them. When it decided it didn't want to be debt free anymore, this government itself changed the law, and it's changing the law again.

It's a little bit of a silly exercise, in my opinion, Madam Chair, to attempt to enshrine your economic principles in legislation and make them the law of the land. I think governments, like Calgary-Buffalo said, have to be able to do what they do depending on their philosophy and depending on the times in which they're governing. I certainly don't agree that debt is always and in every case a bad thing for governments. As the provincial Finance minister has pointed out, all private businesses, all individuals at one point or another make use of the tool of debt. Governments are no different.

What becomes the problem and what we have to guard against is that sometimes debt is a political way out of difficult problems. Instead of cutting spending or instead of raising taxes, you just keep borrowing, and you're transferring the problems then to a subsequent generation. There's no question that this did happen in Canada and in other places and certainly in this province under the Getty government in particular.

We're again seeing a deficit. What we need to do is that when that begins to be a problem, we need to assess our revenues, and we need to assess how much debt we're going to incur. We need to put in place a systematic way of repaying the debt so that it doesn't become unmanageable, and then when we move to better times, the debt can be systematically paid down. Now, I don't see that from this government at this point. But I don't see that this particular amendment will accomplish that because it's far too restrictive and is really just a backdoor way of restricting the government's ability to borrow.

Now, municipalities in particular have always depended on borrowing for their capital projects, and it has many advantages. You don't have to delay capital projects well past the time that they're needed. You can also spread out the costs of a project that may last 50 years or more over the life of the project so that this particular generation doesn't have to pay all of the costs up front for a project that would be enjoyed by subsequent generations.

I recall that when I was on city council in the city of Edmonton, we had a policy that had been established by the former mayor, Laurence Decore, of pay-as-you-go for capital projects. It made it very difficult for Edmonton to get the infrastructure that it needed in a timely way. By contrast, in the same period the city of Calgary under Mayor Ralph Klein was borrowing to beat the band. He ran up very significant debt, but the infrastructure in Calgary was put in place in a timely fashion, and it facilitated the growth of the economy. The growth of the economy facilitated the capacity of the city of Calgary to service its debt and to pay down its debt.

That's the principle that I think the more rigid Conservatives forget. Sometimes you borrow and undertake debt for capital projects as a way of accelerating economic growth, which diminishes the magnitude of the debt relatively so that it becomes more manageable. That's an approach that I do support and our party does support. Not everything this government is doing is terrible.

Mr. Denis: I'll quote you on that. Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Just most of it. Make sure it's a complete quote. Just most of it.

This particular piece, borrowing for capital, we don't have a problem with, but there must be a plan in place for the orderly repayment of that debt. It cannot be used as an excuse not to raise taxes or not to cut programs. I think those are hard choices.

The government failed to fix its revenue problem, which should have been its first task upon being re-elected. It's paying a price because now we have both program cuts and more debt. The government has got itself into a lot of trouble because it didn't bite the bullet and correct the financial position that was also created when Ralph Klein was the Premier. In other words, he cut corporate taxes. I was there at a Chamber of Commerce luncheon where Steve West announced plans to reduce the corporate tax rate from 16 to 8 per cent. Well, we're now down to 10. That's billions of dollars every year that the government no longer has.

Before I was elected, we had Stockwell Day as the Provincial Treasurer, and he imposed the flat tax on personal incomes that also cost billions of dollars every year. At that time, Madam Chair, of course, natural gas prices were sky-high, and we had enormous royalty revenues flowing in, at their peak $8 billion a year in natural gas royalty revenue, that offset those tax cuts for the wealthiest in our society. Well, guess what? Those royalties are just not there anymore, and that's the problem the government has gotten into.

You can't generate by magic, re-create those royalty revenues, so you have to do something else. You have to correct and reverse the corporate tax cut and the flat tax so that we have the adequate revenues to provide the programs that we need. The government has failed to do that, and that's why we have more debt than we need to have. That's why we have a rising deficit, and that's why we have simultaneously significant program cuts across the board. The government failed to grasp its fundamental task, the task that should have been tackled head-on in its first budget in its first year but was not, so the government has paid a price. Frankly, Madam Chair, the people of Alberta are also paying a price.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A2?

Mr. Fawcett: Madam Speaker, we might be making progress here because I actually agree with a little bit of what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said. I think he actually suggested that at times government might have to make hard decisions to cut programs, so we're making a bit of progress here.

What I do want to highlight, though, is that when the Premier asked me to be Associate Minister of Finance, one of the things that she put in my mandate letter was to go out and do consultation on a number of things. One is the savings policy, and the other is looking at alternative ways to finance capital projects. The Minister of Finance and I went out and talked to a number of Albertans, did an online survey, and talked to a number of financial experts.

In all of the questions that we asked, the one particular area that actually came back pretty solid, that there wasn't a lot of disagreement with, was that the government of Alberta should try to be as flexible as possible when it comes to managing its assets, particularly its physical infrastructure assets. That meant that where it financially made sense, to debt finance; where it financially made sense, to pay cash for certain projects; and where it financially made sense, Madam Chair, to go the P3 route. Accepting this amendment would go against everything that we heard in that consultation.

In fact, if you look at the realities of this, Madam Chair, you know, we wouldn't be able to move as quickly as we did on projects like highway 63 if we had this. I know the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View gave a passionate member's statement, I thought a very good member's statement, yesterday around some of the challenges around highway 8. Again, hopefully we will sometime in the future have an agreement to complete the southwest ring road in Calgary, and when we do that, that is going to be a massive, massive infrastructure project. You know, I don't know what numbers are coming in, but I've heard everything from $4 billion to $6 billion.

Governments don't have the ability to just collect the cash on hand and build those massive infrastructure projects. You need the ability to debt finance those to get them off the ground and get them built for our communities and for our cities and for our province when we need them, and we need those things today. As the members up in Fort McMurray on highway 63 know and as the member over there on the opposite side knows, we need that project as soon as we possibly can in southwest Calgary. So I would urge him and all members that have those critical infrastructure needs in their communities to defeat this amendment because it would really inhibit the government's ability to be able to move forward on those.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any more members who wish to speak on amendment A2?

Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll carry on with the bill, Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Airdrie for allowing me to present my thoughts on Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, and make a couple of amendments of my own before I head back to Calgary. It was a very gentlemanly gesture by the hon. member, and I thank him very much for it.

Speaking to the merits of the bill, I'd like to go through some of the reasons why, at least in my view, this has happened, that the Fiscal Management Act has come about at this time, at this place, and at this juncture. We did have an act in place, that was brought in in 1993 by Mr. Klein, that – say what you want – was serving its purpose in terms of providing a clear, unambiguous, and easy way for Albertans to read what our positions were in terms of revenues and a consolidated debt number.

In fact, one of the reasons that was brought in immediately upon Mr. Klein's election was the fact that over the course of the four years previous the Don Getty and Dick Johnston administration was running budgets and budget numbers and revenue projections and allocations of expenditures which never turned out to be true or to have an air of reality to them. It was even suggested by some people at that time that they thought the government itself didn't quite know exactly what their position was. With the election Mr. Klein did bring in a fairly transparent process that allowed Albertans to understand what was going on and that let opposition, media, and Joe and Jane Albertan know what the actual position of the province was.

Despite the protestations of the Treasury, that does not appear to be the case at this time. We can look back to the fiasco that happened on budget day when, simply put, the opposition members couldn't get a clear handle on what our net deficit or net debt position was. The media could not get a clear position on what that was. In fact, it took many days for organizations that are pretty adept at this stuff to come up with an exact number.

Although the Minister of Treasury Board says the confusion is only amongst people on this side of the House, I will point out that his boss, the Premier, has indicated that she doesn't believe we are in a deficit position – and she said that to Graham Thomson – whereas the minister confirms that we are, so it appears that confusion is rampant all around in terms of this new Fiscal Management Act that has been brought into this province.

Let me be even clearer on why, in my view, this act came in during this juncture. In my view, it was because ultimately the sustainability fund proved unsustainable, and you needed a mechanism by which . . . [interjection] You liked that one, hon. associate Finance minister. I thought you would. But, ultimately, it did prove unsustainable.

To carry on what has happened in our province since '08, when we found ourselves in a position of not being able to pay for our operating and our capital projects through generating revenue from taxation and through our oil and gas revenues and because of the sustainability fund running out, we needed a new set of accounting to provide a new message to the public. No longer was the old messaging going to work: that we still have $15 billion in the sustainability fund, we still have $8 billion in the sustainability fund, and that we still have this in the sustainability fund. Eventually, that message ran dry. You were unable to have that cushion to shield you from the public scrutiny of what, in fact, the finances of this province are because we have not been able to pay our way with our existing fiscal structure as it is or the oil and gas revenues as they are.

Accordingly, you need to switch the message, switch the scenarios, so you have the Fiscal Management Act, which divides the budget into three constituent parts: an operating budget, a capital budget – or I guess we could call it the debt side of the budget as it would have been formerly known – and a savings component. Really, in my view, the savings component is the most specious of the messaging arms that are out there because if you look at projected revenues and the amount of savings that we're going to do over the course, at least until the next election, it's going to be minimal compared to the amount of the net debt position that we are going to find ourselves in. I think that is the backdrop.

I would also like to point out that when I first spoke to this in second reading, I indicated at that time that I wasn't as familiar with what was going to happen in the accountability act. I wasn't as familiar with some of the commentary that was going on out there. I remember giving my comments that indicated that some of the financial reporting requirements underneath the new Fiscal Management Act didn't seem to be as diligent or require the government to be as open and transparent as the former rules and regulations under the old act did.

In fact, I wrote a letter to the Auditor General about this and asked for his views on the matter. Although he is undertaking a thorough review that he will be giving in early July 2013, he does say in this letter – and I'll quote it just to make sure; it's from the middle of the page – that in this regard, the government stated on page 17 of the 2011-2012 Annual Report that both the audited consolidated financial statements of the Province of Alberta in the annual report and the fiscal plan documents (the budget and quarterly fiscal updates) adhere to Canadian public sector accounting standards, . . .

Now here is where it gets interesting.

. . . except that the fiscal plan covers a narrower scope of reporting.

That's interesting because I believe we heard a lot about openness and transparency in the last election, that we were moving to more of a system of that measure whereas the Auditor General confirms in this letter that we are going to a narrower scope of reporting.

Now, I might not be the sharpest tool in the shed, Madam Chair, but I do understand that a narrower scope of reporting does not allow for more information to be passed through to the opposition, to the media, and to the general public to truly validate our fiscal position. I'm looking forward to the Auditor General's report in this regard.

I would like to add on to the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who put very succinctly, I think, what debt and things of that nature are in a financial accounting system. Essentially, with debt and any other move that the government must make, it has to account for a reasonable basis of mapping out what our society needs for today and what our society needs to do tomorrow. If we're just taking on debt to avoid the difficult situation of having to revisit the fiscal structure, which, in my view, is something that we should be doing, then that is not a good enough reason to be going into debt. We as a society have to learn to pay for how we go and for what we use.

The hon. member did a great job of pointing out how Mr. Klein, although bringing in a pretty open and transparent measure for viewing budgets, was not so good at planning for the long term, when natural gas prices maybe weren't at $12 to $16 dollars and the Canadian dollar was at 62 cents, or having stable revenue streams when cutting the corporate tax rate from 16 down to 10. It wasn't made with long-term planning towards what our society was actually going to need and the fact that we may be in a difficult position in the future if things change.

I think the government is making a bet that they're simply going to be selling so much bitumen by 2016 that it doesn't matter. Maybe. Maybe not. But I think that goes against the evidence of economists and government reports that suggest that in order to do better both for today and for tomorrow, we need a substantial revisiting of our fiscal framework. To deny that is just denying the future, what would make our province not only better today but better tomorrow.

Those are my comments on the act and why it came about. In my view, it's not as open and transparent as it could be or as the old provision was, so I'm going to pass out a couple of amendments to my colleagues in the House and see where they go.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll pause at this moment as we distribute the amendments. You have the original copies as well?

Mr. Hehr: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Can we have the pages distribute the amendments, please?

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'll start. You guys are waiting with bated breath. Essentially, my amendment, which every member will get in due course, is based on some of the things that are happening with the federal government that have led to, actually, a closer scrutiny of the budgeting process. They had at one time appointed an independent budget officer to look at . . .

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member. I hate to interrupt, but we haven't named this amendment yet. Hon. member, we will call this amendment A3. We'll just wait a minute until enough of our members have a copy, please. I know you're anxious.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Madam Chair, sorry for jumping the gun there.

Essentially, this amendment is a move to try and replicate, not in the exact same way but in some way, what would allow for additional scrutiny on the budgeting process by having our Auditor General be able to investigate any report prepared under the act and to analyze our budgeting process with a little more scrutiny.

I was very impressed, actually, with the work of Kevin Page, the federal budget officer, who would analyze the federal budget process, would ask questions around it, would write reports about it, would challenge the government on their assumptions, would challenge the government on some of the decisions that they made. I think it allowed for a more public view of the inside look at the budgeting process.

Let's face it; the Member for Edmonton-Centre was bang on this afternoon when she rightly informed the House that the opposition in this province is given very little information in our budget documents. There's no detailed breakdown of how many full-time employees are in a department, what infrastructure spending is going to go on a line item detail, where all the spending in projects fits into this massive $40 billion operating budget, now our capital or our debt side of things. Where is this information coming?

So, in my view, having the Auditor General be able to do this – I grant that he may be able to do this now, but having this in the act would encourage him to do such a thing, and it would allow him to do this whether it forms part of Public Accounts or not. I believe the Auditor General would add a certain amount of scrutiny and an eye for detail that would be welcome, and his views would be welcome not only to us in this House but to the general public as well.

I leave that for people to consider, and I'd encourage them, too, if they think this has merit or can fit in with our Fiscal Management Act, that it be followed through on.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. At this point I would move to adjourn debate on Bill 12.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would also move that we rise and report.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, did you want us to rise and report Bill 14 and rise and report progress on Bill 12 as well?

Mr. Denis: That is correct, and move back into second reading on Bill 20.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: At this time I would ask the Member for Calgary-Varsity to rise and give the committee report.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 14. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 12. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Appropriation Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate April 23: Mr. Denis]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, you have 15 minutes left.

Mr. Denis: I don't have further comments, actually. I'll let it go to the next speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Can I ask how much time I have before this thing gets put automatically to a vote?

Mr. Hancock: You've got 15 minutes.

Mr. Mason: Fifteen minutes. Wow.

The Acting Speaker: I understand that we will be taking the vote at 10:15. You have your 15 minutes, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to start by expressing my real concern about the fact that many members of this Assembly have been disenfranchised by government tactics and have been prevented from speaking to this budget bill.

I'm going to share my 15 minutes with my hon. colleague from Calgary-Buffalo, who I know came over especially this afternoon from his office in order to speak to that bill before it was adjourned. I want to talk about what's happened here because we've seen a gradual erosion of the ability of the Assembly to have oversight over taxation and public expenditures, which is one of the foundations of our parliamentary system of government.

The parliamentary system evolved in Britain under demands for the public to have the right to scrutinize and approve government expenditures and taxation. That was a struggle over a number of centuries that has brought us to today, and it's one of the foundations, one of the pillars, of our parliamentary democracy which this government has trampled upon.

There have been two things that have happened, Madam Speaker. First of all, the government, using its majority, has built into the standing orders automatic closure on budget bills. That's in the standing orders, that there's a fixed amount of time, after which the vote on an appropriation bill must automatically be put, and that's the deadline that we're facing in about 15 minutes.

That's not bad enough, a certain number of hours set aside automatically before closure is imposed by the rules. Then the government has gamed that system, the system that they put in place, by adjourning debate, but the clock keeps ticking. They talk about other things and debate other bills, and the clock still keeps ticking. Then they bring the bill back before the House just a few minutes before it's due to be voted upon, thereby disenfranchising not only opposition MLAs who want to speak to the budget bill but many of their own members as well, who should be getting on the record on this budget.

I want to indicate to you, Madam Speaker, that at the first available opportunity, which will be tomorrow, we will be proceeding with a point of privilege against the government and will be arguing that, in fact, they have intruded on, trampled on the rights of members of this House through their rules and their tactics.

I want to talk about this budget. As I indicated earlier, Madam Speaker, the government has missed an opportunity to put the province's finances in order. They needed to do that by making sure that the revenues of the province were stable and capable of supporting the program expenditures that Albertans demand and that it not be dependent on royalty revenue for ongoing program expenditures. About 30 per cent of our program expenditures are now funded by nonrenewable resource revenue, and as the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has said, that's intergenerational theft. That is stealing the resources that belong to all generations of Albertans to use them to pay for our programs today instead of paying for them ourselves.

The government can't seem to get off that roller coaster. I will note that the Emerson report, that was commissioned by former Premier Stelmach in 2011, identified the need to deal with this problem – and it's something that we've been raising for a number of years, and others have as well – the need to get off volatile royalty revenues and to pay for our program expenditures through a fair, equitable, and competitive system of taxation. The government has failed to do that.

The government has now seen a huge plunge in its popularity and its credibility as a result directly of this budget. The reason is that, as we identified well before the budget was actually tabled, this is the broken promises budget. The Premier and the Progressive Conservative Party in the last election made an enormous list of promises to the people of Alberta in order to secure their re-election. Now, the Premier keeps trying to redefine the mandate of the government, and she keeps claiming: we were elected to make tough decisions, to provide the kinds of decisions and so on that Alberta needs, and never mind what we actually said in the election.

Madam Speaker, in order to provide my colleague with some time to speak, I'm not going to go through a comprehensive list of the broken promises in this budget. Suffice it to say that very few of them have been kept, and existing programs have been cut and are under attack in a wide range of areas. At the same time the deficit is mounting much faster than it needs to do. Albertans won't put up with it, and they've clearly signalled that they won't put up with it. They were misled in the election by this Premier and this government in securing their own re-election, and they've been betrayed now that the election is over.

There's no question in my mind that in the area of seniors, in the area of postsecondary education, primary and secondary education, in the area of health care, in the environment, in arts and culture, in almost every area this government has betrayed the people that put them in power and gave them another mandate, and they will pay a price for it, Madam Speaker. They will pay a price.

We'll make sure that Albertans fully understand that there's a real, different, progressive option that's available to them in the next election, that they don't have to be scared by the Wildrose into voting PC, that they can vote for a progressive and moderate political party, which is the Alberta NDP. We will stand up to the Wildrose in a way that these Conservatives are afraid to, Madam Speaker. I look forward to that day. I look forward to the day when we have two options in this province, one conservative vision and one progressive vision, and the whole shambles of progressive conservatism is swept from the stage of history. I look forward to that day.

I am certainly not going to be supporting this budget. This budget is actually the worst of all possible worlds. It has lots of debt, lots of cuts, and it is not a document worthy of the people of Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members who would like to speak under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Do I get to speak?

The Acting Speaker: We're done with 29(2)(a) if you'd like to speak on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: How much time do I have?

The Acting Speaker: You will have 15 minutes.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a privilege to rise, and I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for ceding me some time as I did come in this afternoon to speak to this situation we find ourselves in. I, too, would echo his comments on the way we have set up discussion on the importance of the finances in this province, the importance of budgets. Our ability to comment on them in a fulsome manner has been outright pulled out from us as members of this esteemed House.

What happened today was an example of what's happened for the last five years, where we're discussing the budget and we're going through our final comments and offering our fulsome thought on what has transpired, but our hopes and dreams and aspirations for a better fiscal structure in the future have been severely compromised. That's what we saw transpire this afternoon and why we're back here tonight fighting over time on speaking to a very important bill. That is what has transpired. Needless to say, I hope that is rectified and that it is handled in due course in some form or fashion.

Madam Speaker, I'm a pretty even-keeled guy. I honestly am. But I was pretty riled up this afternoon at some of the speeches coming from the government members' side and, in fact, some of the members' statements that have been coming from the government members' side as of late that have stated: we are fulfilling the mandate that we were elected to do. If they believe that, I consider that an outright lie.

If I remember what transpired at election time, the promises made and promises given, they can essentially come down to about four or five different things. One, I think, was no debt. The other was no service cuts. The other one was no new taxes. There was a whole host and magnitude of other promises, a balanced budget and the like. They also promised three years of predictable, sustainable funding. They also promised, you know, post-secondary funding that would go forward in that fashion.

There was no mention of any of the calamity that we now see. For government members to have the temerity that they do, to get up here and say, "We are following through on what our promises were in the last election," is beyond the pale. Frankly, they should be ashamed because they should know better. They know what they were elected on. They know what they promised. To now try this revisionist history that is occurring in this Chamber is ridiculous. It reminds me of when the hon. Member for Airdrie used to sit beside me over on this end, and he'd say, "There the government goes again saying north is south, east is west, up is down" and the like. That's what it amounts to.

So if you could do me a favour just for my sanity and maybe for my peace of mind, try to remember, when you get up and do your member's statement, what you ran on and were elected on. Remember that. People see through it. I see through it. Maybe you can ship it off to your constituents, and they might believe it for a second or two. Really, you know, look at yourselves when you do it. You know what you said. You know what you ran on. You know what you promised. When you try to spin it this way, it just rings hollow.

I, too, would like to go back to where we are on our fiscal structure. Clearly, this was the opportunity where I was hoping that the government would get it right. For any member who ran under the new Progressive Conservative Party who actually believed that you were progressive: I hope you didn't convince yourself that that just meant you were going to spend the oil wealth faster, okay? Simply put, that would be irresponsible. It would amount to intergenerational theft, which we have done in the last 25 years, that I was hoping was going to end under this new Premier.

To be progressive, I recognize that you have to assume certain things and you have to ask the taxpayer to support certain initiatives that you deem important. I assumed the Premier and her party deemed full-day kindergarten important. I assumed the Premier and her party deemed postsecondary education important. I assumed a whole host of things that, when I saw those election platforms, are not reflected. In fact, to be honest, I was one of the people who, actually, after election day said: "Heck. I'm pretty excited. Maybe we have a Premier here who can change things, who can actually change the structure that was set up under Ralph Klein and move this province into the 21st century."

I think we missed a real opportunity. In fact, I think the government would be more popular today if they had just lock, stock, and barrel gone ahead and changed the tax system to reflect something, you know, in the mode of Saskatchewan or even somewhat half that of Saskatchewan, been in a better position with the public than they are today. Really, if you're going to break a promise, in my view, you might as well break a promise that fixes something, okay?

You had an option, I guess, as to what state you are right now. You could break the promise of no debt, you could break the promise of no new taxes, or you could break the promise of predictable, sustainable funding. You've broken all of those except the one you probably should have broke, the taxes. You should have broken that tax promise and probably left all of the others alone. You could have done that. That would have put Alberta's finances on the road to some sort of reasonableness and rationality and would have given you something to actually take into the election. "We're different than the Wildrose because we're going to have predictable, sustainable funding. We are going to provide for the social needs of this province. We are going to be able to provide full-day kindergarten."

If you just keep the same fiscal structure, if we're just going to keep kicking this problem down the line – you know, I don't care what your bitumen projections hopefully are by 2016. I think some think that that's the best strategy to win the next election. We're never going to get out of the fact that we are not paying for what we use. Eventually the situation we'll find ourselves in – you may get a temporary reprieve from it in 2016, but it's never going to solve the underlying problem as outlined in the Emerson report, that said that our revenue structures need to change. The fact is that virtually every economist over the last 25 years has said that, whether they're from the left or the right side of the spectrum.

Where I feel very comfortable with this is that two former Finance ministers have also said this, Minister Liepert and, of all things, Minister Morton. When Minister Morton can admit that we have a revenue problem, why can't this government? You know, it couldn't have been easy for him to say that. Ask yourselves that. The darling of the fiscal right says that. Now that he's out of government, he says: "My goodness, guys. Let's do something that's right for the province and right for future generations." You have to ask yourself. Are you really telling yourself that these two gentlemen, who have been Finance ministers in this province, who say that our fiscal structure is broken and that we finally have to deal with it – if that's not enough evidence despite the fact of all the other evidence that is out there, I don't know what is.

I don't know why you had that fiscal summit if you're just going to bury your head in the sand and hope to sell more bitumen by 2016 and try and fool the public. "The Tories saved the day. By the way, we put the oil in the ground. Didn't you know it? We put it there, so we're going to spend it all. That's just how it is, okay?" You didn't put it there. Ernest put it there. He prayed really hard, and he got it there. Actually, it might have been Bible Bill, so you guys can take credit for it.

That to me is not a plan, okay? It may seem like a winning election strategy – I don't even know if it's that – but it doesn't solve anything. We've got a real problem here. Any objective measure of this outside of the political lens says that we have this problem, and I would hope that next year we can see some action on this front to really fix the problem that is evident and to go ahead from there.

I will not be supporting the budget, Madam Speaker, for that laundry list of explanations, primarily because I don't believe that the government has fulfilled one iota of their promises given on election day, and this is reflected in their budget. I would hope that members of this House honestly assess that and, if they are a Progressive, ask themselves if that was that just to simply spend the oil wealth faster. If it was, you didn't understand why you got into this business or what needed to be done.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I will call the next speaker for the next few minutes, but I would remind all members that we are not in committee. We expect everybody to have proper decorum, and that means not having your feet up on another person's chair.

Did anyone want to speak on 29(2)(a)? Going once, twice. Okay.

Moving on to the next speaker, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and talk about Bill 20 tonight. I've sat here, and I've listened to so many discussions on this budget, where each individual thinks we should go and where each individual doesn't think we should go. It's interesting that while we may not agree with my friends to the left on the principles of how money should be spent, we agree on one certain thing, and that was that clearly today democracy as a whole was thwarted by the PCs on the other side. It seems unfair to not allow an opportunity for the hon. member from the Liberals to speak to the budget when he was here and prepared, to hold it off till tonight for no other reason than just to be difficult.

But to go forward to the budget, on July 12, 2004, Alberta declared itself debt free.

Alberta is now debt-free, due in part to the high price of oil and gas.

"Today I'm very, very proud to announce that Alberta has slain its debt," Premier Ralph Klein said on Monday in Calgary.

"Never again will this government or the people of this province have to set aside another tax dollar on debt."

That's what Premier Ralph Klein said, and that is the PC Party, the Conservative Party that Ralph Klein envisioned and that Albertans envisioned.

Going forward, Premier Klein went even further. Not only did he slay the debt and make a better Alberta for all of us, but he went even further to leave this government with a $17 billion sustainability fund, the same fund that they have absolutely drained to almost nothing.

In 2012 we had the highest resource revenues and the highest corporate and personal income tax revenues in all of Alberta's history, and we had the remaining parts of the Alberta sustainability fund. With all of its great economy, with all of its great attributes, a province that everybody wants to come to, when you have the previous Premier, Mr. Klein, set you up for success, how is it possible that in 2013 we could possibly be heading into $5 billion worth of debt? You cannot tell me that last year, during the campaign, at any one point anybody talked about the need to go into debt. They talked about what a great economy we're in, what a great province we're in, how they'll balance the budget, how they will personally guarantee they're going to balance the provincial budget. They went on and on and on with all the promises that they were going to be able to do.

Let's take a look at some of those promises that weren't able to be kept in this budget. Let's talk about seniors' cuts. Let's talk about reduced home care. Let's talk about closures of long-term care facilities such as Carmangay, Strathmore, Michener Centre.

Let's talk about the 50 seniors in Michener Centre that are now going to go to continuing care facilities that don't deal with people with developmental disabilities. Many of my colleagues in this room were at the breakfast this morning at 7 o'clock with the Canadian Mental Health Association. They talked about the unique needs those people with mental health have. Where do those seniors fit into our current continuing care centres? We hear the other side talk about how we're moving away from institutionalizing our Michener Centre clients, yet moving these same clients into continuing care centres: I hate to say it, but those are institutions as well. The reality of it is that the government has failed on that.

Never once during the campaign did they talk about 8 per cent MLA pay raises. Never once during the campaign did they talk about the federal building. Never once during the campaign did they talk about how they were going to go over budget on the federal building for new MLA offices by over $75 million, never once during the campaign and never once in this budget. They were questioned thousands of times during this budget with regard to AHS bonuses, and they waited until the very last minute to be transparent and open with Albertans and tell Albertans that they're going to go ahead and pay out those bonuses on March 31. They waited till the absolute last minute.

They tell everybody they're going to do all these things: changing, going first. Let's just talk about even the elder abuse strategy, still not implemented. The 44 cents on cellphone calls: that's a tax. Let's talk about the reductions in seniors' benefits. Let's talk about the property tax deferral program. For all of these things they waited to the last minute.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(3) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 12 Fiscal Management Act (continued)

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have amendment A3 on the floor, moved by Calgary-Buffalo.

The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to speak to amendment A3, that the hon. member has brought forward to us, that essentially gives the Auditor General carte blanche on pretty much everything and anything he would like to report on under the act. Frankly, the Auditor General has a great deal of power within the act and within his own act to do what he needs to do, and this would be superfluous to what he's got in the act that grants him his powers today.

I would not be in support of this motion because I have not had any opportunity to review what kind of impact that may have on a whole raft of other issues as it relates to what is an officer of this Legislature, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Well, I'd like to ask the Finance minister what he's afraid of. Why wouldn't he let the Auditor General, an officer of this Legislative Assembly, look closely at all aspects of the government's reports that are prepared under this act, whether or not it forms a part of the public accounts?

I think this is an excellent amendment. I think the Auditor General should be allowed to do that. But, then again, I forget myself, you know, Madam Chairman. They don't want the Legislature to have full scrutiny over their budget. They don't want the Legislature to have full ability to debate all of their accounts. Why would they want an expert like the Auditor General looking at their accounts and making public reports? That could be terribly embarrassing for this government.

I guess I'm not surprised that they're not supporting this amendment, Madam Chair, but I am nevertheless disappointed.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Well, I'm certainly disappointed that the hon. member is disappointed. Madam Chair, this government is not afraid to have the Auditor General look at whatever the Auditor General would like to look at under the purviews of the powers granted to him by this Legislature in the act that he has for his particular office. Putting this kind of clause in all of the other pieces of legislation is not required, it's not needed, and frankly

I'm not sure why it would even be brought into this act. Therefore, I'm not supporting it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A3?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll go back to debating Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act.

Mr. Hehr: One more amendment, Madam Chair, and it's going to be very, very quick.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while we distribute the amendment. This will be known as amendment A4.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'll read the amendment. It renumbers section 9 as section 9(1) and adds the following subsection to it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, please pause for a moment so that they can have the amendment in front of them as you read it.

Hon. member, you may continue.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Essentially, this amendment is asking that the fiscal plan contain

- (a) a consolidated statement of revenues and expenses for each fiscal year;
- (b) the actual total surplus or deficit for each fiscal year; and
- (c) the actual total debt, if any.

I'm looking for these to be somehow incorporated into our budget documents to allow us to not have the debacle we had on budget day of last year, where no one knows what the total deficit total or the total debt total is. I believe it would be in the spirit of openness and transparency in allowing the opposition, media, and the average Joe and Jane Albertan alike to have a clearer picture of our financial picture.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Madam Chair, when the hon. member looks at the plan that was presented based on the Fiscal Management Act this year, he will note that there are consolidated statements of revenues and expenses at each year, which are required under the public-sector accounting principles, which we follow. We have not changed that. We will continue to have the consolidated financials within the business plans and the operating plan that we present. That's part of the operating plan. The Auditor General would be terribly upset with us if we didn't do that.

As well, the actual total surplus as defined in the act is actually stated in the operating and expense plan, and the actual total debt, hon. member, is part of the capital plan. It's in the document, and you can readily see that as it changes in the capital repayment. What you're asking for is already in the act. Therefore, I cannot accept the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hehr: Fair enough with that explanation. I agree to disagree at this point in the evening, and we'll move on.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll go back to debating Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. That's me. I have an amendment, and I'll distribute that now.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll pause for a few moments as you distribute the amendment. Please send the originals up to the table. We'll call this amendment A5.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Well, this is a simple amendment. It addresses an issue I brought up earlier. It would change section 11 by adding after subsection (2).

Section 11 says, "Reports on progress." This refers to what I was talking about earlier with the quarterly updates.

11(1) The responsible Minister must make the following public as follows:

- (a) the actual results of the fiscal plan for the first 3 months of the fiscal year, on or before August 31 in that year,
- (b) the actual results of the fiscal plan for the first 6 months of the fiscal year, on or before November 30 in that year, and
- (c) the actual results of the fiscal plan for the first 9 months of the fiscal year, on or before February 28 in that year.

Then:

- (2) The responsible Minister may determine the content and form of a report made under this section.

Well, the amendment would address this vagueness, this power given to the minister. It says:

- (2.1) Notwithstanding subsection (2), each report made under this section must include a statement of the accuracy of the operational, savings, and capital plans in light of any revised projections for the entire fiscal year.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

This goes to the idea that – Mr. Chair. Holy smokes. Poof. All of a sudden a new chair. It's good to see you.

Subsection (2.1) is designed to make sure that when the government gives their quarterly updates, they give a projection of what they expect the final surplus, deficit, balance sheet, et cetera, all that stuff will look like at the end of the year. What they've been doing over the last couple of quarters, as I alluded to earlier, is changing a practice where before they would make sure to give a projection. So in the first-quarter update they would say: look, given what we know about oil prices and expenses and all that sort of thing and revenues, et cetera, this is what we expect the deficit, surplus, sustainability fund, et cetera, et cetera, will look like at the end of the year. They did it again in the second quarter, third quarter. Recently they haven't been doing that. They have just been stating what the actual revenues and expenses were for that first three months and not making the projection thereafter of what the deficit or debt or whatever will be.

This is a way of clarifying it. I think it's a good amendment, and it will create transparency. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation, which is a very respected group when it comes to standing up for taxpayers and transparency and so forth with government finances, has suggested this type of thing be added to Bill 12. I think it's a very good idea, and I hope the minister will see fit to accept this amendment.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I read with interest the amendment that says that it must include a statement of the accuracy of revised projections. Basically, that's what it's asking. It wants us to say that our projections that we're going to make are going to come out true somehow or to guarantee that they're going to be true. No one can do that, Mr. Chair.

What section 11 talks about is that the minister responsible will have to provide Albertans with the actual results of the fiscal plan for each of the first three months, then the first six months, then the first nine months. The minister is also required, given the business plans that we've done, to talk in great detail, as we have, about what the changes are in the economic situation going forward. What are the changes that are going to be happening?

Contrary to what the hon. member has stated, we do provide a projection of what the range could be given what we know in the economic conditions that are out there. But it's more important, frankly, Madam Chairman and fellow colleagues in the House, that we are telling Albertans how well we're doing in the budget that we're debating today.

Three months from now Albertans are going to want to know how well we did versus what we said we were going to do. You know, did we spend what we said that we were going to spend? Were we too much? Were we too little? I think it's important that we recognize that doing a projection for a projection's sake only gives, you know, some like the Canadian Taxpayers Federation an opportunity to try to do the math, and obviously then they can write up the story.

I want to quote from somebody who I think is quite knowledgeable in these things. That would be John Ferguson. Now, John Ferguson is a very respected businessman in the city of Edmonton. He is a chartered accountant. He has been recognized by a number of different associations for his knowledge and business acumen. He also just happens to be the chair of Suncor Energy. This is what he had to say the day of the budget.

I think it's very positive that they're separating the operating and the capital budgets. They're two different things... It creates more accountability, and I think overall it will be the right thing to do. It's unfortunate that it's happening in this year, when there's so much going on, but when we get the comparative figures next year, it'll be terrific.

Now, that's someone who understands that management makes decisions by good information and by seeing where we're going to what our actual results are.

That's why, Madam Chair, we are moving to a process that, quite frankly, will be able to thwart things like March madness, which I know many of us in this House have talked about in our constituencies. You know, you can't tell when March madness is going to happen until after the year end. Well, by the third quarter of this year we're going to be able to tell where we're at in our actual expenditures to our budget that we said we would be at. We're going to be able to manage the expenses of government even better than we did before.

Quite frankly, that is the accuracy the hon. member is looking for in this amendment, but he doesn't need to put this amendment in. To say that we're going to have a statement of the accuracy of the revised projections just seems a little bit at odds to me. I think it is much better to say that the minister responsible will make public the actual results of the fiscal plan for the period that they're reporting on. I think, Madam Chair, this is actually not that much different than what was in the previous act, so, yes, I am going to have to say that I will not support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any others who wish to speak on amendment A5?

Seeing none, we'll move to the vote.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move back to debating Bill 12, Fiscal Management Act.

Mr. Anderson: I have another amendment I'd like to distribute.

The Deputy Chair: We have another amendment. We'll call this amendment A6. We'll pause for a moment until everybody gets a copy.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. This is an amendment. One thing I am happy about in this act is a clause that I've been advocating for since I started five years ago, with the Progressive Conservative caucus for a couple of years. I've been advocating for this for a long time, so I am happy to see it in here. I'm just such an impatient person. I just want to see it moved up, so that's what this is. This refers to section 4. Currently it says:

4(1) In this section, "net income" means the net income from operations as reported in the "Statement of Operations and Accumulated Surplus" contained in the Heritage Fund's financial statements.

(2) For the 2015-16 fiscal year, the greater of the following must be retained in the Heritage Fund:

- (a) 30% of the net income of the Heritage Fund;
- (b) the amount determined under section 11(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act.

(3) For the 2016-17 fiscal year, the greater of the following must be retained in the Heritage Fund:

- (a) 50% of the net income of the Heritage Fund;
- (b) the amount determined under section 11(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act.

(4) For the 2017-18 fiscal year and subsequent years, 100% of the net income of the Heritage Fund must be retained in the Heritage Fund.

The reason why this is important, Madam Chair, and why I've been advocating for it is that at some point, of course, as we've talked about many times in this Legislature, the oil and gas revenues that we have as a province will start to decline, probably not because we've run out of oil. That's probably not going to be the reason why. The reason will be for the same reason that many other natural resources which are out there where there's abundant supply – it's gone down in price for things like coal, for example, is not because we ran out of coal. It's because there were alternative energies that were out there for heating homes like natural gas and so forth. Demand has gone down for those products, so it's a lower price.

Well, it's the same issue with oil and gas. I think it's clear that demand over time will subside. It'll certainly go down. The demand already has plateaued and is going down. That is combined with a huge amount of supply because new technologies developed in Alberta, ironically, in a lot of cases, are being used to develop huge plays in the United States, in Russia, in other places around the world, so the supply is up. In a lot of cases like the U.S. the supply is also close to the customers, closer than we are to the customers we want to get to. Because of that, I think you're going to see oil and gas prices decrease over time.

We still have some time to make some good money on oil and gas, but I think it's a handful of decades now, not forever – that's for sure – and certainly not for another five, six, seven decades. It's probably going to be a much shorter timeframe than that. That's why it's important that we put away enough money in the heritage fund so that we replace our reliance on oil and natural gas revenues, and part of that means not raiding the heritage fund.

Many people don't know this, but the heritage fund today is worth less than it was in 1976, when it was first established by Premier Lougheed, if you adjust it for inflation. People say: well, how is that possible? Well, this is how it's possible. What happened was that from about 1986 on – I think it was 1986 – every year the government would take the revenues made on the heritage fund, the earnings from the heritage fund from that year, and they would stick it into general revenues, and they would spend it instead of saving it. They kept doing that and doing that over and over and over again. There were a few years they inflation-proofed it but just a few. For the most part they just took all of the interest from the fund, put it in the general revenues, and spent it.

The problem with that is that what would happen over time is that when the heritage fund would have a good year and, say, gain $2 billion in value or whatever, they would take that full $2 billion out, and they would spend it. Therefore, the best-case scenario would be that they would inflation-proof it, and it would be worth no more than it was when you started. At worst, they didn't inflation-proof it, and because of inflation it would actually be worth less than when they started. That was one way it would decrease.

In years when the heritage fund decreased in value, when it, say, lost a billion dollars or so like in the 2008 world stock market problem, collapse, the money would go out, or the value would be lost, you could say, and they wouldn't replace that value after the fact. What would happen, of course, is that that would decrease over time the value of the heritage fund. That's why it's worth less today than in 1976 when adjusted for inflation. It's an absolutely horrendous record of wealth management.

If we had just left the interest in the fund from 1986 on, not invested another penny of oil and gas revenue in the fund from 1986 on, just left the interest in there, assuming a rate of return at 7 per cent, which could be a little lower or could be a little higher – who knows, but let's say 7 per cent – the fund today would be worth well over $150 billion in value, which would be enough, if the earnings off that, let's say, were at 6 or 7 per cent. That would replace the annual amount we get from oil and gas today or be very close to it anyway. That's where we would have been if we'd just used a little foresight, starting in 1986, and saved.

Now, we can't blame it on Premier Ralph Klein. What happened was that from 1986 to . . .

Mr. Mason: We can't blame it on Ralph Klein?

Mr. Anderson: No, you can't. I'll tell you why you can't blame it on Ralph.

From 1986 to 1993 Premier Don Getty and his government went into a massive amount of debt. Not only did they not save, but they also went in the opposite direction. They debt financed, and they took out roughly $23 billion in debt.

When Ralph came into office as Premier in 1993, his first priority, and rightfully so, was to get rid of the debt. So instead of leaving the money in the heritage fund, what he did is that it went into general revenues, and then it was used along with other revenues to pay off the debt. And he did so. He paid off the debt, and he built up a $17 billion sustainability fund/capital fund.

Was that too much? Maybe, maybe not. Who knows? But the point is that he took $40 billion in cash because of his balanced budgets, and he was able to pay down the debt in the amount of roughly $40 billion. So I don't blame Ralph in any way, shape, or form for not investing at that time. It was the mistakes of his predecessor that changed his focus to debt repayment instead of savings.

However, if from 1986 we had just balanced that budget and just left that interest alone, that's where we would be today, $150 billion or more in savings. It's a massive squandering of wealth that occurred primarily during the Getty administration, the Stelmach administration, and now the Redford administration. It is truly a shameful record.

I am grateful that there seems to be an admission that there needs to be a change in this regard, so that's why section 4(4) says, "For the 2017-18 fiscal year and subsequent fiscal years, 100% of the net income of the Heritage Fund must be retained in the Heritage Fund." That's fantastic. Now, the only problem with that, of course, is that there is a kind of caveat. The caveat is that in that same year or the year before that, 2016, they're planning on borrowing $4 billion to pay for capital, bringing our debt up to $17 billion. If you don't include pension liabilities and just debt for capital, essentially P3s, bonds, et cetera, it'll be $17 billion. If they're still borrowing at that rate, $4 billion a year or $3 billion or whatever, you know, that's great that they're going to allow the heritage fund to grow, but at the same time our debt is going to be going up, and that's not good. I'm glad for section 4(4), but I wish that we wouldn't be borrowing at the same time, essentially borrowing to save.

What this amendment does is that it strikes out subsections (2) and (3), and it gets right down to business. Starting in 2014-15, which is the year that we say that we would balance the budget if the Wildrose government was elected, which is not this year but next year, 100 per cent of heritage fund earnings would be retained in the fund.

In fact, what a Wildrose government would do is that we would continue to not raid the heritage fund interest, let it build up every year as well as hopefully some additional investments into the heritage fund from surplus funds from year to year, so that within 20 years or thereabouts, maybe 25 years, the heritage fund would be at a level, $150 billion to $200 billion, where it would literally replace our reliance on oil and natural gas revenues from year to year, which would be an amazing legacy to leave. So our kids could keep the same tax advantages that they have today. It will be just as easy to start a business in a low-tax environment as it is today. They won't have to worry about their taxes going up to 15 or 17 or 20 per cent or whatever to pay for the same social programs and infrastructure that they have today. They won't have to do that because it'll be like they still have oil and gas revenues coming in every year. But in this case it's not a nonrenewable resource; it's a renewable fund that every year is compounding with interest and paying out dividends to allow us to keep our Alberta advantage that Ralph established and that I think we still have although it is deteriorating every day that we continue on in the direction we're going right now.

That's the purpose of this amendment, to move up this wonderful idea of leaving the interest in the fund, something that should have been done a long time ago. I don't want to wait – and

I don't think Albertans want to wait – till 2017-18 for that to happen. We want to see it happen now, well, starting in 2014-15. We want to balance the budget, not be in debt, start saving, do what our children need us to do, and start today.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance and Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I am pleased that the hon. member is recognizing that the savings initiative of keeping 100 per cent of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund earnings in the heritage savings trust fund is something that he can support. I don't think it'll change his support for the bill, but, you know, one can only hope.

I would also say that, hon. member, we did look at moving it up. In fact, we thought: what would happen if we did that? Then we thought: what would happen if the differential stayed where it was? What would happen if we didn't get access? What would happen if – if you start to think about those what-ifs, which are pretty close politically to us right now, and you put it in legislation that you had to start next year, it ties your hands to deal with some of the things you might have to deal with if those situations arose.

That's why in the act we did the stepped approach. We said: "We're going to start in 2015-16. We're going to move to 30 per cent, 50 per cent, 100 per cent." You'll note in the business plan – and I'm sure you did – that we actually do start earlier because we think we'll be able to, but we're not going to put it in legislation and tie the government's hands to do that. We're going to say: "We're going to get there. It's in legislation. We're going to get there, but we're not going to tie our hands." In fact, you know, even under your old definition in terms of balancing, we're looking at a balanced budget in 2015 with a surplus on the operating side of close to $1.4 billion. If we hit those numbers . . .

Mr. Anderson: But you're borrowing.

Mr. Horner: Of course we are. That's the right thing to do financially because your net assets are going up.

I think, hon. member, it should be put on the record that a lot of the dollars that you talk about have been spent. The $17 billion, the interest earned from heritage savings trust fund investments in past years: a lot of that is in the $44 billion worth of net financial assets that this province has, that Albertans enjoy. We are the only jurisdiction in Canada and probably North America that has actually taken the assets out of the ground and built a balance sheet that is second to none in North America. Frankly, that's not an intergenerational theft. That's setting the framework for the next generation's completely solid financial footing. That's something that we can be proud of, hon. member, not something you should disparage as a theft from the next generation. As a matter of fact, we've set the next generation on a very, very strong foundation.

I can't accept this for the reasons that I've outlined in the sense that it would be irresponsible of us to put this in legislation given what we know politically. I know you know that, too. So I'll take my seat and say that we should vote this amendment down, too.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I want to just maybe ask a question of the mover of this amendment, seeing as he seems not as distracted as he was before. I do want to make a couple of points. First of all, I agree with the principle of the amendment, which is to move towards retention of the interest earned in the heritage fund and allow it to compound.

I want to correct, you know, a little bit of a blind spot in his history relative to the role of former Premier Klein and the interest in the heritage fund. It's true he was left with a large deficit, and it's true he had a mandate to eliminate that deficit. He was focused upon it. But when he got close to that goal, instead of retaining the interest in the fund again, he chose to give tax cuts to corporations and to impose a flat tax, which cost billions in revenue and left him then with no choice but to continue reaching into the heritage fund and taking money out. It wasn't just for deficit fighting; it was also for helping his rich friends that that occurred.

My question is this. You talk about retaining 100 per cent of the interest within the fund, but in the next moment you're talking about building up the fund and paying out dividends from the fund.

Mr. Anderson: No. I meant to general revenue, not to people.

Mr. Mason: I know you don't mean to people.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Mason: But to use interest, then, to offset our appallingly low royalties and to put that into the general revenues of the province: at what point do we transition from retaining all of the interest in the fund to using the interest to pay for government programs? That's my question.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Well, that's a good question. Obviously, that's not in the amendment, but our policy that we ran on during the election, of course, was the Balanced Budget and Savings Act, and we thought it was a very popular policy with folks. The point where we would start taking money out of the heritage fund, taking the interest out and start putting it into general revenues to be used for regular program spending and so forth, would be the point when the annual earnings from the fund replaced entirely our reliance on oil and natural gas. In other words, if a five-year rolling average for oil and natural gas was, say, $7 billion a year, if the fund was able to produce $7 billion a year, then at that point we could use that money because we would no longer be dependent upon it. So that's it.

Now, I do want to just make one little note here about Ralph Klein. You know, you wave a red flag in front of a bull when you do that.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Madam Chair.

Obviously, Premier Klein did pay off the debt, as you said, and the deficit and so forth. But then the comment was that – I forget; I think it was in roughly 2000 or 2001, one of those years – the PC government, the Ralph Klein government, brought in the flat tax and lowered corporate taxes as well.

I do not for a minute think that was because Premier Klein was trying to enrich his friends, his business friends or what have you. That is not why those tax cuts were brought in. Those tax cuts were brought in to establish what we called back then the Alberta advantage. It was to make sure that businesses would come from all over the world to invest in Alberta and so that people would come from all over the world to live in Alberta. That was the Alberta advantage that has attracted, frankly, millions of people to our province. They know that they can come here and be in a low-tax environment and be successful, and it's a fantastic place to raise their family.

That's why we on this side of the House are working so hard to remind our cousins across the way, as we like to say, our some days friendly, some days estranged cousins – it depends on the day or the issue – why that legacy is so important and why we need to protect it by making sure we keep balanced budgets, don't go into debt, and keep taxes low. That Alberta advantage is something that we need to keep going forward. Ralph Klein, when he did that, did not do it to enrich his friends; he did it for the benefit of this province, and it worked, Madam Chair.

Mr. Mason: Enriching his friends was just a side benefit, then, Madam Chair.

Actually, I just want to point out that under the current flat tax on personal income in Alberta, people in middle income ranges pay higher taxes than they do in a number of other provinces. It benefits the wealthy far more than the middle income. They raised the personal exemption – I grant you that – but for the middle class it's not as good a deal as you're suggesting.

I have a couple more questions. First of all, you talk about the tipping point where you start reaching in and taking the interest income at the point where it starts to offset royalties. That raises a little alarm bell in my head. Does that mean you want it to replace royalty revenue and you'll cancel royalties when that happens? Is that what you're saying? I think you should clarify that on the record, hon. member.

Secondly, it doesn't say anything about that particular trigger in the amendment at all. I would assume that if, God forbid, there was a Wildrose government and you reached that point, since it's not in the act or not a part of this amendment, you'd have to repeal your own act, wouldn't you? You'd have to change that legislation in order for you to dig it out.

If you could sort of talk about your future vision of offsetting royalties and what you mean by that, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Anderson: I know this is captivating the audience here, but I will be very, very brief and just say that, yeah, we would have to amend it, for sure. No doubt about that. But if oil royalties were still coming in, I don't think it would ever be the intent of a Wildrose government to cancel oil royalties. That would be kind of silly, so we wouldn't do that. What we could do is all kinds of really cool stuff. For example, we could build up scholarship funds. We could build up endowment funds with that extra cash, sustainable endowment funds. We could build more infrastructure. We could do that. We could build a little extra infrastructure here and there with those extra funds. That would be good.

Another thing we could do is – oh, sorry; through the chair. That's right.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: I'm deaf in my right ear. I am, so sometimes I don't hear well.

We could do all of those things. And you know what we could do? Through the chair, hon. member, I know you'll support this. If we got that heritage fund up to $200 billion, $250 billion, say in 20 years, we could do the unthinkable. We could actually eliminate – eliminate – income taxes. Could you imagine that? Income taxes. Have people from all over the world coming to Alberta because . . .

Mr. Mason: For a free ride.

Mr. Anderson: For a free ride? To set up doctors coming in, all kinds of health professionals coming in . . .

Mr. Mason: That's not my vision.

Mr. Anderson: I know that must be your vision. I know that's what you meant.

Anyway, we could responsibly lower taxes to even lower levels at that point if we had a fund that could replace that revenue. Granted, that's probably 20, 30 years away, but the sky's the limit. That's what's so exciting about a large heritage fund. We could do so many things.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A6?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move back to Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. I've been inspired by all these amendments. No, I don't have one, but I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 12 and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to give the committee report.

11:00

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on Bill 12. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 14 RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move third and final reading.

The Acting Speaker: Is there anyone else who would like to speak on Bill 14?

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:02 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 24, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Let us be thankful for the voice we have been given, let us be thoughtful in how we employ that voice, and let us remember there are those who have no voice at all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have many, many introductions today, so once again, in the absence of any specified time limit for introductions, I will ask you all to please be as brief as you can in order to allow other members the courtesy of having enough time to do their introduction. House leaders, I will again ask all of you to review this matter of introductions. We have had introductions that have gone from as low as 20 seconds in length to as high as over a minute in length, and we need a little tightening up on that, with due respect. Thank you, hon. members.

Let us start with school groups. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of the hardest working, smartest, brightest students in the country, two classes of students from Aldergrove elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. Accompanying the first class of students today is their teacher, Elana McConaghie, and parent volunteers Kendra Nickerson and Julie Haskins. Accompanying the second class of students is their teacher, Doug Johnson; TA Anna Pietucha; and parent volunteer Iris Bruening.

Now, Mr. Johnson's class is studying FNMI traditions, specifically the Iroquois Confederacy and how it relates to democratic government. We may be the leaders of today, but these are the leaders of tomorrow. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you for your brevity, hon. member.
The Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Deputy Premier it's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you a group of 49 visiting students and their leaders from Caernarvon elementary school here in Edmonton. Like I said, there are 49 in this group, including group leaders Lisa Shemko and Susanne Venaas and parent helpers Kaye Ly, Jenny Chan, and Shelly Quon. They are seated in the members' gallery, I believe, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you as well, hon. minister.
Let's go to Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, please.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you Ben Kemball, who is a work experience student in my constituency office of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Ben is heading to university in September but, unfortunately, was just recently affected by the budget cuts. Ben works very hard in my constituency office, and he's learning a lot. He's here today to see how the Legislature works.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, for your brevity.

Any other school groups? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce 27 students and teachers from Calder elementary school. They are here today to observe the proceedings in question period, and I wish that they could have the warm reception from everyone here in the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, as well.

Let's move on now. Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the community sponsors of the School at the Legislature program. This program gives grade 6 teachers from all across our province an opportunity to relocate their classroom to the Legislature for a week. Seated in your gallery are Mr. Tim Downey, president, Priority Printing Limited; from CTV Mr. Lloyd Lewis, VP and general manager; Mr. Eric Rice, manager, production and interactive, CTV Two; from the Rotary Club of Edmonton Mr. Jack Clements; and finally, Mr. Ron LaFranchise, horticulturist and volunteer to our program.

I'd also like to formally recognize the support of CKUA Radio Network: Mr. Ken Regan, general manager; Ms Patti Pon, chair of CKUA Radio Foundation; and Ms Katrina Regan-Ingram, director of marketing and sales, who, regrettably, could not join us today. We wish to show our appreciation for this significant and ongoing sponsorship of the program. Our guests are seated in your gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Sherwood Park, your first of two introductions.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Gordon Weighell and his daughter Lindsay. Gordon and Lindsay were originally scheduled to attend session back in November, but the very first heavy snowfall of last year derailed those plans. I am extremely glad they have still made the effort and found the time to be here today. I would like them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Your second introduction.

Ms Olesen: It is again my pleasure to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of my constituents who are in attendance today. Todd Banks is the executive director of the Chamber of Commerce, and Chris Dugan is my favourite bill collector at Case Receivable Management in Sherwood Park. They are great volunteers in our community and good friends of mine. Would they please rise, and could we all please welcome them with the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and Leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two oppositions to – I have more than two oppositions, but I have two introductions. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests from the Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater Alberta NDP Constituency Association. They're here to present a petition on an issue that has severely affected many Albertans, particularly those on low and fixed incomes, the price of electricity in our province. The petition asks the government to recognize electricity as an essential service and reregulate the industry. I would now like my guests to rise as I call their names and to receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly: Mandy Melnyk, Chandra Clarke, Jean Brehaut, Ron Monroe, Margaret Monroe, and Joyce Ollikka. Please join me in giving them a warm welcome.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, through you and to you is a constituent of mine, Rachel King. Rachel is in the process of completing a master's degree in counselling psychology at the University of Alberta and will be starting her PhD in the fall. The province's recent budget has made her concerned for the future of postsecondary education in this province. Rachel is also the sister of our director of research and communications. I would ask Rachel to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Patty McLeod. Patty is a vice-president of corporate responsibility for her employer. She and her husband, Dan, have two lively daughters, and Patty shares her energy and expertise on the boards of the YWCA of Calgary, the Calgary Chamber of Commerce, and the Calgary Economic Development Authority. Most importantly, Patty and her family are residents of Calgary-Glenmore. I ask Patty to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Mr. Al Johnson. Al is originally from Montreal and as a chartered accountant accepted a six-month assignment to Calgary over 30 years ago. Al is a management consultant working in the nonprofit sector. I suspect, though, Al's biggest challenge in life has been as my husband. Thank you, Al, for bringing out the best in me. I'd ask Al to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two constituents of mine from Hinton, Shirley and Gino Caputo, who help make this the great province it is today. Shirley has served as trustee in the Grande Yellowhead public school division for the last 12 years, six of those as the vice-chair. In addition to her work with the school division, Shirley is chair of the Hinton Adult Learning Society, and she has volunteered with several organizations, which is important to recognize as it is National Volunteer Week.

Her husband, Gino, is a remarkable individual. Gino is a cancer survivor, being diagnosed with cancer three times. He was able to do his chemotherapy treatments in Hinton at the local hospital. In 1998 he was featured in the Facing Cancer magazine, encouraging expansion of local community centre cancer clinics. Gino is a strong advocate and fundraiser for the Hinton community cancer clinic, and it's one of the facilities that received government funding for upgrades recently. Gino's personal philosophy is to live life, love, enjoy everything, exercise, and not stress, words that we all need to follow. Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to say that they're here in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the Minister of Environment and SRD.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 10 constituents of mine from Edmonton-Ellerslie: Telly Balanag, the president of the Filipino Womens' Association in Alberta; Fely Taylor, recently crowned as Miss Spring 2013 by the Filipino Womens' Association – and I had the honour of attending the event out in the snow two weeks ago – Beth Aperocho, the first president of the association; Flor Salanguit, the Filipino Retirees' Association's Queen of 2012; Arcy Arabe, the board director; and Rebecca Bengco, August Salanguit, Maria Aromin, all members of the retirees association. In addition to all of those people, we have Elena Monar from my constituency, who serves on my PC association. At this time all my guests have risen. Please accept our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two outstanding constituents from my community and my constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon. Donna and Laurie Tkachuk are here joining us today for the first time in the gallery. Laurie has been a pharmacist in our community for a number of years, and together they have run a very successful retail business in pharmacy as well. In our community of Drayton Valley when we want something done, this is the couple we go to. Donna and Laurie are such outstanding volunteers and businesspeople, and they give so much back to our community and this province. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests from the Coalition for Action on Post-Secondary Education, or CAPSE. CAPSE deplores this government's dramatic budget cuts for postsecondary education. They'd like to see the government stop demanding innovation from everyone except itself and instead demonstrate innovation to create new ways of generating revenue to fund essential services like postsecondary education. I would now ask my guests to rise as I call their names: William Anselmi, Micah Cooper, Dougal MacDonald, Kelly MacFarlane, Amina Mohamed, Carolyn Sale, Brianna Wells, and Janice Williamson. I would ask everybody to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the first of two introductions.

Dr. Swann: That's correct. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to introduce to you two Albertans that are fairly familiar to the Legislature. Over the last 10 years Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop have attended the Legislature. Eric is a member of the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers, the largest producer-funded farm organization in Alberta, which, by the way, unanimously called for mandatory WCB and child labour standards. Eric is also the president of the Farmworkers Union of Alberta, advocating for extending labour legislation to agriculture to protect child labourers. With him is Darlene Dunlop of the Farmworkers Union, to remind this government that just as women are persons, so too are farm workers, deserving of the same rights as other workers in Alberta. I'll ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

My second introduction is Mr. Peter Helfrich, a Calgary paramedic for 20 years and candidate in the Banff-Cochrane area in 2012, as passionate as I am about better government in Alberta. Please rise and receive the warm welcome.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly – that's a tongue twister – my guests from United Church Women. Donna Krucik, Louise Rogers, and Margery Wright are here to present a petition demanding that this PC government take real action on ending child poverty in Alberta. Many promises have been made, yet little to no funding has been allocated to tackle this serious issue. There are still over 90,000 children living in poverty in Alberta, a truly shameful statistic in a province as wealthy as ours. I'd now like to ask Donna, Louise, and Margery to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you three constituents from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, leaders in our community. Elizabeth Sebest is a retired educator and also an avid gardener. George Sebest, her husband, is also a retired educator, and both are involved in the Pysanka Festival. Also from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville today is Marcel Van Hecke. He lives near the wonderful community of Fort Saskatchewan. He's a farmer, and he's a developer, but he does actually live in Strathcona county. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm greeting from this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Insulin Pump Therapy

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another example of why Albertans can't trust this government and another broken promise that affects vulnerable Albertans. Yet the Premier and her ministers ignore those promises, and they claim they're keeping their commitments. Just yesterday the Premier gave us a list, and she included insulin pumps as a promise kept. Nope. Promise broken.

Here's what one Albertan told me: "The election promise was for people with type 1 diabetes who would benefit from an insulin pump. They would have their costs covered. My vote was swayed accordingly as my daughter has type 1 diabetes. The only reason I voted Conservative was because of this promise."

Another Albertan told me of the ordeal that type 1 diabetics face each and every day. She said that a pump would alleviate those with type 1 diabetes from having to poke their fingers repeatedly every day up to 15 times or more. Then, to top it off, they can be injecting themselves as many as 10 times a day. I have received over 30 e-mails from Albertans just like these two, and they're consistently saying that they need these pumps, they were promised these pumps, and they're not here.

Mr. Speaker, the original promise was for $18 million this year and $65 million over five years. This would have covered 1,600 Albertans this year and 6,200 Albertans in all. But after the election everything changed. Funding dropped to only $5 million this year, leaving only 300 Albertans eligible for this coverage. That's a far, far cry from 1,600. If you do the calculations, it's about $17,000 per patient, but the pumps are only $7,000 per patient. One must wonder where the rest of the money goes.

Now, I don't know if this callous decision is due to this government's stunning fiscal mismanagement, the imaginary bitumen bubble, or whether the government just had to make some room to pay for those March 31 Alberta Health Services bonuses. At the end of the day the Premier made this promise, and you continue to take credit. Please do something.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government's plan to reduce drug prices is a complete disaster. Yesterday in their latest bulletin Alberta Blue Cross confirmed it's a mess. It turns out the repricing and delisting of drugs has created a large number of supply issues. Many of the drugs that were supposed to be of a lower price aren't available, so many of the delisted drugs have to be relisted at a much higher price. Now, we warned several weeks ago that this would happen. The minister ignored the warnings. Is the Premier listening now to the reality of what he has done to our drug pricing plan?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the decisions that we made with respect to drug pricing are going to continue to allow us to ensure that there is appropriate access for Albertans throughout this province at a cost to taxpayers that is much reduced. There is no doubt that whenever we introduce change, there is some period of transition, but we have complete confidence with respect to this decision. Simply because the opposition fearmongers about this is no reason for us to change our mind.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've also been warning about the potential for pharmacy closures as a result of the minister's Fredicare plan. We've revealed information about drugstores in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Banff, and elsewhere. There's also a pharmacist in the Premier's constituency who has made multiple requests to meet with her MLA to explain the impact drug prices are going to have. Since the Premier has so far refused to meet or even respond, what would she like me to tell her constituent on her behalf?

Ms Redford: Well, I think that it's very important for MLAs to meet with their constituents, and whenever there is a request, that certainly happens, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to meet with any of my constituents who have any view with respect to our decisions. But at the end of the day our circumstances are exactly what we've described before, which is that we've made decisions with respect to how to take care of vulnerable Albertans to ensure that drugs are available at a fair cost to everyone. We do believe that there has been fair advance notice with respect to transitioning into a business model that allows that to continue, and we would encourage anyone who's running a business in this province to make the decisions that are necessary to maintain that business.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this Calgary drugstore in the Britannia mall in the Premier's constituency has operated there for more than 50 years, and the current owner, Debbie Boyle, has owned it for 22 years. She's worried about increased costs, reduced income, poorer service to patients, and potential closure of her business. This is one of dozens of stories that we've heard. Surely government MLAs must be hearing the same stories, yet the Premier and her Minister of Health continue to ignore pharmacists, ignore patients, and ignore reality. Why?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons that we have so many people that are worried about these issues is because of these continued unfounded allegations by the opposition that are continuing to make sure that people do not have confidence in the public health care system. In fact, I am very familiar with this business. I understand that it's a thriving business. I understand that people are concerned, and it's important to have these discussions. But one of the reasons that people are concerned is that we continue to see these unfounded allegations from the opposition spreading doom and gloom, which simply isn't the case.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Second main series of questions.

Ms Smith: I'll be sure to pass that on to your constituent Debbie Boyle.

Health System Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government is sending mixed messages on health executive expenses. Now, some days the Premier calls it fearmongering when we raise issues about the Mayo Clinic, fancy dinners, charity write-offs, and attending political functions. Other days she wants us to make sure that all appropriate steps are taken to report it. Some days she says that it's all in the past, yet she hired Justice Wachowich to see if he can get some of this money back. So which is it? Are they serious about recovering wasted tax dollars or not?

Ms Redford: As said in this House last week, we have made the decision to ask for legal advice to determine, Mr. Speaker, where and whether it will be possible to recover costs that may come up over the course of time and to say that we can ensure that where it is effective and it is possible, we can take appropriate steps. But standing up in this House and pounding desks and saying that it all must be done doesn't actually give us the legal right to do it. We've asked for legal advice with respect to that, and once we receive it, we'll follow it.

Ms Smith: Here's the problem, Mr. Speaker. We've got two tiers of health care, one for health VPs and one for everyone else. Take Danielle King, a 17-year-old nationally ranked dancer who had a serious knee injury. She was told to wait up to three years for her operation. Instead she went to Cleveland for surgery so she could keep on dancing. She paid over $11,000 for treatment. The out-of-province committee offered to cover $613. Yet health VP Joanne Stalinski got automatic expense reimbursements for almost $6,000 for a personal fitness trainer and a spiritual life coach. How is that fair?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to go back and dig out what the employment contract might have been for somebody seven, eight, nine years ago, but I do want to say this. If someone has gotten taxpayer dollars when they should not have gotten those taxpayer dollars based on the policies of the day, we will do everything in our power to recoup those costs. We will do everything in our power to achieve the cost savings for taxpayers. In fact, this leadership, this Premier, has delivered the most comprehensive expense policy of any province in this country.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's not in the past. Executive contracts that have been approved by the current minister still offer all kinds of personal and health care perks that everyday Albertans just can't get. Health VP Alison Tonge's contract, which was signed in 2010 and subject to approval by the minister, allowed for up to $15,000 a year for personal financial and tax advice, for club memberships, and other similar expenses. If the Premier is looking for places to cut, how about cutting the country club clause in health executive contracts?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual to have health accounts in clauses in contracts. As a matter of fact, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees . . . [interjection] We're talking about health clauses or health accounts. In fact, I can remember having a Members' Services discussion about MLAs having a health account. [interjections] If we want to have productivity, every business knows that you're going to have accounts in senior executives' contracts that will have benefits. I am sure AHS is looking at all of those benefits.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, what is it that propels you to keep interjecting so much?

Mr. Anderson: We're not.

The Speaker: You're not? It's becoming abundantly obvious that you're getting a little bit more chirpy and more chirpy and more chirpy over here on the Wildrose side, and that baits stuff on this side, on the government side. Then we get Edmonton-Strathcona jumping in as well, having an out-and-out conversation across the hallway. Edmonton-Centre, I'm going to leave you out of it this time. Let's carry on with some civility and decorum the way we're trained to do.

The Leader of the Official Opposition. Third main series of questions.

Ms Smith: You'd think with $400,000 incomes they could cover their own country club memberships.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are right to be disappointed in this government's handling of our finances. Disapproval of the financial direction is growing. Trust and confidence are shrinking. One need only look at the overall financial picture of the last few years to understand why. We've gone from $17 billion in savings in 2008 to $17 billion in debt by 2016. It's an average cash shortfall of more than $4 billion a year. What possible justification can the Finance minister offer for this extreme fiscal mismanagement?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, what can I offer? I can offer schools. I can offer hospitals. I can offer roads. I can offer the best fiscal system in the country. I can offer a savings plan. I can offer living within our means, zero per cent increase in our expenditures. I can offer all of those things to Albertans because they need it today, not when they think the money might come in in the future.

I would even suggest that the hon. member might want to talk to her own town council in Okotoks, where they have borrowed some $25 million. Why? Their residents need it now, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Smith: And Albertans are offering 26 per cent approval ratings.

Yesterday the Energy minister told us that bitumen revenue will be up, generating $15 billion over the next three years. That's great. But these rosy estimates that he offers don't begin to erase the annual cash shortfall. Does this Finance minister ever expect that the government is going to live within its means, or is he still relying on energy revenues to one day bail him out?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, we had six hours of estimates on my department, and it's amazing that in those six hours the hon. members opposite did not do the math on the projections of the next three years. They talk about $17 billion in savings going to nothing. That $17 billion is in those schools, those roads, and those hospitals. Over the three years, if they were to actually look at the economic plan, our savings will grow to $24 billion, and net financial assets in this province are going to grow. We are the only province in Canada that has net financial assets per capita, and we will stay that way.

Ms Smith: We know that the Finance minister likes to explain that he's building Alberta. Well, we think he's just billing Alberta, saddling future generations with billions of dollars in borrowing without any plan to pay it back. Now, we already know that we're going to have $17 billion in debt by the time Albertans are asked to choose their next government, and now we know we can't count on a windfall of energy revenues, so where's the money going to come from? How's the minister going to balance the budget and pay back all that debt?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I can refer back to the six hours' worth of estimates. The hon. member opposite must have missed a few of those hours because we talked a lot about the debt repayment plan. In fact, we talked about the capital debt repayment account that is in our business plan. We talked about the fact that, yes, there's $17 billion worth of debt that's going to be on the books from the five-year period, both two years previous and the three going forward.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? A lot of that debt actually is for municipalities like the town of Okotoks, where we actually borrowed the money for them so they could get the best rate possible. Why? Because we have a triple-A credit rating that we are using, and 60 per cent of the people in that Leger survey said: use it for debt for capital.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order during the Minister of Finance's final answer. That point of order has been noted at 2:01:05.

Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, over a year ago the Premier promised in her leadership campaign to bring paid farm workers under the protection of occupational health and safety. As a human rights lawyer the Premier is well aware that occupational health and safety laws are internationally recognized as a basic worker right, yet this is just another promise made, another promise broken. I expect this resistance to sensible regulation from the Tea Party on my right but not you, Madam Premier. Why have you broken this promise to a particularly vulnerable group?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there are no promises broken. In fact, as this hon. member knows, there have been and there continue to be discussions with the agriculture sector in this province, the agri-industry in this province. The minister of agriculture and I have engaged in a number of processes. As the hon. member knows, just simply passing a law doesn't make everything right. It doesn't fix everything. There's a combination of education, regulation, enforcement, and engineering that goes into safety in any place, including agricultural workplaces, and that's a work-in-progress.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if this minister isn't tired of hearing his voice say the same thing year after year after year. Legislation is part of the solution. You know that.

Given that you also promised, Madam Premier, to bring paid farm workers under workers' compensation, which is only possible if occupational health and safety is in place, can you please stop the rhetoric and give a straight answer? When will you deliver on this promise?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would indicate that I was tired of hearing the same voice over and over again, but he injected a new piece into it this time. He referred to the Tea Party, and I thought that was rather refreshing. Tea is always refreshing.

It's a very serious subject, and the hon. member knows that doing one piece of the whole puzzle often is more ineffective than doing it comprehensively and together. Education, engineering, legislation, and enforcement are all pieces of the process. It has to be done right to be effective. This hon. member knows that.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that both the Wildrose and the PCs represent rural ridings. It strikes me as odd that neither stands up for paid farm workers, who, to state the obvious, live and work in rural areas. Again, to the Premier, if she's courageous enough to stand: how do you explain your shocking disregard for the human rights of your rural constituents, some of whom are children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this Premier, above all, respects the rights of children and, in fact, has tasked this minister to protect those rights of children each and every day. Children are the most vulnerable of our citizens. Children, if they have the opportunity to grow up, to succeed, to maximize their potential, are the future of this province, and this Premier has tasked this minister to make sure that that happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Edmonton public school board determined that they have $18.9 million less to work with and 1,200 more students to teach. It took them awhile to root out all the hidden places where this government hid their cynical, dishonest cuts to public education, but there it is:

cuts that will lay off hundreds of workers, reduce the quality of education in our schools, and hand teachers an effective 10 per cent wage cut over three years. My questions are to the Premier. How can you possibly think that the quality of public education will not be affected with all of these cuts that are taking place here now?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I don't share the hon. member's concern over the quality of education in this province. The quality of education in this province is second to none right across the world, and it's going to continue to be that way. Even with the cost restraints that we've put into this budget – and there's no question this a challenging budget for everyone in every corner of the province, and education is no exception. But thanks to this Premier, when you look at the budget line items and when you look at the different ministries, it's obvious which ministries she protected, and one of them was Education.

Mr. Eggen: Oh, Mr. Speaker, really.

Given that Edmonton public schools actually added up all the cuts for us and found that they ended up holding the bag for $18.9 million and that even if we break this number out across Alberta, this government has left kids short $100 million, or $225 per kid, how can the Premier possibly think, honestly think, that this will result in anything but larger class sizes, more students being left behind, and a whole big heaping helping of broken promises right through this next school year?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I find it absolutely fascinating to listen to this wild conjecture with respect to the impact of education cuts which actually didn't happen in this budget. What we saw in this budget was the ability to fund education more than many other departments. We were able to come to a deal with teachers, who were able to therefore be honest partners in education.

I understand one of the things that the school board did last night was to take a look at their own administrative salaries. We think that is a wise decision because it's important to make sure that they do what we do, which is make sure resources in the classroom are going to students.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, given that this Premier has been prancing around with this teachers' agreement like she's just bagged a moose for her wall while at least $100 million has been siphoned off school and classroom budgets – not all the teachers are signing it; that's for sure – why don't you drop the cuts to public education before the damage becomes irreversible?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the member agrees with me that the Premier did an incredible job in getting a deal with the teachers. That's just one of the many promises that she's delivering in education, including putting $107 million back into education, including increasing funding for class sizes, increasing funding for inclusion, including passing the Education Act, and, most important of all for the sustainability of the system and as an example for our students, living within our means in Alberta.

Fort McMurray Education Property Tax

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, Fort McMurray is trying to get the government's attention on education taxes, and if their two elected representatives won't speak up for them, I will. Yesterday the mayor sent a letter to the Premier pointing out the inequities in her town. The mayor is upset and justifiably so. Her residents are paying a disproportionately high amount in tax and are receiving little in the way of new classroom space or support. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: do you care to enlighten the people of Fort McMurray as to why you are shortchanging them on schools and gouging them with higher taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the letter that the mayor of Fort McMurray wrote. I believe every mayor and every elected official should advocate on their community's behalf, and our two MLAs from the area have done a stellar job in advocating on their community's behalf. The fact remains, though, that we had a very unfair system which encouraged many Alberta taxpayers, education property tax payers, to have to subsidize other regions, which is patently unfair. We had to move to an equitable playing field, a fair system for every single Albertan in this province.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, given that Mayor Blake is also upset with this government's lack of consultation, saying that she is concerned the province failed to enter into discussions regarding the removal of the education tax cap in the back-in-debt budget, and given that this government claims to be accountable and transparent, I'd like to ask the Associate Minister of AT and T, who coincidentally represents the people of Fort McMurray: why in the world wouldn't you consult with the mayor before you and your government chose to increase the taxes in your community by $16 million?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I know that this member is still somewhat new to this Legislature – it's only been a year – but he should know full well that the process that we have, the parliamentary privilege, means that he cannot discuss the budget. It has to be tabled in this House for members of this Assembly first, and you cannot go out and consult about what you're going to do in the budget and about policy changes that you may make. It's so that people can't abuse the system and make investments or make changes that they may profit from. That makes it fair to everybody in Alberta.

Mr. McAllister: I'm glad to see these MLAs are doing a great job of speaking for their ridings.

To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that this government has once again left Fort McMurray in a lurch when it comes to classroom space just like they did with the twinning of highway 63 and with promising and delaying a much-needed seniors' facility and given that you have just made Fort McMurray residents pay the highest education property taxes in this province, why is it that not one red cent from this additional $16 million is going back into that community to help with education?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think this hon. member as the critic for Education should do a little bit more homework. Just like yesterday, when it was apparent that he had not read the Inspiring Education report, I wonder if he's actually looked at the budget and seen that the school divisions in Fort McMurray are getting the largest increases in the entire province. Likewise, I would ask the member if he will stand up there with me on the day we announce new schools in Fort McMurray that, based on Infrastructure's decision, may potentially be P3, or financed, schools and if this member of the Wildrose would support taking on debt and financing schools in Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order at 2:11, during the last member's last question.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Support for Vulnerable Albertans

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Human Services. We are all tremendously fortunate to live in a province that has been blessed with so much, yet we know that significant social challenges exist in every community in Alberta and that personal tragedies occur each and every day. In responding to personal tragedies as part of their job, first responders are all too often confronted with horrific situations that can leave them psychologically wounded and scarred. To the minister. This Legislature took action last year to support first responders. Can you tell me: has this actually made a difference on the front lines?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was my honour last year to be asked to carry Bill 1 on behalf of our Premier, that allowed presumptive coverage for PTSD sufferers in the first responder community. It was the right thing to do, and it was a promise kept. Since the act was proclaimed in December, 15 first responders have received PTSD coverage. [interjections] Apparently, they don't want to hear the answer. In the previous three years only four had received coverage.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. Given that this government has made a number of commitments to address complex social changes and given that the promised social policy framework was delivered earlier this year and was called by some the most in-depth government guide to social policy in 30 years, will the minister now turn that policy work into actions that will make a difference to the lives of Albertans?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, that's already happening. The social policy framework was completed – at least this stage of the discussion was completed at the end of February. It's already been utilized by government to look at issues as we went through the budgeting process, as we're proceeding through the RBB process, the results-based budgeting process. All policy decisions will consider the social policy framework.

But we haven't stood still while we've been consulting, Mr. Speaker. We've taken action to end homelessness. In fact, over 6,000 Albertans in partnership with our collaborating partners in communities have been housed. We've kept our commitment to AISH recipients, we're ensuring low and medium incomes have access to child care subsidies, and we've created an independent child advocate. Promises made, promises kept.

Ms Olesen: My supplemental. Given that promises have been made to address homelessness and that those without a home, including the chronically homeless, aboriginals, youth, and women and their families leaving violent situations, are desperately counting on these promises being kept and given that an interagency council was announced earlier this year, can the minister assure Albertans that a council is really something that will make a difference in something as important as breaking the cycle of poverty?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's promise to set up the Interagency Council on Homelessness is an important step forward on this promise to end homelessness within 10 years. We work with seven collaborating organizations across the province and a number of delivery organizations. The Premier's vision was to bring those agencies and those communities together in a council to jointly govern the process of how we identify and address the causes affecting homelessness and the result of how we deal with homelessness. That council is in place, it's working, and it's going to deliver on the promise to end homelessness in 10 years. It's exciting work for Albertans. It's very necessary for our communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-North West.

Insulin Pump Therapy

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health minister continues to undermine confidence in our health care system. Last year the Premier promised funding to cover insulin pumps for all Albertans who needed them to manage their disease. In January 2013 the Minister of Health said that 1,600 Albertans would be covered at a cost of $18 million. Today there is only $5 million, and only 300 Albertans will be covered. How could this government could be so cruel as to promise thousands of Albertans hope when you clearly could not deliver?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, we just had the opportunity to have six hours of budget discussions. This member was there and heard very clearly the commitment from the minister on the insulin issue. The commitment was made very loud and clear on behalf of the government that this program is a work-in-progress, and the minister is completely committed to this program.

Mrs. Towle: I was there. He promised $18 million in January, $5 million at budget estimates.

Given that according to the Canadian Diabetes Association 6,200 patients should be eligible for these pumps and the minister promised to help 1,600 of them just two months ago, in January, but today is covering just 300 and given that of the $5 million allocated, less than half is going to the actual pumps, what is the rest of the money being spent on, and why is it not being used to fulfill the Premier's promise to type 1 diabetics?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I made it very, very clear that the commitment is in the budget. It's a budget item. The minister has defended it in estimates and is committed to this program. It will not be decided by politicians who gets the insulin pumps and who gets the support. Clinical advice from medical professionals will determine those most in need. We are committed to this program. Promises made, promises kept.

Mrs. Towle: Wow. Less than half of the budget allocated is going to fund these pumps. It's fewer dollars for fewer patients. But that's not the whole problem. Why was the Premier bragging about insulin pumps yesterday as part of her year 1 accomplishments when the only thing that's been accomplished is another broken promise?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I know the member's commitment to her constituents and to those Albertans that are looking for support with insulin pumps. It's a line item in the budget. This budget will be passed, and it will be acted upon. I promise you that.

Mount Royal University Jazz Program

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I had a call from a very upset constituent who is a member of the two-year jazz program that is on the chopping block at Mount Royal University. She's one of 45 talented musicians who feel they're being cheated out of a quality musical education. Can the minister of advanced education help right this painful situation?

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand from the minister that the students that are currently in the program at Mount Royal University will be fully able to finish their entire program. That much we know for certain.

Now, we all know that many institutions have made very difficult decisions as a result of the budget, but the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education has said over and over that the impact on students should be the number one consideration.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, again to the minister. Some of the students who have not yet entered the program are scrambling to audition for other programs in other cities, but some of them live in Calgary and have families, and they cannot relocate. How do we avoid losing talented musicians to other provinces?

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to be clear that arts programming, including the fine arts, is important to all Albertans. I want to make it clear that the minister must review and sign off on any program closures, and it's my understanding that the Deputy Premier is working with Mount Royal University at this time. This minister, his department, and Alberta schools are committed to accommodating students in this province.

Ms Jansen: And finally, Mr. Speaker, again to the minister: how do we convince the nucleus of jazz talent in Calgary that we're still a city that values them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Arts- and culture-related education programs are important to Albertans and to this government. They enrich education in our communities and feed directly into the future growth and sustainability within our cultural sector, which is a huge contributor to our economy. Calgary's reputation for valuing the arts is well known from numerous festivals and events to the many world-class performers who live in Calgary or who pass through this city to perform. There is no shortage of incredible opportunities to experience arts and culture in the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Secondary Ticket Sales

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. When the government had the opportunity in 2008 to stop online ticket scalping and protect Alberta workers, performers, et cetera, they responded with vague hand wavings about how protection would be offered through the new Fair Trading Act and to let the system work. Well, that didn't happen. Instead, we had Ticketmaster registering as a lobbyist in 2009 and – poof – scalping legislation went right off the agenda. So to the Minister of Service Alberta. Ontario, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba have managed to protect their stage technicians and the ticket-buying public with legislation. What's Alberta's excuse?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member previously asked this question in the House, that is very closely aligned to the ideology that this member subscribes to, I would suggest that the member take a look and actually research the success of programs in other jurisdictions. For example, some of the jurisdictions that this member mentions banned scalping; however, if you go to any Internet site or actually visit any single venue, any concert date, you'll find a variety of people offering tickets for sale. Member, on this side of the House we're looking for solutions that actually produce real-life change.

Ms Blakeman: Well, as a result, you've offered absolutely no protection to people.

The minister likes to pretend that this problem is about bots. Mr. Minister, computers can't think. They are programmed by humans, operated by humans, and humans can be held accountable through legislation that is passed and enforced by humans. That would be you. When can Alberta expect consumer protection from this government?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, bots operate very similarly to a lot of the folks on Twitter from that side of the House. They're essentially machine-operated people that continue to just send out one tweet after another after another after another, hoping that somebody will watch and listen to their propaganda and their ideas.

The fact of the matter is that this technology has been banned by other jurisdictions, and those jurisdictions have found that there's no actual enforceable way to crack down on that technology. We're exploring options to see how we can actually bring in meaningful, long-lasting, productive change in Alberta.

Ms Blakeman: Well, back to the same minister. How much longer is this government going to dither given that secondary ticket sites are multiplying like rabbits? StubHub, Vivid Seats, TicketNetwork, Razorgator, Viagogo, Seatwave, SeatGeek: all of these exist where only TicketsNow flourished in 2008. Why aren't you doing something to protect people?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, this is really, really funny now because this particular member a question ago – not a minute ago, a day ago, just one question ago – implied that we were essentially working for Ticketmaster. Now with this latest question this member is essentially implying that we are allowing secondary sites to function in the province. So, Member, you should note that what you just asked would imply that you're working for Ticketmaster.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, did you wish to raise a point of order at 2:25?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Unfortunately, they don't seem to be learning.

The Speaker: All right. A point of order has been registered at 2:25 from Edmonton-Centre during that last answer just given.

Let's move on now. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you have ceded your spot to Edmonton-Strathcona.

Edmonton-Strathcona, please proceed.

Funding for Sexual Health Services

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we heard that recent cuts to sexual health centres meant these clinics will no longer provide low-cost birth control to women who desperately need it. Now, whether this is, as AHS suggests, just a review or whether it's a budget cut is actually irrelevant. What is important is that at-risk women in Alberta now have less access to affordable birth control than they did before. To the associate minister of health and wellness: why isn't this issue a priority for you?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm aware of the issue. The College of Pharmacists has raised this issue with AHS, and together they're working out a solution. I can guarantee you that those most in need of these drugs are continuing to receive them.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not what we're hearing from the centres.

Given that research clearly demonstrates that greater access to sexual health education and contraceptive methods is a fundamental pillar to long-term poverty reduction and given that this was a program to lower barriers for women to obtain contraceptives, can the associate minister tell us why this government isn't taking action to improve access to sexual health services for low-income Albertans rather than standing by while AHS cuts it?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the member infers that this is a budget issue. It's not a budget issue. This is a simple issue. The pharmacists have an issue with AHS and the way this program is administered. It will be worked out. Albertans are protected. The minister is committed to this program and will continue to be.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, given that we've been given no assurances around timelines for when it will be, quote, worked out and given that appropriate and convenient access to birth control is the single best way to ensure women don't have unwanted pregnancies and given that the lost service will hurt women across the province, will this government take responsibility and direct AHS today to reverse the decision to cut off thousands of women from low-cost birth control?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, again I want to correct the member. The College of Pharmacists has raised an issue on the selling of these drugs. AHS is currently working on this issue to resolve this as quickly as possible. The minister and the ministry are committed to this program.

Funding for Hospital Infrastructure

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, recently the CBC released its Rate My Hospital report. It is very discouraging to see subpar ranking for hospitals across Alberta. Three Alberta hospitals received a D rating, which speaks to yet another government failure in both health care and infrastructure. This comes in addition to broken promises to build new health facilities in many communities. When will this government put the priorities of Albertans first so residents in Fort McMurray, Daysland, and Bonnyville can access the same level of health care as other Albertans?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we know how important health facilities are to communities. He named one that's in my own constituency. We know how important schools are to kids and parents. We know how important roads are for our economy and traffic. This is the same mantra of this tired old opposition that stands up and says to balance the budget and then runs criticism about why we're not spending more money. It's hypocritical.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, it's about priorities.

Given that conditions in the Daysland health centre are substantially worse than the average hospital in rural Alberta, will the minister admit that this government has failed to provide the community with the same level of care as the rest of Alberta and immediately take corrective action to get this hospital up to par?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, last Friday was a constituency day, and I was in Daysland talking to the town council, talking to people in the community, in the seniors' centre. The people in that community are incredibly proud of the doctors, the staff, and the hospital they have in Daysland. They know that we're continuing as a province to work with every single community to ensure Albertans get proper health care services, which means continuing to invest in the infrastructure for the people of this province.

Mr. Barnes: It received a D in the survey.

Given that residents of Bonnyville and the Lakeland area should receive the same level of care as other Albertans and given that results show substantially more patients are readmitted to the Bonnyville health care centre after surgery than other hospitals of a similar size, will the government commit to working with staff and administration to identify areas of concern and fix the issues that need fixing?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the opposition claims they would spend $4 billion on infrastructure but don't say where the money is, given the fact that they would slash the budget and continue to take infrastructure projects off the priority list, they are the last group that can comment on how we invest in this province appropriately. We'll continue to work with municipalities, with people, and with communities to build infrastructure, to build a stronger Alberta for the next generation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Seniors' Lodge Renewal Program

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs announced nearly $31 million for maintenance and upgrades to seniors' lodges throughout this province. This is certainly welcome news, but it's only a start. Those lodges need more than maintenance. Some need a complete overhaul, and some communities need brand new lodges. My question to the Municipal Affairs minister: can the minister tell us what he has planned in addition to the one-time maintenance funding?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every year we work on our budget to make sure that we have maintenance funding so that the housing authorities can work on where the investments need to be. It's not necessarily just maintenance in each room; it can also be more vigorous maintenance in particular facilities. With the Alberta Social Housing Corporation in Municipal Affairs we're working very vigorously with our partnered local authorities on a long-term real estate strategy that will make sure we address those long-term infrastructure needs when it comes to seniors.

Mr. Quadri: To the same minister again: will the government build new lodges in addition to maintaining the existing ones?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, looking ahead, the Alberta government plans on working very proactively to develop a long-term capital plan. It includes consideration of additional facilities. We know that the population of seniors in this province is going to grow from approximately 420,000 to close to 700,000 people over the next generation, and it's going to take significant investment and partnerships with our local municipalities and with seniors to make sure we meet those needs.

Mr. Quadri: To the same minister again: will the government be picking and choosing which communities will get the new lodges and where this funding is located?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We continue to work collaboratively with our management bodies. We know that they understand the situation at the local level. They provide the best input. I can say that staff are visiting and assessing facilities now so that we can understand the situation that we're in. We'll be working with our local authorities to address community needs and make sure that we put the investment in the right place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Assessing Supports for PDD Clients

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our most vulnerable continue to be impacted by this government's mismanagement and inability to communicate. The decision to shift away from community-based supports to outcomes-based supports may be a positive thing, but the minister has admitted to not knowing how this system will impact any individuals in the PDD system. With no planning, no consultation, and no feedback from those who will be directly impacted by this government's decision-making, how is the minister going to determine which supports will be cut?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, there's so much in that preamble that is just absolutely incorrect. Very obviously, we're not proceeding anywhere without some very thoughtful planning and working with our partners. That's exactly how we're going to continue to do it going forward. That's just ridiculous.

Mr. Wilson: Check the Hansard, Minister. You admitted it last week.

Given that the lack of communication with caregivers and families has resulted in anxiety and insecurity in communities across this province, when will this minister find the courage to advise parents, guardians, clients, and staff which specific programs will be cut as of July 1?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, we are indeed working with parents and families and service providers across the province, and over the coming weeks we will be travelling the province to visit with each and every one of them. The changes that we're trying to make are a logical and correct transition in services that we provide there. We, in fact, have the support of the service providers. I recognize that there's a transition issue. I'm doing everything I can to manage that.

Mr. Wilson: Given that this government has a history of ramming through decisions without proper consultation and this minister has imposed an irresponsible and offensive three-month deadline to current contracts without communicating what to expect after July 1, when will the minister have the new outcomes-based contracts in the hands of our service providers and advise families what supports their vulnerable loved ones will receive?

Mr. Oberle: As I indicated in the last answer, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that there's a transition issue here. We do indeed have some trepidation in the service community out there and with some parents, and I'm working on that. We will ramp up our communications efforts. We will have contracts in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Medicine Hat.

Access to Government Services

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have enjoyed the great success of privatization of government services such as registries and liquor stores. It benefits both consumers and service providers. This privatization process and business model was launched 17 years ago. Since then the Alberta population has more than doubled, urban community growth is high, and we've seen far greater advances in technology. My question is to the hon. Minister of Service Alberta. What is your plan to make the government more accessible and more open?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are moving forth with what I call an open government strategy that will allow Alberta citizens to be able to get access to services at their fingertips. We'd like to see a portal, a window perhaps, one access point for Albertans to a variety of online services, whether it be relating to the department of Service Alberta or the Department of Education to get transcripts. We believe that Albertans expect co-ordinated, sophisticated mechanisms and tools in place to help them get access to the best services at their fingertips.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please keep your conversations down to a dull roar.

The hon. member. Second question.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same hon. minister. Look at the registries alone. Given that the number of registry shops has not been increased with the population growth and diverse needs, what is the minister planning to do in this area of service?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much. I'd like to thank the veteran member of this Assembly for a hard-hitting question. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we look to see how we can best provide services to the Alberta public, which may include, potentially, the expansion of existing systems we have place, which could mean more services through more storefront locations. Also, as I mentioned earlier, it's very, very important that we find better tools and better ways to provide services to Albertans and the everyday Alberta public living in many, many different parts of this province to get them services online, right at their fingertips.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: given that we must provide Albertans with government services at the least cost to taxpayers and to consumers of services as well, what is your plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'd like to thank the member for that very strong question. In fact, we're committed to making sure that we find the most value possible out of every single taxpayer's dollar that we spend on providing services to Albertans. Through our results-based budgeting process we're looking at a variety of different systems that provide services to the public to see how we can make them better, to see how we can provide services to Albertans more cost-effectively and more conveniently. It's very important that the public gets all the services . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Employment Supports for PDD Clients

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, this government is leaving vulnerable Albertans in the cold. The associate minister of PDD has swung his axe at front-line services for Albertans living with disabilities in my constituency as part of his $42 million cut to day programs. Experts say this cut will send Alberta back 40 years in how we care for our most vulnerable. A 40-year setback from a tired 40-year-old government. Minister, the people affected by your cuts are scared as you're tampering with their lives. Will you do the right thing and stop downloading your deficit onto our most vulnerable citizens?

Mr. Oberle: Well, let's just dial it down here a bit, Mr. Speaker, and help the opposition understand that that wasn't a cut in the budget. We did transition $42 million out of community access into community supports and into wages for front-line staff, which I sincerely hope that hon. member supports. Now, we're going to try to achieve a transformation in PDD care. I have assistance in employment supports in other budgets outside of the PDD program. I do recognize that we're creating some concern in the community, and we're working on that. I will work on a transition.

Mr. Pedersen: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister plans to funnel these disabled citizens into work placements and given that the executive director of REDI, a group that specializes in finding work for disabled people, said that less than 1 per cent of these people could manage to hold down a job without added supports, will the minister admit that his vision is destined to fail?

Mr. Oberle: I absolutely will not admit any such thing, Mr. Speaker, and I will chastise that member for having a rather jaded view of the ability of disabled persons to lead productive lives in our society.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you rose on a point of order at 2:41 during the associate minister's answer just now. It's been noted.

The final question, please, from the hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's from the experts, not myself.

Mr. Speaker, given that this minister says that he has a plan to transition these disabled residents into the workforce and given that he's put nothing forward in the way of details of that plan, how can service providers, families, and clients trust this minister to replace these effective day programs before they are officially cut on July 1?

Mr. Oberle: You know, Mr. Speaker, the questions seem to be almost as if we're planning to turn people out in the street and expect them to get eight-hour-a-day jobs without any supports and get them off our rolls. The actual fact is that we fully recognize there are going to be ongoing employment supports. This is not about cost savings. This is about the dignity of persons with disabilities and their right to belong, to contribute, and to be valued in our society and about our duty – our duty – to support that.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we carry on with our Routine, a number of our members over the last few days are getting a little bit carried away with the preambles, so I would ask you to please tighten those up for tomorrow. In fact, there should be no preambles, as you know. We've talked about this before. I want to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, who stood up and asked three good questions. There were others, but that one in particular I noted.

On that note, we're going to carry on here in 30 seconds with the continuation of Members' Statements.

Members' Statements (continued)

Anniversary of Election

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, yesterday marked the one-year anniversary of the last election. Unfortunately, the government that Albertans thought they voted for is not the one they got. Whether it's seniors' drug prices, increased funding to postsecondary institutions, schools, teacher workload, full-day kindergarten, funding for municipalities, or ending child poverty, this government has proven over the last year that it cannot be trusted to deliver on the very issues that got the PCs elected.

First, in communities across the province and now in between the budget lines we have been chasing all of those broken promises, and it's an impressively long list. This government will tell Albertans over and over again, as if repetition creates reality, that times have changed. But when it comes down to it, there's one thing that really matters to Alberta voters, and that's trust. This Premier and government have repeatedly betrayed the trust of voters over the past year. So year 1 has been a never-ending list of broken promises and plummeting trust and support for this government.

An anniversary, however troubled, is not just a time to reflect. More importantly, it's a time to look forward. I have no doubt that we will continue to encounter the negative effects of this government's policies and budget in the next year, and we will continue to oppose them on those issues, but we will also continue to propose positive alternatives to the cynical politics of the day. Instead of simply talking about difficult decisions, we will be talking about investing in people. Instead of simply talking about the need to extract our resources faster and faster, we will be talking about a sustainable pace of development and the creation of jobs in Alberta. Instead of talking about building Alberta in the interests of a few, we will be talking about building an Alberta for everyone.

So happy anniversary to this government, and sympathies on the failing grades.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt, but I think you have a group that's here that we did get permission to revert for, but we'll carry on with Calgary-Glenmore and keep looking for your group.

Salute to Families and Friends of Members

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we celebrated yesterday the election results of 2012, today I would like to speak to the families and friends who encouraged each of us to be here. An election campaign truly is a time when you learn who your friends are, those who look us in the eye and honestly tell us that our ideas, our speeches, and our campaign platforms are good or bad. These are the individuals who walked with us as we decided whether to stand for nomination and election or not.

The other team of individuals who stand with us through thick and thin are our family members: our wives, our husbands, mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, children, and grandchildren. They contribute to and support our passion to be in public life. As MLAs we've all had discussions around the dinner table regarding money, policy, and the impact on the family. Our children see the newspaper headlines and see the media, where politicians are accused of good and not-so-good activities. Our family members love and support us no matter what their personal opinion is on current policy. We can be strong and attentive in our MLA roles as we rely on their continuing support.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, thank you to family and friends for helping us to achieve our goals and aspirations for our constituencies, and a special thank you to my husband, who has stood by me through thick and thin, as we celebrate our 31st wedding anniversary today. Thank you, Al.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Armenian Genocide

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, on the night of April 24, 1915, 98 years ago today, the Turkish government arrested more than 200 Armenian community leaders in Constantinople. Hundreds more were arrested, and all were executed. This was the first step in the annihilation of all Armenian families. Over 1 and a half million Armenian men, women, and children were massacred. Hundreds of witnesses reported these atrocities.

As the first genocide of the 20th century, the Armenian genocide was a precursor to the genocides that followed, acting as the prototype to modern crimes against humanity, including the genocides in Cambodia, Rwanda, Darfur, the Ukrainian Holodomor, and the Jewish Holocaust.

Mr. Speaker, a genocide denied is a genocide repeated. The international community failed to hold the perpetrators of the Armenian genocide accountable for their crimes, encouraging the most heinous and brutal dictator in world history, Adolf Hitler, to say as he planned the annihilation of the Jewish people, "Who, after all, speaks today of the annihilation of the Armenians?"

Mr. Speaker, my grandfather Paravon Kalagian never spoke about the night he witnessed the people of his village, including his mother, being tortured and burned alive even though he never stopped reliving the horror at night in his dreams.

My grandmother Mariam Kalagian had an incredible capacity to love others despite the fact that she lost her entire family during the genocide. She taught us that love was better than hate. Her story and lessons are not forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, we remember these atrocities like the Armenian genocide, the Ukrainian Holodomor, and the Jewish Holocaust because, as George Santayana said, "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it."

I wish to extend my heartfelt sympathy and expressions of solidarity to all Armenian people at this solemn time of remembrance. My grandmother was right when she said that love was better than hate, and if anyone in history should ever say again, "Who remembers?" we can say, "We remember."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Sherwood Park Music Festival

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week the 37th Sherwood Park Music Festival was held at Festival Place. Over the course of four very full days the festival played host to numerous performances in junior, intermediate, and senior piano; junior and senior strings; musical theatre; speech arts; choral; handbells; woodwinds; brass; and percussion. Judging in these different categories culminated in the grand concert on Sunday, starring the winning performers.

The Sherwood Park Music Festival has grown steadily over the years and now serves the counties of Strathcona, Beaver, Lamont, and Minburn. This growth occurs only because of the hard work and dedication of over 50 volunteers and another 50-plus sponsors. Each and every year these dedicated individuals make this important community event an extraordinary success.

From the Sherwood Park Music Festival winners go on to compete in the Alberta Music Festival, the first of which was established in Edmonton in 1908 under the guidance of Lord Grey, the same Canadian Governor General of Grey Cup football fame. There local winners join others from more than 35 other music festivals held annually in Alberta. Those fortunate enough to win the Alberta Music Festival are then invited to compete at the National Music Festival, hosted this year by Wilfrid Laurier University in Waterloo, Ontario.

Dedicated to music appreciation and encouraging young performers and music teachers to pursue excellence in music performance, the music festival movement provides a framework and incentive for growth in musical knowledge and ensures those skills are passed on and continue to flourish.

Congratulations and thank you to all involved.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Workplace Safety

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 28 is the day set aside to remember Albertans injured or killed on the job. I remember one who worked with me, Mel Ondryk. He was dedicated to serving our customers and helping his associates work safely. He knew the rules of safe rig moving and their importance. Mel was so knowledgeable and committed to following them that he became a driver trainer, one of our best. We called him By-the-Book Mel.

He trained many young drivers and swamper. They learned how to properly use load slings and load binders. He taught them the importance of the walk-around check before beginning a trip. He showed them how to secure loads and how to put on over-dimension signs and outrigger lights. He was patient and careful to cover all the safety procedures and everything else they needed to know. They were taught the importance of following at a safe distance and how to calculate that, depending upon their speed and the weight of their load. When Mel said that they were ready, we had confidence that these new drivers would do a great job.

But while helping another driver during a rig move, Mel momentarily forgot an important rule, to establish eye contact to confirm that the other driver knew he was stepping within the radius of that truck's movement as it was backing up. Seconds later he was dead, knocked down and run over by the front tire of the truck as it backed up and the driver turned the steering wheel to correct the direction of his trailer. I lost a friend and his wife lost her sweetheart to a preventable, avoidable accident.

Safety rules evolve and develop over time as organizations anticipate problems and learn from them. I encourage all managers and their employees to be even more diligent in making workplaces as safe as possible. Co-operate, collaborate, and consult with others.

This Sunday let's remember all the Mels. In their memory may we resolve to be vigilant and safe.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we asked for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests. Could we ask once again if that's still in place? The guests have now arrived.

The Speaker: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, please proceed.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members a fantastic group of grade 6 students visiting from my constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. The students from Destiny Christian School are sitting in the gallery along with their teacher Mr. Glenn Mullen and their parent supervisors, Ms Jaime Whitehead and Ms Roberta Bechtold. I hope they enjoy their time at the Legislature today, and I'll ask them to please rise and stand as my hon. colleagues provide the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Red Deer-North, did you have a petition? Please proceed.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to present the pheasant release program sustainability petition, that was reviewed and approved in format by Parliamentary Counsel. With the fourth instalment of this petition, I am presenting an additional 389 signatures, for a current total of 1,838 signatures from Albertans who are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to take the necessary measures, including the introduction of proposed amendments to existing legislation, to ensure the preservation and enhancement of the pheasant release program, which has been an important part of Alberta's hunting tradition, heritage and culture for over 65 years.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice that at the appropriate time I will be rising on a point of privilege pursuant to section 15 of the standing orders. The matter relates to the conduct of the government yesterday with respect to managing House business in relation to the debate of Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013. In particular, my rights and privileges as a member of the Assembly to within reason identify, draw attention to, and debate matters arising from Bill 20 were limited in a way that breaches my parliamentary privilege.

The Speaker: So noted. Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

Bill Pr. 1

Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Canada Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will simplify the organizational structure of the church and is therefore administrative in nature. The bill number is Pr. 1.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a first time]

Bill Pr. 2

Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers Amendment Act, 2013.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, please proceed. I understand you have two tablings.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have two tablings. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition which calls on the government to revise their policies to eliminate child poverty and its manifestations in Alberta.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a petition which calls on the government to "take immediate action to regulate electricity prices, recognizing that electricity is an essential service."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Highwood, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll table the appropriate copies of a letter from a physician in Calgary, Dr. Patrick Wyse, who says that he will retire early this year because "by not utilizing the collective expertise [of physicians in the community] the mayhem created in Alberta's health care system over the past two decades falls squarely on the shoulders of the conservative government."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood and Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings related to several questions that I asked this week about Alberta Health Services expenses. First, the employment contract between Alberta Health Services and Alison Tonge: the requisite number of copies, five.

I also have a number of expenses from Joanne Stalinski for her personal training sessions with HigherSelf Fitness and Consulting, which I mentioned today.

Also, a number of expense forms related to expenses by Michele Lahey. I've got four different expense forms related to that, five copies of each.

In addition, the Pharmacy Benefact, which is the bulletin by Alberta Blue Cross that I also referenced today, where they acknowledge that the drug plan pricing changes have had a major impact on their delisting and some of the changes that they are going to be making not only at this time, but they also do say that additional process changes are going to be announced in future updates.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, were you trying to catch my eye because the clock hit 3 o'clock?

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that we let 7(7) lapse and continue with the Orders of the Day.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, you have a tabling?

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two documents that I referenced today. The first one is an article from Jamie Komarnicki with the Calgary Herald, dated January 13, 2013, where she did an interview with the Minister of Health. "The health minister said the government has set aside $18 million in 2013 to fund the first free pumps."

The second document that I'm tabling is from the 2013 April 17 Families and Communities budget estimates committee for Health, wherein he states that actually only 300 people and only $5 million will be put aside for the pumps.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings?

Seeing no others, then allow me to please table with you and for you the requisite number of copies of the School at the Legislature annual reports for 2010-11 and 2011-12, noting that the reason we are one year behind, so to speak, is because of the provincial election last year. Nonetheless, this is a very successful program, and I encourage you to become more familiar with the School at the Legislature.

Hon. members, we have a point of privilege, I believe, that has been noted here by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Hon. member, did you wish to proceed and outline your case for urgency?

Privilege Opportunity for Debate

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pursuing a point of privilege today under Standing Order 15. I'm pursuing this point of privilege on the grounds that my ability and that of all opposition members, in fact, to participate fully and fairly in second reading debate around Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013, has been unjustifiably hindered by the actions of this government and therefore infringe upon my privileges as an opposition member. I also have some reason to believe that this will continue in the Committee of the Whole process and also in third reading unless a remedy is achieved. There's no more important function for an opposition MLA than to hold the government accountable on issues of public expenditure. Please allow me to explain the nature of the actions in particular and touch on why I believe they relate to privilege.

Essentially, Mr. Speaker, yesterday several members of the opposition made repeated requests to representatives of the government caucus that different opposition members be allowed to speak to Bill 20. In response the government allowed one member of each opposition party to speak once before the government majority was used to adjourn debate in the afternoon. Then in the evening the government brought Bill 20 back to the floor with just enough time for one member of each opposition party to speak again before the issue had to be voted on under Standing Order 64(3) at 10:15 p.m.

Through this strategy roughly four hours of debate opportunity was lost to members of this Assembly. In other words, by using its majority to adjourn debate at will, the government effectively prevented up to 20 opposition members and a number of government members from having the opportunity to participate in debate on Bill 20 in second reading.

Now, as it is, Mr. Speaker, the government has previously used its majority to bring in our standing orders, and as I'm sure you are aware, we already have what some people might characterize as time limits or what others might even characterize as closure as a result of section 64 of our standing orders, which limit or put on a maximum amount of time that the appropriations bill can be debated. Indeed, as you know, the bill can only be debated for a maximum of one day for each stage. So now this new practice of the government, one that I've only seen in the last couple of years and to greater and greater degrees this year, to further limit debate by significantly limiting the amount of time allowed for budget debate within each of the days when we're allowed to debate, in my view, represents an excessive use of its majority by the government caucus.

As for timeliness, Mr. Speaker, you did indicate to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that he could not anticipate the actions of the government and use that as the foundation for his complaint with respect to privilege. As a result, we had to wait until what we had anticipated would occur did indeed occur. The matter was brought back by the government near the very end of debate yesterday evening such that second reading was completed with no time between the first adjournment and the last 40 minutes or so in the evening.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, there's no more important function for an opposition MLA than to hold the government accountable on issues of public expenditure. House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, on page 819 states that the direct control of national finance has been referred to as the "great task of modern parliamentary government".

Page 820 of the same volume recognizes the fact that Parliament must assent to all legislative measures which implement public policy and the House of Commons authorizes both the amounts and objects or destination of all public expenditures.

Now, as the Speaker knows, the Parliament consists of all elected members, not just the government. Of utmost importance to the role of Parliament is the role of the opposition in debating issues of public expenditure. Pursuant to this at page 831 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice it states that the House of Commons recognizes two contradictory principles: that the government is entitled to get its financial legislation through Parliament; and that the opposition is entitled to identify, draw attention to, delay, and debate, items that it feels need attention and discussion.

Marleau and Montpetit on pages 66 to 67 speaks to the issue of privilege and states that any disregard of or attack on the rights, powers and immunities of the House and its Members . . . is referred to as a "breach of privilege" and is punishable by the House.

Erskine May, 22nd edition, on page 108 states that any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

Moreover, Beauchesne's page 3, section 1, describes the principles of parliamentary law, and it states, Mr. Speaker, that they are to protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to enable every Member to express opinions within limits necessary to preserve decorum and prevent an unnecessary waste of time; to give abundant opportunity for the consideration of every measure, and to prevent any legislative action being taken upon sudden impulse.

Mr. Speaker, it is my assessment that Standing Order 64, which essentially places a very significant time limit on debate in second reading for appropriation bills, is in place and more than meets the principle of orderly execution of business and avoiding any unnecessary waste of time, those principles that I just referred to in reference to the quote from Beauchesne's. However, for there to be no unnecessary waste of time, there needs to have been an excess of time spent on the issue to begin with, and in this case there was almost no time given to the issue, which is the cause of my concern. Both myself as well as another member of my caucus were given no opportunity to speak to Bill 20 in second reading. In total, six of 26 opposition members were allowed to speak to Bill 20 yesterday.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that while estimates provide an opportunity for opposition members to question the government on issues concerning the budget, they do not afford the opportunity to engage in parliamentary debate. I know that what we will hear from the other side is, "Oh, well, you got 55 hours or whatever of estimates debate," notwithstanding the fact that we've already had a conversation here around the fact that the number of hours for estimates debate was significantly limited to the opposition by this government in a previous decision.

Notwithstanding that, Mr. Speaker, this is different. The opportunity to debate Bill 20 is the one forum in which we are given the ability to debate the combined impact of the budget as it relates to all the departments of this government. There is no other such forum for us to talk about how: well, you know, maybe this cut here is okay, but when it's added up with all these other cuts, it's really not so okay. Or if I were a member of the Wildrose caucus, what I might say is: well, maybe this increase in funding right here is okay, but when added up with all these other increases in funding, it's not okay.

There is a principle, Mr. Speaker, that the budget as a whole requires debate, not just the line-by-line, ministry-by-ministry discussions that we have in estimates. That is the debate which this government has limited significantly. They've already, as I've said, had the benefit of section 64. By using their majority to adjourn debate and then not bring something back, they've actually, as I've said, on second reading itself limited the debate by about 50 per cent, roughly 4 hours.

Mr. Speaker, parliamentary democracies often see arguments over the principle of respect for the rights of the minority. Beauchesne's suggests in section 3 that it is there to preclude "a Government from using to excess the extensive powers that it has to limit debate or to proceed in what the public and the Opposition might interpret as unorthodox ways." If almost no time is given to the opposition to debate Bill 20, then we must surely conclude that debate has been limited to the most excessive level achievable, that of almost no debate, with all due respect to the six opposition members who were given the opportunity to engage in debate. Similarly, this also calls into question the principles of every member expressing their opinion and having the opportunity to engage.

In this case, I am arguing that the government is using its power of majority to unjustifiably and excessively limit debate on a matter that is of the outmost importance to this House and goes to the very heart of our roles as members of this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, the standing orders, which are put in place to ensure that excessive debate does not occur, are there. Moving forward in the way I've just described, I would suggest and I would argue, amounts to an abuse and a fundamental breach of privilege. That is why I'm bringing this to your attention now so that by your good judgment you can find a prima facie case of breach of privilege in this matter, and a remedy can be sought before the rights and responsibilities of the opposition to debate matters of public expenditure have been completely trampled upon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your consideration of my points.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Airdrie.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to support my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona in her question of privilege because I believe what we've seen here is interference by government in the performance of the responsibilities of a member. Specifically, this question of privilege is pinned onto the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but it could just as easily have been pinned onto my colleague from Calgary-McCall, who was here yesterday afternoon and, in fact, whose name was on the list because he wanted to speak and was not allowed to.

We have a number of citations, Mr. Speaker, that recognize that the role of the opposition is to hold the government accountable. In House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 37, we notice that it is indeed essential for the country that the shades of opinion which are represented on both sides of this House should be placed as far as possible on a footing of equality and that we should have a strong opposition to voice the views of those who do not think with the majority.

What I have seen in this particular instance, I would argue, is a changing definition of obstruction. There are a number of good definitions in Erskine May, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, in Beauchesne around how members may not be interfered with or obstructed from pursuing their duties as members. Clearly, it's been meant to deal with physically restraining someone — we have had an example of that here in this House — or getting in their way. We also had an example once where the doors were closed, and members were not able to access the Chamber and participate in debates.

I would argue that what we're seeing here is this government moving into a new definition of obstruction. I will just give you that definition on page 61 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice. “The House has the authority to assert privilege where its ability has been obstructed in the execution of its functions or where Members have been obstructed in the performance of their duties.” I believe that that is the case here.

Now, I was careful to check, and indeed I will put on the record page 117 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, in which it says: “In other words, just as a member is protected from anything he does while taking part in a proceeding in Parliament, so too must interference relate to the member’s role in the context of parliamentary work.” In other words, this is not about constituency work. We were here trying to debate the appropriation bill, and we are supported in being able to do that.

The standing order rules are our rules. We, hopefully, have all agreed to abide by those rules in the same way that citizens generally agree to have the police have a condition of power over them in exercising their authority. But I think that this government has abused our standing orders in the following way. They have used the parts of the standing orders to make a sum that equals a denial of the right to rise and speak in this Assembly.

Now, the government through the Government House Leader and the deputy leaders has presumed to create closure or time allocation. Now, under those circumstances you have to admit it, Mr. Speaker. You have to put that motion on the Order Paper. We don’t have closure anymore because it made the government look so bad, but now we have time allocation. But you have to put that motion on the Order Paper. There’s a day’s notice. Everybody can see what the government is going to do. There has to be a level of discussion, and then the time allocation can be put into place. But you’ve got to admit it.

What this government is doing by using different parts of our standing orders is that they are creating a sum total of silent closure: no notice necessary, no debate necessary. The motion for time allocation, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, is debatable, and it allows the opportunity for all to speak in opposition to that. What we’re getting now and what we’re experiencing now is time allocation or closure by stealth. They’re not admitting to it, there’s no notice in front of it, and we’re not able to debate it. It’s just implemented. That is, as you can understand, in my opinion, very wrong.

Worse than that, Mr. Speaker, this was predetermined. This wasn’t accidental. It didn’t happen as things rolled out yesterday. In fact, the Government House Leader had approached and communicated with opposition House leaders, proposing that one speaker per caucus per day was how he would like to proceed with things. Well, of course, I and other opposition House leaders responded pretty vehemently against that, saying: no; we have a number of people that wish to speak. Because of the way the budget estimates were done in legislative policy committees, we felt very strongly we wanted to speak to the total effect of the appropriation bill. We made that very clear. So it was predetermined that that was the way the government wanted to implement this, and they proceeded to do it. We had no notice, which we would have had, and no opportunity to debate it, as I said.

Further to that, we’ve had a recent change to the standing orders – these are some of the parts that I’m bringing together for the Speaker – not supported by the House leaders, in 59.03(7) in which the government, who used to have to get unanimous consent to revert to introductions in order to give first reading of the appropriation bill and struggled sometimes to get that permission unanimously, changed the standing orders so that they always got it. Our Standing Order 59.03(7) now reads: “Following the Committee of Supply’s report to the Assembly on the main estimates, the Assembly shall immediately revert to Introduction of Bills for the introduction of the appropriation Bill.” Okay. Now we have to go to the appropriation bill.

Under 64(2) it says: “No appropriation Bill may advance more than one stage a day.” Now we’ve lost the first day of debate or the first day that we would usually have to prepare, notify people to come to the gallery, whatever, because the government has already given itself a head start on that. I disagree slightly with my colleague in that I don’t see 64(2) as a limitation. I read it that you cannot cram them together. In fact, appropriation bill debate in second, committee, or third could go on longer than one day, but it has to get a minimum of one day.

This is third of the parts, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 64(3) says that once the appropriation bill has been moved for second reading on any day – I guess that this is the curtailment of it; you’re right – then the Speaker will interrupt the proceedings at the end of that day 15 minutes before regular adjournment time, which in this Assembly is taken to be at 10:30, so the Speaker would intervene at 10:15, and call the vote.

So now the whole debate has to take place between when it’s first brought up in second reading and 10:15. Indeed, what we had was the Government House Leader using the standing orders and his prerogative to organize the House business. He did it in a way that opposition members were denied an opportunity to debate. I had people here that wanted to debate. I had people here in the afternoon that wanted to debate in second reading.

As I mentioned yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we have specific themes that are to be respected in the debating of a bill. Second reading is to debate the principle of the bill, and we wanted to be able to do that. It’s considered inappropriate in debating in other stages of the bill to be trying to lump it all together although we certainly do take our leeway here in this House sometimes. Some of my caucus members are now denied that opportunity. They go straight into Committee of the Whole, if they can manage to be recognized, or try to speak in third reading.

Now, Mr. Speaker, adjournment is not debatable according to House of Commons Procedure and Practice. It’s supposedly used for the ordering of House business, but it should not be used as a form of closure, as a form of time allocation, and that’s what this government did. They used the adjournment in the afternoon knowing that they were going to come back very close to the specified voting time of 10:15 that evening, perhaps allow another speaker or two, and then call the vote. But they certainly curtailed the amount of time that was available, and they used the parts of the standing orders that are not meant to be combined to stop opposition members or any member from speaking. But, in fact, that is what this government and the Government House Leader have done. He has combined a number of parts of our standing orders to create a total that has the effect of denying the opportunity for members to speak.

Now, on page 594 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice it does go over the ability of members to speak and notes: “With few exceptions, a Member may speak to any motion that has been proposed to the House and which is open to debate.” Few exceptions.

In House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 596 we have that the opposition is particularly recognized when we are debating supply. We know that, and I’ve raised this in this House before. We even recognize the importance of the opposition’s role with money matters by having the chair of the Public Accounts Committee always be designated as a member of the Official Opposition. So it is recognized in parliamentary procedure that the opposition is given a unique role and unique rights, I would argue, in holding the government accountable about money bills.

On 596 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice it says: "On supply days, the Chair may recognize Members from the party sponsoring the opposition motion more frequently." More frequently, not less frequently, Mr. Speaker. More frequently.

All in all, what we've had is an especially grievous coming together of design by the House leaders of the government, and it is especially grievous because the opposition House leaders had been so unhappy with the allocation of speaking rotation and time in the estimates debates. With a set of committees running concurrently on some days, not every day but some days, it's not possible for me or the members for Calgary-McCall or Calgary-Mountain View or Edmonton-Strathcona to be able to be in two places at once or to be able to take part in all of those.

I've been able to raise some of the issues that my constituents wanted me to raise, looking at the totality of the budget, but other members in the opposition have not, and that should not be happening. If it needs to happen, Mr. Speaker, then the government should use the standing orders that are in place to do that. If they wish to curtail debate, then use the processes that are there. In other words, stand up and admit it. Put the time allocation motion out there on the Order Paper. Everybody knows there are 24 hours. Put it on the floor, and we'll debate it. But don't sneak around using standing orders and putting them together in a way that it ends up with a result that, I believe, was never intended to be arrived at, and that is disallowing members an opportunity to speak in second reading on appropriation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to commend the two members that have already spoken, the members for Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Strathcona, on very, very thoughtful preparation and citations in this debate. I'm always learning a lot from both of these members, who very meticulously prepare for these sorts of things. My comments, thankfully, can be a lot shorter because they've covered, essentially, every possible citation on this that could be brought up and have done so very effectively, certainly the most important ones.

I'm going to just appeal to a sense of fairness and common sense to back up what has been said here. Obviously, we do have estimates debate. We do have 70-some hours of estimates debate. Of course, as you know, Mr. Speaker, those are broken up into different ministries. Two to six hours are given to each of those, and there's back and forth. There are very specific rules about what you can and cannot ask about and so forth. We go through that process. But as the previous members have clearly articulated, that is a very different process and a separate process from debate on the budget as a whole, in its entirety.

I have to say: think about the absurdity of this. The Official Opposition and all opposition parties have a very crucial and specific role in government to hold the government to account, especially on money bills, on appropriation bills. Really, if it's not our number one purpose in here, it's close. We're supposed to do that.

To give the opposition parties essentially a couple of speakers each, which is what we got at the beginning of this – but in some ways that's not true because that was a response to the budget. It wasn't a response to the actual appropriation bill before us. But that was the maximum that we were able to negotiate just to respond to the budget, two people from each party. Okay. All right. We've got to move things along, so maybe that can be justified. By the way, I should say that I think more than two people per party should be able to respond to the budget, but okay.

For a minute it's moved into estimates. We move things along so we can get things going, so it doesn't get hung up too much in this House. The government wouldn't want to do that. But we get into estimates, and we go through the estimates process. Then it comes back, and we have the bill in front of us. Now we have a situation where, essentially, well, I've been able to speak to that bill in second reading, a couple of others have been able to speak to that bill in second reading, and that's it. So only literally two to three members of the opposition parties are able to speak to the budget in its entirety.

Think about the absurdity of that. It makes no sense. I mean, it's completely undemocratic. What possible justification could there be on that side of the House? What justification could our Legislature have for only allowing the opposition the opportunity for one or two speakers to respond to the budget in its entirety? The citations were very clear. Only in very rare circumstances should debate be limited with regard to bills, especially appropriation bills. In fact, the most limited that we are with regard to debate is on the ultimate money bill, the budget.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a very good opportunity for you to set a standard in this Legislature of fairness on this issue. We as opposition House leaders, obviously, are in the minority here. We can't change the standing orders. We talk about negotiation. Well, I guess you can say that House leaders negotiate. It's a negotiation. It's not exactly a fair negotiation because, really, the government can do whatever they want, but we call it that to all sound nice about it.

An Hon. Member: It's a democracy.

Mr. Anderson: Well, democracy doesn't mean you can trample on the rights of the minority. That's not democracy.

Mr. Dorward: You had a lot more time than I did.

Mr. Anderson: Well, you should have time, Member. You should have more time.

Anyway, I think that it's very appropriate that we... [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry to interject.

Government members, please. Let's not get into this. This is a very serious point of privilege that a member has raised, and I would afford each of you the same courtesy if you were arguing a point of privilege that you felt strongly about. So please let's button it, and let's let this member continue on and finish his comments. Then we'll come to you if you wish to speak.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think that the points have been made very clearly. I think that we have an opportunity to change the standard in here with regard to this particular issue.

I want to make it clear that the standing orders, I think, were never intended to limit debate on the budget in that way. Obviously, there was some kind of time allocation looked into, but there's nothing in the orders that would ever suggest that we should put the budget on the table, the appropriation bill, and immediately adjourn, have no debate on it, then bring it back so that a couple of people can speak on it, and then vote on it 15 minutes later. That's an abuse of that standing order. It goes directly against the privilege that every member of this House should have, on the government side and on this side, to respond to the main piece of legislation that we pass every year, which is the budget.

I hope you will carefully consider that, Mr. Speaker, in your evaluation of this. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the chance. I'll try to be as brief as I can. As you said earlier, a point of privilege is very serious but also is very rare. There's no doubt that the onus is on the member asserting it to prove it, and I don't believe that that burden of proof has been met today. I'd suggest to you that there is no point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, as a government we have the privilege to set the agenda, and I think that's a very important point that we can never forget. I'd say that there's no lack of opportunity for the opposition to put forward their arguments. Under this Premier we increased the estimates to discuss the budget to 70 hours. When I first came here, it was three hours per ministry. We now have our bigger ministries where we're allowing six hours of debate, and I think that, you know, gives the opposition a chance to ask some really detailed questions of the ministers and the ministers a chance to give some answers back.

Mr. Speaker, the budget was introduced on March 7, and there's been plenty of time to debate its merits. I think that it is important that we've had debate on the interim supply bill, we've had debate on the budget, we've had debate on estimates, and we're having three debates on the appropriation bill.

I'd like to also say that, you know, there's been no direction from the Official Opposition on the number of speakers they wanted to speak to the bill. I can say to you that even last night there was opportunity for another Liberal and NDP member to speak to that bill, and . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. I asked government members to not interject when opposition was raising its points. Now I'm going to ask Wildrose opposition and other opposition members: please don't interject when the government is speaking. It's got to be good for the goose, good for the gander, and that whole story.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, please continue.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To argue that the use of available standing orders to manage the flow of work in the Legislature can be subject to a question of privilege is the same as arguing that the government's use of majority vote is an abuse of privilege. There is a process to change the standing orders, but until they are changed, they will as written guide the efficient operation of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I want to leave you with this. It's one thing to say that something is undemocratic because you didn't have your say, but it's another thing to say that something is undemocratic because you didn't get your way. In this case I think that's where we are today, and I would suggest that there is no point of privilege.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. We've now heard from, in fact, all House leaders or deputy House leaders.

The purported question of privilege is actually a continuation of something that started in this House yesterday afternoon, April 23, during second reading in the debate on Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013. At that time, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview rose under Standing Order 15(5) to raise a purported question of privilege on this same issue, which is now being raised by a different member, in this case the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Yesterday's discussion of this issue can be found at pages 1952 and 1953 of Alberta Hansard. Because it was raised yesterday and I was anticipating it coming forward today, albeit not by this member – nonetheless, the issue I was anticipating coming forward – I had the benefit of one full night to think about it and one full day or thereabouts to consider a decision on it after I had heard the comments, of course.

With respect to the protocols and procedures notice of the purported question of privilege was in fact provided to my office by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona this morning at approximately 10:50, which means the member did meet the requirement of Standing Order 15(2). The basis of the purported question of privilege that was raised yesterday and which has now been reiterated here today is that the member's ability to perform her duties is being interfered with because debate, in her view, was limited on Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013.

Yesterday's exchange on this matter and the discussion that we've just heard here today suggests that some members are alleging that their right to free speech or their opportunity to speak in this Assembly is being called into question. But I want to be very clear that members in this Assembly are in fact allowed to say anything they want here as long as they do it within the rules of this Assembly and/or within the practices and guidelines, that I've cited many times and which many of you have no doubt read, that come from other established practice books.

In the context of the comments about the rights and privileges of free speech of members let me start, first, by referring you to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, page 308, where it states the following:

The right to freedom of speech is not, however, absolute; there are restrictions imposed by the House on its Members, derived from practice, convention, and the rules agreed to by the House. For example, the Standing Orders provide for time limits on speeches.

And it goes on. In fact, a little later on page 308 it says the following:

The duty of the Speaker is to ensure that the right of Members to free speech is protected and exercised to the fullest possible extent; this is accomplished in part by ensuring that the rules and practices of the House are applied and that order and decorum are maintained.

The same point is found in Beauchesne's, sixth edition, at paragraph 77, which states the following:

Freedom of speech does not mean that Members have an unlimited or unrestrained right to speak on every issue. The rules of the House impose limits on the participation of Members and it is the duty of the Speaker to restrain those who abuse the rules.

Let us be reminded about those rules. In particular and as just one example, the time allocated to debate on an appropriation bill is limited by Standing Order 64, which all of you would know, because it sets a deadline for the vote. In fact, Bill 20, the subject of this purported point of privilege, is an appropriation bill. Hon. members, rules such as Standing Order 64 are, in fact, the rules that you as members have set for yourselves in order to conduct business in this Assembly.

Now, I am very sympathetic to the views expressed by Edmonton-Strathcona and by Edmonton-Centre and, for that matter, by Airdrie, and I certainly am not discounting the views of the deputy House leader either. These are all good, solid, valued, principled views that they have all expressed. In fact, I would encourage everyone to read through that Hansard and hear what these members have said about the role of opposition and about the role of rules and how we're all bound to abide by them, because there's valuable information.

You can tell by the way a member stands up and presents a point of privilege or a point of order or chimes in with comments from him- or herself as to how much dedicated research went into that preparation. As Airdrie said, there's always something to be learned from that. Sometimes we can learn from his comments as well. There's a lot to be learned when House leaders of government stand up. There are things that we can all learn from each other.

I am sympathetic to what was said. I listened very carefully to it, and I reviewed it all in my mind last night as well, what was said yesterday. Standing orders, as Edmonton-Centre said, are our rules; we've all agreed to abide by them, or words to that effect. In this instance the standing order that we're asked to abide by was followed. It was not violated. Now, members can argue and they did argue that they don't like the wording of that or they don't like the application of it or they don't like the net effect of what comes out of a standing order that has what is frequently referred to as a guillotine vote capability. So I am sympathetic to that.

I'm also sympathetic to the fact, as I think the deputy House leader said or as has been said on similar debate in the past, that decisions do have to be made in this House and that rules exist for those decisions to be facilitated, whether we like it or not.

The rules governing the length of debate, the frequency of speakers who participate in that debate, and how long each member can speak: all of these rules are important, and all of these points are important. In considering the importance of these rules of debate and frequency and so on, we also have to remember that debates simply cannot go on endlessly. We would never arrive at any decisions. Think about that. That's why we have them.

I am persuaded by comments of fairness, by comments pertaining to common sense, and I am also well aware of how the decision-making process works both inside this Chamber and outside it. It's not infrequent for opposition members to disagree on some of the House rules. They may not have gotten it their way, and sometimes government doesn't get it their way either.

Someone mentioned the point of rules being negotiated. Indeed, they are negotiated. They are debated. They are thoroughly vetted through caucus mechanisms. They are vetted and debated by House leaders and deputy House leaders and their representatives and the whips, and the leaders chime in sometimes with their own people, so it's not infrequent that there would be differing points of view on that. In fact, that is one reason why I allowed a considerable amount of time to occur. We had a lot of healthy discussion here. The first speaker took nine minutes, the second speaker took 15 minutes, and the third speaker took some time less than that. The fourth speaker took even less time. Obviously, I didn't note it down. That's a considerable amount of time. Nonetheless, a lot of points were raised.

In my view, this matter is something that ought to be sorted out by the House leaders when they next meet to discuss and debate our standing orders, which are de facto our standing orders, our rules. Edmonton-Strathcona, you spoke. Edmonton-Centre, you spoke. Airdrie, you spoke. The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations spoke. You are all House leaders privy to those meetings.

The points you have raised from the opposition side are extremely important to the functioning of democracy, extremely important. I would ask government members to pay attention to what has been said here so that you can somehow alleviate the concerns that the opposition members have. I'm going to side with the opposition on that point of having those items addressed by you because opposition's role in this democracy is to hold the government to account, and the rules by which they are asked to abide may not favour them all the time. They don't favour government all the time either, but there is always room for some improvement. I'm going to read those points again because I enjoyed the way that most of them were presented.

However, in the end there is no prima facie question of privilege at this time, and pursuant to Standing Order 15(7) that concludes this matter. We will now move on to the understanding that, please, members, I ask you to review all of what was just said in the last 45, 50 minutes of debate in this Chamber.

Let us move on to points of order. Hon. Member for Airdrie, you had the first point of order at 2:01. Proceed with your citation and your point, please.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first point of order, the point of order you referred to, is under 23, specifically (h), (i), and (j), but particularly (l), "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." The Finance minister in debate today specifically said of the $17 billion in debt that we referred to, which is the debt for borrowing for capital and so forth, that some of that money, some of that debt that we were referring to was money being lent to municipalities. He clearly said that. Now, that was a flat-out false assertion. There is no other way to put it.

I refer the Speaker to the budget, page 135 of the fiscal plan. It is very clearly laid out that the Alberta Capital Finance Authority right now has liabilities of roughly $15 billion. That is the fund for the liability that includes money that is lent or that the municipalities use to borrow, that the government allows them to do, essentially cosigns for. That is very clear.

If you go down a couple of lines to liabilities for capital projects, you'll see alternative financing and direct borrowing. As you can see, this year that totals just over about 4 and a half billion dollars. Then that rises to just over $8 billion this year, and then by 2016, as we referred to, it equals just barely under $17 billion. That's what we referred to in this House.

When the minister stands here and says something that is patently false and knows that because it is in his own budget – and I've heard him belittle members of the opposition over and over and over again for not doing their homework, for not understanding the budget documents. You guys are fools; you obviously have no training. That is what I've heard him say many times, essentially paraphrasing. Then he comes into this House and says something that is so categorically untrue and accuses this member, meaning the Leader of the Opposition, saying that by railing against or by being against the $17 billion in debt that is being taken out for liabilities for capital projects as per this document, she is somehow limiting what one of her towns, Okotoks, can do when borrowing for their capital projects. It's absolutely false.

Mr. Speaker, they talk a lot about scary over there. What is scary is a Finance minister that does not understand his own budget document or wilfully ignores it and says something that's categorically untrue. That is what happened here. That should not be a practice. When we ask a question in question period, we should get a truthful answer or at least some kind of an answer but not something that is in direct conflict with the document that the minister in charge has put on the table. That is not appropriate in this House, and I'd ask him to clarify and withdraw that comment and apologize for misleading.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess it doesn't surprise me that there's a little bit of confusion because the opposition has consistently said in this House and outside of this House that we are going back in debt, that we are going to incur $17 billion worth of debt. The hon. member is absolutely correct, and I would point him to page 141 of the document that he was referring to, where it shows that in the out years we're going to borrow about $12 billion, 12 and a half billion for capital projects, not $17 billion. It does rise to that because we have debt from the past. We were in debt before. We can't go back into debt if we were in debt before.

You know, I can understand how this is starting to confuse Albertans because the opposition refuses to tell the facts to Albertans when they go out into their town halls and some of the places that they go to. I was a little confused about where the $17 billion came from, so I assumed – and one should never assume, Mr. Speaker – that he was referring to the capital debt that we're going to incur and some portion of the advancing of loans that we're going to incur, because those numbers roughly add up to about $17 billion, too, in the next three-year business plan. And we can talk about last night when the hon. member actually introduced an amendment to Bill 12 that would have cancelled all borrowing, which would have meant that the Alberta Capital Finance Authority would not be able to use the government of Alberta's guarantee, actually wouldn't be able to function, frankly.

I would point to and will table at the appropriate time the town of Okotoks' notes to consolidated financial statements, page 11, where it states that when 25 and a half million dollars worth of principal and interest is repayable, "debenture debt is repayable to Alberta Capital Finance Authority," which is us, which is part of the borrowing we've done and will do in the future.

So if the hon. member would like to clarify that we are not going back in debt but adding $12.5 billion worth of debt and some debt for on-lending to farmers, customers of ATB, municipalities in his riding and his leader's riding, then I'd be happy, Mr. Speaker, to apologize for being confused about what the heck they're talking about. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where we're going with that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you know, we're getting more and more points of order from both sides here that are more points of clarification and so on. I don't mean to make light of it at all, but I don't know how many times I've stood and said that these points of order that are raised – I can't stop them from being raised, nor would I want to, but they do offer a chance for people to clarify their positions. I noted both speakers just now referred to different pages of a particular document for clarification and understanding and perhaps for definitions as to what is debt, what isn't debt, when did somebody go into debt, when did it start, when will it end, and whatever else.

There are various citations I could read, but I think I'm just going to stop here and say that there is no point of order, but I did appreciate the points of clarification that both sides have now had a chance to utter, and I'm not going to take more time on that.

Let us move on to item 2. A point of order was raised at 2:11 p.m., and that point of order was raised by the hon. Government House Leader. I wonder if there is a Deputy Government House Leader that wishes to speak to this.

Point of Order

Questions outside Ministerial Responsibility

Mr. Campbell: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief. This is in reference to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View asking a question to the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, the Associate Minister of AT and T. Basically, the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View maligned the minister by trying to put a question to him that he knows full well is within the purview of Municipal Affairs. I'd look under Standing Orders 23(h) and (j) as my citations. I'd also look at the House of Commons, 503, "make a charge by way of a preamble." Mr. Speaker, I'd also look at Beauchesne's, page 120, 409(1), where it's very clear. "It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion" or argumentative.

Mr. Speaker, the member asked a question to the Associate Minister of AT and T really about his advocacy for his constituency, not about his ministerial responsibilities, and I suggest that by doing so, he maligned the member by calling into question his actions representing his constituency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. deputy House leader for the Wildrose.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure where the hon. member is coming from. The point of order was called on the third question, and the third question was to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I'm not sure if he's got the wrong information. That just simply wasn't the case. I have the quote here. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why is it that not one red cent of that additional $16 million in education tax is actually going back to the community to help with education?

Of course, when the opposition asks questions, the government has the opportunity to have any minister answer that question. In this case the Minister of AT and T decided to sit in his chair and not answer it and not be accountable. Instead, the Minister of Municipal Affairs decided to answer it.

There's absolutely no point of order. The references that he refers to – I'm not even sure if he mentioned the citations in the standing orders. There's just no point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, thank you both for being brief. Clearly, there's no point of order here. But just for purposes of clarity the point of order was raised right around 2:11 p.m. this afternoon, and it was during the third question; in other words, the second supplementary question. The Minister of Human Services rose when the person asking the question, Chestermere-Rocky View, said something to the effect of Fort McMurray being left in the lurch. I have partial Blues here, and that's what prompted the minister to rise, according to my recollections.

However, let us just be careful what we impute one way and the other and move on to the next point of order because there is no point of order here.

Hon. members, the third point of order was with respect to Edmonton-Centre, who raised a point of order during the third answer given by the Minister of Service Alberta. She has indicated that she is withdrawing that point of order only because she had to attend to some other urgency. However, I have the Blues from then, and I would just explain a brief cautionary point here to both the minister and to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, to be careful in our speeches to not impute any motives about people working for or at the behest of others or suggesting something untoward. Although she didn't ask me to raise it, in her absence I do raise it only because of that purpose. So let it be known that officially that point has been withdrawn but with that cautionary note from me, please.

Item 4 on the point of order list is from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills or someone on behalf of.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll rise on this point of order. Again, it's Standing Order 23, specifically

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

You know, on this side of the House the Member for Medicine Hat asked a question about a policy that he feels and I think the majority of us on this side of the House feel is going to hurt persons with disabilities. It's going to be harmful to them and to their future. That's a policy. We're saying that the policy is going to hurt people, and that's why we want it reversed.

Now, the minister then replied with a personal attack, saying that we on this side of the House have a dated view of persons with developmental disabilities, that his comments were belittling and essentially dismissing those with developmental disabilities and their ability to be a part of society to work and so forth. I don't have the exact Blues quote – hopefully, you can read it – but that's what was said.

Emotions run high in here, so perhaps this is a way of getting this off our chest. As someone who has an autistic son and a brother with a developmental disability who's looking for work right now, I really have a problem with personal attacks on either side saying that individuals do not care or belittling individuals or that individuals don't understand persons with developmental disabilities.

We can have policy disagreements. There's no doubt about that. But to come into the House and say that to people on this side, to demonize them – that's what it is. People who are callous and cold towards people with developmental disabilities are not good people, so to state that flat out is not only imputing false motives but is very likely to create disorder, especially with those who have very close loved ones with those types of disabilities.

Perhaps the best thing to do is to clarify for this member for the future that I can guarantee him that if a Wildrose government is elected in 2016 . . . [interjection] You can laugh about it, but I'll tell you one thing. We will treat people with developmental disabilities better than you have ever treated them. Do you want to know what we'll do? We'll make sure that instead of spending $350 million on MLA offices, we'll put it on the front lines to those individuals who need it the most. That's what we'll do.

I would hope that we could have a policy disagreement on things and not have to resort to saying to members opposite and across the way that we don't care about people with developmental disabilities and their ability to function in society. That is absolute garbage, and it's uncalled for. We want to have a policy debate – that's good – but please do not demean us in that way.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's most interesting that the hon. Member for Airdrie would continually rise on a point of order about inflammatory language and then use an argument about whether or not they're going to win the 2016 election to make a point of order. That's nonsense. Let's just dial it back a little bit here, and let's explain what happened.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat expressed an opinion. Whether it was his opinion or an expert's is not clear to me, but that's irrelevant. The opinion was that disabled persons are not going to be able to be employed. That's the way I interpreted that. I think I've got the quote very close. I said: I will chastise that hon. member for his jaded point of view. Something very close to that. I reacted passionately because I very strongly disagree with that statement, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that we have an employment rate of about 18 per cent in our disabled community in Alberta. Washington state has an employment rate of 70 per cent. So that statement, whether it came from that hon. member or an expert, is wrong, and that's why I reacted to it.

However, Mr. Speaker, I was passionate because I actually agree with the Member for Airdrie in his passionate statement about persons with disabilities. It is never ever my intention to offend the practices and proceedings of this House, and if that language is in any way unparliamentary, I freely withdraw it. Furthermore, if it offends the sensibilities of that hon. member, whom I clearly called an hon. member and believe, I'm also quite willing to withdraw it.

In doing so, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to issue a plea that I very, very much hope that the hon. Member for Airdrie will support. I think I heard in the preamble to that question and I know I've heard in other preambles to questions about this topic in this House the use of the words "these people." That harkens back to an offensive time for me, and I'm going to call a point of order the next time I hear it. That should not happen. When you refer to a group of people as these people or those people, I think the hon. Member for Airdrie would understand that that's offensive. Maybe he doesn't, but I will call a point of order the next time I hear it.

I freely withdraw my comments, and I apologize to the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, who's working very hard on behalf of his constituents, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Issues pertaining to persons with developmental disabilities or any kind of disabilities or to people who are down in their luck for other reasons: they are very special people indeed. They deserve the utmost of respect. We've heard two very good statements given here. The associate minister has withdrawn his comments and apologized for them. That's a very good move, hon. member. Thank you.

With that, we're going to move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 12 Fiscal Management Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I must say that it's a pleasure to stand and move this amendment to Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, to improve government transparency. I have the original and requisite number of copies for the Assembly.

The Chair: The pages will circulate that, so if you'd just give us a minute or two and then you can speak to the amendment, hon. member. This would be amendment A7.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, be amended in section 10 by striking out subsection (3) and replacing it with the following:

- (3) A business plan must include the following:
  - (a) the mission, core business, and goals of the Government . . . or agency;
  - (b) the measures to be used in assessing the performance of the Government [ministry] . . . or agency in achieving . . . [its] goals; and
  - (c) the performance targets set by the Government [ministry] . . . or agency in achieving . . . [its] goals.
- (4) The business plans must be made public at the same time as the responsible Minister makes the fiscal plan public.

Since being elected last April 23, I've heard this government continually speak to the importance of transparency but continually fail to put those intentions into legislation. This is extremely pronounced in the weakness of the legislation that the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation brought forward with the government's whistle-blower legislation. I and the Wildrose believe that this is not good enough. Transparency needs to be law. The act must mandate what needs to be reported in ministry business plans. Sunlight is the best of disinfectants, Mr. Chair.

In second reading of Bill 12 I spoke to the complete repeal of the Government Accountability Act, which is what is happening under the Fiscal Management Act. When that Government Accountability Act was passed – it was passed in 1995 – it was the envy of the rest of our nation. We were the first – let me repeat that, the first – province in Canada to adopt a publicly reported results-based performance measure framework into our budgeting process. The act was designed to improve accountability between civil servants, elected officials, the government, and the citizens of Alberta.

Mr. Chair, according to the Taxpayers Federation and Mr. Derek Fildebrandt "repealing the Government Accountability Act will gut the most important accountability measures required by law. This will leave taxpayers without the most basic information required to know what their government is up to." He goes on to say, "In theory, the government could present its entire budget on the back of a napkin with these massively reduced requirements in Bill 12."

Mr. Chair, it is for this reason that I put forward this amendment in the exact language the Klein government used and thought important for government transparency. I want to make sure for my constituents and all Albertans that all future budgets will be presented in an accountable and transparent manner. Retaining this section of the Government Accountability Act, which this government now wants to repeal, will ensure that in future provincial budgets there will continue to be a qualitative and quantitative measure that has been designed to assess performance against goals.

Without clearly articulated measurable . . . performance expectations, there will never be sustained improvement in government programs and services.

Effective decision-making in our democracy requires that Albertans have access to all the information in a reasonable, recognizable, and responsive format . . . It is never good for democracy when citizens question the authenticity and the accuracy of any government document, which inevitably leads to the perception that their government as a whole has failed them.

Mr. Chair, we have the opportunity here today to make sure that this doesn't happen. We can ensure that this direction from Klein's Government Accountability Act lives on in this new act, the Fiscal Management Act. Let's make sure there is a continuation of this positive impact of publicly reporting on government's performance, which has enhanced our transparency, strengthened accountability, and provided measurable and visible motivation for civil servants to improve services and programs for Alberta's citizens. Let's continue to improve the transparency of our democracy, not retreat into the opaque reporting requirements of budgets in past generations like Bill 12 will do.

Hon. members, please support this amendment rather than completely throwing away the Government Accountability Act, that was passed in 1995. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Finance, President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know, we could put in there how many pages it should be. We could put in there how many pictures there should be, kind of like their budget. It has more pictures than pages. We could put in there things that are somewhat, I would suggest to you, common sense in terms of a business plan.

I would put Budget 2013 on the table to say that all of the things that the hon. member is looking for are part of the fiscal plan. They're part of the business plans. They are what a business plan is. In fact, the business plan has to be prepared for each fiscal year for all of the government agencies for that period and at least two subsequent periods. The major economic assumptions have to be made and prepared in that fiscal plan, including a comment on the effect that changes in those assumptions may have on the finances of the government in the fiscal years to which fiscal plan relates.

The mission, core business, and goals of the government are still going to be in our three-year business plans, the ministry annual reports, and the government-wide performance report Measuring Up, which has never been in legislation. It's something we do as part of our policy and our core business, so putting it into the legislation, Mr. Chairman, every time the Finance minister wanted to change some format in terms of the mission or the core – all of the information is there. For the hon. member to suggest that the information is not there or even for the Canadian Taxpayers Federation to suggest that the information is not there is not correct. It is in the business plan and will continue to be in the business plan.

So, no, I'm not going to support the amendment as proposed.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't understand why you're now having the idea of voting against the Government Accountability Act. I mean, this was an act that was passed in this Legislature by a PC government. It was a communication tool for that government. Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, is a tool that does nothing more now than bring smoke and mirrors back into Alberta politics.

At the basic level the Government Accountability Act put into the provincial budget a quantitative and qualitative measure designed to assess performance against goals. Those were words that were used to describe that act by the PC government of that day. Why vote against it now? What's wrong with that wording? Let's bring it back. It was a very, very good piece of legislation, so why throw the baby out with the bathwater, Mr. Chair?

Mr. Horner: Well, hon. member, the rhetoric all sounds good, but the reality is that what we're doing is combining two acts, not getting rid of one. We're combining two acts into the Fiscal Management Act. It's going to implement all of the government policy decisions related to changes in the current fiscal framework. We're adding a savings policy. That wasn't in the other act; we're putting it into this one. We're blending them together. We're changing the debt ceiling, the way that we now have it. It wasn't in the other acts; now we're putting it in. Those are good things, hon. member.

Just to say that you're going to have a mission statement embedded in the budget or business plan – you can't tell me that that's your core value. Your core value is that you want financial information that's clear and concise, you want people to be able to read and understand what you're presenting in terms of those expenses, and you want people to understand what you're borrowing, what you're saving. All of those pieces are the core values, not the fluff that you're talking about.

I won't be supporting the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to remind the hon. minister of the debt retirement account that existed prior to Bill 12.

Now, section 10(3) right now reads, "The business plans must be in the form determined by the Treasury Board and must be made public at the same time as the responsible Minister makes the fiscal plan public." This doesn't state what must be in those business plans. This other language, this language that the Klein government wrote, states what must be contained in those business plans. I see no reason why we need to throw that away. That was very good language. That was very clear and concise language about what the government must report to the citizens of Alberta. They need to be the ones who make the decision on whether or not it's a good budget.

It's not up to the minister or to the government to decide what performance measures should be used in reporting on that. It should be, as it was in the other legislation, clear and transparent and put forward in a manner that Albertans could recognize, make a decision on, and judge the government on. This new wording, "business plans must be in the form determined by the Treasury Board and must be made public at the same time as the responsible Minister makes the fiscal plan public," to me means that you can change how it's going to be reported whenever you want.

Now, with Bill 12, that's what this is putting forward. The old act, the Government Accountability Act, the act passed by the Klein government in 1995, made a change to that. Rather than have the Treasury Board decide, it was put into legislation so that everybody understood what was coming and what would be in that plan before it was released.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member says that his complaint is that the government is going to be able to say what's in the plan. Yet his amendment says that the government is going to state what the mission is, that the government is going to state what the core businesses are, that the government is going to state what measures are going to be used, and that the government is going to set the performance targets. The opposition isn't going to set the performance targets. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation isn't going to set the performance targets. He's saying that government is going to do all this. Well, that's what we do, and we will be doing that in a format that will be legible, easy for Albertans to understand, and will contain all of the information that is pertinent, as is the document that is before this House today. It has the environmental outlook. It has the capital plan. It has the savings plan. It has the operational plan. It has the overview. There is the Measuring Up document.

Hon. member, the performance plans and targets that we do are not part of a step-by-step legislative process where we have to set out the number of pages and those sorts of things. You're asking if the government is going to do it. Of course the government is going to do it. That's what the government does. Even in your amendment the government does it all.

So, no, I'm not going to accept the amendment.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. I just wanted to comment very briefly on this issue. I think that the issue here, of course, is trying to improve accountability and limit the opportunity for the public relations department of the government, with all due respect to the public relations department, to come up with the kind of language that they've been using as a means of suggesting that they've met their goals, like: we're going to collaborate, and we're going to work towards the future; that's what we said that we were going to do when we said it, and now we're doing it. That's all they ever say. Then, of course, it means nothing when you actually try to dissect or analyze the pablum that is coming out of the Conservative message box these days.

Just looking through the business plan right now – the minister says that it's already in the business plan – I have to say that I'm not convinced that they're actually meeting the objectives that he suggests they are. There are a number of elements in the business plan where the performance measures are not given on an annual basis. They might be given every two or three years at this point. It's very discretionary.

As well, we have instances where in the Ministry of Human Services you have on one hand – I mean, I really just don't know where they come up with these things. The goal is that vulnerable Albertans are protected and supported in times of need, and then one of the performance measures is about percentage of children and youth who received child intervention after their file was closed. The question is: well, how many files are closed? Really, the issue is: how many children are being subject to abuse, and what are the measures of that, and is that going up or down? How many children are using the food bank right now, and is that going up or down?

So for the performance measures that currently exist, I would suggest that you actually have legislation like this so that we could decide whether, in fact, a reasonable person would actually suggest that what has been produced here amounts to a performance measure. That might be a good thing. Perhaps having legislation would promote a practice within government to say that, well, let's just put on our objective hat here and say: does this thing we put in here actually amount to a performance measure of the goal that we just outlined? In fact, you can probably go through a third of the items in this business plan and find that there's very little connection to the goal they've identified and the performance measure they put out there. Percentage of clients who feel that getting a little bit of money improved their life a bit: really? That's a performance measure? I mean, it's all of these sorts of subjective satisfaction measures. Those aren't performance measures, for heaven's sake, Mr. Chair, and I think the minister knows that.

You know, I'm looking at one that says that a priority initiative is to work with partners. It's this lovely collaboration word. Apparently, a Conservative cabinet minister cannot get up in the morning without repeating their collaboration mantra to themselves in front of the mirror for 10 minutes before taking off to potentially talk to media in the future. Nonetheless, we're going to collaborate with communities and stakeholders so that opportunities are created for Albertans to succeed, and through that, our priority is going to be that we're going to eliminate child poverty. Then you get down to performance measures, and it's the percentage of AISH clients who believe that their benefits help them live more independently. Really? I mean, one is hardly a performance measure of the other.

Perhaps if this amendment were passed, there would be an obligation for there to be a rational connection between the goals which the government puts out in its press releases and the performance measures to which it holds itself accountable.

