In the current regulatory system providing notice of proposed energy activities is not always required, and Albertans do not always have the opportunity to inform the regulator of their concerns, at least not at the front end of decision-making. This often results in challenging a decision that has already been made. Bill 2 provides a better opportunity for Albertans to be informed and to have input into proposed energy resource activities.

Bill 2 also provides for important appeal processes. In the current system Albertans and landowners use the existing appeal mechanisms for the reasons I stated a moment ago. Because decisions are often made without hearings, the only recourse left is to appeal decisions. Through Bill 2 the regulator is able to involve Albertans and landowners much earlier on in the process.

The Chair: Hon. minister, if I may, would you please just pause for a moment and distribute the amendment and then return to speaking?

For the record you actually had 20 minutes, so you have some 14 and a half minutes left.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, sir. That's an expansion on the earlier instructions.

The Chair: We'll have the amendment distributed. Please continue, hon. minister. Thank you.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Through Bill 2 the regulator is able to involve Albertans and landowners much earlier on in the process, before decisions are made, as I was saying. If you have the right to appeal to the EAB today, you will have the right to request a regulatory review tomorrow. It is also important to note that unlike in the ERCB system today hearings will be conducted by hearing commissioners who are appointed separately and quite independently from the board and the CEO of the regulator. This provides an additional element of independence. The structural change drastically reduces the potential for conflicts and supports fair decision-making.

I think there is some confusion about whether or not the reference in the bill to regulatory reviews is, in fact, an avenue of appeal. Regulatory reviews are a form of appeal. To clarify this, Mr. Chair, I propose an amendment to change all references in this case from review to appeal. This will make it clear that there's an appeal mechanism that is in addition to appeals to the court, but at the end of the day if there is still disagreement about the regulator's decision, Albertans still have access to the court, as they always have.

I'd like to discuss further the makeup and composition of both the board of directors and hearing commissioners. Through the Responsible Energy Development Act we are ushering in a modern governance model. Mr. Chair, as somebody who has spent a lot of time learning about and practising the practice of governance of organizations large and small, this is very important. Under this new structure there is a separation in the governance function of the board of directors, the management responsibilities of the chief executive officer, and the conduct of hearings by hearing commissioners.

This structure enables us to recruit the right people for the job. It allows us to gather the most talented people we can find for the governance board, for the management group, and importantly it will enable us to recruit people with the right mix of expertise required for the hearing process. This is the flexibility we need in order for us to build a regulator which is truly world-class and stands out in the global community of those who provide regulatory oversight.

We also think it's crucial that the regulator have the time it needs to make the right decisions for this province by gaining the right information from stakeholders, landowners, and Albertans. We have not prescribed hard timelines for decisions because we don't believe every project takes a one-size-fits-all approach. Rather, we are giving the regulator the tools and the flexibility it needs to be nimble, responsive, competitive, and efficient. That's what we heard landowners, industry, First Nations, and Albertans want, and that's what we're doing.

Finally, I would like to talk about consultation as a whole. Let me be clear. Albertans will be engaged, and they will have more opportunity to provide input into the new system than ever before. Albertans will be engaged on important resource policy issues as we move forward. We remain committed to consulting with the province's First Nations. This responsibility rests with the Crown, which is why we haven't given the regulator the authority to determine the adequacy of consultation. It is the government's responsibility, Mr. Chair, to engage and consult with First Nations, and it's a responsibility the government of Alberta takes very seriously.

I'd like to end by saying that this is a once-in-a-generation opportunity to truly revolutionize the way we regulate energy resources in the province. We're going to take the best practices from the past and build on them for the future. I believe that with the Responsible Energy Development Act we are creating a system that is efficient and effective for all parties involved. It will set high standards and will ensure that we remain a competitive place to do business while protecting Albertans' property rights and protecting our environment.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: I'd just like to table the amendment I referenced earlier.

The Chair: Yes. We've recognized that. Just for the record this will be amendment A1.

I'm going to recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order Separating Amendments

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The citation I'll give you is Beauchesne 688, which would allow me to ask that the clauses of the government's amendment be severed, and this is following with the tradition and precedents of the House. This is definitively to discuss the various sections separately and also to be voted separately.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: I would like to speak to that point of order.

The Chair: You will in a minute, hon. member.

The rules indicate that this does not require a vote. This is a courtesy that the chair will allow. We will split it as you have requested, hon. member. So there is no further point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just what are you splitting? You're splitting it for voting purposes, but for discussion purposes anybody speaking to this can speak to the whole package?

Ms Blakeman: With respect, Government House Leader, and speaking directly to the chair – help me with the math here – there are something like 14 different sections that are being modified by the government amendment. While I wouldn't say that anyone couldn't speak to all of them, my intention, which you have concurred with, was that they be debated separately and voted separately. This is affecting a number of different sections in the bill, and it requires that kind of attention. According to 688 we are allowed to discuss this word by word, clause by clause. This is the working session on the bill, and I would like the opportunity to work the bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: So for clarification, then, hon. member, you're requesting that we discuss and debate from A through N separately?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, sir.

The Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Hon. Government House Leader, did you care for further clarification on that, or is that good enough that we move forward?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The custom and the practice of the House has been on occasion, when requested, to separate particular sections for voting purposes but to treat the amendment as a whole. I would request that we continue with that custom and practice of the House.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Chair, as the person who has requested this in the past, I can tell you that both have been granted to me.

The Chair: Hon. members, I believe that for clarity it would serve us to debate each separately and vote separately, so we will proceed accordingly.

Debate Continued

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chair, I do appreciate your ruling very much, but I have to say that this amendment has not been provided to us in advance. This is the first we've seen of it. This is . . .

An Hon. Member: Raising the bar.

Mr. Anderson: . . . apparently raising the bar in this democratic process.

What it seems to be to me is a way to amend certain sections knowing full well that we cannot, once these sections are debated and voted on as an omnibus package, bring our different amendments that we have one by one. With your ruling, that's less of a problem now because we can go through and debate each one of these clauses. However – and this is important – we will need time to look at this amendment and see how this alters the bill.

I mean, it's just – we'll keep it simple. It's difficult to understand how the opposition – we've prepared 12 amendments to this bill. The NDP caucus, I know, has at least six, maybe eight, and I know the Liberals probably have some as well. We're in a position here as a caucus where we would have to study this amendment to see what subamendments we would need to bring to these different clauses because if they affect amendments that we were going to bring, this is our one shot to talk about them.

Mr. Chair, I would ask the Government House Leader to consent to adjourning debate on this bill. Give us a day at least anyway to take a look at the different amendments, how this affects the bill, and come back, hopefully, with amendments or subamendments – which ones we can support, which ones we can't support – just some basic time to go over this. Otherwise, I fear we're going to be spending a lot more time than necessary in Committee of the Whole.

It just doesn't make sense to do it this way. If we had had this given to us in advance, even a few hours in advance, we could've prepared something for it. But at this point I don't know how we can proceed without adjourning debate to a future day. So I would move, hopefully with the Government House Leader's approval, that we adjourn debate on this matter until we can review this amendment in full.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Just for the record the rules do not require that notice be given of where we are today.

However, I will look to the hon. Government House Leader. Did you want to respond, hon. Government House Leader?

Mr. Hancock: I would dearly love to, but a motion to adjourn is nondebatable.

The Chair: You have moved that we adjourn debate?

Mr. Anderson: Yes.

The Chair: Okay. That's not debatable.

Mr. Anderson: It's just a vote.

The Chair: Then I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:12 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I just wanted to briefly, then, speak to the amendments and indicate that it's interesting to have what we've just gone through with respect to the motion to adjourn debate. I understand the opposition's concern about an amendment being tabled that they haven't had a chance to look at and that they have to read, digest, figure out how it fits into debate on the bill. That's what we face every day in this House when we go into committee. Amendments come up.

I have as House leader always extended the arm to opposition members to say that if you have amendments to the bill, to any bill, you know, share them with us, and we'd be prepared to discuss. [interjections] I hear members opposite saying: we did.

Last night during debate there was mention a number of times of 12 amendments. As I understand it, four have been shared, so there are another eight that haven't been shared. Then when I talked to other opposition members, they say that they have five, but those haven't been shared. The dilemma I have here as a House leader is: do we adjourn the House every time an amendment is tabled so that people can read it and digest it and see how it affects life and see how it affects subamendments?

Now, part of the problem appears to be – and I do appreciate the dilemma – that members opposite say that the amendments have been submitted to the table and haven't yet been approved. I can understand that. So, then, in scheduling House business, that creates a bit of a complication. I think it's a complication that we need to address because if the amendments that have been submitted and haven't come back are not available for tabling in the House or for sharing, then as House leader I really ought not to be scheduling the debate on the bill. But we did actually give notice to everybody that debate would be scheduled, and nobody actually came back and said: "Well, we're not ready for debate in committee on this bill. We don't have our amendments back from the table yet."

So we do have a bit of a dilemma, and I think it's an interesting one because I have to say that I can only remember a few occasions where I've actually risen to ask the House to adjourn debate in committee so that we might take an amendment back and look at it. We have done that because I am absolutely sincere when I say to members of the House that I believe that our role is to make the best possible legislation we can, and that means that we should be looking at amendments that come forward to determine whether, in fact, we think they actually will improve the bill.

I think it's a given that there are some things that we're just going to disagree on. We know that amendments come forward to allow for political statements to be made. When I use the word

"political," I'm not using that in any sense in a negative way. I think that the art of politics is to discuss public policy in public and to put opposing positions forward, and I know that a significant number if not most of the amendments that come forward on any given bill are with respect to a true difference of viewpoint as to the direction that a bill should take.

Others that are brought forward are truly intended to improve the legislation in terms of its operation, and those, I think, bear a significant looking at. In some cases, where those amendments are clearly discernible, we can work with the minister or the bill's sponsor. We can look at it and make a determination whether there are likely to be any unintended consequences, those sorts of things, and amendments can be accepted on the floor of the House, so to speak.

In other cases, where an amendment looks like it might be an amendment which is designed to truly improve the quality of a bill but requires some additional look, I have in fact asked the House to adjourn so that we could take it back. We're very reluctant to do that because House time is valuable.

That's why I always extend the arm of, dare I say, friendship to opposition to say that if you have amendments that you want to bring forward to a bill that are truly intentional in terms of improving the bill, share them. We'll have discussions in our respective caucuses, and we'll bring them to the floor for informed discussion. If they're not, then we'll presume that they're political in nature, and we likely won't have an informed discussion on the floor because we'll assume that they're intending to provide a platform for a political discussion.

Now, I'm truly in a dilemma here because we have tabled some fairly straightforward amendments but amendments that, nonetheless, will take somebody a few minutes to check back on the various sections to see what they're doing. Given that this is amending a wholesome act – in other words, one doesn't have to go and check back to the existing statutes; it's just checking it against the bill to see where it is, so it's a relatively more easy process – I would expect that we would be able to deal with it. Nonetheless, if the members opposite are prepared to undertake to share their amendments with us on a timely basis, say before end of business this afternoon, I would certainly encourage us to consider adjourning debate so that they can have a look at these amendments and see how they impact and see how they might impact other amendments. Then we can determine what time is necessary in conversation with the table with respect to when amendments that they've indicated are coming might be completed.

This is truly a problem for this House if we cannot get our amendments on the table in a timely basis. We have a period of time that we're sitting here. We've done some very heavy lifting, actually, over the last two weeks. Members on both sides of the House have been very co-operative in terms of dealing with the work of the House. We've had up until now, I thought, a very good conversation around scheduling although I hadn't noticed that the leader of the Liberal opposition had stopped speaking to me, but I now notice that. We have endeavoured to ensure that everybody was aware of the course of business that we wanted to undertake for the week, what our goals and objectives for the day were, and how we were to proceed.

I would have hoped that if parties were not ready to proceed with debate, they would let us know shortly after we put it on the table so that we could take a look at it and see how we could do it better. I have no intention as House leader to bring business to the floor of the House that's not ready for debate, but we do have to have business on the floor of the House, and we do have a lot of business to do. I would look to advice from the hon. members opposite if they're prepared to undertake to share amendments on a timely basis. Whether or not they're in official, finished form is not relevant to me as long as they show the intention. What's fair for one is fair for the other.

Amendments coming forward are dropped on the floor of the House and distributed, and then we're expected to get up and vote on it. I have to scramble, as I do with each and every amendment, to look it up, to see what it does to the bill and what it does to the existing act if there is an existing act. I do that every time. When I'm on the floor of the House, every time an amendment hits the floor, I have to do that work on the fly at that moment to determine what the efficacy of that amendment is, consult with the bill's sponsor, consult with members on the floor of the House, and see how to proceed.

We don't get that courtesy from members of the opposition very often, not in the 15 years that I've been House leader, and we certainly haven't had that kind of co-operation now. Yet one government amendment is tabled, and all of a sudden it's an affront to democracy if we don't adjourn the House so that everybody can sit down and examine it in full detail. What's good for the goose is good for the gander, as they say. I'm not sure what that expression means, but it is an expression. I think what it means is that we can't adjourn the House every time an amendment hits the floor, so the only way the House can reasonably proceed, if that's a requirement that people have, is if people share amendments on a timely basis. Maybe that's an amendment we need to make to the rules; I don't know. I would think this would be something that could be done by people of goodwill working together and collaboratively.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

I'll recognize the Member for Airdrie, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to thank the Government House Leader for that wonderful explanation of what we're seeing here today. Just to give background on what did occur, this caucus, for our part, sent over our critic, our deputy House leader, to meet with the Minister of Energy and their lawyers. In fact, I believe there were two meetings that evening but certainly one that lasted a while. Our critic for Energy went over exactly the concerns, the amendments in rough form, the subject matter of the amendments, what they were going to be. He didn't have the exact wording, of course, because it was before Parliamentary Counsel. This government did know of the amendments long in advance. We have done everything we could to reach across the aisle and try to co-operate with them in that regard.

What day did you send them the four amendments?

Mr. Hale: This morning.

Mr. Anderson: This morning we sent them four one-line amendments – one-line amendments, very small amendments, anyway, simple amendments – in advance so that they could see them, with the promise that we would get the other eight to them as soon as they came from Parliamentary Counsel, where they're at.

I would also say that I hope our Parliamentary Counsel doesn't wince from the bus tracks that are over their backsides right now. They are severely overworked. Frankly, it's just ridiculous that we're here till midnight every night. We have amendments in this committee that they're trying to get together, and they have to be here to help run the House and help the chair run the House late into the evening. To sit here and somehow infer that they're not doing their job because they can't get the amendments out quick enough for folks – we have a serious problem. The serious problem is that we have a government that decides they want to ram through legislation and stay up till all hours of the night to do it and only sit 20 weeks of the year in this Legislature while giving themselves a 16 per cent raise or an 8 per cent raise, whatever it is that week. That's what the problem is with this democracy, frankly, Mr. Chair.

I certainly would like to commend Parliamentary Counsel for the good work they do for the opposition. Maybe we could spend some of that money that we would have spent on trips to the Olympics and, instead, spend it on another couple of folks and support staff to help these folks, who are working as hard, probably harder than most of the folks if not all of the folks in this Legislature. I don't think they have anything to be ashamed of, and I want to make that clear. They're working very hard.

Now, I would also say that this is why we debated in second reading over and over and over again the idea of sending this to a public policy committee. This is the exact reason why. Now we've got some kind of bologna sausage-making going on here, legal sausage-making, that's going to result in an absolutely horrendously flawed bill.

If we had just put this and taken the time, we wouldn't be here debating. How many sections does this amend? Fourteen. Well, there are several subsections, too. Fourteen amendments in one omnibus amendment, including number M here, which amends sections 12, 15, 18, 38, 39, 40, 41, 60, 61, and 78; and number N, sections 38, 39, 41, and 60; and there are others. It's just really amazing to me.

Of course, as the hon. member knows, if we amend these sections and they're in the same sections that we have amendments for, even though they're very minor amendments, just changing "regulatory review" to "regulatory appeal," it means that we can't bring in substantive amendments. While you're playing word games with it, that means that we won't be able to bring substantive amendments that would actually alter what the bill does and what it does not do, et cetera. This is, you know, a cheap parlour trick, frankly.

The government should be, I think, ashamed of themselves in the way that they've conducted themselves. I think we've been very clear in the House leaders' meetings that we've had. In other meetings and discussions that we've had, I've been – and I've got the e-mail correspondence to show it, and I'd be happy to table that e-mail correspondence – nothing but co-operative with this Government House Leader. Nothing but co-operative. I respond to all of his e-mails in the most polite way possible. I know that's amazing for folks over there to hear, but it's very, very polite. I try to offer solutions. I try to get back to him immediately. I'm doing everything I can to try to change the tone from the regular dysfunctionality that is in this House into something that's more functional, and this is the return.

To stand there and compare the amendments that we're bringing forward – which, again, we went over. We went over the subject of each of these amendments, Mr. Chair. They were shown to this minister and his legal staff. Then we gave him the four actual amendments that were approved by Parliamentary Counsel. We gave that to him this morning to look at, full well prepared and excited, frankly, to debate those amendments. Folks here had prepared speeches on this side, not everybody to every amendment but, I'd say, five, six per amendment. We could have gone through this process. We could have made, I think, great progress on this bill.

Instead, we get a massive amendment that there has been no time to look at. I mean, the government full well knows the difference between a one-line amendment that changes one thing in the bill, which they got in advance, and some monstrosity, Franken-amendment here, that is brought forward, plopped on our desk, and we're expected to react to it and see if this is good legislation. This is not how you run a democracy. This is not how you run a House. This is a joke. I mean, come on, guys.

Surely, we have more respect for the democratic process than to do things like this. If we're going to skip parliamentary committees, which they have in Ottawa and they have in other normal, functioning democracies, if we're going to skip that whole process and, instead, just bring in folks to randomly assess questions that the government decides that the committee is going to assess through their chairs that they direct, if that's all that they're going to do, well, what's the point? What's the point of it, you know?

I mean, I just don't understand the intent here. We were getting business done. We've got business done every single day and night since we returned to session, good progress done on bills, on second readings, Committee of the Whole. We've had good back and forth. We've had just a lot of good discussion. We've had good meetings between myself and the House leader saying, "Okay, what can we get done?" We say, "Well, how about this?" We get this done. It's been a good, mutual understanding, a very healthy understanding. What's with the cheap parlour trick?

I don't know how the Energy minister conducted himself as an MP under the Mulroney government. I have no idea, but I tell you what. If this is the way he conducted himself, that would explain why you got two seats at the end of your distinguished career there, sir, because this is a freaking disaster. It's absolutely shameful that we come into this house and, frankly, you know what all over the democratic parliamentary process. It's offensive.

We are here to make good law, to make sure that our laws are something that the people of Alberta can be proud of, something that we can put our stamp on after we leave this House. We're not here to play games with each other. We know in question period there's give-and-take, and there are political statements given. We know the form of that, and we know why we do that in question period and Members' Statements and so forth. We understand that that gets heated and that there is political pontificating and all that sort of thing. We get that. That's part of the process. We get that. But when we get down to committee and when we get down to second reading and when we get down to the actual business of crafting and amending these bills, I think we have, so far anyway, been able to put that aside and actually concentrate on the bill in front of us and try to get a good piece of legislation out to the people of Alberta. We don't turn it into some kind of pathetic excuse for legislative sausage-making that this is. I don't understand it.

I hope that we can push the reset on this. I hope that this event today does not change the pattern for the entire four years that we're here. I hope that we can maybe cool off a little bit, all of us, over the dinner break. I still hope that we'll adjourn this and go to Bill 4 – we were ready to debate Bill 4 as well – that we get some progress done so that when we come back here tonight, we can get progress on some amendments.

We're going to have to look at this in detail. At least give 24 hours to us or until tomorrow to figure out what we can support and what we can't support in these amendments and actually get some progress done. What happens, Mr. Chair, if we don't do that is that it turns into a bit of a gong show in here, and instead of passing amendments and debating amendments and getting progress and getting through third reading and stuff like that, we're all here until 4 in the morning. I know that there are several members over here that are really excited about the prospect of staying until all hours and doing all-nighters. They think it's kind of cool. They want to be a part of that. You know, they've been waiting. "This is our chance to make a statement." I said: "You know what? As long as the government is co-operating with us, we can co-operate with them. We don't need to make any big, brash political statements and so forth. We can co-operate with the government because they're co-operating with us. They're letting us get our amendments on the table and so forth." Until today.

The games have started. This was a pre-emptive strike, so to speak, on debate on this bill, and I think that it's ill timed. I am more than willing and I think our caucus will be more than willing to pretend this event did not happen on a go-forward basis as we try to go through these bills. We still have Bill 7, Bill 4, Bill 2. These all have a lot of proposed amendments coming forward on them but doable amounts of work on them. I think that if we do that, we can actually get progress so we can be out of here without having to resort to cutting off debate using time allocation and all these other draconian things that sometimes the government uses.

We can do that. I don't think we need to resort to some of that stuff, but if this is the type of shenanigans, then, you know, we can't just sit here and get punched in the face over and over and over by this government and not defend ourselves. That's not what we're willing to do, metaphorically speaking, of course.

I hope that the Government House Leader and the other House leaders, if they want to bring it – I've already brought a motion to adjourn, so I'm not going to bring another one. If they want to bring another motion to adjourn so we can adjourn this and can all take a big deep breath and figure out what's going on here and cool down and take it from DEFCON 2, you know, bring it down to DEFCON 5 a little bit, then I think we can get a lot of progress done in this House. But if it's going to be games, well, you know what? We've got 17 very hungry MLAs that are more than willing to play games over here if that's what the government wants to do. We're a pretty relentless group here, so let's try to get some work done for Albertans.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, the Member for Airdrie is talking about hunger, and when we do those all-nighters, we always get pizza, so now I'm thinking about pizza.

I just want to respond to what the Government House Leader is laying out here. You can always tell when I'm a little exercised because my writing is appalling. What it says here is: I'm not playing that game.

Let me just go back to some of the history around this because I know how much everyone enjoys my little historical vignettes. The first time I ever saw the government bring forward an amendment that looks like these – we've now come to accept them as the way the government does amendments, which is, you know, in this case 14 sections that are being amended. You know, the whole time the other two have been talking, I've been plowing my way through, marking everything in my script, and I'm not even halfway through at this point, so it does take a while to find all of that. The very first time I saw this was at the end of an all-nighter more than 10 years ago. The then minister of education thought it would be really funny – it so amused him, I remember – if he brought forward a 14-page series of amendments. I couldn't even begin to tell you how many sections were amended, 36 or something. I can't remember.

At 5 o'clock in the morning, just as the government shift was changing over and their second shift was coming in – and, of course, the opposition people were going: oh my God, I'm going to be here for the whole day – the minister of education brought in this 14-page amendment, which we were all supposed to jump up and start reacting to. Our critic for education gamely got to his feet. He didn't even have time to read the amendments. He just got up and was gabbling, trying to postpone everything long enough for us to run outside, read this, and phone anyone else in our caucus that wasn't already there to get them to come in. Indeed, we did debate that until well after noon, I think, that day. That sort of set the tone, and we've pretty much had that kind of government amendment ever since, where it's a multipronged amendment.

Now, part of our job here in the opposition is to present an alternative view. Sometimes it's criticism, but sometimes it's an alternative view. That's our job. There's no requirement in any of the parliamentary books that I'm aware of – and I do read these for fun. I know that's a little strange, but I do read them for fun. I'm not aware of anything that says that the government has to preapprove an opposition amendment before it actually gets any traction here, yet that is exactly, in his inimitable style, what I hear the Government House Leader proposing to us. If we just gave him our amendments in advance, he'd be able to check all of this, and everything would run so much more smoothly. Uh-huh.

You know what? I have never had the government approve an amendment that I submitted to the government to review in advance. Never. Every single one of the amendments that I have won – and there have been a number of them – has been won on the floor because I convinced people on the floor that it was the right thing to do.

I came to believe that if I wanted an amendment torpedoed, stomped on, annihilated, never to be seen again, submit it to the Government House Leader for review by the government caucus, and that would ensure its death. So I stopped doing it. I mean, it was just such a bad reaction. You know, in the opposition you kind of get used to being kicked around, but at a certain point you go: "You know what? I'm not going to do that anymore. I'm not going to repeat that. I know I'm going to get kicked around, so why in heck would I give you my amendment so you can stomp all over it?" So if the Government House Leader is wondering why he doesn't always get those anymore, he might want to look back at past history.

Now, there are a few of my colleagues that indeed did get their amendments accepted, and that's great. Thank you. I didn't. I don't think there was a conspiracy there. What is that phrase? Never explain by suggesting a conspiracy when simple incompetence would cover it. I'm paraphrasing really badly, but there you go.

So, no, I am not going to encourage any of my colleagues to submit amendments to the Government House Leader for preapproval. I think it's perfectly acceptable for us to be making these amendments on the floor as in comparison to the 14-section amendment that we've just had in one fell swoop from the government. I have never seen a 14-section amendment come from any member of the opposition while I've been on this side, so there's a slight difference in the way people do amendments.

The government has the power to call us into this Legislature, to adjourn us out of this Legislature, to give direction on how things are handled. They have a majority, so they get whomever they want on the all-party committees. Yes, they're all party but nothing that any other member of a party ever wants happens because it goes through the majority vote by the government members. It might be all party. It certainly isn't nonpartisan.

We've recently had a change that was dictated by the Government House Leader, I think, around amendments. I don't want to call it an oddity, but the other part of what the Government House Leader well knows that he has done in submitting 14 – I'm sorry, Mr. Chair?

The Chair: Carry on. There was another member trying to catch my eye. Please continue.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. All right.

When these are put before the Assembly and debated, of course on any other amendment that would've gone to the sections, the government always gets first dibs, right? So their amendment is going to get debated. Any other amendment that amended any section – in here we've got, you know, part 2, division 3, heading of part 2, section 31, section 32, section 34. Any other amendment to any of those sections would now have to be resubmitted and redone as a subamendment, and that takes time as well. That, again, is a burden on our very hard-working and very competent Parliamentary Counsel staff.

It isn't just a matter of us not wanting to be co-operative. We literally have to redo a whole bunch of work, and the Government House Leader, of course, would know that.

We have some really interesting bills in front of us. I'm interested in the pension reform bill. The Education Act is still out there. The government has really been able to push the agenda along very quickly and is very hard working. I find it very interesting that the Government House Leader is shocked and appalled at the temperature of House when, in fact, I made sure to point out to him that if you work people all afternoon and all night and make them go to committee meetings in between – and we are now blessed to find out we're allowed to eat at the table during our committee meetings. Everyone was so thrilled last night in the meeting, and I thought: "Are you serious? This is what we're excited about, that we now have the Speaker's permission to eat in the middle of an hour-long meeting in the middle of an hour-and-a-half break?" Oh, my goodness. The world has opened for me and embraced me with its generosity. Wow.

But, honestly, you're going to have people in here for three hours in the afternoon. You're going to work them for an hour over the hour-and-a-half supper break. I'll tell you: some of them are getting some exercise. There might be some weight loss happening here running back and forth between the Assembly and the Annex in order to get to the room where you're now allowed to eat while the meeting is going on and then rush back to the Assembly and then sit in here until 11 o'clock, 11:30, 12, 12:30. I've been watching the adjournment times. How are you not going to have people that are tired and cranky and PO'd and not as able to control their temper as they would like to? Well, duh. Of course that's going to happen, so nobody should be surprised about this.

Now, I know that the minister is patiently waiting for us to return to his bill, and I appreciate that, but perhaps in the future when he is quarterbacking a bill through, he would keep in mind some of the things I've pointed out. If he did wish to bring 14 government amendments [interjection] I'm sorry, how many? Fourteen.

And how old is this bill? Oh my goodness. It's not an amendment act. It's a brand new act, the whole thing, so they've been able to work on this at their leisure until they decided to bring it home. Oh, wait a second. There was a whole other study that was done on this by the now minister of environment and a couple of others that came out in December of 2010, so you had all of that front work, and now you need to amend it because – what? – you didn't see this one coming? You'd never heard this before?

You know, there are just times when you think: what were they thinking that we would need to have 14 amendments to a brand new bill that they've been working on for . . .

An Hon. Member: Two years.

Ms Blakeman: Well, yeah. I would have said donkey's years because it could be longer than the two years. This report came out in December of 2010. They could have been working on it since December of 2008.

So just a few observations, Mr. Minister. Even if you had kind of given those to us in little bits, there wouldn't have been quite such a temperature rise in here. Just for the future you might want to keep that in mind.

Mr. Chair, in response to the points that the House leader has raised, I think he understands now that we're going to have to spend some time changing things in reaction to what he's talked about. There are lots of people here that would like to just speak to this bill in Committee of the Whole, and we can spend the rest of the afternoon doing that. I have a number of notes here, and I'm – oh, sugar. No, we can't do that because now we've got a government amendment on the floor, so we'd have to speak to the government amendment. Huh. Well, you see the problem that we've got.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to raise these points.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the comments from members opposite and take them in. I would agree with the hon. Member for Airdrie. I will not engage at that kind of level that he has taken it to, but I would encourage the hon. Member for Airdrie and all members to take a deep breath. Actually, you know, listening to my colleagues here today, one would think that we had substantively changed the Magna Carta, but in fact what we have proposed changes out one word for another and adds five new words. So six words changed in this legislation have led to this discussion.

Let me tell you why we have done that, Chair. We listened to Albertans. I know that my colleagues in the opposition might not take this well, but we actually weren't focused on what they were doing. We were focused on what Albertans were telling us. We were listening to Albertans. You know, we were listening to Albertans who were reading Bill 2. They were seeking to understand it. The amendment which I have put forward responds to that feedback that I have received, that my colleagues have received as well on this side of the House.

There are three main themes, Mr. Chair. The first one is to help people understand that a regulatory review is actually a regulatory appeal, and by removing the word "review" and replacing it with the word "appeal" – and I know that leads to several sections being changed because it's there in several places. That's one swap of one word for another that helps people understand that there is a very legitimate set of appeal processes built into this new regulator, and that helps Albertans understand the nature of how this process works.

Now, the other one, which I know all members in the House would welcome, is under the notice of application. We've added the word "public" so that public notice must be provided by the regulator, which is a clarification which wasn't there, which we thought made sense, which we heard from people as well. Instead of just saying that notice must be provided: public notice. Providing public clarification is actually an important part of the democratic process and an important part of the regulatory process. What we're trying to do is ensure that at the front end of the regulatory process all of the information is there. You ensure that it is out there in the public domain, that there's going to be a hearing or there's going to be an application coming through. I can't imagine that any members of this House would be opposed to that.

Then in section 32 we're actually adding to create greater clarity so that a wider group of people actually has standing before the regulator, that a person can self-identify if they believe that they are directly and adversely affected and they may not have been identified by the regulator as somebody that is adversely or directly affected. If they only believe they are so adversely or directly affected, then they can bring that to the attention of the regulator and be part of the process.

With these six words changed, we're actually trying to create greater clarity. I know everybody is working hard to ensure that we deal with the business before the House in a timely fashion and that we do so with the greatest possible attention to detail. We all have work to do. We have work to do. We have all been working. I know that other parties in the House have further amendments to bring forward. I'm grateful to the critic from the Official Opposition, who shared with me four of the 12 amendments that they have under way today.

You know, I've watched public statements by the Leader of the Official Opposition, and I have listened to members on the other side. Until you actually see an amendment in clear writing, you're not sure exactly what it's going to look like. We all are working hard to try and get our amendments into the process, and I encourage members on all sides of the House to get their amendments in on a prompt basis. We have work to do. This regulator is responsible for a big chunk – a big chunk – of the economic capacity of this province. We have work to do. People expect us to deliver on this.

Mr. Chair, I'd encourage all members of the House to move as quickly as they can to get the amendments on the floor so that we can address them and move forward. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, I'm pretty disappointed, actually. You know, I was under the impression that we were all acting as adults here. A little common courtesy. Twice I went and spoke with the hon. Energy minister, went through the bill, all my concerns, everything highlighted, talked to him and said: "Can you explain this? What do you think about this? Do you think we could change this?" He said: "Yeah, you bet. We'll look at it." I mentioned yesterday: "You know what? We're getting these amendments ready. When I go through Parliamentary Counsel and get the actual stamp, I will give them to you." That is what I did.

This has not been through Parliamentary Counsel. There's no stamp on here. Common courtesy would have been to have shared and to have said: "Hey, you know what? I've got 10 amendments that I'm going to share with the House." Give us a heads-up. Let us know. If he wanted the amendments before they were approved, we could have given him a rough draft. But we might as well get it right the first time, like we're trying to do with this bill, get it right, and give you the finished document so that you can see it.

You know, the hon. House leader talks about getting these amendments before. This is the first we've heard about it. At least they had the heads-up that we were bringing 12. We had no idea. The only one that was mentioned to me was C. That was the very first, where they were going to put "public" before "notice." That was it. That's the only amendment I'd heard of in this bill.

The hon. Energy minister talked about consultations, how this bill is great. If the consultations were done and this bill is so great, why are all these amendments coming forward? Maybe it's a little bit of naïveté on my part . . .

Ms Blakeman: Yes.

Mr. Hale: . . . which it is. I'm new, and I thought: we're all acting as adults here, so I will share. I'm still going to be showing my amendments to them so that they have ample time to discuss with caucus and come to a decision. If they want, they can come back to me and say: "Yeah. You know what? This one looks okay. Would you mind changing this?" Sure. We're here to work.

From day one I've said that this bill is good for industry. This bill is something that industry wants. It's something that industry needs. We support the theory behind this bill. We just want to see some changes. We want to see these changes in a democratic process, which is in this House, where we can debate back and forth, and we can talk about it. We can exchange ideas and concerns and solutions to our problems to get it right the first time, not to show up and underhand us and try to pressure us and trick us when, as far as I'm concerned, you know, I thought I was being above board and trying to uphold the high morality of this Chamber.

Mr. Mason: I've got a Christmas video you should watch.

Mr. Hale: Well, yes. And does anyone have oceanfront property in the middle of Alberta? Maybe I'll be looking for some new property.

You know, I hear from the other side how we should be acting, how we have to uphold this democratic process. Then things like this happen. It makes me wonder. Is this all a bunch of talk, all a bunch of fluff? You just come across and do what you want anyway.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. What did you think?

Mr. Hale: Well, you know what?

Mr. Mason: He's new.

Mr. Hale: It's time to change. I may be new, but if it's always been done that way, does that make it right? No.

Ms Blakeman: Do you honestly think I've sat here for 15 years and not tried to change it? I mean, good luck.

Mr. Hale: Well, we're new. We've got high hopes. We've got maybe a little bit more energy because we can sit here till 4 o'clock in the morning. We can do that if that's what it's going to take. [interjections] Well, I know. Okay. I rescind that comment.

You know, this is something I mentioned yesterday when I talked about this bill. This is something that affects every single person in Alberta one way or another. It's something that we need to get right. We need more than two hours in the afternoon to hurry and hash and say yes or no to these amendments. This is something that's going to affect people's lives for many, many years. It's something that needs lots of time.

I respect the hon. Environment and SRD minister for taking the time to do the consultations, but since this bill has come forward, I've received e-mails. I mean, I've got e-mails right here that Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, is totally unacceptable, that this piece of legislation will never be accepted by landowners of this province. This is from a property rights advocate group. I don't know if they were missed in the consultations or if they didn't know about it or what happened. I'm not sure. This is what we're hearing now. [interjection] I'll show it to you after if you'd like.

You know, we need to take the time to get this right. If we hurry through all of this stuff and try to change our amendments and make subamendments and – you know what? Hurrying isn't going to make it right. Hurrying is going to hurry up and get it done. Then we're going to say: "Oh, crap. This isn't right. We need to come back, and we need to fix it."

An Hon. Member: Don't say that.

Mr. Hale: Sorry. I can't say "crap." [interjections] No. That's right, and that's part of the whole process that I'm talking about. That's why I made the offer to give the hon. Energy minister and the hon. environment minister our amendments before so that you guys would have time to look at them. Parliamentary Counsel is doing an excellent job under very, very strict – I mean, they're very, very busy.

Like I said before, I waited till I got this, gave it to you guys, let you discuss it so that we could have a conversation with each other or some debate to fix it. I mean, we're not saying that we're perfect. We're not saying that these things are exactly right, but if we work together, we can get it exactly right. If we're too worried about: oh, you're on the government side; we're on the opposition side – just because the opposition says it doesn't mean it's right. And we can't be saying: oh, just because the government wants it, that means it's wrong.

This is something that we need to work together on because it's something that goes far beyond the walls of this Chamber. This goes across the whole province. It's going to affect people across Canada. How many workers do we get all the way from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island who come over here and work on the rigs, work in the oil field? Lots of them. This is something that needs to be handled professionally and with the best interests of Albertans at hand.

With that, I would like to end with a motion to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 5

New Home Buyer Protection Act

The Chair: We're debating amendment A1, moved by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to Bill 5 I'm hoping this afternoon that we can actually have a good and interesting discussion.

In doing so, I want to make sure that it's clear that the remarks that I made earlier with respect to Bill 2 with respect to table officers were not intended – I heard comments from people opposite praising the table officers. I want to make sure that I was not intending in any of my remarks to suggest that the table officers were not doing their jobs. I was only talking, really, about the work that needs to happen between House leaders to make sure the work of the House progresses smoothly and the need for communication to ensure that if things aren't ready to go, we know that so that we can schedule work that is ready to go. The worst thing that we can do in this House is waste the public's time and money by debating just so that we can buy time.

I did want to also acknowledge, as we move on to Bill 5, that the relationship that I've had with the House leader for the loyal opposition has been a very good relationship. He made the comments – and I wanted to acknowledge those comments – that we actually have been working very well together to date in terms of scheduling business for the House. I wanted to put that on the record as we start the debate on Bill 5, that this House works best when we work together, not to agree all the time on everything. We're not going to agree on everything. In fact, it would be a very boring place if we agreed on everything. We need to have a full, robust discussion on the various aspects of things, but in order to have that robust discussion, we need to work together to appropriately schedule it.

