understood that now. Maybe you'll realize how good a deal P3s really are, especially in times like we're going through in Alberta right now with this high escalation of costs and stuff. We're saving hundreds of millions of dollars because we're guaranteed that there are no prices rising. For the one that we just started in Calgary, the northeast ring road, it would be unbelievable a couple more years down the road how much more money it would cost, and we're protected at that one price, that it can't cost us any more.

You also were asking about capital maintenance and replacement requirements on our roads, what kind of deficit we had. Our capital maintenance and replacement requirements are a maintenance activity that was not performed when it should have been or was scheduled to be and was put off or delayed.

For the purpose of reporting capital maintenance and replacement requirements, is the cost of restoring a facility to its current use or its as-built condition? Infrastructure currently has a capital maintenance and replacement requirement backlog of $1.6 billion for roads and $87 million for buildings, for a total of approximately $1.7 billion. It's rapidly increasing each year. To give you an example, we've only been doing about 350 to 400 kilometres of rehabilitation a year on highways, and we should be doing about 1,500 for the amount of kilometres of road that we have out there. Now, there are a couple reasons for that. One is cost, and another is capacity. We've been having meetings with most of the road builders and contractors and stuff around the province, that say that they're working on increasing their capacity. Cost: as a government we've put more money into the budget, and we do lots of planning within this department.

What you've got in front of you is our current three-year plan. We also have an internal five-year and 10-year and 20-year out plan. I'm working on a four-year plan right now to catch up on this backlog. In this three-year current budget plan we've got 2,500 kilometres of rehab in there, and we believe that we're going to be increasing that over the next couple of years.

I hope I've answered all of the questions that you've come with so far. I'm willing to carry on.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate that you've answered a portion of my questions. So far you've come up with a figure that I believe was approximately $1.7 billion. The former Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation's figure, in terms of the overall infrastructure and transportation deficit, was $7 billion, and that was last year. So we may not exactly be talking about the total budget. I know that you referred quite a bit to roads, and maybe what you were referring to dealt directly with roads.

As for converting my enthusiasm for P3s, I would like to think I'm not ideologically bound, but if these roads had been repaired, if these buildings had been maintained, then the costs we are currently talking about in the form of P3 savings would never have had to have been realized.

There has been a neglect since '94 of infrastructure and transportation, and the magic bullet of P3 is not going to resolve all that problem. The biggest part of the P3 equation, that gets left out in discussion, is the fact that we have no idea over the next 30 years, which is the average time for a P3 project, what the interest rates are going to look like. Those interest rates aren't fixed. While we're paying off bits and pieces of the principal, the interest continues to accumulate. It is my belief that the increase in interest rates reduces whatever savings may be initially provided.

With P3s there's also the ownership question. At what point does the project revert to the public owner and become a liability as well as an asset? There's a lot of discussion about P3 schools, et cetera, but I know that that's not your area. It's unfortunate that 30 years from now we'll have that answer, and neither of us is likely to be around in this House. Therefore, the responsibility for those decisions that were made at that time will not fall upon our shoulders. Somehow I'd like to see that accountability extended.

Back to the discussions with Bruce Fowlie. What he noted – and you approached the answer somewhat – was that the community paid out $25,000 seed money trying to get the government to recognize the true combined population if you took in all the summer villages. They felt that if they approached it as a collective, if that were permitted, then they would be able to apply for a $75,000 cost for the grant implementation, which I gather is the maximum for an exploration grant.

One of the difficulties – and this has to do with the regional planning, and I came across this difficulty in Red Deer county versus the city of Red Deer – is that sometimes the regional co-operation isn't the greatest. This is something that we hope the government will take a leadership role in. For example, when I was talking to the municipal district of Red Deer, I said: "Well, why don't you get your water from the city of Red Deer? Why aren't you hooked up by a system of pipes? Why isn't your waste water dealt with and treated?" It seemed like there were a whole series of small water treatment plants as opposed to a large line, that I felt would have been more effective. But we run into this.

In some cases it's regional pride. You know, say the town of Bragg Creek wants money spent on their water treatment plan. It's maybe not necessarily the way they politically want to go: ship it to Cochrane or Cochrane, in turn, ship it to Calgary. But it seemed to me that it would make sense to have the infrastructure through pipelines with a processing facility both for water treatment and for the waste treatment. I mean, I don't want to take away from individual municipalities' decision-making, but it seemed to me that at some point with government support and funding and sort of chairing some of these regional committees, not dictating but chairing, some of these bits-and-pieces solutions could be dealt with.

To go further on Norris Beach – and I know it's a small area, but we've got a lot of small villages and towns that are very important in Alberta and are struggling to survive: the development of a regional infrastructure plan for the purpose of orderly planning around the lake that will serve the needs of residents and the public and acknowledge the environmental challenges, septic tanks versus a collective waste-water treatment system, such a plan emanating from a regional study would consider existing and planned development, public access to the lake, roads, emergency services, and all environmental considerations.