That's all. Thank you.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member just made my point. This amendment doesn't speak to the quality of the measures or anything else. We can have a good debate about the quality of the measures. The measurements that the hon. member was just complaining about are the measurements that this basic amendment would put back in in terms of the legislative requirement. I don't disagree that we should have robust discussion about the measurements and how we measure and the targets, but this amendment would not solve the concern that the hon. member has just put on the floor.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: I can't help it. It's so much fun when we get to have a bit of a debate, but I'll be brief. I guess my argument is that, in theory, if there is an obligation in legislation for there to be a goal and an associated performance measure, there might actually be an objective forum; for instance, in an administrative review application in front of a judge, where the judge would actually be asked to render a reasonable, objective decision on whether one is a reasonable performance measure of the other.

Right now, with it just saying that it's up to the government, well, no objective observer is ever going to wade into it because the legislation clearly says that it's up to the government to do whatever it wants.

The Chair: Are there others?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the bill. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment that I'll circulate.

The Chair: That amendment shall be A8. If you would circulate that through the pages, please, and give us half a minute. Then I'll let you speak to it, hon. member.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment refers to Bill 12, section 13. If you turn to section 13 right now, you will see that it's talking about the ministry annual reports. What this amendment does is add a subsection after subsection (4) which would say:

(5) In addition to the requirements of this section, ministry annual reports must incorporate any changes to format, timing and content recommended by the Auditor General or state explicitly in the report why the Auditor General's recommendations have not been adopted.

Now, I think that this is a very reasonable amendment. I think that what this is meant to do is that if the Auditor General comes back and says that there's something missing from these annual reports or that there's something that needs to be added to these annual reports for clarity purposes or whatever or to comply with accounting principles, whatever the Auditor General might think, this government will make sure that they will incorporate those recommendations from the Auditor General. I think that this is very important.

I think we're seeing an example of it now. There was just a letter written by our colleague from Calgary-Buffalo asking for the Auditor General to examine whether the government had complied with its legislation when they put Budget 2013 forward, to see if the consolidated financial statements and budget, et cetera, were prepared in accordance with generally accepted principles that could be understood by Albertans.

Now, it may be that he comes back and says: yes, they have been. Certainly, we've heard from the Canadian Taxpayers Federation and we've heard from many others who have said that they don't think that that's the case. If the Auditor General were to – of course, this is speculative – come back and say, "We've got some problems here; you need to include this; you need to change your report" or consolidated statements or whatever, such and such, "in order to comply with generally accepted accounting principles" or whatever, what have you, this amendment would make it incumbent upon the government to adopt that recommendation and implement that recommendation.

I think that this is a good safeguard. I think it's actually good for the government, too, because it allows the government to show that it's willing to be transparent, that it's willing to abide by an outside, third-party, independent source when it comes to ensuring that the consolidated documents and annual reports are indeed up to snuff and up to standard. This would be something that as chair of the Public Accounts Committee I think would be very helpful.

We work very closely in the Public Accounts Committee, and there are many members in this House on all sides who work with that committee that are dedicated to making sure that the recommendations of the Auditor General are implemented. We spend most of our time in that committee doing that. We think that it's important. The Auditor General, in my view and, I'm sure, in most views, is one of the most if not the most important officers of the Legislative Assembly, and his recommendations certainly should be given the utmost weight. That's why I like the idea that if the Auditor General says, "Look, something is missing here to make this a truly transparent document," why not implement it? I think that that would be very important.

I would say, too, that we did originally want to introduce a budget officer. We got a letter from the Calgary Chamber of Commerce outlining their idea for a provincial budget office, and it's very well worded and a very good argument. It specifically says that we should have a third party, essentially, to audit or be able to make sure that the numbers that the government is putting out there are indeed accurate, that they aren't playing around with the numbers, being a little bit too rosy or underrosy. The provincial budget officer would guard against that.

Now, I've heard the minister say that we don't need that because we've got an Auditor General. Okay. Great. I still think it would be good to have a budget officer. But if we have the Auditor General, if that's what the minister has said and he trusts that that budget officer is unnecessary because we have an Auditor General, then let's put it into law. If the Auditor General comes with a recommendation that says that the government needs to alter or incorporate any changes to format, timing, or content, et cetera, that should be added.

Let's be clear. This doesn't bind the government. We're not saying that you don't have any flexibility here. It specifically says at the end that they can either accept those recommendations or state explicitly in the report why the AG's recommendations have not been adopted. It doesn't bind the government's hands. It gives them the ability to say that if they feel something is just so outrageous, which would probably be very rare – but let's say that it happened – they can say: no, we didn't do it, and we didn't do it because of X, Y, and Z.

I think that this would be a good amendment, and I hope that the members opposite would support it.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Interesting, interesting amendment. I went to the budget documents, and I went to the tab titled Response to the Auditor General. In the response to the Auditor General's package of the plan, which is something that we do as a matter of course in response to the Auditor General's recommendations, which come from the report of the Auditor General of Alberta, which are done every year and which we have to reply to, there are Auditor General's recommendations on Transportation, on inspector confirmation, on timeliness and completion, on Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, on Executive Council, on Treasury Board and Finance. The Auditor General has made recommendations as it relates to Treasury Board and Finance, as it relates to AIMCo.

You know, interestingly enough, Mr. Chairman, as part of the response to the Auditor General's recommendation we as the government have to put our response right there, right next to it in the column. The reality is: why would you put one clause into the Fiscal Management Act that relates to one thing when you have all of these other recommendations? The Auditor General is perfectly free and, I would also say, very willing to put recommendations as to how our format may have crossed the line of the legislation. I would add that when the previous letter went to the Auditor General saying that we had violated the act in some sense in terms of our quarterly reporting, he came back and said: "No, you hadn't. You didn't." There are no recommendations that we have violated anything in this report from the Auditor General.

I would also say to the hon. members opposite that if the Auditor General gave us a recommendation as to format, timing, content, or that ministry reports should incorporate any changes – he's the Auditor – then we're going to have our government response in the response to the report of the Auditor General. You wouldn't put it in the legislation and have it as a one-off item, Mr. Chairman. Therefore, we cannot accept this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Again, very briefly, I need to rise in support of this amendment. Again, just trying to use examples, I think of recommendations by the Auditor General on the effectiveness of and the process around climate change management, climate change emissions, and the climate change program. I think he made some very specific recommendations, and I do not believe that the annual reports of that ministry refer to them consistently or, in many cases, at all. The response of the government that's included in the Auditor General's report often just amounts to simply: working on it. Then it doesn't come back until the Auditor General actually takes the time and uses his very limited resources to specifically highlight it again.

What should be happening is that where the Auditor General outlines that there is a significant departmental problem with implementing a task that the government has committed to, then there should be an obligation for that to remain a feature of the annual report, not just the one time the Auditor General brings it out but every year. Certainly, that's not the practice right now, and this would ensure that it was the practice, so I support the amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Well, actually, hon. member, you might want to read the amendment. It would not ensure that. It would only ensure that if it was a change to format, timing, and content of the report, not whether or not the recommendation was made.

I would also point you to the report, the Auditor General's recommendations and the responses, page 153, Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, the Auditor General's recommendation that the Department of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development improve the reliability, comparability and relevance of its public reporting on Alberta's results and costs incurred in meeting climate change targets.

It's already there, and it's been there every year, hon. member. This amendment would not do what you're asking for.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much. All right. I have another amendment, so we'll distribute it.

The Chair: If you'll have the pages circulate that, hon. member. Give us half a minute.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment, A9 I believe it is, amends section 12(2). In this it's talking about the government annual report and what must be in here.

- (2) The annual report must include for a fiscal year
  - (a) a fiscal plan analysis that includes a statement of
    - (i) the actual operational revenue and actual operational expense,
    - (ii) the debt-servicing costs . . .
    - (iii) the amount of non-renewable resource revenue,
    - (iv) the amount allocated to or from the Contingency Account . . .
    - (v) the prescribed savings,

- (b) a comparison of the actual performance results to the desired results included in the business plan . . . [and] variances,
- (c) the consolidated financial statements of the Province of Alberta.

What (c.1) would do is that it would go under that, “the consolidated financial statements of the Province of Alberta,” and say:

- (c.1) a historical fiscal summary commencing with the 1993-94 fiscal year and for all subsequent fiscal years that includes
  - (i) a breakdown of revenue by source,
  - (ii) a breakdown of operating and capital expense by function, and
  - (iii) a balance sheet including financial assets, capital assets, pension liabilities, and accumulated debt.

I know this Finance minister wants to always follow generally accepted accounting principles. Well, generally accepted accounting principles: if you talk to some accountants, obviously not every accountant, they would say that when you change the way that you report your numbers as a company, you have to alter your historical fiscal summary to report it as it would be if you had always done it that way so that there can be a specific comparison made, so you can compare apples to apples, essentially. If you don't do it that way, then you're comparing apples to oranges because you're doing the books differently one year as opposed to the 20 years before that. So it becomes difficult for people, members of the public in this case and government members and members of the opposition, to compare apples to apples to see whether we're making progress or whether we're going in the wrong direction or whatever.

What this amendment would do is make sure that this document, that is in the fiscal plan this year, the historical fiscal summary that is in the fiscal plan this year – what it would make sure would happen is that we would be able to have another table that would show that historical fiscal summary but would do so using the same methodology that's being used now under the new act for all those years previous to this one. In that way, we could compare apples to apples. When we're debating in this House, we'll be able to figure out exactly what has changed, the size of the operational deficit, a surplus, the size of the capital program, the size of the savings, whatever. It would be, I think, a very good financial practice to be able to do that and give that type of fiscal summary for people to peruse and look over and be able to compare.

That is the amendment in this case.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do recognize where the hon. member is coming from on this one. The change to how we broke down the capital expense by function in actual fact would be a fairly significant exercise by a lot of people, to go back into records to figure out what the capital that was hidden in that operating expense that we didn't pull out before was. It would be a significant undertaking to do that.

I think what we're going to be seeing in the years to come is the benefit of having actual results compared to budgeted and actual operating expense results compared to what we said that we were going to spend on a program or service, not blended with what I've been saying all along was an opportunity to move capital in and out of the expense accounts to change the numbers. I think that change has been a significant component of where we're going for transparency, similar to what municipalities use.

So I would not support putting this into the act. There will be many, I'm sure, in the future that will look at breaking those things down and coming up with the comparators on their own. I would not be averse to that. I wouldn't be averse to going through the exercise, but I would be averse to putting it into the act.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I think you've got some very smart people working in that department. I don't think it would be that hard to do it, and it sounds like you're not opposed to it. So if you're not going to put it in the act, would you at least put it under advisement so that if your department is able to supply that in future summaries, we can compare apples to apples?

Mr. Horner: You know, there may be an opportunity for us to look at utilizing some. I don't know whether we do it as a research project or something like that. I'm not opposed to it, hon. member, but I am opposed to putting it into the act.

The Chair: Are there others?

I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: Are there others to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: I have another amendment.

The Chair: We'll call that one A10, hon. member.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is another amendment. This is in the definitions section under 1(1). What we do here is that we strike out clauses (a) and (b). Now, (a) and (b) under the new act say:

- (a) “actual operational expense” means, with respect to a fiscal year, the actual operational expense of the Government and prescribed Provincial agencies as reported in the fiscal plan analysis for that year, but does not include changes in liabilities respecting pensions;
- (b) “actual operational revenue” means, with respect to a fiscal year, actual revenue of the Government and prescribed Provincial agencies, less . . .

And it goes through and says what things are not going to be included in the revenue.

Now, what this amendment does is that it strikes those and replaces them with:

- (a) “actual expense” means, with respect to a fiscal year, actual expense of the Crown for all purposes as reported in the Government annual report for that year but does not include increases or decreases in liabilities respecting pensions;
- (b) “actual revenue” means, with respect to a fiscal year, actual revenue of the Crown from all sources as reported in the Government annual report for that year.

It then also strikes out “actual operational expenses” wherever it occurs in the act and puts in “actual expense” and strikes out “actual operational revenue” wherever it occurs in the act and substitutes “actual revenue” just to make it consistent with the definitions throughout the act.

The purpose of this. The language being used in this amendment is the exact language of the previous act. It's just going back to the way we reported it last year. Again, this goes back to the fact that it was truly amazing on budget day how many different numbers were out there with regard to the actual size of the deficit, the cash adjustment, the size of the sustainability fund, everything under the sun. Certainly, for the deficit number there were literally a dozen different numbers floating around, including from your own government. I heard with my own ears – unless I was hearing things – that when media asked the government what the actual deficit was, the Finance minister gave a different answer than the associate Finance minister.

Then, of course, the NDs had a number. The Liberals had a number. The Wildrose had a number. They were similar, but they were different. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation came out with a totally different number. CFIB came out with a different number. Then Don Braid had a different number. I mean, it was just all over the map.

That can't be healthy, and I think that that goes back a little bit to what I was saying about how we're now changing the way we report things so that we're not comparing apples to apples anymore, which is why we need that historical summary to be able to do that. I talked about that in the last amendment. But we wouldn't need that at all if we passed this amendment, if we just continued to go on with the way we've reported it.

I can't see the Finance minister saying – he says that there's such harm in doing it that way. I don't see it. We've had some of the best, the most balanced budgets we've ever had using this definition from last year. It gives people an understanding, a better understanding anyway, of what the consolidated deficit or the consolidated surplus is.

I don't think we have any problem with the Finance minister separating out operational, capital, and savings as another document in his budget in the fiscal plan. If he wants to do that in order to put that out there so he can message it how he wants to message his budget and make it even more clear for people, in his view, that's fine. But why change the way that we have done this reporting for decades now? It doesn't make any sense to make that change.

You know, it makes people concerned, frankly, when government starts changing the way that they account for things, the way that they present the budget, the way that they present, particularly, the deficit number. When they start changing the rules around that, that makes people nervous. It makes it look like they're hiding something. Indeed, if you look at the number that the Finance minister and the associate Finance minister gave, they were on the low end. They said: the deficit is this much. Then everybody else was more in the $5 billion to $6 billion range: no, it's this much if you consolidate capital into it.

We can't have that kind of craziness again on budget day. It's uncertain. It's amateurish. We've got to make sure that we have consistency. There may be some investors out there that like the new format, and I'm sure the minister will quote that. But the public, which is who the budget is for mostly, just the general public, were happy with the way it was being done. This definition complied with generally accepted accounting principles. People were happy with it. It worked. People understood it. We would have some disagreements about, you know, that we would try to merge in some expenses that still weren't counted as expenses like capital for provincial infrastructure, but that was just one number. We had back and forth about that, but the general deficit number gave everybody a consistent gauge by which to judge the size of the deficit or the surplus and the finances of the province.

I think that Albertans want us to continue to be consistent, to use that same definition, and not to change the definition in order to frankly hide the size of the deficit. Well, not to hide the size but – what's the word? – to make it more difficult to determine what the true cash adjustment is and what the size of the deficit is. That's very difficult, and it caused a lot of uncertainty. I hope that perhaps – I have a small hope. It's probably a little tiny hope. Okay. Maybe it's not there at all, but I will say that I am hoping this amendment will be accepted.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I'm having a déjà vu moment here because last night we had an amendment – in fact, it was amendment A1, I believe – that the hon. member presented that said that we would have to present “a consolidated expense and revenue balance sheet which includes all capital spending as an expense.” Today we have an amendment which, basically, would do the same thing, which means that he's doing the same thing amendment that this House has already defeated. You know, I'm sure there are some rules around that. You know, I'm not as educated in House rules as the hon. Opposition House Leader, but my guess is that perhaps there's something we might want to check there

The other thing that I did want to say, too – and I know there's another hon. member that wants to comment on this – is that the way that we reported it before included capital in the expense side, which is why there was confusion, which is why, hon. member, you used to bring it up almost all the time. Now you won't have that issue because it's all in – you know, I was kind of doing this for you. When you think about it, we are now showing a more transparent view of the operating expenditures of this government. I could have risen on a point of order, Mr. Chairman, when he was suggesting that I was trying to hide what the deficit was. Totally untrue.

In fact, I pointed out not only to the journalists and the Canadian Taxpayers Federation the calculation that we used to do, which is still there. It's simply the difference between the change of our net financial assets. That's all it was. It's still there. You can still figure it out. So there was no, I guess, confusion on our side. But it was because of all of those other numbers where people are trying to turn it into a cash-required deficit, which includes money that you would have put into savings, versus what is an accounting deficit of operating revenue over operating expenditures, which is what we have today.

So, no, I can't accept an amendment, which we defeated in this House yesterday, presented in a different format today, which I believe is against the rules. The Clerk might want to comment on that. I'm also going to say no to this amendment for the same reasons that I said no to it yesterday.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Chair. There's no question that these are complex matters, and there's no question that a $40 billion budget is a complex thing. However, Bill 12, this document, over time will be better understood, quite frankly, than the financial statements that have been released by the government in the past. There is a bit of a transition period. There's no question.

I would like to just say – and I support everything the minister just said. Of course, that's a puffball statement. [interjection] It's not a puffball question; it's a puffball statement. Mr. Chair, deficit is to operating as funded is to capital. Simply, what's happening here is that the operational expenses are really what is associated with deficit, and capital is the word "funded." To use the word "deficit" with respect to capital is nonsensical in the accounting world. Therefore, this is going to make things much clearer.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A10.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo I've got an amendment, which I will circulate.

The Chair: We'll refer to that one as A11, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you.

The Chair: Proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The purpose of the amendment is somewhat similar to the previous amendment. It's to establish clear taxpayer information rights in relation to the act. We're proposing that every citizen has the right to:

- (a) know how their tax dollars are spent;
- (b) expect the Government to conform to generally accepted accounting principles in preparing any documents under this Act;
- (c) expect the Government to report on the province's finances in a clear, straightforward and unambiguous manner.

The motivation is that Bill 12 fundamentally changes the way government administers and reports on the province's finances. One of the key features of the new legislation is that the government will now be required to have a distinct operational plan, a distinct savings plan, and a distinct capital plan as part of its overall annual fiscal plan.

In creating these new, quote, fiscal management structures, end quote, as the Premier calls them, the government is reversing the Klein-era restrictions on debt and deficit, relaxing financial reporting requirements, and ultimately demanding less accountability and transparency from the Minister of Finance.

The new process also makes direct comparisons to previous budget estimates much more challenging and, as we saw with Budget 2013, leads to multiple and contradictory ways for the province's actual deficit and debt numbers to be calculated.

I appreciate that I wasn't here last evening, and the minister has already said that there was some repetition, so I'll put it to the minister to comment on whether there is sufficient difference between this and the most recent amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. minister, I take it you've got a copy of the amendment?

Mr. Horner: I do. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I note that in the amendment it says that the act would "expect the Government to conform to generally accepted accounting principles in preparing any documents." I would not accept the amendment because we also have to adhere to the public-sector accounting principles, which in some cases are actually different than GAAP. In some cases, as we'll see in the near future, our Auditor General is actually on the committee of the public-sector accounting groups.

There are different ways that we deal with depreciation, different ways that we deal with capital and capital amortization. There are different ways that revenue is actually recorded in the public sector versus generally accepted accounting, but because we are a public entity, we must adhere, in my view, to what our Auditor General is going to tell us, which could actually violate this, which would be unfortunate. I would not want to do that. Therefore, I'm not going to. In addition to the fact that it is a given that by the nature of the general business plans that we're doing – the savings plan, the capital plan – the whole intent of this new framework, as I think I heard the hon. member say, is to be transparent and to provide that, this would be redundant in terms of putting it into the act.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A11.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Chair: Again, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo an amendment.

The Chair: This will be amendment A12, hon. member.

Proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: The purpose of this amendment, an addition to section 16.1, is to commit the Legislative Assembly to a review of Alberta's tax revenues within one year of the act coming into force. The three items to be included in the review are all from the Alberta Liberal fiscal platform, including (a) the feasibility and benefits of moving to a continuously progressive income tax system, (b) the feasibility and appropriateness of increasing the Alberta corporate income tax rate by 2 per cent, and (c) examining whether Alberta's overall tax system, tax mix, and tax revenues are sufficient to pay for the level of government services that Albertans need and expect.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Horner: I'm not sure that I even need to speak to this one, Mr. Chairman. Obviously, this is not something that we're going to accept putting into the act. How we come up with our policy around tax – corporate, personal, and other – is a matter of government policy, and you wouldn't put it in a piece of legislation, so we will not be accepting A12.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others to speak to amendment A12?

Ms. Notley: I will speak very briefly to this. I just want to outline my wholehearted support for this amendment. Probably the singularly most difficult component of this bill, Bill 12, is the fact that it absolutely fails to deal with the structural revenue problems in this province and that, in fact, through a number of different mechanisms it simply gives the government a whole bunch of discretion to put off fixing structural revenue problems in this province. This amendment is one small mechanism that would hold the government at least partially publicly accountable for a process of answering to Albertans for why we're not looking at other sources of revenue. Of course, we also have some fairly huge issues with respect to what we're collecting from our nonrenewable resource revenue.

However, the issue of the flat tax in Alberta is a significantly difficult one and one that, clearly, Albertans no longer support. The majority of Albertans do not support this. We need to allow for an opportunity for there to be some broader discussion with it, and this is one mechanism that might allow for that.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Chair: On the bill are there other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 12 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 12. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That's carried. So ordered.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests prior to Committee of the Whole?

5:10 Introduction of Guests (reversion)

Mr. Sandhu: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to have found many of my friends outside the Legislature taking pictures. They will be travelling to Fort McMurray tomorrow. They will be moving into crucial decision-making positions in ONGC, which is the national oil company in India. This group of 23 ONGC senior general managers are to take over strategic positions in the Indian national oil company. The group has come to the University of Alberta through IIM Bangalore. IIM Bangalore is a leading management institute in the country and has organized this visit as part of the leadership development program in collaboration with the University of Alberta. Professor V. Anand Ram is one of the program directors accompanying the group. I will ask all my new friends to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 20 Appropriation Act, 2013

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm glad to be able to rise, finally, to speak to Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013, having not had an opportunity to do that in second reading and, of course, as we've mentioned before, having had the opportunity to do that in estimates significantly limited through an unprecedented change in process introduced by the House leader and his committee chairs. That being said, I am pleased to be able to take this brief period of time in Committee of the Whole to offer up some comments about Bill 20, the Appropriation Act.

As we have stated in a couple of other forums, probably the most fundamental difficulty around this piece of legislation rests with, first of all, the countless broken promises which it reflects on the part of the Premier, and the second difficulty relates to the failure of this government to come to grips with its revenue problems. That's probably a good summary of how this budget reflects a very disappointing first year on the part of this government and this Premier.

When it comes to the issue of revenues, Mr. Chair, we've argued on a number of occasions that the 10 per cent flat tax has not been a success in Alberta. The very fact that not a single other province has adopted the flat tax is an indication that it's not actually burning up the phone lines in a "Hey, this a great idea; let's do this here" sort of way. In fact, it is one of the many policies that this government has introduced over its ridiculously long and antidemocratic tenure – antidemocratic in length, shall I say – that works towards increasing the gap between rich and poor. Nowhere is that greater than in this province, and that happens, of course, as a result of this flat tax.

As is typical with many right-wing governments – in case anybody hasn't been watching over the last few months, it's very clear that that's exactly what we have; people might have thought they were voting against the Wildrose, but really in many respects that's kind of what they got, the Wildrose with different personalities but, beyond that, very similar agendas – what you find in situations where you've got right-wing governments is that they often have a tendency to want to cut services, but even more significantly they really want to do great things for their friends in business.

They do that in two ways. First of all, they slowly chip away at their base of revenue. Thankfully, you know, at least the average guy or girl gets their taxes reduced a little bit although typically they end up paying on the other end with lost services and increased fees. But in theory everybody's taxes go down, and certainly the taxes of the wealthy go down even more. That's the first thing that happens.

The other thing that we do is that we then start finding ways to give millions and hundreds of millions and, indeed, billions of dollars to big corporations and – wait for it – wealthy Albertans. So we actually do it on both sides. What happens is that you'll find that if you analyze the management history of right-wing governments, they often contribute to spiralling debt faster than other parties. Of course, as I always like to remind this Assembly, in Canada the party with the best record in terms of balancing the budget is, in fact, the NDP.

I do believe that a balanced budget is very important. But the way you do that is that you make it very clear that we are all part of this great province. We ask those who can afford to to pay their fair share. We're all part of this province, and we all want to see it grow forward in a way that is fair and equitable. Indeed, Mr. Chair, it's becoming more and more apparent that the more equitable a community is, the better everybody does, even those at the very, very top. Their quality of life actually goes up by way of living in a more equitable community.

That being said, we're also conscious of the competitive advantage. It's never been our idea that we would, you know, price ourselves out of the market. It's quite the opposite. It's our view that we can retain the lowest taxes in the country yet make them fairer amongst Albertans and increase them enough to also bring a lot more money into our treasury while retaining that competitive advantage. We can do that.

We also have the lowest natural resource revenue system in pretty much the developed world. I did hear one person point out that Angola had a lower royalty rate than us, but I'm just not convinced that we should be comparing ourselves to Angola in that regard. Were we to simply follow the guidance that was given by former Premier Lougheed, we could easily double the amount of money that comes into our coffers right now through non-renewable resource revenues.

That being said, the other thing that our party has been very keen on seeing more work on is the idea of investing to upgrade our resources here in the province of Alberta. Rather than shipping them out as fast as possible, as cheaply as possible, ensuring the greatest amount of profit possible to organizations and corporations which have no loyalty to our province as a community, what we would do is we'd say that we need to be putting more work into creating long-term, sustainable, mortgage-paying jobs for Albertans here, and in so doing, we increase our tax base, we bring more revenue into our coffers, and we also increase the quality of life for regular Albertans. Rather than being the source of cheap and easy dollars for multinational corporations, we ought to be actually developing our resources in the best interests of all Albertans.

That being said, on the expense side of this budget we also have a number of significant broken promises. It's hard to go through the list because I think I only have at this point about three minutes left, and the list is so long. I have to say that I am personally almost offended by the Premier's decision to make the elimination of child poverty a critical plank in her election platform and to watch what she has done since then. I find it to be the quintessential cynical move of a politician, and it's the kind of move that will ensure that the respect for and trust in politicians takes an unprecedented plummet. I don't know who promises to end child poverty and then turns around and cuts program after program after program that currently maintains the level of child poverty where it is and tries to stop it from increasing. I just don't know who does that kind of thing. It's just so cynical.

Certainly, what this budget did was not only cut a number of different programs that would have helped not eliminate child poverty but certainly worked against it increasing, but on top of that this budget includes nothing, no money, for increasing efforts to reduce child poverty. In fact, instead what it does is it has a lot of gobbledygook and message box language about how we're going to collaborate more with the private sector and nonprofit organizations and move away from our role as being a resource provider to families and communities and children who are in need. It is a monumental communications feat that someone managed to write that plan and still have any sense of dignity when they publicly read it out and suggested that it was actually going to make life better for vulnerable children in our province. It's a broken promise, and it's one that I think the Premier should be really quite ashamed of.

The other one, of course, is full-day kindergarten. Now, of course, she says: oh, we've got kindergarten all over the place. Well, actually, we've got lots of full-day private kindergartens and a smaller number of full-day kindergartens where school boards have been creative in order to make that work for high-needs kids, but overall full-day kindergarten does not exist for the majority of children in Alberta. We are, I believe, the only province left in the country that doesn't do that. Just to be clear, that is a fundamental piece to ending cyclical intergenerational poverty over the long term.

Once again, the Premier cynically broke her promise on it and then refuses to take responsibility for it. I have to tell you, Mr. Chair, I have just never seen a political leader who is so shameless in not at least taking responsibility for the decisions she's made. To simply choose not to fund full-day kindergarten and then to not acknowledge it is – really, you wonder why people have such a low trust relationship and such a low trust rating of the Premier.

That's really a concern for me, Mr. Chair. I think that all Albertans want to see everybody have a shared and equal opportunity for success in the future. They don't want to see Alberta become the home of intergenerational, structural, unfixable poverty. We should not have children who are in government care going to the food bank, and we do. That is ridiculous. We are a province that is far too wealthy for that. There are so many components to child poverty which I think every member of this House who chooses to vote in favour of this budget should really consider. Quite frankly, we are doing nothing, and the government actually had the gall to run on doing something. You should be pushing your Finance minister to add some honesty to the positions that were publicly taken by the party which is now in government.

Obviously, we've heard a tremendous outcry about the cuts to advanced education. Again, you talk about the investments that we make in our province that actually would bring about diversification. You know, everybody involved in politics loves to talk about economic diversification. We talk about it all the time. It's just one of those words. It's like motherhood and apple pie. Economic diversification: we're all in favour of it. Yet here we have a government that is taking away significant resources, 8 per cent, from our ministry of advanced education after several years where that area was frozen.

We have a Premier who once again refuses to take responsibility for the outcome of her decisions, who actually will sit in a press conference and say to people, "Oh, no; we can cut this by 8 per cent," and then people will magically have an improved education through finding efficiencies. I mean, I'm pretty sure she doesn't actually believe that because nobody who knows anything about organizational management would believe that to be true. So why is she saying things which no reasonable person would actually believe to be true? It's frustrating, Mr. Chair. It's frustrating not having a Premier who would engage in an honest debate about the implications of her decisions.

Ultimately, here's what happened, Mr. Chair. The Premier had to decide: do I have the political courage to go to Albertans to come up with ways to restructure our revenue, or am I going to break a whole bunch of promises? If she believes that Albertans would rather see those promises broken, then she should go honestly to Albertans and say: "You know what? I know I promised you the moon and several unicorns in addition to the moon, but it can't happen because I don't have the political will and/or courage. I believe you folks are not at all interested in getting rid of the flat tax. You're not at all interested in seeing the oil and gas sector contribute more to our coffers. You're not interested in these things, so I believe this is something that you want me to do."

Instead, she has the temerity to come into here, well, certainly in public, to say: "Oh, no, no, no. I cut a hundred and fifty million dollars, but I did that because I was trying to improve things." Really? Really, Mr. Chair? I mean, there's got to be a point at which these things come back to haunt you.

So that's with advanced education. Of course, it's the same kind of thing with the cuts to PDD: a $45 million cut from a community access support grant, roughly a 45 per cent cut to Albertans with developmental disabilities. And, yes, I understand that that overall budget went up a little bit because the government made a decision to partially fund a promise. They didn't keep their promise. They halfway kept their promise to put more money into salaries for those hard-working people who do brilliant work every day in the PDD sector, so that's great.

But nobody believed that when the Premier said, "I'm going to give more money to these hard-working Albertans," she meant that what she was going to do was take it away from the very developmentally disabled Albertans who those people serve. I don't believe that's what people thought. Again, it's a profoundly misleading way to approach talking to Albertans and governing the province. Those cuts are going to hurt some of our most vulnerable Albertans.

Again, it frustrates me that the Premier is not at least prepared to admit that that's a choice she made and that she thinks that in the long run that's what Albertans would choose. That's what political courage is, Mr. Chair. You make tough choices, and then you take responsibility for them. You don't simply start wishing on a star and talking about unicorns and then, you know, striding out of a press conference saying: "Yeah. Truly, unicorns are real, and the sun rises in the west. That's me. Thank you very much. I'm going to collaborate. I'm going to move forward. Tough decisions. Bye-bye." I mean, it's just a profoundly disrespectful way to govern the province. That's what this whole budget includes. That's what this whole budget encapsulates.

Another issue, Mr. Chair, relates to seniors. Seniors probably are taking the biggest hit in this budget out of anybody. It hasn't been fully discussed yet. I don't think they're fully aware yet of what this means because there's perhaps a different means of communication in certain subsets or communities in our province. We're taking tax relief away from seniors, we're taking income support funds away from seniors, and we are taking pharmacare away from seniors. It adds up to about $250 million that seniors in the next two years are going to lose out of this budget. It is the single biggest area of cuts. That's on top of the government's continued refusal to build new long-term care beds and their decision to contract out the fake long-term care beds to private developers, the majority of whom will charge seniors a ridiculous amount of money for the care that they need.

When it all comes together, this is a tremendous betrayal to seniors. What that means is that it's not just about seniors, of course. We know what that will really mean is that the families of those seniors will be the ones who shoulder the burden that this government is creating and building and handing back to Albertans. Why? It's really important that the wealthiest Albertans pay the least amount of tax in the country, to the tune of $10 billion a year. That's really important to this government, and that's the choice that they've made, Mr. Chair.

I think that it's really a disappointing budget because there were some tremendous opportunities for this government to truly move forward, to truly make gains, to truly become progressive, to truly reflect the values of Albertans. Instead, what we got was the same old same old combined with an unprecedented unwillingness to acknowledge and admit to the same old same old. So, yeah, I guess there was something new introduced into this budget, and that was a whole new relationship with reality on the part of this government's leader. That's the new part, the relationship between the facts and what we talk about. That's a real problem in terms of the cuts to Health.

Then, obviously, with the stable, predictable funding that was promised for health, that was promised for advanced education, that was promised for K to 12, all of that, just the elimination of the predictability of it is a hit. That was something that this government argued over and over and over again that these institutions needed in order to be able to plan, in order to be able to improve their services and make better decisions. All of that rested on stable, predictable funding. I remember seeing different ministers across the way a year ago saying that as a chant, as a mantra: stable, predictable funding. In every area this government has broken its promise on stable, predictable funding. The only stability in the funding is that you cannot count from year to year on what it is you will receive. That is something that these folks on the other side actually acknowledged in a pre-election period was bad for good governance. Now, of course, we've decided to go to stable, unpredictable funding. So that's a problem.

I'm also, of course, concerned about what this province is doing with respect to the effective management of our resources and the protection of our environment. When I talk about that, I mean making sure that our air is clean, that people aren't getting sick because of development that's going on too close to their community, ensuring that our water is clean, ensuring the health of our wildlife and that our biodiversity is clean. All of that is not included in this budget.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm honoured to rise and speak in committee on what I would have to call an indescribable failure of government to really address the 21st century in terms of our finances, our responsibilities, our future. The Minister of Finance earlier dismissed the Liberal-proposed amendment to actually commit to a serious and legislated examination and transformation of our revenue and our budget, instead opting with his government to transform the reporting of our revenue and our budget plans. Albertans deserve better. The financial management of the last two decades reflects a shameful lack of courage and foresight and a failure to provide the fundamental role of government, which is to act to protect the most vulnerable in our society and future generations.

Mr. Chairman, the term "power corrupts" is well known. Perhaps what is less well known is that weakness corrupts. What has resulted over the last decade, in particular, is a profound loss of hope and confidence in our population such that we have lost all but a small proportion of our public to the democratic process.

It's been fostered, may I say, by the continuing concentration of power, concentration of media messaging, and intimidation from a government that has resorted to using power to silence and dismiss dissent and alternate perspectives on where this province could be and should be; by the staggering lack of leadership despite repeated financial advice from within this country and beyond this country; by recommendations that we get off the resource roller coaster totally unheeded by this government, now compromising not only future generations but the current resources we have for services and a new economy, not to mention the abdication of environmental standards in terms of proper monitoring, objective monitoring, objective science, and proper enforcement of those standards, again compromising present and future generations.

The failure to recognize the need for stable revenue for basic services such as education, poverty reduction, persons with developmental disabilities, and environmental monitoring as well as health care in the broadest sense of health care, not simply sickness treatment but real investment in primary care and prevention, is going to haunt us for decades. The lack of humility and willingness to examine the evidence, the failure to invest in early childhood, in lifelong learning, and in health means at least three serious compromises to our future.

We will see more social violence, addictions, mental health problems, and long-term physical health costs. We will see a profound loss of human potential, which, for a government that touts its commitment to a knowledge economy and a future in postsecondary innovation and research, is a profound failure. Thirdly, it will mean, ultimately, the failure of a sustainable economy if we do not invest in early childhood; in people with compromised surroundings; environmental, social, and intellectual opportunity. We will fail to get the kind of economy that we would see with vibrant education leading to thoughtful, engaged citizens in research, in developing alternative entrepreneurial options to the resource addiction that has plagued this province for decades.

The Alberta Liberals have consistently called for an honest review of our tax system for fairness, for stability, and for social development based on evidence. Mr. Chairman, the evidence from around the world is quite persuasive. It seems this government has never been interested beyond its own borders in learning about state-of-the-art or best practices in terms of governance and financial management and planning for the future.

In short, this government has no foresight, no courage to deal with the evidence that's on the table, and no willingness to learn from experts like Richard Wilkinson, who over the span of 35 years has put together a tremendous accounting for what happens when you invest in people, in social equity, in people in disadvantaged positions and reduce the income inequality that spurs all kinds of social, health, and environmental problems.

Norway has also been a quiet leader in terms of governance, in thinking about both the short-term needs of people and the longer term investment for the future. They were the first country to have a carbon tax, in 1991, and they have shown in half the time a savings account of close to $600 billion as a result of saving their nonrenewable resource wealth and being able now, if they chose, to fund all their programs through the interest on this tremendous savings account that they have built up primarily through their nonrenewable resource sector. That, Mr. Chairman, is leadership.

Somehow, despite several visits to Norway and several visits from Norway to this government, there has been no inclination to make the kind of changes, the kind of tough decisions in some ways that that government has made: first of all, to examine the revenue stream, look at what we're getting for our natural resources, examine the tax system and see where there is fairness and unfairness in terms of the corporate sector and individual income.

We have repeatedly recommended that we move away from this egregious flat tax, that has left us between $6 billion and $8 billion less in tax revenue than the nearest province, where we would clearly be able to invest in the kinds of preventative and long-term social and economic development priorities that these countries have and have demonstrated great returns. In Norway, for example, there are extremely few homeless. They are well taken care of. The children from disadvantaged families do not go hungry. There are seniors' care centres that are models in the world. Yes, they have a higher tax system, but they have also put the priorities of government on what human and environmental priorities must demand if we're going to have a sustainable society and a sustainable planet.

It's once again distressing to have to stand up and rail about a government that seems unwilling or unable to learn from the past and learn from the best that's going on in the present around the world in terms of both managing our revenue stream and budgeting for the needs of the people today as well as saving for the long-term future of tomorrow.

5:40

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm disappointed with the appropriations and in the budget in general. I just want to raise a few points because we've debated a number of topics dealing with the amendments that came forward on Bill 12 or even the bill itself. Now we have the Appropriations Act. But I want to talk about a couple of things, particularly with regard to debt and the rhetoric that's been transpiring throughout the entire debate.

Borrowing money responsibly throughout all of our society works extremely well in business. I pay off my credit card once a month. That's my goal, and lots of people like to do that. The way this government was able to call itself debt-free was that it actually had a debt retirement account, and the law was very specific about that. It basically said in section 5(2) of the Fiscal Responsibility Act that the debt retirement account must be equal to or greater than the total accumulated debt, a very good provision of the act that now is basically removed as a result of rescinding the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act. That to me is the primary difference. The government, to borrow responsibly and have those funds available so it actually had that zero net debt, was allowed to manage its finances and call itself debt-free.

Mr. Horner: Which we will after this.

Mr. Anglin: Well, that's where we're going to have to disagree. That's where we're going to have to disagree.

The hon. House leader from the government side put an end to the nonsense of: we're going to borrow money to save money, and we're going to lend that borrowed money out. When that was brought up quite awhile back, he stood up and said: that's nonsense. I was glad to hear it. I'm glad to hear that the government is not saying that anymore, which was, in the House leader's words, nonsense.

The fact is that I've never seen anybody borrow money to save money, and I've never seen any institution borrow money to save money. It's a unique concept. I don't think it works. If you can make it work, please show us how. But we'll judge that a few years down the road. More and more investors have gotten themselves into trouble thinking they were going to borrow money, invest the money, get rich off it, and pay that money back. That generally has never happened, and I don't see that happening here.

There are a couple of issues that were brought up recently in these debates, and one of them I did not get a chance to address. That was the one about setting the goals and assessing the performances and setting those performance targets so that we can measure in the business plan of the government, when it proposes a budget, how we're going to do these things.

I'm going to give you a particular example. The issue of greenhouse gases is a significant issue. Nobody that I know of argues that point. We need to deal with it. [interjection] I do know it very well, hon. member from Edmonton—whatever, Gold Bar.

An Hon. Member: Goldfinger.

Mr. Anglin: Goldfinger.

I'll tell you that while the member over here may insult us, calling us the Tea Party, the reality is that we would be better described as the Green Tea Party. That still would be an insult, but I wear it well. I wear it well, being the environment critic. That's one of the reasons I'm the environment critic.

Let's talk about that because that is in your budget.

An Hon. Member: Born again.

Mr. Anglin: No, sir. I was born that way, not again. Just born that way.

I want to get done in 10 minutes here, so let me get done. Otherwise, you'll get me off topic, and I will keep on going.

I do want to say this. The greenhouse gas strategy, if it complied with some of the things that were brought forward in the way it's presented in this budget, if there was accountability, if there was verifiability, then we would be able to actually measure whether or not we're achieving those targets. That's not just important for this budget. That's important for our economy, and that's important for our industry. What has been made public in the estimates, what has been made public recently is that there's a real lack of verifiability in that sector, and we're suffering that criticism internationally. To change that criticism, all we have to do is be more transparent and verify those carbon offsets to make sure we are achieving exactly what we said we are, and anyone who's an accountant knows that. You want to be able, when you measure this stuff, to verify that it's accurate. That's what audits do. That's the whole purpose of the carbon offset system.

In this budget, in this act itself everything would have flowed better had we accepted some of the amendments that were offered earlier, and I think that's extremely important.

I do want to make a point. Under our other system, soon to be our old system, we had a debt retirement account that allowed us to use money more efficiently, to borrow money but to actually be able to state to the public – and that's why our former Premier did this and hung that big sign that says: we're debt free. That was his justification. That was his legitimacy. What we're going to do on the passage of multiple acts here is remove that legitimacy.

Now, what you're saying in many ways, hon. minister of Treasury Board and Finance, is pretty much: trust me. You're not saying that? Well, I think you're saying that, but that's okay. If you're not saying it, I'm not trusting you anyways on the issue of the budget.

Mr. Horner: The feeling is mutual.

Mr. Anglin: But I don't have the billions of dollars you have.

I will tell you this. The measurement is: have you always done what you said you would do? You may say that, yes, you have.

But you stood up here in this Legislature and said that we would have a balanced budget at one time. I can go back and find that. You said that our operational budget would be balanced, and what we did is that we came in with a deficit. We don't have a balanced budget, and we're running a deficit.

We can go back – and we've done this. We've tabled the evidence where our Premier has talked very negatively about debt, the way you're hearing the opposition talk about it. She did that during the leadership campaign. We have stayed on message with that, the very same words she used when she ran for leadership about how negative debt is. I took that as that whole concept of the net debt, gross debt, and what's often referred to as the total accumulated debt. What we have here now is a system in place where it looks like there could be checks and balances – you can change that as we move forward – but we're going to still accumulate debt going forward. That is my belief.

Now, I don't have the evidence to say that this is what it's exactly going to be in four years or three years or five years. Nobody can say that precisely. But the track record is that we haven't done what we said we were going to do, and that's what's disturbing. There needs to be accountability or something in the act that really would hold the government accountable to its spending.

As I stated earlier once in this House, it's a legitimate debate that the Liberals and the NDP have brought forward, which is that they would balance the budget by raising revenues. They would do it differently. Both those parties have said so. We said that we would balance the budget by reprioritizing, and that's a legitimate debate.

What I think went wrong is that nobody on the other side, nobody that I know of, stood up and said that when they went door-knocking, they told their constituents that when they got elected they were going to repeal the Government Accountability Act and they were going to repeal the Fiscal Responsibility Act. I don't believe it. Maybe some member will stand up and say that they did – please do – but I don't believe they did that.

To me, that's the legacy that I think gave Alberta its reputation, that gave Alberta its credibility. It's what gave Alberta that acronym of the Alberta advantage, and it meant a lot. It meant a lot to the people who did it. It meant a lot to the citizens who supported it.

I don't believe they were told that during the election. And when they found out, I think that's what we're hearing the rumblings about from the public.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will finish. Thanks.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I'd ask that we rise and report progress on Bill 20.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 20.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, being that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was so diligent in his comments and was very nice to finish before 6 o'clock, I'll suggest that we adjourn the House until 7:30 tonight.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:52 p.m.]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate April 18: Mr. Campbell]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to rise this evening to speak to the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013. I am generally supportive of the direction that the minister is taking on this. I think it's a good step forward in a lot of different ways.

I want to just spend some time going through a little bit about some of the areas where I think that the minister is making some great progress as well as identify some areas where I have some concern and will continue doing some consultation. I do have a few amendments that I will be proposing when we get into Committee of the Whole. I can give some idea of the direction that I think we need to go there. Hopefully, we'll be able to get some government support on at least one or two of them.

One of the things I do want to start by saying, though, is that my father-in-law was actually one of the principal individuals behind the Metis Settlements Act originally. Dennis Surrendi, when he was in government as a deputy minister, assisted in drafting this legislation. I'm going to be talking with him about some of the changes that are now being made to it to see whether or not he approves of the new direction. I'm quite sure that he will, but I know that he looked at it as an area of great pride for Alberta to have been in a leadership role in advancing the cause of the Métis in Alberta.

I think we've seen as well in the rest of the country that other jurisdictions are now having to grapple with something that we in Alberta showed leadership on many, many years ago. You look at, for instance, the Manitoba Supreme Court decision, which essentially charts out a course for Manitoba to do exactly what we have already done here in Alberta. I do commend the government for having been visionary in that regard and having made such great strides so that we are now at the next stage of assisting our Métis friends in being able to develop even more self-government, more accountability to their own membership, and, I think, open a new era in investing in their own communities, job creation, improving infrastructure, education.

I'm very excited about the direction that the Métis settlements are likely to go in the coming years. I think that the Metis Settlements Act laid the groundwork, and I think that the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, with some of the changes, is going to move things even one step further.

I understand the process for this was that in 2011 the government entered into a 10-year agreement to develop some long-term governance structures as well as to address the issue of funding. Both of those announcements have now been made, and I think that that is a good indication as well. What I like about this type of approach is that it recognizes that you can't change governance roles without dealing with the issue of funding as well. I think our municipal leaders who are going through the process of determining city charters and determining changes to the Municipal Government Act would actually appreciate that the government has recognized this in this area, that you can't change or have a new discussion about roles and responsibilities without also having a discussion about how you're going to increase funding to be able to address that. I think that sets a good bar.

The reason I mention that is because I understand that what the minister is attempting to do with this legislation is to – and we recognize that the Métis have a special status in our Constitution and special roles. They're not like a municipality, although many of the functions they perform are very similar to municipalities, yet under our current legislation they don't enjoy the full range of autonomy that many of our municipalities do enjoy. They have other areas of autonomy that our municipalities don't enjoy, which is why they're a bit of a hybrid. But I think it was important for the minister to recognize and to move forward on addressing some of those areas where they actually were not being treated with the same level of autonomy and independence that our municipal leaders enjoy. It's all very good that we're making progress here with local governance, addressing issues of education, infrastructure, employment. I do think the minister struck a nice balance in this legislation in recognizing the special jurisdiction and in being supportive of that.

Again, I had mentioned that I'm going to do a bit more consulting. I'd like to consult with the Metis Settlements General Council and the Métis Nation of Alberta just to see if there are any other areas that they might flag for future concern or future consideration. I think that any time you have new legislation, especially legislation that is changing the relationship in a substantive way, it can probably always be improved, so we are going to be looking at ways in which we can offer potential improvements.

If I could, I'll go through a couple of the areas where I think that the act strikes the right chord. One of the things that I like that I'm seeing in this legislation is that there's very clearly greater attention and certainly legislative language around increasing transparency on a whole range of fronts, in particular, I think, the transparency around some of the decision-making that happens at the council level, the ways in which they set their own pay, creating some caps for their pay. Financial reporting is, of course, another important area, the fact that they're going to move more in alignment with what we're seeing at the provincial level as well at as the municipal level with developing three-year business plans so that not only the province but also their own people will be able to see the kind of direction that each settlement council intends to go and also the financial reporting to back that up.

There's also extensive language around the issue of a code of conduct. Of course, those of us in public life are accustomed to reading through those codes of conduct that we get on our first couple of days of orientation when we come up here to the Legislature. I don't think that that is an onerous provision to be asking for in other levels of elected office, whether it be municipal or, in this case, our Métis settlements council members.

The other thing – it looks like it's a bit of housekeeping but also a good measure to keep in – is the parity with municipalities in having the four-year election cycle. I know that moving from three years to four years was a very popular move when the government proposed that for municipalities. Allowing for the general elections to take place on Métis settlements on a four-year election cycle is in keeping with, I think, the direction in which the government is wanting to go in trying to make sure that there's at least some parity on the main elements of the jurisdictional framework for governing both municipalities and our Métis settlements.

The areas of concern that I have, though, are on the issue of eliminating completely the Métis ombudsman. Now, I know that the ombudsman had some difficulty in the past, I think a couple of years ago, when there was an issue at the Elizabeth settlement regarding the development of a gravel operation in the Edmonton area. There were also some issues on the Elizabeth settlement with another business venture that had not panned out. I think that there was some difficulty in being able to get to the bottom of what happened there to provide the full transparency to the community. There was a big shakeup in the office, and I don't know that we ever really did get to the bottom of understanding what happened in that community.

I don't know that you necessarily throw out an ombudsman process just because it didn't appear to work in an individual case. I have to say that this is the one area where I am hearing from members of the Métis community, maybe not from those who are in elected office but certainly from those who are living in those communities, about whether or not it is in their best interest to have lost this opportunity to have another avenue to appeal when they do see that things are going wrong.

I recognize what the minister has said, that there is still an opportunity for any issues to be brought forward before the ombudsman, and there is also another appeal process. I'm prepared to give him the benefit of the doubt that that is a process that is going to work to address some of concerns that I'm hearing from Métis living in these communities, but I did just want to flag that because it did seem to come a bit out of the blue. It was a bit of a surprise, and it didn't seem to be one that was universally hailed as a good move. I think that there might be some language around greater accountability or the appeals process that some members of our Métis communities might like to see to feel a little more comfortable that that provision has now been eliminated.

There are also a few issues that I'm seeing around the role of the chief administrator in a settlement under these new provisions. I think I understand where the minister is attempting to go by establishing a governance board that will hire the chief administrator essentially as their principal employee and then empower that administrator to hire their own staff. I can understand why that might be a better approach. It's certainly what we do at the municipal level. It's what we see in many nonprofit and other charitable organizations. It's certainly the structure that many governance bodies use so that you don't end up having a board of directors interfering with the day-to-day operations and hiring managers and individuals who may or may not then know who their direct boss is.

I understand the structure that he is moving to, but I do think that in empowering a chief administrative officer in that way, it does require additional barriers, executive limitations, to be built around the role of that chief administrator. I know that there is extensive language in here about code of conduct and how it applies to council members. One of the amendments we'll be proposing is that that same code of conduct provision also apply to the chief administrative officer. We think it's important. Because they are going to be the arm implementing so much of council's decisions, they do need to have the same code of conduct provisions around them if we're going to be able to get at addressing some of the issues with governance accountability.

The other way in which I think there do need to be some limitations or at least some empowerment of the council built in is that in changing the language the way they have to allow for the council to only hire the one employee, not all employees, it seems like they have taken away the provision of council to be able to set parameters around the type of pay structures or pay grid that the administrative officer is then empowered to implement. I think that's important, too. Once again, if you're going to try to build a fence around the decision-making power of the council so that you can get better governance, they do also need to be able to set executive limitations around their chief administrative officer in this regard to ensure that there is some clear direction about what the parameters should be.

I mean, the minister is going to great lengths to make sure that the council members themselves are going to have a more open process for determining pay as well as a more transparent process for determining and reporting what the level of pay would be. You want to make sure that that same high standard also applies now to the employees that are going to be determined by the chief administrative officer. That's another area where I think we just need a little greater clarity.

I think it's worthwhile going to the actual act to see what the current provisions are when you get to the issue of direct democracy. Actually, as a party that believes in direct democracy and wants to see more measures for the general public to get involved in approving decision-making of their governing bodies I found some of the parameters that are built into the current legislation about bylaws to be something that we could probably look at adopting not only at the municipal level but also at the provincial level.

I will just make note of the act under sections 54 and 55. I mention this because there are provisions in the proposed new bill that do have me quite concerned with regard to budget.

In the current legislation under section 54 it talks about the process by which Métis settlements approve bylaws. What it says is:

- (1) Every proposed bylaw must be presented at a public meeting in the settlement area after second reading but before third reading.

How fantastic would that be if we actually had that same parameter on provincial legislation, if before we could move from second reading to third reading and approving something, we actually had to go to the public and do a public meeting so that they could hear what it is we were talking about and give us some feedback?

In addition, it says:

- (2) At least 14 days' public notice of the date, time and place of the public meeting must be given.

This is kind of an interesting proposal. I think it's in keeping with what the Premier promised in the last election about making sure that there was more time to debate legislation through its different readings. What I find so fascinating, as we're talking about debating changes to the Metis Settlements Act, is that the Metis Settlements Act already has most of its bylaws operating under these rules.

I will go one step further, and this is even more interesting. It talks about approving the bylaws. It's not just enough to have the elected members approve bylaws. In this case,

- 55(1) A quorum for public meetings called to vote on settlement bylaws is 15 settlement members.

They actually have members come out who are eligible to vote, and then any member who is eligible to vote can actually vote on whether the bylaw should pass or whether it should fail. So anyone who's affected by the issue under discussion can show up at the public meeting and be able to have a vote.

- (4) A bylaw voted on at a public meeting is approved if a majority of the settlement members who are eligible to vote and who vote at the meeting vote in favour of the bylaw, [and]
- (5) If the vote at the public meeting is not in favour of the proposed bylaw, the bylaw is defeated, and all previous readings are cancelled.

I think this is fascinating, that the government has created legislation that has this level of direct democracy and accountability on our Métis settlements. I think there's something instructive that we can actually learn from that in how we would approach all of our bills that we're debating in the Legislature, especially since there is a great possibility that we'll be here until 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning over the next number of weeks. Just thought I would mention that to the members opposite. There is a better way to do it. There is a different way to do this. They were the ones who came up with this in consultation with their Métis settlement leaders, so what do you know?

But the reason I'm raising this is that while I love this direct democracy process, what I am concerned about is that in the provisions that the government is now suggesting for how budgets will be passed, it now says that those two sections that I made reference to – and this is under section 14 of the Metis Settlements Act – they're going to add a new section, section 55.1, under budget bylaws, and it says that sections 54 and 55 do not apply to a budget bylaw.

That has me a bit concerned because, as we've seen with this last budget at the provincial level, there is a great deal of policy that gets set through the course of bringing forward a budget. As we've heard the members opposite and ministers often say, when we ask them, "Why didn't you consult with anybody? Why didn't you tell anybody what was coming?" we kept hearing, "Well, we couldn't do that because it was in the budget, and if you leak details of the budget, it could impact markets." That was the reason why all of these policy changes came through the budget without consultation.

What I'm worried about is that by enshrining that practice here now in this legislation, we're actually moving away from what the minister is hoping to have, which is more accountability. I think there's a danger of less accountability. Now, I might be able to be convinced into the argument that the membership of the settlement should not be able to vote down the budget at a public meeting. I mean, we don't have our municipal governments operate that way. We certainly don't have the provincial government operate that way. So I think I could appreciate perhaps exempting the budget from section 55.

But I don't know how you can exempt the budget from section 54, that requires it to be presented at a public meeting, requires 14 days' public notice. I think it should be pretty clear that if we're trying to create some parity with other levels of office in the way we have our Métis settlements governed, there clearly has to be some mechanism for public input and public feedback. We go for weeks with our estimates process. Everything is posted online. At the municipal level they have public hearings, and they also go for weeks in their budget process.

It does seem to me that this is a bit of a hole in the act. The way it is now written does actually allow for a great deal of policy-making and a very important piece of legislation to pass seemingly without any requirement to let the public know, to give oversight, to have any public meetings. I don't think that is what the minister had intended to do with that, but I do think the way this amendment is written does take it one step too far.

The other issue that I do have is the issue of consultation. It does say that the minister can make regulations in consultation with the general council and the settlement, and I think that's a good provision to have. But I think we do need to see a little more definition about what consultation actually means. I think we have heard oftentimes the government claiming that it does consult, but then we hear the recipients of the decisions that are being made telling us that they don't feel they were consulted. So one-way consultation, with the minister telling a council what he's going to do in regulation and just informing, doesn't quite cut it, I don't think, with our higher standard of obligation to our Métis since they have a special constitutional status.

If we can actually get some clear language around what constitutes proper two-way consultation, I think that there would actually be some good value in being able to use that language in many other types of changes, regulatory changes, that happen in many other different applications. It certainly will be of interest to me when the minister brings forward his aboriginal consultation legislation, which I think is expected later this month, to be able to see whether or not we can get some clarity there. If we can get some clarity in that aboriginal consultation legislation, perhaps some of that language can be built into this act as well.

I don't have too much more to say. I know that people were probably worried when I got here tonight that I'd be going on for 90 minutes. Don't worry, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to go on for 90 minutes tonight. Aw, come on. I thought I'd get applause from the other side for that. [interjections] There we go. Thank you.

As I said, Minister, there's lots of good in this legislation. Having seen that some of the amendments in the bill are house-keeping, changing names of ministers because ministers' names have changed – it's no longer minister of environment; it's now Minister of Environment and SRD – I did find some amusement in certain portions of the bill about some of the anachronisms. It does actually demonstrate how old this legislation is, for instance, when in schedule 2 it talks about how some of the required investments or allowed investments would be securities in the Alberta Energy Company. I don't think the Alberta Energy Company exists anymore, so if we're going to be trying to clean up some of that language, it might be an opportunity to clear that up.

I was also greatly interested in the way in which the composition of one of the appeals councils is determined. Let me just find the page on that. I think the minister may decide that he might want to make a revision to that one as well because it did seem like it may have been a little out of step with the times. It talked about the Metis Settlements Appeals Tribunal Existing Leases Land Access Panel being established, consisting of five persons. The reason why I was attracted to this is because, of course, when the Minister of Energy brought through his Bill 2, this is the kind of granular detail that we were trying to get him to write into his Bill 2, to actually talk about the types of groups he would consult before putting different persons on the panel.

It says:

- (a) a chair appointed by agreement of the Minister of Energy . . .
- (b) 2 persons appointed by the General Council.
- (c) one person appointed by agreement of the Canadian Petroleum Association, the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada and the Canadian Association of Petroleum Landmen.

I think all of those names have now been updated. I think some of the associations have merged, and I think there are others who have grown out of that. If you're going to do a housekeeping amendment, that just may be one area that the minister might want to take a look at, to update that to identify the proper associations that should have some input into that appeal tribunal panel.

I also would encourage the Minister of Energy to take a closer look at that because that's the kind of approach that we were hoping to see him take when he was populating the board for his new energy regulator, actually identifying in legislation the groups that should be consulted from an environmental perspective, from a landowner perspective to make sure that you've got the full range of input into the people who should be on the council. It seems to me that if we've done it once before in legislation, heck, I think we can probably do it again.

Maybe it's something that should be done in regulation, though, because if changes to names happen, then we end up with this difficult position where we've identified companies or associations that no longer exist. It would still be nice to see a similar type of approach in other legislation. I did just want to flag that for the minister. I think there might be other areas just because the legislation is a little out of date, a little old. There may be some additional housekeeping amendments that need to be done.

In any case, I do think, generally speaking, that this legislation heads in the right direction. It certainly does strike a more respectful tone. One of the things that I have heard from members of the Métis and aboriginal communities is that they often do feel like the other orders of government take a bit of a patronizing approach in their dealings with those who are living on settlements or living on reserve. I think that this does strike the right tone.

I know that many of the powers that the settlements have are similar to municipal governments', so I'm glad to see that the government is addressing some of those areas.

I still think there may be additional work that needs to be done around all of the other areas of constitutional jurisdiction that our Métis settlements have. Perhaps that will take place over the course of the next 10 years as the government develops the new funding model to ensure that children's services, health care services, seniors' services, education, community colleges, employment, and other economic development services are developed on the reserve with a coadministration type of approach.

I've heard often from our friends in the Métis community and even from our First Nations that they want to have a productive, constructive relationship with the provincial government, but they want to make sure that they're doing it as equals. They want to make sure that the province looks at them as another order of government and treats them as such. I do believe that the government is going in the right direction with this bill, but, you know, bills can always use a little bit of improving.

As we identify some of the amendments that we may bring forward – I think I've identified about six or seven that we're likely to bring forward – I do hope that the government gives them due consideration and that we'll be able to move forward on improving this bill in the interests of making sure that our Métis settlements and the leaders in those have the tools that they need to continue to lead their people and that we also respect the grassroots decision-making and grassroots interests of rank-and-file Métis members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, I'd just remind you that if you would like to speak, please indicate. Send me a note.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest to speak on Bill 19 here this evening, the Métis Settlements Amendment Act. Again, it's a very interesting piece of legislation. It's quite comprehensive. Considering the historical precedents our province has set in regard to the recognition of our Métis land base here in the province of Alberta, I think it's entirely appropriate and timely that we are again leading this initiative to make amendments to update this set of regulations and laws for 2013.

In our view, most of these changes are not contentious. They seem, in fact, Mr. Speaker, to be technical, and indeed I do see noticeable improvements. However, there are some questionable changes that I would like to bring forward, and we will do so in this and subsequent readings.

Just going through the legislation, then, starting with governance, I suppose, and this idea of the annual meetings for settlement residents, including the presentation of a business plan and an audited financial statement. Currently it seems, to my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the Métis settlements must hold an annual general meeting every year within 180 days of the end of the financial year and then present audited financial statements, discuss any matters raised by those present.

So this amendment means that the council will also have an obligation to present a business plan, to my understanding, at the annual meeting and to allow discussion of that along with financials amongst the participants. As well, this legislation seems to have settlement chairs continue to be appointed by successful councillors. However, there seems as well to be a new provision that allows a settlement to enact a bylaw providing for the election of a settlement chair. I'm guessing that would happen at the same time as when the councillors are elected as well. Some interesting technical and substantive changes there that I think are mostly good.

We know that there have been extensive negotiations by the minister and several ministries in regard to this amalgamation, and I do recognize the minister's work on this and recognize the integrity that he took to the table in regard to these amendments in Bill 19.

One area, though, that I wanted to talk about here this evening is in regard to this elimination of the Métis settlements ombudsman. This ombudsman had become critical, really, of how the PC government had been treating his office. For example, Mr. Speaker, in the 2011-2012 annual report from the ombudsman he wrote that the migration of this office from a contracted organization to the Government of Alberta . . . had the effect of undermining primary key components of an Ombudsman's role – independence, impartiality, and confidentiality . . . In effect, this change has created a schizophrenic organizational structure whereby staff report to and are responsible to the Ministry's administration but are required to comply with the operational directives from me as the MSO.

Some confusion here that I think deserves to be clarified.

He goes on to talk about impartiality. He says in one of his writings that legal advice and opinions are now provided to the Office of the Métis Settlements Ombudsman by Alberta Justice – the same people who in fact provide legal advice to the Minister and to the Ministry. In my opinion, this situation is not only a conflict of interest but this closely-related relationship was clearly not envisioned . . . In addition, any properly established 'classical Ombudsmen' and the vast majority of departmentally appointed Ombudsmen have their own legal counsel.

This does seem to be a structure/reporting relationship problem.

You know, on a similar theme, the office is at a minimum one member short to complete the reviews and investigations regarding complaints that take place throughout the area. It seems to be a problem, as far as I can see. I just wanted to identify this for clarification so that we can perhaps get an explanation in regard to why it was necessary to eliminate this ombudsman. What are we going to do to replace that important independent role, especially when we are moving forward with amending the Metis Settlements Act?

Specifically, in Bill 19 on the first page section 2 amends section 1 of the act by redefining councillor as “a member of a settlement council, including a settlement chair.” The previous definition indicated that a councillor was “a settlement member elected or appointed to a settlement council.” I’m just wondering why it was necessary, Mr. Speaker, to remove the reference to councillors being, quote, unquote, elected. Again, why wasn’t this reference to elections maintained in the new definition?

Section 4 of this bill before us pertains to the selection of a settlement chair and creates two different systems, as far as I can see, for choosing that chair, either through appointment by councillors from amongst themselves or through direct election. The council would then decide the process that they want to follow. This creates two different types of removal process as well, as far as I can see. Appointed chairs can still be removed by their fellow councillors, but elected chairs, as far as I can see, cannot. So an appointed chair who is removed remains a member of the council as a councillor, but an elected chair who resigns is no longer a member of council.

This gives rise, Mr. Speaker, I think, to several questions. One, why was it decided to create two different systems: appointed chairs, elected chairs? It seems to create a degree of local decision-making autonomy for each settlement, which is good, but it also, I think, two, creates potential confusion in relation to the significant differences that will exist between different settlement councils who will choose their chairs and the ability the different councils will have or not have to remove that chair. I just really wonder why it was necessary to create two different processes.

Section 10, which repeals section 23.1 of the old act, stipulates that the minister and the general council shall review the procedures and make recommendations for changes not later than December 31, 2005. According to the website the last amendments to this act were made in 2004. I’m curious to know if the consultations and recommendations were met by that date in 2005 and, if so, why no changes were made to the act at that time. Do the changes that are now being proposed here in this Bill 19 relate to the recommendations that are, I guess, almost eight years old now? I’m just wondering about that, too.

Finally, why is there no provision retained in this act for a future review process, unless I’m missing something here, and consultation relating to the election procedures and recommendations for improvement?

I just wanted to bring up those few points, not to suggest that ultimately we are not interested in supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I think it is in some way an improvement, again, like I said from the outset, setting a direction for amendment of I think a fairly high-standard and unique situation that we’ve created here in Alberta in regard to the Métis settlements.

So with amendments and with some debate and revisions, answers to the questions that I brought up and some more that I will bring up later, I certainly think that the Alberta New Democrats are supportive of this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I’ll recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and speak to Bill 19. As an MLA from a constituency with significant Métis populations – I have two Métis settlements, the Kikino and Buffalo Métis settlements – I’m really happy to see that the government is finally taking some steps to improve some of the legislation surrounding Métis settlements.

Of course, I did quite well in the election in those two different settlements, and part of the reason was because I think that some of the individuals, not all, had believed that Premier Redford and this government were not consulting with them. The Premier was not consulting with a significant number of the individuals within those settlements. So it’s nice to see that there’s at least something going on here and that they’re addressing some issues.

The legislation attempts to improve the governing capacity of the Alberta Métis settlements. I know the Leader of the Official Opposition has thoroughly gone through a number of the legislative provisions. She is going to be putting forward a significant number of amendments to try to improve this legislation.

I thought I would talk just briefly and highlight some of the issues that I’ve seen. Of course, there are over 66,000 Métis people in Alberta, I believe, and the lion’s share of that population is located in northern Alberta. I do have some comments from one of the stakeholders, and that’s the chairman of the Kikino Métis settlement, Floyd Thompson. He was one of the four Métis officials who were appointed to the long-term arrangement negotiation committee and was involved in developing Bill 19 and the long-term agreement itself, which is a 10-year, $85 million investment plan with the Alberta government.

Mr. Thompson has been looking forward to, as he has stated, some stricter guidelines and greater accountability. One quote that he has stated is that with local and provincial government, people want their government to be up front and centre, that they don’t want things behind closed doors. This legislation sets the stage so that anyone coming into leadership knows that they have to be accountable. They’ve been elected to serve the people, not correct them.

I think those are, of course, wise words, Mr. Speaker. It’s too bad that those words and that wisdom weren’t acknowledged by this Premier because I think it would be very valuable advice. If you’re going to – and the Leader of the Official Opposition alluded to it – make these types of substantial changes to the Métis settlements, some of those are very equally applicable to this current PC government.

The other comment that Mr. Thompson had indicated is that the election period goes from three years to four years. I just want to indicate that he is indicating that he is in favour of that, that it puts Métis settlements in a good position for business planning and assessing outcomes.

Another interesting amendment is in the legislation. I believe that currently individuals within the settlements can elect five council members. With the legislative amendments, if the settlement members prefer, they can elect four council members to run for election, with a separate election race for chair. That, obviously, is a synergy with municipalities where, if there are a sufficient number of individuals within a municipality that want to directly elect, in a county’s case, a reeve, they can put that forward and have those elections.

The other aspect is a code of conduct. That would be an official code of conduct for settlement councils that will be supposedly developed in the near future and will ensure that the requirements of those council members are defined. In that area Mr. Thompson indicates that he is in favour, and essentially he is indicating that they want to ensure that the councils act responsibly, ethically, with professional conduct, impartially, with integrity, honesty, and treat people with respect, maintain confidences while not withholding public information.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, again, a lot of wisdom there. It would be fortunate if some of the ministers, in particular the Minister of AT and T, would listen to some of those principles and apply it to Alberta's legislation, not just Bill 19, with respect to Métis settlements.

One thing that our leader had indicated is that there is some concern within settlements that the government in their communications are saying that a settlement is akin to a municipality. You know, I'll just quote from what Mr. Thompson is stating: all governments have similarities, but the bottom line is that Métis settlements are never going to be municipalities, and we don't care to be referred to as municipalities. I hope that the hon. minister would take that into account. Of course, Mr. Thompson is quite accurate in that Métis settlements have different constitutional rights, and although the minister is trying to align some of the principles and government structures of municipalities with the settlements, he should not refer to settlements as a municipality. I think that would be some wise advice for him to take.

The other aspect is that the legislation will create standardized financial reporting for all the settlements and require three-year business plans with strategic plans laid out for achieving goals. Of course, anything that provides forward-looking requirements I think is positive. I've discussed this with some of the individuals on the settlements, and they see this as a positive step forward.

I look forward to the debate in Committee of the Whole. Our party will be putting forward substantive amendments. I hope that the hon. minister looks closely at those amendments so that we can pursue and have some positive outcomes in this legislation. You know, I think this minister has done a significant amount of consultation. I hope that he will look at our amendments thoroughly and genuinely give them some due consideration to try and strengthen the legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand and speak to Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013. I give a lot of credit to the minister for his leadership on this. I think it's long overdue that we have a constructive and leadership relationship with all our First Nations. The Métis are a unique part of our history. Indeed, they went through some of the same troubling times that our other First Nations did, suffered a lot of the same kinds of experiences, deprivations, and abuses by a system that tried to destroy the Indian culture.

I think we have a lot to make up for, and investing in these folks, investing in their stability, their educational processes, their cultural enrichment, and assisting them in finding their way into the complex management world and the accountabilities that we know all governments have to face and meet is an important step. Everything I've heard about the settlements has been that they're challenged in a lot of different ways, not unlike some of the reserves, and the minister has taken it firmly in hand and addressed some of the key issues.

As many will know – and I want to put it on the record – this government did conclude a long-term agreement with the Metis Settlements General Council, directing $85 million in provincial funding to the settlements over the next 10 years, after which it's presumed these settlements will become relatively self-sufficient. They will have the capacity to set tax or other revenue streams. They will then have full accountability, as outlined here, to have democratic elections, four-year terms now instead of three-year terms.

They will have financial accountability guidelines that will preempt any, I guess, concerns that have been raised in other contexts and make sure that they get off to a good strong start with the training, the opportunities for feedback, and appropriate, constructive oversight as they move into their roles on these councils, with more clear roles and accountabilities, as I say, which are very appropriate.

I have a few questions about some of the sections. They may well have been addressed in the bill itself, but I couldn't see them. Section 14 amends section 55 of the Métis settlements agreement by stipulating that, unlike all other bylaws, budget bylaws are exempt from public notice and public approval requirements from settlement members. That, in the face of it, doesn't appear to be a democratic process. It doesn't seem to address some of the prima facie case for accountability, transparency, and democratic process.

Section 15 amends section 57(1) of the MSA by stipulating that settlement members may petition the settlement council for a bylaw about any matter other than annual settlement budgets. Again I have questions about why that would be exempt, and I'm sure the minister will have some opportunity to explain that further.

Section 21 repeals sections 175.1 to 175.3 due to the fact that the $700,000 Métis settlements ombudsman office was eliminated in the 2013-14 Alberta government estimates. As I raised at the time, I think there are concerns that the ombudsman was receiving twice as many appeals and concerns about due process as the council. It raised questions in my mind about whether the ombudsman was more accessible, whether he was seen to be acting independent of the council and therefore having a significant ongoing role, and whether we're going to lose some of that sense of accountability through this process. We haven't yet heard from the Métis communities themselves about what they feel the impact is going to be of eliminating this ombudsman, and I think we need to hear more about the impact. If this is simply a cost-cutting measure and is going to undermine the confidence of people and the ability to have due process, then we will be very much pushing back on that.

Another area. I've just begun to read through the Metis Settlements Act. It's my understanding that energy and subsurface rights do fall within the Métis jurisdiction and that there will have to be joint agreements and due consultation and accommodation for any developments on their lands and, if I'm not mistaken, comanagement as a result of the arrangement that has been made with Métis settlements. I'd like to hear more about that and how, in fact, the new consultation agreement that is being developed and proposed by this government will impact, how the consultation accommodation process may or may not be different between First Nations and the Métis. It's not clear to me yet where that falls, and again I would like very much to hear from the Métis communities themselves on some of these issues.

With those provisos, again I congratulate the minister and the government for moving forward on some essential work that needs to be done in terms of social development, economic development, education, responsible and accountable democratic processes, financial accountability on the Métis settlements. From the limited interaction I've had with Métis people, I think it is a real step forward.

With that, I'll take my seat. Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to be brief, which is a nice change of pace. [interjections] I notice they did not hesitate, compared to my hon. leader. [interjections] I will be brief because most of what my concerns were have been questioned.

I rise because although I do not have Métis settlements in my riding, I have many Métis people, and the CFO of my campaign is Métis. I actually had a chance to talk to him about this bill.

I want to thank the hon. minister for bringing this bill forward, but I do have a question. Hopefully, the minister can address and answer the question. Some of the other members have brought it up. How does the appeal tribunal differ from or enhance what the ombudsman was or is today? That's been brought up, I think, a number of times, and maybe we can get that answered to the level that we can deal with that.

Beyond that, having debated the budget – and we will have some more speeches on the budget later and on the other bills where we will disagree – it's always a pleasure to rise and agree and see something brought forward that we can have bipartisan support for and actually take positive steps in the governance of our great province. From where I sit reading this bill, I'm pleased to rise to support it. I ask my fellow members to support it, and I want to thank the member for bringing it forward.

Thanks again, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'd invite the hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really do appreciate the comments from the hon. members about this bill. I think it's quite timely that 2013 is the 75th anniversary of the establishment of the Métis settlements in this province, which I think speaks volumes about the long and productive relationship we've had with the Métis community.

Mr. Speaker, settlement members and their elected leadership want improved governments, they want increased transparency, and they want clear roles and responsibilities, which this bill is set to achieve. The Métis settlements have nothing but my admiration and respect for the work that they continue to do. This bill supports the Métis settlements long-term arrangements which were negotiated between the province and the Métis settlements leadership, which is a prime example of what is achieved through dialogue and a positive working relationship.

Mr. Speaker, I just want you to know that we took about two years to get to the point where we were actually able to sign the long-term agreement. That's because we had real good dialogue, and we wanted to make sure that we had a bill and an agreement in place that would allow the Métis settlements to move forward. That's what they wanted to do, and they made that very clear to me. Again, I have nothing but admiration for the leadership of the Métis settlements and the work they did.

One thing that I do have to say because of some of the comments is that members have to understand that there's a very distinct difference between the MNA, which is the Métis Nation of Alberta, and the Métis settlements. Those are two different organizations. When we look at talking about that, hopefully, I'll be able to clarify that a little bit more in Committee of the Whole.

In saying that, Mr. Speaker, again, I appreciate the support of the members of the Assembly. I look forward to talking about the amendments.

With that, I would call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 12 Fiscal Management Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 12, and I'm pleased to rise and move that.

You know, government first committed to a renewal of the fiscal framework in Budget 2012. Last fall we consulted with businesses and financial leaders and academics and everyday Albertans both in person and online. They told us that the province should save for future generations in both good times and in challenging times. They said that we should consider borrowing to build infrastructure but only when it made financial sense. I've seen that most recently in the Leger poll. And they said that Alberta needed to reduce its reliance on nonrenewable natural resource revenues.

Mr. Speaker, we have a duty to prepare this province for the future. The province is expected to expand to more than 5 million people in the next 17 years. That's the equivalent of adding another city the size of Calgary. Population growth means good things for Alberta: more diverse and vibrant communities, more tax revenue, more customers, and higher consumer spending at local businesses. It also means more pressure on existing programs and services and more pressure on our public infrastructure. We know that adequate public infrastructure goes hand in hand with quality of life, and Albertans have told us that access to schools and health facilities and maintained roads and highways are priorities for them.

The Fiscal Management Act is our response to what we heard. Bill 12 legislates the requirement for an operational plan, a savings plan, and a capital plan, and it retains a 1 per cent legislated limit on in-year spending increases in total operational expense. It also sets limits on borrowing for infrastructure and prohibits borrowing for programs and services.

In addition, Bill 12 establishes the new contingency account, a short-term savings fund that will act as a fiscal shock absorber and stabilize revenue fluctuations. The Alberta sustainability fund will be replaced by this new account. Bill 12 allows the operational budget to be in deficit only if there are assets available in the contingency account to offset it.

Another important change that this legislation makes will help future generations become less reliant on resource revenue. Each year specific amounts of nonrenewable resource revenue will be set aside for savings: 5 per cent of the first $10 billion in non-renewable resource revenue, 25 per cent of the next $5 billion up to $15 billion, and 50 per cent of all nonrenewable resource revenue in excess of $15 billion. This portion will be placed into the contingency account until it reaches a balance of $5 billion. The revenue will then be used for other savings such as the Alberta heritage savings trust fund or endowments or the capital debt repayment account.

I would also like to address some questions and comments that have come from some of the members. Concerns were expressed about the repeal of the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act. I would like to point out that the majority of items in the old acts have been included in the new Fiscal Management Act; for example, the 1 per cent legislated limit on in-year spending increases in total operating expense. Information such as the consolidated deficit and change in net assets has not disappeared. These items are still included in the consolidated financial statements that we present. We will see that the depreciating of our assets and debt-servicing costs in this way of presenting the budget is the same as we require of municipalities, separating capital from operating budgets. This method, recommended by groups such as the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, is similar to financial statements that can be found in the business world.

A number of members also referred to government's borrowing plans as borrowing to save. Our borrowing is responsible and strategic, much like the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre suggested. The Fiscal Management Act responsibly sets a cap on how much we can borrow. It limits debt-servicing costs associated with capital borrowing to 3 per cent of operational revenue. It's tied to market conditions and the government's operational revenue. So if our revenue goes down, the limit on our debt goes down. If interest rates go up, the amount of additional debt that we can take on goes down as well. We've said that borrowing for capital projects will be done strategically.

Our one point that we continually made when talking about borrowing for capital has been that borrowing will only be done when it makes financial sense. We're not going to borrow just for the sake of borrowing. We're leveraging our triple-A credit rating to access low financing costs. This strategy will save more money in the long run, and it lets us avoid increased labour costs and inflation that come with delaying projects. By "save," I don't mean add to our savings. I mean pay less costs. This way much-needed capital projects such as schools, health facilities, and roads like highway 63 will be there for Alberta's growing communities when they need them instead of needing to play catch-up. Debt repayment plans will be established at the time of borrowing.

Speaking of capital projects, if members wish to see a list of priority projects, they just need to have a look at our capital plan on the website.

Throughout the debate I heard strong support from all sides of the House for our approach to saving. Albertans have told government that saving is a priority in both good times and challenging times. They continue to support strongly the heritage savings trust fund and believe it to still be the best way to save for future generations. Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, provides the province's first savings policy in more than 25 years and will ensure a degree of saving each and every year. We're putting into law a responsible savings strategy where a portion of non-renewable resource revenue will be set aside into savings.

Some would like us to accelerate our savings plan, and this act does allow us to do this. We had a good discussion about that in one of the amendments last night. While it sets out a timeline of 2015-16 to start saving specific amounts of nonrenewable resource revenue, we do have a full intention of accelerating this plan. Income from the heritage savings trust fund will also be retained in increasing portions, ultimately retaining a hundred per cent of the income by 2016-17. Under the new savings plan the province's total savings in various funds and endowments will grow to more than $24 billion over the next three years. That's significant, Mr. Speaker, and it is reflective of this government's focus on building Alberta's future. To suggest that our savings are depleted is wrong. The Fiscal Management Act is important not only because of how it changes the way we save for the future but also because of enhancements to the rules around how we spend and borrow.

I would ask all members of this House for their support of Bill 12, and I look forward to debate in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to briefly talk on Bill 12. Of course, what this back-in-debt budget does, despite the debt, is that it also repeals the Government Accountability Act as well as the Fiscal Responsibility Act. It's interesting to see day in, day out how the Finance minister tries to spin this. He says: well, we're going to borrow to save. If you actually go into Hansard and take a look at the number of times this Finance minister has used the word "debt," it would be an interesting word count. I'm sure it's dozens if not hundreds of times. This is quite a substantial difference from the past. Of course, we've gone from $17 billion in the sustainability fund to eventually having $17 billion in debt by 2016.

I just wanted to close with a statement that was actually done in the third reading of the Government Accountability Act back on May 11, 1995. Since we're doing third reading of Bill 12, I think it's quite relevant. It was by the then Treasurer, Jim Dinning, who said:

I'm proud that my colleagues have been willing to set the standard and set a high one such that no matter who may come behind us, they will not be able to water the standard down without looking at the whites of the eyes of Albertans and saying, "We're going to deliver to you substandard government."

I hope that these members can go to their constituents and look into their eyes and say these same words, that they are indeed going to have substandard government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to again make a few comments in regard to Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. I have made my comments and views fairly clear in readings that we've had of this bill already. Just to remind people, this really lies at the heart of this spring session and the budget. The problems that we see in Bill 12, I think, are largely indicative of the cuts and the other issues we have in each of the other ministries before us here this spring.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the biggest problem with this bill is that it does very little to change the structural revenue problem that we have here in the province of Alberta. We need to not only reverse the cuts that we had felt and experienced over the last 17 years but also start to restructure our corporate tax rate and royalties rates so that we are capturing a fair share of the revenue and of the wealth that is being produced in this province.

Everyone knows that Alberta is becoming more and more the economic engine of the entire country. While other jurisdictions in North America and in Europe are experiencing recession, our economy is in fact growing. So for us to have a budget that is essentially a cutting budget in the midst of a growing economy, there lies an essential contradiction that, I think, should become abundantly clear to most Albertans, and I know that it is for regular working people. This budget doesn't match the reality that they are experiencing on the ground with their own lives and with their own budgets in their families.

Our population is growing, too. While all of the classic indicators of an economy in healthy, substantive, long-term growth are here right before us, right in front of the doors of this Legislature, suddenly you come in here and you have this alternate reality where we are making cuts and somehow looking to reduce our public expenditures for the essential services for which this government and this entire Legislature has been created in the first place, to provide public health care, education, roads, and so forth to meet the needs of a modern industrialized society.

You know, I find it kind of unfortunate that we are running up against these two realities here in this Legislature. It's not just a moot point that we're debating for academic purposes; it means actual dollars that affect the lives of regular Albertans, millions of them across the province, everyone from someone who might have a school-aged child to seniors or someone who is needing to access the health care system. So many of us have all of those things in our lives all at the same time in regard to school-aged children, postsecondary children, aging parents, and so forth and require extra care. You know, when we take dollars and we debate these things here in this House, it's not just for ideological purposes or for moot points of debating; its effects are direct and measurable in the outside world, in people's lives.

As well, the problem is that this bill really doesn't save money, and I cannot see it saving substantial amounts of money until after the next election cycle or until somehow we hit another oil boom or energy boom in the province – right? – which could entirely possibly be soon. But, again, when have we learned that we should put systemic things into place that will see us through the vagaries of the boom and bust cycle that invariably causes damage, both societal and physical damage, to our province, both on the boom and on the bust cycle? That's not to say that the boom doesn't do those damaging things to our social fabric and to our physical environment as much as a recession does, too.

We need to learn from these mistakes, and while, you know, Bill 12 certainly – I mean, I'm not suggesting that it's not worth the paper that it's printed on. It has some provisions to ensure responsibility and some sense of saving. At least it acknowledges those concepts, which, I think, Albertans consider to be very overdue. We just have to, I think, categorize these things much more carefully and make substantial savings and not spend the royalty and revenue from our nonrenewable resources but, rather, save those and start building a structural change that allows us to diversify our economy and make something that is sustainable and something that we can be proud to hand down to subsequent generations.

This budget also, I think, has this sense of confusion – right? – between money in and money out. I know that this budget is separated into three sections, but really I don't see it making a deficit calculation, in my mind, at all. You know, this drastic reorganization makes it hard for us to track things, and I think that goes against the grain of both the substance and the theme of transparency that we strive to achieve here in the Legislature.

As well, so many of the reporting provisions in this bill are up to the discretion of the minister and the ministry. I think that we could have more required reporting in Bill 12 in our budgets and make those problems go away, right? It's not as though people are not capable of reading budgets and reading sophisticated budgets, but this whole idea of discretion, I think, is not entirely appropriate.

Again, I know the minister talked about this, but, I mean, this Bill 12 was replacing the Fiscal Responsibility Act, which actually made it illegal for actual expenses to exceed the revenue plus what was contained in the sustainability fund. This present act abolishes that requirement and replaces it with a requirement that only the operating accounts in the budget must be balanced, opening the door for borrowing for capital expenditures. It makes a promise not to have that operational deficit ring. It sends off a bit of an alarm bell, I think.

Certainly, it's not necessarily an imprudent thing to choose to borrow for capital expenditures, but I just find a contradiction here in what I had heard for many years in this Legislature when I was here before. Suddenly you see the turnaround. I just wonder how sincere the government is in regard to these things or if they're just saying what they think people want to hear.

You know, the questions that I asked before are something that I just wanted to bring forward again very quickly, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, what is in the way here that would just stop this government from moving the goalposts again if they don't find enough revenue to pay for the level of services that Albertans demand, right?

Part of this budget exercise that we've just gone through here is very much less substance in terms of a shortage of funds and more of an excuse to continue down the path of privatization and this neoliberal concept of reducing the responsibility of government to provide the essential services that a modern industrial society requires. This ideological attack would have come regardless, even if we had a billion billion dollars in surplus. I know that the pattern over the last 20 years is to have a cutting budget, to make attacks on public services immediately subsequent to an election victory. That hasn't changed, and I find that to be cynical and ultimately destructive.

This bill is only part of a strategy, I think ostensibly only, to make Alberta less dependent on nonrenewable resources, but it doesn't seem to achieve that. There's nothing in the bill that helps to diversify the economy, nothing to address the revenue problem, as I said before. The only thing that this might accomplish, I hope, is some small revenue savings that can smooth through and build the heritage trust fund into something more substantive that we can use as part of our ongoing budget if it builds enough size and scope.

So, Mr. Speaker, for the sake of brevity I don't want to go over all of these points again. It's safe to say that the budget that we've dealt with over the last few weeks is disappointing, and this Bill 12 is just a pale shadow of that disappointing news that Albertans are having to face.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also glad to rise and speak on Bill 12. Bill 12 repeals both the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act and replaces them with a single statute that changes the way the government administers and reports on the province's finances. One of the key features of the new legislation is that the government will now be required to have a distinct operational plan, a distinct savings plan, and a distinct capital plan as parts of the overall annual fiscal plan. It also establishes a new short-term savings contingency account whose purpose is to provide funding for those years in which the actual operational expenses exceed actual operational revenues, as operational deficits will now be illegal with this bill.

The contingency account is a renaming, repurposing, and continuation of the Alberta sustainability fund within the general revenue fund. The balance in the contingency account is not permitted to be less than zero.

It also repeals the Fiscal Responsibility Act, which had made deficits illegal. Under the new Fiscal Management Act only operational deficits are illegal now. It also, you know, waters down the Government Accountability Act. It incorporates seven watered-down sections of that statute into the Fiscal Management Act, including the following: fiscal plan, business plans, reports on progress, government annual report, ministry annual reports, accountable organization, and contents of public accounts.

The new section pertaining to the government's annual fiscal plan creates the requirement for an operational plan, a savings plan, and a capital plan. The references to the Minister of Finance that were found in the Government Accountability Act have been replaced by ones to the responsible minister in the Fiscal Management Act.

Absent from the new legislation are those sections of the Government Accountability Act that require some measure of accountability from the Minister of Finance. Section 11 obligated the minister to include a statement of responsibility within the consolidated fiscal plan and the consolidated annual report, and section 12 required the minister to make public a written statement explaining any omitted information or noncompliance with the act and produce those two documents.

Also gone is section 6, which required the inclusion of the major economic assumptions that the Minister of Finance made in preparing the province's consolidated fiscal plan and the anticipated economic conditions for the fiscal years to which the plan related. Repealing the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act was necessary to give the government the flexibility it needed to borrow, to go into debt, to pay for capital projects. I don't think we would need to repeal the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act had the government not been mismanaging the money.

By committing the government to a savings plan as well as an operational plan and a capital plan, the Minister of Finance claims that Alberta's major savings accounts will grow to over $24 billion within three years, which, it should be noted, is an estimate of all the money that will be held in a new contingency account and the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and other savings. This is not to be interpreted as the heritage savings fund being worth over $24 billion within three years.

The bill needlessly reduces the fiscal accountability and transparency on the part of government for election finance reporting requirements. It doesn't change the potential tax mix or diversify its revenue streams. It offers no real plan or lifeline for paying off the province's growing debt and does nothing in the short and medium terms to reduce the province's overreliance on nonrenewable resource revenues.

The government claims that this legislation reflects the results from the Dollars and Sense consultations held in the fall of 2012. By the government's own admission only 6,000-plus Albertans participated in that process according to page 3 of the government's Dollars and Sense: What We Heard report. This begs the question: why is the government setting fiscal policy based on the feedback and advice of less than 1 per cent of Albertans?

When the government first announced that it was borrowing up to $1.1 billion to pay for the twinning of highway 63, the Transportation minister said that it would be paid back within 20 years. Since then it was revealed in Budget 2013 that the government plans to borrow 12 and a half billion dollars over four years for various capital projects. The debt keeps growing, Mr. Speaker, yet this new legislation contains no plan or timeline for paying off this debt. This debt is going to be like a runaway train.

I think this bill should be defeated because it needlessly reduces fiscal accountability and transparency on the part of the government for election finance reporting requirements, it doesn't change the province's tax mix or diversify its revenue streams, it offers no real plan or timeline for paying off the province's growing debt, and it does nothing in the short and medium terms to reduce the province's overreliance on nonrenewable resource revenues.

If the government is going to repeal and amend laws to make itself less fiscally accountable and transparent, it should at least have the courage to admit that it's doing so of its own choosing and not because a relatively small number of Albertans apparently told them to do this through the Dollars and Sense consultation.

With this bill Alberta Liberal members are once again being asked to support several questionable proposals in order to get one desperately needed one passed; namely, a legislated savings plan. The government must not use Bill 12's requirement for an operational plan, a savings plan, and a capital plan as a shell game to obfuscate the province's finances. Why is this government setting fiscal policy based on the feedback and advice of less than 1 per cent of Albertans? That boggles my mind, Mr. Speaker.

For those reasons, I won't be supporting the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it interesting that over the last number of months the PCs have been looking at their historic leaders and the legacies that they've left and how much we hear about Peter Lougheed, how much we hear about Ralph Klein, how proud they clearly are of the legacy that both of those leaders left behind.

I think it's worth remembering why it is that Peter Lougheed enjoys the legacy and the admiration that he does today. It's because for most of time that he was in government, when he was in the Premier's office, he balanced budgets, ran surpluses, and put money into savings.

I think it's important to remember why Ralph Klein has the admiration that he does today. It's because for most of the time he was in office, he ran balanced budgets, ran surpluses, not only became debt free but also put money into savings, some $15 billion by the time he left office, and he also instituted rules that created greater transparency.

You don't hear the PCs talk much about some of their other leaders, like Don Getty, who racked up $23 billion worth of debt, who lost his own seat, who spent billions of dollars on corporate welfare trying to pick winners and losers in the economy. You don't hear them talk that much about Mr. Stelmach, who depleted savings, who also started down a path of corporate welfare with the $2 billion carbon capture and storage.

I think it's instructive for the members opposite to think about what kind of legacy their current leader is going to leave. When you look at two of the most important things that those two leaders had done and how they actually changed the expectation in this province about what their government ought to do, I think you see a massive mismatch with what the Finance minister has proposed in Bill 12 and why Bill 12 should fail.

I look at this bill as a bold step backward, a bold step backward to the kind of substandard government that my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was talking about. I hope they look at the whites of the eyes of the people that are in their constituencies as they go back and try to sell why it is that a year later they're taking a step away from the legacy they often claimed to be so proud of. Had they followed in the path of Peter Lougheed, who in 1976 established the heritage savings trust fund, if they had done then what they claim they're going to do now, keeping the interest in that fund, it would have grown to $136 billion today. It would be generating $7 billion to $8 billion a year in additional investment income. We would have already weaned ourselves off of the reliance on oil and gas revenues if only they had been able to keep with the good decisions that he made back in those early days.

If you look, as well, even at some of the more recent decisions that have been made, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation points out another substantial way in which this budget is taking a step backwards. The Premier likes to talk about raising the bar on transparency and accountability. We're absolutely going in the opposite direction in this legislation. "Repealing the Government Accountability Act will gut the most important accountability measures required by law." This is according to the Canadian Taxpayers Federation's Alberta director Derek Fildebrandt. "This will leave taxpayers without the most basic information required to know what their government is up to."

There's no requirement to have consolidated revenues and expenses, a consolidated deficit or surplus number; revenue sources by category; expenses by category; a breakdown of liabilities and assets; borrowing, or debt, requirements; or detailed spending of capital by ministry. These are ways in which the government I think is breaking some of the early pioneering work that had been done by the previous leader Premier Ralph Klein and his then Finance minister.

I am going to address in my brief statements tonight this notion that the Finance minister likes to keep putting forward about borrowing for capital and when it makes sense. I've noticed that the Finance minister seems to suffer from selective hearing. I will try once again to get across to him what others, what economists and business leaders, are telling him makes sense when you're looking at the issue of borrowing for capital in this province and, in particular, government borrowing.

What the Alberta Chambers of Commerce said is that for debt to make sense, it had to have five key parameters, five key restrictions. One, there had to be a spending limit law because if you do not have a year-over-year spending limitation, you will always put yourself in a position where the government is spending well beyond its means. This has absolutely been the case with this government over the last 10 years, doubling inflation and population growth, which is why we're in the trouble that we're in today. So a broken rule 1 about when borrowing makes sense.

Two, borrowing only makes sense if you have a priority list and you have preidentified all of the projects that you might borrow for for capital, and this government does not do this. Directing us to their website to look at what their priorities are going to be for the next three years is not what we have been asking for day in and day out in this Legislature. They know exactly what all of the priority capital projects are for every single school board, for every single health district, for every single municipality. We want to see a long-term, 10-year priority list so that we can start identifying those projects which should be near the top of the list and those ones which can wait a little bit longer. They refuse to give that, and you need to give that kind of priority list if you're going to be able to prioritize your borrowing. That's what the Chambers of Commerce actually said.

They also say that you shouldn't be borrowing for things that are going to have a higher operating cost than the cost of capital. You shouldn't be borrowing for things like schools and hospitals, which we know in some cases can . . .

Mr. Horner: They did not say that.

Ms Smith: They absolutely did say that. I will show the minister. I will send that over to you, Minister. I will show you exactly where they did say in their budget submission that you should not be borrowing for items that will have a higher operating cost than capital cost. The Finance minister continues to break that third rule of when it makes sense to borrow.

The fourth. When they began, they actually proposed a much stricter limitation on what the borrowing limit should be based on a percentage of revenues. The government has said 3 per cent. The Chambers of Commerce has said 1 per cent. They started off even lower than that, at .05 per cent, a few years ago, but I think they saw there was no way the government was going to be able to match that. That would still put a spending limit in there of $12 billion. Their 3 per cent spending limit gives the Finance minister the latitude to go up to $36 billion or $40 billion depending on what the interest rates are.

Now, of course, he did say this evening that if the interest rates end up going up, that means that we borrow less. Well, what happens if the Finance minister borrows to his spending limit on the basis of today's interest rates? Then when he goes to refinance, as we know he's going to do – we know he's going to roll over – when he rolls that debt over and we end up not being able to be within those parameters, what do you think is going to happen? Well, I can already predict it. We saw what happened when their debt repayment rules were inconvenient, when they got in the way. When it was inconvenient because they had a balanced budget rule and that got in the way, and when it was inconvenient for them to have a zero-debt rule and that got in the way, they changed the legislation. That's exactly what this Finance minister is going to do. This spending limit law is a sham. There's absolutely no limitation when you're going to have a 3 per cent limit.

Then we also have the fifth rule that the Finance minister has broken for when it makes sense to borrow. If you're actually going to borrow, you have to have a plan to pay it back. He's constantly told us how this is like a family mortgage. This debt is not structured like a family mortgage. When a family takes out a mortgage on a property, when they make their payment every year, not only are they paying a portion of the finance charges; they're also paying a portion of principal. So year after year after year the amount of the outstanding debt gets smaller and smaller and smaller, and a greater and greater portion of their payment goes to pay down the principal, and less and less goes to finance charges. That's not what the Finance minister has done.

What the Finance minister has done is that he's taken out long-term bonds so that when we get up to the $17 billion that he intends to borrow by 2016, we are going to be spending $600 million year in, year out, every single year, until that money is paid back. And I don't believe it will be paid back. I don't see any evidence that there's a debt repayment plan that will allow for him to make that end-of-term balloon payment when that debt comes due. I'm already going to predict that if this government is still in power in 20 years, what we'll actually see is a plan to just simply roll it over and roll it over. Who knows? Maybe it'll take 20 or 40 or 60 or 80 years to finally pay that debt back. We've done the calculation. With the kind of money that they are setting aside right now, it would take 83 years to pay back $17 billion worth of debt. So he's broken the fifth rule of what the Chambers of Commerce say makes sense for borrowing for capital.

I go one step further because, quite frankly, I do not think it makes sense at all for a government that is awash in resource revenues, as this government has been for most of its history, as it still is when you look at $7 billion to $8 billion a year worth of resource revenue, windfall revenues that any other provincial Premier would be delighted to have, that this government can't seem to live within those means. It absolutely is unconscionable that on top of not putting any meaningful amount of those resource revenues away, this government is also intending for us to go back into debt.

I'll just share a little story. The hon. leader of the fourth party, the NDP opposition, and I were at a debate at the University of Calgary a couple of weeks ago put on by the students of the Economic Society of Calgary as well as the Wildrose and the NDP clubs on campus. I can tell you that we had a pretty good debate there. One of the things he said was: the NDP is not a party that believes in deficit; we would not go into debt. The NDP would increase revenues – at least they're being honest about it – by increasing taxes. I can tell you that the kids in that room gave him a round of applause for saying that he would not mortgage their futures.

Here's the interesting thing when we're trying to figure out where the political paradigm is in this province. It's quite clear to me that the Progressive Conservatives are actually not just to the left of the Liberals; they are actually to the left of the NDP, absolutely to the left of the NDP. There is no question in my mind.

Here's what Jack Mintz had to say about this. This is why I believe, once again, the Finance minister is not listening or he's having selective hearing when he listens to what it is that economists tell him. Jack Mintz has said that in a resource-rich economy like Alberta we should not be borrowing at all. We should be putting money away like Alaska and Norway because if we spend every dollar worth of resource revenues, we are actually dipping into the wealth of future generations. We should be putting some of that money aside so that not only do we have those resources to be able to take care of our own needs, but they also have those resources to be able to take care of future needs. When the government not only spends every dollar worth of resource revenue but, in addition to that, starts borrowing money, Jack Mintz says that they are double-dipping on future generations. That is exactly what this government is doing.

I can tell you they do not have the support of the younger generations, people who have not even had the opportunity to vote, to take out billions and billions and billions of dollars' worth of debt that they and their kids and their grandkids are going to have to pay back. This is not smart debt; this is foolish debt. It is not fair to future generations. I hope that when the minister goes back to his riding and looks those young people in the eyes, he actually has a much better explanation for why it is that he's mortgaging their future, because what he's told us here tonight, in my view, gets a big fat F, a big fat fail.

I'm going to be voting against this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I know that we're moving on to the appropriation bill, and I really want to get there. On behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo – I know he would want me to put a couple of things on the record.

First of all, the Liberal caucus really strongly believes that this government has to stop supplementing 30 per cent of its operational budget in its budget by using nonrenewable resource revenue. It has to stop that. That is spending the next generation's money – it is intergenerational theft – and they have to stop doing that. That money has to be put into, we would suggest, endowment funds, postsecondary endowment, infrastructure endowment, the heritage fund, arts and social sciences. That's our suggestion. You can come up with something else.

We do need to return to a progressive tax. That gets more support than I thought it would. People are asked: "Do you want the services? If you want the services, this is what it's going to cost." They're willing to pay that. So I think we should be returning to a progressive and fair income tax system and taxing our corporations appropriately.

You know, I made a lot of fun of the government when I first spoke to this bill, that it still has to pass laws to stop itself from doing what it should be doing in serving the people. I do find that really odd. We have to pass a savings bill to make ourselves save. I just think that's weird. But the government seems to need to do that, and I've been through three Treasurers who have done it. It seems to be part of the Conservative culture, I guess. I don't know.

The last thing that I'm going to say here is about the need for a surplus plan. I'm going to keep talking about that. This is a cyclical economy. We are going to have surpluses again. What plan does this government have as to how it will spend those surpluses? They're going to come even through oil sands royalties and the postpayment option payout that I was referencing earlier.

We had during my time – I haven't even gone back and counted it. I don't know how much it is. Maybe $15 billion worth of surplus money has come while I've been serving, and I can't tell you where that money went. You'd think that with $15 billion the highway from here to Calgary would be paved with gold. It's so much money, and I can't tell where you guys spent it because you had no plan, and everybody that got there first with their hand out got the money. I'm not really sure how it benefited everybody in Alberta. You need to get a surplus plan about what you're going to do. Nobody is looking me in the eye, which just tells you how – oh, there he is. The Treasurer looks me in the eye as everybody else was looking anywhere but there. That tells me how uncomfortable they are with the idea.

That is my last requirement. My colleague from Calgary-Buffalo had raised a number of very reasonable amendments, none of which were passed by the government majority. You know, he was asking for things like a fiscal plan being expressed in plain language, that there be a consolidated statement each year and an actual total surplus or deficit – I mean, this isn't radical stuff; well, I wouldn't have thought this was radical, but evidently it's way out there to ask for plain language and consolidated statements – also, empowering the Auditor General to investigate anything that happens under this act or as a result of this act, reviewing the income tax rate and looking at the appropriateness of increases to it, and allowing the citizens to know how their tax dollars are being spent. It's very reasonable. Sorry; I thought it was reasonable. I guess it's radical.

Those are the points I wanted to raise in connection with Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board to close debate.

Mr. Saskiw: If I just could make a motion first to have one-minute bells, please.

The Deputy Speaker: I don't know if that's in order at this point, hon. member. We'll come back to that.

Go ahead, Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I am going to be, I hope, fairly brief, but I do have to cover off some of the information that was put on the floor of this House, which was, frankly, a little bit misleading in terms of the information that was provided.

First of all, we talked about the opposition talking about the back-in-debt thing, and we had a point of order on it actually earlier on today, Mr. Speaker. They talked about the fact that we're going back in debt, back in debt. If they actually looked at the books of the province of Alberta, they would know that we've been in debt. We've been in debt for some time. Since 2005 we've been building infrastructure using debt financing. It's unfortunate that they're not looking at that and are trying to convince people to look at it as a back-in-debt budget, which, frankly, I find kind of interesting. If that's all they've got, that's it.

The other thing that they're talking about is repealing two acts. They're not talking about the fact that we're replacing with one that actually contains almost all of the requirements of the previous two and bringing those two together as well as putting in a savings piece and a debt ceiling that is sensitive not only to our revenues but also to our interest rate costs.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition also mentioned Mr. Dinning and talked about how this would be contrary to his views. I can inform the hon. member that I had a very long chat with former Minister Dinning. We have had a lot of chats about how the budget would go. He was actually one of the CEOs that I consulted with last year around the fact that we should be using capital in the capital markets for financing debt. You know what he said, Mr. Speaker? He said: that's the right thing to do. He said that you should be moving in that direction because it makes financial sense.

We committed to not raising taxes in this budget, and we didn't, Mr. Speaker. Promise made, promise kept.

You know, frankly, as some of the other members in this House can do, I can talk about the legacy of Peter Lougheed. I can talk about the legacy of Ralph Klein. I can talk about the legacy of Premier Stelmach. Quite frankly, I can talk about the legacy of Don Getty because I grew up in both of those, in Peter Lougheed's and Don Getty's. I still have a relationship with former Premier Don Getty. He served this province extremely well. He sacrificed a lot for this province. To talk about someone who put his family and his life into the hands of the Albertan public and served this province the way the hon. leader did, frankly, I find a little bit distasteful.

Mr. Speaker, Premier Lougheed knew that we had to build in this province. When you travel around this province and you go to the airport terminal in Medicine Hat, there's a plaque on the wall that says: built by the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. When you move through the hospital where my first child was going to be born, in Consort, Alberta, where I lived for a period of time, it's a beautiful facility, built with Alberta heritage savings trust fund dollars, capital dollars, cash.

When you talk about things like the sustainability fund, the majority of that $17 billion actually went in when Premier Stelmach made the conscious decision not to put $8 billion into the heritage savings trust fund but to put it into the sustainability fund. Premier Stelmach built infrastructure in this province by utilizing that sustainability fund. Did I agree that he should use cash? Not really because even then the markets would have sufficed.

The hon. leader likes to use the Canadian Taxpayers Federation as her guide for all things financial. I understand they've used political science advisers in the past. It hasn't worked out too well for them. I don't think this one has either. When they talk about, frankly, that we're gutting the most important aspects of the act, we're not. We've proved that already by the amendments that came forward, by the discussion that we've had in this House. It's unfortunate she obviously wasn't paying attention to that.

The Chamber of Commerce. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is talking about the submission that the Alberta Chambers of Commerce gave to this government before the budget, what they said before the budget. Let's talk about what they said after the budget, after they actually saw what we did, after Ken Kolby, who is the president and CEO of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, was in the lock-up and read it and understood it probably better than members opposite. He said:

The Alberta Chambers has also long supported the need to strategically invest in capital projects to secure our province's future... For that reason, it supports the provincial plan to leverage its solid credit rating to borrow at today's low interest rates in order to proactively build infrastructure to accommodate Alberta's growth.

Mr. Speaker, that was after the budget was tabled.

Let's talk about the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton Chamber of Commerce has said:

The Edmonton Chamber of Commerce agrees that borrowing to invest in infrastructure, by taking on debt, can be a good way to help fund needed infrastructure projects, which can significantly boost our economy and increase quality of life.

Let's talk about the Calgary Chamber of Commerce. This is from Ben Brunnen, the chief economist with the Calgary Chamber of Commerce: the approach of using debt to finance capital is actually a prudent one in the sense that these infrastructure assets last decades, and it makes good sense to finance them over their useful life.

Mr. Speaker, the Chambers of Commerce are obviously supportive of the plan that we presented after the budget.

The hon. leader talks about a list. They've been asking for the list. We've said that the list is there. Where's yours? They have $4 billion worth of capital in their supposed plan. They haven't told Albertans what they're not going to build. They haven't told Albertans what they're going to cut, a $3 billion cut to operating over and above what we've already done. They haven't told Albertans about that because they don't have a back-to-back budget.

Mr. Saskiw: Carbon capture.

Mr. Horner: Carbon capture and storage. How much is in the budget this year? How much, hon. member, is in the budget this year for carbon capture and storage? Less than a hundred million dollars. How are you going to save a billion dollars with less than a hundred million? It doesn't add up.

The other thing they talked about is the capital plan debt repayment. You know, Mr. Speaker, we keep talking about this document which we tabled in the House on March 7, this document which is the budget, which talks about, among other things, how we're going to borrow, what we're going to borrow, the cash adjustments: all of the things that the hon. members say that we don't present to Albertans. It's all here. Just about everybody who actually understands, you know, the reading of the financial statements: they find it. Evidently, they don't.

For the hon. members I'll come back to page 128. Line 23 is the capital debt repayment account year-end balance. Gee, that sounds like the capital . . .

Ms Smith: Yes. You calculate that up: 83 years to pay it back.

Mr. Horner: Well, if it was a very simple calculation like that, you wouldn't be running a $40 billion operation, Madam Leader.

Jack Mintz. I've got to comment on Jack Mintz. I love the idea that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition brings up Jack Mintz but only brings up a very small piece of what Jack says. Jack says: don't borrow; when you've got all this money, you shouldn't borrow. But what else does Jack say? Jack says: put in a sales tax. Jack says: we should increase and close the gap on the taxes. Well, you know what, Mr. Speaker? You can borrow pieces from all these folks and say that this is the way to go, but if I'm supposed to listen to what Jack Mintz says, perhaps the hon. leader should, too. I'm telling you that we did not agree with putting in an increase in taxes in this budget.

Another thing the hon. member talks about is: why aren't we like Norway? Norway, Mr. Speaker, has a 25 per cent sales tax, the highest personal income taxes in Europe. I don't want to be like Norway. I kind of like the taxes that we pay in Alberta in terms of the lowest in the land, and this plan, this budget will actually maintain that.

Alaska. I actually had a very interesting discussion last week with the chief investment officer of the Alaska permanent fund. Do you know what the Alaska permanent fund is up to, Mr. Speaker? Forty-five billion. All this time that they've been doing, evidently, what the right thing was and would have this big fund, the savings that Albertans will have after three years of this business plan will be $24 billion, but we will also have built the infrastructure that the Alaska state government is looking for investors from outside to build because they can't use any of their own resources.

Mr. Speaker, we've taken a balanced approach – and Peter Lougheed is the one we'll thank for the balanced approach – to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and what we do with nonrenewable resources. Peter Lougheed understood something very, very important. If we want Alberta to grow and to move from where it was in the Social Credit era, we need to invest, and we need to put our faith in Albertans being entrepreneurial and keep taxes low and build the infrastructure that we need to bring Albertans to this province. That's what this government and this

Premier are going to do. [interjection] I know she's chirping over there, but the Leader of the Official Opposition is talking to . . . [interjection]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has said: why don't you look young people in the eyes? You know what? I do. When I look young people in the eyes, I say: what's the Alberta you want to have 20 years from now? Is it one where we're still waiting for that school for your kids? Is it one where you can't get to work because the road isn't there? Is it one where you couldn't drive around the city of Edmonton on a ring road because ideology said that we shouldn't enter into P3 debt, that we shouldn't be doing that, to wait until we pocket $8 billion somewhere before we build any other infrastructure? Young people understand that you build today for success tomorrow. They want that infrastructure here, and that's why we're going to build it for them.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members in this Legislature to vote yes for this bill, vote yes for this budget because it's about living within our means, building for the future, and creating opportunity for Albertans. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The exuberance is great, hon. members, but we do want to get home tonight.

The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has moved third reading of Bill 12, but before I call the vote, hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I believe you had a request that may require unanimous consent.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would ask for unanimous consent that we forgo the standing order on division bells and that we go to a one-minute bell.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I'll ask one question. Does anyone oppose the motion?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: With that, I will call the vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:20 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Amery	Fenske	McIver
Bhardwaj	Fraser	Olesen
Bhullar	Horner	Quadri
Brown	Hughes	Rodney
Campbell	Jansen	Sandhu
Cao	Jeneroux	Sarich
Casey	Johnson, J.	Starke
Cusanelli	Kennedy-Glans	Webber
DeLong	Khan	Woo-Paw
Dorward	Klimchuk	Xiao
Fawcett	Lemke

Against the motion:

Anglin	Hale	Saskiw
Bikman	Kang	Smith
Blakeman	Pedersen	Stier
Engen
Totals:	For – 32	Against – 10

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 20 Appropriation Act, 2013

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any comments to be offered? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. This is the part of the budget process that I've been looking forward to because I get the opportunity to put the comments, questions, and concerns of a number of my constituents on the record around this year's budget. No surprise to anybody, I made quite a fuss about there being enough time for opposition members to speak to this bill because we do feel that we didn't have a lot of time to be checking out the other departments when we were in the policy field committees for debate. This is our chance to be able to speak with a sort of overarching view of the budget.

Let me get right down to business here. I did table a letter earlier this week, I think, from a senior who was very concerned about the changes that were happening to the medical oxygen program. I see that concern repeated a number of times. Every time the government changes the delivery of a program, which is not to say that they shouldn't change – they should. You know, our ability to govern should move with the times. But there always seems to be that period of incredible instability and indecision and lack of information for vulnerable people. Those of us that are up and around and in the thick of things here have access to information. Well, we should have access to it. I think that a number of times we actually don't. It sure causes a lot of concern and stress in, particularly, the seniors community when they don't know what's going to happen. A lot of them don't really like change that much.

On this particular project, changing who's going to deliver their medical oxygen, I've heard from a number of seniors with concerns about that. I didn't get a chance in the Health budget to say: "Why are you doing this? What is the point of changing this or looking to find a new contractor? Is it to save money? Is it, you know, to share the opportunity for other local suppliers to get a contract?" I don't know. There's the question.

I did get a chance in the Culture debate to raise the huge concerns that are generated in the charitable, not-for-profit communities under Culture around the cancellation of the STEP program and the community spirit matching grant program. I don't know quite how to describe this. For a number of years the CFEP program has been oversubscribed, and often extra money slipped that way. This year I think it was supposed to be $45 million that was actually going to be spent although the budgeted amount was $38 million, so the budgeted amount for next year is $38 million. Well, essentially, that is a cut of $7 million. I count that because, you know, if you're not going to put that extra money in there, that's money that that community doesn't have access to, and they need it.

These are not communities that have a lot of cash lying around. This is a volunteer-based community. They're not-for-profits. Any money that they make, any surplus they have goes back into strengthening the services and programs that they provide. The stretch is enormous. This is public service. This runs the gamut from the United Way and all of the services that they raise money for – Big Brothers Big Sisters, youth-based organizations, the youth emergency shelter in Edmonton – through to all the poverty organizations and the shelters and the housing organizations, faith-based communities, disability communities, and I will talk specifically about one of them.

This was just an unbelievable blow. I was really surprised that this government would miss the mark on this one so badly because this is a connection to community, and usually this government is a little smarter than that. I think what's happened is that the lines of communication are so bad with this government right now – by that I mean between caucus and individual backbenchers and cabinet – that they didn't get a chance to express how damaging this was going to be. Big mistake. This one I think is going to cost you in many ways more than anything else you did in this budget because it's going to affect so many people. When they can't get that service, they're going to say, "Why not?" and the finger is going to get pointed back at you folks for taking money from front-line services. I've been wrong before, but I've also been right a lot, and I think this is one that I'm going to be right on.

Let me just talk about the Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities. Again, they wrote to me. They've already had a funding cutback from the Harper Conservatives. They've just been told, basically, that funding is going to be phased out for any disability assistance groups over three years. At least they gave them three years. It's a 35 per cent cut this year, moving to 65 per cent next year, and the last bit of funding would come in '15-16. That's pretty devastating for groups that are trying to help people participate fully in the life of the province. So what does the government do? It cuts the STEP program, cuts CFEP or isn't going to go over on it, and eliminates the matching community spirit project. Yikes. That's a blow. That's a huge blow. They have communicated that to me really well.

The other group that wrote specifically about that cut, aside from all the groups I've already talked about in the Culture debate, was Changing Together, which is a group that serves immigrant women – by immigrant women, for immigrant women – a really vital organization. They're volunteer based. The thing about the whole volunteer community is that there is a disproportionate number of women that volunteer for these organizations, and they are also the recipients of these organizations. So making a cut into the not-for-profit charitable volunteer sector really has an effect on women's lives in this province.

The point that Dilara, who is their executive director, was making to me was that they're criticized for how they manage their money, yet the model actually creates the duplication that they're criticized for. It keeps being offered as a project-based grant, and it's announced that it's all about youth this year or bullying this year. Well, everybody writes the grant, doing essentially the same work they're doing, but they target it now towards youth so that they can get some money to keep going and offer the services that they're offering. So, yeah, you get duplication. Well, you know, you set that one up yourself. Next year it's bullying, and everybody will write the grant targeted towards bullying. You shouldn't be surprised about that. You created that situation.

She also makes the point that I just made about the preponderance of women who are volunteers, who keep these agencies going but who are also recipients of the services. She goes as far as to say, you know: isn't this an exploitation of labour, an exploitation of women? Now, I don't think I would actually accuse this government of doing that, but it sure works in your favour, doesn't it? It sure lets you do some stuff that ideologically you wanted to do. I don't know if it's an act of commission or omission. Nonetheless, it has a huge effect on women in this province.

A constituent wrote to me. I'm not making fun of the constituent, but he started out by expressing his dismay. He'd always supported me as a Conservative member and liked the work I was doing, but he was really upset with this particular decision. I, with heavy heart, wrote back and said: "Hmm. Not a Conservative. Never have been. Glad you like my work, though." His point was that he was very concerned about – his name is Bruce. I'll quote: However, I am dismayed by the government's decision in their last budget to slash funding to postsecondary institutions while not permitting an increase in tuition fees. He goes on: attaining higher education is an investment. Yes, indeed. I agree with him.

Specifically, what he was writing to ask is if the Conservatives had considered the model introduced last year in the United Kingdom. Last year their tuition fees tripled, but access was not denied because the government introduced a student loan program through which students could borrow money to pay for the fees. The students are not required to repay the loans until they earn an annual salary higher than 50,000 Great British pounds annually. This scheme acknowledges that the students are eventually likely to earn such large salaries, so the government will recoup their costs. The increased revenues through income taxes will cover the costs of the unpaid loans by those who do not earn such a high salary. During their degree the students are free to devote themselves full-time to their studies with no fear of bankruptcy if their investment does not pay off.

Elsewhere in the letter he talks about the fact that, you know, almost all of our university students are also working full-time at a job, and it's not conducive to great learning, and it takes them longer to do it. Thanks very much to Bruce for raising that point. I've now been able to raise it with the government and just kind of drill that home again.

This was another area where I was really surprised by the government because there was a lot of talk in the election and in the Premier's leadership race about postsecondary education and diversification and research and how much they value that. And then, yikes, they get in and make moves that really hurt postsecondary education, like serious cuts, really putting our universities in a very odd position, and then really-out-there explanations that came from the new minister of advanced education as to why that was being done.

I don't know why it was done. It really didn't make sense with what I'd heard from the government previously. It didn't jibe, but – you know what? – recently a lot of things don't mesh very well with what I heard people say earlier. It's the difference between what they say and what they do, and, boy, is there a big gap on that one.

Another big issue in my constituency – and I have started to get letters about it again – is the cost of rental housing. This government is adamantly opposed to any kind of rent cap, even a temporary one. Well, you know, I'm glad that you're in a position where you don't have to worry about that kind of thing, but my constituents aren't. In this constituency we have probably the largest stock of rental housing in all of Edmonton because it's older housing stock and it's cheaper housing stock. We, too, have had a lot of conversions to condominiums. We can see as the economy is doing really well here – the government is not doing so well, but the economy is actually doing pretty well with the number of people employed, blah, blah, blah. So the rental rates are starting to go up again. People are writing to me going: how am I supposed to afford this? There's no cap on how much they can increase it, but they can only do it once a year, which was the result of the last change.

I don't know what to say to them. What do you say to somebody when their rent goes up by like, I think the last guy said, $700? Well, you know, you're paying whatever, $850, and all of a sudden it goes to $1,500. I don't know how you cope with that. I think the answer is that you don't. You move. You try and find an even cheaper place, which is probably a little less safe in the structure and in the age of the building, whether there's any mould there and how likely it is to have vermin and all the rest of that stuff that you deal with in lower cost rental housing.

It is an issue for my constituents, and I wanted to make sure that I got that on the record because I think it's going to become more of an issue. I really do seriously think we need to look at temporary rent caps when that kind of thing happens. Eighteen months max, but it needs to be enough to ride out that real peak in what happens.

The government's excuse is always: well, you know, the landlords have to tough it out during the times when they've got more vacancies and they aren't able to charge as much. But you know what? They never drop the rent. They say: well, we'll throw in the Internet cost, or we'll throw in the cost of cable TV. But they never actually drop the rental rates on any of these places. I don't actually see them hurting very much, not that I want them to hurt, but I'm told that this is such a tough time for them. Well, it's a tougher time for people that are trying to find a secure place to live.

Housing security and food security are two really vital issues in our urban areas today and, for all I know, maybe in the rural areas, but I'm not going to comment on that because I don't have enough expertise to say it. But food and housing security are real issues for people, and they cause huge stress. I used to say: "Oh, stress-schmess. C'mon, who cares? Just, you know, suck it up. Get on with it. What is this stuff about stress?" But I'm persuaded by the evidence. You start to look at the medical evidence of what stress actually costs us in lost productivity and doctor visits and hospital visits, and you start going: "Okay. All right. I'm convinced. This counts." Creating situations like that does create stress. It is paid for in another part of our society. So don't think you're getting away with this, because we're going to all pay for it somewhere else.

That's part of the lesson that you actually did learn with the housing first project, that to insist on the old way of thinking about homeless people was costing all of us a lot of money because those people still got services. They got them through emergency rooms in the hospitals. They got it through the police services intervention. They got it through courts. They got it through jails. They got a place to sleep. They got food. They got it through places that we didn't think they were going to get it from, and it cost us money. It costs us way more money to do it that way than if we would provide the housing that they need and the housing security. So put that on the record.

I want to talk about the Condominium Property Act and the building codes, two things that need to be updated. That condo act is 30 years old, I think, or close to it. It is not dealing with the fact that we've had people living in condominiums now in the larger urban centres for 30 solid years. The issues that are coming up are long-term structural problems, so sinking funds and additional assessments are becoming a huge issue for people. I mean, imagine that you've almost paid off your $100,000 or $150,000 mortgage and your condo board decides that they're going to need to assess you $25,000. Oh, my God. Like, you're not living in a grand place, and now you're going to have to try and come up with this additional money on top of the mortgage that you're already paying. It's a life-changing event, I'll tell you. That's their single biggest expenditure that they will ever lay out. It's the single biggest thing that they'll ever purchase. When we can't provide them with legislation that offers consumer protection, we're doing something wrong. We're doing something very wrong in this place.

So I will continue to push for much stronger changes to the condo act around both the building codes and what's possible and reasonable there but also around how the condo act actually works and how it's implemented for boards of directors and property managers and realtors and owners and sellers. The consultation process has been very frustrating. There have been, I think, three different committees that have come and gone and made recommendations that didn't particularly go anywhere. Now the minister is running another public consultation. You know, Minister, with all respect, we're kind of done with that. We really need to see these changes move faster rather than slower. I understand we're not going to see these changes come before us for another year, which is going to be very difficult.

I also want to put in a plug for this government to please develop life lease legislation. Life lease, as you probably don't know, is another kind of housing that is being provided that on the continuum sits between a rental property and a condominium. You are in a shared property, and you've paid money, a significant capital outlay, that goes into a fund that actually pays for the building of it. It's long and complicated. I'm not going to go into it right now, but there are a number of life leases in Alberta right now, and there is no legislation governing them.

I'm coming to the end of my time. Well, it's a good thing I'm on duty for tomorrow afternoon, Mr. Chair. I'll be able to get up in third reading and put the rest of my four pages of notes on the record.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise with great interest to speak briefly on Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013. This is, again, not dissimilar to Bill 12, that we were speaking on before. It's sort of a summation of the budget that we've just worked our way through and, I guess, an opportunity to highlight some areas that require improvement and why we, in fact, as New Democrats will be opposing this Appropriation Act for this year.

Again, I would just like to start off talking about broad strokes. When you are doing a budget, Mr. Chair, you have to ensure that you are not just dealing with your expenditures but with your revenue. Perhaps the fundamental failure of the budget for 2013 was the failure to deal realistically and honestly and with enough scope in regard to royalties, in regard to corporate taxes, and in regard to the flat personal income tax that we have here in the province of Alberta.

You know, Albertans are wily and intelligent. They know how budgets are produced and how you have both revenue and expenditure. They do it themselves. We do it ourselves, and we've become adept at watching how the government does it, too. By some magical sleight of hand, as I said before, while our population is increasing and our economy is increasing, somehow the government claims poverty and has run short of cash.

The explanation was long and elaborate, and it strained credibility with each passing week. In fact, by the time we are here, in these last few weeks, we know that the so-called price differential for our energy here in the province, the bitumen bubble, as it was coined, is pretty much the way it has been over the last number of years, with the usual vagaries of market fluctuation. You know, that whole explanation or excuse, as you might describe it, Mr. Chair, in fact just didn't hold water.

Yes, we do have a price differential between Alberta's energy and other places in the world because we are located in a different location on the map. One, we are in a different place, and transporting our energy products takes longer than if you are in another part of North America. Number two, we are dealing with a different energy source. All of these things Albertans know, right?

We are intimately involved in the oil and gas industry, where many of our jobs are. We read about it. Our family members are part of the energy industry. So, you know, you can't pull the wool over the eyes of a population that already is driving and is employed in the industry. I have lots and lots of relatives and friends, people that work in the oil industry and gas industry. They know exactly what the price differential is, and they know that that explanation rang hollow at best and, in fact, was an excuse to make another attack on public services here in the province of Alberta just like this government has done after the elections many, many times over.

When we're dealing with royalties, for example, we know that our royalty rates are lower than they should be, and Albertans know that, too. We saw a poll that just came out in the last 24 hours that demonstrated abundantly, clearly that, in fact, our royalty rates are bargain basement. They are inadequate, and they are leaving us with a deficit in our public expenditures that is resulting in the cuts to everything from education to health care to advanced education to municipalities.

I mean, just take a look at the roads, right? I only have to point as far as, you know, the roads that we drive on to and fro here in Edmonton to see that the level of infrastructure that we invest in in this province is not commensurate with the wealth and the industry that takes place within the boundaries of the province of Alberta. It's just not happening. It's embarrassing to see the level of road maintenance. It's one small example that people bring up to me all of the time.

It goes on, Mr. Chair, in regard to K to 12 education, some of the areas for which I'm responsible as a critic. You know, we know that we were fully capable of having an expenditure on public education, K to 12, that was commensurate with the increase in our population and the increase in the expense of living and of producing a public education system here in the province of Alberta, but instead we chose to make cuts, the extent of which is now becoming more clear.

We talked about this today, how one school board has taken all of the various bits and pieces, nooks and crannies of cuts and come up with just how short they actually are for their budget. It's a significant amount of money. It's almost $19 million just for one school board. Here in the province of Alberta you can extrapolate the figures that they worked on there to suggest that, in fact, we have a shortage of at least a hundred million dollars in our public education system for this next school year.

You do not make that sort of cut in a public education system. We know that we spend 80 per cent on education workers. If you take a hundred million dollars out, it's going to result in layoffs of teachers and layoffs of other support staff and larger class sizes and all of the things that go along with that. You know, stable, predictable funding for our public education system didn't happen. We failed to see the full-day kindergarten that we were expecting and hoping for over this next fiscal year and long-term funding as well. The AISI funding was eliminated, and we will see the negative results from all of those sorts of cuts.

In regard to Treasury Board and Finance, Mr. Chair, we were looking for stable and predictable funding for these public services. We didn't get it. We wanted to reduce our dependence on the oil and gas revenues that we're spending for operations, which we failed to do. We haven't fixed our revenue problem, and we end up with the vicious cycle of boom and bust that we have been locked into here in the province of Alberta for many, many years.

Advanced education. I mean, people know what sort of mayhem has been unleashed on our advanced education system, right? The stable, three-year, predictable funding that was promised was broken, of course, and capital funding taken away. We have effectively an 11 per cent reduction to postsecondary education, which will result in higher fees being charged to students and to the families of those students, one of which is mine. We're going to see reductions in faculty and so forth.

Again, an unnecessary cut not for the sake of the economy or the population growing in our province, Mr. Chair, but for the sake of ideology and confused priorities and the unwillingness to look realistically and seriously at our revenue problem in this province and this predilection of this government to serve and to follow the wishes of the very most wealthy in our province, individuals and corporations as well.

It's not a proud thing. I'm hoping that we can look for some constructive places where we can make some compromises here. I know from living through these kinds of public service cuts like we did 15 years ago that they cause systemic damage that is very difficult to fix. For example, if this government is allowing these sorts of cuts to fester in the health care sector, if you allow that to take place for more than a year – right? – which is bad enough, then you start to have the health professionals that actually make the system function, the boots on the ground that actually deliver health care, making decisions about moving to other places.

We saw that before, and if it happens again here, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, I will not stand for it. I not only have a great deal invested in the integrity of our public health system systemically but personally as well, right? I know that for my own family and the choices that they've made to become health professionals or to be trained as health professionals, if this doesn't get resolved, Mr. MLA from Edmonton-Manning, playing with your lips over there like you are, and we end up losing that next generation of student nurses, of which my daughter is one, I will hold you personally accountable for that. Do you know what I mean when I say that? Just so you know.

So, yeah, that's the way it's going to go, right? I take this job as a legislator, but I also take it as an Albertan who is raising my family here, and I find these sorts of cuts unnecessary. I find them to be objectionable. I find that the social fabric of our province is only as good as the next investment you make into it, Mr. Chair. I just hope that we can find a way to mitigate some of the damage that is taking place here now and in the immediate future; otherwise, again, we end up having to pay down the road more than the original cut that's taking place.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm also pleased to rise and speak on Bill 20. There are issues with the budget. We are debating $40 billion that we are going to spend, and we only had about 70 hours to scrutinize and debate the budget. There are cutbacks, and we are still going into debt. The debt was paid off in 2004. That was a $23 billion debt, and there was a sustainability fund of $17 billion. That is gone, and four years down the road we will be back into a $17 billion debt again. That is like a runaway train. With the budget cutbacks teachers are getting laid off, class sizes are going up, and professors are getting laid off. There's no full-time KG, the STEP program has been cut, PDD lost $45 million, I believe, and there's a $146 million cutback to the PSE.

We didn't need to go down this road, Mr. Chairman. We heard the talk about Mr. Lougheed and Mr. Klein. They had fiscal plans in place, and we have deviated from those plans. Had we stuck to Mr. Lougheed's plan and had we been putting away 30 per cent of our oil revenues every year and had this progressive government stayed on course, you know, we could have had about $150 billion in savings, not $15 billion. If we placed $3 billion per year into the heritage fund starting in 2013 until 2030 and if we get an 8 per cent rate of return and reinvest all of the profits of those first 10 years, the heritage trust fund would grow from today's $15 billion to almost $75 billion. That's lots of money. With the return on that money alone we wouldn't need to do any cutting back. We wouldn't need to borrow.

The government is claiming that they can borrow at preferred interest rates, but who knows what's going to happen five years down the road, 10 years down the road? I think we are going on the wrong path, and this budget is going to take us back into debt, Mr. Chair. The cutbacks to the PSE are really going to hurt.

I got a letter from my constituents that goes on to say:

Calgary, the 2012 Cultural Capital of Canada, is about to feel the effects of drastic cutbacks to Provincial Government funding to post-secondary institutions.

Tuesday it was announced that the entire Theatre and Music Program at Mount Royal University will be cut. Students, faculty and supporters of the arts are astonished and outraged at this very short-sighted decision. The ripple effects of such a decision will reverberate across the city.

Calgary is fortunate to have amazing high school band and theatre programs. At issue here is the commitment to maintaining a high quality training ground at the post-secondary level for young musicians and artists in Calgary. These programs serve to stimulate and grow arts and culture in our city. Enrollment in the MRU Jazz program is consistently two or three times the capacity, proving that young Calgarians demand to have a local option for training in Jazz music. Now, just as the current school year is ending, and with very little advanced notice, local students will have to leave the city to audition for and find other postsecondary music and theatre studies programs.

This letter goes on to say:

Just one year ago, Calgarians celebrated receiving the national distinction as the Cultural Capital of Canada. It began with enthusiastic statements by Calgary-Centre MP Lee Richardson who made the announcement on behalf of Heritage Minister James Moore. "Calgary is one of Canada's fastest growing and most vibrant cities, and we look forward to working with the city to continue to promote the arts, boost tourism, and grow our economy.”

The government of Alberta, through its 2008 Education and Lifelong Learning policy in “Spirit of Alberta” says that “It is essential that the education system, from early childhood development to post secondary, contribute to Alberta’s cultural development. Our schools have a valuable role to play in transmitting cultural values and in enabling cultural and creative exploration for young people. Investment in lifelong learning institutions such as schools, post-secondary institutions, interpretative centres, historic sites, libraries and museums will ensure the long-term viability of our important cultural resources.” If the proposed cuts to the MRU Theatre and Music Program proceed, many talented individuals will choose to leave the community and seek employment elsewhere. Our local aspiring theatre and music students will leave the city and/or the province in order to study.

Unfortunately, what began in 2012 on a high note for arts and culture in the city of Calgary is ending in tragedy.

I’ve got another letter here saying:

I am writing to express my opposition to the proposed cuts to the Theatre and Music Programs at Mount Royal University. Due to provincial funding cutbacks, the university has had to make some difficult choices. On recommendation from academic administration, you will be voting to suspend intake into the Theatre and Music Performance Diplomas effective Fall 2013. While current students will be able to continue next year to finish their diplomas, no new students will be accepted into the forthcoming years. This equates to a loss of 120 student seats in theatre and music programs and possibly the end of the University’s Shakespeare In the Park program – a twenty five year Calgary institution [will be gone.] These cuts have a significant impact on the mentorship of emerging artists in Calgary. These programs provide a constant flow of new creativity to the vibrance of the Calgary community. Without them, Calgary’s cultural identity will suffer. I urge you to reconsider this decision and recognize the impact it will have on all aspects of this community from professional theatres, dance, opera, musical performance venues, clubs and entertainment and cultural life of this city.

I’ve got another letter here saying:

I cannot fathom how such a misguided decision can be made with regards to cutting the Mount Royal University theatre and Music Programs.

As a former teacher of the arts it sickens me the way this province has eroded our band and music programs in our schools and is now taking aim at the university level. What will our legacy be? What happened to a ‘well-rounded person?’

Keep culture in Alberta. Please.

There’s another one here. It goes on to say:

I was disheartened to learn about the impending budget cuts to postsecondary education following the 2013 budget announcement on Thursday, March 7, 2013. A hundred-forty-seven million dollars in budget cuts to the postsecondary education is no small amount, and this challenges each and every postsecondary institution in the province that mandates to provide quality learning to young adults.

It goes on to say:

I am an employee at Mount Royal University. As one of the leading undergraduate institutions, MRU has done an excellent job of creating experiential learning experiences for its students, and everyone who is a part of this community takes pride in the role we play in the lives of our students and in helping to fulfill this mandate under an already strained operating budget.

It goes on to say:

I am a member of your constituency, a citizen of this province, and a tax payer of this province. I feel that our government has made a decision that is not in the best interest of Albertans by causing a huge unnecessary burden to our PSEs. It is through the PSE system that our province will be able to sustain its economic engine in the country. In order for the government to diversify our economy and take care of our environment, we need to invest even more in our PSEs so that we have a highly skilled workforce. Investing in our youth is the only way that we are able to keep our economic engine propelling forward and compete in a very competitive global market.

Please rethink this action against post-secondary education. Students have had to deal with increasing tuition costs; they should not have to deal with a compromised experience or a decrease in the quality of education they receive.

Education is an investment. Money put toward education is an investment. I get so many other letters. Albertans are demanding that there should be no cutbacks to education. There was a promise that there would be three years of sustainable funding and, you know, an increase of 2 per cent every year, but there has been $146 million cut from PSE. That’s going to make students leave the province.

You know what happened during the ‘90s with the cutbacks. We lost all the nurses, doctors. We’ve got people moving to Alberta, and we’re going to need our doctors, nurses, and all the skilled people, so if you keep on cutting back on education, everything is going to suffer. We will pay for this in the long run. This budget is affecting not only one segment of the population; it’s affecting a whole lot of Albertans. For those reasons, Mr. Chair, I will not be supporting the budget.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers?

If there are no other speakers, I’ll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 20 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That’s carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chair, I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 20.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Emergency 911 Act

The Chair: Are there any questions or comments?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 15 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Chair: Are there any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment with the requisite copies that I would hand to the Clerk.

The Chair: We'll get the pages to circulate that.

Hon. members, this being the first amendment, it will be amendment A1.

Proceed, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be very brief. This is the only amendment that I'll be putting forward. What this section does is amend Bill 16 by striking out section 2(c). Typically the review board consists of three members, and what section 2(c) does is eliminate that requirement in certain circumstances and would allow for essentially one person to make a decision to dispose of property. I guess the rationale for this amendment is that if in the act there's a reason to have three people make a very important decision, why allow a cop-out by allowing only one person to make that decision?

It's a very simple amendment, Mr. Chair. We take, obviously, the process of taking someone's property rights as a very serious thing. We think that the appropriate due diligence should occur, and if it is three members that typically make this decision, I would ask that the government consider this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Speaking on the amendment, I understand that the minister and the MLA spoke this afternoon. Bill 16 was drafted with extensive consultation with the Criminal Injuries Review Board, the CIRB. There's general agreement with the CIRB to go ahead with this clause. The CIRB administers appeals, which is a vital function. CIRB members are very strong advocates for victims, and the appeals will happen faster with section 2(c) as it is.

We won't be supporting this amendment, but I'd like to thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for his input.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 16 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chair, I'd ask that we rise and report Bill 15 and Bill 16.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 15, Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the opposition for the work we've done tonight. I think we've made some substantial progress. I would suggest that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:16 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, hon. members.

Let us pray. Hon. members, may this beautiful, warm, and sunny day be absorbed just as warmly within our hearts and souls as it is being shone upon our bodies, for it was surely on a day just like this one some time ago that someone first called our province sunny Alberta. May it forever be blessed so. Amen.

Pleased be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday I asked for and received some very good co-operation from you in keeping our introductions as brief as possible so that all who had introductions could present them in the appropriate time. Today I would ask you to please do likewise. However, please know that for the very first introduction, which will be provided by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, he has requested that some added time be given for his introduction. I have considered that, and I have allowed him a little bit of extra time today for his introduction should he wish to use it. I would ask for your co-operation and understanding.

Let's proceed, then, with Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly someone you want in your corner when you're in a fight, former Alberta Liberal MLA Rick Miller. A number of you across the aisle sometimes entered the squared circle known as the Alberta Legislature with Rick, and as you know, he is a formidable opponent, a tireless technician, a resolute reformer, an audacious advocate, and a doggedly determined defender of the down-and-out.

Rick was the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford from 2004 to 2008 and served as the Alberta Liberal caucus chief of staff from 2009 to 2012. Rick is bravely battling cancer in the same style with which he battled the Tories, with honour and dignity. While sometimes we go to battle wearing different colours, I know today everyone in this House is in Rick's corner. Hon. members, please join me in welcoming the man, the myth, the legend, Rick Miller, with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members, and thank you, hon. member in our gallery.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you. I'm privileged to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of visitors seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. The first is well known to many of us here in the Legislature and is a friend of mine and a friend of many, Mr. Art Johnston. I'd ask you to stand, Art, please. Art is a past two-term Alberta Progressive Conservative MLA who represented the constituency of Calgary-Hays from 2004 to 2012. His impressive career also included 11 and a half years serving in the Canadian armed forces and 25 years serving with the Calgary Police Service, retiring as a patrol sergeant. Art is up here to participate in the annual Scotiabank Alzheimer's hockey challenge in Leduc this weekend, and he's playing on the Alberta MLA all-star team. We all know that Art is not only an all-star on the ice, but he's an all-star off the ice as well. Absolutely.

Accompanying Art, Mr. Speaker, is his son Ed Johnston, who is from Calgary. I'd ask Ed to stand. We recruited Ed as one of our ringers for our MLA all-star team. He is a natural playmaker, and he's a selfless son who sets up his dad for goals all the time. Also here with Art is his granddaughter Jordon Johnston and her friend Travis Brittain, both from Pigeon Lake.

They're here today to watch the proceedings in the House, and we are privileged to have them all here today. We thank Art for his many years of dedicated service to his city, to his province, and to his country. I ask that my MLA colleagues greet them with the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly my wife, Serena Donovan. She is sitting in your gallery also today. I'd like to thank her for all she does for me and our family. She has also come to Edmonton this week to cheer on all MLAs from all the different parties, but especially the Wildrose goaltender, playing in the Alzheimer's hockey fundraiser, which you helped organize, and I'm gratefully thankful for. If she could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Jeneroux: Mr. Speaker, it's an absolute pleasure to stand here today and introduce you to a gentleman seated in your gallery. This is certainly not this gentleman's first time in the Chamber. As a matter of fact, I imagine this gentleman has logged more hours inside this Chamber than most elected officials. He spent nearly 13 years in this Chamber and had the power that most of us dream of, the power to be able to turn on and, more importantly, turn off any of our microphones whenever he wished. He was, in fact, the former console operator, sitting right above that very clock. He introduced me to politics in the Legislature long before I was even school aged and has continued to support my passion and chosen career path. I ask that my father, Mr. Doug Jeneroux, please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to stand and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fantastic group of students from Glenwood school in my constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. They are here with Mr. Kelly Thomas, their principal; Mrs. Kathy Thomas; and Mr. Ken Selk. Please rise, students, and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake I would like to introduce to you and through you a group of 60 students from H.E. Bourgoin middle school from the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. They are not with us in the Chamber right now. They will be joining us during question period. I would ask that they be recognized at this time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 82 incredibly bright grade 6 students from the Iron Ridge junior campus in Blackfalds. They are accompanied today by their teachers Mrs. Ashley Kovitch, Mrs. Amanda Mayert, Mr. Bill Carter, Mrs. Shelly Miller, Mrs. Irene Allen, Mrs. Cheryl Drobot, Mrs. Cheryl Taylor, Mrs. Jodi Vanderzwaag, and Mrs. Joni Olsen. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Let's move on, then, to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I'm fond of saying, the future of agriculture is very bright in Alberta, and we have proof positive with us today. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Jacob Onyschuk, who is this year's Alberta 4-H Premier's award winner. He is from Legal, and his family home and family farm kind of straddle two constituencies, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. We have two very proud MLAs who are happy to see him here today, too.

This prestigious award recognizes an individual who exhibits outstanding leadership, communication, and interpersonal skills. It's a one-year term during which Jacob has been and is representing youth and 4-H at various events. He was a member of the Bon Accord 4-H and Vimy Dunrobin 4-H Multi Club, and he's been extremely active in many clubs. He majored in animal science at the U of A and just finished his exams. He was formally presented with his award by the Premier earlier today.

He's here with his parents, Teresa and George; siblings Larissa, Nicholas, and Benjamin; and 4-H specialists Leila Hickman and Jocelyn McKinnon. They're all standing, and I'd ask that the Assembly give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my guest Lorne Dach. Lorne has been a real estate associate broker in Edmonton for the past 26 years. His slogan Call Lorne Dach and Start To Pack is well known to many of us. For six years he was a member and chair of the city of Edmonton Non-Profit Housing Corporation, which is responsible for managing more than 600 units of multifamily housing owned by the city. In the 2012 election Lorne was also a candidate for the NDP, running in the constituency of Edmonton-McClung. I would now ask Lorne to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three introductions. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Sabina Florence Zutter. I met Sabina at the gym while I was trying to lose weight for this hockey tournament. She was clipping along like a 24-year-old, and she told me she was a senior. Sabina prides herself on keeping in good physical shape, taking personal responsibility, and maintaining her independence. She's here to oppose the cuts to financial assistance for seniors. These subsidies have helped to keep seniors active and healthy so they don't end up spending their last years in bed, burdening the health system. I would ask Sabina to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Betty Wedman, who continues to advocate on bullying and teen health and wellness since the suicide of her son in 2008. Betty's son Alex chose to end his life due to depression caused by bullying. Betty is here today as she feels there is a lack of accountability regarding bullying. She hopes that government will incorporate health and wellness classes into our school system to help combat this societal problem. I would ask Betty to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Madeline Rainey on behalf of her son Connor, who has autism. According to Madeline Connor endured horrific abuses in the Edmonton public behaviour classrooms, culminating in a chokehold that Ms Rainey reported to her trustee. The response? She said that there was a staunch denial. For years Ms Rainey has advocated to spare others the nightmare. There are legal protections against staff bullying staff, students bullying students, students bullying staff, but what's missing is protection against staff bullying students. Ms Rainey, I apologize for whatever happened to Connor, and I would ask you to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly members of the results-based budgeting economic development challenge panel: Brad Anderson, executive director of the Alberta Chamber of Resources; Ruth Kelly, president of Venture Publishing Inc.; Jeremy Heigh, principal economist and founder, Sift Every Thing Corporation; and John Swendsen, vice-chairman, corporate and investment banking, National Bank of Canada. We've been meeting today, and we will continue to meet until 9 o'clock tonight. There is our panel – it's a bit like Dragons' Den – and we've pulled them out for an hour to watch question period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some of you will have met Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop yesterday. They're here to advocate for responsible legislation to protect farm workers and also to honour the International Day of Mourning next week for dead and injured workers. This morning they were on the Legislature steps, where a documentary filmmaker is making a trailer to be shown at the Global Visions Film Festival for a proposed feature-length film with the National Film Board on the plight of farm workers in Alberta. I'll ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 11 representatives from Edmonton's Chinese community here in celebration of their 100 years of history in our great capital city. The Chinese population in Edmonton has grown along with our city, and they have developed strong organizations to assist them to promote and preserve their culture and to support one another in their chosen country.

My guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names: Mrs. Mei Hung, president of the Chinese Benevolent Association; Mr. Games Choy, vice-president of the Chinese Benevolent Association; Mr. Lap Cheek Kwong, national chairman of the Chinese Freemasons Society; Mr. Ken Kwong, chairman of the Dart Coon Club, Edmonton chapter; Mr. Henry Fung, president of Edmonton Chinatown Multicultural Centre; Mr. Frank Gee, chairman of Gee Association of Edmonton; Mr. Donald Mah, chairman of Mah Society of Edmonton; Mr. Dan Wong, chairman of Wong's Benevolent Association; Mr. Allan Kwan, president of Assist Community Services Centre; Mr. Raymond Ng, president of Edmonton Chinese News community newspapers; Mrs. Barbara Fung, public relations person for the Chinese Freemasons Society and Dart Coon Club. I would now ask the Assembly to please give them the traditional warm welcome. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest Jim Brennan. Jim is the chair of theatre, speech, and music performance at Mount Royal University. Due to recent provincial budget cuts to postsecondary education Mount Royal University has had to cut diplomas in jazz and theatre. This threatens the very existence of Calgary's Shakespeare in the Park festival, which has been running for 40 years and hosted 45,000 people last year. By cutting these programs, 120 seats will be reduced from Mount Royal, and many of the arts students will have to leave Calgary for study. I would now ask Jim to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests from the Coalition for Action on Post-Secondary Education. CAPSE is returning to the Legislature today to remind the Legislature that the government of Alberta has solutions to the financial problems before it that do not involve imposing cuts to its postsecondary system. They are also here to provide a representative face to the over 67 per cent of Edmontonians who oppose these cuts. I would now ask my guests to rise as I call their names: William Anselmi, Cressida Heyes, Natasha Hurley, Carolyn Sale, and Janice Williamson. I would ask everybody to join me in welcoming them to the Legislature.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

National Day of Mourning

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sunday, April 28, is a sombre day across our nation as we pause to commemorate all the men and women and children whose lives have been forever altered by workplace fatalities, injuries, and illnesses. Sunday is the National Day of Mourning, a day that we recognize the tremendous loss experienced by far too many Canadian families each year. We think of those whose mother, father, sibling, or loved one failed to come home from work healthy or, worse, failed to come home at all.

We do not have to ask for whom the bell tolls. Death or injury in the workplace affects us all. It weakens the strength of our families, our communities, our province, and our country. But a workplace fatality affects none of us so much as the family left behind. The constant reminders of a lost loved one throughout the year are the tears and memories rather than the warm embrace or the bright future. When a loved one is killed on the job or when an injury or illness snatches away their quality of life, a family is shattered, children left without a parent. The fibres of our community are stretched. Tensions rise. Loss, anger, and fear fray the bonds that were once thought of as strong and unbreakable.

The National Day of Mourning, founded by the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the Canadian Labour Congress, is meant to help ensure that we as individuals and as communities understand those challenges and help with those challenges. It's meant to remind us that despite our losses and our pain, there is a community of support in Alberta and across the country that can help guide us through our sadness and, more, provide help and support where needed.

Our government is committed to help strengthen those families and communities by enabling and encouraging all members of our society to help one another and to improve the social policies at the very foundation of our strength. Although today is a reminder of those we've lost, it's also a challenge to us to protect the living, to maintain constant vigilance in our goal of ensuring that every working Albertan is able to arrive home safely at the end of each and every working day, that each of us as an employer, as a worker needs to make safety our first priority.

As a government we are demonstrating this commitment in a number of ways. There are no excuses, no accidents, and no circumstances under which a workplace death or injury can be accepted. I'm confident that our fellow Albertans and Canadians will take some solace in the efforts that we're using to make our communities safer places in which to work. Those efforts include ongoing improvements to our employer records database, an approach which makes companies accountable by making their safety records publicly available.

We're improving our occupational health and safety measures, including the hiring of additional officers. This means more rigorous and focused investigation procedures and some of the most stringent compliance enforcement measures of any jurisdiction in Canada. Those measures include fines of up to $10,000 for repeated violations of safety legislation and are intended to send a clear message to workers and employers. The message is this. Those who senselessly risk the health and safety of others will be held accountable, and the cost to them for doing so will be far greater than the cost of doing business in a safe and healthy manner.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all of my Legislature colleagues I offer my most heartfelt sympathies to those whose lives have been forever changed by workplace injuries and fatalities. Last year there were 145 fatalities in Alberta. Each one of those fatalities was preventable. Each one of them diminished our province and our lives, and we are committed to changing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on behalf of the Wildrose opposition. Thank you.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for rising to commemorate this occasion. Nothing we say here will erase the pain families of Albertans killed in the workplace live with every day. Yesterday I shared a story of a friend of mine. Mel Ondryk was probably not all that different from many of the workers who are killed on the job in Alberta: hard working, humble, dependable, professional.

In a workplace like the Legislature a momentary lapse in judgment might earn you some scorn and ridicule from the other side, maybe even a bad headline or two. I learned that pretty quickly. But at workplaces like Mel's a momentary lapse can cost you your life. That's why safety is so important and why we mark the National Day of Mourning to assess where we are in regard to workplace safety and what more we can do.

Mr. Speaker, I owned and operated an oil field services trucking company for 25 years. Mel lost his life while working with me, I'm sad to say. Over the years I witnessed a lot of dangerous situations unfold that were completely avoidable. Because of that, I did all I could to put safety first.

There are many reasons why accidents happen. Most have to do with pressure: pressure from field supervisors, from managers, from customers, pressure to get the job done quicker. But that can never be an excuse. The very best are the ones who say: I don't care what pressure there is; I'm going to do this by the book. That can't be an attitude just for front-line workers. It must be a culture from the top down. If you're a boss, talk to your staff. Find out what challenges they face. Never put them in a situation where they have to compromise safety. If you're a worker, talk to your boss. Speak up. Stand up for yourself. Don't be pressured into cutting corners.

Wildrose supports measures to make companies more accountable for their safety records.

I encourage Albertans to take time on the National Day of Mourning, on Sunday, to think about what they can do on their own job sites to protect one another.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. Can I respond to the minister?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would anticipate that the tradition should now be followed, and that is to ask for unanimous consent to allow the other two opposition parties a moment to have one of their representatives speak to this very serious issue. I will ask you one question. Is anyone opposed to granting unanimous consent for the other two opposition parties to offer their comments on this issue?

The Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View, please proceed.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to respond on this soon to be International Day of Mourning for worker deaths and injuries. Last year in Alberta 20 people and a similar number of companies were convicted or under active investigation for various offences under the Occupational Health and Safety Act for causing workplace fatalities and injuries. Sadly, none of these investigations or enforcements applied to industrial farming operations. This is because still in 2013 agricultural operations are explicitly exempted from these laws for reasons that only this Conservative government can answer.

Industrial farming operations contributed in the last 20 years to 355 deaths, over 12,000 hospitalizations, and hundreds of millions of dollars of public cost according to the most recent report of the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research. The unique negligence of the Alberta government in relation to paid farm workers is now well known across Canada and widely condemned by those who respect international standards of human rights, worker rights, and Charter rights.

In an upcoming international conference in Florida two occupational health experts, Dr. Shirley McDonald of the University of British Columbia and Dr. Bob Barnetson of Athabasca University, will tell delegates that Alberta officials justify the exclusion of paid agricultural workers from basic health and safety rights on the basis of three myths.