I've been very proud over the years in this House of the way we've been able to work together as House leaders, not always agreeing but working together for the benefit of all members in the House in terms of scheduling bills. I believe that this afternoon we've come to an understanding in the interim of the debate that went on on Bill 2 that we can proceed to Bill 5 in committee this afternoon, that we may have an opportunity to proceed to Bill 4 in second and Bill 8, and that we come back to Bill 2 tomorrow. I hope that everybody will understand that sort of order of business, that the work will be ready.

I do have to say that I am a little bit nonplussed by the reaction to the tabling of the amendments. As far as amendments go, even as far as government amendments go, this one is, with no offence intended to the hon. Minister of Energy, very light. I mean, I was able to read it in about four minutes. You know, they're talking about amending 34 sections, but 33 of them, more or less, are changing "reviewable" to "appealable." That's the difficulty that I have with some of the comments that were made.

But as we always do come together in the full agreement and understanding that the people's business is important and must move ahead, I'm really pleased that we've been able to come to the conclusion that we should proceed with Bill 5 this afternoon, which is a very important bill, Mr. Chairman, for this House.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Are there other comments to be offered on amendment A1 to Bill 5?

Ms Blakeman: If I knew what amendment A1 was, that would . . .

The Chair: I'll read the amendment for the benefit of the memory of the hon. member. Notice of amendment, Bill 5, New Home Buyer Protection Act.

Mr. Bilous to move that Bill 5, New Home Buyer Protection Act, be amended in section 28 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) Regulations under subsection (1)(e) shall be made no later than 6 months after the date this statute comes into force.

That is amendment A1, hon. member. Do you wish to speak to that amendment, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre?

Ms Blakeman: Well, I appreciate what the member is trying to do, and that is to give parameters for how long we could expect to wait to see the regulations come forward. You did say section 28, correct? Yeah. So this is saying that the regulations that the Lieutenant Governor in Council makes regarding a bill need to come before us within a six-month time period.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. That's right.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Good point.

Lots of times – another historical vignette. We used to have an all-party committee that was called Law and Regulations. Before my time, given that I'm so ancient, the regulations used to come to the floor to be debated by the members of the Assembly. That stopped before I was elected in 1997, so we never saw the regulations. Actually, they're easier now with computers, but it's still kind of hard to find out where the regulations are and when they're officially published. Sometimes you can catch somebody in the ministry that will actually send you a copy, or the minister will give you a copy, but for the most part we pass the acts here, and they're gone. We don't see the regulations, and in some departments they won't give you the regulations even once they're established.

There is so much. Every bill I see has more and more references to the regulations, more and more references that "the minister can make regulations on the following," "the specifics on this issue will be made through regulation," et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. What those regulations are becomes really important, and it's a wise choice of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to try and hasten, well, not hasten necessarily but probably, to say that these need to be complete within a six-month period.

My only issue with that would be that I'd like to be reassured by the proposing member that he has discussed this with the minister because what I don't want to see are regulations that are not well thought through. Trying to figure out the unintended consequences of what we do here is always a challenge, and even that is kind of funny. If you read the remarks in Hansard, well, what did she mean by unintended consequences? How are you supposed to figure out what was unintended? Well, true enough, but that's what we've got to do because sometimes when we change a law, there is a consequence that happens way down the road that we didn't think was going to happen. It never occurred to anybody that that would be the result of what was being passed. I want to make sure that in six months it's actually possible to get all of the regulations through that are being considered under this act.

This is an important act for me. I represent the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. I have somewhere between 45,000 and 50,000 people now. When I started, I had about 25,000, so it's almost doubled in the time I've been representing it. At one point I had 500 single-family homes. I'm under that now. Most of my constituents live in either rental apartments or high-rise condominiums.

The effect of this bill is something that is going to be really important for us. We have had a series of condominiums built in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre that could have used this act. I think part of the coming about of this act was my repeated references to it because it was affecting so many people and so much money. You know, I did a big media show at one point a couple of summers ago, dragging all the media down to look at one of the condominiums. Interestingly, with the same builder, in every single one of his condominiums the same thing happened. They all look the same. If you want to drive around, I'm sure you can figure out who the builder is.

What happened to them was that by the time they figured out what the problem was, that the roofing wasn't very good, and the acrylic siding wasn't very good, and the water got in and ran down inside of the acrylic siding and came in through the roof and ran through the skeleton of the building, through the actual – oh, I'm not a construction person – timbers that are holding it upright, it started to rot from the inside out, so rotting the walls, rotting the flooring. The balconies always fell off. By the time they figured out what was wrong, they started to see the watermarks, and the balconies started to kind of pull away from the main structure.

Of course, the first thing you do is that the board approves that you're going to hire someone to come in and have a look at it. You do that, and that costs you money, so that's another couple of thousand that each condominium owner has to fork over. They go through it. They come back, and they go: yeah, you've got a huge problem. The assessments for most of the people in that building were $30,000 by the time the smoke cleared. Imagine buying kind of a nice but middle-of-the-road condominium. You put your down payment on it, and you've got your monthly payment. All of a sudden you are supposed to come up with $30,000 in order to keep your condominium, that you've already been paying on, and now you've got this additional payment.

It was a deal breaker for some people. They just couldn't afford to pay more money on top of what they were already committed to. They thought they were in a certain economic bracket for what they paid, and they could handle the condo fees for the maintenance of it. They just couldn't handle the extra assessments that were happening, and they lost it. So there went their single-biggest purchase. Will this act help them? Will that situation repeat itself? My hope is no, but I will get into some of the details later.

Specifically, on the floor right now is the amendment that the regulations should be brought in within a six-month time period from the proclamation of the bill. I suppose that if the government wasn't ready, they could just put off the proclamation of the bill until they were ready, and then it would all be fine. I've just answered my own question. I'm handy that way.

I am in favour of the amendment that's before us, and I look forward to another opportunity to speak generally to Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to make a few comments, obviously, in favour of this amendment A1 on Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act. I worked together with the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and our staff with some detail on these amendments.

Certainly, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre just related, we have across the city and, really, across this province a significant problem with new-home construction and condo construction that is not meeting the needs of perhaps the weather we have here in Alberta or the structures themselves just not being put up to the standard that they should be.

Quite literally, we have hundreds of people that have been left holding the bag on new condos that they've purchased, and within three, four, five years they find themselves with a bill that is quite difficult to pay off or, quite frankly, having to walk away from their purchase. I was taken by the Member for Edmonton-Centre's comments about the actual bills on some of the places that you had here in Edmonton-Centre. I was watching Glenora Gates, for example, being totally reclad from the outside, from start to finish, a terrible inconvenience for the people in there and, as you say, a $30,000-bill per unit.

Well, in Edmonton-Calder, just behind 137th Avenue, with a very large double condo unit called the Palisades the exact same thing with the exact same cladding and very similar even in the blueprints – right? – with people getting a $20,000 to $30,000 bill five years after they purchased it. In the Palisades it's about 15 per cent of the people that are just having to walk away.

We had terrible, terrible stories from young couples that bought these places, you know, going bankrupt, from seniors that lived in the older part of Edmonton-Calder looking for some more convenient lifestyle in retirement, close to the Safeway, very visually nice apartments, and they turn out to be fatally defective.

I am from that approach coming to this New Home Buyer Protection Act. I looked through it with a fine-toothed comb to ensure that that sort of thing does not happen again. Quite frankly, we need to consider addressing the people who have been left holding the bag over these past few years. It's not just water damage. We can go to Fort McMurray, where people had 45 minutes to evacuate their place – it had to be torn down, and people still paid mortgages on the thin air that used to be a condo up there – or to the place in Leduc. You know, Mr. Chair, I'm sure you've seen that one with your own eyes – right? – the gentleman not following the code at all and, really, committing fraud against the people who purchased that place in Leduc. Calgary, Lethbridge: everywhere I go, I see a similar trail of destruction.

This is a chance for us to make redress for those people and to put their hearts at ease to know that perhaps Albertans in the future are not going to get ripped off. This first amendment that was put forward is to propose that the government has six months from the proclamation for regulations to be determined regarding building assessors and building assessment reports. As the bill reads now, it indicates that condominium coverage begins when a building assessment report has been completed. But, you know, we would like to find more about what that building assessment actually is. Section 28 gives cabinet the responsibility for determining what a building assessment report is, what kinds of documents it contains, who a building assessor can be, what their qualifications may be, and that person or office to whom those reports are submitted.

Again, I think part of the fatal combination of events that left people in Glenora Gates and the Palisades in Calder holding the bag was the fact that these assessments, these building inspections, were not done with the independence and with the authority that should be required to do so.

You know, it's interesting. I did some research on it, and we had independent provincial inspectors up till 1993 in this province. The loss of those independent provincial inspectors – right? – as bureaucrats was a fatal blow to this whole integrity of the building system. In '93 were the massive cuts and downloading onto, basically, private contractors committing this thing. Now, as we're many years later, certainly we want the independent inspectors, but we want to ensure that the independent inspectors and the process that they go through is comprehensive and transparent and that these inspectors do not have a relationship with the builder, that there's a degree of separation and independence during that process.

I think this is pretty basic. We know when they're putting up the cladding on the exterior of these condos that I have in my area that an inspector could have caught that before they went to the next stage or process and not have the balconies tilting inwards so that the water was going into the walls and black mould was growing up through the baseboards and into the floors, where you could do the inspection on an independent basis at each stage along the way before the problems were buried by the next stage of construction.

If we don't fix this uncertainty – right? – regarding building assessment reports, I think we could potentially be approving a loophole that could permit ongoing problems that we saw. You know, it's one thing to have a warranty and the insurance that goes with that, but if you're not ensuring that the integrity of the code is there, it's like buying expensive insurance on a 1974 Pinto. You have a car that is famously known for its dangerous explosive properties. You can put the best insurance in the world on that, but is that really going to serve the best interests of safety and so forth? That's the angle that I'm taking with this particular amendment.

This amendment also requires the government to make regulations pertaining to building assessment reports within six months of proclamation so that this all kind of comes together in a timely manner, Mr. Chair.

Again, this is my first chance to speak on Bill 5. I'm very excited for the prospects and the possibilities of it, but I have some adjustments that I think we can make so that we put something out the door here that we all can be proud of.

The Chair: Thank you.

Other speakers on amendment A1? The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It was nice to hear the positive comments about our bill from the members across the floor. We, too, believe this is an excellent piece of legislation to protect homeowners.

But not to get into all of the bill at this time, this particular amendment is about setting a time frame. I would speak in opposition to that. I believe that we need to just leave the minister and the department to take the appropriate amount of time to get this right, to get the appropriate regulations in place. This bill will come into force on proclamation. It will be proclaimed and come into force. But in the future we also need the ability, Mr. Chair, to make changes potentially to these regulations around these assessment reports as we go forward. Putting these types of timelines in will not positively impact the bill, but they could negatively impact it into the future.

I would ask that we not support this, but I do appreciate the support for the bill and look forward to your other amendments to see if there may be other things coming forward.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Further speakers? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do want to compliment the government, and particularly the minister himself, for bringing this whole act forward. It's been long overdue. It's a very good piece of legislation. There are some concerns that I have with it as the Municipal Affairs critic. The existing homeowners' warranty program: I'm not sure how they're going to relate that to the new warranty companies that come in and what relationship that will have. That's a little bit vague.

Also, there are some concerns we have with the mobile home aspect of it. Mobile homes are typically built in a factory, and they're then moved out of that factory onto a site. What happens with that warranty? If I'm the manufacturer of that home, once it leaves that factory, I'm done with it. I wouldn't want to be responsible for what happens on a truck to a site, how it's put on the foundation, how it's hooked up to plumbing and electrical, how the foundation is built, and so on. That could drastically affect the structure of the building.

Those are a couple of things that I think we need to clarify down the road. I wouldn't hold up the bill just for those things, but I think eventually they are going to need to be addressed.

Again, congratulations to the minister, and I really appreciate his consulting with me, sitting down with me and going over some of these things, before we got here.

This is a sorely needed piece of legislation. I'll get to the amendment in a second, but my colleague mentioned some of the condo disasters that have happened throughout the province, and it's not just one incident. There have been several of them. Fort McMurray was probably the worst one, but it happened in Leduc, it happened in Calgary, and it has happened in several other places. The one in Fort McMurray: I do have some, I suppose you could say, inside information on it as I sat on the Safety Codes Council board of directors. We got some inside information on that situation at the time. I can't get into the details of it because, obviously, it's in court right now.

I have 35 or 40 years in the construction trade, so I know a little bit about construction. Even though I was an electrical contractor, you see all kinds of things. What I heard about that building was terrifying. Absolutely terrifying. They gave those people one hour to get their personal belongings out of that building and get out. They're still paying mortgages, as my colleague said, on thin air. That's the kind of thing this bill, hopefully, will prevent in the future. So, again, congratulations. I could get into a horror story about a house I had built in Calgary, but that's a long time ago.

Back to the amendment. Now, this amendment would require cabinet to have the regulations surrounding building assessment reports completed within six months after the passage of Bill 5. This amendment would ensure that cabinet outlines the rules surrounding building assessment reports: what information is to be included in the reports, when and to whom those reports are to be submitted, and the qualifications and powers of building assessors to be completed in a timely fashion. Anything we can do to clarify the issues that have been raised and to ensure that those in the building industry will clearly understand what is expected of them is a positive step forward. I would highly recommend that we vote for this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be brief. I just want to clarify, and maybe the associate minister could help me understand this. I don't see in the amendment that it says that cabinet could not go back after the six-month period and then change the regulations. I'm wondering why you choose to, I guess, oppose this amendment based on that at this point in time. I do believe that there's validity to what's being proposed here, so if you could perhaps offer clarity around that, Mr. Associate Minister.

Also, I'm curious if the Member for Edmonton-Calder could clarify for me how this amendment will specifically fix some of those issues that we're talking about with the condos? The horror stories are endless, right? How does this specifically tackle that?

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. associate minister, would you care to respond?

Mr. Weadick: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I can't tell you exactly how long it'll take to get these regulations right. I can tell you we're going to work at it as quickly as we can and get them right.

The other thing is that this specifically says, "Regulations under subsection (1)(e) shall be made no later than 6 months after the date this statute comes into force.” It doesn’t say anything about changing them. Throwing that in there and leaving us with, potentially, the inability to make changes to that regulation in the future as the world changes would not be a good thing to do. Regulations change from time to time as the world changes. We need the ability to do that.

We also need the time to get this right, and if it takes seven months to get it right, we’re going to take seven months. When brought out, with all of this done – it’s going to take interministry work between Service Alberta and our ministry to make sure that these forms and the people that are going to be administering them are properly trained and can do the job, so we want to do this right. That’s why we want to make sure we have the time to do it, and I don’t believe that arbitrary dates into the future would be helpful.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. associate minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Blakeman: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills: I listened carefully to what he was saying and his concerns about manufactured homes. I’m just wondering where the concern is because in the interpretations it actually does define a manufactured home and it defines a new home.

The Chair: Hon. member, are you speaking on the amendment?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, because that’s what he was talking about.

The Chair: Okay. If you can try to keep it to the amendment, that would be great. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Then you need to talk to him, not me.

The Chair: I’ll remind all members accordingly. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much.

What is the particular part? Because as I start to read through this as I was researching it for the purposes of the amendment, it’s pretty clear that it talks about a new home in every section, so I’m not clear on what section he’s particularly concerned about that relates to manufactured homes. Even the parts that are talking about hooking things up, where it talks about – hang on; I’ll get it. You know, it does talk about a residential builder, but it also means whoever is hooking the stuff up and doesn’t include this, that, and the next thing. Oh, here we go. “‘Delivery and distribution systems’ include electrical, gas, plumbing, heating, ventilation and air-conditioning systems to which the Safety Codes Act applies and any other system prescribed as delivery and distribution systems.” I’m not quite catching what’s not covered.

The Chair: Hon. member, if you can try to tie that into the amendment somehow, that would be great.

Mr. Rowe: Yes, I will. When a home is built on-site, it’s all done under one umbrella, under one contractor, typically, a home builder. The foundation is dug and the house is stick built from there up, so all of those things – the electrical, the mechanical, the drainage systems, and all the rest of it – are all part and parcel of that one construction project. When a manufactured home is built, it’s built in a factory, and all that work is done with connections stubbed out into the lower floor to sit on a foundation. Once it leaves that building, the person who built that home, the manufacturer, has nothing to do with the hookups on-site. So as a warranty supplier, as an insurance company supposedly giving a warranty, I’m not sure how they’re going to separate those two issues because one can have an effect on the other. Do you need two warranties? I’m not sure how that’s going to be covered, and that’s a concern.

Ms Blakeman: It’s not specifically applying to manufactured homes; it’s applying to the new homes. Okay. I got it.

The Chair: Hon. members, other comments on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Very briefly, the Member for Calgary-Shaw was asking me how this might improve that. I think what it’s doing is that you need the regulations to follow the legislation in a close and timely way. You know, really, without it you are not having the full force or benefit of this law, if we make it a law, without the regulations around assessment. We’re saying to bring those in quickly and timely. It doesn’t preclude the possibility of changing those, right? You can still change them by cabinet or whatever process they have in place. It just brings the full force of the legislation into effect in the shortest possible time, in a timely manner. Let’s put it that way.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on the amendment.

Mr. Fox: On the amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’ve been reading through the NDP amendment here. On the whole, you know, I do like where this is coming from. I’d like to know: why six months and not a year, not 18 months, not three months? I’m curious why six months was picked for this amendment. Is there a particular reason, or is there something that is set out in statute?

Mr. Eggen: Thanks for that. I think we chose that as sort of parameters that are commonly used in legislation, you know, between the process of proclamation and then regulation. It’s following a certain pattern of legislation that is accepted here.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Further comments on the amendment?

Seeing none, I’ll call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back to the discussion on the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I don’t have any amendments to this act. I was very happy to see it. As I say, I’ve been advocating and campaigning for it. I’ve been making helpful suggestions to the government. I’ve been embarrassing them. I’ve had media extravaganzas. I’ve done whatever I can to move this along.

There are a couple of opportunities I want to give here. One of the things that the Liberal act had suggested – and that was Bill 209 from 2012, previous to the election. It’s fun to have a year in which there are two complete sets of bills with the same numbers. My colleague from Calgary-Buffer had introduced the Homeowner Protection Act, and it had exactly the same layout of coverage. One of the things that we were considering was licensing, if the contractor would have to have a licence. If they failed to produce a quality build, their licence could be suspended. They would have to fix that before they would be issued a licence. They could not continue on.

Of course, one of the problems that we see is that an unscrupulous builder can just leave the name of the company and leave the company with no assets. You can sue them for problems like we've been describing, and you can even win according to what the court says, but you've won nothing because there are no assets left in the company. Some of these contractors keep slipping away and not being held responsible. So we wanted a system that would stop that kind of thing, and we had suggested this licensing.

Now, when I spoke to the minister, he had said that they were doing that, but they were going to make the warranty company offer the licensing. So the licensing was not on the work as such; it was going to be through the warranty. Basically, you've got to have a warranty. If you did not fulfill all of the requirements, the next time you wanted to go and build something, you would have to get another warranty, again, through the insurance companies. Since you didn't fulfill the last one, they wouldn't give you a warranty for the next one, and that would stop some of it. I have been trying to find where that is in the bill, so if the minister or associate minister would like to point me to the right section, seeing as we're in a section-by-section analysis, that would be helpful.

I think that when we consider things like the New Home Buyer Protection Act, certainly I can't unweave it from the two other pieces that we have seen fail us. One is part of the building codes, but it's not so much the building codes themselves. It's just shoddy business practices, or it's not clear enough that there's an expectation that it's well built and what some of those details are.

If you want some past examples of where that's failed people in Alberta, we had, for example, the government approve a certain building material in the mid-90s called pine shakes. They were on a list of approved materials that people could use, check-marked, you know, kiss of approval from the government. So they believed that this was a good product, and they bought it. It was substantially cheaper than the cedar shakes. In fact, they were terrible. They moulded; they cracked. The scandal of the 2010s was the pine shakes scandal of the 1990s, basically.

The whole craftsmanship building products, to me, is interwoven with the warranty and one other piece, and that is always the monitoring for compliance and the enforcement of compliance. With any one of those set apart, if they don't have the other two pieces in them, they don't succeed. I think we have to consider them together.

I would have liked to have seen this extend beyond the simple warranty program that they've done here, which is essentially an insurance program, but they're making you get it. Like car insurance, where the government says that you have to have PL and PD. You must have it; it's the law. You can't drive a car without it. The government says that you have to have it, so then the government regulates it so that it is affordable for people because you can't put people in a position where you say that they have to have this, and then it's too expensive for them to have it. Like car insurance, we're now developing a corollary here in the New Home Buyer Protection Act where the builder has to have that warranty, which is, in fact, an insurance plan. The builder is betting things will go wrong, and the insurance company is betting that they won't and that they'll make money on it.

I'm not particularly seeing how this is all going to knit together. Let me just give you a few examples of that. I don't know how many of you, when you drive around, have seen that very common kind of California strip mall design. You can see it from a ways away. It's always got a little peaky thing and often a little circle in it. It's just so California strip mall, and you think: "Who would build that here? This is a winter city."

I would like to see us be proud of the things we've learned as winter people in a winter city in a winter province because we have developed ways of doing things that do take into consideration the fact that we live in a place where it snows and it gets cold, even far enough north where you get permafrost. You've got to deal with all those things. [interjection] Yeah, snowmobiling; that's good, too.

Why aren't we promoting our knowledge of building materials and building construction models that understand and use a winter city's approach? It's another way we could be marketing some of our knowledge.

I'm sure I don't have to prod people very hard to think of some of the things you've seen and you went: "Why on earth would they do that here? What a stupid idea." I'm thinking of those pebbles and glue that were used in a number of sidewalks. I went through university by cutting grass in the summer and shoveling snow in the winter, and I took one look at that stuff and went: not going to wash. The first time you brought along a steel blade on that pebble-and-glue stuff, it broke the pebble stuff up. It just made a mess of it. It worked great around the pools in the California brochure that you looked at. Not a good idea for use in Edmonton or Calgary or even Lethbridge.

It's not just the material; it's also the usage of the material. You heard me talk earlier about the acrylic – hang on.

An Hon. Member: The siding.

Ms Blakeman: No, it's not the siding. It's the plaster. It's the goopy stuff.

There are two kinds of it, cementitious and acrylic. The acrylic was fairly new, and it was much loved. It is still fairly new. People really liked it because you could get vibrant colours. With the cementitious plaster – I hope I'm saying that right; yeah, I guess that's the word for it – it was very soft, muted, pastel sorts of colours. The thing is that with the acrylic, you can use it here. We did develop it well enough. You can use that acrylic plaster, but it has to be thick enough. You can't put it on in a three-quarter inch. I couldn't tell you exactly how it has to be. I can just tell you that I know that it's thicker than the standard.

There are a couple of things that we could be doing to promote ourselves and our own expertise when we've got somebody in the back there that used to build manufactured homes. I'm sure that, you know, the way he built them to deal with our winters is different than somebody would build it in Arizona.

The final point I want to make is how you knit this together with the inspections. You can pass as many of these pieces of legislation as you want, but if we don't have the inspection or monitoring provisions in place to make sure that there is compliance with what's been set out, it's useless. I'm sorry; as soon as they know that nobody is watching them, people are going to do it. They want a profit. They're going to cut a little bit of a corner, and when nobody says anything, they're going to cut a bigger corner. It happens. I want to know that we understand that these kinds of things do need that monitoring for compliance and, more than that, that there's an enforcement for compliance.

Sometimes that enforcement for compliance can be quite innovative. It doesn't always have to be a stick. Sometimes it could be a carrot. It doesn't always mean a fine because sometimes that will just make people try and figure out a different way to do it to simply avoid the fine. To me, these things go together: the warranty, the building codes, the building processes, and the inspection and monitoring for compliance.

Thank you to the government for listening not only to me but to many other people who were quite concerned about this.

It doesn't help anyone that's already owning their condominium. Last plug on this one: we also need to update the Condominium Property Act itself, which is decades out of usefulness. It always was, actually. It was always way behind. Most of the condominium act is focused on a developer building a condominium and at what point he hands it over to the people that have bought it. It doesn't deal with the fact that we now have condominiums that are 30 years old. We now have condominiums that have been converted from apartment buildings into a condominium.

The frustration and struggles that people are having currently with living in a condominium and that whole condominium life are not covered under the current condominium act, and it has to be. We have more and more people living in that situation. It really needs to be covered. I've been asking Service Alberta for probably four or five years. I'm sure I'm going to be told by the minister that they're consulting. Well, the previous minister consulted.

I even had someone on that committee, and it just turned out to be a bunch of lawyers – God bless them – who represented different parts of the condominium community. Some represented the builders, some represented the condominium boards, and some represented the property management companies. But they were all lawyers, and all they did was sit around and talk about the nitty-gritty of it. Guess what? Nothing happened with the committee. The Minister of Service Alberta actually has one of the neatest ministries going because it's consumer protection. I am now going to turn my laser light gaze upon him to be moving that condominium act along because it's quite deficient and needs to be brought up to speed.

Finally – I am way off on a tangent here, and I recognize that, Mr. Chair; thanks for your patience – we do also need legislation on life-lease arrangements. I will not go into any more detail on that other than to say that I've got a life lease. Where's the other one? Clareview, I think. I know that they're coming. They're turning up in smaller towns. They are, really, a living situation that's halfway between a pure rental arrangement and a condominium. But right now there's no legislation that governs them, and they're starting to have some issues about: how are they taxed, what happens when you sell, is that considered a capital gain? They're getting into court, and there's nothing for the judges to work with. So for those of you that don't like judge-made law, remember that the judges can only interpret what is actually written, and right now they don't have anything to work off of for the life-lease situations.

So for the Minister of Service Alberta there are two things that I'm putting on his plate. One is the life-lease arrangement. The other is the condominium act.

Thank you very much to the Minister of Municipal Affairs for doing the work on this new-home buyer protection. I am very happy to support it in Committee of the Whole, and I look forward to discussing the anticipated effect of it, which should be wonderful, in third reading.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on the bill.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to this bill because it really is out there as a consumer protection bill, and I am for consumer protection. I don't think any member would argue against taking steps to enhance consumer protection. In fact, I think bringing forward consumer protection measures for the largest purchase most Albertans will ever make in their lifetimes, their homes, was long overdue. There are some things, you know, that are in this bill that I'm a little iffy about. There are some positives. There are some negatives. The intent of this bill, as I said, is to increase consumer protection for their most valuable purchase, and it's something that I do think we should support.

Some of the positives that I'm seeing in this is that it does propose a mandatory home warranty for all new homes to protect consumers against shoddy building defects, materials, and it gives homeowners a little bit stronger protection if something goes wrong with their new home. I do like that we're also looking to increase the general quality of new homes here in the province. I know that I for one would like to think that if I'm purchasing a new home, I'm not going to have to do any major repairs to it within the next six months, two years, 10 years. I mean, the purpose of buying a new home is not to have to retrofit the thing as soon as you buy it.

One of the negatives here that I'm worried about is: how much more bureaucracy is this going to create? We're talking about a new registrar. Who is that registrar going to be? What is their mandate going to be? How are they going to operate? Where are they going to go? What are the regulations going to be behind this? I mean, we're looking at this from a 10,000-foot view, but we don't really know how everything is going to be implemented.

Are we going to utilize some of the databases that already exist within Service Alberta, or are we going to create something new? You know, I'd like to think that maybe we might get a little extra bang for our buck on this one and upgrade some of the existing registry systems that we have and roll this in with it rather than creating a whole new one. I guess that's the fiscal conservative in me wanting to minimize the amount of tax dollars spent in the province on these sorts of initiatives.

Now, another question I have about that database. It's pointed out that it's going to be publicly accessible. How is it going to be publicly accessible? Is it going to be something that we can just access off the Internet, or is this something where we're going to have to go through a registry office? Or are we going to have to go to land titles and basically do a search of land titles through the SPIN program? These are things that we really don't know and that I'm hoping we will see in the regulations.

Again, it would've been nice to pass the first amendment because it would've put a time span on that. We would know how quickly these regulations are coming out, have them reported back, see it and be able to maybe offer motions and advice if it's something that we don't think is actually going to be in the best interests of Albertans to look after consumer protection here in the province.

Now, I remember when I bought my very first new home. I bought it in 2003. It was when I moved to Lacombe, actually, and it was a very proud moment in my life. This was the first home that I'd owned that nobody else had owned before. I was lucky in that I knew the builder. I had a personal relationship with that builder, and I trusted that builder. You know, it was reassuring to know that they had a home warranty program on that home then. When I looked up in the rafters, I could see stamps on the rafters and on the floor joists that had information on them so that I knew I was covered and that if something did go terribly wrong, if there was a defect in that material, I was going to be protected and I wasn't going to have to come up with $10,000, $20,000, $30,000 to try and fix a home.

For many of us and many Albertans, with the way the price of homes has gone, a lot of us are leveraged way out there on these things. On a $300,000 home for a family you're paying quite a lot of money every month just to afford the mortgage on that. Now, I can't imagine – I really can't imagine – what it would be like if all of a sudden there was a problem with that house, and it wasn't covered under warranty, that there were some issues with the materials or with the workmanship in that home, and I now had to put another $40,000 or $50,000 into it. Where's that money going to come from? For the average Albertan, I mean, they're scrimping and saving and working as hard as they can just to have that house. What happens now? At least now, maybe, with this bill they'll have some recourse. They will have some protection and some ability that they never had before, especially in expanding out the envelope.

I'm also curious about what my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was talking about with the manufactured homes. Who is ultimately responsible for that contract? Do we have two warranty programs that each have to be purchased, one by the manufacturer of that home and then one by the owner once they decide to place it on a foundation? How much more is this going to cost Albertans? I mean, if this is a $2,000 charge for the warranty from the home builder and then a $2,000 charge to the Albertan when they place that manufactured home on the foundation, we have now effectively doubled the cost of the warranty program to that homeowner. Is that something that we want to saddle Albertans with? It's something that I would like to see fleshed out in these debates here tonight.

Now on to the subject of condos. I do have to say that I agree with the Member for Edmonton-Centre on the need to go into the Condominium Property Act. This thing is a couple of decades old. I know that when I was an insurance broker, the scariest thing that I would always be putting out there to my clients was: "What happens if there is a problem with that building, with the common area? It's now going to be assessed back against you. Can you afford that assessment?" Again, I relate that back to when I bought my first new home because when I bought that home there was no way – there was absolutely no way – had there been a defect in that property, that I was going to be able to afford to fix that defect so that I could either live in the home or then sell the home. If there is a defect in a condo, not only are we affecting one family, we're affecting hundreds of families just in one building.

We saw what happened out in B.C. with the leaky condos. It actually bankrupted their B.C. new-home warranty program. Now the only thing that's offered out there is through insurance brokers themselves. [interjection] Which is this. Yes, that's right.

This is something that's scary. Can you imagine that for just one – just one – condo in downtown Calgary the claim back against the warranty program was in excess of $400 million? Four hundred million dollars. If that doesn't get paid out, what happens to those owners? They're bankrupt. There is no way that they can come up with the funds to fix that building. I mean, $400 million assessed against – what? – 100 people. That's $400,000 apiece for a condo that was probably worth $200,000 to $300,000.

What are we doing to Albertans when we don't put this protection in place so that they can have confidence in their biggest purchase, their home, something that they should be able to take pride in, not something that will crush them under burdensome debt and destroy their lives if there's a defect in that condo?

Ms Blakeman: Consumer protection.

Mr. Fox: This is consumer protection. You bet.

I like speaking about consumer protection because there is nothing better than seeing Albertans thrive through their purchase of property. I mean, we talk about property rights in this Legislature a lot, especially in this first session with the bills that we have going on, Bill 2, Bill 8. I mean, these are major property rights issues. We want to make sure that Albertans are protected in their property rights and in their property so that their investments in this province don't bankrupt them.

What service does it do Albertans if we bankrupt them because they don't have the protection when they make their largest purchase in the province, the purchase of their home? We want to make sure that they are covered. We want to make sure that the programs that are in place to cover them remain viable. Again I refer back to the B.C. new homeowners program. When that went under, I can't imagine how many citizens in that province that hurt. I can tell you it would have bankrupted a lot of them.

Now, when we have Albertans here purchasing their homes, we want to make sure that that program is there in place when they need it. We hope they never have to use it. I mean, that was the case with insurance. We always hoped that you'd never have to use your insurance policy, but it was nice to know that it was there. I can tell you from personal experience that that policy was usually the most expensive piece of paper that that person would ever buy, but the day that they needed it, that piece of paper was invaluable. There was no amount of money that would cover off what that piece of paper would do for them. It gives you peace of mind. It gives you the knowledge and the firm conviction that something is standing behind you and that you're not going to lose everything and that you're not going to be left on your own in the times that you need that assistance.

One thing that I would like to ask is: do the companies that are going to be providing these warranties have the necessary reserves to cover off catastrophic loss here in this province? If there is another condo in Fort McMurray or down in Calgary, two or three of these in one year, who needs to claim against the new-home warranty program, are they going to have the necessary reserves to compensate those homeowners, those condominium owners in that case? I would hope that if that happens, those people are covered, that it doesn't fall back on them so that they now have to declare bankruptcy and move, maybe even leave the province, because we didn't ensure that there were necessary reserves behind these programs.

We did do some stakeholder consultations in looking at this bill, and we did talk to the Canadian Home Builders' Association. We're happy to see that they're generally in favour of the bill. They do have a concern for owner-builders selling their homes within a short period of time. They want to make sure that the entire industry is represented and that they have a good name in the province and that they're not hurt by these one- or two-off builders that are out there building a shoddy product and giving the whole industry a bad name.

I mean, I worked in an industry where just one bad broker tainted us all. It was a horrible feeling to have somebody walk in and call you a crook or a cheat or a liar because of something somebody else did somewhere else in the province.

An Hon. Member: It's like being in politics.

Mr. Fox: Yeah, I guess it's like being in politics. It was a good place to earn a thick skin.

An Hon. Member: Or law.

Mr. Fox: Yeah. Yeah.

We have to make sure that Albertans are protected. It's just my pleasure to stand here today in support of a consumer protection bill. Now, I just hope that some of the amendments that are coming forward are looked at seriously and not just glossed over and voted down. I mean, far be it from me to stand up here. I call myself a fiscal conservative. I've been a hard-core conservative from the moment I entered politics, but that doesn't stop me from recognizing when I have colleagues in the NDP putting forward decent amendments that I think in some ways I can support.

With that, I thank everybody very much for their time, and I'll sit down and take any questions there may be.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act, and to talk about some of the specific elements of it, that which is positive as well as that which I think needs some more work.

Generally speaking, I think the intent of the government is laudable in that we're attempting to provide protection to Alberta's new-home buyers. As many other people have already said, it's often going to be the biggest investment that anybody will ever make. It's not only an investment. It's about home. It's about where you live. It's about security. It's about using that security that you get from your home, that allows you to then propel yourself through the rest of your life. That's one of the reasons why, as a bit of a digression, we constantly talk about the need to provide housing for low-income families and families at risk. When you don't have that basic, basic foundation, then it's very, very hard to make your way successfully in other areas of your life. Homes are an investment and also a critical component to the well-being of all of Alberta's citizens and families. To the extent that this bill does provide some protection to those new-home buyers, I think that's a good thing.

[Ms Kennedy-Glans in the chair]

Of course, I'm always in favour of anything that allows for consumer protection. We reside in a province that has somewhat limited consumer protection initiatives relative to many other jurisdictions. We certainly have limited access to legal support should consumers need to pursue their rights in the courts. Heaven knows they probably have no hope of being able to secure those rights in our judicial system right now as it sits, so any kind of consumer protection initiative is a positive one.

But we do have some concerns. The previous speaker talked about how this is, in effect, an insurance system, that it's modelled on what they have in B.C., which was put in place after their horrendously unsuccessful building codes resulted in a disaster of huge proportions for many British Columbians in terms of leaky condos. Ultimately what happened was that the system that they had in place before went bankrupt, and people had no assistance, so now we have this system that they have now, which is somewhat mirrored by the legislation that we're looking at today. I think it's important to understand and to have a bit of an assessment of how it's working in B.C. because it is, as I say, a bit of an insurance model.

The last speaker sounded a little bit like one of those, you know, Manulife or whomever type commercials, where someone tells you that if you buy your insurance, it's all good, and you'll sleep well for the rest of your life, and everything will be perfect. They're just there constantly to make your life better. I mean, I suppose because I have been in that position of trying to extract insurance benefits from insurance companies, I know it's not always sunshine and singing birds.

In any event, in B.C. in the last year, from June 2011 to June 2012, their home warranty program received 1,739 claims. About 574 of those, a little less than a third, were resolved between the claimant and the builder, being able to mediate a solution. Then there were about 161 of those 1,739 where some type of benefit was paid out, and the remaining 550 of them were rejected. I think that adds up.

What we're looking at there is not an overwhelming story of success, Madam Chair, because, unfortunately, there were a number of people that made claims who didn't actually have those claims resolved through the program that they have in B.C., which, of course, is mirrored by the program that we have in place here. I think we need to be a little bit cautious about, you know, breaking out the tickertape parade around this particular initiative.

Now, that being said, assuming that there is benefit to be provided by it, of course, one thing that we need to be aware of that this legislation does not deal with and that others have talked about is the fact that there is no retroactivity to it. We've just come – well, not just now but in the previous eight years or so, I suspect it would be fair to say – through quite a gargantuan building boom. The fact of the matter was that if any of us here knew of people who were working in the residential construction industry in 2007-2008, they knew that most of those certified tradespeople had been drawn in or sucked into the industrial sector, in most cases, because it paid better, and there was a shot that it might be unionized. Those who were working in residential construction often had less certification, less training, so some of what was being built was perhaps not the best thing. That's what happens when you've got booms. The quality of construction does tend to deteriorate.

We've got a whole bunch of folks out there whose homes are now anywhere from four to 10 years old who are not covered by this, so we have some reason to be concerned about that. Of course, we have the examples in the condominium industry and, you know, some of the most obvious examples where there have been some horrible structural failures. Those people have at this point very little to provide them with assistance. Retroactivity is an issue that we're concerned about.