We all know that in the winter probably the population of these villages drops to, you know, one-tenth of what it is during the summer when people come down from Edmonton and so on to enjoy them. It's kind of like what happens in Fort McMurray when everybody comes to town and the hospital is needed and the various facilities. Another concern that they had was road maintenance and upgrading within the municipality to handle the increased traffic resulting from increased development activities. In the village of Sangudo, again, the waste-water distribution system came up as well as upgrades to the village reservoir.

From the city of St. Albert a concern that the Member for St. Albert has brought up: the west regional roadway currently under construction on the west side of St. Albert, the north leg of the Anthony Henday Drive and its currently planned alignment proximity to some neighbourhoods in south St. Albert, a freeway which they consider is too close to residential areas. General infrastructure maintenance and expansion are ongoing needs.

Now, when the minister indicated that he was trying to answer my questions, I don't know whether in your information you can give me anything about the Jasper municipality or Lesser Slave Lake or Longview or Norris Beach or Sangudo village. If that's not possible tonight, it would be wonderful to receive that information, sort of a progress report, so that both you and I could get back to these individuals who have expressed their priorities.

The town of Taber. Again, waste water comes up there as number one, a new waste-water treatment facility, phase 1 at a cost of $10 million, in 10 years phase 2 at an additional cost of $18 million, and that's funded in 2006 dollars. The northwest storm waterline comes in at – again this is a 2006 figure – $2.7 million. A 57th street connector connecting downtown to highway 3 over the Canadian Pacific Railway tracks: $2.5 million has been paid to CPR to relocate their spur lines, $2 million for road construction.

The city of Edmonton. I'm going beyond their three priorities because of the large population. They've noted a $3,068,000 total for unfunded projects. Oh, pardon me. That's in the billions, I gather, rather than in the millions: $3,068,000,000. Sorry. I misread. Based on the approved 2000 budget summary for the city of Edmonton, unfunded elements of the plan, total cost of over – oh, pardon me. I'm making a mistake. I've got a series of millions and billions here in place. It says $3,068,000. Excuse me for my confusion there. Of this 54 per cent relates . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

Mr. Ouellette: Well, hon. member, I've got to clear the air here a little bit. You're jumping all over the place. I don't know how anybody can follow any questions you're asking. I answered all of your questions before, but I will say that it took 13 letters and five phone calls and how many times in the House to get you to understand what the Auditor General was talking about in $34 million. So maybe I will have to reanswer all these questions 12 times.

I want to say that you're really talking specifics here about separate municipalities. We have grant programs that every municipality can apply for on every single issue you talked about tonight, and that's what we're doing with just about all these municipalities. When you talk about summer villages at Pigeon Lake, yes, there have been a number of programs there, and different people have taken the lead to partner with them. I'll give you an example of one. Wetaskiwin took the lead for a study along the south shore at Pigeon Lake, but the project fell apart because the summer village residents did not want anything that may allow more growth. They didn't want their little paradise to be shared with anybody. They said: we'll cancel this project.

We have grants available that they can apply for. One of them is the AMIP program. The program provides financial assistance to municipalities to develop capital municipal infrastructure to maintain and enhance economic, social, and cultural opportunity and well-being while protecting and improving the quality of our environment upon which people and economies in Alberta depend. Funding under this program supports the development, enhancement, and rehabilitation of core capital infrastructure projects such as municipal roads, bridges, public transit vehicles and facilities, water and waste-water systems and facilities, storm drainage systems and facilities, emergency service vehicles and facilities, and infrastructure management system software. Included in the list of eligible projects are design and engineering services, construction and rehabilitation, vehicle purchase, and land acquisition. In addition, the program may include barrier-free transportation initiatives to improve accessibility for seniors and persons with disabilities.

Where the core capital infrastructure needs have been addressed, the available funds may also include other capital projects such as cultural and recreational facilities, community environmental and energy systems and facilities, solid waste management systems and facilities, municipal buildings, and other municipal infrastructure.

We were talking about P3s and having to worry about 30 years. That's another one that you're very, very, very misunderstanding. It's completely warranted for 30 years. The only place that any cost can differ on the full price of that ring road for 30 years is that in our contract they can tie the annual maintenance fee just to the rate of inflation. There's no such thing as interest rates. There's no such thing as anything like that that could increase the cost of that road. We get the road back after 30 years in the same shape – we can do an engineered study on it. It has to meet the same engineering criteria after 30 years as it did the day it was built. They're responsible for all of that maintenance. That's when I say that it's such a good deal, especially in times of cost escalations like today.