Myth 1, education is better than regulation. The evidence shows that both education and regulations work synergistically to significantly reduce injury and death. Myth 2, farms cannot be regulated. The fact is that every other Canadian province has a combination of both education and regulation. Myth 3, farmers don't want and can't afford regulation. In fact, the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers have again unanimously called on government to work with producers and bring in responsible occupational health and safety and child labour standards, which would not only save lives but protect owners from criminal negligence charges. Enlightened governments know that occupational health and safety benefits employers, employees, and all society.

We await the time when this government exercises its fiduciary duty to both farm workers and farm owners and moves the agricultural industry into the 21st century. Government carries the responsibility for protecting basic human rights and workplace equitably across this great province. Sufficient, qualified, and committed occupational health and safety staff are needed to accomplish this important responsibility. Political leadership is needed in Alberta today if we are to ensure our great agricultural enterprise meets its goal of becoming an ethical industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we recognize and pay tribute to workers killed, injured, or who become ill because of their work, I join with Canadians across the country to anticipate marking the National Day of Mourning. To give honour to this tribute, it is important for us to note that much work remains to be done to make Alberta's workplaces safe and healthy.

The reality is that Alberta as a province has among the highest workplace death rates in Canada. As things stand now, we also have some of the weakest standards and weakest rules in the country. We remain the only province in the nation that does not legislate mandatory work site health and safety committees, thereby withholding a fundamental tool that workers in every other province in the country use to keep themselves safe.

As well, the safety of farm workers in this province is another issue that this government is ignoring. Fatalities on Alberta farms, as tragic as they are, are preventable with the proper legislation to protect those workers. Instead of keeping their promise to include farm workers in safety legislation, this government has recently taken active steps to preclude public access to information about farm fatalities.

No one should have to fear for their life as they do their job, Mr. Speaker. Risks and possibilities of danger must be eliminated. Workers need to know they can demand safety measures to reduce hazards or threats to themselves or their co-workers. This government must improve safety standards and then invest adequate resources to enforce those standards that keep workplaces safe. The safety of workers should never be sacrificed in the name of cost savings.

Mr. Speaker, as we reflect and mourn those who have lost their lives and the families who have lost their loved ones, let us commit to ensure the safety of our workers and prevent as many tragic accidents as we can because, as we all know, one death is too many.

I would also like to extend an invitation to all Alberta workers, including those in this House, to attend the formal day of mourning ceremony and tribute being put on by the Canadian Labour Congress at Grant Notley park this Sunday at 1:30 in the afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you for those recognitions. Please be advised that the flags that fly on this glorious building, the Alberta Legislature Building, will be lowered from sunrise to sunset in recognition of this day on Sunday.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Support for Couples Aging in Long-term Care

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, a family doctor contacted the Wildrose opposition to advocate on behalf of his patients on an urgent matter. I want to tell you about a couple in Crowsnest Pass. This couple has been married for 63 years and rarely ever spent time apart. The 90-year-old husband has Parkinson's, but he's able to get along quite well with minimal help. His wife, though, has terminal cancer and is very ill. Their doctor has been able to keep them together in the local long-term care facility for the last two months, but the AHS superboard has now told the husband that he has to move out next week. To the minister: why can't they stay together for the time that they have left?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm unaware of this particular situation, and I'd certainly be happy to look into it if the hon. member would like to provide me with the details. What I can tell you is that we are working very hard to allow couples to stay together as long as possible, particularly in very tragic circumstances like the ones that have been described. Because of the demand for continuing care across the province, we do have a first available bed policy that Alberta Health Services has in effect, but I know they make every effort to ensure, particularly in very difficult circumstances such as these, that couples are not unnecessarily separated.

Ms Smith: I'll just give a bit more detail, Mr. Speaker. Their doctor has found a way to keep them together for the last two months by having them in community support beds in the long-term care facility. It's worked well, but AHS rules say that these beds can only be occupied for a maximum of two months, which seems kind of arbitrary. The husband isn't blocking access to anyone else. There are 20 empty beds at this facility. Will the minister step in and make the caring and decent decision to allow this couple to spend their last days together?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly there are situations where exceptions should be granted. As I said, I don't have any specific information about this case. If the family physician or the hon. member wants to provide me with more details, I'll certainly look into it.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's undertaking. I just want to get on the record a couple of last details. To add insult to injury, if the husband is forced out, he is going to have to take a taxi over to see his wife, plus pay additional charges every day for his meals. Meanwhile, of course, they've raised the issue of the AHS health executives who still do enjoy their lavish expense accounts. I want to get an undertaking from the minister, because this is not the only issue we'll raise today. Will he agree to put patients first, give local caregivers the power to serve their patients the way they want to with compassion and with respect?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I don't have the particulars of this case. I'd be pleased to look into it. As Leader of the Official Opposition I'm sure the hon. member would not expect me to have those details at hand. If her intention is to raise awareness about a particular constituent in this province and their issues, she's accomplished that. There are ways to do that more directly, and I'd invite her to provide the details to my office.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: I certainly will give the minister the information he needs. I hope he can help out.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there are also more stories coming in about the mess that the Minister of Health has created with generic drugs. In a few moments you'll hear about one such story from one of our MLAs. The mess is bad enough, but the government has made it worse with an advertising campaign that distorts what's really going on. Here's what one pharmacist had to say about that, and I quote: maybe instead of spending $400,000 to advertise how great these generic cuts are, you could have invested the money into pharmacy to allow us to provide much-needed care for our patients. What does the minister have to say about that?

Mr. Horne: Well, what we have to say, Mr. Speaker, is that we just added $40 million in additional benefits to pharmacists to enable them to work through the transition to lower generic drug prices. As the hon. member knows, that is on top of the over $80 million that has been provided over the last few years. The very specific reason that we are taking these measures is to allow pharmacists to be paid directly for many of the services that they have provided for free to Albertans over the years. That can only be accomplished if we as payers on behalf of taxpayers have access to lower generic drug prices.

Ms Smith: The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that the claims being made by the Premier and her Health minister are just not true.

Here is an example of the government misleading the public in its advertising. The government claims that their changes will have limited financial impact on pharmacies, but the fact is that the average pharmacy will see a loss of annual revenue of about $600,000. How can the minister expect pharmacies to survive with that kind of loss?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this might be a good opportunity to help inform the hon. member about some of the facts. First of all – and I don't know where she's getting her information – there is no evidence that has been presented to me to suggest that $600,000 is the average loss in rebates that pharmacists would experience. In fact, the nature of those payments, which are rebates – they are financial transactions between individual pharmacies and distributors – is not transparent. That's data that's not available to us. That's not right. That's why we don't have the lowest generic prices that we should have. We're going to invest the money that we do save in expanding pharmacy services in the province.

Ms Smith: Well, I'm getting my information from the Pharmacists Association of Alberta, whom the minister claims he's been listening to and consulting with. Clearly not, because the government claims other jurisdictions like Ontario are reducing prices, too, yet have more pharmacies open. But here's the truth. Ontario pharmacists are allowed to charge higher dispensing fees, so they have higher revenues, and even then Ontario's pharmacy wages and hours have been reduced, pharmacy unemployment is up, and, more importantly, Ontario's price reductions were to 25 per cent, not 18 per cent like Alberta's. Why does the minister keep distorting the truth?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we'll leave that last comment aside for a moment.

The fact of the matter is that we in Alberta have followed the lead of other jurisdictions like Ontario, which began many years ago to reduce generic drug prices. I don't think any member on this side of the House wants our pharmacists to continue to rely on rebates and other under-the-table payments that are not transparent to the public, that result not only in higher drug prices for government and for Albertans who pay out of pocket and for employers but also deny pharmacists the opportunity to be paid for the very professional services they do provide. Our pharmacists deserve better. They are getting better as a result of this plan. We'll continue to work with them directly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: The problem is that there is a limit to how low you can go, and the minister's plan goes too far.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that the Premier's excuse for borrowing billions of dollars in the back-in-debt budget is phony. It's the unicorn of Alberta politics. Even the former Finance minister, Lloyd Snelgrove, was critical of his former colleagues for using the bitumen bubble as an excuse. He correctly pointed out that the spread between bitumen prices and conventional prices has been a fact in the real world for years. We pointed out that the spread on budget day was almost the same as the spread on election day, when the Premier was making all of those promises to spend, spend, spend. Will the Premier now concede that we're going into debt because she's spending too much?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the fascinating thing is that between election day and budget day there was an entire 12 months of an increasing differential that impacted our revenue to the tune of $6 billion. Not only that; let's just look at the newspaper today, Brian Ferguson, CEO of Cenovus. It says: "Cenovus predicts the differential – which on Wednesday stood at about $18... will widen again in the last half of this year." He said: "All things taken as a whole, we're expecting that supply will increase somewhat more than demand." I'm going to take Brian Ferguson's advice from Cenovus well before the Leader of the Opposition's.

Ms Smith: The fact of the matter is that the bitumen spread has been there for decades, Premier.

When we raise the issue of debt and borrowing, the Premier with the backing of her Finance minister insists it's a good idea to borrow. Of course, that wasn't what they were saying during the election a year ago. But if the government cut its wasteful spending on things like layers of managers managing managers, on things like corporate welfare, it could pay cash for core government responsibilities like building schools and hospitals. Wouldn't that be better?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that was very exciting in this budget was the fact that we made a commitment to continue to invest in the infrastructure that matters to build Alberta, unlike the opposition. But on top of that, let's remember – oh, I don't know – that on budget day we kept spending to zero whereas the opposition suggested that spending should increase to population plus inflation. On top of that, we've enhanced savings, saving $24 billion. [interjections] We continue to increase funding for education and health care. We have a deal with teachers and with doctors to ensure that we keep our fiscal framework strong. That's something we're proud of. [interjections]

The Speaker: I see the usual Thursday afternoon chorus is alive and well.

Hon. members, on a more serious note the Member for Airdrie rose on a point of order at 2:11:30, and that has been noted.

Let's go on with your final question, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans aren't nearly so enthusiastic about the government's direction on finances. Only 13 per cent approve of the direction.

Earlier in the week the Energy minister pretty much admitted that future bitumen revenues will not be high enough to save them. If the Premier refuses to prioritize spending, as we've suggested, how will they ever stop the downward spiral of constant deficits and ballooning debt?

Ms Redford: In estimates two weeks ago we had a fascinating discussion where the Leader of the Opposition used exactly the same language, and this is what she said: we would prioritize spending on infrastructure and find the savings on services somewhere else. Well, I don't know about them, Mr. Speaker, but from our perspective we weren't going to cut $6 billion in services to Albertans because we're committed to savings, to building Alberta, to supporting families and communities, to ensuring that schools and hospitals continue to open. We will build for the future because that's the commitment that we made to Albertans.

Political Party Donations

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to a story by Chuck Rusnell of CBC it appears that in exchange for major financial donations to a leadership campaign a promise was made to amend Alberta's labour legislation. To the Premier: was this promise to amend Alberta's labour legislation made in return for a campaign donation?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I saw part of this story. Do you want me to answer this or not?

The Speaker: Well, I think we all know the rule about campaign donations and political party references and so on. But if you wish to . . . [interjections] Excuse me. The chorus does not get an encore.

If you wish to provide an answer, I welcome you.

Ms Redford: I will. Mr. Speaker, I saw a copy of this story this morning. In fact, I welcome the report. What did this report say? It said that someone made a political contribution and, as a result of that, expected to get access. As far as I can tell, the story was that they didn't. That's a good system. That's what we're proud of. That's what change looks like. We're going to continue to do the work that's right for Albertans.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, according to the story they had access. A commitment was made. It was reflected in the party's platform. People are just so cynical in this province. One political commentator says that this is just how things are done in this province, behind the scenes. When all of these types of campaign donations are made, Premier, how do Albertans trust this Premier and this government when each day brings a new scandal? How, Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as far as I can tell, what each day brings is another story in the newspaper that the opposition brings up to try to get some political traction. This story today exactly proves the point that that's not the way that business should be done. It's not the way that we are involved in doing public policy. It is not something we subscribe to or support in any way. And it simply did not happen and will not happen in the future.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, we had illegal campaign donations. We've had a $430,000 donation. We've had Tobaccogate. We've had all these kinds of election campaign finance issues. You just passed legislation recently, Premier. You could still drive a $430,000 truck through that legislation. Premier, my question to you: what other decisions are for sale in this province under your leadership? Come on, Premier.

Ms Redford: None, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the leader of the Liberals I actually have the documents.

Now, this morning more revelations of shady backroom politics came to light, this time involving years of collusion between a coalition of big construction companies and the PCs. During her PC leadership campaign the Premier accepted $26,900 from the Construction Competitiveness Coalition and its members. At the same time she assured this coalition that she supported their antiunion agenda and then included proposals in the PC election platform that were almost word for word. Can the Premier tell us why she promised big construction corporations to bring in union-busting amendments . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only fact in that entire question is that there was, in fact, a political contribution. We, our party, before any other party, before there were even rules in place, ensured that we disclosed those contributions. That was consistent then with amendments that we made to the Election Act.

The other thing, again, is that it proves the point. Even though people may choose to participate in the political process, there is no reason to ever presume, as this story shows today, that that will do anything more than allow them to feel like good, solid citizens.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact that they revealed it doesn't change the fact that they got them.

Following large, ongoing donations to the PCs members of the antiunion construction coalition received about $1 billion in grants and contracts over a six-year period. On top of that, they received a promise to make union-busting revisions to the labour code in this Progressive Conservative platform from the last election. Will the Premier admit that the donations from the antiunion construction coalition not only got them their contracts but also got them the promise of labour code reviews intending to facilitate union-busting by these antiunion construction companies?

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. member, please review your third question because if it's along the same lines, it won't be allowed. The rules specifically say: no questions with respect to political parties or political party donations. We've talked about this before, so please rethink, recraft your question. You're a veteran; you'll figure it out.

Hon. Minister of Human Services, if you wish to respond.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. And I guess that would mean it would be totally inappropriate for me to mention that the AFL gave the NDP $30,000 in 2012. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. members, you can see that if I allow something like that on one side of the House, I have to allow it on the other side. Then you can see what happens between members of this House. Please.

So let us remember that there are rules in our practice of parliament books. Those rules and those guidelines exist for a reason, and it is exactly to prevent outbursts like we just had during the Liberal leader's questions, during the NDP leader's questions, and certainly during the Minister of Human Services' answer.

Hon. Minister of Human Services, would you like to conclude your answer now, bearing in mind the rules and practices?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad we're very clear on that now.

Mr. Hancock: What I'd like to indicate to this hon. member is that there's no surprise in this. We for two years have been talking. The Competitiveness Council provided a brief to government some two years ago, and the previous minister opened up a discussion on that. We've had the discussion with the building trades council, with unions. We've had letter-writing campaigns.

We've had open, transparent discussions. Everybody involved now knows that Andy Sims is mediating the process. There's nothing hidden here, and there's no special . . .

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we know that the PCs have received $186,750 in something we're not allowed to talk about from the antiunion construction coalition. Coincidentally, I'm sure they received not one but two reviews of the labour code intended to undermine the rights of working people and a campaign promise in the PC platform document to allow union-busting. To the Premier: now that Albertans know how this government makes policy, will she finally do the right thing and ban corporate and union election donations, including for leadership races?

The Speaker: The hon. minister briefly. I think the ND leader got his point onto the record, and I'm prepared to move on, but if you can do something briefly to comment, I invite you to offer your comment.

Mr. Hancock: Briefly is very difficult for me, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to say this. Nothing has been bought, nothing is bought in this government in terms of policy. We have had a very clear, very open, very transparent process in which there's been no secret about the fact that the Competitiveness Council wanted change, there's been no secret in the fact that many of the things they asked for are not happening, and there's no secret in the fact that there has been discussion with all parties very publicly . . .

The Speaker: Wonderful. Thank you.

Support for Couples Aging in Long-term Care (continued)

Mrs. Towle: Babe is a 96-year-old World War II veteran currently in a private care facility and on the waiting list for extended care. Fran, the love of his life for 71 years, was put into extended care in October. When Babe can visit Fran, they find comfort holding each other's hands even though Babe can no longer express his words and Fran is confused. Babe and Fran deserve to be together. How many other Alberta couples, having spent decades together, will have to spend their last days apart because this government will not make it a priority to keep them together?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have known going back to 2010 of the issue that we're facing today, and that's an aging population. Since 2010 this government has made a commitment to build a thousand new spaces each and every year. Every one of the new facilities and every one of the facilities that we co-announce with opposition members and members on this side, mayors, community members, all have spaces for couples. We know we have to get our stock of couples' residences higher, and we're going to.

Mrs. Towle: Well, given that recently released documents show that the policy allowing seniors to be placed in care facilities up to a hundred kilometres away from their home was supposed to be an interim policy to deal with bed shortages during the H1N1 pandemic, which was four years ago, and given that couples in the last years of their life are still ending up 200 kilometres apart, why does the minister allow this so-called interim policy to continue well after the pandemic has ended?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have an idea of the document the hon. member is referring to. It's from 2009.

The hon. member should well know that the demand for continuing care spaces in Alberta is very high. There is a first available bed policy that's in effect. As the associate minister has indicated, today's modern facilities, the thousand spaces that we're opening each year, offer opportunities for couples to stay together because we recognize that need, Mr. Speaker. That's what leadership in continuing care is about.

Mrs. Towle: Couples are separated every day, Mr. Speaker, and given that in 2009, when the hundred-kilometre placement policy came into effect, Alberta Health Services said, and I quote, that Alberta Health Services is committed to getting these clients back into their community of choice as soon as there is relief from the unique H1N1 pandemic pressure, will the minister scrap the hundred-kilometre rule immediately, or will he continue this government's cruel policy of divorce by nursing home?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we will continue to do is what we have been doing; that is, increasing continuing care spaces at a rate not seen anywhere else in this country on a per capita basis. I'm sure all of us would welcome the opportunity in question period to stand up and talk about the very specific details of constituents. If the hon. member's question is about policy, she's aware of the policy that's in effect. It's nothing any of us want to continue longer than possible, but it is a necessary response to a very temporary situation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please review your questions from here on out because I'm going to clamp down on supplementals. We're running late today.

We're going to call and recognize yesterday's champion of no preambles to supplementaries, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: I've got lots of preambles today.

Access to International Markets

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the CEO of a leading Alberta energy company raised concerns about the threat to our economy of the bitumen bubble and that Alberta lacks market access. This is an issue that concerns everyone who has looked at it seriously, including industry, economists, and financial institutions. That has not only had a serious impact on Alberta's revenue outlook, with a $6.2 billion drop this year, but it's also had a big impact on our federal partner in Ottawa as well. To the Premier. We know that all those who would like to build walls around Alberta like to deny that there are problems.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we were hoping for a repeat performance, but we're not getting it.

Hon. Premier, if you wish to respond.

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the unique challenge that we've always faced in Alberta is that we're an export-driven economy. When we face some of these difficult financial challenges, one of the things that we need to do is make sure that we're putting strategies in place to allow our markets to continue to grow. That, of course, is why we understood in the last election that we couldn't live within our borders, that we couldn't build firewalls or perhaps other kinds of fires, and that we needed to make sure that we were building markets. That's why we have incredible work going on in our government in our international offices on Keystone, on pipelines to the east, on pipelines to the north, and on Gateway. That's what allows us to continue to have the quality of life that we're entitled to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that yesterday a report surfaced that indicated that Alberta is looking to do even more to build international markets and given that the budget increased funding to strengthen Alberta's presence and growth and to diversify markets in Asia and the United States, do Albertans receive tangible benefits from the work that takes place outside our borders?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member will not be surprised to hear that the answer to that question is yes, we do receive tangible benefits. We see that every day in Washington and Quebec and New Brunswick, where we have strong partnerships with people that understand what our environmental record is, that we're important economic partners, and that the economic engine of Canada, right now located in Alberta, can share the wealth across this country so that we can have refining in Quebec, refining in New Brunswick, and exports to Asia. That's an international strategy outside of our borders, and that's what matters to Albertans.

Mr. Quadri: Mr. Speaker, can the Premier explain how Albertans can understand the important opportunity that exists internationally and how small- and medium-sized businesses can get help from the government to gain a competitive edge in those markets?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that's very important for us to understand if we look at Alberta's economy is that everything doesn't happen only through energy, and everything doesn't happen only in very large corporations. It's very important for us to be working with agricultural producers, with companies that are exporting to Asia such as honey producers, that have very successful markets. The only way that we can ensure that we're finding customers and supporting those trade strategies is to have international offices with people that understand Alberta's businesses and economy and to make sure that that ongoing relationship continues to expand markets in lots of commodities around the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Police Integrated Information Initiative

Mr. Saskiw: This Justice minister is now infamous for throwing tens of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money down the drain. For several years this government, including the Premier when she was Justice minister, spent at least $69 million on a police integrated information system, known as API3, but then scrapped the project. That's money spent on nothing just like the $10 million spent on not building the police college in Fort Macleod. What excuse does this progressive Justice minister have for his reckless incompetence in spending hard-earned, taxpayers' money?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, if anybody is incompetent, it's this very member. [interjections] In fact, the $69 million: guess what? That can be used throughout this entire province. I invite him to go and contact the chief of the Calgary police, who has even indicated that . . .

Speaker's Ruling Inflammatory Language

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you see what you've prompted with your reference to incompetence? Then we have another one firing back at your incompetence and his incompetence. It's in that category of personal attack.

So craft your questions a little better, hon. members, and government members, craft your answers a little bit better. Don't take the bait all the time, both ways.

Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, let's see how you do on your first supplementary.

2:30 Police Integrated Information Initiative (continued)

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier was the Justice minister as the API3 program was being developed, can the current Justice minister clarify whether this million-dollar boondoggle occurred under his watch or hers?

Mr. Denis: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the API3 program was founded before either the Premier or myself was elected in 2006.

Regardless, there's no money wasted here. The chief of Calgary police, Rick Hansen, has even said so publicly. I invite this member to check his quotes in the Herald. He has indicated that he can use the coding from the actual API3 system and much of the hardware can be used throughout much of the entire government, so this member's statements are inaccurate.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Calgary Police Service cited that the API3 project would help – and I quote – increase public safety and enhance efficiency and effectiveness, can the minister explain how he's going to fill these gaps in the justice system now that millions spent on the project have been flushed down the drain?

Mr. Denis: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I don't know which inaccuracy to talk about first, but perhaps this member would first want to talk about his party's weak and soft record on crime, the fact that his leader wanted to go and create a red-light district, the fact that he wanted less enforcement on highway 63. [interjections] No matter what this member does, we're continuing with enforcement in this area. [interjections]

The Speaker: All right. Let's just take a few seconds to cool off. Alberta is sunny Alberta, but it's also been known to be cool Alberta. Ah, I feel better. I'm sure you do as well. Let us move on. Calgary-Bow, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Support for Volunteer Organizations

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This week is National Volunteer Week, and across the province Albertans are honouring the amazing volunteers who make a difference in their communities. Every year these volunteers make it possible for our citizens to access programs and services worth an estimated $9 billion, supporting youth and families and keeping our province strong. My question is to the Minister of Culture. Given the incredible contribution of our nonprofit volunteer sector, how can you justify cuts to grants that are so vital to helping volunteer organizations achieve their goals?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, volunteers do indeed make our province hum, and I'm so thankful for everything they do. That's why funding has been maintained to many of our community investment programs, including the francophone community and arts and heritage programs – those are very, very important programs – as well as the community initiatives program and the community facility enhancement program.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Culture: why was the community spirit program, one of the few programs where Albertans helped to determine where dollars went through their donations, eliminated?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, that was a really difficult decision to make as a minister, but we know that $65 million now has been allocated towards the core programs and services that community initiatives and community facility enhancement do provide. As well, the applications for the community spirit donation program are being processed. Those cheques are being mailed out in May. I want to note that Alberta has one of highest charitable tax credits in all of Canada, and I know Albertans will continue to donate to their charities of choice.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: what is this government doing to ensure that the nonprofit, voluntary sector remains viable for future generations of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are indeed committed to helping Albertans now and into the future. One of the things that we have is community development officers that are across Alberta. They will assist organizations with fundraising, strategic development, and board development. As well, the government has incredible partnerships with organizations like the Alberta nonprofit, voluntary sector, and I'm currently working with the Minister of Human Services on some other programs to engage and keep communication open with the nonprofit, voluntary sector.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Deerfoot Trail

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like the Fort Macleod police college, the Deerfoot Trail handover is something that we keep hearing about, but nothing ever really happens. To the Minister of Transportation: when is this now expected to occur, Mr. Minister?

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, when he talks about the Deerfoot, it's not a single location issue. There are a whole bunch of changes that eventually we'd like to make. I can tell the hon. member right now that there are big improvements going on as part of the southeast Calgary ring road project, with better interchanges between highway 22X and Deerfoot Trail that will accommodate a lot more traffic. Through that, Mr. Speaker, I also expect we'll take off a lot of the truck traffic that ties up Deerfoot Trail, particularly during the rush hour, when that finishes by the end of this year. We're hoping that will at least be one improvement although certainly not the last one.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has said that before this happens, he will have to fix the problem with the Glenmore Trail. But there was no money in the budget. Will he still fix the problem at the Glenmore Trail before he hands Deerfoot Trail to the city of Calgary?

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member: I'm sure he's aware, because we just finished estimates and we just finished quite a bit of discussion on the budget, that the Glenmore Trail interchange is not in the three-year plan, but we hope to get it in there in the future, and I thank the hon. member for the reminder of that project. It's certainly something that we want to get done.

In terms of handing the Deerfoot Trail over to the city, that will happen at some point, we hope, in the future but not until after we have, I would hope, a good discussion with the city and try to actually come to an agreement on when that'll happen. There is no date per se, Mr. Speaker, when we're planning it.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it costs about $4 million a year to operate a freeway like Deerfoot and the road has some major design problems, will Calgary see any increase in transportation grants to help pay for the upkeep, or will those costs be downloaded to the city of Calgary?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the hon. member wants to negotiate something here in the House when the discussions haven't even begun yet with the city. Obviously, the question can't be answered because the negotiations haven't even begun, but I can you this. When we go ahead, we will talk to the city in advance. We'll actually try to get their agreement, and when that will happen – again, I'll repeat myself because the question was asked again – we don't know, but we look forward to looking after the Deerfoot Trail very well until such time as we turn it over.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Child Poverty

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year and a half ago this Premier made a promise to end child poverty in five years. Since then not only has she allotted zero new dollars to this promise; she's actually cut funding to countless programs which fight child poverty in Alberta. My question is to the Premier. Who promises to eliminate child poverty in five years, puts no money toward that promise, and cuts funding that currently exists? Who does that, Madam Premier?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this is a typical NDP approach to policy, just add money and stir. What we're actually doing is looking at every program that we have that affects children to determine how effective they're being. We're looking at a poverty strategy based on the social policy framework. [interjections]

We're looking at that to determine how we can do better. We're continuing the very good programs we have. There are a lot of good things happening. There will be more good things happening. But you don't start by putting in billions of dollars. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you may be on the list later. We'll give you a chance then if you want.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, please proceed.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this budget cuts child intervention, cuts support for youth in transition, cuts retraining for parents and poor families and given that this Premier's social policy/public relations framework calls for government to, among other things, actually reduce its role as a funder of antipoverty initiatives, will the minister admit that not even his substantial rhetoric is enough to feed growing numbers of hungry children in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what I think Albertans understand and certainly what we understand from Albertans in the discussions we've had through the social policy framework and others is that when you deal with issues like poverty, in particular child poverty, it has to be owned by the community. We have to come together to do these things. It's not simply a matter of creating, for example, a school breakfast program that you apply right across the province at a substantial cost. You look at targeted programs. You look at communities coming together. You look at effective use of public resources to actually achieve results. That's what we're committed to doing.

Ms Notley: Well, here are your results. Given that the number of Alberta children living in poverty has grown by 70 per cent in the last four years alone and given that this government has already had over 46 years to fix this problem, is the minister really trying to tell this House that the Premier broke her promise to children in this budget because you really have no idea about where to start the fight against poverty? Is that really what you're telling us?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker, because the Premier did not break her promise. The Premier is keeping her promise to Alberta's children. We are putting children first. We are making sure that our programs are effective and achieving results. Most importantly, we're making sure that all Albertans come together in this very important battle to fight child poverty to make sure that each and every child has the opportunity to have a successful start because their successful start will be our successful future.

Provincial Labour Supply

Mr. Bikman: Mr. Speaker, small business is the engine of our economy, encouraging competition, spurring innovation, and creating jobs. Two days ago CFIB's report, Looking for Hire Ground, indicated that over half of all entrepreneurs in the west are giving up business opportunities due to the shortage of labour and skills. A stunning 84 per cent of small-business owners looking for help in the last three years say that they've had difficulty finding new employees. Over two-thirds are hiring underqualified people. This government claims to be taking action. Why haven't we seen better results?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of answers to that question. We've done some very good work in conjunction with the federal government to change some of the rules so that we can get the skilled workers we need and make it easier for them to come. The helmets to hard hats program would be a good example of that, where people who have skills coming out of the armed services, whether they're the Canadian or American armed services, can get the accreditation they need to put those skills to work here in Alberta. So there are a number of very successful recruitment programs happening.

We're also, Mr. Speaker, working within Alberta to make sure that people, whether from the aboriginal community, perhaps, or persons with disabilities or women in rural areas, who haven't had access to the skill sets that they need to get those jobs have proper programs to get that access, to get those skills. So Albertans working, Canadians working, and bringing in people from other jurisdictions that have the needed skills: that's a comprehensive program, and it is working for Alberta.

Mr. Bikman: Mr. Speaker, given that this labour shortage hurts not only our own provincial economy but Canada's too and given that the Calgary Chamber of Commerce's chief economist, often quoted here, calls the labour shortage a structural challenge, when can small-business owners expect this government to address the structural nature of Alberta's labour shortage?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a very good question because small businesses in Alberta through the chambers of commerce and other organizations have been partnering with us in this very important process. They have been working with us as we've talked to the federal government, for example, about increasing the allocated number of spaces in our provincial immigrant nominee program and other programs, which would help us to actually bring people here not on a temporary basis but on a permanent basis to add to our community, add to our businesses, and add to our economy. So business has been working fully with us. They have offered to go to Ottawa with us, and they have gone on their own. But it's not just about going to Ottawa; it's about looking at how we bring those people who are here in this province who need to be part of the economy into the economy as well. So we're working on both fronts.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the CFIB Alberta director said, "Policy-makers have begun to respond, but much more needs to be done to help employers find the qualified people they need to build their business and grow our economy," what else will this government do to address this shortage and help our economy?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's obviously a continuing piece of work because a skill shortage, for example in the oil sands, translates into demands in all other aspects of our economy. It's a fairly comprehensive piece. You can't just say: we need more welders. You have to look at the whole structure of the economy and where we need people.

The answer is not just in temporary foreign workers. The answer is in how we can bring people here, how we can increase the skills of the people who are here so that they can be true contributors to our economy on a long-term basis. That's an ongoing strategy. We're working with business on that strategy. We're working with communities on that strategy. It is working, but more needs to be done, absolutely, and we will partner with all of our communities – chambers of commerce, business – to ensure that that strategy continues to be successful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Victims' Assistance Programs

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 21 to 27 is Victims of Crime Awareness Week all across Canada. The theme for this week is We All Have a Role, and I encourage everyone in this Legislature to pause and reflect on what they can do to support victims of crime and see if they can do even more. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. In keeping with the theme of We All Have a Role, is our government taking its share of responsibility when it comes to supporting victims of crime in their time of need?

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and answer this question, specifically because it deals with the many services that Alberta Justice provides to victims. Last year we were able to help over 66,000 victims in a budget of over $30 million.

We also wouldn't be able to do this if it weren't for the many community-based organizations in the nonprofit sector such as Project Kare, Calgary Communities Against Sexual Abuse, the Canadian Society for the Investigation of Child Abuse, and the Zebra centre, a few blocks from here, or it was a couple of weeks ago. If it wasn't for these valued organizations, we wouldn't be able to do it.

Ms Olesen: To the same minister: if that is the case, what kinds of services are available to victims of crime in Alberta.

Mr. Denis: The first thing to note, Mr. Speaker, is that every crime is unique and every victim is unique. The grants that we talked about go to 76 police-based programs that operate 138 victims' services units and 33 community-based victims' organizations. I also want to take this opportunity to thank the more than 2,000 volunteers each year that contribute more than 189,000 hours – that's 189,000 hours – of their personal time to help victims of crime.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. Again to the same minister: while it's easy to understand the value of assistance that goes directly to victims, what is the value of conferences such as the one being held today by the Victims of Homicide Support Society?

Mr. Denis: Well, first off, there was that meeting today. Unfortunately, I wasn't able to attend, but I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for doing so on my behalf. The conference is a great forum, a learning opportunity for victims, law enforcement, criminal justice professionals, everyone who works with victims of crime. The theme is very appropriate, Mr. Speaker, because it reflects the government's commitment to ensuring that victims are treated with dignity, compassion, and respect. It's our belief that victims' rights should be placed above criminals' rights.

The Speaker: Thank you, Sherwood Park, for no preambles.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, every day we see more fallout from the Health minister's reckless Fred-icare plan. Another pharmacy, this time in my constituency, is at risk of closing its doors for good, possibly leaving patients without access to their much-needed medications. This irresponsible plan is resulting in shorter hours, less direct care, no more complimentary services, and reduced stocks of medications at local pharmacies. Minister, the time for grandstanding is over. Your ad campaign is a sham. Will the minister finally accept that his plan has backfired and is causing physical and financial distress for Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the situation is quite the contrary. We've already talked about the financial transition assistance that's provided by government to pharmacists. I'm pleased to tell the House that we've now received price offerings from all generic manufacturers for May. They have made the right decision. I can tell Albertans that they will be seeing lower prices for drugs in this province starting on May 1.

Mr. Fox: Given that this minister's reckless Fred-icare plan has already failed, with pharmacies facing closure, drug costs rising, and patients suffering, what will it take for him to finally hit the reset button on this disastrous plan and stop putting the health of everyday Albertans at risk?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a gross exaggeration. If the hon. member wants to have a discussion about patient safety and quality assurance in this health system, I'd invite him to ask a real question, and I'd be pleased to explain to him exactly how the system operates in that regard.

We are proud of the work that we are doing to reduce generic drug prices in Alberta. We are supporting pharmacists in providing the professional services that they are trained to deliver. We are delivering lower generic drug prices, beginning in May, for Albertans that pay out of pocket, for government, for taxpayers, and, most importantly, for employers across this province who give people jobs.

Mr. Fox: Albertans would like a real answer, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that a pharmacy team from Blackfalds has asked their customers to tell their stories, explaining how the minister's changes are deteriorating their quality of care, and given that I have a stack of these letters filled with one sad story after another, can this minister explain why he continues to plow ahead with his reckless Fred-icare plan without any regard to how it's failing Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, where to begin? A real answer would involve asking a real question, one that recognizes the facts that have been presented over and over in this House and to Albertans.

The reason we're doing this, as I said in an answer to an earlier question, is not only to reduce taxpayers' costs although that's a laudable goal and one that we would expect the hon. member to share as an MLA in this House. What we are doing is freeing pharmacists from the tyranny of rebates and other payments that are made to them, which are not transparent, and we're replacing that with professional fees for professional services that they provide to Albertans.

Homelessness

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, today at a news conference held in Edmonton, the Edmonton Homeless Commission released its four-year update, and the results show real progress in meeting the goals of Edmonton's 10-year plan to end homelessness. It's always good to hear good news, particularly when it comes to supporting less fortunate individuals. One of the challenges that many vulnerable individuals experience is feeling excluded from mainstream society. My questions today are for the Minister of Human Services. What is your ministry doing to address the need for community acceptance in addressing homelessness?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's a very important question. We've seen both in Edmonton and Calgary situations where communities have been concerned about the demographics of their community in terms of a higher number of lower income people and whether they have too much social housing already in their community. That's a very important question to be raised. We need to have and we do have through the social policy framework discussions some real understanding that all of us as a community have to come together to deal with these issues. All of us own these issues, and we have a shared result of the process. Now, a lot of the real answer ends up at the civic level with respect to zoning and with respect to how they plan the city so that all citizens have the opportunity to live in any community.

Mr. Dorward: Is your ministry undertaking any focused work to address the youth issue? We hear time and time again that there are too many youths and children who are homeless.

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. The youth homelessness agenda is an additional agenda that has been embarked on not just by our department but also by the Interagency Council on Homelessness, working together to say that with respect to the specific youth population we know that a homeless youth who doesn't find a secure place within a very short period of time may go on to have a very long life of homelessness. It's an important issue, it's an important concern, and it's being worked on diligently right across this province.

Mr. Dorward: What is the government doing to address the need for permanent supportive housing? We want permanent solutions.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a real success story in this area, with approximately $255 million in 2013 that will go to various housing programs, including supports to social housing, seniors' lodges, and rent supplements. Now, the government will continue to make investments in affordable housing a priority by using existing resources in the Alberta Social Housing Corporation to match federal contributions in this very important area. The government has a long-term plan, which started in 2011-12, to invest up to $320 million over five years to develop 36,000 government-owned or -supported housing units and affordable housing units where appropriate.

The federal government just recently announced a five-year commitment to housing, and we're examining our five-year plan to consider a variety of funding models and ensure that our priorities are aligned and approaches are sustained to make the best possible use of the funding.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, just because of the outbursts and delays and the interventions and somewhat lengthier preambles on the parts of some members, six other members did not get a chance to get recognized for their questions today. I know you'll think about this over the next week and come back prepared differently when we resume.

Hon. members, in 20 seconds I will call on the first of several members to read their member's statement.

Before we do, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: While we're waiting that 20 seconds and people are shifting around, Mr. Speaker, in anticipation that we will reach 3 o'clock before we reach the finish, perhaps we could ask for unanimous consent now to extend past 3 o'clock if necessary to conclude.

The Speaker: Hon. members, one question to you: do we have unanimous consent to proceed with the Routine beyond 3 p.m. should it become necessary today? Does anyone object to that?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let us carry on with private members' statements, starting with Edmonton-Decore.

Centennial of Edmonton Chinatown

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly my honour and privilege to rise today in recognition of Edmonton's Chinatown centennial anniversary and the tremendous contributions by the Edmonton Chinese community over the past 100 years in our province's capital city. Albertans of Chinese ancestry have a proud history, heritage, and identity in the province. They were amongst the many founding cultural groups that helped to build this province from its very beginnings.

The first Chinese settler arrived in Edmonton in May 1890 and established a laundry business on Jasper Avenue near 97th Street, known then as Namayo Avenue. The migration of Chinese settlers to Edmonton continued over the decades as there was a desire to create familiar communities filled with support from individuals and organizations in a new homeland. One such community, located in the heart of Edmonton, is known as Chinatown, which features the Harbin gate, built in 1987. This gate symbolizes the friendship between Edmonton and its sister city Harbin in the People's Republic of China. This is an eclectic and enticing area, built by local dedicated entrepreneurs, community and service organizations, and tireless volunteers.

Edmonton's Chinatown is truly a living part of the Alberta spirit, where generations of people may discover, experience, and enjoy exciting festivals, traditional cuisine, fellowship, old and new Chinese architecture, and local professional and business services.

Congratulations and best wishes to all those from the past, present, and future in the Edmonton Chinese community on the occasion of their 100th anniversary of the establishment of Edmonton's Chinatown and for their dedicated leadership to add immeasurably to our great city, province, and country. May they have continued success in the many years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Bitumen Valuation

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most Albertans don't believe the Premier when she claims the bitumen bubble is the reason her government is breaking nearly every promise they made to get elected. In fact, a recent poll says that a whopping 65 per cent of respondents do not buy the Premier's excuse. Alberta Liberals called it what it was, BS, a bitumen sham. We were right then, and we are right now. But you don't have to take our word for it. A former Finance minister and Treasury Board president, Lloyd Snelgrove, thinks so, too. He even went so far as to state on the public record that the Premier's excuse might work for the people who don't follow the financial history of Alberta. So either they weren't going to listen, or they chose to ignore what would just be common sense.

What happened? Where did the Premier go so wrong? When the bitumen differential cycle peaked in December, smack in the middle of budget preparations, the Premier panicked, and she decided then to make bitumen prices the scapegoat. But for the bitumen sham to work, the Premier had to convince Albertans that the bubble was both real and unforeseeable. She couldn't, and because her televised propaganda address failed so miserably, the Premier deflected attention by calling an economic summit. Sadly, even then she did not find the courage to address our province's overreliance on volatile resource revenues despite the fact that that was exactly what economists were telling her to do. Instead of progressive taxation and asking large corporations to pay their fair share, as Alberta Liberals propose, she put our savings and services at risk by tying them to the price of a barrel of oil. Now that's a shame, just as the story she told us about bitumen is a sham.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Jacob Onyschuk

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a special young Albertan. During last year's annual 4-H selections program in Olds Jacob Onyschuk of Legal was chosen from amongst the province's top 4-H members to receive 4-H's highest honour, the Premier's award.

Over the past year Jacob has done a great job representing youth and 4-H at various events, and he had the opportunity to meet with the Premier, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, and his local MLA, the Minister of Education, this afternoon.

Jacob has been an important member of the Bon Accord 4-H and Vimy Dunrobin 4-H multi clubs. In addition to having market steer, heifer, cow/calf, and goat projects, he's contributed at the district and regional levels by facilitating workshops and chairing the Northwest Regional Beef Committee. Jacob has also been involved in the U of A Multi-Species Judging Club and Collegiate 4-H Club.

Mr. Speaker, 4-H has been shaping the lives of youth and adults for a century. One of the longest running youth organizations in Alberta, it has more than 6,000 members participating in close to 400 clubs across the province. With more than 250,000 alumni, 4-H is also one of the most respected and admired youth programs in Canada. In fact, it would be nice to see by a show of hands, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, how many of the hon. members in the House today are former 4-H members.

Mr. Speaker, the 4-H motto is Learn To Do by Doing. Through various activities they develop professionalism, strong leadership qualities, and build the confidence they need to succeed. I want to acknowledge the outstanding work done by the 4-H clubs in Alberta, extend a warm thank you to the volunteers, applaud our young people, and extend special congratulations to Jacob.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Highwood.

Postpartum Depression in Men

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to take a few moments to recognize, discuss, and bring a bit more attention to the issue of postpartum depression and anxiety in men. It is well known that postpartum depression is a condition that can manifest itself in women who have recently given birth. Symptoms include social withdrawal, feelings of guilt, irritability, low self-esteem, insomnia, and even panic attacks, among others. Though we always can and always will strive to do better, the prevalence of postpartum depression in women means that a number of resources are predominantly geared toward the women who suffer from it.

I don't intend to take any attention or focus away from the seriousness of how this affects women, but though this type of clinical depression is starting to be socially accepted and documented in women, it is often forgotten that men, too, can suffer from a form of postpartum depression and anxiety, often referred to as the daddy blues. This depression is an experience of anxiety and other problems of mood by fathers after the birth of a child. Because the condition is so well known in women and because the idea of male postpartum depression may seem counterintuitive to some, men are often left to suffer alone and in silence.

Research is also beginning to suggest that men often experience depression and anxiety in ways that are different from women. Men sometimes cope with their symptoms in different ways, too. These findings might help explain why even trained mental health professionals frequently overlook or misdiagnose this form of depression. However, it has been found that certain symptoms exist that are unique to the men who experience them. The manifestations of these symptoms include such things as increased anger, the misuse of prescription medication, and even thoughts of suicide.

I'm hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that as time and research progress, increased awareness may be raised as to the full extent of the prevalence of postpartum depression and anxiety in men as well as women.

Thank you.

Provincial Borrowing

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we've been discussing the province's finances in the Legislature lately in the debate on the financial management act, or, as I like to call it, the financial mismanagement act. Let me reinforce the Official Opposition's position on why the Minister of Finance and the Premier are wrong on debt and borrowing.

We've heard the Finance minister cite multiple chambers of commerce as supporting his position, but we really should look more closely at what they are actually saying. What the Alberta Chambers of Commerce said is that for debt to make sense, it had to have five key limitations.

Number one, there had to be a spending limit law because if you don't have limits, you'll never control spending. Strike 1.

Number two, borrowing only makes sense if you have a priority list and you have pre-identified all of the projects you might borrow for. Oops. Missed that one, too.

The third rule is that government should not be borrowing for projects that will have a higher operating cost than the capital cost. Wrong again.

The fourth, a strict limitation on finance charges as a percentage of revenues. The government has said 3 per cent. The chamber has said 1 per cent. Another broken rule.

The fifth rule that's been broken is the requirement to have a plan to pay the borrowing back. The minister likes to compare the province's borrowing to a mortgage, but mortgage payments include a portion for the principal. All the minister plans to pay is the interest.

Finally, here you see what economist Jack Mintz had to say about the government's finance. Now, first off, although Mintz has argued for tax changes, he has never argued to increase and close the gap on taxes, as the Finance minister claimed yesterday. What Mintz actually said is that the government must learn to deal with its spending problem. He also said – and this is more important – that provinces with natural resource revenues are borrowing significant amounts from the future already since they are selling off physical assets that would provide revenues to support future generations. So when the government spends every dollar's worth of resource revenues and also starts to borrow money, they're double-dipping on future generations.

I hope that corrects the record, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Edmonton Music Awards

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many of my colleagues may know, I'm a big supporter of the arts. Over the years I have organized and sponsored many cultural events and performances at Edmonton's Jubilee Auditorium, Edmonton's Winspear Centre, and other places. Such exciting events treat Edmontonians to a variety of colourful performances from Italian opera singers to Chinese folksingers, from traditional violinists to Japanese drummers and Ecuadorian pan flute players, from European folk dancers to Indian Bollywood dancing and bamboo dancing from the Philippines. We are very fortunate that Alberta is home to such an array of talented artists and musicians, many of whom have achieved national and international success.

Mr. Speaker, this Sunday, April 28, musical excellence will take the centre stage in Edmonton during the 2013 Edmonton music awards. The awards are an opportunity to celebrate and pay tribute to the outstanding local talent we have in the Edmonton area, including St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Leduc, Spruce Grove, and Stony Plain. It is also a chance to hear some of the capital region's best. There will be live performances by Corb Lund, The Command Sisters, Owls by Nature, Nuela Charles, KingDoom, SIINNES, and Il Duo. On Sunday night there are not enough awards to recognize the countless efforts and hours that many talented and dedicated artists have put into their craft.

I want to say that all of this year's nominees are deserving of a heartfelt thank you from all of us. Thank you for your hard work, thank you for sharing your talents, and thank you for your contribution to the cultural mosaic of our great province.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, May 6, 2013, written questions 36, 37, and 39 will be accepted, and written questions 38 and 40 will be dealt with.

Also, on Monday, May 6, 2013, Motion for a Return 7 will be dealt with.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Bill 21

Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 21 will create a funding mechanism between industry and government to support the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan for oil sands monitoring. The funding arrangement will enable Alberta to collect, hold, and disburse funds and continue to implement the joint plan. Changes to the act will also allow government to move forward on a provincial monitoring system by identifying programs and setting fees to support those programs. The goal of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development is full integration of all hazardous waste management systems in the province.

With this in mind, Bill 21 will remove the requirement for personal information numbers, PINs, for hazardous waste management to support implementation of the regulatory enhancement project. Removal of the requirement for a PIN will support the integration of the two waste management systems under the new Alberta energy regulator. Removing the PIN requirement will simplify administration and will not affect environmental assurance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 21 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise just to remind you to please be brief with the introductions to your tablings.

Let's carry on. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the Finance minister is back for my tabling. I was correcting the record of what he said last night about how Jack Mintz had argued to increase and close the gap on taxes. I've got, actually, five copies of a column that Professor Mintz wrote himself, where he does say: "In my view, Alberta does not have a revenue problem, but it does have a spending problem . . . More spending does not necessarily mean better public services." He proposes revenue-neutral tax reform, and he finishes with "Let me repeat: None of the tax reform revenue should be used to reduce the deficit. The government must learn to deal with its spending problem."

I trust that corrects the record, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a report released to the public earlier this year. This report is a review of the retail electricity system of Alberta. There were 41 recommendations. Six recommendations related to removing the default rate were rejected, two were accepted immediately, and the remaining 33 recommendations have been approved in principle and are in the implementation phase. The remaining work of these recommendations will be done by an MLA team chaired by myself and supported by Department of Energy experts. We'll be working closely with the Minister of Energy to ensure that the public interest is considered when developing the implementation plan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 24 handwritten notes from postsecondary students calling on this PC government to reverse the devastating cuts to colleges and universities. One note from an anonymous student includes a five-dollar bill, and it reads: "Dear Hon. Mrs. Redford . . . Please, have my last $5 and do something nice for yourselves . . . You really haven't been looking out for your own interests. It's not much, but it's all I have, enjoy yourselves." Instead of giving the money to the Premier, we will donate it to CAPSE to continue their fight to stand up for post-secondary education in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Let's be reminded not to use proper names of members in this Assembly. Even if we're quoting, it's still inappropriate.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is a letter from March 19 to the Member for Calgary-Shaw, and the other, the same letter on the same date, is to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, fabulous Edmonton-Centre if you don't mind. The letters: I've been putting on the record some information about the estimates, and they're necessary to correct the record, based on the question asked by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat yesterday. Hopefully, he'll avail himself of the information, which was sent to his party over a month ago.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I get to table on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-McCall a number of documents that were the basis for the opposition leader of the third party's questions today, the quotes from Mr. Conacher, the founder of Democracy Watch and professor now at the University of Toronto.

In addition, a CBC news article on the one-year anniversary and people's unhappiness with what's happening.

Finally, some information I believe based on the initial announcement by the government and followed up on by the media on the bitumen bubble not being the source of Alberta's financial pain.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horne, Minister of Health, response to Written Question 1, asked for by Mrs. Forsyth on November 26, 2012, "How many long-term care nursing beds were available to Albertans as of March 31, 2012?"; response to Written Question 2, asked for by Mrs. Forsyth on November 26, 2012, "How many mental health beds and addiction beds on average were available to Albertans in 2011?"

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Drysdale, Minister of Infrastructure, response to Written Question 3, asked for by Dr. Swann on November 26, 2012, "What was the original 2007 estimate of construction costs and projected opening day for the South Campus Hospital in Calgary versus the actual cost on completion, and actual opening date?"

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, there were two points of order today, the first of which was brought forward by the Member for Airdrie. The hon. deputy House leader for the Wildrose.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll endeavour to be brief. I rise today under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). This is with respect to some comments that were made by the Premier. In her statements the Premier indicated that the Wildrose financial recovery plan somehow increased spending at inflation plus population growth. I think this is, you know, an ongoing situation. If you continue to make outright false assertions, people won't believe a word you say. We see this in the polls, where the trust factors are way, way down. This has to stop.

I know the Premier may not have read our financial recovery plan. What we did in our plan was ensure that in two years' time, given how badly this province has been managed, we would be back in the black. What the Premier should know in terms of our plan is that our cuts went to things like bonuses to health executives, cutting that, cutting MLA pay raises, cutting corporate subsidies, cutting the expensive add-ons for MLA offices like rooftop gardens, theatres. I'm guessing there's marble flooring as well.

Our plan is quite a bit different, Mr. Speaker. I just would like to clarify on the record that her statement is false, and maybe we can send her a copy of our plan if she would like that.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, when the point of order was raised, I recall there being shouts of derision in the House, quite appropriately, because once again this is not a point of order. This is the opposition trying to justify their platform and showing incredibly thin skin. There is no standing order that says that you can raise an objection every time somebody talks about the things that you've talked about in public.

The thing that's really incredible about this is that the hon. member talks about how their real cuts would be on these things and then goes on to list a number of a things which, if you added them all up and added a dollar, wouldn't fund half of the things that they've tried to spend it on. I think the number in the budget this year for the federal building renovations is something like $20 million. They keep talking about this building that's going to house luxury offices, and they wilfully neglect to add that it's going to house all sorts of civil servants coming out of the Terrace Building and the LAO offices coming out of the Annex. They keep talking about it as though they could spend $375 million when there's only $20 million in the budget, which, if they were to cancel the project, they wouldn't be able to spend because the cancellation costs would probably be twice that. This is the problem when they're using points of order to try and clarify something which cannot possibly be either clarified or considered good public policy.

Nonetheless, the standing orders are not the place to raise it. The place to raise it is the debate. They can try and justify that out on the streets if they want. They can add it to their speeches in the House if they want. The fact of the matter is that it's quite ludicrous that they think they could prioritize the budget and finance all of the things they think they should cut out of the budget with the numbers that they're using. It's ludicrous. But the point is that it's not a point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would agree that it's not a point of order, but let me make a couple of brief comments. I've gone through the Hansard Blues, and here's what got said. I'm going to use this to some effect, I hope. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition stood up and in her question said, amongst other things, the following: "If the government cut its wasteful spending on things like layers of managers managing managers, on things like corporate welfare, it could pay cash for core government responsibilities," and it goes on.

That gave rise to the Premier then standing and saying, among other things, the following: "On budget day we kept spending to zero whereas the opposition suggested that spending should increase to population plus inflation. On top of that, we've enhanced savings, saving $24 billion," and then interjections will show in the record of Hansard as having occurred. Subsequent to that, we had the point of order raised by the Member for Airdrie.

Now, it's not infrequent in this House for positions to be misunderstood or misinterpreted, perhaps even misused by one person against another or one caucus against another or however it goes, so let me just remind you of what I reminded you of yesterday in this regard: page 510, second paragraph of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, which I won't read again, and Beauchesne's 494, both of which talk about receiving two different variants of a fact and so on. In particular, though, with regard to 510 House of Commons it did say this, and I want to mention this one quickly. "These matters" such as the one we've just been hearing about here now "are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules."

Now, points of order, as we have all experienced in the past and in this past year in particular, are not an opportunity as such to get up and disagree with someone else on a position or some procedure that is commenting on a position. What it is is a time for you to stand up and raise a point of order because a rule of this House has been violated or some guideline given in some other parliamentary practice book has been violated, has been breached. That's what points of order are all about. They should never be used as a reason or an excuse or an opportunity to extend or promote further debate on a point, and they should only be used to address violations such as I've just mentioned.

Again, we've just passed our first-year anniversary. None of us are rookies anymore. You've heard me speak to this before. You've probably read Hansard from the past of previous Speaker's rulings in this regard. And I know you've all paid strict attention to the parliamentary practices that have been mentioned in those comments.

Let's note that and move on to our second point of order, which was raised by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: I thought the Government House Leader actually rose on a point of order during the debate.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I distinctly remember you standing.

Mr. Saskiw: I'll withdraw it.

The Speaker: You'll withdraw it. Okay. Thank you.

That second point of order has been withdrawn, and we can move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Appropriation Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013.

This act will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government for the 2013-14 fiscal year. The schedule to the act provides amounts that were presented in greater detail in the 2013-14 government and Legislative Assembly estimates tabled on March 7, 2013. These were since debated in Committee of Supply and legislative policy committees over the past several weeks.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question that Budget 2013 is one of the toughest budgets this government has seen in some time. When we prepared this budget, we did so knowing that we had some serious and immediate fiscal challenges to address. Namely, we were facing a $6 billion shortfall of revenue due to low energy prices as well as the even lower price that Alberta producers are getting for their product.

Forecasting at its best is an inexact science. We rely on the knowledge and expertise of experts in both the public and the private sector to arrive at our own forecast. Traditionally, if our forecast turns out to be too high, we're accused of padding the forecast. If it's lower, we're accused of lowballing it. I heard a member's statement today in this House talking about the fact that, well, we must have made a sham instead of using what industry has, yet in today's papers there are three or four different companies that are talking about the fact that this bitumen bubble has affected their earnings this year and will next year.

In Budget 2013 we arrived at a forecast for oil of $92.50 a barrel with the differential estimated to be at 27 per cent. The one thing that we know we can predict with some certainty is that energy prices will continue to be volatile. We see proof of that volatility now when we look at the differential, the discount Alberta producers get for bitumen. We've seen this in the months leading up to the budget, when Alberta was getting about $30 less for its bitumen. Today the discount sits at around $17.50.

The smaller discount is good news for Alberta, but it's not something we can bank on. As quickly as we saw prices recover, we know they can fall again just as quickly. We need to take action now to deal with this reality. I know that the Premier, in response to one of the questions, was talking about the Cenovus executive who was talking about how that differential is quite likely to spread to $40 in the second half of this year.

That's why, Mr. Speaker, responsible change is the theme of Budget 2013. This government is open to changing the way we do things to ensure this province continues to meet the high expectations of Albertans. As Alberta grows and evolves, we find ourselves at a pivotal moment in time. Budget 2013 represents the responsible change that's required, change that Albertans have been asking for and that this government is committed to deliver.

Mr. Speaker, this budget builds on the work of Budget 2012. It addresses the immediate fiscal challenges we're facing today, and it sets the stage for creating the Alberta we need to be 20 years down the road. Through this budget we're focusing on three priorities. One is building Alberta by investing in families and communities, including the new roads, schools, and health facilities that we need. Two is living within our means by challenging every dollar government spends and making sure that every program continues to deliver real results for Albertans.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition tabled a newspaper article written by Jack Mintz to support her claim that Dr. Mintz says that we shouldn't be borrowing. Well, I had an interview with Dr. Mintz some time ago, when I was doing the budget consultations. One of his quotes is: debt is not wrong to use for capital – in fact, it could be an opportunity for the pension plans to become involved – as long as we learn to live within our means.

Mr. Speaker, the number two theme of this budget is living within our means. The other piece that Dr. Mintz said was: yes, we want to do a sales tax, a consumption tax, and it'll be revenue neutral. How many taxes has this House seen that were revenue neutral? I haven't seen too many of them. It would mean increased revenues for this province. A consumption tax is not something that is included in this budget.

The third thing that was part of this analysis was that we have to work to ensure that our resources get to market, including new markets in Canada and around the world, so we can get the highest possible price for our products.

Budget 2013 is the right budget for right now. It's also the right budget for tomorrow as we prepare for a future when a larger number of Albertans will be expecting the same high quality of life they're enjoying here in our province today. This budget is maintaining Alberta's low tax advantage. It neither increases taxes nor introduces new ones.

Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker. Before we look into the pocketbooks of Albertans, we are looking at ourselves first. That's why we're reviewing every government program and service through the results-based budgeting process. We'll be sure that Albertans are receiving value for their tax dollars and the government is delivering the outcomes Albertans expect as effectively and as efficiently as possible. That's why this budget provides no increases for public-sector compensation.

Government has shown leadership on this issue. In February we introduced a three-year wage freeze for all government managers and opted out and excluded employees. We're planning to reduce the size of management by 10 per cent over the same three years. That's almost 500 positions, Mr. Speaker. We'll ensure that the right people in the right positions are doing the right work. In March we came to a tentative agreement with the Alberta Teachers' Association that will see the wages for nearly 40,000 Alberta teachers frozen for three years. This week we finalized an agreement with Alberta's physicians that also includes zero wage increases for the first three years of that agreement.

As we hold the line on spending, we will continue to support the core programs and services. The budget delivers on the Premier's commitment to invest in what Albertans have told us matters most, like savings and priority services like health care and education, and ultimately reducing our reliance on nonrenewable resource revenues.

Budget 2013 invests $17 billion in health care. That's a $500 million increase from last year. It provides $500 million towards 50 new schools and 70 school modernizations. This budget holds the line on increased funding for programs that support vulnerable Albertans, including AISH, persons with disabilities, homelessness programs, and child intervention programs. It includes postsecondary capital funding of nearly $500 million over the next three years and municipal sustainability initiative funding of nearly $900 million this fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2013 delivers responsible change in part by bringing structural change to our actual physical framework. This change creates three plans instead of one. There seems to have been some confusion about that. That actually allows this government to be even more transparent and accountable to Albertans. We've had some good debate in the House around that.

The budget includes an operational plan that includes a zero per cent increase in spending, not an easy accomplishment when over the past 10 years the average increase in spending has been 7.3 per cent. This budget also includes a legislated savings plan that ensures that we save during good times and challenging times. Under this plan we will set aside a portion of nonrenewable resource revenue and replenish the savings in our contingency account while also growing the province's longer term savings vehicles, including the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. We will see our savings grow to over $24 billion, as the Premier said in question period today, over the next three years, all part of the plan to build Alberta.

Finally, Budget 2013 includes a fully funded capital plan that will ensure we have the public infrastructure Albertans need today and in 20 years from now. Like with savings, we need to invest in infrastructure in both good times and in challenging times. Public infrastructure is a priority and essential to our long-term economic success.

Our capital plan is supported by a responsible borrowing strategy to finance infrastructure projects, something that the financial experts, including Jack Mintz, business leaders, and other Albertans, have told us makes good financial sense. Even a recent survey, the one survey that the opposition continues to throw out there – it's not a very scientific one, but I'm going to use a piece of it, too, Mr. Speaker – showed that close to 60 per cent of the respondents said that borrowing for capital projects like my school and my hospital was a good idea.

The plan also includes concrete, legislated steps to ensure our debt does not get out of control. It limits how much the government can borrow by placing a limit on its debt-servicing costs, and it includes a debt repayment plan in which the government will set aside money each year in a capital debt repayment account, as evidenced in our documents presented in this House.

Mr. Speaker, as we move forward into the future, the budget builds on the best of what Alberta has today: our healthy economy, a solid global reputation, and a public service that is committed to delivering the value Albertans expect. At the same time Budget 2013 also brings responsible change, ensuring that this province continues to succeed in the future and is prepared to meet the needs of a new generation years from now.

Mr. Speaker, I am very excited about the future of this province. I am very excited about the future of the Alberta of tomorrow, 20 years from now. This budget, this plan, is the fundamental basis on which we will achieve that. I ask for all members' support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to get the opportunity in third reading to get up and speak to Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013. For those fans that are joining us in the gallery, thank you so much for coming. I hope you find this interesting. Third reading is the stage of reading for a bill in which we discuss the expected or anticipated effects of the bill once it passes. If you know all this already, please forgive me.

We're dealing with Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013, which gives final permission for the budget that's been presented by the government. Now, I had made quite a big deal over the fact that I was very unhappy with the budget process in Committee of Supply, which wasn't in Committee of Supply. It was in the legislative policy committees. Despite having negotiated successfully for more hours to be spent on the larger ministries or more complex ministries, given a severe failure of understanding we in the opposition, in fact, got less time in that additional time that we negotiated. The preponderance of time was allocated to government backbenchers. I continue to be puzzled why government backbenchers need to get public time to question their own caucus members. Evidently you don't talk to each other, so you need to do it on public time. I still don't agree with that, but that's the way it is.

I'm going to use this time to put on the record some of the concerns that my constituents have raised with me that were in budget debates that I wasn't able to attend either because I was in another one at the same time or I was preparing for another one at the same time.

I know that the minister for aboriginal affairs has been working very diligently. In fact, we have a bill in front of us now – I think it's Bill 19 – around additional understandings with Métis settlements, and I know that they're looking at clarifying additional legislation for some of our First Nations. What I still don't see are programs that are dealing much more specifically with urban aboriginal people. They tend to get disenfranchised. They get punted from here to here. They're not on the reservation; therefore, the federal government doesn't want to cover their programs and services. The province doesn't want to pick it up, or if they do, they want the organization that's delivered the service to go and get payment back from the band council. Can you imagine sitting in a band council office waiting to get paid back for, you know, services you offered like battered women's shelter services? That would take a while.

We just have not moved into the 21st century. We're not dealing with what we actually have in front of us. In fact, what I see is that where people from urban aboriginal communities end up in high-risk situations, the city ends up picking up the tab because it's their city, and they're not going to let people die on their streets or, you know, go cold or hungry. So the city steps in. I don't know how we managed to download from the federal government through the provincial government to the city, but that's what's happening, and it should be dealt with. I know the minister is working on a lot of stuff. I'm just going to put that one back on his plate because it needs to be dealt with.

The next issue. I don't know why this happens. It happened before my time. We have an interesting situation in our standing orders whereby the accounts from the Legislative Assembly Office, which cover things like the cost of Hansard, the library services, the human resource and financial assistance that's given to the constituency offices to process their expenses and human resource obligations – it also covers all of the committees that we do. It pays for the clerks, Parliamentary Counsel, that sort of thing. I have never figured out why you don't get to debate those budgets. The answer that I have been given is that each committee passes their own budget, and once the committee has passed the budget, well, there it is. That's all you need. Bundle them all up together, put them in a document, and put it in front of the Assembly.

That officially is the first vote that we do when we're voting on the main estimates, but we don't get to debate it, and we don't really get to examine it. There's not an in-depth opportunity to examine what exactly that money is. It's just a curiosity to me that we don't actually get to look at that and understand how much is paid for what and why and whom. I just thought I'd put that on the record. I do get asked about it occasionally, and I duly go through the story that, you know, supposedly these committees have okayed all of this. But it still strikes me as curious.

Culture. That was one of the committees where I got to participate in the debate, so I won't spend a lot of time on this, but I just have to put this on the record because there are so many new people involved in the Assembly at this point. Please remember that the funding originally for Culture was 100 per cent tax dollars, but those dollars started to get scarcer in the very early 1980s. To augment what they were trying to do and the legacy they were upholding at the time, which was coming from Premier Lougheed, the staff managed to finagle some of the lottery money that was coming in and get it assigned to their department to augment what was being done there. Over a period of time the tax dollars for Culture were withdrawn more and more and more, and increasing numbers of gambling dollars replaced them until finally all of the activities were in fact funded by lottery dollars.

Now, that connects really closely to lottery dollars. They're not a big deal right now. Nobody seems particularly exercised about the fact that $1.485 billion that this government raises and uses comes from gambling in this province. The biggest addict to gambling is the government because that's now an integral part of how they do their budgeting. They depend on that money coming in, so they've got to have it. They've got to encourage a certain level of gambling to continue in this province because they need that money.

Interesting things have happened over time with how the lottery money is accounted for. In my time it used to come out originally as a separate document. You had the general revenue fund, and you had the lottery revenue fund. It showed, you know, the money that came in through ticket sales, through – I think it's just the two things. It's ticket sales, and then the big monster blow-up of revenue was the VLTs. Now we have the slot machines. That was the really big bounce.

It was always that $200,000, $300,000 was the revenue from the lottery-based tickets like Lotto Max and Lotto 6/49 and Western whatever it is now. The money that the province actually made was at $200,000, $300,000, but then it jumped to over a billion when the VLTs came in and then the slot machines behind them. I always love the fact that the government explains this by saying that they had to get into the business of being the gambling operator because if they didn't do it, organized crime would, dot, dot, dot. Oh, my goodness. Sorry, Hansard; you can't actually get the laugh in there, but maybe you can write it in. You've got to love it. You've got to love it, really.

There was a to-do in the mid- to late '70s about VLTs. There were lots of stories about people that became addicted to the VLT revenues, that they gambled away everything: their family's house, the car, the kids' education, everything. They were devastated. People were not so keen about these VLTs. Some local municipalities voted to have them removed. Now, remember what I said at the beginning about the province really needing these gambling monies because they count on them? The province managed to drag everybody through the courts long enough that people forgot, and things got settled.

But the way they accounted for it at that point was that they needed to prove to people how important and integral the gambling money was to what this province is. So all of a sudden we started to get in every department's budget except a couple – I think it was 14 budgets. Right in the budget you would see "from the lottery fund," and then they would assign certain amounts of money to it. It was building a school. It was supporting an aboriginal initiative. In all of these departments they were accounting for use of lottery money and making it mean something.

At that point if people said, "Well, get rid of the VLT money; quit gambling, government," the government could say: "Really? You don't want that school? You don't want that program? But that's what it's paying for." I've got to admire it. It's pretty clever, and it worked. So people moved off the government as a gambling addict thing and have stayed off it. I mean, people have accepted gambling as a form of entertainment now although there's still always a hesitation about how it affects people who are problem gamblers and how it affects the rest of society, that has to pick up the pieces behind them.

We did have a department of gambling – I'm sorry; gaming – at one point. They called it gaming; I call it gambling. Gaming sounded more fun and not quite so insidious and dangerous. In that document you had all of the things they then decided to admit were being paid for out of the lottery fund, that were accounted for under the gambling – sorry; gaming – department, including all of the big foundations that money went out to, so another way of accounting for it.

This year, goldarn it, I can't find it. I ask: where's the lottery money? I know it's paying for things in Culture like the CFEP grant and the CIP grant. Where is it? Well, yes, they admit that's where the money is coming from, but they don't account for it in their budget anymore. Huh? Well, it's under Treasury. I look, and indeed it is. There it is, one little line, one line in Treasury showing that Treasury is transferring $1.485 billion from the lottery fund, coming from Treasury as largesse out to all of the ministries. There's a little trip down memory lane for you about how you can have different accounting practices for lottery money.

I want to raise again the concern that people have around adequate funding for K to 12 schools and reflect the number of letters and phone calls and walk-ins, e-mails, Twitters, Facebook postings from constituents. My schools are all working really hard and doing wonderfully, some of them against pretty significant and staggering odds. When you're working from what can be considered core city schools, you can be up against it. You may not have the support from parents, for example, that other communities do.

The staff do an exceptional job, and the staff raise a lot of the additional money that the schools have. My hat is off to them. I honour them every year with their very own special day towards the end of June. Funding education in the future is very important.

I want to talk about the concerns that seniors have and their previous rejection of the government's pharma-plan, which is moving from a universal plan, where everybody gets the same access no matter whether you're rich or poor, to one that now will have a line that says: above this you pay X, below this you pay less. As soon as the government gets into these ones that aren't universal, that have a line drawn, then we get into: well, what about the people that have $2 less? They are now paying full freight on this above or beyond that line. It just creates huge problems.

Yes, pharmaceuticals are not covered under the Canada Health Act. The government is not obliged to pay for them, but we really need to find a better way to pay for pharmaceuticals than charging seniors. Basically, we're charging the sick additional money because they need prescriptions. It just doesn't reflect a societal attitude that I really want to participate in in my province. You know, it's basically saying: "You're old. You're sick. Great. You pay more because you're using more." Again, it's a user-pay way of approaching health care – the sicker you are, the more you pay – that I just don't accept, but this government seems to be going in that direction. I'll put that on the record on behalf of my seniors.

It does disproportionately affect, once again, women because women tend to be the primary caregivers both professionally in the health care system and also as volunteer caregivers in the home or in the community. Because women live longer, they are primarily the people that are going to be those elderly, vulnerable, sicker seniors that will be caught in this and be struggling now to find money to pay a premium every month and then to pay a copay, or an additional pharmacy fee or however that's all going to be worked out, to get their prescription.

You know, I keep bringing this up, and the government goes: "Oh, yeah. Right. Yeah. Hmm." And then they do nothing about it. It definitely disproportionately affects women. That is the best argument for why we should have more women in this House because we'd have a better understanding of what's going on. In the meantime we don't have more women in this House, and we keep disproportionately affecting women's lives in the way the government decides to do things.

I am really frustrated and angry about this budget. It's not what we were told was coming either in the leadership contest from the Premier or in the election. Then we end up with this very strange sort of phantom bitumen bubble thing, which lasted, like, two and a half weeks before the price differential started to adjust itself back to familiar territory. As a result, we've had – I don't know whether to call it ideology or incompetence. You people need to talk to each other because there's a lot of chaos and slipping between the cracks and things undone and things not done that shouldn't be happening in a province with the resources and the technology that we have. We should be able to treat people better.

I believe we should be saving our nonrenewable resource revenue, and that means we're going to have to be levying a fair and progressive tax upon people so that we're not stealing from our children. Currently that's what we're doing. It's intergenerational theft because we are using their natural resources. We've already used the natural resources we could lay claim to and that our parents and our grandparents could have laid claim to because we managed to take that oil as it came out of the ground yesterday and spend it today in government programs and services. Thirty per cent of the operating budget is gathered from the oil and gas sector, particularly the oil sector.

You know, a long time ago I was told that either we're going to run out of oil and gas – it didn't seem that likely – or people are going to stop buying it from us. At the time I thought: yeah, right. But I've lived long enough that, actually, it is starting to look like the second thing is in play. It's in play today, where people are boycotting our oil or questioning us or questioning the possibility of a pipeline because they believe we are not environmentally rigorous enough and we're not taking the steps that they expect us to take.

What I get from this government is: "We're working on it. We're working on Ticketmaster and online scalping. We're working on the environment. We're working on health care." You know what? I'd like to see the product of your work occasionally because so far all I hear is that you're working on it and that you're in a committee and that you've got a strategy coming out, which just means you use more trees to publish more papers. We're not actually seeing the product of that.

You know, your performance measurements: you can't hit your targets. We're not reducing wait times in ERs. We're not managing to give people hip and knee surgeries fast enough. If people are truly in a disaster – a heart attack, a stroke, a car accident – and they get through into the ICU, it is amazing. The delivery of health care is amazing. Everyone talks about how terrific the staff are. But the administration of health care sucks, and it needs to be addressed. I'm sorry to use such brutal language, but frankly I can't find anything else that quite sums it up with the same amount of . . .

An Hon. Member: Spice.

Ms Blakeman: . . . spice.

An Hon. Member: Conviction.

Ms Blakeman: Conviction. Oh, thank you. I'm getting all kinds of help now.

Because it does. Your administration of health care has failed repeatedly. Now, somehow or another the front-line staff manage to pull it off for you. You should be terribly grateful to them for doing that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak today to third reading of Bill 20, the Appropriation Act, 2013. I'd like to begin, before I go into the details of this act and the budget that the government has put forward, just with some general comments on the fact that many Albertans are left scratching their heads, wondering why we've got a budget where there are significant cuts to some essential services and programs that many Albertans rely on, from seniors to postsecondary students to teachers and children in our classrooms to our community programs. Like I said, I'll go through it in a more detailed, line-by-line analysis in a moment here.

Many constituents have asked me as I've travelled around the province: why do we have such a recessionary-style budget, or, as my colleagues from the Wildrose call it, an austerity budget, when the economy is doing quite well, as we've heard and as we see? The government themselves have talked about the numbers. Our unemployment rate is fairly low. Our economy has recovered better than most jurisdictions across this country, yet there seems to be a lack of revenue in the government coffers to support and to even continue some of the most critical and basic services that many Albertans rely on. It begs the question, first of all: what is the breakdown of the spending that the government is doing with their current $40 billion? I believe all opposition parties have pointed time and time again to certain people in positions, often high-level executives, abusing not only their salaries but eligible expenses. Really, it comes down to this government allowing a mismanagement of the dollars that people work hard for and that this government collects.

You know, to start from the top, there needs to be a cleanup of the dollars that are being spent, some that are being misappropriated, that could be used toward programs, especially on-the-ground programs funding our front-line services. Unfortunately, it seems that those are the first folks to feel the cuts and the last ones to get the dollars restored. In order to fix this – the New Democrats have called it this broken-promises budget – it's shameful that the government will not look to address the side of revenue.

I mean, again, we have a budget that is heavily reliant on our fluctuating resources and the rates that they're going for as opposed to closing our corporate tax loopholes, raising it by a percentage or two, which would still keep Alberta competitive with our neighbours on either side.

As well, Alberta is the only province that has a shameful flat tax. When you look at how it breaks down, you actually have middle-income earners paying more than they would in neighbouring provinces where there is a progressive tax system. Then you have those folks like the Albertans earning $40,000 who are paying the same amount as the extremely wealthy Albertans earning $4 million. There's definitely something wrong with that, Mr. Speaker.

As well, something that the Alberta New Democrats have been saying for years is to upgrade and refine our raw bitumen, our product, here in the province, which would keep these quality long-term jobs in Alberta. Let's ship a more refined product, a finished product. Our neighbours all around us, including our neighbours in the United States, have learned this. In fact, I'm sure they snicker at the fact that we're shipping the lowest quality product, that we're wanting to ship it to them, so that they can upgrade it, get the value, the jobs, and then sell it at a much higher rate. It's unfortunate that this government is content to ship jobs and resources down the pipeline at the expense of Albertans and our future.

You know, Mr. Speaker, between increasing the upgrading capacity in this province, closing our loopholes, raising our corporate taxes by a very modest amount, and weaning Alberta off this flat tax, we would have more than enough revenues to save for the future, to diversify our economy further, to invest in green energy.

I mean, I'm not sure why we don't take advantage of the fact that Alberta gets more sunlight than any other jurisdiction, I know for sure, in Canada. I'm not sure about North America. But the fact of the matter is that there's a great amount of free energy that we should be harnessing, and it's shameful that we're going to wait Lord knows how long with this government in power. Clearly, it's been 42 years, and we're still waiting.

I think there are solutions to the revenue side, and it's unfortunate that the government is unwilling to look at that, you know, especially because it's reflected directly in this budget and in this appropriation bill. We've got municipalities that are frustrated, are crying out that there's crumbling infrastructure, whether we're talking about roads and bridges or hospitals and schools that are in desperate need of maintenance. Yet, again, something that's been a thing in the past and that this government enjoys to do is to just defer costs, either download them onto municipalities or: let's just defer them to the future; we don't have enough money for that. It's quite frustrating that they continue to kick the can forward. Well, what happens is that the infrastructure deteriorates further the more we delay. You've got issues of safety. You've got higher expenses when we eventually do get around to putting the dollars into the infrastructure that's sorely needed.

We're falling further and further behind. I mean, you look at many municipalities, and their infrastructure deficits are ballooning, yet the dollars that they're getting from this government aren't nearly enough. You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure you're aware that on every tax dollar municipalities get somewhere between 8 to 10 cents, yet they are the folks who provide the bulk of the services and programs that Albertans rely on on a day-to-day basis. Our system is quite skewed.

They don't have the dollars they need, and to top up some dollars that they get, the government is insistent on using this paternalistic grant-style lottery formula where municipalities have to compete with one another for dollars. They are unsustainable. They're random. They're not sure if they're going to get the same grants. They're not sure if they're going to be there the next year. You know, municipalities are saying that they need long-term, stable funding in order to have an appropriate strategy and a plan in place to build for the future, to be proactive and look at their needs, not just today, not just three years from now but six years, 10 years down the road so that Alberta is the best place to live in this country.

Although there is MSI funding, which I know many municipalities welcomed when it was introduced years ago, their frustration is that the dollars that were promised for MSI funding have not been delivered. I believe it was in this budget or this coming year that MSI was going to be increased, or the PCs promised MSI would go up to $1.05 billion. Unfortunately, it remains flat at $846 million. Now, that number isn't exactly true because we need to keep in mind inflation and population growth, which according to the Tory numbers is actually 4.3 per cent. When you look at that, holding the line is actually, in effect, a cut. So municipalities are quite frustrated that they're not getting the dollars that they were promised, which, again, seems to be a recurring theme for this government. They seem to love to promise the moon and the sun, yet they cannot deliver. Albertans are saying: "This is ridiculous. We are actually moving in the wrong direction."

I want to just work my way through a couple of the promises, to be a little more specific so that the members in this House are quite clear on what was promised and what was delivered and how contradictory the two are. First of all, the government promised to introduce an initiative to make Alberta the national leader in energy efficiency and sustainability. Well, unfortunately, they're nowhere near fulfilling this promise.

The Premier claimed that we'd be a world leader in climate change. You know, unfortunately, all that this government has done is continue to embark on PR campaigns to try to convince the world that what we're doing is quite environmentally sustainable and that we have clean methods of extracting our resources. Well, unfortunately, the government cannot and has not even met its own climate change targets let alone targets that were assigned by Canada. Years past Kyoto we are long past and miles away from meeting those targets. Even the government's greenhouse gas targets are well below those of our federal counterpart.

You know, it's frustrating that there are no supports, like I'd said, for building and upgrading more of our resources here in the province.

Something else that came through last fall was creating the single energy regulator. Well, many Albertans are really confused on how this isn't a conflict of interest, where you have a regulator that is a promoter of the oil and gas industry yet at the same time is supposed to be the police of the oil and gas industry. A complete conflict of interest there.

We look at health care. A promise of five years of stable funding for health care with increases of 4.5 per cent: broken promise. Introduction of a fast-track emergency room program to reduce wait times: broken promise. Access to mental health services or improving access to mental health services in the community: not even close. There was money that was promised to STARS ambulance, $10 million, and unfortunately they're not going to see it.

This budget, again, was riddled with promises on the one hand and failed to deliver on the other. I mean, in health care 1.5 per cent less was given than was expected. There is no money to hire more nurses, which are desperately needed, significant cuts to PDD funding, and the fact that this government still has not addressed the problem of a lack of ambulance services in rural Alberta areas.

For seniors, I mean, there was a promise to build a thousand more long-term care beds – now the seniors are going to be lucky to have 30 this year, just a slight difference from a thousand – as well as to enhance the capacity of long-term care. Well, you know, we saw this week that the Premier promised universal drug coverage for seniors, and now she's not only rescinded that promise; she's implementing a plan that's going to see $180 million cut from the seniors' drug benefit plan.

Seniors as well are getting slapped in the face by the increasing property taxes – this dubious deferral program is actually going to cost seniors more in the long term – and the fact that this government has reduced the eligibility for seniors' benefits, removing the WCB and CPP disability income exemptions, which is actually going to significantly hurt many seniors across this province and especially target those seniors who are injured or who have disabilities.

You know, in this budget we see cuts for climate change policy development. It does nothing to help Alberta reach its climate change objectives for greenhouse gas emissions. It still does not eliminate water markets in our province, and it cuts the operating budget for the climate change and emissions management fund down to zero. Unfortunately, this government, as opposed to being proactive and looking at taking these positive steps, continues its course of being reactionary and reactive and is investing heavily in carbon capture and storage as opposed to addressing the issue of cutting down on how much we produce, not finding a dark place to stow it away and pretend that it's not there anymore.

Regarding Treasury Board and Finance – and I've talked about this a little bit as well – I mean, this government still has not fixed its revenue problem or will not even look to addressing that, from closing corporate tax loopholes to raising corporate taxes to eliminating the flat tax. You know, we're not doing a good enough job.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is now available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't always agree – actually, I often disagree – with my parties to the left here, but I'm wondering what it is about the tax structure, the revenue structure that the member is particularly promoting here.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, and I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for that question. You know, really, we're promoting a three-pronged approach: first and foremost, raising our royalties to a competitive rate, competitive with other jurisdictions within North America; looking at investing in upgrading and refining more of our bitumen here in the province; then addressing the tax side, our flat-tax and corporate tax side. I want to thank the member for that.

In addition, continuing on this theme of broken promises, I know that Albertans are well aware that our education system was promised predictable, stable funding. That hasn't happened. There was promised full-day kindergarten. That was another broken promise. Many schools indicated before the budget came down that eliminating the AISI funding would significantly hurt many of the new programs, from literacy programs to new spaces and partnerships that schools were creating to help address the fact that today in Alberta we have a significant number of people moving to Alberta from other parts of the country, from other parts of the world.

We have many more English language learners in our classrooms than we did 50, 60 years ago, and if we want to ensure that we're giving every student an opportunity to succeed, we need to ensure that there is the appropriate level of funding in our classrooms and that teachers have the resources available to give students the attention that they need and deserve.

From there, I mean, we look at Human Services. It's riddled with cuts, the $42 million cut for community access supports for people with developmental disabilities, the elimination of the STEP program. That was something, Mr. Speaker, that I tried very hard to have reinstated. Organizations across the province wrote letters and e-mails talking about the impact, the real impact that the STEP program had not just on the students but on the organizations, the programs they offered, especially families and specifically low-income families who relied on summer programming in their communities for their kids. Now communities are scrambling and have indicated to me that they're going to have to cut some of their programs.

The Department of Culture. It's frustrating that that's the first place the Tories love to take the axe to. The community spirit grant: completely abolished. Many of those organizations used the STEP program. Now they're hit twice. The safe communities initiative fund, again, a proactive partnership program that was on the ground, community based, community driven: this government yanked it away. I mean, it seems that anytime a program is proactive in looking at being preventative and doing something positive, this government doesn't like it: no, let's go back to our reactionary, throw a Band-Aid on an issue approach as opposed to looking at addressing root causes.

So I just wanted to very briefly say that, you know, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that since the Premier took office, she's cut funding to the combined community spirit and other initiative grants by a total of 91 per cent. That's quite impressive. It went from $28.6 million in 2011-12 to just $2.7 million this year when we look at combined operational and capital spending. Clearly, it is not a priority for this Premier to invest in arts and culture in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude by saying that I cannot support this appropriation bill. I am very concerned about what these cuts mean not only to Albertans today but to future Albertans. It's important to note this government in their reluctance and refusal to address the revenue issue. We can't help but forecast recessionary-style budgets in the years to come, where organizations that are getting hit this year are going to be impacted again next year and the year after. As has been pointed out, the government is forecasting a $17 billion deficit within three years. My concern is not just with this budget today; it's with future budgets.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers? Did you want to speak to this?

Mr. McIver: Yes, please.

The Speaker: You are speaking to this motion?

Mr. McIver: Yes. I understand that I haven't got much time because at 4:15 something has to happen, so I'll try to be quick, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I just want to stand up and be on the record supporting this budget and what this government is doing. We're building Alberta. We're opening markets. We're putting infrastructure in place. We're doing the things that Albertans are asking us to do, and I want to stand up and thank the Premier for the leadership in keeping the promises, the President of Treasury Board for putting together a plan, and my colleagues for listening to Albertans and influencing the decisions made along the way, which at the end of the day are in the interest of Albertans.

Albertans have told us that they want schools now. They don't want to wait until their kids are 12 years old to start grade 1. They want them to be six years old to start grade 1. They're telling us that when their kids grow up, they want a transportation system that's going to get them around, that's going to provide jobs and opportunities for them. They want an education system that's going to put them in a position to take those jobs. This budget is doing those things.

I also want to say that – you know what? – Albertans are smart people. They know when they see this budget that where we've had to make cuts – and never when you make cuts is it pleasant. But we did our best to make sure that we share the joy in that area, if you would, Mr. Speaker, and actually prioritize where money does get spent on infrastructure and programs. These are the things that Albertans are after.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to support this, and I look forward to voting for it in a very short period of time, which I think I've squeezed out, between now and 4:15.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have about 30 seconds or less left. I wonder: does the Minister of Finance wish to close debate at this stage?

Mr. Horner: Let's call the question, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a third time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're at 4:16. I wonder if I should recognize the Government House Leader or the Deputy Government House Leader. Do you wish to proceed? We're proceeding onward, then.

Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice it's my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 16, the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, crime is a reality in our communities, which means that there are always victims of crime who need our help. This bill honours victims by easing their access to supports and benefits offered through the victims of crime fund and demonstrates once again the leadership of our Premier, our Minister of Justice, and this government with respect to ensuring that victims of crime receive the respect, compassion, and support that they deserve. These supports can be vital in helping victims of crime through their grieving and coping process.

As we heard during debate of this bill, this proposed legislation will give victims of crime more options in how to present their case to the Criminal Injuries Review Board and will strengthen the protection of confidential information. In addition, this bill holds criminals accountable for their actions by amending the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. As this House is aware, this particular act provides the resources necessary for Alberta's civil forfeiture office to seize the proceeds of crime. These proceeds are then used to support a number of programs and services, including those for victims of crime.

Specifically, Bill 16 closes some unintended loopholes by ensuring that defendants cannot initiate countless baseless legal delays. At the same time, the legislation ensures that defendants of forfeiture action have plenty of time to initiate their defence before any confiscation occurs.

The remaining change noted in the legislation clarifies what is considered proceeds of crime. If $10,000 in cash or goods easily liquidated into cash is found during a police investigation, it will be assumed to be the result of criminal activity, and it may be confiscated so long as there is no sign of legitimate business activity.

I know of the concerns about the proposed legislation. I know one of the concerns is balancing the individual's civil liberties when it comes to seizing their property. Mr. Speaker, this bill was drafted to protect victims' rights while balancing an individual's civil liberties when it comes to the seizure of goods gained from criminal activities. The legislation is about ensuring that justice is served.

I thank all the members in this House for their positive feedback and support of this bill. I'm confident that it will make a positive impact in the lives of victims of crime and ensure that they receive the support they need to return their lives to normal as quickly possible.

Thank you.

Mr. Saskiw: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 16 on third reading. It's the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, which amends two pieces of legislation, the Victims of Crime Act and the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. Of course, this is a piece of legislation that will put a dent in organized crime and allow some of the enforcement officers increased abilities due to amendments to the administrative process. We've seen with this Justice minister that he's come up consistently with a progressive, soft-on-crime approach. It's nice to see that he's thrown a bone to the conservative part of the Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to thank the minister for putting forward this piece of legislation, which will again allow for a cleaned up administrative process by limiting extensions that individuals had previously provided. As well, essentially it provides for a simplified review process of the decisions made by the director in charge of carrying out the duties under the act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to be able to rise and speak to this very complex bill. You know, I just want to say that first and foremost this government should be investing in more courtrooms and in the courtroom process where there is due process. We have a system. We need to ensure that we have enough judges in courtrooms to process, to ensure that everyone is entitled to a fair trial. Albertans should not be guilty before proven innocent.

My concern, first of all, is that this PC government in this budget is closing six courtrooms. I mean, that really goes counter to, I think, the essence of what they're trying to do in this bill. Instead of investing in more courtroom infrastructure, which would address the court delays, again, this government is closing six courtrooms and enacting this legislation, which replaces a presumptive legal process with a presumptive administrative process. Such changes by definition are not wrong, but it should be handled with a great level of sobriety and care.

One of my concerns, first of all, is the amount of time that members in this House have had to speak on this bill. It feels like it's been extremely limited.

You know, we need to ensure that there is due process. Our courts function the way they do to ensure that we're not misjudging individuals and that their rights as Albertans, as Canadians are protected and that they're not judged before they're entitled to go through the court system.

It gives me great concern that this bill wants to replace the legal system with more of an administrative system. I mean, Mr. Speaker, in our legal system there's access to counsel. On the administrative side what this bill would do: there's no right to legal counsel. We've got rules, but we're not sure how they're going to be enforced or how well they're going to be enforced if we're under an administrative model as opposed to being under a legal model.

Mr. Speaker, if I can speak on behalf of myself and the Alberta NDP, we would prefer that we have more resources in victim services, that we work on providing and opening up more courtrooms, and look at ensuring that Albertans have the right to court, not create legislation where a person's rights might be trampled because they no longer have access to due process.

You know, there are a couple of other concerns that we have, Mr. Speaker. The wording changes from a reasonable time when the crime occurred to a reasonable time from the date the applicant knew or ought to have known that a criminal offence occurred. You know, I think that's positive, on the one hand, yet at the same time I'm not sure what a reasonable time is. That is, again, very ambiguous, which makes it difficult to support that point. I think, honestly, that what we need to do is fix the problem that we have, not allow a way to offload due process and the legal process by dealing with these through administrative measures.

Questions that I have. It talks about that seized property "may be disposed of without the Minister having to commence a legal action." Questions about Albertans who either have no permanent address or are homeless or transient: I'm not sure how this is going to affect them. Another concern. If an individual does not file a notice of objection, they are "deemed to admit the facts asserted in the notice" of a disposition.

Ms Blakeman: Which is negative billing.

Mr. Bilous: Which is negative billing. Thank you, Member for Edmonton-Centre.

I mean, simply, it's just not right that if the person in question is out of the province – the fact is that we're saying that silence means consent, not that we need to find out what the person means. If anything, now we're silencing people even further. Folks who either don't know or are unaware: the system is now working against them as opposed to ensuring that Albertans have the right to legal counsel, to the court system. You know, I don't doubt that our court system is heavily bogged down at the moment, but let's address the problem. Let's open up more courtrooms. Let's bring in more judges. Let's ensure that Albertans' rights are protected and that they have access to this due process.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the other reality of looking at the legal side as opposed to the administrative side is that there is the neutrality of a judge, and we rely on judges to be impartial when they're making decisions and enforcing natural justice as opposed to going through an administrative body. If I recall correctly, in this bill the review board can function with one member. I'm a little confused as well because the bill says: member or members. That implies that really a review board could be one person. Well, that's quite a concern, that you have one individual who is making decisions. Again, they are not a judge. They are not impartial. This is not going through a legal framework.

Mr. Speaker, we, myself and the Alberta NDP, are very much in favour of ensuring that victims are compensated, that we strengthen legislation for victims and look at doing what we can to prevent crime, that criminals are given their due process, that there is a court system. They have rights, but we need to ensure that we're protecting our victims and ensuring that the law is respected and is served.

It's with great trepidation, Mr. Speaker, that we're still considering supporting this bill. Again, the intent I think is noble. We're behind that. But the process and what this bill wants to do very much puts individuals' rights possibly in jeopardy. We want to ensure that all Albertans are respected and have the proper channels.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

Mr. Hancock: If I can get it in before the clock, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on May 6.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:29 p.m. to Monday, May 6, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 1st Session (2012-2013)

Activity to April 25, 2013

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, May 6, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members and guests, let us pray. On this beautiful day let us be reminded of the freshness that comes with spring: the birth of new buds on trees, the sprouting of beautiful plants and foliage, and the reappearance of beautiful flowers that enhance our province from border to border to border to border. Let us also be reminded to take time to stop and smell those beautiful flowers. Amen.

Now, please remain standing as we listen carefully to one of Alberta's rising young stars, who is going to sing for us O Canada, our national anthem. Welcome Alexandra Brigley all the way from Coronation.

Miss Brigley:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, Alexandra. [applause]

Thank you, members.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: School groups first, beginning with the Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some wonderful students from St. Vincent elementary school located in my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. They are seated in the public gallery. I had the opportunity to visit their classroom, and their questions were absolutely excellent. They're visiting with their teacher, Lori Lundeen, and parent helpers Joan Hertz, Cathy Kreutz, and Joanne Slugoski. I would ask that they all rise now so that they can receive the warm welcome of the entire Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 25 of Clara Tyner elementary school's best and brightest grade 6 students along with teacher Sandi James and parent helpers Jackie Kanash, who knows my sister-in-law well; Carol Lamont; Lynda Lauman; Isabel MacBeth; Bryan Wigger; and Minerva De Tio, from my constituency, of course, Edmonton-Gold Bar. I'm pleased that they are able to be here today. They're currently studying active citizenship in their social studies class. As part of that program they've also raised money for the Stollery children's hospital and made sandwiches at the Mustard Seed. I would ask that the students, parents, and teacher now rise and receive the warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, I have some friends here today. If they could please rise. Diane Llewelyn-Jones is from Taber, and she is writing a screenplay for a movie on the Famous Five. She is here along with three dear friends: Rob, Terra, and Michael Hodgins, who were with me almost every day from January 1 until April 23 last spring. Please receive the welcome of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of grade 6 students from Windsor Park school. They're here as part of the School at the Legislature program. Here today are 21 students; their teacher, Mr. Lucas McCaw; and one parent helper, Dr. Deepali Humar. They're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that my guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups?

Seeing none, let's proceed onward with guests. The Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a particular honour today. Number one, I'm doing my introduction on behalf of our Minister of Municipal Affairs. Sitting in your gallery is a young lady whom we have just heard sing a rendition of O Canada. Alexandra Brigley is a grade 9 student at Coronation school and, as you know, is a very, very talented young lady. She began formal music lessons in piano and singing when she started school and looks forward to competing in local and provincial festivals each spring. Alexandra's long-term goals are to perform in live theatre and also to teach music. Isn't that wonderful? She is accompanied today by what I would imagine are very, very proud parents, Dale and Brenda Brigley; and also Nick and Joe, who are her siblings; and, finally, some other relatives: Brian Heidecker, who has been involved with the U of A for some 30 years, including serving on the university's board of governors and even serving as a board chair; Shelley Heidecker; and Donna Bagdan. I'd now ask all of them to rise and receive our welcome. Thank you for the singing.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on the first of two introductions I have today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly no stranger to us, Mr. Doug Brinson. He's accompanied today by his wife of 42 years, Sharon. Doug, in addition to being one of the nicest guys in the building, is retiring after more than 15 years spent keeping this House and us safe as a member of the legislative security staff and, of course, as a sheriff. Before joining us here, he was a 30-year veteran of the RCMP.

Doug, I particularly want to say thank you on behalf of the government for your service to us every day. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two special constituents of mine who have travelled to Edmonton today to watch question period, my daughter Jodie and my oldest granddaughter, Tory Johnson. They are seated in the members' gallery. My daughter has helped me very much over the last six or seven years along the way. She normally sits at home and watches QP on TV, so she was glad to be able to watch it here today. I would now ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents of mine, Carl and Eileen Christensen. They are both former teachers and reside near the booming metropolis of St. Lina. They are proud home-schooling parents of four children and, at least from the reports I hear, are particularly proud of their youngest daughter. Carl is the Wildrose constituency association president for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I appreciate everything he does and his wife for allowing him to do it. I would ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you my son, Ethan Notley. Ethan has been to the Legislature before but never to watch question period in person. He has however watched fairly regularly on TV, and he has indicated that I can pass on a couple of his observations. While he is now and always will be a member of the NDP, he admits to having a bit of sympathy for certain members of the government front bench. In particular, he says that he's quite aware of what a pain it can be to be lectured by me and suggests that if any members of the front bench are feeling particularly hard done by, they should simply revel in the fact that at least for them, unlike him, it's not a daily experience. I would ask that Ethan stand and that all members of this Assembly join me in giving him our traditional warm welcome.

Now, the reason Ethan is here today is mostly to give support to his very good friend Erik Heise, the next person I'm pleased to introduce. Erik is in grade 8 and has been enrolled in the Edmonton public school board's music enrichment program since grade 5, learning to play the cello. When Erik heard the news that the 50-year-old program would be eliminated due to a lack of provincial funding, Erik's very precise comment was: this is my hockey team; why are they taking that away from me?

With Erik today is his mother, Kari Heise. Kari teaches music, and she also sings in the renowned Eucharistic choir. Kari is here in support of Erik and to reinforce the fact that music education does not just create musicians; it also supports and significantly improves the overall education and success of students who are beneficiaries of a music education. She is frustrated that a government which promised to build our K to 12 education is instead making cuts that are causing the demise of a 50-year-old music program serving over 600 children in Edmonton. I would now ask both Erik and Kari to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Heather Workman. Heather is concerned that victims of domestic violence experience further victimization owing to a lack of support systems, which, in turn, leads to long-term health, social, legal, and financial problems. She is here to advocate for discussions on how support systems for victims of domestic violence can be improved. I'll be tabling today on Heather's behalf an article on Chief Justice Beverley McLachlin's call for restructuring the family law system. I will also be tabling the Action Committee on Access to Justice in Civil and Family Matters April 2013 report on the problems with family justice. I would ask Ms Workman to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly guests here in recognition of the 50th anniversary of Balwin Community League, which will be celebrated with the greater community on June 22, 2013, in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore. These guests give selflessly and fully to their community league to ensure that their goals and programs make a lasting difference to all. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they please rise and remain standing as I mention their names: Mrs. Cynthia Lenders, president of Balwin Community League and avid volunteer to the league's board; Mr. Graham Harbak, past president and maintenance director; Mr. Rick Chaulk, past president, who served eight years; Ms Marianne Ethier, treasurer and past area council 2 representative; Mrs. Joyce Krachkowski, social director and past ladies auxiliary codirector. Ms Terra Harel couldn't be with us today, but she serves as the special events director.

Congratulations and heartfelt best wishes to these outstanding volunteers of Balwin Community League. I would now ask that we give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two ladies who are here today on behalf of the Alberta Caregivers Association: Ms Anna Mann, the executive director of the Alberta Caregivers Association, and Joan Bowes, who sits on the board of directors for the Alberta Caregivers Association. It's no secret that these individuals and their association have worked closely with me on the development of my compassionate care leave bill. I'm also pleased to recognize and raise awareness in the House that it's Family Caregiver Week in Alberta. There are 4 million to 5 million caregivers in Canada, with 170,000 of them living right here in Edmonton. I'd ask that my two guests, seated in the members' gallery today, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: You have a second introduction. Proceed.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two young gentlemen who sat down with many elected officials over the last week, including me. I have a fond spot in my heart for young, talented doctors, so when these two gentlemen introduced themselves to me, I couldn't help but invite them to see us all in action. Dr. William Wei Han is a second-year family medicine resident from Edmonton, and Dr. Chris Fung is a third-year radiologist and nuclear science resident also from Edmonton. These two residents are also very strong advocates for caregivers in Alberta, know a lot more about medicine than I could even fathom, and it's an absolute pleasure to introduce them today. I'd ask that my two guests rise.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, followed by the Minister of Education.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a second introduction. I wanted to also introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Doug's daughter Cindy McMullen and her son Britton McMullen. Britton is a source of pride and joy to the family, and like his grandfather, he's demonstrated that courage runs in his family as Britton has faced and fought a difficult battle with cancer. We pray that he enjoys a very long, happy, and healthy future. I'd ask both him and his mother to please rise and enjoy the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a constituent of mine, Mr. Dan Dennis, and four visitors that he has with him here from Brazil. Dan is the youth exchange co-ordinator for the Rotary Club of Athabasca and has been hosting Rui Brasil Neto, a student from Brazil participating in the program. Rui arrived in Athabasca in August and has been attending high school at Edwin Parr, just down the street from my house. During his time in Canada he'll be staying with four different families, including Dan and including my constituency office manager, Dawn Minns. His family from Brazil is with him here this week; that is, his father, Rui Brasil Jr., a doctor in Brazil; his mother, Iza Brasil, who is an orthodontist; and his younger sister Bea. When he returns to Brazil, he plans to begin studies to become a doctor just like his father, and then he wants to return to Alberta, which we would welcome. It's a pleasure to have them here, and I'd ask them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you an outstanding citizen and a constituent of mine. Mr. Sukhdarshan Singh Pannu is a passionate volunteer. He volunteers his time as a dedicated, tireless coach for the Edmonton Eagles Field Hockey Club and has led his team to five silver medals as well as a gold medal in the league tournament. His efforts go beyond field hockey. He is a tireless activist working as a fundraiser for the Salvation Army, the Heart and Stroke Foundation, the Canadian Red Cross, the University Hospital Foundation, the Sikh Federation of Edmonton, and many others. He was the recipient last week of the Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton award for sports and leisure. On top of all that, he volunteers on my PC association board. He's joined here today by his wife and his nephew Harpreet Singh Sandhu, the editor-in-chief of Asian Times, a community newspaper. At this time I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Speaker's Ruling Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go on with question period, could I ask you once again to please tighten up your introduction of guests. We just barely made it today, and we didn't have that many guests to introduce. There are some jurisdictions, as you may know, that only allow a total of five minutes – total – for guest intros to be done. So bear that in mind.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

School Infrastructure Funding

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose 10-year debt-free capital plan calls for the building of a hundred schools and renovating 60 others. It would do so without saddling future generations with $17 billion worth of debt, like the government will. I mention this because the Premier, when she made her school funding announcements in front of elementary school students, got it all wrong. But now that I've explained the Wildrose debt-free capital plan to her again, will she stop acting like Pinocchio and tell the kids the truth about it instead of the made up scary tales that she told them last week?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Leader of the Opposition is prepared to provide some information to Albertans, but that's exactly the point of actually announcing real infrastructure plans such as we did last week. I recall two weeks ago – perhaps it was three weeks ago – when we were at my estimates, the Leader of the Opposition randomly threw out that the reason they would be able to build infrastructure is because they would, quote, reprioritize $4 billion in spending this year. So it's easy to say that you can promise one thing on one hand and not promise something on the other. We have a plan to build schools, and we'll continue to do that.

Ms Smith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We would start with the patronage and corporate welfare this government likes to hand out.

When the Premier, though, was scaring the kids with her bedtime stories last week about the Wildrose, she neglected to tell them about her back-in-debt budget and the $17 billion worth of debt that she is borrowing on their behalf. Why didn't she tell the kids about that?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's a wonderful opportunity to review the fact that a year ago Albertans made a choice between looking to the future, investing in infrastructure, understanding that it's worth creating 18,000 new spaces for kids as opposed to the build-nothing approach that we see from the opposition. It's not what Albertans chose a year ago, and it's not what they want today.

Ms Smith: Well, I certainly don't remember the Premier campaigning on going into debt, Mr. Speaker.

The Premier also didn't mention the really scary part. When those school kids just start to get themselves established 20 years from now, the entire $17 billion worth of principal amount is going to be due, but the government isn't planning to set aside anywhere near enough money to pay it back. Why didn't she tell the kids that they're going to be on the hook for all of it?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we see in this Legislature every day is the Leader of the Opposition who should be concerned about her nose growing.

It has been very clear that we have put in place a fiscal plan that ensures that we are dealing with infrastructure, going to capital markets that invest in the long term, and ensures that this province can continue to grow, and that's what we're committed to.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Still didn't campaign on going into debt, Mr. Speaker.

Political Party Donations

Ms Smith: Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a big problem with Alberta's election financing laws. The Chief Electoral Officer verified that the PC Party was indeed given a single $430,000 bank draft for a huge donation, but the electoral office said it was okay because of what appears to be a new category of political contributions available to large, powerful organizations. It's called a bulk donation. This ruling has opened the door for the kind of self-serving political action committees like they have in the U.S. Why does the Premier continue to support a law that has the potential for such abuse?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we said when the opposition raised this last year, the most important thing that we could do was get the facts on the table and get a decision from the Chief Electoral Officer. We have had that decision. It has clearly ensured that what has been put in place is entirely appropriate.

I might suggest from the other perspective that this party should be very careful about suggesting that anything like that isn't appropriate since we certainly know that they have participated in exactly the same form of fundraising, and we wouldn't accuse them of doing anything wrong either.

Ms Smith: I can assure this Assembly we have never received a single $430,000 cheque.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans need to trust that the election process is clean, fair, and democratic, and they are right to be concerned about what is going to happen in the next election if a large corporation, a law firm, a union, or a special-interest group can gather money into a single bulk donation and try to influence the election. Now that the Premier has seen the public reaction to this distasteful practice, will she act now to change the law to prevent future abuse?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a very clear set of rules that are in place that are transparent, that ensures that everyone understands who makes political contributions and how they're made. For any political party to stand in this House and deny that they have not actually taken the same approach to political fundraising is slightly hypocritical.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, what the Wildrose has done in this Assembly is propose an amendment to close the Katz loophole, but the government voted it down. Now, in light of the potential abuse that was unveiled following the Chief Electoral Officer's recent decision, if the Premier won't agree to close the loophole to stop future bulk donations, will she at least agree to ban union and corporate donations altogether?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a set of rules with respect to election financing that are rules that people can have confidence in. We also have an independent Chief Electoral Officer, who, despite what the opposition says, has not said that anything untoward happened and in fact vindicated the people that this party slandered last year. That's why we have independent offices. The report is clear. No rules were broken, and it's important for us to respect those rules, as we did.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the noise level is rising here. The heckling is starting up again. I'd like to ask you to show some respect for the people asking the questions and for those attempting to answer them.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the PCs have done nothing wrong, maybe the Premier can explain why they had to pay $25,000 in illegal donations back.

Funding for Dementia and Alzheimer's Patient Care

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, they're doing this again, trying to save money on the backs of the most vulnerable Albertans. This time it's Alzheimer's and dementia patients. The government claims that their new centralized outcomes-based funding approach is better for patients, but in practice it is taking front-line resources and staffing away from patients with dementia and Alzheimer's. When the CEO of the Bethany care centre, that operates a number of facilities across Alberta, calls it a perverse system, will the Premier acknowledge her government might have made a mistake?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that the patient-based funding, what the member is talking about, assesses the patients with Alberta Health Services to make sure that the funding goes to the patient in the right space at the right time. There are many instances where we can show that there are reductions of funding, and there are many instances where we can show that there are increases in funding. The whole premise behind this policy is that those in need will get the services, and the funding will follow.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's not what's happening. Front-line worker positions are being cut in facilities with some very high-needs patients because the funding model is biased against patients with dementia and those who are in end-of-life care. In Cochrane, for example, where there was a huge protest this past weekend, 13 aides and LPNs have been laid off, and other staff have had their hours reduced. How does that make patient care outcomes better?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, like I said in the first set of answers, Alberta Health Services' intention is to make the process responsible and responsive to the needs of the patient. There are cases that will fall through the cracks, and Alberta Health Services will review those. I'll say that if any of those circumstances arise, I encourage the people to raise these issues with Alberta Health Services directly, right at the site.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, these are dementia and Alzheimer's patients, who can't speak up for themselves.

The outcome we should be demanding for these patients is compassion. If the minister won't give us the right answer, will the Premier agree to reassess the complex formula for funding and make the necessary changes to ensure that all patients get the care that they need?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the reason that we now have the system in place is because we have reassessed the formula for funding. Patient-centred funding ensures that the supports are there for patients and their families. In some cases that means that in structures and in organizations, if you actually take a personal interest in advocating on behalf of patients and families, staffing structures will change. That may affect staff, but it doesn't affect patients.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order was noted at 1:57 p.m.

The Leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

2:00 Research Development and Commercialization

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When this Conservative government made devastating cuts to postsecondary education, nobody could figure out why. It just doesn't make sense. Well, now we know why. The Conservative agenda is to turn postsecondary institutions into R and D facilities for their big corporate donors. To the Premier: why are you suggesting that the University of Alberta change its motto from whatsoever is true to whatsoever is profitable? Why, Premier?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we promised Albertans was that we were going to ensure that our universities and the taxpayer dollars that we invest in them are diversifying the economy. We see already tremendous partnerships between the private sector and universities that are doing very well to invest in research that will grow the economy. All that we are doing now is continuing to deliver on that model. We know that boards of governors and presidents of universities know that it's important to invest in diversifying the economy, in finding new opportunities for economic growth, and that's why we made the decisions we did.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, hogwash. What the Premier is proposing to do is to tear down a mansion and build a shack in its place.

In his State of the City Address Mayor Stephen Mandel said that the University of Alberta contributes 5 per cent of this province's GDP, more than $12 billion. Alberta's postsecondary institutions already have strong working relationships with industry. Most importantly, they do not sacrifice academic independence and freedom, something that rightly concerns Alberta's professors, teachers, and students. To the Premier. Your approach will drive out top researchers and students. What makes you think that Soviet-style central planning is a way to direct postsecondary research?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how to answer to theatrics like this, but let me tell you this. We know that there is fabulous research going on in our academic institutions, and that includes universities, polytechnics, and colleges. We also know that our professors have the academic freedom to engage in any research that they see valuable. We also know that all that is paid for by Alberta taxpayers. If there is a possibility to solve real problems with real solutions, monetize it, and bring revenue back to universities and to Albertans, I don't see what's wrong with that.

This government has completely lost its way when it comes to postsecondary education. The pursuit of truth and knowledge, while not always of commercial benefit, is valuable in and of itself. Furthermore, some research, which does eventually prove to be of commercial benefit, would not be approved if the only motive was profit. Albert Einstein would not get funded in your Alberta, Premier. To the Premier: do you really think Alberta students voted for this when you claimed to have walked in their shoes? Premier, I'm asking you.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we know that Canadian professors are the most cited and quoted professors in the world in academic journals, but we also know that not only this provincial government but our federal government is looking at making sure that the research that already happens in our institutions brings benefit to all of Canada and, frankly, de facto to Alberta. So the fact is that since we're investing so much into our postsecondary institutions, it only stands to reason that we benefit from it not only financially but by actually bringing real solutions to real problems that the world is struggling with right now.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

New School Construction Announcements

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier was busy using school kids as a backdrop for her partisan attacks on the opposition. On the one hand, this Premier is breaking promises with cuts to programs, increasing class sizes, and imposing a reduced quality of education. On the other hand, she pulls kids out of class to serve as props for her partisan political attacks on the opposition. My question is to the Premier. Can you get any more cynical?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it was very exciting last week to be able to travel this province with our Minister of Education and our Minister of Infrastructure and keep a promise that we made during the election, which was to build 50 new schools. There is nothing wrong with ensuring that we remind people that last year they had a choice, and they chose to build schools, they chose to create 18,000 new spaces for children, and they chose to have high-quality education. That's a promise we kept.

Mr. Mason: In the last election the people had a choice between a lake of fire and a bunch of broken promises, Mr. Speaker.

When parents and teachers agreed to allow their kids to participate in the Premier's news conference, did they know that they were agreeing to their kids serving as a backdrop to a Tory campaign event complete with cheap attacks on other political parties?

Ms Redford: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the wonderful thing about some of the work that we were able to do last week in announcing those schools was that there were lots of parents and community leaders there. What they knew was that they were coming to announcements to build new schools, to modernize schools, to create new spaces to make sure that our kids could excel to the best of their ability. There is no doubt that Albertans and parents understand that we made a commitment to Albertans, and we're going to keep it.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the government has borrowed a whole bunch of money to build a whole bunch of schools, many of which should have been built 10 years ago. It's no great accomplishment. Only this Premier could manage to get bad press when announcing new schools, but it's no surprise given the slew of broken promises that follow this Premier around. My question is to the Premier. Will she apologize to Albertans for misusing their resources for partisan purposes and for using their kids as her props?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, we all get to work on behalf of the people of Alberta. We all get to make promises, and some of us, fortunately, get elected to actually deliver on our promises. When I look at what we do as MLAs and leaders of opposition parties and everything that we do to encourage public debate, that's part of what a democracy is. The last time I checked, the leader of that party was paid by taxpayers, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is another day and another example of this advanced education minister's failed government-knows-best approach. [interjections] Dr. Bob Church, who is a member of the Order of Canada . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Please, leader of the ND and whoever you're conversing with on the front bench, be it the Deputy Premier or whoever, let's stop that across-the-bow stuff. The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View has the floor. He was interrupted, and I'm going to ask him to start over if he wishes or to pick up where he left off. It's your choice.

Mr. McAllister: I'm familiar with this, Mr. Speaker. It's take 2. Thank you.

Mr. McAllister: It is another day and another example of this advanced education minister's failed government-knows-best approach. Dr. Bob Church, who is a member of the Order of Canada and a founding chair of the Alberta Science and Research Authority, is saying that the research plan under Campus Alberta and the government's latest announcement will be a complete disaster. He's warning that the centralized R and D superboard will result in the continued exit of top scientists, clinicians, and engineers from this province. To the minister: how does creating a brain drain out of Alberta do anything except take a hammer to whatever is left of the Alberta advantage?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, never mind take 2. This show will stay in a can because it has no resemblance to reality whatsoever.

If this Official Opposition critic for this ministry would actually take five minutes and choose to meet with me, send me a memo or a letter or ask a question, I would be able to perhaps illuminate him on the subject. The fact of the matter is that there will be no brain drain. The fact is that we will be giving our academia more options to engage in collaborative research if they choose to do so.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I did try to meet with the minister when the budget was released and this was affecting postsecondaries, but he was busy tweeting from a beach across the world.

Given that Dr. Church is saying that this type of top-down, government-driven research hasn't worked anywhere in the world and given that he says the last time he saw this model in action was when he was a visiting scientist in the Soviet Union in 1972, will the minister admit that his plan to have bureaucrats staring over the shoulder of researchers is nothing short of a disaster?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I will not be debating through this member on what Dr. Church may or may not have said. I'd gladly meet with him and discuss that myself.

It may have happened somewhere in 1972, but I can tell you right now that in Boston at MIT, in Tel Aviv, Silicon Valley, and Stanford all of that is happening, as a matter of fact, and I don't see a brain drain over there. Everybody is vying to work out of those institutions. We can be just as great if we give our academia that opportunity.

Mr. McAllister: Well, perhaps we'll try it like this. Minister, who do you think Albertans will find more credible on the issue of how to create innovation in our economy? A man who has been in the field for 35 years, is a founding member of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, and is a former member of the Medical Research Council of Canada and the Alberta Research Council or a minister who has only been on the job for all of a whopping three months?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's really refreshing that they actually believe in science. Maybe global warming will be something that they will believe in soon.

I will tell you whom I will believe. I will believe our professors at the universities. I will believe the individuals I met with in Lake Louise over the weekend, who are the top researchers in Canada and Alberta who are looking at collaborative research not only with the private sector but with other institutes throughout the world, who are looking at solving real problems like global warming, believe it or not, with real solutions that are already taking place in our universities but could be delivered to market, could be commercialized and enrich our province and our research.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

New School Construction

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is Education Week in Alberta, when we honour the best of our educators and the best in education. I can tell you that for municipalities in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake as well as many others across this great province having a school means spaces to learn and opportunities for our children to grow. Unlike some other parties, our Premier and our government prioritized education and are putting our commitments into bricks and mortar. My questions are to the Premier. Over the constituency week you announced a number of new schools. Can you tell me why our government is building schools while the Official Opposition says we should cut spending and delay?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we've already talked about, this is a government and a party that's building Alberta, and we're proud of that. We have made that commitment to Albertans over time, and we made that commitment a year ago. We made a promise to keep investing in infrastructure – schools, roads, and hospitals – so that we can continue to succeed as we have in the past 40 years under a Progressive Conservative government. Eighteen thousand new spaces right across this province, that are going to allow children to excel, was a commitment we were proud to make last week.

Mrs. Leskiw: Again to the Premier. Many Alberta communities like Bonnyville and Cold Lake in my constituency are facing the pressures of a growing population. As a government we have committed to many more schools. In communities like Cold Lake when can we look forward to more school projects being announced like the ones announced in the 19 communities?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I don't know if that was a question or just a lot of preamble, but if somebody wants to address it from the government side, please do so.

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. One of the things that was really important last week is that we made sure that Albertans understood that while there were many announcements made, 30 new schools, there are more to come. We certainly dealt with the immediate growth pressures but worked very closely in partnership with school boards right across this province to make sure that we keep that commitment to build 50 new schools and modernize 70 because that's how Alberta students will be able to learn to the best of their ability.

Mrs. Leskiw: Again to the Premier. Given that this morning you announced $11 million to support dual credit programming to encourage students to earn high school and postsecondary credits at the same time, how is our government helping to ensure that our kids will find rewarding careers? [interjections]

Ms Redford: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, I hope the opposition will listen to this because it's actually about helping kids improve. We had the opportunity today to announce the dual credit system, which will be available to school boards right across this province, $11 million over the next three years, so that students who are in high school and may choose to not take a purely academic track are going to be able to be given information and options and actually get credits ahead of time. That's what allows Alberta's kids to succeed.

Mrs. Towle: Mary is 85 years old. She has dementia. She needs help with eating and going to the bathroom, she needs nine medications a day, she's frail, and she's in a wheelchair. She lives in continuing care. Now, because of the government's new funding model for seniors' care, Mary is going to suffer. AHS has determined that patients like Mary can't meet the so-called outcomes and are therefore not entitled to the same level of care they used to have. Facilities that care for Mary are already laying off staff. To the Associate Minister of Seniors. It appears that this new funding model is leaving vulnerable Alzheimer's and dementia patients behind. Why?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, Albertans need to know and have confidence in their publicly funded health care system, that it's there and it's going to be there to respond to the needs of Mary, your constituent that you raised. Listen. At any time the province takes care of vulnerable people. We know that there are people like Mary around. We have caring, loving, dedicated staff that make sure that she doesn't fall through the cracks. [interjection] Sir, this lady will be taken care of.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the new AHS funding model is supposed to provide greater levels of care for patients with high needs, can you please explain how patients like Mary, who have dementia and need help getting dressed, washing up, and using the bathroom, are having their care hours decreased?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, we talked about this a bit earlier. The patient funding model will respond to the needs. As the needs change, the responses will change. You can be assured that there will be patients that have fewer hours of service, and there will be patients that will have more hours of service. It will depend on the care plan, and it'll depend on the assessment given by the caregivers at each individual site.

Mrs. Towle: Unfortunately, those caregivers won't be there at each individual site.

Given that Alzheimer's and dementia patients have apparently been left behind by this Alberta Health Services funding model, will the Associate Minister of Seniors please commit to reviewing the model so that the very unique and very intensive needs of these patients and their families are addressed and not ignored?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, as we age and as the demographics change in this province, we're going to have an increase in higher levels of care throughout the province. This is part of the reason why the Premier and our government have committed to building more spaces across this province. Every one of the new spaces that we're talking about announcing in June or July will have care for dementia patients. Every one of those places will have opportunities for couples to age in place. Is it enough? Is it fast enough? No, it's not. We're getting there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

PDD Community Access Funding

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week during the constituency break I had the opportunity to speak with several of my constituents regarding PDD funding. Many are worried that these cuts may have serious, real-world impacts on them, their family members, their lives, and their quality of life. All of my questions are to the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities. How will the $39 million cut to community access affect my constituents who are concerned that this cut will deny them the basic opportunity to participate and be a member of their community?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond to that. We discussed that we're going to reduce community access funding in favour of services that provide more inclusive, more engaging opportunities in the community, like employment. I can tell you right now that while that transition is in place and assessments are ongoing, nobody, but nobody, who needs services will be denied services.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that cuts have been made to postsecondary training institutions like Mount Royal University for their social work program for disabilities, how is the minister going to ensure that the difficulties that organizations are already having regarding staffing are not multiplied, compounded?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, we do have a strategic plan in place to deal with workforce issues and disability service workers, and a big part of that was the 10 per cent wage offer that was made this year. We do have a strategic plan going forward, developed in concert with service providers and postsecondary institutions. It's posted on our website for comment right now.

I am actually deeply concerned about the cuts in postsecondary institutions. We had a sign language interpreter program at Lakeland and a disability service worker program at Mount Royal. I'm concerned, and I will take that up with the minister of advanced education, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many organizations are concerned with the July 1 deadline to submit revised budgets and that this is a very aggressive timeline to initiate change in caring for the vulnerable Albertans that we have here, will the minister consider extending this deadline?

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, at the moment we are working towards that very deadline. We are working collaboratively with service providers, PDD agencies, caregivers, guardians. I recognize completely that there is a concern out there about the pace of implementation. I also recognize I'm not going to have success unless I work with people. We'll see how the transition goes, but I am absolutely prepared to be flexible if I have to be.

New School Construction (continued)

Mr. Hehr: During the election the Premier promised to build 50 schools and renovate 70 in four years. Last month in estimates the Minister of Education admitted that this promise will not be fulfilled. With 40,000 more students expected by 2016, even with the 50/70 plan this will leave 17,000 students without a classroom or a desk to sit in. Our classrooms are bursting at the seams, and the building of new schools is not being given a high enough priority. To the Premier: can you explain to me how we will educate these additional 17,000 students?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the fact that this member of this opposition party agrees that there is a need now to build schools for kids today and not 30 years from now. I would have to remind this member that we are only in year 1 of a four-year term, and we will do our utmost to make sure that our kids have the classrooms and the schools they need today and not 30 years from now.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that a school can be built in 18 months if the government scraps their addiction to P3s, which can take up to five years to build, why does this government simply not roll up their sleeves and start construction tomorrow on these 28 schools instead of forcing children and communities to wait until 2016?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we will be using funding models that make sense, and the funding models will be different in different communities. At the end of the day we made a very clear commitment to invest in infrastructure and to invest in building Alberta. That not only means schools, but it means seniors' facilities, it means hospitals, and it means clinics and many other pieces of infrastructure. But the fact is that, as everybody knows, very few people out there have enough cash up front to build everything with cash up front, so we will be looking at innovative solutions to bring the schools to kids today and not 30 years from now, like opposition would have it.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that in 1993 the provincial government took away the local school boards' ability to tax citizens for schools and by extension the province would be responsible for building these new schools, when will this government either provide the necessary funds to school boards or, if they're too gutless to raise revenue, return the taxation powers to the local authorities?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government made a commitment to Albertans that we were not going to raise taxes, that we were not going to dig into their pockets until we did an entire review of what we were doing in our government. I would also say that the list of projects that was recently released was the first tranche of a number to come. We understood that there were pressures in certain areas of the province. We dealt with that as promised. Another promise made, another promise kept.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. In the last election this PC government ran on the promise of adequate funding for education. Mr. Speaker, this has turned out to be a particularly nasty, hurtful broken promise. For example, in Edmonton public schools the latest cuts include 44 education specialists from math to science, English to phys ed. Junior high sports programs are likely to be cut significantly as a result. How can this government rip $19 million out of Edmonton public schools and a similar amount from boards across Alberta without knowing full well that these sorts of cuts would end up taking place?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the member has read the 2013-14 budget, he would have seen that there wasn't a cut to K to 12 education, but there was an increase. Even though a minimal increase, there was an increase in the budget. Our Minister of Education is working collaboratively with all 62 school boards, making sure that every single dollar as much as possible ends up in the classroom, benefiting students. That is why kudos go to our teachers and the ATA and our minister in achieving a long-term labour agreement that will allow us to better budget into the future and make sure that dollars get into the classrooms.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this government extracted $19 million from Edmonton public for the next school year, resulting as well in the elimination of the music enrichment program, which for more than 50 years has provided affordable music instruction to students in Edmonton, how can this government stand by and claim their innocence while these cuts unfold? Music programs burn across Alberta while this government fiddles.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, grants for inclusion and small classroom size have actually gone up. What this member is referring to – and he should know well because he’s a teacher as well – is a music program that has been apparently eliminated that was an extracurricular activity, an after school program, thankfully delivered by teachers. Again, our teachers need to be thanked for the work that they do outside of classroom delivering extracurricular activities, but if he has an issue with those, he should be speaking with the school board, with the locally elected trustees who manage each school board’s budget.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that on one hand this Premier, this government uses education and young children in particular as campaign props while on the other hand they’re busy cutting school funding – and let it be known that that school funding cut to enrichment is a direct result of the budget cuts that came from this Chamber – why won’t this government clean up their act and give back the money they took away from education so that we can get on with the important business of looking after our children and the schools in which they learn?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, fancy, inflammatory language but very little truth. As I said earlier, the budget did not go down, but it has gone up even though a little. This member needs to be reminded that our school boards now will have to make some very difficult decisions. I know some school boards will have to be dealing with school infrastructure and others, but at the end of the day this Premier has made a commitment, this government has made a commitment not to balance the budget on the backs of kids, and we haven’t. We haven’t diminished school boards’ budgets, but they will have to make some difficult decisions on the infrastructure side perhaps, and I encourage them to look at that.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, over the last seven to 10 days the price of wholesale electricity in the province of Alberta has averaged more than $400 a megawatt, and on more than one occasion the price has approached a thousand dollars a megawatt. Given that there are no reported problems, no increases in demand, and given that the average wholesale price of electricity across North America was less than $40 a megawatt for the same time period, how can this government honestly say that Albertans have a very good, working electricity system?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, the electricity system delivered by the private sector and by the oversight regulators delivers to Albertans fair electricity at a fair price over a consistent, long period of time. In fact, I noticed that the hon. member wasn’t complaining about the fact that the price of electricity, the average pool price, was, like, $28 in the month of February. Remarkably, when it’s really, really low, we don’t hear anything.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you. That’s because they’re not listening, Mr. Speaker. The ancillary costs doubled.

Given that TransCanada’s internal study found that Albertans are paying more than double what it costs to build a transmission line in seven western states and two other western Canadian provinces, to the minister: why are Albertans paying more than double the going rate?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is exceedingly skilled at comparing apples and oranges. I would say that if you look at his press release recently, he’s pointing out and suggesting that the costs are quite different when, really, in one case it’s trying to build a line in Alberta; in the other case 400 kilometres of it is underwater. If the hon. member would like to find us 400 kilometres in a straight line in Alberta that goes underwater where we could put a line, by golly, we’d be there right with him.

Mr. Anglin: You got it.

Given that Albertans are paying $10 million per kilometre to build an above ground heartland transmission line, which goes past the schools and homes of Sherwood Park, and given that it only costs $4.1 million per kilometre, half the price, to build the same size transmission line underwater, underground, which is supposed to be more expensive, how can this minister say that Albertans are not getting ripped off?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are exceedingly well served by the electricity system they have in this province. They’ve had consistent, reliable costs that are right in the middle of the average supply of electricity right across this country. Albertans are well served. I would add that we’ve given additional teeth to the Alberta Utilities Commission to ensure that costs are kept under scrutiny through the build of these transmission lines.

Transition of Michener Centre Residents

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, there are many concerns across this province for the residents of Michener Centre in Red Deer-North, who will be transferred to new homes in the community. Some parents of the 125 residents are pleased that their loved ones will be repatriated back to their home communities for care, but other parents and guardians have serious concerns about moving their loved ones. I’ve been assured that each resident will have an individual plan developed for them with the assistance of their family and caregivers. I understand that a resident will only be moved once their parents or guardians agree to the plans. I also understand that every effort will be made to move residents with their friends whenever possible. To the associate minister for persons with disabilities. Residents and staff have been told that it’s been mandated . . .

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I caught the tail end of that. I was trying to watch the member there. It relates to whether or not there's a mandate for residents that are cared for by the public guardian to be moved first. That is absolutely not the case. The public guardian represents a number of residents there, some with lesser needs and some with more profound needs. Every patient in there will be moved in accordance with an individual plan, agreed upon and developed with, in fact, the staff, our department, and their guardian.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: will parents, guardians, residents, and caregivers be able to participate in developing the plan for their loved one, and what will you do if a parent does not agree to the plan that is being developed?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I spent a good part of last week actually meeting with families from the Michener Centre. You know, we have some difficult but productive discussions going forward, and I'll continue to do that. Every individual in that place will have a plan developed for their particular needs and an appropriate destination identified as a result of that. From there, parents or guardians will have choices about what the best pathway for their loved one will be, and I will guarantee that we're going to work with every individual before they're moved. No one moves until there's a place for them.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: given that Michener staff are very concerned about the residents first but, secondly, more than 400 staff are concerned about losing their jobs, what kinds of supports will be available for the staff, some of whom are near retirement?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, you know, I have to say that the staff have been absolutely exceptional in very difficult circumstances, more difficult because of the planning at the individual level that needs to be done. We can't identify what some of the staff impacts will be right now, so it's a difficult time for staff. Despite that, they have pledged to be involved in the care plans for individuals, which is absolutely exceptional and speaks volumes for the great people that are there. Once those care plans, appropriate destinations are identified, we'll be able to work with staff. We can absorb some in AHS, in our own program. At all times we'll be working within the collective agreement, and people will be dealt with with dignity and respect and gratitude.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

PDD Front-line Staff Contract

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The associate minister of PDD is having a tough time selling his plan to cut $42 million in program spending for the most vulnerable citizens. Front-line workers are worried about how they'll deliver quality care, and our clients are worried about how the cuts will affect their standard of life. Now we hear about a new gag order which is being imposed on all PDD front-line workers and service providers that threatens them against speaking out without prior consent from your government. The culture of fear and intimidation is being used to muzzle front-line staff like it did in AHS. Why is the associate minister adopting it to silence the people caring for people with developmental disabilities?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the member's assertions were true, I'd probably be equally concerned about them, but in fact they're not. We've got a draft contract out there that nobody has signed yet, that's available for open comment. In fact, we're having a forum with service providers next week for everybody to comment. We're trying to standardize a contract on our side that deals with children's services and our needs. That clause came from children's services. It's out there for open comment. If anybody has a problem with it, I'm pretty sure they'll identify it in an open forum that we have next week. We're trying to work collaboratively.

Mrs. Forsyth: So, Minister, will you guarantee this House that there'll be no muzzling of front-line staff?

Mr. Oberle: I think I've been through that, Mr. Speaker. Overall, we have a budget increase. We've moved some money out of community access supports. We want to move more toward employment supports. We gave a boost of 10 per cent directly to front-line staff.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to ask that question one more time. Minister, will you guarantee that there'll be no muzzling of front-line staff or service providers?

Mr. Oberle: I apologize to the hon. member. I misunderstood the question. There was something probably on our side, not theirs. Mr. Speaker, I will guarantee, first of all, that people that need services will get them and, second of all, that those contracts will be fashioned so they meet the needs of front-line providers and the government. I don't know right now where that clause is going to wind up. But if there's a clause in there, it's for good reason, to protect people's health information or whatever else. There will be no muzzling of front-line staff to talk about issues in care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Aboriginal Youth Participation in Sports Programs

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People who participate in sports have the opportunity to develop many skills, some emotional and some physical. It allows us all to learn about teamwork, trust, self-discipline, respect for officials, and how to be good winners and losers. For some Albertans, though, there are barriers which do not allow them to play. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: what exactly is your ministry doing to increase activity in sport participation in underrepresented groups in Alberta such as in my communities?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member correctly points out, anyone who has participated in any capacity of sport, whether as an athlete, a coach, an official, or in any other capacity, knows that there are tremendous benefits for both the participant and the greater community. Sport can do more than that. Sport can be a tremendous agent for positive social change as well. I was very proud two weeks ago along with my counterpart at the federal level, the Hon. Bal Gosal, to sign a three-year funding agreement between the federal and provincial governments that will provide for programming focused on the very groups that my hon. friend is referring to.

Ms Calahasen: Given that my constituency has many underrepresented groups such as aboriginal youth looking to get more involved in sport, what is specifically being done to increase their sport participation, especially if you have this agreement with the federal government?

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it is a very good question with regard to targeted programming. I'd like to acknowledge, first of all, that my hon. friend has been a long-time and tireless advocate on behalf of aboriginal youth throughout her long and distinguished career here in the House. One of the key areas that we're going to be working with through this program is that we're working co-operatively with the Red Cross to provide special training in both water safety and swimming skills. It may alarm you to learn that the drowning rate in our First Nations, Métis, and aboriginal communities is some 10 times what it is in the greater population. That is a shocking statistic and one that this program intends to address.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that we have money coming from the federal government and that we have organizations that have been involved for a long time with sports, especially dealing with aboriginal youth, what is the minister doing to be able to make sure that we are getting the results that we should be getting, especially when we're dealing with the North American Indigenous Games Council?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the programs that we have that I'm very proud of is Alberta's participation, the only province that participates, in the Arctic Winter Games. Those are coming up once again, and it provides for participation by northern Albertans in these traditional sports. But, beyond that, the programming and the funding that I just mentioned a moment ago will allow for the funding of a number of different programs. For example, one that has been ongoing involves some 42 aboriginal communities and some 8,400 program participants in order to provide them with the skills and the training necessary to allow them full participation in sporting events at various levels within . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

2:40 Infrastructure Planning and Maintenance

Mr. Barnes: This government is once again playing politics with infrastructure in Alberta. Some of our hospitals' basic safety requirements are being ignored in favour of friendly government projects. AHS has outlined for government an immediate need to upgrade the kitchen facility at the Calgary Foothills hospital, which hasn't received any kitchen upgrades since the 1960s. The Foothills kitchen has received several public health citations and is dealing with failing, obsolete equipment and mould issues. AHS has requested immediate funding to repair this issue. To the government: can you explain why this important issue has not been addressed?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this is really rich coming from a party that ran their last campaign on and continues to be committed to building less, yet every project in their constituency should be this government's number one priority. This government has committed to building Alberta, to building infrastructure, building it now, building it in a manner that is well thought out, and addressing as many of these infrastructure issues as we possibly can, not politically like they would have us do. We will not diminish our infrastructure budget, which they would have us do, but we'll continue to invest in a methodical, rational, needs-based manner.

Given that your government has ignored similar requests and deficiencies from facilities in Wainwright, Daysland, Fort McMurray, and Bonnyville and given that it's likely this request to upgrade the Foothills medical centre kitchen is going to suffer a similar fate, can you please explain how your government decides which projects are approved and which projects are not approved?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before in this House, our list of all the projects that we're doing is on our website, including the 30 that we announced last week. They're already up and on the website, so our three-year plan is there for all to see. You know, one day the opposition wants us to spend more money; another day they want us to spend less. We're building the right infrastructure in the right places at the right time.

Mr. Barnes: Given that Alberta Health Services has submitted this repair as an immediate concern and given that your government has ignored this health concern while at the same time funding projects that aren't even on the list of AHS capital requests, it's clear the government continues to play politics with taxpayers' money. When will this government release a prioritized project list for all Albertans to see?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times I have to say it. It's on the website. I work with my colleagues in Education and in Health. They have budgets for maintenance and ongoing infrastructure challenges, and they build in priority, that the highest needs are built, and they have the money to do that in their budgets.

The Speaker: Airdrie, your point of order at 2:44 has been noted.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period Practices

The Speaker: Just before we continue on, I want to make four quick comments. Number one, some of the preambles that some members are using are really getting carried away. There's not supposed to be any preamble, but some of you are particularly skilful at using given that and given that and given that, and you're making it into a 35-second speech with the given thats. Well, I can tolerate a little bit of it, but can't we tighten that up? We've left about five or six members who had questions on the list. They weren't able to get up because we're taking a little too long on that front.

Secondly, there are a lot of these toss-ins that some of you give right before you ask your second question or right before you give your second answer in the case of government, and those toss-ins take time. They don't maybe look like they do, but it means that you're going over the 35-second limit. Today we had about 10 or 12 people who violated the . . . [interjections]

That would be my third point, and that is all the side conversations. I know you've missed each other for a week and there's great love in the room – I understand that – but the side conversations today were well and beyond what is normally the case.

Next point. Some of you are becoming a little bit tricky with your heckling. You tend to hide behind someone else and then heckle away as if I can't hear you. Well, I can hear you, and I can pretty much recognize who you are, so let's not play those games with each other, okay? If you've got a heckle you want to throw in there and you have the guts and courage to do it, throw it in and suffer the consequences if necessary, but don't be hiding or pulling in behind somebody's chair like I saw three or four of you do today. It happened on both sides.

Next point. You know, there's a rule in our House that comes from a long-standing parliamentary tradition, and it reads something like this: you cannot do indirectly what you're not allowed to do directly. What that means is that a comment like the Pinocchio comment suggests the L word. I think we're above that. Responding with "Someone's nose is growing" is in the same category. There's one for each side of the House. Let's please keep that in mind. We're not going to allow that or tolerate it going forward.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I'm anticipating that we'll have a time challenge. Could we ask now, so that we don't interrupt statements, if we could extend past 3 o'clock?

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are running a bit late in the program today. The Government House Leader has asked that if, when 3 o'clock arrives, we're not finished the Routine, we grant unanimous consent to continue. Does anyone feel opposed to that request?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Let's carry on, then, with Calgary-North West.

Anniversary of the Liberation of the Netherlands

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and speak about an important historical anniversary that occurred yesterday, May 5. It marked the 68th anniversary of the liberation of the Netherlands by Allied forces. Through the winter of 1944-45 Canadian soldiers battled German forces in the Netherlands until May 5, 1945, when freedom was once again returned to Dutch citizens, including my parents, after five treacherous years of occupation during World War II.

As the tulips, a gift to Canada from the Netherlands, bloom in Ottawa every spring, it is a renewed reminder of the liberation as well as the fact that Canada provided safe harbour to the Dutch royal family during the German occupation. The Groesbeek Canadian War Cemetery and memorial in the Netherlands is the final resting place of many Canadian soldiers who lost their lives in the fight for the Netherlands' freedom.

As the daughter of Dutch immigrants I know how thankful the Netherlands is to Canadian soldiers, and I am so very proud of the eternal bond that has been forged between Canada and the Netherlands after that liberation. We are thankful for their sacrifice, and we will never forget.

New School Construction Announcements

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, last week should have been a great week for the government. They travelled around Alberta announcing badly needed schools for Alberta students. We support these new school announcements wholeheartedly although a Wildrose government would have built them without going into debt. We would have publicized a prioritized list of all schools requested throughout Alberta so that those who didn't make the cut this time would know how long they will be waiting in line.

Now, if anybody needed a good headline right now, Mr. Speaker, I think we all know it's the government, but somehow they even managed to botch this one. You see, somebody over there thought it would be a good idea to gather little children around for a photo op and then launch into a completely unfounded diatribe against the Official Opposition. The Premier warned the little ones against that evil Wildrose Party: they wouldn't have built any schools; in fact, if they're in charge, they won't build anything at all. Well, I guess that when Alberta adults stop believing you and listening, maybe you reach out to the little ones. Obviously, this was in very poor taste, and what should have been a good-news announcement turned into another communications embarrassment for the government.

You know, it's funny, Mr. Speaker. This government has the largest number of communications and public relations staff in provincial history. There are a lot of people on the public payroll over there. Perhaps somebody should have figured out that using kids as political pawns is not appropriate. In fact, it's quite pathetic. You would think somebody would be fired for this colossal gaffe. My guess, though, is that we're going to have to wait until 2016 for that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a reminder that it's not customary to raise points of order during private members' statements, nor is it customary to heckle them as they're speaking.

Let's carry on with Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Long-term Cancer Prevention Strategy

Mr. Dorward: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. More Albertans aged 35 to 64 die from cancer than heart disease, stroke, other circulatory disorders, infectious diseases, and unintentional injuries combined. Every day 42 Albertans learn they have cancer. By 2030, a short 17 years from now, we expect that to grow to 73 new cancer cases a day. These rising numbers have a significant effect on our communities, health system, our provincial economy, and, most of all, the families and loved ones affected personally.

I'm so proud to see this government invest time and money into reducing and preventing cancer with the release of its new cancer plan to 2030, Changing Our Future. Alberta's cancer plan is about creating a better future, where more cancer is prevented, more cases of cancer are cured, and suffering from cancer is greatly reduced. The plan takes a provincial approach to cancer so that all parts of the system will work together for the best possible outcomes for patients and families.

The plan sets out 10 strategies to complete a comprehensive and co-ordinated system, headed by CancerControl Alberta, a new operating division under Alberta Health Services. It will combine existing resources, Mr. Speaker, so its implementation won't cost taxpayers any more money. The investments that we are making in cancer infrastructure will enable Alberta to be a leader in the fight against cancer. I'm proud to be on the government side, that's not afraid to make a fully funded capital plan in this regard as well.

This government protects our vulnerable and builds the better Alberta that we all want to see for today and for our tomorrows, Mr. Speaker, and that includes a great cancer plan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Balwin Community League 50th Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured and privileged to rise today in recognition of the 50th anniversary of Balwin Community League, which will celebrate their five decades of accomplishments with the greater community on June 22, 2013.

The Balwin community is located in the northeast area of our provincial capital between 127th and 132nd avenues and 66th to 82nd streets in Edmonton-Decore. In the early part of the 20th century it was known as Packingtown. This was a rugged, working-class neighbourhood as many families living in the area worked at the nearby stockyards, rendering, and meat-packing plants. Mr. Speaker, Packingtown no longer exists, and in 1910 the area was incorporated as the village of North Edmonton and became part of the city of Edmonton in 1912.

The Balwin neighbourhood is derived from two early property owners, Frank Ball and Luke Winterburn. It was officially founded in 1962 by G.W. Linford and incorporated by the province of Alberta on February 15, 1963.

Over the years the community was the lucky recipient of a new clubhouse, which was donated by a local real estate owner. In 1970 the Balwin community hall was built at 76th Street and 128th Avenue. Seven years later with pride the mortgage was retired thanks to the tireless hard work and commitment of many people who rolled up their sleeves, including the ladies auxiliary, to tackle this goal.

The Balwin Community League has remained active over the years, and most recently, last year, in partnership with the city of Edmonton they completed a refurbishment of Zoie Gardner park.

Congratulations to all those involved who have given so generously to the long-standing success of the Balwin Community League. I know that the families, the community, and the leaders of our city, province, and country are very proud of all the past, present, and future volunteers in the Balwin community. *Heartfelt thanks for adding immeasurably to the lives of children, youth, individuals, and families. Special best wishes for continued success in the many years to come.**

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

David Thompson Corridor Visitor Services Program

Mr. McDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to recognize the innovative David Thompson corridor visitor services program. Just recently this program won the responsible Canadian energy social performance award, which recognizes CAPP members who have demonstrated innovation and leading performance in their commitment to responsible development of the Canadian petroleum industry. This program builds upon a long-term co-operative relationship between Suncor Energy and Alberta Tourism staff at Crimson Lake provincial park with a goal of raising awareness and fostering stewardship of the provincial parks and protected areas within the David Thompson corridor.

Located in the constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the David Thompson corridor visitor services program, under the leadership of Graham Thursfield, provides opportunities for people to engage in nature-based, hands-on, experiential learning about our incredible natural habitats. The partnership has made this possible by providing funding for a full-time visitor services program, environmental education programs for regional students, the delivery of public interpretive programs, and the establishment of numerous partnerships in support of Alberta parks.

Mr. Speaker, these days Albertans are asking our oil sands industry to take decisive action on global and regional environmental issues, so it's important that we recognize the industry's environmental stewardship and collaborative social initiatives. The award-winning David Thompson corridor visitor services program is an excellent example of the oil sands industry working with our provincial parks system to preserve important ecological areas and provide places where people can enjoy and learn about Alberta's natural heritage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Hehr: Until this government adopts a fair and principled tax code like that famed socialist Brad Wall in Saskatchewan, it seems we will have to turn to the Minister of Alchemy, who possesses the fabled philosopher's stone responsible for the transmutation of lead into gold. How else can we expect to pay for the bundles of promises to bushels of people given by this Premier, which included 50 new schools and 70 renovations? By the way, the Minister of Education admitted last week that this will be another broken promise. If Alberta adopted Saskatchewan's tax code, the second lowest in Canada, this province would bring in an extra $11 billion a year. We could pay for those new schools. We could also plan to adjust demographic needs.

The education of our children should not be an election promise tied to the price of a barrel of oil. Yes, the Premier announced nine new schools to be built in Calgary, but they will not be completed until after 2016. This does not bode well for our education system. Alberta's K through 12 enrolment is expected to increase by 40,000 students in the next four years. Even with the completion of the Stelmach schools we'll have a shortfall of 17,000 student spaces. What will happen to these students? They'll be crammed into the already sardinelike conditions in our classrooms.

In 1993 this government took away the taxation power of school boards. The corresponding duty is that this government would tax citizens when schools would need to be built. Clearly, this has not happened. Instead of following the advice of virtually every economist or every government report or the advice of former Finance ministers Liepert and Morton to raise revenue, this government would choose to simply turn its back on educating our children.

Failing to modernize our tax system to ensure predictable and sustainable funding and saving for the future leaves the government only one option, to set up a government ministry devoted to alchemy. Otherwise, the system just isn't going to work.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

*The text in italics exceeded the time limit and was not read in the House.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's first report, dated May 2013, entitled Review of the BRIK (Bitumen Royalty-in-Kind) Program. The committee undertook this review on its own initiative in accordance with Standing Order 52.07(2) after considering a number of suggestions put forward by committee members.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank all committee members for their contributions during this review, the LAO committee support staff, and the stakeholders who contributed via written submissions and oral presentations. The committee looks forward to receiving the government's response to the recommendations set out in its report within the 150-day period set out in Standing Order 52.09(1).

This report is comprehensive enough, expressive enough, and also thin enough that it will not defend itself against being read, as Sir Winston Churchill so eloquently used to say.

Mr. Speaker, copies of this report are being distributed to all members of the Assembly.

3:00 Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Bill 23 Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave today to present on behalf of my hon. colleague the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance Bill 23, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, for first reading.

Bill 23 removes legislation that's no longer needed and amends our personal and corporate income tax acts. It makes adjustments that will maintain consistency with tax law changes made by the federal government to items such as the Canada child tax benefit and the scientific research and experimental development tax credit. Bill 23 also repeals the Alberta Income Tax Act, which was replaced by the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act some years ago. I would encourage all members to support this bill in first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

Bill 24 Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also beg leave to introduce Bill 24, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, on behalf of my hon. colleague the Minister of Service Alberta.

Bill 24 is a statutes amendment act, somewhat in the line of a miscellaneous statutes amendment act but differing in that we haven't actually sought opposition approval, so it's not a unanimous consent type of bill. It is a bill which would be open for debate. It's a bill which is essentially compiled of amendments to a number of acts, what I would call one-line or one-page amendments to a number of acts. It amends, for example, the Condominium Property Act in section 38. It amends the Emblems of Alberta Act in sections 2 and 12. It amends the Perpetuities Act in section 3. It amends the Surveys Act in section 4.

It has a number of amendments. The reason why the bill is longer than one might expect is that it has a number of pages of amendments which essentially are just changing the names of ministries from how they are currently expressed in statute to how they are currently represented, with the names of the ministries that we have now.

It's a relatively straightforward bill amending five acts, with specific changes to sections, and then a number of acts, virtually all of the other acts in the province, with respect to changing the names of ministries and other representations of that nature. A very straightforward bill, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask support at first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's be brief in the introductions of our tablings today.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I have tablings on behalf of my colleague the leader of the third party and Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The first is copies of the mayor of the city of Edmonton's State of the City Address on April 2, 2013, in which he specifically talks about the 5 per cent contribution to GDP from the University of Alberta.

The second two tablings were mentioned earlier during an introduction of Heather Workman, who's in the gallery. The first is an article on Chief Justice Beverley McLachlin's call for restructuring of the family law system, and the second is the final report of the Family Justice Working Group of the Action Committee on Access to Justice in Civil and Family Matters, entitled Meaningful Change for Family Justice: Beyond Wise Words.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on behalf of.

Mr. Hehr: This is actually on behalf of myself, Mr. Speaker. It's just a letter I referred to last week in the House. It's a letter from the Auditor General, Mr. Merwan N. Saher, regarding his anticipated work that he's going to do and reporting on the change in our budgeting processes and the fact that there's a narrower scope of reporting contained therein.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Let me move on to Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Airdrie.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past constituency week I was able to meet with persons concerned about the PDD program. I have the requisite number of copies of 29 letters from parents, providers, grandparents, siblings, community members concerned about the announced cuts and changes to the PDD program.

I also heard from a pharmacist concerned about some things in his letter here.

The oxygen supply changes that are being made are a concern to Ms Janzen and Kelly Clemis.

The parent preschool program, southwestern Alberta, invited me to meet with them. They gave me four letters from Naomi Wiebe, Kathleen Van Herk, Chellsea Jensen, and Nicole Leavitt. I'd like to table those.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter that I received from Mr. Matt Dumais from Airdrie. Mr. Dumais has multiple sclerosis and spends roughly $2,500 or sometimes more on prescription drugs every single month. What he's concerned about is that the Alberta College of Pharmacists is trying to get rid of reward programs such as Air Miles at Safeway. He uses those air miles to get to warmer locations to treat his MS and is very worried. This is the fourth or fifth letter I've received in Airdrie alone on this. I would hope that the Health minister would look into this. This seems very anticompetitive and is only hurting MS patients.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to table with you five copies of an Ethics Commissioner report titled Report of an Investigation under the Lobbyists Act Re: Mr. Joseph Lougheed.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Campbell, Minister of Aboriginal Relations, response to Written Question 5, asked for by Ms Smith on December 3, 2012, "Of the transfers received from the federal government, what is the total amount earmarked for health care for aboriginal peoples in Alberta, and where and how were these funds spent during the past three fiscal years?" and response to Written Question 6, asked for by Ms Smith on December 3, 2012, "Of the transfers received from the federal government, what, if any, is the total amount earmarked for housing for aboriginal peoples in Alberta, and where and how were these funds spent during the past three fiscal years?"

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, I believe you had two points of order. Do you want to deal with them one at a time?

Mr. Anderson: Sure.

The Speaker: Okay.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first point of order relates to our Standing Order 23 (h), (i), and (j). Specifically, if you could look at page 144 of Beauchesne's, it specifically notes that accusing someone of slander in this House is unparliamentary language and should not be used. The Premier did in fact accuse the Leader of the Opposition of being a slanderer, of slandering folks over this Daryl Katz investigation by Elections Alberta. Obviously, it is not slander for many reasons, not the least of which is that $25,000 was found to be in contravention of the act and had to be returned by the PC Party. Truth is a defence, as anybody would know.

In that case, there is no doubt that the complaints made by this Official Opposition leader necessitated an investigation that did in fact find that $25,000 was illegally donated and had to be returned. It was simply the case that that was certainly not a slanderous accusation. Neither is asking for an investigation into something slander. If every time we're in here, we're going to be accused of slander for doing our jobs, which is to refer matters to the officers of this Legislature, whether that be the Ethics Commissioner or the Chief Electoral Officer and so forth, we're going to be accused of slander a lot because that's our job as Official Opposition, to refer matters that don't meet the smell test, that have issues that may be a problem, to these independent officers to let them do their work.

Not only that, but we did obviously say, Mr. Speaker, that the donation, the bundle amount, was in the form of a $430,000 bank draft. That actually was proven true in the investigation, once again. It was seen by the Chief Electoral Officer that $405,000 of that $430,000 did comply with the act in the Chief Electoral Officer's interpretation. We don't like the policy that allows for that, but to say that we've slandered anybody is unparliamentary and should be withdrawn by that side.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of things, I think, that beg comment there. First of all, it's totally disingenuous for that hon. member to suggest that the finding that one of the donations that was made was made by somebody who was outside the province somehow justifies the comments that they were making, which in no way, actually, were related to that particular fact. Over the course of the last year we can even look in Hansard – I believe we'd find it in Hansard – at the comments that were made relating to a corporate donation from somebody who was seeking favours and all those sorts of things. I think that whether or not the word "slander" is a parliamentary word that's allowed under Beauchesne's, the definition of slander is certainly in what was said.