The length of time for the warranty that is prescribed in this legislation is also of some concern for us. There are many experts that suggest that the length of time that's currently laid out in this legislation is simply not adequate to ensure that structural deficits or mechanical deficits or whatever kind of deficits are possible are evident before the warranty expires. It's a problem that the warranty is so short lived. We're giving people a great sense of comfort, as the previous speaker suggested, but the problem is that we may be doing that a little bit falsely. The fact of the matter is that they may discover that they've got this great level of comfort only to find that as a result of this legislation the warranty that they had tucked underneath their pillow at night actually expired about six months before they discovered that they had mould or that the envelope was faulty or whatever the case may be. That's a concern that we have.

Another issue that we are concerned about is the issue of the building inspection and the fact that this act sets up or does not appear to prohibit the practice of having the building inspectors working for the warranty provider. That is a concern because I think that raises the potential for a conflict of interest. The warranty providers, as much as that sounds really good – you know, it's the warranty provider; they sound really warm and fuzzy when you call them that, and I'm sure that that's the intention – really are insurance companies. Relying on an employee of the insurance company to tell you, "Oh, look at me; the people that we insured made a mistake, so yes, now we are the insurance company, and we have to pay you out" is problematic. There's nothing in this act that prevents that, so we are concerned that that's going to raise some issues.

The other thing that I wanted to talk about briefly is just the fact that, overall, what we really need to do – and I know other speakers have spoken to this already – is that we have to seriously look at our building code. Ultimately, a building inspector doesn't look at a building and conclude that the building is sound. What the building inspector does is say: has the building been built in accordance with the criteria that it must be built in accordance with? That's all they do. Often that criteria is, you know, signed off by an architect or somebody else. All the building inspector says is: did they follow the rules? But if the rules themselves weren't the right rules, then the warranty won't pay.

For instance, imagine you're in the situation, you know, 15 years ago in B.C. At the time it was perfectly okay to build a condominium that allowed for a great deal of leakage and ultimate deterioration because that's what the code allowed for at the time. Then the building inspector looks at it and says: "Well, they followed the code. Nobody made a mistake there." Then the person's house starts to rot because the code itself was inadequate, and then the person doesn't get anything from the warranty program.

The concern we have is that if this is not inextricably tied to an increase in the standards of the building code, then, again, there's a loophole that's awfully darn large, that you can, well, maybe not drive a truck through but certainly rain a whole bunch of water through. That's the concern that we have.

The final thing that I want to talk about is the issue of, as I said before, the length of time over which the warranty lasts. Let's say that we're talking about structural integrity and a failure in the structural integrity of the building. If the warranty runs 10 years and you discover that there is a significant breach in the structural integrity of the building that you have purchased at nine and a half years, you're cooking with gas. It's great. If you discover it at 10 and a half years, you're done for. There's nothing that you can do in terms of the warranty.

Now, as I said before, 10 years is a bit of a dicey time period because many people will tell you that 10 years is not enough time to determine that there is a structural deficit in the structure of the house. With condo owners we have an additional problem, and I would like us to consider finding ways to fix that additional problem, so I'm going to propose an amendment on that basis. As things stand now, that warranty on a house starts to run once the first person takes occupancy of that house, once they are certified to take occupancy, and once the title has transferred. That's when the warranty on the house starts to run. That's a good thing. That makes sense.

Unfortunately, the warranty starts to run on a condominium at a much different time, and it starts to run at a time when we are not entirely sure what the relationship is between when the warranty starts to run and when the owner-occupier actually moves in. What we could actually end up with is that, effectively, the person who buys it only actually has a warranty from eight years after they move into the place as opposed to 10. We would like to correct that.

Mr. Chair, I'm going to be proposing an amendment to Bill 5, and I will provide it to the table and then wait for it to be distributed amongst the members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, this amendment will be A2, and as soon as we have a copy at the table, I'll invite the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to speak on the amendment.

Ms Notley: On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview I am moving that the New Home Buyer Protection Act be amended as follows, that section 1(1)(y) is amended by striking out subclause (ii) and substituting the following:

- (ii) in the case of the common property of a condominium corporation, 10 years beginning on the later of the date that
  - (A) a building assessment report is completed as prescribed, and
  - (B) the first unit is occupied.

Then in part B section 3 is amended by striking out subsection (4) and substituting the following:

- (4) With respect to the common property of a condominium corporation, coverage begins on the later of the date that
  - (i) a building assessment report is completed as prescribed, and
  - (ii) the first unit is occupied.

In essence, Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to change the date on which condominium coverage begins. As I said before, currently the bill indicates that the condominium coverage begins when a building assessment report has been completed. But, again, as we've already outlined in speaking to our previous amendment, since we do not yet know exactly what a building assessment report will be because the regulations around that have not been made, because we don't know how many inspections it's precipitated upon, because we don't know where in the building process the building assessment report is completed, because we don't know the relationship between the building assessment report's completion and the occupancy of the first unit, because we don't know any of these things because, of course, the government is keeping to itself massive regulatory authority, which is hardly new – it's what they do in most legislation – because we don't know that, we don't then know the effective length of the warranty that people are purchasing.

There have been occasions where a condominium is completed, where I can anticipate or imagine that a building assessment report would be completed and signed off on fairly early, but then a whole host of other issues arise which interfere with the purchaser and the owner-occupier's ability to take occupancy of that condominium. It's more common with condominiums than it is in the case of a single dwelling, obviously, because you're dealing with a multiplicity of people.

In any event, because we don't have the regulations completed around the building assessment report, the problem is that we could easily find ourselves in situations where people are actually paying for a home warranty – and they'll pay for it perhaps when they prepurchase their condominium, so they pay for their home warranty there – and then the building assessment report is not completed until later. Then the person for whatever reason is not allowed to move in until much later, so the warranty itself is abbreviated in relation to what happens with fee simple owners of a single property.

Given that often condominium owners tend to be younger people – well, not always. I shouldn't say that, I suppose. I'm probably speculating here. Certainly, seniors are a higher proportion of condominium owners. I think I can say that with some certainty. But what we're doing is that we're providing a differing level of protection for condominium owners than we are for single-family or duplex-type residential owners because for those people the warranty doesn't start to run until they move in, but for condominium owners the warranty may well start to run a couple of years before they move in. We really don't know.

The point of this bill, then, is to ensure that that kind of thing doesn't happen. I can't imagine that the drafters of the bill anticipated that that kind of thing would happen. I imagine that they were trying to deal with the complexity that exists around the fact that you have a whole schvack of people moving into one common property and you've got to pick a date and find a time to properly assess: when is the trigger point, and when does the warranty start to run? That being said, there have been countless cases where the building is for all intents and purposes finished and then it deteriorates into a whole bunch of legal wrangling between all the multiplicity of parties that have to be involved in the investment and development of that building, and you can find there being a long delay between completion and occupancy.

This amendment simply seeks to ensure that condo residents are just as protected under this legislation as are new single-residence homeowners. As I said, this amendment simply means that coverage will begin for condos only at the point where a building assessment report has been completed and the first unit is occupied.

I was speaking with another hon. member and wondering whether that even in itself might be too early a trigger. Maybe we should be talking about when one-third of the units are occupied. You know, there's no question that there's some merit to that observation. I mean, in many respects we're kind of lowballing this, at least trying to ensure that somebody is able to move in there. So then a portion of the common legal barriers that exist between completion and occupancy, we can be sure, have been resolved before the warranty starts to run.

This amendment is solely designed for the purpose of protecting consumers, expanding consumer protection whenever possible, ensuring that home purchasers and condo purchasers in Alberta, as I said, the preponderance of whom I suspect are seniors, are as protected as they can possibly be under this legislation, that notwithstanding some of the other shortcomings we've identified under the legislation as it currently exists that we enhance their protection and also treat them fairly, equal to those who purchase single-unit homes.

I hope that members in this House will give some due consideration to supporting this amendment that's being made on behalf of the NDP caucus and, in particular, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. associate minister, did you care to respond?

Mr. Weadick: In a moment. I'll hear some other folks, too.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: All right. I'll give the minister time to come up with something.

I do support this amendment, and I was talking to the hon. member about it a bit earlier. I know of at least one condominium that was built, happily not in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, in which people were expected to prebuy or at least put a sizable instalment down and then continue to pay. So I guess, actually, that arrangement was with their bank. They were expected to prebuy the condominiums. Then I'm hearing people say that, well, they haven't moved in. This is two years down the road. I'm thinking: "Well, why not? Didn't you buy this condo?" "Oh, yeah. I'm still paying the bank for it. But there's been this problem and that problem and the next problem." They've never moved in. I think they might have even changed ownership. You think: well, that's not working out.

I agree that we need to be careful about when the clock starts ticking to start the warranty program, or the insurance program. This is all about timing. This whole act is about, you know: as long as the extension or the warranty or the assistance or the coverage will be for one year or three years or five years or 10 years. I mean, it's all about timing. Therefore, to be saying, "Okay; well, when the last tradesman walks away, that's when it starts," well, the last tradesman walking away may not be when people actually start to occupy that building.

If I can think of at least one, then this is not just a solitary problem. I know it'll be a surprise, but I'm not all-knowing and all-seeing. This problem exists in other constituencies throughout Alberta where we have that time lag. So I actually think it's a very good suggestion that we start the clock ticking when we have someone in a unit. Since for the condominium units you end up buying it yourself and different people can buy their coverage at different times, it's less an issue of when everybody is in and when the condominium association is formed because your coverage, as the associate minister has explained, covers your building envelope but also your share of the common areas.

So that might actually work the way it is, but I'm certainly grateful that it was raised because I had forgotten that timing does really become critical when you start launching these things. It's all about timing and when these things start and when they end.

I would recommend that my hon. colleagues support the amendment brought forward by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview as presented by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. I appreciate the thought behind this because at first when I read it I thought: you know, maybe this is a reasonable thing. Then I looked at some of the issues around condominiums and around how they're constructed and at some of the issues around redevelopment of existing buildings, apartments, that are condominiumized. It starts to not work so well. I'm going to give you some examples. Many of our condominium developments are phased, so you would get a part of the construction under way, some people would move in, and construction continues. There are people living there, but people may purchase units two, three, four years after that fact, so we could've started the clock ticking way ahead of when we want to.

What we've determined is that we're going to use the building assessment report. We're going to include in that triggers for when the insurance can start so that even in a building that's under construction or in phased construction or reconstruction, you could set some parameters around when it actually started for different parts of the building. I don't want to limit it and maybe see it reduced. I think that's probably a very minimum, when the first person moves in, but in many construction cases you might be reducing the amount of warranty available to some of the members by a significant amount if it triggers when the first people move in.

I like the idea behind it, but I would speak against it and only say that we're going to ensure that all the people in the building, in the condominium, both for their private property and the common areas have the full warranty that any private owner would have, which is right up to 10 years on the structure. We don't want to limit it in any way, and I think this might do that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Well, I very much appreciate the associate minister engaging in this discussion and this conversation. I think it's quite useful. Of course, you know, the process for developing a condominium will vary based on the condominium, whether you're dealing with redeveloping what was a walk-up, which is, unfortunately, happening far, far too much in my constituency, or whether you're looking at brand new construction. What I would simply point out to the associate minister in terms of his comments is that the proposed amendment says that it would be the later of the two. It would be the later of either a building assessment report or when the first unit is occupied. So it doesn't mean that it has to start when the first unit is occupied.

If for the reasons that the associate minister describes, the first unit is occupied earlier than it is appropriate to have the warranty commence, then it would be later that the warranty started because of the way this amendment is structured. It's structured to ensure that the warranty starts running at the later of the two options. It ensures that if for some reason there's somebody occupying one part but the building assessment report has not been completed appropriately for the full building or whatever, the warranty would not commence until the building assessment report was completed.

What this amendment is attempting to deal with is the opposite situation, where in some cases you could have the building assessment report completed, but you wouldn't have anybody occupying it yet because of other often indirect legal obstacles that may occur if, for instance, financing falls apart and suddenly the financiers and the developers are all fighting, and nobody takes occupancy because that creates a whole new set of legal rights, so everything is put on hold. In my riding, for example, there has been an example of that, of one condominium that went up on Saskatchewan Drive, a beautiful, luxurious condominium, that actually stood empty for about two years after it was completed because of that kind of dispute.

What this amendment is attempting to do is to protect consumers at all levels and to just ensure that it's the later of the two. Because the rules are not yet clear on exactly when the building assessment report would be done and because it's not possible for us to be sure that it might not be completed before occupancy occurs, or that it might be completed well before occupancy occurs, that's why we're proposing this.

I appreciate the associate minister's concerns, but I think the amendment deals with them by providing for the later of the two.

The Chair: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. We believe that using the building assessment report to trigger this based on the type of construction is probably the best way to do it, but what we will do is take that recommendation around first unit as one of those considerations as we're developing what the building assessment report might impact. That may be one of those triggers that could trigger a building assessment report.

I think the spirit of it is good. I don't want to limit how we can use the building assessment report in various types of construction to ensure that we can get the maximum benefit for the homeowner.

The Chair: Are there other comments on the amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll support this amendment. Again, it has to do with the assessment report. There is some concern that we're not sure when that has been completed. We're not even sure what a building assessment report will be because a regulation has not been made.

Those are some of our concerns. I won't belabour the point. I would just recommend that my colleagues support this one.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Other comments on the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back to discussion on the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Okey-dokey. Well, as I've said, we have a few concerns about this bill. I think I outlined a lot of them originally as I started speaking, but one of the additional concerns that we have refers to mandatory minimum coverage periods for statutory protection under the contract. I have an amendment that relates to that, so I will provide that to the table and wait for it to be distributed.

Thank you.

The Chair: This amendment will be A3. As soon as we get a copy to the table, hon. member, you can speak to the amendment.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I've said before, we are concerned that the mandatory minimum coverage periods outlined and stipulated in this legislation are not adequate to provide full and comprehensive protection to new-home buyers in Alberta. The legislation as it is currently written sets mandatory minimum coverage periods for statutory protection under all new-home warranty insurance contracts in Alberta. As it currently sits, a warranty must include at least one year of coverage for defects in materials and labour, two years for defects in materials and labour related to delivery and distribution systems, five years of coverage for defects in the building envelope, and 10 years of coverage for structural deficits.

Mr. Chair, we have consulted in the NDP caucus with experts who raise serious concerns about two of the coverage periods, at least, specifically one year of coverage for defects in materials and labour and five years of coverage for defects in the building envelope. One year, we're told, is very little time to determine if defects in materials or labour are present if, as is sometimes the case, it takes several months for new-home owners to move into their new residences. Therefore, we are proposing extending the minimum coverage period for these defects to at least two years. Secondly, according to the experts that we have consulted, defects in the building envelope may take 10 years or even longer to become apparent. Therefore, we are proposing to extend the minimum coverage period for building envelope defects to at least 10 years.

Mr. Chair, I had the great privilege of living in British Columbia during the '90s for a period of time. I was much younger there – I was in my early 30s – and several of my friends went out and purchased condominiums during the time that I was there. I still to this day feel some guilt in relation to one friend who I very, very enthusiastically encouraged to purchase a condominium that overlooked the Burrard Inlet. A lovely, lovely condominium: a stunning view, beautiful roof deck, all that kind of stuff. The building itself – I can't remember how old it was now – was not very old. She reached to the very end of her financial wherewithal, and she purchased this lovely condominium that overlooked Burrard Inlet and the Lions Gate Bridge. You could hear the seagulls when she was out on the deck. It was a lovely, lovely place.

Unfortunately, within a year she and her co-condominium owners became aware of the fact that that building had significant leaking problems that had not been discovered in the course of the inspection that she engaged in before she purchased it and that had not been disclosed or people had not been aware of before that was finished. Ironically, after spending all this money for this spectacular view, she then spent, not a word of a lie, two years with the view covered in a tarp. She had no ability to actually see that Burrard Inlet and that beautiful Lions Gate Bridge because of the tarp that covered the whole condominium. Anyway, when all was said and done, she had to spend an extra $200,000 on getting her portion of the condominium corrected.

Mr. Chair, the point is that the building was older than 10 years when she moved into it, not much older than 10 years but a bit, and it was certainly well beyond five years old. Had she spent extra money on top of the premium that she paid for the stunning views and the seagulls and the Lions Gate Bridge and purchased the warranty that is being proposed under this legislation, she would have not been successful, you know, had she been there when it was first built because the leakage occurred and became obvious to everybody well after the five-year period. And that's in a place like Vancouver where it never stops raining, ever, except on that one day every 30 days when you go house shopping, and it talks you into buying the condominium with the great view on that particular day.

Anyway, the point being that it was very clear, and anyone in Vancouver can tell you that building envelope problems do not become obvious, necessarily, within the first five years of construction. Having that in this warranty means that we are going to exclude a number of new-home buyers from coverage by the warranty. We know that the leakage issue is, in fact, a growing problem in Alberta. We've had experts, and we've had architects out there saying that our building code as it currently exists is not too dissimilar from the building code in B.C. As a result, the same vulnerability that existed there with respect to leaky condos now exists in Alberta. We are concerned about this, and we're proposing these changes.

Our amendment is supported by Professor Tang Lee. Professor Lee has been teaching architecture students about building envelopes at the University of Calgary for over 35 years, and he has consulted and served as an expert witness in cases of leaky condominiums and other buildings. He's an expert on the National Building Code of Canada, specifically part 5, which addresses building envelopes and environmental separation. He tells us that five years is not long enough, folks.

If we want this warranty program to be all that the government claims it is, we should make these changes. This legislation should not in any way be a protective mechanism for incompetent home builders or the private companies that serve to benefit greatly as warranty providers through this legislation. In endorsing the spirit of this legislation, let's at least make sure that it is strong enough to protect the interests of the consumers and that the time periods stipulated are in accordance with expert recommendations.

So I ask the members of this Assembly to support our motion with respect to amendment A3, the motion that is being submitted, once again, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. It's getting to be a bit of a habit, but I'll speak against this amendment as well, not because of the spirit behind it. I like the idea that they're trying to get extra. Don't forget that this is a mandatory home warranty program, so this is the minimum. This is what people have to provide when someone builds a new home or condominium.

Mr. Chairman, the numbers that we put in, one year and five years, are consistent. But don't forget that on the five-year building envelope we're having companies have to offer a seven-year option. It's mandatory that they offer a seven-year option to homeowners on building envelope. That's not to say that people can't buy more than this if they choose from their insurer, if they think that building envelope is a big issue, but it drives up the cost of each and every home.

It's a cost issue. We know that we can get this kind of protection for homeowners for about $1,700 to $2,000 per home. We believe it's reasonable. It's a great level of coverage. We aren't even sure what the seven-year building envelope will cost, so what we've asked the industry to do is work out the costs and offer it to homeowners as an option. Homeowners will have the option to say, "I believe going to a seven-year envelope would be appropriate, and I'm willing to pay for that," because, of course, the homeowner does pay for it anyway. I'm guessing that over time you may see increased coverages available, not mandatory but optional, for the homeowner to pick what kind of coverage they want, the same as they can when they insure anything else.

We've set a standard that we believe is appropriate, that's affordable for Albertans, that will keep home ownership affordable in this province, that will meet the biggest issues that we see around timing for mechanical systems, for envelope, and, ultimately, for structure. We believe that the bill as it's set up really does meet those minimum standards that we think are appropriate for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other comments? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the associate minister. I did have a couple of comments and questions on this. When you're offering this product – if you're buying a spec home, the warranty is already purchased on it. So is there going to be an availability for the consumer of that spec home to turn around and come back to another warranty provider to purchase the additional coverage, or is that coverage going to need to be purchased at the time that the builder actually purchased it, when they started construction of the home? Usually these warranties are purchased in lumps by the builders. They're not really one-offs.

I know several in town that are just on a program with the warranty provider, and it's automatically attached to every new home that they build. So what mechanism is there going to be to make sure that the consumer knows that this option exists, that there's an extra cost to it? Where are they going to go to purchase it? I don't know of a product that exists right now within the industry to cover this off.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(4) the committee is recessed until 7:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 6, 2012

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of the Whole back to order.

Bill 5 New Home Buyer Protection Act

The Chair: We are debating amendment A3. I'll look for the next speaker on amendment A3. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have to admit I'm torn with this one. I would concur in the amendment in that the one and five years are probably a very minimum standard for a warranty. I want to say that I agree with the amendment. I know in talking with some of my colleagues that there is a concern about the added cost, and there are recommendations from Professor Tang Lee from the U of Calgary, who has 35 years in this business, who is recommending that this is what we do. However, as I said, I am concerned with the added costs. There are no estimates in here of what that cost would be, so it's a little difficult to get off the fence on this one, but I will.

After a long time in the construction trade I liken this to buying a car. The car salesman says: you can choose a warranty which lasts long enough for you to get off the lot, or you can take the one-year warranty at an added cost.

I will support the amendment, and I know that some of my colleagues may choose to not support it. That's the beauty of our party. We have the right to free votes, and that's important. My personal recommendation is that we would do this. I believe the costs would be minimal. Once you have a warranty established to extend that, I think the cost would probably be minimal related to the total cost of your home. As has been stated before, this is the biggest investment that the average Albertan will ever make, and I think protecting that investment is of paramount importance. I think the dollar value between the two would be minimal related to the overall cost of the home.

I personally will be supporting this amendment, and I would encourage others to do so, too. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I as well am speaking in favour of this amendment. I share the same concerns as most of my caucus as it relates to cost to the homeowner and to the taxpayer and to the government, those sorts of things. The concern that I have as a former real estate broker is that often when a person takes over ownership of their property, it can easily exceed the period of one year for defects and materials and labour. It can easily exceed even two years, but I think two years is a very reasonable option.

More important, though, are the defects in the building envelope and the structural defects. I know from personal experience in owning a real estate company and being a real estate broker that there are situations out there where, you know, there is a structural defect that comes to light – cracked foundations, damage to how the structure was actually created – that is in a time period that would exceed five years, and the homeowner is left with really no options.

Sure, they could possibly sue the home builder, but a shoddy home builder doesn't stay in business anyway. They've already moved on after five years. We've heard time and time again about those home builders that, unfortunately, don't take a lot of pride in their work and go around this province and create homes that are just not up to standard, and five years later they're out of business and gone. The people that feel the effects of that person and that business that has shoddy workmanship may not begin to feel those effects until between that five- and 10-year period.

I also have experienced and have had clients who have actually experienced where it isn't just limited to a major defect. In a really heavy spring they find out there's flooding, and then they call in the experts – and that might be in year 7 – only to find out that the type of cement that was used to pour their foundation or the structure that was created now leaks, and they have no recourse. I think that the change from one to two years on the defects in materials and labour is a reasonable change. I also think that there is some reasonableness about changing it from five years to 10 years in the structural defects.

I understand that there is often a concern about how much we protect, you know, the homebuyer when they're making a private purchase, but I think that if we're offering some sort of responsible governance in these types of things, we need to make sure that we're looking at all options. For most people the purchase of their home is the largest investment they'll ever make. They truly do intend to use that as part of their retirement fund, and then they find out that literally that building is structurally defective or even defective in the materials and labour. Some of that just takes longer than we would normally expect.

I share my caucus's concern about the costs. I think the costs would be minimal, but I do think that to extend the years of coverage for these types of things is relatively minor, and it's easy to show homeowners that we're actually taking a look at what their needs are as well.

So I speak in favour of this amendment, and I thank the hon. member for bringing it forward.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, will speak on this amendment. I think it's a good move, particularly in light of the fact that many condominiums are built in not only Calgary-Buffalo, the area I represent, but all across this province. This is continuing to be a trend that we see and that home purchasers are seeking out. In particular, I think this amendment goes a long way to protecting people involved in those types of purchases as well as individual homes from some of the vagaries of workmanship or the like that may not be quite up to snuff. It would give them some sort of protection from these shortcomings, I guess, in the actual building practices. I think moving to two years would be an eminently reasonable move.

In fact, moving it from five years to 10 years on the building envelope is very important. In my research on this topic the building envelope is probably the most important piece that goes into a condo building and – I'm not an expert on this – may in fact be the most important piece that goes into a home. The building envelope ensures that the foundation is solid and the like, and it's from that that we often don't see any damage to the property for five years. If it is substandard, those types of cracks or foundational developments don't usually appear in the first five years.

For instance, I have a constituent, Maritza. I can't remember her last name, but she was involved in a condo purchase just outside of the downtown core in Calgary-Currie. She purchased a unit in this home. In fact, I think almost 200 people did, and they purchased a brand new residence in this building in 2005. They became aware this summer – that's 2012 – that the building envelope was faulty, that it was causing undue leakage and the like, and that the entire building was flawed structurally. She got a cash call for $120,000 to simply remain in her condominium.

That's a real-life example of a situation where a building envelope was structurally flawed right from the beginning. Make no bones about this, Mr. Chair. It was structurally flawed from the day this condominium was built, yet the damages to the building envelope and the damage that happened to the building didn't come out for six years. If you looked at that file, if you looked at the inspectors' report after the damage became apparent, the inspectors went in and they said: "Oh, my goodness. This thing is flawed from soup to nuts right from the beginning." They identified all of these things. They said that it was a building that was not made with the right materials, the building envelope was shoddy, the workmanship was shoddy, and the like. Needless to say, even with all of this hindsight the damage did not appear for six years.

I would agree with the changes put forward in this amendment. I think, especially in light of the concerns around building envelopes, that it would make sense given the nature of where people are choosing to live, many times in my constituency. Nevertheless, I think they're good changes. I think they're actually reflected in a private member's bill that the Alberta Liberals did on this issue a year ago. I think when we did that private member's bill, it was based on some talks with individuals and condominium owners and, actually, even builders of condominiums, who pointed out theirs is a real talent and an art and there's a need for having not only quality builders – there are many of them out there – but a need for warranties to ensure that those practices are handled.

Needless to say, I think it's a good amendment. I think it recognizes some of the concerns I brought up, and I would urge all members to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm going to rise, and I'm not supporting this amendment. I will explain why. I could easily live with the amendment from one year to two years. I think for labour that would be reasonable. But the issue I have a problem with is raising it from five to 10 years, particularly with distribution systems. The labour should show itself within one year. Raising it to two years, in my experience, would be reasonable, but to have that hanging for 10 years: I would see issues of abuse with the system.

There are materials that last five years. There are manufacturers of material that will actually say: this is going to last you a lifetime or 20 years. For the issue of materials that's not a problem, I don't believe. I worry about quality craftsmanship and that craftsmanship being held hostage for eight years, seven years, nine years out because there's been a shift in some other work that infringed upon the initial work done. I think that what that would do is penalize even good craftspeople, good quality builders and add to the extra cost just because of these extra years.

I've had the privilege in the past of building my own buildings. I've had the privilege in the past of wiring condominiums. I understand the difference in the quality of labour, but one of the things that is missing throughout all this is the initial inspection. I think that's problematic because realistically, when you look at this bill and you look at the amendments to this bill, what we see here is an attempt to correct a problem because we're not properly inspecting these buildings in the first place. We have a hole in our inspection process. I see that not just in dealing with the condominiums in the large cities. We see that out in the rural areas with some of the homes that are being built. There is quality workmanship taking place, yet we still have people building buildings that are going uninspected, and I don't understand why.

If you look at the rules and regulations of any small community, they require that a building inspector show up and inspect, but what we see from community to community – and I talked it over with the hon. member here in my own caucus – is that there are builders who are closing up a building before they even get inspected for structural quality control, before they get inspected for plumbing or wiring. How can that be? Yet, we allow that, and when we allow that, now what we have going on here are the problems we've created.

Realistically, when I look at this, what we're trying to do is put all the onus on the builders. That may be so, but then they have to carry that liability, if this amendment passes, out into a full decade. In real terms, when you get beyond that one or two years, I think it's very difficult to say that it was the quality of the workmanship or it was the labour that was the problem. You might be able to look at the material and go at the warranty of the people who provided the material if the material truly was defective, but the labour portion of this amendment is problematic and troubling. I had the opportunity to talk to a lot of builders in and around my riding who are fully aware of this bill, and they have talked to me about their concerns. They don't like it because it's going to add just a little bit more to the cost that they will pass on to the purchaser of these buildings.

As a whole, I think it's a punishing amendment by holding the labour portion hostage for a full decade. I think that's unfair. I think that's unjust. I think that'll add just that extra little cost also because to insure this going out one year or two years – unfortunately, anyone who's had a car warranty knows that you have the warranty, but as soon as it expires, something goes wrong. I don't get it. It's Murphy's Law. It happens. It's almost inevitable. Maybe that will happen with labour. I don't know. But to have that go all the way out 10 years, to me, is abusive.

For that reason, to my fellow caucus members, I can support the first part, but I can't split this amendment apart anyway, so I can't support the amendment. I can easily support going from one year to two years. That would be reasonable. I cannot support five years to 10 years. I think that's unreasonable, and for that reason I will not support the amendment.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Kang: I agree with the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, but I also support this amendment. I think our inspection process is not really stringent. It's just lax. If we want to have good-quality work on the homes, I think our inspection process should be better than what it is today. For sure, corners are being cut in the inspection process. I know from experience. We have so many builders who are small builders. They come into the business, and maybe four or five years down the road they will be out of business.

I think this is the biggest investment that Albertans are going to make, and if it's going to cost a little more, 1 or 2 per cent, so be it. I know that will give them peace of mind. They will not find any surprises eight or 10 years later where they will be liable and they will have to pay from their own pockets because sometimes the costs are much higher than the cost of the warranty. I support this amendment because this will go a long way to giving peace of mind to the homebuyers.

I'm a strong believer in warranties. I buy warranties on almost everything, and I have used the warranties. I may be the unlucky one. When things go bad with the TV or washer or dryer or whatever, those small things, you can always afford to buy them. But a house: you can't just go out and buy another one because it's the biggest investment.

I think there should be a proper inspection process in place. With the warranties it will be a good idea to go from one to two years and five to 10 years because for five years things may be okay, but in the sixth year problems may occur. It has been happening in the condos. There's a building downtown at 11th and 1st where they had a problem with the parkade, so it's costing them hundreds of thousands of dollars.

I will be supporting this amendment, but I think we should look at the inspection process as well. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

If I could just ask all the members to please keep the side conversations down, I would really appreciate it so that we can hear the member who's got the floor. Thank you.

I'd recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: No jungle stories tonight, Mr. Chairman.

An Hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Bikman: I've run out.

I am against this amendment. I'm a caveat emptor kind of guy. I believe that we have an obligation to perform due diligence.

Mr. Wilson: Latin? Nice.

Mr. Bikman: Bless you, my son.

We ought not take that obligation and responsibility away from individuals. We're grown-ups. In this technological era it's so easy to get online and check out a person's reputation, a builder's reputation, other people's experiences, everybody's ratings of something these days.

I think that the additional cost may be prohibitive and punitive to first-time buyers and to builders that are doing a good job. I understand that discussions were held with builders, and I know that, in the main, reputable builders support this bill as it's been crafted. I'll surprise you on the other side of the House. I have confidence that you've done your homework on this and know what you're talking about when you propose this and that you've balanced the issues, the protection that people need, that consumers need against the needs of the builders and the contractors. So for this reason I can't support the amendment.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to echo some of the comments that have been made here already this evening just since we've been back. As I mentioned when I first spoke to this bill, I recently went through the purchase of a new home. The builder had offered a warranty which is very similar to what we see in this act, and it was quite sufficient. Now, there was an option to purchase more. We had I believe it was 60 days after we took possession of the home where we could take up that option, and it was a charge of a maximum of $250 to double all of the clauses outside the exception of the one-year to two-year. It would take the structural to, I believe, a 20-year warranty. So the options are there for consumers in the current market. I think that, you know, it is reasonable to assume that if someone wants that additional warranty protection at a cost of $250 when they're buying a $300,000 home, that's not going to be a prohibitive measure for them to go ahead and take that into their own hands.

I also agree with what the Member for Rimby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said. From one year to two years could be a reasonable number to insert here, but taking five years to 10 years in the other part of the clause certainly makes this amendment something that I will not be supporting.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm prepared to just make a few comments with respect to my colleague's amendment. The sections outline the mandatory minimum coverage periods for statutory protection under a new-home warranty insurance contract. Our amendment seeks to increase the minimum coverage period for two types of coverage: defects in materials and labour and defects in the building envelope. The legislation as it's currently written sets mandatory minimum coverage payments for statutory protection under all new-home warranty insurance contracts in Alberta.

We've consulted with experts who raised serious concerns about two coverage periods, specifically one year of coverage for defects in materials and labour and five years of coverage for defects in the building envelope. Mr. Chairman, one year is very little time to determine if defects in material or labour are present if, as is sometimes the case, it takes several months for new-home owners to move into their new residences. We, therefore, propose extending the minimum coverage period for these defects to at least two years.

Secondly, according to the experts that we did consult with, defects in the building envelope may take 10 years or even longer to become apparent. Therefore, we propose extending the minimum coverage period for building envelope defects to at least 10 years.

Mr. Chairman, we talked to Professor Tang Lee, who has been teaching architecture students about building envelopes at the University of Calgary for over 35 years and has consulted and served as an expert witness in cases of leaky condominiums and other buildings. He's an expert on the National Building Code of Canada, specifically part 5, which addresses building envelopes in environmental separation.

We want this legislation to do what it is advertised to do: protect homebuyers. The legislation should not in any way be a protective mechanism for incompetent home builders or the private companies that serve to benefit greatly as warranty providers through this legislation. Endorsing the spirit of this legislation, let's at least make sure that it's strong enough to protect the interests of consumers and that the time periods stipulated are in accordance with expert recommendations. Mr. Chairman, I think that's the least we can do.

One of my colleagues suggested a few minutes ago that it would be onerous on those builders that do a good job. I think the logic of that is faulty at best, Mr. Chairman, because if they're going to meet these requirements, they need exert themselves no further. They have provided a good product that will meet these requirements, and there is no additional burden placed upon them. Where it places an additional burden is on those builders that don't do a good job, that sell shoddy products and pass off extensive repair costs onto unwitting consumers. Those consumers deserve our protection, and I would urge all hon. members to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers on the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have a question for the hon. member. I think we're talking two different things here when you speak of envelope, particularly in regard to condominiums such as in the city here, in Edmonton, which are significant in nature. The people I represent, particularly in my local riding, and the builders I represent in my local riding are single-home builders, and I'm trying to differentiate between the two. Clearly, there's a difference. I would hope the member would see the difference.

When I mentioned a punishing nature on the local home builder, I'm talking about the individual who makes their living on their reputation, hires maybe five or six people as the crew, and they build a home. I'm just curious. Would you agree that there's a difference in the envelope of the single-home structure versus the condominium, and would that coverage then have to be different? What I can't reconcile is that 10-year mark. I can't find where that is beneficial to the reputation of the quality, competent home builder versus the construction company that would build a $30 million, $40 million project with hundreds and hundreds of craftsmen, maybe even to the tune of thousands. We're definitely talking about something different.

Again, it goes back to the issue, to me, of the initial inspection, which is required by law in almost every jurisdiction. I don't know of one that doesn't require it here in Alberta, so I will take the presumption that every jurisdiction requires home inspection. I see someone shaking his head; he might get up later.

I was wondering, Mr. Chair, if the hon. member would comment on that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I can probably see that in a smaller community. When people are in the business on a long-term basis, they depend much more on their reputation. I guess what I can't reconcile is that if they're doing such a good job to the extent that it makes this unnecessary, then what is the downside of keeping it?

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much for recognizing me again, Mr. Chair. Many things have been brought up since the time I last spoke, so I'd like to speak further in favour of these. As was pointed out, a one-year limitation on some of the minor flaws, not necessarily minor flaws, is a relatively limited time period to have that type of protection. You're going to have a person move in and, basically, 365 days later have to do an assessment as to whether things have been built correctly. I think going to a two-year period, it would match up, give time for the ground to settle, the cracks to appear, and go forward on that basis.

When it comes to the building envelope, I honestly believe that 10 years, given what experts in condominium and home design say, is a fair number to arrive at. The building envelope is, like I said before, probably the most important aspect of any home or condominium that goes up. The five-year warranty on this portion of the building envelope simply does not allow the time for a purchaser to assess whether any damage is being done. Ten years is what the experts in condominium design and home design are suggesting to go for, people like Mr. Tang Lee and the like, who are recognized experts in the field.

Really, having builders live up to this standard, the ones who are doing it already, don't have a problem. Simply put, they're going to keep doing business, and they're going to keep selling homes and the like and go forward as planned. The people who may have a problem with this legislation are the substandard builders, which are the ones we're trying to keep from building faulty homes and keep from building faulty condominiums. In my view this looks to be a perfect sort of bill in that regard. It will actually allow those already doing quality workmanship to continue to succeed. Those are the people we should want to stay in the business.

I will just take a sec to correct the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on the fact that in Alberta what we have is safety code inspectors. We don't have, actually, building inspectors. My understanding is that what we have is that the architect and the developer get together; they sign off on the deal; the architect, under his insurance, covers the design; and the builder has to ensure that the actual structure, the building envelope and the like, are done.

Here's where things get a little wonky in that process. What happens is that oftentimes a project, say a condominium, is started with the best of intentions, started with the economics in play. The builder gets started. All of a sudden, oh, my goodness, we don't quite have as much money to build this as we thought we did. Maybe some seed sales haven't gone as well. Inevitably there's that economic crunch where they start to cut costs, and they start to cut costs on materials, labour, and the like, and there you have the problems.

In Alberta you can get a safety code violation, but it's not actually a builder inspection. There is no inspector ensuring that this is actually done. The onus here in this province is on builders and developers to insure their workplace, and there is no enforcement out there. I'm just correcting the hon. member on that point.

Given that's the state of the way we run things in Alberta, that the builder and the developer and the architect are on the hook, well, we have to do something to ensure that there are actually rules and regulations in place to ensure that they are doing what they said would be done, that there is a recourse for homeowners and condo purchasers when things go south.