Yes, you could say that our total maintenance and replacement requirements across government are more than the $1.7 billion. The $1.7 billion is our department: $1.6 billion of that on roads and $87 million on buildings. As of March 31, '07, our total capital maintenance and replacement requirements across government will be $5.8 billion. I'll go a little further. The backlog of capital maintenance and replacement requirements is expected to exceed $12 billion by 2012, but we're talking replacement cost of buildings here. We're talking buildings here that are 75, 85, 95 years old, some maybe less, and they never ever were built or designed for that period of time. So that's also the cost if we replaced all that square footage.

When we talk about roads, you can see by the great economy we have in Alberta the increased amount of truck traffic and heavy traffic and traffic that's beat up our roads a lot quicker than we had expected them to from our original design requirements with less traffic count on them.

Did I catch all of them yet? No. There's one more here, I see: the St. Albert bypass. We have been working with the city all the way along. We've been doing the functional design and study with them. They're going to look at building the road, and as long as they build that bypass road to our government specifications so that when we need to do the complete bypass or take it over, if it's to our specifications, we can do that, and we can actually pay them out for the money they've spent on that road because it would become a provincial numbered highway.

We want to help every municipality that's under pressure, but like anything else, there's only a certain size of pot of money. We want to stretch those dollars as far as we can. That's why we ask all of our partners to help us with different ideas. How can we streamline our designs, our engineering? Can we make P3s work better to stretch our dollars further to help taxpayers? But I will guarantee you, hon. member, that we will always do that due diligence. If a P3 doesn't make sense and doesn't work better for the taxpayer of Alberta, we wouldn't go there. That's the thing that I speak about to our officials all the time, that they do the proper due diligence. They have the degrees in the fields that they work in, they wear the engineering rings on their fingers, and I'm just there to make sure and try to help them manage that we look after taxpayers' dollars properly.

Are there any other ones that I've missed? I think I've caught all the questions from this round, hon. member. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. If I accused the minister of hyperbole, it would be the equivalent of the pot calling the kettle black, so I won't make that accusation. But I will note that it wasn't 12 phone calls, Mr. Minister, and an equivalent number of letters.

Mr. Ouellette: I was being a little sarcastic.

Mr. Chase: Oh, I see. Okay. I appreciate the qualifications.

Going back to Edmonton and trying to speed up because I want to raise a number of concerns beyond the priorities given to me. Roads: $1.3 billion in funding is currently underfunded; an additional $683 million is needed for public transit projects; $68 million is needed for drainage system changes. The section on project management and construction, including emergency response facilities and public works buildings rehabilitation notes: $322 million in unfunded projects; $120 million is requested for police buildings and equipment. Currently the most urgent needs have been met by expanding the city's debt. Tax-supported debt reaches $50 billion under this budget.

Similar story in Calgary. Based on the approved 2007-2008 capital budget, $2.8 billion in additional capital projects have been identified as needed but are unable to be funded within the 2007-2011 capital plan. This unfunded list forms what the corporate infrastructure status report has noted as a $5.4 billion infrastructure funding gap over the next 10 years. A hundred and forty-two million dollars in properties and buildings. Basic maintenance and construction in Calgary's parks is unfunded by $153 million. Unfunded recreation expenses total $213 million. Expansion and maintenance of Calgary's public transit system needs another $440 million.

While $93.5 million in needed projects will be funded over the next five years, an additional $110 million will go unfunded. Major transportation infrastructure will go unfunded to the tune of $9,898,000,000. Equipment, critical computer infrastructure, and service locations are in need of over $317 million over the next five years. The 2007 unfunded capital projects totalled $297.8 million. By 2011 the total unfunded liability of the city of Calgary will be $2.8 billion. This is why our municipal minister and our mayor are doing quite a bit of travelling, both in the air and on our roads.

In 2005 the mayor, Melissa Blake, from Wood Buffalo came down in the spring and called upon the government to recognize the extraordinary needs of the Wood Buffalo-Fort McMurray area, and it was a $1.2 billion request. The amount the minister has mentioned comes nowhere near that $1.2 billion. Because there was such a delay and such an underfunding, in the spring of 2006 Mayor Blake came back with a joint proposal with the surrounding area, a need for $2 billion.

So I'll let the minister and his associates do the math, but you'll find that whether it's the city of Calgary, whether it's the city of Edmonton, the city of Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, there are billions of dollars of infrastructure and maintenance required. In the city of Calgary, for example, just the public part of the school board is approaching a half billion dollars in deferred maintenance, and that isn't even dealing with the 40 schools that have been requested.

Anyway, progressing. The Radke report raised a number of large issues. Many haven't been dealt with in this budget. This was the government's own report done by a former ADM, yet they have only partially dealt with its concerns. I'll address issue 23 of the recommendations, transportation infrastructure in the RMWB: the need for four major interchanges in the urban service area, even over the twinning of highway 63 south. The east Athabasca corridor road should be fully funded by industry, which is an interesting suggestion. It is primarily a corridor road that industry uses. It calls into question: what is the provincial infrastructure transportation responsibility, and what is the responsibility of the private sector? A lot of discussion there. The need for completion dates on AI and T projects so that the municipality knows what's going on and can co-ordinate.