Time after time the hon. members on that side – and the Premier did not refer today to the hon. Leader of the Opposition. I was listening fairly closely. She said that those people over there have been slandering or something to that effect. Quite frankly, what we heard last year was not the appropriate role played by the opposition in standing up, identifying an issue, and asking that it be investigated by the Chief Electoral Officer. No. What they did was day after day slag somebody who is not in this House.

I believe, if I recall correctly, that a number of times they were admonished not to use names of people in the House who were not here. That's another rule that says: do not speak of someone who can't be here to defend themselves. Time after time they used the opportunity to slag Mr. Katz and Mr. Katz's companies and make accusations that somehow the company was making a corporate donation and buying a favour and all that sort of stuff, which is very clearly in the definition of slander, only to discover after the investigation of the Chief Electoral Officer that none of that was true, that none of that was right. The only thing that was found to be a case is not something they commented on at all, that one member who had made a donation actually, although he has offices in Edmonton and spends most of his time here, a lot of his time here, has his official residence or his driver's licence, et cetera, in Ontario.

That one was found to be an illegal donation, not something, by the way, that the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta would have been able to discern. That's something that was found to be a wrongdoing on that person's part, but of course the rules require and the action taken was to return the money, and there was, as I understand it, a letter of admonishment. That's in the Chief Electoral Officer's report.

The appropriate way to go forward on this at the time would indeed have been to say, "We think this looks like something that should be investigated," to write to the Chief Electoral Officer and ask for an investigation. The investigation would have been done. The result would likely have been the same result, and that would have been an appropriate process if they felt that there was a problem. But, no, they brought it to the floor of the House. As you've admonished and as your predecessors have admonished a number of times, political contributions are not a subject for the floor of the House. They brought it to the floor of the House. They did not actually raise the issue saying, "Here's an issue we'd like to have referred to the Chief Electoral Officer" until they were batted down a number of times for their comments in the House.

So, no, it's not the opposition doing their job. The opposition doing their job would be to take issues that are important to Albertans, put a context around them, ask the questions, and if they believe that there is something that needs to be investigated by an officer of the Legislature, to refer it to the officer of the Legislature for investigation. That's not what they do. They're not doing their job as opposition, quite frankly. They are fearmongering, and they are muckraking, and they are bringing up all sorts of stuff and putting it in the worst possible context and dragging the names of people who are not in this House to defend themselves into the debate.

Mr. Speaker, you might find that slander is a bad word. I've looked; it's in here. It might be a bad word, but all words have to be used in context. The Premier was not accusing the Leader of the Opposition of slandering. What she said was that the behaviour of the Official Opposition over the course of this was slanderous, and I think that's an appropriate description. If you find otherwise, I'd be happy to withdraw it.

But, Mr. Speaker, in the context of this it's important to understand that there is a proper role for opposition. The public does expect that role to be played. It is to ferret out the things that proper questions should be asked on, and it is to ask them properly and deal within a proper context. None of that is what the opposition did.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, briefly, I'm sure. Carry on.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, very much, Mr. Speaker. Pardon me for interjecting myself into this point of order between the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader, but there are two points that have come up that I think are really important. One is that we are given the privilege of free speech in this House exactly so that anyone, including members of the opposition, even the Official Opposition, may describe circumstances and hold the government to account for it.

The balance to that is that we do have to be careful with that freedom of speech, with that privilege, not to call people names who are not in the Assembly to defend themselves. As far as naming them, just referencing them, I think the government doth protest too much because sometimes you'll need to say someone's name so we all understand who we're talking about. I'm not particularly in this case talking about the gentleman that the Government House Leader raised. That's the balance that we're seeking here.

I find that increasingly the government takes umbrage whenever any member of the opposition wants to criticize the government at all for any reason. That simply is not acceptable, and I know that the Speaker will uphold that free speech and the right of members, including the opposition, to raise situations that we find curious or unacceptable and to demand an answer from the government for that.

Secondly, a number of times recently – and most recently the Government House Leader made reference to the fact that party revenue cannot be raised as a question. In fact, that is not true. In House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 504 – and this is under the section that is dealing with questions criteria – it says: concerning "internal party matters, or party or election expenses." Not revenue. Expenses. I don't think that's a mistake or an omission, Mr. Speaker, because the revenue is important in the context of elections. I'm not commenting on any particular example that may or may not have been raised recently in context with this government receiving money or not receiving money from any particular court, but it is important in the overarching role of democracy that where the revenue comes from in any political party is important, and that's why the wording is there.

I'll also note that this comes up in Beauchesne's under 410(17), less specific there: "Ministers may not be questioned with respect to party responsibilities." Nothing about expenses or revenue in that line. If I may use the hon. Government House Leader as an example – and I will give the disclaimer at the beginning that I have no idea whether this is true; I'm just using it as an example. Say that the hon. Government House Leader is also the vice-president of a political party. We would not be able to question him on his political responsibilities, but we can certainly question him on how that might be affecting his job as a minister of X, Y, or Z. I think it's important that we remember these clarifications. The connection between how parties are funded and who's funding them is important, and that's why that express wording has been used.

As well, my first point about the government's oversensitivity to any questioning – it's darn near any questioning now – that isn't brought up by the government as being beyond the pale and outrageous and all kinds of other dramatic statements. I mean, if you can outdramatize me, Mr. Speaker, something is going on here.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie rose on a point of order at 1:57. I think it's important to put a little bit of context ahead of this point of order. We had a comment just moments before to do with Pinocchio, which I've already noted, and we had a response to do with the term "your nose is growing" or words to that effect.

Then we got into this question from the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition about so-called loopholes, bulk donations, union and corporate donations, and so on. At that point the Premier said the following:

Mr. Speaker, we have a set of rules with respect to election financing that are rules that people can have confidence in. We also have an independent Chief Electoral Officer, who, despite what the opposition says, has not said that anything untoward happened and in fact vindicated the people that this party slandered last year. That's why we have independent offices. The report is clear. No rules were broken, and it's important for us to respect those rules, as we did.

Now, the point of order that has been raised is under 23(h), (i), and (j), and I just want to refresh your memories on what this reads. It says that a member shall be called to order:

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member.

So in the strictest sense of the interpretation of that, this was not a comment avowed to any individual member. However, the spirit of that standing order I think is just as important to consider because although it's not a direct allegation against another member, it is nonetheless a reference to a party of which several members happen to be members.

I don't think that it's in keeping with our rules to accuse someone or some party or some other body or entity of slander. So technically while it doesn't fall under that particular ambit of SO 23(h) and (i), I don't know that it's in the best interest or in the best tradition of this House to use those kinds of statements. The language that has been uttered by various members in this House over the many years that I have been here often comes into question.

So I'm going to ask the Government House Leader if there is an opportunity, as you have offered, to withdraw that particular comment so that we can never have it referenced again. Then we can move on with the rest of the day.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of your words, it would be most appropriate for me to on behalf of the Premier withdraw that comment, and I will undertake to speak to the Premier and indicate to her the extent of your ruling.

In that context, Mr. Speaker, I might say that I have been very reluctant to raise points of order on all of the issues that have been happening in the House with respect to the names that have been called back and forth. We would totally destroy the back and forth in the House if we had a point of order on every breach that's come up in this session. I know you've tried to control the session, but if we cannot call a spade a spade because we want to keep decorum in the House, then I think we'd better keep decorum in the House.

The Speaker: Thank you. That comment has been withdrawn officially.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Under 13(2). I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. You have absolutely got me puzzled. Has the Speaker now ruled that the word "slander" joins the list of unusable language? Because . . .

The Speaker: No. Hon. member, please sit down. [interjection] Please have a seat. It's not the word "slander"; it's the accusation. I think I made that quite clear when I read out the comment. It's the accusation of someone being a slanderer or somebody being a slanderer. I hope that clarifies it.

In any event, we are now done with the points of order. Oh, no. You had one more, Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: You know what? Given that we'll be discussing a motion for a return that deals with the infrastructure priority list, I think I'll withdraw it, and we'll just discuss it then.

The Speaker: Thank you.

That second point of order has been withdrawn, and we're going to move on.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

New School Construction Criteria

Q36. Mr. McAllister:

What are the criteria currently used by the Ministry of Infrastructure to determine where new schools are constructed?

Auditor General Recommendations for Human Services

Q37. Mr. Wilson:

What steps are being taken by the Minister of Human Services and what steps were taken by the previous ministers of children and youth services to complete the recommendations that were made in the 2006-2007 annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta?

AISH Benefit Extension Costs

Q39. Mr. Wilson:

What are the cost implications on a fiscal year basis to extend assured income for the severely handicapped benefits to those currently receiving benefits beyond the age of 65?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Subsidized Daycare Spaces

Q38. Mr. Wilson asked that the following question be accepted.

How many subsidized daycare spaces were available each month in Edmonton, Calgary, and the province as a whole from January 1, 2011, to January 31, 2013?

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to at this time ask the hon. minister, who I believe does have amendments to it, to please table those at this point so that we can move on with the debate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I do wish to respond to the question by indicating that we would be prepared to accept the question if it was amended and to move an amendment, which I have discussed with the member who raised the question. I understand that he is okay with the amendment. If that's the case and the House does approve the amendment and the motion as amended, then I actually have the response here for him today. In fact, I'll send him the response even if you don't support it because he asked the question.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I would like to move an amendment to the question, that Written Question 38 be amended as follows: (a) by striking out "subsidized daycare" and substituting "regulated child care"; (b) by striking out "each month in Edmonton, Calgary, and the province as a whole from January 1, 2011, to January 31, 2013?" and substituting "quarterly in the Edmonton and Calgary child and family service regions and the province as a whole from April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2013, and how many children received child care subsidies quarterly in the Edmonton and Calgary regions and the province as a whole from April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2013?"

The amended question would then read as follows:

How many regulated child care spaces were available quarterly in the Edmonton and Calgary child and family service regions and the province as a whole from April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2013, and how many children received child care subsidies quarterly in the Edmonton and Calgary regions and the province as a whole from April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2013?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reasons for those amendments are probably clear although I went over them very fast. We can report on the number of regulated child care spaces, which include all program types, including licensed daycare, preschool and out of school care, group family, innovative programs, and approved family day homes, but the question as originally written talked about subsidized daycare. In fact, we don't actually subsidize daycare spaces; we actually provide subsidies for children, which is a slightly different distinction. In order to report accurately, we wanted to make that distinction.

The second amendment with respect to monthly and quarterly: there are changes on a month-to-month basis. We actually have reports on a quarterly basis that are more accurate. In the interest of providing accurate information, we report on a quarterly basis.

Then with respect to Edmonton and Calgary those are actually in regions that are a bit broader than Edmonton and Calgary proper. So if it's all right with you, hon. member, we'd rather report on the Edmonton and Calgary child and family services authorities regions as opposed to the cities proper. So these are relatively modest changes that we're proposing.

Then adding at the end of it "and how many children received child care subsidies quarterly in the Edmonton and Calgary regions and the province as a whole" gets back to the initial part of the question about the subsidized daycare spaces but reports it in the way in which we actually do it in terms of child care subsidies rather than subsidized spaces.

I would ask the House to adopt those amendments, and then, as I said, as adopted, I'd be happy to provide the answers.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Human Services – and I stand to be corrected, which is why I stood – is not the money that is given by way of child care subsidies also given to families that do not participate in an organized child care system but goes directly to families that are caring for children at home? Thus, giving us the number of child care subsidies does not in fact tell us how many spaces there are that are available to people. It tells us how many families are receiving subsidies for some kind of child care, whether it's in a licensed daycare space or whether, in fact, people have opted to take that money and care for their children at home or to have a grandmother or a neighbour care for several children in their home or any number of other possible options. I'll seek clarification on that, please.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you. I would like to thank the minister for approaching me a couple of weeks ago with this proposed amendment. I advised him that I was prepared to accept the amendment, and I appreciate his co-operation in this matter. I am prepared to ask for the question, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Human Services has moved an amendment to Written Question 38.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Back to the question as amended. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know it's a bit redundant now that the amendment has been passed, but I didn't have the opportunity to speak before because I'd already spoken. But that's one of the reasons why the amendment is necessary. We do not actually subsidize child care spaces. We provide subsidies to children and families, and they can use those subsidies at a daycare or a day home. I'm not sure that they can use them in their own home, but if they're paying for a day home space or a child care space, they can get those. I can get the information. If the hon. member is interested in what they can use it for and those sorts of things, I'd be more than happy to get that information.

That's actually precisely the distinction here. We don't subsidize daycare spaces. We did support the building of daycare spaces. I shouldn't say that we don't subsidize them because we do insofar as we pay for top-up wages for qualified staff and those sorts of things, but those aren't related to specific spaces. Those are related to the quality of the daycare or the day home itself.

Then with respect to children we support families currently starting at $50,000 and below in terms of family wages and even between $50,000 and $75,000, depending on how many children, to support the cost of them acquiring daycare or care for their children in a number of different places.

I hope that clarifies for the hon. member. If she has any more questions about that, I'm more than happy to get the information.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

[Written Question 38 as amended carried]

Traffic Ticket Fine Revenues

Q40. Mr. Rowe asked that the following question be accepted.

Which municipalities have not received their full share of eligible fine revenues earned through provincial traffic tickets issued pursuant to the Traffic Safety Act from January 1, 2007, to December 31, 2012, and what is the total amount that was not returned to municipalities across the province because of clerical errors and missed time limits since January 1, 2007?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member for this question regarding municipalities that have not received their full share of eligible fine revenues earned through provincial traffic tickets. Unfortunately, I have to reject this as we don't cover that. It's up to municipalities to contact us to determine if they have not received the full amount of their fine revenue. Individual municipalities review their disbursement reports on a regular basis to ensure they're receiving the full amount they are due.

Sometimes, of course, errors can occur, and I'm sure that any errors that do occur are not intentional. For example, if the officer issuing the ticket recorded the wrong location where the ticket was issued or was unclear which municipality the ticket had been issued in, the courts enter in what's recorded on the ticket based on the only evidence that they have in many cases.

For any errors that have been identified, we have made the corrections and provided the revenue to the appropriate municipalities. When these issues arise, Mr. Speaker, Justice and Solicitor General works directly with municipalities to ensure these issues are dealt with on a timely basis. Therefore, with regret I am rejecting this question as previous issues with municipalities have been dealt with in this regard.

I will also add, with respect to this member, that this is not an appropriate use of the written question. If this member knows of any specific concern in any municipality, I invite him to contact my office. I'd be pleased to look into it for him.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to this written question. First off, with respect to the Justice minister saying that this is an inappropriate written question, when the opposition or perhaps a government member puts forward written questions, they actually provide those questions to Parliamentary Counsel. Parliamentary Counsel then approves them as valid questions, or if they're not valid, they send them back, saying that you cannot ask that written question. So for the Justice minister to say that it's not an appropriate question is completely unfounded. This written question was approved by Parliamentary Counsel and is definitely in accordance with the rules and practice of this Legislature.

With respect to the substance of the question this is another example where I think that the government is abdicating its responsibility. If there are any fines that were not transferred back to the municipalities, the government can just say so. If they are unaware of any outstanding amounts, they can simply say so. If they know that amounts have been fully repaid, if there are any errors that have been rectified, they can simply say so. This is not a case of, you know, going through their records and creating new records. They can simply say that to their knowledge, there are none.

This is, I think, another example of the government abdicating its responsibility and then also downloading that responsibility to municipalities and putting the onus on them to identify to the government their errors and omissions. Why should it be up to the municipality to identify errors or omissions on behalf of the provincial government? I think this is well within the provincial government's responsibility and another example of downloading onuses onto municipalities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to close debate.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The intent of this question is to provide some information to municipalities who have raised concerns about the collection and reimbursement of fine revenues from the province. Some municipalities have concerns that fine revenue collected through provincial tickets may have been misdirected to the province rather than being directed back to the municipality in which those fines were issued. For instance, one town in my constituency requested an audit of the provincial tickets written by their peace officers. The audit showed that a data entry mistake had been made, and because of this a significant amount of revenue from provincial tickets issued in the municipality was not being forwarded to the town. If this is in fact the case, it is very concerning.

My written question asks the government to be open and transparent and clearly state which municipalities have not received a full share of the fine revenues earned through provincial traffic tickets that they are eligible to receive.

Another concern raised by the town in my constituency who had requested the audit is that when they asked for information from 2007 onwards, they were told that information cannot be provided further back than 2009. The response from the mayor was: "We find this unacceptable and unbelievable as most record retention policies would require that these records be kept up for up to seven . . . years." I also find it quite unbelievable that the government cannot provide information from five or six years ago. More likely is the fact that the government is simply choosing not to provide that information. So much for the Premier's promise to lead an open, transparent, and accountable government.

In closing, I would like to quote from a letter I received on this issue.

It is our expectation that we trust the Province to provide accurate information, to provide feedback in a timely manner and to correct the mistakes made by the provincial department.

The lack of accountability on the part of the Province raises concerns with other municipalities and the number of possible misdirected fine revenues.

Identifying a problem is a first step to fixing the problem, so I ask that the government undertake to find out how many municipalities have not yet received their full share of eligible fine revenues, which municipalities they are, how much the province owes to each municipality, and table that information in this Chamber so that all municipalities and Albertans can access that information. That shouldn't be the municipality's responsibility; it should be the government's.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has moved acceptance of Written Question 40.

Motions for Returns

Transportation Construction Priorities and Costs

M7. Mr. Barnes moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of the projects itemized in the Alberta Transportation three-year construction plan, 2012-2015, listed according to priority rather than highway number, with related costs for each project.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the government and the hon. Minister of Transportation I would indicate to the House that we reject this motion. There have been a number of times over the course of the last year or so when there's been this question about prioritized lists and then making lists available. Well, I can very easily go to the Transportation website – in fact, I just did – and the three-year construction plan is publicly available on the Transportation website. There's a link right from the main page. I went in there. I found it. It said: three-year transportation plan. I clicked on it, and it comes up with the three-year transportation plan. It's there.

The three-year transportation plan is publicly available. It's listed there. It doesn't need to be the subject of a motion for a return. The rolling three-year plan is reviewed annually and publicly reported with the budget documents.

I think it's fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta Transportation continually collects data on things like pavement and bridge conditions, traffic volumes, collision data and has experts who analyze that data each year to identify the most appropriate and urgent projects, taking into consideration construction or maintenance costs; reductions in vehicle operating costs; costs associated with travel delays and safety; deliverability, which includes permits, rights-of-way, and local issues; industry capacity; prevailing trends in construction costs; support for new development or increased economic activity in an area; condition of infrastructure; available funding; local consultations; and the best timing for specific improvements.

Suffice it to say that on any given project that's on that list, there are a number of variables that go into play to determine whether or not that project can be advanced and how quickly that project can be advanced. Any one or a number of these factors can change in the course of a year. We look at the whole picture. We update the list each and every year to ensure we're providing value for Alberta taxpayers' dollars.

The second part of the question relates to the question of related costs for each project. Alberta Transportation quite advisedly does not release budgeted costs for each individual project as this would negatively impact the open and public tendering process. If you put a number on a specific project as to what you expect it to cost you, it would be amazing at how close to that number the bids would come in. That doesn't give good value for money – you'd never get a good price that way – and it's not an accountable way to manage taxpayers' dollars. Information that Albertans want, that the road builders, the heavy construction contractors, the consulting engineers, and the municipalities across the province want are all publicly available.

As we go forward with road projects that are on the three-year plan that's publicly listed, as I said, on the Alberta Transportation website, there are a number of factors which determine when they go out for tender and whether they could be built on a timely basis. All the projects that are listed on that plan are important, Mr. Speaker. All of them we intend to do.

The question of the timing and the question of the cost are all as a result of a number of factors, so it would be totally inappropriate to provide a prioritized list of those projects showing numbers that relate to something other than how quickly you can actually get all the variables together and get that project going, and it would be totally inappropriate to provide a cost for each specific project prior to the tendering process going out to determine what those costs ought to be.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I wish we could for once in this House, on that side of the House, have an intellectually honest discussion about what we're asking for here. [interjections] This is absolutely the epitome of . . .

Ms Blakeman: Honest or intellectual? Which were you objecting to?

I'm sorry.

Mr. Anderson: No, no, no. I was agreeing with you. It's incredible to think that, you know, maybe we hold them in as high a regard that we can actually have an honest discussion about this.

This government sits there time and time again, looks at the opposition over here, and says: "Okay. What would you cut?" Now, the problem with saying, "What would you cut?" is that in order to understand what we would cut, to know what we would cut by only building $4 billion of infrastructure as opposed to the $5 billion that the government wants to build, which is the case – they're building $5 billion of infrastructure; we're saying $4 billion – there would need to be a prioritized infrastructure list which not only shows what is going to be built but what is on the list going forward, what requests have been made but are not going to be built by government going forward, the order of priority not only for the projects that were approved but also the projects that are not yet approved. If they would just do that, Mr. Speaker, we would all know what the difference in our infrastructure plans would be.

But they say: "Well, you guys just have to tell us. You just have to tell us what you're going to not build." Well, we do not have the resources of government. We don't have people sitting on the side of the road with a clipboard tracking every car that goes by on the road or have the ability to have people go out and see whether there needs to be maintenance on a certain road or have hundreds of people working in the government bureaucracy to decide which projects should be fast-tracked for safety reasons and which ones can wait a couple of years. We don't have, obviously, the government resources to do that. What we need is the same thing that the public needs, which is the government to be open and transparent about that process, to make a prioritized infrastructure list and to put it on the website and make sure that we know not only the projects that have been approved but the ones that haven't yet been approved.

In the Wildrose 10-year capital plan, this is one of the things that we propose, and it will be one of the very first things that we do if we are elected in 2016, put out an infrastructure priority list. We would break it into four envelopes, Mr. Speaker. There would be health care infrastructure, health and seniors' facilities infrastructure; education infrastructure; roads, the highway network and so forth; as well as other, things like museums, cultural facilities, recreational facilities, and so forth. We'd break it into those four envelopes. We would make sure every request – let's use the Education file as an example. We would look at every single request that came in from the many different school divisions across the province, because they all submit to government a priority list for their school board that they've come up with, with access to information that they have about their needs and so forth.

Now, at that point they send it in, and the government probably receives – I don't know the number because it's not published, obviously. That's why we're here. But they probably receive a thousand requests for a school – I'm just throwing a number out there – a thousand new school and maintenance requests. Okay. Great. Then they go and announce like they did this past week 17 lucky winners. Was it 17 or 20? What was it? I can't remember, but whatever it was, the 17 or 20 schools, they announced it. The other people, the other 900 requests for schools on that list or 500 or 300, have no clue where they are on the list. They have no idea where they are.

People say: oh, well, they know because they submit lists. No, they don't. Edmonton public and Calgary public don't know where the schools that they put forward are. They know where they are in ranking according to other schools within their own school division, but they don't know where they are with regard to priority in comparison to the schools requested by Calgary Catholic, Calgary public, Edmonton Catholic, Rocky View school division, Red Deer, and so forth. They don't know.

That's the point of the prioritized infrastructure list. Put all those schools, all those requests into the pot. Then all those wonderful, smart people in the Ministry of Education or the Ministry of Infrastructure or the Ministry of Health and so forth can prioritize all of those requests, one through 500 or a thousand or whatever it is, and say that number one is the most needed, all the way down to the least needed.

Then what we would do is that we've said that a certain amount of that money, that $4 billion, would be put towards new schools. Whatever it is. Say that it's a billion dollars; say that it's a quarter of it. So we put a quarter of it into the Education file. Then you would be able to see exactly or very closely – of course, you have to tender it and so forth, but you'd be able to make a very educated guess as to which projects would be built under a Wildrose government with that $1 billion and what would be built by the PCs or the NDPs or the Liberals, whatever they say they are going to spend on Education infrastructure projects. It would be open. It would be transparent. Everybody would see it.

But the government doesn't do this. They don't do it for schools. They don't do it for roads. Oh, they publish a request sheet. It's in order according to highway number. Wow. That's fantastic. We've got it in order for highway number. How about in order of priority? We don't know what the priority is. We have no idea what the priority is because the government won't put an infrastructure priority list for roads out there. Sure, they have what they're going to build in the next three years, but what about beyond that? Communities are trying to build their infrastructure and are trying to plan smartly for growth, and a lot of that growth is going to be contingent on whether they get support for a provincial project, for a school, for a health facility, for a road.

They can't plan like that, Mr. Speaker, because they don't have a ruddy clue what's coming down the pipeline, and they don't know when they're going to get it. They are told: "Oh, it's on the five-year list. It's on the 10-year plan. It's on the seven-year plan. It's on the six-month plan." Who knows where it's at? No one knows where their project is unless it's in the specific budget for that year or for the three-year infrastructure plan, and even the three-year infrastructure plan can be adjusted quite a bit, so something that's on there doesn't necessarily get built in the three years. I think most of us who have been here longer than a couple of years have had that happen to us.

As an example, Mr. Speaker, let's take Beaumont. I know for a fact and you know for a fact that Beaumont needs a new school.

They really need a new school. Well, I didn't see Beaumont in the new school announcement. I thought Beaumont was one of the highest needs areas in the entire province. That's what the data seems to suggest. That's what has been suggested in this House by the Education minister and others. Yet they weren't on the list. Okay. Maybe there's a legitimate reason. I'm not saying it was political, but the people of Beaumont don't know that.

What could have happened is that they could have been number 10 on the list and somebody might have said: "You know what? Ah, we don't really need a school in Beaumont. Let's put it here. This is a more politically hot area over here. Why don't we make sure that that MLA gets their school so that they can announce it, and then Beaumont can wait another year?" Maybe that's not what happened. I don't know. Nobody does because the list is not printed.

The criteria by which things are prioritized in the government is also not printed. They have some vague, "Oh, you know, it's need, and it's maintenance, and it's da, da, da," but they don't have any formula. They don't have any waiting system, any kind of public document that, frankly, could even be audited. It's all just conjecture and feel-good stuff. It's ridiculous to do it this way, it's incompetent to do it this way, and it's wrong to do this way.

It's also very frustrating. I think I do understand. I know the government won't like this, but I do understand because of my opportunity to sit there for two years and to be able to be on that side of the aisle. I know for a fact that politics does come into play when it comes to infrastructure funding. I know that because when I was with caucus, Airdrie was in high need of a school, many schools, actually.

Mr. J. Johnson: You got the schools.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. We did get the schools. Absolutely. Very good.

But in 2008, pre-election, roughly 30 schools were announced, and Airdrie was not one of the schools even though it literally doubled in size in a 10-year period. It didn't get the announcement of schools. But there were roughly 10 in Edmonton, the exact same number in Calgary, and then the rest were spread around.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of things that come to mind for me when I look at the government's rejection of this request. There's a request for a prioritized list of Alberta Transportation's three-year construction plan, 2012-15, listed according to priority rather than highway number. This strikes me as entirely reasonable and also doable despite the Government House Leader's protests.

Part of the reason that I know it's doable is the government's very own ministry business plan, Budget 2013: Responsible Change. On page 70 of Transportation's business plan under performance measure 2(a) is the physical condition of provincial highway surfaces. The last actual was in 2011-12. Then there's a target for '13-14, '14-15, and '15-16. So the government must know which highways they're going to build or fix, or they wouldn't be able to do the allocation that they have done here. They're able to tell us that the percentage of highways in good condition, which was last determined in '11-12, is 58.6 per cent. But, in fact, that is going to go down so that by 2015-16 only 52 per cent are expected to be in good condition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the government knows what their priority list is, or they wouldn't be able to make this kind of a statement in their business plan. They're able to say the percentage in fair condition. This is slightly better news, by the way. The last actual for that in '11-12 was 26.8 per cent, and it is expected to go up to 30 per cent. So 30 per cent of the provincial highway surfaces are expected to be in fair condition. But the very last category is bad news again because the percentage of highway surfaces expected to be in poor condition, the last check mark, is 14.6 per cent. It gets worse because they're expecting 16.5 per cent to be in worse condition in '13-14, 17 per cent to be in poor condition by '14-15, and 18 per cent to be in poor condition by 2015-16.

Clearly, the government knows what they're fixing and what they aren't, or they wouldn't be able to make that kind of a projection for which highway surfaces are going to get better or how many are going to get better or what percentage is going to get better and what percentage is going to get worse. So they have the information.

I was really interested in listening to the Government House Leader and the objections he was putting forward or his criteria for rejecting this request. He went into a long list of people that use these statistics and seemed to be saying that, well, what others would wish for or wish information for is somehow a factor in answering a request from the Official Opposition. He seemed to be saying – and he's welcome to get up and argue with me on this one, of course, Mr. Speaker – that, you know, if the Alberta transportation network or the contractors association or whoever isn't interested in this information, then the opposition doesn't get it either. It was a very convoluted argument, so I don't accept that either.

He also mentioned that, you know, how could they possibly know all the timelines and when supplies would come and what the season – I'm assuming that the seasons would affect the timelines in building things. How could they possibly give a prioritized list? Well, really? The government is telling us that they don't know how long it takes to build a highway? I'm pretty sure they can tell me within a couple of days how long it takes to build a kilometre of highway in southern Alberta, central Alberta, and northern Alberta. They've been doing this for a while. If they're not keeping statistics, we're all in trouble. That's what we expect government to do is to be able to cover that kind of thing. To say, "Oh, we don't know how much the supplies will cost or how long it'll take to come," well, okay. Yeah. If you're going to be ordering supplies from – what's the most recent thing that happened here? They ordered steel from Quebec instead of using local companies. Does anybody else on this one remember what it is they're doing?

Mr. Eggen: For the proposed arena. Bidding for the proposed arena.

Ms Blakeman: Are you serious?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, for God's sake.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: I'm so sorry, Mr. Speaker. Okay. So that's actually the city of Edmonton's fault, not the government's. Okay. I won't blame you for that one, then. I'll take that back.

It's just beggars belief that the government doesn't know how long it takes to do, you know, any given stretch of highway or how long it takes to get the supplies or even how much seasonal time they have to build it. I mean, please. The government loves to tell us how long they've been in power, and then they turn around and say: "Yeah, but we weren't paying attention. We didn't keep any statistics, and we have no clue how long this takes." Ah, nah. That one doesn't work.

I'm not saying that the government is doing this, but I am certainly laying out that it is quite possible to do it, which is why you want the kind of transparency that's being asked for. Without a prioritized list, it does allow the government to electioneer using projects. They can go into a community they're not doing well in or, gosh, that was won by another party and say, "We are going to promise you a school and a highway and a bridge and an arena and all kinds of things," all of which may well be on the list. But if you don't have to publish that list in any way, nobody is able to say: "No, no, no, no. Hold it. You promised a school to us." What's the other one somebody was talking about here? Airdrie, I think, wanted a school, and they got it. You know, if that transparent list isn't there, then the government can in fact use it for electioneering and should not be able to.

I'm not saying whether they do or don't. I'm just saying that if we really want transparency here, the best transparency is open data, and an openness that says: yes, this is the prioritized list, and we can do it in three-year increments, three, five, 10, 20. That would be fine. It does allow communities to do better planning around when that disruption might be happening, when they could maybe work out a deal to have additional work done in their town with the same contractor, et cetera, et cetera. It also allows everyone else to hold the government to account if they start promising the world during an election time. Well, they wouldn't be able to do that if there was a prioritized list, so it does also save the government from any accusations of that ilk.

The last piece, Mr. Speaker, is the increasing reliance on private contractors for the maintenance of highways. I know that a while ago Parkland did a paper, Delivery Matters, 2013, on infrastructure maintenance. They do go through how to figure out whether or not this government is maintaining our assets – that is, our infrastructure – the bridges, the schools, the hospitals, the highways. There's money put into that. It's a physical thing. It's worth something. We could sell it if we needed to, but we're not going to sell it. We can put a price on it, and it absolutely is an asset. Here was Parkland looking to say: okay; well, how do we know whether the value of it is being maintained?

As I just pointed out to you in that business plan, which is the government's own ministry business plan, they know that there is going to be a degrading of the highway surfaces over a period of time. That they'll admit to. But when you're trying to find out, you know, how well any given area is being maintained, if it's a private contractor, all of a sudden you're into that gigantic loophole in FOIP that is called third party. They won't release the information unless the third party gives permission to release it, and really, Mr. Speaker, very, very, very few third parties will agree to release that information. That's a lack of transparency on behalf of the government as well.

As we get into more and more P3s from the government and those sorts of arrangements, we never get to see the bids that come in, we don't get to see the contracts that are signed, and we don't get to see any kind of performance measurement that goes on. First of all, well, it's a private, closed-bid process, and you can't see the bids because of that. Then we're into FOIP because there's a contract with the government and the private operator.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and talk about this issue. As somebody who also went onto the Alberta Transportation website – I took the hon. House leader's advice and went on there. I went and took a look. On there it says, first of all, that it's a tentative list, so there's nothing clear about that. Then it goes on to list them in order. It absolutely does list them in order, but it lists them in order of highway name – for example, highway 63 – and then it goes through a series of numbers, highway 790, highway 587. It lists them in order of the highway name.

In no way, shape, or form does it say in which order each highway would be dealt with. It doesn't say where they're at on the list. It doesn't say what the priority is. It doesn't say what the priority isn't. It doesn't say what the tentative timeline is. It doesn't say anything about costs. It doesn't say where they're at in the process. So a tentative major construction project list is nowhere near a public prioritized project list like the opposition has been asking for, like every single Albertan has been asking for, and like every single municipality, every single school board has been asking for. Mostly Albertans just want to know where their needs fit on the list.

I would go so far as to say that almost every single Albertan understands that the needs change in this province. We all are very, very clear that what might be the priority this year could change next year. I think Albertans said that loud and clear when we saw the tragedies of highway 63. After those seven people died on highway 63, I don't think there was anybody who said: "No, no, no. Don't do anything up there because I want my stop sign first before you do anything with highway 63." I think it was made clear across this province that they wanted to see highway 63 become a priority, and the Wildrose would have made highway 63 a priority as well.

When you go through this list, it starts off with – and I'm looking at the very first page – highway 1. Then it says, under location, "4 Km W of Bow Valley Trail – 1 km E of Hwy 1X (selective near Canmore)"; type of work, "Preservation/Overlay"; estimated length, 39 kilometres. That's what it says. That's directly from the Ministry of Transportation's website. The Minister of Infrastructure consistently sends us back to this list and says to us every single day when we ask the question about projects that it is published. It's not public. It says the highway. It says the location. It says the type of work and estimated length. It says nothing about the priority.

Are the Minister of Transportation and the Minister of Infrastructure saying that everything to do on highway 1 is the priority, so we'll start with number 1, and we'll work all the way through the numbers until the end? I'm sure he's not. Or is he saying that within highway 1 all the way up to highway 890 or whatever it goes to there's prioritization of those projects? I'm sure that there is. That would only make sense.

Now, there's no reason not to tell the public what those prioritizations of those projects are. For example, the very second line says, again, under highway, highway 1, location, "Hwy 9 – 1 km E of Hwy 817 (E of Calgary)"; type of work, "Preservation/Overlay"; estimated length, 21 kilometres. In no way, shape, or form does this website state that the second item has more priority than the first item. It doesn't even say if it has any priority. It doesn't say where it is in the process. It's in the tentative government-owned transportation projects near completion, under way, or scheduled in 2013-2016. If you couldn't get any more vague, it wouldn't be clearer than that.

If you scroll down, if you continue down the list – again, like I said, it goes: highway 1, highway 1A, highway 1X, highway 2, and it goes consecutively all the way down until it ends at the number of highways that are within that three-year span, but nowhere on there does it say anything about the priority of it. For example, under highway 43, which is six pages into the list, it says: "E of Crooked Creek – W of Sturgeon Lake IR 154," "Twinning – Grade, Base, Stage Paving," 17 kilometres. Where is that in the priority list? What stage is that at? Is it a number one priority? Is it a number 101 priority? Is it the third priority? Is it going to come before 63? After 63?

I'll even go to my own riding, where we're getting some paving. We're very happy for that, but, for example, highway 587, which is in my riding: "9 km W of Hwy 766 – 7 km E of Hwy 766 (SW of Innisfail)," "Preservation/Overlay," 16 kilometres. That is on page 11 of 16. Again, it doesn't say anything about priority anywhere in the document.

The Minister of Transportation and the Minister of Infrastructure consistently tell the opposition: "Go to the website. It's laid out. The priorities are there. Albertans know exactly where they stand with every project." No, they don't. They just know that these projects are listed here. If any one of them drops off, we don't know why. We don't know what bumped them, and I think Albertans want to know that. Nobody is asking for some sort of really detailed, ooh, secret list. In your own ministry clearly you have a priority of which projects you're allotting the money to, and that only makes sense. We're just asking: why not let all of Alberta know that?

This government constantly talks about being open and transparent and always telling Albertans exactly where they stand, but what you have with this list is that when somebody gets bumped off the list, the community is never told why they got bumped off the list or why something became more important. I think that if most communities knew that they had to wait, you know, that they were number 10 on the spot and may be moved up to number 8 or moved down to number 12, they would understand that because they would understand that clearly there is a prioritization, and there would be criteria for how that prioritization is applied.

For the Minister of Transportation and the Minister of Infrastructure to consistently go back and tell the opposition all the time that it's on the website – Albertans have been on your website. It's not there. I would encourage the Minister of Infrastructure to actually look at the website and explain to me how it's prioritized. If it's prioritized by highway number, then great. Let us know that. But if he's not going to say that, then there is no priority allotment to this.

Now, the Minister of Infrastructure, you know, shakes his head at me and thinks I'm acting all strange and all that kind of thing to ask for a prioritized list. Well, he can do that, but this isn't me asking for this list. These are constituents in the province of Alberta who are saying to the Minister of Infrastructure: "I go to your website. I don't see a priority listed to any of these projects." If I'm confused about that, Minister of Infrastructure, I'm more than willing to have you sit down with me and educate me on how your website works, and if there's some sort of interactive part of this that I'm not understanding, I'm certainly more than willing to do that. But I've sat down with Albertans. They don't see a priority on this list, and I'm sure the Minister of Infrastructure and the Minister of Transportation don't either.

Now, if you go even further than that, we know that Alberta Health Services and we know that the school boards are expected by the government to submit a prioritized list to the government. They put their capital projects in order of priority. They put it over a plan of three and five years, and they submit to the government what is the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, 10th priority. They literally go through and submit that list to the government. Then the government takes that list.

The Minister of Education has explained quite clearly how it works for him, and I think he gave a very good explanation. He talked about how they take the needs of the school boards, and then they take a look at growth in the province, and they come up with the priorities that they're going to build schools in. I think that if that's the way you're going to do it, then that's fantastic. But why not make that known to everybody? Why not let every school board know that when they submit the list, they're to go through this formula, and they're going to work together to figure out what the priorities are for each local school board and then what the priorities are of the province, and you come together and have consensus and then make it public?

Then to go even further than that, Alberta Health Services does the same thing. We know Alberta Health Services submits their capital request, and we know Alberta Health Services has different capital requests than what the government's priorities are. We've seen it. We've known that Foothills hospital has a situation with mould in the kitchen. It's been on the list to be fixed for years. You know, that kitchen has been in place since 1960. This government claims to have a priority for home-cooked meals. That's yet to be seen, but they claim to have that, yet we have a kitchen at one of our major, major hospitals that has mould in it. It didn't even make it onto the Alberta Infrastructure list, and nobody knows why. Nobody knows when it will make it onto the Alberta Infrastructure list. No idea, none at all.

The same with the building of hospitals. Why not make it public? Why not have community input into that? Why not share with Albertans exactly what the process will be for developing infrastructure in the province of Alberta?

Now, the Minister of Infrastructure, every time we ask a question like this, often says: go to the website. I've said that already. When you go further down the website . . . [Mrs. Towle's speaking time expired] Perfect.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a brief comment on this motion, that I find very interesting because, of course, when we talk about infrastructure projects, we're not just dealing with roads. Really, there are a whole range of projects that are being promised or prioritized to be built by the Crown. Then it's a question of when they're going to start with the construction and when we might see them come to fruition and in which order.

I think it's a practical suggestion by the hon. member that we should have a prioritized list because, of course, capital projects such as roads and buildings take a long time to go through various stages of planning, and there are many other investments that can take place around that capital project, especially of roads, that might involve other economic interests. If we know that a road is going to be upgraded so that larger and heavier trucks might be able to use it, for example, Mr. Speaker, then this is a means by which different resources or industries might pursue and develop economic interests based on the availability of that road. Right? If a road is upgraded so that heavier trucks can be used, you could have some economic development anywhere along that road, for example. It's a practical way that not only the individuals in the constituencies can look to see where their infrastructure is going, but also it's a way by which our economy can make long-term plans for the future.

I know that in my own personal experience before I became an MLA and was a teacher, I did pave roads as well as part of my jobs in the summer for university. I know for a fact that they do make those long-term plans with construction companies, paving companies for two, three, four, five years in advance – right? – and indeed over the lifetime of a road in terms of its management and its upkeep there is a schedule by which, you know, a road might be upgraded or maintained over time. In a way, this is information that we could probably discern using some kind of detective skills that highway 22 needs to be paved on a five-year regime. If you're being responsible stewards of that Crown infrastructure, then you should pave it during that time. I mean, really, it would take a lot of the mystery out of this process if we could in fact see that prioritized list made public on the website.

You know, we're not asking to put this prioritized list and write it in stone. Indeed, we're writing it electronically on the Internet, and we know that things do change, right? We have changes in plans. We have changes in our assets, changes in our revenues that might determine that that prioritized list would change. I don't think Albertans would take offence to that. Certainly, the level of transparency even with a list that does change over time being available to the public I think would trump the sort of cone of silence that we have to live under now in not seeing which projects are prioritized or, indeed, how they do go on or fall off that same list.

You know, we know that building infrastructure, particularly roads, and other projects is on three-, five-, or even 10-year cycles, so it's a bit ridiculous to presume that we can't figure that out as members of the Legislature or members of the public. Again, I won't reiterate to a great extent what others have already said in regard to the depoliticization of building capital projects in certain places and using certain timing, but we all know that that does happen.

I think that as we seek to change the way we do politics and increase the transparency and the democratization of the politics that we practise here in the province of Alberta, this would be a nice step so we could see when the road is going to get paved or not get paved, which order it's in, and people can make judgments about that. But if we have it behind this drapery that we pull forward or we pull back – and the curtain is drawn at this point – and if we see a sudden flurry of capital projects being pulled out from behind that curtain, let's say, in the last year before an election, then that adds to this sense of cynicism and confusion about good government and wise choices based on need rather than political issues, right?

I mean, the same thing extends to schools, to health centres, to all sorts of capital projects that we need and would like to see. For me as the critic currently for K to 12 education the new school list is very interesting and very relevant to people. You know, we saw a flurry of announcements last week, which were great, in regard to some new schools. Like, I mean, what happened? What was the process, and why were these choices made? We could even extend that to the portables and the modulars that are required to help our schools meet the needs of our growing population.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, as we drive along the dilapidated roads that we see not just in Edmonton but all across the province, it reminds us daily, I think, of the contrast between what we are told is the wealth that we live amongst and live with here in the province of Alberta, the discrepancy between that and what we see when the rubber hits the highway, so to speak. We could do a lot better; we could have infrastructure that's in keeping with our growing population and with our growing economy. You know, Edmontonians are faced with that every day when we smash our way through potholes and so forth. I know that we could do a lot better, and we could see in a more transparent way across the province how that infrastructure is being doled out and, hopefully, being doled out based on need, based on a schedule of maintenance, a schedule of capital investment.

I think that everyone would benefit from that, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to stand and speak to this motion that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of the projects itemized in the Alberta Transportation three-year construction plan, 2012-2015, listed according to priority rather than highway number, with related costs for each project.

As the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, my colleague, has mentioned, I think this is a pretty reasonable request. A prioritized list makes a lot of sense. It should be standard operating procedure, I submit. Citizens have a right to know. Jurisdictions certainly need to know. They need to know when their projects are going to be approved and when they're likely to be built. Their citizens require it of them, and they require that for good governance in managing their own time and resources. They need clear criteria about why their project may be where it falls on the prioritized list. Of course, they'd like it to be fast-tracked and be as close to the top of the list as possible. That's human nature.

It also may be reality. If they know what the criteria are and if those criteria are clear and transparent, then they can tweak their request or they can make the point a little better about what the government seems to think or the Transportation department in this case might think are the important factors that they are considering when they're making their decisions and making that prioritized list. They could tweak their pitch, so to speak.

Without this clear, transparent prioritized list with the reasons or the criteria, the government comes under a cloud of suspicion, as has been alluded to, that the government uses projects and project approval as a bit of a club. And as someone who has been on village council as a mayor and as a councillor and maintains relationships with other councils and councillors today, of course, because I now represent a riding that has counties and MDs in it and many community councils, there is a sense that if they don't – I don't know. Is “kiss up” allowed, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Bikman: All right. Great. I don't know what's allowed and what ain't. Right?

You know, they feel like they kind of have to kiss up. We won't say where because that probably isn't allowed. Nevertheless, there's a sense that they are under some threat, that if they vote left instead of right, they might come out on the short end of the stick, so to speak. There is a sense that the government may be using this to keep the voters in line, to keep the population a little more under control and dependent.

Now, I don't believe in entitlements, generally, but I think Albertans are entitled to know where their projects are on the list and why and what they need to do to keep their project moving up the list. Budget estimates on projects are just that: estimates. It would be all right to share how your engineers and your people have costed out a project. Surely, they're doing it. I can't imagine they're suggesting a project without first taking the time to count the cost, as an ancient Middle Eastern proverb suggests is the wise approach to take.

I believe, quite candidly, in the free enterprise system. I believe that in a free market, even with an estimated cost of a project, if there's a clear, transparent, open, fair bidding process that is not designed to eliminate some bidders and tilt the table in favour of some other bidders, then I think that the prices and costs would actually come down. That's a problem that we do have in Alberta. Projects that we build do go over; we know that they go over cost. I can't imagine that we've had a project built in our province in the last decade or two that actually came in under budget. If we did, I'm sure we'd all like to know about it because if we knew that it happened, we might be able to see how it happened and why it happened and replicate that desirable outcome.

As it is right now, I have a sense and there is a sense from conversations that I've had that things are just never quite on a level playing field. The bidding and tendering process, when it occurs – of course, we know it hasn't occurred with regard to power line construction. If we did have a level playing field for the bidding, then I think we would be very pleasantly surprised at how much more we could accomplish with our taxpayers' dollars. Remember, it's taxpayers' money that we're spending. We're not spending our own money; we're spending the taxpayers' money. Having open, published, transparent lists that are prioritized would require us to be better stewards, would require the government to be a better steward.

I think that all we're asking for with this request is for the government to be transparent and accountable. Well, I'll bet it would even start a transformation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. McIver: I'll be brief, Mr. Speaker. You know, I hear things about: it's the taxpayers' dollars. I agree with that. They are the taxpayers' dollars, and that's exactly why we're operating the way we are. We're respecting the taxpayers' dollars in trying to get them a good deal. If we were to go ahead with this, essentially what the opposition is asking us to do is to hand the taxpayers' wallets over to the contractor and say: “Well, here's all the money we have. Please don't take it all, but do the work.”

We're actually putting them in a competitive situation where they have to try to undercut their competitors, get the work while underpricing other people. Of course, if we put out in the first place the budget that we have to work with, it takes away that protection for the taxpayers. Actually, to talk about supporting this particular question in its current form and talk about protecting the taxpayers is completely diverse, separated by 180 degrees. So that's why we're rejecting the question.

Further, in terms of the priority list, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that everything that we're funding is on the website, as mentioned by some of the hon. members across, and everything that isn't funded isn't on the website. It was mentioned that people need to know ahead. They know three years ahead what we're planning on funding. Would they have us tell people a hundred years ahead? No, actually I don't think the opposition would have us tell people what we're going to build a hundred years ahead because that would be ridiculous. All we're really talking about here is degree. We tell them three years ahead. At some point it doesn't become useful anymore.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when people talk to me about what's on the funded list, they say, "Is my project funded, or isn't it?" You know what I don't hear: am I number 15 instead of 17? I never hear that. They want to know: is it funded, or isn't it funded? If it's not funded, they sometimes will say, "Why not?" and we talk about that we have to set priorities, which is exactly the fact. Whether something funded is 15th or 17th is irrelevant, and if something is unfunded, whether the first unfunded or the 10th unfunded, it isn't relevant either except for the fact that it would introduce one element that the opposition says they don't want. They don't want politics.

Well, if you want politics, what you want to do is release a list that says that this is one, two, three, four that aren't funded. It would give people hope that they could get in. It wouldn't work because we're objective in how we do these things and try to do the projects that give the best value for Albertans first, but it would really inspire people, good people that have a reason for wanting these projects, to come forward and say: if I could just politic a little harder, maybe I can get it moved up the list. We actually decide on the projects not on the basis of politics but, rather, on the basis of need, on how we'll get the best value for Albertans, how we'll deliver the most infrastructure that will do the most good for Albertans.

You know, the folks over there even talked about worrying about whether people are going to get fair treatment. One example was mentioned in the House. Six schools were announced the other day. Four of them were in nongovernment ridings. It's just because that was where the need was. That's how we do things here, and that's how we intend to keep doing them.

In order to serve Albertans best, protect the taxpayers' interests – the question, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, is contrary to those things, which is why we will reject it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief here as well. You know, it's one of these things where I think it was in the throne speech where the Premier put forward her vision for this province of having an open and transparent government. What could be more open and transparent than publicizing a priority list for transportation projects? Put out the list; put out the expected costs. I think taxpayers would forgive the government if there were overruns due to unforeseen factors or factors that were beyond the control of government.

This is where we could then see. If you had a prioritized transportation list or infrastructure list, you could say: this project is a priority for certain reasons, and this isn't. You could see, for example, some of the rationale of why MLA offices are at the top of the priority, at the very top for this government. A rooftop garden is apparently one of the top priorities for this government, to create this rooftop garden on top of brand new MLA offices, or a movie theatre, or something like that. We need to see . . .

Mr. Anderson: You get a movie theatre.

Mr. Saskiw: Yeah, you get a movie theatre in this new MLA office. It's quite outstanding, actually, that taxpayer dollars are wasted on that.

You know, I applaud the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for putting forward this motion for a return. What it would do is allow all Albertans to see what the priority list is for this government over the next three years. Instead of spending the week making announcements and berating the opposition in front of I think it was kids in grade one – that was the tactic that this Premier decided to take when she made these announcements – what we could do is something positive. We can have this government put forward a public, open, transparent, prioritized infrastructure and transportation list so that all Albertans can see what has taken place.

I think that the Minister of Transportation may have just forgotten that the city of Calgary has a prioritized and open and public and transparent transportation and infrastructure list. I don't know if it's been a year or two or whatnot, but I think that the member should take a look at what was done in the city of Calgary and maybe take those good lessons learned there to the government of Alberta.

Apparently what happens is that once you get elected with this government, some of that knowledge of the past and some of those principles that were espoused in the past just kind of – poof – go away. They're not brought forward. Sometimes after people leave government – we saw Ted Morton espouse a whole bunch of principles after he left government, but when he was in government, they weren't there. Poof. They go. Mr. Speaker, in these circumstances let's have a principled approach, have an intellectual discussion, and have this put on the website.

I don't know what Hansard is going to do with "poof." I think they can put that in there but probably not the inclinations.

Mr. Speaker, let's do something right here. Let's have the Premier for once keep a promise. It would be, you know, a big thing if she kept a promise of being open and transparent and actually provided an itemized list in Alberta Transportation for the next three years. Keep a promise for once. It would be outstanding. I think that Albertans would be surprised that a promise was kept, but it would be outstanding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of this motion for a return, and I'd hope the government would reconsider its position. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I'm asking for is a simple request for the government to provide the list of its priority projects for the Department of Transportation. It is important. I've heard time and time again from the people in the construction industry that it is so difficult to effectively plan their men and their capital because projects come on and off the government's lists on what seems like a random basis.

Road builders have told me about times when Alberta Transportation pulled a considerable amount of roadwork without warning and that there was no consistency in the project planning. This, of course, makes contractors financially nervous. What can happen in that case is that they may try to capitalize the cost of their equipment over one year's projects rather than the five or 10 years' worth of work that the equipment and capital would last because they have no faith in the government's list, because they have no faith in the government following through on the amount of work that is planned. This is also true for employees, our tradespeople, and the importance of the capacity in our industry so that we can maintain the proper pricing that's required. Of course, it's the taxpayers who lose out in this scenario.

A priority list would provide certainty to contractors, allow them to plan ahead better, and in turn provide the best value for taxpayers' dollars and citizens of Alberta. Yet every time the government is asked to provide its priority list for transportation projects in Alberta, the minister says that a priority list is on the Alberta Transportation website. As almost everyone has said, however, it is not a prioritized list. It is, in fact, a three-year tentative list. A tentative list. When we compared 2011 to 2012, many things came off the list without being done, without an explanation as to why they weren't done. In one case, highway 61 in my constituency, half of the highway was done and not the other half, no explanation, and it goes on and on. The document on the Alberta Transportation website is titled 2013-16 Tentative Major Construction Projects list.

Also, during debate on the Transportation estimates when I asked the Minister of Transportation to release a priority list of what highways the government is going to work on and in what order they will be done, the minister responded:

The priority list is available, as I've told the hon. member before. He's clearly decided to ignore the advice. It's on our website. If he goes to transportation.alberta.ca, he will find the three-year capital plan there, the priorities that are approved.

I pointed out to the minister that the priority list he referred to on his department's website is a tentative list, first of all. In fact, as the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake mentioned, all the items but particularly the first five items on the list are all projects on highway 1. This is, of course, because the tentative list of projects is only arranged by highway number. The first seven projects on the list are on highway 1. It makes us all wish we lived on highway 1. Then there are 36 references to highway 2, followed by three references to highway 2A, then highways 4, 6, 9, 10, and 11 are mentioned and on and on.

Since the minister said that this is his priority list, I asked him if those first five projects listed on highway 1 are, in fact, the government's top five priority projects for the Department of Transportation. His response was: "I don't have a top five." Clearly, the tentative Alberta Transportation three-year construction plan is not a priority list. Although the minister has said time and time again that it is a priority list, he admitted in estimates that it is not.

What my motion for a return is asking for, so people who are actually working on these projects can gain some clarity into the government's plans, is for the government to provide the list of Alberta Transportation construction projects by priority, not by highway number. We are not asking for any new information here. We are just asking the government to reorder the projects that are done in this document and to list the projects by priority and not by highway number. Mr. Speaker, this should not be hard to do because, in fact, we know the government does have a priority list. They are just choosing to keep it secret. We know this because we FOIPed it and found out that there is a list.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has moved Motion for a Return 7.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion for a Return 7 lost]

[Motion for a Return 7 lost]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Film Industry Support

510. Mr. Pedersen moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reinstate a competitive tax credit regime for supporting the film industry in Alberta rather than the current grant system.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is great to be here today to introduce Motion 510 to the Assembly, a motion that urges the government to reinstate a competitive film tax credit system for supporting Alberta's film industry. As we are all aware, a system of grants is inherently flawed due to its basic nature, that of picking winners and losers. Any attempt to attract and maintain the film industry as part of Alberta's economy is laudable, but completely changing that process over the years has created instability and skepticism within the industry.

That is why I am proud to be here today to champion a return to a competitive film tax credit, a system that was successful, a system that works and is working in North America. There will be those that want government to get out of the way altogether, but I don't think that is the solution. There is a role for government, but we need to adapt with the industry, not against it.

A competitive film tax credit has many benefits for Albertans in and out of the film industry. Among the best reasons for a film tax credit, as I have mentioned, is that it does not pick winners or losers. It does not discriminate against one group over another or one company over another, and it does not make political decisions for the group with the best lobbyist.

A competitive film tax credit ensures that there is equality and freedom in the film industry, something that is lacking now across the spectrum, from the entry level and right on up to the major Hollywood productions. I know that we still have funding through the Alberta multimedia development fund, as I am sure other members will point out, but it is far from being a fair and equal system. While some stakeholders approve of the granting system, it still requires applications, reviews, and then waiting to see if your project is funded or approved for some or all of the funds.

Sometimes we forget to look outside of our borders to see what is being done elsewhere, and this is truly and sadly the case with film tax credits. We need to look no further than British Columbia, where the provincial NDP is promising to raise the film tax credit to 40 per cent should they win the election. That's going to do a lot of good when it comes to attracting and building a competitive film industry there because they have invested the time and the effort to diversify their economy and attract film production to B.C. This modest increase will make them even more competitive while making Alberta even less competitive simply because we refuse to look at what is working elsewhere.

We can also look to Saskatchewan for a lesson in what not to do as they recently eliminated their film tax credit. You may very well ask what happened once they made that decision, and the answer is that industry packed their bags almost instantly, and they're gone. It's similar to what happened here when we eliminated our tax credit. It's happening now in Saskatchewan, and other provinces are becoming even more competitive. What this is going to end up meaning is that there will be provinces that will forever be ahead of the game, and all the while Alberta becomes less and less competitive and attractive to the film industry and all of its support groups.

We know there have been some remarkable films produced at least in part in Alberta, whether it's Brokeback Mountain, Unforgiven, Inception, The Assassination of Jesse James, or Passchendaele. However, we are losing ground against other provinces when it comes to our competitiveness, not only because we eliminated our competitive film tax credit but also because we are failing to respond to the changing times in film. Now, this is not only about getting Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie to come to visit Alberta once every couple of years. This is about ensuring that we can attract film projects of varying scales, whether it's an independent film or it's Warner Brothers.

Through a film tax credit everyone benefits regardless of who your friends are and regardless of what your budget may be. In the end, don't we all want a sustainable and world-class talent pool that chooses to live and work in Alberta? It's not too late to restore a vibrant and successful industry to Alberta. I know there will likely be other members that will disagree with me on this, but I think that we need to fix a system that was changed by this government in the first place. We need to restore equality and fairness in our film industry, and we need to stop giving millions of dollars to the chosen few while leaving everybody else in the dark.

I would also be remiss if I did not talk about the spinoff effects of having a vibrant, diverse, and thriving cultural industry. We have been hearing a lot of talk about economic diversification for the last couple of decades, but all too often what we have seen are grants to multibillion-dollar corporations or subsidies given to friends or connected individuals. This has done very little to diversify the economy, and in some ways it actually hinders diversification because it shows people outside of Alberta that we aren't competitive or a fair place to conduct business, that we just give money without a long-term vision in place. Why would they come here when the government just gives a cheque to their competitor and when the government maintains an uneven playing field?

The same applies to the film industry, and we see the results of that every day. We know that when people come here to work or when they move here for work, they need to live within the community where they stay. They need to eat, they need to sleep, they need to buy gas, and they need to go out every now and then. Fortunately, that means that they are going to be spending money in local stores, staying at local hotels, or maybe buying a house, eating at a local restaurant and leaving a tip for an Albertan that works in the hospitality industry. All of these are good things, which is why we need to attract a film industry back to Alberta. We may not be Hollywood – and we don't need to pretend to be – but we can still be successful, and we can exemplify the Canadian culture, spirit, and work ethic we are known for around the world.

Another piece of the puzzle is the opportunity to consistently attract and deliver various sectors within the film industry so that we can develop and retain individuals in the spinoff industries such as postproduction. As we all like to talk about, producing a value-added product can be very beneficial to the long-term success of the industry and its many products. This is an opportunity to actually do something, to walk the walk and make sure that we are securing and maximizing on all parts of the process.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour and a privilege to be here to debate Motion 510, and I look forward to the discussion that we are going to have in the next little bit, but I want to close with this. We were all elected to ensure fairness and equality in everything we do, and I believe that this is an opportunity to do so. This is an opportunity to show the film industry and the world that we can be competitive and that they should come here to do business. We can show them that when they come here, regardless of the size of their project or what they are here for, they will be treated fairly and that they will receive the same treatment as everyone else.

We can diversify our economy. We can see the benefits of attracting business, people, and investments to our province, and we can restore the competitiveness of our film industry. I think those are all laudable goals, and I know they are all achievable. I believe that reinstating the film tax credit is but one way we can further diversify our economy, and I look forward to seeing stakeholders involved in developing even more tools to help their industry become even more competitive.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the debate we are about to have, and I hope my colleagues will support Motion 510. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased to stand today to speak on the motion from the hon. Member for Medicine Hat to create a competitive tax credit regime for supporting the film industry in Alberta. As the minister responsible for the film, television, and digital media industry in Alberta I recognize the importance of providing support to the talented Albertans who are our province's screen-based production sector, and I'm also proud to report that Alberta is a leader in this industry, with a competitive production incentive program nationally and regionally.

Our film, television, and digital media industry is an important part of Alberta's economy and a contributor to our cultural fabric. This vibrant industry employs over 3,000 Albertans. It is responsible for more than $400 million in economic activity over the last five years. We know that every dollar government invests in film, television, and digital media results in spinoff benefits for many other Alberta industries. Alberta's successes in film, television, and digital media also help to diversify our economy and to retain and attract talent and skilled labour.

This industry helps us tell more Alberta stories so we can showcase our province to the world. It is in our best interest that this industry not only remain competitive nationally and internationally but that it continue to grow. That's why the government of Alberta through Alberta Culture offers incentives to producers in this sector through the Alberta multimedia development fund.

The film, television, and digital media production industry is very competitive. Alberta contends not only with traditional production centres like Ontario but also with American states with comparable locations like New Mexico and Louisiana. Different production incentives are offered across Canada and North America to encourage local production.

Alberta's multimedia development fund, created in 1998, provides production incentives against all eligible production costs in a grant form as well as funding for Alberta production companies for project and script development, training and mentorship, export development, and market development. Now, through this fund production companies can receive up to 30 per cent of Alberta production costs back. So the comment about picking winners and losers is totally out of line because it's based on the Alberta span. We want the money to stay in Alberta.

Some competing jurisdictions in Canada and the United States provide tax credits as opposed to production grants for film, television, and digital media projects. These tax credit incentives are typically a refundable corporate income tax based on eligible expenditures or labour costs. By comparison our Alberta grant system provides up to a 30 per cent return on Alberta production costs, which is equivalent to a labour-based tax credit of up to 55 per cent. Alberta has always provided funding through a grant-based system. Our grant system has several advantages. It offers quicker payout times and a tax credit, a point producers very much like. Paperwork and administration requirements are very straightforward. Our system is very flexible and proactive, allowing us to adjust to changing needs in the production sector.

Regarding the future this discussion comes down to two points. First, regardless of what form a production incentive takes, we know it is needed for more jurisdictions to remain competitive and to attract production in support of their local industry. Second, while our current grant system is working well, we will continue to keep watch on trends in this sector so we can adjust our system accordingly.

Alberta Culture will continue to provide services that support the growth, sustainability, and business attraction of the film, television, and digital media industry, always being fiscally responsible. We will continue to work with industry and stakeholders through the Alberta Film Advisory Council to make sure that appropriate revisions are made to the incentive program when needed to maintain its effectiveness and to maximize its benefit to the industry.

As tax credits fall under the responsibility of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, Alberta Culture officials will continue to work with colleagues in that department to assess the effectiveness of support of this sector and its appropriateness with the province's overall tax policy approach. This government will remain an active partner alongside industry to make sure that our screen-based production sector is growing and is sustainable for our province.

Now, a bit of perspective here. The film Freezer was filmed entirely at the Film Alberta Studio in January with Dylan McDermott, and postproduction is now being completed here in Alberta. This is a first as this work usually goes south. Blackstone just wrapped up. This summer alone we have Klondike, six one-hour shows being filmed; Hell on Wheels, 10 one-hour shows; and Heartland. We know that people love our crews. We are trying to get people to come back to Alberta. We know they want to come back, and that's really important to me.

This industry is a reflection of our culture, and it contributed to our economy and quality of life. Job creation and diversification are the ultimate goals. For example, there was a student at NAIT who got to be a part of the film Freezer. He did some work on it, and he has his credit on his very, very first film. If that doesn't inspire a student at school, I don't know what does.

So before any change in how Alberta provides financial support to this sector can be made, this must be fully explored to determine what is best for the province and what is best for the industry overall. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to speak on this motion, and I'd like to thank the member for bringing it forward. We had to have some deliberation on this motion to reinstate the tax credit regime rather than the current grant system, and upon careful reflection we have chosen to support the motion.

It certainly is a complex issue, but considering the competitive industry – you know, many large film companies devote entire departments to looking at cross-jurisdictional analysis of film incentive programs to find where they might go. We don't have to look anywhere further in Canada than British Columbia and then Ontario to see how they nurtured over time, using tax incentives, some of North America's and, indeed, the world's very best film industries.

You know, it's important to have stability over time just like in any industry – right? – and to know that that regime is not going to change. What happened when we did take away the tax incentives here in the province of Alberta years ago was that we saw an exodus of film production companies and the spinoff industries and individuals who serviced those industries. Really, we haven't got them back, quite frankly.

Because movies can be shot anywhere in the world and because of the large dollars that are involved and the large returns that can come from a successful film industry, you know, we really missed the opportunity here by making a change. Certainly, I think it's the right idea to try to get that back and to make that commitment to a long-term set of tax incentives that are competitive with other jurisdictions around the world so that we can nurture the film industry that I think Alberta deserves both now and in the future. We know that, for example, when we shoot films in Alberta, the economic multiplier really exceeds almost any other industry that I can think of. You know, we see at least 10 or 11 times the original investment from a given film, a major production.

You know, I think that the damage is clear. We know that in 1996 the changes, like I said, from the Klein regime have caused the industry damage that we have never really recovered from.

A consistent message is certainly important. You know, the grant system can leave people out in the cold and can be quite arbitrary. I mean, picking winners and losers: maybe that's not the best way of putting it. Rather, it's a question of allowing the industry to build organically rather than just making arbitrary decisions about which projects might get grants or not.

In 2008-2009 the Minister of Culture at that point was publicly saying that we should introduce a revamped incentive system – very interesting – that could include a combination of tax credits, capital grants, and development grants. So we've heard those noises from over in the government side, and we shouldn't preclude the possibility of moving back to that sort of thing. That's why a motion, I think, is a good first step.

The current Minister of Culture said in 2012 that a discussion was ongoing about tax credits, but we haven't heard much about that since. Again, a very friendly reminder, very organic here, with the idea of the best interests of the industry and of the Alberta public: I think it's time to start that discussion again.

Alberta is the only province that provides grants as opposed to tax credits. I think we all know that. People who work in the creative sector say that without a tax credit system and a dedicated system for developing productions and talents, Alberta will never be as competitive as other provinces. You know, we've done research, talking to people in the industry in Edmonton and Calgary. They do say that there is some quick turnaround with grants, right? Maybe we shouldn't preclude the possibility of having some of those available, too, but the bedrock investment, the thing that will actually make the industry go over the long term, will be tax incentives, certainly.

You know, there are big-budget films. We just haven't really attracted that many. They pull out a few chestnuts and repeat them over and over because really there are just so few examples to choose from compared to a place like Ontario or British Columbia. Big-budget films are choosing to shoot in those places. For example, a $50 million film would receive almost twice as much funding in the province of Ontario as it would in Alberta, where the funding is capped through the grant system currently. In Alberta we need to come up with a system that works well for both small productions and large productions. Again, I think a tax incentive system would meet that need.

Alberta should have a tax incentive system, Mr. Speaker, that allows us to compete. I also would venture to say that we need to do more as well. I think that we need to invest in the film infrastructure that can support film production as well, to take it one step further. We have a critical lack, for example, of studio space across the province. If we had that infrastructure in place, made that investment, helped with that, every film production company, you know, would be helped, right? In 2013, this year, members of the film industry even began a public letter writing campaign asking for these issues to be addressed, and we haven't seen anything come of that so far. Building a creative hub both here in Edmonton and in Calgary I think is something that's long overdue. You can talk about it, but if you don't invest in it, it'll never happen.

Really, I see that the capital infrastructure spending that has taken place with this current government, with this Premier has actually been reduced significantly. We see it being reduced by at least $14.4 million, Mr. Speaker. You can talk all you want about culture, but if you don't put the money in there, it's not going to be there, right? It's just talk.

I think it's ludicrous to talk about gutting capital spending when there's already such a serious shortage of film infrastructure. If you move to a certain point, it's like the roads breaking down, right? If you don't do the maintenance at a certain point, you have critical failure, and that's what we're close to at this point with the film infrastructure in this province.

The New Democrats do support the motion to build and to nurture our film industry in the province of Alberta. We also see a broader issue about the undermining of our culture support in this province for a long time. We need to repair that damage, Mr.

Speaker, by investing in infrastructure and developing a more robust incentive program.

With that, I thank the member for bringing forward this motion. I certainly will vote in support of it, and I encourage others to do so, too.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I need a bit more information before I know whether I'm going to support what's being put forward. [A cellphone rang] Donuts for everyone. Whose phone is ringing?

An Hon. Member: Fifty bucks for the food bank.

Ms Blakeman: Or 50 bucks for the food bank. Oh. Miraculously, it stopped ringing. Okay. There we go.

This government – this government – under whichever Premier you want has really had not a love-hate relationship with film and television development and production in Alberta but more like a passive aggressive sort of relationship with them. At various times people, ministers, have been willing to stand up and say: “Yes, indeed, we understand how much money this brings into our province. It gives us great exposure. It actually has a quantifiable spinoff now on tourism because people come because they want to see where the film was shot, and/or they are just impressed by the scenery and want to come there themselves.” But we've also just had devastating cuts to the community.

I mean, at one point we were poised to overtake B.C. as the big film production centre in Canada. That was right when Premier Klein came in, and everything was slashed. They dumped AMPDC, which was the Alberta Motion Picture Development Corporation. They slashed the funding from wherever it had gotten to at that point, like, $30 million down to $3 million. I mean, everything just died. We had actually gotten to a point, as I said, where we were poised to beat out B.C. – and there's a lot of activity in B.C. – because we had things like the costume trailers, which are custom built. They're built to do a certain job. It's very particular, and it's very expensive. We had those. We had the lighting trucks. We had makeup and dressing room trucks. We had a lot of people who had invested a lot of money in film production in the province, and they just got into the truck and drove away and took their equipment with them because they had to work. They had bills owing on this stuff – it was not cheap – and they left.

Well, I remember the community working so hard to get the previous Treasurer, I guess it was, Stockwell Day, to go out and go to a film shoot and see, you know, what was going on there. There was always this great suspicion that somehow we were hatching anarchists or something in the editing suite, a very strange attitude of the government. Eventually the community did manage to convince the government that they were a good investment, and we moved to the three-stream system that has just now been adjusted.

I keep in touch with this community. I used to work in it as an actor. I do keep in touch with the actors' union, the Directors Guild, the Teamsters, IATSE, which is the stage and technical workers. There is a big community still in Alberta although they're very frustrated because so many of them still live here and pay mortgages here but are working somewhere else. I remember a really good conversation before the last election where a number of people got up and said: yeah, you know, my kid works in this industry, and I'd like them to work more at home and less out of the province.

There was an intense lobbying effort to get the government to adjust the three-stream system, and they have. Of the current three streams, stream 1 is indigenous/coproduction, which is funding up to 30 per cent of all the eligible Alberta costs, but it does require between 30 and 100 per cent Alberta ownership of the production. So you get a better deal. You get more if it's an Alberta production or has a lot of Albertans involved.

There is also stream 2. What they did was that they took the three streams and collapsed them because there was a way to kind of work the system that was happening with the three streams. They've collapsed them into two streams, and it seems to be working much better except for a whole bunch of other things. The second stream is the foreign/service ones. That's where you get the Hollywood ones coming in. They can get up to 26 per cent.

Now, let me give you the list of what they actually cover. The eligible expenses include postproduction – and I think that Alberta might be one of the few jurisdictions that actually covers postproduction costs – special effects; all rentals that they do, from fridges and trucks to costumes and all rentals; set construction and props; animation; craft services, which for you that don't know is food, feeding people; all of the Alberta labour that's involved in the production; food and accommodations; in-province travel; all production services; and additional to that. So it's covering a very wide range.

Now, when you go to tax incentives, quite often the tax incentives are based on labour. I'm not sure exactly what the sponsoring member was looking for, and I'd be looking for a bit of clarification. Neither system is terrific. There are drawbacks with the tax system. You know, what are you going to cover?

Two, in talking to people, actually, just recently at the Mayor's Celebration of the Arts and a couple of other arts events I've been at in the last week, the producers will admit that they get their money faster under this system than they would under a tax incentive system. Well, when your name is on the line and your house is put up as collateral, that means something. The percentage that you're getting back is also very good. I mean, are you talking about a tax incentive that's 5 per cent? Are you talking about one that's 50 per cent? What are you going to cover? So it's a bit more complicated. You haven't fleshed out for me what it is exactly that you're looking for.

An Hon. Member: Fifty-thousand feet.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Fifty-thousand feet? Yeah. I'm sorry. At 50,000 feet or taking it back to the principle of the thing: that doesn't cut it for me.

We fooled around a lot with this industry. It produces between $8 and $11 for every dollar that is invested in it by government, so it is an astonishing payback. I mean, honestly, if any of us could get that rate at the bank right now, we would be cashing out everything we had and running down to the bank to get 8 to 11 per cent back on every dollar that we put on. Holy mackerel.

We have a well-trained group of people in this province that know how to do it. We've got experienced producers, and the system that is in place currently has a couple of things in it that people wanted me to mention specifically, and that was that there is a commitment to mentor and bring along more Alberta labour and talent. They wouldn't want to see that lost under a different system. They were very specific that they didn't want to lose that mentorship piece.

I mean, this system isn't great. Part of it is the cap. There's a $5 million cap per production, I think, and in this day and age that's pretty small potatoes for the film community. You know, at this point a $5 million film is almost animation. It's very short. It's going to be, like, under 20 minutes. If you're talking about professional feature length, it's very hard to get anything done, whether the full amount of the film is $5 million or if your eligible grant is $5 million. I really hate the cap. When we're getting that kind of money back, why is there a cap on each production? That needs to go.

The second thing is that the fund itself for the same reasons needs to be much higher. I can't even remember how much is in there right now. Minister, is it $30 million? Nineteen million? How much is in the film fund right now?

Mrs. Klimchuk: It's $19 million.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, of course, through the Speaker.

It's $19 million, says the minister.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in favour of this motion, and I do so because I actually have a little bit of experience with the . . . [interjections] I couldn't hesitate to stand up and say that. If the hon. members will pull up the movie Double Jeopardy with Ashley Judd, you will notice that some of that filming was done in Howe Sound, right north of Vancouver. The reason that was done there is because of the tax credits that B.C. had in place. That's the reality. That was a film that was designed to represent Washington state, and the B.C. Film Commission, with the way they had their film credit system, was able to get a part of that film up into B.C. By the way, my wife's church in Edgemont Village was also in that chase scene in the middle of the village.

The point I want to make is simply this. To keep the film industry competitive, you have to realize what the competition is doing. When you look at the amount of economic activity the film industry brings, that is why these other jurisdictions do give tax credits to entice these movies to come film. Nothing is more, I think, depressing than to see a movie being filmed in Vancouver that's representing Calgary or Edmonton in its scenery, just for that very reason.

There's a potential here to attract, but the real potential is to make us competitive, and that's why I stand right now in support of this motion, for the singular purpose of making and keeping the Alberta film industry competitive. There's a lot of value that we're missing by not being competitive. If we were to have this type of tax structure, that would encourage and invite the industry to come here, to keep us competitive, particularly when we measure ourselves against these other jurisdictions like British Columbia, like Ontario. It actually increases our economic activity in the film industry, and that's something that should never be taken lightly.

When you do look at the film Double Jeopardy and you see the car go off the ferry into the water, I was in a boat just six metres out of the film as a member of the Canadian Coast Guard, looking to save anybody that was going to drown. Just for your own knowledge, the people in the car were actually filmed in a pool, so I didn't get to save anybody that day.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Motion 510, being brought forward by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat. The intent of this motion, from my understanding, is to reinstate a film tax credit regime similar to those found in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. My understanding is that this would replace the current grant system known as the Alberta multimedia development fund. The tax credit system proposed by this motion would reimburse production companies for filming in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the film industry is a substantial economic contributor to Alberta's prosperity. This is why any motion that claims to be aimed at protecting and bolstering that industry is worthy of serious and careful consideration in the House. It is also why I rise today to speak in favour of the hon. member's motion.

The film industry is a competitive one. There is no doubt about that. While it is often pointed out that Alberta's natural beauty makes it an obvious and attractive option as a filming location, any production company's bottom line is inevitably going to play a role in deciding where to film a project. Thus, we need to take a close look at Alberta's current grant-based system and whether or not it does enough to encourage film production in this province.

I had the luxury of introducing my father in the House recently as he was a former console operator, sitting above the clock. However, Mr. Speaker, he did that job as a way to supplement his income while he pursued and was successful in his own passion for film production. After studying film at Brock University in Ontario, he moved here to Alberta to begin his own film production company. It wasn't a difficult choice at the time as the industry was growing, and the potential seemed endless. However, times changed in the 1990s, and we are now able to realize the significance of the film and motion picture industry in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be fruitful in this conversation to examine the success stories stemming from the film tax credits. I do not believe that it is a coincidence that the two biggest and most prolific filming sectors in Canada, Ontario and Quebec, are two sectors that have implemented film tax credits. Though it trails behind Quebec for third place in film production, British Columbia also makes use of a film tax credit.

After doing some of my own research, the Ontario Media Development Corporation offers the Ontario production services tax credit, OPSTC. This is a refundable tax credit based upon eligible Ontario labour and other production expenditures incurred by a qualifying corporation with respect to an eligible film or TV production. OPSTC requirements are generally harmonized with the federal film or video production services tax credit. The latter is administered by the Canadian audiovisual certification office, the Department of Canadian Heritage, and Canada Revenue Agency.

The OPSTC has been expanded. For expenditures incurred after June 30, 2009, it is calculated at 25 per cent of all qualifying production expenditures in Ontario. Something big to note, though: there is no limit on the amount of qualifying production expenditures. In addition, this credit can be combined with the federal film or video production services tax credit for 16 per cent of qualified Canadian labour expenditures. Again, something substantial is that there is no per-project or annual corporate tax credit limits.

In order to ensure an economic return for the province, the OPSTC requires that eligible productions must exceed a production cost of $1 million. That typically means more money flowing back into the province in the form of jobs for local crews and talent, not to mention publicity for filming locations that pays off in the longer run.

Similar to Ontario, Quebec offers the Quebec tax credit for film production services. In order to qualify for this credit, productions must be of the eligible genre, and production costs must exceed $1 million. The matter is slightly different for the production of a series. For a series production with a running time of 30 minutes or less, production costs must exceed $100,000 per episode. Episodes with longer running times must exceed $200,000 per episode. I recently had the opportunity to tour the Blackstone television set being filmed right here in Edmonton by Prairie Dog films, and in talking to some of the industry representatives, the limitations we currently have restrict additional growth for these series. I believe the evidence shows that a film tax credit is potent incentive for production companies when choosing among locations.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reason to suspect that a tax credit will have the opposite effect here in Alberta to what it has had on the other film industries of Ontario and Quebec. We have some really talented individuals here in the province, and many of them have the dream to do business here in the province that involves the production of film projects. Any helping hand we may give them by attracting future employment prospects ought to be considered.

I spoke with one such individual last week. She went off to study her trade in British Columbia, but she has recently returned to Alberta, to Edmonton. Could she have more opportunity in British Columbia? She thought so, but she also has a passion for our province. Mr. Speaker, these are the people I want to stand for in this House and represent.

When leveraged along with Alberta's natural scenic appeal, I see no reason why a film tax credit could not take us closer to making Alberta a mecca for filmmaking in Canada. I'm not saying that this motion will singlehandedly change the industry, but I do think it's a big step in the right direction to have this conversation. This is why I will be voting in favour of the motion, Mr. Speaker. I wholeheartedly commend the hon. Member for Medicine Hat for bringing this to the floor of the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to lend my support to the motion put forward today by my colleague from Medicine Hat, Motion 510. "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reinstate a competitive tax credit regime for supporting the film industry in Alberta rather than the current grant system." It has been just over one year since the Member for Medicine Hat and I were elected in neighbouring constituencies to serve in this Assembly. One of the things we both campaigned on was to re-establish a film tax credit in Alberta to compete with other North American jurisdictions and restore Alberta's film industry.

The decision by this government to move away from a tax credit system and instead implement the Alberta multimedia development fund grants has not increased the competitiveness of Alberta's film industry. With the AMDF grants the government is now in the position of hand-picking winners and losers in the film industry. This motion is asking for a reinstatement of a competitive tax credit system for film industry labour costs. This type of tax credit would apply across the board and throughout the province as opposed to what is in place today.

Now, Alberta already has an advantage over some jurisdictions because of our low tax regime, including the fact that we do not have a provincial sales tax, although, unfortunately, the Premier's principal secretary would like to see our taxes hiked. Adding a tax credit would provide yet another incentive for film studios and production facilities to set up shop in Alberta and employ Albertans. It would put us on a competitive footing with B.C. and Ontario, both of which have a film tax credit for labour costs. As the hon. Member for Medicine Hat has said, in B.C. it's a big part of the election platform to actually increase the tax credit for the industry should the NDP win. The federal government also provides this type of tax credit. In fact, nearly all provinces with the exception of our province and Saskatchewan provide some type of film tax credit for labour or other expenses.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I ask all members of this Assembly to think about restoring a competitive film tax credit that would help the film industry in our province and to support Motion 510.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, you caught my eye.

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just rise as I noticed that we began debate about three minutes late. In order that we can get a vote today, I would like to ask for unanimous consent of the House to waive 3(1) and to continue past 6 p.m.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion by the Deputy Government House Leader, this requires unanimous consent, hon. members. So I'll ask one question. Is anyone opposed?

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering at this point whether we could have unanimous consent for one-minute bells.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. The motion by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills is for one-minute bells in the event of a division. I'll ask the question. Is anyone opposed?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Then if there's a bell, it'll be 10 minutes.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on this. I was very interested when this motion came up. Certainly, it's because I have what I consider to be a significant amount of experience in this area. I was a film student back in the '80s along with my television career, so I went to school with a lot of film students, kept in touch with them over the years, followed their careers, and was lucky enough last year to be appointed as co-chair of the Alberta Film Advisory Council. So I've spent the last year really immersed in this issue.

It's interesting. When we began to talk about just how workable the Alberta multimedia development fund is, I got a lot of feedback from people in the industry. In fact, for the last year I've got nothing but feedback from people in the industry. I feel there's a little bit of a disconnect from the information I'm hearing across the aisle and what I've experienced in terms of messaging.

What I'm hearing from hundreds of people that I've spoken with is that the AMDF creates a lot of TV and film production activity in Alberta. It keeps us competitive in the marketplace. Alberta's current system is easy to work with, and as all of those people told me, it is utterly fair. The rules are consistently applied. There's no jury, no bureaucracy picking shows they like and shows they don't like. It's strictly first-come, first-served as long as you produce shows that qualify under the guidelines.

Now, AMPIA, which represents the local film and television industry, is one hundred per cent behind the cultural grant system tied to production spending within the province because they say it's working. It's extremely convenient for everyone concerned. It's well understood by the coproduction partners from other parts of Canada and the U.S. and other parts of the world.

A tax credit system, on the other hand, is far more complicated. It's cumbersome, it's not as fair, it's not as efficient, and it's not desired by any of the people I spoke to in the industry. For example, the federal government funding mechanism, CAVCO, is a tax credit system. It's more labour intensive for both the governing body and the applicant than a simple grant. Tax credits require more complicated audits because the money trail is longer. All of this creates more bureaucracy instead of supporting art and artists.

Bureaucracy slows everything down. It makes productions more expensive. Producers have to work on loans or on deficit while waiting for that tax credit assessment to come through. Why make producers jump through more hoops, more paperwork, more expense when they should concentrate on doing good work? Money should funnel down to where it's needed and not back up the system like bad plumbing.

The current Alberta program is revenue positive. Grants are tied directly to spending within Alberta. More money comes back into the province in forms of tax revenue, increased economic activity than is invested in grants. So it fits into a strategy of economic diversification, and that fosters important areas like knowledge-based businesses, digital communications, web-based enterprises, even tourism.

Something else to remember is that this is a cultural program. It's not just job creation. It helps Alberta companies compete in the world marketplace, provides opportunities for creative Albertans to tell their stories to the world. Producers, writers, directors, actors, editors, cameramen, sound engineers, animators, musicians: all of those people are working in this province using this fund successfully. One company I spoke with has created hundreds of hours of programming using this fund, all of it across Canada, syndicated in more than 35 countries. They've now managed to build their own studio with two sound stages, nine edit suites, two sound production suites, and computer animation. This is a fund that's working.

Now, an economist at Simon Fraser University recently wrote that B.C. subsidies amount to a taxpayer cost of $125,000 per film. It kind of sounds like corporate welfare. I don't think you mean to suggest that that's a road we should go down, but it sort of sounds like it is. Do we need to look at other provinces as examples? Well, why don't we look at other provinces as examples? In Budget 2012 Saskatchewan announced that the province was winding down its tax credit. Why? Because this is the problem with tax credits. Industry experts indicate that a greater level of subsidization was required to remain competitive. You raise yours half a point, another company gives you a little bit more, then off you go to another part of the country. It's a race to the bottom. This is one of the problems with it. Provinces are now realizing what former Premier Klein had the foresight to point out years ago, that tax credits for film activities eventually become unsustainable.

Now, I talked to a couple of producers who came back from B.C. in the last year because, lo and behold, they have work here. They have work here, and they're happy about it. One of the things they talk about is this happy example of the fact that they're developing programs that are going into production. A tax credit does not support that kind of initiative. Development is what creates the critical mass of infrastructure here in Alberta. Tax credits work for companies who use Alberta as a location but migrate to wherever it's cheaper to produce the next time because the next province will have a bigger tax credit. That's the problem.

We have a program here that's working. When I talk to people in the industry, they love it. They love it. It works for them. We shouldn't fix what isn't broken.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

If there are no other speakers, I'll recognize the Member for Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was great to hear the debate on Motion 510 today, a motion that urges the government to reinstate a competitive film tax credit system for supporting the Alberta film industry. There have been some great discussions, and I'm proud to be here today to champion a return to a competitive film tax credit. A competitive film tax credit has many benefits for Albertans in and out of the film industry. Among the best reasons for a film tax credit, as I mentioned, is that it does not pick winners and losers. It does not discriminate against one group over another, and it does not make political decisions.

I would urge all of my colleagues to support Motion 510 and walk the walk when it comes to making a decision that can improve our province and make us more competitive and to do the right thing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The question has been called.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 510 carried]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as it's close to 6 p.m., I would move that the House stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, May 6, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 19 Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013

The Chair: I'll recognize the Deputy Government House Leader and Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today in support of Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013. I'd like to thank the hon. members from across the aisle for their support of this bill. I'm going to be very brief because I know that the Leader of the Official Opposition has some comments.

The focus of Bill 19 is on governance and accountability, which will contribute to the sustainability and future economic prosperity of the settlements for the benefit of all Albertans. The intent of these amendments is to define the role of settlement councils and settlement administration. The amendments are a product of extensive consultation through long-term arrangements and negotiations, which resulted in a 10-year agreement signed by the Premier, the president of the Métis council, and myself.

During second reading members of the opposition made comments on Bill 19, most of which were in support of the legislation, and I appreciate that. I have to be clear that this act was developed in full consultation with the Metis Settlements General Council and settlements over the last year. For me to accept amendments without first consulting or discussing with the Métis settlements leadership would be inappropriate. I think the hon. members from across the aisle recognize that and can respect that process.

Some suggestions for improvement, like a code of conduct for the settlement administrator, should be considered, and I will be bringing them forward to the Metis Settlements General Council for their comments. Our intent is to bring forward additional amendments in 2014 to reflect the ongoing work with the long-term arrangements and to clean up several sections of the act that have outdated language. The suggestions of the hon. members could be incorporated at that time if they are accepted by the Métis settlements leadership. I believe some of the suggestions are worth considering, and I'll be willing to incorporate them during our next set of amendments if the Metis Settlements General Council agrees with them.

With that being said, the amendments before you in Bill 19 have been endorsed by the Métis settlements leadership, Mr. Chair, and I think that's very important. They clarify the role of the settlement councils as a policy role, and the role of settlement administration is to implement the policy decisions of councils.

As for enhancing accountability, the amendments establish a code of conduct for councils, standardized reporting, business plans, and a joint Alberta-Métis settlements process to examine new ways of increasing accountability. The development of a code of conduct reflects long-term arrangements and their commitment to increasing accountability. Among other things, it will include rules related to conflict of interest and disclosure when or if a councillor may be associated with a settlement business and rules that apply when a conflict has been disclosed.

A general election will be held every four years instead of every three for each settlement council. General elections will be held on the first Monday in October in an election year, starting in 2013. This change is consistent with the changes made to the Local Authorities Elections Act. The amendments to Bill 19 will also provide settlements with the ability to elect their settlement chairs at large during the general settlement elections or to keep the status quo. A settlement bylaw will be required to allow for the option.

A joint review committee made up of government and Métis settlement reps will be established to review in a comprehensive way all accountability and enforcement provisions in the Metis Settlements Act and make recommendations for change. There will be a requirement for the settlement councils to develop annual three-year business plans. This will include public notification, posting of business plans, and reporting at the required annual meeting of the settlement. Settlement councils will be required to report on expenditure and revenues on an annual basis. This will mean a general council policy to allow for standardized financial reporting in establishing the details of the report.

The amendments also pertain to the roles and responsibilities of the settlement administrator. The administrator will be the head of the settlement administration to help ensure a clear separation between policies and administration. Roles and responsibilities of the settlement council will also be clearly defined when it comes to the development of bylaws and policies. Settlement councils are to oversee operations without getting involved in the day-to-day administration of settlement corporations. This is to ensure a separation between the roles of the settlement administrators and those of the settlement councils.

A general council policy will be required to establish an independent committee to recommend rates of remuneration, expenses, and other payments or benefits for settlement councillors. A general council policy will be required to consider the recommendations of the review committee and prescribe the maximum remuneration, expenses, and payments and other benefits payable by a settlement council to a councillor.

Finally, Mr. Chair, Bill 19 will also repeal the sections of the act that refer to the Métis settlements ombudsman. A review of the office was conducted in December 2012. The review determined that there were more effective mechanisms for addressing the function and protecting the public interest on Métis settlements. My ministry will work with the Métis settlements to develop more effective accountability mechanisms.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. This is the first opportunity I've had to bring through a slate of amendments on a bill, and I'm delighted to be able to speak to the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013. In my second reading comments I did express support for the general direction that this is going. But I do think it can be improved, and I did let the minister know that I would sending over some proposed amendments.

I do find it interesting that we're in the process of passing a piece of legislation to help guide the process that Métis settlements will use to pass legislation in a way that is more transparent and accountable, yet there's such a rush to get through this that it does not appear there is any opportunity for us to be able to give full and fair consideration to these amendments, debate them on their merit, without going back to the Métis settlements for consultation, as the minister just said. I appreciate that he does have to go back to the Métis settlements for consultation, but it does kind of make me question what the rush is in pushing this through the various stages of the readings when in point of fact since this session continues we could actually take the time, do the proper consultation, come back to debate the amendments, pass a few of them, and finish the reading in the fall.

I think that this is an interesting irony that we're in. Here we are giving some direction to the Métis settlements about the kind of time frames that they should have in passing their legislation, the type of public consultation that they should do – in fact, they have some pretty interesting provisions in their current act about that – yet we don't actually follow the same kind of process that we're asking the Métis settlements to follow. I do find that a bit disappointing.

Knowing that none of these are going to pass this evening, I will go through and at least make the best argument for them in any case, and hopefully some of my colleagues in the Official Opposition will lend their voice and their support. Perhaps we'll be able to get an indication from the minister about whether or not he thinks it is likely to pass with the settlement councils.

Again, I think this is just sort of indicative of how we may need to change the way in which we do our work. If we're sort of rushing through things and squeezing out that process of consultation because we're in such a race to get through the different readings, I don't know that we're going to be passing very good legislation. I have to say that I support the view that the leader of government, the Premier, had put forward in her leadership race as well as during the election about slowing down the legislative process, having more time between the different readings so that you do have the opportunity to look at the amendments being proposed by the opposition, to do proper stakeholder consultation. I hope that the Premier does live up to that commitment at some point, but I have to say that I'm a bit disappointed that it hasn't happened in this case.

That being said, I did want to give the minister an early heads-up about the amendments that we were going to propose today, so I sent him a letter, and I've also provided the other opposition parties with the amendments in advance. So, hopefully, we'll be able to go through this rather quickly. I don't think that there's much point in belabouring the amendments. I just want to get them on the record and hope that at some future point we'll be able to pass some of them.

In the letter that I sent to the minister earlier today, the amendments fall essentially into six broad categories. The first is that in giving oversight to the settlement administrator, the power should be exercised within guidelines set by general council policy. I think the concern that we have here is that we want to make sure that there are executive limitations on the administrator since the general council is now empowering that administrator with the requirement to be able to hire employees and set the remuneration.

I also have some concerns that certain sections of the budget bylaws have now been removed from the public notice and public approval requirements that all the other bylaws have to operate under, so I will be putting forward an amendment to be able to address that in two different parts.

We also have a concern about some of the language around financial reporting. The fact that we use the term “financial reports” as opposed to the clearer language of financial statements I think is problematic. I think we need to make that a little bit more clear so that we're giving direction about the standards that we're hoping the financial statements live up to as well as making sure that they comply with the international standards of accounting, which is what we're trying to do, to move the settlements closer to what the expectations are of other orders of government.

Finally, as well, I think that there is some need to address the issue of the settlement administrator being clearly under conflict-of-interest rules that are established by council.

I've also indicated to the minister that because there's some age on the legislation, there are two areas when he brings back amendments that he may want to consider opening up as well. In division 2, existing leases land access panel, 187(2)(c), it mentions four associations that no longer exist because they've changed their names or merged or split apart over the years. Then in schedule 2, investments, under 1(2)(f) there is “securities of the Alberta Energy Company.” Again, a company that no longer exists. We can't make amendments to those sections because they weren't brought forward in the initial amendment act. So if the minister is going to bring it back, I just wanted to flag those two as areas that are going to need a revision.

Just going forward, I'll start with my first amendment. Mr. Chair, since I'm new at this, you'll just have to remind me of the time frame. Do I wait until this is circulated before I continue speaking?

The Chair: Hon. leader, yes, you can circulate those. When they've just about been circulated, you can speak to it. If you could just give us a few minutes, and catch your breath.

Ms Smith: Fantastic. Thank you.

The Chair: We'll call this amendment A1, hon. leader.
You may start to speak, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to move that Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, be amended in section 13 in the proposed section 48(1)(b) by striking out “may” and substituting the word “must” and by striking out “other duties” and substituting “the duties.”

If you go to Bill 19, section 13, when it's describing what the role of the council is in the section under settlement administrator, what it now says is that a settlement council under (b) “may prescribe other duties and functions of the settlement administrator in addition to the duties and functions set out in this or any other enactment.” What this amendment then would effectively do by striking out “may” and inserting “must” and striking out “other duties” and putting in “the duties” is that it would then read that a settlement council “must prescribe the duties and functions of the settlement administrator in addition to the duties and functions set out in this or any other enactment.”

What it does is that it takes away the arbitrary nature by having “may” or “may not” and putting in “must,” creating the obligation on the council to ensure that it puts the proper executive limitations in place so that the settlement administrator isn't just bound by what is in the legislation but is also bound by the overriding direction of the settlement council.

Once again, the reason why we think this is important is because there is now in this new model an awful lot of power being transferred to the settlement administrator. In doing so, we think it's important that the council retain the very clear direction and obligation to prescribe and proscribe the duties and functions of the administrator. The language where it just says “may” makes it a little bit too optional, in our opinion. We do believe that it should be “must.”

If you look at the section right above that, it mirrors that same certainty, that a settlement council “must appoint a settlement administrator and fix the settlement administrator’s remuneration and terms of employment.” It seems to me that there has to be a greater degree of direction and authority vested in the council in that second part where they must also prescribe and proscribe the duties and functions.

I’d be happy to hear from any opposition member or the minister about whether or not he thinks the settlements would be likely to support that change, and I look forward to the debate.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

Hon. minister, do you care to respond?

Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of the amendment. What I just want to say about it is that by changing the language from permissive to prescriptive by saying “must prescribe the duties and functions,” I think that provides clarity to the section of the act. Clarity, in my view, is something that I think a lot of people, particularly the Métis and even the government, can agree to.

I understand some of the arguments made that the minister wishes to go back and consult. I agree with our leader. What’s the rush? We can basically adjourn, and then we could actually consult and come back in and finish this.

In the meantime, if you take a look at the amendment based on its own merit, seeking clarity for this section in the description of the duties seems not just logical but basic in the application of the act. That’s, to me, providing some sort of logic and clarity.

Quite frankly, consistency is something that I will support. I urge all my fellow members and even some of the government members to support that.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Let me begin by saying that Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, is a tremendous piece of legislation. I think it’s great progress. It represents real leadership and a desire to find common ground with First Nations, to build the capacity not only within the Métis nation but also to develop stronger mutual support, shall I say.

Having said that it is a tremendous step toward clarity and accountability and transparency and standards, I think I have to say that this amendment would add to the clarity and accountability and standards that we all welcome not only in our current government but that we welcome in every level of government so that everybody knows and everybody has an understanding and everybody expects the same thing. I think for citizens, for taxpayers, for people who elect representatives to serve their purposes, this kind of clarity and certainty is vital to the whole democratic process, or people check out. They stop paying attention. They stop caring. They stop raising their voices. It’s all part of a very important process that we have all entered into because we all want it.

This is a very sensible amendment that’s simply going to, I think, add to what I think the minister is moving towards and has made great strides towards. It will simply add that greater certainty and clarity. It won’t be, as has been said, as permissive. It will be prescriptive: this is what your responsibility is, and this is what you will be held accountable for both by other Albertans and the government of Alberta but also by your own citizens.

I, too, welcome this minor wording that will just add some more stability, certainty, and, I think, accountability for this whole progressive process that I think the minister deserves a lot of credit for.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others?

Mr. Campbell: Let me put everything into context, Mr. Chair, for the rest of the amendments. I won’t be accepting any amendments tonight or voting on any of the amendments tonight.

Two of the speakers have talked about how this is a quick process. This bill has been 75 years in the making. I can say to you that this bill has been, at least in the last four years, very dedicated to coming to a long-term agreement with the Métis settlements in Alberta. The last LTA ran out, and I can tell you that there’s as much urgency on the part of the Métis settlements to get this LTA in place as there is in the government.

Mr. Chair, the reason I won’t accept any amendments tonight is because this has been a negotiated process. We’ve respected the rights of the Metis Settlements General Council, and we’ve respected the rights of the chair within the negotiation process. Having said that, I am more than prepared to bring these amendments back to our discussions with the Metis Settlements General Council and will bring forward amendments again in the spring.

To suggest that we’re trying to rush through a bill is not true. I can tell you that I myself have spent the last year working on this agreement with my department to get to the point where the Metis Settlements General Council wanted to move forward on this.

As I’ve said in my other speeches, I’m very proud of the work that the Metis Settlements General Council has done. I’m very supportive and very proud of the work that all the settlement chairs have done. Mr. Chair, this legislation is the result of that negotiation process, and I will not do anything to ruin or bring into disrepair that relationship that we’ve built so far.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I can appreciate the minister’s comments as far as the fact that much discussion has taken place with the different leaders of the Métis settlements. However, you know, Committee of the Whole is a very important process in our legislative process before we pass bills, and it’s to give all opposition parties the opportunity to look at a bill and look at improving and strengthening a bill to ensure that the legislation is as comprehensive as it can be. I mean, truthfully, I appreciate the minister’s comments. However, once this bill is passed, it’s very difficult to go back and amend a bill. As opposed to kind of doing a haphazard job here in the House, I think we should take the time before we pass a bill to ensure that it has all the different elements addressed.

Dr. Swann: Why bring it here?

Mr. Bilous: Well, that’s a very good point. You know, it’s here in the Legislature, Mr. Chair, so that the different parties can bring their perspective and ideas to the bill to ensure that Albertans are guaranteed the highest quality of debate and that democracy remains to thrive.

As I said, Mr. Chair, I'm rising to speak in favour of this motion. I think any time we're trying to not only clarify and show transparency but to clarify the different roles and responsibilities within prescribed legislation – I mean, clearly, we're changing the word “may” to “must,” which I think narrows the scope and makes it much easier for a position to be held accountable, for duties to be outlined very specifically. The challenge with the current wording is that it is a little ambiguous. We're not sure under circumstances (a) or (b) if certain responsibilities or duties apply.

This is, I believe, a very reasonable amendment, and it's quite disheartening to hear the minister speak in generalities that all amendments this evening toward improving the Metis Settlements Act will be rejected by the minister. I can appreciate that this process has gone on for some time. There have been discussions with the different leaders of the Métis settlements. However, there has not been the opportunity for this House to debate this bill and to bring forward amendments and recommendations to improve it, so it's quite disheartening to hear the minister say that none will be accepted. I think it's our responsibility and the responsibility of all 87 members in this Chamber to ensure that we're representing our constituents and that everyone is given the due course to speak and make recommendations.

With that, Mr. Chair, I hope that the other 86 members of this Assembly will truly look at some of the amendments that are being put forward, the merits behind them, and seriously contemplate their validity and how they're going to strengthen and improve the current bill as it stands.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to rise and just kind of respond to the minister's comment. I was one of the members that rose and made the comment about rushing the bill forward. I will retract that statement, but then I will make the statement that maybe the bill is premature. The fact of the matter is that I don't want to infringe upon the minister's ability to consult. That's not the point here. The point is that we also consult on this side. The whole goal of bringing these amendments forward is to look for ways that we can improve upon legislation based on the consultations that we go through with our stakeholders. That's what's happening here. If the minister needs more time to consult, I don't think there's anyone on this side that's going to object to that. That's not the issue. The issue is, then: why should we pass this bill before that consultation is finished?

But beyond that, when you look at the actual legislation, which I'm going to support – I think most members are going to support the legislation. It could be a split vote on the other side. I don't know. The fact of the matter is that I think most of my colleagues, when we discussed it, were supportive of it. To just deny outright or say you will not accept any amendment until you can take that back for further consultation – there's an easy solution that I think everyone could agree on. We just want to slow the process down, take some time, go back out and consult, and then come back to Committee of the Whole and get back and engage in the debate with these amendments to strengthen the bill, which is the whole goal of bringing amendments forward.

With that, I'll concede now to the hon. member.

The Chair: Are there others?

Saying none, I'll call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the bill. The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, it was sort of an interesting statement from the minister. I have to tell you that the House leader criticized us once before for not sending the amendments over. He said that if we'd sent them over, he would have had a chance to review them and discuss them with the caucus and might have been able to give full consideration to them. Now we're hearing from the minister that even though I sent them over, he's not going to listen to them anyway.

I guess I am looking for some direction from the government about what we actually do have to do to get them to give serious consideration to any of our amendments. I mean, we're quite happy to go through and make the motion and go through the motions, but it sure would be nice if we actually had a dancing partner on the other side who was taking this as seriously as we were.

If they are in the position where they need more time to consult, then what they should actually do is build opposition feedback into their consultation process. The last time I checked, there is a role in the Legislature to debate legislation. It's why we go through Committee of the Whole. It's why the opposition puts forward amendments and motions. Presumably we have a role in adding input into legislation. It would seem to me that if there is a problem in the government's processes and they're missing a piece that allows the opposition to have meaningful input, then maybe they need to consider the processes.

Anyway, we'll continue on. I do have a second amendment that I'd like to propose. I'm happy to circulate that.

The Chair: That will be amendment A2, hon. leader. If you'll just give us a moment to circulate that, the pages will be there shortly.

Proceed, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Once again let me just read into the record the amendment. I move that Bill 19, Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, be amended in section 13 in the proposed section 48(2)(e) by adding “in accordance with any applicable General Council Policy” after the word “employment.”

I'll just read what the current section says right now under section 48(2). It goes through sort of a number of different delegated responsibilities that are now given to the settlement administrator. These are the ones that are defined in legislation. Then, of course, the way the act is currently written, the settlement will have the opportunity to provide greater direction for duties and functions if they so choose.

The current settlement administrator under these rules would have the ability to ensure that

- (a) . . . bylaws . . . are implemented;
- (b) to administer the affairs . . . ;
- (c) to advise and inform the settlement council on the operation and affairs of the settlement;
- (d) to establish and maintain . . .

And here again the wording says:

. . . in accordance with any applicable General Council Policy, the systems of financial management for the settlement and the records of the settlement:

Subsection (e) is the provision on hiring employees, (f) is establishing human resource policies, and

- (g) to exercise any other power and perform any other duty or function assigned to a settlement administrator by this Act or any other enactment or prescribed by the settlement council or a General Council Policy.

What I find interesting about the way this section is structured is that there are references to the administrator being bound through executive limitations by general council policy in (b), (d), and (g), and it does seem to me that it is a missing piece to not have that recognition of general council policy in (e). What the effect of this amendment would do is that it would give the delegated authority to the administrator to hire employees of the settlement and fix remuneration and terms of employment “in accordance with any applicable General Council Policy.”

I think one of the things that we’ve probably all heard as we’ve been consulting with members of the Métis community – and, of course, I think we have to keep in mind the rank-and-file members, the 8,000 individuals who are going to be governed by the councils that are now going to be under this revised piece of legislation – is that there is a concern under the old system about council members being able to hire every single staff member. I think that the members of the Métis community I’ve heard from have expressed concern about the potential of family members getting hired on, that there aren’t any parameters around what the remuneration should be.

The problem with changing this reporting structure without allowing general council to set those policies is that you could be shifting those same concerns away from the council but to the administrator. You need to be able to make sure that the general council maintains the authority and, indeed, the mandate to provide prescriptions about what the pay scale should be for each of those employees that are hired and to also prescribe policies on when family members can be hired or when family members may not be hired.

I think leaving it open like this and giving complete delegated authority to the administrator without making it clear that general council policy ought to apply in this area does seem like a missing piece. The reason why I think it is a missing piece is because we do actually make reference in three other subsections here to general council policy, so I think it could be interpreted that general council doesn’t have any authority to set those kind of remuneration standards. I think they ought to have it prescribed in law that there’s an expectation that they would set those remuneration standards so that we can address the very legitimate issues that are often brought forward from the perspective of those residents of the Métis settlements who are concerned about some of the oversight, some of the hiring practices. I think if we’re going to correct that part by bringing through this legislation, then we need to make sure that that element also applies to the settlement administrator.

With that, I’d be happy to hear from the minister or other members about whether or not they would support the amendment, and I encourage them to do so.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment, and I encourage all my fellow colleagues to support it. The amendment does nothing more than clarify the parameters of the legislation. When the settlement administrator is given the ability to hire employees, which is exactly what this is, it sets parameters to make sure that there’s no mistake about this. If we accept this amendment, the settlement administrator will hire employees in accordance with any applicable general council policy. That now sets the parameters around how employees are hired.

This gives consistency to the whole act, in my view, and brings it back to the general council, the policies that it establishes and the authorities that follow from that. I understand why the minister would want to go back and consult, but I would argue that anyone that would be in favour of this legislation could easily see where this amendment clarifies the act and makes it a little bit stronger and sets out a parameter to prevent any kind of abuse. We don’t want to be hiring employees not consistent with the general council policies. Here we are with an amendment that, in my view, gives a little bit of simplicity to the clarity, to the parameters on how we want to construct this piece of legislation.

With that, I would love to hear from the minister. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I think, again, that any time we can clarify a bill further to ensure, first of all, that there are systems and processes in place and to ensure that there aren’t possibilities of misusing a position of authority – as my colleagues have already stated, you know, this is really just clarifying further a point in the bill. I would almost even think of this in certain ways as a friendly amendment to ensure that there is that transparency, that clarification that, again, I think just strengthens the bill.

I think that this is another example of a reasonable amendment. You know, the opposition parties go to great lengths to prepare amendments to improve legislation to ensure that many Albertans, in fact all Albertans, have a voice in this Legislature. I think it’s crucial that the minister and my colleagues opposite consider carefully not only the words but the amendments that the opposition parties go to great lengths to prepare to ensure, like I said, that democracy remains strong in this province and that we’re clarifying as much as possible different interpretations of how legislation can be enacted.

With that, I will encourage all my colleagues in this House to seriously consider this friendly amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. I know that the intent of this bill in its entirety is to build a sense of clarity, security, trust, respect for the democratic process, and authenticity of the leadership of these settlements, and I think it behooves us to take every possible step to make sure that we make it easy for that to happen on settlements and make it clear and supportive and strong to legitimate the leadership and provide them with the tools they need.

There may be, in fact, other ways in which it becomes clear within the Metis Settlements Act that there are going to be these checks and balances and that there are going to be council directives and general policies around conflict of interest, family members, guidelines on salaries, that sort of thing, but this simply would reinforce a sense that if there’s any question, it’s very clear, black and white, as it says in this amendment, “in accordance with any applicable General Council Policy.”

I would have to support this, and it may be that the minister will want to discuss this further with others. I’d be interested in his comments specifically about this because to me it strengthens his desire and his commitment through this act to provide the best leadership, the most confidence in the community, and the strongest sense of direction that we can possibly give to make sure they are successful and that people in the community know how things work and who they're accountable to and for what.

So I will be supporting this amendment and look forward to hearing the minister's comments.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just briefly, you know, this is an interesting proposal, and I am prepared to take it back to the leadership of the settlements. But I think it's important for the House to realize that this was almost a deal breaker. When we did our negotiation with the Métis general council, this was the last piece that we were able to get done. You know, for us to sit here in the House and say, "This makes sense to us, and this is the way we do business, and any Albertan should understand this" – this was a big step for the Métis general council and the settlements to come to this, to separate, first of all, between council and their businesses and to differentiate between council and the administration within the Métis settlements.

Mr. Chair, again, I'm prepared to take this back and have that discussion and see where the settlements are at, but I just want to make the House understand that this is a very big step that we've moved forward, just separating the Métis council from the day-to-day business of businesses within the Métis settlements.

Again, my hat is off to the settlement chairs for moving forward on this, and I won't be supporting this amendment at this time.

Ms Smith: Well, I just want to clarify. The two amendments I proposed are really putting more power back into the hands of the general council. I guess what I worry about with this is that it seems to me that the balance in a couple of these places puts too much power into the hands of an administrator without the mandate for oversight from the general council.

You know, we've seen all kinds of instances in the provincial government where senior executive pay has quite literally gotten out of control, and the minister is saying: "Hey, it's not my problem. Go talk to the guy who I delegated the decision to." We've already seen in provincial contracts – whether it was Alison Tonge, who signed a $300,000-a-year contract, worked for two years, and got a $400,000 payout; whether it was Jack Davis, who walked away with millions of dollars worth of payout; whether it's the SAIT president, who walked away with a full year, $365,000 – that it doesn't seem like any elected official wants to take responsibility for those kinds of contracts.

I don't think that we want to replicate the same problem on Métis settlements, where you remove the elected officials from not only having oversight but also from having the requirement to be accountable to their electors for making sure that all of the administrators are paid within a pay scale that is reasonable for the settlement, that they have the mandate from those who are elected, and also have the accountability to those who are elected. So I think that the general council should be quite pleased that what we're contemplating here is that we're going to allow them to retain that executive limitation on their administrator so that they can maintain that accountability in going to their people to justify what the pay scales are and what the hiring practices are.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chair, section 48 is very clear that it gives the council the authority to set the administrator's remuneration and terms of employment and to prescribe other duties and functions of the administration on top of those set out in the act. So the council does have full control over the administrator and the salaries that are going to be set. This isn't a case in point where the administrator is going to set his own salaries and just go hog wild and take a bunch of money and run. Also, the minister has very specific delegation duties under the act to make sure those things don't happen.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just very briefly I want to speak in support of the minister's position here and add my support as to why this bill shouldn't be amended. The legislation we're tabling tonight and the legislation we're discussing tonight comes about as the result of a negotiated settlement between the government of Alberta and the Métis association. We're free to speak against it, I suppose, and to identify individual clauses of that bill that we don't like, and at the end of the day we can vote against it. But to amend it is not acceptable because what we're trying to do is to write legislation around an agreement that we already negotiated, to implement that agreement. To amend it is to go back to the Métis population and say: "Well, we didn't like it. This is how the bill turned out. Love it or leave it." That is not the appropriate mechanism to amend a bill.

First of all, as I said, we can speak against it, and I invite all opposition to speak against any particular clause and at the end of the day to vote against the bill in its entirety. However, it is an insult to the Métis to amend the bill and go back to them and say, "This is what the Legislature cooked up," when none of the people in this House sat around the table for as long as that minister and his staff did to be there in the negotiation. Negotiation is a package deal, and the Métis are expecting us to implement this agreement. If we're not going to, then we have to defeat the bill in its entirety on the floor of this House, not amend it, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-
Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment but particularly just to deal with the comments that were just made by the hon. member. What he's implying here is that once a piece of legislation is drafted by a minister, there can be no amendments whatsoever throughout the process. That absolutely makes no sense. There's precedent, of course, that bills after second reading are put to a committee so that that committee can then go ahead and do consultation.

In my opinion, it is contrary to any parliamentary procedure, practice, logic to indicate that you cannot as an opposition or as a government member propose amendments because the minister has done a whole bunch of consultations. Well, the minister didn't consult with the Official Opposition on what this bill would be. Maybe we have some good ideas. Maybe we're going to be presenting them right here. That's democracy. I think that for the hon. member to indicate that is just completely contrary to the principles in this Legislature.

I think that if this government would listen to some of the substantive amendments or even, potentially, procedural amendments that we're putting forward in terms of the legislation, the legislation could be strengthened. It shouldn't be one of these circumstances where a minister puts forward a piece of legislation and they can just cover their ears and not listen to any type of amendments put forward simply because they've done a significant amount of consultation. Legislation can always be strengthened through the legislative process, and to say otherwise is undermining that process.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do want to address some of the comments that were just made. I know that the members on the other side of the House seem to think their legislation is perfect. However, news flash: I don't think any of them are actually perfect. They can be improved, which is part of the role of the opposition. I think that to insinuate that only the government speaks with the people and stakeholders who are going to be affected by this bill is quite insulting as I'm sure that many members on this side of the House also speak to different Métis leaders and have input to offer. For the government to assume or insinuate that they speak on behalf of and that they're the only ones in discussion with Métis settlements and leaders I think is quite offensive, to begin with.

I think as well that the government needs reminding that they don't represent every single Albertan in this province, that there are opposition members that were elected throughout the province, and that even within their own ridings there are Albertans who don't share their views. So to say that they're coming into this House with a prescribed, written, done deal piece of legislation that is perfect – and I can appreciate that the minister has worked very hard with the Métis settlements and has had many discussions with the leaders. I acknowledge that; I appreciate that. However, members of this side of the House have also had discussions with different leaders, and we do bring other perspectives to the table.

Again, you know, the last time I checked, Mr. Chair, our system of democracy, the Westminster system, was based on the multiparty system, meaning each party brings different perspectives to the Legislature and different points. We are all here in the spirit of bringing forward and improving legislation so that we can go back to all Albertans and say that this was a collaborative effort, something that we all worked on together, all sides of the House bringing forward all points of view and respecting them in a discussion and also in the legislation.

For that reason, Mr. Chair, I felt moved to address some of the issues that the associate minister brought up because I think it's very crucial to acknowledge that we all meet and consult with our constituents and bring their points of view forward in this Legislature. To insinuate that only one side needs to be represented in legislation I think is quite offensive to the many Albertans who aren't represented by the government.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, I think this next amendment that I'm proposing might put the government in a bit of a pickle. Why don't I have it circulated first?

The Chair: Sure. Pages.

Ms Smith: Then I'll explain why the government might be in a little bit of difficulty in passing this bill tonight because it does seem like it may actually go against the current provisions of the legislation. I'll explain that in just a minute, after this has been circulated.

8:20

The Chair: This will be amendment A3 for the record.

Hon. leader, please proceed.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. What this amendment states is that I would move that Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, be amended by striking out section 14. Now, if you look at Bill 19, section 14, budget bylaws, under 55.1, it states, "Sections 54 and 55 do not apply to a budget bylaw."

I would direct the hon. members to go to the original text of the current Metis Settlements Act and just have a look at what section 54 and section 55 state right now. What we're saying with this amendment is that these two sections are no longer going to apply to any budget bylaws. The sections that will no longer apply to budgets are under public notice of bylaws:

54(1) Every proposed bylaw must be presented at a public meeting in the settlement area after second reading but before third reading.

Then it says:

(2) At least 14 days' public notice of the date, time and place the public meeting must be given.

But it goes on to say under approval of bylaws:

55(1) A quorum for public meetings called to vote on settlement bylaws is 15 settlement members who are eligible to vote on the bylaw, or any other number specified by settlement bylaw.

(2) A settlement member is eligible to vote on a bylaw presented at a public meeting if

(a) the member has resided in the settlement area for the 12 months immediately preceding the date of the vote, or any lesser period prescribed in a settlement bylaw, and

(b) the member's residence is in the settlement area on the date of the vote.

(3) Persons affected by an issue under discussion at a public meeting have the right to participate in the discussion of the issue but may not vote on it unless they are settlement members and eligible to vote on it.

(4) A bylaw voted on at a public meeting is approved if a majority of the settlement members who are eligible to vote and who vote at the meeting vote in favour of the bylaw.

(5) If the vote at the public meeting is not in favour of the proposed bylaw, the bylaw is defeated, and all previous readings are cancelled.

I just find it fascinating that the minister talks about all the consultation that he did with Métis settlement leaders, yet they have a very strong culture and history of direct democracy when major bylaw changes are happening on the settlements. So here we are in the Legislature actually taking away the rights of rank-and-file Métis settlement members to have the basics that every other individual living in a municipality has of public notice when budgets are coming through. They also have this very special right currently. They actually have the opportunity to directly vote on any bylaws that are coming forward.

Now, I don't know. To the minister: maybe I missed it. Maybe I missed the broad-based referendum of all of the 8,000 people on the Métis settlements approving this agreement. But it does seem to me that we are rewriting in a fundamental way an essential bylaw approval process for an essential piece of legislation that would come through at the Métis settlements by violating the current provisions that are in place because we haven't actually put it to a referendum of the people in the Métis settlements.

Hopefully, the minister will be persuaded by the argument that we should actually strike section 14 from his settlement act so that we do have sections 54 and 55 applying to this type of budget bylaw in the same way that it always has and the same way that it would apply to any bylaw. I think that if this does not succeed or if he is not able to get this passed by the settlement, at the very least we have to make sure that section 55 continues to apply to budget bylaws.

That will be my next motion, which I'd be happy to speak to. But I think I'd like to hear from other members and maybe even from the minister about whether or not this was perhaps miswritten or an oversight that essentially with this legislation allows the settlement councils to pass a budget without having a public hearing or public notice and gets around the traditional processes that they had for establishing budget bylaws, which was by direct referendum, and doing so without actually consulting directly with the people through a referendum. It does seem to me that this is a fairly major change to Métis settlements and the way in which they pass their legislation.

Again, I know the minister has consulted with the leadership, but I think the reason why these provisions exist in the first place is because they recognize the grassroots decision-making that is the culture of the Métis settlement. To go through and do a negotiation without having a referendum, fundamentally rewrite the way in which the people are going to be consulted on the most important bill that their government brings forward, which is how they're spending money, it seems to me, goes a step too far.

This is why I would urge other members to support the elimination of this section 14 until such time as it can be fully consulted with the members of the Métis settlements through referendum, which is the way in which all other bylaws have to be consulted, because this is a substantial change to the way in which their budgets will be passed even at the settlement level, even with the additional powers that were given to the council.

With that in mind, I would like to hear from other members, but I would urge them to remove section 14 so that the existing rules that are outlined in the Metis Settlements Act continue to apply.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of the motion. Specifically, I too would like to hear from the minister with regard to striking out the public notice and the opportunity for a vote on a bylaw. If I'm missing something here, I am persuadable, but I just don't understand why this would not be applicable. When I look at what this amendment does to the bill to restore these two provisions, I see value in the democratic process, and I see value in due process. Yes, I understand the minister has consulted at great length, but I also know that when we consulted, the whole idea of the democratic process was of significant high value.

I'd be curious as to why it was constructed – was this actually in the agreement that was arrived at before this bill was drafted? – and how this came to be. This is now significant. This is a process that I think any community even beyond Métis would consider extremely valuable. To have due notice and to be able to actually have an opportunity to vote to deal with these issues is significant.

To the hon. minister: I hope that there's a reasonable explanation why this amendment is not something that would be under consideration.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak strongly in favour of this amendment. It think it's very unique, the system of governance that the Métis settlements have set up for themselves and their members. I find it very unique when a group of people use the form of direct democracy. I think that there is no stronger form of democracy than direct democracy, when each person has direct input on a decision before it is made and truly the voice of the people rings loud. I too look forward to hearing from the minister as to specifically why this section is in there and why this is being changed.

I think, you know, that holding a public meeting is crucial, ensuring that settlement members have the ability to vote on a bylaw when it's presented at a public meeting and that it can be defeated at a public meeting through the act of direct democracy when they're voting. I think that truly places the ultimate decision-making and power in the hands of the people that their leaders are elected to represent. It's ensuring that people are participating in that democratic process and ensuring that they have a voice. I mean this, if anything, Mr. Chair, is a fail-safe mechanism to ensure that when items are being voted on, especially relating to the budget, if the members of a community disagree with it, it can be sent out. I find it quite interesting that if the budget that the government just passed a couple of weeks ago was put to a vote for all Albertans, it might have a very different outcome and result.

I think it's important that this ability remain in the hands of the people that the Métis settlement leadership is representing. I think it's crucial that this amendment be adopted by this legislative body and that all members truly think about and reflect on how this amendment is going to ensure that each member of the Métis settlements has a voice and is involved in that decision-making process.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

8:30

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, will stand to at least invite the minister's response because this seems eminently sensible at a time when people are coming together. It's kind of like bringing in their first constitution. They have to have a very strong buy-in to it to believe it, to participate in it, to recognize the importance of every phrase and every decision around it. Maybe not every phrase, but they need to know that they have some ability to influence the process.

These are fairly substantive changes in their lives and in their governance. It strikes me that the very foundational activity that has to come out of this has to be one of honouring and respecting and demonstrating what democracy looks like and that the people of the communities have a very strong role to play. Unless there's something that we don't understand about the existing Métis act which the minister can inform us of, this seems like an eminently sensible way to strengthen what he's doing, to strengthen the capacity of people to address the issues that are most going to affect their lives and their ability to participate in their own democratic process, and to respect those who are in positions of power, not defer to them but to recognize that they are there as a result of the proper, due democratic process in which they still have power to change what's happening and the decisions that are being made at that level of the representative.

I look forward to hearing the minister's comments before I vote, but on the face of it it looks like a very helpful, strengthening amendment to the bill.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chair, I'm getting up more than I want to.

I think that first of all, before we start on the budget bylaw part, people have to understand – and the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre talked about consultation, consultation. This is not a consultation. This is a negotiation. This is a negotiated agreement between the government of Alberta and the Métis settlements. This isn't that we went out and consulted with members and we consulted with the leadership and continue to talk. This is a negotiated settlement, and the Métis general council through their settlements indicated who their negotiating team would be. I can tell you that their negotiating team was the big four that they refer to. We go through this process. This isn't just a consultation. This is sitting down and negotiating what the terms and agreements are going to be.

While I understand the member's concerns about democracy, Mr. Chairman, this is probably the most unique piece of legislation anybody in this Legislature will deal with in the coming months. This is not the norm by any means.

An Hon. Member: It may be unique, but is it the best it can be?

Mr. Campbell: Well, I think it is at the present time. I think it's the best it could be because, first of all, we were able to settle a $6 million lawsuit. We were able to get all eight settlements to agree unanimously that this was a good deal. We were able to put funding in place over the next 10 years to provide services such as policing, housing, essential services, good governance, economic development, and health care. I would say that this is a pretty damn good piece of legislation.

Mr. Chair, I think it's important. Again, I appreciate the Official Opposition leader's amendments, and I'm prepared to discuss this with the settlement leaders, but I think it's important to note that these amendments require the councils to consult in development of the business plans. The budgets cannot do anything outside the business plan. That's a three-year business plan that has to be adopted by the settlement, has to be adopted by the Métis general council. Again, as minister I have control over those business plans if I think something is out of the ordinary.

Mr. Chairman, I think it's also important that this ensures that councils are not prevented from governing by as few as 15 members but also ensures that members are informed of the council's plans, have input into the planning process, and promote the accountability of councils.

Mr. Chair, when the opposition talks about democracy and people being involved in the process, we've taken that step. We're making sure that all council members are involved in the process. Under the former legislation 15 members could vote down the budget, and all of the affairs of the Métis community would come to a grinding halt because they would not have the okay from their settlement to do the financial business going forward.

Mr. Chair, again, this is an important step forward. Is it as far as I'd like it to go? No, it's not, but as I said, this is a negotiated settlement, and this is a big step for the Métis settlements to take. I'll not be supporting the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill. The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do have a follow-up amendment with that one being defeated. I accept some of the arguments that the minister made. I'd be happy to talk a little bit more about that while this one is being circulated.

I do recognize that part of what is occurring in this legislation is that we are trying to move Métis settlement governance to be on par with other orders of government in Alberta. It's quite clear that we don't have a public referendum on the provincial budget. Heck, if we'd had a public referendum on this past budget, I'm pretty sure it would have failed resoundingly, so I can understand the minister's concern about the power of the people in that regard on a budget. We've got something like over 400 municipal councils in the province if you include summer villages. I don't think any of them, at least none that I know of, go to the people with a public referendum – I'm happy to be corrected by someone if I'm wrong – on the particular issue of the budget.

I can recognize that it might be a step too far to have both sections 54 and 55 not apply to the budget bylaw.

Can I now speak to this?

The Chair: Just to be clear, hon. leader, for the record you are moving this amendment, which will be referred to as A4. Please proceed.

Ms Smith: Thank you. With all of that context in mind, the amendment that I would love the minister to take to the Métis settlement leaders in his discussions with them is to move that Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, be amended in section 14 by striking out the proposed section 55.1 and substituting the following:

Budget Bylaws

55.1 Section 55 does not apply to a budget bylaw.

I think that would address the concerns that the minister made in his comments about the potential for the business of the settlement to come to a halt in the event that there was a referendum defeating the budget. But I have to say that I do not see why we would keep section 14 as it currently is written, that says that section 54 would not apply to the passage of a budget.

Again, just as a reminder, what this amendment would do is that it would say that there does not have to be a referendum in the instance of a budget bylaw coming forward, but there would still have to be public notice of the bylaws. Section 54, then, would still apply to the budget bylaw, and in this case it means:

(1) Every proposed bylaw must be presented at a public meeting in the settlement area after second reading but before third reading.

(2) At least 14 days' public notice of the date, time and place of the public meeting must be given.

I would say that it would be very unusual for a government in Alberta at any level to fail to give an annual budget the public airing and public notification. I don't think that that would be in line with anything we see at the municipal level. Certainly, it's not how the provincial government operates. To say, "Well, it's all in the three-year business plan" is, in my view, not adequate. If the government said to the people of Alberta, "We're no longer going to issue an annual budget; just go look at the three-year business plan that we passed this year,” that would certainly not pass muster in raising the bar on accountability and transparency.

This notion of having an annual budget available for the public to scrutinize and review is vitally important, especially when it comes down to the budget. We’ve seen with the government’s most recent budget how many major policy decisions were made through the course of deciding where dollars were going to be allocated. It would be no different on a Métis settlement. You could have something in a business plan. As we see every single day and we saw through estimates, you can have a high-level principle about what your business plan is going to do and the objectives and priorities that you want to achieve and then have that be a mismatch on how dollars are actually allocated. We do see that in numerous cases in the provincial government’s own estimates. This is why it’s very important for the public to be able to see on an annual basis the same public notification provisions before a budget actually gets passed.

Again, I accept the minister’s argument about it not being voted down by referendum. Fair enough. But I don’t think that there can be any justification to why you would say that the most important bylaw that a Métis council would bring forward, that a Métis settlement would bring forward, which is the budget bylaw, because it sets the stage for virtually every other policy decision that is made throughout the year – I have no idea why you would make the decision that the most important bylaw doesn’t have the public notice requirement, but everything else does.

In that spirit and, I think, again, in keeping with what the stated intention is of what the legislation is trying to do, which is to bring Métis settlements governance powers more in alignment with the kind of governance powers, oversight, and accountability that we see from municipal councils and indeed our own provincial government, it seems to me that this is a mismatch, having this section 54, about the public notification of bylaws, fail to apply to a budget bylaw. I would argue the opposite, that this is probably the most important bylaw that the public notification should apply to because it determines so many of the other decisions that the Métis settlement council is going to make.

With that, I’d be happy to hear from my colleagues about whether or not they would support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

Are there others? The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. There is a trend that’s been developing with this government in the repeal of notification. We witnessed this in Bill 2, and now we’re here with the Metis Settlements Amendment Act. I don’t understand the omission or the withdrawal or the repeal of proper notification. I don’t understand that. I don’t get that. I would really like someone to rise, particularly the minister on the other side, and explain why notification is not a reasonable mandate in legislation. To me, it’s just basic to the democratic process, how it’s handled. Beyond that, the whole basis of our democratic process is a well-informed public, so when we break this down into a smaller segment that is dealing with the Métis settlement, it still doesn’t change. We have to have proper notification, where the people are informed. From that information, then, the people can make the proper decisions that they need to make.

Whether this was an oversight, I still don’t know, but I will say this. To me, it is absolutely paramount that proper notification be a mandate in any type of process so that the people involved in the process have an opportunity to learn the facts, to learn the issues, and to participate in the process. Without proper notification that ability to learn the facts and to participate in the process is diminished significantly.

With that, I will turn the floor over to any other member. [interjections] Maybe you would like to call the members to order so they could hear the other members, too.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’ll speak very briefly to this and just reiterate some of the main points. This is a very straightforward amendment, and it would just simply require public notice when a budget bylaw is being put forward by the settlement council. We see in the other portions of the legislation that when there is a bylaw that’s being put forward by a settlement, that type of public notice must be given.

This is, to me, a completely sensible, no-brainer amendment. I don’t think this is something that should even be that debatable. From a settlement perspective, with the most important piece of enabling policy they put forward, which is the budget bylaw, for there to be no requirement for notice to the general members whatsoever, I simply don’t, at least in my dealings with the Métis settlements in my area – and I have two of them. I think that they’re very open and transparent. They would like their members to have an opportunity to see the numbers. I’ve talked to many, many members not just on the council but also in the community. They would like more openness and transparency.

To the minister: I’m not sure if this is simply an oversight or if it’s intended to not provide that notice to the members. I’d be very interested in hearing what he has to say on this particular amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I, too, am curious about this lack of public notice on budgets. Surely, especially as a new government is forming itself and establishing credibility and building relationships with the community, recognizing that they’re in that position of power because of the community, it would be incumbent on us to make very clear to both the leadership and the citizens that we have such a high regard for democracy and for accountability that we would very much insist as a government, the governing body of all of Alberta, that we have standards that include the public information for citizens regarding how their money is to be spent.

It’s very fundamental, and I have to assume that it’s an oversight, that it was just something that slipped through, and that in the best interests of the community and the best interests of the future stability and confidence in this community it would be restored. I await the minister’s statement on this because it’s a pretty fundamental oversight in a democratic system and in all other municipalities – of course, this isn’t entirely consistent, and they were very clear that they don’t want to be entirely operating under the same guidelines and statutes as a municipality, but everything possible to instill confidence and accountability and transparency. Surely the budget has to be the foundation of any kind of trust that’s going to develop in a community and in a newly created body within the Métis settlements.

I hope the minister will take this under advisement and do a very serious review of it and consider its importance to not only the credibility of this whole act but also the credibility of this government. If it doesn't set standards, if it doesn't enforce standards, then what are we left with in this province?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. You know, I think that not only is this amendment logical, but it really does fit as one of the cornerstones of democracy. Removing the public notification aspect, where the public must be notified, I think is a step backwards for a couple of different reasons, Mr. Chair.

Number one, I don't know how many years that public notification has been a part of the governance and democratic process for the Métis settlements, but I'm sure that that would have negative consequences in a variety of ways. I mean, if the folks that are part of the Métis settlements have been relying on this public notification for budgets to know exactly what's going on, how the dollars are going to be spent, and the priorities of their leaders, to take this away I think, first of all, would come as a surprise or a shock for many folks. If they've come to count on it, I think that you're taking away their ability to stay informed and to be aware of what's going on.

I mean, when I think about our own budget process, Mr. Chair, in Alberta we're fortunate that province-wide we have quite a bit of media that will bring to attention the budget that we're debating, the estimates, ministry by ministry. You know, forgive my ignorance. I'm not sure what kind of media is available on the eight different Métis settlements, but I think there might be less access to that information via the media.

That's a luxury that we have in this House, Mr. Chair. Many Albertans can turn on the television and at least follow along with what the government is proposing to spend in its budgets. Again, for smaller governance structures like the Métis settlements public notification may be an absolutely essential part of the process to ensure that its citizens are not only informed and engaged but have that ability to participate in the process. I think that I, too, as are my colleagues on this side of the House, am curious to hear the minister's response and rationale for this.

It seems only logical. Again, when we talk about public interest, ensuring that our citizens are informed and engaged, putting forward public notification and ensuring that everyone is well aware of what's going on, especially when it comes to budgets and spending dollars and priorities in different communities, including the Métis settlements, I think is absolutely crucial.

So I, too, would urge all members of the Assembly to critically look at this amendment and to understand and to see the logic and the reasonableness and rationale behind keeping this in place to ensure that that crucial cornerstone of democracy remains intact. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. First of all, nothing in my ministry is straightforward. Let's get that on the record. Whether it's dealing with the Métis settlements, the MNA, or our First Nations, we go in circles quite a bit, so nothing is straightforward.

This section is very straightforward. Let me say that a budget has to be passed at the settlement council meeting, so that has to be open to the public. Mr. Chair, that's no different than municipal government, and I say municipal government knowing that I'm going to get a phone call from the chair of Kikino because he makes sure that I understand that they are not a municipal government; they are a government on their own and very unique. At the municipal government level no public notice has to be given for the passing of budgets. It has to be done at a public meeting. What we're doing is following what's under the Municipal Government Act right now and asking the Métis settlements to do the same thing.

Again, Mr. Chair, I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A4.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the main bill. The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have a two-part amendment in this next section as well. If this first one is not to the minister's liking, I've got another version that may well be. I'll let that be circulated.

The Chair: This will be amendment A5, hon. leader. Just give us a minute for the circulation. Thank you.

You may proceed, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I listened to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View say that it may be an oversight that this public notification piece had been excised from the legislation with regard to budget bylaws, but I guess when you see two instances where the public does not appear to be inserted into the bill, you kind of wonder whether or not it is an oversight to have happened twice. So let me try to reinsert the public into this other section of the legislation.

I will read into the record the amendment. It looks like a long one, but I'll explain the two parts to it and then also explain what the subsequent amendment would be if this one does not pass. I move that Bill 19, Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, be amended in section 20 by striking out the proposed section 159.1 and changing the title of it to "Standardized financial statements." Then it reads as follows:

159.1 On or before September 30 of every year, each settlement council must

- (a) prepare, in accordance with General Council Policy and International Financial Reporting Standards, standardized financial statements for the previous financial year for the settlement,
- (b) file a copy of the standardized financial statements with the Minister and the General Council, and
- (c) make the financial statements for the previous financial year for the settlement available to the public in the manner the council considers appropriate.

There are a few changes that, I would say, you'll notice if you're looking at the Metis Settlements Amendment Act on page 11 versus what we've got here.

The concern that I have is that the term "financial reports" is open to interpretation. I think most people understand that financial statements has a fairly specific meaning for what it is you're expecting to see when you see the statements of a business operation or, in this case, a council's operations. What you'll see in the language that I'm proposing here is that we move away from the language of using "financial reports" to using "financial statements,” which required the revision in point (a) and point (b) and the new point (c).

The other point that you’ll see that I’m suggesting here is that by moving to the term “statements,” we also have to identify the accounting standards with which we think the Métis settlements ought to comply. It’s my understanding that municipalities as well as the provincial government are moving away from the generally accepted accounting principles standard to this international financial reporting standards, which is why I’ve put that in there in the provision under (a), to make it quite clear that we’re not just talking about reports in any old format. We’re talking about financial reporting standards and particular types of financial statements.

In addition to that, I think the important element as well is that it’s one thing to make your statements available to the minister, but our view, especially in keeping with the grassroots, democratic consultative process that you see in Métis settlements, is that you have to make those financial statements for the previous year available to the public as well.

I hope it’s just an oversight. It does seem to me that that should be a fairly standard practice, that it’s not just the accountability that the council has to the minister. They have an even greater accountability to the people who vote them into office, and as a result the financial statements should be available to the public every single year. If it’s not made available to the public in an easy way, I guess the alternative would be that all 8,000 members would have to call the minister’s office to be able to get the financial reports. That doesn’t seem like a very efficient way of approaching this.

It seems to me that this should be fairly straightforward. We see this in every other level of government. When they get to their end of year, they will issue a finalized version with updated financial statements in an appropriate format, easy to read, easy to compare to previous years. In keeping with the minister’s stated intention of moving the governance structure for this order of government closer to what we see at the provincial level, closer to what we see at the municipal level, this seems to me to be just a fairly standard omission in the original drafting of the bill and a fairly reasonable series of amendments.

Just to reiterate, then, it would be adding the term “financial statements” in place of “financial reports,” putting in place international financial reporting standards so that we have a standard that we’re asking all settlements to rise to, and, in addition, making sure that there is some kind of public availability for the financial statements each and every year so that the members of the public, members of the Métis settlement have access to the information of the council members who are directly responsible to them.

I hope to hear from other members about whether or not they would support this, and I urge them to do so.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: I just wonder if the member could describe the international financial reporting standards.

Ms Smith: Okay. Well, I think I would have put generally accepted accounting principles in there, but my understanding is that the new standard that businesses are moving towards is the international financial reporting standards. This is my understanding from the Finance minister, that this is the financial reporting standard that we comply with at the provincial level. These are the standards that we ask our municipalities to apply. If we’re going to ask our municipalities and our provincial government to move towards this standard, it would seem to me that what we’re trying to get is the same standard at the Métis settlements.

I think the problem with the term “report” is that it’s not specific enough. It could allow for eight different settlements to create different reports in eight different ways. I think that with the fact that we do have international bodies that have reporting standards, I think we should put something in there. If the hon. member wants to propose some other type of accounting standard so that every settlement has them, I guess he can do that. I think that it’s fairly clear that most municipalities and other orders of government have a particular standard that they work towards in releasing their financial documents, and I think that we should be asking for the Métis settlements to meet that same standard that we’re asking of other elected councils.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I find it something that’s very, very interesting, and I applaud the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for how she’s wordsmithed this amendment. If you look at (c), they’ve not only proposed making the financial statements for the previous year public, but I think what’s really important here is “in the manner the council considers appropriate.” I think, especially when we’re looking at working with different groups, that we are culturally sensitive and that how they phrased this amendment is that it is in a manner which the council deems appropriate. So we’re not imposing our standard or what we think should be disclosed to the public. It’s leaving that authority with the council, who knows better than anyone else what is appropriate and relevant culturally, but ensuring that it is also made public for the purpose of their members and for others as well.

I mean, again, when we look at companies or the government, the books are public and opened up so that anyone is able to look through them and scrutinize and question. So I appreciate the hon. member’s amendment and looking at having some standards and being able to have a comparison from year to year.

Mr. Chair, I’m sure the irony isn’t lost on you that it seems in this House, even though this was my first budget estimates set, that new categories are invented and implemented, and money is shifted around, and it’s challenging to track from year to year exactly what was spent on what. I mean, when we look at the new categories in this budget, some dollars were pulled from previous operating and capital and put into whatever the category is, which makes it extremely difficult to find out very clearly and concisely, without having to be an accountant or a financial expert, if there was an increase or a decrease from previous years. What was the money? How was it spent? That way, there can be a real, fruitful discussion as opposed to this kind of trying to find a needle in a haystack, discovering what dollars are new, what dollars were moved from which section to where.

I can appreciate that aspect of this amendment, Mr. Chair, as far as asking for a standard set of financial statements, again, that will be made public as deemed by the Métis council as far as their standards of what is appropriate, the format that they decide to share with the public and in keeping with being culturally sensitive and appropriate for the settlement leaders.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wish that they'd read the whole act as it encompasses everything at once instead of just picking out certain pieces.

Financial reports are in addition to the already required financial statements, which must be audited and presented to the public, so this is an added part to the financial piece. We're not taking anything away at all. The financial report is new, and it means that all settlements must prepare their financial reports in the same way. What we're looking for is to ensure that there is comparable tracking in order to more effectively plan. Before we signed this agreement, the settlements coded their budget items differently. Now all eight settlements will budget and code their items the same way.

Again, Mr. Chair, this is a big move forward. I can also say to you that we have a controller on three settlements right now, one that was asked to come in and look at some issues, and two other settlements asked for the same controller to come in and help them as they move forward on their financial accountability. I would suggest that by the time we're done, the controller in question will visit all eight settlements, moving forward and making sure that these reports are done in a prudent manner.

I will not be supporting the amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, I'm happy to be corrected. I didn't see anywhere else in the legislation that financial statements were enumerated differently from the financial reports, so I hope the minister might be able to point that out for me to correct my error so I can see. I mean, he suggested that we're choosing from one area, and it's covered off in another, so if he would indulge me and let me know what section I need to be looking at, I would appreciate that.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A5.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: The hon. leader, to the bill.

Ms Smith: All right. Well, fair enough. Maybe we'll have that in a written response.

Following up, then, on the defeat of that amendment, again I would invite the minister to perhaps . . .

The Chair: Amendment A6.

Ms Smith: I'll wait until it's circulated.

The Chair: Sure. Please.

Ms Smith: But I would invite the minister to maybe make me a written statement or to get one of his staff to show me where the financial statements are indicated in the legislation because that is the reason I thought it was important to put the financial statements in. I still am a little bit confused, then, if the financial statements are covered somewhere else, about why it is that we have financial reports here. Perhaps we can have a sidebar conversation about that because I guess I'm a little bit surprised that I didn't see that in my first reading through.

In any case, I think it still doesn't eliminate the concern that I had initially expressed. If the government does not want to move towards establishing an accounting standard, and they don't want to move towards calling these statements – they want to continue calling them reports – that's fair enough, but I think that there is also still the requirement that we have the public back in this process. It's not enough for the minister to be in receipt of these documents. Really, we're creating a governance structure for the 8,000 people who live on-reserve, who are accustomed to having direct democracy and direct accountability from their council members, and I think that the financial reports are a key aspect to that.

With that in mind, the amendment that I would propose is to move that Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Act, 2013, be amended in section 20 in the proposed section 159.1 by striking out “, and” at the end of clause (a), by adding “, and” at the end of clause (b), and by adding a following clause after (b). So this would make this clause (c). It's again in the same section but this time about standardized financial reports. What section (c) then would read is: “make the financial reports for the previous financial year for the settlement available to the public in the manner the council considers appropriate.”

It's again the same wording that we had before, the same intention that we had before, and I'll make the same argument that I did before, that it isn't sufficient for just the minister to be in receipt of these financial reports. We believe that the public, the voting public on the settlements, should be able to have access to these reports in a manner the council considers appropriate, but I still think that the idea that the public should be able to have easy access to the reports is what we're trying to get at in this legislation. We're trying to create an accountability structure so that we can have confidence among the people who are going to be governed by this new legislation, the 8,000 members of the settlements, that they can have confidence that they have the documents and the accountability that they need to have to be able to have confidence in their elected leaders.

I think this just adds additional protection, it adds additional information, it increases transparency, and it raises the bar on openness. These are all things that I think the government talks a lot about. I think in keeping with that spirit, that we're constantly trying to raise the bar for the provincial government, we also want to raise the bar for Métis settlements. I think this is something that would be appreciated by members of the settlement as well as something that would be appropriate in a democracy where council members are principally and foremost responsible to the citizens who elected them.

I urge other members to vote in favour of this, and I look forward to hearing the minister's response.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. This speaks directly to public disclosure. I don't see where the objection would be to including this in the act and basically supporting this amendment, the idea of making financial reports specifically for the previous financial year for the settlement available to the public in a manner that the council considers appropriate. That is just basic public disclosure for the benefit of all.

Looking at the intent and the context of what this amendment does, it only serves to strengthen. I cannot imagine where the objection would be in any kind of agreement, particularly when you look at the overall bill that we're dealing with. This does nothing more than make the legislation stronger. It is going back to what we talked about earlier, when we debated public notification. The whole strength in the democratic process is an informed public making informed decisions. Making the financial reports available – and we're talking about the previous year's financial reports – in a manner that the council considers appropriate strengthens that democratic process that is applicable to the Métis settlement.

With that, I will cede the floor, and I'd like to hear some opinions as to why this wouldn't be.

9:10

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm happy to see this next amendment from the Leader of the Official Opposition because, again, this speaks to accountability and transparency. You know, I think this amendment is beneficial not only for the members of the different Métis settlements but for all Albertans, should they choose to view the financial statements just as someone from the city of Calgary could look at the city of Edmonton's books and vice versa.

I think what's important about this, again – and I think it's worth highlighting – is the terminology or the phrasing of this amendment, that the financial statements of the previous year are available to the public “in the manner council considers appropriate,” which is quite significant, how the council deems they want to present their information in whatever way or fashion or method that is appropriate to them, whether we're talking about culturally or in other manners.

Again, this speaks to the responsibility that elected officials have to show to the people that they represent not only how dollars are spent. Especially when we look at budgets, I mean, that reflects priorities, and it should be available to the public. It's not that they have to ask for or request that information; it should be available no matter what, which basically takes down barriers and makes it more accessible for individuals to find that information and to be able to hold their leadership to account and to ask questions about priorities or about previous years' spending and, as well, to be able to have those comparatives year over year to see how dollars were spent.

I, too, urge all members of the Assembly to look at this amendment and to adopt it for the sake that it is reasonable, it is logical, and again it's something that ensures that it's protecting the public, the public interest. This is a responsibility of elected officials, Mr. Chair, that there is an element, as the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre had said, of public disclosure and that the public is well informed of what the leadership is doing and the dollars that they're spending.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others?

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Chair, I realize everybody on the opposite side is not an accountant, and I totally respect that. I do. But when people put forth amendments, you wouldn't think that the amendments wouldn't make any sense whatsoever. The IFRS rules: as it was explained, what the difference is in some detailed explanation, it was way out there. I've got to say that this amendment cannot be supported. I thought the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, who told us – I'm pretty sure it was either recently or in the fall – that he was an accountant, would know that any annual report done by a qualified accountant does report the previous year in it already.

It's not necessary. We don't need this amendment. The prior year information is already in the current year financial statements.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to speak in favour of this amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar likes to wax on about how he's an accountant. He's got this massive amount of experience. Has he produced audited financial statements and signed off on all of them?

Mr. Dorward: Yes.

Mr. Saskiw: Well, if you know that, this is an amendment to make sure that the audited financial statements are given to the public, that they're made publicly available.

Mr. Chair, you know, with the type of tone here – we're genuinely trying to make substantive amendments. He doesn't have to come to this Legislature and put down other members that are trying to make a positive difference in this legislation. If he's going to go there and try to make demeaning comments about how someone is not an accountant and someone is not a lawyer or whatever, he shouldn't even stand up.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The reality is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar doesn't listen, so he wouldn't understand. The comment I made is on the record. I never once said in this Assembly that I was an accountant. I made that absolutely clear. You apparently missed it, so I'll explain it again. When I went through university, I majored in accounting, but I never once said I was an accountant. I don't want to be an accountant. I decided at that time it was ridiculous to be an accountant. So let's make that very clear. I decided to be an engineer instead. I want to make that . . . [interjections] Well, the allegation was at me, so I want to make it absolutely clear.

Now, in saying that – and I want to make it clear – I did study for my certified financial analyst, which is a three-year program, and I learned quite a bit more than I learned in university, but that's another matter for another day.

The basis is simply this. I understand financial accounting, and I understand reporting. This is not about debits and credits; this is about reporting, financial reports. That's all it's about. That's all this is about, disclosure, and you don't have to be an accountant to figure out that disclosure is something that absolutely is paramount in making an organization work. If you don't have disclosure, you have all sorts of propensities to falsify and to disrupt and to corrupt.

The whole purpose of disclosure is to make sure that there is seamless knowledge that is disseminated. If you're in a private institution, that, of course, is among stockholders. In this case this is about the democratic process. It's not about financial disclosure in terms of what the budget is in front of you. This is about the past reports. I'd like to hear the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar actually justify why past reports should not be disclosed in the public interest. Of course, then again, we might want to hear why the public interest is being removed bit by bit from pieces of legislation.

But in dealing with this amendment here with the Métis settlements, the issue is about public disclosure of the previous financial year. I know this: from any accounting rules, whether you're dealing with the issue of our current budget or whether you're dealing with financial accounting, cost accounting, having access to previous reports is fundamental in any kind of analysis.

I will say this: I never pretended to be an accountant as some may have in this room, but I know some that are not chartered accountants. That to me is a proper accountant, so I would make that very clear. That does not negate the issue of understanding what accounting is. That is not germane to someone who portrays themselves to be an accountant; that is something that is learned and exercised and expressed through a number of different professions.

I would leave it at that, and if the member would like to engage me more, I am happy to.

The Chair: I hope the member might want to engage the chair, hon. member.

I'll recognize the minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I didn't want to bring out the big book, but the Member for Calgary-Shaw said, "Where's the big book?" so here it is.

Mr. Chair, I want to turn to part 1 of the Metis Settlements Act, division 1, section 5(1), annual meetings. This will clarify the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre's question.

5(1) Within 180 days after the end of each financial year a settlement council must call an annual meeting of the residents of the settlement area by giving public notice of the meeting.

(2) The purpose of the meeting is

- (a) to discuss past and future activities of the settlement council,
- (b) to present the audited financial statements for the immediately preceding financial year, and
- (c) to discuss any matters raised by those present at the meeting.

Mr. Chair, also, just for clarification and to the opposition leader's comments, the standardized financial reporting is for the general council and the minister. The audited financial statements are made public at the annual general meetings, which I just talked about, to all Métis settlement members who are at that meeting.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Ms Smith: I appreciate that clarification. I had obviously over-looked that.

But I have to admit to then needing a definition of what financial reports are. If the financial reports are not the same as the financial statements, then perhaps the minister needs to add a definition to the legislation about what exactly he is referring to when he's talking about financial reports. I think you can understand that when reading through this, you would expect standardized financial reports to be financial statements. If they're not financial statements and are something else, I think that's kind of important for us to understand, to know whether or not there actually does need to be this additional requirement of them being reported to the public.

I recognize that there is another section where they talk about audited financial statements, but I still am left puzzling about what this financial report might be referring to and, again, why it would be that this would not be something that would be required to be shared with the public as my amendment suggests.

The Chair: Are there others?

Mr. Saskiw: Well, the question is what the difference between financial reports and financial statements is. Since we have the expert here, the accountant, a CMA, not a chartered accountant, if you know the difference between what a financial statement is and a financial report – I would hope, Mr. Chair, that the hon. member would since he's so well versed in these types of materials. I mean, clearly, he would know that. It would just devastate all of us if he didn't. He's been standing up here day after day talking about his accounting credentials. Clearly, he can answer the question, if the minister can't, as to the difference between a financial statement and a financial report and what the definition of a financial report is.

The Chair: Thank you.

I'll recognize the hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I mean, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar wasn't at the negotiations, so for him to talk about the difference is unfair.

For the required financial reporting, Mr. Chair, as I said, that's reporting to general council and to the minister, and that's to report on the expenditures and revenues on an annual basis. That is different than the audited financial statements that the settlement councils will do for each settlement council and report to their members. The general council needs to know on an aggregate basis what monies are being expended. Again, as we go out over the next 10 years and look at the $85 million that we're going to spend on a number of different essential services – education, et cetera – for the Métis settlements, we need to have an idea of where we're at on that.

That's the difference between the two. One is to the council and to me; the other is the financial statement that will be the audited financial statement by a certified firm that goes to the Métis settlement at their annual general meeting.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Saskiw: Well, I guess the question is that if there's a financial report that's out there, then why would it just simply go to the minister and not to the general members of the Métis settlement?

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. minister, if you care to respond.