I would say that this is a good amendment. It covers off some concerns that we had referenced throughout the years on this file. I will point out again that the Alberta Liberals first asked a question on condos and protection for homeowners in 1997, that we had a series of private members' bills asking for protection for homebuyers and condo purchasers. In fact, in 2008 an all-party committee came back with a report that stated that homeowners and condo purchasers were not being protected in this province. What we have here is a 15-year drag on getting actual legislation in place.

I might point out, hon. Chair, that the British Columbia government had these protections for citizens of that province in 1997. Things go slowly here in Alberta. Thank God the new hon.

Minister of Municipal Affairs is now on the file, and six months he could rectify this malfeasance that has been allowed to drag on in the Albertan populace for so long.

In any event, I would urge all members to support this amendment and allow homeowners and condo purchasers to have the protections they are rightfully entitled to.

The Chair: Further comments?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. Comments on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I actually have two more amendments that I'd like to introduce.

The Chair: Proceed. If you would send them to the table, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: I will provide the chair with the requisite number of copies of the next one, and he can call on me when he's ready for me to speak.

The Chair: This new amendment will be A4 as soon as it's circulated.

Hon. member, you may start to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, if I thought that there was any chance that this government would vote for an opposition amendment, I would have shared it with them gladly months ago. Pardon me if I've become a little cynical after a few years in here. I urge the hon. Wildrose members to watch the Christmas video. It should be part of your training. Okay.

Mr. Chairman, I move on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that Bill 5, New Home Buyer Protection Act, be amended as follows. Section 1(1)(s) is amended by adding "or" before "relocatable work camp" and by striking out "or any building exempted by the regulations from the definition of a new home." Section 28(2) is amended by striking out clause (a).

For the benefit of the hon. Solicitor General, whose legal fees may not be paid by the Legislature – I don't know – I would like to speak a little bit to this to elucidate and help him understand the richness of our approach to this question.

Mr. Chairman, this section outlines cabinet's regulatory authority, and this subsection authorizes the minister to make regulations exempting

- (i) persons or categories of persons from all or any portion of this Act . . .
- (ii) a building, a class of buildings, a portion of a building or the common property, common facilities and other assets of a condominium corporation from the definition of new home in section 1(1)(s), or
- (iii) a category of persons from the definition of residential builder in section 1(1)(dd).

Are we clear so far, hon. minister? That was just your part. This amendment removes the authority of the minister to issue such exemptions.

Mr. Chairman, we asked Municipal Affairs about the purpose, intent, and necessity of including such ministerial authority regarding exemptions in this legislation. Their response was that there may be types of homes or houses that this legislation does not apply to. For example, in B.C. houseboats are exempted. That's unlikely to be the case in Alberta, but there may be types of homes that simply do not feel the need. With regard to common facilities in some cases such as bare land condominiums, where the roads might be common property but do not form part of the home, the minister may need to make an exemption. On the other hand, in a high-rise condo the common property is an integral part of everyone's home. For instance, the stability of the parking garage located under the building could impact everyone's place of residence; therefore, exemptions wouldn't be considered for this type of common property.

Well, Mr. Chairman, we didn't really think that it was an adequate explanation. Our amendment is based on the understanding that ministerial power to make exemptions constitutes a loophole in the legislation that could potentially undermine the force of the legislation. So we ask: how does an exemption serve to protect new-home buyers and to assure them that all new-home buyers will be served by this legislation? This amendment seeks to ensure that all new-home buyers and all new homes will be governed by this legislation and cannot be exempted from the legislation at the whim of the minister.

Mr. Chairman, those are my comments with respect to this amendment.

The Chair: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on amendment A4.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm also not a lawyer, so I'm going to plead ignorance on this one. Just where it's leading us I really can't say. I'm not going to support this because having just recently looked at it, I haven't got my head around exactly what the implications of this are going to be. In that light, I will plead my ignorance and step away from it by not supporting it.

The Chair: Thank you.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Maybe the minister might want to actually answer this question versus the amending member. I'm just curious as to what would constitute an exempted building. You know, what kind of building would be exempted?

Mr. Mason: A houseboat.

Mr. Anglin: A houseboat. I would call it a boat and not a building. Some are pretty big, but they're still floating. Maybe we need to go back to the definition of what a building is because I can tell you that a ship is a ship is a ship, and they are ruled by Canadian law, not Alberta law.

I'm just curious because I read the amendment. It seems like a simple amendment, but I can't get my head wrapped around what would be an exempted building under regulation. Maybe someone can answer that question and help us understand this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, there are a number of buildings that could be exempted under this. I mean, we're talking about individual home ownership here. This is about people that are going to buy a home to live in. We're trying to provide a warranty product that will allow them the comfort when they invest. Don't forget, 80 per cent of the homes built in Alberta today are under home warranty, so people have been getting warranty or receiving warranty, and our builders are building a fabulous product.

We've heard discussions around inspections. I'll tell you what. Our municipalities do a great job of inspecting. Electrical inspections, plumbing inspections: all that is done at various stages right from when the first footings are poured and inspected by a gentleman on site right to when you hang your light fixtures and they're inspected by an electrical inspector to ensure that everything has been done. Having been through the process and been in the industry for 30 years, if anything most builders feel they're overinspected, not underinspected. So there's great inspection.

But to answer the question, in Alberta we have a number of types of buildings that would be exempt. Work camps across the north that are built: they're utilized for a period of time; they may be moved. ATCO facilities are brought in and moved and taken out. That would be one example. Dormitories. These dormitories could be on campuses or colleges or a whole host of places, but trust me, we don't want our colleges and universities buying new-home warranty for products that they own, that they build for the benefit of their students. Hotels and motels. These are facilities that are built by people. They own them. They build them for a business purpose. This act is not constructed in any way for those types of facilities.

As you can see, there are many, many types of buildings that are constructed here that people use that would be exempted under this act. There may be others that will come up as well that I haven't even thought of. For now, we need to leave the exemption in to allow the warranty to act as it's supposed to, which is to protect homeowners that are buying a home to live in or a condominium to live in so that they can make sure that it is well built.

Trust me, in Alberta we have some of the finest construction in the country. We follow the building codes. Mr. Chairman, I just have to defend our builders here. I've heard so much tonight, but let me tell you: our builders do a fabulous job. I work with many of them. I know many of them.

As a nine-year municipal councillor in the city of Lethbridge I can tell you that we have an extremely active inspection group. They go out. They do plumbing inspections. You must buy permits for all the aspects of your construction on a building.

Within this legislation for significant reconstructions there will also be an opportunity for people to get warranty. This is a wonderful piece of legislation that will only enhance what's already being done in this province at a very high level. That's why the exemptions are there.

Mr. Mason: I'm just a little bit dismayed at that commercial for the building industry from the associate minister who's supposed to be regulating them. I don't think that was very appropriate at all, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, and it makes me even more suspicious of the legislation. There are literally hundreds of leaky condos in Edmonton and Calgary and other centres in this province that cry out for strong legislation and strong protection. For the associate minister just to stand up there and very blandly suggest that everything is just fine and we have a wonderful product and so on, it makes me wonder why we even have a piece of legislation in the first place if things are so great.

Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, we need strong protection for people in condominiums and for homebuyers who are not commonly but often enough left with a difficult and expensive mess years down the road after buying a new product. I think that it would be far better if the associate minister was a little bit more objective with respect to the actual circumstances that many Albertans find themselves in.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm not as insulted. I do respect the answer, but I will say this: if inspections were really that good, we wouldn't need this bill. We have a good bill here, and I'm going to be supporting the bill, but I will tell you this: the inspection process in my communities is not working very well. It's ineffective.

I can tell you right now that across the street from the Rimbey hospital, there's a seniors' facility. It is private, it is condominium based, and those seniors are in trouble. The builder has left. They needed this bill before that building was ever constructed, closed up, and the builder left. By the way, the builder is being sued for something else up in Fort McMurray right now, as he leaves his trail around this province. Unfortunately, had we had proper inspection, we probably could have headed off a lot of that.

I can cite examples in Sundre, I can cite examples in Rocky Mountain House where building inspections have failed us. They have penalized the homeowner. They have penalized particularly our seniors, and it is a problem. That's why this bill is good.

To the hon. member, though. Each of the instances that you mentioned is actually laid out in the bill. They are exempt. So going to my question, I didn't understand why that one clause would allow this sort of loophole, as the hon. member would call it, or any other building exempted by regulation. Someone brought up a houseboat. I still would not call that a building. I'd call that a boat. I was just trying to get my head wrapped around whether that could be restructured so there wasn't this gaping loophole. It had to apply to something as far as some sort of parameters so that nobody could be exempt in the sense of allowing abuse. I think that's what the member is trying to get to.

See, I have one issue with government. [interjections] It's my one issue. Write it down. It is this overreaching parental authority to make rules and regulations to take rights away. That is my one major issue. I may have fibbed because I probably can come up with more issues, Mr. Chair. Again, when I look at laws, when I look at new legislation, I always look at it with a view that any time we pass legislation, we take away a right. That legislation should have a limit. All legislation should have a limit in the powers it gives government. That's what I'm looking for: the limit.

Maybe the member could take a look at it again because I went down and there are a number of exemptions here. They're well laid out, and I agree with that. I was just trying to get my head around: why the one open clause? Could someone explain why the open clause? What was not thought of, I guess? What's out there? That's the question.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, I always get a little nervous when things are included in regulation as it doesn't lead to as much clarity or consistency or the rules being applied in a fair and above board manner. That's not in all cases, but I think a healthy dose of skepticism around regulations is good for not only members on our side of the House but for the governing party as well.

I heard the explanation that oftentimes this was relating to dormitories, some work camps, and sort of the one-offs. They're not condominiums and/or single-family homes if you want to use the definition. When I look at the exemption – and I'll just read from the act: a building, a class of buildings, a portion of a building, and the common property, common facilities, and other assets of a condominium corporation. Okay? That seems to me to suggest pretty clearly that this is applying to condominiums, condominiums that the hon. member from the fourth party indicated were clearly having difficulties. Clearly, numerous condominiums in Calgary-Buffalo, downtown Calgary, Edmonton, and Fort McMurray are there.

The way I read that, unless you can explain to me otherwise how this is not specifically related to the common property and common facilities and parking facilities and the like, I have no choice but to accept this definition as it reads to me. It says pretty explicitly those types of assets. Maybe you want to try another crack at it because maybe I didn't quite hear you correctly the first time.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I understand the member's concerns. Condominium associations and corporations can take many different forms. There can always be some circumstances that you can't foresee when you're trying to build legislation. You want to make sure that you don't prevent yourself from having years before you can actually change the law to adapt.

I didn't even know they existed, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, until about six months ago, when I discovered that I do know a couple of people who live on what they call bare-land condo associations. A bare-land condo association means that there is a lot of collective land that's also included in the condominium association, but none of that would need to fall under a new-home warranty program. So there would be circumstances where you would take some condominium property and exempt it from being a part of the new-home warranty because you couldn't take bare land and cover it under a new-home warranty. That's the idea. That's the only sort of circumstance we would use. I didn't know that those sorts of associations, those types of condominium organizations existed, and I would hate to create something that has undue consequences.

I have no intention and no one in this House has any intention of causing any undue effects to anybody who really deserves home warranty protection on a condominium or general property that's collectively owned by the condo that's part of the home itself, but there could be something that would arise where we'd need to give an exemption, and entrenching it in legislation, preventing us from doing that, leaving someone in a lurch for a couple of years may create circumstances that would be bad the other way. That's why we've created the ability to make some exemptions that wouldn't fall under the new-home warranty.

If you read through here, Mr. Chairman, it doesn't list houseboats as being exempt or work camp trailers or homes on wheels or trapper's cabins or other circumstances where a new-home warranty maybe should be exempted and not apply. You can't forecast or foresee every single circumstance where it may need to apply. That's why most every act – and it's not just this government; it's governments from 1905, when this province was created, that have created circumstances, created pieces of legislation where exemptions can be made under special circumstances. It's pretty common practice so that we can avoid undue consequences to people who, frankly, through no fault of their own may wind up in contravention of the act when we had no intention of putting them under it.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other comments? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I like the bill, and I understand where this amendment is coming from. I think it stems from a concern that a lot of people have when you give sort of a blanket authority or a blank cheque to somebody. I think in the past maybe I and lots of others perhaps had more faith in the institutions of government than we currently have. Some of our fear, my fear at least, is that this could be subject to abuse, could be subject to inappropriate persuasion. I'm uncomfortable seeing this kind of authority vested without some limits to it, and that's where my concerns come in.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: I honestly appreciate the hon. minister's comments. They really actually made some sense, and they did bring some things into focus for me. Nevertheless – there's always a nevertheless – in my view, it could have been slightly better drafted by your draft-makers to reflect some of the misgivings here. I'm not sitting here drafting it right now, hon. minister, and I know you're not either, but possibly something that reflected the fact that it wasn't the actual condominium building that was actually built to house people but the condominium assets. Okay?

I think that would have narrowed this to a certain extent for my liking. It would have alleviated the need for this amendment and I think would have at least given me a little more cause for understanding that the regulation is there for a reason, as you rightfully pointed out. But it possibly could have been worded better to more narrow the scope of what the purpose was than to allow for a relatively broader interpretation of what this could actually mean for people interpreting it.

Those are my comments.

The Chair: Thank you.

Further comments?

I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will move our fifth and final amendment to this bill. If you just let me know when to begin, I will.

The Chair: Send the copies to the table, and as soon as there's a copy at the table, I'll invite you to start your comments.

Hon. member, you may begin on amendment A5.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview I move that Bill 5, the New Home Buyer Protection Act, be amended in section 3(2) by striking out “, and” at the end of clause (a), by adding “, and” at the end of clause (b), and by adding the following after clause (b):

- (c) the new home has been inspected by an individual authorized to engage in the home inspection occupation under the Home Inspection Business Regulation who is not employed by nor will receive payment from the warranty provider.

Mr. Chairman, this is, quite simply, an amendment to prevent a conflict of interest by requiring that home inspectors who make an inspection on a new home are not employed by the person or company that's providing the warranty. The section of the act that is being amended indicates the conditions that must be met before a home can be offered for sale. Our amendment indicates that a new home must first be inspected by a home inspector "who is not employed by nor will receive payment from the warranty provider." Bill 5 right now has nothing to say about home inspections, and at present in Alberta they're a mixed bag. They're either employed by municipal governments, accredited agencies, and/or corporations that provide compliance monitoring services.

New-home buyer warranty legislation already exists in British Columbia and Ontario. It has existed in Ontario since 1976 and in B.C. since 1999. In both provinces there have been major problems, and we can learn from their experiences. In B.C., for instance, there have been problems with home warranty providers who employed home inspectors and then withheld inspection reports from homeowners when a problem was reported or a claim was filed.

This amendment seeks to ensure that homes are inspected by people who are regulated under provincial inspection regulations, the home inspection business regulation within the Fair Trading Act, and are not employed by the warranty providers.

Mr. Chairman, home inspectors who are working for an inspection business must have a licence. To have a licence, a home inspector must first be employed by a home inspection business, be a registered home inspector or a certified master inspector or have a degree, diploma, or certificate in home inspection from an approved school, and pass a test inspection by the CMI – that's the certified master inspector – from the International Association of Certified Home Inspectors Alberta or a registered home inspector from the Canadian Association of Home and Property Inspectors or hold an approved home inspection designation from an approved industry association or a licence from an approved regulatory body.

The amendment will provide new-home buyers with a third-party opinion on the quality of their new home. New-home buyers will not just have to take the word of the buyer and the warranty provider. Mr. Chairman, we need to remember that warranty providers consider the builders to be their clients or members. They are not looking out for the interests of the homeowners because it is the builder who has, first, paid the warranty and joined the membership in the warranty provider corporations before, two, passing on the cost of the warranty to the new-home buyer.

Therefore, it's essential that we include a provision in this legislation which requires homes to be inspected by inspectors who are not employed by the warranty provider but are instead hired by the new-home buyer. It ensures that impartial inspections will be completed, that there is no conflict of interest, and that the new-home buyer will be fully informed about the quality of their new home.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for recognizing me to speak on what I think is a very good amendment. Essentially, it's taken some of the learning practices that B.C. from their legislation has had in place for over 13 years now and from Ontario, which has had their legislation in place for a lot longer, since 1976. It builds on some of the information-gathering processes and some of the pitfalls that they saw occur.

Essentially, this is to ensure conflicts of interest don't exist, to ensure that the one who is providing the inspection is not directly connected to the warranty provider. This seems like an eminently reasonable amendment, one that should be referenced and, I think, would add to the act and really wouldn't be that difficult to comply with. I know that here we've had some debates about red tape and all that stuff, but this is a minor amendment that I think does great value to ensure that a conflict of interest is not happening in this business. We've seen from the examples given by the hon. member that this has happened in other jurisdictions, and we should take lessons from that, so I would say that we should do this. I think it's an easy amendment to accept, and I'm sure the hon. minister is looking at it, reviewing it. In my view, both the opposition parties as well as the government members should accept this as a friendly amendment that adds to the protection of homebuyers.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I can see the concern of the member that put forth the amendment, but I kind of look at this as: is the glass half full or half empty? I choose to look at it as half full, and by that I mean that if I'm a warranty provider, who else would I want to trust to do my inspections to my satisfaction? Would I want the existing system, which has given us many faults, as we have heard in this whole discussion, and is the reason for this bill? Do I want to use those inspectors, or do I want to use somebody that I am employing and I am paying and I expect to do the job to get that home inspected? It's my neck that's going to be on the line if something goes wrong five years from now or a year from now. I'm the one that's going to have to pay out of pocket to fix that, so I would like control on that. As I said, I choose to see this glass as half full, and I would want that control if I was going to supply the warranty. So I will not support this.

Thank you.

The Chair: Further comments on amendment A5?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: I also support this amendment, Mr. Chair, because I know conflict of interest. There may be some unscrupulous builders out there, you know, fly-by-night builders. They may hire the inspectors. They may get the job done and then go out of business, go bankrupt, and I think there will be no protection for the homebuyer because those people are in the business to make money. I think this is a friendly amendment. I think we should all support this amendment because this will, I think, protect the industry and homebuyers equally. I'm going to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Further comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In response to the comments from the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I think that's a very generous view of the interests of someone who has built some condominiums. If they have built a very quality product and they want to make sure that it will meet all the requirements of the act and they want to make sure that there's a thorough inspection, then I agree with them, but that's not what the act is for. The act is for those instances where somebody might just want to hope that while they haven't quite provided the best quality of product, maybe it'll make it and that maybe somebody is, you know, not going to come back at them by the warranty. I fully acknowledge that's probably a minority, possibly a small minority of home builders, but those are the ones that the act is designed to protect against. So it has to do so, and without this, I don't think it will.

Thank you.

The Chair: Further comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I read this, and I kind of go back and forth. My gut is telling me that this is the type of amendment that should be supported. I say that because, again, as I reflect on the experiences of purchasing a new home, when I had my one-year warranty period expire, I paid for a licensed inspector to come and do the inspection because I didn't trust the builder's inspector to actually see everything and/or agree with certain elements that would not necessarily be caught. Having someone who came in as a licensed inspector gave me the peace of mind when my warranty was expiring that everything that was going to be covered was caught and that it was fair.

Further to that, when I told the builder, who came to do the inspection, that afterwards, they even admitted that it's unfortunate that this happens so often that consumers feel they have to go outside of the realm of the warranty provider to employ or pay out of pocket for a licensed home inspector. Again, my gut says that if our goal here is to ensure that we are properly protecting consumers, then I see no reason why not to support an amendment that suggests that these inspections be done by independent and licensed providers.

Thank you.

The Chair: Further comments? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have a question here for the hon. members. When I look at this amendment and I read it through and I put myself in the position of the warranty provider, I could not imagine hiring somebody to falsify the warranty and put me in jeopardy. That doesn't make sense to me. There's a CYA thing going on here. I understand the hon. member hiring his own inspection; I would do the same.

Mr. Mason: Why?

Mr. Anglin: I don't trust anybody, one of those other issues I have with government.

But the reality is that it's a logical, common-sense connection. In my mind I know what the amendment is trying to do. I don't believe it's absolutely necessary. It's problematic in one sense, and I will tell you where I think it's problematic. If I'm the person that's providing that warranty, I want to pay somebody to make sure they're covering my rear end and that they are doing that inspection. I'm on the hook. I'm on the hook to pay if I'm doing the warranty. So if I've got to hire somebody else – I don't trust them. As you just said, you want to trust the person you're hiring. If I'm covering home after home after home as the warranty provider, I want to make sure those things are built correctly and that I'm not paying out on warranty. I mean, I really want to know that.

Again, I won't be supporting the motion, but I'd be interested in some comments.

The Chair: Further comments?

Mr. Griffiths: Just quickly. I hate to say it, but those were some of the most valid comments I've heard. I mean, Mr. Chairman, it's exactly as the member explained. I don't understand the purpose of this proposed amendment. The independent person cannot be paid by the warranty provider even though the warranty provider is going to be responsible if there's any damage and would want to hire the best, most qualified person to find out if there's damage to make sure they don't have to pay out the warranty. They want a quality product being built.

You've got to ask yourself, then: who's going to be responsible? Are you now taking all the new-home buyers and telling them they have to pay for an independent person? It doesn't even make sense, Mr. Chairman. I won't be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Further comments?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A5.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. Questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 5 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Perhaps you could try and see whether anybody would be opposed to rising and reporting on Bill 5 and progress on the bill, too.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 5. The committee also reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That is carried. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 4 Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act

[Adjourned debate October 31: Mr. Scott]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: I have nothing further. We're ready to call the question, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I will recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 23 I gave a member's statement detailing some of the things that I thought the government had copied from our Wildrose platform, and I celebrated their inclusion of whistle-blower protection, which was found on page 42 of the Wildrose campaign platform. Unfortunately, I was celebrating too soon because even when the government does attempt to adopt what should be good policy, they do sometimes manage to find a way to implement it in a way that doesn't quite do the job. So we have before us Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, which, I'm saddened to say, is a rather flawed piece of legislation that I cannot support without significant amendments.

I do want to give a bit of history about how it is that we got to where we are today, and I can't do that without acknowledging my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who over a year ago began the process of putting motions forward to urge the government to adopt whistle-blower legislation. She was even in the process of developing her own private member's bill, which would have been introduced in the spring session. I am, having looked at this legislation, kind of wishing the government had held off and waited for the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to put forward a better bill because I was quite surprised to hear, when the bill was released, my hon. friend say that the government had not worked at all with the Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform, or FAIR.

FAIR is a registered Canadian charity that is run by volunteers and supported by individual contributions. It promotes integrity and accountability within government by empowering employees to speak out without fear of reprisal when they encounter wrongdoing. Its aim is to support legislation and management practices that will provide effective protection for whistle-blowers and, hence, occupational free speech in the workplace. Now, had the government worked with this organization closely, I think they would have avoided some of the unfortunate errors that they have made in this bill. But, fortunately, we have been working with FAIR, and we will be putting forward several amendments designed to be able to correct what we see as flawed legislation.

Let's also remember why it is that we're having this discussion, Mr. Speaker. In the context of the last few years I first became aware of the kind of bullying and intimidation that we saw by this government when I became leader of the Wildrose and had numerous donors and supporters fearful of reprisal in the event somebody knew that they were supporting the Wildrose or somebody knew that they were coming to a Wildrose event. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and I used to have a laugh when we went to restaurants about how the people we would meet would put their back to the door just in case anybody saw them sitting with us because that is the culture that has been created by a government that has been in power for 41 years.

We've also seen that it goes far beyond that. We've seen municipalities, schools, and colleges that feel as though they have to hire high-priced lobbyists or give dollars to the Progressive Conservative Party in order to be able to get grants. We've seen letters written to school boards saying: you'd better be quiet; otherwise, you might not end up getting that school project in your riding. We've seen the Deputy Premier even threaten a group of parents in Airdrie that the reason they might not get their school is because of an outspoken MLA from Airdrie-Chestermere at the time.

This is what we've been accustomed to seeing from this government, this kind of bullying and intimidation. Of course, it culminated with the AHS review by the Health Quality Council and all of the allegations of health care professionals being bullied and intimidated. Once again, of course, the Premier had promised that she would do a full public inquiry into the issue of bullying and intimidation of health care professionals. It didn't happen. But we know that there have been serious cases.

I'll mention a couple of them. Dr. Ciaran McNamee, a doctor here who ultimately ended up leaving this country and going to work down in the United States because of a toxic workplace environment. We also introduced the public last year to Dr. Tony Magliocco, who tried and tried and tried through the proper channels to raise issues he felt were going to cause a serious concern in the diagnosis and treatment of various forms of cancer. He got nowhere when he went through the official channels and, ultimately, once again, ended up leaving this country to go to another country to practise medicine. We even had a candidate for our own party, Dr. Peter Rodd, who was a doctor at Alberta Hospital, who also felt that he had been bullied and intimidated for trying to stand up and talk about certain practices that his superiors didn't want to hear.

Now, the problem with this bill that we have is that we know that this is the context under which we are talking about whistle-blower legislation, because we want these front-line workers, we want those who are involved at different levels of public office to be able to come forward and talk about the concerns that they have without fear of reprisal. Unfortunately, this whistle-blower protection bill as it's written does not go any of the way towards addressing this very, very serious concern.

It can be corrected. There are ways in which we can make amendments to be able to close this loophole, and I'll go through a few of the issues that we've identified and some of the issues that we hope the government will look upon favourably when we're putting forward amendments because I think we all share the same goal. We want to be able to have strong whistle-blower protection. We want to be able to have front-line workers feel that they have an environment where they are respected, where they are valued, where they can bring issues forward without being harassed or bullied or intimidated or threatened or in some other way forced to operate within a toxic work environment.

Now, in question period last week I was a little bit concerned because it seemed to me that the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation didn't quite know what his own bill said. In Bill 4 he said that it allows a whistle-blower to go to anyone that they wish, but that of course is not what this bill says. I want to use that as a jumping-off point because I want to talk about the way in which we're judging the effectiveness of this bill. We're judging the effectiveness of this bill on seven different measures.

The first measure is that we believe proper, appropriate, complete whistle-blower legislation will allow a prospective whistle-blower to disclose anywhere. We do not want to see a highly prescribed process for disclosure of concerns. It may well be that an employee feels perfectly comfortable going to their deputy minister, going to their boss, going to a senior official within their own department, but it could well be that they're actually concerned that the person they've got a problem with or the environment that they've got a problem with does not allow them to go through those official channels. They may want to go to the commissioner as a more comfortable way of bringing it forward. They may want to go to the police directly.

They may want to go to a board if they're with an agency and they've got it overseen by a board. There may be somebody on the board of directors that they feel they have a relationship with and can go to. They might want to go to the media. They might feel so concerned about an issue that they feel the only way to be able to get it addressed is to go to the media. We've seen that before. They may want to go to an MLA. I can tell you that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek receives almost daily phone calls and e-mails from people who are talking to her about the kind of environment that they're operating within and the kind of concerns that they have, the kind of issues they want to be able to bring forward without fear of reprisal.

The problem that we see with this bill is that it creates a highly prescriptive process. It's actually quite interesting the way this is described under Procedure for Disclosures, under section 5. They call it "procedures to manage and investigate disclosures," and that, I think, is really interesting language because it's quite clear that the government is trying to create a process to manage an issue as opposed to getting to the disclosure part of it. It seems very clear – and I think that this is a fair criticism from FAIR – that they want to bring forward legislation that unfortunately will cause employees to have their concerns go into a black hole, and they may never see the light of day. That's what we want to avoid. We want an employee to be able to disclose their concerns wherever they feel the most safe and the most comfortable disclosing it. Point one, they have to be able to disclose anywhere.

Second point. They have to be able to disclose at any time. I am concerned that there are a number of provisions in the legislation that restrict that ability to disclose at any time. For instance, even in the case where we have an employee concerned that if they don't disclose that there's going to be an imminent danger, an imminent risk to public safety, even in that situation the legislation still requires that even after they've disclosed it, they have to go back through this bureaucratic process to be able to make sure that the deputy minister is looped in through every step of the way. I would say that this again goes to this issue of having the security that you can disclose at any time without feeling like you're trapped into an overly prescriptive process.

The other concern that I have is that there is a two-year limitation on being able to go after an issue from the time of the incident. We agree that there does need to be some kind of reasonable time period, but we think that time period should be a two-year limit from the time of disclosure. For a person who has been working in an environment where they see wrongdoing for some time or where they've experienced an environment where they don't feel that they can be open for some time, it may well be that it will take them some time to work up to being able to tell somebody about it. So we think that being able to have this addressed in a timely way is important, and that means that from the moment it is disclosed, you would have a two-year time limit, not from when the incident first occurred.

The other part that we are concerned about – again, we've seen this time and time again with the government – is that it's always on a go-forward basis. When we look at this bill under part 1, section 3(2), "This Act applies only in respect of wrongdoings that occur after the coming into force of this Act," which is pretty remarkable when you think about it. There may be somebody here today, right now, who wants to be able to be protected under whistle-blower legislation because something is happening right now in their department. This legislation prohibits them from being able to talk to anybody about it, to disclose it, and to have it addressed because it's not retroactive. Even though we've been talking about this for some time, even though it's on the Order Paper, even though it's going to be proclaimed in the next couple of months, if something is currently happening today, it can't be discussed because now the bill says that it's going to be on a go-forward basis.

We think that that is a way of trying to actually quash any genuine exposure of wrongdoing in the government, and we don't think that this is in the spirit of what the hon. Premier promised when she started talking about whistle-blower legislation during her run for the PC leadership.

The third way in which we're going to be judging this legislation is that whistle-blowers have to be able to disclose for any reason. Once again, when we do look at this list of wrongdoings, it is again fairly prescriptive, fairly tight, and also focused on only the most serious types of violations.

I don't object to the things that they have on this list. Again, I'm looking now at section 3(1). It talks about if there's a contravention of an act or a regulation under section 3(1)(a). It talks about, under section 3(1)(b), if an act or omission might create "a substantial and specific danger to the life, health or safety of individuals" or "a substantial and specific danger to the environment." Section 3(1)(c) talks about the "gross mismanagement of public funds or a public asset." Section 3(1)(d) talks about "knowingly directing or counselling an individual to commit a wrongdoing." Absolutely all of these things do need to be parameters under which somebody would have the opportunity to blow the whistle.

But we also want to make sure that we're able to address this issue of bullying and intimidation, a feeling like you can't come forward and talk about things that are going wrong in your department; otherwise, you might lose your job; otherwise, you might be demoted; otherwise, you might face some reprisals. So this does not go far enough, and it doesn't actually get to the issue that I think prompted all of the public discussion about why we needed whistle-blower legislation in the first place.

We need to have an amendment that deals with the issue of being able to have protection for disclosing bullying and intimidation, having an ability to blow the whistle if there is a breach in the code of conduct or code of ethics or policies or directives that are occurring as well within a ministry. I think that that is just as important as these very serious violations that would be outlined here.

The fourth way in which we'll be judging this bill is by looking at how broadly it covers those who might be impacted by government decisions. Now, I think the language initially was intended to be quite broad, but one of the things that we're quite concerned about is the ability to see certain exemptions. For instance, it may not cover all of those agencies that do contract work with government. All that we read in the legislation is that it may extend at the discretion of the commissioner. It may extend to all of those different types of organizations that are doing work with almost a hundred per cent or a large share of their funding coming from government.

Of course, we know that there are a whole range of different entities that do work on government's behalf, whether it's our charitable organizations or nonprofit organizations that are administering to children, that are administering to the poor, that are administering to seniors, that are administering group homes. I think it would be an error in this legislation if we didn't extend this whistle-blower coverage to all of those entities that are also relying almost a hundred per cent for their work on the contracts that they're getting from government. It's not just employees when you factor that in. It's not just employees, then, who are impacted. We could potentially have volunteers who want to be able to raise the alarm as well. We think the language in this legislation is far too narrow.

The second thing is, of course, the exemptions for the Executive Council. We think that if there is wrongdoing among cabinet, that should also be disclosed. I think that there needs to be some provision that there aren't exceptions. We all have to live to a high standard, and I think that whistle-blower protection should apply there, too.

But I think the thing that concerns me the most is section 31. This leaves it incredibly wide open. Under section 31 it reads:

(1) The Commissioner may, in accordance with the regulations, exempt any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing . . .

There's that word again: "thing."

. . . from the application of all or any portion of this Act or the regulations.

That's a pretty broad level of power for exemptions.

(2) The Commissioner may impose any terms and conditions the Commissioner considers appropriate on any exemption provided for under subsection (1).

(3) The Commissioner must provide reasons for giving an exemption under this section and must ensure the exemption, including any terms or conditions imposed, and the reasons for giving the exemption are made publicly available.

It seems like an awful lot of verbiage for a section that shouldn't be in there in the first place. We think that this entire section should be withdrawn from the legislation. If we're going to have whistle-blower protection that is complete, that is broad based, we can't be allowing for the commissioner to be able to exempt any person or thing from the protection of the legislation.

The fifth area in which we'll be judging this legislation is whether or not the ombudsman or commissioner is appointed by an all-party committee. There does seem to be a lack of clarity about where this power will reside, whether it will be with the ombudsman or whether it will be independent. I'll look forward to the debate to see whether I can get some further clarity on that. But the main thing is that it does need to be an office that reports to the Legislature. The Legislature, I believe, needs to be able to have the power to be able to provide the oversight to this independent office in order, once again, to be able to give the confidence to whistle-blowers that they do have the option of having all parties able to get the information that they need to be able to support them in their efforts to address the issues that are going wrong in their various departments.

The sixth area that we'll be judging this legislation on is whether or not, when wrongdoing is found, there is an open, public reporting of that. At the moment the way this legislation is written is that the public reporting is only optional on the part of the commissioner. Now, we've seen how this has happened in a couple of instances over the last year. It's sometimes not enough that you have an independent commissioner. We saw that, for instance, in the case of a particular MLA who lost the last election and was able to get an exemption from the Ethics Commissioner to be able to operate outside the provisions of the conflict of interest law. We have also seen the Chief Electoral Officer forbidden by legislation from being able to report 45 instances of elections violations, of illegal donations to a political party. We've seen as well what can happen when you are not allowing the full latitude for an independent officer to be able to do their work.

I worry that in this legislation, because there is that wiggle room – my experience with the way the government operates is that they do tend towards keeping things secret and not disclosing as opposed to reaching the higher bar that the Premier has set of openness, accountability, and transparency. We're asking for the government to reach for the higher bar in this legislation, to raise the bar and make sure that all wrongdoing is publicly reported in a way that is not only annual but also whenever instances are occurring as it's going along so that we can make sure that issues are resolved. Part of the reason why whistle-blowers come forward is not just to be able to protect themselves if they're facing a toxic work environment, but chances are that it's because they see some issue that needs to be resolved. We need to make sure that we know what the issue is, protect the whistle-blower, and then get on with actually resolving the issue that is in that department.

The last thing that we would be looking at is protection against harassment for those who come forward. This, I think, is where this legislation falls the most short, where it is the most inadequate. We look at the cases of these doctors – Ciaran McNamee, Tony Magliocco, Peter Rodd – who all got chased out of the health care system, in some cases chased out of the province or chased out of the country, because they did not feel that they had a work environment where they could operate. They wouldn't have been able to move to a different hospital because of the harassment, because of the intimidation, because of the bullying. There isn't any recourse against those who bullied and intimidated them. We don't even really know the names publicly of those who created such an uncomfortable work environment for these three men, and I don't think that we actually even resolved any of the issues that they raised.

This, I think, was another example of failure. We don't have protections against harassment for those who come forward and do blow the whistle. We have to make sure that if whistle-blowers are going to have the confidence to come forward, the public knows why it is that they felt such a serious need to expose what is going on in their area of work. We need to make sure that they're protected so that they continue on doing the work that we hired them to do.

Mr. Speaker, there are other problems with the bill. As I mentioned, Wildrose will be bringing forth many amendments to it, but I do want to conclude by saying that I am reminded that previously the Premier had said: we either have open government, or we don't. Well, when you take a look at this bill, it's quite clear that we don't. The Premier has also said that we need to keep raising the bar on accountability and transparency. Well, I think that this bill also fails on that count. The government needs to go back to the drawing board on this bill in an awful lot of ways.

We're hoping we'll be able to put forward amendments that can repair the worst deficiencies that we see in it. I would also hope that the government would be open minded about putting this bill forward to a committee, one of the policy committees, so that we can look at it once again, we can debate it through, we can identify the flaws, we can identify the amendments, so that we can fix it. If we can't fix it, it shouldn't pass.

We believe that we need to have whistle-blower legislation that isn't just words on a page, that isn't just a piece of paper, that isn't just something that the government can pass so they can feel good about themselves because they have now got whistle-blower legislation on the books. We actually want to have a piece of legislation that the workers it is supposed to protect feel good about and processes in place where we know that whistle-blowers will be protected so that we can continue to restore the value that we have for our front-line workers, who are doing the work on behalf of Albertans every single day. I think that's what we've got to keep in mind: who is it that this is designed to protect? It's designed to protect those hard-working, front-line, public-sector workers who are doing so much every single day to make sure that the public services Albertans value are delivered in a way that has the highest value for taxpayer dollars as well as the very best service that Alberta taxpayers have come to expect.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's, as always, a privilege to discuss legislation in this House. It is similar in that case right now. We have in front of us Bill 4, the whistle-blower protection act, which is part of Ms Redford's promise to bring forward open and transparent government to this . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the names.

Mr. Hehr: Ah, yes. Thank you.

The hon. Premier's promise was to bring openness and transparency to this great province, and whistle-blower legislation was to be part of that new agenda and that new mandate.

I would be remiss not to say that, you know, not all the new ideas have stemmed from the Wildrose addition to this Chamber. I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek probably remembers, when she was in government, when the hon. Hugh MacDonald, my former colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, first brought whistle-blower protection laws to this Assembly. He came up with a private member's bill in 1998 and championed the cause for some 14 years before we saw any whistle-blower protection being thought of by this government.

I will note that the legislation brought forward by Mr. MacDonald back in 1998, in my view and probably in any objective view, had much more teeth, much more protection for whistle-blowers, much more ability for people to feel comfortable and to bring forward legitimate complaints when they find issues of malfeasance or otherwise while working for a public body. I do note that my former colleague was very passionate about whistle-blower protection and would often talk about it in our caucus meetings and wonder why we didn't have this law in Alberta.