Issue 29, the industrial heartland: what planning has taken place? The report states that I and T "has not participated directly in planning the roadway system in the industrial heartland and has no money budgeted in its current three-year capital plan for financial support of extraordinary requirements for road construction." It doesn't seem that this capital plan is any better.

What's going on with these recommendations? What's been done? As far as we can tell from the budget documents, this is what the ministry is doing: twinning highway 63 south. We agree with this, but it would be nice to see the minister explain why they're ignoring the recommendation by Radke to put this on hold. Now, you can't have it both ways. Highway 63 has been a major concern that we have brought out as a Liberal caucus since the late '80s. Possibly the minister could give us an update as to how many kilometres of highway 63 have now been twinned, say in the 2005-2006 year, and where we'll be in terms of kilometres accomplished in twinning by the end of this season. That would be nice to know.

The bridge is listed in the capital projects but only as a proposed project. Can the minister clarify what is going on? The interchanges are not on board yet at all. What's the plan? When? Who pays? Municipality, the province, the feds?

No word on the east Athabasca corridor road. The EUB report 2007 to 2013 has suggested that the Alberta government should be taking a lead role in co-ordinating this. Radke thinks it should be fully funded by industry. Can the minister sort out this difference?

No word on Upgrader Alley and planning there.

The list of questions appears almost endless, but to cut down to the core of the problem, what is the government doing to make sure they aren't lacking any plan for this development as they were lacking one for Wood Buffalo? We know the possibility of 10 upgraders. What's the plan?

We need clarification on all this. The health care concerns raised in Radke were dealt with straight away. Why the delay on infrastructure and transportation?

We also need more accurate costing: part 6 of recommendations from page 144.

Alternative financing, otherwise known as P3s: a little bit more detail. There's an increase of $53.6 million on last year, 36 per cent. What is this for? Is it just the northeast ring road, or are there other project increases? What is the government spending on through alternative financing? What kinds of alternative financing are going on? We've heard about P3s. I'd be interested in other creative mathematics.

In the business plan, page 207, alternatively financed projects dropped from the $202 million this coming year to just $5 million in the year following. They then increase slightly to $31.9 million after that. Why the decrease? Aren't these commitments that have to be paid? Isn't the whole point of a P3 to spread out payments over the years, not fluctuate? What is the province's P3 debt? How much is the province on the hook for over the next 20, 30, or, if any projects have been extended, out to 40 years?

The capital plan, page 85, suggests a figure of $513 million for the two ring roads. Is this the total cost other than what you mentioned as an interest increase based on the maintenance only? I would love to have that written down, that the only fluctuation in interest is in maintenance; it's not over principal.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, hon. member. I've got to start out again. You were all on city grants again. You were all on somebody else's total infrastructure package or planning or deficits. I don't know where you want to go with that because it is not an actual responsibility of Infrastructure and Transportation or the provincial government.

The provincial government is doing everything they can to help Edmonton and Calgary and any other municipalities with their own plans, but those are their plans that you were talking about, how they're short for their different projects that you were naming. I can't remember them off the top of my head because I was just listening to you, saying: every time we've addressed this, we say what our responsibility is and all the different grants they can apply for from us, but that really is their responsibility. We try to help them with that, and in a short period of time of the last five years or so we probably went from – and I'm doing a little bit of guesstimating here – around $400 million to municipalities to today: this year going to be $2 billion going out to municipalities. If we could do more, we would do more.

But what you were actually addressing here or trying to say was that our problem was city planning. Yes. I agree. They're suffering the huge growth of the province the same way as we are. Hopefully, we can work together and come to some solutions to address all those facts.

You were talking quite a lot about highway 63. We do not have highway 63 on hold. I don't know where you got that from, but highway 63 is not on hold. We're going to probably spend – maybe somewhere in these notes I have the exact figure – well over $500 million in the next three years just on roads in the Fort McMurray area. We're right now in the process of building a five-lane bridge across the river in Fort McMurray to the tune of about $150 million. We're working on the interchanges you're talking about. We've just tendered from Fort McMurray south to 881, twinning that section this year. You wanted to know how many miles were twinned. I don't know those miles exactly, but we're twinned from, oh gosh, the other side – I don't know if we could call it the Syncrude plant or Mildred Lake area or somewhere – back to Fort McMurray. We've already spent $200 million over the past few years. Funding approved in the current '06 to '09 capital plan totals $548 million, reflecting all the growing infrastructure needs.

Rapid economic activity in the Fort McMurray region has increased the movement of goods, equipment, and people to the region. This work has included repaving 55 kilometres on highway 63 at locations between Fort McMurray and south of Mariana Lake to preserve the existing highway, including grading of the Stony Mountain truck staging area as well as clearing 60 kilometres on highway 63 in preparation for future twinning.