Mr. Campbell: I've explained it enough. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A6.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have one last amendment, and I live in hope that the minister may actually agree to pass this one. The reason I live in hope is because in the summary of amendments to the Metis Settlements Act it actually is one of the items that is already listed there as what the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, will do. It looks to me like he's already gotten preapproval in his negotiations with Métis settlement leaders to actually do this. The problem is that in my read of the legislation – and once again I'm quite happy to be corrected if I have missed something. We're sort of scouring through a number of pages here. There are 150 or so pages in the original act, and then in addition to that, there are about another 20 pages in the amendment act. So it is possible that I did end up missing this piece.

But I will go through and read the amendment if everybody has a copy of it.

The Chair: Just another half a minute, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Sure.

Again, a lot of the amendments that we put forward were to make sure that in transferring this power to the administrative officer, the settlement administrator, the general council did not give up any provisions to be able to put executive limitations around that administrator.

First of all, I'll read into the record the summary of the amendments that the minister was kind enough to give to me. In section 2 under roles and responsibilities he said that the MSA will establish the Administrator as the administrative head of the Settlement and outline the powers, duties and functions of the Administrator, including . . .

And this is point 4.

. . . comply with the MSA and General Council policies, including the Code of Conduct.

Now, I think it's very important that the administrator also be included under a code of conduct. In fact, I think the minister has done a really good job of establishing in one of these sections – just give me a moment to find it. He did a really good job of going through in quite a bit of detail what the conflict-of-interest provisions would be for a council member. I'm just going to go through and find this here. It's sort of escaping my attention.

Let me read it into the record. The difficulty that we have is the way in which the section was enumerated. Here it is. Sorry. Section 27 of the Metis Settlements Amendment Act is amending section 222, where it talks about in subsection (1) adding the following after clause (bb), and it goes through

- (bb.1) establishing a code of conduct to govern the conduct of councillors, that includes, without limitation, rules
  - (i) respecting conflicts of interest, including . . .
    - (A) defining conflict of interest,
    - (B) requiring a councillor to disclose the names of . . . family members . . . employers . . . corporations in which the councillor is a shareholder, officer or director, the names of each partnership of which the councillor is a member, and the names of other entities in which the councillor has a financial interest,
    - (C) respecting what constitutes a conflict of interest and what does not constitute a conflict of interest,
    - (D) respecting the disclosure of conflicts of interest, and
    - (E) respecting how conflicts of interest are to be dealt with,
  - (ii) governing whether a councillor may have a business or financial arrangement with the settlement council . . .
  - (iii) respecting the obligation of councillors to keep [confidential] matters . . .
- (bb.2) establishing a Councillor Remuneration and Benefits Committee . . .

and so on and so forth.

The areas where he goes through and discusses conflict of interest as it respects councillors are very good. The problem is that now with all of this power transferred over to the administrator, the same code of conduct has to apply to the administrator. We have to make sure that when an administrator has now been delegated the authority to make these decisions, especially over hiring, over business contracts, we also have a clear definition of what constitutes a conflict of interest and we also have the administrator disclosing any potential family members, employers, or corporations of which they may be a part, respecting what constitutes a conflict of interest, respecting the disclosure of conflict of interest, respecting how conflicts of interest are to be dealt with, and so on and so forth.

I think that in my read of what the minister indicated the legislation was going to do, which is to ensure that the administrator on being given these new powers would also have to abide by a code of conduct, I was kind of expecting to see more clarity in the legislation about how that would apply to the administrator. It does appear on my reading that it is not in the legislation, so we worked with Parliamentary Counsel to try to fill this gap. We can't really fill it in that section because that section deals specifically with the provisions that govern the conduct of council members.

What was suggested by Parliamentary Counsel was that we do an amendment instead to the proposed section 48. Section 48, as we've discussed in a couple of places before when we were trying to make some amendments to it, is the place in which the settlement administrator has the limitations and legislation placed on them. So it is in this section. We've got subsections (1), (2), and (3). What we're proposing is that we add two sections afterwards that would fill this gap and live up to the commitment that the minister negotiated with the settlement councils about ensuring that the code of conduct also applies to the settlement administrator.

In doing so, I would move that Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, be amended in section 13, in the proposed section 48 by adding the following after subsection (3): "The Minister must, after consulting with the General Council, make at least one regulation establishing rules concerning conflicts of interest for settlement administrators."

That was the wording that was suggested by Parliamentary Counsel. Presumably that means that there could be additional legislation that is put around the conflict-of-interest provisions by the general council, but we do need to have at least one regulation establishing conflict-of-interest requirements since that is something that the minister appears to have committed to in his negotiations with the settlement council members.

9:30

Then, of course:

- (5) If a regulation under subsection (4) relies upon rules concerning conflicts of interest in other enactments, it must state the enactments that apply.

Again, this is language that was proposed by Parliamentary Counsel. Admittedly, it's not all that elegant. There might be a better way for the minister to be able to ensure that in legislation a code of conduct does indeed apply to the administrative head of the settlement. I think that's what the expectation was of those who were reading through what the act was intended to do. I think this does appear to be a piece that might be missing in the legislation.

I would urge others to support this so that we can make sure that in handing over these additional new powers to the administration, we don't end up inadvertently creating a hole so that the general council does not have all of the tools of oversight that they need to and all of the requirements in a code of conduct that should be applying to this very important and key member of the council staff. It really is one of those – I think it's just filling the gap. Now that we're moving to a different type of model, where there is going to be a single administrative head, the requirements on that administrative head include a very clear code of conduct. I think it's missing in the legislation, and I urge all members to support it.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.
Are there other speakers?

Dr. Swann: I'll just add a few words briefly, Mr. Chair. I like the general tone of these amendments. They're friendly amendments. They're strengthening amendments to the whole tone of the legislation. They don't have to be seen as onerous. They don't have to be seen as infringing on an agreement that's been made with the Métis nations. They can be seen as strengthening the capacity to hold each other accountable, and if there are arguments, then it's right there.

If there are no clear black-and-white statements about conflict of interest, for example, that apply to administrators, it's just that much more difficult for people in the administration and in the councils to deal with. If there is an addition of clarity and strengthening of the whole process, to me it's something that we should be embracing, and I'm sure the First Nations would see the merit of it, to add to that already good legislation and bring about a stronger sense of consistency that people may be used to in other circumstances and suddenly see a big gap within their existing legislation.

I guess it's a question, Mr. Chair, of trying to get this right the first time rather than having to go back again and again and again and say, "Oh, let's add this" or "Let's not add this." Then we have fights and debates within the settlements themselves, which we could pre-empt by having it standard with and consistent with other jurisdictions across Alberta.

It is the role of this government to set a standard. It is the role of this government to say: this is what you should aspire to. Obviously, nobody expects to achieve it a hundred per cent of the time. But if they know what the benchmark is, if they know what the standard is, then we can all aspire to that. We can hold each other accountable for that, and we can help build the capacity to actually reach it more consistently than not.

That's all I see, Mr. Chair. I see some opportunity to strengthen the legislation, and I will be supporting it.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there others?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Chair, I'd just like to say that when you look at section 48, which gives the council the authority to set the administrator's remuneration and terms of employment, it also prescribes other duties and functions of the administrator on top of these set out in the act. The council has the ability right now to set the code of conduct and any conflict-of-interest guidelines that they want to put in place for the administrator under section 48.

The Chair: Are there others?
Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have the appropriate number of copies of an amendment I would like to make.

The Chair: The proposed amendment A8 will be the next amendment recognized. Hon. member, if you could just give us a few minutes to circulate that.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll begin by reading the amendment into Hansard here. I move that Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013, be amended by striking out section 21 and substituting the following after section 175.3.

Immunity and confidentiality continue

175.4(1) For greater certainty, a person who is a former Metis Settlements Ombudsman, investigator or other member of the staff in the Metis Settlements Ombudsman office is not personally liable for anything done or omitted to be done in good faith in the performance or purported performance of a function, power or duty under this Act as a Metis Settlements Ombudsman, investigator or other member of the staff in the Metis Settlements Ombudsman office.

(2) For greater certainty, a person who is a former Metis Settlements Ombudsman, investigator or other member of the staff in the Metis Settlements Ombudsman office shall continue to treat all information that came into the person's possession in the course of performing functions, powers or duties under this Act as a Metis Settlements Ombudsman, investigator or other member of the staff in the Metis Settlements Ombudsman office as private and confidential and shall not release that information except as permitted or required under any law in force in Alberta.

Mr. Chair, the reason that I'm moving this – and I have the support of my whole NDP caucus – is that this amendment will retain the ministerial authority to establish an office of the Métis settlements ombudsman.

Mr. Chair, the bill currently seeks to repeal sections 175.1 to 175.3. This amendment will remove this repeal although it does retain the government's proposed section, 175.4, specifically subsection (1) pertaining to immunity and subsection (2) pertaining to confidentiality with respect to the former ombudsman and all staff of the now eliminated office.

I have much to say in support of this amendment because this is a complex matter, and the government's actions are currently deeply troubling to me and to many Métis settlement members. The reason, Mr. Chair, is that there is a troubling irony that in this bill, that purportedly increases the transparency and accountability of Métis settlement governance for the benefit of all residents, the provision that allows the minister to establish a Métis settlements ombudsman is removed.

To be clear here, Mr. Chair, the MSO has already been eliminated, so funding for the ombudsman was completely eliminated in Budget 2013. The office closed its doors on April 4 of 2013. Members of all three opposition parties have raised concerns in this House and outside of the House with respect to the elimination of this office. However, it has so far failed to receive not only a great deal of attention but to get a significant amount of attention from members on the other side of the House. Tonight it's imperative that the minister finally explain why the elimination of the Métis settlements ombudsman was necessary, and unless he can do so in a convincing manner, I urge all members of the House to support this amendment.

I'd like to begin, Mr. Chair, by speaking briefly to the importance of the MSO and the problems associated with the way the government has handled this office. Firstly, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre raised a very important question during debate on April 24. He asked, as has been asked before – and I believe my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View asked a similar question in the past – "How does the appeal tribunal differ from or enhance what the ombudsman was or is today?" To date the minister has not provided an adequate response to that question.

According to the Metis Settlements General Council there is a very clear distinction between the functions and responsibilities of the appeal tribunal and the formal office of the Métis settlements ombudsman. The Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal is a quasi-judicial body that resolves disputes related to land and settlement membership. It has the authority to amend right of entry orders and works through adjudication and mediation to settle compensation disputes for oil and gas activities that occur on settlement lands. The appeal tribunal is also able to resolve other matters outlined in the local bylaws and policies of the general council.

In contrast, the Métis settlements ombudsman was supposed to be an independent and impartial office where settlement members could take any complaints concerning the management or leadership of the settlements. The ombudsman would work informally with parties involved to try to resolve their concern, collect evidence, and launch formal investigations and reviews. In short, the appeal tribunal resolves disputes pertaining to land and membership while the ombudsman served a singularly unique function pertaining to governance and accountability by providing all residents with a dedicated service and process to investigate complaints related to settlement management.

The issues addressed by the office of the Métis settlements ombudsman included alleged conflicts of interests, including furthering private interests, nepotism, acceptance of gifts, confidentiality concerns, and outside employment; misuse of funds; professional misconduct; as well as concerns related to housing, employment, policies, and procedures. Included amongst the many issues addressed by the ombudsman were mispending on unauthorized trips for council members, unauthorized lending errors, unauthorized bonus payments, unauthorized expense claims, unauthorized severance, suspicious investments, kick-backs, job openings not posted properly, fraudulent complaints, and a lack of control over spending. In short, the appeal tribunal and the ombudsman were two different entities with two very different functions and responsibilities.

Secondly, members of this House should be aware of the evidence that this office not only served a unique function but also served a critical function, as demonstrated by the volume of complaints it received every year from residents of the settlements. According to the 2011-12 annual report of the ombudsman, Mr. Chair, there were 137 complaints made by settlement members in 2010-11. That number rose to 175 complaints in 2011-12, which is an increase of 30 per cent. In addition, investigations arising from the ombudsman's own initiative increased 270 per cent in the same one-year time period, from 11 in 2010-11 to 30 in 2011-12.

The evidence suggests three clear things, Mr. Chair. One, there's a clear need for the office of the ombudsman, as demonstrated by the number of complaints received from residents. Two, there is demonstrated knowledge amongst residents of the function and process made available through the office of the MSO. Three, the individual who served as ombudsman most recently was clearly active and proactive in his role. He resolved a total of 235 complaints in 2011-12 and, as mentioned, significantly increased the number of self-initiated investigations. Within that year he offered referrals, he conducted reviews, he conducted formal investigations, and ultimately submitted 61 formal reports to the minister. That is no small number. In short, on average the minister was receiving a formal report from the Métis settlements ombudsman every four business days.

Thirdly, the individual who served as ombudsman was not afraid to speak out about the support or lack thereof he received from this PC government and from the minister. In his 2011-12 annual report the ombudsman wrote that the migration of the Office of the Métis Settlements Ombudsman from a contracted organization to the Government of Alberta... had the effect of undermining primary key components of an Ombudsman's role — independence, impartiality, and confidentiality... In effect, this change has created a schizophrenic organizational structure whereby staff report to and are responsible to the Ministry's administration but are required to comply with the operational directives from me as the MSO.

As to impartiality, Mr. Chairman, he wrote:

Legal advice and opinions are now provided to the Office of the Métis Settlements Ombudsman by Alberta Justice — the same people who in fact provide legal advice to the Minister and to the Ministry. In my opinion, this situation is not only a conflict of interest but this closely-related relationship was clearly not envisioned... In addition, any properly established 'classical Ombudsmen' and the vast majority of departmentally appointed Ombudsmen have their own legal counsel. It is unfortunate that I have been singularly unsuccessful in convincing government authorities of this need. To be effective, this office needs to be independent, impartial, and transparent. I will continue to press for the degree of separation necessary for this office to operate properly. To me, a major problem is the structure and reporting relationship. On a similar theme, the Office is at minimum, one staff member (Advisor) short to complete the Reviews and Investigations relating to the complaints we receive in a timely manner.

This is located on page 4 of his report.

I've also spoken with residents of the Métis settlements who have told me the exact same thing. They say that the MSO didn't ever quite work as it could have because this PC government never gave it the support that it needed. Clearly, the government has made it impossible for the ombudsman to do his job properly.

Now, within a year of making his complaints public in his annual report, his office has been eliminated. Frankly, it looks like a tactic to get rid of a civil servant who was criticizing the government. Maybe it is; maybe it isn't. But there is an appearance of muzzling going on here. Up to now I've spoken both about the unique and critical functions of the office as well as the individual performance of the most recent ombudsman. There are two separate issues, of course, and I've spoken to both of them, not because they're difficult to dissociate but because there is no public evidence on either matter that would lead a rational person, let alone a member, to believe that there are solid public policy reasons to support the elimination of this necessary office.

But distinguishing between the office and the individual performing the duties of the office is of critical importance. However, to this point the only comment the minister has provided regarding the elimination of this office was at estimates debate in response to a question I raised. I'll quote from Hansard, Mr. Chair. He said:

Well, first of all, understand that this was the ombudsman's second kick at the cat... I met with the ombudsman three times: when I was first made minister, when I golfed with him at a Métis tribunal golf tournament, and when he came to talk to me about the fact that he might be leaving. So for the ombudsman to say that there was any interference or that he didn't have independence in his office is not true at all.

Those are the words of the minister. The problem here is that the minister is saying that the individual who served as ombudsman had two terms, and things weren't working out, so this minister decided to eliminate the entire office. That seems problematic to me.

Moving away from the individual, I want to turn specifically to section 21 of this bill, which is the final nail in the coffin for the office of the Métis settlements ombudsman. Section 21 of this bill formally removes the minister's ability to make regulations establishing an office of the Métis settlements ombudsman. In its place a new section, 175.4, has been added, requiring the former ombudsman and all former staff to maintain confidentiality of all information gained through the exercise of their authority in the office of the MSO.

The question that now arises is quite important. For settlement members who need to raise complaints regarding management and governance on settlements, including conflicts of interest and all other issues that the ombudsman would have investigated, what is the process that they can follow to have their concerns addressed? Indeed, is there a process in place to address these complaints? The answer appears to be no, and I hope that the minister will enlighten the Chamber.

The appeals tribunal deals with distinctly different disputes. The provincial Ombudsman of Alberta does not investigate matters involving other levels of governance, including federal, municipal, and settlements governance. The only advice given on the old website of the Métis settlements ombudsman is to contact the policy co-ordinator of the Métis relations with the government of Alberta, which is hardly a permanent solution.

Moreover, Mr. Chair, according to the Metis Settlements General Council the need for an ombudsman has not disappeared. They have told us that something similar is needed. It needs to be quasi-judicial and ombudsmanlike, to use their words specifically. The general council also says that consultations are ongoing with the minister regarding what kind of quasi-judicial and ombudsmanlike body should replace the office of the Métis settlements ombudsman. This is the problem. We can debate how well the current system was working. The government can try to discredit the last ombudsman because he was critical of them, but we should not debate the purpose, the function, and the importance of having a dedicated process and office for dealing with complaints related to settlement management and governance. We certainly should not eliminate that office before a new process or another process has been established.

As far as anyone can tell, the government has handled this situation backwards. They've handled it in a reverse order, Mr. Chair. They've eliminated the ombudsman's office without having completed consultations and without having a replacement ready. We have to question when and even if a replacement is going to be created.

In short, the result of what the government has done is twofold. For those members who haven't been listening as intently as they should, I'll summarize. One, the minister is asking MLAs to accept the removal of the office of the MSO from the Metis Settlements Act without knowing what its replacement is going to look like or whether there will even be a replacement. Two, settlement residents who have legitimate concerns about the governance on their settlements no longer have an established process and dedicated staff to address their concerns. Instead, they are directed to a staff member of the department. So the government has replaced an established process with a shadowy interim process that nobody can publicly scrutinize.

To conclude, this amendment is a small step to say that as lawmakers we cannot remove a process for handling complaints about governance without ensuring that a proper new process is in place. This is also an opportunity for the minister to finally explain his troubling decision, and apparently a step in the wrong direction and even a backward step, Mr. Chair, to eliminate the Métis settlements ombudsman. Clearly, as I've outlined this evening, his function and role was very specific and very unique, and by removing that office without having an office or a new system or process in place, I would argue that it's dismantling the democratic ability of the folks who live on Métis settlements to have a channel, a process, an opportunity to take their complaints.

Clearly, as I've identified in the statistics, the ombudsman was extremely efficient at doing his job and ensuring that the folks who live on the Métis settlements have an outlet, a vehicle that is independent, to address their concerns.

Mr. Chair, I strongly encourage all members to think about this amendment. I'm very curious to hear what other members of the Assembly have to say about this amendment, if they feel as passionately about having and restoring the office of the ombudsman, this independent office, that clearly was very effective in his job in addressing concerns of the people who live in the Métis settlements.

I also look forward to hearing from the minister to finally get an answer as to why this office has been eliminated altogether.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there speakers? The hon. minister on the amendment.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wasn't going to get up to speak to this – I was just going to vote it down – but I think we have to get the facts right.

First of all, I think it's important that the last ombudsman was on his second term of duty. He was the ombudsman, he left, and he came back again. So to suggest at any time that the government was not happy with the job that this individual did is just not true. If that was the case, he'd never have got hired a second time. The fact of the matter is that he was a competent individual, and we hired him again.

I think it's important that we talk about the independence and what – Mr. Chair, I really don't feel comfortable standing up in the Legislature and talking about somebody who hasn't got the ability to defend themselves. So, you know, I do this with great reluctance. But I think it's important that when the ombudsman left the first time, he asked that all of his staff at the time, who were independent and outside of government, be put into government so that they could retain their jobs and have a chance to move around the public sector if something happened, that there were layoffs or whatever. That ombudsman asked the government to put his people into the public sector and into government positions. The government did that. So for him to come back the second time around and say that, you know, it's not independent, that we don't respect his independence, is not true.

As I said in Hansard, that the hon. member quoted – I did say that – I met with the ombudsman three times. When I first joined the ministry, he came over to say hi to me. We had a nice chat for about an hour. I had the privilege of golfing with him and the former ombudsman before him at the Métis general council golf tournament and talking about the ombudsman's office. Then he came to see me about a number of investigations that were ongoing and that he had not completed and asked me to make some decisions. Again, Mr. Chair, I wasn't comfortable with that because I would have thought that he would have completed those investigations and moved forward on some of them, but he didn't.

The other thing that was disconcerting to me, Mr. Chair, was that when he tabled his final report, he mailed it to all members of the Legislature before the minister got to see that report, and I find that not proper. That report is to come to the minister, and the minister tables that report in the Legislature. That did not happen, and that concerns me.

Mr. Anderson: Is he an officer of the Legislature?

Mr. Campbell: No, he's not an officer of the Legislature. He's an officer from Aboriginal Relations.

The Chair: Through the chair, hon. members.

Mr. Campbell: So, Mr. Chair, I had a problem with that.

Let me talk about some of the stats. Mr. Chair, 10 to 30 per cent, depending on the year, were not jurisdictional complaints, and over 50 per cent of the jurisdictional complaints never went to investigation. Many of the 50 per cent mentioned did not even see a complainant make a formal complaint, or they withdrew their complaint. That trend in complaints has dropped by approximately 30 complaints every year since 2003.

We did not contemplate at all doing away with the ombudsman's office until we knew that the current ombudsman had decided that he was going to retire early. He came to me before his term expired and said: I'm leaving early. It was at that point in time that I sat down with officials from my department and had the discussion about whether or not we still needed the ombudsman's office.

Mr. Chair, right now within the Métis general council and the Metis Settlements Act we have the Métis appeals tribunal, which is a quasi-judicial body. It's our thought within the ministry that we can bring that work to that quasi-judicial body and that they can fulfill the role of the ombudsman. At the present time anybody that has a complaint can phone our office, and we'll investigate those complaints through our Métis relations department. We also have the ability if we think anything is serious to ask an investigator to go out and do the investigation and report back to the minister and then follow up on that complaint. If it's real serious, we always have the ability to call in the RCMP to look at that. We have the ability to look after complaints that are happening right now within the Métis settlements.

Mr. Chair, I can say to you that I've had two letters from Métis settlement members about not retaining the ombudsman. Two. So for the hon. member to come out and say that all kinds of Métis settlement members are out raising arms about this, that all of a sudden they don't have someplace to go, is just not true. I can say to you that our department has a very good working relationship with members of the Métis settlements. I've visited all eight Métis settlements. I've talked to the community members, I've talked to the councils, and I know what's going on out there. Are there some people that aren't happy? Sure there are. There always are in every circumstance, but we have the ability to deal with those complaints.

Mr. Chair, again, unfortunately, you know, Budget '13 happened, and we had to make some tough decisions. It was our thought that with the Métis appeals tribunal in place and the fact that it is a quasi-judicial board and the fact that it was dealing with a number of matters within the Métis settlements already, it was a natural fit, that we could take the ombudsman's job and put it into that tribunal. These are people, a number of them, that actually live on the Métis settlements. They're people that have been appointed from the public at large. They're very qualified in dealing with the Métis settlement issues. So we made that decision.

I would strongly suggest to all of my colleagues to vote down this amendment. This makes no sense at all. Like I said, for my hon. colleague across the way to get up and wax eloquent about democracy and how people aren't going to be looked after, Mr.

Chair, is just not true. This department and the people within my department take their roles and responsibilities very, very seriously, and we will do all within our power to make sure that if anybody within the Métis settlements has complaints, those complaints will be heard and will be dealt with in a timely fashion.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the comments of both the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview as well as the minister. I'm still open to being convinced of the importance of passing this amendment. I did speak with the minister about the different processes that would be available to those who raised concerns about issues that are happening on Métis settlements. One of the arguments that he had indicated to me before – I don't think he made it in his speech right now – is that Métis people still have access to the Alberta Ombudsman, just like any Alberta resident would.

Part of the reason we did not bring forward an amendment on this is that it did strike me that we don't have a municipal ombudsman overseeing any issues that take place at the municipal level. We recognize, again, in trying to keep some level of parity with the way in which we govern our municipal councils, that we want to try to get the same governance structure for our Métis settlements.

I was persuaded by the argument of the minister that the Alberta Ombudsman is also one of the avenues to be able to have Métis indicate that they've got issues on the settlement. Perhaps the minister can respond to that. In dealing with only the issue of the tribunal – again, that was another argument that the minister had put forward – it strikes me that going through a tribunal process is likely somewhat more cumbersome than being able to make a complaint to an ombudsman. Perhaps the minister would be able to clarify how easy it would be to go through that tribunal process versus going through the ombudsman.

I guess, finally, the other concern that I have in just eliminating this section and restoring the ombudsman is that now the budget has passed, and there's no budget for it. The $700,000 has been eliminated. I'm just wondering. From a structural point of view, if you re-establish an ombudsman and you don't give it any money, have you actually established an ombudsman? I just wonder if perhaps what needs to happen at this stage, now that the budget has eliminated the ombudsman, is that we really need to monitor the situation over the next year and see whether or not there is actually a hole.

I wonder if the minister might answer those points but then also just commit to sharing with us in this Legislature in keeping track of how many calls do come in to his office, if that is one of the legitimate avenues by which he is anticipating that he would be able to receive some of these complaints, so that we can get some gauge of whether or not there is some need to be able to restore this process or create some suboffice or specialty underneath the ombudsman or whether or not we are indeed seeing any increase in cases heard before the appeals tribunal.

I am open to giving this a try for the next year, but I wouldn't mind if the minister would give us some undertaking about how he would anticipate judging the level of success in eliminating this office and some of the other issues that I'd raised.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair, and I thank the Leader of the Official Opposition for those comments. We will monitor what happens over the next year because, again, our role within the ministry is to make sure that we do a proper job of looking after all aboriginal people in this province, and the Métis settlements are a very key component to our success. We will be monitoring and tracking that.

As far as the tribunal process, again, while I say that it's quasi-judicial, it's also very informal. A number of the issues that the tribunal deals with right now are land issues. You'll have two members quarreling over who has land and who doesn't within the settlement. I mean, they're serious matters – don't get me wrong – but again it's very casual, and they do a very good job of administering that. I just see it as a very natural fit for the tribunal to take on the added responsibilities. Again, if the tribunal was to come to the minister and say, "Listen, we have a very serious situation; it's outside our scope," we can always put an investigator on that. Again, if it's a matter of fraud or that nature, we can always call in the RCMP. We have those mechanisms in place. But we will be tracking over the next year to see the number of calls that do come in and whether or not we have to make adjustments.

Again, we'll do that through sitting down with the Métis settlement councils and chairs and having their feedback and understanding where they're at in all this also. As we move through the LTA, it will be a work-in-progress.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'd like to clarify a few things. First, the Member for Highwood has been misinformed to the extent that the Alberta Ombudsman does not look at settlement issues. My office contacted them directly, and they do not, so that is not an avenue that settlements have.

Second of all, we're not talking about establishing or re-establishing an ombudsman. We're talking about ensuring or retaining the ministerial power to create an ombudsman office. The year could go by where we don't have an ombudsman and we see the difference in how disputes are resolved and all the rest while still leaving the minister with the authority to create an ombudsman office or re-establish in a subsequent year. The challenge with the way the amendment act is written is that it eliminates the ombudsman office altogether and removes the power of the minister to create an ombudsman office, which is part of the reason that I'm speaking so passionately about this this evening. The establishment of the office is also done through regulation, not through legislation. Again, the amendment is for the minister to retain his powers to create that office.

A couple of points I'd like to raise. First, the minister still has not addressed my question adequately on the process that is replacing the function of the ombudsman. I'll just reiterate. The appeal tribunal is not the same as the ombudsman office and has different authority. The tribunal is related to land issues and settlement matters whereas the office of the ombudsman is an independent and impartial office that deals with an avenue or an outlet, a process for residents to go through if there are issues or concerns about leadership and the governance of the Métis settlements. Going through to the minister's office is not the same thing as having an ombudsman. The minister's office, first of all, is not dedicated to resolve and work toward the resolution of these issues. It is not dedicated to the Métis settlements. As well, some could argue that it is not a completely impartial office, an avenue for complaints to go through.

I think we're comparing apples and oranges if we want to look at the number of complaints and resolutions that the ombudsman worked towards versus going a year without the office of the ombudsman and just seeing how many calls come into the minister's office. That is not the same avenue. Individuals may not feel as comfortable contacting the minister's office with their claims or their concerns or their issues.

Again, I welcome the minister looking at the annual report from 2011-12 – pardon me; for 2010-2011, but it's in the annual report the following year. There were 137 complaints made by settlement members. The number rose to 175 complaints in 2011-12, which is an increase of 30 per cent. So it is not correct that every year the number of complaints has gone down. That can be seen clearly in the annual report of the office of the ombudsman.

The other thing. Another value the ombudsman brought was that his office has the power to help resolve these disputes through an informal channel, where it doesn't have to necessarily go to formal investigations. Much of the work of the office of the ombudsman is done I don't want to say behind the scenes, but it doesn't need to go to that formal process. By eliminating that, sure, we may see that in a year from now it may rise, and I may say: "I told you so. Look at the number of complaints and formal investigations that have been launched." The problem is that the horses are already out of the barn, and we're now trying to close the barn doors because we've already taken away the power that the minister has to create an office of the ombudsman.

I'd be happy to be proven wrong. However, I urge the Assembly to look at the amendment, which is ensuring the minister has the power to create an office of the ombudsman. It is already eliminated out of this year's budget. That can't be changed. What I'm advocating for is that that power remains and is not removed so that in a year from now, if we see an increase in the number of complaints and formal investigations and this Chamber decides the ombudsman did in fact serve a very critical role, the minister has the authority to create an office of the ombudsman.

For those reasons, I urge members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you. I appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview clarifying some of that. I wonder if he might be able to clarify one more thing since he has had a conversation with the ombudsman office. One of the other concerns that I have is that we want to start removing – and I think this bill goes a long way towards that – some of the paternalistic approaches to members of our Métis communities. It does seem to me that having a special ombudsman just for Métis settlements and not having an ombudsman for other municipal councils seems to be moving away from this notion that we should be treating our Métis settlements as a similar order of government, as we do with our municipal governments.

I think that was sort of the intention that the provincial government was moving towards. I wonder if maybe my misunderstanding of the Alberta Ombudsman applies also to municipal government. Does municipal government have the opportunity? If somebody has a complaint against a municipal government, will the Alberta Ombudsman look at those cases? It would seem to me that if that is not the case, we are seeking to have some parity, and if it is the case that it applies to municipal complaints but not to Métis complaints, then maybe we need to actually change a different piece of legislation. Since I haven't looked at this closely and it sounds like the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has, I wouldn't mind if he might be able to clarify that for me.

10:10

The Chair: Thank you, hon. leader.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Sure. I thank the Member for Highwood for her question. You know what? I cannot speak at the moment on the Alberta Ombudsman, on what role that office can play in resolving municipal issues. I think that is a very valid question. I would be in support of looking into the benefits of creating a municipal ombudsman office, but I can tell you that the reason I feel strongly about the minister retaining the power to create the office of the ombudsman is because the Alberta Ombudsman will not investigate issues on Métis settlements. For that reason, there is not that avenue available for them as there is for most other Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening very intently to the interesting discussion here around the ombudsman, and I'm prepared to give the minister the benefit of the doubt. I see municipalities who have problems dealing directly with their municipal councillors, voting them out of office, starting movements to hold them accountable if they have been misbehaving, having a complaints process develop through their council when there are irregularities or consistent ignoring of problems.

I think this would be a major shift, that I'm not sure we want to set a precedent for, with the new autonomy and respect that is now being shown to the Métis councils. I'm willing to give the minister the benefit of the doubt on this one even though I was one who early on raised serious doubts about the elimination of the ombudsman as a result of this government's, well, timely budget cuts, I would call them, associated with this elimination.

I'm persuaded by the fact that, one, there's no parallel in the municipal government set-up and also by the fact that this minister has obviously gotten his commitment made to the Métis settlements, a delicate, difficult negotiation process, and this would, I think, be a significant threat to the kind of working relationship that has to be developed in these next few years to actually have a very constructive, mutually supportive, capacity-building role, which I think this minister, in all honesty, is trying to develop.

With great appreciation to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for doing his research, consulting, looking at the data, I think it was an important thing. We need to keep some tabs on the complaint process as it evolves over the next year or two on the Métis settlement issue. I hope to hear from the minister in the next year exactly the numbers of complaints and how the tribunal has been dealing with them.

Myself, I intend as the critic for First Nations to be in touch with individuals in the Métis settlements and to find out just what has happened in relation to their complaints process. I share the concern here that this independent officer, who was really responding directly to the people, will be a very different role from those in the council who are dealing with the concerns or the minister's office itself, which will be dealing with the occasional complaint. A very different process, very different roles and responsibilities, and very much less assured accountability, that I think all elected offices need to be held up to.

I won't be supporting this at this time. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to clarify a few points. I mean, obviously, I respect the opinions of all members in this House. The issue I have here is that getting rid of a dedicated process is not the answer. You know, the office of the ombudsman served a very useful and unique role. It was another level of oversight that the public had access to. The ombudsman worked in order to uncover whether there were misdoings or wrongdoings but also was just able to work with complaints in an informal way. The office of the ombudsman itself is an impartial and independent office, which I think is crucial when we look at, again, oversight within our democratic structures.

This amendment, I just wanted to clarify for the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, isn't about retaining the office of the ombudsman because that has been eliminated in this budget. This is an amendment for the minister to retain the ability to create an office of a Métis ombudsman. This is, again, an example, you know, where time will tell if the office is as necessary as I believe and New Democrats believe. Now, maybe it's not, but the point is that with this amendment the minister still has the authority to create that. If the bill goes through the way it is, unamended, that office will be eliminated permanently. That's really the concern here, Mr. Chair. This is an opportunity to leave a process, another form of oversight, in place as opposed to a decision that members of this Assembly will make which could change that, potentially, forever.

Again I urge the members of the Assembly to consider this amendment as a safety measure and as a way to leave that authority intact in this new amendment act should we the Assembly and the government decide, moving forward, that that position is as necessary as I hope to have articulated this evening.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A8.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: Back to the main bill.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Yes. Mr. Chair, I'd ask now that the committee rise and report on Bill 19.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

10:20

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 19. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Having heard the report by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 21 Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 21 will create a funding mechanism between industry and government to support the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan for oil sands monitoring, announced in February 2012 by the governments of Canada and Alberta. This plan lays out a phased implementation of monitoring activities in the oil sands area over three years, from 2012 to 2015. The plan addresses several concerns that have been raised about monitoring in the region, including the need for a more integrated and transparent and scientifically credible oil sands monitoring program.

At the time the oil sands industry committed to providing funding over three years at a cost of up to $50 million a year. The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers recommended the funding formula that determines what each individual company will pay into the fund. The funding arrangement outlined in Bill 21 will enable Alberta to collect, hold, and disburse funds and continue to implement the joint plan. We fully expect industry to comply given that the mechanism was co-operatively and collaboratively designed and developed. However, as requested by industry, we have included a provision in the proposed legislation in the unlikely event that we need to impose regulation to pursue nonpayment. A final decision on a funding approach for a province-wide monitoring system has yet to be made.

Additionally, Bill 21 outlines our goal to fully integrate all hazardous waste management systems in Alberta, and with this in mind Bill 21 will remove the requirement for personal information numbers, or PINs, for hazardous waste management to support implementation of the regulatory enhancement project. Removal of the requirement for a PIN will support integration of the two waste management systems under the new Alberta energy regulator. Removing the PIN requirement will simplify administration and will not affect environmental assurance.

There is also a change in the regulation that ensures that all persons with delegated authority, not just government employees, are granted liability protection. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 21.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 17 Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 17, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 17 is necessary to amend the MGA to implement the new municipal sustainability strategy. This strategy intends to better support the long-term viability of municipalities by providing a wide range of tools and supports, not the least of which will be a new viability review process to be used when challenges to a municipality's viability are substantial. This new viability review process will result in a more proactive approach to identifying challenges, more community engagement and involvement in the long-term future of Alberta's municipalities, and more sustainable communities for our residents. I happen to have two such cases in my own constituency, so I really have a vested interest in this bill.

These changes will help make dissolution a last choice by giving communities a way to assess and work through issues. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and participate in the discussion on Bill 17, the Municipal Government Amendment Act. I have been sitting in the Legislature for one year plus a few days. Prior to being elected as the MLA for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I served as a municipal councillor for and then as mayor of the village of Beiseker. Over that period I also had the pleasure of working with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association first on their board of directors and later on as the vice-president of villages and summer villages. In my experience as an elected official at both the municipal and provincial levels I know of several situations in my area of the province where small communities felt it would be in the best interest of the community to dissolve and become part of the surrounding municipal district. This is going to continue to happen from time to time in the future, and I agree that providing greater clarity around the dissolution process is needed.

Bill 17 would implement one of the recommendations made in the 2010 municipal sustainability strategy report, in which the AUMA was a participant. I know that the AUMA is supportive of Bill 17. They also make a good point that since the Municipal Government Act is being opened up to amend section 130, the section that deals with dissolution, there are also a few other pressing issues that they would like to see addressed at this time rather than waiting for the overhaul of the MGA, which will be continuing over the next couple of years.

Currently the MGA provides the minister with the following tools to resolve municipal issues: a dissolution study and the dissolution itself. Bill 17 is proposing to do away with dissolution studies and replace them with viability reviews. Other measures would also be added to the minister's authority so that the dissolution is not necessarily the only option to resolve municipal issues.

The term "viability review" certainly sounds more positive than "dissolution study," but besides a name change I would like to hear some of the more specific details on what the difference will be between a dissolution study and a viability review. What new elements will be looked at with a viability review that have not previously been looked at through a dissolution study? Are there things that were measured in a dissolution study that will no longer be included in a viability study? Currently I know of at least one community that recently triggered a dissolution study by submitting a petition from 30 per cent of the population of the municipality to the minister. The minister and I had a discussion about this during the estimates debate. He mentioned that instead of a dissolution study, that community is going to be undergoing a viability study in anticipation of the fact that this is the way we will be moving in the future.

I know the government has all of the details of what a viability study will look like as compared to a dissolution study, and I look forward to receiving that information before debate on Bill 17 concludes. Thanks in advance to the minister and his office for providing that information.

In the Wildrose Official Opposition we respect the role of local decision-making in creating what's best for municipalities. We recognize that it is local leaders who best understand the needs of local communities. It is the people on the ground who are in the best position to determine what is needed for their community. I am supportive of the proposal in Bill 17 to amend the Municipal Government Act to write into law that a vote must be held on whether or not to dissolve a municipality before it can be dissolved. This only make sense, especially when a community asks for a viability study. They should be able to look over the results of that study and, based on what they see, hold a vote on whether or not they want to go ahead with the dissolution.

Bill 17 would ensure that if the electors vote to dissolve the municipality, the minister must make that recommendation to cabinet. I certainly hope that regardless of the party sitting as government, the government of the day would respect the decision made by the people within that community.

The other amendment Bill 17 would make that I view as a positive is to provide more tools than just dissolution to use to resolve problems within a municipality. Dissolution may not always be the answer to problems a municipality is experiencing. Sometimes municipalities may simply need some assistance and perhaps some direction as to what actions to take to resolve issues within their own community. Bill 17 will give the minister the authority to provide this assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I will always be first in line to support Alberta's municipalities. From the feedback I have received on Bill 17, it is clear that our municipalities support the changes to the Municipal Government Act that Bill 17 is proposing. I will be supporting Bill 17 and would also like to say that I look forward to the future discussions that will be had on all other sections for the MGA moving forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 17, the Municipal Government Amendment Act. I just want to say at the onset that I and the Alberta NDP caucus strongly value local governance and municipalities as an order of government and their autonomy and independence in decision-making.

With this bill, Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to have spoken with representatives from the AUMA and the AAMD and C and to learn that they have been a part of this bill. They've been consulted, and, you know, this has been discussed with them, and for the most part they do approve of this amended piece of legislation, which I think is absolutely crucial before the government moves forward. So I do commend members on the other side for working with these two organizations to draft this piece of legislation.

I think the bill is very interesting, Mr. Speaker. It contains many provisions that I and my colleagues from the NDP caucus can support. The need to hold a vote of electors in order for a dissolution to be approved is an example of direct democracy and a direct democratic procedure with respect to the most significant question that can face a municipality, and that's whether or not it should be dissolved. So I'm happy to see that that is part of this bill.

A couple of questions that I do have, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure why there is no process for conducting the viability review that's laid out in the bill. Instead, the proposed section 130(3) states that "a viability review must be conducted in a manner determined by the Minister." Now, you know, that gives me a little bit of trepidation because it gives tremendous authority to the minister not only to initiate viability reviews when he wishes to do so but also to conduct them in the ways that he sees fit. Now, of course, the current Minister of Municipal Affairs would never abuse his authority or his post and the responsibilities that have been bestowed on him, but the concern is that I'm not sure if future ministers of municipal affairs will be as noble in their actions and as cautious with the power that they have, so I am concerned with this part of Bill 17.

It would be easier, I must say, Mr. Speaker, to support this bill if we – and I'm sure my colleagues in the Chamber here would agree – could see exactly how a viability review would work and what exactly is entailed in this process. I know, for example, that both bodies, AUMA and AAMD and C, are very curious to see what those details are and how this functions and carries out. You know, as elected lawmakers we want to promote accountability, transparency, and due process, so for that reason I'm concerned that the viability review process is not detailed in this bill, and I would have liked to have seen that.

The bill does provide the legislative framework required to support the municipal sustainability strategy, which has been developed in collaboration with the AUMA and the AAMD and C. I don't know why I'm tripping on that acronym tonight, Mr. Speaker. Any time the government can work collaboratively with various organizations and bodies that are directly and indirectly impacted by legislation that this Chamber passes to come up with a solution that everyone is satisfied with for the most part I think is an example of good governance.

Like I said, the AUMA and the AAMD and C, from conversations I've had with them, are happy to see this legislation as creating a series of options to keep municipalities viable and give them more than just the option of dissolution or not to dissolve. The AUMA has said that this is positive and constructive for municipalities, allowing currently or apparently unviable municipalities to work with their neighbours to find solutions that will work for them in their regions, which I think is very, very positive.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the bill gives tremendous power to the minister. I guess a note of caution that I will issue to the minister is that I believe that people will be watching, people within municipalities all across Alberta, within this room, and the two bodies. AUMA is going to be watching, AAMD and C is going to be watching, and we're going to be watching to ensure that the minister or his successors do not in any way, shape, or form abuse the power vested in them through this bill.

I just want to highlight very briefly, Mr. Speaker, the one issue that the AUMA raised, their one bone of contention if you will. They're disappointed in the minister's willingness to open the MGA in that it did not extend to property assessment and taxation reform, which the AUMA specifically has submitted in its 2010-2012 reports. The AUMA is talking about reforms that are critical to ensure that they can offer the programs and services that many Albertans rely on. You know, unfortunately, coming from the AUMA, their opinion or belief is that by the minister delaying the conversation or opening up the MGA now, in the near future specifically looking at tax reforms and property assessments, is going to delay them in ensuring that communities are sustainable and viable. This delay might endanger their sustainability. It's definitely going to cause an increase in costs because of delayed infrastructure, maintenance, and repair.

It's also going to perpetuate inequalities between municipalities, Mr. Speaker. That's an issue that, you know, we definitely need to have further discussion and debate on in this House. There are differences in property taxes and differences in some municipalities having access to funds that other municipalities don't have. Quite frankly, there is an uneven playing field, which we do need to address. It needs to be addressed in the MGA. So I share the concerns that the AUMA has as far as the minister's reluctance to address these issues in a timely manner.

For the reasons I've outlined earlier, I will be supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker. A couple of questions I wish that my colleagues on the other side could clarify. I wish the bill had more details as far as the viability review, maybe a little less power given to the minister and future ministers. As I've said, I trust that the current Minister of Municipal Affairs will not abuse his powers, but we need to be thinking long term, that maybe future ministers might not be as impartial in their position. For these reasons, again, I will commend the members on the other side for drafting this bill, and I will support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

10:40

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll invite the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock to close debate.

Ms Kubinec: Mr. Speaker, I call the question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

Bill 18

Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise to move second reading of Bill 18, the Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act.

This act will provide the authority to create pooled registered pension plans here in Alberta, giving working Albertans more options when it comes to retirement savings. This proposed act comes on the heels of federal legislation which has enabled the territories and national companies to offer low-cost pooled pension plans, but in order for Albertans to take advantage of these new pension plans, it is necessary for our provincial government to create enabling legislation in our province, which is what I'm putting forward here today.

Actor and comedian Gene Perret once had this to say about retirement. "It's nice to get out of the rat race, but you have to learn to get along with less cheese." This quote, Mr. Speaker, was probably said in jest, but unfortunately for many Albertans this could be their reality as they reach their golden years. Research has shown that a significant portion of Canadians are not saving enough for retirement and will likely see a drop in their standard of living when they retire.

There are many reasons for this, Mr. Speaker, not the least of which include increased life expectancy, with the average person now living more than four years longer than when the Canadian pension plan was introduced back in 1966, and limited personal retirement savings, with fewer than 6 per cent of Canadians maximizing their RRSP contributions each year. Another reason is difficulty making investment decisions amongst people due to a lack of information and experience. Another is that few people are joining workplace pension plans. Another reason is increasing household debt, making it more difficult to save for the future. Finally, one other reason is high management fees for retirement funds, which significantly reduce fund balances.

Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker. By no means are these excuses for putting off retirement planning. Our government strongly believes that it is every individual's personal responsibility to set aside enough money to live comfortably in retirement, but we also recognize that some of the factors I outlined just a few minutes ago are barriers to keeping Albertans from successfully planning for their future. To help address these challenges, our government has introduced the pooled pension plan legislation, that will give more Albertans access to retirement savings plans that are affordable, simple, and easy to administer. We are giving Albertans freedom and responsibility to choose how best to plan their retirement savings.

PRPPs offer many advantages to their members, the first being that they will be a low-cost retirement savings vehicle. Because of their pooled nature, the plans can take advantage of having a large number of members to share management costs so that cost to the consumer is lower than typical retail savings vehicles. In the federal legislation low cost is defined in the regulation as the per-member cost being at or below that of a plan with 500 or more members. This means Albertans enrolled in these plans will end up with more money in their pockets by the time they are ready to retire.

Plan members will also enjoy the benefit of belonging to a pension plan without having to work for a large company or organization. For the first time all small- and medium-sized businesses as well as the self-employed and the nonprofit sector will have access to professionally managed pension plans.

Another advantage of pooled pension plans is their flexibility. These new retirement tools will be portable, meaning members can move their pension contributions from one fund to another, and should the member leave a job to pursue another career, their pension plan will follow them to their new job.

Another benefit to these pooled plans is the high degree of customization available, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, if an employer chooses to participate, their employees will automatically be enrolled in the plan. However, employees can still opt out if they so desire. Should they choose to join a plan, members may choose how their savings are invested based on their tolerance for risk and other factors. They can also choose how much to contribute within the plan's guidelines. Plan members may also choose to temporarily suspend their contributions to help them deal with changing personal circumstances that may occur from time to time. This adds up to a lot of flexibility for every member that is enrolled.

On the flip side, Mr. Speaker, for Albertans who aren't as comfortable with investment decisions, they can go with a default, the recommended option that is not too risky, and they still get a good, solid pension plan that works for them. This should remove a barrier that prevents some people from saving and investing successfully for their retirement, the lack of knowledge or confidence to make specific decisions on investment funds.

One of the advantages of joining a pooled pension plan is that contributions will come right off their paycheque, ensuring that Albertans stick to the principle of paying themselves first.

Like other pension plans, funds are locked in but may be accessed under certain circumstances such as financial hardship.

Another benefit of pooled pension plans is the fact that they will not only benefit working Albertans but also business owners, Mr. Speaker. For employers these plans are easy to offer, and the administrative burden is very minimal. In fact, financial institutions that plan to offer the product tell us that it will be as easy if not easier than offering group RRSPs. Furthermore, we'll see these pooled pension plans as one incentive for smaller employers to use to attract employees and retain current staff.

There are other benefits of pooled pension plans over regular pension plans or group RRSPs. Employers will not be liable for investment decisions or results, benefit guarantees, or administrative burden and cost. Responsibility is limited to enrolling employees and deducting and remitting contributions, and that's it for employers. This takes a huge burden off their shoulders.

Another difference business owners will see in pooled pension plans is that employer contributions are optional. How much if any contribution is given should be a decision made between the employer and the employee.

Business owners that take advantage of the pooled pension plan program and decide to make a contribution will see some tax benefits or greater tax benefits over offering group RRSPs. Canada pension plan and employment insurance premiums will not apply to pooled pension plan employer contributions the way that they would to group RRSPs.

These, Mr. Speaker, are only some of the advantages of pooled registered pension plans. These new retirement savings vehicles are another tool we have to offer Albertans to make it easier to responsibly save for their future.

Bill 18, the Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act, will benefit a great number of Albertans from employees to employers, but most of all they will benefit hard-working families. Mr. Speaker, I can sit here and honestly say today that I wish that this plan was available to my parents as they were working hard and earning a living, putting me and my brothers through sports and school and making sure that we had everything that was available to us. It would have been nice for them to have this type of plan available to them so that they could have planned appropriately for their future. This is something that I worry about greatly, having parents that are getting close to retirement age, that they have the sufficient amount of retirement income.

A good retirement savings fund ensures that the financial burden of getting older is not passed on to our children and is not passed on to our society and, as a result, on to our government. The fact that there is a real concern that there are not sufficient funds available amongst citizens for retirement is certainly a huge concern, I think, of all governments across this country and something that we've been working on very closely with other provinces and with the federal government. Solid retirement savings make for good peace of mind, Mr. Speaker, and that is the legacy I hope Albertans leave behind as they enter into their golden years.

In closing, I ask all members of this Assembly to support this bill because it's the right thing to do, and it provides Albertans more options to be able to retire comfortably and with dignity. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to speak today to Bill 18, the Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act. I want to commend the government for introducing this legislation. Here in this House debates, of course, are often heated, and barbs back and forth at each other are often sharp, but we should always take the time to recognize good ideas and to support some public policy solutions to the challenges that everyday Albertans face.

Fundamentally this bill will allow for more options for Albertans to plan and to save for their futures. Since this is a principle that we in the Wildrose constantly urge the government to heed when it comes to tax dollars and the province's budget, I am of course compelled to support this legislation since I believe it's a good thing for Albertans to have as many alternatives as possible to save for their retirement.

We know that only 1 in 6 Albertans working in the private sector currently participates in an employee pension plan and that employee pension plans can be onerous for small- and mid-sized businesses to establish independently. Pooled registered pension plans clearly address this issue.

I feel that we need to acknowledge the leadership of the federal Conservative government in passing Bill C-25 in order to make these new low-cost, easily accessible, privately administered pension options available to all Canadians. I'm glad the provincial government moved quickly with Bill 18 to provide the legislative framework for the regulation of these plans.

Accessibility is one of the most important aspects of these pooled pension plans. It is crucial and commendable that they will be available to employees with or without participating employers so that the self-employed will also have the opportunity to participate. Mobility is also key to these new plans so that an employee who changes jobs can carry their pooled plan with them to their new employment, where hopefully their new employer will participate. But if they won't, the employee can still make regular contributions to it.

It is important to recognize the burdensome administrative costs, management demands, and legal liabilities for small- and medium-sized enterprises in establishing employee pension programs. The pooled registered pension plans, or PRPPs for the acronym, proposed under the federal legislation and in this bill account for the concerns about the cost and administrative burdens of offering a pension plan to employees by ensuring the plans will be managed by qualified third-party administrators such as major banks and subject to a fiduciary standard of care so the best interests of participating Albertans are protected.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business reports that 78 per cent of Alberta's small businesses do not have a company retirement savings plan but that the majority are either unsure about their options and would be interested in learning more about these PRPPs as an alternative or would definitely consider offering such plans in their workplace to improve retirement savings for them and for their employees. This legislation will give small businesses this option.

In addition to expanding the availability of options through which Albertans can save and plan for their futures, it is good that the PRPPs are defined contribution plans. Therefore, the PRPPs will avoid the risks around sustainability and liability that so many public pension plans face around the world today.

There is certainly still some needed work to be done on these plans, which can probably be dealt with mostly in regulation. For example, it does seem to me and to others I've spoken with that the parameters for contribution limits for self-employed participation should be different from those of regular RRSP contribution limits for regular employees. Contributions for the self-employed should be based on a special formula that accounts for the total amount eligible for PRPP donations, not necessarily reflecting their earnings in any given year, because earnings in these situations are often retained in the company of a self-employed individual and are not taken out as income.

A regulated formula should take that into account for self-employed individuals that own their own business and want to use this tool. If such a formula does not take care of this inequity, this would act as a penalty against self-employed individuals, who wouldn't be able to contribute as much to their plans. So I would ask that the minister address that when he is putting together his regulations.

In conclusion, Bill 18 represents an important step in offering private-sector employees and employers in Alberta an accessible and low-cost option for retirement savings plans. It is important for Albertans to have as many ways as possible to save for their future and to plan for their retirement. I urge all of us here to support this legislation and make Alberta one of the first provinces in Canada to match the leadership of the federal government and pass this enabling legislation for pooled registered pension plans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to stand and speak to Bill 18, the Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act. I haven't yet made a decision about this bill, and our caucus is still coming to grips with it, but I think it's fair to say that it's an interesting idea that will potentially produce more choice. It will also potentially produce more risk and more uncertainty for many people who are already struggling with a plethora of choices in investment, many of whom, I think, are already convinced that CPP could provide most of what is needed if it was simply strengthened. We would reduce the overhead costs with such a large pool of monies with tremendous security as a national plan.

So we have some reservations about it but recognize that the pooled registered pension plans as articulated by the federal minister since 2010 to try to accommodate the provinces of Alberta and Quebec, that rejected the idea of CPP reform, put forward this opportunity for provinces to expand the scope and presumably make more accessible investment packages that were more stable, perhaps, more varied, less costly. We remain to be convinced.

Looking at the approach that this government has taken to a lot of financial management, I guess many of us have doubts that they could add anything to the investment portfolios that are already out there. I mean, this is what independent business does. Why would we as a government feel that we have a better way to sell investments to people? It somehow flies in the face of what these folks and the Wildrose say they believe in, which is free enterprise. Here we are setting up something that I'm not sure wouldn't be there if it was already going to be a profitable venture on its own.

That having been said, I think there are some interesting aspects to this that we will look at, but certainly we've seen some of the criticisms that claim that they are not really that different from RRSPs as they exist today. As an investor myself I struggle just to understand the current costs, risks, benefits of the variable investment options out there today. I also recognize that they won't necessarily be effective in closing the gaps in retirement income unless they're mandatory on the part of employers and employees. It's difficult to know exactly what this government is trying to achieve if people are already making choices around their investment strategy.

I acknowledge that about a third of Canadians don't have any savings, and they're at risk. There's no question. Only a third of Canadians are actually covered by a workplace pension plan. In fact, I'll correct my earlier statement. Only about a third of us have any savings plan at all. Clearly, some changes are needed.

The maximum CPP retirement benefit for someone who retires at age 65 is only about a thousand dollars a month. Clearly, that's not going to do it in the next 20 to 30 years. The median value of an RRSP for workers 55 years of age and over is just around $60,000. In a typical year only a quarter of us put anything into an RRSP. So these obviously create some challenges that need to be addressed.

Again, I guess we have some questions about the risks and benefits. For many of us, adding yet another layer of investment opportunities will raise more questions and presumably create more risk. Albertans already have access, then, to RRSPs. Since PRPPs are voluntary, will those that are not participating in an RRSP choose these? Should people be forced to save for retirement? These are some of the questions that I think are being raised by this bill.

So far only Quebec has made employer contributions mandatory. That's not the case under this bill, as I understand it. The business community is certainly against any kind of mandatory employer pension contributions.

Will PRPPs expand pension coverage at the expense of pension quality? That's a question that I have certainly raised. Just having more numbers doesn't necessarily mean more accountability, better financial management. It will increase to some extent the need for oversight, administrative costs, and until it gets to the level where it's actually dealing with large amounts of money, one has to wonder whether it's going to be a cost-effective option. In other words, might they encourage some companies to drop existing in-house defined benefit pension plans, where they are already matching employee contributions, in favour of this new defined contribution scheme, where workers assume all the risk and employers aren't required to contribute to their pensions at all? Are PRPPs a precursor to defined contribution pension plans for public-sector workers?

In his 2013 budget speech the Finance minister said:

The pension boards are reviewing four major public-sector plans: the local authorities pension plan, the public service pension plan, the management employees pension plan, and the special forces pension plan. This review will ensure these plans remain part of a competitive compensation package for the public service while protecting taxpayers' interests.

Could giving people yet another retirement saving option actually make things worse?

Columnist Preet Banerjee notes, and I quote: we have RRSPs, TFSA's, RESPs, PRPPs; a lot of people will be suffering from paralysis with all these choices. End quote.

Some interesting opportunities. I look forward to learning more and hearing from both sides about these debates. I certainly wouldn't want to rush in to fill a gap that already has old age security and guaranteed income supplement, mandatory public pension plans like CPP, and private savings vehicles like RRSPs and workplace pension plans. I look forward to the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 18, the Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act. Similar to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, there are quite a few questions that I and the Alberta NDP caucus have regarding this act.

There's no dispute or discussion on the issue that Canadians deserve to have meaningful improvements to their pensions. The CPP has a proven track record of professional management, low-cost administration, and reasonable rates of return. Through modest and mandatory savings the CPP provides the guarantee of defined benefits, which provide Albertans with an unrivalled peace of mind. It's therefore, in my opinion, the best option for helping to secure a guaranteed future for Albertans' retirement. What's interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that only 18 per cent of Albertans have a private-sector pension plan versus 40 per cent Canada-wide.

Now, Gil McGowan of the AFL has said that what Albertans desperately need is a mandatory pension program to ensure that they don't retire into poverty. He says that the PRPP is a step backwards because it's not mandatory and, even when combined with federal benefits, is still not enough to ensure that workers have sufficient money when they retire. The AFL and the federal NDP say that PRPPs are simply a glorified RRSP, designed in such a way as to see retirement savings of Albertans handed over to the financial sector, which, quite frankly, has often failed to deliver on its promises with surprising regularity. Anyone who has tried to cash in their RRSPs during the end of a business cycle will know what that means.

It's also important to note that during the great economic recession the CPP barely lost but a few percentage points in value while the stock market took a terrible turn, as many will recall. It's likely that if the PRPP was around at the time, it would have lost an equivalent value to that of the stock market, not the CPP.

Now, Mr. Speaker, PRPPs are entirely voluntary. They contain no requirement for employers to match employee contributions. The benefits they pay out are not guaranteed and are subject to the vagaries of the stock market. If people couldn't afford RRSPs before, then it's unlikely that they'll be able to afford them now. Only 31 per cent of eligible Canadians actually use their ability to invest in RRSPs.

The PRPP will be just another gift to Bay Street, just another financial product that they can sell, especially if they negotiate higher fees than RRSPs. This legislation does nothing to cap the fees that administrators of the PRPPs will charge.

Mr. Speaker, many people believe that the Canadian pension plan is the most efficient, most effective tool for ensuring income security for all Canadians, especially with its operating cost of 1 per cent or better and a good track record. It's pan-Canadian, and it's portable. Therefore, instead of spending so much time and effort working on a new voluntary program, the government should be looking at ways to support and enhance the expansion of the CPP.

The Canadian Labour Congress has a detailed plan to double the CPP benefit, from $934 a month to $1,868, by gradually increasing the employee and the employer contributions, each from 4.95 per cent of salary to 7.95. Regardless, Mr. Speaker, there are unlikely to be many companies that are profitable enough or right-headed enough who are going to provide pensions who don't already have pension plans of their own.

Mr. Speaker, there are several questions that I have about this new act and PRPPs. What's interesting to note is that Australia had a similar plan to PRPPs, but the plan was mandatory, with an opt-out provision. The AustralianSuper fund required employers to enrol their workers in one of the many defined contributions plans offered by the private sector. A recent review, commissioned by the Australian government, after 12 years' experience of doing this reported that the AustralianSuper fund did not even match inflation. Again, part of the reason is because the fees that were being charged were just eroding the interest that they were earning.

I'll move into some of the questions that I have, which hopefully will be addressed soon, Mr. Speaker. I think it's safe to say that most people will agree our pension system in Canada needs to be improved and requires improvement. Now, what can't be agreed upon is whether or not Canadians will be better served by forcing them to hand over their hard-earned money to the private sector so that their retirement can be predicated on the ups and downs of the stock market, guaranteeing large profits for the big banks and investment companies, with no guarantee for Canadian families, or if we should take a more practical and prudent step to expand what's already working for Canadians and guarantee money for their retirement by expanding the CPP.

As I've stated earlier, there are some that believe that the PRPP is really nothing more than a glorified RRSP. It's got a defined contribution plan, but the money is invested back into mutual funds, bonds, et cetera. There are no guarantees for employees and no new money.

My first question – and there are a list of them, Mr. Speaker – is: why has the government failed the best interests of Albertans by failing to advocate on behalf of them to increase the CPP? Maybe I should rephrase that to find out if the government did look into expanding CPP and increasing it.

The next question: if the government truly believes that the fees will be lower than existing retirement tools, will they commit to legislating a cap on the fees that administrators can charge? Again, there's no vehicle that I'm aware of where the fees are as low as what we pay through CPP, which is around 1 per cent.

As well, there are no provisions that would even index the benefits to inflation. So, really, in the long term, you know, people who are investing in the PRPP could actually be sliding backwards, Mr. Speaker, and losing money each year.

What type of efforts will the government make to ensure that Albertans understand the difference between the PRPP and the CPP? How much will this new program cost the government of Alberta to regulate, including possible court fees if the act is contravened?

The bill does nothing to ensure that corporations that go bankrupt will see pensioners and those on long-term disability go to the front of the line of creditors. Again, they may not see their dollars at all.

Moving to section 3, Mr. Speaker, it explains how this act will apply to employees of employers who participate in the plan and to the self-employed.

The question is: will there be any tax benefits to corporations who implement a PRPP in Alberta? If not, is the government planning on providing any? How many businesses who currently do not provide any sort of pension plan whatsoever does the Alberta government believe will adopt the PRPP? In other words, a little bit more about, you know, where the logic behind bringing in this new tool came from or the statistics, I should say. How many businesses are likely to include an employer contribution?

Moving to section 5, subsection (2) allows the superintendent of pensions to

- (a) conduct studies, surveys and research programs and compile statistical and other information relating to plans and their establishment, administration and operation.

This information can be shared with other governments, government agencies, or regulatory bodies of designated jurisdictions, which means Canada or a prescribed province outside of Alberta. Under (c) this information can be shared with supervisory authorities, bodies that act like the superintendent of pensions in Alberta and other designated jurisdictions. The question really is: would the government commit to making any of this information publicly available?

Sections 7 and 8 allow the minister to enter into bilateral or multilateral agreements with other provinces on matters relating to the PRPP. This would allow the superintendent of another jurisdiction to enforce any powers under our act and authorize our superintendent to exercise any powers of analogous legislation from an authority in another province here.

There are provisions in section 8(2)(b) which allow us to limit the application of the analogous legislation of a jurisdiction that is party to an agreement.

Section 8(1) states that the province can “enter into an agreement with the appropriate authorities of 2 or more designated jurisdictions respecting any matters relating to pooled pension plans.” Does this mean that the province cannot enter into an agreement with only one province? Is the province worried that if only a small number of provinces enter into the PRPP plan, sufficient economies of scale will not exist and that the fees that will be charged by plan administrators will not be any better or even worse than the financial retirement tools which are currently available?

Section 9(2) provides that any bilateral or multilateral agreement will prevail over any provisions of this act in the case of inconsistencies or conflicts between them. So a couple of questions. Why would the government give away so much power under a bilateral or multilateral agreement? Why should we trust this government to negotiate such an agreement?

I’m going to jump ahead to section 13. If any administrator becomes insolvent, is unable to act as administrator, or the superintendent feels that this is in the best interests of the members, the superintendent can transfer all assets and the plans that it administers to an entity designated by the superintendent, including all the contractual rights and obligations that the former administrator had. There do not seem to be any provisions here for other entities to refuse to accept the assets and plans of an insolvent administrator. What will occur if another administrator cannot be found? Could the government or the superintendent be held accountable?

If the superintendent moves the assets and plans of a provider to another, will the former plan administrator be compensated? If not, and the new administrator benefits financially, will the money go to the previous provider? If the contractual rights and obligations are transferred to a new administrator, will the former administrator still be held accountable to any financial liabilities?

If the members suffer a financial loss due to an administrator becoming insolvent or unable to continue, will the member or members be compensated, and if yes, by whom? Could the government or the superintendent be held accountable? If the benefits being provided to members are negatively affected by an administrator becoming insolvent or unable to continue, will anybody be held liable for lost earnings? How many administrators are currently licensed in Canada, and how many do we expect to operate?

Section 84(1) of this act imposes court-ordered fines of up to $500,000 for an offence under this act. The court can also order that any party comply with the act or with a contract. My question is: does this fine apply to each offence or to all offences under consideration at one time? Can any administrator lose their licence for offering inducements? What protection will there be for an employee who believes that they have information concerning possible inducements and who wants to provide this information to the superintendent? What obligation will the superintendent have to follow up on allegations of inducements? What resources will they have to investigate such claims, and how much will this cost?

All right. Just looking over some of my other questions, there are quite a few that I have and still some that are outstanding, Mr. Speaker, but I will try to wrap up. Again, just to bring up another point, currently people without a pension plan are often targeted by private providers of retirement investment tools such as RRSPs or tax-free savings accounts or mutual funds. Mutual funds and RRSPs often charge around 2 to 3 per cent in management fees. This is quite a stark comparison to the 1 per cent that CPP charges or operates at.

The often-stated primary benefit of this idea is that it will pool together the retirement savings of many individuals and, therefore, because of economy of scale, will be able to offer a lower administrative fee than other retail retirement tools. During the briefing that we received from the Associate Minister of Finance, he stated that fees are likely to work out to something less than 2 to 3 per cent but more than 1 per cent. These plans are defined contribution, not defined benefit, so there’s no guaranteed retirement income. Now, the Saskatchewan pension plan claims to have administrative costs of 1 per cent, and it’s also voluntary.

You know, just some general questions to the associate minister. Why is the government of Alberta spending time and resources on a plan that doesn’t guarantee retirement incomes? Will there be a minimum benefit that people can receive? Will there be a minimum contribution that employees must make? Has the government considered that depending on what gets negotiated, the benefits could be worse than what the private-sector pensions currently provide, which could incentivize companies to drop their current private pensions and move towards the PRPP, initiating a race to the bottom on pensions?

The problem we’re facing today is that many Albertans cannot afford to save for their retirement, Mr. Speaker. The decrease in administrative costs between the RRSP and other retirement financial tools . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Dr. Swann: I was just wondering if he had any more to say about that issue.

Mr. Bilous: Well, I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I’ll wrap up here. Basically, the decrease in administrative costs between the RRSP and other retirement financial tools and the PRPPs will only be a few percentage points at best. So what makes the government believe that this will make them much more affordable to Albertans?

Similarly, what makes the government believe that a savings of 1 or 2 per cent in administrative fees is going to make this affordable suddenly for small- to medium-sized companies? Why won’t the government admit that this plan is looking more and more like a glorified RRSP?

Again, if the true purpose is to help Albertans save for their retirement, I’m curious to know if the minister has explored the idea and the option of increasing CPP, which again has the proven track record, the low administrative fees, is spread out for all Canadians, so you have a much lower risk because of the number of people involved in that pooled pension. Would it not make sense to look at increasing CPP as opposed to creating another financial tool which may or may not prove to actually be more affordable and may not actually encourage or provide Albertans with the opportunity to save more for their retirement?

I look forward to further debate in the House about this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

11:20

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

I guess I'd offer the hon. associate minister the opportunity to close debate.

Mr. Fawcett: I just want to say that I appreciate the comments of all members. There were a number of questions asked. We'll endeavour to get back to the members on the questions that were proposed to us.

I'm glad to see that there is considerable support, at least from some of the parties opposite, for this program that will help all Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. associate minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 15 Emergency 911 Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and move third reading of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, we've heard lots of support across the floor for this bill. We know that there are a number of issues facing 911 call centres. We have the cost, new technologies, and all of those other things, and we know that this bill will go a long way to resolving some of those issues. We also know that this levy against cellphones will allow us to continue to support 911 call centres across the province of Alberta.

But, Mr. Speaker, one of the other really important things is that it will take the liability off of 911 call centre call takers. As we do with volunteer firefighters, it will absolve them of liability when they're working at the level of their training.

Mr. Speaker, there are fines now for the intentional misuse of 911. This does not include pocket dialing. It's specifically let out of the legislation, but now if there is frivolous and vexatious use, we can act against those people. Those are some of the questions that we heard during debate.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask for support in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. [interjections] Please, hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has the floor.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. I can appreciate that it's late into the night. However, you know what? I think at the same time it's more important that members have the opportunity to rise and speak to these bills, considering we are passing legislation in this province.

First and foremost, certainly, the Alberta NDP supports the principle behind this bill and what the government is trying to do, okay? We're trying to ensure that costs related to the 911 system are funded by all phone subscribers. However, it's unfortunate – and I'd like to note this, Mr. Speaker – that this bill passed through Committee of the Whole on April 24 late in the evening without any comments or proposed amendments from any party. Now, I'm not suggesting there was not an opportunity for debate or tabling amendments. However, in the midst of budget debates somehow this bill slipped along rather quickly. Perhaps we didn't fully consider this bill and everything it entails. Had the bill been amended in Committee of the Whole, I might be able to stand and support the bill this evening. However, there are several loopholes and unintended consequences lurking in this bill, which I'm going to illustrate.

I want to begin by noting that it's correct to say that other provinces have similar 911 levies to support their emergency response systems. However, all provinces impose and regulate those levies in different ways. Now, it is true that Alberta has administered a 911 levy on land lines for a number of years, Mr. Speaker; however, I have to say that my staff and the Legislature Library both had difficulty finding out exactly how this levy on land lines first came about. Was it through legislation or regulation or how exactly? It's difficult to find information, which is always a little disconcerting. The reason I point this out is that this bill addresses 911 levies for wireless devices specifically whereas other provinces have one piece of legislation or regulation that refers to levies on both wireless and land lines.

Now I'd like to focus on several substantive concerns that we have with regard to the way the bill is written, Mr. Speaker. If the minister is responsive to legitimate concerns and constructive criticism, he'll consider the issues very seriously and consider making changes to legislation going forward. One, the vagueness of this bill. For instance, clause (c) in section 7 gives the minister the power to "do any other thing the Minister considers necessary" in order to carry out the purposes of this act. It's unfortunate the minister couldn't be more specific about the powers that he's requesting.

The fundamental principle of responsible government is that the executive branch and the bureaucracy come up with a range of policy alternatives to suit decided upon policy and present them at cabinet and then, in turn, present them for debate. So how can the Assembly simply give the minister the blanket authority to do anything he needs to do? It's his responsibility as a minister reporting to this Legislature to propose to us what he needs to do, to provide us with details in order to improve the 911 system, which we would all support. Moreover, it's been noted by other hon. members who have spoken previously that many of the most pertinent details surrounding this legislation will only be detailed in cabinet regulations, which is always problematic, again for the same reasons I just stated.

Now, at this point effectively the government is asking members to support a piece of legislation where we do not know the exact amount of the levy or the amount that the wireless companies will be allowed to retain to pay for administrative costs. The government says that the fee will be 44 cents per device per month, but it's not stated in the legislation.

Two, section 8 is also problematic. It prohibits any person from making a frivolous or vexatious 911 call. However, it provides no detail about how that determination will be made. Again, perhaps the principle is okay, but the wording and implementation in this bill is very problematic. Now, the ministry's website, Mr. Speaker, provides information about this bill and this section specifically that should, frankly, be included in the bill. The website states that a frivolous 911 call is any 911 call made deliberately to abuse the system. However, this bill itself includes no definition of frivolous or vexatious, and the word "deliberately" is not included in this section of the bill. Here we have an example of a discrepancy between how legislation is written and will be enforced and how the government is selling this bill to us and the public on the ministry's website.

The website also states that 911 operators who feel they've been subject to frivolous calls will be able to place a complaint with their local police service and that no one will be fined for calling 911 in good faith or by accident. These are details that should be included in the bill. They're on the website, but they're not in the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Again, I want to reiterate that the principle and the spirit of this legislation are good, but the way the legislation is currently worded could have unintended consequences. For example, there are situations where one can imagine a call appearing to be frivolous to people who are not in danger themselves, including dangerous situations that may appear to not exist or be resolved by the time emergency responders arrive. People who find themselves in those dangerous situations should never have to question whether someone on the other end of the line will be evaluating their call on the basis of whether it's frivolous or not.

It's also imperative, Mr. Speaker, that no one who makes an accidental phone call to 911 is ever charged with making a frivolous call. I'd feel much more comfortable supporting this legislation if it was a bit more carefully worded to include some of the language that's actually posted on the website, where it explicitly states that no one will be fined for calling 911 in good faith or by accident. I'm still unsure as to why that wording is on the website and not included in the bill itself.

Three, I'm also concerned about the imposition of a fine of up to a thousand dollars for not paying the levy. Does this mean that someone who runs into financial trouble and misses a cellphone payment will be guilty of contravening section 4(2) and, hence, liable to a fine under section 9(2)?

I want to bring to the House's attention that Saskatchewan, which has a 70-cent-per-month 911 levy, has a much different policy, Mr. Speaker. According to section 45.2(2) of the Saskatchewan Telecommunications Act, "if a customer fails to pay the Sask911 fee... the corporation may terminate the customer's telecommunications services until the fee or charge is paid in full." They do not fine people up to $1,000. Instead, they reaffirm the right of the wireless corporation to discontinue service if someone does not pay their phone bill, which seems to be far more reasonable.

Now, if the PC government here in Alberta is concerned about people somehow paying the balance of their phone bill but refusing to pay the 44-cent fee for the 911 levy for some reason, which seems far reaching, Mr. Speaker, then section 9(2) should explicitly state that people will only be fined if they deliberately and repeatedly contravene section 4(2). Under no circumstances should we find a single parent who can't pay their phone bill on time one month due to unforeseen circumstances being fined up to $1,000 because they missed paying their 44-cent 911 levy.

As we are all aware, in writing legislation, word choice does matter, definitions matter, and detail and nuance and care matter because they will be enshrined to stand the test of time. These things are not superfluous. We should not rush, and we should not approve legislation that is badly or insufficiently detailed.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that this bill is not an excellent piece of legislation. The principle is right – there is no disagreement there – but the exact wording is problematic. To reiterate to all members of the Assembly here, the NDP caucus is supportive of the principle of this piece of legislation, but we see another instance here of poorly written legislation with many holes which present questions that raise issues of concern for working families. Legislation should never have unintended consequences. It should be written with such clarity and foresight so as to preclude or at least address and answer the kinds of questions that I've outlined here today.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not written with the utmost clarity and foresight. It is problematic in a number of ways, and the government asks us to accept its word on faith. They say that the charge will be 44 cents per month. They say that no one will be fined for calling 911 accidentally. No Albertan should ever fear calling 911 because they think it could be misinterpreted as a frivolous call. The government says nothing at all about whether late payment of one's phone bill could lead to a $1,000 fine, which would be ridiculous.

I hope the minister considers these issues and takes the opportunity today to address each of these specific questions that I've raised and provide his assurances in the House and to all members and that the minister considers making appropriate changes to this act. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, until such time I cannot in good conscience support this legislation. I am unable to support it as it is currently written.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll offer the hon. associate minister the opportunity to close debate.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Bill 19

Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and move third reading of Bill 19, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2013.

The Deputy Speaker: Speakers to the motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. [interjections]

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to hear my colleagues so enthusiastic about my rising to speak to this bill. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, I want to start off by saying that there definitely are some concerns that I tried to raise during Committee of the Whole, amendments that I put forward and that I spoke to. There were amendments put forward by the Wildrose opposition that were very reasonable in nature. Again, you know, I think it's worth reminding all members of the Assembly that most amendments, if not all, that are put forward by the opposition are meant to improve a bill and strengthen it as well as to remind members of the government that there are four different political parties represented in this House and different ideologies that many Albertans hold. By bringing forward amendments, this is an opportunity for us to ensure that all Albertans are represented, not just the ideas of one political party.

You know, I won't go back too much on the ombudsman and the amendments that, again, my colleagues from the Wildrose put forward as far as trying to strengthen this bill, amendments that were quite reasonable, looking at ensuring that the public interest is protected and that there are transparent and open processes for not only residents of Métis settlements but for all Albertans to be confident in this legislation going forward.

I wanted to just touch very briefly on an earlier discussion during Committee of the Whole on treating Métis settlements as municipalities. I think it's worth noting that the folks that I've spoken to on Métis settlements and the leadership are very much opposed to being classified or treated as a municipality. They are distinct, and they are very unique. For those reasons, the Métis settlements having, for example, a position of an ombudsman where municipalities don't have an ombudsman specifically appointed to work with them that is independent and impartial – I think that we're trying to compare apples and oranges. Settlements are very unique, and therefore they need to be treated that way, so there is a role for an ombudsman to act and to continue. It's disheartening that that power that the minister had has been squashed.

You know, I do appreciate the fact that the Minister of Aboriginal Relations did a significant amount of research and had many discussions with the different leaders of the Métis settlements and that this piece of legislation was a collaborative effort, and for that I will thank the hon. minister. This legislation does help and does work with the Métis settlements to be, I believe, more independent and to continue their process of governance.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will support this bill. It's unfortunate that all of the amendments put forward by the opposition parties were voted down. Again, you know, if we want to ensure that all voices in Alberta are represented and that we do look at pieces of legislation from the different points of view and perspectives not only on the political spectrum but also from each of us who speaks on a regular basis with our constituents and tries to bring their issues, their concerns, and their ideas forward in the House, I strongly urge the government to consider especially the very reasonable amendments that are meant to improve legislation. I would argue that nothing is ever perfect; it can always be improved.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak to the third reading of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing that it's about 20 to 12 and we made great progress tonight, I would move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:40 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 7, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Life is truly precious, and the freedom to live it in a free and democratic way is something that we owe to those who sacrificed their precious lives in defence of that freedom which we enjoy today. Let us remember them, let us uphold what they stood for, and let us be ever thankful. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: We have school groups to introduce first. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the grade 6 class from Michael A. Kostek school in Edmonton-McClung along with their chaperones, Mrs. Paula O'Conner, Mr. Bob Shulko, and Ms Cynthia Smalley, and parents Mrs. Yip and Mrs. Rempel. I would ask the group of students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Let us move on, then. The Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is a very good member of my family, my youngest brother, Wade, who was a member of my constituency but has since moved to the city of Airdrie. He's here today to take in the festivities of question period. He was a tireless supporter of mine over the last two elections, doing everything from going door-knocking with me to pounding in signs. He's a journeyman plumber and works for a company called Larmco Mechanical as a project supervisor. I'm very proud of all of his accomplishments, and I'd ask Wade to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a couple of members of the Department of Finance that have worked very tirelessly on the pooled registered pension plans legislation, that we debated in second reading yesterday. They're here to watch question period and debate in Committee of the Whole on this piece of legislation. I'd like to ask Ellen Nygaard and Adam Bailey to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand here today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Jed Johns. Originally from Fort Vermilion and a member of the Sucker Creek First Nation Jed is a student ministerial intern in my office. Currently he's studying political science at Grant MacEwan. Jed is also president of the students' association at MacEwan University and vice-chair of the Alberta Students' Executive Council. He's excited to be here, and we're excited to have him. He will be a great addition to the Aboriginal Relations team. He's seated in the members' gallery. I would ask Jed to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great leader in the community of Chestermere. He is one of the most prominent and influential people, I think, in my hometown because of his commitment to community and also his faith. He is Reverend John Nemanic. Reverend John does a great job serving his congregation, and he gets involved in community, too. In fact, he's planning on climbing a mountain to help raise funds to build a church in the town of Chestermere. He backs up his faith with deeds, and I am proud to know him. I would ask Reverend John to rise. As he does, he has a couple of guests with him today, friends of his, Linda and Andy Fehr, who are with us from Saskatchewan. I would ask my colleagues in the Legislature to give Reverend John and Linda and Andy a nice warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two university students who will be working out of my ministerial office this summer, Aurora Pounder, who is a political science student at the University of Alberta; and Jessica Mitchell, who is a policy studies student at Mount Royal University. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Raja Abbas, director of the Pakistan Canada Association and also a well-known friend of the Pakistan and Indian community; Raja's daughter Umbreen Abbas, who is visiting from Paris, France; his son-in-law Amir Fayyaz; Syed Shahrazi, who is a media person travelling with them; and Jagdish Nischal, who is a well-known personality in the Edmonton Indian community. I also call him Uncle Jagdish. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I would ask all my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Alison Lee, a grade 10 student from Coaldale and a brave teen who has shed light on sexual abuse in Alberta. She is a strong advocate against this. Also in the gallery is Mr. Ryan Gateman, who is also a grade 10 student, from my hometown of Mossleigh. He was a great door-knocker during my campaign, and his mom was my manager for a well-won election there. I'd like to ask them both to stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two gentlemen who are in town for meetings and will be attending the Alberta

Emergency Management international working group on interoperability, Mr. Mario Beauchamp and Mr. Scott LeFevre. I'd ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members two guests, seated above me in the members' gallery, from my diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. Gordon Butler is a long-time friend of mine and is responsible for my initial involvement with the Wildrose. His father, Jack, served as a visionary MLA in this Assembly under Premier Peter Lougheed from 1975 to 1979. I'd also like to introduce Ken Perreault, another long-time friend of mine and a long-time Reformer in the area and in the constituency. He was president of the Crowfoot constituency association for the Reform Party of Canada, the Canadian Alliance, and then the Conservative Party of Canada. I continue to rely on the guidance, vision, and friendship of both Gordon and Ken, and I ask my hon. colleagues to please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, one more?

Mr. Young: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a person we all know, Rory Koopmans, who is not only a prolific blogger but a political fan. So, Rory.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you my youth VP of the PC association of Mill Woods, Daniel Rose, who is observing QP and all of the process. I would ask Daniel Rose to please rise and receive our warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, let me close off this portion by begging your indulgence to introduce 82 students from 59 different constituencies who are all here as participants in Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program. Hon. members, as a result of your help, we set a record for the most applications received under this program ever, 110 to be exact. These participants are here to learn about your role, your job as an MLA, and they are being very well cared for by the Royal Canadian Legion reps, whom I'll introduce to you shortly.

These students have now toured the Legislature. They've dined with their MLA. They've met privately with their MLA in their offices. They've debated a motion in this Assembly, and they sat in your chairs. I presided over that session. There were things to be learned from it, and they did very well. Later today they will be taking part in a special workshop with Elections Alberta officials.

I want to commend the Royal Canadian Legion Alberta-NWT Command for their ongoing support for chaperoning the program and for their cosponsorship, without which none of this would be possible. And I want to thank our own Sergeant-at-Arms for his stewardship from our end. Thank you, sir.

Seated in my gallery today are the following individuals. Mrs. Audrey Ferguson, who is the district commander, Alberta-NWT Command, and our head chaperone for this year. Please stay standing. She's accompanied by student chaperones from the Alberta-NWT Command of the Royal Canadian Legion: Mr. Bill Fecteau, Ms. LeeAnn Leaburn, Ms. Delores Thibault, Mrs. Sharon Charlet, Mr. Dave Basham, and Mrs. Laberta Basham. If you'd stay standing for a moment. Now let me ask all of our MLAs for a Day, who are seated in both galleries, to please rise. Colleagues, let us thank all of these individuals for their outstanding support. I have no doubt that in future years we'll see some of them sitting in this Assembly for real. They are quite a good group. Thank you, all.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

New School Construction

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today in recognition of Education Week taking place from May 6 to 10. I thought: how fitting would it be to provide a little bit of a history lesson? Premier Duff Roblin of Manitoba many years ago, in the '60s, dug a ditch through Manitoba, and when he dug that ditch through Manitoba, many of the people there criticized him. They said it wasn't worth it. There wasn't enough political capital in the area and what a waste of money. Well, he had foresight, he had a plan, and he's saved that province and the city over $10 billion to date. He should be commended for having a plan and foresight, and I'm proud to serve under a Premier who has the same vision.

We saw that. In this Education Week we are celebrating 30 new school projects to be built in 19 growing communities across Alberta. These new schools will ensure that these kids in these communities can access a world-class education in modern, student-friendly learning environments. I was excited to participate in the announcement in Calgary, Mr. Speaker. It was a tremendous day for my constituency as they needed schools. They were happy to participate. They were happy to bring their kids out to these events. They should celebrate. It's their future that we're celebrating.

The Premier made a commitment to build new schools, and she's doing that. Mr. Speaker, it's just the beginning. Over the next three years this government will invest over $500 million to support the delivery of new schools through public-private partnerships as well as traditional methods. It's a promise that we made, and it's a promise that we're keeping.

We are building Alberta and putting kids first. I look forward to 2016, when I can walk through the doors of these schools with these students in my constituency for the very first time. I hope they look back and realize how much money we saved, and I hope they realize that we had a plan. We're going to build this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Political Party Donations

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week's ruling by Elections Alberta sanctioning political party donations that exceed legal contribution limits has further eroded Albertans' confidence in the democratic process. With limits on corporate and union donations already at sky-high levels, Alberta's flimsy elections laws were even further relaxed when Elections Alberta decided that it was perfectly legal to exceed limits with "bulk" donations.

Mr. Speaker, it's no wonder why voter cynicism is on the rise and voter turnout is plummeting. Elections and government shouldn't be for sale to the highest bidder. Your ability to be heard shouldn't depend on the size of your wallet. Yet those are precisely the messages Alberta's elections laws communicate to voters.

Mr. Speaker, there's a simple way to fix this, a quick and easy change that would immediately restore voter confidence in the system and remove the appearance of buying influence: ban corporate and union donations. By prohibiting large corporations and unions with deep pockets from donating to political parties, we would make a big step towards giving elections back to whom they belong, the voters. When this House was amending elections legislation last year, the Wildrose put forward amendments to close the bulk donations loophole and ban corporate and union donations. To nobody's surprise, the government voted them down.

There's a reason several Canadian jurisdictions, including the federal government under the leadership of Prime Minister Harper, have moved to get big money out of politics. Governments are accountable to voters, not corporations. By opening the door to U.S.-style political action committees that can exceed contribution limits with bulk donations, this government has dealt another blow to the fairness and integrity of Alberta's electoral system.

But the government can still fix this. They can send the message that influence is not for sale in Alberta by banning corporate and union donations, but given the PC Party's heavy reliance on corporate interests, I won't hold my breath.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

North American Occupational Safety and Health Week

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to acknowledge the North American Occupational Safety and Health Week, which is from May 5 to May 11. It is an initiative led by the Canadian Society of Safety Engineering and a number of other partnering organizations across the continent. The government of Alberta is very proud to take part in this annual event focused on the importance of preventing injury and illness in the workplace.

Mr. Speaker, despite the sad stories of every workplace incident, the good news is that they are 100 per cent preventable. By participating in this initiative, the government of Alberta takes the opportunity to educate employers, employees, and the public to understand their workplace responsibilities.

During this week over 30 events are planned province-wide. You can find them on the Ministry of Human Services website, but here's one I want to highlight. This is called the work safe Alberta student video contest. This event engages youth to showcase their creativity and talent in raising public awareness of this important issue. Congratulations to the three winning teams. They are Strathcona composite in Edmonton, Bishop Carroll in Calgary, and Stirling school in Stirling village in southern Alberta. They will go on to represent Alberta and compete in the national student video contest. I urge members of this House to cast your vote by visiting youtube.com/YourJobVotreTravail.

Mr. Speaker, the goal of workplace health and safety in this province is very simple, to ensure that every Albertan returns home safely at the end of each workday. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Results-based Budgeting Economic Development Challenge Panel

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2012 this government made a commitment to a new process, results-based budgeting, to ensure that all government programs are reviewed for relevance, effectiveness, and efficiency. Many constituents of mine have asked for more detail on this process, and in response I'd like to share my experience chairing one of the inaugural panels.

Last November the results-based budgeting panel on economic development was created by the Treasury Board and Finance ministry. Our RBB panel was tasked with challenging the results of the evaluation of over 50 economic development programs administered by this government with a combined budget of $675 million. These programs fall within the mandate of eight government ministries, and to be clear, it was not within our panel's mandate to recommend government policy.

To do this work, I was assigned an impressive team of five external experts, whom I introduced in the Legislature a few weeks ago, plus two other members, my colleagues from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and Edmonton-Mill Woods. Our challenge panel asked hard-hitting questions like: "This program was set up in response to a critical need in 2005. Hasn't the program achieved its purpose? Is it still relevant? What are the entry and exit strategies for this program?" or "Why are these four programs administered separately? Wouldn't they be more effectively and efficiently managed with a clearer governance structure and under the same management strategy?" or "If ministries shared services for grant administration, what savings could be achieved?"

1:50

At times the challenge had a bit of a Dragons' Den feel, but deputy ministers and ADMs from the eight ministries rose to the challenge. Some of these decisions will be put in place immediately. Some of the recommendations will be implemented via the 2014 budget process. In my opinion, all of these changes can't be expected overnight.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we start the clock, let us be reminded that we have about 82 people watching from high school who have already assumed your roles once today and are looking forward to observing the highest possible level of role modelling you can offer. Let's not disappoint them.

First main set of questions. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Report to Taxpayers

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier never misses an opportunity to remind Albertans they elected her government last year, but she also never misses an opportunity to campaign and have taxpayers foot the bill. We all know about the way she used school kids as a backdrop for her election-style school announcement bashing the Wildrose. Her backbench MLAs use question period to attack us as well. And now the latest, a PC-branded propaganda piece disguised as a government brochure. The election is three years away. How much more of these blatantly partisan political stunts are taxpayers going to have to pay for?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are very excited to be able to make sure that we are accountable to Albertans for the decisions that we made in Budget 2013, and we're proud of the fact that we're going to deliver that fact-based document to 1.2 million households this week. I find it ironic that this party, which produces these documents that say right on them "Wildrose Official Opposition," would stand up and ask that question when taxpayer money paid for this and it actually refers to the name of a party.

Ms Smith: We spent about a hundred bucks on that. You're spending $350,000.

The back-in-debt budget that this document brags about, as I said, actually cut $210,000 from Safe House, a society that rescues victims of sexual exploitation. The $350,000 that this government wasted on a PC election-style brochure would have covered Safe House for more than a year. How can she justify that?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, the amount of misinformation that is spread by documents such as this, paid for by the taxpayers, needs to be countered by 29 cents per household of facts to Albertans so that they understand what kind of mistruths are being spread in documents like the other one. We do not apologize for communicating to Albertans the information that Albertans want to know.

Ms Smith: That's $350,000 in new money, and it doesn't mention the $17 billion worth of debt once. Maybe the Premier can get some of her corporate cronies to gather up some bulk donations and stop gouging taxpayers for things like this waste of money.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier can't stop campaigning. Last summer she said: if what we are doing doesn't pass the highest level of scrutiny, we shouldn't be doing it. I couldn't agree more, Premier. When is she going to start raising the bar?

Ms Redford: I'll tell you that the people that I'm concerned about judging us are not the opposition but Albertans, Mr. Speaker. In 2013 this government is delivering on the commitments that we made to Albertans by investing in infrastructure, investing in schools, doing better than this party across the way with respect to controlling spending, not increasing taxes. That document sets out the facts clearly for Albertans in a way that we can be accountable for the decisions that we made to ensure that they, not the opposition, can hold us to account.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: A 26 per cent approval rating speaks for itself.

Political Party Donations

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, many Albertans were shocked to learn that the door is now open to the creation of U.S.-style political action committees here in Alberta. The recent ruling from the Chief Electoral Officer indicated that the large Katz Group bulk donation was okay under existing rules. Entirely appropriate, says the Premier. But others, including the election financing expert Robert MacDermid of York University, said that he was appalled, and he called the ruling, quote, a licence to give money without disclosing the truth about it. Does the Premier want to reconsider her position?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, if anyone needs to reconsider her position, I'll give her this number: $464,500. That's the amount of bulk donations that her party received from one source – one source – her former leader, from 2004 to 2008. Consider that.

The Speaker: A point of order has been raised by the Member for Airdrie at 1:56 p.m.

Second question, please.

Ms Smith: I think the Justice minister is talking about the Alberta Alliance, another political party. Whoops.

Mr. Speaker, with this new Katz precedent there is even less openness and transparency in election financing. [interjections] Elections Alberta admits that the Katz bulk donations are similar to U.S. political action committees. [interjections] But they're different here because of this. There are actually regulations in the United States governing their operations, but there aren't any regulations governing their operations in Alberta. Doesn't the Premier see that having no regulations whatsoever around bulk donations actually makes it worse?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have an elections financing act that ensures transparency with respect to political contributions, and we also have legislation that ensures that there are rules that political parties must follow with respect to their conduct. [interjections] To stand up and say that there are no regulations with respect to political . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Sorry to interrupt, hon. Premier, but there is quite a discussion going on here between Airdrie and the Minister of Justice. I just wonder if they would like to either step outside and have their conversation . . . [interjections] I'll have the Sergeant-at-Arms accompany you if you'd like.

Hon. Premier, if you'd like to continue.

Ms Redford: Thank you. I'll just continue, Mr. Speaker. To suggest that there is not regulation with respect to political fundraising and transparency or with respect to the way that parties conduct themselves is absolutely false, and the opposition shouldn't suggest it.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there's another way to close this massive loophole that threatens to damage the fairness that Albertans demand in their elections. The government could simply ban union and corporate donations to election campaigns. Opposition parties support that. It would be a much-needed win for the Premier. Why doesn't she do it?

Mr. Denis: The Leader of the Opposition: $749,562. That's the amount in corporate donations that her party accepted during the 2012 election. Those who live in glass houses, Mr. Speaker, need not throw stones. [interjections]

The Speaker: All right. All right. All right. Enough already. You're showing off to our students. See, hon. students, what I was talking about now? You see this?

Please continue. Third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eighty per cent of our donations come from individuals. Ninety per cent of their donations come from corporations.

Care for Dementia Patients

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, just as we hear of dementia facilities reducing staff, a fatality inquiry report released Monday is recommending more care for those with dementia. Eighty-four-year-old dementia patient William Buckley, who lived in the Health minister's constituency, choked on a paper napkin in 2010, apparently thinking it was food. Mr. Buckley was being looked after by a caring staff, a registered nurse, and health care aides supervised mealtimes, but even with all that care Mr. Buckley got into trouble. How can families of dementia patients in other facilities feel secure now that they see that staffing levels are going down?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very tragic situation. While I have not reviewed the fatality report in detail, I am aware of most of the recommendations. This report dealt with the unfortunate death of a gentleman in a specific facility at a specific point in time under a specific set of circumstances. There are some comments in the report that talk about benefits from making the system simpler to understand for residents' families and families pursuing other options. But there is absolutely no basis to conclude from the report that there is a widespread issue with respect to the care of dementia patients in this province.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Judge Wheatley actually said that the funding for dementia patients is a mess. He wrote that despite the best efforts of an expert who testified, "a comprehension of this funding system was impossible to understand and one wonders how healthcare professionals . . . on the front line can possibly bring understanding and logic to this system." Will the minister accept Judge Wheatley's recommendation to create a comprehensible system so that the public can understand how facilities get funding?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will agree with the hon. member to a very limited extent. There is certainly always room to improve in making our system easier to understand for Albertans. Many of us are assisting mothers or fathers or other loved ones to navigate the continuing care system, a very good system I might add, and to find the placement that works best for them. But there is absolutely nothing in this report, which, again, is a report based on a situation in 2010, that would lead me to conclude that we have anything but the best possible approach to funding for continuing care. We use patient-based funding in Alberta in 2013. This system matches financial resources to the specific needs of the resident, and that includes the staffing support that resident receives.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government's approach to assessing long-term care patients and having funding follow them is sound in theory, but in practice people with dementia are rated lower than other patients and now get less funding and less care. Judge Wheatley said this. "It is obvious that no sufficient research has been done in this field especially in the area of geriatric or dementia nursing situations." He was told that the Alberta Health Quality Council should be asked to undertake research to determine proper staffing levels. Will the minister commit to act on this recommendation?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we are continually working to improve continuing care in this province. It seems to me that public policy that is soundly based on matching financial and staffing resources to the needs of specific residents is in the interests of those residents and the families and the communities that are served by them. The hon. member is attempting to make generalizations based on a report on a specific fatality incident, a very unfortunate incident, in 2010. I suggest she try to understand what the system in 2013 consists of, and perhaps then we can have a discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. A public fatality inquiry describes an elderly man with dementia dying on a weekend because he choked on a napkin, went into respiratory distress, and had a heart attack. Now, if he had choked on a Monday, he might still be alive because there would've been a full contingent of staff to help him. According to the inquiry's expert, staffing levels should not vary on the weekends and should be much greater than when this senior needed help. To the Premier: tell me again why decreasing staffing for frail seniors just to drive down costs is okay for this province?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this is clearly beyond the pale. Staffing levels across Alberta are not reduced on weekends in continuing care facilities. There are challenges across the country in recruiting sufficient staff for a growing number of citizens who require continuing care. But to suggest somehow on the basis of a report in 2010 about a very unfortunate situation that occurred with respect to a very specific set of circumstances that this is cause for widespread public concern is simply not fair to the residents, their families, or, most importantly, the staff that care for them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I know staffing is less in this facility because I am there twice a week, and I read the notice by the elevator that talked about staffing changes. My heart skipped a beat this morning when I read that because the facility where this man died is the facility where my mother lives. So please tell me and everyone else in Alberta that has someone, a family member in care: why are seniors paying such an awful price for being frail and for getting old in Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the hon. member and her family situation I, too, know very well the facility in which this incident occurred. I can tell you that as a result of the move to patient-based funding across this province staffing levels in many facilities have increased over the last year and a half in order to meet the needs of their particular residents. Equally and more recently staffing levels have been adjusted downward in facilities where the same level of care is not required for the residents in care at that particular point in time. This is a system that we watch closely. We believe it reflects a good intent and policy on the part of Alberta Health Services to allocate staffing resources appropriately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that on March 11 I said that the government was "playing a game of risk and time here" with seniors in long-term care because staff ratios are important, particularly at night or on weekends, when people get sick, throw up, can't turn over, and then choke, how is this honouring our parents, our elders?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, a system that allocates resources based on the specific needs of residents at a specific point in time is a system that is supporting residents and families and communities.

Again, to make generalizations about our continuing care system on the basis of a specific incident that took place three years ago is simply not an accurate reflection of the excellent work that is going into continuing care across the province today. [interjection]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Airdrie.

Long-term Care Staffing Ratios

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as we've already heard, a public fatality report into the death of a dementia patient in long-term care found that staffing levels are insufficient and instructed that the province look into staff-patient ratios. This is not addressed by the money-following-the-patient policy that the government is talking about. Since a damning Auditor General's report in 2007 the NDP has been calling for action on this issue, and for those years the government has ignored this basic aspect of caring for our seniors. My question is to the Premier. Why has the government failed Alberta seniors by refusing to take action on adequate staffing in long-term care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, no doubt what the hon. member would have us do is to regulate staffing ratios for all residents in Alberta and be completely indifferent to the very large number of people that require care above that level in order to adequately meet their needs. The hon. member has access to this information. He can see clearly the paid hours that are allocated for long-term care supportive living level 4, dementia, which is the subject of this question, and the other levels of care that are provided in these facilities. Again, the hon. member would do well to look at what we're doing today in continuing care, and I'm sure he would realize that it's a patient- and resident-centred approach.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have, but both the Auditor General and the justice in this inquiry talked about the need for minimum staffing levels, and that's not accomplished by the government policy.

Last weekend Albertans in Cochrane rallied against patient-based funding, which this minister seems to think is the solution, but facilities like the one where this senior died are the ones that have suffered the most from his new formula, that has cost them the most staff. What's he going to do about that?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, herein lies the basic difference in philosophy between the hon. member and this government. We believe that public health care dollars need to be allocated based on the needs of the residents and patients that we serve in the health care system, and we believe that residents in continuing care facilities deserve no less than that. [interjections] It calls for a higher level of sophistication in this debate than to simply revert to the policies of the 1960s and '70s to only provide one level of care for outpatients and to regulate or legislate the nature of the care that should be provided. These are individual residents. They are supported by families and staff in the local communities that serve them. This was a very unfortunate situation, and we certainly feel for the family, but the facts are the facts. [interjections]

The Speaker: Let's continue without the interjections, please, Edmonton-Calder – thank you – Edmonton-Centre, and Edmonton-Strathcona over the last few minutes. Let's carry on.

Leader of the New Democrat opposition, your third question.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's unfortunate that the Premier doesn't care enough to get up and answer these questions.

This government can't be trusted to protect our seniors. This government can't be trusted to provide our seniors with the kind of care they deserve. This government can't be trusted to build long-term care beds for our seniors. To the Premier: will this government start rebuilding trust with Alberta seniors and commit to finally legislating staff ratios in long-term care facilities?

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted by the Government House Leader at 2:10.

The hon. minister.

2:10

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there is no greater defender of seniors in this province than the Premier of this province. Until recently no one has shown a greater interest than the Premier of this province in actually matching the resources that we have available to serve a growing number of seniors, some of whom have very, very high care needs.

We will continue in our commitment to open 1,000 new continuing care spaces per year across the province. We're on track to reach our goal of 5,300 over five years. All of those beds can accommodate all levels of care, including those with dementia.

Securities Regulation

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, an important aspect of securities legislation is to protect investors against fraud. In Alberta's exempt market, however, enforcement of these rules is almost nonexistent. Over the last few years over 25,000 Albertans have lost over $2.2 billion to companies like Platinum Equities, Foundation Capital, and many others in a manner that has all the telltale signs of a real estate scam. To the Minister of Finance: are you aware of this situation, and what are you doing to help the thousands of Albertans who appear to have been ripped off?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it's a good question. It caught me off guard a little bit. We are aware and the Alberta Securities Commission is aware of a number of these exempt filings that have been made over the last few years. We are not alone in this. A number of provinces across Canada are also becoming involved in this. The Alberta Securities Commission is doing investigations where they have purview over the offerings. We are also as ministers across the passport system looking at that exempt status, and we are bringing forward some new regulation opportunities across the country in this area.

Mr. Anderson: Given that literally hundreds of Albertans have reported these alleged frauds to the RCMP, yet the issue is still not under investigation by them, will the minister join with me in writing to the RCMP to inform them of this situation and ask that it be investigated as soon as possible so hopefully the Crown can recover any funds fraudulently obtained and return that money to the rightful owners?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, indeed – and we probably would need to tread a little bit carefully here – there are some matters before the courts as we speak. There are some investigations that the RCMP are undertaking as we speak. For some of these activities one would have to go to court to determine whether or not they were fraudulent, in fact. There are some issues around what people got into and what they were told. We have to get all the facts before we can actually accuse someone of something.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it certainly isn't illegal to report a crime, and that's what we need to do in this case.

Given that the Alberta Securities Commission has not adequately protected Alberta investors from these dozens of alleged scams, will the minister commit to investigate what can be done to strengthen the ASC so that it can aggressively enforce securities legislation, institute much stiffer fines and punishments, reimburse victims of these crimes when appropriate, and, most importantly, protect Albertans from investment fraudsters and scam artists moving forward?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member basically just outlined what the ASC is doing right now. There are certain fines that are being levied. There are certain activities that are currently before the court, and if they are found to be contravening the act or contravening the law, the fines will be levied. As well, the police are investigating. I know of a couple that they are investigating as we speak, and they will follow the process of that investigation. The other thing to remember is that the ASC does levy fines in the province of Alberta and, in fact, has levied substantial fines this year alone. However, if the proponents don't have any money, you can't get blood from a stone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

High School Education Initiatives

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the spirit of Education Week earlier today the Premier and the Education minister held a press conference with Alberta students from across the province about education in Alberta and specifically how this government is improving diploma exams. I'm wondering how the initiative that he has been announcing over the last few days is going to make a difference for kids. To the Minister of Education: by moving to a digital format for diploma exams, are we actually improving the exam for the written aspect of the exam, and are we eliminating the need for teachers from the picture?

Mr. J. Johnson: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell you is about the great announcements we've had over the last couple of days, including the dual crediting, the new ministerial order on learner outcomes. Today was diploma exams and moving them to a digital format, which is really going to be about centring the system on the student, which is what we heard so much about through Inspiring Education. Students learn at different paces. We need to embrace that, we need to enable that, and they need the flexibility. That's why we're making these exams in a digital format. We're going to give them more opportunities at different times of the year to write. We're going to make it easier for teachers that have to mark those. We'll start introducing the diploma exams in 2014 and move to our diploma exams in digital format in 2017 and, ultimately, to exams on demand.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that we're obviously committed to building schools and expanding programs but that some school boards like my own are getting less funding this year, are we making these advancements at the expense of day-to-day learning, or is this just window dressing?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, these are very substantial transformations in the education system, and they are within our educational budget. We've allocated dollars towards those. I want to highlight that the educational budget actually went up this year by $216 million. Some of that is capital, of course, but over $40 million in operating. So this is a great investment, $35 million, for education every day. We're continuing to fund enrolment increases and core programs and initiatives that are important to our students, but this is really going to centre the system around our students, and these are great developments.

Ms Kubinec: Again to the same minister. Given this announcement today and the funding announced for the dual credit program yesterday, much of the focus is on our high school students. Can the minister tell us when we can expect some announcements that will help our younger students as well?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. We're going to continue to focus our efforts on all of our students. Although the announcement today is really around diploma exams and yesterday there was a fantastic announcement on dual credit, last week was a great week to be the Minister of Education, when we rolled out 30 infrastructure projects. Most of those were for elementary and middle schools. If Albertans stay tuned over the next day or two, we're going to have more announcements that will impact kids, especially in grades 3, 6, and 9.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

PDD Supports Intensity Scale

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 PDD boards started a pilot project known as the supports intensity scale, or SIS, a tool intended to evaluate the support requirements of a person with developmental disabilities. The SIS places a value from 1 to 7 on a variety of criteria to determine the support an individual should need. My question for the minister is very simple. True or false: when the PDD boards introduced this to service providers, caregivers, self-advocates, families, and clients, were they assured that the supports intensity scale would not be used to determine funding?

Mr. Oberle: You know, Mr. Speaker, I can't speak to the conversations that were held back then. What I can tell the hon. member is that that's not the sole determinant of funding today.

Mr. Wilson: Given that many organizations and families, including my own parents, would dispute your claim, Minister, when did your ministry advise service providers, caregivers, self-advocates, and families that SIS would become the tool for determining funding?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the supports intensity scale, pretty much as described, is a tool to determine supports intensity, need. It's based on an assessment of need and an understanding of what the person's circumstances are and natural supports, those kinds of things. That's what determines funding.

Mr. Wilson: Well, given that roughly only two-thirds of PDD clients have had a personal SIS interview to date, will you ensure, Minister, that every PDD client has an individual SIS completed before implementing your changes, that are merely seven weeks away?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, actually, over 80 per cent of the PDD clients in Alberta have had an assessment already. We will be through most of them before July 1 and the rest of them very shortly thereafter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Physician Recruitment in Tofield

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike some others here today who have complained about communicating with the public, I know that listening and imparting information is vital in public service. In Tofield we knew for months that there would be a doctor shortage. Limited emergency services have now been implemented, and two additional doctors have expressed interest in practising in the town. To the Minister of Health: when are full emergency services expected to be reinstated, and when are the doctors expected to begin practising?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll speak first to the recruitment process for physicians. We have multiple teams from AHS and the Department of Health working together on physician recruitment in Tofield. There is a local recruitment and retention committee that engaged the assistance of a recruitment firm, Global Medics, to work with them and AHS physicians and recruiters to help bring additional doctors into the community. This is a challenge that's faced by a number of smaller communities across the province. It is not uncommon. But through the rural physician action plan and other initiatives and particularly the work of local communities we're confident we'll be able to address this in the short term.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. A community open house on health care in Tofield was requested several weeks ago. Why was one not held prior to the reduction in emergency hours?

2:20

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, the reduction in emergency department hours is going to be a response to a shortage of physicians in the community. I do understand that AHS is planning to meet with the community and stakeholders in the near future. Again, they've committed to keeping the town informed of the progress being made in recruitment. But as we look across the province at our success in physician recruitment in local communities, we know that local communities are a huge part of that solution.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. To the same minister. You have indicated that AHS will be communicating with the residents of Tofield. Do you have any more idea as to a firm date?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information with me. There are meetings going on around several communities in the province related to physician recruitment. My advice to the hon. member is to continue to do what she has been doing and to work with the local recruitment committee and Alberta Health Services in the hope of recruiting additional physicians in the short term and, of course, getting the emergency department back up to full operational status.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Coal-fired Power Production

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today is World Asthma Day, raising awareness of a life-threatening condition affecting Albertans of all ages, probably some of the students in our galleries today. An important contributor to asthma in Alberta is airborne pollutants from coal-fired power plants. Despite health costs associated with coal in Alberta at close to $300 million annually, this Conservative government, with their federal cousins, has caved to the industry lobby to extend the normal lifespan of these antiquated polluters by five to 10 years. To the Energy Minister: why are you continuing to extend the damage to the environment and to the health of all Albertans by extending the life of these coal-fired power plants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to say that we work very hard with the federal government to make sure that we have a baseload of coal in this province to ensure that Albertans are receiving a very good price for their electricity while ensuring that we're taking care of the air and the water in this province. With regard to those plants we've worked with the industry. We're working on it sector by sector, and coal plants will be phased out over 50 years. We are working and taking a very proactive approach to the reductions in coal emissions.

Dr. Swann: Typical of this government, Mr. Speaker: profits before people. Could it have anything to do with the $400,000 you received from the industry in your 2011 election? Albertans are rightly . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, is that the question?

Dr. Swann: No.

The Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. I thought I heard a question. Conclude your question, please.

Dr. Swann: Albertans are rightfully shocked that two-thirds of our electricity is still generated from coal in this province. What is your excuse for putting Albertans' health risks second to profits in this province?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans also want us to make sure that we put them first, too, and we put them first by making sure that we have electricity in this province that is affordable for Albertans. When you have an 800-year supply of low-cost, coal-based electricity, we work with Albertans to make sure that they have that. We're not putting industry first. We put Albertans and the environment first in this province.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, coal is an important health care cost, and it damages our environmental reputation. What is your excuse, again, Mr. Minister, for not using the abundance of natural gas which could be powering our power today? We have alternatives. We have clean alternatives. What is your excuse?

Mr. Hughes: If you actually look at the facts, what you would see, Mr. Speaker, is that over the last 10 years the percentage of electricity generated in this province by coal has gone from some 60 to 70 per cent down to about 40 per cent today. We're clearly on a trajectory of reducing the amount of coal that's used in this province. In addition, natural gas is increasing in the amount that is being used, just as is the case throughout North America, and that's a good thing. It's using natural gas, it's producing a cleaner greenhouse gas footprint, and it's ensuring that Albertans have a healthier environment as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Pipeline Safety

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer, after three major pipeline leaks in Alberta and following damning reviews by two separate Auditors General, the NDP called for an independent review of pipeline safety by Alberta's Auditor General. Instead, the government did a quick bait and switch, and with the approval of their friends in the energy industry they came up with their own hand-picked group to do a review. Since December that report has been sitting on the minister's desk. Why has it not been released yet?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is deeply committed to ensuring that we have a very high-performing pipeline industry in this province because that is so important to our credibility in the rest of the world as well. Let's deal with the facts and not the grassy knoll conspiracy theories of certain members of this House. The fact is that the report arrived in the last month after review by the Energy Resources Conservation Board, and it will be released in due course.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that providing editing privileges to the subject of a performance review is just one more example of this government's commitment to having the fox guard the henhouse and given that the real accountability for pipeline safety performance in Alberta is to Alberta's citizens through this Assembly, why is the minister afraid of releasing his insider review of pipeline safety while the House is still in session?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite confident that hon. members opposite will be able to generate public debate whether this House is in session or not. I will bring this forward in the fullness of time. What is important is to ensure that we have the highest performing pipeline system in the world, in fact, because we have 400,000 kilometres of pipeline in this province. We ought to know what we're doing, and we do know what we're doing.

Ms Notley: How about you tell Albertans what you're doing?

Given that, as you say, there are over 400,000 kilometres of pipeline running through Alberta yet just yesterday Enbridge admitted to breaking safety rules for over 10 years without being called to account by federal regulators, why won't this government face this issue honestly, admit there is good reason for Albertans to be concerned, and come clean by releasing that report today?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the pipeline industry is an important infrastructure in this province and has been working hard. Actually, it was this government and it was me as the Minister of Energy who sat down with industry leaders and specifically said to them: folks, you need to make sure that the whole industry performs as well as the best in industry can, and you need to get to work on doing that. It was a strong message of encouraging industry, and then we started the recovery.

That report will be made available when it's ready, in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

New School Construction

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Why don't we start with a positive? We all welcomed the good news of the school announcements in this province last week. Now, to that, there are a lot of school boards and communities, I think we're aware, that didn't get any news. The Wildrose's 10-year debt-free capital plan would do that by delivering 100 schools and renovating 60 more and, more importantly, by publishing a priority list so that communities don't have to wait with bated breath to find out if they're going to get a school. Will the government, then, finally adopt the Wildrose policy, release its priority list for new schools, and take the politics out of the classroom?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that we won't adopt the Wildrose policy of reducing our capital build of schools by 30 per cent. [interjections] As they mentioned when they launched their capital brochure, they said that 30 per cent of the schools we're building today aren't needed. I wonder which ones those are? I'd like to see that list. [interjections] Are those the schools in Airdrie? Is that the school we just announced in Okotoks? Is that the school we just opened in Langdon?

The Speaker: A good little exchange there. Thank you.

First supplementary, please.

Mr. McAllister: You know, Mr. Speaker, I did start with a wonderful positive.

The Speaker: Noted.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Given that students in the STAR Catholic division were among the many communities who will not be receiving new schools and given that their board chair is saying that they've "been left out of the loop" for which criteria are at play when it comes to project approval, can the government explain why they insist on keeping school boards across this province like the one in Leduc in the dark and get to publishing a list so we all know what's going on?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's a very good question. There are a lot of school boards and parents and teachers and kids out there that want to know: "Is our school going to get funded? How do you guys decide on these lists?" The reality is that we've got over 2,000 schools in the province. There are also a number of modernization projects on the go. Besides that, there are modulars. If you wanted to keep an inventory list of all those projects and which one is coming up next, you'd need an entire bureaucracy just to keep that up on a day-to-day basis. Nevertheless, our guys do the best they can. School boards change their capital plans every year and even during the year, so it is just an impossible thing to keep a list of 3,000 projects. How big do they want this list to be?

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, when adjustments are needed to be made on a list, I don't think anybody would begrudge a school board for making them.

Another positive. You know, I think we all recognize that we can't build all the schools we need, but given that, we should be doing all we can to allow boards and communities to prepare for the future. Will the minister commit to contacting the boards who did not have their projects approved and giving them some feedback so they know where they are as a provincial priority and can in turn plan for the kids and the families in their community?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we do that on a day-to-day basis. I talk to school boards every day. I talk to board chairs, superintendents, the business officials. As a matter of fact, we just met with all the stakeholders yesterday, when we launched the dual crediting and the new ministerial order.

Mr. Speaker, this is ironic, that we've got a group that's advocating for us to build more schools when they said that a good 30 per cent of the schools we're building don't need to be built. In addition, their alternative budget last year wanted us to cut our infrastructure budget by $1.623 billion. That's a very specific number with no list. The year previous it was $2.74 billion. That's a very specific number with no list. I think they should look at themselves in the mirror.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, your point of order at 2:32 has been noted.

Let us move on to Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Noninstructional Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Postsecondary institutions in Alberta are struggling to cope with the 2013 budget cuts, and some of them are offering retirement packages to faculty, including some of our leading researchers. In the past some institutions have responded to funding cuts by unilaterally imposing noninstructional fees on students for a variety of services. My questions are for the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. Why has the government not allowed postsecondary institutions to raise their tuition fees by the increased cost of living?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, offering early retirement packages to tenured professors, who have no mandatory retirement age and actually can sit in office till they die, is not perhaps a bad idea if they choose to take those retirement packages, but we were very, very clear in our messaging. We will not be balancing the budgets of this province or our provincial universities, schools, and colleges on the backs of students. We have to make sure that we have efficiencies in the system, that we run those institutions as efficiently as possible before we ask students to pay additional money through tuition or taxpayers to invest additional dollars into the institutes.

Dr. Brown: Research funding coming into the province of Alberta for universities is a major economic driver, so why isn't the department doing more to retain and to attract leading researchers to our universities?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we are attracting researchers to this province, but I would agree with this member, if that's what he's suggesting, that we can probably do more. The way to attract researchers is not only through promoting the province of Alberta but actually creating an environment in which they can engage in research that excites them, in research that is relevant, in research that can be commercialized, in research that solves real-world problems with real, scientific solutions. That is what we're going to do. We know we have great facilities, we know we have great academia, and we're hoping to foster an environment that will attract researchers from all over the world to have that happen.

Dr. Brown: Will the minister explain what his government's policy is regarding noninstructional fees and the increases imposed upon students for those fees?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have been very clear with chairs and presidents of all institutions, urging them not to increase the fees unless they are increasing the level of service that will be available to students. The possibility of regulating those fees may be discussed. The fact is that those fees vary from year to year based on what services are offered to students. Most of those services are very valuable, and students want them. They're extracurricular. We will be discussing that as we will be looking at different models of funding postsecondary institutions and as we will be opening up the legislation soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Alberta Energy Regulator

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December the ERCB released a draft of a new regulatory framework for unconventional oil and gas. This proposed new framework completely changes how regulations will happen. It will regulate plays instead of individual wells, and it will deal with performance outcomes rather than setting specific procedures. To do this, stakeholders, industry, and the regulator will have to work together to write an entirely new joint-outcomes document. To the Minister of Energy: doesn't experimenting with an entirely new style of regulatory regime defeat the stated purpose of improving efficiency for the new regulator?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised an important question, and it deals, really, with: how do you ensure that you continue to have leading-edge regulatory capacity in the regulation of oil and gas business while technology is evolving dramatically? This will all fall under the responsibility of the Alberta energy regulator. We will have a new process in which the policy management office in the Department of Energy will be able to play a role in defining policy, consulting with interested parties, including the hon. member or people he knows.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, given that in the next month the new regulator will have to get up and running, integrate new environmental regulations, and now experiment with an entirely new type of regulatory regime for unconventional oil and gas, isn't the minister concerned that he may have put too much on the new regulator's plate and set it up for failure?

Mr. Hughes: Actually, we have 75 years of exceptional experience in this province of a regulator, going right back to the Turner Valley conservation board in 1938. I know, Mr. Speaker, you probably don't remember that either. But we have a long and an honourable history in this province, and we have many changes that are imposed not by the minister but by the circumstances, by industry, by evolving technologies, and by science as well that ensure that we actually have the appropriate level of regulatory oversight in this province.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, given that the greatest challenge for the energy industry is market access and given that the world is demanding ever-greater assurances on pipeline review and given that the Energy minister answered a question earlier saying that he would release the report by March 31, why aren't the ERCB's resources being used to develop and promote top-notch pipeline integrity regulations rather than experimenting with an entirely new style of regulatory framework for unconventional oil and gas?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be nice if we could live in a world where there's stuff that we could ignore and other stuff that we could focus on, but in fact we have the responsibility of dealing with all aspects of the energy industry, and that is all-important to how we carry on business in this province. We ensure that we get the right balance between economic development, environmental concerns, and respecting landowners in the process with the new Alberta energy regulator. This is a very important initiative, and it's going to be led by first-class people who are really dedicated to ensuring that we meet that balance and that we serve the interests of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Little Bow.

Rat Control

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the early 1950s Alberta has boasted about being rat free because of a very aggressive rat control program that has kept this pest outside of Alberta's borders. Last year, however, in Medicine Hat all that changed. Agricultural producers in my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, located in the northwest part of the province, are very concerned about this rodent. Recently some municipalities questioned the need to spend resources on this pest. My questions are to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. As we've heard little of this, what is the status of the control or eradication program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the question from the hon. member. Things have been somewhat quiet on the rat scene in recent months, but that's a good thing. It is true that last summer we did have an infestation at the landfill in Medicine Hat, and that gave us an opportunity to see our people at work. We have wonderful resources, who take their job very seriously in keeping rats out of the province. Now, we call Alberta rat free, and we are, but that doesn't mean that there are never rats that show up here. But when they do, they don't last long.

2:40

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that normally rats can carry viruses and disease and cause millions of dollars of losses to food crops, what is your ministry doing to ensure that municipalities have proper control plans?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, again, I appreciate the question, and particularly I appreciate it coming from an MLA in northwestern Alberta because people tend to think that the focus of this issue is in the south and along the Saskatchewan border. That is true; we do have a special focus there. However, we think that in every part of the province we should be ready to deal with an infestation because a rat could arrive on a truck, in a piece of equipment, on a train. Two rats can be responsible for reproduction and create 15,000 rats in a year. This is something we take very seriously because they could do a great deal of damage to crops and to property.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what is being done to eliminate the source of Norway rats, preventing this, as you said, from reoccurring and preventing their spread to other parts of the province, including my constituency, especially as we move seed and grain by trucks and by rail and by farm equipment? There's a lot of farm equipment coming in from auctions from the Saskatchewan side.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we obviously rely on people to report when they see a rat so that our people can get in place and deal with them. Where we suspect a rat infestation, bait is placed. People can phone 310.FARM – that's 3276 – and report a rat sighting, and our people will deal with it immediately. We were able to maintain all of the support in terms of our budget for these programs. We work very closely with municipalities, and where necessary we have even provided extra resources for them to deal with the problem.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today.

In 30 seconds from now we will resume with private members' statements, starting with Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Asian Heritage Month

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to Albertans of Asian descent whose contributions have helped build our province and make it such an amazing place to live. Throughout May many organizations and communities across Canada will be celebrating Asian Heritage Month.

We as Albertans and as Canadians take great pride in our diversity. The history of our multiculturalism is the struggle and success story of the pan-Asian communities. From the earliest days of settlement to the present day the contributions of Asian Albertans have made enormous impacts across all facets of life. Asian Canadians helped build our great country, working on the railways that linked Canada from coast to coast. Most began in the most humble circumstances, overcoming mighty obstacles to achieve recognition and citizenship.

Today we can find Asian Canadians in all areas of society: artists and athletes, who dazzle with their creativity and dedication, enriching our culture; the scientists and the businesspeople, leading the way to innovation and prosperity; and the public servants, dedicated to service and building better communities. Their contributions have greatly enriched our Alberta. Some, like our previous Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Norman Kwong, and the recent Juno award winner Vivian Fung, exemplify the spirit of Alberta as a province where ethnicity is no barrier to excellence at the highest levels.

Sometimes the smallest thing is felt every day. For example, you can find a Chinese restaurant, I think, in every part of the community. The Royal Alberta Museum currently has an exhibit called Chop Suey on the Prairies. It is something so ordinary yet an undeniable part of our cultural history, showcasing once again that this is a land truly stitched together by many brilliant threads.

Though many of us were born here, many came from distant lands to make Alberta home. Culture connects us to others in our communities, but culture also connects us to our shared identity as Albertans and as Canadians.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Huntington's Disease Awareness Month

Mrs. Towle: May is Huntington's Disease Awareness Month. Huntington's is a genetic brain disorder. About 1 in 7,000 Canadians has HD, but 1 in every 1,000 is touched by Huntington's as a caregiver, family member, friend, or someone who is at risk. Each child of a parent with HD has a 50 per cent chance of inheriting the disease and is said to be at risk. Males and females have exactly the same risk.

I am one of those 1 in 1,000 touched by Huntington's. My brother Ron had Huntington's. He was 35 when he died. It's a horrible disease. Ron described it this way. It's like having Alzheimer's disease, schizophrenia, and ALS all at once.

Ron's experience began with personality changes, slurred speech, inability to keep his job, and depression. He stopped taking care of himself, had a general lack of co-ordination, an unsteady gait, and a decline in mental abilities. As his disease progressed, his abnormal movements became faster, almost violent. He had jerky, almost dancelike motions. His neurologist called it chorea.

Sadly, like so many Huntington's patients, he had severe dementia associated with the late stages of the disease. Eventually Huntington's patients are unable to look after themselves and need help with daily activities and functions such as eating, hygiene, and toileting. Eventually they become bedridden. The disease leads to complete incapacitation and eventually death. There is no cure.

Ron lived in a long-term care facility for two years. His constant body movements were the equivalent of running a triathlon every 30 minutes. He needed 11,000 calories a day to live. Ron could not feed himself, dress himself, or care for himself. He was vulnerable, but Ron was full of love. Each and every day that our family visited Ron, he hugged us, he kissed us, and he touched us with his struggle. Ron was 32 when he was diagnosed with Huntington's and 35 when he died. We love him. We miss him dearly. He is the reason that I am an MLA.

I encourage all members to go to www.huntingtonsociety.ca and help to find a cure for Huntington's.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I introduce a bill, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: Hon. members, unanimous consent is requested to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests. Is anyone opposed to that?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Proceed, please.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might beg your indulgence again after Introduction of Bills, a little later on in the Routine, as other guests have not arrived, but I wanted to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly someone who has been an inspiration for me over the last 35, 40 years. As I introduce today the Children First Act, I want to recognize an individual who has been teaching for 34 years in the Edmonton public schools system, who has put children first every day, who has brought home issues with respect to children and understanding with respect to what children need to be successful. I might say that she's also successfully been the mother of our three children. My wife, Janet, who has not been introduced in this House in the 15 years that I've been here, is here with us today for the introduction of my bill along with my daughter Janine. I'd ask them to rise and know that I love them very much and that they truly are very special parts of my life and my inspiration and mentors and role models for me.

The Speaker: Are there any other introductions while we're at that stage?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker. I'm also very pleased to introduce a number of people who have arrived today to be here for the introduction of Bill 25, people who have been very instrumental as we've consulted and discussed what we could do better to ensure that children have a good start.

I want to single out one person first of all and then introduce the others as a group. The person I want to single out is Marie Whelan. Marie Whelan – I'd ask Marie to stand – is a principal with the Edmonton Catholic school system, and together with Margo McGee, the M and Ms as they're often called, they were the principals of St. Mary school in my constituency and then moved to Monsignor Fee Otterson school, which was in my constituency and now is in the constituency of Edmonton-South West. On the day that I was sworn in as Minister of Education, they provided me with a pin, Children First. Marie and Margo as role models and mentors have been an inspiration to me over the years. There are schools where, if you walk in, you understand what caring for children means, what educating children means. I just want to ask Marie to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

If I may, I'll introduce the others who have joined us today, and I'd ask them to stand as I call their names: Chief Rick Hanson, chief of police from Calgary; Dr. Anny Sauvageau, the Alberta chief medical examiner; Dr. Talbot, the chief medical officer of health; Rhonda Barraclough, Alberta Association of Services for Children and Families; Randy Baker and Jackie Stewart, Child and Youth Advocate office; Robyn Blackadar, president and CEO of the Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research; Fay Orr, the Mental Health Patient Advocate; Sheldon Kennedy of Respect Group Inc.; Bonnie Johnston, CEO of the Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre; Joan Carr, superintendent of Edmonton Catholic schools; Kevin McNichol from HomeFront; Bernie Kollman, northern vice-chair of Alberta's Promise; Dr. Allen Benson, Native Counselling Services of Alberta; Val Campbell, the chair of the death review committee working group and a Crown prosecutor in the province of Alberta; Janine Fraser, Alberta Council of Women's Shelters; Christie Lavan, Alberta Council of Women's Shelters; and accompanied by Jason Chance, who works in the deputy minister's office in the department.

All of these individuals have been critical and key in consultations leading up to the Children First Act and, beyond that, to what we're doing on behalf of children, working together collaboratively with the community to ensure that we get the best results. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House. I'd like to add a specific thanks to Jason Chance, who has been shepherding this bill through its stages till it got to the House today.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: Let us proceed with the Minister of Human Services for his introduction.

Bill 25 Children First Act

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege today to rise and introduce for first reading Bill 25, the Children First Act. It being a money bill, there is a message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor recommending the same.

Mr. Speaker, the Children First Act is an important piece of legislation to put a focus on the importance of ensuring that each and every child in Alberta has the opportunity for success. We know from the research, we know from practice that when children get a good start, when they have a stable home life, when they have people who love them, when they have an adult in their life that's a role model and a mentor, they grow up to be successful.

I want to start, again, by acknowledging our Premier for the emphasis that she placed on early childhood development, early learning, the protection of children, and the opportunity for each and every child in Alberta to have the opportunity for success, the opportunity to reach their potential, and the opportunity to aspire to be the best they can be.

I would also like to as well again mention Marie Whelan and Margo McGee, the inspirations for me in terms of the concept of children first and the meaning that that has. In each and every meeting I have, when someone says, "What's that pin about?" I say: "It's not a program; it's an agenda. It's what we're here about."

The elements of the bill will be to provide a children's charter, to provide for a review of policies, programs, and services across government that impact children, to ensure that there is appropriate information sharing between collaborative agencies, the police, education, health, child welfare, others in the community who are working together on behalf of children and that they share the information that they have in the best interests of the child.

It will provide for the sharing of information also, on an anonymized basis, with the Alberta Centre for Child, Family & Community Research. It's very important that this agency, which was set up by government to do research, have access to the wealth of data which we have in the government data banks so that they can actually tell us what is effective, what will be effective, and what the longitudinal analysis will be.

The important parts of the bill are the children's charter, the information sharing, the review of policies and processes that are provisioned in the bill, which will require that we review all legislation, policy, and programs relative to children and report back to the Legislature on them and that we share the data and information with the Alberta Centre for Child, Family & Community Research so they can give us information back upon which we can make decisions.

There are a number of amendments to other acts, which are coming from the consultations which we've had to date with members here and others who have told us some of the early things that we can do at the start towards looking at all of our legislation to make sure that we are operating in the most effective and the most efficient way possible, with the outcome, Mr.

Speaker, of ensuring that every child has access to the opportunities which are in Alberta.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, I believe you have three tablings according to my list.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three tablings very quickly. The first one is the appropriate number of copies of a domestic violence letter, an open letter to the Premier from the Calgary Domestic Violence Committee outlining how the elimination of programs like STEP and the community spirit donation grant program have had devastating effects on the ability of nonprofit groups and government agencies to reduce domestic violence in Canada.

The second tabling I have, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a petition which calls on the government to increase postsecondary funding rather than imposing the devastating cuts to colleges and universities. I have 465 signatures here today and plenty more to come.

The third tabling I have, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a Globe and Mail article from May 7, which is today. The article describes how Adrian Dix has a moderate and level-headed approach to the development in the oil and gas industry and is soon to become the Premier.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a copy of the public fatality inquiry that I referenced during my questions today. It was held on the 23rd and 24th of July 2012 and on the 15th of March 2013 respecting a death in the Good Samaritan Society Southgate Care Centre.

The second tabling is an electronic Internet petition. At the last count, which was about an hour and a half ago – they were going up fairly rapidly – there were 2,370 signers. These are parents and students from six or eight different schools – D.S. MacKenzie, Victoria, Hardisty, Esther Starkman, Avalon, Meyokumin, Dunluce, and Coronation – that are involved in an enhanced arts program that happens after school. Because of the funding that transfers from this government to the Edmonton public school board, that program is under threat of being cut even though parents pay for it, so it's of great concern to a number of people.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but it is 3 o'clock, and the Deputy Government House Leader has caught my attention.

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to rise and ask for unanimous consent of the House to continue past 3 o'clock notwithstanding rule 7(7).

The Speaker: Hon. members, unanimous consent is required for us to proceed with the conclusion of our Routine. I'll ask one question. Is anyone opposed to granting that permission? Say so now.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, did you conclude?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings. One is from Joan Raugust of Calgary, with a 27-year-old with developmental disabilities who describes the Ministry of Human Services as “laying the tracks” in these cuts “as they are driving the train,” with no clear plan since the groundwork has not been laid. She is very concerned about these changes.

The second is from a number of individuals across the province, seniors and pharmacists concerned about the cuts to pharmacy and their programs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I have the Minister of Justice, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty’s Loyal Opposition, followed by Calgary-Buffalo. If there are others, please let me know.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just rise to table five copies of five different documents, the first being the 2004 political party annual financial statements for the Alberta Alliance Party indicating that a former leader’s family and corporation contributed $97,500, 73 per cent; the 2005 report, $95,000, 72 per cent; the 2005 campaign, $2,000, at 4 per cent; and 2007, $150,000, 99.7 per cent during that campaign. After the party merged with the Wildrose Alliance Party, the contributions continued for $120,000, or 23.3 per cent, of total donations during that campaign. I’ll pass these documents through to the Clerk.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty’s Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I made reference to two documents today in my questions. One is the new $300,000 mailer going out with PC Party colours, five copies, the requisite number.

In addition, the report to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, public fatality inquiry. This is the sad story of Mr. Buckley and the recommendations from Judge James Wheatley on what needs to be done to ensure that we have better care for those in dementia facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from a constituent of mine, Rachel McDougall-Sutherland, going through the difficulty she has with both finding and keeping daycare, the very little that the federal tax incentive program for daycare does for her as an individual, and requesting that we either get onboard with providing an Alberta daycare program or persuading the federal government to put a national daycare program into effect.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, allow me, please, to table five copies of a report produced by the Chief Electoral Officer re candidates who failed to eliminate a campaign deficit reported for the 2012 provincial general election.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Griffiths, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Special Areas Act special areas trust account financial statements, December 31, 2012; pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report, 2012, dated October 31, 2012; and pursuant to the Capital Region Board regulation the Capital Region Board 2012 annual report.

The Speaker: Thank you, Clerk.

We have I think three points of order. The first one, I believe, was from the hon. Member for Airdrie at 1:56 p.m. Do you wish to proceed with your point, your citation, and so on?

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I refer to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). This is going to a comment that the Justice minister stated, that our party, the Wildrose Party, had in fact in the past accepted bundled donations or something to that effect into the Wildrose Party. This minister was flat out being untruthful. If you’re going to say something, if you’re going to refer to specific numbers in this House and you’re going to specifically make an accusation of that magnitude, you cannot just flat out tell an untruth. This is not a different version of the facts here. This is not that the facts could be interpreted in two different ways. This is just a flat-out falsehood by the Justice minister, and it should not be allowed to proceed.

First of all, the party that he is referencing, the Alberta Alliance Party, is an entirely separate legal entity than the Wildrose Party, a totally separate entity, totally different. I know that’s difficult, but as a lawyer you would think he would have some clue in that noggin of his that you cannot have a completely separate entity be responsible for the actions of a previous entity.

Now, I know that we took the Alliance name, I guess, in 2008 and it became part of this party, but the entities were completely different. It’s kind of like the Progressive Conservatives and the Conservatives federally are completely different, totally different parties. So try to get that through the old noggin there.

That was the first problem. It was a completely different party; obviously, different leaders, but that’s really immaterial. Different parties is the key issue there.

Secondly, you know, it is ironic here. In the case that he spoke of, Mr. Thorsteinson lent that Alliance Party $130,000. That loan, that bridge financing, very similar to what this party received from Mr. Katz and the Katz group of companies, was found illegal under the act. That money had to be returned. I find it funny that what was found to be illegal for that 2008 Alberta Alliance Party has been found legal in this case, an incredible double standard, I would mention in that regard. I think that the Chief Electoral Officer should maybe take a look at the differences between the two and help us understand the differences between the two. There really wasn’t any difference between the two except that one was found illegal, and the one that your party did was found not to be illegal, a bit of a double standard.

In any event, that’s the first piece. The second amount that he was talking about . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hope we’re going to have a clear airing on this because once we get into discussing internal party matters, they are really not in order in this House. The clarification has been given. If you have something briefly to wrap up, I'll certainly allow it because I want this matter done and settled once and for all. Then we'll make a ruling on it accordingly.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I would mention that he brought this up, and I'm just trying to clarify the comments that were completely unfounded and untrue.

To close, I'd say that besides that bridge loan that was found to be illegal and was given back, there was an amount of money donated by Mr. Thorsteinson and his family members in separate cheques. Never once was the money bundled. It was always in separate cheques, and it was over a five-year period, from 2004 to 2008. It was not one cheque or one bank draft for $430,000. Completely different.

I want to thank the member for actually making our case that what your party did was completely inappropriate. What happened here was actually something that wasn't even done by our party, so get your facts straight, and please withdraw your comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice to respond.

Mr. Denis: First off, Mr. Speaker, none of my comments dealt with loans, just donations, so we won't deal with that. None of my comments dealt with separate cheques. I simply, as I tabled those documents earlier, just a few minutes ago, indicated, again, that this individual, his family, and his corporation in '04 donated $97,500; in '04 during the campaign, $95,000; in '05, $2,000; and in '07, $150,000.

3:10

Mr. Speaker, the member is quite correct – please check the records of Elections Alberta if you don't accept my particular memory in this case – that on January 19, 2008, the Wildrose Party and the Alberta Alliance Party merged into one entity. But even after they merged, $120,000 from that former leader's amount in addition to his corporations and family, which is 23.3 per cent in 2008, when that party still exists today. It is still under the elections' rules and listed on the Elections Alberta website as the Wildrose Alliance Party. That's the total amount, $464,500. Despite what all the naysayers may say, it's unfortunate that this member in particular seeks to run from his party's record.

Mr. Speaker, truth is an absolute defence. We simply have a good debate here, and what I've stated is entirely, 100 per cent true.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, I have to tell you that I am disappointed that this matter would even be brought forward. Help me out here. How many times have I reminded you that matters dealing with internal party issues ought not be raised or brought forward in this House? Five, six, seven? I think about eight different times. Now, I could stand here and read them all to you again, and it would take me about 30 minutes to do that.

I would hope that we could, please, forever stop raising issues to do with internal party matters because they not only have no place here, but no one here has the jurisdiction within which to actually address those matters. There is a government. The government has policies, procedures, practices, finances, and so on, and they are here to be responsible and account for how they are determined and how they are applied. Opposition and private members, you have the role to ensure the government is doing that and to hold them to account on government matters.

If you want to go into this a little bit further, just be reminded of one of our favourite books, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, where it says on page 504, with a lead-in from earlier, that a question should not “concern internal party matters, or party or election expenses.” Anything to do with parties is always going to give rise to some kind of debate in this House. It's going to provoke some members to say things that in my experience over the years they have then lived to regret. So far we haven't seen too much of that, but we're on the cusp of that.

I'm going to ask you for the last time. I'm just not going to entertain any more stuff that has anything to do with internal party matters. It wastes time, it's beyond the jurisdiction of the House, and it is out of order to do so. I don't know how I can be more clear.

We've had the Member for Airdrie clarify his position. We've had the Minister of Justice clarify his position. That clarification has been offered. It's now in Hansard for others to read and learn from. Let us not visit this particular tack or this particular vein of questions or answers going forward, please. That concludes that matter.

Let me move on. A second point of order was raised at 2:10 – I believe it was the Government House Leader – with reference to something that the leader of the New Democrat opposition had raised.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Insisting on Answers

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in accordance with Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). The leader of the fourth party, in his preamble during this question, made comments. I don't have the Blues in front of me, so I could be corrected, but the statement was basically the fact that the Premier didn't care enough to get up and answer the question.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's very clear. You've ruled on this yourself, and it's in Beauchesne's at 419 and 420. As the government determines who answers the question, it's quite appropriate for the Premier to get up and talk about issues in the House and deal with matters of a broad nature in public policy and vision and direction, but it's also very clear that the Premier has the ability to ask specific ministers to speak to specific questions within their purview. Again, this was a specific incident, Mr. Speaker, and it was quite appropriate for the Minister of Health to get up and speak on that.

I'd ask that the member of the fourth party withdraw his remarks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I find this interesting. Of course, if an individual member is not in attendance, you can't speak of their absence, certainly, but within the bounds of rhetoric in talking about the issue of the day, in this case the seniors issue, it's not inappropriate considering how the argument was just previously made. I believe the member said something to the effect that you won't find a Premier that cares more about seniors. In reference to that, I think that it was not inappropriate that the leader of the New Democrats should at least invite the Premier to make comment on this issue.

Certainly, people can have a feeling or a sentiment that they are caring about a particular group or an issue, but I am a person that subscribes to the idea that you judge a person based on their actions and not just their rhetoric. When I look at the seniors file, we get inflamed about it because it is so important to all of us to ensure that we look after not only the people who are in care and seniors at the moment but also ensure that the policy is in place in the immediate and long-term future for future seniors, which could include all of us, hopefully, if it's our ambition to become a senior one day. You know, it's not an issue that's just on the side of anyone's plate.

We believe that it's very important that we hear from the very highest level. We make an invitation to the very highest level of the government here to talk about seniors' issues and to give us their opinion because we saw on one hand, for example, these promises that were made in regard to seniors. Then this budget comes and hits us on the back of the head, and we end up with, for example, the promised $20 million education tax subsidy suddenly taken off the table. I know in my constituency this affected seniors a great deal, and they were very disappointed. It really did affect those on a fixed income considerably.

Again, out of the blue this seniors drug plan came out, and we know from the last time just how potentially devastating that can be to certain groups. They haven't set the levels for cut-offs yet, but we see at least $180 million globally coming out of this and onto the backs of seniors, who are having to pay a higher amount.

Then, you know, there was this whole cut to this seniors' income subsidy as well, affecting at least 9,000 seniors.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Yes.

The Speaker: I appreciate your waxing away, but it has nothing to do with the point of order. The point of order that has been raised is under 23(h), (i), and (j) or in that vicinity, so if you would just conclude in response to what the deputy House leader has offered by way of the point here. It has to do with something that your leader said. I have it here in the Blues, where he said at 2:09 or 2:10, "Well, it's unfortunate that the Premier doesn't care enough to get up and answer these questions." He went on to say, "This government can't be trusted to protect our seniors." That is what the issue here is, hon. member, not about your interpretation of the budgets. Please wrap up.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I mean, that's a good, succinct way to come to a conclusion on this. This is an issue talking about caring and talking about specific issues on this, and we need to hear from the highest level about how and where the government is going on all these issues because these few broken promises that I brought up here are not just rhetorical points. They are affecting real people.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Horner: Just to add, Mr. Speaker, because the Member for Edmonton-Calder is missing the point here, that Standing Order 23(i) is about imputing a false motive to another member. We're all hon. members in this House. To suggest that what the member said does not impute the motive that the Premier doesn't care is ridiculous, and they should withdraw the comment. It does impute a motive to the Premier that is not true. In fact, the hon. member heard from the highest level as designated by the Premier, which is entirely within her purview. It does not mean that she doesn't care. In fact, it means she cares a great deal because she wants the right answer to come from the right person. This hon. member should be told to tell his leader to retract the comments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, the Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Government House Leader has risen on this point of order, which I just read for you according to what the Blues said. I want to make a couple of comments here quickly. First of all, I know I've reminded you of this before, but I'll remind you again. When a question is posed to government, regardless of the person to whom it is posed, any member of Executive Council is allowed to answer that. We all know this by now surely. We've been here for about a year. In this particular case, we have questions that sometimes get posed to the Premier, and the Premier has the full ability to either answer the question herself or to delegate it to one of the other members of Executive Council. It's how the system works.

In fact, if you looked at Beauchesne's 419, it clearly says:

The Prime Minister . . .

And in this case we could take that to be our own local Premier.

. . . answers for the government as a whole and is entitled to answer any question relating to any ministerial portfolio and matter of policy. Likewise, the Prime Minister is entitled to delegate this responsibility to the Deputy Prime Minister . . .

Read into that the Deputy Premier for our purposes.

. . . even when the Prime Minister is present in the House.

Then Beauchesne's 420 reads as follows:

The Speaker has stated, "Of course, the Chair will allow a question to be put to a certain Minister; but it cannot insist that that Minister rather than another should answer it."

So that's one point.

There are other references, and I know you'll want to hear this because it comes from our favourite book, House of Commons Procedure and Practice. On page 509 the first sentence says, "Questions, although customarily addressed to specific Ministers, are directed to the Ministry as a whole." In other words, they're able to be answered by perhaps associate ministers or by others on Executive Council.

I find that the way that the comment was made by the leader of the New Democrat opposition violates those particular rules. The rules are very clear, and what happens when we violate a rule or we breach a rule in one way or another is that points of order get raised again, time gets wasted, admonishments have to be given, and the rest you've heard from me many times before.

These kinds of shots, if you will, under the table are really not in keeping with the spirit of the House, and they're certainly not reflective of the vast amount of experience that all of you bring to this House from your own private lives and the kinds of shots you wouldn't be taking at that level. So why take them here when you know they are a breach?

While I'm up, I want to make another quick comment which ties in with this. Frequently we have people playing these little games, as I will call them, where they know very well that the person from the front bench is out of the room. I know we're not allowed to refer to their absences. They may have gone to the washroom. They may be dealing with an urgency. They may be helping one of your constituents, for all you know, or they might be representing the cause elsewhere. But the questions sometimes get posed to that member knowing full well that the member isn't present.

I know how the game works. I've been at this for 20 years. It tends to point out someone's absence. Now, the same could be done toward opposition leaders, and I would hope that we wouldn't stoop to that. So far we haven't, but I would ask opposition members to please review that practice. It's cute to a point. You've made your point. Let's not try to make it over and over again, or we will again have to have this wastage of time to address points of order. I fully anticipate, based on notes that I've gotten and collected over the last few weeks, that that will in fact be the case.

I hope that has clarified that. Accordingly, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, I would ask you to connect with your leader and ask him to withdraw those comments unless you're prepared to do that now. I'll offer you that opportunity.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for your edification on these issues. Based on that, I would on behalf of the leader of the New Democrats withdraw those comments here today.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Those comments have been officially withdrawn. We appreciate the co-operation.

Third and final point of order.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Anderson: Actually, under Standing Order 13, clarification. To your last point, Mr. Speaker, there are often times when we have a health question, for example. If that minister is not in the House and the Premier is not in her chair, we don't know who to direct the health question to. In that case, what do we say? Do we just say, "To the government," or do we say, "To the person representing the Health minister"? What do we say?

The Speaker: Hon. member, you would know this from your previous experience. Every minister has someone who covers them in their absence. In fact, there are typically two. The question could be posed, just as you've said, to any member of government who wishes to respond – that's totally appropriate because anyone, in fact, can – or as another way to the acting Minister of Health or to the Deputy Premier or to any member of Executive Council. There's an associate minister. You have a number of options. Suffice it to say that government members always have at least one if not two or more acting ministers who are ready and usually up to speed to jump in and answer any of those questions.

Now, did we have a third point of order? I believe we did. Airdrie, you rose on a point of order, something to do with the Minister of Education's comments. Citation, then please proceed.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Again our favourite passages, 23(h), (i), (j), and (l). As you know, sometimes with these points of order we do need to call them in order to clarify something that is just completely false from the other side. I'll be brief on this one and just say that the Minister of Education quoted or seemed to be inferring, anyway, that he was quoting from the Wildrose literature that 30 per cent of the schools being built by the government were not needed. That, of course, is not in the literature anywhere.

We would indeed spend less – that is in the literature – on schools. If we had an infrastructure priority list for schools, we'd actually be able to know what that entailed. It would entail, obviously, that some of the schools that the government is building this year – there might be five or six that would not be built this year under a Wildrose government – would have to wait till the next year. They would be at the top of the priority list the very next year and built the very next year. We feel that not only is it important to build schools, Mr. Speaker, but it's important to not go into debt and leave our children holding the bill for those schools. There has to be a balance; otherwise, we'd just build 300 or 400 or 500 schools. Obviously, we have to have a balance between building the schools that we need and staying and living within our means.

The point here with the Education minister is that he inferred that we said in our literature that 30 per cent of the schools that they would build are not needed or are unnecessary. That is completely false. It's true that several may have had to wait an extra year to be built, but it's false to say that we would claim that they're not needed. I would ask him to withdraw that remark.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hate to take up your time because we do have some important bills to pass. What the minister said was accurate. As a matter of fact, in 2011 under their alternative budget the Wildrose Alliance Party was going to cut $2.74 billion out of our capital, which at the time was $7 billion, 30 per cent. In 2012 the Wildrose Alliance Party said that they'd cut about $1.623 billion out of our budget, which was $5.6 billion, again 30 per cent.

3:30

As a matter of fact, in audio from February 13 of this year the hon. member was quoted as saying, I quote: we don't have a problem with a lack of money for building new schools; we've got buckets of it; the problem is that we keep on putting a lot of our schools – I would say up to 30 per cent of the schools that we build are in areas where the priority isn't there; it just isn't.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education answered the question I think in a very fair manner, and I don't think there's any point of order here.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else who wishes to participate? No.

Well, hon. members, right around 2:32 p.m. the hon. Minister of Education, in response to a question from I think it was Chestermere-Rocky View, said the following among other things:

Mr. Speaker, this is ironic, that we've got a group that's advocating for us to build more schools when they said that a good 30 per cent of the schools we're building don't need to be built. In addition, their alternative budget last year wanted us to cut our infrastructure budget by $1.623 billion. That's a very specific number with no list. The year previous it was $2.74 billion. That's a very specific number with no list. I think they should look at themselves in the mirror.

That's a quote according to the Blues. We'll see how they actually come out, but I'm sure it'll be fairly close to that.

Now, the Minister of Aboriginal Relations has defended this point from Airdrie, and I think the hon. Member for Airdrie is looking for clarification more than anything here.

This issue, again, has come up time and time and time again in different words, in different statements, in different positions. I, for the life of me, don't know why we're trying to debate two budgets in this House, one by the government and one by the Official Opposition. I've never heard of such a thing ever before, but it seems to be going on in this House now and going on out there as well. Why? I'll never know.

We have one official budget that is running the province, and that is the one that we should be concentrating on. That is the one we should be debating. That is the one for which, government members, you are being held accountable, not the opposition's budget or whatever you might want to refer to it as. It's just very strange for me in my 20 years to experience that.

Nonetheless, in conclusion, I want to just cite something from House of Commons Procedure and Practice, where it says:

Members may not insist on an answer nor may a Member insist that a specific Minister respond to his or her question. A Minister's refusal to answer a question may not be questioned or treated as the subject of a point of order or question of privilege.

The Speaker ensures that replies adhere to the dictates of order, decorum and parliamentary language. The Speaker, however, is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions. In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue.

The Speaker has no knowledge of what the actual facts in this case might be, but I've heard both sides explain their positions, and this matter has now been clarified, so let us move on and hopefully not visit this particular issue in this nature again if at all possible.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 23 Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and to move second reading of Bill 23, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013.

This is largely a housekeeping bill that will amend our personal and corporate income tax acts and align the tax laws with changes that have occurred recently in the federal tax system. There are also some portions of the act where we would repeal the Alberta Income Tax Act, which, when we moved to the single rate system in 2001, was replaced by the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act.

Repealing the Alberta Income Tax Act will help clean up the books. It will also facilitate the repeal of the related tax deductions regulation and thereby support the regulatory review process by helping to remove legislation that is no longer needed. Legal counsel and the Canada Revenue Agency have both confirmed that the act can be repealed without any negative consequences.

The bill will also amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. These amendments will address recent federal changes to the Canada child tax benefit program regarding parents who share custody of their children. Because the Alberta family employment tax credit piggybacks on the Canada child tax benefit administration system, Alberta's legislation must also be changed. The amendments related to parents with shared custody spread the payment of the credit out more evenly over the year and do not change the level of benefit provided.

The amendments to this act will also repeal the sections pertaining to the Alberta resource rebate program and the NHL players' tax. As these programs are no longer in effect, we no longer require the related legislation and regulation. Other amendments are for housekeeping purposes or to ensure Alberta's legislation properly references applicable sections of the federal Income Tax Act.

The bill also includes changes to the Alberta Corporate Tax Act. When applying the scientific research and experimental development tax credit, corporations are permitted to include a proxy amount for overhead expenses. Concerns were raised that this proxy rate was overgenerous and inappropriately increased the cost of the credits to the government. As a result, the federal government reduced its rate in its 2012 budget. Amendments to this act will maintain our consistency with federal law by reducing the Alberta rate to match the federal change. The scientific research and experimental development tax credit continues to give researchers more access to funds to support their work and support research and development in Alberta. Taxpayers will still be able to claim the credit on the full amount of their itemized eligible overhead expenditures.

Changes to the act will also be made in regard to the discretionary deduction for a capital gains reserve. Capital gains are taxable in the year that the asset is sold. However, corporations can defer tax on the gain by claiming a reserve when some portion of the proceeds on the sale are still receivable. With this bill if a corporation claims a reserve for federal purposes, it will also have to claim the same reserve for Alberta purposes.