We can also see that this legislation was introduced by the Minister of Service Alberta as ushering in a new era of openness and transparency; in fact, he called it a new bar for accountability and transparency. In my view of the legislation, that is not quite happening. If you're looking at bars for trying to provide whistle-blower protection that actually works, that actually give the whistle-blower protection, that actually allow them to feel comfortable, there are ample examples of this throughout the world. Other jurisdictions have been through this process, have moved forward on progressive legislation that not only gives lip service to openness and transparency but actually gives the words some meaning and justice. You have areas in the world like England, Australia, and New Zealand which have gone far beyond what this legislation has to offer.

I think that's something to be considering. I know the hon. Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs commented yesterday, when they introduced the condo legislation, that they looked at legislation across the provinces with regard to homeowner protection. It's surprising that it appears that this has not been the case. You would think that if we were going to go down a path of introducing whistle-blower protection here in this province, we would look to the jurisdictions that are providing the most comprehensive, most effective forms of whistle-blower protection. It seems redundant to do otherwise.

Why would we want to go with a substandard act or an act that doesn't give whistle-blowers the same protections or better protections in the spirit of openness and transparency, when that information is readily available? You don't have to reinvent the wheel, and in this case this is obviously true. This government didn't do much research, in my view, on what exactly constitutes adequate whistle-blower protection. That is referenced not only by members of the opposition, but it seems to be a common call if you look at the papers in this province, editorial comments and the like, that are all resoundingly saying that this whistle-blower law falls far short of what we expected, of what I think the Alberta public was led to believe was going to happen with the new Premier's government and, in fact, that has let not only whistle-blowers but the general public down in that regard.

I think we can start with: what should a whistle-blower protection law look like? Really, an excellent job was done by Mr. David Hutton in this regard. He is the gentleman who is a recognized expert in assessing these laws as to whether or not they are really doing what they're said to do. David Hutton is the executive director of the Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform, which works to protect whistle-blowers who safeguard the public interest.

We must remember that there are those words "public interest" again. It's easy to talk about the public interest. It's difficult to get a handle on it. In my view, never having been in government, when you're in government, it's easy to want to stifle public interest. Oftentimes they have their own ideas of what direction they should be going in or the like, but I think there's always an opportunity to learn not only from other jurisdictions but from recognized experts in the field.

David Hutton says that you need full speech rights.

As a general rule, whistleblowers must be able to blow the whistle on wrongdoing anywhere, anytime and to any audience, with restrictions maybe in cases of national security.

Weak laws tend to limit whistleblowers' options, forcing them into cumbersome, often-secretive bureaucratic disclosure regimes that, under the pretext of giving them due process, silence them and bury their allegations.

It appears to me that that appears to be what is happening in the currently drafted whistle-blower legislation. It doesn't appear to open up free speech, open up the opportunity for whistle-blowers to bring this up in any form or fashion without fear of reprisals from their boss or their employer or the government. That, to me, is fairly evident when you look at the act.

2. Right to disclose all illegality and misconduct

There must be a broad definition of what types of wrongdoing whistleblowers are allowed to report.

Weak laws exclude acts such as violation of policies, regulations or codes of conduct – effectively blessing such misconduct and creating uncertainty about what can be reported. These uncertainties can enable the accused organization's well-funded legal team . . .

Often they are.

. . . to tie up the whistleblower in legal technicalities until they are exhausted and bankrupt, while the wrongdoing goes unchallenged.

The law should also cover all sectors of the economy, not just government, since private sector wrongdoing can harm the public just as badly as government misconduct.

We don't see any of this in the act, and as was pointed out earlier, other jurisdictions have covered this much more broadly, much more extensively. If we are going to have an open and transparent government, let's do it as best as we are able or as best as other countries and jurisdictions are doing so. This is not being done at the present time.

3. No harassment of any kind

Whistleblowers are typically subject to a wide array of reprisals, ranging from the subtle to the brutal. These include social isolation and humiliation before their peers, being cut out of the information loop with their responsibilities given to others, impossible work assignments or no work at all, false accusations and retaliatory investigations.

We must note that it takes tremendous courage to be a whistleblower. It takes tremendous courage to stand up to a government or a department or an employer or the like when you see something that is clearly wrong. You have to establish protocols and provisions that allow this person to not be harassed when they are making their full and fair disclosure to the powers or to any outlet that will hear their cause and give them their day. However, that does not appear to be in this legislation.

4. Forum for adjudication, with realistic burden of proof and appropriate remedies

Whistleblowers are usually forced to seek some kind of remedy after the reprisals have already begun, by which time they may... be unemployed, impoverished and suffering from stress-related injuries caused by harassment.

Weak laws send truth tellers to tribunals, which are set up as kangaroo courts because the whistleblower has to prove that the employers' actions were intended as reprisals. This is virtually impossible – employers are rarely foolish enough to confess their motives.

In other jurisdictions...

Again, other jurisdictions have already written this legislation. The work has been done. You don't even have to do any more. Just go hit print on your printer, print it out, bring it back here with some comprehensive legislation. It's been done, so it wouldn't cause you guys any more work over there.

... the whistleblower is given a fighting chance by shifting the burden of proof: once a connection is established between the whistle-blowing and the reprisal (e.g., if one followed immediately after the other), the onus is on the employer to show that these actions were justified and not intended as retaliation.

It'd be a similar provision to what we see in the workers compensation legislation that we've seen brought in by this government earlier, where we had presumptive coverage for first responders. This would be a similar type of provision except it would be available to whistle-blowers, so the government is not unaware and has used similar, analogous – not exactly analogous circumstances but similar situations to rectify a wrong where they saw it in the WCB legislation. In my view, they should be incorporating this into theirs.

Strong laws can also shield the whistleblower from being harmed in the first place, for example, by allowing injunctions to prevent dismissal or disciplinary action until the allegations have been investigated. They also provide "make whole" remedies to properly compensate people whose careers and future earning potential have been devastated.

As was pointed out by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, this has happened in Alberta's past. It has happened to members of this House. It happens to Joe and Jane Albertan on a regular basis. If we are going to stand up for these people, we need legislation that actually says what their protections are. It doesn't imply what they are; it says what they are.

5. Mandatory corrective action

Attacking the whistleblower turns the focus away from the wrongdoing, and even when the misconduct is eventually proven, there is a strong tendency for employers to let the wrongdoers off lightly. Unbelievably, wrongdoers often receive promotions. This defeats the entire purpose of whistleblower legislation, which is to deter wrongdoing.

These are some of the essential elements that, in my view and in David Hutton's view, are not in the act, which does not provide for a comprehensive whistle-blower legislation, that doesn't allow whistle-blowers the protection we need in this province. In my view, this is lacking in substance of what we should be striving for in this government, that we were led to believe that under the new Premier would be happening in this government, open and transparent government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions or comments for the member under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I am grateful for the opportunity to speak on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. While I appreciate the hard work that the minister has put into crafting Alberta's first piece of whistle-blower legislation, I have to get on the record that I'm bitterly, bitterly disappointed in Bill 4, and I'll tell you why.

As the Leader of the Official Opposition has said in her speaking notes, I have been working on the whistle-blower legislation for some time. In fact, if you go to the Order Paper, you can find my motion that is going to be debated, hopefully, sometime this fall. I doubt if we'll have time to be able to debate it because of the timing. But I also am bringing forward a private member's bill in the spring session, which happens to be the second private member's bill that we'll be dealing with in the spring session.

I was excited about having the opportunity when I heard that the government was bringing the whistle-blower legislation to the House. I guess maybe I was in fantasyland or had been into something I shouldn't have been because I had a lot of hopes for what the Premier talked about, you know? Well, I'm not a lawyer, Mr. Speaker. She is. I guess my disappointment is – and we have several lawyers on both sides, actually. I can tell you that I sat down with the lawyers on our side, and we've discussed this piece of legislation. I'm not going to go into great detail about what they've said because every single member of our caucus is going to speaking on Bill 4 tonight. That's how strongly they believe in what they don't see in our Bill 4.

It's interesting that when I read Bill 4, the front cover says, "Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act." It's the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency, and Transformation. I have to really ask the minister: where's the accountability in this bill, where's the transparency in this bill, and where's the transformation in this bill?

I think, Mr. Speaker, one of the nice things about being a member of the opposition – and we've heard various speakers before me talk about Mr. Hutton from FAIR. I've had the opportunity to converse with Mr. Hutton since the summer in regard to his vision of whistle-blower legislation. What was so interesting when I talked to David is the fact that he said: well, you know, Heather, the government is bringing forward this whistle-blower legislation, and you know that the Premier has said how she's going to be open, accountable, and transparent, and she's going to govern differently.

We're really quite excited about seeing this whistle-blower legislation, so we said, "Yes, we'll certainly help you" because we think it's important to have a very comprehensive piece of legislation. We think it's important to have a concise piece of legislation. More importantly, we think it's important that this piece of legislation does what whistle-blower legislation should be doing, and that's to protect the whistle-blower.

I was lucky enough to get an e-mail from David. David has, in my mind, no political stripe. I've never asked him how he feels. In fact, I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View was one of the previous directors or volunteers at FAIR, so there is no political stripe. You can't be blaming, "Oh, well, he's a supporter of the Wildrose" because I doubt if he is a supporter of the Wildrose Party, to be honest with you. But he certainly has provided us with a good analogy of how he feels about the whistle-blower legislation.

They have concluded that this is a misleadingly-named piece of legislation which shields the government from damaging disclosures, may be used to protect government wrongdoers, and does not protect whistle-blowers at all.

He goes on to say:

This bill is a backward step because it does the opposite of what it claims, effectively shielding the government from embarrassing publicity while doing nothing to protect whistleblowers or the public.

Mr. Speaker, those are two very, very, very damaging statements. In fact, if I was the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, I've got to tell you, Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, my spidey senses would be going: we have a problem here.

I was a previous member of this government. Your legislation goes through a gruelling process, and I don't know if it's changed. I mean, maybe you can tell me. I know you have your process of legislation where you go through legislative review. You have a bunch of lawyers and your Leg. Review Committee around you, and they tell you about what's right in the legislation and what's wrong in the legislation. I have to ask you, Minister: did you do that?

I've been in this Legislature for a long time, and I hate bloody well saying that because that just ages you, and I've got this young leader beside me. You know, it's like the old chicken and the new chicken – I don't know – something old and something new, something borrowed, something blue, and I'm the old one.

How can you even seriously consider tabling this legislation? I have gone through this bill page by page, word by word, spent my entire weekend, when I was supposed to be celebrating my wedding anniversary on Saturday. I said: "You know what, honey? I'm sorry; I've got more exciting things to do. I'm going to read the whistle-blower legislation." I mean, that really impressed him.

Minister, honest to goodness, maybe you and I should get together, and maybe you and I should read this legislation. Maybe you can explain it to me. You can explain it to FAIR, who's probably North American renowned on whistle-blower legislation. In fact, they get called on whistle-blower legislation from all over the world. If you talk to Mr. Hutton, he'll say to you: Minister, maybe you should look at the Australian model, or maybe you could take a little bit of the model that's happening in the States. He says that this is the worst piece of legislation in Canada by far, and he's very critical about other pieces of legislation that have been tabled in other Legislatures across this country. He said that by far this is the worst legislation in the country.

I was at your news conference where you and the Service Alberta minister stood up very proudly in front of a whole bunch of press and said that this is groundbreaking, that this is leading. I don't know what else you said about the legislation. I'll have to go back. I thought: "Well, maybe we're onto something. Maybe this is an exciting piece of legislation." When the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka were briefly going over the legislation as the critics . . . [interjection] Minister, we've got three critics on this piece of legislation because that's how important the Wildrose thinks this legislation is.

We were all kind of briefly reading this legislation, and we were going: "Oh, my God. Oh, my goodness. Oh, crap. This is a bad bill." I'm reading it. [interjection] Well, I know the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, a lawyer. I'm not a lawyer, okay? I'm really excited to have the lawyer from Edmonton-Whitemud get up and give his legal opinion on Bill 4. I'm not a lawyer, so I think that's important.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I think what Albertans were expecting was a big step in this piece of legislation. It was the first time that we were going to allow government employees, servants of the public, to come forward when they know of lawbreaking and gross mismanagement in the public sector because they understand, our hard-working front-line workers, the vital need for democracy in this province.

Checks and balances in this province aren't just about the governing party and the opposition party or the provincial government and the federal government. It also includes civic-minded people coming forward, brave enough to say: enough is enough on illegal behaviour in our government.

I have to tell you that I admire whistle-blowers. I admire their bravery in the face of the governing party. I've been in government, and I've been in the opposition. I've been on the front bench. I've been on the backbench. I've been on the side bench so far outside that one of my constituents asked me if I was going to be in the men's washroom in the next move. I know how it feels. I absolutely know how it feels, honestly, Mr. Speaker, to be in the wrath of government. I know that when you say to yourself, "Enough is enough," enough is enough.

When I made my decision to change parties, it wasn't easy. I've spoken about that. I faced threats. I faced intimidation. I lost relationships with people that I thought were close friends. Some of those people, Mr. Speaker, have not spoken to me to this day. But you know what? I made the right decision, and I made the decision on the path of the people that I serve.

I can't imagine – I cannot imagine – how a government employee would feel confronting their bosses, putting their jobs on the line by speaking out about what they believe in and what they think is right. They're not only risking a paycheque, a job. They are likely risking their livelihood and their career. If you work for the government of Alberta and blow the whistle, your career is, effectively, over. It's their way, or it's the highway.

I think of people like Dr. Tony Magliocco, respected around the world, not only in this province but around the world. He worked hard every day to ensure that Albertans were safe. He did what he thought was right. He took issue with how cancer care, in his opinion, was being degraded to save a few pennies. Diagnoses could be made incorrectly, just like in other Canadian provinces that made the same mistake. You know what? Predictably, his contract wasn't renewed. Was it because he wasn't skilled enough? No. His skills allowed him to be in charge in the first place. It was because he spoke up. He had the confidence and the bravery to speak up for the cancer patients in this province.

Where is he now? He's in Florida. He is at one of the premier cancer clinics in the world now. He couldn't find a job here, and now all Albertans are suffering because people in this government couldn't handle what he had to say. Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, that is disgusting.

In light of Dr. Magliocco's personal experience, as I indicated earlier, I was excited about the whistle-blower protection act. I really was. It's about time, but, Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, I'm truly disappointed in the content of this bill. There are so many flaws that I'll run out of time mentioning them. The leader has spoken about some of the flaws in the bill. I can guarantee you that we are going to bring forward, this party, many amendments to try and band-aid the bill so that we can protect the people who truly want to do the right thing, and that's to blow the whistle on this government.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was an article on October 23 that said how the whistle-blower minister would blow the whistle, and bizarrely he said that instead of going to the whistle-blower official, he would go straight to the Ethics Commissioner. So you had the minister who actually put forward this legislation saying that he wouldn't even go to the whistle-blower commissioner. I'm just wondering what your thoughts are on that, whether or not that just shows another flaw in the legislation.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I mean, if you have a minister of the Crown speak and he's asked about how he would deal with whistle-blowing and he thinks he goes to the Ethics Commissioner, I think there are two mistakes here. First of all, he blatantly is saying that he doesn't support his own whistle-blower legislation. There's just no question.

Secondly, I don't think the Ethics Commissioner is somewhere that is possibly the right place to go. I'm sure the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin is listening, and I'm sure, knowing he's the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, that we're going to ask him to do the right thing. The leader has said that maybe he'll consider moving this to a committee, but those are things that I think need to – as we move forward, we're anxious as the Wildrose to have the opportunity to hear what the government has to say. There are 62 of them; there are 17 of us. I think it's key. [interjection] Sorry; 61. [interjection] I can see Edmonton-Gold Bar is just getting really excited about the debate, and I can hardly wait to hear him get up because I know he's very passionate and concerned about his constituents. I can't wait to hear him stand up and speak in support of this legislation or, for example, maybe recognize the errors of this legislation. I, quite frankly, look forward to the debate.

Are there other comments or questions under 29(2)(a)?

Mrs. Towle: I would just like to ask the hon. member: when she was the minister of children and family services and also the Sol Gen of this fine province, did she ever run across a direct opportunity where people wanted to come forward and knew for sure they would lose their job? If she could explain how those people felt about that.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, I have to say that I was very, very fortunate with the people that worked for me in the Solicitor General and the ministry of children's services. We had an open-door policy, and the open-door policy was the fact that if there was a concern where they were dealing with the ministry, then they knew that they could come to the minister without any fear of reprisal. I had the opportunity on several occasions when people that worked for me in the department came forward and brought a concern to me, and I think I dealt with it in a very fair way. Will that same thing happen at this particular time? I doubt it. I mean, we've seen over and over and over again what's happening in our health industry.

I can tell you, and the leader has mentioned it, that we have had – I might have a day go by that I don't get a call. But I can tell you that I'm considerably busy, as you are, Member, as the Seniors critic now. You know how many concerns and complaints that we get on a daily basis where they want to talk. I mean, I have spent so much time talking to the wonderful doctors and health care professionals in this province. We have given our word that we're going to fight on their behalf so that the bullying and intimidation in this province will come to a stop.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this bill, which is Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act.

Before I begin, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to announce the re-election of President Barack Obama in the United States election. He's now passed 270 electoral votes. I think that's good. There's a marked lack of enthusiasm from my Wildrose colleagues and, frankly, over there. There are a few closet progressives left over on that side.

Mr. Speaker, when I was first elected in 1989 to city council, I dealt with some individuals who were whistle-blowers. One was an engineer that worked for the city, who talked to me about how a major sewer project worth millions of dollars was being constructed. It was to replace an old one, but the old one was actually in good condition.

Another person came to me, a welder, just a welder.

Mrs. Forsyth: Just a welder?

Mr. Mason: Well, he was pretty low. What I mean by that is that he was at the bottom of the hierarchy.

An Hon. Member: He wasn't a lawyer.

Mr. Mason: He was not a lawyer. No, he wasn't.

He told me about a water main that was built in the west end in Edmonton that had been improperly installed, and the result was that it would rust through within 10 or 15 years. They actually drained that water line, because it had already been put in service, and right where he said the faulty construction was, it was.

They had something in common with other whistle-blowers, and I learned a valuable lesson. They were fired, Mr. Speaker, and I've seen that pattern repeat itself throughout my public career. It's been mentioned that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View was fired, other doctors were fired, people who have exposed illegal Conservative fundraising tactics have lost their jobs. It seems to be a pretty standard consequence of people who are whistle-blowers.

This government, when it was elected, purported to be open and transparent and was going to show Albertans that it was possible to be a progressive Conservative. That was what the Premier promised, and she even went so far as to appoint an Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Reporters asked me about that. Isn't that evidence, they said, that this Premier is actually interested in transparency and accountability? I said: "Well, you know, I've been here a little while, and I've heard different Premiers talk about the importance of transparency and accountability. They talk about it a lot, but they don't actually do it. Nothing really changes in terms of the culture."

Then why appoint an associate minister? Well, in my view, if the government simply wanted to be transparent and accountable, it would just do so. It would just do it. You don't need to appoint a minister and a staff and have all of those costs in order to make your government accountable and transparent if you lead by example. Why do you need it, then? Well, it's an interesting question. I have a theory. It's just a theory. If you want to look like you're transparent and accountable but make sure that when push comes to shove, you really aren't, you actually need a bureaucracy to do that. I think that's actually where we're at with this particular government in respect to that.

Mr. Speaker, this is a really bad piece of legislation. It purports to be a whistle-blower protection act, but it's actually a whistle-blower management act. It's a way to manage whistle-blowers so that they can't do damage.

Mr. Mason: That's exactly what it is. So they can take a whistle-blower, and they can take him or her and put them through certain channels and so on, and you know that in the end they're not going to do any damage to the government.

I'm prepared to go through some of the things that are wrong with this act. Only public-sector workers are covered. Private-sector workers need protection as well because, as we know, the vast majority of economic activity in our society is still carried out by the private sector, and all of that activity can produce harm if it is not done in the interests of the public. There's no coverage whatsoever for private-sector workers, and it's a huge shortcoming in a province with many government contractors and persistent issues around the contracting out or privatization of public functions. The commissioner, for example, for any reason he sees as valid can exempt workers from coverage in the bill.

Under section 19 the bill makes it clear that the commissioner is not obliged to investigate any disclosure. There is a complete lack of ability for individuals to appeal a decision of the commissioner. There is no access to the courts and no possibility for a judicial review.

Section 52 clearly states that "no proceeding or decision of the Commissioner shall be challenged, reviewed, quashed" or questioned by any court. Mr. Speaker, that's completely unacceptable because strong and correct whistle-blower protection always provides avenues in addition to access to the courts, not instead of access to the courts.

The provision set out for annual reporting by the commissioner and the chief officers is weak. It's worse than the federal law, which requires disclosure to Parliament within a reasonable time frame. The commissioner doesn't need to disclose many details, beyond annual statistics, to the Legislature, and there's no clear process for disclosure to the public. The commissioner may – and that's may, not shall – publish a public report. He's not obliged to do so.

There is no criteria given for the exemption of employees or public entities from coverage under the act. Sweeping exemption powers allow a commissioner to freely designate certain people, departments, offices, and so on as above or below the law. That's completely unacceptable as it erodes the scope of coverage of this act.

Mr. Speaker, in the U.K. the whistle-blower act focuses on remedies for whistle-blowers and provides that compensation will be given to whistle-blowers. In other words, the whistle-blower in that legislation must be made whole from the damages suffered from the whistle-blowing process. This bill does not have anything whatsoever that protects and compensates the whistle-blower. It's the most glaring evidence that this bill is not about whistle-blower protection; this is about government's protection from whistle-blowers.

Many whistle-blowers lose their jobs and face immense legal and other costs, so it's essential that the bill have robust details regarding remedies in order to make it an effective law for whistle-blower protection.

Mr. Speaker, the strongest provisions are in Australian law. If the bureaucracy refuses to investigate, the whistle-blower has the right to go public and be protected.

Strong whistle-blower protection must turn delay tactics on their head, especially considering the limitations in this bill and the prosecution timelines. There should be no restraints on going beyond internal measures. The validity of the disclosure can be assessed after the disclosure has been made, but whistle-blowers must feel comfortable going public if necessary.

The commissioner's annual report to the Legislature will not provide enough information for the public and will likely be filled with empty statistics. Details missing will likely include things like departments and individuals involved in investigations, remedies sought and awarded, penalties to departments and/or to individuals, and the specific steps taken to remedy any wrongdoing. The secrecy throughout this bill, especially when it comes to the internal disclosure process, will silence whistle-blowers and intimidate those who do not feel comfortable going through internal processes.

There's a monopoly of control over this process, under the control of one person, the commissioner. No appeals to the courts are possible, no accountability of the commissioner to any other officer other than annual reports to the Legislature. As a result, the commissioner can effectively shield the government from whistle-blowers.

Mr. Speaker, governments historically use different strategies to cripple whistle-blowers. There's quite a bit of literature on this. Often the provisions set out in whistle-blower legislation actually enable the government to do the opposite of encouraging whistle-blowers in the name of the public interest. Governments use the following to protect themselves from whistle-blowers: one, no teeth in the law itself; two, inadequate resources given to people responsible for enforcing the legislation; three, appointment of the wrong person to the office of the commissioner; and four, setting time limits for investigation. In this case, prosecution can't take place later than two years after the alleged offence was committed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this is a terrible piece of legislation. This is a piece of legislation that this government should be ashamed of and which I urge the government to withdraw. I know that the Wildrose has said they've got multiple amendments. We know what's going to happen to those. I think we could all save a whole lot of time if the government would just withdraw this deplorable piece of misnamed legislation that, as I said at the beginning, is not designed to protect whistle-blowers but to channel them, to manage them, and to make sure that they can't do any harm to the government or to the bureaucracy in that case.

As such, it will not protect the public. It will not meet the goals that the government claims it's intended to meet. It will in fact, in my view, make the situation worse. I pity the poor person who really sees something wrong within the government and thinks the public has a right to know and tries to follow the steps in this bill because they will be blocked and channelled and will not be able to give effect to the cause that set them off in the first place. There is no end to the intimidation that is continued under this bill. I wouldn't feel comfortable recommending to any individual who saw some wrongdoing to follow the processes set out in this bill.

I'd feel much more comfortable to say: "Come to us. Come to one of the other opposition parties. We'll make sure that we protect you, but we'll do our very best to get your information out to the public." That's a far better approach to take if you really want the public to know what's going on behind the closed doors of this government, Mr. Speaker.

I urge all hon. members to vote against this terrible bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-South East, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've listened to a lot of things tonight, and one thing is for sure. People aren't perfect. To the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek: it's very unfortunate, some of the things that you've experienced in your life in this House, in this Legislature. A couple of things. First, I commend you for standing up for your constituents and running in an election. That takes a lot of courage. Second of all, to cross the floor, I can't imagine, and then if there's a breakdown in relationships, which doesn't just happen in government between parties but between people on the street.

When we talk about some of the things in health care, Alberta Health Services, which is my past full-time employer – I'm a paramedic. I still work on the ambulance. In fact, I was president of the Calgary paramedics. I was a spokesperson for many paramedics across this province that had issues with government, transition, all those things. I have to tell you that if you ask the hon. Health minister and the Health minister before him and some of the other hon. colleagues around here, I was a pain in their butt in some cases and still am.

So when we talk about whistle-blower legislation, I just have to say a few things. When I ran, clearly, I had issues with some of things that government was doing, and I was an advocate. I made a promise to stand up for the paramedics in this province, not just paramedics but be a liaison in emergency room departments between physicians and nurses. I would dare say that some of the bullying that takes place between practitioners can be pretty heavy because they're Type A personalities, and they want to care for patients.

When I made a decision to run for this government, it wasn't a matter of: I don't like particular people. What I saw on this side was an opportunity to build on the strengths that this province already has. When we talk about being able to advocate for patients, that's really the bottom line when we think about health professionals. I've been there in those tribunals, and I've been there with those conversations around the Protection for Persons in Care Act. Any time a paramedic steps out of line or a physician steps out of line – because the argument can be made that every time a physician or a nurse or any practitioner can't perform their duties on a patient, it's inhibiting the ability to care for the patient, and the persons in care act speaks to that. That's one step moving forward.

This legislation is not about words and legalese, which we seem to be getting into about a number of bills here. I guess in some ways I'm putting a challenge. What if we take the politics out of it? What if we as 87 representatives and advocates for our constituents around this province push people, encourage people, lift people up and move them towards this legislation to report these abuses, to be the whistle-blower, to empower them? Instead, every time that a piece of legislation comes around this House, there have to be amendments because it can't be perfect. You know, this bill talks about the ability to go back and review it. The commissioner is asked to report on the inquiries that happen on a yearly basis. The legislation is to be revisited in two years because I can tell you one thing: whether it's legislation we wrote 10 years ago, two years ago, or the legislation that we write today, it's always going to have to evolve. We're always going to have to be diligent. We're always going to have to review it, and none of us in this Chamber are perfect.

Together, if we start working on the real work that needs to be done for Albertans, encouraging them that: "You know what? This is the number one place in the country and, I argue, in the world to live." That's because of the people that live here, that pay taxes every day, raise their families, because of the opposition on this side, the government on this side, because we work together for a better Alberta. We don't always agree, but that doesn't mean we always have to rip down every institution that this government has. I fight hard every day when I'm on the ambulance or with my constituents to defend them, to protect them. I'll be the first one to stand up for the little guy. That's what we should be doing. Not discrediting people or saying that this is terrible legislation. How about stand up for it? How about push people to this legislation? Push it to the max. Push it to the point where it does ultimately fail in certain spots so that it can be improved, rather than trying to always drag it back into legislation.

Now, when we talk about some of the other things – and just to be clear, we need to be truthful in this House. We need to talk about the reality. Health care is very complex, and you have Type A personalities and practitioners right across the board. But the one thing that I don't believe – I've been a part of that bureaucracy that's there and the fail-safe that is created to make sure that not one person is making the decision or one profession but a multiple group of people making a decision for the betterment of patient outcomes at the end. I'm sorry, when a physician happens to be one of 10 making a decision on whether it's clinics or in some of the things that the opposition has mentioned when we talk about policy around how we should develop health care for better patient care, if that one person is on the outside, they absolutely have the right to be outspoken, they have the ability to go to the media, and in that maybe it does put them in front of the commissioner. Maybe it raises a certain number of questions.

We also have to believe that there's a process of building relationships and building trust, and when people go outside that and handle themselves in a particular way, sometimes it does create friction. Sometimes the ultimate part of it is that relationships break down. It's unfortunate, and I hate to hear that. But we've got to start talking about what's right and stop trying to make an amendment to an amendment that confuses it.

We should be encouraging people to stand up. You know what? Really, that's what this is. People stand up and there's reprisal. When that reprisal takes place, they're going to get fined, and the legislation talks about that. Apart from any investigation by the commissioner those who carry out reprisals against employees will have committed an offence under the act, may be prosecuted in court, and upon conviction face fines up to $25,000 for a first offence and $100,000 for a second and subsequent offence.

That's what we should be doing in all aspects of our legislation. When people break the law, we make harder judgments against them. We need to stand up together on this. We need to pass this bill, and then we need to push people towards it, not by saying that this is the weak side or that's the weak side or the weak link. This is one where we have an opportunity to collectively lift people up, stand up for those who are being bullied by administration, because, inevitably, that's never going to change. As humans we're all fallible, and that's going to happen. But if you stand up together, we're going to move forward.

So I look forward to hearing the amendments that might come forward, but I'm in support of this bill. I think that it's more wholesome than what we've had before. It makes it very clear that if you're going to create problems for people who are whistle-blowers, we're going to penalize you. We're going to report our outcomes. We're going to encourage people to move that way. Here's the deal: 87 people, 87 MLAs; managers – because not every manager, believe it or not, in Alberta Health Services is a bad manager; they care about people; they care about ensuring that their members can do their job – there are unions; there are labour groups; there are many avenues.

This is not about stifling people. This is letting them know that when they get bullied, we're going to respond. We're going to charge them. We're going to investigate them. This is a part of open government. I support this. I support the minister of – I can't say it all, so I'll say the minister of alphabet. Pardon me. I'm just kidding. At the end of the day I support this, and we need to move forward on it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the Member for Calgary-South East for your very passionate speech. I certainly appreciate where you're coming from. There are some hard realities here, though, that I think the members across need to recognize. Any time an amendment is brought forward, it's not purely for political gain. There are some real issues here, and the insistence that everything that is being put forward has a level of perfection: that arrogance just doesn't sit well. Recognize that like the mandate your party was given, the opposition was given a mandate with 55 per cent of the popular vote in this province, more than half. It may not be recognized in the seat count. But I think that, you know, some of the things we saw yesterday, us here begging your party to allow Bill 2 to go to a committee to be debated in a nonpartisan environment only to be shut down – so just for consideration, and again I appreciate your passion.

Specific to the bill, though, I would like you to comment, please, if you would, hon. member, on section 31(1), which reads:

The Commissioner may, in accordance with the regulations, exempt any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any portion of this Act or the regulations.

Your thoughts, please.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you. Well, I have to say this about the hon. member across the way: he's a fine gentleman and a constituent of mine, and I appreciate his comments.

Let me speak specifically to that, and I'll relate it to my own profession as a paramedic. Every time I make a decision, whether I decide to treat or not to treat, whether I exempt a protocol or add a protocol that happens not to be there, I have to answer for it. I have a legal obligation to answer for it, and I don't just answer for it once in a patient care report. When I go to a physician and, let's say, I do a terrible call and I feel that I need to do something extreme that doesn't fit inside the guidelines, the first person that I have to answer to is the trauma physician, and then I have to answer to the multitude of nurses, and then I have to answer to the student physicians, the ones in residence. Then I have to answer to a board that may call into question my actions. I am prepared to do that.

I believe this is the same reason that the commissioner has to give a report every year. If he exempts something and it's distasteful to this House or the people that he was exempting, then it should be brought about. That's our job, to hold him accountable, to make sure that people are protected. That's what I believe that is talking about.

Again, when we go back and we talk about some of the very complex things, whether it's health care, land rights, you name it, sometimes that impartial person needs to make decisions based on, maybe, previous rulings, knowing where it's going to go, to help streamline the process. And as we move through that process – and that's why I encourage you – force people through this. It's called plyometrics. Push it till the muscle fails so that we can find the flaw because at the end of the day we'll find a better result for the people that need it.

Those are my comments.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very encouraged to hear the member stand up and speak on behalf of Bill 4. I was very encouraged to hear him talk about his experience as a paramedic and how he speaks out for the paramedics. My question to the member. I recently met with the paramedics, and I wonder if you could tell me what the issues of the paramedics are at this particular time. [interjections] He brought it up.

Mr. Fraser: Where's Brian Mason?

The Deputy Speaker: Relevance, hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Pardon me. Let me tell you. There are obviously some tough things that paramedics went through during the transition, but I can tell you where paramedics are from a professional standpoint right now. They're on very good footing to contribute to the vision that the Premier has around family care clinics being part of PCNs. I see you grimace there, but it is the truth. That was the right path that we needed to go down, but there are some things that we need to address. I'm speaking with the Minister of Health on a regular basis, and he will tell you that because when he sees me coming, he's like: "Oh, no. Here's Rick again." At the end of the day there are some issues around past legislation that I've spoken about regarding union affiliation, and if you talk to the members, by and large – they contact me, and I see them in coffee shops, and you name it – they feel unrepresented.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to be speaking to this bill, Bill 4, tonight. If we were to implement proper whistle-blower protection in this fall session, that could be something that would benefit the province for many years to come. It could be a highlight of this fall session. However, what has been presented to us in Bill 4 is not something that will leave a good legacy. Instead of implementing proper legislation with teeth to defend whistle-blowers, the government decided to bring forward legislation that will defend them from the whistle-blowers.

I am disappointed that the bill doesn't apply to ethical behaviour. The government knew well that the public was looking for action following the alleged intimidation of health care professionals and the accepting of illegal donations. This should have been a part of Bill 4. We should take issues like intimidation of health professionals and other public servants very, very seriously, but the government has chosen not to do so. It is very disappointing.

The bill is also currently structured to keep highly damaging information as private as possible. It indicates that the government wants to hide from the whistle-blowers, not protect them. Under the proposed legislation, government employees that are seeking advice on blowing the whistle can be forced to submit their request in writing. This seems disturbing and a way of intimidating people to not even think of blowing the whistle or finding out how to do so. Further, section 10 makes it clear that you cannot blow the whistle to the public interest commissioner unless you have attempted to work within your organization. Mr. Speaker, I fear that this will deliberately scare public employees out of doing what is right and coming forward with information that is beneficial for the public good.

Let's imagine this. Imagine if you worked in a place where your superiors were public employees that were making over-the-top expense claims. Imagine they were charging taxpayers thousands of dollars for things that were not necessary to their job, things like butlers, Mercedes upgrades, and that sort of thing. Imagine if you had the good conscience to come forward with this and save the taxpayer from being abused. Should you really have to bring this up first with the manager that is abusing the taxpayer? Wouldn't doing that possibly intimidate the individual out of coming forward in the first place? It just isn't a good idea, Mr. Speaker. I do not think this is right.

We should work to encourage whistle-blowers. They can help stop ethical lapses and financial mismanagement as soon as it happens. If we'd had good whistle-blower protection, perhaps a public employee could have come forward in the recent health expense scandal. That could have saved taxpayers thousands of dollars. Why wouldn't we want to include that in this legislation?

Furthermore, the act is on a go-forward basis. If we want to ensure that Albertans are getting proper use of their tax dollars, we should be ensuring that this legislation allows brave whistle-blowers who are already putting their neck on the line to be protected if they want to let the public know about recent issues. This may include issues that we do not know about yet, but it would be better for the government to learn from previous mistakes than to repeat them in the future. Instead of doing this, the government is trying to make this effective only from the day the bill passes. By doing that, the government closes the door on any wrongdoing that has gone on in the past. The government has done more to cover their tracks than they have to put Albertans first with this legislation.

Formal whistle-blowing legislation is welcomed by the Wildrose, but this bill falls far short of what would be called good legislation, like the government's FOIP Act, in that it is designed to protect the government and not the public.

I still hope that we can work together to create more effective legislation than what we have been presented with. This is still a first for Alberta. There has been no protection of whistle-blowers in government previously. So it is a good thing that the government has brought this forward, but we should ensure that this legislation will leave a lasting, positive legacy, not just assist the government in sweeping things under the rug. The Wildrose will be putting forth a good many amendments to try and make this work better than it obviously is now, and I would commend the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for his offer to work with us. All 87 of us should be working together to make this legislation something that we can all be proud of.

Mr. Speaker, if we are not successful with the majority of these amendments, I fear it will be akin to putting lipstick on a pig, and this legislation is a pig or a dog or anything else you want to name it. It's just not good legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise here and speak on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. I echo the concerns of my colleagues about this bill. Quite simply, the government had a prime opportunity to bring forward some real legislation with teeth to defend whistle-blowers. Instead, the government chose to bring forward another half-measure that will do more to enable the government to defend itself from bad publicity than protect whistle-blowers who speak out.

Mr. Speaker, this is another broken promise from a Premier who vowed to bring forward whistle-blower protection that would defend people regardless of the manner in which they chose to disclose wrongdoings. This legislation doesn't do that, and it's a great disappointment. It shows that this government hasn't learned from its mistakes. It shows that this Premier isn't interested in living up to the commitments she had previously made. It's become her MO. It shows that this government isn't interested in providing real measures to regain the public's trust.

After the doctor intimidation, illegal donations, broken promises, and expense scandal after expense scandal the government has brought forward legislation that will primarily assist it in sweeping future issues under the rug. The sorts of things Bill 4 could prevent are not the sorts of things we should be working to sweep under the rug in Alberta. We now spend more than $41 billion every year. This is money that comes from every hard-working taxpayer in the province, and it's something that the provincial government should ensure is spent properly. When whistle-blowers come forward, they are helping ensure that money is being spent in an effective manner. They're helping ensure that taxpayers, who are increasingly nickelled and dimed by this government – school fees, for example – are not having their tax dollars go to luxurious expense claims or unused hotel rooms.