Within Fort McMurray 13 kilometres of paving was completed, including five intersection improvements, construction of an innovative alternative lane south of McEwan bridge to reduce congestion, and installation of high mast lighting to improve visibility. North of Fort McMurray 17 kilometres of grading was completed for the future twinning between Suncor and north of Mildred Lake. On highway 881, 70 kilometres of base paving and 102 kilometres of final paving was completed to allow a continuous paved surface between Lac La Biche and highway 63.

The current capital plan for a $543 million investment is to complete additional improvements in the area, including base paving to complete the twinning, again, to Suncor, repaving northbound and southbound lanes within Fort McMurray between Hospital Street and the Athabasca River bridge, commencement of construction of a new Athabasca River bridge, repaving the grade widening on highway 63 south of Fort McMurray to south of highway 69, twinning of highway 63 from south of highway 69 to south of highway 881, grade widening on highway 881 from east of highway 63 to Gregoire Lake park, and base paving of the Stony Mountain truck staging area.

Longer range plans include twinning south on highway 63 all the way down to highway 55, completion of a staging area north of highway 881, and construction of an interchange at Thickwood Boulevard in Fort McMurray. It goes on and on and on and on. We aren't forgetting about any of our responsibilities there. The main thing is that we're trying to get as much done as we possibly can for the dollars we can afford to put in it at the time or for the capacity that we have.

Alternatively financed projects: a $53.6 million increase is primarily due to the commencement of construction on the Stoney Trail northeast ring road in Calgary. There was a $120 million increase in statutory funding for the commencement of the Stoney Trail northeast ring road, offset by a decrease in funding for the Anthony Henday southeast ring road as this project will be completed in October '07. Statutory programs are not voted by the Legislative Assembly. The projects are set up to recognize the liability but do not require a cash payment during this fiscal year. When a cash disbursement is required, the Legislative Assembly will vote on such an appropriation.

Under the P3 model a private consortium will design, construct, finance, operate, and maintain the asset for a period of 30 years. Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation will make payments over 30 years instead of paying for the project as it is built, the old, traditional way. The government will have accumulated a $513 million capital lease liability related to these projects when they are all completed, and that consists of the capital costs only for the Anthony Henday southeast ring road, which was about $356 million, and the Calgary northeast Stoney Trail ring road, which was about $156.9 million.

There was something else about ring roads that you were asking me. No, I think I got it all now, right? We're jumping around here a bit, but I think I've covered them all. Are we missing anything?

I think we probably have covered all of that for this little session. I don't know if there was more. I'm just trying to think if there was more that you asked about on the Radke report. There was very little about that.

Oh, you were asking about industrial heartland. Highway 21 is part of the industrial heartland. We're twinning that right now. All of that stuff comes into effect. I've met with the chamber in Fort Saskatchewan. We've talked with Sturgeon county and Strathcona county. They're going ahead, working on plans. The actual St. Albert road that you were talking about is part of the industrial heartland. So, yes, it's very high on our radar screen. We're very concerned here. We want to make sure that we're out front of this, that we don't have another Fort McMurray on our hands.

There is an industrial heartland working group. The other morning I was actually in Fort Saskatchewan speaking to the chamber, and I was mentioning: "I'm a little worried. We've got to get this." The fellow stood up and said: "Hey, hey, hey, back off here. We're way ahead of the game on the planning." That is so great when private industry steps up to the plate for that.

Another thing you were asking about, now that I'm thinking of it, was another road. The east Athabasca road is not a provincial road. Just in secondary roads alone we have 16,000-some kilometres. As we're doing a review, looking at all these roads – and I've got to be very careful how I say this because I don't want to scare the municipalities and say that . . . [Mr. Ouellette's speaking time expired]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. One area, minister, that you haven't addressed yet – and I'll look forward to your answers – is where we're at with Upgrader Alley in terms of planning dollars laid out.

The other answer that I would be pleased to receive is that P3s assume the government is going to cover the cost over a 30-year period. If everything were to stay in a boom mode, that wouldn't be a consideration. But what happens if we make promises at this point which we can't finance 30 years down the road? If alternative energy sources become more attractive, there's a concern over pollution that we haven't been able to potentially sequester. The environmental damage is such that our one-trick pony of natural resources that provides us with the majority of our money is no longer there. How will we pay for those bills? How is that built in? That's a concern I have.

Also, the way P3s are recorded. It says that P3s are recorded as capital leases, but there's no entry for capital leases in the estimates or business plan. So where is the figure for '07-08? This may be part of the Auditor General's requirements, and maybe you've got it in different wording. I'm quite willing to hear how it's being explained.