Alberta's corporate income tax system parallels federal law but generally permits corporations to claim different amounts of discretionary deductions. In this case this opportunity is being eliminated to ensure the deductions are fair for everyone. This response is consistent with what we've done in the past when we think a discretionary deduction has the potential to be misused. It does not eliminate the deduction but leaves corporations in the same tax position in Alberta as they would be in almost all other jurisdictions in Canada.

Finally, amendments in this bill parallel federal policy that requires large corporations to pay 50 per cent of amounts in dispute. This policy aids in the collection of amounts from corporations that may or may not have been an ongoing presence in Alberta when the tax issue is finally resolved.

In summary, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act will remove legislation that is no longer needed, strengthen the tax system against abuse, align Alberta's tax law with changes made by the federal government, and support the regulatory review process. As I said, Mr. Speaker, this is mostly a housekeeping bill in alignment with the federal changes.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I now move to adjourn debate of Bill 23, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 24 Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 24, Statutes Amendment Act, 2013.

This is an omnibus act that will address the Condominium Property Act, the Emblems of Alberta Act, the Perpetuities Act, and the Surveys Act and update portfolio names of different departments and associated organizations.

From a Service Alberta perspective the amendment to the Condominium Property Act will help improve protection for approximately 1,300 bare-land condominium corporations representing 40,000 owners. This is an important issue that can be addressed.

Clarifying the authority of corporations, Mr. Speaker, in a court decision the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench ruled that bare-land condominium corporations cannot use reserve funds to maintain or repair property that their bylaws obligate them to manage outside of the requirements of the Condominium Property Act. This ruling has had a significant impact for bare-land condominiums, typically being single-family detached homes, townhomes, or duplexes. The corporations in many of these types of developments are often required by their bylaws to look after what is known as managed property. This can include the building's exterior, roofs, lawns, and other structures attached to the property. For years bare-land corporations have been paying for major repairs or replacements of this property from their reserve funds.

The impact of the court's decision is far reaching. Between 90 and 95 per cent of bare-land condominium corporations are responsible for taking care of managed property, and as a result of this decision corporations are not able to use their reserve funds to cover the expenses associated with managed property and will have to finance the cost on a pay-as-you-go basis. This, obviously, Mr. Speaker, places undue hardship on condominium owners, who must cover the cost to maintain managed property by paying potentially large assessments, often within a very short period of time.

The amendments would allow bare-land condo corporations to use their reserve funds to cover these expenses for managed property as long as it's allowed in the corporation's bylaws. Mr. Speaker, this is the way they've been functioning since the first bare-land condominium corporations came around in the 1980s. We will be giving them certainty and clarity in this.

The Service Alberta condominium consultation that we just concluded also looked into this specific issue, and nearly 90 per cent of Albertans who responded agreed that the corporations should be allowed to precollect these funds from unit owners to maintain and repair managed property as they've been doing, as I said before, since the 1980s.

Bare-land unit owners have expressed support for this through many public engagements and through a lot of correspondence with me. It's critical that we address the issues to give bare-land condominium owners and corporations the clarity and certainty they deserve in dealing with repair and maintenance issues. This is an immediate action we can take to address the challenge for many, many condominium owners.

I should add that additional changes will be coming to the Condominium Property Act as we review the input Albertans have provided in the consultation. I hope that all parties can come together to support this bill. This is a positive step that will have a very positive impact. It's very much needed as a result of the court decision that came out, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much, and now I move to adjourn debate on Bill 24.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 18 Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill?

The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise in committee to speak in a little bit more detail about this particular piece of legislation that our government has been proud to put forward to the floor of the Legislature and proud to have been a leader in bringing this to life here in our country. You know, obviously, the federal government deserves to be commended for its leadership on this, introducing legislation and passing it last fall so that other provinces can harmonize their legislation with what they've put together. That's exactly what we have with the majority of this particular bill and the clauses in this bill. It very much mirrors and harmonizes with the federal government's. We're hoping that all the other provinces follow suit with our particular province and that we have an effective, portable, and harmonized privately administered pension regime for small businesses and self-employed people here in this province, of course, and right across Canada.

As I mentioned, other provinces are looking at this legislation. Saskatchewan has tabled similar legislation. B.C. has tabled similar legislation, as has Quebec. In some of those instances the electoral cycle has provided a barrier to getting that legislation passed, but we're hopeful that other provinces will be following suit.

I thought there was some really interesting discussion during second reading of this particular bill, Madam Chairman. I would like to just start by making some broad comments, and then I'll get into some specific answers that we have for some of the questions that were asked during some of the debate in second reading.

One of the broad comments that I would like to mention though, Madam Chairman, is that there's no doubt that there is a conversation going on in this particular country around pension reform or this concept of whether individuals, citizens of Canada, have sufficient pension incomes to support themselves and their families or their spouses when they retire. One of the discussions that is happening at the federal-provincial-territorial finance ministers' meetings and tables is the idea around the sufficiency of the Canada pension plan. There are a number of comments that would suggest that it's an either/or, that we should reform the Canada pension plan and this would not be necessary. That's actually the furthest from the truth. We're not in the position of trying to decide between one or the other, and in fact those conversations can happen.

At the end of the day what we have is that the Canada pension plan is certainly going to provide some sort of level of retirement savings for all Canadians. It's a universal program for all Canadians. I think we should have that discussion, and that discussion, again, is happening. But at the same time retirement savings are something that people need to be involved in personally.

You know, we all have different levels of quality of life that we want to ensure when we retire, and it's not the responsibility of this government or of the government of Canada to be involved in determining what comfort level we as individuals want to have when we decide to retire. That is one hundred per cent our responsibility as individuals. Some might decide that they don't need as much money to retire, that when they retire, they'll live modestly. You know, they will have a small house that they'll live in, and they will do very little travelling, these types of things. Others may decide that their retirement needs are different and that they need to save a lot more money. They might decide that when they retire, they want to travel. They might decide that they want to have two houses, one so that they can visit family where they live here in Alberta, and one where they can get away from some of the nasty weather that we have in the winter.

These are personal, individual choices. People's retirement planning must reflect that particular desire. There's no right or wrong to any of it. It's just a personal taste; therefore, the government should not be involved in providing pension plans, public pension plans, government-funded pension plans that start to differentiate between the two of them.

No matter what conversations happen with the Canada pension plan, Albertans, Canadians are going to need other savings vehicles to do their retirement planning around that will help meet their individual retirement needs. That's why this isn't an either/or debate, and I want to make that very clear. The Minister of Finance is with the federal-provincial-territorial finance ministers, and they are having those discussions right now around reform of the Canada pension plan. While interrelated, it is a separate issue, and we need not rush into making a decision that is either/or.

I do want to make some broader comments after I answer some of the questions that came up in second reading. First of all, I know that the hon. Member for Airdrie had put forward the concept of whether there should be contribution parameters for the self-employed and whether they should be different than regular employees as earnings are often retained in the company.

The challenge is this. While individuals are free to contribute – self-employed or not, they can contribute, and they're free to do so – an incorporated business can make contributions to the employer as the employer or the owner of that particular company. Even if it's their business, the company can still make a contribution into a pooled pension plan on behalf of that employer. What the limit is would be a federal tax matter, not a matter that is in the purview of this particular legislation. I just wanted to get that on the record.

There were questions about a PRPP provider going bankrupt. What are the consequences, and are members of that particular pooled pension plan protected? The answer is yes. Funds are not part of the overall assets of the provider. They're held in trust and protected from creditors.

There were questions as to: why not have a legislated cap on costs or at least indexing to inflation? What we are doing is defining the low cost, which I mentioned in second reading. We will be defining it in regulation, and it will mirror the federal regulation, which defines the cost as less than that of a pension plan of 500 or more members. We believe that this is a good starting point for what we're considering, essentially bulk pricing, for these types of products. Then institutions themselves at that threshold will be able to compete amongst themselves as part of the marketplace to be able to lower costs for investors. I would suggest that those that are offering the lowest costs below that particular threshold are likely to attract more members just based on the ability of people to go out and look at different plans. That is one of the questions that we wanted to answer.

There was a question about what the tax benefits are to employers that offer pooled registered pension plans. I mentioned this briefly in second reading. I'll indicate again that employers would not be paying CPP and EI as they would on group RRSP contributions since the contributions under PRPPs would not be part of employee income. There is a bit of a different treatment there. There will be a tax benefit for employers. Again, it's not required, but if they so choose to make a contribution or match a contribution to a pooled registered pension plan, there will be tax benefits that don't exist under contributions that are made using a group RRSP. When members talked about this being essentially a glorified RRSP program, it's simply not true. There are significantly different benefits or advantages to offering a pooled registered pension plan rather than a group RRSP.

There was a question around whether the government will commit to making public the information available to and disclosed by the superintendent under part 1, section 5 of the act. This would all depend on the type of information and purpose as there may be proprietary information involved and FOIP restrictions on what information may be public. For public reporting purposes of policy outcomes and the evolution of the PRPP initiative, for example, some information would likely be used and disclosed.

Another question was: do the necessary economies of scale for the low-cost provision depend on all provinces implementing this? That's something that would definitely help for the provision of achieving that low cost, but it's not a necessary success factor. It all depends on the overall size of the plan. You can get sufficiently sized pooled plans just from offering here in Alberta, but I think that from a financial institution's standpoint the more that you're able to pool in the various plans, the more you're able to lower the per-unit management and administrative fees, which, again, will accrue to those that are members of these plans, the average, hard-working Albertans and their families. The success of this initiative doesn't necessarily rest on all provinces signing up.

There were questions about the nature and necessity of bilateral agreements. Because not all jurisdictions are implementing this legislation at this particular time, there needs to be the ability for sequential bilateral agreements, that are necessary to make sure that these plans and legislation and mechanisms are harmonized right across the country.

There were a few more questions regarding authority of the superintendent to change the administrator in section 13. The question was: is the government liable or accountable for outcomes of the change in administrator, including losses? Are there any requirements to notify plan members? Members are protected via the superintendent's power to transfer funds to a new entity if necessary. All members would be notified accordingly, and no investment decisions would be made on behalf of them without consent. This will be in the regulation.

Another question was: how many institutions are currently licensed PRPP providers? There are none yet, obviously, because we don't have the legislation in place; however, there are a number of insurance companies, trust companies, and other financial institutions that have expressed a keen interest to become licensed to develop products and offer these in the Alberta marketplace.

Finally, we had a question about whether there are any measures in place to protect employees who may come forward with allegations of inducements. There are already measures in place to discourage inducements and actions the superintendent can take around those. If employers take any wrongful action against an employee, the employee would have legal recourse, as they would in any other situation. Evidence of inducements is monitored carefully by the superintendent of pensions.

Those were just some of the questions that were asked as part of second reading, Madam Chairman. I just wanted to talk about one particular thing. There was a comment made during second reading by one of the members. I believe it was by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. He made a comment about this not being in the interests of Albertans and it being in the interests of the financial institutions. I take particular offence to that. The reason is that there's no doubt that members of that particular party have a different perspective of society and the role of government in society. There's no doubt that members of that particular caucus have a very paternalistic view of the role of government, and they may particularly believe that the role of government is to save for people's retirement because either they're not smart enough or don't have the will to be able to do it themselves.

We over here on this side of the Legislature and, I think, probably some other members of opposition parties have the view that while the government does have a particular role to provide a safety net for individuals, the government can't be there to do everything for people. There is a level of personal responsibility in our particular society that rests at the individual level, and certainly retirement savings is one of them. I think that any time we can provide individuals with more options and break down more barriers so that they can take it upon themselves to invest in their future, invest in their retirement, and utilize certain tools and mechanisms, we should be very, very proud of doing that and of offering them that option.

This isn't an easy area. As I mentioned in second reading, there are a number of excuses and barriers that people can use that will prevent them from putting away sufficient funds. This is an opportunity, Madam Chairman – and I point to section 33, where automatic membership is required – that if an employer decides to offer this, all of their employees are enrolled. We specifically put in that onus because we want to make people make the decision themselves to opt out, and we want them to understand that there are consequences in doing so. That's why that particular clause under section 33 of the act is in there. We want them to make a conscious decision. It is their personal decision. They do have the option to opt out. We do know that for some people there are particular individual circumstances where they might do that, and that's why we've built the flexibility into this plan.

At the end of the day this comes down to individual personal responsibility. We on this side of the House and, again, I think other members as well, but particularly on this side of House, believe it is a personal responsibility for individuals to be involved in saving in their retirement fund and determining what level they want and what sort of financial mechanisms they want to put their money into, to be able to do that. We do not believe that this is the sole purview of the government, to take a paternalistic view and create a pension plan that protects people from themselves, which is, I think, the underlying premise that I got from the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in second reading.

So I wanted to clarify. This is a good-news story. We're helping people, hard-working Albertans, and giving them tools to plan for their future, to plan for their retirement so that they continue to enjoy a high quality of life through all of their years.

Thank you, Madam Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members? Any other comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Associate Minister of Finance and MLA for Calgary-Klein for the comments. I appreciate his answers. I could sort of see many of the questions that we had put forward in regard to this bill in your comments, and I appreciate the vigour with which you managed to address most of our concerns and reservations around this bill.

Certainly, we've had discussions from the outset of this bill in regard to the importance of having meaningful improvements to pensions and exposure to pensions not just in the province of Alberta but right across the country. We have quite a low rate of people that do have a private-sector pension plan, you know, only about 18 per cent here in the province of Alberta compared to about maybe 40 per cent Canada-wide. We know that while our economy is growing and our population is growing and people are making money, Madam Chair, there is not the corresponding saving taking place here that would ensure a reasonable living for our same Albertans when they reach retirement.

You know, the premise of this bill or the global idea, I think, is trying to address that, and I appreciate that sentiment. I mean, I just found it a little bit disconcerting that we moved from the practical boots-on-the-ground sort of thing here, providing increased pension coverage to Albertans, to sort of a more ideological bent. I mean, I certainly can't just let those unsolicited comments go back towards the member. Yes, of course we're looking for pensions.

You know, it's curious that the member mentioned that, well, people make choices about what kind of retirement they have. But, I mean, really, most people end up with a substantial reduction in their income when they are retired, and it's not a choice, Madam Chair; it's a physical reality, right? Many Albertans spend a good deal of their income on their accommodation and on their food and on their transport and on looking after their kids and don't have a great deal of money to save for their retirement. So this notion that people make the choice I think is less reality and more fiction, certainly.

Also, interestingly, we have a program that's been around for many, many years, which is the Canada pension plan. If we did some, I guess, updating and some work on the maintenance of the Canada pension plan – I think we should encourage that. I know that the associate minister is not precluding the fact that you could have your PRPP as well as the Canada pension plan. Our concern is that this plan will perhaps compromise the integrity and the contribution and the commitment to the Canada pension plan. You know, it's not saying that it's six of one or half a dozen of the other, Madam Chair, but rather just reminding ourselves where we can make the most efficient investments to ensure that people will have the means by which to have a decent life in retirement.

You know, there are a number of issues that I have a problem with still. I know you talked about them a little bit. I mean, we all make investments for our future anyway, so the whole question of registered retirement savings plans – I know my own financial adviser is starting to suggest that maybe it's not really the best investment, that you're not getting the return that you should and that it's difficult to take that money out at the appropriate time. I just feel less than comfortable instituting an expansion of the RRSP program when it seems as though our financial sector planning for our futures is moving away from those very investments.

We know that we could put money and contributions towards more of the CPP benefit, which is more portable, which is larger, right? When we're talking about these investments, the economy of scale really does factor into play, Madam Chair, where if you have more people investing in something, you get a more efficient return. We just know that. So to update the CPP, the Canada pension plan, benefit from 4.95 per cent to 7.95 per cent would I think alleviate a lot of these concerns that people have about the future viability of the CPP here in Canada.

I think we see an initiative across the country, started by the federal Conservatives in regard to PRPPs, that we're trying to follow here. But I question, Madam Chair, that we don't necessarily need to just follow these things blindly. We know that in some other countries they've had problems. I've looked at places like Australia that have put in PRPP mandatory plans with some opt-out provisions. This superfund required their employers to have their workers in one of these defined contribution plans, and I think we've seen that the jury is out on that Australian experiment. It hasn't been producing the results that they had hoped for. So always when we look at implementing something new, we should look at best practices from around the world and evidence-based decision-making from other experiences around the world. You know, I just don't see the Australian version of this operating particularly well.

Based on that, Madam Chair, we did have a number of specific questions that we wanted to bring forward. I think the court of public opinion is also relevant to what we're doing here because, of course, ultimately it's individual workers, people working here in Alberta, that we will be imposing some change on. We saw a Canada-wide poll from about three years ago showing that most Canadians and 66 per cent of Albertans were looking to an update and a solidification of the CPP benefits. Again, I think it's a reflection of the durability and the confidence that people have in our Canada pension plan plus the idea that people do really want to save for their future and want something there that is reliable and constant, right? We all have CPP taken off of our cheques now. You know, it's something modest to look forward to, but it's also something very secure regardless of the vagaries of market and so forth. If we make regulation that ensures the viability of CPP over the long term, then that's money you can take to the bank.

I mean, I'm certainly not precluding the possibility. I appreciate the associate minister's proposal here with Bill 18. We have been discussing it quite extensively in our caucus, so don't presume that we are just blindly following ideology. I think many of the questions or the analysis and the depth of analysis that you had alluded to in your speech, in fact, came from us. So, I mean, at least acknowledge that. We do try hard here and don't just follow the simple version of ideology that you might ascribe to us. In fact, we look for the best, most practical way to serve most Albertans now and in the future.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a true privilege to speak to Bill 18, Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act. I appreciate the hon. minister for bringing this act forward. Although I'm not so certain about the tangible results that will be created by the implementation of this new program to the Alberta landscape or, in fact, to other provinces that are going down this path, I do appreciate the discussion it brings up, some of the points that will be made and some that have been made by members before me. Hopefully, I'll add to some of those comments. At least there's a recognition that our fellow Albertans often are not retiring with a large amount of money at their disposal, and we are trying to encourage them to in fact save more for their future.

I see this bill as being an outright reflection of the fact that the current system is not working. Otherwise, why would government be introducing this bill? If there is nothing to fix, this government wouldn't be putting any proposal before you.

I guess, as the hon. minister said, if individuals and companies truly knew what was best for their retirement and were truly following through with everything that is currently available and the like, there would be no need for this bill. So I take those comments somewhat with a grain of salt. Government shouldn't act unless there is a problem to be solved. This act, just by the nature of its being in this Legislature and presented by the hon. minister, seems to be correcting a problem, that problem being that individuals are not saving enough for the future. We see this throughout Canada and throughout other jurisdictions, that individuals are not saving as much as they have in the past through whatever means. Whether it is through lack of preparation or a lack of ability, people are getting to their retirement years with not very much saved.

I know we can even go back to looking at the existing mechanisms that are out there for people to plan their retirement. The RRSP program, the registered retirement savings program, a very good program that encourages savings, encourages people to reduce their tax burden, and allows them to actually use government money to save for the future, is not taken up with any great shakes by the Canadian population. I think it is 50 per cent at best of Canadians that actually contribute to an RRSP.

With that being the case, one can make two deductions. Maybe they don't have the information. You know, I think that would be hard to believe. Ever since I've been old enough to understand this, RRSPs have been pushed by both the private sector and by other entities, that RRSPs are to be used and managed and that they're good mechanisms for the future.

I think an attempt to expand people's ability to save was through the TFSAs. I'm not sure what they're called, but TFSAs allow people to save an additional amount of money. Clearly, this is not happening. There's a recognition by this bill that there's a problem.

The second point to it, why governments may want to play a role in this. It's my greatest hope and the hope of everyone in here that despite all the rhetoric that individuals should have personal responsibility, that individuals should do this, that, and the other thing, and that individuals have the obligation to save for their future, if they don't, what happens then? Are we then just correspondingly supposed to say: "Well, no. You didn't do this. We provided you an opportunity through registered retirement savings plans, through TFSAs, through this pooled registered pension act. You were supposed to save for your future"? We don't.

There seems to be at least a recognition at this time that life is difficult for many people, that things aren't easily planned for, that there are kids to raise, that there is food to put on the table and clothes to buy. Yes, there may even be a little bit of: I'd rather have that big-screen TV than contribute to my RRSP. I recognize that, Madam Chair. There may be some of that thinking. I think that thinking draws back to: oftentimes I don't think human beings are great planners. You know, it comes back to that.

So what is the corollary of that? Regardless of whether we do it through this mechanism or at the end of their lives, government is going to have to play a role in assisting people. That happens. It happens now. It happens through our government currently subsidizing people over 65 in rental and housing situations when there's need. With many of those complexes run by the Trinity Foundation and other good entities, this government seems to recognize: hey, there are people who get to the 65-plus age and need assistance. We're going to continue to do that because, as we all know, who votes? Seniors vote. So that's going to continue, okay?

But back to the point here. I got a little sidetracked on why we need to have both a government response as well as, hopefully, encouraging seniors to save. If we look, then, at what the statistics say, that people currently aren't saving for their retirement through the existing means, what gives us any indication that this bill will substantially solve that problem? It won't, okay? As the hon. minister said, can it encourage people? Yes. Can it do a little more? Can it give people another option? Sure. I'd buy that. Good. But does it substantially solve the problem of seniors getting to 65-plus in need of a steady stream of income so that they can live life in a reasonable, dignified fashion? Does it address the problem that people are retiring at 65, to use a term, without a pot to take a leak in? Does this solve that problem? No, and hence the need for comprehensive CPP reform, okay? It simply has to be.

Let's call it what it is, CPP reform. It's a forced savings account for people. When they're working, the government takes money from their cheque and ensures that it is there in some form or fashion at the end of their lives. I guess it's a recognition, despite the hon. minister's comments, that sometimes life circumstances, individual choices, and the like are not necessarily happening that dictate an appropriate savings rate to absolve governments of their responsibilities to our fellow citizens that arise at 65. Given that that's the case, given that all evidence to the contrary says that this is happening and that this, unless I read it wrong, is not going to magically correct the problem, we need to engage in comprehensive CPP reform. It's my hope that this government understands that mechanisms like this, having more advertising about RRSPs, having more options like TFSAs out there, are maybe good and maybe make you feel good for a certain time, but it is not substantially correcting the problem.

In my view, the best way to ensure that people at least have an adequate system of retirement is through CPP reform. Yes, that does entail governments being involved in collecting a little bit from people's cheques and employers' cheques and ensuring that they are then pooled in a good system, like the CPP system is – it's efficiently run, efficiently managed, and the like – and then divvied out so everyone has a reasonable standard of living.

Will I be supporting this bill? Well, I'm not so certain, you know, whether I'll vote for it or against it. It doesn't really harm anything. I'll probably vote for it. But at the same time, I don't see it substantially solving a problem despite the rhetoric of what has been said. I think all evidence to the contrary indicates that this will not be good enough. All evidence of watching individuals and families contribute to RRSPs over the last 30 years tells us otherwise. If we continue to ignore that fact as government and as members of this House and cling to the notion that people are going to magically start getting it, are going to magically start understanding that they are going to live to be 88 years of age and they're not going to be able to work after 65, well, then I think we're just burying our heads in the sand and clinging to rhetoric.

Sometimes when a problem is so clear, a problem is so obvious, governments, despite what the political philosophy of the day is or despite what they internally believe, have to act. At the end of the day I hope all of us in this Assembly are not going to see people who have not adequately saved for their futures starve on the streets, where we look past them and say: "No. You didn't take individual responsibility for yourself or your family. No. You didn't do that." We're going to recognize that life is hard. We're going to recognize that things don't always work, that sometimes the best of intentions in life don't always lead to the end being that easy.

Those are my comments, Madam Chair. It's time for us, not only as legislators in this province but encouraging our federal government, to engage in some CPP reform.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am pleased to be able to get up to speak to this bill, a bill that we will be voting against because it is such an unfortunate missed opportunity. It is simply supporting the profoundly disappointing set of decisions made by the Harper government in their decision to abandon seniors in Canada and to refuse to engage in putting forward a meaningful income supports program for seniors like one that we would see in most other developed countries. That is essentially why we are voting against this. The bottom line is that this is a smoke-and-mirrors attempt to paper over the unwillingness of the Harper Conservatives to choose the interests of regular Canadians over that of many big business owners.

In our view, Canadians deserve to have meaningful improvements to their pensions. They absolutely do. What should have happened, Madam Chair, is that we should have been pushing the government much more aggressively to make changes to the Canada pension plan. Unfortunately, instead, this government under the former Minister of Finance, whose name I believe I can now mention, Minister Morton, in adopting not only Conservative policies but also policies of the Wildrose, very aggressively fought against the idea of increasing the Canada pension plan and increasing the benefits received through the Canada pension plan. As a result, this government actually played a role in pushing the Harper government to this very, very bad decision, a decision for which Canadians will be paying for many, many years.

It's interesting, Madam Chair, that if you look at what public opinion is on this issue, the fact of the matter is that in December 2010 a poll showed that 78 per cent of Canadians wanted CPP benefits increased. This included, even in Alberta, that 66 per cent of Albertans believed that CPP benefits should increase, and of course they should because, as you know, the CPP pension right now on its own is well, well below the poverty line. We need to address that because we have a growing number of seniors in our population. The Canada pension plan has been determined by many experts to be the absolute best mechanism for addressing retirement issues in Canada because, of course, we have failed to deal with that issue, as has happened in so many other jurisdictions.

Professor Jon Kesselman, the Canada research chair in public finance at the Simon Fraser University School of Public Policy says, and I quote: expanding the CPP is the best option for improving Canadian workers' retirement income security; it can ensure results that none of the many alternative reform proposals for private schemes can provide.

The CARP director of political advocacy, Susan Eng, writes: CARP remains committed to improving retirement benefits for the current crop of seniors, including increasing CPP, OAS and GIS payments, getting a moratorium on RRIF withdrawals, making access to tax-free savings accounts retroactive and lobbying to remove the HST on seniors' energy bills.

Albertans, in particular, require some kind of meaningful change. Forty per cent of Canadians actually have access to private-sector pension plans, defined benefit private-sector pension plans, but in Alberta only 18 per cent of Albertans have access to those kinds of pension plans. So, in fact, more Albertans will likely be required to rely on CPP than the rest of Canadians, yet we advocated against their interests. So typical, Madam Chair.

Now, if you look at sort of the actual effectiveness of the kind of plan that this government is bringing in, Madam Chair, it's helpful to look at the experience in other jurisdictions. Australia apparently had a plan that was similar to the one this government is supporting Stephen Harper is bringing in. It was a little bit different because it required employers to enrol their workers. It was mandatory, and then workers had an opt-out as opposed to making the whole thing voluntary. But a recent review commissioned by the Australian government after 12 years of experience reported that the Australian superfund did not even match inflation, again because the fees that were being charged were eroding it.

Interestingly, even the Calgary Herald, Madam Chair, noted that the CPP already covers almost all Canadian workers and thus spreads the risk and management fees. It's fully portable, offers guaranteed income to all retirees, and is the only risk-free investment broadly available to workers. Private RRSPs and employer pension plans have proven much riskier than initially billed. Those who are in company pension plans are likely in a defined contribution scheme [at this point], where the amount that goes in is predetermined, but the payout is based on how well the fund... ultimately performs. Nortel workers know only too well how that worked.

Madam Chair, this bill is not going to deal with the growing urgency of the income shortage that is going to be experienced by Canada's seniors. The Canadian Labour Congress has a plan, which, frankly, the federal NDP was in favour of, to gradually increase CPP over time and to double it so that rather than paying $934 per month, it would eventually pay $1,868 a month. Pretty much enough to live on if you're very, very careful. That would have brought Canada's system, well, not really as close to the U.S. but closer.

In the U.S. they pay $30,000 a year. Right now in Canada the maximum benefit that we have is $12,000 through the current version of CPP. We actually have one of the lowest guaranteed retirement income plans in all of the OECD. As we've talked about previously, the greater the gap between rich and poor and the greater the inequality in a society, the more damaging it is to the community as a whole. Interestingly, it's not just damaging to those who are poor, Madam Chair. It's actually damaging to everyone. It's actually even damaging to the chair of Enbridge or, you know, the regional rep for Walmart or whoever it is, whether wealthy or not wealthy. When there's great disparity between rich and poor, it damages the whole community.

So here we are in Canada with the lowest guaranteed retirement income plan in the OECD by about 50 per cent, and we are doing nothing to fix that problem, Madam Chair, and our federal government is doing nothing to fix that problem. This government is piling on through this piece of legislation and supporting...

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but the noise level is getting just a little too loud. Hon. members, if we can keep it down. If you'd like to have any major discussions, you can take them to the room out there.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Chair.

Again, our argument is that this government should reverse its previously hostile position to promoting and growing CPP benefits to provide for true equality and greater income security across the country in order, as I said before, to bring us closer in line with what is offered in other OECD countries. CPP has a proven track record of professional management, low-cost administration, and reasonable rates of return. Through modest and mandatory savings the CPP provides the guarantee of defined benefits, which provide Albertans with unrivalled peace of mind. We would argue that it's therefore the best option for helping to secure a guaranteed future for Alberta's retirees. As I've said, only 18 per cent of Albertans have a private-sector pension plan versus 40 per cent Canada-wide.

We desperately need to have a mandatory pension program to ensure that Albertans do not retire into poverty, Madam Chair. This PRPP is a step backwards because it's not mandatory, and even when combined with federal benefits, it's still not enough to ensure that workers have sufficient money when they retire. This PRPP is simply glorified RRSPs. It's designed in such a way as to see the retirement savings of Albertans handed over to the financial sector, which, quite frankly, is the group that benefits the most from this piece of legislation. Anyone who's tried to cash in their RRSPs during the end of a business cycle will know that the financial sector fails to deliver on its promises with surprising regularity.

It's also important to note that during the great economic recession the CPP barely lost but a few percentage points in value while the stock market took a terrible tumble. It's likely that if the PRPP was around at the time, it would've lost an equivalent value to the stock market, not the CPP. PRPPs are entirely voluntary, and they contain no requirement for employers to match employee contributions. The benefits they pay are not guaranteed and are subject, as I said, to the vagaries of the stock market.

Of course, Madam Chair, that is what is at the heart of this and at the heart of the Harper government's refusal to deal with this issue and at the heart of this Conservative government's advocacy to ensure that the Harper government refuses to deal with this issue. It's simply this, that they're unwilling to ask employers to contribute to the retirement future of their employees. That is why we are creating a second class of retirees and we will create a generation of very, very poor Albertans, in particular.

Madam Chair, it is for these reasons that we will not be supporting this bill. Everyone does agree that our pension system in Canada requires improvement, and we believe our pension system in Canada and in Alberta requires improvement, but this legislation is so wrong-headed and so unable to provide any kind of meaningful benefit to Albertans and at the same time allows the federal government a certain amount of cover for their profoundly damaging and ill-advised decision to abandon seniors' futures in Alberta. We simply cannot support anything that would even indirectly support such a grossly ill-advised policy decision as that which our federal government has perpetrated on the majority of Canadians who require income support in their retirement, so we will not be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

4:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The question has been called on Bill 18, the Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act.

[The clauses of Bill 18 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Denis: I would now ask that the committee rise and report Bill 18, Madam Chair.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: I'd like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-East to give the committee report.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 18.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 21

Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate May 6: Ms Jansen]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise in support of this bill, but there are a couple of issues that . . .

Mr. Denis: What's your experience?

Mr. Anglin: My experience is that I don't generally get listened to on the other side, but I will happily change that experience. They listen to me on this side, Madam Speaker.

I will say this. For the most part I will urge my fellow colleagues to support the bill, but there are some issues with the bill that I hope we can clean up or correct with some amendments when we approach Committee of the Whole. Where I have some real problems with this bill is how it was constructed. In my view, it was constructed backwards.

What I think we all agree on is that we need some sort of air quality monitoring system, and this actually came about with the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan for oil sands monitoring, which I have the report for right here. When that report was first announced some time ago, many Albertans were in agreement with it, and the report actually has a number of provisions outlining how this should work.

From that, this legislation comes forward. As I understand it – and I hope the minister can clear up some of this before we even get into Committee of the Whole – the oil sands working group agreed to fund approximately $50 million over and above both the federal and the provincial funding to implement this. What I would like to have seen is a world-class monitoring system constructed for implementation, and then we look at what it would have cost to implement and keep operating, and then we evaluate whether or not that was exactly what we wanted to do.

Now we look towards the funding and making it work. What I have heard from the stakeholders and the ministry itself is that they looked at the total dollar value that the industry was willing to invest in this, and now this is what we're looking to spend without actually having constructed or devised the air quality monitoring system. That is one problem I have, actually, with the bill, the way it was constructed.

There's another factor that is evident here. It was mentioned last night in the hon. member's speech when this bill was tabled for second reading, and then it was adjourned. This PIN, the personal identification number, for treating hazardous waste: what this bill will do is give the power to the minister to exempt certain companies or groups of people, as they're referred to, from this requirement. I'm concerned about that because there is a potential for dropping the ball here.

I understand why this provision was introduced. The idea is that these companies or classes of people, as they're referred to, are going to come under the jurisdiction of the single regulator. However, the way the legislation is drafted is broad enough that it is not just restricted to oil sands companies or, for that matter, the companies that would come under the single regulator. What we have is a broad exemption that the minister can grant but not necessarily where the single regulator would pick up the jurisdiction. That would be a very small category of companies or a small category of industry, but still there is a loophole there that could come back and haunt this government, come back and haunt the people of Alberta. That is one area that I was hoping we could correct with some of the amendments.

All in all, the idea is that our industry, our oil sands companies need this. They see the value in this. The environmental groups in this province want this. We as a government, as various parties within the Legislature, all agree that we have to do something for our monitoring system. Now, with that said, we also need something that actually will work, that is verifiable, that will give the confidence not just to the industry and to the environmental groups but to our customers, the rest of the international markets that are asking for this for the marketability of our own products.

With that, there seems to be general support for the bill. This is a good start. Industry is onboard. Environmental groups, I think, would love to see it strengthened. Myself, I would really want to have the minister explain in better detail how this exemption from the PIN is going to actually work in conjunction with the manifest that is required. What I see as I read the bill – and I'll stand to be corrected if the minister can correct me – is that this exemption would also eliminate some cases where a manifest is not necessary, and that, to me, would be a little bit too precarious for what we need to do in handling hazardous material.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will conclude by asking my fellow colleagues to take a serious look at this and support this bill. In the Committee of the Whole I will introduce a couple of amendments. Hopefully, the members across will hear that, and maybe my experience will change.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

4:50

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013. As elected representatives there are two duties that are likely among our most important responsibilities. They are, first, to help make Alberta an even better place than when we were first elected and, two, to do all we can to enhance and protect our province for future generations, for our children, and for our grandchildren. With these two guiding principles in mind, I look forward to voting in support of Bill 21.

Alberta's environmental and economic fortunes are inextricably linked. Government has a critical role in setting and enforcing regulations in order to protect the quality of Alberta's air, water, and land. Industry – oil sands and other resource developers – knows that they must minimize the environmental footprint of their activities and operate as responsible corporate citizens while they generate the jobs and prosperity that benefit all Albertans and beyond. We in the Official Opposition have always advocated for real measures that ensure clean air, clean water, and clean land. Every Albertan has a stake in the quality of our air, water, and land.

Alberta's emissions strategy needs to be expanded, and the focus needs to be on ensuring front-line monitoring and enforcement of regulations regarding air, water, and land quality instead of spending billions of taxpayer dollars on flawed ideas like giving $2 billion to some of the largest corporations in the country to pump CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground. That is not a way to improve our environment and is not a wise use of tax dollars. Also, we would rather not see the expensive wealth redistribution schemes like cap and trade. We like the idea of a made-in-Alberta solution, and it starts with effective monitoring of emissions and enforcement of our CO<sub>2</sub> and other regulations.

In order to serve the best interests of Albertans and to earn the best possible reputation internationally, we must accept the reality that every new oil sands project is going to have environmental impacts. That's what development does. The key is to make sure each project operates under clear and consistent environmental parameters, with a clear strategy for how to reclaim the land as quickly as possible.

It is important for environmental and reclamation expectations and regulations to be predictable and consistent for developers and to be enforced by government, so I support this effort to enhance oil sands monitoring and to co-ordinate provincial and federal data on air, water, land, and biodiversity in the oil sands region. I also support making the information transparent and accessible so that all Albertans and people all across the globe can know that government and industry are fulfilling their joint responsibilities in oil sands development.

Oil sands development represents the pinnacle of technological advancement and innovative achievement, and industry constantly improves the efficiency and effectiveness of exploration, production, and value-added processing of this important resource. Oil sands and other resource developments also play a major role in providing government the resources to fund the priority social programs and services that are so important to Albertans as well as to save for future generations in the heritage fund. That is why it is important for the government to set clear and consistent rules and to enforce them so oil sands developers can operate with the confidence of Albertans that they are fulfilling their social licence to develop the resources owned by all our citizens.

I look forward to the debate and to amendments in Committee of the Whole in order to make this the best possible legislation governing environmental stewardship, hazardous materials, and protection of front-line enforcement officers as well. For example, I'd like to see the $15-per-tonne carbon levy currently charged by the government, instead of going into a fund that winners and losers are picked out of, where we pick which technology we're going to fund here or which company we're going to fund there with that money, put into enforcement, monitoring our oil sands, keeping the regulations around our emissions, air and water quality, land quality, land reclamation, and so forth. I think that is how we should be spending that money rather than giving it to private corporations to do what they should be doing anyway, frankly.

In closing, I think that as MLAs in this House we must make decisions that balance economic growth and opportunity with environmental stewardship and conservation. The two are not mutually exclusive. In fact, the statistics around the world – the proof, the evidence – are very clear. The more economically prosperous a jurisdiction is, the better the tools they have and the better the means they have and the more demand their people have for maintaining and improving their environment around them. I think that this is a truism, and we should never try to say that environmentalism and economic development are somehow mutually exclusive. That's just simply not the case.

Bill 21 is an important future step in fulfilling our obligations to current and future Albertans, and I very much look forward to supporting this bill. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now in place. Are there any members that wish to use 29(2)(a) for questions or comments?

Seeing none, are there any other members that wish to speak on Bill 21 in second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013. I'd like to start by thanking the officials from the ministry of environment who took the time to provide me and one of our caucus researchers with a briefing on elements of this piece of legislation.

I think it's really important to sort of start the discussion on this piece of legislation by looking a little bit at the history of this issue as it relates to this provincial government. You know, I can only go back so far. Although I often feel, Madam Speaker, like I've been here for decades, really it's only been five years. I remember – I think it was probably in the fall of 2008 – when I very nervously got up and posed one of my first questions to the minister of environment around the fact that a number of residents of Fort Chip were raising concerns, very serious concerns, about their health and very significant differences in terms of their health, which they attributed to development activities by the oil and gas industry upstream from where they lived.

At that time I was told with much disdain and a great deal of patronizing by the minister that, of course, we all knew that industry was having no impact – no impact at all – on the air or the water or the land in the oil sands region and that we were simply, you know, Chicken Little and that we were causing panic and that that was because our overall goal was to kill jobs. I'm pretty sure that that was part of it, that we lived to kill jobs, and therefore we were completely making this stuff up and were completely hysterical and that there was nothing to it. That was sort of the response that we would get from the government.

Of course, we would also get the age-old response: "You know, there are a few chemicals in the water here and there, but you know what? It's all naturally occurring, and it would be there with or without industry activity, and indeed industry is having no impact on the environment up there." I was assured of that over and over by the minister of environment, who told me how many wonderful scientists he had in his ministry and how they knew so much more about these issues than we did.

Anyway, Dr. Schindler and his colleague Erin Kelly in August of 2010 independently produced a report, an academically independent report. I don't know if it would still be produced in the minister of advanced education's new postsecondary world. Nonetheless, it was produced there although I do believe it was mostly funded by international funders. It showed unequivocally in scientific, geeky terms that, in fact, there was impact on the environment as a result of industrial activity.

Notwithstanding that, the first response of this government and of the minister at the time, the former minister, Rob Renner, was, quote: my scientists are telling me that the amount of compounds that can be detected in the Athabasca River at this point is not a concern and is an insignificant level. Renner said: the fact remains that they are naturally occurring substances in the water, and if we had never set foot in the region, these kinds of results would still be there. Now, that was the minister of this government in August of 2010.

Well, in December of 2010 the Royal Society of Canada, which is basically the leading scientists in the whole country, reviewed Dr. Schindler's work and not only agreed with all that he had found but went further to say that they had no idea how it was that the minister of environment or any of the scientists who were briefing this minister of environment could even make the statements that the minister of environment had made because they weren't even doing the tests and the investigations that they would have had to do to make the statements that they made.

In essence, we had a Progressive Conservative minister of environment assuring the world that we were all hysterical and that their scientists told them that everything was just fine only to have actual scientists come in and tell them that their scientists had not actually even tested for the very thing that they were talking to the public about. Now, personally, Madam Speaker, in other jurisdictions that would have resulted in the resignation of the minister of environment. In this province, unfortunately, things are a little bit slower to happen. But it ought to have resulted in the resignation at that point of the minister of environment; nonetheless, it did not.

Then on December 17, 2010, there was another scientific report that was released which outlined, indeed, that the regional aquatics monitoring program was underreporting occurrences of deformed fish in the Athabasca River, the occurrence of which was actually hidden from the public for decades. So there you go.

Then by January of 2011 the government was forced by public pressure and also at that point by some international pressure to appoint its own environmental monitoring panel. Now, that panel went through its own hiccups. As I recall, there was a fellow who had his own economic interests at heart that basically conflicted him out of being on that panel, and they had to remove him because he was actually a lobbyist for water treatment systems.

In any event, by March of 2011 the minister had to finally backtrack on his assertions that RAMP was adequate and that all toxins found in the river were naturally occurring because their own committee released its findings saying: "You know what? Maybe this isn't quite as good as we thought." Finally, in March 2011 the federal government came to the table as well, and their scientists also said: well, you know, we've actually finally had a look at this, and we've also looked at Dr. Schindler's data. They also said that – who knew it? – Alberta had never really been testing, had never really been monitoring, and maybe someone ought to start doing that.

Quite honestly, Madam Speaker, this government's record on monitoring and protecting the environment and protecting the interests of the Albertans who live downstream from the industrial activity in the oil sands is shameful. They have actually never even come clean on the fact that they intentionally engaged in the activity of misleading Albertans about their health. They've never even apologized for this shoddy record and these knowing efforts to mislead Albertans about how safe our water systems were in that particular area.

Nonetheless, though, international pressure, I suspect, is the primary reason why we are finally moving forward on some of this stuff. But the question is: how do we move forward? Do we move forward 85 per cent press release, 15 per cent action, or do we actually move forward with real action?

One of the key components as a result of this rather unfortunate and unseemly history of governance and public policy management by this government on this file was that almost everybody agreed that the government couldn't be trusted to continue with this work and that what needed to happen was that there needed to be an independent system of monitoring that was ultimately overseen by academically independent scientists who would do monitoring based on what the science told them to seek. That was one of the fundamental components of recommendations that came from this rather unfortunate history.

Then the provincial government and federal government got together, and they came up with their new dog-and-pony show, the joint monitoring program. Yes, they made some improvements. Yes, they increased the locations where they were engaging and monitoring in some cases, so there was a marginal increase in monitoring. And, yes, they also just very recently started releasing some of that information, not full information but pieces of that information, to the public more regularly. However, the independence, the independent body, the independent agency does not yet exist. The agencies that are doing the increased monitoring that is currently going on up there include among others the originally discredited RAMP.

This bill will essentially allow the government to stand between industry and the monitors, so collect money from industry and then give it to the monitors in order to ensure that it's not a direct model of industry funding the monitors. The idea is that perhaps that will result in a slight increase in quality, and maybe it will. But, again, you need to keep in perspective, Madam Speaker, the history of this government on this file and understand, when you look at that, that most people who are concerned about the health of their water and their ecosystem and the environment are, rightly so, somewhat untrusting of the degree to which they can rely on this government, not only those Albertans but also the international markets who are very closely watching the way in which we handle this challenge.

For that reason, we need to set up a system that is actually one that will gain trust. And for that reason, rather than bringing in at the very end of a session that they want to get out of really quickly an enabling piece of legislation that essentially says that the minister may make regulations about whatever the heck she wants, and then we can all go behind closed doors and do it, what should be happening is that the minister should be coming in here with, you know, a piece of legislation that would really define and change the culture and define and dictate a change in culture in this province, both with industry and within their own department and their own ministry and within their own benches, that would define and oblige a change in how we approach protecting the environment on behalf of all Albertans and future Albertans.

That's not what this legislation is. This legislation is, as is typical with this government, the kind of legislation that is written to ensure that the minister of environment will never have to come back into this Legislature if she can avoid it to have these issues discussed.

Mrs. McQueen: I will always be here.

Ms Notley: The minister says that she'll always be here. You know, she's often here. She's usually here. She's great at being here. But the point is: how often do we get to have a really thorough discussion about components, detailed components, of what makes a good environmental protection scheme and what does not make a good environmental protection scheme? Madam Speaker, the reality is that it's almost never.

If this government really wanted to convince our investors and our markets, not to mention our citizens, that they are serious about this, they would bring in a hallmark piece of legislation that actually stipulates the standards and the breadth and the scope and the application and the outcomes of this new environmental regime as opposed to simply saying: we're going to give the minister the authority to do whatever she thinks is appropriate in all her great judgment.

The reason I say this and the reason I started with that long and really unfortunate dark history is because when you've got a history like the one that this government has around the assertions and the assurances that they have made in this House and through this House and in the public to the public about the degree to which we should be trusting them on the environment, when you have that kind of shadowed history, you need to do something pretty big to win back trust. Simply asking Albertans to trust us isn't going to do it. You know, they're – what? – 21 per cent in trust, and there's a reason for it. So I'm disappointed that this legislation does not include much more specific guidance and direction with a vision towards where we're going to go.

Now, when we move further along, Madam Speaker, I will speak about certain components of the legislation that cause me some concern. There are elements of it that we need to know more about. As the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre pointed out, there are specific elements that might be easily improved, hopefully through amendments, but I think that we need to understand that from the start this legislation does not in any way, shape, or form get us to the independence that we are looking for, get us to the basic minimal requirements that we're looking for.

The final point that I will make, Madam Speaker, is that as much as these guys have been really keen to talk about how they're doing monitoring in a really independent way at some point in the future, the final word is this. You can put 19 cameras on a train which is about to go off the rails, but if you don't fix the rails or change the track, you're still going to go off the rails. At this point all these guys are doing is that they're taking a long time setting up the cameras, and nothing is being done to change the direction of this train. I want to make sure that this is not being used as a mechanism to talk about simply the number of cameras for the next 10 years while we continue to let the train barrel to its destination, which, unfortunately, will not be on the tracks.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is in place. Are there any members who wish to speak on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, we'll go to the next speaker. Are there any other speakers who wish to speak in second reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. As always, it's a privilege to rise to discuss any bill, and it's the same here with Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013. It was a particular treat to actually just listen to that tale of woe or description of what actually has happened in this province over the course of the last number of years.

In particular, I didn't get here till 2008, at roughly the same time as the hon. member, and I remember those times. I remember reading in the papers prior to getting here what was happening up at Fort Chipewyan: the increased cancer rates, the strange fish they were finding in the waters, the location downstream from the production of our oil sands. You know, I wasn't the best in science, but I was pretty good at deductive reasoning, and I could pretty much draw the map and sort of see: well, there's something happening here, and dollars to doughnuts it's all that heavy industry that's going on up there. In fact, other signs and symbols were occurring in the province. Other red flags were coming up that clearly indicated that something was happening here.

My recollection of hearing for the first time that all of our concerns on the opposition side were just ridiculous, that we were all just crying wolf, that there were no problems, and that everything was in hand was actually in estimates. It might have even been supplementary supply. We actually got to ask ministers questions.

The first time I heard the story of how the toxin levels in our rivers were perfectly fine and not affected by what our industry was doing up in the Athabasca and other natural, flowing waters was when I asked hon. Minister Morton. I think he might have been the Environment and SRD minister at that time. He told me point-blank that my concerns were ill founded. Didn't I know that the tar sands . . .

Some Hon. Members: Oil sands.

Mr. Hehr: My apologies. I apologize.

. . . were naturally flowing substances that had just been seeping into the streams forever and a day, that this was just happening, that the rivers and the streams up there had become so accustomed to it that this additional industry component would have no effect on what was going on, that the oil sands were just a natural seep in there, that everything had reacted that way over the centuries and that there was nothing wrong, that we were crying wolf, like I said earlier.

Again, I was also here when former Minister Renner would get up and answer those questions posed by I believe it was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and other opposition MLAs on a repeated basis and said with a straight face: "Our scientists have investigated this problem. There is no cause for concern. Everything is all right." Then, lo and behold, the report came out from Dr. Schindler which said: well, everything isn't all right; there are real concerns here.

The way the government portrayed itself, essentially playing the role of Nero and playing the fiddle while things in the environment up there were going to heck in a handbasket, is very concerning. If they didn't know, that's highly concerning, but they should have known, really, what was happening up there. Therein lies the problem.

Going back even further, I know there is much talk now and again about who believes in climate change, but some of you were here in this Legislature when this provincial government was one of the late converts to global warming and the fact that it was real. This government didn't get onboard until 2004, when after, you know, almost 30 years of climate science being out there and most national governments recognizing it, maybe not doing anything about it but at least recognizing it, this government switched its position on global warming and actually admitted that it is real.

We have a long history of not recognizing science, the effects of our industry on water streams, the effects of CO<sub>2</sub> in the atmosphere and the like and the devastating effects. To be honest, we thought at one time that it was probably in our economic interests to ignore them. You know, although that doesn't absolve us from our responsibility to other issues like the environment and global warming, I think we saw it as: "Well, we just have to do this. It's the way Alberta is going to make money and the way Alberta is going to make money in the future. Taking this stuff seriously is just not in our bailiwick because it's going to be too hard, and it's going to impact the bottom line." I think that decision was made.

Possibly and maybe even probably because we paid such a lack of attention to the real and overriding concerns out there, we find ourselves in the conundrum we are in today, where the world community looks at us and says: "What have you done? What are you guys going to do?" Our record is silent as to being in the direction that it should have been. Our actions have not matched our rhetoric as to how seriously we are going to address these environmental concerns.

Because of this, we are now in a box. We have to act quickly. We have to react to this public pressure. I don't even know if we're reacting quickly enough. It almost appears as if we're making it up on the fly. We saw that with the 40/40 proposal on emissions. You know, all of a sudden Keystone XL is in jeopardy. "Well, jeepers, we've got to try and do something to make it look like we're doing something." Hey, I think it would be a decent strategy to implement and bring that in and move forward on it.

My worry is that this is all just sort of a reaction to the current pressures and not necessarily taking seriously not only what's in our economic interest but what is our global responsibility issue. Our global responsibility is to try and do better and have levels of enforcement, levels of scientific monitoring that actually give us a true picture of what is happening. If we don't have that true picture, well, heck, we can never try and do any better.

Although this bill, I guess, is a step, I think I would have liked to have seen more of an independent body that manages this, that has a whole clean-slate approach to the way we're doing things and monitoring not only CO<sub>2</sub> emissions but our emissions into lakes, rivers, streams, and the like. Although this is a first step, as the hon. member said beforehand, we've been in a series of first steps or a series of baby steps when, to make headway in this game, we should be taking large leaps, trying to rectify not only problems of the past but to give us a social licence to carry on in what we do. My hope is that this bill goes a long way in doing this. However, because we do not know the details – they're not laid out for us for, I guess, a full, clear, and wholesome debate about the good, the bad, and the ugly of what we're going to try and do – it falls short, for me, in giving me that comfort level that we are going to do better.

Now, I know the hon. minister of environment is here. She assures me that everything is going to be done to see that this program is up, running, and doing what we need to do, but I would have liked to have seen in this Legislature more of the details of what we're going to do.

Nevertheless, Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to discuss this matter. I appreciate the detailed way the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona went through the history. It gave me a chance to revisit some of those times over the last five years when I've almost fallen out of my chair at some of the answers that were given by the former minister of environment in regard to what was happening and the like. I'm hopeful for a better future. Take care.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading on Bill 21?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The question has been called, but I'll ask the hon. Member for Calgary-North West to close debate.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to thank all the members for participating in this debate and for their comments. We are certainly looking forward to continuing the debate in Committee of the Whole. I call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 17 Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment with the requisite number of copies that I will hand to the Clerk.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. We'll pause while we distribute those copies.

Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A1. The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills may continue.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you again, Madam Chair. I will be very brief. This is the only amendment that I will be putting forward. What it would do is amend section 130(1)(b) to add the stipulation that the minister must hold a vote of the electors of the municipality on the proposed dissolution within 60 days after completing the viability review.

This would ensure that after a viability review is completed, a vote by the electors in the municipality would take place in a timely fashion. We all know government can move very slowly, and I think it is important to ensure that after a viability study is conducted and completed, a vote be held on the proposed dissolution within a reasonable time frame so that it is not delayed indefinitely. Sixty days, or two months, is adequate time for municipal officials and those residing in the municipality to thoroughly study the findings of the viability review.

Bill 17 will give the minister the ability to order a viability review for a municipality, and the same criteria that were in place for triggering a dissolution study will remain in place to trigger a viability review. A municipal council will still be able to request a viability review, or the people of the municipality can request a viability review with a petition from 30 per cent of the population of a municipality or the majority of electors in a summer village.

Most recent examples of municipalities undergoing a dissolution study, including one in my riding of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, were triggered because people within the municipality put forward a petition for dissolution. When it is the people in the municipality asking for dissolution, it is important that they are able to cast their vote on the proposed dissolution in a timely manner after the viability review is completed.

Amending Bill 17 to ensure that a vote on a dissolution proposal must be held within 60 days after the completion of a viability review strikes the right balance between giving people in the municipality enough time to look at the findings of the viability review and ensuring that they are able to cast their vote on the dissolution proposal soon after the viability review is completed.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

5:30

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in favour of this amendment. Hopefully, even the minister himself will support this amendment. What this amendment does is something very, very simple. It says that once that viability study is complete, there can be some sort of closure to this issue. The closure is that there has to be a vote under the act. It just makes sure that that doesn't get dragged out too long. For the citizens that would have brought the concerns forward, everything follows in place as the act requires. It just allows the citizens to know once the study is done and is complete that when the minister makes the announcement, there will be a vote, and they can count on the fact that it's going to be within so many days. If the minister would like a friendly amendment to extend it to 90 days or 120 days, I don't think there would be any opposition over here.

The reason the amendment was brought forward is so that there'd be some sort of assurance of closure and that something would not just get arbitrarily hung up in administration and not be resolved. I think it's a reasonable amendment. I would hope that the minister himself will accept it, and I encourage my colleagues to support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to rise and speak in favour of this amendment. The hon. Municipal Affairs minister knows of an issue kind of like this in my constituency. It's the village of Tilley, who had over 80 per cent of the residents sign a petition. They want to go through dissolution. The county wants to take them. I believe they are going through the viability review at this time.

You know, this would give them a little bit of a time frame so that they know. They're concerned that these studies won't be done and the voting and everything won't be done before the municipal elections come this fall. That's one of their concerns. I think this would allow them to put some of those concerns at ease. For other communities that are going through the same process, it would allow them a little bit of planning. They'll be able to plan a little bit better and put some of their concerns at ease.

I would hope that the hon. minister would take this into account. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Unfortunately, I have to speak against the amendment as this went through a very consultative process with AAMD and C and AUMA. I think that by putting that restriction on it, it's taking away some flexibility. We talk about being a government who wants to consult with our citizens, and that's exactly what we did in this process.

As well intentioned as it is, I cannot support it, and I would urge my colleagues not to as well.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Madam Chairman, first, I would just say a sincere, heartfelt thank you to the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock for doing an exceptional job of carrying this piece of legislation. It's her first piece of legislation, and I am quite sure that it will not be her last. She will do a lot more good work in this House.

I didn't have the benefit, nor did any of my other colleagues, of seeing this proposed amendment before. It was just introduced. My colleague, who had already addressed the concern that these amendments were written to move from a dissolution process to a viability review process to be more active in engaging with municipalities, meant that we worked on this for three years. There have been extensive consultations with AUMA and AAMD and C and other municipalities to make sure that we had a process in place that was just. From all of that consultation I do understand exactly what the members are talking about because we have heard municipalities talk about timeliness and the process and making sure that they could get some of these challenges resolved quickly.

Madam Chairman, in this particular circumstance section 130.1 gives an option for the minister. It says:

After completing a viability review, the Minister may

- (a) by order direct the council or the chief administrative officer to take any actions, based on the results of the viability review, that the Minister considers appropriate to ensure the viability of the municipality, or
- (b) hold a vote of the electors.

This amendment, Madam Chairman, proposes to amend 130.1(b). Now, that still leaves the minister the option of providing orders to the municipality on what they need to do to make sure that they become more viable or actions that they need to take to make sure that they're successful. Putting a timeline around this, whether it's 90 days or 100 days, gives the impression that a vote will be conducted. But when you read this, the minister still has the option of (a) or (b), and there may be no vote at all. It gives a false impression that there will be directives around a vote in a timeline prescribed under 130.1(b) even though the minister has the option of pursuing 130.1(a) in directing the municipality to take a particular action.

Madam Chairman, I think this amendment isn't appropriate the way it's written, and I'd encourage my colleagues to reject it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. The whole idea was not to take that flexibility away from the minister. I would just disagree with the hon. member. It doesn't give any type of false impression because it is still an option for the minister to administer and to call that vote. When the minister decides that that's the route you've chosen – that's your ability to do that – then once you make that decision, the vote takes places within so many days. That's where this amendment comes from. It maintains the flexibility of the ministry to make other changes necessary to have all of that flexibility that's already built into the act.

All that this was intended to do – I think it's very clear – is that when the decision is made to conduct a vote, there is a time frame. I think that's reasonable. If you look at the act, particularly dealing with municipalities, under a couple of different provisions now the municipality, in dealing with things like petitions, with issues of some sort of referendum – the municipality has time frames for conducting a vote, I believe, on petitions. I think it's 60 days. I'll stand corrected. I'm going by memory. That vote falls within a certain time frame. So if a question is brought in front of a municipality, the council has the ability to say that if it's within one year of a scheduled vote, then they can delay that question until the regular election date. So it gives the municipalities the flexibility to not have multiple elections in any given year.

There are multiple provisions in the act now, which, hopefully, will be either strengthened or maintained when these issues are brought forward. I would just argue that this section does only one thing. It stays consistent with the rest of the act by providing a time frame when the ministry calls the vote. Only when that decision is made does this come into effect. That's why I said that whether it was 90 days or 120 days, I think you'd find acceptance on this side. We just wanted some sort of clarity that once it was determined that it was going to a vote, the public had some sort of time frame to expect that vote to happen.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Well, now I would argue that all of the arguments made by the hon. member make this amendment completely irrelevant, then, because if it still gives flexibility to the minister – and I know what he's referring to. In the MGA after councillors resign, they have to have a by-election within six months unless the minister gives permission that they can advance that longer so that if there is a municipal election nine months away, they don't have two elections in short succession. That gives the minister flexibility.

If the intent here, then, is to still give the minister flexibility so that once it's determined there's going to be a vote – the minister could simply sit for six months and wait until he decides on whether or not there's going to be a vote, so it still doesn't take the authority away from the minister to make that sort of decision. In fact, the way it's written now still allows for a timely vote if necessary, but it still allows the minister the opportunity to decide if it coincides too much with a general provincial election or a general municipal election.

There are other challenges as we have some municipalities where we've had one or two or three councillors resign. It still allows the minister the choice. This serves absolutely no purpose because it doesn't take it away; it doesn't give any sort of clarity or succinctness. It is still allowed, but it is at the minister's discretion, so I'd say this amendment becomes completely irrelevant.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any others wishing to comment on amendment A1?

We'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to discussing Bill 17 in Committee of the Whole. Are there any others who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's my first time speaking to this bill. I appreciate the difficulty of what is facing the minister in regard to at least my perception of what he is facing out there and the challenges that are present in both our urban and our rural communities and how the whole group is getting along, where the Municipal Government Act regulates things, and how, in my view, the urbanization of this province is affecting the different mechanisms that have been in place and have served our province for the last 50 years.

There is no doubt that if you look at the local Calgary situation, you hear arguments over water and development size. You hear the comments from the mayor and other city councillors here in Edmonton, who feel that they are not getting a fair deal and that some, if reading between the lines, mergers and acquisitions should happen in our urban landscape to more adequately reflect the fact that Alberta is largely an urban province now. That doesn't mean that I don't understand that our rural communities continue to have people in them, that they continue to be valued Albertans, and they continue to provide much grit and muscle to the Alberta economy.

There is a sense out there amongst municipal councillors and, I know for a fact, some other people out there that the system right now is not working. You see that where you have a smaller town that may have a large industrial base. They're awash in cash while a community two steps down has a population base but no resources because of the way our system has been set up. Or you have big-city mayors who recognize that 50 per cent of the tax dollars their citizens send to the provincial coffers don't necessarily go back to them. They support other province-building activities that have traditionally been pursued in this province. It's difficult to continue those ways when you become a more urban province and when you even have people from rural communities who are using most of the services in our urban centres and the like.

Needless to say, this is a very difficult exercise that the minister is undertaking, one that will no doubt be challenging and full of land mines and not that easy to do. But the exercise is a little bit in public relations, changing some of the language, from dissolution and other words, to more favourable language which is trying to portray the government as a partner in assisting – assisting – with communities' problems and not necessarily being the bad guy. I understand that. That's how politics works and the like, but there is a lot that needs to be done. Hopefully, this bill will allow us to move to a recognition that the current system is not working for many municipalities in this great province and, in my view, has needed revamping for a long time.

On this note, because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is not here and she has tasked me with making her amendment here this afternoon, I will try to do it justice. You know, if I forgot to make this amendment here today, you could imagine what my time would be like at the caucus meeting tomorrow, Madam Chair. So with no further ado let me get this on the record. Here we go. This is on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre. If we could just pass that out.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while we pass out an amendment to Bill 17. This will be known as amendment A2.

Mr. Hehr: In this motion you can see that the Member for Edmonton-Centre is highly concerned that the minister will have, seemingly, the powers to dismiss an elected council. I guess from the position of the Member for Edmonton-Centre she sees this as highly difficult, that the minister can just disband elected officials. Now, I guess we all know here that when you're dealing with matters of dissolution and whether people are going to go into another electoral zone or become a different name or entity, this becomes somewhat problematic. How much power can the minister have? How much can the town councils have?

I guess maybe a pragmatic solution is that once everything is agreed to, we can wait till, you know, the next election cycle. Whatever is proposed can happen the next election cycle so that those town councillors who are elected continue to serve their areas for the full term of their elected session prior to any dissolution or amalgamation occurring. That would be one idea. I am certain that there are others, which the Member for Edmonton-Centre will explain when she discusses this at a later time in this House.

That's essentially it. We think it's heavy handed and unwarranted in this regard. I'd urge members to support this amendment on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Madam Chair. Unfortunately, again I have to speak against this amendment, and I'm using the same rationale as the last one. This went through a very thorough consultative process with the people involved, and this is what the people want to see happen. Just as a side note, the minister already has the power to do that.

I would urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment.

5:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A2?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to discussion on Bill 17 in committee.

Mr. Hehr: No. I think that's fine. I've done my good service on behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus and the Alberta people. I wish the minister luck with getting some of his ideas through.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd move that the committee rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to report.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: I am happy to do that, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills and reports progress on Bill 17. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Hancock: Madam Speaker, I'd move that we adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:53 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 7, 2013

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 23 Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate May 7: Mr. Horner]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 21 Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to stand and share my experience with this bill. This is a serious bill in many respects. If any of you had the opportunity at our most recent break, supertime, there was an article just published. I believe it was in the Edmonton Journal. It was a comment about Al Gore. Many of you know who he is. The point is this. It's not what was written. What is happening is that the reputation is being leveled and the allegations are being leveled, and the only thing that really succeeds in dealing with this is being proactive in doing something about it.

Here we're dealing with a bill that is trying to do just that. Industry has come forward and said: we want to do monitoring. If I remember what this government said initially, it wanted world-class monitoring. That's significant, but without any type of real performance measures to actually validate what we're doing, we lose the argument internationally. And we are. We're getting a black eye. Regardless of how many successes where we can go to the public and say, "This is what we're doing," what they want to see are measurable results. This has the ability to start down the right road. This act of actually instituting a world-class monitoring system has the ability to make transparent and validate what we so desperately need to do. It's what our industry needs us to so desperately do. That's why they have bought into this.

Without further ado, Madam Chair, what I'd like to do is make an amendment to this act. I have the requisite copies right here.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. We'll pause for a moment while you distribute copies of the amendment. This will be known as amendment A1.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. What this amendment does is move that the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, be amended in section 2 in the proposed section 36.1 as follows: (a) by striking out "one or more environmental monitoring programs" and substituting "an oil sands environmental monitoring program" and (b) by adding "oil sands" before "environmental monitoring" wherever it occurs.

Now, the reason for that is that this whole monitoring program was born out of the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan for the oil sands monitoring. The act itself is very broad based. It just openly creates the ministerial authority to actually create a monitoring system. What this does is define it as the oil sands environmental monitoring program, which connects the two dots. As one reads the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan, which is this plan that both the feds and the province came up with, it sets out the parameters, sets out many of the guidelines, which I hope the regulations would follow because it has a lot of industry participation. It gives it clarity.

When I spoke to the various stakeholders, there were some concerns about the authority going elsewhere, left or right, and what they wanted to see is clarity, that this is what we intend to do. This was the industry class. As the minister knows, reading the legislation, it talks about persons and persons of another class, which I assume is an industry group. That's how I take that language. When I read the language "person or class of persons," I'm presuming that we're talking about the Oil Sands Developers Group in many regards. So this is what this amendment is designed to do, to make that connection between the legislation and the plan that was already developed.

As you remember, some of my colleagues across the floor did listen to me. I said that we develop the plan first, then we follow with the legislation. This amendment is to connect one to the other. With that, I would encourage my colleagues and fellow members to support me, and I'd be happy to hear from the minister on this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for proposing an amendment. I would encourage the members in the House, though, to not support this amendment for a number of reasons. Particularly, we've talked about providing the first part of this with the oil sands region as we know that what we're looking at here is where we're starting. We've always talked about that. We've got a great agreement with the federal government with regard to the joint oil sands monitoring plan, the three-year agreement. We've got support with regard to industry for funding that and also for bringing this piece of legislation to the House.

Overall we'll be looking at how we make sure that we have a monitoring program. When we talked about the arm's-length agency, that was discussed from all sides of the opposition in the second reading of the bill, we talked about how this will eventually be across the province. So although this is initially starting out for the oil sands, as we continue on with regional plans and as we continue on with the arm's-length agency, we will also continue to have this legislation be able to affect all of the province.

It would not be good legislation to come back here a year or two from now but to have legislation that is broad, that is encompassing, and that will give us the opportunity to implement other parts of the important monitoring that this member and others have talked about in this House many times. It's not just in the oil sands region that we want to have good air, water, land, and biodiversity quality; we want that across the province. That's what this government is committed to. That's what our Premier has talked about. That's what we've worked toward.

Although I respect the member for bringing the amendment forward, I would ask members of the House to not support this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

7:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any others who wish to speak on amendment A1?

Seeing none, we'll take the vote.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move on to the bill. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I kind of suspected that was going to happen – but that's okay – so I prepared my second amendment based on the first amendment being rejected. The issue of monitoring is significant. In many ways it's legitimate to say that we're going to spread out and that this is going to take in areas other than the oil sands development that's going on. So I prepared another amendment to address that broader issue. I have the requisite copies.

The Deputy Chair: Once again we'll pause while we distribute the copies of the amendment. This amendment will be known as A2.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. With the whole issue of monitoring, whether it's the water, land, or air, it is significant that we have this transparent system. I do encourage the government not to settle for anything less than what is world class if not the leading technology in the world. With that said, to come to an agreement with the industry I think is valid. I think that shows that industry is concerned and they want to participate. That's why I brought this amendment forward, that basically says that we'll move that Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, be amended in section 2 by adding the following after the proposed section 36.1:

Fees

36.2 Within 6 months of the coming into force of this Act, the Minister must develop a proposal for the reimbursement of fees paid by participants in an environmental monitoring program from the Climate Change and Emissions Management Fund.

Now, the issue here is that we have a fund in which industry, the big emitters, now have a choice. They can buy into the carbon offset market, on which we have some disagreements about how well that is working, but we also have this fund. You know, I follow the CCEMC very well, but I do have questions on some of the projects that the fund has invested in. Now, the questions I have are ones of transparency. I don't know if they're working. I don't know if they're doing what they say they are doing. This fund has $260 million plus or minus. The latest is $300 million. That's a sizable sum.

Here's the issue. The industry is willing to participate. They're willing to commit $50 million. That fund has already been set up. The money is there to invest, and the monitoring system that I hope this government undertakes to build will actually apply to many of the projects that are a result of the investment from this fund. Are they doing the things that they say they're doing?

If we have baseline data, if we have the ability to actually measure not just these projects but what the oil sands is doing, what our coal plants are doing, and what every aspect of our industry is doing, then we not only have credible data, but it just seems a perfect marriage to be funded out of this fund because that's the whole purpose of this fund.

Industry pays $15 a tonne for the CO<sub>2</sub> that they emit, that goes directly into this fund. As the minister just signalled to me, there's $300 million in that fund now. Why penalize or why charge more for something than you need to? If the funds are there, this has the opportunity for industry still to participate but to not cost them. They're already paying the fee into this fund. Now, if industry is willing to pay more, then that is something for the minister to take up with industry based on what the criteria is.

Backing up to the original comments I made about the way this amendment act was constructed. We created the plan first, and as the hon. member's staff told me, they looked at the amount of money industry was willing to contribute, and then they backed into it from there. Now, what they mean by backed into it from there, I don't know the technology they were thinking of applying.

I don't think the ministry or this government should be limited in terms of what industry was willing to just contribute when we have this fund that has the ability to actually pay for and maintain the operational costs of a state-of-the-art, world-class monitoring system. Once developed, that is something that Alberta could show the international market. That's why tonight I highlighted that story that was published in the newspaper, which denigrates Alberta and Alberta's industry.

Our goal should be to have a transparent monitoring system that is not limited by money or investment but is only limited by the technology that we can apply to make ourselves the leading jurisdiction in the world in dealing with the technology for world-class monitoring. That, to me, defeats many of the criticisms that are leveled at Alberta, that are leveled at Alberta's industries.

Looking at how this is constructed. What this amendment does is that it just says that the minister will then within six months establish how this is going to be paid for utilizing this fund without having it necessary to set up a fee system. Now, it doesn't stop you later on from incorporating the fee, but it does give a lot of extra value based on what that fund is.

Now, the fund can still invest in the projects that it deems worthy, but the monitoring program is consistent with what that fund is doing. It is, in my view, a consistent marriage of technologies, the technologies that reduce things like sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, fine particulate matter, and CO<sub>2</sub>. The technology being funded to monitor that comes out of the same source of funding. That now, I think, gives a competitive balance on how those funds are used.

With that, I invite my colleagues to support this amendment, and certainly I would love to hear from the minister.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other hon. members who wish to speak on amendment A2? The Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. This is a really good opportunity perhaps, with all respect to the member and his amendment, to do a little bit of education on this: what this is about, and what it's not about. I thank the member for this amendment because it gives me a chance to clarify to the House and to all Albertans with regard to what this piece of legislation is about. This piece of legislation is not dealing with the climate change $15 per tonne technology fund. That's a fund that's managed by the climate change and emissions management fund, an arms-length, independent agency.

What this is about, this piece of legislation, is dealing with environmental monitoring, and I do mean this with the utmost respect to make sure that all members of the House are aware of the difference. This is about us, the monitoring that we do for air, land, water, and biodiversity in the oil sands region. We have the joint monitoring agreement with the federal government for implementation there, and what industry has agreed to is a $50 million maximum each year up to three years. We'll then look at what the renewal of that three-year plan looks like. So this is not about the tech fund, and I'd be happy to have a conversation later on with the hon. member about that.

But I do want to mention about the tech fund what is very important about that. What Albertans told us and what the House told us at that point in time, prior to my or the hon. member's time in the House, was that it needed to be independent and credible and that independent people outside of government or outside of this House were actually making the decisions with regard to who would get to apply for that funding. I think that piece of legislation, which is different from this, has really done an excellent job as we grow that area in technology, making sure we're reducing GHG emissions. Anyone from Alberta, Canada, or, quite frankly, around the world can apply for that fund and can apply for those dollars as long as the technology is then applicable in Alberta to reduce our GHG emissions.

Back to what this legislation is about, Madam Chair. This is actually about the monitoring that's happening on the ground. Therefore, all members in the House, I would ask you not to support this amendment because this amendment is not talking about the piece of legislation that we're talking about in this House.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. To the hon. member: you just made my argument though. One of the arguments about this legislation – and you heard it earlier, I think, from one of the other parties – was that there is a need for independence. There is an actual need for that arm's length. You're absolutely right. How you describe the CCEMC was correct, and I understand that.

That's why I made the amendment, so it would be at arm's length for some funding. It would be an independent body that would actually be looking at or having some sort of input into the creation and operation of the monitoring if they were funding that. Now, there are a number of ways. I suppose it could be constructed inside. But that was the whole reason for the amendment, to go to that independence and to go to that arm's length. I don't disagree with the way you described the two different aspects. I was just trying to bring them back together into one, and I was trying to bring them back into the CCEMC.

With that, there are several things that can happen. But the whole purpose of that fund and the whole purpose of that fund investing in the projects it invests in also has to be monitored, and there needs to be verifiable results. When I look at the projects, many of the projects on the surface might make sense. I look at the investment, and what I don't see is the transparency that it's doing what it says it is doing.

That's the key. That's the whole key behind what I think this legislation is. Our oil sands companies or any industry that's affected is going to take steps to improve what they're doing. They always have. It's only in their best interest. But having a monitoring system that's independent that can verify that and be transparent now is something we can take to the world and say: you can criticize this, but here is how we're doing it, and this is independent. So that's where that came from.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any more members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. With respect to this amendment reimbursing the fees, I'm afraid the participation of the environmental monitoring program is not something that we can support. We certainly believe that the polluter-pay principle needs to be maintained, and that includes costs of ongoing monitoring and general cleanup.

Unfortunately, we will not be supporting this amendment at the present time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members? The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be very brief on this piece because I know members want to move on. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre talks about the independence piece. If you will reflect upon two weeks ago in Ottawa, the independence piece is very clear with the joint monitoring with the federal government. We are very happy after the one-year anniversary of monitoring out of this three-year plan to go to Ottawa and to go to Carleton University and to show what we've done. Not only is the monitoring very transparent, we have created based on our Oil Sands Information Portal a joint portal so that that information is publicly available, very transparent for everyone to see. Quite frankly, the response we got from that was very, very positive.

I agree with transparency. This Premier has committed to transparency. This government is committed to transparency. Quite frankly, Madam Chair, that's exactly what we're doing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would also agree with the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood that the polluter-pay principle should apply here, and that we should be building that fund, you know, not paying the fees back after six months, so we could use that money for some other projects.

I will not be supporting this amendment for those reasons.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move to debating the bill. Again, are there any who would like to comment on Bill 21?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 21 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 23
Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members with comments, questions, or amendments? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. As the Official Opposition Finance critic I'm happy to rise and make some brief remarks about Bill 23, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013. I will be supporting this housekeeping bill because it makes a few necessary adjustments. It clarifies Alberta tax statutes and harmonizes Alberta tax statutes with federal law and repeals legislation that is no longer relevant. Harmonization of the federal and provincial tax codes is necessary to clarify and streamline the tax codes for all Albertans, simplifying the process and reducing administrative complications.

Key points to this bill. Specifically regarding amendments to the Alberta corporate tax code that it brings about, I believe that these are positive and that these amendments provide clarity and accountability for corporate taxation, including harmonizing the Alberta tax code with the federal tax code by defining large corporations as those with taxable income over $10 million, removing existing restrictions on the collection of taxes and arrears from large corporations by the minister, stating that deductions for political contributions by a corporation cannot exceed the amount of tax payable.

It also proposes minor changes to the calculation for deductions claimed under the scientific research and experimental development tax credit. These amendments will maintain Alberta's consistency with federal law by matching the federal change to the proxy amount that corporations can claim for overhead expenses when applying for the scientific research and experimental development tax credit. Reducing the proxy rate also has the added benefit of reducing previously added costs to the provincial government. It is positive that the scientific research and experimental development tax credit still gives researchers access to funds to support their important research and development work that they do here in Alberta and that taxpayers will still be able to claim the credit on the full amount of their eligible overhead expenditures.

8:00

There were also some amendments to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. Number one, the deletion of the NHL players tax. Although, having attended a few Flames and Oilers games this year, perhaps we should have been collecting some tax revenues because we sure weren't getting much out of those teams. I know that they're going to be back next year, so I think it's good that this will help, perhaps, the Oilers and Flames sign a few more free agents. You know, I remember when that NHL players tax was there, that was a big problem, getting those folks to come to Alberta. So making that official, getting that off the books, is a good thing.

Obviously, the Alberta resource rebate doesn't apply anymore, so that will be taken out.

It provides modest increases to the family employment tax credit. This is important to provide as much tax relief as possible, and although the increases are hundreds of dollars a year, it will make a difference to employees in small- and medium-sized businesses, which are often family owned.

Also, there's an amendment to the medical tax exemption to remove the $10,000 cap. Before this amendment, when someone claimed medical expenses for a dependant, the person was capped at $10,000, and this bill will remove that cap. We support the government making it easier for family members and friends to care for dependants when they are in need of medical care.

Bill 23 will also repeal the Alberta Income Tax Act to remove outdated provisions or those that are redundant in the Alberta Corporate Tax Act and the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act.

Madam Chair, all in all, it's a good housekeeping bill that streamlines our tax code and is something that the Wildrose will be supporting. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there any others who wish to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The question has been called.

[The clauses of Bill 23 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Hon. members, the Committee of the Whole now has under consideration Bill 17, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2013. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Madam Chair, as much as I hate to do this, I did make a commitment to the Liberal Opposition House Leader that we would not deal with that until 9 unless somebody has amendments to bring. Rather than call this now, I would move that the committee rise and report bills 21 and 23 and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: I recognize the Member for Calgary-East to give the committee report.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 21 and Bill 23. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 24
Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate May 7: Mr. Bhullar]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In my recent trend of full co-operation with the legislative agenda of the government I'm happy to rise to lend my support yet again to another government bill. Sorry, Sarge. Bill 24, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, is what we are speaking about.

I'd like to commend the government for efficiently dealing with a number of minor but important amendments that reflect necessary revisions to a wide range of government statutes, including name changes of ministerial portfolios, the Emblems of Alberta Act, the Perpetuities Act, and the Surveys Act. We on this side of the House always do like it when things can be done harmoniously and in the most efficient and streamlined way possible.

Most importantly, I want to acknowledge and congratulate, obviously, the Minister of Service Alberta for bringing this forward and congratulate the MLA for Lacombe-Ponoka, our Service Alberta critic, for his leadership as well in highlighting a significant issue for condo owners across Alberta. His work in raising this in the Legislature earlier this year and making substantive proposals to improve the Condominium Property Act undoubtedly played a role in bringing forward the amendments contained in Bill 24.

We support these amendments that better protect Albertan condo owners by eliminating costly one-time special assessments that condo boards would previously collect for repairs in favour of smaller monthly fees for residents of townhouses, duplexes, villas, and single-family dwelling developments, or bare-land developments as they're called.

We know that a recent court ruling affirmed that common property in those bare-land developments only referred to roads, sewers, and landscaping. Other managed property, including walls, roofs, foundations, driveways, decks, doors, and windows could not be funded out of reserve funds and had to be paid for out of special assessments. The changes to the act now mean those bare-land condos can use reserve funds to pay for improvements to their residences. I've received several calls on this matter from condo owners, and this is something that they've certainly been looking for the government to do since the court kind of confused and muddled the issue earlier this year.

I join the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka in applauding the minister for helping to make life more affordable for Alberta homeowners by bringing forward changes to protect Alberta condo owners, many of whom are young first-time owners or seniors on fixed incomes who can't afford large one-time levies, and also for making the changes necessary to clear up the muddled waters caused by the court earlier this year. It's always gratifying when we can work together to make legislative changes that impact Albertans for the better.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. With that, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 24.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 18 Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Madam Speaker, it's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 18, Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act.

I think there's wide support in the House, and I look forward to it passing, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

8:10

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This legislation, or the genesis for this legislation, comes from a federal Conservative bill which established the idea of a PRPP, which is essentially to have a few large national financial institutions provide employers with the opportunity to offer employees a private pension plan which theoretically would achieve low costs through the economies of scale. The federal bill was designed with input from the provinces, the idea being that they would all implement provincial legislation that would allow for this new type of pension plan to be offered. Alberta's legislation is in line with the federal agenda.

Currently if an Albertan does not have access to an employer pension, the only things they have access to are private retirement financial tools such as RRSPs, mutual funds, tax-free savings accounts, and so on. The idea of a pooled registered pension plan is that instead of having a bunch of small pension plans, you have one big one. Essentially, the benefits to the companies are obvious. They can offer a pension and so on.

I think that Canadians deserve to have meaningful improvements to their pensions. The Canada pension plan has a proven track record of professional management, low-cost administration, and reasonable rates of return. Through modest and mandatory savings the Canada pension plan provides the guarantee of defined benefits which provide Albertans with unrivalled peace of mind. It's, therefore, the best option for helping secure a guaranteed future for Albertans' retirement. Only 18 per cent, Madam Speaker, of Albertans have a private-sector pension plan versus 40 per cent across Canada.

Madam Speaker, we think that the plan proposed here is simply a glorified RRSP. It's designed in such a way to see the retirement savings of Albertans handed over to the financial sector, which, quite frankly, fails to deliver on its promises with surprising regularity.

It's also important to note that these are entirely voluntary and contain no requirement for employers to match employee contributions. The benefits they pay out are not guaranteed and subject to the vagaries of the stock market. If people couldn't afford RRSPs before, then it's likely that they will be unable to afford them now.

We think that the PRPP will just be a gift to Bay Street, just another financial product they can sell, especially if they can negotiate higher fees than RRSPs. The legislation does nothing to cap the fees that administrators of the PRPPs will charge.

We believe that the Canada pension plan is the most efficient and most effective tool for ensuring income security for all Canadians, especially with its operating cost of 1 per cent or better and a good track record. It is pan-Canadian and it's portable. Therefore, instead of spending so much time and effort working on a new voluntary program, the government should be looking to a way to support enhancing and expanding the Canada pension plan. The Canadian Labour Congress has a detailed plan to double the CPP benefit, from about $934 per month to $1,868, by gradually increasing both the employee and employer contributions from 4.95 per cent of salary to 7.95 per cent.

It's interesting to note, Madam Speaker, that in the U.S. social security has benefits of $30,000 a year, but the maximum benefit in Canada is less than $12,000. We have one of the lowest guaranteed retirement income plans in the OECD.

In my view, Madam Speaker, this is not the way to go, and I was very, very disappointed that the PC government led the charge against reform of the Canada pension plan. If this is all that they can offer Alberta workers in exchange, then it's a sad trade. What we need to do is improve and reform the Canada pension plan so that it provides benefits so that seniors who retire on the pension plan are not plunged into poverty. We need to ensure that not only employees but employers make a fair and equitable contribution to the retirement of all Albertans.

On that basis, Madam Speaker, we will be opposing Bill 18. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a great pleasure to speak on Bill 18, the Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act. Pooled registered pension plans are the brainchild of our federal Finance minister, Mr. Jim Flaherty. He started floating this idea in 2010 after the federal-provincial negotiations on the CPP broke down. Mainly Alberta and Quebec came out in opposition to the idea of gradually boosting CPP payouts and premiums. At a December meeting of Canada's finance ministers that year there was reportedly unanimous agreement to pursue a framework for PRPPs. The federal government subsequently introduced Bill C-25, and the Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act was passed in the House of Commons. The PRPP framework will be implemented across Canada once the Senate approves and provincial enabling legislation occurs.

Bill 18 represents Alberta's PRPP enabling legislation and provides a legal framework for establishment, administration, and operation of the new type of retirement savings instrument. Alberta is the fourth province, after Quebec and British Columbia and Saskatchewan, to introduce or pass PRPP legislation.

PRPPs are to expand pension coverage, give people more retirement savings options, help more people to be financially prepared for retirement. You know, there are critics in the federal parties, the Liberals and the NDP. They claim that they are not all that different, that we already have RRSPs, we have TFSAs, and that we should really be focusing more on enhancing the Canada pension plan. Some pension experts also say that PRPPs won't be effective in closing gaps in retirement income unless they are mandatory on the part of both employers and employees under this bill.

Currently, Madam Speaker, only 1 in 6 Albertans working in the private sector participates in an employee pension plan. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business said in a news release that recent member data shows that 78 per cent of Alberta's small businesses do not have a company retirement savings plan but that 36 per cent would consider offering a PRPP in their workplace. An estimated 3 and a half million middle-income private-sector workers in Canada have no employer pension plan.

So far Quebec is the only province to back the federal PRPP initiative with companion provincial legislation that would make employer participation mandatory. Quebec was also the first province to set out its own framework of rules for the PRPPs. They are calling them voluntary retirement savings plans, or VRSPs.

In British Columbia the bill died on the Order Paper. Saskatchewan also introduced PRPPs. PRPPs will be simple defined contribution plans, unlike the CPP, and won't provide guaranteed or inflation-indexed benefits. The way PRPPs are envisioned, participants will benefit from economies of scale and therefore a more diverse portfolio as well as lower investment costs.

While participation in PRPPs will be open to all Albertans, they are more targeted to help small businesses and self-employed people. Employees can contribute through payroll savings, making it easy to contribute, but, you know, it will not be mandatory for the employers to contribute to the PRPPs.

The debate over PRPPs is linked to the debate over expanding the Canada pension plan, the CPP. In fact, PRPPs grew out of a breakdown of federal-provincial negotiations on CPP reform, which Alberta and Quebec largely brought about on their own. With this being the case and because Bill 18 will pass regardless of whether we support it or not, our position on PRPPs is that we should be expanding the CPP.

Madam Speaker, Albertans, like other Canadians, are not saving enough for retirement. The Canada pension plan should be lauded as an extremely well-run public pension plan that could be expanded to help address the growing retirement income gap facing many Albertans and Canadians. Unfortunately, there is really no guarantee that the provinces and the federal government will ever agree on a plan to boost the CPP, and if changes do occur, will payments ever be high enough to preclude the need for other retirement savings instruments such as PRPPs?

Albertans already have access to voluntary retirement savings options such as RRSPs, yet a great many don't contribute, Madam Speaker. Since PRPP participation is voluntary as well, how successful will they really be in increasing pension coverage? Should people be forced to save for their retirement? Some pension experts say that PRPPs won't be effective in closing gaps in retirement income unless they are mandatory on the part of both the employers and employees. So far only Quebec has made employer participation mandatory. I think Bill 18 should make that mandatory for both the employer and employees, but the business community doesn't want PRPP participation to be mandatory.

What is the ultimate goal of the legislation? If it is to encourage more people to save for their retirement, how are PRPPs going to be any more effective than RRSPs in this regard since both are voluntary retirement savings plans? We have to have some teeth in the bill, Madam Speaker, so that people will have to save for their retirement. People are more concerned about putting bread and butter on the table, and they want more money in their pockets. You know, a lot of people are not that far-sighted.

Will PRPPs expand pension coverage at the expense of pension quality? In other words, might they encourage some companies to drop existing in-house defined benefit pension plans, where they match employee contributions, in favour of this new defined contribution scheme, where workers assume all risks and employers aren't required to contribute to the employee pension plan? Are PRPPs a precursor to defined contribution pension plans for public-sector workers? Could giving people yet another retirement savings option actually make things worse? We already have RRSPs and TFSAs and RESPs and now PRPPs, you name it. If people are not putting their money into RRSPs or RESPs or TFSAs – they already have those vehicles to save for their retirement – if they're not doing it now, how are they going to put their money into PRPPs?

I don't think it's a good bill, Madam Speaker. It's not going to do whatever it is intended to do. It's just going to be another plan which people will not be taking the benefit of. I don't think I'll be supporting this bill for those reasons. It should be mandatory for both employers and employees.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers on Bill 18?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 24

Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate May 7: Mr. Anderson]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Number 10 in the program, Madam Speaker, number one in your heart.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to rise in support of this bill, just like the Member for Airdrie. I'm pleased to do so, to speak to Bill 24, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2013. I'd also like to thank my colleague the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for first raising the issue in the Legislature and the Minister of Service Alberta for bringing it forward.

I think we've all heard from condo owners – and that's the specific portion that I'd like to speak to – who said that the changes were needed. I certainly have in my constituency, which is why I wanted to rise and speak on behalf of my constituents tonight. The changes were welcome in Chestermere-Rocky View, and as I said, I fully intend to support the bill.

What I would like to do, Madam Speaker, is read a letter, or at least a portion of it, I received from a member of the condo board at the Prince of Peace Village in my constituency in order to explain why these changes brought forward by my colleague for Lacombe-Ponoka and the hon. Minister of Service Alberta are so important and why we're so pleased that they're going to be put into legislation.

The letter:

Dear Bruce:

I'm writing to you as a concerned resident and Condominium Board Director of the Prince of Peace Village . . . within your constituency.

For years, we Boards and Management companies have been collecting fees with good intentions on a monthly basis as a reserve fund in preparation for future maintenance of our common and managed property. Most condo owners would prefer to pay a little each month rather than a large sum perhaps several times per year.

However, recently in Alberta, there was a court case involving a bare land condominium corporation in regards to the authority of the condominium to be able to pre-collect reserve fund contributions for "managed" property.

The judge ruled in this case that a condominium corporation can, as per condominium by laws, maintain managed property but cannot pre-collect funds in reserve for replacement of "managed" property such as roofs, railings, driveways, fences or other expensive items. They can only do so for "common" property due to the ruling of this case.

Herein is the problem, as I continue.

In other words, projects such as the aforementioned may only be done and paid for by the condo owners by special resolution which could be a very large lump sum of money at the time and consequently unaffordable by [many] condo owners.

. . . Honourable Mr. Justice A.W. Germain [the judge] that ruled on the case called "The Shores" dated October 10, 2012 . . . stated this legislation to be flawed, "bizarre", "not practical", "nonsensical" and "restrictive" as it relates to managed property because in the past fees have been pre-collected and held in reserve funds.

I'm getting to the good part, Madam Speaker, I assure you.

This ruling has now made it clear based on flawed legislation, that these fees have been collected illegally placing boards and management companies in an extremely awkward and vulnerable position.

There are about 1200 Bare Land Condominium Corporations within Alberta therefore affecting thousands of condo owners, their corporations and management companies.

Moving forward, we have been informed by lawyers that to correct this problem an amendment to the Condominium Property Act and subsequent Regulations is needed to simply include collection of fees for "managed" property as well as "common" property.

We were also told that [the Service Alberta minister] said amending the Act would be quick and easy to fix, but the opposition although in favour of the amendments, preferred to have further discussion before making any changes.

This is the point that I need to raise. I've only been here a year, Madam Speaker, so maybe I'm not quite familiar with how we hold up legislation that isn't even before the House. Needless to say, I went back to Mr. Harley Sanders and many of the other residents in Prince of Peace and had a good, long discussion with them about this act and the fact that we wanted to support it and couldn't wait to, in fact, once it was presented here. It has all been straightened out in the Prince of Peace Village. I think they saw between the lines anyway.

But the point I would raise is that if we're going to work together on issues such as this or anything in general and if we're going to visit other constituencies of other members, it would be wise of us to include the information that's actually factual and is actually occurring. To suggest in any way that we have been delaying this is simply not true. Now everybody has been corrected on it and, frankly, are a little perturbed that it was raised in the first place.

I do rise to support particularly this portion of the act. It affects so many condo owners in my riding. I just wish that I hadn't had to go through going back to them to explain the fact that we have been waiting to pass this all along, and it was our member who initially asked the question and brought the issue to the Legislature.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Can I ask you to please table the document, the letter that you were reading from, tomorrow?

Mr. McAllister: You can ask me.

The Acting Speaker: And will you?

Mr. McAllister: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We have 29(2)(a). Would anybody like to comment or question?

Seeing none, are there any other members who would like to speak to Bill 24, Statutes Amendment Act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to make some comments with respect to this. The first thing that I'd like to say is that we will support the bill, and we support particularly the changes to the Condominium Property Act.

But before I go on, I want to talk a little bit about the use of miscellaneous statutes under our rules. Traditionally miscellaneous statutes are used only for routine housekeeping changes that are agreed to by all parties and can go through without debate. We think that this should have been included as its own act. It's a substantial change and corrects a very serious problem that has affected condominiums. As Justice Germain concluded, it's a "bizarre" and regrettable decision, and he calls it the "worst possible outcome from a business point of view" for the Shores. This amendment does change that and does fix the problem, so it should be supported.

You know, just to come back to the other thing, it comes back to the Surveys Act, all of the things that are included in this Public Trustee Act. The Justice minister says that it's not miscellaneous statutes but it's a grab bag of minor amendments. In our view, this particular piece is important enough that it ought to have been contained in its own act.

We will nevertheless, Madam Speaker, be supporting Bill 24. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members who wish to comment or question?

Seeing none, I'll ask the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just briefly to comment to the hon. member's comments about miscellaneous statutes, clearly this act is not a miscellaneous statutes act. It is, in fact, more substantive than that. It has some amendments that do change policy and are more than just merely corrective. It wasn't held out to be miscellaneous statutes, which requires unanimous consent of all parties to include pieces in the bill. It was clear up front that we wouldn't get unanimous consent from all parties to include the Condominium Property Act in the bill, so that wasn't going to be a miscellaneous statute in any event.

It does seem a shame to bring forward bills in a stand-alone that have one or two lines even sometimes when there are important concepts in them. This Statutes Amendment Act deals with four pieces of legislation – five, really, I guess – but four that really are one or two lines, no more than one page and don't need to be stand-alone. They speak to specific items that need to be fixed, not huge policy issues but important issues, yes.

So it's not a miscellaneous statute. It is a grouping of different statutes, however, that require modest amendment, and the only reason that there's any heft or bulk to this act at all is because of the number of changes to the names of departments under the amendments to the Government Organization Act.

With those few clarifying comments and because I understand there's a request for this bill to be dealt with again tomorrow, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Might I request unanimous consent of the House to deal with Bill 23, Tax Statutes Amendment Act, in third reading? It passed second reading this afternoon and is out of committee, so it would require unanimous consent to move to third reading.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill 23 Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 23, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2013.

Again, this bill is simply housekeeping in most respects. I'm very pleased with the support of the House today as it's moving through quickly, as it should because it is simply housekeeping.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm struggling here. I might ask for unanimous consent of the House to deal with Bill 21, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, in third reading.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: This is an interesting, odd thing in this Legislature right now. We have already spoken on this. I know our Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre as well as, of course, our critic for the Municipal Government Amendment Act has already spoken to this. We're supportive of it.

Hopefully, we can hear from the other side for another 20 minutes or so and see what's going on so we can have happiness in the Legislature in days to come. I'll leave it in the government's hands to tell us why this is such great legislation.

8:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Ms Kubinec: Madam Chairman, Bill 17, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2013, proposes amendments to the MGA that are required to implement the municipal sustainability strategy. The strategy is intended to achieve long-term sustainability in our municipalities and directly supports the government's strategic plan for safe, prosperous, welcoming, culturally diverse, and desirable communities.

By replacing the dissolution study process with a new viability review process, municipalities will be able to address their long-term viability challenges in a more proactive way that engages community residents, neighbouring municipalities, and key municipal stakeholder groups. This bill ensures that residents ultimately decide their municipality's future through a public vote prior to a municipality being dissolved. If residents choose not to dissolve their municipality, the process will clearly lay out the actions needed to return the municipality to long-term viability and will authorize the minister to issue directives on those actions. The results of a public vote will be binding and will require the community to choose between meaningful options for future sustainability rather than allowing an unsustainable status quo to continue.

The MSS was developed by a working group composed of representatives from the key municipal stakeholder groups – for example, the AUMA, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association; and the AAMD and C, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties – and has strong support from stakeholders.

I'm very proud to support this bill. It is the result of a very collaborative process between the province and municipalities to determine proactive solutions to support municipal sustainability.

Madam Chairman, I would encourage all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to take this opportunity to speak to Bill 17. It deals with an issue, I think, that's emerged across the province, which is disparity. I guess the underlying piece that I want to talk about is the disparity between the financial capacity of different types of municipalities in different parts of the province. We've had a number of urban municipalities that have been forced to dissolve because they simply didn't have the financial capacity to meet the needs of their constituents.

There are lots of other reasons for some of these things. I just have a glimmer of hope here that the minister could use this to address that issue in a more enlightened way than simply requiring the dissolution of a municipality, be it a town or a village, because they don't have the financial capacity to deal with it.

We've had a number of conversations with municipal leaders around the province in the last few months, and there is a variety of approaches to this. Certainly, one of the approaches is to forge new types of municipalities that combine both urban and rural components or sections of the municipality. Right now the choice of simply dissolving or not, in a very rigid way, is part of the problem, which I think this bill is seeking to address.

I think it has a number of positive things. First of all, in order to dissolve, there has to be a vote of the electors, and I think that that's a democratic procedure regarding the most significant question which can face a municipality, which is: to be or not to be. It allows the people who live there to answer that question.

But there are some other things that I think are interesting about this bill that need some answers. First of all, it says that the "viability review must be conducted in a manner determined by the Minister." That does give a lot of authority to the minister without putting any kind of definition around what he or she does. If there was some definition or more definition around how a viability review could work, it would be easier to support the bill. We are supposed to be promoting accountability, transparency, and due process. The viability review process could be more detailed in order to provide assurance of that.

Overall, though, Madam Chair, I can say that the NDP caucus will be supporting this bill. It is supported by AAMD and C and AUMA. I think that if the minister can get agreement between both urban and rural associations in the province on a way to go forward on such a thorny issue, he deserves some credit. I think this piece of legislation is a step forward.

I do want to say, however, that the AUMA has raised an issue. I just want to put that on the record. They are disappointed that the minister's willingness to open the MGA did not extend to property assessment and taxation reforms, which AUMA submitted in 2010 and 2012. The AUMA believes that such reforms are critical, and delaying them will endanger the sustainability of communities, perpetuate inequalities between municipalities, and fail to match property taxes paid by Albertans and businesses to the costs that municipalities incur in the provision of services.

I believe those issues need to be dealt with in this term by the government. I hope that they are. Nevertheless, I believe this act is a step forward, and I'm happy to support it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to get up and relay a few comments on some of the questions and the issues that were raised, particularly by the last speaker. I think I've mentioned it many, many times in this House before that I understand that there are issues that AUMA and the AAMD and C have, individual municipalities, from large urban municipalities to small rural municipalities, all in relation to the Municipal Government Act. I've indicated that the roles and the responsibilities – the taxation and assessment, the planning and development, the governance, all three sections of the MGA – will be reviewed in full course and in their entirety by all of the municipalities, by members of the public, who have just as much say as AUMA and AAMD and C in how they're going to be governed. That's where those sorts of issues on taxation and assessment will be addressed.

This, Madam Chairman, was an initiative that was undertaken between the department, this government, and AUMA and AAMD and C to find the solution to a challenge. A previous solution was no longer working. We previously had dissolution studies, which were in the MGA, which served when a municipality found themselves challenged to remain viable. It was felt by AUMA and AAMD and C and this department that we needed to work on a new process that was about not just the dissolution of a municipality but the long-term viability and sustainability of municipalities.

I know the presumption is that the reason why a municipality would go through a dissolution study is that it's not financially viable, Madam Chairman, but my experience travelling around and being in 329 of the 422 communities in the province of Alberta in some way, shape, or form was that in many municipalities it wasn't just an issue about whether or not they had enough finances to provide the services to their community. In some cases they had the finances, but they didn't have a tax base in order to build their community. In some cases they just didn't have the capacity, and it was difficult to find people who wanted to run even though they had financial resources available to them.

So viability is about more than just money, which is why we didn't address this in this legislation. We're addressing it in the full MGA review because, quite frankly, it's an issue that needs a lot more fulsome debate in the process over the next two years to come to a conclusion.

This process, Madam Chairman, is much more effective. The dissolution process that we had before would have communities reach a critical point, and actually we had to receive a letter from the general public, a petition, or a request from the council that we do a dissolution study. We would go through and do an assessment for several months and spend a lot of good taxpayers' dollars to do an assessment on the sustainability of that community. Then the report would be presented to the community, and in the meantime, while we were doing all the research, the community would become divided, half saying, "We have to dissolve; our taxes will go down, and it will be better," the other half saying: "No. We'll lose our identity." People in the community would become bitter enemies who would fight because they were preserving, in some cases, what they thought was where they lived, and in some cases they thought it would be better if they dissolved.

Then, regardless of what the dissolution study came back and said about their tax base or about their viability or about the resources they had available to them, the capacity they had to govern themselves, Madam Chairman, they would have a vote, which in most cases was almost 50-50. It was very close, 55 to 45 or 57 to 43. In those cases, it didn't really matter whether the vote was to dissolve or not. Those bitter relationships stuck with the community for an entire generation and did not help make the community stronger. If they voted not to dissolve, we'd be back to square one, where a community now had not just a question about their viability but was divided against itself. If they voted to dissolve, there was still bitter anger for a generation about who had the impact on the future of their community.

This process, Madam Chairman, helps communities become viable. It asks questions about their financial wherewithal, about their tax base, about their capacity to govern themselves. It brings in partnering municipalities to see if there are opportunities to share costs, to share resources, to share knowledge and information and find better relationships, to bring about collaboration to make sure everybody is sustainable, viable over the long term. That's what this legislation is about.

I know that the member had some questions about taxation and assessment. It will be done in the full review of the MGA, where everyone deserves to have a full debate. I would hate for this piece of legislation, which was crafted by AUMA and AAMD and C with this department to help communities become more viable, not to pass because it's being confused with another issue that will be addressed in the next two years.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to offer a few comments on this bill. I've listened carefully to the minister repeatedly. That thing about visiting 329 municipalities is becoming his little personal word logo, like his colleague climbing Mount Everest not once but twice.

I understand the work that's been done on this, and I understand where it originated from. I actually think it went back to the previous member. [interjections] I can tell you're all so glad I'm back in here.

Okay. I think it was actually started by the previous – he was Minister of Municipal Affairs, rode a motorbike, and represented Lloydminster. Anybody? No. Okay. Blank looks. I know that the previous member for Peace River-ish, northwestern Alberta, also had a report that a lot of this came out of, so I appreciate that, you know, this has been chugging its way through the process. That's appropriate.

But I have to take issue with what I was hearing this afternoon, where the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock kept popping up in response to every comment, going: oh, no; couldn't possibly even consider that because this was put together by AAMD and C and AUMA, and that's that. I think there are some things in this bill that they didn't agree to, and I would really like to see where in their resolutions they okayed having the minister being able to punt them. If she can send that over, that would settle my mind on this one, anyway.

Section 130.3, which I attempted to amend this afternoon – or my amendment was brought forward this afternoon – is the one I wanted struck because that's where, you know, if everything isn't done "to the satisfaction of the Minister, the Minister may dismiss the council or any member of it or the chief administrative officer of the municipality, and section 574(3) to (6) apply in respect of the dismissal." I'd love to see the resolution where AAMD and C or AUMA said: yippee; yeah, I want that minister to jump up and dismiss me. If you can send that over, I'd really appreciate it because I find that one a bit hard to believe. It may well be there. I will admit that I have not read every single resolution that they've ever passed, so it's indeed possible.

I have an amendment to bring forward. It's been sent to the table, and I'll ask that it be distributed at this point. Some of you have heard me talk about this before, so I'm just going to keep talking while you distribute it. What I'm trying to do here is get at . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'll just have you pause for a moment so that we can identify this as amendment A3. Just give us a minute or two, please. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Sure.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. The minister is very aware of my interest in what I call the CLEA, the combined low expenditure assessments, which is shorthand for the number of assessments that municipalities and rural areas can make and charge against, oh, things like the linear assessments, which are the pipelines and railways, against power plants, for example, you know, stuff like that. They can assess whatever they want. A lot of the municipal districts make a fair income out of it, and I've raised those numbers with the minister in question period. I feel that this has quite a bit to do with why we are in this situation of having to look at viability and/or dissolution in some areas of Alberta.

Now I will pause here and go: sometimes that may be appropriate because we do have an exodus from rural areas to urban areas. It's a fact, and it may not be appropriate to be forcing a community to stay together. You know, it may not be viable, which is the point of looking at this viability assessment. But I think a big piece of this is those assessments. Now, CLEA is a shorthand that I use and some other people use.

I'm sorry. I'm going to pause here and just do a shout-out to Parliamentary Counsel, who did a double whip flip to get some amendments through for me at the speed of light. Frankly, for some reason the government perhaps doesn't like the heat in this room, the actual heat, not the other heat, and wants to get out of session. I don't know why, but we're ripsnorting through this legislation, so my thanks to Parliamentary Counsel for processing my amendments so quickly.

The amendment that I'm moving, that is now A3, is to start to gather some information about the effect that that's actually having. It's amending section 134.1, which is currently a transitional clause, and it's adding after the proposed section 130.3 a section called 130.4.

When a municipality is dissolved or where a viability review recommends the dissolution of a municipality, the Minister must prepare and make public a report within 6 months of the dissolution or recommendation for dissolution, as the case may be, addressing the impact that . . .

Here we go.

. . . residential, non-residential, farm land, machinery and equipment, and other categories of assessment had on the dissolution or recommendation.

It's starting to bring together, frankly, some of the facts so that we have a better sense of the distribution of these assessments, which I feel is not of benefit to the urban areas, in which I include villages, towns, and cities, and that may well be a major cause as to whether we're having to look at the viability of certain areas. I know the minister has spoken before about: oh, it's a community, and we should all work together. It's sounding a tiny bit forced to me as though the government really needs them all to stay together, and that may well be the case. I know that the government has a major voting base there, and they need to keep that voting base where it is so that they keep getting elected. I understand that. That's politics. But it is sounding a bit forced to me that, you know, communities have to stay together and they have to help each other.

What I'm seeing in this act is that municipalities are giving up their self-determination in order to have the minister step in. That may well be what they said they wanted, but I do find it a bit troubling. They're giving up municipal autonomy and self-determination so that the minister now has control over this viability dissolution process.

What I'm trying to do with my amendment is start a little bit of research and say: when we look at this process, let's also look at this piece and see how much it had to do with the original recommendation coming from the community or whether the final version of it, whatever that may be, is tied to the assessments. I think it does. So far the minister and I are descending into: "I'm right." "No, you're not." "Yes, you are." "No, I'm not." Blah, blah, blah. That kind of conversation. I'd like to take it a step further and actually get into looking at some of the root causes of what's happening here.

This is my province, too. I represent an urban riding, and I'm proud to represent an urban riding. I just came in a great rush from a community league meeting of a fairly new community league, which is the Downtown Edmonton Community League. It's been in formulation for a period of time and has now been formally constituted and recognized by the city of Edmonton. They're having their AGM, and all kinds of great things are happening down there. The farmers' market, for anybody that's in town, is starting on the May long weekend, a fabulous outdoor market on 104th Street, the best one in town, even better than Edmonton-Strathcona's. Come on down. You'll have a great time.

That's what I'm trying to do with this amendment. I'm not dissing the process. I'm not questioning – well, yes, I am. I am questioning the reverse onus, the switching of onus that's happened under this bill. I'm being told repeatedly by the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock that this is exactly what they wanted.

Okay. I will have to take her word for that except for the part about dismissing people. I just can't believe they agreed to that.

I want to know how that tax assessment is affecting people because it's a lot of money. A lot of money. I think that tax should be redistributed across Alberta. These structures, once they're built, are a low expenditure to keep going. It's not as though, you know, you have to build a new road out to them every 10 years. You might have to pave it, but frankly you're going to pave everything else, too. The municipality doesn't pay for that; the government does.

That's the reasoning behind the amendment that I've put in front of you. I hope that the government will support this. It should lead us into a more evidence-based position from which to examine some of these. I can tell you that I have not heard from 329 municipalities, but I'm really surprised at how many municipal councillors have managed to track me down and thank me for starting to raise this subject in the Assembly and to bring it forward and say: what the heck is going on? To be fair, I have had a couple of reeves send me steaming, flames-licking-off-the-sides Facebook posts and things. You know, fair enough. Yeah, I'm surprised at how many people have been tracking me down and saying: thank you very much for doing this. I think it's worth considering, for the minister and for the sponsor of the bill, and I hope that they will consider it.

I would have been happy to share this through the government caucus, but as I've already outlined, this whole thing was put together at the speed of light. I left a community league meeting seven or eight blocks away from here and hotfooted it in here to move this tonight. If you keep moving this fast, yes, indeed, you will all be going home this weekend, which may be the plan.

I hope I can get your support in that, and I look forward to any continued discussion on it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: I'll be very brief, Madam Chairman. I just wanted to point out that this is very prescriptive. The viability reviews actually are not done just by the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. We help co-ordinate the committee. We have membership from the local municipality, from the neighbouring municipalities, from AUMA, and AAMD and C, and they choose the prerogative on the direction that they want. This would prescribe including revenue in the discussion. It doesn't prescribe expenses. It doesn't prescribe capacity. It doesn't prescribe relationships. Every single municipality is a unique circumstance when they're doing a viability review. I'd ask my colleagues not to support this because we're not going to make it prescriptive.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Any other speakers on amendment A3 to Bill 17? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Again, I'll be extremely brief. I would suggest that the member should possibly look at the Municipal Government Act when she's concerned about the minister having the ability to dismiss under 574(1) and 574(2). I'll read you (2): "If an order of the Minister under this section is not carried out to the satisfaction of the Minister, the Minister may dismiss the council or any member of it or the chief administrative officer." So that section that is in here now is no different than the section that is currently in the act and does not give the minister a lick more power than he has today to deal with issues in municipalities.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers on amendment A3?
Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll carry on in Committee of the Whole with Bill 17, the Municipal Government Amendment Act. Are there any other speakers?

Seeing none, we will call the vote.

[The clauses of Bill 17 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 17.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: I would ask the Member for Calgary-Varsity to report.

9:10

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 17. Madam Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Having heard the report, does the Assembly agree?

Hon. Members: Agree.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading (continued)

Bill 17 Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2013

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this evening and move third reading of Bill 17, which amends the Municipal Government Act to implement the municipal sustainability strategy.

I want to thank all my hon. colleagues for their consideration in debate on this important piece of legislation. These changes will result in a more proactive approach to identifying challenges, more community engagement and involvement in the long-term future of Alberta's municipalities, and more sustainable communities for our residents.

Specifically, implementation of the MSS will include identifying municipal challenges sooner and developing options to address those challenges; ensuring that the right process is used when the viability of a municipality is in question; finding solutions through strong partnerships amongst neighbouring municipalities, municipal associations, and Municipal Affairs; more community engagement and involvement, including with neighbouring municipalities; and requiring the community to choose meaningful options for future sustainability rather than allowing an unsustainable status quo to continue.

The MSS is a result of a collaborative process between the province and key municipal stakeholders and has received strong stakeholder support.

Madam Speaker, I would like to thank you for providing the time for me to speak to this important piece of legislation. This will mean a lot to the two municipalities in my constituency who are going through this process.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 17?
Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

Mr. Hancock: Madam Speaker, I'm at a loss as to what to do now.

The Acting Speaker: Go home.

Mr. Hancock: I could ask for unanimous consent again on Bill 21. [interjections] Ain't gonna happen. Okay.

In that case, Madam Speaker, I guess I'll have to move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:13 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 8, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Dear Lord, help us to think, to act, and to live in a manner that instills confidence amongst Albertans and reassures those who elected us that they made the right choices. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through to all members of the Assembly someone who will be well known to many colleagues, Judy Gordon. Judy is a former member of this House who had the privilege of serving the old constituency of Lacombe-Stettler. She is with us today to acknowledge Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month, which occurs every May. Mrs. Gordon is an MS Society board member and honorary ambassador in the fight against multiple sclerosis. She's seated in your gallery. She's an excellent ambassador for the causes related to multiple sclerosis. I would ask her to rise, please, and receive our traditional warm welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. President of Treasury Board, you have a school group to introduce?

Mr. Horner: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I've got a very large school group from Spruce Grove, the Greystone Centennial middle school, 118 visitors in both of our galleries, and they are a very energetic group. We were doing the pictures downstairs, as we normally do, and I think I may have to look at shaving off the grey because one of them thought I was the Premier's father. This very notable group is accompanied by their teachers and their group leaders, Patty Nicholls, Claudia Scanga, Joan Papp, Laura Robert, Mathew Pecht, Cheryl Hanson, and Patricia Kusmire. As I said, they are in both of our galleries, and I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let us proceed on with other guests.

The hon. Minister of Health, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House some additional guests that have joined us today in recognition of Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month. These individuals are role models and true leaders within our community in the fight against MS.

I'd ask that each rise as I introduce them: Neil Pierce, who has served as the president of the MS Society of Alberta for the past eight years and has been a tremendous advocate for MS awareness in our communities; Julie Kelndorfer, who was diagnosed with MS nine years ago and began working at the MS Society in order to make a difference in the lives of others affected by this illness – and made a difference she has – and Dr. Christopher Power, an internationally recognized clinician-scientist focused on the causes and potential treatment methods of diseases like multiple sclerosis. He is also a board member for the MS Society here in Alberta. Last but certainly not least, Patrycia Rzechowka. Patrycia was diagnosed with MS last January and recently graduated from the U of A with a BA in criminology. She aspires to become a police officer and has raised close to $13,000 for MS research.

Mr. Speaker, multiple sclerosis is a lifelong chronic illness that can occur at any age, but with individuals such as our distinguished guests, who are dedicated to combating this disease, I am hopeful and confident that we will one day find a cure.

All these guests are seated in your gallery, and I would ask that all members of the Assembly give them the traditional warm welcome and appreciation of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The other Saturday I was listening to CBC, and there was my favourite program, The Irrelevant Show. I thought: "Hot damn. That is a comedy show that is produced out of Edmonton. It is a national program, and it's into its fourth year." I thought: "Okay. That's it. We have to bring in some of the company and introduce them to you so you can all celebrate with them."

Now, The Irrelevant Show has won both the Canadian comedy award and a medal at the prestigious New York Festivals. We were not able to get Neil Grahm here with us today, whom I remember from Three Dead Trolls in a Baggie, which tells you how old I am. Neil is the head writer along with names you'll recognize like Chris Craddock and Dana Andersen, who help to write the show. I'd like to introduce you to the people we did get here. All four of them are part of the original company.

Mark Meer, if you would rise. Mark is a writer and a performer. We met when he was still in high school, I think. He is a member of Die-Nasty Improv. He's a founder of Gordon's Big Bald Head. He has written and performed in Caution: May Contain Nuts, which is another television comedy show, toured all over the place with Rapid Fire Theatre, and you'll recognize his voice from video games. Jana, stand up and join him. Jana: you would recognize her voice if she was allowed to speak to you. You've heard it many times. She's worked as an actor, an improviser, a theatre instructor, and a playwright. I think she started or had a hand in starting the Sprouts festival, which is for small kids.

Donovan Workun: you will recognize him from a number of different commercials and things. He's a founding member of Atomic Improv. He's won both the Just for Laughs Festival and the world improv championships in Los Angeles. He is very proud to have with him today his son and daughter, Ethan and Emma. Please rise.

Finally, the guy who thought it all up. Peter Brown is the producer. He grew up in Saskatoon. A chance radio audition changed his career path. He for many years did Radio Active and is now going to host a network radio show and take us across Canada.

Thank you so much for being so wonderful.

Ms Kubinec: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two of my constituents, Mr. Earl Allen and Mr. John Podolski. Both are proud farmers from the BMW Fawcett-Jarvie area in the north part of my constituency. I sat with both of these gentlemen on the Linaria agricultural society in the '90s, when our sons played hockey together. They are dedicated volunteers in our community, as are many of their fellow Albertans. This is their first visit to the Legislature. I ask them to rise as I call their names. Please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly, John and Earl.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two constituents from Edson, Gean Chouinard and his son Ryan. Gean is a first-time councillor with the town of Edson and is very involved in the community. He has helped out with a dozen initiatives, including Edson's Rotary Sundays in the Park and the Family Day extravaganza and organizes the town's annual soapbox derby. Gean is also a foster parent and has been involved in the Foster Parent Association for many years.

His son Ryan is a grade 6 honours student at Pine Grove middle school and is a remarkable young man. In fact, Mr. Speaker, he received the Edson Chamber of Commerce youth volunteer award this year. He has also helped out with many initiatives, including the Pine Grove school breakfast program and the Rotary Sundays in the Park.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to say that both Gean and Ryan were very active members in my campaign last year, and Ryan was actually appointed as my chief sign guy. Gean and Ryan are seated in the members' gallery, and I invite them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a group of concerned citizens from the city of Brooks. They're here today to raise their concerns to this government in hopes that their parents and all Alberta seniors receive the level of care they deserve. As I call their names, I would ask them to rise: Cheryl Hyland, Darlene Deschamps, Sheila Eaton, Glenn Eaton, Reid DeForest, Jack Peeters, Gina Smith, and Roberta Brower. Also, there are two health care workers here today who don't want their names announced for fear of retribution. I ask that all members join me in providing the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the great honour of introducing to you and through you an individual who has family connected to High Prairie. He was born and raised in High Prairie, Alberta, went to the international university in San Diego to get a bachelor of science, and is now the product marketing manager, warehouse products, for Toyota Material Handling Europe and lives in Sweden. He has come to see what kind of possibilities exist here for business. I know that he is so thrilled to be introduced in this House as his father was a really great campaigner of mine. I'd ask Joe Cunningham, who I believe is sitting in the public gallery, to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have about 10 more to go, and I'm watching the clock, so please tighten up your introductions wherever possible.

The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the Associate Minister of IIR.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions. The first is a young fellow by the name of Will Lumsden. Will is currently attending the University of Alberta. He introduced Justin Trudeau to Edmonton when he launched his leadership campaign. He sits on the board of the Edmonton-Riverview constituency association. He was recently elected as the vice-president of policy for the Alberta Young Liberals. I know Will Lumsden will be sitting in one of these chairs one day, fighting for Albertans. I would ask him to rise and for all the members to give him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Marjorie Bencz, Mark Doram, Cheryl Natrass, and Roxann Vaos from the Edmonton food bank. Alberta is one of the best places. A lot of people are doing great, but unfortunately there are a lot of families that are going through a tough time. Closer to home 53,512 Albertans are assisted by the food banks, with 44 per cent of those served being children. Hunger Awareness Week is about raising awareness of the solvable problem of hunger in Canada. Food banks across Canada are asking all Canadians to acknowledge Hunger Awareness Week and understand that as a collective, as a society we can all make a difference. I would ask all hon. members today to use Facebook and Twitter and use our social media networks to get the word out to go to hungerawarenessweek.ca or foodbankscanada.ca, and the Twitter hash tag is #yegfoodbank. I would ask our members from the food bank to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House four constituents from the Calgary-Northern Hills constituency who are sitting in the members' gallery. I would like to ask them to stand as I introduce them. Karim Dossa is a successful entrepreneur with a recycling business and is director of the Beverage Container Management Board. He is also a very active volunteer and leader with the Ismaili community, serving youth and a multifaith food bank and Aga Khan Development Network projects. Mr. Khin Chew is a professional engineer with an impressive record of community involvement and leadership. Khin is present at almost all Asian community events in Calgary and has been heard at several disaster relief efforts. Mr. Mark Gerlitz is a native Calgarian and a lawyer of 11 years. He and his wife, ShariLyn, have a daughter they named Victoria. Mark is also a board member of the Alberta Safety Codes Council. Ms Holly Wong is a health services researcher at the U of C. Her passion is women's issues and rights, particularly women in the correctional system. Holly is going to India in a few weeks to volunteer in a program that promotes women's empowerment.

I'm pleased to hear that they had a chance today to meet with some of my colleagues and tour the Alberta Legislature Building, and now they're here to listen to us in question period. I would like to thank all of you for taking time out to visit us here today, and I would like to ask the members of the Assembly to join me in giving them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, once again I beg your indulgence. Please review your introductions from this moment forward, or we're not going to quite make it in time.

Edmonton-Gold Bar to demonstrate, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three exceptional individuals that I know, two from the Edmonton-Gold Bar constituency: Mufi Khairullah, Shelley Sabo, and Dicky Tshipamba Dikamba. Shelley is a home co-ordinator for SEESA, the South East Edmonton Seniors Association, and works hard in the community. Dicky runs an organization called the Canadian association of volunteers in action, a francophone organization that finds volunteers and matches them up with the need. Mufi has been a friend of mine for many, many years and works in the recruitment area, particularly in IT, indeed for the government of Alberta. Please welcome these individuals sitting in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the Minister of Environment and SRD.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Eryn Kelly. Eryn is with the March of Dimes, a wonderful organization. I had the great pleasure of spending the morning with her while I was in a wheelchair as part of accessibility awareness week. She also happens to be a constituent of mine in Calgary-Shaw. I would like to ask Eryn to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a dear friend of mine. He's a great community volunteer, a gentleman with a forestry background and business background, and certainly one of Drayton Valley's very fine volunteers. He's a member of the Rotary Club and a great Rotarian but, most importantly, a dear friend of mine and the president of my Drayton Valley-Devon PC association. Colin Campbell, will you please rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Sherwood Park.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you Mr. Dennis Fendall, an active community member of Calgary-Glenmore. Dennis was a school principal and a superintendent with the Calgary separate school board. With the selection of Premier Redford as the leader of the PC Party of Alberta, Mr. Fendall became re-engaged in party politics, and during the 2012 election campaign Dennis was a key member of the Liberals for Linda campaign in Calgary-Glenmore. I now ask Dennis to rise and accept the traditional welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Just a remembrance that we're not to refer to elected members by their names.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of my constituents and long-time friends. [interjections] I'll start with Mr. Ed Riediger. [interjections] Ed is the CEO of the Robin Hood Association, an organization committed to helping people with disabilities.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. We're already fighting the clock, and you're not helping by having conversations across the bow, which prompt my rising. The Member for Sherwood Park has the floor. Let's give her the courtesy of it.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. I'll start again. I don't think anyone heard.

It's my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of my constituents and long-time friends. I'll start with Mr. Ed Riediger. Ed is the CEO of the Robin Hood Association, a school for disabilities and an organization committed to helping people with disabilities achieve their personal best and experience a quality lifestyle.

Next is Gerry Gabinet. He is the director of economic development and tourism for Strathcona county. He has helped attract and promote investment in Sherwood Park, Strathcona county, and Alberta.

I am so pleased they're able to join us today, and I would now ask that you provide them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we still have introductions from Edmonton-Ellerslie, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, the Minister of Human Services, St. Albert, Lacombe-Ponoka, and one other place. However, our agreement with the television network requires us to now move to question period. I'm sorry, hon. members who are left at the altar, so to speak. Some of the introductions took a very long time today. I would ask, please, House leaders to again review this matter. Let's tighten this up so that all members can be introduced. Some people are here and have to leave and will not have the benefit of being here when their introductions are done after QP, and that is highly unfortunate. You have yourselves to look at.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First official question.

Report to Taxpayers

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I was reading through this PC Party brochure, that the Premier is claiming is legitimate government communications to explain how the back-in-debt budget is supposed to be good for Alberta. It is a glossy document. It's got lots of pretty pictures and nice words, and it's all decked out in PC campaign colours, but it doesn't really tell the whole story. For example, the Premier and the Finance minister insist that borrowing and debt are good for Albertans, but I couldn't find one mention in the entire brochure that the government will rack up $17 billion in debt by 2016. Why not?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I may, what the document talks about is where this province is headed under this Premier's leadership. What the document talks about is living within our means. It talks about saving for the future. The hon. members opposite don't talk about the $24 billion of savings that the three-year plan will put in the bank for Albertans. They don't talk about the $19 billion that we have in savings today. This is a plan for the future of the province. We don't drive the vehicle by looking in the rear-view mirror, like the opposition.

Ms Smith: And they don't like to talk about the $17 billion they drained from our sustainability fund in the last five years.

Mr. Speaker, if the government is going to communicate with Albertans, it could at least tell the full story about what it's doing. The campaign-style brochure claims that Alberta's borrowing is much like taking out a mortgage on a home. This is not true. They're only going to be paying the interest. They are paying none of the principal and setting aside next to nothing when the balloon payment comes due. They are leaving $17 billion for the next generation to pay off. No one has a home mortgage like that. When will they tell Albertans the truth about that?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would actually read the budget documents, she would see that we have a debt retirement plan and we have a debt retirement account to which we have made an allocation in this budget year and will make in the future budget years.

She should also take a look at the P3 projects that have served Albertans so tremendously well. I saw a report produced by one of our deputy ministers not too long ago that showed a savings in the value of $2 billion for things like the Anthony Henday, which I think Edmontonians are very grateful for and which is, by the way, a liability for 30 years, a debt, Mr. Speaker. Albertans understand how we should build infrastructure; the opposition does not.

Ms Smith: I've read their budget, Mr. Speaker. At the rate the minister is going, it'll take 83 years to pay back that $17 billion in debt.

It's a $350,000 infomercial being spent to misinform Albertans. Here's another example. They describe the 8 per cent MLA pay raise as a pay cut. Plus, it's designed to look like a PC Party document. It's another communications disaster on the heels of the school announcement blunder, that was using kids as a backdrop for political attacks. Yet the Premier and her ministers continue to hire more and more PR and communications experts from Ontario. Doesn't the Premier realize that it's these kinds of mistakes that are making Albertans . . .

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I've found as a representative of this august Assembly is that when I go outside of this place, my constituents say: "Well, why don't you tell us what you're doing? Why don't you show us what you're doing? Why aren't you telling us what these folks are trying to misinterpret and give, basically, false statements about?" [interjections] Sending 29 cents to every household so that they can see that we are building Alberta, that we are living within our means, that we are going to save for their children's tomorrow: this is a plan for today and tomorrow. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Second main set of questions, without interjections, please.

Ms Smith: They're billing Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and they're not being forthright about it.

Health System Executive Expenses

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in light of the Mayo Clinic expense scandal, we wrote a letter asking Justice Vertes if he would expand his health care inquiry, and we received a response from him this week. He said this.

Your request is one that should be addressed in the Legislature.

Any expansion or alteration to the Commission's terms of reference is solely within the purview of the Minister of Health and his cabinet colleagues.

Will the minister join us in our request for a complete examination of health expenses in order to clear the air on queue-jumping once and for all?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the inquiry has done a very thorough job of investigating all sorts of allegations that have been made. As the hon. member knows, the commissioner asked for and received an extension in order for him to have time to consider the evidence that's been submitted and to prepare the report. The inquiry has fulfilled its mandate or will shortly fulfill its mandate when it delivers its report to you. We have no intention of otherwise interfering with the work of the inquiry.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government's response to the health executive expense account abuse has been disappointing to say the least. The standard answer is that they've tightened up the policy. Of course, after we exposed the Mayo Clinic expense scandal a few weeks ago, they started to see if there was a way to recover some of those illegitimate expenses, but they refuse to order a complete forensic audit. Why is the Premier only taking half measures to recover these dollars on behalf of Alberta taxpayers?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has in fact taken very aggressive measures with respect to all of the allegations that have been brought forward in this House. The fact is that the inquiry has heard evidence on many subjects throughout the course of the last year. The commissioner is in the process of reviewing that evidence and preparing his report. Unlike the hon. member opposite, we are looking forward to the report and its recommendations in order to further strengthen the steps we have taken to ensure this kind of thing can never happen again in Alberta.

Ms Smith: This is where it gets confusing, Mr. Speaker. Either they care about the waste of taxpayer dollars on executive health expenses, which, frankly, go back to the time when the Government House Leader was the Health minister, or they don't care about recovering these expenses. If they're serious, asking Justice Wachowich to get involved is a good step one. Step two would be the release of all of the expenses for all of the executives for all of the health regions going back to 2005. Why won't they do that?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure the hon. member well knows, in fact, all of the expenses of all of the executives of all of the former health regions back to 2005 are all the subject of FOIP requests that are presently in process. That is a process that occurs independent of government. We have absolutely no intention of interfering with that process. The opposition has proven it knows how to use the process, how to disclose and, if I may say, in some cases distort the information that's presented. We stand by that process.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Third main set of questions.

Assisted Living Facilities in Brooks

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me start by acknowledging the efforts of the Minister of Health. I understand the couple in Crowsnest Pass that I spoke about last month will be permitted to stay together in the same seniors' facility. Today I hope he will address major issues in two seniors' care facilities in Brooks. Carla Buckler told us about often finding her grandfather sitting in a soaked diaper and getting bruised from being moved too roughly from his recliner to his wheelchair and her grandmother being fed poor quality meals such as half a hot dog and a brown banana. This is elder abuse. Why are there no consequences?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say, first of all, that there are certainly very serious consequences in this province for individuals who neglect or otherwise mistreat seniors. The hon. member should know that she has an obligation, as does any other Albertan, to report suspicions or evidence of such inappropriate treatment under the Protection for Persons in Care Act, and I won't take the House's time to enlighten her as to what that process is. What I will say is that I am concerned about the situation in Brooks. It was first brought to my attention today in a news release, and I've taken immediate steps to ensure that there is an inspection of both facilities forthwith.

Ms Smith: This is precisely what we're doing, Mr. Speaker, bringing it to the attention of the minister.

Here is what Tia Crapo told us about care in one of these facilities in Brooks.

My dad was found on the floor, in his vomit, with not one person aware of when he was last checked on. When admitted to the hospital, weak, severely dehydrated, suffering with a urine infection, and several bed sores, the doctors were shocked at the state he was in and did not think he would survive the night.

Why do these kinds of things happen without the minister intervening and holding anyone responsible?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, first of all, as I said, the information that's been brought forward with respect to the two facilities in Brooks will be followed up. Those facilities are inspected on a regular basis, as are all facilities in the province regardless of whether they're publicly operated, private, or not-for-profit operations.

But, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is teetering on the verge of something that is very serious. If she is alleging that there has been abuse or neglect of residents in these facilities, she or anyone else who has knowledge has a responsibility to report that under the appropriate legislation.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, they've reported it. It's been ignored, and now the minister needs to step in and do something about it.

You've already been introduced to several people in the galleries affected by unacceptable care and lax enforcement of existing standards.

An Hon. Member: Fearmongering.

Ms Smith: Well, maybe the hon. member would like to go hear the stories himself if he thinks it's fearmongering.

They have many more heart-wrenching stories about neglect, lack of attention, horrible food, and ignored requests. The families and the caregivers have come here today to the Legislature to seek action. What is the minister going to do about it?

Mr. Horne: We, in fact, have tremendous compassion for any Alberta resident or family that would find themselves in such circumstances, and we have taken the appropriate steps. The hon. member's constituents and community representatives should be commended for coming to the Legislature today to express their concerns.

What would not be forgivable, Mr. Speaker, is a politicization of this issue. As I've said, the processes are in place. I've asked for an immediate inspection of both facilities. If there are concerns with regard to abuse or neglect, I'm sure the hon. member knows how to handle that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Report to Taxpayers (continued)

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I looked through the Premier's leadership review campaign brochure, produced by the increasingly partisan Public Affairs Bureau, paid for with $350,000 of taxpayer money. Now, if this leadership review brochure told the truth about the Premier's broken promises, I'd have no problem with it. However, it's nothing but a spin job. To the Premier: why does your leadership review brochure not mention your broken promise to provide all-day kindergarten within a year of being elected?

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader rose on a point of order at 2:03, and I suspect it's to do with issues pertaining to party matters, which have no place in this Assembly. Hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, please review your supplementary questions so that they can be ruled in order. Party matters are not the subject of debate here. I've indicated this a number of times, and if you wish to rewrite the history of tradition, then so be it. However, in the meantime we're not going to allow that. I made it very clear yesterday, and we're going to pursue those rules today.

If someone from the government side would like to answer this question, please do so.

Report to Taxpayers (continued)

Mr. J. Johnson: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Just a moment.

Hon. members on the Wildrose front bench, please. Enough. Okay? Enough.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to try and answer the question. As we've said many times in this House, full-day kindergarten is a commitment of the government. It is important to the Premier. It is something we're working on. It is something we're going to deliver. But it is linked to the early childhood development strategy, that's being led by the Minister of Human Services in co-operation with the Minister of Health and myself, and once we have that strategy nailed down and some of the costing on it, we'll be bringing those options forward to cabinet. We hope to be delivering full-day K in this province in the very near future. Again, it is a commitment. We are working on it, and we will get there.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, allow me to rephrase. What I referred to, that looked like a leadership campaign brochure, is actually a government document. I note that this document fails to mention the Premier's broken promise to provide sustainable, predictable funding to Alberta's postsecondary institutions. Not a single, solitary word about this is in this document. Whatever happened to truth in advertising? To the Premier. Why does your leadership review brochure – oh, excuse me. Why does this document fail to mention your devastating cuts to postsecondary education?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think it's highly appropriate and not only appropriate but desirable for government to communicate with Albertans and share information relevant to what the plan of the government is into the future, what achievements we have accomplished together, not this government but Albertans together, and where we're going to move with our economic development, with our financial plans, with our growth. Albertans want to hear that. If this opposition wasn't spreading the fearmongering that they do, perhaps we wouldn't have to do it, but unfortunately that is one of the means by which we will continue to communicate with Albertans.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, only with this government is the truth referred to as fearmongering.

I've only mentioned two broken promises out of this document. There are others, of course. Some examples are increased MSI funding, a very important issue today; increased art funding; no service cuts to those with PDD, our respected seniors; and, of course, a balanced budget. To the Premier: did you exclude all of your broken promises in this brochure because they're too politically damaging or because you wanted this to fit in the mailbox?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, on the one hand the hon. member complains that this document may be political. Then on the next hand he talks about a political document that was issued a year ago, and why isn't this like that document? What this is information for Albertans in their households at 29 cents apiece so that they can understand what is in the budget because it's very obvious that the opposition does not.

The Speaker: The leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Alberta Energy Regulator

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy appointed Gerry Protti as chair of the regulator responsible for approving all energy projects in Alberta. It seems that Mr. Protti is listed as the vice-chair of the Energy Policy Institute of Canada, a lobby group representing the who's who of energy companies in Canada. He is himself a registered lobbyist for the energy industry. To the Energy minister: if Mr. Protti doesn't have a conflict of interest, then who does?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, it's always good to get questions from the grassy-knoll group. It is quite clear that when Mr. Protti was asked to take on this role, he took all the steps to eliminate any potential conflicts such as those alluded to here, should there be such things. I would add, actually, that Mr. Protti is a very fair-minded, straightforward, hard-working, and dedicated Albertan, that ought to be supported in his role.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, you know, this Energy minister can talk all he wants about how fair minded he is, but here's who he represents: the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, Suncor, EnCana, the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association, CNRL, Enbridge, TransAlta, Aecon, Cenovus, Shell Canada, Imperial Oil, and the Canadian Petroleum Products Institute, to name just a few. This guy can't possibly take an objective view of projects involving any of these energy corporations. Why is this minister putting the fox in charge of the henhouse?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the governance board of the Alberta energy regulator will have responsibility for ensuring that the organization is well run, that it sets appropriate outcomes for the organization to perform. In addition to that, there will be a panel of independent commissioners, who will be put on the panels to hear specific cases as they come forward. I'd rather appoint somebody who actually knows what's going on as opposed to somebody who doesn't.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciated your prayer today because only divine intervention can save this government now. This government has made a farce of energy regulation in Alberta. If it wasn't so outrageous, it would be funny. How can this Energy minister justify turning one of the ministry's most serious responsibilities into a joke?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, if anybody was laughing, it would be a joke, but there isn't anybody who's laughing at that joke. I would say: what we're building, we haven't even started yet. I would encourage all even-minded, fair-minded Albertans to give us a chance to establish the board, to establish the organization. Let it get up and do its work. The proof is in the pudding.

Assisted Living Facilities in Brooks

Mrs. Towle: Heartbreaking stories about mistreatment and neglect of our seniors have been heard from all over the province. In Brooks Hilda Bunney fell one night, and her head went through a wall. Hilda lay there for hours. The call bell didn't work. She suffered steam burns, fractured vertebrae, and two hematomas to her brain. No one called a nurse or an ambulance. This is not fearmongering. The family wrote letters to the ministry. The family made a complaint under the Protection for Persons in Care Act in 2011, and the RCMP will not investigate. When will the minister take action and end elder abuse in Alberta?

2:10

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we take all allegations of elder abuse extremely seriously, and this government, I believe, has proven that in response to any member on any side of this House who has brought forward a concern about a constituent or wanted to represent a constituent's family. We will take these concerns equally seriously. As I've said, I've ordered an immediate inspection of both facilities. We do not believe these are widespread issues across our province – and I want to be very clear about that – but one incident is too many, and we'll continue to take aggressive action.

Mrs. Towle: This is not one incident, Minister.

Given that under the Protection for Persons in Care Act you, the minister, can launch your own investigation when “a report of serious abuse has been made about a service provider” and given that the horrifying stories of friends and family of AgeCare residents here today have already been provided to you, will the Minister of Health launch an investigation immediately into these AgeCare facilities?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as with any similar situation, we will look at the information that is presented, and we will take immediate action to investigate the complaints.

Mrs. Towle: That’s great because they’re here today, and they’d love to meet with you right after QP, and they can go through their complaints with you.

Given that this ministry and the protections for persons in care and the RCMP are not able to protect seniors in our system, will the minister tell the families who are here today why this would be unacceptable if it was a daycare or an education facility, but you find it completely acceptable to do this to our seniors?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this is really crossing a line. We take these allegations extremely seriously, and as members across this House can attest from their own experience, any time an allegation has been brought forward, we have investigated, and we have taken the appropriate action. It would be completely improper for me as minister to stand here and to draw or to speculate on conclusions resulting from the information that’s just been presented. We will take this matter as seriously as we take the circumstance of any other senior in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

High School Education Initiatives

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This being Education Week, I want to focus on an issue that really matters to Alberta families. There are few issues of more importance to parents than having an educational environment that is going to help their child succeed. We know Alberta’s education system is effective and world class, but the only way to keep it that way is to make sure it continues to evolve. In fact, that was the message Albertans delivered through Inspiring Education. To the Minister of Education: is the system evolving as quickly as it needs to?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that was the message Albertans gave us, and I’m very proud to say that in the last three years since Albertans developed the Inspiring Education vision, we’ve made significant steps and jumps to bring it to life. We’ve passed the Education Act this last year and made some alignments with Inspiring Education. We’ve had some great announcements this week with things like dual crediting, which was announced Monday, a high school flexibility program that was announced today, digital diploma exams yesterday, and a new ministerial order on student learning. Most importantly, we’re a hundred per cent focused on making sure our decisions are centred around the student.

Ms Olesen: Again to the same minister: given that Albertans said through Inspiring Education that the system as a whole needs to be responsive and flexible and given that high school students in my constituency are saying that elements of the system continue to be too prescriptive, will the minister take the kind of actions Albertans expect to address this concern?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely right. Kids are unique, and we need a system that embraces and recognizes that uniqueness and their capacity to learn. We’re doing just that with things like moving the diploma exams to more times throughout the year and even digital exams and the expansion of the high school flexibility program, which we announced today, which is essentially delinking the time kids sit at a desk from the credits they earn and tying it more to the mastery of their skills and their capacity to learn.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. Finally, to the same minister: given that the minister can hardly expect success without the participation of students, teachers, and parents and given that the actions you’ve talked about include some significant changes and thinking outside the box, are stakeholders onboard with these specific changes, and how can we have confidence that they will be successful?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, they will only be successful if everyone is onboard, and I can tell you that during Inspiring Ed we had input from thousands of Albertans over several years, from young to old, because we’re all stakeholders in the education system. It doesn’t matter what you do, whether you’re a parent, a grandparent, whether you pump gas, whether you’re a senior in a lodge, or whether you’re a taxpayer or a part of government. We all benefit from the fact that we’ve got the best education system in the English-speaking world, and we’re all going to benefit from the fact that we’ve got a Premier who’s a hundred per cent committed to keeping us the best.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Calgary-Cross.

Assisted Living Facilities in Brooks

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we’ve heard some very sad stories about what’s happening in our province to our seniors. Minister, the family is here today. They’ve gone through all the processes of the Protection for Persons in Care Act and complained to the RCMP. Will you meet with them after question period?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we will handle this situation the way we would handle a situation brought forward by any member of this House. We will look into the complaints that have been made. We will look at the history of the complaints under the Protection for Persons in Care Act and through correspondence, and we will get back directly to the families about the concerns they’ve raised.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, we have some employees who worked at the care centre who have lost their jobs. Would you be willing to meet with them? They complained through the correct processes, and they’ve lost their jobs since. Would you meet with them?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I ordered an immediate inspection under the continuing care health standards and the continuing care accommodation standards into these two facilities. As the hon. member knows and as the families know, there are processes, and they have obviously availed themselves of those processes. I will look into the status of the complaints that have been made, and once we've had an opportunity to consider the facts and all the circumstances, we'll get back to them with a response.

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, we have staff up in the gallery who currently work for the facility that we're complaining about. They're concerned about losing their jobs. Will you guarantee that they will not lose their jobs?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this is a most unusual way to have concerns presented on behalf of constituents.

What we will do is what I have laid out with respect to the standards in the facilities and with respect to the complaints that have been filed. I do not believe that any employee in any facility in this province has to or should need to fear for their job as a result of advocating for the people they care for. I stand by that, and that will continue to be the case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Family Violence Death Review Committee

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has one of the highest rates of family violence in Canada, and in many cases children can be profoundly affected. They can be witnesses, they can be orphaned, or they can lose their lives. My questions are for the Minister of Human Services. I understand that the proposed family violence death review committee will only look at homicide-suicides that were committed in the context of an intimate partner relationship. My question is: how will this help children affected by such tragedy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think there are two important aspects to that. The first is, of course, that children who are in a situation where there's family violence, particularly resulting in death, are demonstrably affected. The work of Dr. Fraser Mustard and others has shown the developmental impacts on the child who lives in a situation of family violence and is exposed to it. So understanding how we can prevent family violence is very important to the development of children.

Also, of course, sometimes children are involved in that family violence themselves and are the victims of that family violence, and we need to know and understand what we can do better to help families in that situation be protected from aggressors.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since we have seen cases recently where a youth in an intimate partner relationship experienced dating violence as a precursor to a horrific tragedy, how will the death review committee improve the safety of youth who are presently at risk through dating violence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, we are seeing an increasing number of violent incidents in dating relationships, so it's very important to understand that and to take that into account. Certainly, the family violence death review committee will be able to look at situations of intimate relationship, including dating, and understand what we can do better in that area.

The other piece that I would want to add is that we are currently reviewing our family violence and bullying reduction strategy and renewing it, and we're putting a particular focus on education about positive relationships and other areas to reduce the amount of dating violence.

2:20

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, a very strong group of people in the community is already working to prevent family violence in our province. My question is to the same minister.

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Fritz: How is the death review committee going to work with the communities without overlapping their efforts?

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, point of order. Anticipation.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The family violence death review committee is something that the community and the stakeholders in this area have been asking for for a number of years. We've been working with the community in terms of developing a proposal for a family violence death review committee. If Bill 25 is passed by the Legislature, the community, I believe, will be very strongly supportive of us implementing what they've asked for.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you rose on a point of order at 2:19:30, and hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you rose on a point of order at 2:19:40. They've both been noted.

Let's carry on. Edmonton-Centre, you have the floor, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Athabasca River Water Management

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has not been exactly rigorous in ensuring that some water will be left in the Athabasca River. Since the mid-70s the low-flow rate for this river has decreased by 30 per cent due to climate change, but the government has allowed current and future licences for 15 per cent more water flow to be removed even during low-flow periods. To the Minister of Environment and SRD: what reason does the minister have for allowing increased water allocation when the total flow is dropping?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We take water very seriously with regard to the Athabasca River and across this province. In fact, we have a system that's continuously monitoring, and we evaluate within our framework. We have a system of green condition, when you can allow approvals for water to happen; a yellow condition so that oil sands companies will be cautioned when they require water limit withdrawals; and then we have a red condition, that makes sure that less than 1 per cent of allocation would be withdrawn. We work with industry and they work with us to make sure that when there are low flows, we have policies in place to protect that.

Ms Blakeman: No. Didn't answer the question.

Back to the same minister. Given that this minister keeps touting science-based decision-making, why do the recommendations of both the '06 Radke report and the '07 joint review panel for the Kearl project for base water-flow limits get ignored in the new framework? Or were they not science based?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're not ignoring these. We are taking real action on the ground with regard to the monitoring that we're doing in the oil sands with regard to the amount of allocation of water from the river. We are taking action in this province. As we grow the oil sands region, we're increasing the monitoring that's happening there. We have 2 per cent allowable but less than 1 per cent of allocation happening there. Those are real actions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for raising that. How does the minister tell the newer oil sands projects that under the current water management framework there will not be enough water for their development? Or to put it another way, why did Syncrude and Suncor get a FITFIR deal to keep drawing as much water as they want?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a process in this province called cumulative effects management. We make sure that we're monitoring within the whole land-use area. We have enough water, and as I said, during low flows we work together with industry to make sure that we take care of that and that less than 1 per cent of the water withdrawal happens. That is taking real environmental action. We will continue to develop the oil sands in an environmentally responsible way, as we have in the past and will continue in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Student Ministerial Internship Program

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring this PC government quietly introduced the taxpayer-funded Alberta student ministerial internship program, better known as the tiny Tory boot camp, for 27 nonpartisan individuals. At the same time this government cut the STEP program, which nonprofit and volunteer organizations relied on to provide programs for families. To the Minister of Human Services: why does this government insist on funding self-serving projects rather than organizations that support families and communities across Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: What an absurd context that he's put around a very important question. The important part of that question was about the STEP program. The absurdity is talking about an internship program which allows young Albertans to come in and understand the workings of government, young Albertans from all political backgrounds, I might add. [interjections] If he wants the proof of that, I can show him that because some of those interns have been very active in other political processes. But that's not the important thing. [interjections] The important thing is that young Albertans have the opportunity to get an internship in government, understand the workings of government, and take that very good . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre, you had your chance. If you want another chance, let's please abide by the rules of decorum here.

Also, while I'm on my feet, I might add that there are a number of side conversations going on over here and a number of them going on over there. Sometimes it's difficult to hear each other think. I know that we might not like questions, the way they're phrased. I know we might not like answers, the way they're given. But the people giving them have the right to give them and to ask them in their own words, so let's give them the respect, shall we? That would be very refreshing.

Are we ready to carry on? Let us proceed, then. The hon. member.

Student Ministerial Internship Program (continued)

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A special STEP program just for Tories.

Given the difficult position that nonprofit and voluntary organizations are in because of this PC government's budget cuts and given that this government chose to fund its own 27 interns, to the same minister: do you find it a little hypocritical to tell organizations across Alberta that you can't afford to pay for their interns while you happily use public dollars to pay for yours?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, again, the hon. member provokes. The response clearly indicates that internships across government, both ministerial interns and departmental interns, are very important ways of ensuring that young people get an opportunity to get experience, and that's a very educational process.

But I would answer the hon. member's question. We have, in fact, very much appreciated the opportunity for other organizations to have internship programs, and that's why my department has partnered with Enterprise and Advanced Education to increase the funding available for SCIP so that Volunteer Alberta can provide internship programs to not-for-profits all across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. SCIP and STEP are two totally different programs, Minister.

Given that cutting programs, which hurts communities, means this government is actually putting Albertan families last and given that the government's priority is itself and not families and communities, when the opposition raised serious concerns about priorities, this minister's response is not to answer questions but to asphyxiate us with large volumes of hot air.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps that could be another carbon capture and storage project.

The opportunities for young Albertans to learn about voluntary organizations and understand the career in a voluntary organization is very important to this government. That's why we're working with Volunteer Alberta, and that's why we're working with voluntary organizations across the province, to ensure that that part of the STEP program continues. The STEP program itself was cancelled, yes. It was cancelled because employment opportunities for young Albertans wasn't the priority. There are lots of employment opportunities, but learning how to work in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Agriculture and Rural Development Policy Adviser

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope to tone down things here a little bit.

Last summer the agriculture minister found himself in a bit of hot water when the media revealed that Evan Berger, the former ag minister, was hired by the ag department to be a senior policy adviser. My questions are to the current agriculture minister. Could he remind us why he decided to hire Mr. Berger, and can he tell us how Mr. Berger has been doing in his role as a policy adviser now that he's held the job for some nine months?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One would have hoped for a question about policy, but we'll address this question. I do wonder, however, if perhaps the question was written by or the hon. member was assisted by one of the failed candidates who is working for his caucus. Nonetheless, the person in question does not report to me. He reports to an assistant deputy minister. That group does great policy work, and I'm very happy with the work that they do.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our employees don't have a cooling-off period.

Can the minister commit to tabling some of the examples of, I quote, the innovative, leading-edge, written policy advice he has received from Mr. Berger, or has all the advice been oral? If so, can the minister tell us on which topics he gets advice from Mr. Berger?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's staff also doesn't get preapproved by the Ethics Commissioner, and that's what happened in this particular case. This person was not hired until after the Ethics Commissioner had approved the position.

The evidence of the good work that Mr. Berger is doing as well as my staff is all over the place. It's in the Growing Forward agreement we just entered into with the federal government, a new five-year agreement that we're very proud of, also CEDA negotiations, farm safety, rat policy, and on we go.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Mr. Berger earns about the equivalent of a ministerial salary, can the minister assure us that Albertans are getting good value for money for his continued employment?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that Mr. Berger earns a salary which is similar to that of an executive manager. I am no more going to be providing particular evidence of one employee of my department, this one in particular, than I am any of the rest of the 1,600. They all do good work, and I'm proud of the work they all do.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister for Edmonton-South West, followed by Medicine Hat.

Missing Persons

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May 5 through May 11 is Missing Persons Week. This important week is a time for us to reflect on what we can do as individuals and as a government to help. As a father of two young daughters I can't even fathom what it would be like if they were to go missing. This week's remarkable rescue in Ohio of three women who had been missing for over a decade renews hope for those that are still missing, like Shelley-Anne Bacsu of Hinton, who has not been seen for over 30 years, and Lyle and Marie McCann, who went missing in 2010. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: what is our government doing to help reunite families and friends with their missing loved ones?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for that question, particularly given that this week is, in fact, Missing Persons Week. One of the things that I want to highlight to him is the Amber Alert program, which began in this province in 2002. One of the success stories includes the return to her home of a 16-year-old with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder in Edmonton two years ago. This isn't just the work of legislators, Mr. Speaker. It's also the work of the police services in this province, and we have to give them a sincere thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. It's pretty clear that the police agencies do an amazing job when looking for missing people. I don't want to deflect from that, but what role does our government play, specifically the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One very important initiative was the enactment last year of the Missing Persons Act, and I thank the former Minister of Justice for passing that particular act. This legislation actually gives police the tools to deal with missing persons matters, gets them information ahead of time while respecting people's privacy. It is the first such stand-alone legislation in the entire country, but it's not going to be the last. I've spoken to Manitoba's Attorney General, who has indicated to me that he has significant interest in this particular area and plans to pass similar legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that these situations have a reaching range of people they affect, what about the families and friends of missing people? What services does our government provide to help them during and after to cope with this incredibly tough situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much again, Mr. Speaker. Victims continue to be a priority for this government, especially with the passage of Bill 16, the Victims Statutes Amendment Act, 2013, which improves services to victims throughout this province. I note that it was actually passed with the support of both sides of the House. Particularly, this year we're also providing $12.9 million to support the 76 police-based programs that operate victims' services units across the province. There's still more work to be done, but we've paved some good ground here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Support for the Film Industry

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased to see this House pass my private member's motion to restore a competitive film tax credit. A competitive film tax credit will bring back a fair, honest system that all Alberta film and television producers can benefit from and eliminate this government's habit of picking winners and losers in the industry. To the Minister of Culture: since this motion has received support from all parties, when can we expect to see your government take action and implement it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was indeed a robust debate on that motion. Of course, the motion is advice to the government. The Alberta multimedia development fund is already doing tremendous work in the film, television, and digital media industry. We know there are many solutions to funding out there such as public-private partnerships. We know that the funding model that we have right now with the Alberta multimedia development fund is working.