We should be encouraging whistle-blowers, not dissuading them from coming forward. Dissuading whistle-blowers is something we have constantly done in this province. The Wildrose Official Opposition has heard from public employees that they are afraid to speak out because they worry that there may be reprisals if they do so. Honest Albertans, who just want to see everyone in the public sector act honestly, are forced to watch as a few others cheat the system, knowing they cannot make a difference by speaking out. This hurts all of us, and we all fail in this Assembly when that happens.

This is why I was happy to see this legislation come forward. I believed, hoped that it would provide real whistle-blower protection. I hoped – and so did all Albertans – that it would be retroactive so we could see areas we could currently fix in the system. This isn't what we got. It makes me think of all of the honest Albertans who may want to come forward but now remain unable and afraid to do so. Making the act retroactive to include previous gross mismanagement or any other wrongdoing in the last couple of years is a way in which the government could have made this bill much more effective.

Now, we are not asking the government to span back decades to try and save money, but I do not think it is unreasonable to have the government look at programs and departments that are still in place where the government could be doing a better job or, I would hope, where they want to be doing a better job. At the very least, honest Albertans who want to see a more effective public sector should be able to come forward without reprisal, but by the government making this bill only active from the day it passes, they prevent this from happening.

This makes me wonder: why not do that? If the government doesn't have things to hide and wants to be open and honest with the public, why not make it go back to 2008? This is a measure that could help give this bill legitimacy and help restore Albertans' trust with this out-of-touch PC government. It's something the government should do. If they really don't believe this legislation could cover that, I would be happy to hear anyone on the government side explain why because I can't seem to get my head around it.

I'll sit down now. I look forward to hearing others' input. We still do have a chance to amend this act, and I pray that we can work together with government and other opposition parties to construct some real legislation that'll be retroactive and have some teeth.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a quick question for the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. I was listening attentively to his speech this evening. He talked about retroactivity of the legislation. I'm curious as to what authority he would seek to make legislation retroactive that is consistent with a constitutional and legislative principle in this country.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a great question. Given the amount of retroactive things that this government has done in the past, I would think they could teach us all how to do that.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak on this bill, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. When we were briefed by the associate minister and the Minister of Service Alberta, that was a wonderful briefing we had. I was excited about this legislation. The minister asked us if he had the unanimous support from the opposition, and I said to the minister: "We will see about that. It will all depend on what kind of surprises you have in the bill for us." Mr. Speaker, we've got the bill in front of us, and it's full of surprises.

I said that if the legislation met our scrutiny, we would support the bill. From the outset, this isn't a good bill. We all want to support this bill but not in its present form. This bill is flawed in more than one way, Mr. Speaker. The Premier promised during the election to have an open and transparent government. The more they talk about openness and transparency on the government side, the more opaque it gets.

Mr. Speaker, why reinvent the wheel? The minister talked about going a step further and raising the bar on openness and transparency. I think that the minister has gone backwards with this bill, that this bill is there to silence whistle-blowers, not to protect but to scare them into not coming forward. Because they have to go through all the hoops, all the red tape, they will be afraid to come forward. We need legislation that is most comprehensive, most effective, and that will fully protect whistle-blowers from any reprisals for coming forward against whomever. The whistle-blower shouldn't be worried about any intimidation, isolation, or being the black sheep when they come forward.

Mr. Speaker, all the critics and newspaper articles are saying that this whistle-blower bill is failing whistle-blowers, that it offers them no protection. I was in the hospital, and the nurses, the staff were complaining about this. They said, "Don't name us," because they didn't want to come forward against the management, and they didn't want to lose their jobs or jeopardize their chances for promotion.

That brings me to Dr. Paul Thomas, a professor from the University of Manitoba, who says that they're overhyped as integrity cure-alls, entangle the bureaucracy in more rules and laws, and that they can backfire by deepening public cynicism and mistrust of government. He says that it comes with a huge price both for whistle-blowers and the people or organizations accused of wrongdoing or mismanagement, that government isn't going to stop or fix wrongdoing in government unless it makes broader changes to the political and administrative cultures of the government, and that today's style of politics has fed an unhealthy obsession with accountability that's aimed at catching and blaming people rather than getting at the management problems or weaknesses in the system that led to wrongdoing in the first place.

Here is the fear, Mr. Speaker. I've got a few examples of witch hunts. An investigation was initiated when an ASC employee came forward with complaints about the organization, revealed allegations, including favouritism, lewd conduct, a highly sexualized environment, poor employee relations, and interference in enforcement cases that benefited select high-profile and influential individuals. The four senior directors were pushed out by the acting ASC chair, and a witch hunt was conducted to rid the organization of whistle-blowers.

In a letter to the minister the ASC staff warned that many ASC staff find themselves unable to perform their jobs effectively due to extremely negative, intimidating, and stressful work environment created and fostered by the chair and the executive director, an environment that continues to deteriorate daily. The whistle-blower was let go as director of human resources by the interim chair for making a 27-minute telephone call to a newspaper reporter from her desk. The head of administrative services was dismissed for questioning a computer audit. In spite of this information, at no point did the ministry intervene to remove the acting chair of the ASC, who had attempted to stall the AG's investigative process, fired the four top ASC officials, all of whom could have been key to the investigation by the AG into enforcement irregularities, and threatened current ASC staff with more pink slips, thereby increasing the fear level within the Securities Commission.

Mr. Speaker, whistle-blowers should be able to speak anywhere, anytime, to anybody they wish without fear of the reprisal they're going to have. We can only support this bill if we have amendments, and I will be bringing forward those amendments to clause 3(2), clause 19(2), clause 51, and clause 52. If we want to really put teeth in this bill, we should be going back to the drawing board and bringing this bill in a form which will have more teeth.

The government accountability watchdog says that the best whistle-blower protection regimes operate within countries such as Australia, the United States, and the United Kingdom, but we are not borrowing a page from their legislation. The act only protects government workers, not those in the private sector, something opposition MLAs point to as a major weakness in the bill. This bill should be protecting everybody. We've been through the XL beef shutdown because the employees, you know, didn't want to come forward, maybe because they were not protected.

Mr. David Hutton brought up lots of concerns about this bill. He's the executive director of Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform, and he points out that there should be full free speech rights.

As a general rule, whistleblowers must be able to blow the whistle on wrongdoing anywhere, anytime and to any audience – with restrictions only for cases where the law prevents disclosure.

That's, like, national security.

Second, the right to disclose all illegality and misconduct.

There must be a broad definition of what types of wrongdoing whistleblowers are allowed to report . . .

The third one, no harassment of any kind.

Whistleblowers are typically subject to a wide array of reprisals, ranging from the subtle to the brutal. These include social isolation and humiliation before their peers, being cut out of the information loop with their responsibilities given to others, impossible work assignments or no work at all, false accusations and retaliatory investigations.

Bullying or firing is easy to see, but these punishments are not easy to see, Mr. Speaker.

The fourth one, forum for adjudication, with realistic burden of proof and appropriate remedies.

The whistleblowers are usually forced to seek some kind of remedy after the reprisals have already begun, by which time they may already be unemployed, impoverished and suffering from stress-related injuries caused by harassment . . .

Strong laws can also shield the whistleblower from being harmed in the first place, for example, by allowing injunctions to prevent dismissal or disciplinary action until the allegations have been investigated. They also provide "make whole" remedies to properly compensate people whose careers and future earning potential have been devastated.

The fifth one is that there should be mandatory corrective action.

Attacking the whistleblower turns the focus away from the wrongdoing, and even when the misconduct is eventually proven, there is a strong tendency for employers to let the wrongdoers off lightly. Unbelievably, wrongdoers often receive promotions. This defeats the entire purpose of whistleblower legislation, which is to deter wrongdoing.

There are so many issues with the bill, Mr. Speaker, and unless we bring in legislation which will address all the concerns that have been raised by other members as well as by the opposition, I cannot support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise here and speak on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. Sadly, I'm unable to support this bill as it is currently written.

As a new member I've had the honour and privilege of working very closely with the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and as Yoda has said, smart she is. I have listened intently to her passion, to her dedication for the most vulnerable in society: the seniors, the children, and others who are afraid to speak up for themselves and those that care for them. Many of you in this House have worked with this hon. member, and you know that this dedication and passion has guided many such pieces of legislation in this House. That is why we should all strive to learn from this member, who has worked diligently on promoting the effectiveness of this House, and ensure that we protect Albertans with good legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it is worth noting that this is the first time the government has brought forward whistle-blower legislation in the Assembly. As I said, my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek has worked tirelessly on this type of legislation, and it's good to see the government finally taking this issue seriously enough to bring this legislation to us. The problem is that the legislation is not enough.

Mr. Speaker, like many Albertans, I've had time to reflect on so many situations in which this government has not been held accountable. We see how an out-of-touch PC Party has accepted thousands of dollars in illegal donations and one donation of $430,000, possibly from a single individual. While the government was so blatantly wrong on these issues, they were still shocked that anyone could accuse them of wrongdoing. The article that I'm referring to is simply one of many articles that we have read over this past week. This is an out-of-touch PC government that seems incapable of recognizing its own problems.

Unfortunately, I think that could be the theme of Bill 4. We have a government that is incapable of recognizing its own problems. This bill seems as if it was carefully drafted to make sure it doesn't address the problems that need to be addressed. After what has been presented to us in Bill 4, it seems as if it was carefully crafted by a government so that it would not apply to them. You will notice that the intimidation of medical staff, the donations by prohibited corporations – it's not covered. How can this be?

How does this government not draft legislation that ensures that all are protected regardless of the date and time when that protection was required? What would they be afraid of? Nothing to hide? Why not do it? We don't need to go too far into these issues, but it is fair to say that this is an area where this government has hurt the public's trust.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, we have to make sure that whistle-blower protection applies to organizations that receive government funding like our seniors' centres. If seniors or those who help our seniors want to blow the whistle about ethical lapses or financial mismanagement in our seniors' centres, this legislation should protect them. It does no such thing. How does this government rationalize that the most vulnerable people who are begging for protection have no avenue to come forward without retaliation or fear? Is this government telling these people and front-line workers that they don't matter and that they are not important enough to have the protection if they need it?

The fact that this legislation seems to stickhandle around these very areas is telling of how sincere this government is about effective whistle-blower protection. This bill is flawed in that it would not apply to the gross violations we have seen recently in this province. The government is failing to recognize its own problems.

Mr. Speaker, let's recognize what's at stake here. Adopting whistle-blower protection is significant, being that this is the first time we're allowing government employees to come forward when they know of lawbreaking and gross – I'm saying gross – mismanagement in the public sector. This will benefit our province in so many ways and for generations to come. Checks and balances are not just about the opposition parties keeping the governing party honest. Proper checks and balances also include average people who care about our province coming forward to let the public know about illegal behaviour and improper spending in our government. We should allow and encourage any individual to do just that.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is about more than whistle-blowers. This bill is about integrity: integrity in the process, integrity in the system, and integrity in government. Albertans want integrity, they want protection, and they want us to ensure that they can come forward if they need to. They want that security. As elected officials it is key that we ensure that they have that ability.

I have a tremendous amount of respect for whistle-blowers. Mr. Speaker, I was recently elected to this Assembly, so I understand what people say outside of the dome of the Legislature. There is a lack of trust for elected officials and how they manage the public purse, and after scandals like the recent health expense scandal, who can blame them? We should recognize that this is a problem and do something – something – about it. Instead, the government has failed to recognize their problems and has brought forward legislation to protect the government from whistle-blowers, not whistle-blowers from the government.

It's as if they want to create a system where Merali would continue to pay his butler on the public dime, but the government wouldn't get in trouble for it. It's as if the government wants to create a system where the intimidation of health care professionals continues, but it doesn't become public. It's as if the government wants to spend $113,000 on unused luxurious hotel rooms but doesn't want to have to explain that to the public. This is the wrong message to send to the public, but it's just what Bill 4 does. This is another broken promise from the Premier, who promised protection for whistle-blowers regardless of the manner in which they choose to disclose the wrongdoings.

But, Mr. Speaker, what has surprised me this week is how the government has brought this bill forward. Since releasing the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, those on the other side of the House have been trying to build this up to say that it goes further than any other piece of legislation in Canada and that – it's really hard for me to actually say this – it sets a new bar for accountability and transparency. Well, if that doesn't prove that the government is failing to recognize its own problem, I don't know what does.

This bill has been opposed by opposition parties, ordinary Albertans, and stakeholders. David Hutton, who has already been referred to today, the executive director of the Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform, which is a charity focused on improving whistle-blower protection, gave his opinion of this bill last week. He called the release of this bill disappointing. He said that if this act passes, "it compels the whistleblower to enter a secretive, bureaucratic and tightly-managed process which is likely to bury their allegations and is unlikely to protect anyone except the wrongdoers."

More important, Mr. Speaker – and this is very concerning – is the hypocrisy of this government. How are we to have any faith in this failed legislation when even the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation has awkwardly come out against this bill. The associate minister has publicly stated that if he had cause to use this legislation, he wouldn't, that he'd go to the Ethics Commissioner. If the minister himself cannot endorse and trust this legislation, how can he possibly expect that Albertans would support legislation that he himself does not even stand behind?

Mr. Speaker, we can do better than that on an issue as important as whistle-blower protection. My colleagues and I could just vote against this bill, but that's not what Albertans sent us here to do. I would hope that the members across the floor would remember the respect that they had for the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and actually review her amendments and give serious thought to them. We want to make this bill better. We want to work with all members of this House to ensure that we enact legislation that is effective and just. We will be bringing forward amendments that can do just that, and I hope the government will work with us in implementing things and raise that bar and ensure that whistle-blower protection is strong.

We still have the opportunity to make this legislation one that sets a new bar for accountability and transparency. It will take a lot of work, but it's something that I believe is entirely possible if the government decides to hear what Albertans are saying as opposed to telling them what they need to hear. We can work together in this Assembly. We can build off of each others' strengths. We can pass a good piece of legislation. Co-operation, listening, and the ability to want to do the right thing are all it takes.

I implore this government to do that with Bill 4.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Comments or questions under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always a pleasure to rise in this House. However, it is with mixed feelings that I rise today to speak about Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. I believe that it is a positive step that whistle-blower legislation is being introduced in this province; however, I do believe that the government has missed the mark.

Mr. Speaker, the government and specifically the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation claim that this is the most comprehensive, the strongest, the best, the most inclusive, the most wide-ranging, the most complete piece of whistle-blower legislation in the country. Well, I have a bit of bad news for them. This piece of legislation is flawed, it has no teeth, and if this is an example of the Premier raising the bar, it's safe to say that even a mouse would trip over it.

Seeing that even this government chokes and goes into a speed wobble when trying to articulate what the Ministry of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation does, speaking against this bill is like booing at a peewee hockey game. You know you shouldn't do it because they're just kids. There's little skill on the ice, and why would you expect anything from someone who's barely played the game? It's just mean. That's what we have here, a government that has never had to be transparent or accountable trying to play a game and look like pros. Mr. Speaker, they've failed to do so, and they do not deserve the encouragement that some of them think that they do.

Part of me wants to say that I'm surprised that this government has failed on yet another promise, but sadly I'm not. It's starting to become more of an expectation, and I think I'll be shocked when they actually do not. When the Premier appointed the Associate Minister of AT and T – I'm going to save us all and introduce that in the House – I think it would be safe to say that Albertans were hopeful this government was going to be held accountable, become more transparent, and change the way that this government does business. So far we have seen anything but.

There are a number of concerns that I'm going to raise with respect to this piece of legislation. The first is pretty simple, straightforward, and it's an easy fix. Bill 4 as it stands is only on a go-forward basis from the time that it's proclaimed sometime in 2013. Well, I'm going to strongly encourage the government to make this piece of legislation retroactive.

Mr. Denis: How?

Mr. Wilson: You're a lawyer. I'm sure that you can figure it out, to answer the question from the Solicitor General as to how that could be done.

I think there is great benefit for Albertans to know the past mistakes of those working for the public, not just those that are committed in the future.

The second concern that I'm going to raise is quite serious and a little disturbing, to be honest. Section 10 makes it clear that you have to make efforts to raise concerns within the department before the public interest commissioner could become involved. For example, let's say that you know the person you report is doing something wrong. You have to try and work with them to blow the whistle on their wrongdoing. If I may, it would be like the hens having to ask the fox for permission. I think we can all safely assume how that's going to turn out.

Third, Mr. Speaker, is the reporting structure for the public interest commissioner. If there is wrongdoing found, it should be reported to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, a committee which most would argue was created for this very purpose. This helps ensure that there's no political interference, perceived or otherwise, which would cause great benefit in restoring Albertans' trust and faith in our government.

Another concern that I have is the exemption policy which is outlined in section 31(1), which states that "the Commissioner may, in accordance with the regulations, exempt any person, class of persons, public entity, information, record or thing from the application of all or any [part] of this Act or the regulations." Let me paraphrase that. If the commissioner wants to exempt anyone or anything for any reason, he or she is entitled to do so.

The reason I am so concerned about this is that just this past summer we saw a flagrant example of what happens when there are loopholes explicitly written into a law. A former minister was hired before the expiry of his cooling-off period by the ministry he was in charge of only weeks before. The hiring was given the green light by the Ethics Commissioner in part because the individual in question was a member of, and I quote, the government family. Mr. Speaker, based on this very questionable rationalization, would the public interest commissioner excuse inexcusable actions because someone was part of the government family? I understand that there are instances, rare instances, that would require an exemption. However, I cannot think of why there would need to be such a broad range of possibilities that there are absolutely no limitations. None. Zip. Zilch. Nada.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to believe that every member is here for the right reasons. I know there are a number of concerns that will be raised on this side of the House in regard to this legislation, and I'm looking forward to the ensuing debate. I am hopeful that these concerns will actually be heard on the other side of the House, will not be dismissed as political grandstanding but will be recognized as part of the democratic process, and if heard in good faith, will be able to drastically improve this legislation.

Now, I started by saying that I have mixed feelings speaking on this legislation today, Mr. Speaker, and I do. I'm glad to see that for the first time in our province's history we will have a piece of whistle-blower protection legislation, and for that reason, I acknowledge that this is a step in the right direction. However – and this is where I am conflicted – if this piece of legislation is flawed and it passes, I believe we are doing a disservice to Albertans. My constituents put their trust and faith in me to do the right thing, and I do not take that lightly. I cannot properly represent them by supporting a seriously flawed piece of legislation. I could not look them in the eye and confidently say that I did everything I could to strengthen this bill to protect them if they were to ever find themselves in a position where they were to need the so-called protections of this bill.

I encourage my colleagues on all sides of the floor to remember that that is what the spirit of this bill intends to do, protect your constituents if they ever find themselves in this position. However, Mr. Speaker, as written it seems to only protect the government. I have to believe that even members of the governing party would see the flaw in that.

Now, I am perfectly willing to support an improved version of this legislation that would much better serve all Albertans. I know that every time the government's legislation is called into question, they trot out the standard lines of: we're listening to Albertans and having conversations with Albertans. However, I know I'm not alone in wondering who they're truly listening to while they're doing these consultations. The government has rarely been transparent, and this piece of legislation demonstrates that once again.

This bill presents an opportunity to change that. However, with the apparent fear this government has for strong whistle-blower legislation, it really does beg the question: what do they have to hide? Why didn't they want to make it retroactive? Why are they so worried? I think Albertans deserve to know.

Although this bill is well intentioned and a step in the right direction, I think this may be a textbook example of one step forward, two steps back. With improvements such as the amendments that will be brought forward in this House, this piece of legislation could do quite well and could definitely serve the interests of Albertans. Without these, Mr. Speaker, I will simply not be able to support this piece of legislation. As it stands, it does not serve the interests of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member that just spoke. I was impressed with the sports analogies. I'm going to rise and not be so harsh on the government. They brought forward a whistle-blower bill with good intentions, I think in good faith. I will tell you that I had a friend who played on a football team with me. He ran 80 yards for a touchdown. It was the wrong way. When we meet today still, he can point out that it was the longest run from scrimmage of the season and he did score, but for the other team. So as a sports analogy I applaud these members for bringing a whistle-blower bill. We need one, and everyone knows that. I think it's well intentioned that way.

Unfortunately, it scores for the other team. We missed. Call it a pitch in the dirt or a pitch over the backstop. I don't care. Use whatever sports analogy you want. The fact is . . .

Mr. Hancock: You're striking out.

Mr. Anglin: It struck out. Unfortunately, you're in the wrong ballpark, too.

The reality is that it is well intentioned. I applaud that, and I won't understate that at all. Being well intentioned is one thing. Not being accurate and not being thorough is another matter altogether. That is the concern that has been brought forward by a number of the members already.

There are two ways to go about this. No one should be ashamed either way. One is that we could scrap the bill and just start over. The other is that we could try to fix it from where it sits today. I will tell you that there are a lot of reasons why we should fix it. I'll throw one out to the hon. members on the other side. How do I blow the whistle on the commissioner? It's a good question.

Mr. Anglin: I think so. It's a very good question. The commissioner makes the rules.

You're dealing with this issue of absolute control over the whole process and no protection for somebody who is willing to come forward. We're looking at not only the issue of government. We talk about the safety of people, but what about the money that is involved? What about government funds, which are taxpayers' dollars? When you look at a lot of wrongdoing, a lot of times that's around financial things, around misspending.

I will draw a real-life example. I deal, as some members may or may not know, with electricity. I will tell you quite honestly that people from the AESO, people from AltaLink, people from ATCO, people from Enmax all leak information to me. Sometimes I want them to come public with information; they can't do it. Now, AltaLink will tell this government that they think they have a good target on $12.1 billion, $12.4 billion worth of government money to build transmission lines, and they may not be far off. They have goals; they have aspirations.

That's a lot of public money. I can tell you that there people in that company who don't agree with some of the things that are going on, but they have no venue, and of course that's not what this bill is about. The bill misses that totally. This bill doesn't cover a company like an AltaLink, yet that's $12.1 billion, $12.4 billion of the public's money that they're going to be charged with as far as spending it properly goes.

The closest thing we even have to oversight is a regulatory board who have no authority to really get in there and audit and challenge a lot of this, so you can see some weak spots start to pop up here and there. Looking at this, if we were to draft a whistle-blower bill that had some substance to it, there could be a tremendous payback to the taxpayers of this province along with protection for the individuals that'll make that attempt.

In the news media recently there was an engineer that I believe either worked for Enbridge or TransCanada. I think it might have been TransCanada. He came public. It was in the CBC news.

What he came public on was the inspection processes dealing with the safety of pipelines, which is paramount to this province, and we know that. We dealt with some issues with this last summer. Along with those issues Alberta's reputation was on the line, and our reputation was hurt significantly.

11:00

You have a whistle-blower who comes forward, and he gets fired for what he did. There's no protection for him. He's not a government employee. Yet the issue that he's blowing the whistle on is absolutely paramount to what this government's objectives are, which are to enhance the ability of our resources to get to market, which is significant for our economic growth. So there really is that connection, yet there is no protection. That's what I think some of these members were saying when they discussed the gaps in this bill.

I'd like to talk a little bit more about the private sector, that is missed altogether. There are so many examples of private-sector misconduct that costs taxpayers huge sums of money. Had there been proper whistle-blowing protection in process at the time, what we do know about some of these companies is that it could have been prevented. I point to some of the most obvious. Enron was a perfect example, the collapse of Enron, a private company. But what happened is that it also took down an accounting firm, and the taxpayers had to pick up for thousands of employees, how they were going to handle not just the unemployment but the social impacts when that disaster spread out through the community of Houston. WorldCom was another one. Bre-X was another one.

These are situations, private companies, that cost the public dearly. Any time that costs the public, government pays the price. Yet when we look at those situations, had someone had the ability to come forward with some sort of protection, we might have been able to head off a lot of those. I'm not saying that we would have prevented it, but the fact is that whistle-blowers from the private sector have a tremendous amount of value to protect the public sector, to assist the government. That's missing entirely in this bill.

The idea that government would have a limit on what can be investigated over time: that to me is a shield to hide past wrongdoings. I will say that this government has in the past made a lot of legislation retroactive, and I don't see where it's a problem here to get into that issue of making it retroactive to the point that we can hold a lot of misconduct accountable. When I say misconduct, I tabled a number of documents here at the request of the whip of the governing party on the issue of spying on citizens. That's a wrongdoing, and nobody was held accountable. Those citizens that were part of that still know that, and they still want some sort of remedy or justice for what they think is a tremendous violation of what they believe are their democratic rights. But that will never see the light of day in any jurisdiction, whether it's a court or whether it's through this whistle-blower legislation.

I will tell you that there are a number of examples that I find troubling. There was a sour gas well that was going in next to a school in Tomahawk. We had a real problem with the issue of standing. Parents who had their children going to that school who lived outside the normal range of what they called directive 056 were not allowed standing because they didn't live within the range, yet their children had to go to that school where the sour gas well was being drilled. They appealed that, and they were denied standing in the hearing, and then they went to court. In that whole process – and these were all women that did the fighting here, about six of them, because I went and I met with them more than once – their husbands were worried about their jobs. That's a community where many of the people who live in the community work in the oil and gas sector, and they feared that if they put up too much of a fight to protect their children, they would lose their jobs.

Now, think about that in terms of what's going on. What was being fed, from the husbands who didn't want to lose their jobs, was accurate information going on about the processes dealing with the sour gas wells, information that was not readily available to the mothers, information that was not readily available to the regulator. The regulator was not being given accurate information. So here we go with a situation where this is not government, but it's about the lives of children. It's about the livelihood of the parents, the family and having no protection to come forward with accurate information.

As you can see, the bill itself, as well intentioned as it is, is hollow. It misses the mark. It's a great score for the other team with somebody running the wrong way. It's not hitting the target. One by one we've stood up, and we've said this.

Where do we go from here? Well, we've got a couple of choices. There are the number of votes on the other side that can just take this through, and there we have it. We'll have a whistle-blower's bill that doesn't really do anything for us. Or we can actually make it work. Going through the bill with my caucus members, it's significant. It is significant. I would actually be much more in favour if we either cancelled the bill and started over or put it into committee. Now, no one's making a motion for either one of those, but we need to fix it. We are going to try to fix it, but I get the sense, as is typical for amendments from the opposition, that we might get one or two; we might get none. The likelihood of any correction doesn't seem to be coming from the other side as far as "We're hearing you," or "We're listening."

That means what we're going to end up with is a bill that doesn't do what it's intended to do. That would be troubling. Again, as we started out on some of the other bills, here we are on this bill, where we could have a consensus. We could do something right. We could actually have something that we could show to the public, that this is going to work for you. If we don't get to that point, then it's all for nothing. I will tell you this: if you don't have a really good bill on that third reading, you cannot sell it to the public. I think the public does want it. I think this government wants to give something to the public. So I implore the members of the governing party to listen and to act upon what they're hearing and find that common ground. Let's make something work.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a). The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you. I just need to understand a couple of points here, just to get it straight. So the opposition's position here is that if we have a whistle-blower bill, it would apply to all private corporations? I need to understand that because that's what I heard you saying. That's what I heard you implying. [interjection] Well, he's speaking on your behalf. I thought I had the floor.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair. Thank you.

Mr. Casey: Sorry.

I would like that clarification because it became very clear that he was speaking on behalf of his party. I'd like to know if that's the case.

Also, the reference to retroactivity. Everyone keeps referencing it. You mentioned that there were lots of obvious bills in the past that were retroactive. I'm a new guy here, so I'd just like to know what bills you're referencing that have been retroactive.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre in response if you care to respond.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I always care to respond. I just have to look. It's the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. I wasn't expecting to be called out on that so quickly. Rather than look it up right now, I will get that answer for the member. But I will tell him this. It was a section of the Alberta utilities act. It was made retroactive to June 1, 2003. What it did is that it repealed section 14(3) of the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. That was actually passed on December 8, 2007, at 3 o'clock in the morning. I was up there. I can dig that out for you.

Now, on the issue of private companies. That's a really important issue, and I'm glad the member heard it.

And by the way, I do not speak for my caucus. I sometimes even vote against them. But the reality is that I speak as the representative of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and I am a member of the Wildrose opposition. I don't make policy for my caucus or my party, but I contribute.

Dealing with private companies in particular, what I am actually advocating for – we do have private companies, like an AltaLink, like an ATCO and other companies, that take a tremendous amount of public money. That's a lot of money. That's why I threw out that $12.1 billion, $12.4 billion. The public deserves accountability. I don't think anyone is arguing that. When we give that kind of money out to a private company, there needs to be some sort of whistle-blower protection for the public interest.

As the Minister of Health will tell us, they use private institutions. All our doctors are private. There's a tremendous amount of money in our health care budget that goes out to private – you know, private companies provide those services.

We need to be able to have accountability in many different ways. We set up mechanisms for accountability, which is good. But we also need whistle-blower protection so that if something goes wrong in those mechanisms, somebody can come forward with some sort of sense of confidence that they can show that money is either being misspent, misappropriated, whatever the situation is, and have that protection.

I haven't even asked any of my members in my caucus, but I would advocate in my caucus and I would advocate in this House that we try to establish some sort of whistle-blower protection wherever public money goes. If that money goes to private companies, we need to have something there so we can still have that type of protection.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Yes. I'll be brief, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 29(2)(a) talks about five minutes for questions or comments. Well, I just have a comment for the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. There's a difference between retroactive legislation and retrospective legislation. Retroactive legislation is going in the past and changing the rules. Retrospective legislation is going and shining a light on something that happened in the past. If this member doubts me, I actually had a discussion about this with a sitting justice of the Supreme Court of Canada about a month and a half ago.

That's the story, and that's the lay of the law, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You have 15 seconds, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Fifteen seconds. Section 82 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, and it changed history.

Mr. Donovan: Just looking at the hour, I won't drag this out quite as bad. Again, this is an interesting philosophy to have the whistle-blower legislation. It's almost like a catchphrase more than anything for a lot of people in this room because it was talked about. Being on county council before, I went over this with staff. How do you go over dealing with things when your foreman isn't happy with how you're doing and you can't be happy about how your foreman is doing the job? Your administrator maybe doesn't want to listen to you. What's your next step? Who do you talk to?

The concept of this is absolutely great. Again, I was like the leader of our party, the Member for Highwood, when she talked about how we first saw that. I actually walked around and said: well, this is another great thing this government is adding to this program, that we're actually going to have a whistle-blower legislation. The problem was in the shortcomings of it. Again, I mean, I respect the associate minister for all the work that he's done in getting to this point. The concept was great, but I think there are a lot of issues to it that bother me. You know, when you have these things, why not go about it in the right way and do the right bill and take your time and go through it?

Again, sometimes as soon as you make a commissioner, you know, that has unlimited discretion to do anything or to do nothing – that's the question. You want to make something that at least has some teeth to it. I think all the colleagues that have talked before go on to describe the fact that there's no teeth in this legislation or any mechanism to ensure that public disclosure of any wrongdoing that could be found. The commissioner can grant exemptions at will for any reason. I mean, it's almost like a fairy tale in here in what this commissioner could or couldn't do depending on whether they like the person or not or what goes on.

Any time there's a mechanism that the whistle-blower can go to an MLA or the media at their own risk, again, that always plays into: are you going to have party politics? I'd assume that probably if a person that worked for the government would come to me as an opposition MLA and tell me something, you'd have to hope that that MLA isn't going to make a grandstand of the situation. You'd hope that that person would actually do the right thing and try to solve the problem, but there's obviously a reason why that person hasn't gone through, I'd assume, the proper channels, through this bill, for who they would talk to.

I guess those are things that worry me fundamentally. I think the process, the idea, is great. The government has identified that there are enough people that work, whether it be in the province as a public servant or whatever the process is, that have a way and a means to be able to go out and talk to somebody if they identify that something has been done in a haphazard way which isn't productive for anybody. I mean, we should all be worried as taxpayers in this province about what's being done financially with our money or the process of something being done.

Not to harp on Carmangay but we saw it this summer. We had staff there, and they wanted to speak out against some things. Basically, they had to not do it because they were fearing for their job. This was even with unions involved and everything else. I mean, I'd never point a finger at the unions, but the staff members truly felt that they could not say what they were thinking because they wanted to be able to get their job in the next location once they figured out the writing was on the wall and that facility wasn't going to be open any longer.

I don't think that's the way that anybody should live. I don't think you should be in your own party and worry about what your leader is going to say to you or do to you. I mean, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and I have lots of great discussions in our caucus about different things. We don't always have to agree, but he knows he can speak freely of what he wants to do, and he doesn't have to worry about the bus coming down on him when he's standing in the way, because he didn't get led down the way with the wrong idea. I mean, you should be free to speak forward about what you want and what you believe in. I think we're all elected to be here to speak on what we want and what we believe in ourselves.

I'm not saying that everybody is right or wrong. Actually, I was quite impressed with the speech from the hon. Member for Calgary-South East. He spoke very passionately about being in EMS and the job he did and how he was a pain sometimes to everybody. To me that's not a bad thing to have. I mean, he spoke passionately. He spoke very much of what he would actually go ahead with and what he fought for. I believe he was the president of the EMS in Calgary for three of four years. I mean, definite leadership quality there. That goes to show that you don't have to be the pain all the time, but you have to be constructive to move forward on this.

If this legislation is drawn up correctly, I think it has some great potential to it. I'm not taking away from the minister, who obviously put lots of hours into this. At no time would I ever take away from that, but I think the wording – again, it's always the devil in the details in these things. It could have been a great concept when they thought about it and when he started putting the act together, but it's the wording in it. Again, I'm not a lawyer, and I would never bash a lawyer for that because you do a lot of training to get that job. But in saying that, I wouldn't want you to come and set my air seeder either. So we'll agree to agree on what we can and can't do all the time. I think there are a lot of purposes . . . [interjection] If you ever want to come and run the combine, feel free.

My point is that, I mean, everybody has a title and a job in what they're doing, and they're good at what they do. I just think this needs – we have lots of ideas that could change this. Again, it's going back to having the common courtesy to listen to opposition. In any good government good opposition is key to how it rolls. We've had it for years in this province, and I think we need to continue it. That's how the system works. You need to be a strong advocate.

It's pretty easy when you're the only set of eyes looking at something: yeah, that's the best way to do it. But sometimes if you see some other people's thoughts and ideas – I mean, we have lots of papers and lots of people's opinions on this stuff. I really think that if we sit back and look at it, the idea of the whistle-blower legislation is great. I think the process of it is a great idea.

I think the idea of the commissioner, the whole process of it, is almost like a FOIP inquiry to get anything done. If somebody goes to the commissioner and the commissioner decides that they don't like that or they don't think it's something that is politically correct to do or not politically correct to do or is going to cause a big tidal wave, do you touch it or not? I personally don't think that's the right philosophy to have in legislation. It should be black and white enough to know that everybody can go out and feel free in saying what they see is wrong.

I mean, it's the little things sometimes. Like I say, we always talk about the devil in the details. In my previous experience in municipal council, I mean, there were lots of things. It's just the little things that tip you off, and then when you start actually digging around, you can find some of the problems. People don't go out planning to make a problem, but sometimes it's just easier to keep rolling with the system because they don't want to buck the system and they don't want to cause a problem, Mr. Speaker.

I guess, just in saying that, I mean, I think the concept is good. It's just seriously flawed in how it's written. But I'd be more than happy and our colleagues here on the opposition would be more than happy to sit down with the Associate Minister of AT and T, as so politely put by my colleague of acronyms, on how to do that. We can do some free phone calls and everything with it. You know, we can sit down and have some good discussion on what we could do to change this. I'd hopefully look forward to the associate minister being open to that idea of sitting down and having some rational conversation on what we could change with the amendments and not just close the book on the idea and say that we're a bunch of radicals from the other side.

With that, I'll close on that concept, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise tonight to talk about Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. Bringing in whistle-blower legislation is a good start towards protection for people who are brave enough to speak out against gross mismanagement of taxpayer dollars and abuse within the system. While I can support a bill bringing in more power for whistle-blowers, I have a lot of trouble with Bill 4. I dispute what the Minister for Service Alberta said last week: we have gone further than the government of Canada and, quite frankly, we have set, in my opinion, a new bar for accountability and transparency. The legislation introduced does not come close to setting a new bar. The legislation is weak in many areas and has been written to protect the government from whistle-blowers, not the other way around.

Under the proposed legislation and the way it is designed and written, a whistle-blower would get buried in bureaucratic red tape as whistle-blowers are forced to report wrongdoing to senior management within their own departments first. Mr. Speaker, this can allow for those who abuse the system to hide wrongdoings from the public. If this legislation was truly intended to protect whistle-blowers, it would allow employees, contractors, and nonemployees to report wrongdoings to anyone, anywhere, and at any time.

If the government is serious about this legislation and wants to set a new bar for accountability and transparency, then it should make every effort to defend the whistle-blower. If we are really setting a new bar for accountability and transparency, why wouldn't the proposed legislation defend workers from across the public sector? Why, Mr. Speaker, would any public servant, employee, supervisor, contractor, board member, or, for that matter, anyone involved in the government with knowledge of a wrongdoing not be protected if they came forward? Bill 4 doesn't do this, and to assert this sets a new bar for accountability and transparency in ignoring the obvious.

Also, the bill does not protect whistle-blowers who want to speak up about recent mismanagement in the PC government. It is only enforced from the day the bill is passed. Therefore, any wrongdoings that have happened in the last couple of years or are happening right now cannot be looked into. This government seems to be more interested in covering their own tracks, not defending whistle-blowers.

Further, if a wrongdoing has been confirmed and corrective action is required, this legislation does not provide for the outcome to be reported to the Legislature or made public. What that means is that these problems will remain buried under lock and key, with the public not being any wiser. This allows each government department, board, or organization the ability to cover up, to remain silent and nontransparent, no different than how this government has been operating for a few years. Why would the government want to keep all of this a secret? Doesn't the public deserve to know if their tax dollars have been abused or mismanaged? This legislation reduces transparency and creates a loophole to help the government sweep information that should be public under the rug. It creates a black hole that offers no comfort, protection, or solutions for whistle-blowers.