Sustainability. I started talking about the Liberal plan, which according to our number crunching suggests that by 2020 we'd have set aside $120 billion so that there wouldn't be the dependency that we currently have on nonrenewable energies. There seems to be no similar savings account in the provincial government plan. The government has no long-term guarantees for infrastructure spending. There's no savings fund to back it up. With the Alberta Liberals' plan for the future we would eliminate the infrastructure debt, drawing on an increased royalty scheme partly but also setting aside 30 per cent of all revenue from nonrenewable energy to address these costs so that we wouldn't get a nasty surprise 15, 20, or 30 years down the road.

The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development copied our plan and would have put 30 per cent of nonrenewable resource revenue into a savings plan. The Minister of Finance wanted 20 per cent put away. Jim Dinning, endorsed by over half the Tory caucus, said he'd put at least 30 per cent into savings and possibly as much as 50 per cent. How are we going to back up our infrastructure projects? Without a substantial savings plan the province has no chance of maintaining an acceptable level of funding for infrastructure. Why hasn't the government done anything about securing our future so that when these payments come through on our P3s, we would be able to actually pay them off?

Highway quality. How is this living up to keeping Albertans safe? In the business plan, page 201, we see measure 1(b), showing that the government is aiming at 21 per cent of provincial highways, over 1 in 5 kilometres of road, being in poor condition by the years 2009-10. Also in the estimates line 3.0.2 shows that spending on provincial highway rehabilitation is going down by 13 per cent even before the 10 to 25 per cent construction inflation. At the same time, goal 2 of the business plan is to provide a safe, secure, and reliable provincial transportation network.

The Premier and all the ministers keep touting the pledge to keep Albertans safe. There's a disconnect here. How can the minister justify letting the province's roads deteriorate so badly? Isn't this a result of the massive underfundings in the 1990s that's coming back to haunt us and the consequence of a complete lack of planning? Could the minister please provide the most recent vehicle fatality rates in Alberta? Does the minister expect that with twice as many roads in poor condition in just three years' time, the rate of accidents will increase?

Construction inflation. The business plan says that inflation in the construction industry is running at 10 to 25 per cent. If it's as bad as the top end of that, then we're looking as much at the I and T budget shrinking in real terms. This is, of course, just the result of the government's failure to plan and the deferral of massive infrastructure debts from the cuts in the 1990s. The minister talked about a figure of $12 billion, which I consider to be extreme lowballing. The Premier was at the table when these cuts happened. Now Albertans see ever-increasing amounts of their tax dollars going in to catch up. An acknowledgement of the impacts of the failure would be appreciated. How do the ministry's long-term highway maintenance contracts with private firms address the inflation? Are they proofed against it? If not, the 27 per cent increase in the maintenance budget suddenly becomes pretty paltry, potentially really only 2 per cent as inflation cuts into it.

Local management. Stop micromanaging funds. Get government out of local projects. The reaction of Mayor Bronconnier is just one example of how this government's interference causes problems. Why did the Premier make promises of no-strings-attached accountability for municipal infrastructure and then turn around and hand out less than expected and direct where it could be spent? I refer to the dispute of the province treating the city of Calgary as some recalcitrant child who is unable to manage his accounting. The minister, when I listed a long list of debts and projects, said that those are all problems of the city, that the province has no responsibility to address those public infrastructure needs.

These aren't luxuries. These are requirements: water treatment plants, roads, LRT. What will the government do about providing the real funding needed to build light rail transit in Calgary? Albertans are already so reliant on cars. Do we want to make them more so? I hope not. The government needs to take the lead on sustainable transportation in this province.

Transportation safety business plan goal number 3, page 202. It's interesting to compare this with last year's business plan. Last year the performance measures for seat belt usage were as follows: the last actual measure from 2003-04 was 84.9 per cent of drivers, though the target for this year just past was 88 per cent. Now look at this year's. The last actual measure has gone down to 82.9 per cent. We're already meant to have reached what we're now only expecting in three years, so it seems that the expectations of this government are going down rather than up. One of the things that we as Liberals and myself over the last three years as the shadow minister have called for is the full implementation of the McDermid report, that takes into account safety measures such as seat belts. Of course, we've put forward the notion of getting rid of handheld cellphones, which, fortunately, a number of companies have done voluntarily.

Would the minister please explain why ever fewer Albertans are using their vehicles without wearing a seat belt? Why is the ministry weakening its target so dramatically? Isn't this evidence of a failure of the government to make our roads safer? Why isn't the minister being more aggressive on and I would say implementing and funding the McDermid report? It addresses so many of these safety concerns.

Percentage of drivers in fatality collisions who have consumed alcohol. Again comparing last year's data with this year's, the last actual figure came out of the 2004-05 year, 19.1 per cent. This year's target is 19 per cent. If you keep lowering your expectations, you'll probably meet your target. This year the last actual is 19.2 per cent, '05-06. The target for '07-08 is 18.9 per cent. Again, it seems like the government achievement tests. If the kids don't make the grade, we lower the expectation rather than raising the training. The target for '08-09: 18.7 per cent. For '09-10 it's a decreasing target of 18.5.