Mr. Pedersen: To the same minister: given that the current system of film grants has resulted in anti-Alberta projects like Dirty Oil receiving tax dollars with the minister's approval, doesn't she see the fairness and opportunity in broad-based relief as opposed to direct subsidies and support from taxpayers for individual projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, there are many production companies, and when they apply for films or television, it's not for me to judge the interest and the passion out there that a production company may have. At the end of the day it's about job creation, it's about diversification, and it's about encouraging our students who are at NAIT or at SAIT or at Red Deer College to go into a profession like film, television, or digital media and stay in Alberta and achieve their dreams and work on a crew and be part of something really awesome.

Mr. Pedersen: To the same minister: given that a local president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees said that this motion "is a turning point for [the Alberta film] industry as never before have we had such strong support from the legislature," can you give Alberta film and television workers a firm date by which they can expect your government to take action and restore fairness in their industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Film Advisory Council currently is doing a lot of excellent work and having conversations with a number of individuals just about the choices out there, whether it's public-private partnerships, whether it's AMDF, or whether it's a tax credit. At the end of the day it's about ensuring that these films are filmed here. This fund is not about choosing winners or losers. It's about funding the right things that need to be done and encouraging the jobs to stay here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Slave Lake Housing Needs

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of homes were lost in Lesser Slave Lake during the wildfires we had. Our government made a swift decision to purchase over 400 manufactured homes and ship them to the area for those in need. I understand that the housing authority will no longer be placing people in units as they become vacant even though there is a drastic need for housing in the area. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why is it that we can't use those units that are there in Slave Lake for the people of Slave Lake as well as the MD of Lesser Slave River?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The units in question were always intended to be short-term housing to be used in a time of crisis and to help the community transition back to success given that this was one of the greatest disasters the province of Alberta has ever experienced. Now, the community, particularly the Tri-Council, has done an amazing job of helping the community to recover, rebuilding housing because the demand for affordable housing is on the decline. Currently in the province of Alberta we are developing a comprehensive real estate strategy that will recognize the need for temporary units across the province and help us work on a strategy for housing province-wide.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the minister for that answer. However, given the fact that we made such a big deal with the Tri-Council being involved in all decisions regarding the recovery, why are they not being consulted in the decision to remove these units or in the exit strategy or to even be involved so that they can become part of the solution rather than part of the problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've consulted with the Tri-Council from the very beginning. They have done an exceptional job of working together to help rebuild the community. When affordable housing and crisis housing was necessary for the community immediately after the fire, we consulted with the Tri-Council, who helped us work out the strategy for how many houses were needed, how we were going to develop them in the community, and how we were going to transition through this period of rebuilding the community. We'll continue to work with the Tri-Council and the local housing authority to address the needs in the community. We're going to continue to discuss when it comes to these transitional housing units and the province-wide strategy to make sure they're utilized in the best possible way.

Ms Calahasen: To the same minister, then, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that these trailers . . .

Some Hon. Members: Trailers for sale or rent.

Ms Calahasen: My poor Roger Miller song.

To the same minister: given the fact that these trailers will be moved eventually and that there's such a housing need in a constituency such as mine, why – why – can't you consider providing these units to those authorities or communities who are needing them?

2:40

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we take all of this very seriously. We're aware of the housing needs in Slave Lake. We know that the local housing authority manages those housing needs exceptionally well in working with partnerships throughout the community and throughout the region. There's a need for affordable housing all over this province because we have such a fast-growing economy and so many new people moving here, which is why we're working on a long-term, comprehensive, province-wide strategy to address this. These units as well as other units around the province will be accorded through a province-wide strategy to address every community's needs where possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government doesn't like to answer questions about electricity. The maximum generation capacity of Alberta is 14,400 megawatts, and the average demand is 8,000 megawatts. Given that there is clearly more supply of electricity than demand, why has the monthly average price for wholesale electricity gone from $65 to $93 a megawatt?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, there are days when I feel like all I do is answer questions about electricity from this member.

One has to be fair minded about this. You have to look at a series of months. Actually, what ordinary consumers pay is not the wholesale price. Rather, they pay a price which I would observe is considerably lower each month this year than it was last year. It's right in the middle of the pricing of electricity right across this country. It's a fair price.

Mr. Anglin: Let's put this in context here. Given that ratepayers paid to the generators of Alberta on average $400 million per month for all of last year, how does this minister justify the increase now that Albertans have been paying $600 million per month to the generators for 2013?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, one can cherry-pick and try and pick apples, oranges, or whatever fruit one wishes in terms of trying to compare different numbers, but the facts don't lie. The facts are that we have fair pricing for electricity in Alberta. We have consistent delivery of electricity in Alberta. As the hon. member noted himself in his opening comments, we have tremendous capacity in this province to ensure that Albertans are well served and that when they turn the light switch on, it goes on.

Mr. Anglin: We're not talking about apples and oranges; we're talking about electricity.

Given that Alberta ratepayers will pay the generators $850 million for selling this electricity for the month of April and given that Albertans are on track to pay the generators $1.9 billion for the month of May, would another minister like to pinch-hit and tell Albertans how wonderful this electricity market is working for Albertans?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, it's easy to pick numbers out of the air and try and turn them into facts. Actually, if you look at the history, if you look at the performance – and I'd be happy to share this information subsequently – if you look at the rates that Albertans pay, they are fair. They're in the middle of the pack in terms of the rates that other Canadians pay if you look at comparable jurisdictions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today.

Statements by the Speaker

Timers in Question Period

Use of Another Member's Letterhead

The Speaker: Just two quick notices here before we go on and continue with the introduction of guests, even if it's just for the record at this stage. One, the Speaker did not hear the real bell when it apparently went off right when I stood to recognize the last questioner primarily because of an increased level of noise in the Assembly. However, I did hear a subsequent bell at 2:42. I believe it came from the northwest corner. This has happened all too frequently. If someone has a bell that rings to signal their particular version of when question period ends, I'd ask you to please silence it because it is distracting.

The other point is that this is a very busy Chamber even when we're not sitting in it, hon. members. While most of you are here and paying rapt attention, let me say this. We get a number of groups who come and visit. They tour through the Assembly. They walk through the Assembly. We have MLA for a Day, where every single seat is taken up by a student, for example. These students move around. They have their own materials. And it is very possible sometimes during Committee of the Whole that members go and sit in each other's desks.

As a result of that, I'm thinking someone may have inadvertently picked up another person's letterhead and perhaps mistakenly used it as their own. Or not. Nonetheless, it has come to the Speaker's attention that there has been a little bit of a note exchange going on, perhaps attributed to those whose name is on the letterhead but not necessarily to those who signed the notes. If that happened directly, inadvertently, or in a joking fashion or whatever, I would ask you to please stop that because it has offended some members, and I've received notes to that effect. They're not in on the joke the way some of you are.

That having been said, let us continue on.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I will recognize Edmonton-Ellerslie for your introduction.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you an outstanding individual, Mr. Khan Virk. He has been a very active volunteer in the community for many, many years. He was heavily involved with soccer in the city of Edmonton, serving on the board of EDSA, and is currently involved with the Mini World Cup. He has also been a very active member of the Millwoods Cultural Society of Retired and Semi Retired as their vice-president. I've known Mr. Virk ever since we came to Canada, and he's always been Uncle Virk to me. He's joined here today by his grandson Rocky. At this time I'd ask both of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

We have the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is Canada's largest beef-producing province, and the beef industry is a cornerstone of our agricultural industry and our agricultural economy. The Alberta Beef Producers are a strong voice for that industry, for their members, and they're an important partner with us in maintaining sustainability and competitiveness for our beef industry. We have with us today four representatives of the Alberta Beef Producers: the chair, Doug Sawyer; the vice-chair, Greg Bowie; the finance chair, John Buckley; and their executive director, Rich Smith. They've been watching these proceedings for the last hour or so. They're standing now in the members' gallery. I'd ask that hon. members welcome them.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by St. Albert.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly one of my constituents in Edmonton-Whitemud, Alice Ayre. This is Alice's first time in the House, and she's indicated that she wanted to come and see the procedures and how business is conducted. She's seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that Alice rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to rise and introduce to you and through you a fine young man from Norrköping, Sweden. Karl Waszkiewicz is with the almost 60 fine kids from the Rotary International group that's visiting us today. Karl has almost spent a full year in St. Albert. He's attending high school at Bellerose. I have it on good authority, as he's living with his rotary family, Rob and Cathy Heron, who are very good friends of mine, that Karl is an outstanding young man, they assure me, and he is setting a very good example for their young children. I'd like to ask my colleagues in the House to recognize a fine young man with their warm traditional greeting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a lady who I have the utmost respect for. My first opportunity to get to know her was when she was the mayor of Lacombe. I had the tremendous opportunity of learning from her when I sat on Lacombe's Economic Development Board. She has had an incredible impact on our community both as mayor and MLA. Mrs. Judy Gordon, thank you for all you have done for Alberta and for our community. I'd ask that Mrs. Gordon please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy today to have guests again in the gallery, this time for the second reading of the Children First Act. These individuals have played a vital partnership role with government in the past and will be engaged throughout the next year, as will all Albertans, as we look forward to focus on the children's agenda.

With us today are members of the Alberta Foster Parent Association: Sylvia Thompson, Linda Krauskopf, Katherine Jones, and Norm Brownell. I'd ask them to stand, please, as I call their names. We also have Carolyn Goard, the acting executive director of the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters; and Christie Lavan, also with the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters; Sergeant Gary Willits, the child at risk response team, Edmonton Police Service; Deb Cautley from the Youth Empowerment & Support Services society; Val Campbell, chair of the death review committee working group and a Crown prosecutor. From the Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research: Leslie Twilley; Christine Werk, who is also a constituent in Edmonton-Whitemud; Cecilia Bukutu; Jo Lamba; and Robyn Blackadar.

Again, today we have with us Marie Whelan, who, as I mentioned yesterday, was the principal at St. Mary and now at Monsignor Fee Otterson and is the inspiration for me behind the Children First Act. With Marie today is her daughter Karen Keats, who also is an educator with the Edmonton public system, I believe. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and a thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 54 enthusiastic, intelligent, awesome Rotary youth exchange students who are living in Alberta for one year. The students come from Asia, Europe, South America, and all parts of Canada. Canadian students are preparing for their exchange next year. I had the pleasure of speaking with them this morning, but I'm sure the highlight for them was meeting the Premier. I'm pleased to welcome the students along with their Rotarians: Phil Hochhausen, Wayne McCutcheon, Ron Prokosch, Rick Istead, Donna Johnson, and Doug Campbell. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Assisted Living Facilities in Brooks

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seated in the gallery today are a group of brave individuals who travelled all the way up from Brooks to get this government's attention on an issue that is near and dear to their hearts. They are here to talk about the quality of care their loved ones, patients, are receiving while living in facilities that are supposed to be regulated and supervised by the government.

They shared their stories with the media earlier today, and they are truly heartbreaking to hear. I won't go into too much detail, Mr. Speaker, but here is a sampling. A lady told us about the care in the same facilities in 2011. She said that her mother was hospitalized after she had fallen in a hallway. The staff did not call for an ambulance but, instead, waited until the next day when her mother could not get out of bed. She suffered a cracked kneecap and torn ligaments as well as facial bruising. She was hospitalized for six weeks. She now requires a walker, something she didn't require prior to her fall. Why do these kinds of things happen without the minister intervening and holding anyone responsible?

This is just one story of dozens that have transpired in these facilities.

Even staff at the facilities have been afraid to speak out for fear of reprisal. Some have been terminated for voicing their concerns, and others can't take it anymore. That's why they're here. Their concerns and stories have been made known to the government through the proper channels, through contact with elected officials, and even through official complaints under the Protection for Persons in Care Act dating back to 2011. They are not getting anywhere. They are not here to point fingers, Mr. Speaker. They're here for answers. They're here to demand action. They're here because they have nowhere else left to go.

This government is tasked with ensuring basic standards for quality of care and is failing these people that they love. I applaud their courage, and I'm proud to stand with them in demanding answers and actions. We will be at your office shortly, Mr. Health Minister, to give you another formal complaint and to get your assurance that you will investigate the employees who were terminated, who brought their concerns forward, and assure the employees who are here that they will not be terminated for speaking out.

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Support for Municipalities

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipalities provide Albertans with the important day-to-day services we all rely on – transit, roads, sidewalks, snow removal, libraries, water, sewage, and garbage disposal – yet they receive the least amount of funding of the three orders of government. In fact, municipalities only receive 10 per cent of the tax dollar but provide 90 per cent of the services. This creates an unfair relationship of dependency and saps municipal autonomy. Municipalities need local revenues to fund local priorities.

Mr. Speaker, the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary have been calling for a city charter which would give them the tools and resources to deliver services, programs, and infrastructure. Clearly, the Minister of Municipal Affairs does not realize most Albertans call Calgary or Edmonton their home, nor does he appreciate the fact that Edmonton has 10 times the population of the third-largest city in Alberta. Many people who do not live within the municipal boundaries of the two largest cities still rely on Edmonton and Calgary for core services, and no matter where Albertans live, they must come to these two cities to receive specialized services. Calgary and Edmonton are asking to be recognized as distinct, distinct in their size and in the way they contribute to Alberta culturally, socially, and economically.

The minister wants a civic charter to apply to more than just the two largest cities. He wants it to apply to all municipalities, but he's missing the point. The purpose of a big-city charter is to recognize the unique role big cities play. Despite how the minister may feel, every municipality is not the same. A summer village is not the same as a city of 1 million people. Mr. Speaker, it's time to treat Edmonton and Calgary as world-class cities and give them the authority, ability, and autonomy to meet the growing needs of their communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Education Week

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week marks Education Week in Alberta, and it gives me great pleasure to rise today and celebrate Alberta's education system, which many feel is one of the best in the English-speaking world. But even with those ringing endorsements, we are working hard to make our education system even better so that we can be certain our schools are preparing students for tomorrow.

When our government worked with Albertans to develop Inspiring Education, they told us that our education system must be flexible, innovative, and focused on the student, and they told us that we should encourage engaged thinkers and ethical citizens with an entrepreneurial spirit. We listened, Mr. Speaker, and we are taking action to bring Inspiring Education to life.

One initiative that I would like to highlight today is the high school flexibility enhancement project. Since the 2008-2009 school year the Ministry of Education has been working collaboratively with the principals and superintendents of 16 high schools to study the 25-hour-per-credit requirement and the effect of its removal on high school organization and program delivery. This morning, Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Education announced an expansion of this project, which will give all high schools in Alberta the opportunity to participate. This will increase opportunities for high school students to learn any time, any place, and at any pace. After all, the students must remain our focus, and they are the heart of our efforts in Inspiring Education.

I look forward to continuing to see the ways that Inspiring Education is coming to life in my constituency, Mr. Speaker. I would like to wish everyone a happy Education Week.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader has caught my attention because it is coming up to 3 o'clock.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that we forgo 7(7) for the time being and finish the business in front of us before we go to Orders of the Day.

The Speaker: Hon. members, unanimous consent is required and requested. Does anyone object to us granting unanimous approval to continue on with the Routine until finished? If you object, please say so now.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Let us continue on. The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Sherwood Park.

Continuing Care Facilities

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Associate Minister of Seniors and I along with mayors and reeves in my constituency announced the opening of the new Points West Living in my constituency. Every Albertan regardless of age or circumstances should have a place they are proud to call home. But welcoming spaces like this don't just happen. They are built, supported, and maintained by committed staff, loving families, visionary leaders, and an engaged community. All of those have certainly come together at Points West Living. Here the residents are able to receive the care and the support they need and continue thriving in the community. The Alberta government is proud to be a partner in this facility.

This new supportive living centre will add 42 new designated supportive living spaces in Cold Lake. An additional 10 spaces will be independent living spaces. The facility will provide new, modern, homelike accommodations and expanded supportive living options. We are pleased to provide $3.7 million to the affordable supportive living initiative to support this project.

We remain committed to increasing the supply of affordable supportive living spaces for Alberta's seniors and vulnerable people. Within the past two years alone we partnered with voluntary and private providers to open more than 2,100 continuing care spaces province-wide. These spaces allow more seniors to get the care they need closer to home while staying connected to their families, friends, and communities. This is a priority for Albertans and is a priority for our government.

Congratulations on the opening of Points West in Cold Lake.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Bitumen Royalty in Kind Review

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to commend the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future for their review of the BRIK program and, of course, our chairman, the Member for Calgary-East. I think the review shed needed light on the importance of upgrading, refining, the capture of value-added in Alberta, and the benefits of further processing in Alberta in so many ways.

As the chairman of North West Upgrading pointed out, Alberta would have made $500 million more in 2012 had their BRIK allocation program been up and running. Other benefits include improving the market for bitumen, taking supply off the market, improving prices for western Canada select, and nailing market share for improved Alberta production before the markets are dominated by other players.

The review overturned some of the myths about the profitability and impact of processing in Alberta. It also improved the understanding of members of the committee and hopefully this entire House on a number of current issues relating to our oil and gas industry moving forward.

It also pointed out how the regulatory approvals need to be streamlined, which supports our implementation of a new single regulator as per the Responsible Energy Development Act.

The report identifies some areas where further research may be required such as the capacity of our watershed to deliver the quantities of processed water.

The North West Upgrader project alone quantified some of the benefits: 1,300 engineers and accountants currently working on the design; 8,000 construction jobs; 350 specialists; a $4.6 billion impact to the Albertan economy in the construction phase, generating over $400 million in provincial taxes and over $900 million in federal tax.

Value-added processing is about capturing the potential of Alberta's resources for Albertans and growing our economy so we can provide the high-quality services and supports Albertans deserve.

Congratulations to the committee, and thank you so much to all staff and presenters for your valuable insights.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Calgary Access Awareness Week

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Access Awareness Week, a valiant effort by many people to raise awareness of people living with a disability and the barriers and challenges they face. Calgary Access Awareness Week promotes a barrier-free society for all citizens of Calgary, whether that is transportation, employment, recreation, education, or communication.

Today I had the privilege of being selected along with Joy Bowen-Eyre, a Calgary board of education trustee, and Calgary alderman Diane Colley-Urquhart to become image-makers for the day by simulating living with a disability.

It is said that to truly understand someone, one should take a walk in their shoes. Well, today, Mr. Speaker, I wheeled in someone's chair. It was quite an eye-opener, and I have a much better understanding of the unique situations people with disabilities face as well as the things that I often took for granted. It gives me an entirely new level of respect for the Member for Calgary-Buffalo and the challenges he must overcome daily in simply navigating the Legislature Grounds. Whether it be a long wait for an accessible vehicle this morning to be transported here to the Legislature, the fact that I needed someone to carry my coffee, open a drawer, open a door, or even move items in my office just to allow me access to my desk, it has been an enlightening experience to say the least.

Since becoming elected, as the Official Opposition Human Services critic I have had the privilege of meeting with many people who share the values of the week of awareness, and we are working together to create a world where people are not seen for what they cannot do but, rather, for what they can contribute.

Access Awareness Week has been successful in accomplishing its statement of purpose, in particular working towards providing a means by which the disabled community can speak for itself and have a voice of its own.

I would like to recognize all the volunteers, organizers, and participants involved in this year's Access Awareness Week. Alberta is a more inclusive, welcoming place because of your contributions, and I thank you for all that you do.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Bill 22

Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 22, the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a commitment to consult with aboriginal people when land management and resource development decisions may adversely impact their existing treaty or other constitutional rights. Bill 22 is enabling legislation that fully respects First Nations treaty rights and provides First Nations people an opportunity to be more engaged in the consultation process for their benefit and for the benefit of all Albertans.

First Nations and industry have indicated that there is a lack of funding and capacity for some First Nations to do a proper job on consultation. Bill 22 will ensure that the proper funding is in place to build capacity so First Nations can be fully engaged in the consultation process. Bill 22 will ensure that the consultation is open and transparent for the benefit of all parties. Overall, this bill would help us to make significant steps forward in Alberta's management of the consultation process and in our duty to consult with First Nations people.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. First of all, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition which calls on the PC government to protect the rights of injured workers by amending the Workers' Compensation Act. I am tabling 52 signatures today.

The second tabling is a letter to the Premier sent from the president of the Alberta College of Social Workers, raising their organization's opposition to the substantial cuts to the persons with developmental disabilities community access program. The letter points out that in the government's own social policy framework "the principle of inclusion is identified as a fundamental belief of both the government and Albertans." However, cutting the program, which promotes community access and social inclusion for persons with developmental disabilities, is very much contrary to this principle. The concerns voiced in this letter show that this government can't be trusted to protect Alberta's most vulnerable citizens.

The final tabling, Mr. Speaker, relates to documents referred to by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in his question today, and it includes the appropriate number of copies of a list of the member organizations of the Energy Policy Institute of Canada, the organization for which the new chair of REDA, Mr. Protti, is now a lobbyist. It's quite interesting. He was such a good lobbyist that he was actually given the job of overseeing energy development and environmental road bumps in the province. He did a brilliant job for energy. Unfortunately, the minister has failed in an epic way on behalf of the people of all Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is an e-mail from one of my constituents, Mark Heseltine, who is writing with great passion about the cuts to the 50-year-old music enrichment program. He just feels that if there was something wrong with the program, it would've failed, you know, before, but it's managed to get through 50 years. It is one with an important history, and it does build a civil and richer society.

The second tabling I have is a report created by the Edmonton-Centre constituency office. We have received a number of letters supporting the music enrichment program and asking that it be restored. Rather than tabling all of the letters, I have just produced a report for you with the text of the letter and the names of everyone we've received so far.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table the requisite number of copies of a letter I've written to the Member for Calgary-Shaw in response to Question 38, which was accepted as amended in the House a few days ago. Attached to the letter is the table of that data which he requested. At the same time, the Member for Edmonton-Centre had indicated that there was other information that she would like to have associated to it, and I assume that she will get in touch with my office in written form so I can know precisely what that information is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter from Carolyn Pogue of Calgary, who heads up the child well-being initiative, in response to the minister's new Bill 25, asking the question: what does it actually mean to put children first when 91,000 children, twice the number five years ago, are in poverty, teachers are giving their lunches to children obviously in need, and Inn from the Cold housed last week at their church 23 homeless guests, of which 14 were children?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General I have two tablings. The first tabling today is a book authored by Sherri-Lee James and Susan M. Rowe titled For the Love of My Boys: A Mother's Story of Parent Alienation and Abuse. Victimization occurs far too often through physical abuse, mental abuse, spousal abuse, and many other ways. It's important that we recognize how destructive abuse can be, not just to victims but society as a whole. I have the appropriate number of copies here to table.

My second tabling on behalf of the minister is the Alberta Justice and Solicitor General victims' services status report, 2011-12. This report indicates that a total of $13,055,413 was provided to eligible victims of crime by the financial benefits program during this period, and I have the appropriate number of copies to table.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter that I read last night during debate on Bill 24. I'd like to table those today. It is from one of my constituents, who is a director on the condominium board of Prince of Peace Village near Chestermere. I have brought those today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Let us move on. We have three points of order. The first one was raised at approximately 2:02 or 2:03 by the Government House Leader.

If you would like to proceed with your point of order, we would welcome it.

Mr. Hancock: I'd withdraw it, Mr. Speaker. There were so many objectionable things that happened today, I can't remember which one I raised the point of order on.

The Speaker: If I read you correctly, Government House Leader, you are withdrawing your point of order. Thank you. I see a nod, so that first point of order is cancelled.

The second point of order was raised at approximately 2:19:30 by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Do you wish to proceed with your point of order?

Point of Order Anticipation

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief, and perhaps, you know, this is just an opportunity to clarify it. I rise under 23(e), which is the provision that states that it is not proper to anticipate "contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day."

There was a question that referred to subject matter which pertains to Bill 25, which, if you look at the Order Paper, is slated to be discussed today in second reading. I don't want to belabour the point, but it might be an opportunity for clarification.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Anyone from the government side?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I think I'm the next point of order.

The Speaker: Yes, you are.

Ms Blakeman: So perhaps rather than having a whole other point of order, I'll just support my colleague here with the citation on anticipation. It's something that I've been increasingly noticing happen, and in my day I was taught not to do that, so I rose to point out that anticipation was happening here. That appears under our Standing Order 23(e). Now, if we have it in our rules, that's the first rule that we follow. If we don't have it and it's silent, then we tend to move up to Beauchesne's, in which we find anticipation rules under 512 to 514, or even up to Erskine May, pages 327 and 334 to 335, all of them commenting on the same thing. If there is going to be something on the Order Paper, we should not be using question period because there is another opportunity to raise it.

I in fact checked the Order Paper, and indeed on the back page, page 4, right there under Wednesday, May 8: afternoon, Government Bills and Orders, second reading, Bill 25. Then I thought: well, you know, these get out of date really quickly if we move a bit faster. So I pulled the instructions that I received on the proposed order of business for Wednesday, May 8, subject to progress and as per the Order Paper, that is received from the director of legislative affairs, I'm guessing, and indeed: Wednesday, May 8, afternoon, second reading, Bill 25, the Children First Act, moved by the minister for children's services.

Indeed, I know that every member of the government caucus is provided with what they call the blue sheets or whatever, that outline for them exactly what bills are expected to be brought up by the government that day. So the member for Calgary-Cross was more than aware, in the point of order that I was raising, that that was going to be on the Order Paper and, I'm sure, given her seniority in this House, understood the concept of anticipation, that we were going to be discussing it in the afternoon given that the government has clearly got it marked everywhere to be discussed.

If I could just get a bit more comprehension about the concept of anticipation and not have government members using their precious time to raise issues that are, in fact, scheduled to be on the Order Paper later that day, that would be a wonderful thing, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting because usually this is the point of order that I would be raising on the opposition when they bring up questions relative to a budget that's going to be discussed in estimates later that day, the difference, of course, being that usually when they're raising the issues with respect to budget, they're asking about specific numbers and those sorts of things, which are actually the purview of the questions that should be coming up in estimates.

Now, in today's question the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross was not actually asking things that were directly related to the establishment of a review committee in the bill. The bill actually provides for the establishment – and we'll be debating that later on today, hopefully – of the death review committee. It sets up the purpose of the committee, and it sets up the establishment of the committee and the role of the committee and the mandate and all those sorts of good things. What it doesn't talk about is dating violence, which was the interest that was raised by the hon. member. What it doesn't raise in the bill is the impact on children. Of course, it talks about family violence and intimate partner violence. Well, actually it doesn't reference intimate partner violence, but I referenced that in my speech yesterday.

The hon. member had the opportunity to raise a question and wanted to know about the impact not of what is being established here for the purpose and mandate that's in there but how it might relate to other aspects that are not part of the bill: how children might be affected and how it might be utilized in that area and the area of dating violence, which is a very important topic for Albertans today. Questions that come close – just because the family violence death review committee is in the bill that's being discussed today, it doesn't anticipate. It's a different part of the policy discussion, which the hon. member is certainly entitled to ask.

The Speaker: Are there others?

I, too, will be mercifully brief on this, I hope. Standing Order 23(e) is certainly very clear about the definition of anticipation. It says that a member will be called to order if that member "anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day." Then, of course, it leaves it up to the interpretation, usually, of the Speaker to determine whether or not anticipation has occurred.

I have the benefit of the Blues as they were. I note that in the first question the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross talked about family violence, about orphans, about a proposed family violence death review committee, homicides, and suicides. The minister responded with comments pertaining to family violence and family violence prevention and aggressors and so on.

In the second question the Member for Calgary-Cross talked about tragedies and partner relationships failing and something to do with dating violence. The minister responded with his sadness at the increasing number of violent incidents, and the debate goes on, talking about bullying and so on.

Then when we get to the final question, we have the Member for Calgary-Cross asking a legitimate question about a strong group of people in the community who are already working hard to prevent family violence, and she tossed a question to the minister as follows: "How is the death review committee going to work with the communities without overlapping their efforts?" Now, up until that point there was no reference whatsoever to anything that's on the Order Paper that I'm aware of although I have to confess that I have not yet had a chance to read thoroughly the Children First Act, which was tabled yesterday. It's 70 pages long, and I'll be reading it, I guess, tonight. But I didn't see anything out of the ordinary there.

I have cautioned individuals in the House before about anticipation, particularly when we were talking about budget estimates. When departments were up for review for a three-, four-, five-, six-hour period, it would be inappropriate to ask money questions about a department whose estimates were up that evening. I did note that in earlier sessions, which some of us were here for, in 1998, which is one example, Speaker Kowalski, my predecessor, at the time gave quite a speech about this. I'll just read you a couple of sentences from that because it's still what guides me and the Clerk and his table around this matter of anticipation. Here's what Mr. Kowalski said on March 3, 1998, regarding anticipation:

I've indicated time and time again in this House that this chair will provide a wider rather than a narrower interpretation in dealing with subject matters. This chair will give the greatest degree of flexibility to private members when they choose to rise in this particular Assembly. In this case, if the questions would have been of a debating nature and we would have got into a debate on the bill, then the chair would have risen and said that this precludes the opportunity we have in question period. However, in this case, the questions that were directed were framed with words such as: is it government policy? That, in the chair's subjective view, took it out of the realm of debate on a particular bill.

I think, Government House Leader, you raised an interesting point. Typically it would be someone from government raising this matter of anticipation, usually as a reminder to others, but that was not the case today. Two members rose almost simultaneously, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Centre. They do raise a good point because, at the end of it all, the third question, that I've already talked about, that was asked by Calgary-Cross was responded to by the Government House Leader in the following manner:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The family violence death review committee is something that the community and the stakeholders in this area have been asking for for a number of years. We've been working with the community in terms of developing a proposal for a family violence death review committee. If Bill 25 is passed by the Legislature, the community I believe will be very strongly supportive of us implementing what they've asked for.

It was at that point that the two points of order had been raised because some specific reference to a bill that's on the Order Paper was noted.

Nonetheless, I don't see anything having been violated here, and we're going to move on with that clarification.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 25

Children First Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour and a privilege to rise again today, this time to move second reading of Bill 25, the Children First Act.

In doing so, I again would like to acknowledge and thank our Premier for the emphasis that she's placed on early childhood development, early learning, the protection of children, and the opportunity for each and every child in Alberta to have the opportunity for success, the opportunity to reach potential, the opportunity to aspire to be the best that they can be. I'd like to thank my constituents and the Premier for entrusting me with a leadership role in helping to make that happen for Alberta's children.

I'd also like to acknowledge and thank Marie Whelan and Margo McGee. Marie is with us here today with her daughter Karen, as I introduced. Margo, unfortunately, couldn't be here. They gave me this Children First pin on the day that I was sworn in as Minister of Education in March 2008, a pin that I've worn every day since then as a constant reminder of where our priorities as individuals and as government should lie.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

At meetings people often ask what the pin is about. "Is it an organization or a program?" I'm pleased to respond: "No. It's our agenda. It's what we're about." Marie and Margo have been inspirations as models of loving and caring for children, whatever those children's gifts or attributes might be. It's fitting, then, that this pin and this act that I am moving share the name "Children First" in honour of Marie and Margo and the work that they do and that so many others in our community do to put children first and to make sure that children have the opportunity for success.

There is nothing more precious than a child, and that's why the well-being, safety, security, education, and health of our children are priorities for our Premier and our government. Those priorities are shared by many stakeholders and service delivery partners who've identified opportunities for enhancing the tools, processes, policies, and laws relating to the success of children. Their input is reflected in this act although I must say that this act is not complete. There is much more work to be done.

Two hundred and ten years ago William Wordsworth wrote these words: the child is the father of the man. He was right. In the intervening 22 decades evidence-based research has clearly shown that what we do with, for, and to our children will in great measure determine how they grow up and who they grow up to be as adults. That's why the Children First Act is so important.

The primary responsibility for the raising of children and the right to determine what's best for a child rests with parents. We know that the great majority of children in Alberta live in safe and caring environments, but even the strongest and the most caring of families will sometimes face crisis and challenge and will need help. One of the objectives of this act is to ensure that that help is there when and how it is needed to strengthen families and to protect children.

Unfortunately, not all children in Alberta are safe or cared for properly. Many live in situations of neglect or danger. When a child has been subject to or is at risk of serious harm or injury, time is of the essence. The people who are there to help a child need to work together to provide those wraparound services which understand the challenges of the family and the needs of the child and provide support and understanding.

The Children First Act has a preamble that sets the context, the values, and then provides four essential elements to give action to those values. The first calls for the creation of a children's charter that can be used to establish the principles, priorities, and roles and responsibilities pursuant to which individuals, families, communities, and governments engage and collaborate to ensure that each Albertan child and family has the opportunity to succeed.

The charter will be a living document that will continue to develop as we learn more about what our children need, when they need it, and have more evidence-based research to guide our decisions and direction. It will function as a lens through which programs, policies, and approaches can be evaluated before they are put in place and reviewed to ensure that they are achieving results. It will help to ensure that those who want what is best for our children are not working at crosspurposes and that what is done to solve a problem in one area doesn't create a problem in another area.

The second piece calls for a complete review of policies, programs, and services affecting children and reporting to the Legislature on that review. Child poverty will not be overcome without comprehensive action and focused effort and resources. While many great programs are working for children and families now, we need to ensure that we are deliberate and single-minded in our purpose. That means effective, comprehensive, coordinated, community-owned action guided by laws and policies which are purposely designed to achieve successful outcomes, not merely deal with the symptoms, as important as that work is.

The third provides a mandate for sharing information between parents and active partners in law enforcement, education, health, children's services, and service providers collaborating for the success of the child when dealing with the health, safety, education, or well-being of a child. Additional amendments to the FOIP Act and the Health Information Act will make it clear that a child does not have to be in imminent danger before information can be shared, changing the test to a risk of harm to the health and safety of the child. These provisions will undergo further scrutiny as those acts are reviewed and as we do the comprehensive review of laws relating to children. But we cannot ask police, educators, health professionals, and social workers to collaborate for kids' sake without providing a safe platform for them to share among themselves the necessary information to truly act in the best interests of the success of the child and the family.

We had with us yesterday Chief Hanson from Calgary, who has been a strong advocate for information sharing, and so many others have let us know over the years that one of the single greatest barriers to success in helping children is the inability of people working in the area to collaborate and share information. It's not that that's prohibited by the acts now, but we've created this climate of defaulting to no, and that's unnecessary and unreasonable.

The fourth key area under this act provides the Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research and the provincial Child and Youth Data Lab with greater access to information. This will enhance their work in analyzing crossprogram trends and make recommendations for improvement. Evidence-based decision-making and longitudinal analysis are extremely important to ensure that government and its partners have the information needed to make the right decisions and to adapt in an informed and meaningful way to change. Good data drives good decisions.

With these four key elements in place the act goes on to deal with some specific changes that our partners advised us on as we consulted about the children's agenda. These specific changes are the beginning, the work that could be accomplished immediately as we embark on the wholesale review through the provisions of this act and the learnings from the results-based budgeting project. The government of Alberta's approach to results-based budgeting will also help to ensure that programs that are designed to help in the positive development of our children actually produce the outcomes that we expect of them.

The Children First Act calls for changes to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act that will enable qualified, front-line workers to make timely decisions about the children they serve. We ask our staff to use their skills and judgment to help children and families, but then require them to adhere to policies and processes that tie their hands. Well, Mr. Speaker, rules are for when brains run out. We want our staff to be guided by experience, intellect, and the best practice but to put into effect their best efforts to help families achieve successful outcomes.

Consultation on this act revealed that current processes and policies have often prevented a timely or effective response. The provisions of this act will ensure that all who are mandated to act in the best interests of children will have comprehensive, timely, accurate, and valuable information with which to make their decisions.

The changes will also acknowledge the important role of foster parents and kinship care. We have some members of the Alberta Foster Parent Association with us today. We ask Albertans to take children into their families and homes and care for them as their own children, but we stop short of giving them the ability to do just that. In result, too often children in foster care see themselves as an extra, not as part of the family. We want to change that. We want foster parents and kinship parents to act as parents with as much authority as can be appropriately given.

After a year of independent operation as an officer of the Legislature the Child and Youth Advocate has requested changes to his act to further support his mandate. The Child and Youth Advocate Act will be amended at his request to enable the advocate to investigate serious injury or death of a young adult receiving post-18 care and maintenance. A second amendment will allow the advocate to provide information to an appeal panel on behalf of a child.

The government of Alberta believes that raising a child successfully requires a stable family, a caring and engaged community, and the enabling partnership of government. Family violence is one of the great challenges we face in creating a solid foundation for some of Alberta's children. The effect of family violence goes far beyond the family. Those children who experience family violence or who grow up in dysfunctional families are less likely to finish school, more likely to have addictions or other medical problems, less likely to be successful, more likely to end up living on the margins of society.

In many ways we also become what we behold. It's a sad fact that those who grow up in violent families often go on to replicate that violence in their own families. None of us can choose the families that we're born into; however, we can choose the types of families our children are born into if we have the right kind of help. The early intervention and supports that this act is meant to facilitate will help to break the cycle of family violence and help to create a better future both for the children in those families and the children of those children.

This act will amend several other statutes to provide more timely recalculation of support orders under the maintenance enforcement program and the payment recalculation program; to improve the offence provisions of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, the Drug-endangered Children Act, and the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act by removing the term "wilfully" to ensure that those who put children at risk are held accountable regardless of intent or motivation; to allow children under 12 the ability to appeal court orders under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and guardians to appeal permanent guardianship orders; to allow applications to be made to the victims of crime fund under the victims restitution act for the funding of counselling services for children who have been sexually exploited or otherwise made the victim of physical or mental harm due to crime.

Amendments will be made to the Protection Against Family Violence Act in two important areas. Family violence protection orders issued in other jurisdictions will be enforceable in Alberta to reduce risk, additional costs, and court appearances for those seeking similar protections that they had elsewhere in Canada and other reciprocal jurisdictions. Mr. Speaker, it means that the police will be able to rely on those family protection orders and help protect partners and children. A family violence death review committee will be established to review all family violence related deaths. The goal will be to identify trends, patterns, risk factors, and gaps in service to make recommendations for systemic change.

Mr. Speaker, death in the situation of family violence, intimate partner violence is a real tragedy, a tragedy for the families, a tragedy for kids that may be left behind, a tragedy for parents and others. But we compound that tragedy if we don't learn from it and understand how we could do better as a community, as a society to protect others from a similar fate.

The Children First Act acknowledges that children are the future of this province and that supporting children in becoming successful adults benefits society as a whole. The government of Alberta recognizes that children are the foundation for Alberta's future. That's why we have Alberta's Promise, dedicated to improving the lives of Alberta's children and youth. It does so by inspiring ideas, actions, and investment between our business, agency, and community partners to help build a brighter future for Alberta's children. Alberta's Promise brings together people, businesses, and not-for-profit organizations passionate about helping kids, and when we do, we keep our promise to Alberta's children and youth. I'm pleased to say that in this act Alberta's Promise will be extended for a further five years.

Mr. Speaker, a committed, cohesive, and caring society is one that puts children first. Through this act Alberta builds on our social policy framework by focusing on children first. Through it we show that our Premier and our government are committed to Alberta's children and that there truly is nothing more precious than a child. Because of this act I will be able to continue to wear my Children First pin proudly and continue to say that children first is our agenda. Alberta's children are Alberta's future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege for me to stand up and speak to Bill 25, the Children First Act, as the former children's services minister when I was with the government. Before I make any comments on the bill, I want to start off by first acknowledging the unbelievable staff that the minister has in his department. I've just started to read the bill, and if I may, I want to make a comment. You can see the footprint on this bill of every staff that I had the honour and privilege of working previously with when I was the minister.

I want to just make a comment on the minister that's bringing the bill forward because he and I go back a long way. I absolutely want to acknowledge his passion when it comes to protecting children in this province. I could probably go on and on about the fights that we used to have when he was the Justice minister and I was the Solicitor General, all the fights that we used to pick when the Liberal government was there at our federal-provincial-territorial meetings, and the passion that we both brought forward in regard to representing the province and not only representing our province but representing the children of this particular province.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, it's exciting to see this bill hit this Legislature floor. It has some 76 pages that I think need to be read through. I know that the minister will be more than willing to answer any questions that we have on this particular piece of legislation. I know in my heart the people that work in that department – and, quite frankly, I'm not afraid to say about the minister, knowing him, that in his heart he will be wearing his pin very proudly when he says “children first” because that's the type of person that he is.

There are things in this bill that I really like. What was nice to see and refreshing to see in this Bill 25, the Children First Act, is the preamble. The minister alluded to the preamble, and quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, this is the first government bill that I have seen in I don't know how long among bills that the government has tabled in the Legislature lately that has gone back to the preamble. I think preambles are important, especially in pieces of legislation that are affecting people's lives and children's lives on a daily basis.

The minister alluded in his speaking notes to how the bill is broken up in regard to the children's charter. He alluded to the family violence and things like that, but more important to me is how his department and the minister have captured under the preamble some of the statements that I think are important. It talks about:

Whereas the well-being, safety, security, education and health of children are priorities for Albertans;

I think you couldn't say anything more simply yet capture more in what he said in that particular preamble.

He goes on to talk about:

Whereas Albertans recognize that children are the future of the province and that ensuring that every child has the opportunity to become a successful adult will benefit society as a whole;

It goes on to say:

Whereas programs and services for children are most effective when they are provided through a collaborative and multi-disciplinary approach;

It goes on further:

Whereas the Government of Alberta is committed to working with individuals, families, communities, non-governmental organizations and the private sector, as well as with other governments, to support and create opportunities for children;

It continues on, Mr. Speaker.

Whereas sound, evidence based research . . .

And that's one of the things that I'm going to ask the minister about, his comments on the evidence-based research. This is just personal. I sometimes have a problem when we talk about evidence-based research because it depends on who has the evidence-based research. Sometimes I think we get boxed into what evidence-based research you're looking at, Minister. I know you have put a lot of time and energy into this because I know your work ethic, and I'd like to ask you, maybe as we go through the process of the bill, what you're talking about when you talk about:

. . . is critical in the design and development of effective actions to allow, encourage and support successful outcomes for children and families;

When I talk about evidence-based research, you know, just so the minister has an idea where I'm going on this, if you have an alcohol addiction problem, for example, AADAC follows the 12-step program. As a former drug and alcohol counsellor, that has been around for as long as I can remember, yet we've got some other addiction resources that don't necessarily follow the 12-step program. You might have a 16- or 17-year-old entering a drug and alcohol rehabilitation centre and not necessarily believing in the 12-step drug program, but they may have another program that they follow that could be just as effective as AADAC's 12-step program.

I look around at some of the family violence centres. I'm very involved with Youville women's residence, Discovery House – there are all sorts – and they all follow what they consider a successful model in what they're trying to do when they're trying to get women and children up and successful again. If we're talking about an evidence-based research model, are you using particular evidence from one area, or is it what is most successful? I always hate to see us getting boxed into some evidence-based research that could curtail what is being used successfully somewhere else.

You go on to talk about:

Whereas appropriate sharing of information between individuals and organizations planning or providing programs and services for children is critical to ensuring successful outcomes for children and families;

Well, the minister knows full well how long we have been trying to advocate in regard to the sharing of information. Both he as the Justice minister and I as the former Solicitor General and minister of children's services know how critical it would be to share information if you have a child that's in care. It might be sharing that information if there are some problems with the educational system, sharing some information with the police. So I like that. It's something that I've been advocating for many years. In fact, when I was chair of the safe communities task force, it was one of the recommendations that we put forward, so I'm quite pleased to see the minister include that in his preamble, to make it one of the priorities on where he's going to go on this particular legislation.

Some of the questions that we have about this particular legislation – and I shouldn't use the word “we,” but I personally because on this side of the House everybody, all of my colleagues, may have different questions on different pieces of the legislation, so it's up to them to speak.

We talk about the children's charter. I like the idea of a children's charter. I think that what the minister is trying to do when he talks about how the charter must recognize the following principles – and he's got five principles – captures what Albertans would like to see under a children's charter.

My concern about the charter – and the minister is certainly going to be able to respond back – is that he wants Bill 25 passed, and then he plans on going out and consulting with Albertans over the summer and probably the fall in regard to the children's charter. I'm a little uneasy that we're putting the cart before the horse. If we're putting what we want in the bill and what they want to see under the children's charter and then they want to go out and reach out to Albertans, does that mean that when we come back in the fall, we are going to see amendments brought forward to Bill 25? How are we going to do that? So I have some questions there.

The other thing that I have some concerns about – and I know that his department is listening, and they're going to provide the minister with answers – is that under the children's charter he's got: “the Minister may review the Children's Charter from time to time and amend or repeal and replace it as the Minister considers appropriate.”

Well, one of the things that I have learned in this Legislature, when I was with the government formerly and being on the legislative review committee – I can't even remember what it's called – was that the minister taught me the difference between “may” and “must,” small, little words. One is three letters; the other one is four letters. It's your complimenting day, Minister. The minister took me under his wing when he was the Justice minister and told me in his lawyerly talk, because I'm not a lawyer, how important it is that there is a difference between the words “may” and “must.”

Minister, I know your staff is listening, and I have some questions about the charter, so you can maybe get from them the answers to the questions I have. Under 2(3) you talk about how “the Minister may review the Children's Charter from time to time and amend or repeal and replace it as the Minister considers appropriate.” I guess my question is: why can't we make that a must? People change. Things change in this world. You and I go back a long time, and now you can see what's going on in the social media with all the technology and things like that. I really think that if you were seriously talking about a children's charter and you seriously wanted, as you say, children first and you seriously want to do what is to the benefit of the children, then make a simple change in the wording to “must” regarding the review.

You, as we well know, are in one of these positions where there's no time limit. You could be the Minister of Human Services for the next two years, and a new minister may come in and like the idea of something new in the charter.

I just think that if we're going to be as bold as to talk about a charter, my understanding – and you can correct me if I'm wrong – is that there is nowhere in North America that we can use as a guide. I've just done a little bit of research in regard to a children's charter. I understand that there are, I think, two cities that have a children's charter, and they are Toronto and Regina. So there is nothing to compare as to who's had a children's charter, what's successful in the children's charter, what needs to be in the children's charter, and what we can do better in the charter? If we're going to be as bold as being the first province in North America – I haven't done a lot of research – then why can't we look at the children's charter and we review it every year?

It goes into that under Review. “The Minister shall conduct a Government-wide review of policies, programs and services affecting children and shall, after concluding the review, lay a report respecting the review before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting” or after 15 days. I guess my question on that is: when? Are you look at doing that yearly? Are you looking at doing it every two years? When do you plan on doing the reviewing?

I know that we were in receipt just recently of a letter from the Privacy Commissioner in regard to information sharing for the purpose of providing services. We need to discuss that as a caucus, obviously, after being alerted by the Privacy Commissioner to your act. I personally want to be on record as the former minister of children's services and, if I may, as the Health critic for the Wildrose that I like this. You and I have been advocating this for a long time. I think it's important for information to be shared. I think if there's anything that has to be done, maybe it's an amendment on that particular that may address some of the issues that she has, you know, some of the requirements.

We haven't had the opportunity to talk, obviously. This came to us just very briefly, and I'm sure that you're going to get up and speeches some of the responses that you had in regard to hearing from the Privacy Commissioner.

You talk about the Child and Youth Advocate Act as amended. As I said, Minister, we just got this bill laid on the table. We're busy trying to take care of other pieces of legislation. There are things that need to be questioned.

Under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act you talk about taking out the director and substituting a child intervention worker. I guess my question is: is the worker the only one making the decision? I have a great deal of faith in the social workers in this province. There is always that small percentage you have a problem with. If there happen to be some problems between the worker and the family, if there is some animosity between the worker and the family, leaving it up to one worker, is there a way that can happen? I was dealing with a situation in my own riding that was a seven-year fight for a family to clear their name. I like the idea of the social worker being able to make the decision because they're trained to be able to make decisions. What recourse has anyone got if we have that sort of problem, if there is a dispute between the family and the worker? Previously the director used to have to do all of that.

Minister, all of these sections in the bill are things that I think need to be done. I think, quite frankly, you and your department have done a good job on this bill. There are so many things in this bill that I like, that I think need to be done.

We talk about foster parents and the unbelievable job that they do to become foster parents. A good friend of mine has fostered, I think, seven children. There are three things that I could not do. I couldn't be a foster parent because I have, I guess, an attachment disorder. I don't like to let go of anything and would be very afraid of having – I'm sure I'd probably have 35 children now. I couldn't be a foster parent or a foster dog parent, if I may say that, because I would probably never give up the dog for that particular reason. What I've learned over the last couple of weeks is that I could not work in a hospice. So there are some things in this life that I'd be more than prepared to tackle.

As I indicated, my friends are foster parents and are 98 per cent successful. They've raised the foster kids. They've come back, and they've celebrated weddings with them and all sorts of things, and that's because of the loving, caring, nurturing comfort that foster parents have provided to these children when they've gone into custody and have been fostered out.

With those brief comments, I am going to sit down because I know there are others that want to work. I think it's going to give us, myself, the opportunity to go home and do some studying, read the bill a little more clearly. I know, Minister, that you're not afraid of an e-mail or a phone call if I have questions. If I may say so, I'm going to be bugging you a little bit just to get some clarification. I also know that the staff in your department would be more than willing to answer any questions.

I want to end by saying good job, Minister. I think we're lucky to have you and the department, and we're lucky to be able to talk about this particular bill. I will probably be wearing one of your pins when this bill passes, so thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to debate Bill 25. Echoing some of the comments of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, congratulations to the minister for the diligence and, I guess, commitment to detail. Obviously, he's had big changes in his department over the last year, and there are significant implications for that in relation to child care, a recognition that there are weaknesses in communication across different departments that deal with children, a recognition of the need for more research-based and evidence-based policy-making and action for the interests of children and their families.

So, yes, a job well done. A job well started, I should say, because I think it's early. It's unfortunate that it's so late in the legislative timetable. It's a tremendously large bill. It means that if we're going to do due diligence, we're going to have to spend some time with this bill, and I'm disappointed that it didn't come earlier or that we don't have more of a chance. I hope that the minister would consider some alternatives if, in fact, our session is drawing to a close, as it appears to be.

There appears to be, again, a question of haste and not enough preparation time for us in this. I would have to ask who was consulted on some of the decisions that are being proposed here, some of which are fairly significant in terms of human rights, in terms of sharing information, in terms of who has the authority to do what under what circumstances. Some questions come up around these issues which are, yeah, very significant and that I certainly would not be happy pushing through without a full discussion, especially since hearing from the Privacy Commissioner, and some sense that this is consistent and not duplicating or not confusing people with the other privacy and information acts that we deal with and that everyone in Alberta deals with.

The other thing that surprised me was to hear from some staff that this totally came out of the blue, that staff in your department had no idea this was coming forward. They had no input, no sense that some of the changes that they see before them have been made with serious implications, some feel, to their authority to make decisions for clients or at least the appearance that the authority to make decisions on behalf of a child might be transferred to a private entity, to a foster parent when in fact the buck stops at the government, at the minister's office, at the Crown, as is indicated in the report, but can be delegated, it appears now, under this new act. So there's confusion there. I can say that there's some significant anxiety among staff, who aren't clear where this is headed and, certainly, why they weren't consulted and given a chance to have some input into this.

The third area I suppose would be his initiating comments about poverty reduction and the question, I think to quote as accurately as possible, of a community-owned strategy for poverty reduction, which sounds like a code word for downloading the poverty reduction strategy onto the community, instead of saying a shared responsibility for poverty reduction with the community. I believe I heard the minister in his introductory remarks say: a community-owned poverty reduction strategy. I'd like to know how that jibes with a partnership, a collaboration, a sense that we're going to do this together, not download it and then have someone else to hold accountable if the poverty reduction strategy doesn't achieve its goals. I would just appreciate some clarification around that, especially when we've seen it happening in other areas.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, maybe I'll revert to a second point that I made about authority to make decisions about a child in a particular set of circumstances, maybe a child that is going on a trip, and now the minister wants to ensure that there's a simple, quick way of giving permission for that child to go on a trip without going through a big, long list of individuals to consult with.

This kind of change that I think the minister is suggesting, if I can quote him again, is doing what Albertans want. When did you ask Albertans if they wanted to give the Crown the power to delegate that authority to either the foster parent or to a private agency? Was that actually discussed in your consultations? Did people actually say that they wanted the Crown to devolve that authority in some instances where they felt it appropriate to the foster parent or to the private agency that's providing child services? It's a question. I don't know the answer. Some of these issues have come up just on first blush in our going through the bill and questions that need to be answered.

Those, I think, Mr. Speaker, identify some of the key concerns that I have at first review. Again, I hope the minister will take them in the spirit in which they were intended to ensure that the children are put first, that the community has indeed a full understanding and that we have a full understanding of the implications of the potential shift of authority from the government jurisdiction to possibly other jurisdictions, that we seriously look at some of the concerns that the Privacy Commissioner has given us that create ambiguity, uncertainty, duplication, in fact, perhaps confusion around who can get access to what information, under what conditions, and with whose permission when already, I thought, as expressed by the Information and Privacy Commissioner, we have a good bill that addresses some of these issues.

Just for the record, the commissioner has recommended – and she has indicated five different concerns about the privacy issues here – that at the very least the bill needs to be amended to include mandatory requirements for privacy impact assessments; a duty to record disclosures, including disclosure by information systems; and a duty to report privacy breaches to the commissioner's office. I take that seriously, and I know the minister does.

I would be interested in hearing some of the discussion around this. I certainly hope that we're not going to ram this through in the next couple of days. This is an important bill, with many implications, many concerns, and I think we all need to be sure that it's going to provide the results that we all want and that children deserve.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to Bill 25 in second reading. As has been mentioned a couple of times already, this 72-page piece of legislation was tabled yesterday, and although we did get a briefing last week, this is the first time we've had the opportunity to look at the actual legislation in full. Many of us are scrambling to get a real sense of what it is that the government is trying to achieve here.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to protecting children in Alberta and when it comes to reducing the experience of child poverty in Alberta, this government has a tendency to overstate its accomplishments, shall we say. I use that particular characterization of their activities in this regard judiciously. I believe that's a judicious description of the way in which the government engages with this particular set of challenges experienced by so many vulnerable Albertans. As a result, it's very important, I believe, for us to look very carefully at what exactly it is that this act is doing. Unfortunately, this is not a government that has earned a tremendous amount of trust when it comes to dealing with these issues.

There are at least four things, perhaps five, that occur to me as being areas that require additional consideration. The first one, which has been mentioned and, frankly, concerns me the greatest, is the issue of restructuring the ministry so as to essentially take responsibility away from the director of child protection vested in the Crown, which of course is what it always was, and then expand the opportunity to delegate authority to what is referred to as child intervention workers, Mr. Speaker. Now, in our briefing we inquired: well, what is a child intervention worker? We were assured that that would be defined by regulation. That is profoundly concerning to me.

There are two lines of concern with respect to this process. The first is: who is this government going to include in the definition of a child intervention worker? We have on record the Premier saying that she thinks there is the opportunity to contract out the work done in the ministry, that was once children's services, to nonprofits, to charities, to volunteer organizations, and to the private sector. The Premier is on record as saying that she thinks that kind of work can be done there rather than by government workers who are directly accountable to Albertans through this Legislature.

When I'm told that we need to just trust these guys around the issue of who a child intervention worker will be, frankly, Mr. Speaker, I simply can't do that. We have so many examples in this province already where extremely important services provided to a broad range of vulnerable Albertans are consistently deprofessionalized, underpaid, and understaffed in nonprofit, arm's-length organizations across this province. Whether you are talking about the care of the mentally ill, whether you are talking about the care of seniors, whether you are talking about the care of disabled Albertans, whether you are talking about the care of children, in every case this government takes every opportunity it can find to reduce its own staff and to download those responsibilities onto nonprofits, volunteer organizations, and charities, many of whom are struggling to provide the level of qualification and time necessary to do the job that a professional would say represents best practice.

We do that in almost every human services setting in this province, Mr. Speaker, because, so clearly, this is not a priority of this government. Then, of course, strangely, the Premier actually believes we can increase the degree to which we do that. Then we have a social policy framework that talks about the government moving away from being a leader and a funder and a service provider and instead is a convener and a partner. We have that announcement made side by side with a rep from Safeway Inc.

We're talking about reducing poverty. I am absolutely astounded by some of the fundamental presumptions that seem to underlie the direction that this Premier seems to want to take this province when it comes to continuing the job that at this point they have really not done very well at all. Of course, we have a huge gap between rich and poor in this province. We have growing numbers of children living in poverty, and we have growing numbers of people who are homeless, yet we are the richest province in the country. Clearly, we are not doing a very good job. The last thing that I think we should do is take our bad decisions and exacerbate them.

That being said, this ability to delegate these authorities and the responsibility to who knows who is very concerning to me.

Dr. Swann: It's dangerous.

Ms Notley: It is dangerous indeed, Mr. Chair. I'm very concerned about that.

I am also concerned that what's really going on here is that the government is trying to distance itself from responsibility for what happens when they make one of the most important decisions that government ever makes. Taking a child from their family and putting them somewhere else is a very, very profoundly important decision. It should only be done in limited circumstances, and it should only be done with the greatest level of thought and care and consideration and time and investigation that is dedicated to that process.

Then when that child is taken away, they need to be cared for with the greatest level of skill and time and commitment and resources available because once that child is taken from their family, they are in crisis. Let us be clear. If you take a child from their family, you've created a crisis. You may be pulling them from one crisis, but they are still in crisis.

This idea that this task that we do in this province, Mr. Speaker, can be done by contracted agencies, who then contract out so that we've got people making $14 an hour and who may or may not have a six-month diploma in child care services and child protection and child intervention, is incredibly disrespectful of the importance of that work and the nature of that work and the sophistication of the work and the skill requirement of that work. I'm very concerned about this, and I need to see what the government contemplates being the recipient of this incredible level of authority that the government takes upon itself.

The other element of that, which, of course, is problematic, is that even where you're downloading that authority onto individual social workers who may even still be amongst that small group of social workers who are still directly employed by this provincial government, the question then becomes: does that social worker have the time and the ability and the authority to do what their professional organization tells them is best practice? The director of child protection can make those decisions, but if the front-line social worker is told to have a caseload that is 40 per cent above what they believe is best practice, then they simply have to do that. Indeed, that is what's been happening for years, Mr. Speaker. How do you then make that person legally responsible for those decisions when they're only able to make decisions about part of the job? That's also a problem.

The next thing I want to talk about, Mr. Speaker, is the issue of the children's charter. Now, we all love the idea of a children's charter, giving children rights and giving them a way to hang onto some rights and maybe bootstrap themselves into some higher quality services than what they might be receiving in this province right now. Unfortunately, what we see in this legislation is extremely vague, and really all it does is that it gives the government and the Premier an opportunity to send out a press release saying: "Look at us. Look at us. We've introduced a children's charter." The word "charter" is so generally well respected that everyone thinks that means good things, but the reality is that the substance of this charter is lacking significantly.

My view, Mr. Speaker, is that in a province that is the wealthiest in the country and in a province that has the wealthiest people in the country and in a province that leaves $10 billion on the table to give back to the wealthiest people in the country every year, when we're talking about the rights of children who are in the care, whether temporary or permanent custody, of this government, we should be able to write a charter that says at the very least, like the UN charter, that children should always have enough to eat and that children should always have a roof over their head.

The fact of the matter is that right now in this province – in this province – where we are so wealthy and we leave $10 billion on the table every year, children who are in the care and custody of this government have no roof over their head and go to the food bank for food. That is shameful. That is shameful, Mr. Speaker. We should write a charter that says that that is prohibited. In this province, where we are so proud of our resource wealth, we should be able to write a charter that says that that won't happen anymore. Until I see that, I frankly can't give the concept of a charter a whole lot of deference.

Now, the third thing that I'd like to talk about, because I'm running out of time very quickly, is the question of information sharing, that's been raised by the Privacy Commissioner although I also had those concerns when I briefly looked at the act yesterday. Now, I understand and respect what the minister is talking about when he talks about the need to be able to share information between silos when it comes, particularly, to ensuring the safety of a child; you know, when you're talking about a teacher being aware of a violent situation or a risk of violence and not being able to tell a social worker or vice versa, those kinds of things, or if a health care worker is aware of those things.

The minister had Sheldon Kennedy standing beside him at his announcement yesterday, and he had police officials standing beside him at the announcement. I have sympathy for that argument. I realize there are privacy concerns, but I have sympathy for that argument. What I don't have sympathy for, Mr. Speaker, is the way this legislation is written because this legislation goes well beyond that. This legislation gives service providers – and we don't know who they are. They may well not be employees of the government. They may well be for-profit daycares – we don't know – or other for-profit child service providers. It could be Walmart, for all we know, if they come up with an after school program. We don't know – we do not know – who the service providers are.

It gives them the ability to share information not only about the kids but about the parents and not when the child is at risk of serious injury or violence or death but simply when, in that person's opinion, the best interests of the child are served by sharing that information. But we don't know if that person, that service provider, is even educated to make such a decision to reach that conclusion. It could be, you know, that someone who is 19 years old and is a camp counsellor has decided that they think it's important to tell the child's teacher in the same town that mom had postpartum depression five years ago and was in the hospital for five months. The minister is looking at me incredulously, but the fact of the matter is that the way your act is written, that could happen. There is nothing in the way your act is written that would stop that from happening.

That is what we need to ensure doesn't happen. That needs to be corrected. The act needs to be corrected. I'm all for sharing information to keep people safe. I am not for allowing the personal details of parents to be shared indiscriminately amongst a group of people, that this government is not even prepared to define, on the basis of opinions that I'm not convinced they are qualified to reach.

It is a huge thing when you give them the ability to share the medical information, for instance, of parents. It's too much. Particularly when you look at the profile of the families that are impacted by this, we're looking primarily at indigenous and First Nations Albertans and low-income Albertans. These are the people whose privacy rights will be completely eliminated.

The final thing I want to talk about is the issue of the family violence review committee. All I can say there is that it's long overdue. It should have been done a long time ago, and it needs to be more transparent.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member and my colleague for bringing up some interesting points and setting sort of another tenor to this discussion. We, in fact, with such a substantive piece of legislation, just can't hold forth with some accolades and then hand it over to the government. You've given me some food for thought.

What I particularly wanted to know more about is this children's charter. I've just been reading it over here again. We only got this thing a couple of days ago, right? [interjection] One day ago, yeah. I'm just wondering what's missing there. I'm having a hard time, you know, looking at this not just as a document that is setting parameters or a frame for this legislation but on a legal basis framework as well. I'm just wondering what we could do to perhaps make this children's charter a little more substantive.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to respond.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much. You know, as any lawyer will know, sort of the penultimate charter in Canada is the Charter, which is part of our Constitution, and that, of course, actually sets out a number of rights and a number of rights which are enforceable. It's meaningful (a) because it delineates a number of rights and (b) because it's enforceable.

This charter doesn't delineate. Maybe in one area there are a few rights that are delineated, but overall most of what it's talking about is government policy. It's written in a way that it's not enforceable even if it were enforceable, but in fact the charter itself is not presented in the act in a way for it to be enforceable, so really it's being called a charter but is not really a charter.

The other thing is that when you go back, for instance, to Canada's Charter, when Parliament first had discussions about that Charter, there was extensive debate at that time about whether or not that Charter should include reference to economic equality and whether or not people should be protected from discrimination on the basis of poverty. There was extensive discussion at that time about that concept. Now, it was ultimately rejected even though the NDP at the time argued vociferously for it to be included.

But even though it was rejected there, if this was really a charter, Mr. Speaker, we would address those issues in this charter because, again, as I've said, we are talking simply about children, and we are talking about a province that's supposed to be the wealthiest province in the country. We're not talking necessarily about economic equality. We're talking about those basic human rights that the United Nations talks about, which is the right to nutrition, adequate nutrition, and the right to a roof over your head at night. If we really want to talk about a meaningful charter, something that's bold, let's talk about that.

The other thing I wanted to really quickly mention as well is that the family violence review committee as it currently exists is set up just like the child incident review committee. As far as I've seen, I've seen no actual investigation report ever publicly released by that committee. I suspect that this committee is set up in exactly the same way, and given that we are a province which, unfortunately, has the highest level of domestic violence in the country, we should be ensuring that the organization that reviews these incidents is compelled to report to the public about its investigations and what went wrong.

You can do that, Mr. Speaker, and still protect people's privacy. You absolutely can – I've seen it done before – but it should be done because that's part of the way that we engage the public on this very, very important issue, which is the preponderance of domestic violence in this province. This legislation allows the minister to keep the whole thing behind closed doors and keep it secret for heaven knows how long. That's the last thing that this issue needs in this province. It needs to be very clearly public when these kinds of things occur.

I'm disappointed to see that they've set up the committee, but at the same time they've made it very clear that the committee need not publicly report and, rather, just will do an annual report. Anyone here who has ever read an annual report produced by this government, if they could get through the orange and the blue and the various and sundry message-box language that, coincidentally, equates with election campaigns, if they can get through that stuff, they rarely find a great deal of substantive information. It's disappointing that that is not included in the act as it relates to that piece because otherwise it's a good piece.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly hope that I can add to the discussion and share something today that will be of benefit as we consider this very important act about our children, our most precious commodity, our future. We want to ensure that it will be as good as possible. Concerns about abuse and neglect are very serious and have to be taken seriously and need to be addressed properly.

I admire and respect the minister and believe that he truly wants to make Alberta the best possible place for children to be raised. I think this act has some very good parts to it. I think that we always need to exercise caution when we're listening to children report certain things, being sure that we're discreet in our investigation, a thorough investigation, remembering that when we hear only one side of a story, it's like trying to get the news from reading the editorial page. We need both sides or all sides. There may be, obviously, more than just two.

It's very important that we get this act right, with adequate input and open discussion, especially by those of us here in this Legislature, that have been elected to review these kinds of things. It's always a little worrisome to me and a little bit suspect, too, when I get a limited-time offer. I rarely buy a used car from somebody trying to sell me something where I've only got until tonight, you know, at 5 o'clock or whatever to make the deal.

I don't mean to say that you're acting in a suspicious way, Mr. Minister, but after almost 70 years of living, I always want to take a little extra time to look at that. Sometimes I'd rather walk away from that hot deal than take it without having time to do my due diligence. I've been burned seriously at times in my life when I haven't done adequate due diligence. I've been taught by a very wise and successful man that when you think you've done enough due diligence, you're probably only half done.

Of course, we all love children. As you know, I probably feel that way, loving children more than some other people, based on the number that I've had the opportunity to love and be engaged with as a child rearer, as a parent. I think that one of the things that we need to consider when we are looking at and creating a piece of legislation as important as this one – and we all recognize how important it is – is the foundational question. Will this act strengthen families, or will it undermine them? If so, how will it be good? What are the dangers, and how will we mitigate against them?

I'd like to quote for a moment now rather loosely – I'll be adding to and paraphrasing – from a document that my wife and I have used to help guide us in our responsibilities to raise children to be respectful, with all of the things that we all want our children to have and grow up with. It's from a document called The Family: A Proclamation to the World. I'm going to quote some parts word for word, and some parts I've edited to make it appropriate, hopefully, for this situation in our Legislature.

It starts out. Parents have “a solemn responsibility to love and care for each other and for their children,” a fundamental “duty to rear their children in love and righteousness,” to provide for their physical, social, emotional, mental, and spiritual needs, and to “teach them to love and serve one another . . . and be law-abiding citizens wherever they live.” Mothers and fathers are accountable “for the discharge of these obligations.” Happiness in family life is most likely to be achieved when founded upon sound principles taught in the wisdom literature of the ages. Successful families are “established and maintained on principles of faith, prayer, repentance, forgiveness, respect, love, compassion, work, and wholesome recreational activities.” Parents are obliged to “help one another as equal partners. Disability, death, or other circumstances may necessitate individual adaption. Extended families should lend support when needed.”

When not available, neighbours, friends, churches, and other volunteers ought to assist. Government should always be a last resort, not the first. The disintegration of the family will bring upon individuals, communities, provinces, and nations a repeat of the calamities experienced by all civilizations and societies that have risen and fallen over the ages. As responsible citizens and officers of the government or at least elected representatives of the people we should promote “measures designed to maintain and strengthen the family as the fundamental unit of society.”

Parental rights and responsibilities. There are some things that are best done by parents, wherever possible, and I think this act identifies the primacy of parents' responsibilities and their rights as well. We talk about rights, but we don't talk about responsibilities as often as I think we need to or should. Teaching what a healthy, loving relationship is between parents is an obligation we have where possible and where appropriate. Principles, morals, values, integrity, reliability, trustworthiness, respect, the work ethic, importance of education, service to others, helping those in need, recognizing need, charity, accountability, honour, discernment: many of these lessons are best taught as parents work alongside their children, whether it's planting a garden or mowing a lawn or shoveling a neighbour's sidewalk and then your own, whether it's helping mom or dad make a casserole to take to a needy neighbour. These are things that are best taught at home wherever possible.

My experience with students in the federally funded introduction to trades course that Lethbridge College taught for many years as well as from teaching at two reserves, one in my riding and one right next to my riding, the Kainai reserve, with the headquarters at Stand Off, and the Piikani reserve at Brocket, taught me – well, I was asked to assist there because the college was acknowledged and recognized for doing a good job teaching their students how to weld and how to overhaul and how to frame and how to wire. Prospective employers or companies were hiring them as apprentices and helping with their education, but where the college was falling down was in some of the basic life skills. I was approached and asked to develop a module to teach that during the first week of their approximately 12-week course. We called it life skills and employability. Society and some parents were neglecting teaching these important principles.

Sometimes parents are overworked. Sometimes parents have two jobs. Circumstances can vary, so there's a tendency for us to want to step in. Sometimes that stepping in is best done by the extended family, by an older sibling, by neighbours and friends. Again, government obviously has a role, but it ought to be as a last resort. You and I have talked about this, Mr. Minister. I'm able to refer to you as you in this sitting.

It's important that children learn the law of the harvest. I've been misquoted as I've tried to refer to that at times, much to my embarrassment. The law of the harvest is the simple principle, that people of the land understand, that if you don't plant in the spring and weed and fertilize and water and nurture, you don't have much harvest in the fall. That's a true principle of life. A farmer learns that you can't take shortcuts.

In the educational system you can take shortcuts. We think that the object is to get an A when, really, the object is to master the material. But is there anybody here who's never crammed for an exam? What's the half-life of crammed knowledge? About 15 minutes after the end of the exam you've forgotten most of it, right? Who wants to be operated on by a doctor who learned how to beat the system and cram for the exams? Not me.

Well, our children need to be taught that, and that's best taught at home. If we're creating programs or creating opportunities for children who are in situations of abuse and neglect, I hope that it would include helping the foster parents to teach some of these basic principles.

I'm married to a woman who grew up in foster homes because her mother and father had problems. Her father died, and her mother suffered because of that, and the children needed to be placed in an orphanage or with other family. My wife is one who was in foster care and experienced conditional love, love that was there only if they liked what you were doing, and if you weren't doing it, then they withdrew their affection. That has created trauma in many people in that situation, trauma that's very hard to address through the efforts of social work. It requires incredible dedication.

I admire our hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for acknowledging the challenge that it is to play that role. Those that do it and do it effectively have my deepest admiration and respect and appreciation. As I said, my wife, Sheila, is one who experienced that, and it's created many challenges that we've needed to address together. I'm grateful for the help that we both received with that. That's part of what happens when government steps in. We want to make sure that they step in where necessary with good guidelines to help that intervention be successful in a way that benefits not just the child but ultimately perhaps the subsequent marriages, work relationships, and parenting responsibilities. It's a big step, and it's very important that it be done right.

I want this bill to succeed. I hope that it will address these issues. I want to support it after it's been thoroughly examined and vetted, after we've been given the chance to assist you and the government, Mr. Minister, in the critical due diligence necessary. I know that you've taken the time and your department has taken the time to get a lot of input and talk to a lot of people. Hopefully, it's included people like me who have successfully parented – I'm not trying to toot my horn, but by any reasonable standard of success I think that we have managed to do that – or those people that have provided foster care successfully, looking at the ones who have struggled and created more problems than they solved to make sure that the act will address those issues in an effective, compassionate, and tender way, that will produce the result that we desire.

We need to have it clear in our minds what result we are after. We talk about results-based budgeting. We need to make sure that this is a results-based act, that we have the big picture that we're after drilled down to the micro, the individual, and what result we hope it will achieve and make sure that it's going to do that. I submit that this isn't something we can do in 24 or 48 hours or by next week, as much as that might upset the apparent timetable that exists. Once again, we're not buying used cars here. We're affecting people's lives by the things that we do and the decisions that we make. How well crafted this bill ultimately is will depend upon input from all stakeholders, certainly including all of us having the opportunity to address the things that I've mentioned and some that I probably, quite frankly, am not smart enough to think of, at least in the amount of time I've had to consider this.

Anyway, I appreciate it. I appreciate the efforts. As I said, I want to support it. I'm sure that given the honour and integrity of the minister involved and the seriousness and the quality of the staff that he has, these issues will be addressed and the proper time will be taken with a calm and reasoned approach, taking a step back, an arm's length, so that we can have some sober pondering and study.

I hope that we'll have a chance to consult with our constituents and have a chance, through our researchers and ourselves personally, to do some of our own research into studies, not only opinions, of the best sociologists and child psychologists, the methods used by successful parents, as I mentioned, and the things that are being done in other jurisdictions. We don't have to reinvent the wheel. It's possible that there are some jurisdictions that are addressing this very, very effectively, and we ought to make sure that if they are, we can learn and benefit from the mistakes that they made getting to that degree of perfection or degree of effectiveness, anyway.

Those are some of my concerns. I appreciate the opportunity to share my perspective with you, and I hope that Mr. Minister and the government will take these seriously because I've certainly given from my heart as well as from my experience, and the education that I have has prompted me to share this with you today.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to express my appreciation in listening to the member's comments about this bill. I was wondering if he could provide a little bit of feedback or input regarding the children's charter, which is on page 3 of the bill. It's defined there, and I'm just wondering if the hon. member feels that there's anything missing from that or if he's satisfied with the wording of the charter or what role this charter could and should play in the context of the whole act.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, the second question which I'll tack on to the hon. member is just looking at the fact that a child intervention worker is not defined in this act anywhere and if that poses any questions to the hon. member or potential concerns or flags. Who is setting that standard? How is that regulated? Who is by definition a child intervention worker?

I look forward to hearing your comments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. Thank you for the opportunity to respond and for the compliment, to think somebody my age will actually remember what the first question was now, so I'll answer the second question first. The definitions are kind of like the rules, and the minister was, I think, being a little bit flippant and entertaining us with the comment that rules are – how did you put it?

Mr. Hancock: For when brains run out.

Mr. Bikman: For when brains run out.

Well, I think that rules are like good fences, and good fences make good neighbours, and good clauses and good definitions make good acts. I think that we need to be very careful in any act that we participate in creating – that's assuming that this really is a participatory process – and need to be very, very clear and remove any ambiguity that can possibly exist. It takes good lawyers with good hearts and minds and good research and listening to people like you and me to craft such definitions and such rules and clauses so as to address those things in a clear and defined and limited way. I think that's important, and you've raised an important point. I hope that this is somewhat of an answer or has at least added to our understanding of the issue.

The first question was about the children's charter. Did I remember that correctly? Yippee. All right. As I was reading through this – and I haven't made it all the way through yet, but I will – I circled and starred a couple of issues. I made reference to one of them without making it specifically about the charter. Clause (2)(e) says: "While reinforcing and without in any way derogating from the primary responsibility of parents, guardians and families for their children" and so on. I think it's important that we recognize the paramount role of parents in this, and I'm glad to see that it's addressed. I think that can be strengthened and perhaps should be strengthened. I'm always concerned when a person – and I realize that when we say "minister," we probably mean the ministry and all those people that you'll call upon for support in decision-making. But the next point:

(3) The Minister may review the Children's Charter from time to time and amend or repeal and replace it as the Minister considers appropriate.

Well, I hope that in developing and establishing that children's charter, an awful lot of opportunity to give input and feedback will be given to us, that though it may be crafted and brought to us in a semi-complete or at least a partially prepared form, then we would have a chance to debate it, discuss it, ponder it, and do some more research on it. Maybe we could even be invited to provide some input if this is going to be done over the summer and presented back to us in the fall as part of a complete Bill 25, Children First Act. I think it's important that we do consider that.

There are some things that some of you will think are important to include. There will be some things that others may think ought not be included. That needs to be considered because we need to be very careful in doing this. This will be an historic first, and getting it right will take time. If we consider the long-term impact of what this bill can and will do . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to our previous speakers for providing some illumination here on Bill 25, the Children First Act. You know, I've been working through this very substantive piece of legislation both yesterday and today, having to move it to the top of my list because it suddenly appeared in its entirety. I was astonished to see how comprehensive the legislation is, encompassing a number of existing acts and making amendments as well as substantive new legislation on its own. For that, and for the complexity, or the edifice, that's been created here, I certainly do acknowledge the minister and the ministry's hard work in putting this together.

Not to say that I am opposed categorically to all parts of it. Rather, I think in the interests of evidence-based legislation and the application of best practices to looking after children in care in our society and in our province, you know, just at the very least, as the previous speaker from Cardston-Taber-Warner pointed out, we must make sure that we are debating the issues in a substantive bill like this in the fullness of time to ensure that we are moving forward with legislation that we cannot just live with in some sort of compromise but are making changes that will improve the quality of life for children in our province, to ensure that we cover the rights and responsibilities that we have as the state, as the Crown, to reinforce the existing means by which we look after children in this province and also, I think, to reach out and, as I say, use best practices from other jurisdictions to ensure that we perhaps are going further so that we know children in this province are not wanting for nutritional requirements, are not wanting for shelter, are not wanting to fulfill their education needs to the fullness of their ability and that we look to creating the best opportunities for everyone.

You know, when we go back to the first principles of how we look after the youngest in our society, I think that equality comes first to mind. If we're not creating an equal environment in which young people can thrive, then we are setting the template for inequality and for the problems that are just exacerbated as those same children grow up to be in positions of responsibility and to form the framework of our society later on. So equality is something that I think should be the first principle that we aim for in this House in making legislation, particularly here with Bill 25, the Children First Act.

As far as I can see, Mr. Speaker, just from the beginning this bill is amending, as I said, many other pieces of legislation pertaining to children inside and outside of care. It has the children's charter here, which I'm particularly intrigued about and was seeking some more clarification on. I think it sort of enshrines a government-wide review of policy and programs in regard to children in general and then expands that information sharing so that service providers can share personal information about children, parents and guardians, and other service providers.

Now, I've never sort of been sitting in the Legislature and had a reaction come back so quickly as it did on the last point that I made about this legislation. That came from the Privacy Commissioner. Within hours of this bill being released, we saw that the commissioner was raising some serious concerns about that information sharing.

You know, as I said, we're all just learning about this, but I guess it brings to mind my first concern about this substantive piece of legislation coming towards the end of the spring session in that: are we being obliged to rush through this? Are we putting ourselves in a position where we will have unforeseen consequences coming from Bill 25 after we leave this House at the end of the spring session?

I think that the Privacy Commissioner has done us a service. I'm just looking for it. Here it is: Commissioner Identifies Privacy Concerns with Bill 25. I'm very happy that this did come out. I'll just summarize some of the concerns that came out in this release.

[Ms Kennedy-Glans in the chair]

Madam Speaker, it becomes you very well. Absolutely. I'm going to stay within the rules even more than I usually do for the balance of my speech.

It says:

Bill 25 erodes individuals' ability to control what happens to their own personal and health information by broadening the ability to share information without consent. The ability to say yes or no to the sharing of one's own information is, fundamentally, what privacy laws are intended to provide – control.

Further, she states:

Individuals will not necessarily know what information has been collected about them, by whom, or for what specific purpose. This is contrary to fundamental privacy principles of transparency, openness and accountability, and reduces individuals' ability to exercise their rights to complain or ask for a review [as well].

Again, I'm talking about unforeseen consequences, Madam Speaker. You know, as I say, this came out within hours of the introduction of this bill, and I think it should raise all our attention here in this House in regard to our responsibility to create good legislation.

The bill as well has some amendments. Statutory authority is now provided to child intervention workers and not the director in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. You know, I would like to see clarification on that because if you're moving that authority down the line of the people who are responsible for providing children's services, I just want to be assured that that doesn't mean that the Crown or the state is abdicating any sense of control or responsibility, ultimately, for the protection of children in care. Of course, if you're moving it down to the workers, unless you're contracting out that responsibility, you are potentially putting that person into a position of responsibility. Basically, to contract that responsibility out through a payment or so forth or contractual obligation, when, in fact, the ultimate responsibility of a child in care must be under the Crown – any erosion of that responsibility I don't think is in the best interest of anyone, really.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The amendments in here also seem to expand the ability of the Child and Youth Advocate to give evidence in legal proceedings, allow former guardians of a child now under permanent guardianship to apply for an order to terminate, and then some other issues as well.

Now, I guess there are one or two things that I would like to point out in the brief time that I have here in second reading. I would like to focus more on, again, this idea of providing statutory authority to child intervention workers, the front-line staff, as opposed to the director in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. In the brief 24 hours that we've had to ask the front-line workers about this, we've received word back that they are very concerned about this.

As far as we can see, this change seems to come from the well-publicized court case in 2009 where the director was found to be personally in contempt of court. The Hon. Justice Jean Côté in his ruling described the child intervention system as a “complex administrative structure” that according to evidence in law “must exacerbate opacity and the opportunities for deniability.”

Now, the government argued that the judge’s view of this law would necessitate a restructuring of the whole child protection administrative system. So it seems as though Bill 25 is a response to this 2009 case and is, in fact, a restructuring of the whole system. Now the front-line staff will have statutory authority, which formerly was invested in the most senior officials, and it means as well that front-line staff will be held responsible for everything, even though many decisions are made, in fact, by more senior people in the department and front-line staff have no real power to commandeer funds and to make that level of responsible decision.

Our view is that the government is transferring their statutory authority and responsibility for child protection away from the director and to the front-line service providers. And because the Premier has talked about contracting out more services, there is the potential for the government to contract out more to nonprofit agencies, charities, private contracts, private businesses, the responsibility for custodial decisions – right? – thereby contracting out their own liability. The definition of child intervention workers, as my colleague pointed out here previously, does little to prevent this.

We have a problem here, Mr. Speaker, as I said before in summation, where the potential for moving that responsibility away from the Crown, away from the highest level of decision-makers to the front line I think creates confusion and a detrimental sort of opportunity to buy or sell that authority out to a private contractor of child services.

The bill also, Mr. Speaker, seems to make it much easier to share information between service providers, which, as I read before, seems to raise a great deal of concern about privacy.

The bill also seems to allow a new family violence death review committee to submit reports to the minister, one that never will be publicly released and another that will be released when the minister chooses to do so. When we’ve seen many controversial deaths and injury in care, it is really becoming more obvious that the lack of transparency in regard to these things needs to be expanded, not contracted. You know, in our view, this seems to be in this present bill another way to control information that Albertans ultimately deserve to know about.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, as I said, the bill is substantive and comprehensive. It’s creating new legislation and amending many other pieces as well. First and foremost, I would echo the last speaker’s comments, that we would want to debate this bill in the fullness of time. I expect and suspect that we will do so. I don’t question the intention of the minister and the ministry in working so hard on this bill or on the integrity of care that Alberta will provide for children both in and out of care. At the same time, we need to take time and effort to ensure that we are not, either through intention or inadvertently, compromising the integrity of how we look after children, both inside and outside of care.

You know, when I looked at the first couple of pages, back to this charter – I will speak more on it later – again, there is just so much more room in this part of the document to nail down some of these issues about ensuring equality and social justice and sustainability throughout this document.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you. My question to the member with respect to this bill. I know that before he recently was re-elected to this House, he had the opportunity to travel all across Alberta on a number of different occasions in his role with Friends of Medicare and to meet with a lot of people that worked in the nonprofit sector and with social agencies who provide care of differing levels to Albertans who are in need, not always children but sometimes children. I’m just wondering if the member can speak to his view about sort of the need to have professional caregivers and intervention workers making major decisions around where a child lives or with whom a child lives and those kinds of things versus what you’ve observed over your time, your travels in terms of the somewhat stretched volunteer and community organizations who are often recruited into providing this kind of service in the absence of any other service being available.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona for thinking of that. Quite frankly, as I was looking through this bill, again, not to cast aspersions yet about the intention of how this will actually unfold in reality, I saw a very similar process taking place in our public health care system over this last number of years, where there was a choice being made to contract out different parts of care, including health care that was covered under the Canada Health Act and acute medical services but also the care that includes, I guess, the social work and the housing and the material needs of people that can’t look after themselves.

We saw that unfolding in seniors’ care over this last number of years, and quite frankly, to the member that asked me this question, it has been unfolding in, I think, quite a negative way, unfolding like a slow-moving car crash in lots of ways. We see the increased private contracts going out to deliver public services. You see the redefinition of the language surrounding the care of seniors. It’s the same seniors needing the same care going through the same normal human process that we’ve seen since human beings first started to walk this Earth, yet somehow we’ve seen that they’ve changed the language so that someone moves from long-term care and end-of-life care to continuing care or independent living or whatever it is. It just put a lot of people in a tight spot.

I just don’t want to see that same tendency, that same arc of change taking place in our social services – right? – particularly with children’s care. Hon. member, as you contract these things out, you’re just so much more likely to have a reductive process taking place, where, you know, people are looking for less, not more, and shifting responsibilities around. Ultimately, we know that if a child is in care and a ward of the state, then we need to increase that care and increase the focus of that care with the best professionals that are available and not scrimp and compromise that in any way, shape, or form.

Yes, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, we look for similarities. Like I said from the outset of my initial speech, we look for best practices and lessons, both good and bad, that we can learn from, paths that we’ve taken before.

As I said and in conclusion, I certainly don’t want to compromise the work that’s gone on here. I can see that the scope of it is substantive. Just in regard to that definition of a child intervention worker, the definition of who is responsible, the charter that exists in here at the beginning, and a couple of other things, I do have serious concerns that I hope we might clarify here in the next few weeks until June, when we finish with the spring session.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have great pleasure to rise and speak on second reading of Bill 25, the Children First Act. I want to thank the minister for bringing this forward. I do truly believe, as other members previous have noted, that his intent here is pure, to make sure that children in our province are given the best environment in which to grow up and to thrive.

There's a quote that I want to share with the House that I often reflect back on, and that is one that was given to us by the leader of the native American Squamish tribe, Chief Seattle, who said, "We do not inherit the earth from our ancestors; we borrow it from our children." I know that that's more of an environmental lens to look at things through, but I also use that in my day-to-day life as a father. You know, my role here is not just to look at what has been given to me, but it is to make sure that for children and for my son in particular I as a father do everything that I can to make sure that the world he grows up in and becomes a part of is the best one possible for him, Mr. Speaker.

The reality is that our children are our future. It's both how and why we exist and why everything that we do as a society is focused on creating an environment that is favourable for our children to thrive and succeed and go on and lead productive lives in. Many children are blessed with the support of loving families, and unfortunately many also are not. The Ministry of Human Services is in a unique position and is, unfortunately, responsible for dealing with some of the most horrific cases of neglect and abuse. It falls on the minister's shoulders and his staff to come up with the appropriate solutions to minimize those situations when they do happen and to make corrections where they can and, with legislation, to ensure that we minimize these situations.

You know, protecting all children, both in and out of care, is, again, the paramount thing that both parents and foster parents can do, that child service workers and this government can do. It is incumbent upon them to do that, recognizing that it's not just about raising children. It's about raising adults – they are all going to grow up one day – and ensuring that those children, as they grow up, are in a position where they, too, can turn around and restore that and return that favour to their own children and make sure that they provide a safe and stable environment, strong enough to raise children of their own in.

I do believe that there are many positives in this bill. The sharing of information, from what I understand from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek during her time as the minister for child services, was a major obstacle for that department back then. In listening yesterday to the chief of the Calgary police force, Rick Hanson, at the press conference where the minister unveiled the bill, talk about, you know, when they were doing the debrief, how if they had had certain pieces of information from other stakeholders or other agencies involved that had that information, they would have been able to take corrective action to stop some of the tragedies that we've heard about.

I do believe that there is plenty of support amongst many of the stakeholders for this bill and for that sharing of information, but I also believe that there is a very good reason why we have an independent officer of this Legislature in the Information and Privacy Commissioner. Her role is to make sure that we follow the three acts that guide freedom of information, whether it be PIPA or the Health Information Act, and it is somewhat of an alarm when she sends out a press release on the day after this bill has been tabled in the Legislature that flags some pretty major holes in what she sees as issues based on this legislation potentially having, I guess, disagreements with current legislation.

I think that speaks to one of the reasons why the pace in which this bill is being brought forward is unfortunate. It would be much more comfortable for me – I truly want to support this legislation. I do believe that I will ultimately support it, but I would much rather be able to hear from the Information and Privacy Commissioner directly to hear and understand actually what those concerns are and what we can do as legislators and in this bill to make sure that we're still, I guess, finding ways and means for both of these goals, which are, again, the sharing of information in the best interests of children but doing so without impacting and negatively impacting other people's privacy.

It's a welcome change that people in these agencies would no longer have to necessarily fear that they're in violation of these acts and that that sharing of information can happen, but, again, I think that when you get a press release with five very specific notes on it from the very commissioner, who is independent of this Legislature, waving red flags, that is probably something we should pay attention to.

I'm happy to see that the minister has looked to remove the word "wilfully" from the sections of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act, and the Drug-endangered Children Act. It sort of fits our tough-on-crime agenda, the things that we've been talking about here in this House. I like and fully support the minister's position to remove this word that changes the legislation, which essentially would allow that any person who causes a child to be in need of intervention or in need of protection from being sexually exploited or who causes a child to be drug endangered becomes guilty of an offence. For you lawyerly types in the room I'll use your Latin mens rea. The removal of that I think will go a long way to help ensure that when these interventions are required, the people responsible for putting these children in danger are held responsible for it.

I'm also happy to see some clarification around the victims of crime fund, Mr. Speaker, and what I would probably call the Little Warriors clause. There has been quite a bit of discussion in this House about that organization and some of the financial support it's requested from the government. I was happy to see that the minister is looking to clarify within this act that for agencies that are trying to protect children – it makes it more clear that this would be an avenue where they could go and apply for funding from the victims of crime fund.

I'm on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, as you are, Mr. Speaker. When the Child and Youth Advocate came to see us and discussed with us some of the amendments that he would like to see in the legislation that governs his office and his body, again, I was fully in support of those, as was our committee. I believe we unanimously chose to support him as he came in and was able to express to the committee why he felt that he could use these increased powers.

It's one of those unintended consequences in legislation that sometimes, like this, it may have been passed a little bit too quickly, without the proper due diligence. As a result of that unintended consequence or lack of due diligence, there has been a case or cases that he has been unable to intervene in. He's been unable to testify in a court or basically state his opinion of the facts. It's had a negative impact on his role, and I'm happy that we're seeing some changes in here as per his request that will allow him to fully advocate, as others across the country in his role have the opportunity to do.

I know that there are members in the Chamber that are quite uncomfortable with allowing our front-line social workers to use their training and empowering them to make decisions without necessarily having to climb the bureaucratic ladder. I can share their concern and hope that the minister does regulate just how much power those individuals will have and the situations in which they will be allowed to exercise that training. I think that speeding up the decision-making process in the child intervention world, in child services, which could also directly impact the ability of the Crown to protect vulnerable children, is a positive step. Again, I would like to express the sense of trepidation that I do have about the degree of power we may be granting them, and I look forward to some fruitful discussion during Committee of the Whole about what exactly the minister's intention is with that.

I think giving foster parents the authority to make day-to-day decisions is another positive step. We have, you know, foster parents who truly – many of them deeply care about these individuals, and they want to be able to give them an environment that is as close to a home as they can possibly know under the circumstances, and this is just one more step that allows for those children who find themselves in that situation to truly have that sense of home and sense of family. I think it's going to make things much easier for the foster parents as well.

I'm happy to see the recognition of interprovincial and interjurisdictional family violence protection orders. It doesn't make a lot of sense to me, Mr. Speaker, that an individual in a neighbouring province or any province for that matter could have a restraining order against someone, they could move to Alberta, and that restraining order is null and void based on the fact that they crossed an imaginary line. I think that this is, again, a positive step forward, and I thank the minister for including it.

The overall intent to protect children, particularly those in harm's way, is admirable, and it should be supported by every party. There are some areas I will need some convincing on. I know that the minister is very passionate about creating his frameworks, and it reminded me during the briefing that we had on this bill of one of the more famous scenes from the movie Jerry Maguire, where Tom Cruise walks in at the ends and says: "You complete me." I truly believe that the minister, when thinking about having a new project, a new charter, a new framework to create, felt that this is going to add some completion. I'm saying it in jest and in good fun, Minister, and I hope you can take it that way.

I do sincerely appreciate the offer of the minister to include the opposition party in the creation of the charter, and I take what I see in here as just a general working framework as to what that is going to include. I don't think that it's a bad thing. I do believe that we see some very specific language in here that is a direct result of the social policy framework. It is what Albertans generally told this minister through that process, and I think that they see that in this act.

Another one of the things that I have a bit of a problem with, Mr. Speaker, is around the family violence death review committee reports. I believe that striking the committee is absolutely the right thing to do. I think that there's been a lot of positive that's been seen out of doing this similarly in Ontario. I believe five years ago they implemented something like this. I think it compounds the tragedy if we have a domestic violence situation where a death has occurred, and if we don't actually learn from it, then shame on us. Again, I believe that it's the right thing to do.

My problem with this and the way in which the wording is in the act is around the three reports. My understanding is that there will be a report that is completely confidential, that has a number of the details that the public does not need to know. A second report will be a public report. And a third report will be an annual report tabled here in the Legislature. My main concern is around that public report and the fact that based on the wording in the act, the minister can withhold that public report if he or she so chooses. I don't think that that's necessarily my definition of public. So, again, I look forward to having that discussion with the minister during the committee process as to what exactly would prevent him from releasing that report.

It's interesting to see this government, again, who ran on – you know, the leadership of the Premier. When she secured the leadership, she talked about slowing the legislative process down. I understand that a lot of the girth, as it were, of this bill is in consequential amendments, but at the end of the day it's also a very important piece of legislation, and I think the minister can appreciate that. I think it's incumbent upon us to get it right. Because this Earth and what we have here is on loan from our children, I think that it goes without saying that we need to have as a Legislature and as legislators the ability to look at this with more clarity, to get more clarity on what the Information and Privacy Commissioner has flagged for us here today.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a notice of amendment in which I would move that Bill 25, Children First Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. We'll just let that be circulated.

Hon. members, this amendment will be referred to as amendment RA1.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw. You have about a minute and a half left.

Mr. Wilson: I will make it quick, then, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

As suggested earlier, I think that this piece of legislation is so vital that it's a shame not to include everyone in the process. I believe that what we have in the Families and Communities Committee would allow for this bill to be properly dissected, for some public consultation to happen, for all parties to ask our stakeholders to have feedback and to do the due diligence that I know the minister has done himself. I just don't, quite frankly, feel like we're doing our jobs by getting a bill and having less than 24 hours to call stakeholders, to be able to properly look at it, to propose amendments to strengthen it. That being said, I think that rushing significant legislation like this is, quite frankly, an example of how not to govern.

I would ask all members to support this referral motion. Thank you for your consideration.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking to the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Is there 29(2)(a) on this?

The Deputy Speaker: There is 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: Okay. Thank you very much. Well, then, I would like to ask the hon. member what types of things he thinks the committee needs to consider. For example, we've received the information from the Privacy Commissioner raising a number of concerns. Do you feel that that is something the committee should consider? Should we hear from the public on this matter? I guess I would note that when this same minister was the Education minister, there was extensive consultation on the Education Act, but this is being fast-tracked very quickly, and it has a broad, broad effect on families and children. Do you feel that the committee should perhaps hold public hearings?

Mr. Wilson: Great. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for the question. To start with one of the items that he flagged, the news release from the Information and Privacy Commissioner, I wholeheartedly believe that we need to have the opportunity to ask her about her opinion. I recognize the fact that the minister has met with her, and they've negotiated extensively around this. I also recognize that many of these concerns are the same roadblocks that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek ran into when she was minister many years ago.

It doesn't change the fact that I do believe that having the opportunity to gain clarity on what her concerns are and making sure that we do what we can – I mean, she's also kindly put in here that at the very least she has a couple of amendments that she would like to see to the bill. I think that it would be far more productive and far more, I guess, in fashion and more respectful to what we do here to have the opportunity for various parties and various individuals to directly question her on what these concerns are and what we can do to address them and then pass this legislation knowing full well that we can meet both of these ends.

I do also believe that public hearings may be worth while. I don't see any reason why we shouldn't be doing this. If this is, again, such an important piece of legislation and building the children's charter is something that the minister is set on doing, then I think that it's almost incumbent upon us to make sure that we get public input on something along these lines.

Quite frankly, when the minister I believe yesterday suggested that he wanted to get through Committee of the Whole the day after tabling a bill this size, I don't believe that it truly respected the process.

Mr. Hancock: I never said that.

Mr. Wilson: I'm happy to hear that that process may be changed. Fair enough. I will withdraw that comment. I'm happy to hear that we do not have to go into Committee of the Whole tonight on this bill.

That said, I think that the committees that are struck by this Legislature, the all-party committees, are meant to do that. They are meant to examine legislation, and I think that we should exercise that right.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There is still time left. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. member's comments. I wanted to get a little bit of clarification from him. He referred to some members having issue with responsibility for the front-line staff. The hon. member had made a comment that it's front-line social workers, but what needs to be clarified is that in this bill it's talking about child intervention workers, not social workers. Social workers are trained, have certification, are qualified. There's a licensing body. There's an overseeing body of social workers. Child intervention worker is not defined. It's unclear. We have no idea what the training is. I was just wondering if that affects the hon. member's thoughts or position on this bill bestowing powers and authority to these child intervention workers who could have no qualifications or little or no certification or formal training in this area.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question and giving me time to respond. I think that this is just another reason why this needs to go to committee so that everybody can be perfectly clear on what it is that this bill is going to do and what it's going to allow for. I would be very interested, for example, for the College of Social Workers to come and talk to us about what it means to them and other stakeholders who have a complete grasp of what the positive and negative implications could be.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, we will now have debate on the amendment. I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased that the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw has made this amendment. I was waiting for just a moment to see if we were going to get a response from the minister on this, so I'll try and provoke one, then, if I can. I would rather be responding to the hon. minister once I know his position on whether or not this should be referred, but I certainly think it should be. I am very surprised at the haste with which this bill has been put forward. It's part of a bigger picture of haste on a number of bills. I don't know what sort of arrangements the Government House Leader has made with the Official Opposition, but I do know that our request to speak and have time to prepare amendments on other bills has not been responded to by the Government House Leader. I also know that bills have been put through over our objections, and we've not been informed that they were going to be dealt with; for example, Bill 21 last night.

I want to say that, from our point of view, the degree of co-operation that we're going to afford this government going forward in the last days of this session is going to be extremely limited. We have up until this time found the Government House Leader to conduct himself with integrity in a general sense, but we have found that that has been completely absent in the last few days, and we are very disappointed in those actions. We may be a small caucus, but we're a mighty caucus, Mr. Speaker.

I want to say that I think this particular bill should be referred to committee, as put forward in the motion, and it should be subject to public hearings. This is a bill with broad-reaching implications for families and for children, and there has been very little consultation with respect to this. It's odd to me that the minister, who in previous incarnations, for example as the Education minister with the Education Act, was going to consult till the cows came home, until people were sick of him coming around and knocking at their door: what do you think about my bill? That was the kind of stuff that was happening. It was consultation ad nauseam. In this case, we see a very different story. We see a much different situation, a bill that has many problems, from our perspective.

I know that some of our other colleagues in the Official Opposition don't have problems with the principles of this bill, but we do. We think that it deserves a lot of discussion and that it needs to be debated thoroughly in this House. Opposition parties need time to study it, to do their own consultations with different organizations, to prepare amendments, and so on. Some of those courtesies, indeed I would say rights of opposition parties have been trampled on by this minister acting as the official Government House Leader in the last few days, and we're not prepared to let that happen again. I want to say that this is worrisome legislation. We do need to talk to the public about it. I think there should be public hearings. I think we need to hear from people.

You know, kids matter. The minister loves to wear a little lapel pin. He's got one on right now. It says Children First. Well, this bill doesn't put children first. If this bill really puts children first, it would make sure that we talked to families around the province, that we talked to organizations that deal with children in all sorts of circumstances, including children who come from troubled families and have various sets of challenges.

Now, in the Premier's leadership campaign she stated that she would "require all government departments to conduct detailed program reviews and demonstrate why programs and services cannot be delivered by community-based organizations or the private sector." She further committed "to identify services that can be transferred to community leadership or privatized." Now, Mr. Speaker, we are on record in the areas of health care and education that those are public services, paid for by the taxpayers, and they need to be delivered publicly as well. The same goes double, in our view, for children's services.

What's happened is that the Premier has been targeting supports for the most vulnerable Albertans. Despite all the promises, all the great rhetoric in the campaign, all the promises that were made about eliminating child poverty in five years and so on, we haven't seen a single piece of evidence that this government is actually prepared to do anything about that. In fact, they've made major cuts to the supports of children living in poverty. I think that's shameful, Mr. Speaker, and this government needs to be held accountable on that. They can't run an election promising to eliminate child poverty, then completely ignore it in the throne speech, and then in the first budget after the election make multimillion-dollar cuts to the programs that would help those children.

We've seen the social policy framework and in that case the minister's epic consultation process, which concluded with exactly what the Premier wanted, and that is to download services to communities and private companies. On page 17 of the social policy framework it says that the government will move from its role as a funder to a new role as influencer, convener, and partner. Well, isn't that nice, Mr. Speaker? What nice things to say about the role of the government in dealing with children, particularly children who need help, who are in poverty. If they think that they can be an influencer, convener, and partner and cut supports to children's services and that's going to end child poverty, then they are dreaming in 3-D.

We are in the midst of results-based budgeting, which has tire company and lumber executives reviewing all program dollars on early child development and supports with Albertans with disabilities. We have the Premier's swath of broken promises, including her commitment in 2011 to eliminate child poverty in five years, and we have the Premier's budget, which was an unprecedented attack on Alberta's families and children: no commitments, no follow-through on the promise for full-day kindergarten; cuts to public schools, including elimination of AISI; cuts to busing; cuts to the education system support; learning resources cut in half; and there's a cut to the Alberta child health benefit.

The STEP program, by which many community organizations are able to deliver services within the community that benefit kids, that benefit families and benefit communities, has been eliminated. We've seen cuts to family supports for children with disabilities and to youth in transition. We've seen major cuts to postsecondary institutions. The biggest cuts of all come to our universities and our colleges. We've seen cuts to income support for learners and health benefits to learners. That's this Premier's record so far, Mr. Speaker, cuts to the important things that people need.

Now we have the Children First Act, that wants to engage in a mandatory review process of all government services and programs for kids in order to streamline and consolidate, all of this without consultation, all of this rammed through in the middle of the night if this minister has his way. It's just more code for this Premier's right-wing agenda of downloading, off-loading, and privatization of the most vital supports for vulnerable Albertans.

You know, you have to wonder where we start with this legislation, and I'm outlining some of those just to illustrate and underline the need for public consultation and to support the motion of referral that's been made.

Here's a serious problem: providing statutory authority for children in care to child intervention workers, the front-line staff, as opposed to the director of child, youth, and family enhancement. This is a serious concern to the workers on the front lines and the stakeholders that we've had a chance to talk to just briefly over the phone. They're very worried about this change.

It stems from a well-publicized court case in 2009 where the director was found personally in contempt of court. The Hon. Mr. Justice Jean Côté in his ruling described the child intervention system as a complex administrative structure and, according to the evidence he saw, "must exacerbate opacity and the opportunities for deniability." The government argued that the judge's view of the law would necessitate restructuring the whole child protection administration, and this bill is a clear response to that case. It is a restructuring of the entire system.

Mr. Speaker, there are lots of other things that I think we could talk about that are bad with this bill, but the point that I want to make is that something so important as the children of our province needs to have legislation, a government, and a minister that care about them. That means talking to Albertans. That means talking to Alberta families.

There are a wide range of views, and these views are reflected in this Chamber. We don't all have the same view of families or the role of the government in children's lives, but I think that we all benefit from a thorough discussion of those different ideas and different approaches, which hasn't happened with this bill. This is a top-down approach, top-down decision-making that will set in place very specific ways of dealing with children in our province. By not talking to the public, by not listening to the front-line staff, by not listening to families, I think that the minister has done a disservice. I think that the government has done a disservice. It's fine to pass legislation, but I think it's very important as well that the government be held to account for its other decisions, which I've outlined with respect to cuts that existed in the budget, contrasting those with the promises that were made by the Premier in the last election.

I believe that this government has done more to limit debate. The Premier made another promise, Mr. Speaker, in the election, and that is to recognize and value the role of the opposition. It has done absolutely the opposite since the election. That speaks to the need to have this matter referred to committee to give the opposition as well as government members a chance to participate in the process of shaping the legislation. I think the promise that was made is probably one of the hollowest that I've seen. If the Premier thought she could put opposition members to work in committees and create lots of busy work so that we couldn't do our job as opposition, she's mistaken. The opposition in all parties has been very effective in this session and will continue to be despite the attempts of the government to limit our ability to do our job.

Whether it's limiting debate on the budget or trying to ram through bills in the middle of the night, this government is less democratic and has behaved in a less democratic way than any of the previous governments that I've seen. I mean, it's all the same government, but they like to divide themselves into different governments by leaders so that they don't have to take responsibility for what happened with the last leader.

I've been here for a little while now, Mr. Speaker. I've worked across from three Premiers, and I have to say that this Premier is less open to the opposition, more likely to ram things through, more likely to trample on the rights of the Assembly than either of the other two Premiers with whom I've had the opportunity to work. I've seen a real deterioration in how they present financial information, how they debate the budget. You know, we've seen different rules in different committees for the opposition, limiting the opposition's time to ask questions on the budget, limiting our ability to debate the budget through various nefarious tricks devised by the Government House Leader.

I think that in general we can turn a page, Mr. Speaker. We can turn a page by supporting this motion, by taking substantial pieces of legislation and referring them to committees, taking them out to the public so that the public can get a better sense of what's in the legislation and could respond before we have votes, before we go in the middle of the night and push through important pieces of legislation. I think that that would be an excellent course for us to take.

Thank you for that.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I believe 29(2)(a) will be available after the second speaker. Based on the ruling by Speaker Kowalski, there will be 29(2)(a) available after the second speaker. [interjection] Okay. I've been corrected.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The Government House Leader did catch my eye. Did you want to speak?

Mr. Hancock: No. I want to speak to the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: To the motion. Okay.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief. Throughout his whole speech I'm not sure if the leader of the New Democratic opposition really had the opportunity to fully articulate how he felt. I am just wondering, with respect to this motion that was put forward by the Member for Calgary-Shaw, if he could actually highlight the main points that he has in favour of this motion. I just want to ask him if he can further elaborate in his articulation of the reasons he's supporting it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, just to remind you that this section is intended for brief comments and responses, not to extend debate. Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: I didn't know that, Mr. Speaker. That's the first time I've heard that.

Well, let me just quickly say that I think all of us benefit by more democracy rather than less. The government is doing a poor job. If the government is in trouble with voters, if the government is scared, they will want less democracy, and they will want less openness. Every PC government I've ever seen always campaigns on more openness and transparency, yet it gets a little darker every day.

An Hon. Member: You need to get your eyes checked.

Mr. Mason: Hon. member, through the chair.

In my view, what we need to do is to open up the windows. We need to open up the doors. We need to let the public know what's going on. They need to be able to have input, and they need to have the opportunity to hold the government accountable. I'm confident that if we do that, we'll have better government.

Even with this crew, hon. member, if we had more democracy, more openness and transparency in a real sense rather than just meaningless campaign promises, they could become a better government. I think it's actually possible, and we should try and encourage them to do that, to become a better government by accepting that more openness and transparency is good for them. It's tough medicine for this government, but I think they'd feel better if they'd actually listen to the public once.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to our leader of the New Democrats, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. In the fullness of time, usually when we receive bills, especially substantive bills – I seem to recall from the time that I was here before to now when we had the opportunity to do something very valuable, and that was to get out and consult with stakeholders. I shouldn't doubt that the government did do some of that work when they produced this bill, but I just wanted to ask the member what sorts of stakeholders – if we had some time to actually do this properly, how does that bear fruit to help to create good legislation that benefits the most people? I was just curious.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for that question. I think there is probably a whole slew of organizations that we could be talking to, and many organizations – not-for-profit organizations, community organizations, as well as professional associations – have a very strong, rich experience dealing with children and some of the issues that sometimes face children who are in more challenging circumstances. But I think that just listening to parents, just giving an opportunity for teachers and front-line workers and families to have input to this would be very interesting.

I've represented a part of Edmonton that is a lower income area for over 20 years both on city council and as an MLA, and I've visited some schools in my constituency and some in other areas as well. The struggles that the teachers have. Sometimes kids come in at about 10 o'clock.

5:50

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Government House Leader, speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to speak to the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood when he got up indicated that he wanted to be provocative. I had every intention of speaking to the amendment anyway because it does give me an opportunity again to respond to some of the issues that have been raised, but I want to indicate to the House that I don't think it's very appropriate for someone – it's very appropriate for a member to be provocative, and I always enjoy the provocation that comes from the hon. member. I find it offensive when he attacks my integrity. I have always considered . . .

The Deputy Speaker: A point of order has been noted at 5:51. I guess we should deal with that now.

Hon. member, do you have a citation for your point of order?

Mr. Mason: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j).

The Deputy Speaker: Proceed, hon. member, to speak to your point of order.

Point of Order Scheduling Government Business

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I think at this point we need to put on the record that with respect to Bill 21, first of all, we were not told that it would be dealt with last night. It was not in the communication or part of the agreement that was made, okay? So that's the first piece.

The House leader for the New Democrat opposition sent a note to the Government House Leader asking that it not be dealt with. I'm going to allow my House leader now to fill you in on the rest of the details.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, hon. member, if I may, I think that's the reason we have an amendment, because the amendment spoke to the whole idea of trying to move this into another place to allow more time. The point you have raised now is suggesting that your caucus did not have the opportunity to deal with this. I really can't see the point of order, hon. member.

I think we're going to proceed. We're going to let the Government House Leader carry on. That's exactly the content of the amendment that we're dealing with, hon. member, with all due respect.

Proceed, hon. Government House Leader.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you. I do want to get this in while the hon. member is here to hear it. The fact of the matter is that he did challenge my integrity by raising in discussion that they may not have time to have discussions around bills because they're rushed through. Yet Bill 21 was on the Order Paper last night, it was on Projected Government Business, and it was called. The hon. member was here, and if he'd had any objection to the thing proceeding, he could have stood up and said so and did not.

Mr. Mason: I sent you a note.

Mr. Hancock: It's not on the record that he said that. He sent me a note, but I don't get everything. I don't look at everything because I've got all sorts of things happening. [interjections] Things were happening very quickly.

My point is that there are important things to debate in this bill, and the hon. member chose to attack my integrity rather than bringing forward his vast experience, 15 years in the House, although he didn't even know the rule for raising a point of order.

That being said, this an important bill, and this is a bill that does bear discussion. I am one of those who actually was keen on getting legislative policy committees, now standing committees, into the rules and referring bills to those committees for productive discussion. I'm a member, as I think has been acknowledged, as the hon. member said, that consults bills ad nauseam.

I want to say two things on this particular amendment. First of all, it's a little premature. We're at the debate stage where we're talking about the principles of the bill. Others may disagree with me on this, but I think the principles of the bill are important to debate and pass, and then if we want to refer it to a committee rather than dealing with it in Committee of the Whole here, that's another discussion. As to what should be in the bill and whether certain things are handled in the bill in an appropriate way and those sorts of things, that could possibly be something for discussion before a committee, either in the House or a legislative policy committee. But I think we can come to some agreement as to whether the principles of the bill are the ones we want before we send it to the committee to do that further study. That's one point, and that's why I won't be supporting this amendment.

The second point is with respect to consultation. Two points. First of all, I can assure the House that I spent a considerable amount of time in January, February, and March meeting with stakeholder groups. Not every stakeholder across the province, obviously – and we certainly didn't put up the website that we did on the social policy framework discussion – but we have had considerable discussion with groups that are involved with families. Evidence of that is the some 17 to 25 representatives of many of those groups, not all of them, who are here because they are excited about this bill coming forward. They are excited about what we've been doing. They acknowledged yesterday publicly that what we've put into this bill reflects what they asked us to do.

I didn't go out and say: "I'm going to have a Children First Act. What would you like in it?" I went out and said, "How can we frame a discussion around children in an appropriate way, and what are the things that we could move on immediately to show direction and action while we're continuing the discussion over a longer period of time over the other things we should do?" The review process that's built into the bill provides the opportunity for us to look at everything we're doing and to review everything we're doing.

The FOIP review that was promised in the throne speech will allow a thorough review of the FOIP Act, but there are things we need to do now in the best interest of children. It's been very clear from all of the stakeholders – and the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek acknowledged that we have been trying to do some of this information sharing stuff for a long time. I can say that there have been discussions between our department and the Privacy Commissioner's office, and we made some changes to the wording in the act to try and accommodate the concerns that were being raised by them. I'm disappointed in the news release, to be perfectly frank, because it was my view that we had accommodated all of the issues that were raised. But we can get into that discussion.

I would encourage members to think about the fact that we are having a discussion now, and we will be going out and having discussions about poverty and poverty reduction. I've made that public, and we're going to be doing that. We are going to be talking about the family violence tragedy, and there will be consultation on that. In fact, virtually every piece that's in here is going to be the subject of some very thorough discussion. But I would suggest that we ought not hold up the good, low-hanging fruit, if I can call it that, that's in this bill, the things that we can do now to make things better now while we discuss the additional things that we can do to make it better. If we've made a mistake in this – and that's quite possible – then we can always come back and fix it with that discussion.

We do need to empower front-end workers, properly qualified, which is why we define them in the bill as child intervention workers, and then put a regulation-making authority as to what the qualifications need to be before a person is delegated the authority to make that front-end decision. That's an important piece because you do need qualified people to make those decisions.

But we do not need the whole of our bureaucracy – and I don't use bureaucracy in a bad way – to be available to slow down processes and the decision-making that needs to be made on a more urgent basis by people who are qualified to do it at the front end of the system. We certainly don't need it to go up the line to the director to determine whether a child should be allowed to go on a field trip for school, particularly if a foster child is in a family with other children and the other children are going to the same school and dad can sign their forms or mom can sign their forms but can't sign the form for the foster child. How does that make the child feel in the family? We don't need to hold that up. We can start doing that now.

I find it really ironic that those members – I was going to call them the third party, but I think they've been demoted to fourth – would get up day after day saying that we're not taking any action. Then when we take action, they say that we're going too fast, that we've got to slow down, and that we ought to consult some more. That's really ironic. So to attack my integrity, and then be totally inconsistent in their comments and framework about what we should do and how we should do it: that's really ironic.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has provoked me. I always thought he was an honourable guy and, quite frankly, a friend. Then he gets up and challenges my integrity over stuff that he should know well . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hate to interrupt you, hon. Government House Leader, but it is 6 o'clock. The House stands adjourned until 7:30 tonight.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 8, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 25 Children First Act

Mr. Wilson moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 25, Children First Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned May 8: Mr. Hancock speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that when we left, I was in the middle of a bit of a tirade. I don't think I need to repeat it, but I would like to say this. I mean, there's some discussion in this amendment about sending the bill off to the legislative policy committee just to reframe the debate a little bit. I was in the process, I think, of saying that I am a big believer in the legislative policy committees, standing committees, as they're now called. I think there's some very good work that those committees can do, and I think in some circumstances it's great to send a bill from the House.

There are a couple of stages that you can send a bill from the House to the committee. One of them would be after first reading so that you can debate the principles at the committee and come back recommending whether a bill is needed or not, whether or not people agree that the principles that are espoused in the bill should be proceeded with. That's why you would send a bill to committee after first reading or, quite frankly, before you've passed it on a second reading.

But if you agree that the principles of a bill are correct, the principles being in this case the support for children, the concept of a children's charter, the concept of a review, the concept of information sharing in appropriate ways between professionals who are working collaboratively together on the benefit of children, if you believe that the Alberta Centre for Child, Family and Community Research should have access to the data which is necessary to do the research so they can provide information for us with respect to the longitudinal effect of programs on children, if you believe in those principles, then this wouldn't be the time to send the bill to committee because we wouldn't be asking the committee to talk about the principles of the bill. We would agree with those principles.

Now, if there are more principles that people think should be in the bill, if there are things that people think are not covered by that or if they think that the wording is not sufficient, then the next stage of the bill, obviously, is Committee of the Whole. The bill can be sent to a committee after second reading and before Committee of the Whole if you want to look at what's in the bill and whether or not the provisions for creating a children's charter are fulsome enough or the provisions for the review process are fulsome enough, whether the protections around privacy and information sharing are fulsome enough. All of those things can be dealt with as a result of that.

My point is that this motion should fail on the basis that it's not at the right point. This is at the principle stage of the bill, and I would hope that members in the House would agree in principle with the bill.

The second reason why I wouldn't send it to committee. This speaks to the question that my critic from Calgary-Shaw just shouted across, and that is: would you support it at that stage? The honest answer is: no, I would not. That's because I think we can in committee deal with some of the issues, if we want to, that I've heard so far relative to the children's charter and how the House gets to look at that. I think we can look at some of those things in Committee of the Whole. We don't need a study, and we don't need, quite frankly, further input to deal with some of those particular issues that have come up.

With respect to the privacy issues that have been raised, sometimes we'll just have to agree to disagree. We've done a lot of work, I think, between the department and the Privacy Commissioner's office to try and deal with those issues. But for me the paramount issue here is: do the people working on behalf of children have the opportunity to share information together to achieve it? We saw it with people here yesterday, whether it was the chief of police from Calgary, whether it was the executive director of the Calgary Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre, or some of the others. The single biggest problem we have, in my view, with respect to helping kids is the people who don't think they can share information for the benefit of those kids. So no, I don't think that that's a principle that I'm prepared to bend on as the sponsor of the bill, and I don't think this House should bend on it.

I think you can always improve things. Nothing's ever perfect, and quite frankly sometimes things are just wrong, but I don't think the process to improve this bill is by sending it to the committee. I think the process to improve this bill is to pass this bill with whatever amendments we might want around those other pieces. I'm happy to look at amendments if people want to raise them.

I'm very pleased that my critic from the Wildrose Party took the time to come up from Calgary and attend, I thought, a fairly thorough briefing in which I also provided what I would call a table of concordance as to where in the three-column document the pieces fit into the act. In the drafting of the act people called it a 78-page act, but it's very clear that one single amendment, the change from director to child intervention worker, occupies about 60 or maybe 70 of those 78 pages. It's all just changes in various sections of the act. I directed the attention of the opposition critic to the specific sections and the specific columns.

Quite frankly, if the third and fourth parties had cared to attend, they would have got the same thing, a completely open and transparent discussion about what the principles were.

Ms Notley: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you've got a point of order. Citation, please.

Point of Order Provocative Language

Ms Notley: Yes. Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). The minister suggested that members of our caucus or that representatives from our caucus, quote, could not care to attend a briefing. In fact, we did send representatives from our caucus, who spent a great deal of time speaking with the minister and his staff getting the information and providing us with all the information that was available on this bill.

The suggestion by the minister that somehow we don't care about this bill or that we did not engage in the briefing process is exactly the type of language under 23(h), (i), and (j) which is intended to provoke and to create disorder within this House, Mr. Speaker, and also to impute motives. We care a great deal about this bill. We are a very small caucus. We asked our staff to go and get briefed. They got briefed, and I believe that we are quite as well informed as anyone could be who hadn't had the exact piece of legislation given to us. Of course, nobody did until yesterday, all 71 pages, notwithstanding the assurances of the minister that we should just trust him that most of it isn't really that complicated.

So I suggest that the minister should withdraw the comment that suggests or is designed to suggest that we were not caring enough to become informed about the substance of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister, to respond to the point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry if I offended the hon. member. I'm actually delighted that she has acknowledged that their researchers had well in advance of the introduction of the bill a very thorough briefing and a full understanding of what was going to be in the bill. I appreciate her putting that on the record. I apologize for saying that she didn't care enough to show up. I'm glad that they at least sent caucus representatives, and I'm glad their researchers thoroughly understood the bill and thoroughly briefed her on the bill before she came to the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The minister has apologized, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Why did he say what he said, Mr. Speaker? [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please. I heard the minister make an apology, and I think that I'm quite willing to accept that apology on behalf of the House and invite the minister to continue.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know the point of order is over and I am speaking to the bill, but I heard the leader of the fourth party say, "Why did he say what he said?" Well, I think it is important. You know, we try and alert the opposition as early as possible. There are protocols in the House that say that we can't share a bill before it's tabled in the House. I try and do everything I can to meet that protocol while making sure that opposition members have access to an understanding of bills because we often don't have a great deal of time.

It's been my practice as House leader to try and introduce bills as early as possible so that they can sit during a budget process and then be debated afterwards. We didn't have the luxury of that this session, so I've encouraged all of my colleagues who have bills to make sure that briefings happen, and I think that's important. I think it's important for the opposition critic to actually show up, and I really appreciate the fact that Calgary-Shaw did show up, you know, at a time when it was very inconvenient to him, I'm sure. That I appreciate, and I would have appreciated it if the others had, but I understand that they have other things to do, and they have their caucus researchers. I really do appreciate an acknowledgement that they were thoroughly briefed on the technical aspects of the bill.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hancock: I just want to go on to say that in preparing this bill, I met with a lot of stakeholders personally. Departmental people did as well, but I personally attended a number of round-tables that we had with stakeholders, including family violence prevention and intervention people, sexual assault centres, child and youth support services, the nonprofit and voluntary sector, police, Alberta Health Services, school boards and educators, information-sharing and protection of privacy people, and people in the mental health field, many of them. I can assure you that over January, February, and March I was doing a lot of that in addition to all the other things we were doing in preparation for understanding what the next steps were.

7:40

One of the next steps that was very clear was that we needed to frame the discussion, which is what the Children First Act does, and that there were some early things that we could do. But this is very clearly the start of a process, not the end of a process, the start of a process which will involve a public discussion about how a children's charter should be framed and what should be in it and then how we bring that back to life.

I have no intention of going home and writing a children's charter. That's not the way I do things. That's not the way we did the social policy framework. That's not the way we did the Education Act. That's not the way we do any of the stuff. We're not going to go home and write this because the benefit of a charter of any sort is in the process used to develop it in which the community gains ownership.

That was one of the other things that was raised, community ownership. A community has to own its own social issues. Government, of course, is a partner in that process, but we're not advocating government's responsibility. We're not farming it out to the private sector. We are working with the community to understand our social issues and help develop solutions for those social issues because they're societal issues. There's no magic wand and there's no pot of money that's going to make them right, and legislation isn't going to make them right. Legislation is a framework that you can do things under. That's what this is.

I would encourage us to pass this legislation now. There will be opportunity – and I'll put it on the record here – to have a fulsome discussion on family violence issues and a renewal of the family violence strategy. There will be opportunity for discussion on child poverty because we have a number of communities that are publishing their reports on child poverty. In the next few weeks, actually, we'll see Calgary publish theirs. We'll see Edmonton publish theirs in the next month or so. I think there are 10 other communities that are developing them, so the work has started on that. We're not starting from scratch.

There's a lot of work, a lot of consultation, a lot of things happening. We promise in this legislation a review of policies, programs, and that would include, in my view, legislation because legislations, after all, are policy. There will be lots of consultation. There will maybe even be some pieces that we will all agree should go to a legislative policy committee, but I would ask that we move ahead with this act if for no other reason than because the NDP opposition thinks that no action has been taken. My gosh, there's been a lot of action, and I think we should continue that action, and we should get this done.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I am on 29(2)(a). I appreciate the minister holding the briefing last week. I understand that he's not mandated to do so. It was a very good discussion, so thank you for that. But I would like to ask the minister. He speaks of the urgency to pass this legislation, and we've been here sitting now for over two months. We delayed the start of session by weeks on end, so I'm wondering if he could address: why wait until the last few days of this session to drop this bill and have debate happen? I would appreciate the minister answering that question as opposed to the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: I'd be happy to. Despite what people think, legislation doesn't get created overnight. Good legislation certainly doesn't get created overnight. There are times when you can do emergency legislation, but most legislation actually goes through a considerable process.

Now, in this one we started the process, and some of the stuff that's coming into this actually comes from the discussions we had around the social policy framework. Then we had to sort of say: "Okay. Well, what does that mean for our next steps?" Then we took that and went out and talked to all of these stakeholder groups to say: "Did we hear right from what people were saying on the social policy framework discussions? Does this map onto what you're saying we need to do?" One of the big issues – and it's part of that conversation – one of the questions I asked was: if we could bring forward a piece of legislation, what would you want to have in it? That wasn't a promise of legislation. It was saying that that could be one of the tools.

The development process, quite frankly, has been truncated a little bit because in this life you only have so much life, and I've discovered that if you don't get things done in two years, you might be moved to another portfolio. In 15 years in this business I think I'm in my seventh, so there's a little bit of urgency in everything I do these days because, you know, I started an education process which three ministers after me had to finish off, and I don't like to leave my messes around for other people to clean up. I want to get this stuff done.

I think we've talked with people. We've heard back from people that were here in person because they cared about it being introduced. They wanted to support it. They're excited about the information-sharing pieces, even if the Privacy Commissioner is not. They are excited about the things that are in here. Yeah, we could take another month to debate it if the House is around for another month.

I would have dearly loved to have introduced this at the beginning of session, but it wasn't ready. It wasn't done. I do have other duties in terms of a House leader and budget processes and all that sort of thing, so I can't spend all day every day on it, but I try. Yeah, it would have been nice to be able to introduce this earlier, but I just got it done. It got done. We got it through the processes.

We needed then to get caucus approval because we have to do that. I can't bring it by myself. I don't own this bill. This is a government bill, so I have to get approvals. Then having gotten those approvals, I have to get people to draft it, and then we have to make sure that the drafting meets the policy approvals, that process which colleagues who have been in government know a little bit about and can inform you about. So it's not a short process; it's not an easy process.

This is outside the normal bounds in that normally as House leader I ask my colleagues to give me their legislative plans, a three-year plan ahead of time and a one-year plan by last June. This one was not on the one-year plan last June because we were in the social policy framework discussions, and I didn't want to presume what was going to come out of that. What did come out of that is that Albertans think the strongest priority we have in social policy is getting children a good start, and I'm going to follow through on that.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Ms Notley: On the amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to speak to this amendment. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Shaw for putting forward this amendment because I do believe that it represents a good conciliatory opportunity for us to address in a more fulsome way a number of the very significant policy elements that appear in this legislation, and it gives us an opportunity to understand their consequences and to ensure that we don't go bowling forward simply because the Premier wants to have some deliverable that she can talk about on a campaign trail this summer. As a result, I think that the Member for Calgary-Shaw has come forward with a very good proposal.

That being said, though, Mr. Speaker, I do want to just briefly speak to an issue that arose in the exchange between the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and the Government House Leader and just put it on the record in relation to the propensity of this government to move things forward at breakneck speeds and to display an increasing level of disrespect for each of the opposition parties and in particular for the opposition House leaders.

In particular, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood brought up the fact that we had anticipated having the opportunity to put in amendments to Bill 21, which is a number of amendments around the ministry of environment related to water monitoring. The House leader suggested in his comments that, in fact, it was always on the Order Paper that Bill 21 would be considered in Committee of the Whole last evening, on Tuesday. I just need to be clear that, first of all, in fact, I have the Order Paper from that day that was printed on Tuesday, May 7, presumably on the advice of the Government House Leader because certainly the opposition gets no input into these things. It states very clearly, simply, that Bill 21 would be in second reading and that it would not be in Committee of the Whole.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in addition to that there has been a practice in this House that every day – typically, depending on the level of functionality, it would be by 9 or 10 o'clock in the morning; as things have become decreasingly functional, it's now more like 11:30 or noon or 12:30 – we get a note from the Government House Leader's office that puts forward the proposed schedule for government business for Orders of the Day for that day. That is something that's a tradition that's been in play as long as I've been House leader, since 2008. Every now and then that might change as a result of negotiations between all House leaders, but it certainly doesn't change without notice to House leaders.

Of course, that proposed order of business also did not suggest that Bill 21 would even be in Committee of the Whole yesterday evening, nor, certainly, did it suggest that it would be voted through. Now, sometimes those things happen accidentally, and indeed those things have happened accidentally.

7:50

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the Minister of Human Services has risen on a point of order.

The hon. minister.

Point of Order
Scheduling Government Business

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(h), (i), and (j) the hon. member is clearly imputing false motives to me as House leader and challenging what I said. Now, we are supposed to be debating the Children First Act, which I think is a very important act. If they want to deal with what happened last night on Bill 21, 21 will come up later tonight, and you can raise all the issues you want on 21 tonight when it comes up.

But the hon. member protests that the Order Paper says that Bill 21 will be in second reading on Tuesday, May 7, “and as per the Order Paper,” which is always there because one of the things we know about this House is that business is fluid and that things happen that you don’t expect to happen. Did I expect that we would move 10 stages of bills yesterday? Absolutely not, but we did, and we went home by about quarter after, 20 after 9. Did I anticipate that happening? No. But here I was, having made a commitment to the Liberal opposition House leader, because she asked, with respect to holding Bill 17 until she could come back at 9 o’clock because she had an amendment she wanted to speak to, and we did that. We had then to desperately find business to fill in.

That’s why it always says on the Order Paper – and the hon. member has been here long enough to know – “as per the Order Paper.” That means that this is our intended business for the day, but it’s fluid. She knows that. She’s seen these circumstances happen before. So to impute that I’m somehow making a commitment in an e-mail, if that’s the case, one of two things can happen. Either we don’t send her an e-mail saying what’s coming up in the day, which I don’t think she’d like, or we will put in that e-mail that she should understand that this is our intended business for the day, but if things change, things change.

I mean, we don’t do that on an intentional basis. I didn’t intentionally rearrange life, but we actually ran out of business last night, Mr. Speaker. We couldn’t get unanimous consent to proceed, to take another step on a stage. We’d made a commitment not to move Bill 24 because somebody wanted to speak to it the next day and made a commitment not to deal with Bill 17, but I hadn’t made any commitment not to deal with Bill 21. Nobody had asked me to make a commitment on Bill 21.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hancock: You can’t do a point of order on a point of order. Don’t be silly.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I will rule on the point of order. You’ll have a chance to speak to it if you like.

Proceed.

Mr. Hancock: The point is that she’s making allegations against me as House leader which are totally wrong. If she wants to, we can sit down, and I can give her a briefing on how this House works if she hasn’t been around long enough.

An Hon. Member: Don’t be patronizing.

Mr. Hancock: Well, you’re the one who raised the question of integrity in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we get back to the business of the Children First Act. If the hon. member wants to talk about Bill 21, Bill 21 will come up soon enough.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, did you wish to speak to the point of order?

Mr. Mason: No. I will let my House leader go.

Ms Notley: Well, since this point of order has turned into a debate on this particular issue, I’m perfectly happy to go on with that.

There is an Order Paper here for yesterday, which outlines very clearly that as of yesterday Bill 21 was going to be dealt with in second reading. Now, several times the House leader has talked about how he was being so accommodating to the Member for Edmonton-Centre for her ability to come back and debate Bill 17 and put an amendment forward. The critical component, Mr. Speaker, which is fundamental to having this House operate in a remotely productive way, is that she was told that Bill 17 was going to be coming up that night. Now, you know that in general during debate not every member of the House is here at every given time. That is the way it is for the government side, heaven knows, and also for the opposition.

Now, when you take into account, Mr. Speaker, that in this sitting this government has started scheduling committee meetings in the morning over the objection of opposition members, that this government has put night sittings in unnecessarily over the objections of opposition members, that this government has scheduled committee meetings between the afternoon and the evening sitting over the objection of opposition members, for this House leader to suggest that that’s the way it works and that there is no precedent and no history of the House leaders working together to make sure that members are able to be there when their critic areas come up at critical times is absolutely ridiculous. That is the way that it has always been done.

It is particularly necessary to respect the rights of the minority, Mr. Speaker, when you have a small opposition, and they cannot simply be here for 18 hours a day because they can’t trust the House leader to tell them what’s coming up at any given time.

Now, the fact of the matter is that the history has always been that the House leader advises the other House leaders at least on that given day what the schedule is. On this particular day the Order Paper did not say that Bill 21 was coming up in Committee of the Whole. The subsequent e-mail that goes out to all House leaders every morning from his office did not say that it was going to go to Committee of the Whole. It did say that Bill 17 would, which is why the Member for Edmonton-Centre then made arrangements, but it did not say that Bill 21 would. Moreover, the House leader was then contacted by me, and he responded to it. When he still had the time, he was provided a note by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in the midst of debate on Bill 21 in Committee of the Whole, and he still insisted on voting it through.

Mr. Mason: He didn’t respond.

Ms Notley: He did not.

Mr. Hancock: After the fact.

Ms Notley: No. It was done while it was still on.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that the House leader can either respect all of the opposition House leaders in this House, or we can have this place descend into acrimony much like we are doing now, and we can have debates go on much longer than perhaps necessary. It's a decision that needs to be made.

This is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The reason I am raising this is simply to recount the history and to recount the practice in this House and to set the record straight. It is under no circumstances a point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j). Simply recounting the facts of a situation is not in any way, shape, or form a breach of 23(h), (i), or (j).

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, it's very obvious that we have a disagreement in the House, whether it's between the House leaders or the different sides of the House. We've heard this throughout the spring sitting about the scheduling of estimates and other schedules and so on. I have a hard time trying to find a point of order here. It's very obvious – and I think both sides can agree – that we do have a disagreement in terms of the scheduling, how the House has been scheduled through the spring. It is my hope that after this session is over, some accommodations that may be more amenable to both sides will be found, that this does not continue into the fall session.

Hon. members, I would encourage both sides of the House to stay on topic. We're discussing an amendment to second reading of Bill 25. If both sides would confine their arguments and the rhetoric to the topic at hand, I'm hoping that we might get out of here at some reasonable time tonight.

I find no point of order, and I would ask that we proceed.

We were on the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Please continue, and please try to stay on topic.

Debate Continued

Ms Notley: Absolutely. Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to confine my arguments and, indeed, my rhetoric to the motion around referring Bill 25, and I will do that at this point. Thank you very much.

The motion on Bill 25 is to refer it to committee in order to give us the opportunity to review it in greater detail. Now, the Minister of Human Services said that, well, this is not necessarily the best time for it to be referred to committee because presumably we all agree with the principles underlying this bill. But, Mr. Speaker, I think once you get past the name of Bill 25, we're running into some difficulty with our agreement with the principles. The reason for that is because, as the minister himself said, this bill is one legislative extension from the social policy framework that the minister introduced. I think it was in January or so when he announced it.

8:00

Mr. Hancock: February.

Ms Notley: February, the minister advises.

This is an extension of that social policy framework. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that we do not agree in principle with the components of that social policy framework. That social policy framework does not talk about economic equality. It does not talk about the meat and the potatoes and the rent required to eliminate child poverty in this wealthy province. What that social policy framework talks about is taking the incredibly historically damaging decisions of, in fact, the Klein government to privatize almost 50 per cent of poverty reduction strategies that were undertaken by the government at that time and downloading them onto the community and downloading them onto volunteers and downloading them onto charities and creating a patchwork, unconnected system.

That is what the government did in the mid-90s. That created huge pain and suffering in the lives of vulnerable Albertans and contributed directly to the massive growth in child poverty that we see in Alberta now. The social policy framework that this minister, with the absolute approval and cheerleading of his Premier, introduced this February is essentially premised on the same model. It's talking about the government becoming a partner and sitting beside private corporations and volunteer groups and nonprofit groups and employers and facilitating their whatever it is that's going to somehow deal with child poverty in Alberta.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we don't think you can deal with child poverty in Alberta, for instance, when the wealthiest people in Alberta pay the least amount of tax in the country and the gap between the wealthy and poor in this province is the largest in the country. When $10 billion a year is left on the table because we don't want to ask wealthy Albertans to pay their fair share, that is the kind of issue you need to get to to start dealing with real economic equality. This minister instead wants us to adopt an act which flows from a framework which is about getting a bunch of charities together to collaborate in a very unco-ordinated way, with the government being very clear in that document that they want to move away from their role as funder, which means those tax dollars will not go to eliminating child poverty, and we can potentially free up more tax dollars to give even more tax breaks to the wealthiest Albertans and corporations in the province.

The reason I am talking about this, Mr. Speaker, is because this goes to the principle of the bill. Because I have some significant concerns about that principle, I do believe that this is the right time to refer the bill to a committee, not afterwards. That's the first point.

The second point, of course, is that we need to talk about some significant issues that have already been raised. The bill was introduced yesterday, and we already have an officer of this Legislature identifying serious concerns about components of this bill.

Now, it's really interesting, you know, Mr. Speaker. The bill talks about giving service providers almost unfettered access to the private information of children and their parents. I would just like to take a moment to give you the actual reading of who service providers are under this legislation. The organizations include

- (i) a corporation,
  - (ii) an unincorporated association,
  - (iii) a trade union as defined under the Labour Relations Code,
  - (iv) a partnership as defined under the Partnership Act, and
  - (v) an individual acting in a commercial capacity,
- but does not include an individual acting in a personal or domestic capacity.

That is the definition of a service provider which is referred to in this legislation.

What in heaven's name are we doing talking about giving any of those organizations the ability to share the medical information of parents of children at risk if they in whatever capacity decide that it's in the best interests of the child? That is a huge, Orwellian change, and it is outrageous that this government would come to us at this point and ask us to approve the legislation.

I'm just reading from your legislation, Mr. Minister. This is what your legislation says. You may have a different objective. You may have talked about different objectives when you introduced this legislation, but our job is to actually read the legislation and make sure that the language that you're asking us to approve meets your objective, and this does not meet that. That is why this piece of legislation needs to go to a committee so that it can be properly evaluated over the proper amount of time.

We may well have had a briefing a week ago, but we did not have the legislation in front of us. We did not have this definition of service provider in front of us, and that's just one section in 71 pages of the act that I've just had a chance to look at right now. I can't imagine what other little gems we will find with more time, but I can imagine that this issue is so important to Albertans, it is so important to our most vulnerable citizens, it is so important to the children of Alberta that it deserves time and attention. It deserves to be given full debate over time, with genuine consultation in an open and transparent fashion, where we can all see what everybody has to say about the components of this. Passing this in second reading tonight, running it through committee on Monday, and trying to wrap it up on Tuesday does not meet that objective, Mr. Speaker. It is disrespectful to the very people we are suggesting we are here to help and support.

For that reason, I completely support the amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary-Shaw. This piece of legislation requires far more consideration and far more deliberation than this House leader is currently prepared to allow members of this Assembly. I urge all members of this Assembly to support this motion. Do it to put the children first.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I certainly concur with my colleague. [interjections] I know it's a shock, a horror. Lightning strikes twice. Well, you know, the more you listen, right? She's got a lot of experience and wisdom, for sure, that I've learned from. I have to ask her a question that I think all of you might find interesting. I mean, this is substantive legislation. It's not dissimilar, at least in scope, to the Education Act. I know that was a long and winding road, three ministers and so forth. We don't necessarily need that.

Again, it's this question of conferring with stakeholders that I would like to go back to. I heard the hon. minister talking about some of the examples of people that he met, but something just popped into my head. Why didn't he confer with the Privacy Commissioner, who now comes a few hours later and says that this has serious problems and concerns? Can you think of some other ones that maybe we could talk to besides the Privacy Commissioner that would give us good stakeholder advice that would help to make this legislation something good?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will say that I haven't yet had the opportunity to confer with all the stakeholders to find out who was consulted and who was not. I have some questions about whether the College of Social Workers has been conferred with about this fundamental change in the relationship between social workers and the statutory authority prescribed under the act and the director and the delegation of that authority to people who are not social workers. I don't know if they have been consulted with, but it would strike me as absolutely mind-bogglingly foolish to have not consulted with the College of Social Workers as they are the professional body that delivers the service which we are now talking about having a different group of people deliver or an expanded group of people deliver.

I would also question whether there was consultation with the union that represents social workers. They, too, have insight in terms of what the work process is and how that is working. You know, you always hear what the managers tell you is happening in the department, and then you talk to the front-line workers or their representatives, and you find out what's really happening in the department. Were they consulted with? I don't know. Those are people that need to be consulted with. Moreover, even amongst the groups of people that minister says that he's consulted with – he said that he consulted with the Privacy Commissioner, but then the Privacy Commissioner came out with a press release saying: well, I kind of disagree with what's going on here.

The question then becomes: how many of the other organizations might welcome the opportunity to openly discuss some of their supports and misgivings about this legislation? Not everybody is an officer of the Legislature, feeling that they're okay to come out with a press release outlining some of their concerns about the legislation. If one of the people that the minister consulted with then was able within 24 hours to put out a two-page press release outlining her concerns about his act, I worry about what some of those other organizations, which happen to be financially reliant on the government in many cases for operating funds and grants, would say if they were invited to an open forum and asked specific questions about this element of the act or that element of the act and how we can do this better.

If we care enough about this issue, that is why we would do that in an open forum, that is why we'd refer it to the Legislative Offices Committee, and that is why we would have all those consultations in public, on the record, in Hansard, so that we could really evaluate whether we're making the best choices here.

You know, the Member for Edmonton-Calder talks about the Education Act history. The minister himself talks about the Education Act history. Now, that was an interesting one because although there were two years of consultation, the consultation was so high level that many people who were involved in much of the consultation were still surprised when they saw the legislation. I actually think that when you're making substantive changes to legislation, there's actually, you know, a big piece where you're really changing how you do the work. There's a lot to be said for taking that legislation and then putting that legislation on the road and consulting on that. That's when people really see what it means. They see what the high-level language and communications spin actually looks like when it comes into law.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of this motion for referral. I'll get into some specifics.

I think, you know, part of the issue and why this motion is very, very appropriate is because our democratic process is really contingent upon ensuring that voices are represented, that opinions are expressed, and that we debate and look at all different sides of an issue. I mean, it's interesting that the minister claims that there were many different groups that were consulted. I'm reluctant to use the word "consulted" because of the formal definition of consultation. But they were engaged in a discussion.

The minister, when he rose this evening, talked about how this has been a process going on for I believe he had said a couple of years, a significant amount of time, let's say. I think that that is positive, that any amendments or large changes to an act or to processes need an adequate amount of time in discussion with different stakeholders, both those that are going to be affected directly and indirectly. However, the second piece to that, Mr. Speaker, is ensuring that all Members of this Legislative Assembly, representing the roughly 3.7 million Albertans, have adequate time to debate, to create amendments, to thoroughly go through legislation or bills before they become legislation.

You know, I'd like to remind the Assembly that this bill is no small bill. There are quite a number of changes being proposed. This was only given to the opposition 24 hours ago or in that area, so it's challenging. All members, I believe, of the Legislative Assembly, both on the government side and the opposition side, want to ensure that they're doing their job to the best of their abilities and have the resources and tools available at their disposal to ensure that they can work to the best of their abilities and serve Albertans in the capacity that we were all put here to do.

It's very challenging to first of all go through a piece of hefty legislation in a very short period of time and to do it justice. Now, I will commend members of my caucus, the NDP caucus, and our staff for the amount of work that they've done in a very short period of time, trying to disseminate this bill and look at the repercussions.

I honestly think, Mr. Speaker, that part of the reason why this motion is so applicable is that I see this as, "If we're going to do something, let's do it right the first time" as opposed to the minister's idea of: "Let's just pass it through haphazardly. It's good enough for the moment. We can always go back to it." I disagree with that line of thinking. You know, when we're affecting the lives of tens of thousands of children, numerous families and workers within Alberta, it's very important that we take the time to debate, to go over, to contemplate, and to go through a bill line by line with our glasses on to scrutinize but also to come up with ways to improve and ensure that the legislation that we're going to pass is really in the best interests of all of those Albertans that it will affect.

You know, I can appreciate the minister feeling that his ministry and likely himself have consulted with quite a number of groups. I'd like to take back that word. They've discussed with quite a few different stakeholders and individuals this bill before it was written. However, I think it's important to note that that opportunity is also one of high priority for opposition parties, that we have the ability and the time as well to discuss and to talk with the front-line workers, families, service providers, and stakeholders that that legislation is going to affect. I think it's important, Mr. Speaker.

I'll just draw a very brief analogy. For the members who have children, I think that if one of their children, for example, was writing a letter to their grandparent, they may write in a certain way and include certain details that are appropriate for their audience, appropriate for their grandparent whereas if they were to write a letter to their close friend, there might be a different use of vernacular. There may be different words that are used, there might be a different tone, and they might reveal different details or tell different stories.

My point is that those folks who have been in discussions with the government may have a bit of a different story or points that they would raise or feel more comfortable raising with nongovernment members of the House. Maybe they're more willing to share certain details with others. My point, Mr. Speaker, is that it's important that all parties in this House have an opportunity to engage with Albertans before legislation is passed through. If the other opposition parties work as diligently as the Alberta New Democrats, then I know that in the very short amount of time that we're given to consult and to discuss poignant issues with all of the different stakeholders, that's a priority. You know, it's important that we do that.

You know, I applaud the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for raising the issue that different stakeholders need to be consulted. I'm unsure. It's unclear whether the College of Social Workers, who have a great stake in this bill and piece of legislation, have been thoroughly consulted, if there's been an adequate level of discussion. It's extremely challenging in a very short time frame, less than 24 hours, for opposition parties to try to engage with many of the different groups to get, well, for lack of a better way of putting it, Mr. Speaker, their interpretation of the bill and the effects that it's going to have on their clients, on their staff, on their families, which I think is very important.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, is very timely in the fact that we want to ensure that a bill goes through due process, that we as members participate in our due diligence to go through and ensure that the intention of a bill is actually going to be carried through according to the wording of the bill. I know that if intentions always equalled words, then we probably would have very little use for lawyers. I think it's important that we're as clear as possible and that the bill outline its consequences, intentional and unintentional, and that we really think things through. I think this motion is extremely timely.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona had spoken of. She was illustrating the point, but I want to use the term. This is something that I taught in social studies when I was teaching high school. You know, we all have a duty to ensure that we're not contributing to tyranny of the majority, and that's to ensure that minority voices are heard and are given the time to raise their point. The challenge that my colleague was illustrating is that when you have a smaller caucus, it's at times challenging to ensure, well, first and foremost, that we participate in all of the discussions. We just want to ensure that legislation and bills are given their adequate amount of time to ensure that we're passing the best legislation possible for Albertans. I mean, really, that's what it comes down to here. We are all representatives of our constituencies, and when we speak, we're not just speaking on behalf of ourselves but the 30,000 to 50,000 Albertans that we represent.

Mr. Speaker, this motion for referral is especially relevant, and I'd like to touch on a couple of points here if I may. You know, first and foremost, for a bill that is, I believe, over 70 pages long, I'm a little dumbfounded as to how a child intervention worker is not defined in this bill. I can tell you that sometimes titles sound wonderful, but we need to dig a little deeper to find out what the criteria are for one to have achieved such a title. Is there a body that is a designator or a creditor of that term? I can appreciate that a child intervention worker does include social workers, for example. However, with social workers there is a body, the College of Social Workers, a licensed body, and any individual cannot just claim that they are one without having the proper credentials.

For myself, Mr. Speaker, it is a little disconcerting, in fact more than a little, that a child intervention worker is not defined. I'm happy to enlighten some of the members in the House if they're unsure what exactly that means. I have worked with organizations who have youth workers on their staff. You know, these folks do some fantastic work. However, there is no governing body. There is no set of accepted standards that qualify a person to be a youth worker. In other words, any person who happens to work with any person who is defined as a youth is essentially a youth worker. That can be problematic because, you know, when we're putting a high level of trust in individuals working especially with minors as well as some of the most vulnerable individuals and citizens in our society, we need to ensure for a myriad of reasons that these folks are qualified, are trusted, have the ability, have the credentials, have the experience to work with youth, with young people, with children. The fact that this bill refers to that is problematic.

Mr. Speaker, I turn to section (62) and 129.1(1). "A director may designate persons as child intervention workers for the purposes of this Act." That places a significant amount of authority and power in a director, that they can proclaim an individual to be a child intervention worker. I'm not sure about the rest of my colleagues, but I can definitely see some potential issues with that.

Moving from that to another concern that I have and the reason that I'm standing before you, Mr. Speaker, speaking in favour of this motion that was put forward by the Member for Calgary-Shaw as raised earlier in the House, public hearings are, I think, a very effective tool for democratic institutions.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would like to thank the awesome Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for his great speech. He's very awesome. I noticed that he wasn't quite finished, so I'd like him just to have a chance to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Bilous: I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Thank you. I'm sure that you're very interested in hearing more about our democratic processes.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, public hearings, I think, are a great way to engage Albertans and our citizens directly, again, to truly live up to this spirit of consultation and ensure that not only are members of our province engaged – and when I say "members," I'm referring to Albertans, our citizens and constituents we represent – but that they're informed, that they're educated, and that they have the ability to share their thoughts and ideas on legislation that this body is thinking of passing.

Mr. Speaker, that brings me full circle back to the point that governments should take their responsibility seriously in ensuring that opposition MLAs and members of this Assembly and, I would say, even nongovernment MLAs have the time to engage with their constituents and to get feedback from their constituents on a bill before it becomes law. I know that the hon. minister has spoken at length about passing this piece of legislation and then worrying about improving it later. However, that's, in my mind, problematic for various reasons.

I mean, the Lord only knows – well, in fact most Albertans know – that this Legislative Assembly doesn't exactly sit the most number of days in a year. In fact, it's quite interesting that we're the opposite. But my point, Mr. Speaker, is that we need to ensure that we follow a process, that we give opposition parties and all MLAs an adequate amount of time to engage with Albertans to get their feedback and their ideas and their comments on legislation before it passes.

This motion for referral, I think, is not only very timely, but it's very appropriate for this bill. You know, Mr. Speaker, although I am a newer member of this Assembly, I do agree with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that it feels, especially this week, that we are moving very quickly through various pieces of legislation. I know that the members that were here on Monday last enjoyed hearing many of my comments and ideas on a myriad of pieces of legislation. It was my great pleasure to do so, and I think it's also one of my responsibilities. I think it's important that members have that time.

You know, there are many other reasons why this motion is very applicable, why it's timely, why I urge members of the Assembly to seriously consider and vote in favour of this motion. We know that this act is going to affect many, many Albertans, from children to families to many of the hard-working Albertans that work with children and families throughout the province. I think it's important that not only do we show them the respect that we want to get this right the first time but that we do get it right the first time, Mr. Speaker.

I think there is absolutely no rush. As the minister has indicated, this has been in process for a significant number of months. So it begs the question, then, Mr. Speaker. If it's already been in process for a number of months, let's take another month or two. Let's take the summer. Let's engage with Albertans and ensure that we are bringing forward the best piece of legislation possible.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, I just want to remind you that the purpose of 29(2)(a) is to make a comment on or get some clarifications on what was said by the previous speaker, not to extend debate.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment to Bill 25. I must say that I have a lot of sympathy for this referral amendment. It raises a lot of questions, this bill, a large bill that's been dumped on us in the last day with lots of questions, not least of which from staff who say that it's unprecedented that they have not even been consulted on this major bill. Maybe I'll repeat that in case anybody missed it: a message from staff that it's unprecedented that they within Human Services have never seen this bill in process, have never been consulted. "Unprecedented" was the comment that I've heard from some of the staff, Mr. Minister. They've never seen such a significant bill that has never had any reasonable consultation with the people that are actually going to be implementing it.

There is a real sense, even on this side of the House, that there's a haste to this. Within a couple of days of wanting this passed, he's pushing this into third reading. It's very clear to me that there are some uncertainties about roles and responsibilities and authorities. There are legal implications. There are communications, information, privacy issues. There are serious questions around, as I say and I've said in the media, talk about poverty, about children's development, about putting children first, investing in children and their families. But where's the action?

Over so many decades we have the lowest investment in social supports in this country per capita. I mean, the talk is there: the values, the process, the principles, the consultation. Albertans are tired of this, especially those who are suffering. Where is the action? Where's the money? Put your money where your mouth is.

Once again we're talking about great, great, grand ideas with no money: sorry; we're in a deficit position, but we're going to talk about it, philosophize, and put forward a great document that people are supposed to swallow whole in a couple of days when serious questions have been raised about it.