While the government calls this setting the bar high, Mr. Speaker, I think it's time the government picked the bar up off the floor. This is another broken promise from the Premier, who promised protection for whistle-blowers regardless of the manner in which they choose to disclose wrongdoings. The Premier time and time again during the leadership race, the election, and here in the Legislature talks about creating a transparent and engaging government that listens. However, in this legislation the government only extends whistle-blower protections to a limited number of people involved in the public sector and puts too much of an effort into sweeping things under the rug.

The only way to ensure transparency and correct problems that have festered within the government is to introduce strong legislation that protects whistle-blowers from reprisal and encourages them to speak up. If the government is serious about lifting the bar, they should bring forward legislation that does just that. There is still time to go back and make amendments and lift the bar up off the floor and create whistle-blower protection that can be the best in the country. I hope we can all work together to do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been eagerly anticipating my chance to speak to Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. The whistle-blower protection in this province is long overdue, and we will join the ranks of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Nova Scotia in having protection for whistle-blowers.

Whistle-blower used to be a dirty word, Mr. Speaker. It used to be used in the same way as "rat" or "tattletale." I can't help but to see it completely differently. Whistle-blowers protect the public interest and safety by courageously stepping forward despite the odds against them. In a word, they are heroes. Heroes are selfless. They sacrifice for others. They are brave when up against insurmountable odds. They are David to Goliath, and we should do everything we can to make sure that David wins.

Allan Cutler is a hero, Mr. Speaker. He blew the whistle on the Adscam sponsorship scandal. All Canadians owe him a debt of gratitude. Adscam wasn't just about the incompetent use of tax dollars. It was about the deliberate and fraudulent use of tax dollars for political purposes. For far too long, civic-spirited public servants have been afraid to come forward or be destroyed if they do. Careers can end. Jobs can be lost. Ultimately, the livelihood of a person and their family is put at risk when someone in the public service wants to step forward and bring attention to outrageous behaviour. I am pleased that after 41 years of government the party in power is finally seeing fit to bring whistle-blower legislation forward. It's about time.

There are also limitations to prevent frivolous claims against the government. Whistle-blowing is too vital to a free and healthy democracy to be bogged down with the bitterness of some. This legislation should be reserved for those who know of serious wrongdoing in public institutions.

I do, however, have many reservations. If this government is to be believed, this piece of legislation before us will protect those working in the public sector when they blow the whistle. They will not have to fear reprisal from their supervisors or from other management executives in their department.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that I don't believe this government. I don't believe this bill was intended to protect employees in government. This bill reads a lot like the FOIP Act. It was intended to protect the government from its employees. If this bill was intended to hold the government to the highest standards and facilitate whistle-blowing, it would read much differently. From the beginning of my reading, this bill seemed a bit suspicious. Why would the legislation only apply going forward? Wouldn't the government be interested in the violations of public trust? Wouldn't it want to know about gross mismanagement of public funds or reprisals against employees who spoke up in their departments?

One could conclude that there's something to hide, Mr. Speaker, especially since this bill, if passed, would not be implemented for some time. We'd be in limbo until it was passed. This seems less like whistle-blower protection and more like whistle-blower suffocation. What kind of message does this send to the civil service right now? The expense scandal in our health system was only brought to light by a FOIP request from the media. The government tried to hide the scandal. I would surely doubt that this government claims to be perfect, so why gag the civil service in the meantime? Why not make a promise here in the Legislature now to protect employees against reprisal from this day forward instead of at some future distant date that is undefined?

Another issue with this bill is the definition of wrongdoing. I've examined the legislation in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia. The bill we are debating is quite similar in many ways to the other provinces mentioned, but this government under the Premier has talked endlessly about being a leader in Canada. While I think we should be a leader on whistle-blower protection, we should set a higher standard of wrongdoing. As it stands in this bill, wrongdoing is limited. It's limited to gross mismanagement of funds, assets, and civil and criminal laws.

We can do better than this, Mr. Speaker. We should be looking at the ethical behaviour. What about the intimidation and bullying of our health care professionals? What about the Merali expense scandal? The CEO of Capital health signed off on Merali's expenses, yet we all know how unethical it is to have five-star dinners and luxury automobile expenses picked up by the Alberta taxpayer.

Another major concern of mine is the exemption section of this bill. To be honest, Mr. Speaker, all barn doors I've seen are smaller than this exemption. The government is asking us to trust the judgment of an ombudsman who is designated to oversee this process. Where I'm from, trust is earned, and memories are long. We have an Ethics Commissioner in this province. We have conflict of interest legislation in this province. It is clear that the former ministers must cool off for one year before re-entering government service, especially in your own department, yet somehow Evan Berger is now a highly paid consultant for this government.

What's the point of conflict of interest rules if this government is just going to waive them when it's in their best interest? What's going to happen with whistle-blower protection in this province when anyone or anything can be exempted from the act? It's shameful, Mr. Speaker. It's absolutely shameful. Albertans do deserve better than this.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss how private this legislation is, especially considering that it is designed for the public's benefit. This whole bill seems designed to keep a lid on outrageous conduct inside government. This seems far too secretive for me. This province thrives on freedom. The ministry that crafted this bill has the words "transparency" and "accountability" in its name, yet somehow this bill does not allow findings of wrongdoing to be made public by the public interest commissioner. Every avenue is designed to lead to the Premier's office and cabinet. If the commissioner is ignored by a minister or the Premier or by a deputy minister, there appears to be no recourse so that the public is aware of the situation. Ironically, this seems to be against the public interest.

I find it interesting that this bill closely follows the relevant legislation in Saskatchewan. I find it interesting because there is a significant clause in the Public Interest Disclosure Act of Saskatchewan that allows the commissioner to make a special report to the Speaker if it's in the public interest and relevant to a disclosure made to the office. Somehow section 24 from Saskatchewan fell off the truck on the way over.

I seriously hope this government reconsiders their bills and listens to the opposition so that serious progress is made on this issue. I was hopeful, Mr. Speaker, when I learned that the government would finally introduce whistle-blower legislation, the fifth province in Canada to do so. The Premier campaigned on this issue in the last election, and she campaigned on the issue when she ran for the leadership of her party. She criticized the ombudsman approach advocated by her opponent. She trashed it. Yet here we are watching this government zig when it said it would zag. Calling her actions a flip-flop cheapens the office.

I think my constituents and I don't just feel disappointed, we feel a bit betrayed. Twice the Premier promised significant reform in the way of this but has gone against something she has campaigned for. I hope for the sake of Albertans that this bill is significantly improved over the course of debate. We need to get our acts together on this.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion.

Mr. Fox moved on behalf of Mrs. Forsyth that Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

I have the required copies of the motion, 100, that I would like to distribute.

The Deputy Speaker: Please continue, hon. member.

Mr. Fox: I did hear earlier that there was some indication on the other side of the aisle that you would like to work together – I believe it was the Member for Calgary-South East – and I would like to take that as an olive branch with this motion. I would hope that it is passed and that we can move this to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities so that we can work on this legislation, we can get it right, and we can do what's in the best interests of all Albertans and make sure that this is an ironclad act that goes forward out of that committee.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment, Mr. Speaker. I'm really looking forward to the first piece of legislation that gets referred to one of these standing policy committees. I hope the government will take a look at this and allow us to use these parliamentary committees a little bit more for things like this. We have a great opportunity, I think, to work together in those legislative committees to draft and perfect legislation. I mean, whistleblower legislation, we all agree, is a fantastic idea, but this legislation falls short.

The problem is that by putting something like this into Committee of the Whole – Committee of the Whole is a very awkward vehicle in a lot of ways to appropriately deal with legislation where there are several amendments needed. We saw an example of that this afternoon. It can be very difficult and awkward. You can make little tweaks in Committee of the Whole – that works all right – but with regard to making substantive changes to the legislation, generally that should, I think, be done in a legislative committee.

I hope that the government will think about that and will vote to accept this amendment. This is not a matter of just tweaking this bill. There are very substantive amendments that we need to bring forward. If need be, we will bring them forward in Committee of the Whole, but I think it would be a much better service to the people of Alberta if we referred this to our legislative committees and got to work on this right away.

I hope that we can vote on that in this House because I for one don't know if I can support this bill in its current form. I think that there are so many amendments that are needed to make this a strong piece of legislation. Right now I think that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood had it right in that this is more like whistle-blower management. This isn't whistle-blower legislation. This is a way to manage whistle-blowers. I think this is a piece of legislation that is truly full of holes.

I could go through all the different amendments and things that I think we should do to fix this piece of legislation, but I'll save that for, hopefully, the legislative policy committee process. If not, then I guess we'll have to save it for Committee of the Whole.

Hopefully, we can have a vote on this now and see if we can put this to a committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers on the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to speak in support of this amendment motion. I have four amendments. I don't know how many the Wildrose caucus has and how many the NDP caucus has. The right thing would be to refer it to the committee and get it right. We don't want to, you know, pass the bill and then have to bring in another bill to correct this one, like we did before. So it will be the right choice to send it to the committee and get it right.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in favour of this motion. Here we are again. A different bill, but the reality is that we are going to attempt to utilize a parliamentary tool that I don't think has been effectively used, particularly in this session. So in good faith, to bring this bill to a parliamentary committee, at least what the governing party can say is: we tried to accommodate the opposition so we can make this a good bill. At best – at best – we can get something that we all agree on and actually have something concrete that is significant, that the government will be proud of, that the opposition will support, and the public will have something with some teeth in it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 4 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we should probably resolve into Committee of the Whole and debate another bill for another 10 hours, but I don't think anybody else thinks that, so I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:43 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 7, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Dear God, as elected members of this Assembly help us to remember that we are but servants gathered here to represent a diversity of people. May the common thoughts that unite us shine brighter than those that divide us. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, just a brief reminder, if I could have your attention for a moment. Kindly be reminded that because of extremely poor weather conditions today a number of roads are closed and a number of public transit systems have been severely interrupted. As a result, we are three pages short in the number of servants that help us today. Please bear that in mind as you communicate with each other with notes and so on.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, indeed, have the honour of making a very special introduction in our Legislature today. In schools across Alberta this week students are paying tribute to soldiers who have sacrificed so that we can enjoy the freedoms that we enjoy today. The soldiers we recognize are not just grandparents or great-grandparents. For many, like Tim and Sally Goddard, who are seated today in your Speaker's gallery, we are remembering and recognizing sons and daughters.

Mr. and Mrs. Goddard are in Alberta this week to join the students at Captain Nichola Goddard school in Calgary as they recognize their first Remembrance Day service in their new school. The school is named after their daughter, who was killed on May 17, 2006, while serving in Afghanistan. It was my pleasure to meet Mrs. and Mr. Goddard earlier today, hear more amazing stories about their daughter, and learn about the remarkable humanitarian work that these two parents are now doing not only in Afghanistan but throughout the world.

Joining them, Mr. Speaker, in the gallery is Lieutenant-Colonel Bill Fletcher. Lieutenant-Colonel Fletcher currently serves at the western Canadian Army headquarters here in Edmonton, but back in May 2006 he was Captain Nichola Goddard's company commander. For his leadership and bravery during that development he was recognized by the Governor General of Canada with a Star of Military Valour, Canada's second-highest military honour. May I add that only 10 Canadians have been awarded this particular order. This is an award that recognizes valour, courage, selflessness, and devotion to duty in very difficult situations. It is for that valour, that courage, and that devotion from the hundreds of thousands of soldiers who have fought or are fighting for our country that we recognize during Remembrance Day.

I would ask that all members of this Assembly welcome Mrs. and Mr. Goddard and Lieutenant-Colonel Fletcher in our Legislature. I would ask them to rise and receive our welcome. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour and pleasure to rise today and introduce to you from Edith Rogers school 106 very enthusiastic students who are learning about democracy and the Alberta government. They are accompanied by teachers Dave Hunt, Bev Newsham, Marek Ziomo, and Nikki Kaye. I'm sorry if I pronounced your names wrong. They are here to understand and learn about our Legislature, and they will spend all this afternoon here. I would ask them to rise, please, and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce an extraordinary Canadian to all members of this House. Lisa Schamehorn Eades is a personal friend, but she's also a personal reminder to me of the burden that our military families carry. Lisa is the widow of Sergeant Shawn Eades, who was killed in action in August 2008 while serving on his third tour of duty in Afghanistan.

Lisa and her husband are reminders of more than just sacrifice. They're reminders of the incredible work our soldiers do for others while they serve so far away. Our soldiers that fought in Afghanistan did more than just fight, Mr. Speaker, they built. They built schools for millions of Afghan children, including millions of girls who had never been allowed to go to school before. Before Canadians got to Afghanistan, there were about a million children in school in Afghanistan and none of them were women, none of them were little girls. Today there are 8 million children in schools, and about a third of those are girls. These soldiers and their families do not just change lives today; they are changing generations.

Mr. Speaker, Remembrance Day is a day to remember the fallen and those who have served our country. But we also need to remember the families like Lisa and her two young daughters, Breanna and Niya, who will wear the Memorial Cross in recognition of their sacrifice during this year's Remembrance Day ceremonies. We need to continue to remember the burden that our military families carry. I'd ask all members of this House to join me in welcoming Lisa with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Ms Heather Smith and Mr. David Harrigan, whom I met with today as part of the ongoing budget consultations. Heather is the president of the United Nurses of Alberta, and David is the director of labour relations. We had a very engaged conversation this morning, and I received some tremendous advice and counsel from these two folks as well as some others. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask that you all give them the warm reception of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Brenda Bourque-Stratichuk. Brenda is involved in the Métis Nation of Alberta provincially and regionally. She is a vice-president of the region 1 aboriginal business association, chair of the Kids Are Worth It nutritional program, sits on the St. Paul Legal Aid appeals association, and much more. I'd like her to rise at this point in time to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Assembly a very special guest of mine, Mr. Jonathan Dai. He is a prominent scholar, a successful businessman, and a passionate community leader in the Alberta Chinese community. Along with his long list of titles because of his extensive involvement in the community, Mr. Dai is the current president of the Canada-China Council for Cooperation and Development, where he champions the promotion of trade and business relationships between Canada and China. One of the many awards he has received is a citizenship and immigration award in business research and development. Mr. Dai is sitting in the members' gallery, and I would like to ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of this Assembly two of our province's long-time farmers and constituents of mine. Danny and Elaine Lyons are from Westlock, and they braved those roads. This shows you part of their fortitude. They celebrated the family's Alberta Century farm and ranch award this summer. This means that the Lyons family has continuously farmed in Alberta and have been dedicated contributors to our province's agricultural industry for over 100 years. Danny and Elaine are deeply involved in their community at Hazel Bluff and continue to live and farm on the family's original homestead to this day. Our province is blessed with so many hard-working farm and ranch families. I am proud to be able to welcome Danny and Elaine to the Legislature today. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and greetings from our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the Minister of Environment and SRD.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the House seven board members of the Newell Foundation, who have joined us today all the way from my constituency of Strathmore-Brooks. As I call their names, I would like to ask them to rise: Yoko Fujimoto; Debbie Ackerley; Molly Douglass, who, I may add, was my junior high language arts teacher; Sheila Evans; Ike Schroeder; Barry Morishita; Cathy Stephenson. I would now like to ask the members of this Assembly to give our esteemed guests the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two really great guests that we have in the members' gallery. Today I'm proud to say that we have our director of communications in ESRD, Mr. Andy Weiler, here with us and a very special guest that he has with him, his daughter Megan, who is with Andy today on a take your kid to work program. They've had a great day getting back and forth and joining us here at the Legislature and had some extra bonding time as they were travelling from home to here. Please, I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

MLA Remuneration

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today. I'd like to go back a few years to April of 2008. Premier Stelmach and the Alberta PCs have just won an election. They are riding high. They are on top of the world, feeling so good about themselves, in fact, that their first official act is to go behind closed doors and give themselves a 34 per cent pay increase. I remember that, and I know a lot of Albertans remember that. I would suggest it's a major reason there are 17 Wildrose MLAs over here today.

You think that would have taught them a lesson, but here we are four and a half years later and it's like a rerun. We're watching a bad movie all over again. Until a day or so ago, Mr. Speaker, MLA compensation was roughly $145,000 a year. Well, now it's $156,000 a year. PC members say that that's a pay cut. I guess we can figure out why they can't balance the budget.

I ask rhetorically how many of them would be here today if they told their constituents: a vote for me is a vote for another MLA pay raise? It doesn't require an answer. What it shows, though, is that you can change the leader of the party, but you can't change the culture. The Premier came to office promising to deliver change, a different way of governing: more open and transparent, more accountable to Albertans. I'd like to believe that she was sincere, I really would, and she's merely discovering what many Albertans already know, that you can't change the culture.

That's why I'm proudly on this side. I stand with a Wildrose leader and Wildrose MLAs that believe in giving back to Albertans, not taking from them.

Thank you.

Political Party Fundraising

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, as days go by, Albertans are learning more and more about the PC financing and cheating strategies, especially when it comes to fundraising. First there was the Daryl Katz fiasco and his $430,000 donation to the PC Party. Then we learned about Joe Lougheed and how he billed the Alberta College of Art and Design $150,000 for setting up meetings with senior Tory staff and a minister on top of shelling out thousands of dollars' worth of tickets to Tory fundraisers. Now we're learning about a top executive at the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology soliciting political donations for the Tories.

With so much questionable money flowing into the PC's piggy banks, we're demanding answers. This government cannot be trusted to be straight with Albertans when it comes to money and donations. This Premier, when she was the Justice minister, buried efforts to include donations to her party's leadership race in disclosure legislation, so how can Albertans trust her and her government to clean up the financing of politics in this province?

Mr. Speaker, New Democrats have long been the only voice in Alberta demanding a thorough housecleaning. That's why we've called on the Chief Electoral Officer to investigate the Katz donations, and we have just submitted another request, for another investigation into Joe Lougheed's illegal fundraising tactics.

This government needs to take immediate action to prevent another Katz fiasco and to stop Tory influence peddling by making changes to the election financing legislation. New Democrats, like most Albertans, want to see a ban on corporate and union donations. Mr. Speaker, we need strong and principled election finances legislation. It's the only way to protect our democracy and to finally have a government that cares about the needs of Alberta's middle-class families. How can the Progressive Conservatives call themselves progressive when they continue to fail to be transparent and accountable to all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Captain Nichola Goddard School

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across this great province we have hundreds of schools where excellence in teaching and learning take place. Each of those schools is named by its respective jurisdiction and can reflect a prominent or influential community member or historical figure. We can add Captain Nichola Goddard to that list.

This past August the new Captain Nichola Goddard school in Calgary opened to students. The school was named to honour the life, service, and sacrifice of Captain Nichola Kathleen Sarah Goddard, a devoted Canadian, a leader, a wife, a daughter, a friend, and someone who had an infectious smile that could cheer up anyone anywhere at any time. On May 17, 2006, in Kandahar province, while moving her vehicle to provide better protection for a group of soldiers, Captain Goddard was killed when her vehicle was attacked by the Taliban.

Captain Goddard believed that her service would create opportunities for other people to build a better life, specifically through education, Mr. Speaker, and it has. Our military recognized her leadership and posthumously awarded her the meritorious service medal. Her love of life, learning, and service lives on through several significant honours, including scholarships at the University of Calgary and the University of Prince Edward Island. In recognition of Goddard's heroic service to our country the government of Canada announced that the Canadian Coast Guard would name a new patrol vessel in her memory.

Mr. Speaker, with Remembrance Day approaching, we are honoured, humbled, and proud to have Captain Nichola Goddard's name attached to one of Alberta's schools and equally touched to have her parents, Tim and Sally, in the gallery today. Her name and her legacy are now enshrined in our great province, and she will never be forgotten. [applause]

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MLA Remuneration

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday PC MLAs voted themselves an 8 per cent pay raise for all MLAs. Now, the Deputy Premier issued a press release saying that it was a cut, but it's not; it's a raise. The full package makes us the second-highest paid provincial MLAs in the country. It doesn't really matter how you try to mask it. It's another 8 per cent increase when Alberta is running a $3 billion deficit. The PC caucus may believe it is a cut. No one else does. It's a raise. Period. I may have missed something, though. Did the Premier campaign on this?

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the Leader of the Opposition has missed, and she has missed a lot. She missed the fact that this Premier has now eliminated any and all committee pay. She missed the fact that this Premier has eliminated any and all transitional pay. She has also missed the fact that Alberta now is the only province in Canada with no transition pay. She also missed the fact that this Premier eliminated the tax-free allowance. She also misses the fact that this Premier made sure that we don't get a pension plan, and she misses the fact that before the election MLAs were receiving from taxpayers $170,000. Now they're receiving $156,000.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to teach the Deputy Premier some basic math because they're ignoring that in their lame defence. The transition allowance, committee pay, and tax-free allowances were not part of the package that newly elected MLAs receive. For the last six months, up until Tuesday morning, an MLA made about $145,000, but by Tuesday afternoon an MLA made more than $156,000. That's a raise. Why do they defend it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: You see, Mr. Speaker, how convoluted they have to get to make this seem confusing. The fact is that it is this Premier that eliminated all those additional benefits as of this election. The fact is that they were receiving from taxpayers $170,000. The fact is that they are now only receiving $156,000. Let me tell you one more thing. Also, the fact is that now they have the opportunity to completely opt out from any RRSP if they choose to do so, and I hope that they do.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the PC majority wanted this extra money, and now they have it. They used all kinds of manoeuvres to get it, including renaming the transition allowance a departure allowance. Of course, that didn't work. So now they're renaming a raise by calling it a cut. That won't work either. Is this the sort of thing the Premier was referring to when she talked about raising the bar on accountability?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition may want to get as cute with the numbers as she wishes to. The facts are simple: $170,000 down to $156,000, no additional pay, no hidden pay, no transition allowance, no pension, transparent, and now an added ability for opposition members, if they choose to do so, to opt out from any and all RRSP contributions.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, when I got elected in April, I was more than happy to find out our compensation would be roughly $145,000. Suddenly, in the last day or two, though, it's become $156,000. Now, I'm no veteran of the intricacies of this Legislature and all the complexities of being an MLA, but I'm pretty sure that 156 is greater than 145, and I'm pretty sure the public gets that, too. Do you understand how the public feels about that, Premier? [interjections]

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what I know is that the public in the last election voted for a Premier who has undertaken to eliminate committee and no-meet committee pay. [interjections] She has undertaken to eliminate transition pay. They have voted for a Premier who will make sure that Alberta is the only jurisdiction in Canada that doesn't have any transitional allowance. They have voted for a Premier who wanted a very transparent payment method to MLAs, and they voted for a Premier who brought down the pay of all MLAs of this Alberta Legislature from $170,000 before the election to $156,000 as of yesterday.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the noise level is starting to creep up a little bit. It's reminiscent of the kind of weather we're having out there, not good. Please be reminded that whoever has the floor has the right to speak and be heard.

The hon. member.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ripple effect of voting yourself a big raise will be felt across the province. Regular, hard-working Albertans can't do it, unions can't do it, and even though the government is insisting that more money is less money, anyone with a pencil can figure out it isn't. Well, maybe not quite anyone. How will the government spin this 8 per cent raise that it gave itself to the very unions it's trying to negotiate with?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, it's great that this member is advocating for union raises. We chose not to take a raise. We chose to take a pay cut, and the numbers are very simple.

Let me also add that we have sought the advice of a retired Supreme Court of Canada justice, Justice Major, who reviewed all of the pay of MLAs throughout the country and made his recommendations. His recommendations were significantly richer, which we have not adopted either. As a result, Mr. Speaker, it's as simple as this: from a $170,000 cost to taxpayers before the election to $156,000 as of yesterday.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, the only thing this government needs to cut in addition to the 8 per cent raise is the baloney it dishes out on a daily basis.

Given that doctors have stopped negotiations on a new contract and they're struggling to negotiate a contract with teachers, why doesn't the government understand that an 8 per cent raise for MLAs is a terrible precedent and will make these sensitive contract negotiations more difficult?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, unlike all the professionals that this member referred to, we are not taking a pension plan either. No, we will not be using this as a guideline for negotiations with other unions because we do not expect other unions to take an 8 per cent cut or from 170 to 156.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Justice System Review

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to ask for an immediate, third-party investigation into the case of the Airdrie girl and several other cases where delayed prosecutions resulted in dropped charges. Even Theoren Fleury, the former Calgary Flame, himself an abuse victim and now an outspoken advocate for victims, says that the Premier is passing the buck, and he's also called for a full investigation. He says that by the time pedophiles get caught, they typically have over 100 victims, yet the government accuses us of playing politics. Why don't they shut us up by ordering a full independent investigation right now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This has been asked and answered several times through the House, and I'll answer it one more time. We will and we have undertaken a full and complete independent investigation. If that investigation at its conclusion indicates that we need an external review, we'll go and look at that. Let's let this process work itself out. Let's not politicize what is a very serious and important issue for all Albertans.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government claimed the girl from Airdrie was an isolated case, but we are aware of multiple cases where delays in prosecution have forced judges to dismiss charges, denying victims their day in court. Now, judges call these delays egregious and unacceptable, prejudicial, unexplained, and unjustified. The minister wants to spend months having the department investigate itself. That's another delay. Why not do it properly, completely, and independently right now?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, again, that is exactly what we are doing. It saddens me deeply that the Leader of the Opposition has no respect whatsoever for our judicial process in this province. [interjections]

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there's the little girl from Airdrie we learned about last week: no justice for her. The victim of a Calgary gang rape: no justice for her. A Calgary woman who was sexually assaulted in 2003 never had the case go to trial because of delays: no justice for her. [interjections] How many more cases does this government need to see before it finally acts to restore public confidence in our justice system?

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. May I ask you, particularly those in the front row here, a couple of you: don't heckle when your own leader is asking a question. Let her get out the question. Okay? Please. It's recorded, and I have several examples. I'll be happy to play them for you.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, for the final time today, Thursday we found out about this issue, and Thursday I ordered the investigation. We are acting. This is a very serious issue, and I thank the member for her concern over this particular issue but also for all sexual assault victims throughout the province.

Child Poverty

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Society is measured by how it treats its weakest members, and I can think of no one weaker than the 70,000 vulnerable Albertan children living in poverty. Speaking of heckling, just yesterday the Finance minister wished the Human Services minister "good luck" in response to a question on funding child poverty. To the Premier. Your government doesn't have a problem using taxpayer money to fund fancy dinners and pensions. Why can't you just spread the luck around to help lift our children out of poverty?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's not good luck that Alberta children are looking forward to ending poverty; it's good government, good management, and good leadership. Our Premier has made a commitment to the people of Alberta that we will have a poverty reduction strategy. We will help those children get the type of life that they need in this province and the opportunity to participate and the opportunity that we celebrate in this great province.

Now, the Provincial Treasurer said "good luck" in jest yesterday in answer to a question. He actually has wished me good luck many times, and I need good luck because this is not an easy task. This is a very, very important task, and it's one that takes good effort.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, to these guys it might be a joke, and they can wish each other luck and pat themselves on the back, but Alberta's working families are struggling to put food on the table and pay the bills and the fees that this government has downloaded onto them.

Given that promises such as the social policy framework and the elimination of child poverty cost real money, not lucky money, to the Minister of Finance: how much luck do our children need to have you fund child poverty reduction?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it isn't about luck. I will wish all of my colleagues the best of luck in this Assembly to accomplish the tasks that they've set out to do. I have full confidence that this minister is going to be able to do that. I am also going to be very proud to be the Finance minister that helps him do that and to achieve the vision that this Premier has set forward with my colleagues on this side.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the better that this government funds child poverty, the luckier our children are going to get. Given that this Premier's promise to end child poverty in five years is so far down on its luck since the Finance minister here wants to play the Grinch by refusing to fund it, to the Premier. Please get up and answer this question. In light of your Finance minister's refusal to fund the ending of child poverty, is this just another broken promise or another flip-flop?

Ms Redford: I truly congratulate the hon. member for trying to come up with creative words to ask entertaining questions. At no point, Mr. Speaker, has anyone on this side of the House ever suggested in any way that this government was not prepared to fulfill its commitment to fund our child poverty reduction strategy. If we look across the province with stakeholders on what is happening with respect to consultation to end child poverty, we are doing solid work. This minister is doing solid work. Our Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board is doing solid work, and we are going to keep our commitment.

Election Finances Legislation

Mr. Mason: Well, there's a first time for everything, Mr. Speaker.

When it comes to election financing, the PCs are serial cheaters. We've seen Tory bagmen entice municipal councils, school boards, Métis settlements, and postsecondary institutions to break the law. When they're caught red-handed, the Chief Electoral Officer refuses to reveal details of the law-breaking. To the Premier: when will this government crack down on the biggest election finance lawbreaker in this province, the Alberta Progressive Conservative Party?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for his inquiry about the Election Act. It's interesting because back in May I said that we would be bringing in amendments. Guess what? We are bringing in amendments to deal with the issues that he had raised.

Mr. Mason: Oh, well, I'm just so relieved, Mr. Speaker.

Given that yesterday I wrote to the Chief Electoral Officer asking him to investigate an invoice sent to the Alberta College of Art and Design by Tory bagman Joe Loughheed for tickets to a Tory fundraising dinner and given that the same Tory bagman pulled the same stunt with the University of Calgary, when will this PC government take decisive action to stop illegal fundraising activity by the PC Party?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know it's Wednesday, and I realize that many of you have sat until almost midnight or after midnight for a few days in a row. I understand that tomorrow is Thursday, and there's going to be a break for a week, but that doesn't mean that we should relax the rules to the point where they can be broken.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you know what the rules are concerning questions about party matters. So I would ask you, if you wish to rephrase that question, to please do so.

Election Finances Legislation

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I will rephrase this question. The question is: when will the government – the government – who is responsible for enforcing the laws of this province, take decisive action to stop illegal fundraising by a certain unnamed political party?

Mr. Denis: Once again, Mr. Speaker, there are very clear rules that this government has established related to conflict of interest, related to lobbying, related to donations. We have a Chief Electoral Officer that's independent.

At the same time, beating that dead horse I've had the last couple of days, I want to quote for this member, so he understands, Dr. Daniel Doz today: I want to be very clear; at no time did Alberta College of Art and Design use public dollars to make donations to a political party or to purchase tickets to political events.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that yet another Tory bagman, a senior executive at the time at the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology, used her work e-mail to illegally solicit political donations from the Alberta College of Art and Design for a Tory fundraiser, will the Premier admit that a pattern of corruption and illegal activity on the part of the PC Party exists and that this government is utterly incapable of fixing the problem?

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's move on.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, we all now know about an Airdrie girl losing her rights to justice because court delays resulted in the case against her accused rapist being dropped. One of the reasons being given to her by the Crown was a shortage of courtroom availability and staffing. This Premier and her minister have repeatedly claimed in this House that this was just one case, an isolated incident. If this is an isolated case, Minister, why yesterday did your internal investigator into this issue tell the Calgary Herald that so far this year eight cases in Edmonton and Calgary have been stayed as a result of lengthy court delays? Is that an isolated issue, sir?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, whether it's an isolated issue or not, one occurrence is one too many, and this is something this government takes very, very seriously. As we move on, I would ask this member to join me in supporting the process that we've outlined and waiting for the process to go through so we know exactly what happened so that this may never happen again.

Mr. Anderson: This process needs to be greatly expanded. I think we can all see that now. It is clear that our justice system, the one this minister and this Premier are responsible for, is overburdened and unable to keep up, and as a result of that, victims of serious crimes are being revictimized. Isn't it clear to this minister that he is failing to protect Albertans by not ensuring there are enough prosecutors, judges, and courtroom time to deal with dangerous sexual predators, who now think they can get away with anything in this province? Are you going to spend the resources needed to unclog our system and protect Albertans?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, this was an important issue for this government long before this member brought this very important issue to this House. Just this year I've appointed two more Provincial Court judges. Next year I'm appointing additional Provincial Court judges. Last week at the national Justice ministers' meeting in Regina I lobbied Justice Minister Rob Nicholson for more Queen's Bench justices to deal with the growing population and caseload in this province. I hope this member will join me in continuing to push for more judges on the federal level as well.

Mr. Anderson: Lobby harder, Minister.

How about this idea, though? Given that the PCs just gave every MLA in this House a raise of $11,000 per person, why don't we forgo that raise as a group here and instead use that to hire another judge and three Crown prosecutors to deal with violent crimes like the one in Airdrie and actually start spending money on the priorities that will help protect Albertans rather than spending taxpayer money lining the pockets of PC politicians and cronies? How about that for an idea?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that I find it almost abhorrent how an issue that is not only important because it pertains to justice but actually pertains to victims that they have chosen to name in this House – how they would politicize that and link that to MLA pay and other political innuendos. Having said that, the Premier and the Minister of Justice have been very clear. One, let's find out what truly happened in those cases, and we shall find that out shortly. If indeed it is believed that there was something wrong, we will bring in outside investigators as required. But let's not forget that this minister and this Premier have been lobbying the federal government for more Court of Queen's Bench judges.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Alberta-U.S. Relations

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's no secret that what happens in the United States has a significant effect on Alberta's economic interests. I'm concerned, quite frankly, that Alberta's message as a responsible energy producer risks not being heard in many quarters of the United States. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. How will he ensure over the next four years that American lawmakers appreciate that there is no better place in the world than Canada to help the United States meet its energy security needs?

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta-U.S. relations are absolutely fundamental to the success of our province. Our Premier has made it a priority to travel to the United States to meet face to face with key decision-makers. One would need to look no further than her historic meeting with the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chair of the Democratic National Committee, and also key administrative representatives. She's made it very clear to me that the next four years present a tremendous opportunity for Albertans and that our level of engagement in the U.S. and on both sides of the border must increase significantly, and it will.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. What specific Alberta-U.S. engagement strategies and actions will you promise will be taken to ensure that Alberta's access to U.S. markets remains a priority of this government?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's of critical importance that we continue to work on strategies that eliminate impediments to the more efficient flow of goods and services across borders. We'll work to develop new markets. There remain significant opportunities to expand our share of the U.S. market for a wide variety of commodities, products, and services. While the U.S. is our largest trading partner, we'll be closely watching how the U.S. leadership handles the health of their economy. No doubt this underlines the commitment that we have to diversifying our markets. It's critical to our future.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Energy. With the same President and the same Congress in place in the United States, what does he think of the odds of the Keystone XL pipeline being approved and in a timely manner?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I remain optimistic about this project. Obviously, the southern leg down to the Gulf coast has already been approved and is under construction. We know that the issues with respect to Nebraska are being addressed by the local processes there. This government, though, will continue to engage with U.S. lawmakers to ensure that they are fully aware of the importance of this pipeline and of the energy security that Alberta and Canada can provide. Canada and Alberta in particular remain the safest, friendliest, most secure source of energy for America.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Seeking Opinions

The Speaker: Let me just point out some things as we go. Beauchesne 409, hon. member, would tell you that a question during question period "ought to seek information . . . [but] cannot seek an opinion." Just a reminder.

Let us move ahead. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Rolling Power Outages

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week we learned from the Market Surveillance Administrator's report that the July 9 brownouts that gouged Albertans were caused by improperly set controls. The report didn't mention or investigate the forced reduction of electricity imports at precisely the same time, when the system desperately needed only 200 megawatts of electricity to avoid brownouts. Can the minister explain this omission and discrepancy?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the MSA, the Market Surveillance Administrator, found in their purview and in the work they did was that there was no collusion evident on the 9th of July. However, I am still awaiting another report from AESO, the system operator, and I'll look forward to seeing that full report. Like the hon. member opposite, I want to ensure that Albertans continue to have confidence in the electrical system in this province, that when they turn on the lights, the lights go on, and that we continue to have cost-effective electricity throughout this province.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the data indicate that the system operator, in effect, turned off as much as 400 megawatts at precisely a critical time when the system only needed 200 megawatts to avoid brownouts, quoting the minister, was this "an opportunity for a good conspiracy" to curtail electricity imports to manipulate prices, or was this incompetence just part of the systems operator carrying out this government's failed policies?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is plenty of opportunity for conspiracy theories in the world, and this is just another example of one of them. I would say that this hon. member, clearly, I believe, could run the system better, could plan it better, and could build it better than any other Canadian. You know what? That's a big ambition.

I would prefer to listen to the experts who actually are on the front lines every day doing their best to serve the people of Alberta to ensure that they have a robust electrical system in this province.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can guarantee you that I can run it better than any sitting cabinet minister. Thank you very much.

Will the minister undertake to table and explain to this Assembly why the Market Surveillance Administrator failed to investigate the reduction of imports when the system desperately needed that electricity to avoid brownouts and provide this Assembly with a detailed record of the flow of electricity imports for that day, July 9, 2012?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I made the commitment on the 9th of July and on the 10th of July that I wanted to understand what happened that day, as all members of this Legislature would as well. I made a commitment that there would be full disclosure of the results of that review, and I will do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Market Access to China

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. China has recently emerged as an economic powerhouse in our global economy. As such, many jurisdictions around the world have developed strategies to increase trade with China. To the Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Affairs. You mentioned the work that you have started on the Asia Advisory Council earlier this week in the House. What else is Alberta doing to enhance specific trade opportunities with China?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I cannot stress enough to this Assembly the importance of China as a key market for this province. China places a very high priority on fostering close personal relationships with jurisdictions that they enter into business and cultural opportunities with. We have been doing this through direct relationships through successful missions by our Premier and other ministers along with the work of our Alberta offices in Hong Kong, Beijing, Shanghai, and Taipei. In addition, the work of the business community, cultural organizations, and postsecondary institutions has successfully been building dynamic relationships with China in energy, agriculture, science and technology, and culture.

Thank you.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same associate minister. As you are aware, there are Albertans that currently live here that already have cultural and economic ties with China such as the Chinese Professionals and Entrepreneurs Association and the Canada-China Council for Cooperation and Development, like Mr. Dai I introduced earlier. To those Albertans, some of them living in my riding, what specifically is the government of Alberta going to partake in to take the strengths that they have to advance our interests?