Why didn't things drop over the past year? Given that there has been no improvement from last year to this year, if anything a slight worsening, what is it that makes the minister think he can lower the rate of drinking drivers and fatal accidents? What new tactics will the ministry be using? I can partially answer that. There are going to be more sheriffs out on the roads, and I appreciate that there's going to greater policing, although I'd rather have RCMP if given the choice.

Percentage of drivers in injury collisions who had consumed alcohol. The actual figure has gone up from last year too.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Chairman and hon. member, I have to say that from what you're reading somewhere, you got all your information backwards again. I'm going to read it to you if you understand. When we were talking seat belt usage, combined percentage of urban and rural seat belt usage in Alberta, the last actual result for the Alberta percentage was 82.9 per cent. The national rate for the same period was 90.5. So, yes, we're 8 per cent lower than the national average, but we went way up, especially in rural Alberta, from where we were before.

You were saying that with our target we were targeting less. It says right here that the ministry's target is to reach compliance rates of 95 per cent by 2010 in compliance with Canada's national target. The higher the percentage the better the performance. Can I say it a little slower? The higher the percentage the better the performance.

Then we go to the drinking and driving casualty collisions. Measures indicate the percentage of vehicle operators in casualty collisions, injuries and fatalities, who were judged to have consumed alcohol before the collision. Data is taken from the Alberta collision information system. The lower the percentage the better the performance. So we're going from 19, asking for 18.5. The lower the percentage the better the performance. Do you understand that now, that we actually are shooting for better targets than where we are?

You were asking about provincial highway rehabilitation, an $18.9 million decrease primarily due to work required to be done in '06-07 to accommodate highway rehabilitation in resource development regions in the northern Alberta transportation corridor. Provincial highway rehabilitation allows highway pavement and bridges to be restored to their original condition at the most cost-effective time to avoid irreparable deterioration. Timely rehabilitation results in substantive cost savings in the long term. The reason for the decrease: the '07-08 estimate actually had already increased $57.1 million compared to the '06-07 budget, so it ended up a $57.1 million increase. You can take $18 million off that, but it was actually increased from our '06-07 budget. That reflects that adjustment.

I think you were asking about our percentages for the physical condition of provincial highways. Our percentage in '05-06 in good condition was 63 per cent. Our target in '07-08 is actually 57 per cent. That is one where we're actually going down. We realize that we're not keeping up to our target of getting all of our roads up to the 80 per cent range. Percentage in fair condition is 24.1 per cent. Our target for '07-08 is going to be 26 per cent. Our percentage in poor condition was 12.9 per cent in '05-06, and we know that's going to jump to about 17 per cent this year.

I'd just like to comment a little bit. You were talking about, you know, the Liberal idea of doing things. With all due respect here, I just almost hate to tell you this because I know that it may not be the most politically correct thing, but I honestly believe that if your philosophies were in place in this province, our poor economy would be at its knees in a very short period of time because of the philosophies of not understanding that you have to work with everybody in this province. You can't just say: "You know what? I'd fix all that stuff tomorrow by charging more royalties or doing this or doing that."

We do have some pretty good relationships with some of the industry where they come out and actually spend a lot of their dollars on our roads. If we go to them at times and say, "You know, we have a safety factor here; we need this intersection done; your industry, your business has created this extra traffic," they actually step up to the plate and put the millions and millions of dollars on the table for us to fix the intersection. You can't always try to tax people into fixing your problem because if you do that, all of a sudden you don't make things very good for any small business to survive in an economy. I just wanted to preach a little.

Ms Pastoor: I didn't hear increased taxes.

Mr. Ouellette: No. I heard increased royalties, and you can't just jump and do that, and you can do it.

Another thing that you were getting at: not putting money away and doing that for things. I guess what you asked is: how do we make sure that we still have the money 30 years out if the economy changes or whatever? That's where the planning of this government has done very well by having a sustainability fund and a capital fund. We have $7.7 billion in our sustainability fund as of March 31, '07. So you can say percentages that you'd put away in the heritage fund. These are all part of the heritage fund, and it's money being put away in a sustainability fund for that time when different revenues drop. We can carry on with holding our budget because we have a sustainability fund. We also have a capital account for capital spending on all the capital projects that are in line, and that capital fund is at $6.1 billion, hon. member.

Overall, as you can see, as often as you seem to think, "Where's your planning and where's your planning?" tonight we've actually talked a lot about planning. We've talked about all the different plans we have within our own ministry. We've also talked about our sustainability fund, which has been a plan that we've been working on for a long time out to make sure that we can sustain the budgets that we actually put out there to look after all of our great citizens of Alberta.