I myself have raised questions about child labour on farms, on large industrial operations. For 10 years they've been raised, and this minister himself has said: "Yes, yes, yes. It's important. We're looking into it. Children are first. We invest in people in this province. Blah, blah, blah." No action. No action. How can we believe that this big document, without any consultations with us, with the very people that are being affected, and with your own staff, is going anywhere but your own ego? Your own ego.

Mr. Speaker, I think there's a real gap between words and action, between talk and credibility here, decades of talk about child poverty. Where is the action? Children still hungry, children still sleeping in a different church every night in this province, children still on the street, farm labour still depending on Mexican Mennonite kids because there are no standards. This government doesn't have the guts to put in new laws because their main voter base is out there in the rural areas. There's a huge credibility gap. I'm sorry.

This is a wonderful, philosophical, interesting bill to look at and read. It has no substance as far as the people in the front lines are concerned and a lot of questions about whose agenda is being served here. It doesn't look like it's the children of this province that are necessarily being served, apart from large philosophical frameworks and processes and great values and principles.

We have among the highest rates, Mr. Speaker, of mental illness, stress, early childhood mental illness that's not being addressed.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I realize that you probably have some disagreements with parts of the bill and what have you, but if you can try to frame your arguments around the amendment, I think it would help the process. Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Very succinctly, Mr. Speaker, that's why it has to go to committee. There is no way we can pass this bill in this House with so little time, so little consultation, so little addressing of the key questions that we have about this bill. It needs thought. It needs consultation. We need to do this right.

It's been said before, and I'm saying that this government lacks credibility. We have lost trust in a government that talks, talks, consults, and puts forward more and more and more paper and wants us to push it through in a very untimely way. There's just no credibility here. This 70-page bill, a couple of days before they want it through, simply begs the same question. Where is your head at if you think this is a democratic process and you want real debate and you want the best bill for the best outcome for staff, for foster parents, for children, for outcomes in this province? Where's your head at if you think you're going to do this in two or three days? It's just not credible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if this hon. member would be good enough to acknowledge, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona did, that although he wasn't able to show up for a briefing, a very thorough briefing on the bill, the researchers from his caucus did show up and hopefully translated to him what was going to be in the bill, exactly what sections related to the pieces of import, the fact that a substantial amount of the bill is about one amendment, and that's really the child intervention worker having the authority to make decisions on the front line. I wonder if, first of all, he would be able to acknowledge that they didn't just get this bill yesterday as a surprise but that, in fact, they had a thorough briefing on it. He didn't take the time to come, but they did send researchers. Edmonton-Strathcona was good enough to acknowledge that. I hope he would be.

The second thing I would wonder is if he really thinks that we brought together a bill like this without talking to some of the 7,000 people that work in Human Services, if he really actually thinks that. In fact, we've spent the last 18 months bringing together Human Services and talking to front-line workers and everybody in the department about how a change in service delivery was necessary and how we're responding to what they've asked for, and that is some authority and some respect on the front lines for people who are appropriately trained to make appropriate decisions and not to have to go through the bureaucratic maze to get decisions made all the time on things that are very important to children and things that are very important in terms of the service delivery model.

If he actually thinks that because we didn't take this act, which we couldn't, out to say, "We have a Children First Act, and this is what we're going to do in it," that we didn't actually talk to some of the 7,000 workers, many of whom are social workers, many of whom are members of the union that was mentioned earlier, many of whom are members of the professional organization that was mentioned earlier – he actually thinks we didn't talk to them and that this isn't responsive to what they've been telling us for the last 18 months, the tools that they need? Does he actually think that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's comments. Do you think I should believe you or the people on the front lines? I've grown very, very distrustful of the comments that come from this government about consultation, for sure. I've certainly experienced a lot of different interpretations of consultation with First Nations, and I've now seen very different interpretations of consultation with your own staff. Some members of the union itself say that they have not seen any dimension of this bill before this week. They were taken completely by surprise.

Mr. Hancock: They talked all year.

Dr. Swann: Well, okay. They may have talked about principles and values. Where the rubber hits the road is on who gets delegated authority for making tough decisions on children. The question is whether you really respect social workers, whether you really respect front-line workers and allow them to make the decisions and they're going to take the responsibility or you're going to relieve them completely of that responsibility. This ambiguity is clearly causing tremendous consternation.

Mr. Minister, if you had done a proper consultation on this, I don't think the anxiety and the fear would be there and the expression of complete surprise that this is what came out of whatever consultations you may have had. I don't doubt that you're talking all the time, that you're listening to some extent. What has come out of that result is not what people expected in this document is all I can say.

The ambiguity that's there with respect to legal liability, to roles and responsibilities, freedom of information, and whose interests are being protected: obviously, the Privacy Commissioner has deep concerns about that. Frankly, as I've said before, the lack of action of this government, real action, to address children first is so blatant. After 42 years of talk it's pretty hard to believe that this is going to solve the inaction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this amendment most succinctly and in a very focused manner. I appreciate the Member for Calgary-Shaw bringing this forward. You know, just the process that we see unfolding before us in regard to Bill 25 over these last few hours I think breathes even more life into the importance of this amendment and the necessity of this amendment. Even as we move along here and buy time, so to speak, to have more insight into the bill, we are learning things from hon. members who have thoughtful and intelligent opinions to discuss. It also gives us time for our researchers to do more work. As we speak, we have a battery of researchers in the Annex that are working their fingers off to ensure that we have more information that gives us a better understanding of certain aspects of this bill.

I know that the minister is feeling a little defensive, and that's fair enough. I mean, I guess that's part of the process of bringing forward these bills. But, you know, we're trying to make something that can work, right? We're not trying to destroy constructive engagements and improvements to our Ministry of Human Services. But just the very act of combining all of these ministries together: no one knows better than the minister himself what a giant task that really is. When we try to formalize some aspects of that into law, there's never a better time to actually go through each piece and see where we can make improvements.

As I said just in the last few hours, as we go through more carefully what the Privacy Commissioner has brought forward, again, I think the minister did make some indication that he did speak to the Privacy Commissioner, which is fine. But then for us to get information back, upon careful deliberation, is proof of why this amendment is so relevant and important. There was time for thoughtful consideration, and then we received some very valuable information that we've been deliberating on even further. This is an illustration, Mr. Speaker, of the importance of this amendment to make a referral to spend some more time, considered time, and to work through a committee to build a better bill. For example, this Bill 25 makes it much easier to share information between service providers, and that's what the Privacy Commissioner was bringing forward. Again, in a matter of a few hours we've thought about this one carefully, right?

It tells us a lot. It tells us about the definition of a service provider. On page 2 of the bill, section 1(g), it defines the service provider, talking about it as a department, educational body, police service, organization, right? An organization could be a corporation, an unincorporated association, and so forth.

You know, again, this is a constructive engagement, an example of why we should pass this to committee. It's very similar to the privacy concerns that we've seen around health care and the privatization of health care over these last number of years. Mr. Speaker, if I've learned one thing following that process, analyzing it, and being constructively critical of that process, it's that you cannot mix private and public services together and expect that the information that you're sharing, the private information about individuals, is not put in jeopardy.

What happens, Mr. Speaker, is that when you have people that are serving either as a nonprofit society or organization or as a for-profit corporation, you know, they are trying to run a business. That business necessitates making a profit, turning some advantage from that health care service or, in this case, potentially, that social service. In doing so, that private information on individuals will be traded and potentially bought and sold.

The implications of that are dire. We know that especially with persons in a compromised situation, children in need and so forth, families in crisis – right? – this information is very sensitive. By definition that information is compromised if you're running through a private provider or through a contracting-out circumstance in terms of dealing with Human Services, children's services in particular.

Again, taking a sober second look at why we should refer this bill to committee, this is a perfect example that we learned through the triangulation between the Privacy Commissioner, through our researchers, and through reflection and debate here right now as we speak. I see no reason why we can't take a sober step back to referring this bill to committee. It's, again, as I said before, a substantive bill that is very much similar to the Education Act and other sort of landmark bills that change the way we deliver services. I really do think, Mr. Speaker, that this is not unreasonable in the least.

We know that there's principle behind people making decisions and creating laws and bills, and we often draw back to ideology. What sort of vision do we have for our society? The application of those visions and ideology, bearing fruit in actual legislation, is what the purpose of this House is.

If we're not looking seriously at the root causes or building into legislation the root causes of child poverty and the root causes of the disruptions in our families that require intervention through social services, then we never really will make substantive change. If we don't look at a way by which to put money and a more reasonable sharing of resources, a modest sharing of resources, to the people of Alberta, then we will always exceed and multiply our rates of child poverty in this province. It doesn't matter how many billions of dollars pass through. If those billions of dollars don't hit the ground to look after the persons most in need, then those numbers of children living in poverty, having to be dealt with through social services, interventions, foster care, crime, school dropout rates, and all the other, will never change. They will only increase.

It's the disparity of wealth in this province that has to be addressed, and we can address it through legislation. We can address it through something like Bill 25, on page 3, in the children's charter. The children's charter made some direct address to equality and social justice. If it spoke about building an edifice that would include the fact that no child should live in poverty and be wanting for food and shelter and clothing and education, then that would build a substantive charter that could anchor Bill 25 and actually address the issues that we see before us today in regard to child poverty.

It was fine and dandy to run on the elimination of child poverty in this province but only if you address it with the money that is required to make a more equal and just society. If you don't do that, then you are being worse than dishonest; you are contributing to the problem. You can write bills that are 72 pages long, or you can write bills that are 5,072 pages long. Nothing will change until we address the root cause of this issue, which is an inequality of wealth.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to ask the hon. member why it is that he and his colleagues and, it appears, the critic who spoke from the Alberta Liberal caucus always seem to think that nothing is being done unless the budget is being increased significantly? Why do they not understand that sometimes you've got resources invested and that redeploying those resources in a more appropriate way can also achieve results?

I mean, I seem to always be running up against this thing: we're doing nothing because there's not more money being poured in. Sometimes you need to have the frameworks in place. Sometimes you need to have good, solid policies in place. You don't always need to pour money in the top to get results out the bottom. That's one of the things that needs to be understood in this process, that there's a significant amount of investment in social policy in this province. One of the questions we ought to ask is: are we getting the results out of that that we should be getting?

Mr. Eggen: Absolutely. I certainly do not preclude the importance of building a framework by which you can ensure that efficiencies are to be had and that people can speak to each other in a reasonable way so that these different ministries can work together in a more constructive way. But there's no way, Mr. Speaker, that those things can be achieved – right? – without having the adequate funds available by which each of the services can do their job, execute their job, and reach down to that same root cause that I described previously.

You cannot bring someone out of poverty, which is the root of so many of the issues that we're talking about – lack of school completion rate, nutrition issues, crime, broken families, and so forth – without the money that is lacking. That's how we define what poverty is. Poverty is the absence of adequate money in order to raise a family and to raise a child here in this province. We know that those numbers aren't going down. They are only going up. And they're going up despite the increase in our economy, the increase in our population, and our position as the wealthiest place producing the healthiest GDP in Canada. Until we address those discrepancies – we cannot feed or clothe or look after people in poverty with words. We have to ensure that those words are backed up by the substance of the money that we have available in this province to ensure that our children are looked after.

We're not talking about something that we probably don't all have some belief in. It's not as though we are butting heads against some ideological forces that would preclude us from looking after people. Sometimes I think we need to just give our heads a shake and look for practical solutions. You can't create something from nothing, nor can you raise a child and a family out of poverty without the very thing that's missing. By definition, poverty is a lack of money available to those people. We're not talking about millions. We're not talking about reaching into the pockets and stealing something from somebody else. We're looking at the resources, the things that we have available to us now to have a reasonable, modest opportunity to raise a family and the security and the health and the peace of mind that comes with those things, right?

We don't disagree. I know we don't. We share a similar first name, and we share a similar job. The minister and I probably feel in our hearts, you know, that we know what's to be done. I'm just pointing out something here that is, I think, the first principle that we should strive to achieve here in the Legislature in the fullness of time through this notice of amendment to refer it to committee and to build something that is complete.

Respectfully, that's my reaction to that. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: Yes, on 29(2)(a), just a brief comment. Poverty is defined as not enough money to meet the basic needs that a person needs in life. It is strictly about the amount of money that's available. And I cannot understand how this minister can ask people to come out of poverty without changing their financial circumstances, without ensuring that they actually have more money.

Those kinds of questions, those kinds of rhetorical rejoinders about throwing money at it, are simply ridiculous in this case. If people have two-thirds of the amount of money that they need, then it's important that you make up the other third. That takes money, Mr. Speaker. It happens to be the one problem that you can solve with money.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

If there are no other speakers, I'll invite the Member for Calgary-Shaw to close debate.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. members who have all spoken in support of this. I think that we have touched on a number of reasons why it makes sense for this to be referred to committee. I think there is a lot of fruitful discussion that could happen, and at the end of the day it's only going to strengthen this bill.

I do appreciate the minister standing up and engaging with the reasons why he doesn't feel it's necessary. I do accept that he has put some time into this and that he feels strongly that the bill is where it needs to be. I don't necessarily feel the same level of comfort with him admitting there could be errors, there could be mistakes, there could be omissions, and we can just come back and fix it. I think that with something that is this important, Mr. Speaker, we should get it right the first time.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, my mistake. I believe you've spoken already.

We'll call the question, then, on amendment RA1.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment RA1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:58 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 25 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Back to the bill. I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I take very seriously my responsibility to speak to such a comprehensive – well, comprehensive is probably not the right term – such a heavy piece of legislation that's going to affect so many Albertans. I'll launch right into it.

You know, first and foremost, Mr. Speaker, is the question surrounding definitions. I think the choice of diction that is used and the intentional and unintentional consequences of language are, as you know, extremely important and do affect and have effects that are often more far reaching than we initially think. It's for that reason and several others that it is our responsibility to ensure that we choose our wording very carefully, especially when we're drafting legislation, and consider it very methodically and put a significant amount of thought into our intentions.

I'll begin by talking about, again, Mr. Speaker, the definition of child intervention workers. Now, you know, I can appreciate the minister's intention of giving more, as the minister has said, responsibility or authority to child intervention workers. My issue is on that definition. Now, within that category there are folks who are included like social workers, who, again, are licensed, who have a governing body. They have standards. There's certification and criteria that must be met before an individual has the designation of social worker. Yet with the child intervention worker, the terms that are used in this bill are not defined, and that is cause for concern.

As well, Mr. Speaker, it appears that this bill is downloading certain responsibilities onto front-line staff. I think that, you know, most members of the House would agree that there is a reason why some positions have more responsibility, maybe are compensated more than others. It's because they do have more responsibility, more authority. What's interesting is that what was the director's responsibility as far as statutory authority for children in care has now been passed on to front-line workers. Now, although the minister may argue that this means we can expedite a process, whether it's signing waivers or whichever else – and that may have a good intention – we need to look at the possible ramifications that aren't as positive or that are negative by doing this.

Again, it leads me back to my first point, Mr. Speaker, where, you know, if we're giving statutory authority to individuals who may not have the education, the experience, the certification, or the judgment to make such decisions, that's something of grave concern. I mean, when we're talking about, especially, removing children from a home or placing them in care or placing them with a family, that has implications that will go for the whole life of the child and have far-reaching consequences. I mean, the lives that are going to be affected by the changes in this legislation are significant, are monumental, actually. I think it's for those reasons that we as responsible Members of this Legislative Assembly need to take the time to significantly contemplate and evaluate what effects this is going to have. You know, that's one of the first reasons why I have concerns with this.

Next, Mr. Speaker, we're talking about restructuring the entire system. From conversations I've had and my caucus colleagues have had with front-line workers, I'm not sure that's necessarily the route that we need to go. Again, you know, the restructuring that's being proposed in this is riddled with certain problems. The Premier herself talked about contracting out more services, whether it's to private, for-profit agencies or to volunteer organizations, and the challenge with downloading these responsibilities onto these entities is that we're downloading liability or taking it and putting it into the hands of those individuals who may not have the same – whether we're talking about codes of conduct or we're talking about the same set of ethical standards that they must adhere to. So that's an issue in itself.

I mean, one solution that I'm not sure the minister has contemplated is just looking at our reporting mechanisms within the department and ensuring that the communication that should be happening is happening as opposed to suddenly changing responsibilities, shifting them, downloading them onto folks who maybe shouldn't have those responsibilities or the ability to make certain decisions, who don't have the same qualifications or standards that are acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, another issue is information that is going to be shared. As my caucus colleagues have raised, the fact that the Privacy Commissioner already has listed several issues and concerns that she has with this bill speaks volumes, especially in light of the fact that this bill has only been made public in the last 25 hours. The concern is, again, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona so eloquently stated, that there's information that's going to be shared between agencies.

At the onset it sounds like it's a pretty good thing that there's information that's going to be shared. However, when there's information not only about a child in care but about their parents or foster parents that is going to be shared with other organizations, they may not have the same standards. We're sharing it with other service providers, and the concern here is not so much in that term but in the definition of a service provider. Again, my colleagues went through and outlined the different definitions of service provider. It could be anything from a department, an educational body, a police service, or an organization that provides programs or services.

Now, I'm not going to question the intentions of organizations or service providers in the work that they're trying to do. The challenge, Mr. Speaker, is that we do have privacy laws in this province to protect individuals and families and especially children and the most vulnerable. This bill really calls into question those laws and raises grave concerns over who will have access to what information and how it'll be used. Again, you know, the concern isn't with the 9 out of 10 organizations that even if they're given sensitive information will do the right thing and ensure that it's not shared or passed on or taken advantage of.

The concern, Mr. Speaker, is that we have a duty in this House to ensure that Albertans are protected and that they are not placed in a position of jeopardy or in a position where they could be in jeopardy, and this bill does that. I mean, that on its own is reason enough for the members of this Assembly to send this bill back, to vote it down. Let's write it correctly the first time as opposed to passing legislation which could have far-reaching implications. Let's see here. I mean, I'll come back to this, but passing this bill I think is dangerous and irresponsible.

I want to talk a little bit, Mr. Speaker, about downloading responsibility onto front-line workers. Again, you know, many front-line workers, especially social workers, those folks who work with Alberta's most vulnerable, have ridiculous caseloads. Many of them are overworked and are trying to do the best job that they can. By suddenly thrusting them into a position where they're having to make certain decisions, where they are on the front line – I mean, this is again a reason that there are positions like directors, where they're not dealing with and working with the day to day, where their head is down, and they're working hard. They have the ability to sit back and take in the larger picture and to weigh their decisions a little more closely and with a little more time.

I'm concerned that there are some workers who because of their caseload, because of their workload, because of the demands that their jobs place on them – that there may be hastily made decisions. Again, when we're talking about deciding whether or not to remove a child from a home, there are innumerable consequences that will come with that decision and will affect a child for the rest of their life.

Mr. Speaker, as you're probably aware, when I taught for six years, I taught at an inner-city school and worked with some of the most vulnerable young people in the province, and I can tell you that many of them had experienced this system. Many of them had been moved from house to house, had been pulled in or out. You know, it makes me just wonder how many of those young people who have experienced the system, now in their 20s, have been consulted on this bill and if they've been talked to as far as the decisions that were made on their behalf, possibly with the best of intentions, but that doesn't negate the fact that some of those decisions might have been incorrect decisions. I'm sure that they would very much love to give their input and feedback on legislation that is going to affect many young people, some of whom come from similar positions and backgrounds.

I'll move on, Mr. Speaker, to the children's charter. Gosh. That sounds wonderful. A children's charter. I'd love to be enthusiastic and to get behind it. However, the first time I went through this bill, I flipped the page after I read the five points in the children's charter, thinking: okay; let's get into this. Then I realized that was it. It was more than a little disappointing. As has been raised by other members in this House, a charter should be and needs to be meaningful and have some substance to it as opposed to some great values and high-level ideologies. This sounds wonderful. What does it do? Is it enforceable? How does this apply to young people? How is this going to ensure their livelihoods and that decisions being made on their behalf are not just wishful or hopeful but that they actually have measurable outcomes or targets and standards to ensure that we are doing what's in the best interest of Alberta's children and youth?

When I look at this charter, there's a lot of fluff and not a lot of content going on here. You know, I can appreciate the minister's thought that the charter will be banged out at a later time. However – I'm sorry – if it's in this bill and it's going to be legislated, let's bang out these details right now. It should be in here. In fact, it's unfortunate that our previous motion was defeated because that would have given an opportunity to define and to clearly articulate this charter, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. The Member for Edmonton-Beverley-Clareview had not actually finished his comments about the charter and a specific comment that he was about to make. I just wanted to hear the very end about, specifically, how he thinks we can improve the language around the charter and how that would make this bill, were it amended, much more effective.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. It's with great pleasure. I mean, you know, I think it's important for members of the opposition to make comments on things that we feel the government has done well and things that we feel haven't been done well and then to put forward our suggestions in the form of amendments or speak to what should be included.

So it's my pleasure to go back to the issue of the charter. You know, I would love to see in this charter some achievable targets. Let's talk about things like housing. Let's talk about ensuring that children are in safe housing, that there is an adequate amount of housing versus the number of children in this province that are still living in poverty. Let's talk about ensuring that every child has food in their belly and that they are well nourished. This charter, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, should have tangible targets or actionable items that we will ensure happen to make sure that children are protected.

You know, it's with frustration, Mr. Speaker, that I hear the Premier talk about her commitment to end child poverty, yet we look at the actions. You know the expression: actions speak louder than words. I look at whether this province has moved forward significantly in ending child poverty in this province, and we are a far cry from that. As my colleagues have stated, in a province as wealthy as ours it is quite shameful. I believe the statistic is that around 70,000 children in this province are living in poverty. When we're putting forward legislation, especially legislation that says "children first," we should be addressing these issues. I mean, words are lovely, but you're not going to fill a belly with empty rhetoric or hot air. So I'd like to see the charter be a lot more specific.

The other thing I find interesting, Mr. Speaker, is under the children's charter, subsection (3). The government is passing or would like to pass a piece of legislation that gives the minister some far-reaching powers that I find a little bit concerning, where the minister may from time to time, which is completely ambiguous, amend or repeal or replace the children's charter. Now, on the one hand, because this one doesn't actually have anything of substance, well, then, maybe that's a positive, but at the same time the fact that the charter can be interchanged is a little disconcerting. Like I said, I think it's important that hard targets, actionables are included in this charter.

You know, the other thing that I touched on a little earlier, Mr. Speaker, is again looking at the service provider. What are the qualifications for service providers? What is the training afforded? What is the standard? What body is overseeing a service provider?

9:30

The issue that I have, Mr. Speaker, is that, again, if we've got some workers who maybe aren't certified or aren't held up to a certain code and they are of the opinion that either disclosing information to other service providers or removing a child from a home is the best action or idea or solution to a problem, that's problematic. I mean, we need to ensure that workers are supported, but again decisions that could be made in the moment under a high amount of stress when a person is emotional are dangerous.

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't actually going to speak at this point, but if there are no other speakers, I will do that. I am prepared to speak to it nevertheless.

I want to take up where my hon. colleague left off, on the children's charter. You know, I don't think there's anything wrong in principle with a children's charter, but I do agree with my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that vague principles are not going to overcome the financial barriers that children have if their parents aren't able to provide them with the basics of life. It doesn't really address it except in the most indirect and vague way, open to the greatest possible interpretation.

Of course children should be "treated with dignity and respect," but what does that mean, and who interprets that? What does it mean in practice? We don't know.

The "familial, cultural, social and religious heritage is to be recognized and respected." That's good, too.

"That the needs of children are a central focus in the design and delivery of programs and services affecting children": well, they could be designed that way. The programs could be designed that way so that the needs of children are a central focus, but then the government could still cut the funding, as it has done, so what does that really mean, Mr. Speaker?

"Prevention and early intervention are fundamental." We agree with that, too.

It is a good principle and one we agree with that "individuals, families, communities and governments have a shared responsibility for the well-being, safety, security, education and health of children." I'm actually pleasantly surprised that that statement is present here given the dogmatic assertions of many members on both the Official Opposition side and the government side that parental rights are the only thing that counts with respect to children. But the point is that it's just words, Mr. Speaker. It's high-sounding principles, and those principles have not been backed up by action on the part of this government.

This government, of course, talked about ending child poverty in five years in this province in the election. A lot of people liked that. A lot of people voted for them because the Premier said that in the campaign, but then the very first Speech from the Throne omitted all reference to eliminating child poverty. It wasn't even in the Speech from the Throne. It should have been Bill 1, Mr. Speaker, but it was ignored. Then we saw the budget, and there are millions of dollars of cuts to children who are most at risk across a range of programs.

Now, the minister says that only the NDP thinks that you can solve a problem by throwing money at it. Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't believe that you can solve most problems by throwing money at them. That's actually been the practice of this government. Whenever they run into trouble, they've had lots of royalty money to throw at it, and it hasn't produced the results that they claimed it would.

But this is one issue where money does make a difference. If you're going to raise people out of poverty, you have to put more money in their pocket. Now, how can you do that if you are withdrawing as a funder for programs for those children and those families? Who's going to step up, Mr. Speaker? Private companies? I don't know. Can you make it into a business so that they can make money giving money away to poor people? Are underfunded private agencies or not-for-profit agencies going to be able to do it? Are they expecting the municipalities to do it? How is the government planning to resolve the question of children's poverty? We don't know, and the charter doesn't even address it.

It could be strengthened if we had some clear language and clear goals and some clear requirements that have to be there. Now, I know that the charter hasn't been written yet, but these are the principles that it's supposed to include, and I sincerely doubt that when we do see the final charter, it's going to say that the government has a responsibility, legally enforceable in the courts, to make sure that no child lives in poverty in this province. It won't say that, not from this government, Mr. Speaker. It's going to be more words, but it's going to be following this particular set of principles. It will just be more principles, and we know that the government doesn't stick to them, that it would rather keep taxes low for corporations, maintain the flat tax, maintain some of the lowest royalties in the world than actually fix child poverty.

I wanted to talk a little bit about some of the problems with this act. It provides statutory authority for children in care to child intervention workers. Now, other of my colleagues have talked about the child intervention worker, which is not defined – it's not a profession; it doesn't have standards – as being anybody that calls himself a child intervention worker. It shouldn't be here. It shouldn't be in the act. A completely undefined profession, a completely undefined position in the delivery of programs to children should not be included in an act and should not be given any authority. Only those people who are professionally trained and accountable for their professional behaviour, in our view, should be specified in an act and given authority in an act of this Legislature.

I see this as very closely related to the decision to download responsibility for children's services to underfunded community organizations, including profitable organizations, corporations, companies, and so forth. It is a delegation, it is a downloading, it is an off-loading of responsibility for children. That's what the act is really about, Mr. Speaker, and that's why we take such exception to it. It's part of the social policy framework, that reduces the priority of providing social services for those in need in our society. It reduces it by saying: "It's no longer government's responsibility. We'll toss it down to the community, and we'll let them sort it out. By the way, we're going to cut the funding while we're at it, and we're going to end child poverty in five years." Good luck with that.

The same thing is happening here. Skilled, qualified, caring, compassionate, professional staff are going to be replaced with anyone that a not-for-profit organization wants to call a child intervention worker. So it is, again, a devaluation of the work and the priority that this government gives to children and children's services.

9:40

Now, we said earlier that Bill 25 was a clear response to a particular case in which the ruling was made by Justice Jean Côté, and we think it's a clear response to that 2009 case. It's a restructuring of the entire system. Now front-line staff will have the statutory authority that was formerly vested in the most senior officials. It means that front-line staff, not necessarily qualified, professional staff but front-line staff, will be held responsible for everything even though many decisions are made by more senior people in the department and the front-line staff have no power to access the necessary funds to deal with the cases in front of them. The government is transferring their statutory authority and their responsibility for child protection away from the director to any front-line service provider.

The Premier talked about contracting out more services, and there's certainly lots of potential for that in this bill. There's potential for the government to contract out to for-profit agencies the responsibility for custodial decisions and thereby contract out their own liability, Mr. Speaker. The definition of child intervention workers in section 9(62) does nothing to prevent that, but it's clear that a complete restructuring of the system is not needed. What we think is needed are clear reporting mechanisms within the department.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the bill makes it much easier to share information between service providers, which raises immense concerns about privacy, and this issue has been raised by the Privacy Commissioner. First of all, how does the bill define a service provider? On page 2, section 1, the new Children First Act defines service provider as follows:

- (g) “service provider” means
  - (i) a department;
  - (ii) an educational body as defined in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act;
  - (iii) a police service as defined in the Police Act;
  - (iv) an organization as defined in section 1(1)(i) of the Personal Information Protection Act that provides programs or services for children.

If we look at that, we see that under the Personal Information Protection Act

- (i) “organization” includes
  - (i) a corporation,
  - (ii) an unincorporated association,
  - (iii) a trade union . . .
  - (iv) a partnership as defined in the Partnership Act, and
  - (v) an individual acting in a commercial capacity.

So they’re commercializing child poverty, Mr. Speaker. They’re commercializing the care of children and the services that are currently provided by the government.

In short, Mr. Speaker, this bill will permit government agencies not only to share information amongst themselves but the children’s personal information with corporations and individuals acting in a commercial capacity. This is the provision that opens the door to privatization in the child intervention system, exactly what the Premier promised to do when she said that she would review all government services to see which ones can be privatized. Clearly, she thinks that corporations can be allowed to make money off the most vulnerable kids.

In addition, the Privacy Commissioner has stated that she’s very concerned about the privacy implications of Bill 25, and she goes on to say that individuals will not necessarily know what information has been collected about them, by whom, or for what specific purpose. This is contrary to fundamental privacy principles of transparency, openness and accountability, and reduces individuals’ ability to exercise their rights to complain or ask for a review under existing privacy laws.

Bill 25 erodes individuals’ ability to control what happens to their own personal and health information by broadening the ability to share information without consent. The ability to say yes or no to the sharing of one’s own information is, fundamentally, what privacy laws are intended to provide – control.

Under Bill 25

In effect, Mr. Speaker, what the Privacy Commissioner is saying is that this secretive PC government has introduced legislation that undermines transparency, openness, and accountability.

This is, again, the Privacy Commissioner.

Bill 25 may authorize information sharing with non-profit organizations that are, for the most part, not regulated by privacy legislation and not subject to any independent privacy oversight body.

Bill 25 provides legislative authority for sharing information “for the purposes of enabling or planning for the provision of services or benefits.” This is a very broad purpose that could include any number of activities undertaken by a service provider.

Finally, she says that

Bill 25 authorizes information sharing that in many ways is already permissible under existing . . . privacy laws. The Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy (FOIP) Act, the Health Information Act (HIA) and the Personal Information Protection Act (PIPA) allow disclosures with the consent of the individual the information is about, or without consent in certain circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, the commissioner has recommended that “Bill 25 should, at the very least, be amended to include: mandatory requirements for privacy impact assessments; a duty to record disclosures . . .”

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. I do believe that the member had been making some comments about what he believes the commissioner was putting forward as some proposed changes that would be helpful and would improve this legislation. I’m wondering if he could continue talking to us because I’m curious about his view on what those proposed changes were and whether they would be advisable.

Mr. Mason: I thank the hon. member for that question. The commissioner recommends that Bill 25 should, at the very least, be amended to include: mandatory requirements for privacy impact assessments; a duty to record disclosures, including disclosures via information systems; and a duty to report privacy breaches to the Commissioner’s Office.

That’s what she says.

I want to just conclude, though, Mr. Speaker, and say that there are some basic flaws in this piece of legislation, privacy being one of them, but the degradation, the lowering of priorities of children’s services in this province by dispersing it among not-for-profit and for-profit organizations that don’t have the capacity to deal with it as well as reducing the standards in terms of staffing to an undefined group of front-line service providers and giving them authority for things but without the resources to do the job that they need to are all fatal flaws, in our view, in this piece of legislation.

A children’s charter could be something that would be valuable and useful, but it needs to be really concrete and very specific, and it needs to address real economic issues affecting children. It’s not good enough to have high-sounding principles about how we value children and value their rights to education and so on. We need to have clear and very positive language in a children’s charter that requires government to make sure that child poverty does come to an end. That’s what we think should happen. That’s what voters thought that the government was going to do, but it’s something that needs to be done.

I think we should all reject this bill as it currently stands. We should fix it before we pass it. We’ve seen too many examples of what the minister is saying: let’s pass it; it could be wrong, but we’ll fix it. That’s a very irresponsible approach to take to legislation, Mr. Speaker. Look at Bill 50. Look at what they did with Bill 19. Look at what they did with Bill 36 and what they did with Bill 50. They made a total mess, passed rotten legislation, and then had to go back and fix it. That’s not what Albertans expect of their government. They expect a government that gets it right the first time at least most of the time. But now the minister is saying: “No. That’s our standard way of operating. We’ll pass flawed legislation. If it doesn’t work, we’ll change it.” Not good enough, in my view.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, did you want to respond under 29(2)(a) as well?

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure that it’s clear on the record . . .

Mr. Mason: He can respond?

The Deputy Speaker: Well, he can ask a question. My apologies, hon. member. Question or comment.

Mr. Hancock: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity because it is supposed to be a question-or-comment period. It's not supposed to be monopolized by one person talking for five minutes if more people have indicated that they want to speak. We do need to actually enforce that.

The other piece I want to make perfectly clear, that the hon. member should know, is that, first of all, the provision for a children's charter in here is not the children's charter itself, and developing a children's charter or the process of developing a children's charter in itself is a very important process involving Albertans in developing that children's charter. So to suggest that this is not comprehensive enough when the whole process about developing a children's charter is to make it a comprehensive charter is really quite misleading in terms of a reading of the process.

More importantly, I want to make clear for the record that I did not say that one should pass flawed legislation and fix it later. What I said in response to a comment that was made by Cardston-Taber-Warner is that nothing is ever perfect and that one should never assume it's perfect. One should always be prepared to assess what they do and learn from it, learn from their experiences and do better. That's a far cry from saying that we should start with flawed stuff and fix it later. That's not what I said, and I want to make it clear on the record that it's not what I said because this hon. member is very fond of misinterpreting what I say.

Mr. Mason: Can I respond?

The Deputy Speaker: Well, somebody has to ask you a question, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: I heard a question.

The Deputy Speaker: I didn't hear a question, but go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I think it's worth while . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. That time has expired.

Are there other speakers at this time?

Seeing none, I'll give the minister the chance to close second reading. The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have the opportunity not to prolong the debate on this but to say thank you. With all the rhetoric that was happening, there were actually some very wonderful contributions to the discussion, and I thank members for doing that. I mean, we do get carried away sometimes. I, quite frankly, get emotional about this myself. What we need to do in this House is have good debates on good public policy issues.

What we need to do in this House, in my view, is ensure that we take the time to read the legislation and to understand it and respond to it. That does take time. I actually want to apologize that there isn't more time sometimes to introduce a bill and let it sit there long enough for people to actually go out and consult. Most of the time as House Leader that's what I have encouraged, that we get the legislation on the agenda early, we then go off and do the budget, and then when we come back, people have had lots of time to get it out there. But that's not always the case.

This is, I think, important legislation to deal with now. I'm surprised at the speed with which some of the legislation has happened and how quickly we've come to this. Nonetheless, we are where we are. It's important to put everything into a context. This legislation is legislation that people have asked for but not specifically. They didn't say: I want a children first act. Quite frankly, I was surprised when we got to call it the Children First Act, but I'm pleased with that.

What we did over the last 18 months is that we've talked with people inside the department and outside the department. Yes, we have talked with social workers and others in the department about what we could do to make the job better so that they could use their innovation, use their talents, use their abilities at the coal face, so to speak, to actually get the job done. Yes, we need bureaucracy, and yes, we need rules, but we shouldn't design it so that that bureaucracy and those rules get in the way of the outcomes we want to achieve. Rather, enhancing the ability to get to those outcomes: that's what we're striving for. That's what we want to build.

There were a number of comments in second reading about a child intervention worker. Somehow there was a suggestion that just anybody would be designated as a child intervention worker. Well, that's not the case. There's clearly a provision in the act, which the hon. member has obviously read, that they got to because they quoted some of the sections about the ability to designate somebody as a child intervention worker and regulation-making authority that's outlined in regulation of what might constitute a child intervention worker. Obviously, you want to have well-qualified people making these types of decisions. Obviously, you want to do that. Can you write it all in legislation? No, you can't write it all in legislation.

Legislation is very prescriptive, it's very unyielding, it's very unchanging, and it doesn't actually react to the things that you need to do on an ongoing basis when you're dealing with complex issues and people. You can't write rules for every situation that families have or people have. You can't do that. That makes it impossible. What we've built up over time – and I'm not just talking about this government; I'm talking about governments generally. We've built up bureaucracies.

Bureaucracy is not a dirty word. Bureaucracy is a description of what you try to do for equitable access to public resources. How do you make sure that people are treated equitably? You build up structures to do that, but sometimes the structures get overbuilt. Then you put in accountability structures on top of that because you want to be publicly accountable, and you want to be accountable for the public dollar. Then people start adhering to the accountability structures, then the bureaucracy, and pretty soon nothing gets done. Sometimes you have to go back and sweep that away and say: what we actually want to do is achieve the outcomes, and what we actually want to do is empower well-qualified people to make appropriate decisions at appropriate times to achieve those outcomes.

Yes, government has to be accountable. We're not going to delegate that authority willy-nilly. We're going to delegate that authority to people who are qualified to make those decisions, who are reasonably well trained to make those decisions, who have experience in those decisions, and who are working with other well-qualified people in the area. Obviously, that's going to have to happen. There's no way government is just going to pick somebody off the street and say: you do it, and we'll be accountable for your actions. That would be absurd. That's the type of interpretation that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and his colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona would want to put out. Well, that's just an absurdity.

With respect to the privacy issues there are fundamental disagreements sometimes about how much we keep private and how much we share, but one thing should be perfectly clear. There's nothing in this act which is going to allow some unqualified person who has no association with it and is not accountable – in fact, there's nothing in this act which says that it supersedes FOIP. The FOIP Act actually has a provision that says that it's paramount to every other statute. So there's nothing that takes this out of FOIP. Nothing. They're still bound by FOIP.

We're talking about professionals who understand their obligations sharing information with each other with respect to helping a child. That's what we're talking about. Do we want to make sure that in every one of those situations where they're sitting down in a meeting and sharing information, the child has a privacy assessment? With respect, I'd disagree with the Privacy Commissioner on that. That would be more bureaucracy and more rules and binding more things together, which won't work. So I'll have to have a respectful disagreement on that particular point. What we want to do is not throw people's personal information out into the street or put it on the Net. What we want to have are professionals, working together in the best interests of children, being able to share the information that they need to share so that they can protect children who are at risk, so they can assist children and families who are going through difficult times and do it in an appropriate way. That's a very important objective. That's what this act is about. That's what this act will accomplish. Yes, there's a lot more work to do.

I keep hearing from people: you aren't taking any action. Then when you take some action, when you deal with issues that people are saying are the most important barriers to success in terms of them carrying out their jobs, they say: "Oh, you can't do that. You'd better wait." I'm sorry; which is it? Do we take action, or do we wait? I vote for taking action. I hope you will, and I'd ask you to support this in second reading.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 21

Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013.

On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development I would like to thank this House for the support shown for this bill and what it is designed to accomplish. Through second reading and Committee of the Whole we better examined what this act could achieve for Alberta. We discussed the importance of creating a funding mechanism between industry and government to support the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan for oil sands monitoring. The funding arrangement will enable Alberta to collect, hold, and disburse funds and to continue to implement the joint plan. This funding mechanism is a perfect example of how government and industry can work together on a common goal, and that goal is to promote an open and transparent system for environmental monitoring. The funding proposal was put forward by the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and is fully supported by all of the players in the oil sands.

The goal of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development is also full integration of all hazardous waste management systems in the province. With this in mind Bill 21 will remove the requirement for personal identification numbers, or PINs, for hazardous waste management to support implementation of the regulatory enhancement project. The next step is passing Bill 21 so that we can establish a funding mechanism as we move forward on a provincial monitoring system and also fully integrate all hazardous waste management in the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Do you know how much time I have?

The Deputy Speaker: Ninety minutes.

Ms Smith: I do. Well, I was expecting that I was going to be called by my deputy House leader to speak to this around 5 o'clock this afternoon. Being that we've had a few more hours to work on it, I won't use my full 90 minutes, but my comments are going to be more voluminous than I had originally intended. Sorry to the members opposite, but you'll be happy to know that I am speaking in favour of Bill 21.

I will go through a couple of the reasons why I'm in support of Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013. I congratulate the government on being able to work collaboratively with our federal counterparts. I've been watching with great interest as the federal Environment minister and the provincial Environment minister have rolled out joint initiatives over the course of the last year. I think this is a very positive step in the right direction. I think it does show that there is a real appetite on the part of both our federal and provincial counterparts to find ways to be able to improve not only our environmental monitoring for the sake of that but also to improve our environmental performance for the sake of being able to make the case to our international partners in the United States, to our future international customers around the world that Alberta can develop its resources in a way that has less and less impact on the environment. The first step towards making that international case is, of course, having sound monitoring.

I reflect back on my own leadership campaign. When I decided to run for the Wildrose back in 2009, I had a number of different platform planks. Two of them were energy and environment and the nexus between the two. I have mentioned in this Chamber before that I have coauthored three studies on the environment. This is an area of particular interest for me. One study was on species at risk. Another one was when I was at the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, called ecoprosperty. I'll make mention of that one a little bit later. The other was environmental indicators for Canada and the United States. My very first foray into public policy was going at this very important task of looking at what the environmental indicators actually say and looking at our progress, measuring that progress, and seeing how much incredible progress North America and Canada in particular have made on a number of different measures since the first Earth Day, back in the 1970s.

One of the things that you will notice as well with our party in the supporters that we have had and the members who are represented here today is that we have a large number of landowners who support our party. The reason for that is because we recognize and I think landowners as well recognize that landowners have been the original environmentalists, the original stewards of the environment. The incredible amount of work that our landowners have done to be able to steward the resources not only benefits their business but also benefits the environment, increases biodiversity, ensures that we've got sound management practices for not only land but also air and water. I think that you will find that that is an ethic that runs through all Albertans from the north to the south and certainly nowhere more strongly than in our landowner community.

I would say that many of the issues that we have faced over the last number of years, the friction that we've had between our landowner community and our energy industry, have centred around an absence of monitoring or insufficient monitoring. Establishing baseline measures for a whole range of factors, whether it's water quality measures, air quality measures, land-use measures, species at risk measures, is vitally important, I think, to being able to continue to have a very positive working relationship between those who are developing our energy resources and those who are most impacted by it, the surface users and our landowners. I think this is an incredibly important step in the right direction, and I'm looking forward to seeing how it develops.

I was also very interested in reading through the Hansard debate on the amendments put forward by my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I was interested to see how that debate unfolded. I would say that I am convinced by the environment minister's arguments on one of the issues that was raised, about whether or not this should have been narrowed to be more specifically on oil sands or whether there was some advantage in having it more broad so that the act gives the authority to the government to establish monitoring on a whole range of environmental indicators.

I have to say that I am persuaded that it is more broad and that that is a good idea because I think that even though oil sands really is the area where we have our most acute challenges in communicating to the world the progress that we're making on the environmental front, the success that we will make in monitoring oil sands can also lead to success more broadly across all indicators all over Alberta.

I'm glad that there is this greater latitude to be able to bring in monitoring programs not just for the oil sands but also more broadly, and I'll explain a little bit why I feel that way. First of all, I do think that in the oil sands area we have significant opportunities for improvements, significant opportunities to make incredible progress and to develop incredible new technologies that will allow us to be able to develop the resources that have less impact on those three: water, air, and land. As those technologies are developed, they'll be able to not only assist in cleaning up the environment in the rest of the province but also become export technologies for the world. That is something that Alberta is well known for.

Again, it all goes back to being able to monitor. Once you've established the baseline, you can start developing methods to be able to reduce the level of pollutants and impact on the environment and make incredible progress. We've already seen what is happening with our oil sands companies and the work that they're doing collaboratively to be able to eliminate tailings ponds. I think that they will have a breakthrough, and we'll be able to see in very short order how we will be able to eliminate tailings ponds and, in doing so, use that technology for broader environmental cleanup, especially in the area of oil spills, which, as we know, is an increasing issue for us internationally in getting our pipelines approved.

I think as well, on the issue of air quality emissions, that as we start doing more emissions monitoring and more ambient air quality monitoring, we're going to be able to use the progress there to be able to establish new measures and new technologies elsewhere.

Then, of course, the fact that we're going to be able to have less and less impact on the land: we're already seeing that with SAGD operations. These large mining operations have been an incredible source of prosperity for Alberta, but I think we do recognize that moving to different, less invasive, and smaller-footprint development projects also offers us an opportunity to demonstrate to the world that we're developing the resource in a way that has less impact on the environment.

I think that being able to do all of that monitoring up in the oil sands is fantastic. It offers us significant opportunities to be able to make that case to the world. But the reason why I think it's very important for us to make sure that we're taking a very broad approach – and I encourage the minister to be as broad as possible in establishing these programs – is because we have to recognize and be honest about how difficult it is going to be to reduce our oil sands greenhouse gas emissions as we're looking at increasing our oil sands output by double over the next 20 years or so. I think that if you just narrowly focus and just try to continue to have energy intensity targets on oil sands that are unrealistic, we'll never be able to make the case to the world that we're actually going to be able to reduce our overall emissions targets.

I've talked to a number of people who are invested in oil sands, and part of the problem that we face in being able to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions, especially in the area where we have mining, is that as they start mining out further and further, they are having to use more and more trucks. One of the operations that I spoke with is now using twice as many trucks to be able to mine the product and take it to the upgrader so that it can be upgraded and transported to market. It just stands to reason that as these large mining operations end up getting more established, they are actually going to be more energy intensive because of the transportation vehicles that they need to use.

We're also seeing this in the issue of SAGD. As SAGD continues to develop, we're going to see more and more natural gas used to be able to create the steam. The fact of the matter is that in developing these resources, we are going to be using more hydrocarbon fuels, and as a result we are going to see an increase in greenhouse gases. The way we're going to be able to demonstrate to the world that we're going to make meaningful progress on this is if we see displacement technologies in other areas. This is why my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has talked so much about how we have opportunity on greening the grid on electricity. It's related.

If we can start moving to other sources of fuel for electricity, whether it's clean coal, whether it's natural gas, whether it's hydroelectricity, that is where we end up with the really genuine offsets for what we know will be the increase in greenhouse gas emissions in the oil sands. I hope that we are able to create through this monitoring program that holistic approach so that we can acknowledge to the world that, yes, we're increasing over here, but look at how much we're dramatically decreasing over here. I think we have a huge, huge opportunity with the potential development of hydroelectric power not only as a source of new, clean, and green power to be able to offset the retiring coal plants but also as a potential replacement for some of that natural gas in Fort McMurray.

I would hope that by doing this monitoring, doing it in a broad base and expanding out what we expect of our industry working collaboratively to achieve as collective goals for Alberta, we will be able to make the case to the international community that we are a responsible producer of energy. We know in this Chamber that we are a responsible producer of energy, and it's just a matter of having the data to be able to support the progress that we're making.

I think that this kind of approach could shift the discussion in Canada and, more importantly, shift the discussion in the United States. I think we also know, looking down at our American friends, that they do want to achieve certain greenhouse gas emissions goals, but if we can get them thinking along the same lines holistically rather than just zeroing in on the one source of greenhouse gas emissions in one province in one industry, as they have been doing, then I think we'll have great success in being able to say that we can achieve our goals together.

We can see an increase in oil sands development, we can be a partner in providing energy security for North America, but we can also achieve a collective reduction in greenhouse gas emissions. The Americans have the same challenge that we do of greening the grid, particularly in retiring some of those heavy-polluting coal-fired electricity plants. They've already made some progress in that, but I think that by taking a holistic approach to monitoring, we will be able to help change the public attitudes in the United States that will help us get pipelines approved, and it will certainly help us open new markets.

Shifting to Europe, I think that our environmental monitoring will have a huge impact on shifting the discussion with our potential European customers in the future. I would say that in looking at some of the efforts of the government over the past number of years, I think that what I've observed the government to do is that they often take measures designed to be able to get media as opposed to get results. With ad campaigns, especially since they've been done in sort of a haphazard way as opposed to an ongoing education campaign, the $2 billion that was initially set aside for carbon capture and storage – I think we've already seen the failure of that approach, with two of the proponents backing out, saying that they can't make money at it. The $15-per-tonne carbon levy is, I think, also going in the wrong direction. I'll talk a little bit more about that because I know my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre proposed what I thought was an excellent amendment last night. Hopefully, it's something that will be of further discussion between he and the environment minister as we go forward.

Again, getting back to this issue of proper monitoring and establishing proper baselines to show reductions and improvement, I want to talk about some of the really important opportunities that I think Alberta has to be able to shift debate in this regard. When I worked at the Fraser Institute, my boss there, Mike Walker, used to have a phrase. He said: if it matters, measure it. But the most important thing is that you have to be measuring the right things.

One of the problems that we face in Europe is that the OECD does an annual assessment of environmental indicators, but there are a lot of problems with the data. In some cases they're measuring the wrong things, or they're measuring in the wrong way. I'll just give a few examples to explain how I think Alberta, with its new monitoring program, especially broadly defined, could begin to add new data to the mix that might be able to help change the debate in Europe.

For instance, in the OECD measures they do a measure of forestry. The measure that they use, about whether or not a country is overharvesting their environment or underharvesting their environment, is a measure of the amount of cubic feet harvested per capita. Now, per capita measures don't work when you're measuring something like that. On that measure Canada is 27th on the list of 29. Iceland is first on the list. Well, the problem is that Iceland has no trees, so of course they're not going to have a very low mark when it comes to how many trees they're harvesting. A better measure would be: how much harvest is there per hectare of forest that you have? If Canada was measured on that, a meaningful indicator, we would actually go up to sixth on the list, from 27th out of 29.

There are another couple of examples; for instance, fertilizer. If you try to measure fertilizer per capita, as they do in the OECD environmental indicators, Canada is, once again, 25 on a list of 29. Who's number 1? Switzerland. Switzerland has 1 per cent of Canada's cropland. They don't produce a lot of crops, and that's the reason why, when you measure on a per capita measure, Switzerland ends up at the top of the list and we end up down.

What if we measured fertilizer per hectare? Well, then Canada would go up to third, and Switzerland would go all the way down to number 18. The same thing with pesticides. If you actually put it on a proper measure – how much pesticide are you using per hectare? – rather than being 22nd on the list, Canada would be all the way up at fourth place.

But the biggest opportunity is the per capita measures on energy usage. Right now Canada is 27th out of 29 on that measure. Turkey, Mexico, and Portugal are right up at the top. But none of the measures that the OECD uses look at climate, look at geography, look at the existing resource space, look at whether you're an import economy or an export economy, look at what your existing population is. By using this new approach that we have for monitoring, for establishing baselines, for establishing new indicators, I believe that we could change the debate in Europe right now away from looking at what I observe to be flawed measures of environmental indicators that skew against Canada's performance and skew in favour of countries who are part of Europe. I think that Canada and Alberta in particular have a huge opportunity to change the debate. I think that this bill, that dedicates so much money to monitoring, can really lead the way.

I want to just revert back to the report that I worked on when I was at the Fraser Institute, Environmental Indicators for Canada and the United States. There are a couple of things that I would observe, coming closer to home, about what I found when we were going through that. Again, this was back in 1995-96. What we found at the time was that the data was not great, particularly for water quality monitoring. There were very, very few stations that were set up in rivers across the entire country, let alone in individual provinces, that monitored ambient levels of different pollutants in the water. This, I think, is a good opportunity for Alberta to be able to establish something far more comprehensive, and I think it is one of the areas where we still end up with difficulty being able to get good data.

The other major success story that we found in looking at the data – again, I’m looking at 2012 because they’re still doing their air quality update. The national air pollution surveillance database already monitors the ambient air levels of NO<sub>x</sub>, SO<sub>2</sub>, carbon monoxide, volatile organic compounds, particulate matter, and we have had incredible progress over the last 35 years in reducing all of those ambient levels of air pollutants.

The Fraser Institute did give some recommendations about how we might be able to improve air quality monitoring even further even though we have already made great progress. It does seem in looking at the database that there are places where we have high levels of emissions but we don’t have air quality monitoring stations. That would be one of the holes that I would think through this process we’d be able to fill, identifying areas where we do have emissions and making sure that we’ve got stations in place so that we can do a proper and more thorough level of monitoring.

The other thing that they pointed out is that the national air pollution surveillance database doesn’t include certain other pollutants. Benzenes are not included, and there may be other things to consider adding just so that we can get a more comprehensive measure of what our true air quality is.

In summary, on the first point I think that it is very good that the act remains very broad. I think it’s very good that the environment minister has the latitude to be able to establish a full spectrum of monitoring on air, on water, and on land. I’m really looking forward to watching how this develops. I’ll be watching it with great interest.

The last area that I wanted to make reference to – and this goes to the point that my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was raising last night – is the issue of the $15 per tonne carbon levy that goes into a fund that is managed by the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation. I think that my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre says that this is not a levy-and-spend type of proposal; it’s a levy-and-hoard type of proposal. We already see that the number of dollars that are growing in this fund has gone up to $235 million that is just sitting there.

I have to say that in looking at the progress report of how the funds are being spent, I would have to question whether or not we’re actually getting any value out of this. I think it served a PR purpose as opposed to a practical purpose, and I think that the numbers really do speak for themselves. It’s quite interesting, as my colleague pointed out, that the levy brings in about $51 million per year, maybe $60 million this year, and $50 million per year just happens to be the amount of money that the government is wanting to commit to doing this monitoring.

The problem with the approach that is being taken by this corporation is that in their two-year progress report they have given out 43 different grants to individual companies. As you know – we’ve said this many times before – we don’t believe government is all that great at picking winners and losers. We think that that should be done in the private market. But if you’re looking at the measure of performance that this is judging by, to what extent is it actually achieving the government’s objectives of reducing greenhouse gas emissions? I have to say that it’s a pretty paltry performance record. Forty-three different projects. Two years in only two of them are complete, four of them are only 40 per cent complete, 10 of them are between 20 and 40 per cent complete, and the rest, which is well over half of them, have had virtually no progress being made on them.

Meanwhile, this corporation is trumpeting that they may reduce, if all things go according to plan over the next 10 years, eight megatonnes worth of greenhouse gas emissions. Well, our greenhouse gas emissions levels in 2011 were 242 megatonnes, and the federal government has committed Canada to reaching carbon emissions objectives of 18 per cent below 2005 levels by 2020. This approach is not going to get us there. It may have been a useful PR tool at the time it was put forward, but I think that now that we’re a few years in, we’re seeing that it’s not generating what it should.

I think that my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was absolutely right. We would get far better value by taking the fund dollars that exist there right now, $235 million, and investing that in establishing the monitoring for air, land, water, not only for oil sands but throughout the province, and then being able to have this ongoing levy applied to future monitoring efforts. I think it would be a far better use of the dollars that are in that fund, a far better use of the dollars coming in from that levy.

What I would observe as the problem that we have in talking to our international partners, in talking to the international community, and in talking to our future international customers is that they’re not interested in seeing political spin. They’re not interested in seeing flashy proposals that don’t actually accomplish anything. They’re actually interested in seeing real progress, and the only way that we can show real progress is by establishing the benchmark, establishing the baseline, and then watching across all industries the kind of technological improvements that are going to see all of those different measures go in the right direction, which is improvement rather than getting worse.

The other thing I would say is that I know that the members from the NDP opposition party rejected the proposal that my colleague had put forward on the grounds that they believe that the polluter should pay. I think I’d just like to put another proposal, that comes from my own hometown, on the table about how the kind of approach from Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre could actually help small municipalities who are trying to do the right thing.

My hometown of High River annexed some land that included the local landfill. They thought: this is great; we’ll be able to invest $2 million in being able to recover this property. They thought they would be doing something good for the environment, and they thought that they would be doing something good for the community, that they’d turn it into parkland. Well, rather than actually getting accolades for doing that, they’re being punished by the province because the province has now said: “Well, now that you own this and now that you’ve recovered it, we want you to do ambient air quality monitoring for methane at a cost of $150,000 per year in perpetuity. We don’t really know when that’s actually going to come to an end. This is the first year that we’re doing it.”

I have to tell you that they do feel like they are being punished for having done the right thing, whereas if we had this kind of fund set up that would be looking at how we would monitor methane as a greenhouse gas at a variety of different sites, this is exactly the kind of thing that High River would be able to apply to to have that air quality monitoring take place, and then they would be rewarded for having taken the right steps in recovering this landfill.

I put that forward as the potential that I see for taking the kind of approach that my colleague had proposed. I think that this would not only benefit my hometown, but I think that there's probably a number of other projects that would be able to apply for these funds so that we can make sure that we have the very best air quality monitoring so that we get the very best results.

The last thing I would say is just on one of the other studies that I coauthored when I was at the CFIB. It was on ecoprosperty. We were measuring the attitudes of small- and medium-sized enterprises and their attitude towards the environment and towards the economy. The thing that I found so heartening and so wonderful is where most small- and medium-sized business owners sat on this issue of where the balance is.

Now, you will always find a certain percentage of folks who say that the economy can be sacrificed because there is no measure that goes too far when the environment is concerned, and you'll have people on the other side that will say that as long as we're making progress on the economy, then there's some sacrifice that happens with the environment. Fortunately, both of those extreme positions are not represented in very large numbers. The vast, vast majority of people – in our study it was 87 per cent of the small- and medium-business owners surveyed – said that we have to have a balance.

We can have a healthy economy and we can have a healthy environment. If you do not make sure that you have a healthy economy, you don't have the dollars generated to be able to invest in the environmental technologies that will allow you to continue to improve, and if you don't have a healthy environment, you don't have an environment in which your business can thrive. I think most Canadians, most Albertans understand that there's an important balance.

I think that the measures that are going to be taken in this act to be able to do the monitoring will let a lot of Albertans be at ease. We're doing really well on a great many indicators of environmental performance. I think the opportunity that we have is to be able to demonstrate just how good a job we are doing compared to our neighbours in other provinces, our neighbours in other energy-rich jurisdictions, and certainly our international customers and partners. To me this is just an absolute opportunity, and I'm glad that the government is going to take advantage of that.

I think if they took the recommendation of my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, we would be able to increase the monitoring quickly and get to those goals faster. I hope the government still does consider taking that under advisement, but I certainly will be supporting this bill and voting in favour of it, and I urge others to as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to rise here today to discuss Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013. I'm cautiously happy to see this government bring this bill forward as it appears to deal with legitimate environmental and industry concerns. Additionally, the bill will help Alberta obtain and maintain the social licence that is essential to continue to develop Alberta's natural resources and to achieve greater economic prosperity. Obtaining this social licence and enhancing the image of the development of our natural resources across the world have to be serious priorities for this government.

Environmental issues are paramount in the international public debate on the development of fossil fuels and the oil sands. Continuing to improve our environmental record will be a key part of gaining access to new markets and expanding Alberta's economy. We must recognize that improving our environmental record will not be done by one bill. This is a common goal we in this Legislature should share and work together towards.

With that said, I do believe this bill is a step in the right direction. The Wildrose Official Opposition recognizes that the government must play an important role in improving our environmental record and has put forward some environmental ideas I think the government and legislation like this should take seriously. I think it's important to mention that while improving and maintaining our social licence to develop our energy industry is vital, we must not forget that there is nothing more important to individuals than the quality of the air they and their loved ones breathe every second of every day. It is imperative that our province's economic reliance on the production, use, refinement, and sale of hydrocarbons never undermines the right of Albertans to breathe the clean air.

This is why the Wildrose opposition has long advocated for a clean air strategy. Such a strategy could achieve a reduction in pollution and carbon emissions, which would help enhance our image. In order to do this, we must increase the use of clean-coal technology, natural gas, and hydroelectricity generation and move away from heavy carbon emitting coal generation. This would be measurably more efficient in improving our environmental record and reducing greenhouse gases and pollutants that directly affect the health of Albertans – mercury, lead, and other particulate matter – than the government's current strategy of spending billions on carbon capture and storage.

Put simply, improving our air monitoring is the kind of direction Wildrose endorses for meaningful improvements to our environment, so I do support this bill but not without some concerns. It's important to recognize that industry wants to do the right thing. Alberta's resource companies have been at the leading edge of technological development to improve the environmental impact of industry. Since 1990 oil production related emissions have been reduced by almost 40 per cent per barrel, and the technology is only getting better. Industry has not only been improving the technology they use; they've also said that they want to earn that social licence to continue to grow our natural resource industry in an environmentally friendly way.

There are some misconceptions out there that industry doesn't care – for instance, among some of the ill-informed, anti-Alberta, and anti-industry environmentalists, the sort of people this PC government has given film grants to – but these criticisms are not at all accurate. Industry wants to do the right thing and contribute to the economy while ensuring that the environment is safeguarded for future generations and future economic opportunities. Bill 21 provides a window to the future in that it's facilitating economic development in oil sands and helping to ensure that our air is clean, as Albertans expect and deserve.

However, I do have a concern with this bill, and that's relating to the powers the minister is giving himself. This seems to be a refrain every time the government puts forward a bill. The bill seems too broad in who it applies to and in the powers it gives the minister to compel participants to pay. Now, the minister and sponsor insist that this legislation is just going to make the oil sands monitoring program possible. As to compelling participants to pay, they'll say that the industry has volunteered to pay for this.

Well, first, let's look at the bill as it concerns the oil sands industry. Industry has agreed to pay up to $50 million for three years, but this bill has no cap on the potential cost to industry, so it could cause uncertainty and put economic competitiveness in jeopardy.

The concerns I have go beyond the fact that it's signing the oil sands companies to a blank cheque. It's the fact that nowhere in this bill does the word "oil sands" appear. Instead, it says that the minister has the power to create any monitoring program for any group and decide without limit how much they have to pay for the monitoring. This appears to be a case where one industry has agreed to pay up to a certain amount for a limited time to set up a monitoring program, but the minister has turned that into the power to make any industry pay for any additional monitoring outside what anyone has agreed is necessary. It again raises questions about this government and whether this is an example of another tax grab that is going to erode the Alberta advantage.

Oil sands players have agreed to the necessity of monitoring to obtain and maintain their social licence. The question now is: now that it has the power to determine the bills to be paid, is this government going to turn this into a punitive tax that can harm the industry and our economy?

The other, bigger question is: who's next? Livestock operations for water monitoring? Coal for air monitoring? These might seem reasonable on their face, but usually the government's role is to set limits and enforce them and set fines for those who violate limits. The oil sands case is one where industry has volunteered to pay for the government's monitoring. That's not the norm. The way this bill is drawn, it looks like the government is trying to make it the norm, and I'm concerned that no other industry seems to know what's being pushed through here. I certainly hope not, but the broadly worded language here could be interpreted that way.

I hope this government can recognize the very serious concerns at play here. We saw what happened with royalties when a centralized government doesn't listen to industry. Some clarity is needed on the government's intentions with Bill 21.

Bill 21 also aims to protect civil servants from actions for damages while enforcing the act. This makes sense. Civil servants working to protect the environment should receive protection from legal liability in carrying out their duties.

Other aspects of the bill are easier to interpret and can be supported. The changes to the hazardous materials law shift authority over hazardous materials so the oil and gas sector only has to deal with a single regulator. The environment department and industry are doing a good job for the most part, but transferring responsibility to the new energy regulator fits the mandate of the new regulator and will hopefully help streamline this aspect of industrial development. We will be watching, however, to ensure that the regulator is adequately regulating the transportation of hazardous materials for those who are exempt from the department of environment's regulations.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I can offer reluctant support for Bill 21 as written. Overall it's an improvement, but the broad language and enhanced ministerial powers are a concern for me as I worry that they may erode the competitiveness of not only the oil sands industry but any other industry in Alberta that the government decides to turn its sights on with a lot less consultation than we see with the oil sands monitoring program.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 24

Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate May 7: Mr. Hancock]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to speak to Bill 24, the Statutes Amendment Act. Bill 24 comes in direct response to a ruling that caused immediate issues to arise for managed property bare-land condominiums. This is a complex issue that needs some explanation in this Legislature.

Bare-land condominiums are bare-land units which are created when a condominium plan is registered to subdivide the piece of land on which there is no building. The registration of bare-land condominium plans creates a corporation as well as unit titles. There may or may not be common property, depending on the configuration of the plan and access. Common property, if any, will typically be streets or roadways allowing access to each unit. Managed property means such part or parts of the unit that, by its bylaws, the condominium corporation is to administer, control, manage, maintain, and repair as it would the common property, being improvement to the lands within the boundaries of the units, including the exterior of any buildings, structures, driveways, walkways, lawns, landscapes, and such other parts of the units to be managed, maintained, and repaired by the condominium corporation as provided by its bylaws.

The October judgment has now made it illegal for all bare-land condominium boards in Alberta to precollect funds for managed property improvements or maintenance, meaning that such repairs or maintenance will have to be paid on a pay-as-you-go system. The method being used to deal with the managed properties prior to this judgment was to create a reserve fund, contributed to by condo fees, intended for the long-term plan of maintenance of the property.

This essentially puts the bare-land condo associations back to the pre-2000 method of levying costly and unexpected special assessments on owners rather than using a reserve fund. This decision has created an untenable situation, and virtually every bare-land condo in the province is faced with the same dilemma: a reserve fund that is unusable for the purposes for which it was devised; funds locked in with no equitable way for distribution back to those who created it; also, a situation where a special assessment will be levied against the condo owners each and every time a repair, upgrade, or maintenance is needed. No predictability. No sustainability.

This issue has affected thousands of Alberta condo owners and has tied up millions of dollars of Albertans' funds. Back in March I stood in question period to raise the need for resolution of this issue before the Legislature. I'm happy to say that the Minister of Service Alberta has heard this need and, in discussion with different parties, including myself and other opposition members, has brought forward a solution to fix the issue, which is in need of an immediate fix.

The October ruling was troubling for many bare-land condo boards and owners and had a great impact on the activities of these managed property bare-land condo corporations. Since the ruling it has been hard to measure the chaos, confusion, disruption, and expense that has been endured by bare-land condo owners. In many cases scheduled maintenance and repairs were cancelled or postponed, which has had the potential of impacting property values if left undone for any length of time. I believe that delaying this legislation would never be found to be acceptable.

With this simple piece of legislation prodded out of the government by an extremely effective opposition, we are correcting a flaw in the condominium act that had placed managed property bare-land condominium boards and management companies in an extremely awkward and vulnerable position. I received an e-mail that highlights exactly why I've been advocating for this change to the condo legislation.

Dear [Member for Lacombe-Ponoka],

After living in various homes around Bermuda and Canada since I started out, we made the decision to move to a condo community, a fifty plus community to be exact, made up of a combination of 34 villas in nine clusters, and 138 apartment units in 3 apartment buildings. We also have an amenity building.

Recently we have been made aware of the situation involving "Bare Land Condominiums". Needless to say we are a little more than concerned at this revelation. When we moved to our present address in 1998, it was our first encounter with a condo situation. We love it, in spite of some quirky people we have come to know.

But what is to be done? It would seem that when the province set up the condo by-laws, they had not seen the unintended consequences when they assembled this over-riding legislation. Personally, as I live in a villa, I am not too interested in being left holding the bag over a conflict that I was never party to. The system we have lived with for the past almost 15 years, has worked very well. There was and always will be a bit of apartment/villa rivalry where one faction sees an advantage that is not real. We have a few people in our complex like that.

Even so, when the facts were looked at, by both sides, and when we set up our own by-laws, we worked around some of the areas that were deemed to be unequal.

What we need from the government is to come to the party, put together a fix that will leave a situation we have all lived with for however many years, intact. We [will] need to go back to that, as a system to live by. Before I retired, I lived as much as possible with the term, KISS System. "Keep it Simple [dot, dot, dot]." I'm sure you have heard it before. It works every time, avoids unnecessary bureaucracy, and usually keeps everyone happy.

The letter is signed Ross.

I am in support of this bill, Mr. Speaker. It keeps it simple. It addresses the issues that I brought before the Legislature. It's retrospective and allows access to funds that condo corporations had precollected prior to this ruling and allows new managed property developments and maintenance going forward.

I would like to quote an Alberta condo owner, Mervin Lee, author of another of the litany of letters I received on this issue. Mr. Lee states: "I trust you will do everything in your power to push this legislation forward as soon as possible to rectify this absurd situation."

Mr. Speaker, although there are many other issues within the condominium act that need to be addressed and resolved and the minister is working on it in consultation with many groups and with the opposition parties, I ask all of the members of this Legislature to support this bill.

It came to my attention that a message was heard by Albertans that opposition was holding up the introduction of this legislation in the Chamber. Well, folks, in this province it is upon the government to introduce government legislation. Although we did have to wait for the government to bring this bill forward, I have done everything in my power to see that this change for bare-land condos is made quickly to the condominium act. It is my hope that this much-needed legislation will see timely passage.

Please, hon. members, vote in favour of this bill for Alberta's bare-land condo owners.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also rising in favour of Bill 24, Statutes Amendment Act, sponsored by the Member for Calgary-Greenway. I almost said Montrose. Old habits die hard.

As we all know, there was a court case that found that the condo boards do not have the ability to collect and hence use any funds for the purpose of repairing or replacing anything on the property. This amendment will allow for the monies collected to be spent on appropriate expenses to repair and replace.

It also goes through the Emblems of Alberta Act, the Perpetuities Act, the Surveys Act, and portfolio names.

I'm going to support this, first, because it will protect all the condo owners' investment in their condos. If this doesn't pass, perhaps repairs to the buildings could be put off as there will not be any funds for the repair. On the rationale, condo dwellers will live co-operatively with each other with regard to the common space for their common interest, as it appears, and there needs to be a mechanism to allow for the collection of funds to operate. This amendment will allow that.

This also goes to fix the Emblems of Alberta Act. Currently the entirety of the coat of arms is protected, but portions of it are not. This amendment will designate the ARMS, the shield proper, as an emblem and, therefore, protect it.

Under the Perpetuities Act this amendment will also treat mineral leases differently than the other perpetuities agreements by removing the limitations that the landowners would experience after the lease has been around for 40 years. The landowners will basically not lose the rights that they would normally have over their property.

This also will amend the Surveys Act. The director may become less accountable to the Assembly as they would not necessarily be employed by the minister.

Then the portfolio names. This will also clean up a bunch of acts so that the references are to the correct ministers and departments.

I think this is a good bill overall and will go a long way to addressing the problems that condo owners face. For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think I will be supporting this bill, and I congratulate the minister for bringing this bill forward. I hope everybody supports it and we pass it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Bill 24, the Statutes Amendment Act. You know, a couple of things to outline. I think the government here is breaking precedent with past procedures or at least what they've done as far as tradition goes, where a miscellaneous statutes bill is normally introduced only after each amendment included in the bill has been informally approved by all parties. It's quite unfortunate that not all parties have agreed to everything that's included in this act. I've had several conversations with the Minister of Service Alberta, so I'll get into some details as far as what I was looking to see and what the expectations of the Alberta NDP were.

Regardless, first and foremost, the changes to the bare-land condominium. I've had the opportunity to speak with quite a few different condominium owners, especially folks in bare-land condos, where, as you know, Mr. Speaker, there's very little common property. There are certain promises that are made by the condo corporation that it's going to be maintained. I should back up here. Funds collected would be held in a reserve, as they are in most condominiums, and then those could be used to improve or upgrade common property. Now, what makes bare-land condominiums unique is that there isn't a great deal of that common – in traditional condominiums people own the interiors, and the rest of the grounds are common property whereas in bare-land condos there is very little common property.

It wasn't until a decision was made where – basically the condo boards could no longer access those funds, so there have been, you know, quite a few bare-land condos within the city and province-wide who unfortunately cannot build up a reserve of funds to address issues when they arise. Because of that, Mr. Speaker, some of these condominium boards have a significant amount of capital that's tied up and that's inaccessible. When they need dollars for large improvements, it's unfortunate that they can't collect for them.

This part of the bill, you know, Mr. Speaker, is very reasonable. Again, there are many condo boards and members that I've spoken with who feel that this is pressing, that this should be dealt with. I do commend the Minister of Service Alberta for wanting to move on this quickly. However, the challenge is that this isn't a tiny piece in this amendment act, in this bill. It's quite significant. Because of that reason, Mr. Speaker, my caucus and myself requested and felt that this warrants its own piece of legislation. This warrants its own bill. This isn't just a tiny, friendly amendment. This is going to impact thousands of Albertans and should be put through the proper process and proper course through the Legislature.

There are other aspects of this bill talking about amendments and perpetuities and surveys. The issue here is that this isn't a short and sweet housekeeping act or piece of legislation or bill. Pardon me, Mr. Speaker, I'm starting to grasp at words here. [interjection] Fear not, my friends. My second, third, and fourth wind will come to me.

Needless to say, this is something that should be broken apart. It's not just, you know, a sweep it under the carpet or shoot it through as quick as possible. For that reason, it makes it extremely difficult to agree to pass this bill forward, and it's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. I thought the parties were all in agreeance that this would be broken up into various bills just because it does require some more research and definitely more discussion. There are several pieces in here.

As I said, we're looking at the Surveys Act, the change there being that the director of the surveys will no longer be required to be a government employee, which again means, obviously, that the government is looking at contracting this out. That raises the question of: why are we trying to move this out of the government's purview and over to the private sector?

I think, as well, there are changes, as I said, to the Perpetuities Act. I'll just recap here that it will state very clearly that the possibilities of reverter and conditions subsequent section does not apply to mineral leases. Now, although members from the other side will talk about how this is intended to clarify – you know, what's interesting, Mr. Speaker, is the existing act possibly provides a 40-year bar to landowners' rights to terminate a mineral lease. What's interesting about that is that after 40 years, provided payments are made, there may be no further right to reversionary interest in the leased property. That in itself, in my opinion, deserves some attention and further discussion.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, it makes it difficult to support this when really we should be debating and giving due process and due time to each of these elements of this bill.

With that, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak on this.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure tonight to rise and speak in favour of Bill 24, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2013. I particularly want to talk about section 3, that amends section 19 of the Perpetuities Act. I had the opportunity to meet with EnCana to discuss section 19. Some of the concerns that were brought up talked about qualified and absolute estates in that land and that qualified estates would have the potential to end if a specific event occurred or if certain conditions were not met. This would happen 40 years after the lease was signed if it was signed after July 1, 1973, so it is very important that we handle this legislation sooner than later as 40 years will be up July 1, 2013. Those are some concerns that were brought to me.

I had the opportunity to meet with the hon. Energy minister, and I think this is a good example of parties working together with industry. I've also contacted the Freehold Owners Association, and they're in support of this. It's nice to see parties and industry and mineral owners working together to ensure that the right thing is done because, you know, approximately 20 per cent of the mines and minerals in Alberta are owned by private persons. The current legislation would have an effect on them, so it's nice to see that we're looking after amending section 19 in the Perpetuities Act.

I'm just going to be short and brief and say that I'm supporting this bill, and hopefully all my other colleagues will as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm please to be able to rise to speak to Bill 24 in second reading. As others have indicated, this is a bill which includes provisions to address three issues, one with respect to the bare-land condominium issue, one with respect to the Perpetuities Act, and one with respect to the Surveys Act.

Now, as others have noted – and I would also like to add to that deliberation – this is an act which puts together three separate pieces. Generally speaking, the rule, Mr. Speaker, is that for each issue that the government is trying to address, they have a separate act. For that reason, each act gets the attention of the Legislature that is anticipated as a result of following our general rules of parliamentary procedure. It gives the opportunity for, you know, the level of discussion that those who have put into place those rules of parliamentary procedure have deemed to be reasonable within our democratic system. By putting three pieces together, of course, we cut that opportunity by two-thirds.

Now, often it will happen, however, that House leaders can all agree that, in fact, the three components are really housekeeping in nature and really don't require the Assembly to turn its attention to them in the way that the authors of our parliamentary system had anticipated and had, in their good judgment, believed to be the appropriate way to approach the issues. So in those cases you have a number of issues all addressed in one act.

In this case, of course, we the House leaders did not agree that these issues were all appropriate for a miscellaneous statutes amendment act. Indeed, I believe I will not be speaking out of turn to say that the Government House Leader also acknowledged that each of these elements probably weren't quite of a miscellaneous statutes nature. Instead what we did was that we just sort of created our own little mini-omnibus here. I guess my concern is that this is not a precedent that I would like to see adopted or utilized very frequently because it significantly limits the opportunity for debate.

I believe it was the House leader – but it may have been another representative of the government – that argued that, well, these three changes, although they are substantive and they are not merely housekeeping in nature, are limited to a very specific and small group of Albertans, so it makes sense to put them all into one bill. I'm not sure that that's really an accurate statement, Mr. Speaker. I think that the Condominium Property Act amendments have the potential to have a rather broad-ranging impact on a number of people, and I think that the number of people that they impact can grow every day. So I just don't know that that is a piece that should have been bundled together with these other items.

Now, that being said, there is no question that the consultations that we've done around the issue of the Condominium Property Act suggest, like all the other speakers that have risen thus far, that this set of changes is changes that pretty much everyone agrees are necessary and represent a responsible reaction to a judicial decision and are in the best interests of the people who they do impact. In this particular case, certainly, it's not something that we disagree with, and indeed we are pleased that this particular change is coming forward. As I said, the concern really is more just around what kind of precedent it sets for other issues in the way it's presented in the legislation.

In terms of the Emblems of Alberta Act, I guess the concern that I have there is, again, really in some ways more of a question. You know, it seems small in nature, but if we get ourselves into a position – and we don't know. What we're basically doing is giving to the government the ability to make regulations about other organizations above and beyond government who can bear the provincial shield or the emblem in their businesses or wherever. I'm a little concerned about what those regulations are going to say and who exactly it is that we're going to be giving the authority to to use that shield and whether that's a responsible use of it.

Of course, because we can't see the regulations, as is always the case with this government, we don't exactly know who it is that we're planning on expanding the permission to to use the emblem of Alberta. The Progressive Conservative Party? I don't know. Maybe. And if they get it, will the NDP, too? Don't know. Are we allowed to right now? Not sure. Again, because so much of it is being delegated to regulatory authority, we just don't know.

There's no question that if this is simply a case of putting into legislation what has already been in practice, then that's fine so that we're simply not penalizing those who have actually for many years been using the emblem with our quiet permission. I don't know, but again I typically am not keen on seeing legislation change such that we say: well, we had this in legislation, but now we've decided to just give ourselves the authority to deal with it in cabinet meetings, behind closed doors. That certainly is a trend with this government.

The Perpetuities Act. I'm going to take everyone's word on it that this is what all the relevant stakeholders want and that there's nobody that doesn't want this. I have to say that when I see the word "perpetuities," I am immediately pushed back to very, very late nights in law school, much later than this, 4 o'clock in the morning, trying to memorize the rule against perpetuities. Although I can say the phrase "the rule against perpetuities," that's where it stops. I could not for the life of me tell you what that rule is anymore. That's really all I have to say about that. Certainly, I can't engage in a really thoughtful discussion about it because, really, I was able to do it for a brief period of time when I wrote the exam, and then it stopped. People here suggest that it is something that all stakeholders are in support of, and I'm going to take them at their word on that.

The issue with respect to the director of surveys: I am a little concerned about this no longer being an employee under the minister's administration. They will have to be a surveyor, but they are not an employee under the minister's administration. I am a little concerned about that. Surveying is an important task, and the Surveys Act and the context in which the director of surveys works are very important for a full range of issues that affect Albertans every day. I'm not exactly sure why we now need to contract that out as well. It seems to me to be very fundamental to the role of government. It always historically has been fundamental to the role of government. I worry about contracting out that particular task.

We've really had very little debate and very little explanation for why it is that we are being asked to agree to allow that role to be contracted out, presumably to the private sector. Again, with the context being the way it is here, where it's mashed together with a bunch of other changes, we're not entirely sure whether we've had enough of an opportunity to really get at what the government is trying to do with this change. I'm not convinced that we've gotten much of an explanation on that at this point. So we're a little concerned about that.

Section 22: we're talking just about change in name. After that, we have a whole series of changes to portfolio names. Now, that one is housekeeping. That one I could have definitely seen being properly within a miscellaneous statutes act, so we're not going to spend too much time about that.

Now, it looks like we've got the Minister of Transportation taking over some work from the Minister of Infrastructure around control and management of roads within improvement districts. I presume that that's as a result of also changing the roles and responsibilities within those ministries, as is the amendment to the Public Trustee Act.

So there are a number of changes here. We do not see any reason to be voting against this bill with respect to the substance here, with the exception of the concerns that I've raised around the Surveys Act. That's, of course, what's so frustrating because we're in this position where we know everybody wants the changes to the condominium act, so what we have to do now is decide: do we vote for that? We know that that's probably the most substantive part of this and that that's what people want, but in so doing, we're also supporting this privatization of the director of surveys role in Alberta, and we are also giving free rein to the government to decide who gets to use the Alberta provincial shield.

Neither of those things are things that we would necessarily agree with without there being a little more justification from the government. Unfortunately, because of the way this bill has been cobbled together in this little mini-omnibus format, we're compelled to vote for those things in order to support the changes to the condominium act. That, of course, is why we suggested at the very outset that we did not want the condominium act changes mushed together with a whole bunch of other pieces of legislation.

That being said, that pretty much outlines our concerns and the issues, certainly, that I have with respect to this piece of legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to just make some brief comments in regard to Bill 24, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2013. I have a particular interest in the section that's dealing with condos and the amendment to the Condominium Property Act. Certainly, it's a useful change and revision to allow funds from a capital replacement fund to be able to be spent on repairs and to replace private property in a place that is a bare-land condo. If a condo corporation also is required by bylaw to repair and replace property, they may use the funds collected after the bylaw took effect to do so. Again, I find that to be particularly useful.

You know, I hope that this is a prelude to a more comprehensive set of protections that would ensure that there is a way to address maintenance but to also address deficiencies in condominiums where there is common property either in the actual physical structure or in the surrounding area of a condominium. We just see so many people buying condos with deficiencies in common property and/or drainage of the surrounding area and people left on the hook for those changes that have to be made to buildings and common property in condos. In a way, I took this to be pointing in a direction for further reform in regard to the Condominium Property Act.

I just have in my own constituency so many people that have been hung out to dry with deficient condominium construction and the surrounding landscaping of these places. Our ability to look at and revisit some of the laws that might protect condominium owners when they're purchasing these places and allow us to give more latitude and capacity to protect people against unscrupulous condominium developers I think is something that we would all benefit from both now and in the future.

I was listening briefly to my colleague make some comments in regard to this bill that we're looking at here now just in regard to this idea of pulling together so many different pieces into miscellaneous statutes amendments. You know, while I don't oppose that categorically, as was said before, the existence of the bare-land condominium changes in conjunction with some of these other miscellaneous changes I just find a little bit incongruous. It's more substantive, the part on the condominiums, than some of these other miscellaneous amendments.

I just would caution against the use of omnibus bills. We see bad trends towards omnibus bills both in the United States and in the federal government of Canada, where they're tagging all kinds of major changes together in one bill.

You know, I certainly do support the Condominium Property Act, for example, but am professing my ignorance on some of the other ones here until I look at them. For example, I just wasn't even aware of section 4 of the Surveys Act. Sometimes we have a tendency to tuck away things that maybe are hidden from clear view in miscellaneous statutes, and I would just like to advise against that categorically if not specifically to this bill that we are talking about now, Bill 24.

You know, those are my brief comments on this. I just wanted to point out that certainly I do support the Condominium Property Act both in substance and as a direction that the government should take to protect the common property of condominium owners in general – I think they deserve our protection here under law – and my reservation about having it tagged to other miscellaneous statutes as it is here this evening.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think I've exhausted my comments. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

If there are no other speakers, I'll recognize the Minister of Service Alberta to close debate.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a very robust dialogue, some a little more entertaining than others.

Given the hour and given the fact that we need to bring relief to condominium owners, I would humbly request that we move forth and vote on this.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 21

Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate May 8: Mr. Hale]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this bill is being dealt with without some of the amendments that might have been prepared, and that's unfortunate because I think that the government is not on the right track with this bill.

The people of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, are demanding and have been promised and deserve an arm's-length, independent, transparent, accountable, and scientifically credible environmental monitoring agency to oversee industrial development in the oil sands region. The government has been working on this project for two years, with various reports, committees, and working groups. Currently we have a board that is supposed to be working on the establishment of our new, quote, world-class, unquote, monitoring agency. Albertans are demanding a voice in the development of this new monitoring agency, and they deserve nothing less.

Once the management board has come forward with their recommendations, it should be incumbent upon the government to discuss the merits of the recommendations with the public before deciding on a course of action. This bill essentially starts the process for the new agency by stealth. It allows the minister to develop, quote, facts on the ground before the board has even had a chance to complete its work.

The bill allows the minister to take exclusive control of current monitoring programs and establish new ones, allowing her to make regulations without limitation concerning their nature and scope. This could have ramifications for which toxins to study, the geographical location, and so on. It will control the funds that are directed to these organizations and the information they produce. The bill does nothing to change the current governance structure of these monitoring programs, meaning that all monitoring is still under the control and veto of the Minister of ESRD. There is nothing here resembling an arm's-length body or independence of any kind.

Through these new regulations the Minister of ESRD after consultation with the federal government will have the power to dictate how $50 million will be spent on monitoring. That's what has been promised by industry and what this bill sets out to collect by way of mandatory regulations. We do not know how long it will take to establish the new arm's-length monitoring agency. The minister said that it could be up to eight months while committee members said that it could be up to five years.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, considerable amounts of money will be spent on the design and implementation of any number of current and new monitoring programs. Money will conceivably be spent on equipment, research, design, mapping, staff training, manuals, and policies. This will create a substantial amount of physical capital and institutional inertia destined for a direction that the minister has the opportunity to set behind closed doors and without any independent oversight in the near future. We don't think that's acceptable. This bill should be scrapped, and the government should redouble its efforts to establish the new independent monitoring agency.

With regard to the section on PINs, personal identification numbers, it should be noted that while the bill will conceivably reduce duplication of documentation when it comes to PINs for toxic materials, the devil will be in the details, Mr. Speaker. The government's change allows it to make regulations and exclude persons from those same regulations. There was no exclusion clause in the past. This is a significant increase in power for this government that we don't feel comfortable affording them.

Regarding the expansion of immunity for damages to all government contractors we need to also be cautious. Many of the contractors that would now be covered by this amendment would be working for the government one day and then working for the oil companies the next day. While there are codes of practice within legislation governing the professions that aim to stem unethical activities, these rules only have the power to revoke the licence of professionals. They cannot provide compensation to anyone who may sustain damages. This section should also be opposed on these grounds.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the government is taking far too long to do the right thing and establish an independent environmental monitoring agency. I think in this regard and in other regards as well they've lost the trust and confidence of Albertans. Now they're trying to establish what the facts on the ground are going to look like before the management board is even able to report on what it thinks our independent monitoring agency should look like let alone even setting it up. The government needs to scrap this bill, do the right thing, and meet its promise for a real, independent, accountable, scientifically credible monitoring agency.

It's clear that this government likes working behind closed doors with industry when it comes to the environment. When will this government do the right thing and conduct the extensive consultations that this process deserves with Albertans, with environmental groups, with First Nations, and with scientists on what this monitoring agency will look like?

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this particular piece of legislation falls far short of what we believe is necessary with respect to dealing with the oil sands environmental issues. We continue to believe that the government's failure to adequately deal with environmental issues in the oil sands has seriously hampered Alberta's ability to market the products of that industry and has given ammunition to environmental groups that would like to strangle the Alberta petroleum industry and the type of economy that we're trying to develop.

The government is struggling with projects like the Gateway pipeline or the Keystone pipeline largely in part because of its terrible record in the oil sands, something we've been talking about for years and warning the government about, that the biggest risk to future development of oil sands in this province comes from opposition internationally, which is fuelled by the government's dismal record.

When the Premier goes to Washington and New York and tries to tell the Americans that we're cutting edge, that we're doing the very best in the world and so on, you know, it just doesn't ring true, Mr. Speaker, because it isn't really true. The fact of the matter is that when it comes to emissions, downstream water effects, and tailings ponds, all of those issues, this government has not done its job of overseeing strict environmental regulation, including the question of water monitoring, which, as we know, has been a very, very sorry tale.

The government insisted that the company-established water monitoring system was actually providing accurate information and that everything was fine. Of course, leading scientists, including David Schindler, have completely refuted that position and have shown that what the government was supporting with its industry self-monitoring of water was giving meaningless results. And the promise the government has made to establish world-class water monitoring in the Fort McMurray area has still failed to come to pass.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, it's time the government went away from these kinds of approaches, these half-baked, industry-driven approaches, and actually stepped up and put in place the very best possible system. I think that if that were done, we would be in a lot better position, but I'm not confident that this bill giving so much authority to the minister is going to do that because the record, quite frankly, is that the ministers in this government do their best to be apologists for the industry and do not stand up for environmental quality or for the impact of people downstream from the oil sands.

On that basis, Mr. Speaker, we will not be supporting this bill. It is a further attempt to institute half measures, and we have no confidence, were this bill to be passed, that a proper monitoring system would be put in place. That's the primary reason we urge all hon. members to reject this piece of legislation, send the government back to the drawing board, and have them come back with a proper, systematic, rigorous, and independent monitoring system with respect to pollution caused in the oil sands.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I just wanted to ask the member one question. This bill was referred to me in the briefing as enabling legislation as opposed to prescriptive legislation in that it's legislation that the ministry officials feel is the best because it gives the maximum flexibility for the minister to make changes as she goes. That's why the officials were telling us why enabling legislation is always a better way to go than prescriptive legislation. I'm just wondering if the member, with his years of experience, has any opinions about what that means for the role of the Legislature in the policy that is being addressed through the enabling legislation in question.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, hon. member. Well, it's bad. It's very bad. I can say that without reservation. Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the dysfunctional nature of environmental regulation of the industry, I can tell you that this government is an enabler, so it's natural that enabling legislation might in fact be exactly what is needed in this regard. If you want to enable bad activities and dysfunctional environmental activities, then this is the way to go. But if you want really good, solid environmental protection, transparency, and independence, we need to start with something a little different.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

I recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, and I reluctantly offer my support for the bill as it appears to be part of an overall effort to obtain and maintain the social licence necessary to continue to develop the Alberta oil sands and to achieve greater economic prosperity.

Environmental issues remain at the forefront of the international public debate around the carbon-intensive development of fossil fuels. Continuing to improve our environmental record will be a key part of gaining access to new markets and expanding Alberta's economy. The rationale of Bill 21 seems to be aimed at accomplishing this as well as to resolve some of the problems with the environmental monitoring the way it is currently done.

Environmental issues are a joint responsibility between the provincial and the federal governments. The joint responsibility led to a bit of a turf war between the federal and provincial governments over environmental monitoring. The solution of the turf war was the creation of the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan for oil sands monitoring. This created a monitoring system that measures changes to water and air quality as well as changes to biodiversity.

The amendments in Bill 21 create the legal framework for the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development to implement this. Bill 21 also gives the minister licence to implement any other environmental monitoring plan deemed necessary as well as to charge fees to industry participants for environmental monitoring activities.

Now, I said in the preface that I would offer reluctant support for the bill. As written, Bill 21 leaves many questions unanswered, and further clarity will be needed to ensure this bill meets its objectives and is effective rather than burdensome. This is the best way to ensure that industry can realistically abide by the plan, that it monitors environmental change, and that proper steps will be taken to remedy environmental performance measures when necessary.

One serious issue with Bill 21 is that it enables the minister to implement other monitoring programs, but it does not prescribe reasonable limits on that power, nor does it give any parameters for what they can charge the industry. On the one hand, it is fiscally prudent to transfer these costs to industry as industry will be the long-term beneficiary of increased economic development with the securing of a social licence in the oil sands development. On the other hand, it could cause some uncertainty in industry if the minister of ESRD is permitted to raise these fees on a whim or if the minister imposes unnecessarily high fees on industry. The potential for a problematic fee structure is present in this bill, and that is unfortunate as this amending act could be the best place to address these future concerns right off the bat instead of waiting for the problems to occur and having to address them after they have already impeded economic development.

It's important to recognize that industry wants to do the right thing here. Industry has been saying that it wants to earn that social licence so it can continue to grow in an environmentally friendly way. There are some misconceptions out there that the industry doesn't care. However, industry wants to do the right thing and contribute to the economy while ensuring that the environment is safeguarded for future generations and future economic opportunities.

So Bill 21 provides a window to the future in that it is facilitating economic development in the oil sands and doing so with an eye on protecting the environment. Bill 21 could be a necessary link to ensuring economic and environmental sustainability, but there's a hole in the bill, and that's how much the minister is going to ask for and whether the minister will increase this amount and whether the minister will implement new programs and require industry to pay these costs, too.

There is no cap on the potential cost to industry, so it could cause uncertainty and put economic competitiveness in jeopardy. This is something to be aware of now so, should it emerge in the future, a quick and decisive action could be taken to mitigate any problems that could occur. Overall, it appears to be in line with this government's view that power should be centralized and the buck stops with the minister.

Will the minister cap the amount she expects industry to pay? Will it remain at the $50 million current benchmark? Why has this bill been written so broadly that its intentions could be interpreted in a variety of ways? These are some of the very serious questions that remain.

This appears to be a case where industry has agreed to pay for monitoring, but the minister has interpreted that as a carte blanche power to make industry pay for additional monitoring outside what industry has agreed to. It raises questions on the integrity of this government. Whether this is an example of a bait and switch, we don't know, but industry has taken the bait, so to speak, in agreeing to the necessity of monitoring to obtain and maintain its social licence.

The question now is: is this government going to switch and turn this into a punitive tax that could harm the economy? Nobody would want to see that happen – I believe that – but the broadly worded language here could be interpreted in that way. I hope this government can recognize the very serious concerns at play here. Given that industry has been misled before once or twice with serious consequences to our economy, some clarity is needed with this government's intentions with Bill 21.

Other aspects of this bill are easier to interpret and can be easily supported. The changes to the hazardous material law shifts authority of hazardous materials so that the oil and gas sector only has to deal with the single regulator. Industry does a good job for the most part, but transferring responsibility to the new regulator fits the mandate of the new regulator and will hopefully help streamline the aspect of industrial development. However, there has to be caution that nothing falls between the cracks. This bill opens that possibility and can make that reality, so that needs to be a concern for this government.

Bill 21 also aims to protect civil servants from actions from damages while enforcing the act. This makes sense. A civil servant working to protect the environment should receive protection from legal liability in carrying out their duties.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I offer reluctant support for the bill as written. Overall, it's an improvement, but the broad language and enhanced ministerial powers are a concern for me, as they will undoubtedly be a concern for industry.

With that said, I'd like to add just a few closing words on results. This was brought forward when we talked about the whole reason for monitoring. As the Leader of the Official Opposition brought to this Assembly's attention – there's a weird sound coming out here somewhere.

An Hon. Member: It's your voice.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much.

Mr. Mason: It's the government starting to think.

Mr. Anglin: That's okay. That's not the weird sound I was talking about. I was talking about the weird sound coming from over there.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I don't know if it's a computer or something, but there is a high-pitched sound. It's gone now.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some of us can hear the weird sounds. Others cannot.

Let's talk about the logic of what we're trying to do. The whole purpose of monitoring is to reduce things like nitrogen oxide, sulphur dioxide, mercury, particulate matter, arsenic, cadmium, lead. It goes on and on. We talk about CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. But what are we doing? Well, we're starting this program to actually monitor. We had an opportunity here recently where a coal-fired plant actually submitted its notice of termination. It did this. I brought this up in estimates, and what I wondered was why this government forced this company to invest $190 million – that's what it's going to take – to rebuild generators that it issued a termination notice on and forced them to go back online, which may be at the end of this year, when they're due to be retired in only a couple more years away.

Now, when you look at the amount of pollution that comes out of a coal generator, when you look at the total greenhouse gasses that come out of that coal generator, you have ask yourself: if our goal is to reduce CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, if our goal is to reduce pollution and monitor that, why are we forcing something like a coal plant, Sundance A, which is Sundance 1 and 2, back online when there's no great need for it? We have 14,400 megawatts of capacity of power today. Our average demand is only 8,000 megawatts, so that gives us a cushion of over 6,000 megawatts. That's an incredible sum of electricity, far more cushion than a regular electricity system needs, yet we forced this on them.

Now, what was interesting about it is that I did ask the minister about this, and based on the answers I got, I had to go do some more homework because the issuing of the termination notice is delivered to the power purchase agreement holder, and what I was told is that it's strictly dealing with the power purchase agreement holder. What I found out when I researched it is that the balancing pool, which is also the AESO, enjoined the power purchase agreement holder in the arbitration suit to force this generator back on. When I look at the balancing pool, that's government. That's an agency that works off government policy.

That's not logical in the sense that we don't need the electricity. Yes, it was a civil matter, but the advantage of meeting our CO<sub>2</sub> objectives, the advantage of lowering the particulate matter of a generator that was clearly at the end of its lifespan, lowering and limiting the amount of oxides, lead, mercury that comes from these plants is absolutely significant.

Here we have a contradiction. We have the government on one side saying: "We're going to take these active measures. We're going to pass this bill for the advantage and for the benefit of our industries." Then, on the other hand, we actually force one industry to invest nearly $200 million to turn on two rather old and dilapidated generators to fulfill a requirement for only a couple of years. That makes no economic sense to me, and I don't understand that. What we need and where I'm going with this statement is consistency not just in legislation but in policy. That's not consistent policy. It's inconsistent, and it's a contradiction.

There are a number of ways we can achieve our goals. We have the carbon offset system, which has turned into almost a complete disaster. Right now on Alberta agriculture's website it is still there after bringing this up a couple of weeks ago. We have a company called Carbon Merchants. There's a warning notice on that website that says: do not do business with this company. On the ESRD website under the carbon trading system it says: do business with this company. What is going on? Here we have the contradiction still existing.

We need consistency in policy. We need one government agency dealing with another government agency and actually communicating and making sure that there's consistency. One is wrong; one government agency is right. They can't both be correct. That needs to be fixed on a specific level. What needs to really be addressed is consistency in the policy and why we're bringing this type of legislation forward: to help our industry, particularly up in the oil sands, to meet its objectives, to monitor air quality for the whole purpose of showing the world that we are going to meet our targets, that we're going to have a transparent and a verifiable system to show that we are meeting our targets. Why wouldn't we take action to actually meet the targets when that opportunity presents itself? That is a very, very important question that this government has to ask itself, and it needs to take corrective action to make it work.

That's going to take a lot of communication between the various departments. It's not impossible. It can be done. It just takes a little bit of work. That's what I hope this government will undertake.

I will ask my colleagues to support this, not because it's a great bill but because it is heading in the right direction, and that's important.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I just can't tell you all how thrilled I am to come back from my community events and join you all to talk about Bill 21, which I have to say has gone through this House with such speed that it could probably qualify for some sort of European race at this point. Maybe it gets to wear its own little yellow T-shirt through. What do they call it? Yeah, it's a yellow T-shirt. It's actually a bit, you know, embarrassing when things – oh, don't go there, Laurie. It's late at night, but don't go there.

So I didn't even get a chance to try and do amendments to this act although, to be fair, you'd think from all the hoopla and all the anticipation for Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, it would be longer than three pages and give a bit more detail. Really, we've just got two sections in here. No, a bit more than that.

The first one is – tah-dah – the ability to create regulations for a new environmental monitoring program. So do we get the program in this bill? Well, no. The minister gets to make regulations off somewhere else, in the dark, one presumes, to put these environmental programs in place, and it's got one of those clauses – you know, I was giving a speech earlier tonight to a group of young people, and I said: "Legislation is actually easy to read. It's always set out in the same way. It starts with definitions. It goes into the sort of meat of the bill, what they're really trying to do with it, and then it kind of breaks it all down." I got them to start reading a bill, and of course it was incredibly convoluted and filled with language that just makes people want to run, and, look, here it is again.

Respecting the participation in an environmental monitoring program monitoring program by a person or class of persons whose actions or activities may cause an effect on the environment, including requiring a person or class of persons to participate in an environmental monitoring program.

A class of persons. So, like, do they have grades? Do they pass or fail on this somehow? Or is it just, you know, a little group of people trotting along together? Hmm. A class of people. Okay.

The most important thing that this all seems to be about according to the Pembina Institute and some of the government speakers already is – tah-dah – that they can have the ability to impose fees on the participants in an environmental monitoring program, which kind of seems obvious to the rest of us, but what it's really about is that, you know, all of the voluntary compliance programs that we've had up till now never quite seem to work because it's so loosey goosey on the voluntary part of it. I don't usually put people to sleep. I'll try to be a bit more lively. Sorry about that.

The voluntary compliance is that it's voluntary. One, they don't have to do it, and two, they can kind of decide how far in they are or how enthusiastic they are or how much money they're going to put in.

This supposedly is going to set that they're all in equally, and that's going to make everybody in the industry happy. That makes sense because these guys are in business to make money, and they don't want to have to step out and spend any more money than anybody else because they want to return a profit back to their shareholders.

Here we have section 2 in the bill, which is modifying section 36.1(c) in the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, but it doesn't tell us what kind of fee. You know, is it a percentage of something or just a figure that they picked out of the air or based on somebody's birthday? There's no information in this bill about how they're actually going to do this.

When I'm asked to approve this, you know, you end up with all of those little cliché statements like, well, the devil is in the details, which is sort of a kind way of saying: I have no idea what the government is up to, but they want me to agree to the bill. They just say that they're going to do something, but they don't actually tell us what that is.

Yeah, the minister is going to make regulations to establish, determine, pay, and recover fees. It doesn't tell us what or how or who or why or how much that might be or what it's based on, but they're going to do it somehow.

Late penalties. They're going to put out the circumstances and the extent and how participation is supposed to happen. Again, blah, blah, blah, and you don't really know what they're up to.

Collection, use, disclosure, reporting, or publication of information. Okay.

(h) requiring a department as defined in the Government Organization Act or a Government agency to provide the Minister with a report, record or information relating to environmental monitoring.

Any government agency? Children's services on environmental monitoring?

Deeming that a specific environmental monitoring that is in effect immediately before this act comes into place to be an environmental program for the purposes of a regulation in this section. Really, what this act is saying is: okay; the minister gets to make this up as they go along. Somehow this is all supposed to be fair, and everyone will respect it and do it.

Let's take a step back. How is this really supposed to work? Well, you're supposed to start out by saying: "All right. There are certain limits or targets or something specific that people are to meet or not exceed." That sets the line in the sand or the specific thing that companies are expected to meet. Then you want government to monitor. Why do I want government to monitor? I've got a government and an Official Opposition. Both of them don't want bigger government. They don't want to pay all these civil servants that are going to go out and monitor things. They want somebody else to monitor.

Well, the problem is that we're supposed to have unbiased monitoring. We're supposed to have monitoring that anybody can trust is straightforward. There's no political bias in it. It's absolutely straight across, and everyone can trust that it's true. Well, that hasn't happened so much in Alberta, and I'll come back to that.

Then following the monitoring you want an agency or some sort of method by which we ensure compliance. So when we monitor something and we go, "Whoa, that's way short of where you're supposed to be for your target" or it's way over the limit that's been set here, then there is a mechanism by which you can say, "Now you must meet the expectation," and there's probably a punishment involved or a fine or, you know, 50 lashes or 20 days in the public stocks or something like that as an encouragement or a disincentive for people not to repeat this action.

So that's what's supposed to happen. It's not what happens, but it's what most people would understand as a logical process.

Let me go over what's happened about environmental monitoring in this province. First of all, we had this industry volunteering to do things. We had some smaller groups that were sort of volunteer on the spot groups. I know one of them got really angry with me once and yelled at me in an e-mail about something.

Mr. Hughes: It's hard to believe.

Ms Blakeman: I know. I know.

None of this monitoring was really getting us anywhere. You know, the opposition critic, the Official Opposition, when it wasn't a sibling of the government – in other words, when the Liberals were the Official Opposition – argued that this wasn't happening, that there wasn't really any monitoring happening.

The government argued back two things. It said: "Well, that wasn't true. There were no violations. It wasn't happening. They were monitoring really well." Or they argued: "Yes. It's there, but it's natural." Right.

Now they're all on the bandwagon of scientific: scientific evidence, evidence-based decision-making. Yeah. That's what got them in trouble. When some scientists actually went and tested, they went: "Yes, indeed, there is a problem. We can now prove that there are pollutants, that it's in the air, that it's in the soil, that it gets into the water." Yes, indeed. They can prove that, you know, it came during certain times of the year and that it was coming from the oil sands. They were able to prove everything, and then the government went: ahem. Long pause. Then they said: "Well, yes. Okay. We never really had a monitoring program. Oops."

Okay. You know, they argue that it's happening, and then they argue that it's natural, and then they admit that, well, okay, they weren't really monitoring. After that came: "But we'll get you a humdinger of a monitoring program. Just wait. We will get you such an amazing monitoring program like you've never seen before."

We're still kind of in that waiting stage because then we get the feds and the province – now, if that isn't something to make your blood run cold, the thought of the Harper Conservatives joining up with this current version of the government – arm in arm, dancing down the yellow brick road together, for environmental monitoring. Yeah. You see what I mean.

Where I've seen this before was in – I think there are a couple of other examples, but the only one I could come up with really quickly was labour. You get the federal government and the provincial government coming together and going: okay; we're going to have a four-corner agreement or a four-post agreement or a four-pillar agreement. It always has to do with upright things; I don't know why. And the feds pass off. They say, "We're going to pool everything; there's no sense in having a provincial job-finding office and a federal job-finding office, so let's pool everything together; we'll combine all of our services and make it easier for the client," who actually is a human being that's looking for a job.

Then the feds kind of step quietly, quietly, quietly back out of the game, and the next time you turn around and look at it – this is a couple of years down the road – it's all been passed off to the province. They've changed legislation to say: okay; well, as long as the province does something and it meets a certain loose criteria the feds have, they're good to go.

Then you look, and the province is starting to step away from some of the programs that they said they were going to support. So when you look at the labour agreements and the labour programs that are running in this province now, you can see how far back everybody stepped. What kind of assistance is actually available to get people up and working in this province? That's what we're moving into with environmental monitoring.

When I look three, five, 10 years down the road, based on the combinations that I've seen up until now, I'd have to say that if the proof of the pudding is in the eating, we've already had this one, and we know where it goes, and it's not where everybody is telling us it's going to go.

Earlier today I talked about the cumulative effects. At one point one of the phases that the previous environmental minister went through with me as his critic was saying: well, it's all going to be about cumulative effects. I remember the budget debate. Everything was about: wait for it; we're all going to get into cumulative effects. We said: "Okay. How are you going to measure this? What's it going to be? What are you going to combine? What are the targets going to be?" "Well, wait for it. Wait for it." Are we sensing a pattern here? Yes. They're going to come up with a humdinger of one.

Now, I got a note this afternoon from one of the members opposite when I talked about cumulative effects. Actually, to be perfectly honest, Mr. Speaker, I was heckling the minister, and someone in the backbench picked it up and sent me a note saying: well, it's called CEMA, the Cumulative Environmental Management Association, a nonprofit multistakeholder group, which recently released their annual report. [A timer sounded] Oh. Mr. Speaker, that cannot be.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Ms Blakeman: I would hope so.

The Deputy Speaker: A question or a comment, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona?

Ms Notley: Oh, absolutely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Very interesting comments from the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Interestingly, what this bill essentially enables is not the independent monitoring yet that we've been promised, rather simply having this government be the collector of industry funds, to then distribute them for the most part to the same people that have been doing the monitoring for the last 10 years. There are changes. There are new groups coming on. But certainly some of the people that have been monitoring before, for instance RAMP, will continue to receive money as a result of this bill and will continue to do monitoring. I'm just wondering what insight the Member for Edmonton-Centre has about that prospect.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. You know, what I can say back to the member is that it's part of the same pattern that we've seen before. It's just a circle that starts to come around again. Here we go. We're now going to collect money to fund the same groups that weren't doing the monitoring very well to begin with. When we pointed that out to the government, the government said that, yes, they were, and then when they were criticized more, they said: well, actually, it's naturally occurring. And we start the whole cycle over again.

One of the questions that is not answered for me in the list of regulations that the minister is going to come up with as to how this is going to work – again, Mr. Speaker, you start to wonder: well, how long is it going to take to get this dang thing up and running? Do we have any, you know, process in place right now, or are we just sort of staggering along on the old system, which is going to look a lot like the new system?

Specifically, when you look under the request for the report, the one where I was sort of making fun of the fact that some department that's defined in the Government Organization Act – which makes sense because they keep changing their names and changing what they're responsible for. All right. Yes. We have to go to the Government Organization Act to figure out which government department is responsible.

Then it goes on and talks about: "or a Government agency [that's going] to provide the Minister with a report, record or information," but nowhere in there does it say how often. It doesn't say that they're going to report annually or that they're going to report every three months to the minister. It's just some sort of a report at some point. Actually, it doesn't even say that. It just says that they'll give a report relating to environmental monitoring. I hope that means that they're actually going to monitor something and report on it. But it could just sort of be a general essay on environmental monitoring, I suppose, because it's not very well defined here.

Finally, the catch-all, wide-open, on-the-range horse galloping into the sunset kind of regulation that this government is so fond of: "respecting any other matter the Minister considers necessary for the establishment and operation of an environmental monitoring program," which, as we know, could turn out to be absolutely nothing or a whole bunch of other stuff. So we're back to this whole idea of how we trust the independence of the monitoring, and that question is not answered here.

This is another one of the government's shell bills, which says: we have been forced into or we think we'd like to or perhaps we'll get around to establishing some kind of rules for how some sort of program is going to work. I don't mean to be nonspecific here, but they're all starting to look the same to me. You could just change the name of the ministry, and it could fit a number of other bills that we've seen because it's just a list the minister can make – rules about this, that, and the next thing – and they're all done through regulations. Indeed, we can end up with the same kind of monitoring agencies, the same monitoring agencies, that have been discredited, wide-open discredited.

The RAMP agency had everybody withdraw from it except for the industry, and I'm not sure that the industry ever reported anything after everybody left. It was totally discredited. It was at about that point that the government finally said: "Well, yes. Okay. We weren't really doing very much monitoring at all." Here we go again on the circle. So it's frustrating.

You know, I hear people talking about social licence now. Oh, God save me. Social licence. Okay. Well, that's basically the black eye. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, feel the same way as many of the government MLAs. We're sorry that the Member for Edmonton-Centre's time has run out because I was quite enjoying listening to her comment on this bill. [interjections] It sounds like some members are a little more awake now. That's wonderful.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to start off by just talking a little bit about the pace and speed at which this bill has been moving along. It's like it's on nitro boost or something, the fact that here we are already in third reading of this bill, which, again, is a bill that really does require some significant debate.

Ms Blakeman: It's on Red Bull.

Mr. Bilous: This is Red Bull on steroids.

I look forward to shedding some light, as some of my colleagues in the Legislature here have, on the baby step forward but more the three steps backwards that this bill is heading in.

First, I just want to talk about probably one of the largest concerns that I have, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this bill, which I feel I should address officially, Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013. I just question, from the title of it, how much it's going to enhance or amend.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

First and foremost, the bill allows the minister to take exclusive control over monitoring programs and, as well, to establish new ones, which allows her to make regulations without limitations, especially concerning their nature and scope. I mean, this is going to have some serious ramifications; for example, when they're studying different toxins, which toxins they're studying or looking for, where they're going to study, the geographical location, what they're looking for, et cetera.

As well, it's going to control the funds that are directed to the organizations that are doing the monitoring. I'll speak at length on that just to ensure that my colleagues here are clear on those repercussions or at least the repercussions that I see, which other colleagues have pointed out.

Here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. The bill doesn't do anything to change the governance structure of these monitoring programs. You know, my colleagues in the Alberta NDP caucus have talked a little bit about RAMP, and I will come back to that a little bit later. Monitoring is still under the control and the veto of the Minister of ESRD, and that's a concern. Albertans have told me and have told my colleagues that they're looking for an arm's-length body, an independent body to be in charge of monitoring. Unfortunately, this bill does not do that.

You know, the first of three larger arguments that I would like to put forward, Mr. Speaker, is looking at the authority and the power, for lack of a better word, that's going to be in the hands in the minister. Again, we in this Assembly want to ensure that there are limitations, that there are parameters to work within. My colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona talked about enabling legislation, which makes me a little nervous because we're placing an unbelievable amount of faith in our ministers, in the decisions that they're going to make.

Now, granted, you know, I'm sure our current set of ministers are all extremely honourable and trustworthy, but my fear is future ministers. Once we have this legislation, what if they are not as honourable and abuse their position of power? [interjection] The Member for Edmonton-Centre is making me smile here just talking about: if the disgruntled cousin was government, what they would do with some of these powers.

First of all, the bill gives the minister authority to collect money from industry and put it into monitoring agencies, which, you know, at the onset sounds not bad, actually, because of the fact that there has been with this bill an improvement from $20 million up to $50 million that industry will be putting towards monitoring. That's sounds wonderful. However, before we start to celebrate and crack the party crackers, we need to look at who is operating these monitoring agencies. Who are they? Who's on the board? How are they being run? How are they monitoring? Who are they beholden to?

Interestingly, when we look at some of these monitoring agencies – and I'll use an example that my colleagues have mentioned. RAMP is a primarily industry-run organization. It's disconcerting, Mr. Speaker. What's interesting is that RAMP for the most part, from all different sides, has proven to be fairly unreliable and not credible.

Ms Blakeman: And a crashing disaster. You know that.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. You know, I will take those words. Truly, RAMP was a crashing disaster. I really like the sound of that.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, Mr. Speaker, we need monitoring agencies to be arm's length and a significant distance from influence. I want to first of all give kudos to Dr. Schindler, who has been pushing for independent monitoring, one amongst many in the scientific community, saying: "Listen, if we want real monitoring and we want it to be independent and substantial, it cannot be controlled by industry. It cannot be primarily driven by industry." Here's the thing. This government has talked about how much and how well they've done as far as monitoring for a long time, but the reality is that really what's been happening for decades is a failure to monitor. I mean, the only thing that the government was doing successfully was issuing propaganda about how well they were monitoring, which really wasn't necessarily the case.

You look at some areas around the province, especially up north around the Fort Chipewyan area, where government and monitoring agencies for years were saying: "No, no, no. There's nothing wrong with the water, land, or air. It's perfectly fine. No, industry hasn't affected it in the least." Most Albertans with some common sense recognize that that's just blatantly untrue and, frankly, quite impossible.

Thanks go to the scientific community and opposition parties like the Alberta NDP with some help from other parties for pushing for this. We're taking a baby step forward here. Some of the monitoring will be not just controlled by industry.

Here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. The scope of the monitoring, the extent of the monitoring should not be in the hands of a minister. It should be outlined legislatively. It should be debated, discussed, and voted on by members in this House, and it really should be done by an independent panel of scientists, not a single individual, not a minister who can make some sweeping decisions.

Second of all, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to talk a little bit about the elimination of the PIN requirement. It's going to be removed by this bill. I mean, I have more questions than comments when it comes to this, to get a better sense of how this is actually going to affect industry, how it's going to affect monitoring. I have a hard time placing my faith and trust in this government when for decades we've been asked to trust the minister, to trust industry, that they are capable of self-monitoring. You know, it's kind of funny because it'd be like putting a toddler or a little kid into a candy store and saying: you monitor yourself and only eat as much as you think you should. Realistically, the toddler would eat until they got sick. If anything, I think the monitoring has been anything but adequate.

I'm going to move on to the absence of liability – that's part of this bill – and allowing private contractors and consultants to carry out these environmental impact assessments and environmental monitoring. I mean, the issue, Mr. Speaker, is that many of the assessments are done not by employees of the Crown or government employees. They are handed off to private industry's individual contractors, who aren't either held to the same standards or aren't working for the government.

A great example that I can give, Mr. Speaker, is that some of these consultants, because they make their livelihood from contract to contract, are looking for that next contract. Who knows if that next contract is with Shell or Suncor or one of the other large companies, where they don't want to step on the proverbial toes of their future employer. So it begs the question of how impartial or how neutral or unbiased these contractors and their assessments are when they're going through and taking a look at, you know, the impact that developments within the province are having on our land, air, and water.

Mr. Speaker, it's definitely in my purview – and I'll speak on behalf of the Alberta New Democrats – to say that a monitoring agency that is arm's length, independent should be established, not this piece of legislation as it stands. I'm very nervous about this piece of legislation passing through the House and moving forward and the implications this is going to have not only on all members in the House and our own families and friends and Albertans but on future generations.

I still have lots of concerns here. You know, the expansion of immunity for damages to all government contractors is a concern. Many of the contractors that would have been covered, like I said, could be working one day in a contracted position for the government, the next day for an oil company. I acknowledged the fact that there are codes of practice within legislation governing professionals to stem unethical activities. You know, these rules only have the power to revoke the licences of professionals, so they can't, for example, provide compensation to any one or group who may sustain damages. That in and of itself is a concern, Mr. Speaker.

A couple of points and questions here, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think part of my concern with this bill is that the government has taken far too long to do the right thing. This bill is full of too many loopholes, and I really urge my colleagues in the House not to support this piece of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for question or comment.

Are there any other speakers? Edmonton-Centre, you've spoken already.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, but can't I do 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Well, you were kind of slow, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: I have bad knees. I don't even have a brace on.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: God. It's, like, midnight. I'm getting criticized for not getting up fast enough. Okay. I'm sorry. You see, you get me off track here. You get me on a tangent.

The Deputy Speaker: Please proceed, hon. member; 29(2)(a).

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. I was picking up on the last thing he was saying. He's not supporting it because why?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to respond.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre. I mean, that was, well, a hard-hitting question. You know what? It's because I have significant questions. Okay. There are a few different questions here. Is it possible that the government wants to get rid of the PIN because it may have an impact on the liability for companies since they no longer have to sign the PIN application saying that they are in compliance with all relevant laws?

My other questions. How will people receiving shipments of hazardous waste for disposal or storage be able to verify that the producer and/or shipper of the hazardous waste are in compliance with all relevant legislation and regulations if they can no longer ask for proof of this verification by way of a PIN? Could this removal of the necessity to have a PIN open the door for fraud and misrepresentation concerning shipment and storage of hazardous wastes?

Is the ministry planning to exclude any person or class of persons from the requirement to produce manifests for the consignment or transportation or acceptance of hazardous materials? If not, why do they give themselves the power to do so?

I'd love for the government to please explain why they're seeking to extend exemption from liability for damages to organizations such as the delegated administrative organizations when these organizations are designed by nature to limit the legal and financial liabilities of the government. These organizations are not under direct control of the government. Should they not be held responsible for their actions?

Previous to some of these amendments exemption from liability for damages was extended to persons who are working on behalf of the government by way of the authority of a regulation. Amendment 6(b) extends this immunity to people who ask to work for the government under section 9 of the Government Organization Act. Section 9 allows for the minister to delegate any powers except to make regulations to anyone without putting such delegation of power into a regulation. It only has to be included in writing. This adds a considerable power to the minister to delegate anyone to do anything for them and then have them excluded of all personal liability. Now, that's a significant increase in the powers the minister has. Why was this necessary, and who would this apply to?

Many contractors that would now be covered by this amendment could be working for the government one day and working for an oil company the next. Again, imagine an important situation where a consultant overlooks aspects of an environmental impact assessment one day and then goes to work for the company that this benefits the next. That's a concern.

You know, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is truly troublesome because it gives the minister too many new powers. The minister has too much power when it comes to designing our new environmental monitoring system when, again, it should be done by an independent, arm's-length body, and it gives the minister too much power when it comes to exempting persons from a requirement to hold a PIN when moving hazardous materials. Finally, it gives the minister too much power when it comes to removing any personal liability for those she may wish to delegate authority to.

Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why this bill is very troubling. I think that we definitely need to bring forward and create an independent, arm's-length monitoring agency, and we need to monitor and clean up our environment and ensure that we are going about developing our natural resources in this province in a very sustainable and controlled way. Unfortunately, I think this bill, although the title sounds very great, is a far cry from ensuring that our air, land, and water quality are up to where they should be.

Ms Notley: I'm moderately pleased to be able to speak to this in third reading because, of course, I'm speaking to it in third reading not having spoken to it in Committee of the Whole. Nonetheless, I am pleased to be able to speak to this in third reading and join with my colleagues in their observations about the speed with which this particular bill is making its way through this Legislature. I particularly liked the description by the Member for Edmonton-Centre about giving this bill its own little T-shirt with racing stripes on it. I thought that was quite cute, and it would be quite appropriate because it really does seem to be racing through at quite an unprecedented speed. We'll get into that into a moment. Number 21 coming down the backstretch very, very quickly.

Anyway, here's the thing with this bill. I'm going to spend a bit of time talking about the bill before I get into what I think we should do with it.

An Hon. Member: Looking forward to that.

Ms Notley: I won't go there.

This is a bill that basically does three things. It authorizes the mechanism for government to collect money from industry and then funnel that money to various and sundry agencies that are engaging in monitoring right now, most of whom are the same agencies that have been engaging in monitoring for quite some time, but there are some new ones that have been added to the pile – that's for sure – and of course the breadth of that monitoring has increased somewhat.

As previous speakers have already noted, it does also set out the fact that the money that's being collected from industry to go towards monitoring is up to $50 million. That amounts to about a $30 million increase because previously, in my understanding, industry was spending roughly $20 million on RAMP, not to any great effect; nonetheless, they were spending about $20 million. So that's about a $30 million increase. You know, it's not a bad thing that we're sort of inching our way towards this process and that we're getting some of that money.

Anyway, I'll talk a little bit about the problems that are inherent nonetheless in the part of the bill that addresses that issue. The other thing that the bill does, as my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview spent some time discussing, is that it eliminates the requirement for agencies and industry players to fill out a PIN form and to certify, essentially, that the hazardous waste materials that they are producing or storing or transferring or delivering have been delineated and described in accordance with the regulation. They no longer have to swear to that through filling out a PIN application. That's the second thing that it does.

The third thing it does is that it removes liability from a number of people, from what are referred to as, I think, DAOs, delegated administrative organizations. It removes liability from those, and some of those have been identified already like the Recycling Council and things like that. It also removes liability, Mr. Speaker, from contractors who might be hired by the government to do some work for the ministry of environment. It extends to those people the same exemption from liability that public servants enjoy. Maybe I'll start there, about why that is a concern for us.

Now, it's different depending on what part of the work the ministry of environment is doing. Depending on what you're talking about, the role of contractors in that work varies from task to task. But I've certainly had people describe to me quite frequently the kind of dynamic where, say, for instance, an industry player of some type, whether it's oil and gas or some other industry player, forestry, maybe gravel pit, whatever, will make an application to move forward with some type of industrial development, and one of the things that has to happen is that they need to provide an environmental impact assessment.

Well, a lot of people, myself included – when I was first elected, when I used to hear about environmental impact assessments, I used to read the legislation and go: "Oh, okay. Well, the ministry has to do an environmental impact assessment before they can approve this project." In fact, then I discovered that, no, actually it's not the ministry that does it. Typically it's a consultant that does it. It's not a staff person. It's not a public servant. Sometimes it might be industry itself that will hire somebody to do an environmental impact assessment, and then they'll provide that to the ministry. The ministry will go: "Oh, great environmental impact assessment. Okay. Check." And then they're done. So they're not actually sending their own people out in the field to check on whether this environmental impact assessment is correct and sufficiently robust or whatever.

Another kind of example of where you see contractors is where you've got a well where they're closing it off or whatever, and they're finishing production, and they need to get a reclamation certificate in order to release any further liability that they might have for the existence of the well. Again, I always had in my naive little mind this idea of these, you know, great public servants employed by the ministry of environment marching out there and doing a hands-on inspection of that site to make sure that the reclamation certificate was earned and that they'd met all these standards and everything was safe and everything was good.

It was only subsequently that I realized: oh, no, no, no. That's not what's happening. Industry is filling out forms to say: "Yup. We've done everything we need to do to earn this reclamation certificate." Sometimes then a contractor will be asked to go along and review that and sign off on whether or not that reclamation certificate was properly filled out and/or whether it reflects what's actually happening on the ground. But many times, Mr. Speaker, it's not actually public servants that are doing it.

You know, is this maybe just me being: oh, everybody has got to be direct employees of government, and we're ideologically opposed to contracting out? Well, not really. You see, here's the problem. These very same contractors one day might be doing a contract for government, but that contract only lasts a month or two months, and the next day or month or whatever they're doing contracts for industry. They're going back and forth and back and forth. Their bread and butter is often industry. So those are not the folks that we should be relying on necessarily to be providing us with assurances that all the environmental standards and processes have been met.

Now, when I found this out, I said, "Well, this doesn't seem right," and I was told: "But, you know, we can rely on their professional association. Many of them are engineers, so they've got to meet a certain professional standard. So if they cut corners or if they're worried about their next contract or whatever, if they just don't dig as deeply as a public servant might have or whatever, we can always hold them to account because of their professional association." But I've since found out that, in fact, it's not necessarily the case that the professional association has the capacity to engage in a specialized assessment of whether or not this particular specialty of engineers is engaging in best practices. They may not have that ability, they may not have those resources, and that's not really their job.

Then where does that leave us? Well, presumably those people would be worried about their own liability, and they would make sure that they did due diligence so that should they ever be sued, they would be able to use the defence of due diligence. Well, because we're now going to treat them like those same public servants who only work on behalf of the public and do not one day work on behalf of the public and then the next day work on behalf of the industry on the other side of the table, we're going to extend exemption from liability to them. Well, I have some real concerns about this. I mean, I've had concerns about the relationship between these contractors and industry on one hand and this assurance process that should be happening by public servants on the other hand. This bill, I think, has the potential to exacerbate that problem, and that's why I'm concerned about that.

Let's go back to the monitoring. We talked about how that's a bit of an improvement because we're collecting that $50 million as opposed to the $20 million that went directly to the monitoring agency. Well, first of all, as I said before, the agencies that are going to receive that money are for the most part, not entirely but for the most part, the same agencies that were doing the monitoring before, and those are agencies whose work has been reviewed by numerous independent academics and independent people, all of whom have said: "You know what? You know how you've been telling us for the last 20 years that everything is naturally occurring and nothing bad is happening up here and industry is having no impact on the environment? Well, guess what? It's wrong. You weren't sharing all the information with us. You weren't asking all the right questions." Those are the people that this money is going to go to right now.

Now, when the federal and the provincial governments got together with much fanfare several times – they love to have press conferences and put out press releases – and announced the new joint federal-provincial monitoring plan, they did so on the basis of recommendations that came from both the federal and, I believe, also a provincial oversight committee. But in both cases what those reports recommended – and it was fundamental to the recommendations – was that the scope and the nature of the monitoring had to be defined by an independent panel of scientists, and you could not take it away from the independent panel of scientists. Because we had a 20-year record of government not being forthright with the people of this province, we could not have faith in this system unless the people who were designing the monitoring plan were in fact scientists who were independent from government. That was the one piece of that set of recommendations that this government ignored.

Instead, what we have in section 2 of this bill is a long list of authorities that are being given to the minister in her discretion to be the one to establish the scope and the extent and the nature of the monitoring program. That is exactly what the key objective observers said should not happen.

12:50

Now, we're going to be told: "Oh, well, we've got this other monitoring agency that we're in the process of developing, and someday, you know, that may come to fruition. Maybe it will, and maybe it won't. We don't know." But there is no reason why this mechanism here, which is going to be what governs what's going on for the next four or five years, could not in here provide for a role for independent scientists and for a more transparent process for establishing the terms and the parameters of that monitoring process. That could absolutely be provided for in section 2 of this act.

Instead, what is provided for in section 2 of this act is that we should cross our fingers, close our eyes, click our heels, and trust the government. But after 10, 15 years . . . [interjection] Well, I'm glad one person here is excited about that prospect. I hate to break it to you, but with the record on the environment the vast majority of Albertans are not excited about the prospect of once again crossing their fingers, closing their eyes, and trusting the government on this file. You just don't have credibility on this file anymore. There are some files you have credibility on. This is not one of them. It just isn't. Not only does this government not have credibility with Albertans; it doesn't have credibility with the international community anymore either.

All that being said, I've just barely touched on it. There are so many issues that need to be addressed in this bill, and of course we can't do that in third reading. That is why I would like to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, in order to talk about a motion that I would like to introduce at this time. If you'd like, I will take a moment while it's distributed, and then I can discuss it or briefly describe it.

The Deputy Speaker: Please. If you'd have it passed out, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you have 34 seconds to read your amendment into the record.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The motion is that third reading of Bill 21, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 21, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 2, 3, and 6.

I would like to speak to that in the brief amount of time that I have left. As we already discussed at some length in the House earlier, we've not had an opportunity . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking to the amendment, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: And we'll call this amendment RA1.

Mr. Hancock: Just say no. Need more be said on this particular amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as my colleague was beginning to say, we are proposing that this be committed back to Committee of the Whole. The reason is that – and we've had lots of discussion on this earlier today – we would like to propose amendments to the bill.

I'll be very conciliatory and say that because of misunderstandings surrounding the passage of this bill last night through Committee of the Whole when it wasn't listed as such on the Order Paper, we didn't have an opportunity to make our amendments and had precious little time, quite frankly, even to prepare them. That's why we would like to send this back to Committee of the Whole so that we can re-engage the legislative process with a view to having the entire process, including that not only the government's ideas but the opposition's ideas be incorporated into the discussion.

Ms Blakeman: Whoa. That is way too much. And the opposition?

Mr. Mason: Well, into the discussion, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I did not say that we expected our ideas to be incorporated into the legislation. That might be too much to ask in this place.

But there are some basic principles, Mr. Speaker, that really ought to be followed in the development of legislation, and those are that all members have a full opportunity at second reading and third reading to debate the bill and to vote on the bill and that also in Committee of the Whole all members of all parties, all caucuses in this Legislature, should have an opportunity to put forward their amendments as a way of improving this bill.

Now, the Government House Leader is fond of saying – whenever anyone dares raise a question about the role of government members in question period, for example, or in estimates debate, he will stand up and grandly opine on the importance of all members, that every member has the same rights as every other member and that you can't possibly discriminate in favour of the opposition in holding the government to account because, of course, government backbenchers are just as committed to holding the government accountable as are opposition members. Now we're in a position where opposition members were not afforded the time or the courtesy of being able to develop reasonable amendments as a way of doing their job, their duty that they were elected by their voters to perform, to try and improve the legislation.

I can assure you that we want to improve this piece of legislation, and should this motion pass, we will bring that forward. We have lots of really good ideas, but you're going to have to, I'm afraid, pass this motion to refer it back to committee if you want to find out what they are. We want to be positive. We want to be helpful. We want to make sure that the legislation is as good as it possibly can be. That's why we want to commit this back to Committee of the Whole, Mr. Speaker, because we want to work with other parties in this House to strengthen the legislation.

Ms Blakeman: Do you mean the Liberals?

Mr. Mason: I want to acknowledge the excellent job that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, who is a member of a party which will not be named, has done on this file. [interjection] Yeah, well, there are lots of names for it, hon. member. A lot of them may not be the right one.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, there's an important principle here, and that is that we need to proceed methodically and at a stately pace through the legislative process in order to make sure that all members of the House in all political parties can have input into the legislation on behalf of the people that elected them. That didn't happen in this case. I'll call it a misunderstanding, but the fact of the matter is that we were unaware that last night the government intended to put this bill through the committee stage. We didn't have our amendments prepared, nor did we, frankly, have enough time to prepare them by last night anyway, and I think everybody should have recognized that. You can't put through important pieces of legislation at such a rapid pace and actually believe that this place is then doing its job. I think that's one of the reasons why we felt it necessary to make the point that we're making now.

An Hon. Member: What point is that?

Mr. Mason: The point is that we are not helpless, and we deserve and insist on the respect due us as an opposition party in this House. We need to reflect our constituents, who are not just located in our constituencies. We have people who support our point of view from one end of this province to the other. All of those people want to see their views reflected in the debate here. That may not be the majority position. It may not be incorporated in the legislation, but it is a view, nonetheless, of many, many, Albertans, hundreds of thousands of Albertans, that needs to be reflected in the debate on all the important pieces of legislation that take place in this Assembly. It is, I think, incumbent. It's only fair.

I wish that the Government House Leader had not stood up and briefly said: just vote against it. I think it's a mistake. It's a mistake to reject the opportunity for members in this House and parties in this House to participate in the legislative process. That's what we're here to do. That's our job. That's what we're elected to do. I think that needs to be done.

I think it's important that parties work together in developing legislation. I mean, question period is question period; the political process is the political process. It is designed to be an adversarial process. You just look at the way the place is laid out. It's one side against the other. That's basically in its very nature.

Ms Blakeman: Two sword lengths.

Mr. Mason: Two sword lengths across, yes.

Ms Blakeman: That's saving you.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Well, I'm sure the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre would love to, you know, get up here and voice her views in this place.

It is an important principle, Mr. Speaker, that we need to have a proper committee discussion on this bill. We haven't had it. I came in last night, and things were going through here at lightspeed. I was amazed that there was a lack of debate and so on on so many of the pieces.

Ms Blakeman: Why are you surprised? They're the same party.

Mr. Mason: Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre says that they're the same party. I don't think that they're exactly the same party, but I think that in terms of the legislative agenda there's a lot of agreement there.

I still think it's the job of the opposition to slow down the pace of debate so that the public can become aware of what's going on in this place. That's a very important function of the opposition, and when the opposition doesn't do that, we can see what happens. The whole basis of the legislative process is undermined.

I know that the government doesn't like that, and I know that the government members get frustrated, but I think the important thing is that the legislative process ought not proceed too quickly in order to give careful consideration. That's one reason. The other reason is that it provides an opportunity for the public to notice what's happening in this place and to participate with that.

The third reason, Mr. Speaker, is that it allows the opposition party to do its job. Now, the government has the opportunity of knowing well in advance what its legislation is going to look like, and they have the opportunity of consulting before they even draft the legislation, before it's even introduced in the Assembly. The opposition doesn't see it until it's introduced for first reading. But we also have a duty to consult. We have a duty to consult with our constituents, and we have a duty to consult with stakeholders. We have far fewer resources, of course, than a government department does in order to accomplish that, but it's still something that we try to do, and we take that job seriously.

We try to think through who the stakeholders are when we see a piece of legislation and contact them as quickly as we can to try and get some information. Sometimes that process takes a lot longer than we would like, and we're not able to incorporate all of the input from stakeholders that we would like to do, but we try to do that. I think the other opposition parties do the same thing. They try to consult. They try to talk to different stakeholders and get a good sense of what they think so that they are more informed when they debate the bill and can draft amendments in some cases in order to improve the bill. That is something that takes a bit of time. We do have some resources, nowhere near the resources that the government caucus has or the government itself has. We also need time to deploy those resources in order to do a better job on behalf of the people who elected us. That work makes this place more meaningful.

If the opposition isn't able to do its job and the government just pushes through legislation at a very fast speed, it renders this place meaningless, Mr. Speaker. It renders this place pointless. That is something that I don't think most members on the other side really want to see. It requires, then, some patience on their part, some forbearance, some recognition of the role of the opposition in the legislative process. If they're prepared to do that and prepared to put up with some of the criticisms that they face from the opposition as well as some positive suggestions, then I think we can make this place meaningful and feel much better about the role that we all play here.

What's the point of sitting here and just being rubber stamps? There's no point. I don't think the government members want to see that either. If the government keeps persisting in some of these tactics – and I think particularly about the tactic around the Appropriation Act of setting a fixed amount of time, basically building closure into the standing orders, then adjourning debate on the bill, and then bringing the bill back just before the vote – it means that there's very little opportunity to debate. That's a tactic, Mr. Speaker. Yes, that's a tactic that I think represents an attempt to run roughshod over the principles of parliamentary democracy, including the role of the opposition.

If we don't have proper committee consideration on a bill, Mr. Speaker, we haven't considered the bill properly, and we haven't done our job, and that's why this motion should be approved. We should have a proper Committee of the Whole on Bill 21 because this is an important bill. It's a significant bill. It was in Committee of the Whole for a grand total of 21 minutes. I think we can make that more productive if we, in fact, bring it back.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just emphasize that this is not just about the opposition. This is about the government side and how the two sides complement each other in order to improve the products of this place.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre?

Ms Blakeman: No. I was rising to speak. Look at how fast I did that because I flexed my knees.

1:10

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. No one under 29(2)(a)?

Then I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre to speak to the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'll set my ice bag on the floor here.

Thank you very much for doing this, Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I'm sure that for the people that are new to the Assembly, this must seem like a very strange experience, but there's a reason for it. In Alberta we have an unusual situation where we've had a majority government in place for a very long time. What I've seen is that the government is growing more and more – I was just looking it up, you know, and I felt that the words weren't strong enough. What I really see is hubris. For those that have studied your Greek theatre – anybody? Anybody? Hubris. I bet that you know what it is. Yes, she does. Two people. Excellent. [interjections] All right. Settle down. Settle down. No competition on the hubris. It is about putting yourself above the gods, that you are so fantastic that you put yourself above the gods. Of course, anybody that's studied their Greek tragedy knows what happens when you put yourself above the gods. You come in for a terrible tumble, and they shoot you with thunderbolts and things.

The point is that there is a position, and in this House we're meant to have at least two sides working on something. Opposition is useful because it brings an alternative point of view, hopefully some constructive criticism, and some alternatives. Often I've seen government go back and change what they're doing because something was raised that was, in fact, useful and made it a better bill. But there's less and less respect from the government toward the opposition members.

I know that there's a family dispute, and family disputes are vicious. I mean, nobody fights like your brother or your sister. Nobody. That's a vicious thing. I'm sympathetic to the two sides here that are having a family dispute because I know it's hard on both of you. Nonetheless, you still need . . .

Ms Notley: This sounds like therapy.

Ms Blakeman: Therapy. Oh, jeez. Yes, I'm sure they could get involved in therapy, and I know that you'll all come back together and get over your family dispute at some point in time. Certainly, that happened with your federal cousins, so it's going to happen sooner or later to you.

You have two other opposition parties in the House, and we're working hard here. I'm not asking for a sympathy play. We do our work, we show up, we do our readings, and we bring forward things that we . . . [interjections] We're thrilled to have you with us, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I listen well, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

It's just wrong to be roaring past Committee of the Whole and taking that opportunity away from the opposition side of this House to even try to be prepared with amendments. You know, we have increased the number of Parliamentary Counsel that we have, and still I think some days I feel bad about what I'm asking them to do in turning around amendments very quickly. By the time we see the bill, it's on the Order Paper for the next day. You're trying to anticipate what you need to be sending through to Parliamentary Counsel as an amendment, and you want to get it right. I don't want to waste the House time. If I agree with the bill, I'll tell you I agree with the bill. If I agree with certain parts of it, I'll tell you that and move on. When I don't agree, I think I have a right to be able to bring up those amendments to try and make it better.

The Minister of Service Alberta is really looking to get on the record, and we're all looking forward to that because I can't hear him when he mumbles. He might as well just get his name on the list and get up and actually speak here. [interjections] I'm sorry. He mumbles?

An Hon. Member: He never mumbles.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, he doesn't mumble. Okay. There's something happening with my hearing, then.

What happened the other day was disrespectful. In moving so quickly – and I know it was hot on Monday. I did tell you this, didn't I? I told you that when it got to the warmer seasons, the air conditioning in this place takes a while to kick in, and it gets kind of saunalike here. I did warn you. If you look back in Hansard, I did. [interjection] Oh, somebody liked it. Well, there you go. But I noticed that other people didn't like it.

All of a sudden there was a big move to get out of this House as fast as possible, so the Government House Leader took advantage of that and plowed through Committee of the Whole.

You are not just allowed to bring forward amendments in Committee of the Whole; you're allowed to examine the bill word by word, clause by clause. That's the point. We're not to do that in second reading, where we're talking about the principle of the bill. You can be admonished for singling out particular sections, actually. You're not to be doing that when you're in third reading because you're to be talking about the anticipated effect of the bill when it comes into play. So the point where we can do that and get into the nitty-gritty of it, say, "Yes, we like this," or "No, we don't like that," and do the amendments is during Committee of the Whole.

Now, what I've heard the government side say is, "Well, you know, you should put more people on," or "You should expect that these bills can come up at any time; everything that's on the Order Paper is live," which is why you see me hauling around every bill that's still on the Order Paper. It starts to get a bit heavy at a certain point, which means I have to start icing my shoulder, too. [interjection] Yeah. You just keep yours here. I noticed that. I have a set here as well, but I also need the notes that I've made or the research that I've done on it, so I've got to carry around the rest of it.

This is where the hubris comes in, that complete lack of respect for the amount of resources that we're working with. We've got two researchers. I'm assuming that the ND opposition has about the same number. Just trying to process all of the stuff that's coming across our desk and get that stuff through takes a while. It's not going to happen in 24 hours, which is the pace that we have the government moving at now, so it's perfectly appropriate that we use the parliamentary processes to say that you need to go back and do this properly.

Let's face it, kids – not being disrespectful; being fond and affectionate of all of you, of course. That process wouldn't be there if there wasn't a need for it occasionally. All of the parliamentary processes that are available to us always end up allowing the opposition to find our voice or to make our voice heard, and this is one of these opportunities.

Asking for a referral back to Committee of the Whole allows us to get those amendments up. There are a few things that I would do to this if I had the time to do it. I'm sorry; that sounds like I'm going to beat it to death. There are a few amendments that I would make to improve the act. I'm one of the people that keeps beaking off about the need for monitoring in this province, so why wouldn't I try and make a bill like this work?

Some of you will know that one of the Laurie Blakeman memorial speeches – oh, God. I'm sorry. I said my own name, and then I . . .

The Deputy Speaker: It's okay, hon. member. You admonished yourself. That's fine.

Ms Blakeman: Then I cursed. I'm sorry. It's just not working out for me tonight.

It's the regulations. That's it, the Edmonton-Centre memorial speech on regulations. This is a perfect example of this. All that's in this bill is that the minister can go away and make regulations on everything. There is no transparency with this. We don't get to see the regs until they're done, and then you've got to really dig for them and pay attention because it's not as though they, you know, get tabled in the House.

Indeed, here's a concept. They used to get referred to a committee called the Law and Regulations Committee, and they used to all be reviewed by an all-party committee that looked at the regulations.

An Hon. Member: Not in your lifetime.

1:20

Ms Blakeman: Yes, indeed, it was in my lifetime. It was. It was in my lifetime.

That, actually, is the Gary Dickson memorial speech because he was the one that referred to that most often and taught me about it.

There is an issue about the regs. How many of you know what's going to happen to the regs on this bill? Have you sat on a committee? Do you know what they're going to look like? No.

That's part of the process that has been removed by this government. That committee was completely disbanded and struck off the records in '09, I think. That's part of the problem with this bill.

When I go back and I start going around to all of my different agencies and organizations over the summer and talk about what we did in here, they'll say: well, what's going to happen? I don't know. I can tell that they're going to make a regulation about X, Y, and Z, but I've no idea what that's going to be. You've already heard a number of really good points raised about: why would we be empowering the government to raise an amount of money from the industry to fund the organizations that are already discredited? In particular, I went looking about the RAMP program, and I went looking for the one that gave me hell, and I found them both. The RAMP program was particularly discredited – what was the term I was looking for?

An Hon. Member: Useless? Violated?

Ms Blakeman: No, no. It was excoriated. It really came in for some very bad press. For a number of reasons it was considered not transparent. It had the majority of . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are you still on the amendment, hon. member?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, on the referral motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Sorry. Just let me find it, and then I'll have it. Oh, yes. All right. God. There are too many amendments on this desk.

It had a number of people on the committee. They could not agree on what was being put forward. It ended up being all industry representatives on the committee. It had no independence and no credibility at the end of it. Actually, the recommendation from a number of organizations is: get rid of it. Yet, what we're looking at here, what I'm hearing – and, again, I can't verify any of it because there's nothing actually written down – is that, in fact, that very organization, RAMP, is going to be one of the groups that continues to get funded.

The second group, the one that was mad at me, I'm pretty sure was the Wood Buffalo Environmental Association. When I looked them up, I could see why they were a little cranky with me. They have a number of things that work as an environmental monitoring agency in that they are transparent. They do publish; they even publish raw data if you really want to crunch the numbers yourself. It is rigorous. It's done by technicians. They're using a recent technology. One of the criticisms of them is that they are limited by the size of the network that they're pulling the information from. I think that's where this organization and I got into a bit of a spitting match before. It's one of the ones that has been chronically underfunded, so it hasn't been able to improve that network in any real way. It's organization based, not sector based. So guess what? That brings us back to the same problem in that the industry members on it significantly outnumber other stakeholders, and it reduces the credibility of the monitoring.

When we're trying to put together a piece of legislation that is about monitoring – I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, I just have to say this one other thing. When I'm talking about referring backwards to the Committee of the Whole, several times I've seen this government this year do – I don't watch Glee, but they keep talking about a mashup, where they put the songs together. It's like different songs that they put together.

An Hon. Member: Medley?

Ms Blakeman: No. They call it a mashup. Okay, medley. Yeah. That would be our term for it, and we won't talk about what age that might be.

This act is putting together the section that's about environmental monitoring and how they're going to make the regulations and how they're going to get the industry to pay. Then, totally unrelated, it starts talking about the PIN numbers of people that are transporting or storing . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Oh, that cannot be, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments. [interjection] Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, your time has expired.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for her eloquent – she named her speech there. I can't remember the name that you've given it. Unfortunately, the Member for Edmonton-Centre was cut off mid-sentence, so we are all hanging, dangling in suspense here, and I would like to ask the member if she'd like the opportunity to finish that sentence so we can at least have a complete thought.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member. [interjections]

Ms Blakeman: Yes, you did. You got a number of thoughts. Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm getting a critique of the speeches that I'm doing at 25 after 1. I just so enjoy the positive reinforcement that I get from my colleagues opposite.

What I was saying was that we get this mashup, this medley, of almost unrelated ideas. We're talking about making regulations for monitoring, and then the next part of the bill is about the PIN numbers for the transportation and storage of hazardous waste. I keep going: what has happened here? You know when you get a magazine from the doctor's office and you get into the story or you're reading Reader's Digest and you get halfway through the little jokes section, then you go to get the conclusion and the page is missing? That's what it feels like with this bill, that there's a linkage missing or that two different pieces got kind of stuck together, which is another reason why it would be a good idea if we went back to Committee of the Whole and we respected what the opposition brings to this House.

I know you guys have been in power for a long time. I know that you guys over there are thinking you may not be there so much longer. Things aren't going as good as you thought. They're not going as well as you'd want people outside – oh, it got very quiet all of a sudden; isn't that interesting. It's not going quite as well as you thought, and you may not be there for very much longer. I know that I love to threaten you with this, and it is indeed part of my revenge scenarios that I think about when I'm truly angry with you all. You know, for you guys to have to sit over here and experience – thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker. I know I exasperate you sometimes. For you to sit over here and experience the limitations that have been increasingly placed on the opposition over time by this very same government is a revenge scenario that I really enjoy. You guys would not be happy here.

We have learned to work within it. We've even learned to be cheerful about it, but you should not disrespect us, Government House Leader. You should not disrespect us. We have things to bring to this, and you should not be pre-empting our time off this.

[interjection] Well, this is the other argument. The Government House Leader is now saying that this is my fault.

I'm willing to accept the blame for a number of things, but me saying that I will get back here by a certain time in order to be able to move a bill is not a reasonable excuse for the Government House Leader to bring up a different bill that has not been on the prescribed government business for the day and then allow it to pass through a stage of reading that none of us knew was going to happen and were not able to prepare for. If you wonder why we're all so hot under the collar, that's what happened.

This bill was brought up in Committee of the Whole. We didn't know that was going to happen. We're not able to turn on a dime. We don't have those kinds of resources. We weren't prepared for that. It passed through. We couldn't even bring amendments forward because we hadn't submitted them to Parliamentary Counsel and didn't have them approved. The whole thing spun through Committee of the Whole in 21 minutes. I came back here, and that was it. It had passed. I didn't even get a chance at it. Now we're into Bill 21.

Really, having the Government House Leader say that this is my fault is a bit rich and also disrespectful. Not a good idea.

I'll go back to where I started, which was about hubris. Do not put yourself above the gods.

Mr. Mason: We're behind you all the way.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. I'm out there leading this army that is not there.

But that's what it's about. I think this bill could be made into something that's very useful for everybody, but it's not useful now. No disrespect to the sponsor because I know that you're a new member and you're working your way through this. I hope it's been a good experience for you. But this is not . . .

1:30

Mr. Mason: What could possibly go wrong?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. What could possibly go wrong? Well, you know, what could go wrong . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Your time has expired.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the amendment.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise, partly to get circulation in my legs. I'm happy to speak to this amendment and to outline some of the merits and the reasons why I urge all members of the Assembly to support this amendment. As has been outlined by my colleagues, there are a significant number of reasons why Bill 21, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2013, needs to be referred back to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's telling when I look at – albeit I'm a newer member in the House here – the number of minutes and the amount of time that we spend on many of the bills in Committee of the Whole. You know, it's interesting and it doesn't do this bill justice that there were around 25 minutes of time spent in Committee of the Whole. It's frustrating because, first and foremost, especially for smaller opposition parties, Committee of the Whole, as you know, is a time when we can bring forward amendments, when we try to improve, ameliorate a bill. I mean, it's got its challenges when a very short amount of time has passed from first reading to when the bill is suddenly fast-forwarded to Committee of the Whole.

I mean, first and foremost, obviously, members need to go through the bill, need to interpret it, and need to consider what's in the bill, the merits of a bill, what needs to be either improved or amended to strengthen the bill or to ensure that we're writing the best possible pieces of legislation before they're passed. And this requires time, Mr. Speaker. Again, you know, the smaller opposition parties have fewer resources, fewer researchers. We, too, take pride in our work and in the amendments that we put forward. It's extremely challenging when there's a very short period of time to try to contact many of the stakeholders and many of the people who are going to be directly or indirectly impacted by the passing of a piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it's not just the amount of time that is physically spent in this Chamber debating a bill at a certain stage that is very important. It's extremely important that there is time outside of the Assembly when members can inform themselves, do the research, and reach out to community members, to various organizations who have, you know, a myriad of experts and individuals who are much more familiar with the subject matter than many of the members pertaining to – you name it – different topics from A to Z that we debate and discuss in this House.

You know, this motion to refer, I think, is extremely fitting for this bill, and I do want to reiterate what the Member for Edmonton-Centre said. I mean, this is nothing to do with the sponsor of the bill or the intention of the bill. It's to do with due process and ensuring that we all live up to the duties and responsibilities that are placed on us.

We all have a duty to consult. We want to make sure that Albertans are included, are represented when we're speaking on behalf of the 3.7 million folks that live in this great province of ours, so it is important to consult, to spend an adequate and appropriate amount of time. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, when we look at when this bill was introduced to the time that we're at today, right now, there has not been a significant or a substantial amount of time given to this bill in this Chamber for us to pass this in good conscience.

Clearly, as was outlined by my colleagues, there was, I would say, a bit of a misunderstanding – I'm being very forgiving to the Government House Leader – in that there is a process that takes place, an agreement, if you will, Mr. Speaker, between the House leaders on the process for ensuring that all members of the Assembly are aware of what's going to be discussed on a given day, which I do acknowledge is a courtesy, to ensure that members can be well informed on what's going to be discussed in the House and to ensure that they and their researchers have an adequate amount of time to prepare, whether that's via amendments or just becoming familiar with the bill.

When I look at the number of pieces of legislation or bills that we have debated this week alone, Mr. Speaker, it is a significant amount of legislation. We've moved very quickly on many of the pieces. You know, this motion to refer back to committee I think is a nice way to gently tap the brakes and to say: let's look at how we can strengthen this bill, how we can improve it to ensure that we get it right the first time.

Earlier this evening we spoke, and there's a difference of opinion between the government side and the opposition side as far as getting it done right the first time versus passing something through just for the sake of getting it done and then worrying about improving it. You know, Mr. Speaker, it makes me think of a great little analogy of a student handing in a first or second draft of an essay, saying, "Well, this is it; this is the finished product," when in reality it's only the first or second draft. It needs revisions. It needs other sets of eyes. It needs to be improved, peer editing, before that final version is presented.

I can tell you that often, you know, once something is handed in, we don't – in putting our best foot forward or in making a first impression, you get one crack at it. I think it's important that we put our best foot forward, that we take the time to review this bill and get input from all parties but as well from as many members of this Assembly as we possibly can, Mr. Speaker. I mean, I think we all have the goal in mind of writing and producing the best possible pieces of legislation, and in order to do that, we need an adequate amount of time. There seems to be a shortage of time.