Traffic safety is a very high priority of this department and this government. It was actually mandated by Premier Stelmach, mandated to me in a letter. We are working on a traffic safety plan, and we are going to implement . . .

The Chair: You can't mention members' names in the House.

Mr. Ouellette: Sorry, Mr. Chairman. Just our Premier.

We're working on a traffic safety plan. We're going to be bringing different things forward. We're looking at a number of different things, and cellphones is one of them that we're also looking at. It doesn't mean that it'll come forward. We want to make sure that the studies are proper. We just don't want to jump on the handwagon because it's the popular thing to do.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chair's Ruling Committee of Supply Procedure

The Chair: It's been indicated by the opposition that because of the time there's a desire to move on to Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Before I recognize the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, I'd like to read two letters from the Speaker, and I'll just read a paragraph from each one.

The first one, dated April 30, 2007: "Each Minister must provide, in writing, the names of the officials to be admitted to the Assembly floor to the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly with a copy to the Sergeant-at-Arms."

The next letter, dated May 8, 2007: "Each caucus must provide on one day's notice, in writing, the names and job titles of the officials to be admitted to the Assembly floor to the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly with a copy to the Sergeant-at-Arms."

I did receive a copy from the minister of employment and immigration of the staff she wishes to be admitted to the floor, but I did not get the one day's notice, so I would require unanimous consent of the Assembly as we did earlier tonight for the opposition.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: Hon. minister, you may invite your staff in and introduce them, and you may proceed with your comments.

Employment, Immigration and Industry

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, and thank you to all the members for your support of the staff of Employment, Immigration and Industry that are with us this evening. If I may, to my immediate left is Rick Sloan, who is the assistant deputy minister in charge of the area which is principally involving the economic development file from the previous economic development ministry. To my immediate right is acting deputy minister Alex Stewart, and Alex has fulfilled the role of acting as an assistant to the deputy minister and a senior officer in Employment, Immigration and Industry. Beyond is Shelley Engstrom, who is one of the senior staff members in corporate services looking after the area of budget and finance.

We are very pleased to represent this ministry here this evening, recognizing that this ministry and its business plan are a collaboration of six ministries which have been formed into one unit that comprises some of the most exciting parts of our governance structure, from the people that are employed in Alberta, from the people that we have defined as the working poor, to the industries that provide jobs and opportunities for Albertans to engage in commerce.

We believe that Alberta is in a fortunate position. Our unemployment rate is the lowest in Canada. Our employment rate is the highest. We have $169 billion worth of projects on the books.

One of the challenges we face is to manage our growth to build a stronger Alberta. In order to do this, we need to invest in our workforce, and that is why Employment, Immigration and Industry is allocating some $300 million to support employment in Alberta in areas like skills training, English as an additional language, and academic upgrading. We're also working to ensure that members of underrepresented labour-force groups have access to the labour market, groups like First Nations and Métis, immigrants, people with disabilities, youth, and older workers.

Besides investing over $6 million in specific aboriginal training programs, an aboriginal workforce action plan is being developed in partnership with Alberta's First Nations and Métis organizations. Government also provides funding to some schools on reserves so that aboriginal people can take academic and occupationally focused training.

Increased spending on immigration will also help address, not solve, the province's labour shortage. We're increasing immigration funding by $9 million to a total of almost $68 million. Alberta has 10 per cent of Canada's population but only about 7.4 per cent of the immigrant population. Our target this year is to work towards an increase to at least 10 per cent of Canada's immigration. We want to increase that to 10 per cent, or about 24,000 people. This additional immigration funding will expand the number of nominees under the provincial nominee program to 2,500 in 2007-08, 5,000 in 2008-09, and 8,000 in '09-10. It will also provide international marketing in credentials recognition and up to 500 additional spaces for English as an additional language and bridging programs.

Mr. Chairman, the new funding supports the made-in-Alberta immigration strategy that was announced last week. We're also putting together, in co-operation with the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, a health workforce plan, an action strategy that will help us address labour-force issues within the health care sector.

Our department is helping industry develop strategies in areas like tourism, hospitality, construction, energy, and manufacturing to address specific labour-force concerns. The strategies are being developed by Alberta's leaders in business, industry, and unions, including Syncrude, the Alberta Chamber of Resources, Canadian Federation of Independent Business, Merit Contractors, and the Alberta Building Trades Council.

Alberta's long-term prosperity hinges on the province's success in securing a position as a globally competitive economy where innovation and knowledge are applied to add value to our traditional commodity sectors. To that end, our department is investing an additional $2.5 million to develop policy and deliver programs with industry to address the developing high-performance environments component of the building and educating tomorrow's workforce strategy. This includes initiatives to raise awareness of productivity issues among industry, the addition and expansion of existing industry development programs, and the lean enterprise assessment program.