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is correct. Local communities and cultural organizations are important ambassadors for our province, building very positive impressions of Alberta and Canada abroad. Our government works to ensure that the voice of Alberta's Chinese community is reflected in our policies, and we work to develop opportunities such as educational and cultural exchanges. We work with the organizations the member mentions in areas such as supporting ongoing missions and incoming visits by Chinese officials and other delegations.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last supplemental question is to the same associate minister. In your recent trip to China what specific outcomes did you achieve to enhance the economic and cultural opportunities that you talked about earlier?

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, Mr. Speaker, we saw some very important immediate outcomes during this mission, including agreements with leading business development organizations, who agreed to offer exciting international work experience for Alberta graduates. A very exciting follow-up visit has just been confirmed with a Chinese organization seeking to collaborate with us and bring positive results to our province. We continue to work on different initiatives with groups that have a strong interest in what Alberta has to offer in terms of technology and knowledge and know-how. We have a strong relationship with China, and we'll make it bigger and stronger.

Thank you.

Political Party Fundraising

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, another day, another scandal. Today we learned of another situation of Progressive Conservative Party insiders working at publicly funded institutions breaking clear election laws by fundraising for the PC Party. What makes the details so perverse is that the individual was actually engaged in fundraising while at work at her computer at SAIT and that she is soliciting funds from another public institution, the Alberta College of Art and Design. To the Deputy Premier: is it government policy to find PC loyalists jobs at publicly funded institutions?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, two points on this matter. This member has been reminded on a number of occasions in this House that if he has any concerns with any member of the Alberta public doing something that doesn't adhere to our laws, he knows exactly where to turn. He should go to the elections officer or the Ethics Commissioner to report that. To date, they haven't.

Also, let me remind this member that even though, Mr. Speaker, you don't like to talk about political parties over here, the PC Party is the only party that listed any and all donations that they may have received in error and posted them on their website. Now I challenge the parties opposite to do just the same and post their donations that they received that they shouldn't have.

Mr. Hehr: That's just wonderful, but is the Deputy Premier telling me that it's a case of good luck that Tory insiders continue to get jobs in key positions and government relations departments in our universities and colleges, or is it government policy to ensure that members of the family are positioned strategically in these institutions to do the government's bidding?

Mr. Denis: I will not entertain any of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo's baseless conspiracy theories on this matter. We've been very clear. This government has been very clear. Donation activity from a postsecondary institution is unacceptable. If this member has some information or, again, wants to report this to the Chief Electoral Officer or the Ethics Commissioner, as the Deputy Premier mentioned, I would in fact insist that he do so.

Mr. Hehr: All that I'm asking the minister is to use common sense. You look at the names of Tories who have been named as fundraisers for these various institutions. It's clear. I'm just wondering if it's government policy whether you find these people jobs or not.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, it is not up to me or anybody else in this entire Chamber to tell an educational institution as to who it goes and hires. I will just leave, again, these baseless conspiracy theories over across the aisle and take my seat. Hopefully, this is the last time we have to answer this question today.

Edmonton Down Syndrome Clinic

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, today is the last day of National Down Syndrome Awareness Week. Ironically, due to Tory cuts Alberta Health Services is eliminating funding for the nurse co-ordinator position at the Edmonton Down Syndrome Clinic in the Stollery children's hospital. Despite recognizing this position as an essential health service in 2011, this government is now trying to download the costs onto a local charity. To the Minister of Health: how can this minister justify cuts to this essential service?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, our first and only concern as a government is to ensure that the needs of these young children and their families are met. I have spoken with Alberta Health Services today. I am assured by Alberta Health Services that this program is not ending, that it will continue. I expect Alberta Health Services to work with the families and with the community organization that represents these families to find an acceptable solution to this issue.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that instead of funding this essential service, this government chooses to pay for things like unused London hotel rooms, will the minister admit that forcing parents to hold a bake sale for essential services is a slap in the face to families affected by Down syndrome?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very irresponsible distortion of the facts of this situation. As I said in my earlier answer, my office was in contact with Alberta Health Services earlier today. We are assured that this clinic is not shutting down, and I have indicated very clearly to AHS that they need to work with the families and the community organization that represents those families to ensure that these services continue to be provided.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that during the PC leadership race the Premier's website said, "I want to identify services that can be transferred to community leadership or privatized" and given that this service has now been passed off to community leadership, can the Premier tell us regarding services for kids with Down syndrome: is this what she had in mind?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, apparently the hon. member is not interested in the answer that I gave him to his first question. I will say to him and to this House once again: there is no jurisdiction in this country and there is no Premier in this country and no government that is more committed to the needs of families and children with Down syndrome than that in Alberta.

Driving Competence Test

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, once again this government is confused and inconsistent. The Minister of Transportation indicated that the DriveABLE program is under review, but Alberta Transportation says that there's no agreement with DriveABLE. It seems reasonable to believe that at some point in time there had to be a discussion on the requirements and criteria that would be used when making the decision to revoke the licence of a senior. Assumedly, those discussions would have been held with DriveABLE. Given that we are hearing from many unsuspecting seniors from across this province that they are concerned about the impact of this DriveABLE program, will the minister share with Albertans how the government decided the results of this program would be part of the criteria used in revoking the licences of seniors?

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that the hon. member knows just how badly she embarrassed and insulted herself with the irresponsible and inaccurate member's statement on this topic that she made in the House yesterday, but we will be correcting that in due course.

Mr. Speaker, the only person that has the authority to take away a driver's licence is the registrar. They use a wide range of evidence, including medical evidence. The evidence may include DriveABLE exams amongst others. When that happens, a person can always go to the Alberta Transportation Safety Board.

Mrs. Towle: One only has to wonder if the minister has some cognitive issues he may need to deal with here as well.

Given that there is no agreement with DriveABLE, can the Minister of Transportation explain how this private company would be allowed in any way, shape, or form to share any of the personal medical information that it obtains from unsuspecting seniors with Alberta Transportation?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, doctors can refer patients to this DriveABLE organization, who can share the information with the doctor as part of their reference. That's how they get involved in this.

Mrs. Towle: Unbelievable. They share the information with Alberta Transportation as per an e-mail directly from Alberta Transportation, and I'm more than willing to table that, Mr. Speaker.

Given that many seniors across the province are wondering if they'll be the next ones who will be asked to put their licence at risk, can the Minister of Health table the agreement that must be in place that allows for the use of DriveABLE technology being used at many of our health care facilities across Alberta?

Mr. Horne: I don't know what specific information the hon. member is referring to. If she'd care to provide me with some specifics of her request, I'd be very pleased to table whatever information I have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Transportation Infrastructure

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the growth in Alberta's international region transportation infrastructure is a major concern not only for the efficient movement of goods and services but also for the safety of those who work in the economic heartland of the Leduc Industrial Park, the Nisku Industrial Park, and the Edmonton International Airport. One of the major outstanding projects in my constituency is the 65th Avenue overpass, linking the city of Leduc to Port Alberta. My question to the Minister of Transportation: what is the status of this project within your department?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for the question. We continue through Alberta Transportation to work with the city of Leduc, the Edmonton International Airport, and area developers to determine the best course of action for this particular intersection and how best to share the costs. At this point road construction is not on the three-year plan, but as I've stated before in this House, we will continue to consider it in priority based on needs, based on development, based on safety and a number of other important criteria.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Port Alberta is an ambitious project that benefits all of northern Alberta by providing a commercial hub for goods transported by air, ground, and rail, can the minister update Albertans on what the province is doing to support this economic resource?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the importance of Port Alberta, and Alberta Transportation is working on the Alberta transportation strategy, which is a long-term, multimodal strategy to improve transportation safety and security in Alberta and to guide investments and programs in the future. Input from Port Alberta will be considered in the development of this strategy, and it includes our government's priorities of supporting the economy, families, and communities. We'll be listening to Port Alberta.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the safe movement of people and goods between highway 2 and Devon is a major concern, particularly on a day like today, can the minister update this House on the progress of the twinning of highway 19? [interjections]

Mr. McIver: Well, there seems to be enthusiasm for this question, Mr. Speaker. You know what? We are currently in the design stages of twinning. We're hosting open houses and meeting with local stakeholders. There are municipalities that we're talking to, a few community groups, including some churches, the local MLAs, citizens that have shown interest. As we go through this, the plan will solidify. One of the big things is the airport, deciding the final alignment of the runaway, and as that all becomes clear, we will have an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Cardston-Taber-Warner Health Facility Concerns

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask three questions that are of concern to my constituents of Cardston-Taber-Warner. The first is from a concerned nurse whose husband has Alzheimer's disease. He's not receiving the care he needs such as regular baths and exercise. The facility he's in doesn't have sufficient staff to provide it. They apparently lack the funds. Errors have been made with his care, and they were reported to management, but there's no evidence of corrective measures being put in place. Will the government please tell us when money will be spent more effectively to rectify these kinds of problems?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, obviously, I can't speak to the specifics of the situation of the hon. member's constituent. What I can tell the hon. member is that we are of course seeing increasing incidences of Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia. In the new continuing care facilities that we are planning and in the 1,000 spaces we are opening each year, we are taking that into account very seriously in the design of the facilities to ensure that the unique needs of these residents can be met. It does require in many cases a special model of care.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people of Milk River have been asking for a restoration of the five acute-care beds taken out of service by Alberta Health Services a few years ago. This has resulted in hardships and delays in receiving necessary care for them and the surrounding district. It's made it virtually impossible for them to recruit doctors because these MDs want to be able to care for patients and practise medicine, not just provide emergency attention and prescribe medication. When will this government do the right thing and restore the acute-care beds and facilitate the hiring of new doctors in the town of Milk River?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, certainly, adequate numbers of continuing care beds in every community is an important ingredient in our ability to care for seniors and to provide a high quality of care. I would be happy upon request to look into the situation in Milk River for the hon. member specifically. He's certainly correct that the availability of those resources is a factor in attracting physicians, but what I can also tell him is that the role of home care and the support that we can provide at home for seniors is equally important in providing the quality of care that we wish to provide.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. I'll get back to you with those details and will appreciate your help.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Cardston and surrounding area, including the largest First Nations reservation in Canada, are well served by the doctors and medical professionals in their community. They receive great care in spite of having what must surely be one of the older hospitals in the province. They've been promised a new one but would like to emphasize their need. When will this promise be kept?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the recommendations with respect to where new facilities are constructed in Alberta originate with Alberta Health Services, and those recommendations are developed on the basis of a population health needs assessment for a specific area. It is not simply a question of where a new hospital is required. It is also a question of what other facilities and resources and staffing are available to meet the actual health needs of the residents. I don't know the specifics offhand of this particular case, but again I'd be happy to look into this and get back to the hon. member directly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Fish-Creek.

Royal Alberta Museum

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new Royal Alberta Museum is going to cost taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars. I know that it'll be a world-class building. It's something we should build when times are good but not when times are not as good, when we are still under cost control and balancing our budget. My question is to the Minister of Culture. Is this project necessary now, or can it be delayed until the province is in a better financial situation?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, this project is very necessary. It invests in community, it invests in families, and it's about our future. We know that for every dollar spent on culture, it's double the return. This project will be going ahead, most definitely.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: why is it that the government is paying cash for this project when we are going to finance the construction on highway 63, an essential piece of infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many know, this project has been on the books since 2005, since Her Majesty deemed it the Royal Alberta Museum. We know that with the partnership of the federal government and the contribution of $122 million, this project is going ahead, and it'll be important to the future of all Albertans.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: how can we pour millions of dollars into the new museum while at the same time allowing the Glenbow Museum in Calgary to struggle financially?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the Glenbow Museum is a tremendous facility in Calgary. Last year alone their budget was $3.1 million. They received a 7 per cent increase last year. It is an independent board that makes independent decisions, but the government supports them with respect to the cost of utilities as well as the city of Calgary. It's a partnership, and we are very happy to work with the Glenbow Museum.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Health Quality Assurance

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans expect their health care system to provide them with a sense of comfort and healing. Unfortunately, Alberta Health Services is failing them in that regard. The latest numbers show that out of every hundred people accessing health care, a dozen will report unexpected harm. This is unacceptable. Given that the quality assurance committee was created to ensure a process is in place to investigate these incidents, I want to ask the Minister of Health: how many incidents have been investigated?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is certainly true that Albertans enjoy a health care system that is focused on their needs and supporting their healing when they are sick. I have no idea what the hon. member is referring to with her statistic. I can tell you that the Health Quality Council of Alberta provides leadership in measuring and monitoring a variety of indicators of quality in our system. I rely on their advice in order to make policy decisions. Alberta Health Services relies on their advice in order to deliver safe and effective services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay, Mr. Speaker. Let me help the minister on this. It's on page 83 of the last quarterly report of Alberta Health Services. That's your report, not mine, so page 83. Again to the minister: what are the recommendations from the Executive Patient Safety Committee?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Health, I do not attend nor do I monitor the detailed proceedings of any particular committee within Alberta Health Services. The question of policy, which is probably what the hon. member is trying to get at, is the degree to which we consider quality indicators in the development of health care policy and in the design of the specific delivery of services in hospitals and in other venues. It should be obvious to the hon. member. I think, if I remember correctly, she's been an advocate in the past, at least, for increased focus on quality in our health care system. We take every incident seriously that arises. They arise every day across Canada. We follow up on each, and we strive to do better.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay. I'm going to try this question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Health please share with the House the quality assurance review recommendations?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems unable to specify the specific issue that she has. As a matter of fact, as difficult as it may seem to believe, I'm not carrying page 83 of the last report with me this morning. If she would like to use the vehicles available in the House such as motions for returns and written questions to have that detailed information provided, I'd be pleased to do that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in about 15 seconds I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning so that we can resume Members' Statements. Fifteen seconds.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Clareview Community Recreation Centre

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and honoured to rise today to talk about the Clareview community recreation centre, closed for upgrading since October 2011. The northeast is the last area of Edmonton to receive a new rec centre. I have heard from many constituents and residents of the northeast who are looking forward to the completion of the rec centre.

In June I attended the partnership announcement between the city of Edmonton, Edmonton public library, Edmonton Catholic schools, and the government of Alberta to support construction of the Clareview community hub. The rec centre space will include an 18,000-square-foot public library. Its outdoor park space will include two new sports fields, three ball diamonds, a spray park, and walkway connection to the Clareview LRT station. The centre will be home to a beautiful swimming facility, fitness centre, and an ice rink, which many northeast residents are waiting for.

In addition, the facility will be home to a new Catholic high school as a centre of alternative learning. Mr. Speaker, this new multipurpose facility will be one of a kind in Edmonton.

Recreation and community centres in our province support all Albertans in living a healthy lifestyle. I look forward to witnessing the impact the new rec centre will have on families in northeast Edmonton and all the Albertans who access it in May 2014.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope you join us in 2014 for the grand opening.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Strathmore-Brooks, and then a request to revert to introductions.

Century Farm and Ranch Awards

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that my colleagues across this Legislature don't get tired of me talking about agriculture and how proud I am of it. Farming and ranching are a great part of Alberta's heritage and legacy. They consist of hard work and sacrifice combined with a healthy dose of energy and unrelenting faith. This spirit of vision, complemented by a new land of limitless natural resources, is what brought our forefathers to Alberta. They settled the land to build the family ranch or farm, the place many of us continue to call home today. Courage and determination was what our parents and grandparents had, and they had plenty of it.

Marked by this same spirit of unshakable resolve, it's not surprising that second and third generations continue to build this rich heritage of agriculture. It's a heritage to be proud of, reflected by personal sacrifices, perseverance, and a commitment to a family way of life. It's a legacy that you, too, may pass on to our children.

Keeping the farm or ranch from generation to generation and actively operating is an impressive achievement for any Alberta family. I stand today with the government of Alberta to recognize these special families who built the foundation of prairie farming and ranching. The Alberta Century farm and ranch award salutes those families who have continuously owned and actively operated the same land for a minimum of 100 years. In my constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock we celebrated four such milestones just this summer: the McNelly family from Clyde; the Lyons family, who are here today in the gallery, from Hazel Bluff near Westlock; the Marquette family from Linaria, very close to me; and the Messmer family from Naples. It is so important that these families be recognized.

It's that time of year again, when the Canadian Finals Rodeo and Farmfair are going on. We are looking forward to celebrating that today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Newell Foundation

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge the stewardship of the Newell Foundation in addressing the community's health needs for my constituency of Strathmore-Brooks. The Newell Foundation had the foresight to propose a one-building, aging-in-community concept that will include a hospital and lodge in Bassano. The town of Bassano needs a new hospital, and the Newell Foundation has taken this opportunity to propose something that will improve health and seniors' services for the community. The project will be able to provide everything from a little bit of help for those who need it to long-term care and even palliative care. The project may even provide for health needs such as physiotherapists, pharmacists, a health clinic, and doctors' offices.

I fully support this initiative. It will be an asset in the community for decades to come. I would like to commend the Newell Foundation and its partners and stakeholders for working to make this a reality. It's refreshing to see the leadership of groups like this take the bull by the horns with such a great idea. I would also like to thank the hon. Health minister for taking time to come to Bassano and hear the proposal and for taking the time to meet with the board to discuss this first-class facility today.

This one-stop-shop concept will ease the transition that our seniors face in later years. They can move from the lodge with assisted living down the hall to receive long-term care, to acute care when needed, and not have to face the challenge of moving down the hall in another town. This will end the tremendous burden faced by families when having to make tough decisions regarding the level of care needed for their parents and grandparents.

This project has a way to go yet, and I will continue to support it every step of the way. Once again, thank you to the Newell Foundation for its leadership on health issues in our community.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we get unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests? Is anybody opposed to that?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a couple of ladies who have become fairly familiar here in the Legislature over the last couple of years: Patty Dittrick, president, and Mary Lynne Campbell, executive director, from the Public School Boards' Association. I'm sure they're very anxious to see Bill 3 get into third reading and passed. We welcome them back to the Assembly.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me today to table three reports with the appropriate number of copies on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health. The first is the 2011 annual report of the College of Opticians of Alberta. Since 1965 the college has ensured that Albertans are receiving competent and effective care from their opticians. Their motto of Your Vision, Our Focus truly captures the value that the college places on vision care for all Albertans.

My next tabling is the 2011 annual report of the Alberta College of Medical Diagnostic & Therapeutic Technologists. This college regulates over 2,000 members who work in hospitals, primary care networks, and independent clinics, and their work with MRIs, X-rays, and radiation treatment for cancer is truly invaluable in today's modern medical field.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the 2011 annual report of the Alberta College of Speech-Language Pathologists and Audiologists. These professionals use their training to work with those with difficulty expressing themselves and with those with trouble hearing them. This report highlights the great work the college is doing to increase the quality of life of many Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you. Sorry. They're on my desk back in the office, but I will try and remember them tomorrow.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do happen to have mine here.

Today I am pleased to table the required number of copies of the first annual Results-based Budgeting: Report to Albertans. The results-based budgeting process has encouraged government to work in different and more integrated ways and will ensure that every program and every service is delivering outcomes efficiently and effectively. Over the past year work has been under way to develop the process, create the schedule, and recruit external members of the public to participate in the review. This report explains the three-year process that we will use to examine and assess all government programs and services, including those delivered by agencies, boards, and commissions. It also includes the names of government MLAs and members of the public who will sit on challenge panels and whose responsibility is to bring an external perspective to the review process.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just two items to table today, and I'll be brief as they are rather clear documents. I referred today to a document from Dr. Daniel Doz of the Alberta College of Art and Design wherein he indicated he did not use public dollars to make donations to a political party or to purchase tickets. Five copies there.

Secondly, I also table a letter from myself to the Hon. Rob Nicholson, Minister of Justice of Canada, dated July 24 wherein I asked him to honour the request of the Hon. Neil Wittmann, Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, for four additional justices in this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the Minister of Education.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I table the appropriate number of copies of the document Creating Synergy Health Coalition of Alberta. I attended their gathering yesterday and was introduced to the very energetic and committed individuals who are part of the Creating Synergy Health Coalition of Alberta, or CS, an alliance of informed, knowledgeable, and experienced individuals; voluntary health charities and not-for-profit or nongovernment organizations; and stakeholders representing present and future users of health care in Alberta. Their vision is the best people-centred health care for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I have the appropriate number of copies of an article here to table. Yesterday I referred to an article entitled The Unreasonable Demands of Education, written by the hon. Leader of the Opposition, where she calls on schools to implement fees on parents to cover some of the extras in the school system.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Olson, Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council annual report 2011-2012; pursuant to the Farm Implement Act the Farmers' Advocate office and Farm Implement Board financial statements 2011-2012; and pursuant to the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act and the Stray Animals Act the Livestock Identification Services Ltd. summary of activities April 1, 2011, to March 31, 2012, and financial statements for the year ended March 31, 2012.

The Speaker: I believe that concludes our Routine for today.

On that note, let's move on to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 4
Public Interest Disclosure
(Whistleblower Protection) Act

[Debate adjourned November 6]

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to stand up today to speak on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, or, as some would prefer me to say, stand up and blow the whistle on yet another broken promise and yet another flawed piece of legislation. Many of my colleagues have outlined various concerns with this legislation, but they say that repetition is the mother of all learning, so I'm going to take another crack at it, my children.

What disappoints me most is that we have seen some quality bills presented to us this fall by government, but for some reason this bill seems to have skipped so many important steps of scrutiny that all these other bills were put through. Bill 4 provides protection, but what amazes me is that it's not protection for whistle-blowers from government retribution. Rather, it provides protection for the government from whistle-blowers. It is absolutely amazing to me that the current government thinks that they should be able to get away with this. I guess that's what happens after 40 years of power, when you think the rules don't apply to you.

I am concerned with the lack of accountability this government thinks it should be treated with. The Premier has stated that the only thing worse than making a mistake was not admitting the fact that you did. Well, Mr. Speaker, they sure have made some mistakes with this bill, but I don't hear any admissions from the government on this one. Although there are some positives, I feel that they are so heavily outweighed by the negatives that I will be unable to support this bill.

Why is this bill being introduced on a go-forward basis only? What is it that the government is trying to hide? My constituents and all Albertans want to know. As well, I have yet to hear a plausible and convincing argument as to why this bill should have so many loopholes. Again, why does the current government have so much to hide? What are they worried about? What do they think it is that Albertans do not deserve to know?

Third, why is it that if the public interest commissioner is not satisfied by the follow-up from the department, they can only complain to the department? This should be done through a more public forum, likely through the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices.

As well, although this is by far not my last concern, it is the last one that I'm going to speak at length about. It's about the process for a whistle-blower to navigate in order to report alleged wrongdoing. The fact that someone must first work through their own organization, extremely likely the organization that they are trying to blow the whistle on, before they can go to the public interest commissioner is a process that is beyond me. Again, I am open to being convinced otherwise, but I just cannot see why there is a rational need for this.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek is bringing forward a great many amendments. I think that we would all be well served and, truly, that Albertans would be well served if we put some deep thought and consideration into these amendments.

These amendments are not based on a political agenda. Rather and more importantly, they are based on a passion for doing the right thing. I have been told by my constituents that I should come here for the right reasons, and I believe that we have all come here to serve Albertans but that when we are here, I also need to do the right thing.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to close with this. I encourage all of my colleagues to listen carefully and think hard about the amendments that are going to be brought forward. Think about what your constituents sent you here to do. They sent you here to stand up for them, to stand up for Albertans, not to protect offenders or wrongdoers and certainly not to protect the government or government departments.

I say once again, Mr. Speaker, that we all came here for the right reasons, each and every one of us, but we also need to do the right thing. For that reason I cannot support this bill as it currently stands. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really glad that I am getting the opportunity to speak to Bill 4 in second reading. Because we're speaking about the principle of the bill here, are we at all interested in the concept of it? Do we want to see it go forward and try and tweak it a bit or fix it a bit because it's not exactly what we were looking for, or do we just disagree flat out with the principle of it and don't want to see it go forward at all?

I'm really incredibly disappointed to say that I can't support this bill in the way that it's presented, and this is a bill that I have waited a long time for. To see it come forward drafted the way it's been done: it's such a slap in the face for colleagues of mine that are no longer here. The previous Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had a bill – Bill 207, I think it was – that was actually a really good run at this and had some very good regulations and a process to put very strong whistle-blower protection in place.

I have to say that I would not recommend to anyone that they step out as a whistle-blower if they're relying on this legislation to protect them because it's not going to. That is what is so sad. More than sad, it's frustrating. It's just bedeviling that this government over and over again can take an idea that they get pushed and pushed and pushed to do by the opposition, by advocacy groups in the community, by individuals, constituents, and they finally say, "All right; we'll do it," and then they come out with something that we might as well not have because it so disregards the principle of what we were asking for. That's what we have in Bill 4. It's called the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, sometimes people talk about: close but no cigar. In theatre when you go to see your friend's play and it's a real turkey, you say: well, that was interesting. Then you talk about the set and the costumes. Or maybe you say: well, it was a good idea, just bad execution. I can't say any of those things for this bill. It's not close enough to deserve any kind of a cigar. As a play you couldn't possibly say that it was interesting. It is a good idea. Well maybe – I agree with my last statement – it is a great idea. It's one that is very needed in this day and age, but it is foul execution in what we have seen brought forward.

The longer I look at this, the more I read it, the angrier I get because we, all politicians, have created a situation where the public no longer believes us or trusts us, and we've managed to disparage the civil service enough that we've given permission to the public to disparage them as well. Rather than being regarded as an honourable profession that you go into to serve the public and provide a program or service to them in a good way, now they're all called various bad names. What a civil servant is trying to do is deliver a service in the same way no matter who comes through the door, and that's a good concept to work with.

We know in this day and age that we need to look at our programs, review our programs on a regular basis to make sure that they still make sense, that they're still being delivered in an effective way, that they haven't been abused anywhere along the line. Frankly, no program is immune to this. Things go wrong. Things change in other contexts. Other legislation changes affect the way a program is delivered. You want the people that are working there to be able to step out and tell us: "There's a problem here. This is not working the way it should. The taxpayers are not getting value for their money," or, even worse, that there's fraud or bullying or an illegal action taking place. That's the only place we're going to hear this from, so we depend on those people to step out. But we have to protect them.

There are far, far too many examples of people who've taken huge risks. Many of them are well-educated people: scientists, respected academics, people with many years of experience in particular areas . . .

Dr. Swann: Doctors.

Ms Blakeman: . . . physicians – yes, very good – medical officers, ER doctors, who step out and say, "This is wrong, and it's so wrong that I need to tell someone out there about it so it will get fixed." In most cases they've already tried to fix it on the ground. They've already gone to their supervisor. They've already talked to their colleagues at the coffee table or in their place of work, and nothing is moving. People don't voluntarily step out of their comfort zone and put themselves in jeopardy for fun, you know, or for something to do or because they were bored. It's scary and potentially quite harmful to them. So if we accept that, then somebody that is stepping out to blow the whistle on wrongdoing or illegal activities really does need to be (a) taken seriously and (b) protected.

What we see, whether we're going to look back at things like Enron or other corporate structures in which corporate bullying was endemic to their corporate culture or to see how people get – what's the official word? The human resources term is constructive dismissal. So this is the opposite of that. You know, all of a sudden people aren't getting the assignments they used to get, or they're taken off of a good file. Other people start to mock them or make jokes about them when they walk by. That kind of stuff in your working atmosphere is toxic. It really poisons it.

Or let's say that you lose your job, and you're fighting to get it back because you say: "Hey. I stepped out. I was a whistle-blower, and now I've lost my job directly as a result of that." What happens? We say to them: "Well, prove it. You, an individual person out there on your own, prove that that government structure set out to do this to you." Who's able to do that? I mean, you can't even leave your office with any paperwork anymore. If you get fired, there's somebody at your elbow. Out you go. They're taking your card off your little elastic thing, and you're out, so you couldn't even collect any of the evidence that you would need to try and prove this kind of thing. This is what is so distressing to me in this bill.

First of all, the premise of the bill is that they're going to set up another process or structure in here, that you're going to go to your own workplace, to someone that's been identified as the – sorry; I'm not remembering the title here – local whistle-blower person and give them your information, and they should be looking after it. Well, for any of you that have ever been in that kind of situation, that's just kind of laughable because they're probably part of the problem. In all likelihood, as I mentioned, you've already gone through the workplace saying, "Don't you find it strange that so-and-so always disappears at this time of day?" Or, "Gee; how come they get to have such and such?" In all likelihood most reasonable people would have done that already and not have seen anything happen and not have seen any change, so by the time they're at the point of doing things officially, on the record, this seems like a strange step to make them go through.

The one saving grace in this is that the legislation does allow that if you don't want to go to your local person, then you can go directly to – I'm sorry; these terms are just not sticking with me today – the legislative officer that they're going to create here, the commissioner of public interest, and they can bring the case before them. Okay. That's one small positive thing to say about it.

Where I'm really concerned is in the lack of protection that's offered here. For starters, there's no protection around somebody losing their job, or if they do lose their job, there's nothing that says: okay; if it turns out that you have lost your job as a direct result of your whistle-blowing, we will compensate you for the time that you were out of work and restore the job or an equivalent job to you. There's nothing in here that says that. So now we know that if somebody blows the whistle, there's no protection.

And there is a way in corporate culture that allows them to minimize, diminish, trivialize. My friends over there are experts in this, so I've got to assume they've passed some of that to the people that work with them. I hope it hasn't trickled down through the civil service, but I can't speak to that. Every day in question period – and we saw it today – a minister stands up and questions somebody's intelligence in the question that they asked or demeans them by saying that, well, they weren't smart enough to understand the question, or trivializes the question by just dismissing it. You know, it happens right here. You all know what I'm talking about. It happens easily, and it happens all the time. Very few people even comment on it. So it's easy to have it part of that corporate culture.

There's nothing that's going to protect people from, as I said, losing their job, nothing that's going to protect them from harassment or bullying at the work site. I could call it going to Siberia. You know, all of a sudden, you're in the desk that's at the end of the hall next to the photocopy machine, and you're missing out on the chit-chat that's back in the main area, the kibitzing. You don't know when everybody breaks for lunch because you're down the hall by the photocopy machine.

It's like blockbusting. It's like corporate culture blockbusting. I said that to a younger person the other day, and they didn't know what I meant. That was something that was used by unscrupulous developers, where they would buy up all the houses around and, you know, a couple of people wouldn't sell or one elderly couple was going to hang in there in their little old bungalow. The developer would basically rent the houses to people that weren't your number one kind of people. They'd start having parties. There's loud music. There's stuff going on. Maybe they don't keep the property so nice. No mufflers on the motorbikes, et cetera, et cetera. This couple is really starting to be afraid, and they're not comfortable in their home anymore. It's a way of busting the block and getting them to move out so the developer can buy the house and put up the development they want.

That's the same concept here. Being sent to Siberia down by the photocopier is a form of blockbusting. It's a way of making people so uncomfortable in their workplace that they give up and just get out because it's so toxic. You want to talk about posttraumatic stress disorder – and I'm not minimizing it here – just imagine the stress that you're under if you're in that kind of a situation. You did a brave thing – you stepped out – and now you're being punished in your workplace. There's no protection for you at all. If things go badly and you decide to quit because it's so bad or you get fired, you know, probably not constructively, let go, now you have no salary, and your family thinks you are a complete idiot for having jeopardized them and their financial security and perhaps their reputation if that's part of it. Still we have no protection here.

I think part of it is that you have to make sure that the legislation is offering whole remedies. That would be the thing about the work and the missing salary, maybe the missing benefits as well, missing pension contributions. There should be no burden of proof put on the individual. Once it's established that there's a connection – and this is not hard to do. You know, if the person blows the whistle and a week later they're let go from their job – well, duh – those things are probably connected. I think there's a very high probability of that. But not to place the burden of proof on the individual, I would say, you know, that the ones with all the money, the corporate culture there, can pay for it.

I'm really looking forward to Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments. The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member of the splendiferous constituency of Edmonton-Centre . . .

Mr. Rodney: Sorry. The what?

Mr. Pedersen: Splendiferous. [interjection] It is now.

Being that I'm a new member, a new MLA, and that the member talked about a previous bill that had been introduced and mentioned how much better it was than this one, I'd just be kind of curious to hear what she would have to say about what made it better versus what we're being presented with here.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. It's the fabulous constituency.

Mr. Pedersen: I'm trying to grow your vocabulary.

Ms Blakeman: No. We're good with fabulous. Splendiferous could go to somebody else. I'm not going to hog them all.

The legislation. I know that it was the previous Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I'm pretty sure it was Bill 207 in its day. Let me just see if I can find the year. Nineteen ninety-eight, I'm being told by my colleague. [interjections] Excuse me? Thank you.

His bill did cover a number of these sorts of protection devices, plus he had some very strong statements. It's a good suggestion. I will dig it up and bring it in so I can talk about it in Committee of the Whole. He had some real rigour in there that protected the whistle-blower but also was very clear about the activity. You see, in some ways I think – and if I remember this correctly, the suggestion was that this should almost go to an outside group like Democracy Watch or that some outside group should be the arbiter of this.

In creating another legislative officer, well, we know how that works, and it can become tainted as well because in this Assembly the membership on the committees is determined by the number of seats that you hold, not by the popular vote, which has been my suggestion, which would really change the membership on those committees. They're done by the number of seats that you have, so the government always has a majority of the seats.

Even when you're on the Legislative Offices Committee and you're looking at the hiring of this new person, whatever the actual title is called, you're always outvoted by the majority. So, you know, are you really getting an independent member who's well qualified, or are you getting another – what's the phrase? Oh, yes: in the family. Another individual who's in the family and seems to have a lot of luck.

There are a lot of ways that this can go askew although it appears to be on a fairly straight track, and there's an example. Every time we create another legislative officer with the idea that somehow this is going to solve our problem, it doesn't. That officer reports through a committee of the Legislature, but the Legislature is dominated by one party here, as is the committee. Did that help?

Mr. Pedersen: Sure.

Ms Blakeman: Good.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other questions or comments? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess, just being a new MLA, what would be kind of the most common occurrence of someone that would need this type of whistle-blower legislation? Is it doctors, nurses? What types of individuals have you had in your long career as an MLA that have come to your office? If this legislation actually worked, which individuals would actually use it?

Ms Blakeman: Actually, I've had a couple of civil servants who have come who were trying to point out some real problems in the way programs were being delivered. A long time ago there were a lot of issues around the maintenance enforcement program. The current Minister of Human Services was Justice minister, and I was his critic. There were problems in there. The teachers have quite a good process for that. It's a tough one to go through. It's called a review panel or something, but they've got quite a good system there. The other ones were some nurses and somebody trying to qualify to be an LPN.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat, then Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to rise to speak today to this particular bill, Bill 4. The Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act it is called, but as many people have already said, this is not a whistle-blower protection act; this is a government information protection act.

It's really quite disappointing because we have a government, Mr. Speaker, that made much hay out of their alleged plan to usher in a new day, a new, progressive approach to things that was going to be accompanied by transparency and openness and, you know, independence of lots of things. I think there were going to be a few theme songs and perhaps some birds tweeting and flying around in the background as well.

Nonetheless, what we've gotten instead is this public interest disclosure act, which, just as a starting point, Mr. Speaker, replicates the federal legislation except in some cases it actually is worse than the federal legislation. So we are not actually taking our marching orders from the Harper Conservatives. We're taking what the Harper Conservatives have done, and we're making it worse than what they have done. So this is like Harper Conservative disclosure – quote, unquote – but less.

It really is quite something, Mr. Speaker, to hear folks on that side try to spin this as good news because really what this is going to do is clamp down on disclosure in a way that is unprecedented. It is absolutely not going to increase transparency, and the government is fully aware of that fact. It is really quite disingenuous that they are spinning this piece of legislation the way they are.

What are some of the reasons why we think that would be the case? Quite frankly, flipping through my notes today, just the simplest version of notes, I found nine amendments already that we are going to need to propose to this to make it not damaging to the careers of our hard-working public servants. Of course, Committee of the Whole is the place where we will go through that in more detail, so I won't go through it all in excruciating detail now, but I will say that it took me literally 15 minutes to scan through and see a whole bunch of things that just jump out at you as something that will be abused and used wrongly by this government to further clamp down on information and to further undermine the rights of the hard-working people who are employed in the public sector.

That's what we're dealing with, and I think it's really important to get that right out there. There's been a lot of discussion and analysis of the federal whistle-blower protection act, and it's been clearly concluded that that act does not do what it was intended to do and that instead what it is meant to do and what it does do is provide a whole new array of tools to the government to clamp down and stomp on people who are attempting to engage in a more transparent public discussion and in some cases to disclose information.

Let me just give you one example. We have the commissioner, the final person that somebody will get to maybe, if they've managed to navigate their way past their boss and keep their job in the process. If the commissioner decides that the person's information is inappropriate and was not something that should be disclosed and if they decide that the matter in question is not something that ought to be disclosed and then, on the flip side, if that information becomes public and that person is fired, because the decision of the commissioner is not eligible for consideration by the courts, what happens, Mr. Speaker, is that that person's legal rights to sue for wrongful dismissal or to access their rights under their collective agreement have now actually been fettered. They've been restricted – they've been restricted – by this process.

So a person goes through this process, and decisions are made about the merits of the concern that the person raises, and then those issues and those decisions are fundamental components of a subsequent wrongful dismissal act or a subsequent grievance or a subsequent application under a human rights tribunal. In any of those cases, the finding of the commissioner is significant in the deliberation in those other forums, yet the commissioner's finding is not subject to review or consideration by a judge or a labour relations board or a human rights tribunal.

What we've done now is that we've taken a great big piece of a wrongful dismissal case, and we've said that public servants no longer get to adjudicate that pursuant to the terms of natural justice with their own counsel and all that kind of stuff because our commissioner has made a finding. That commissioner's finding is unassailable, Mr. Speaker. Right there – right there – I now see that what we've done is that we have limited the rights of our public servants through that process. We've actually stepped on the rights that they would otherwise enjoy under the common law or under the terms of their collective agreement, depending on what we're dealing with. It's a form of discrimination against public-sector employees.

It's ironic because typically when one thinks about whistle-blower legislation, you know, the first thing that comes to mind is: well, it's not good whistle-blower legislation if it doesn't apply to the private sector. As soon as I looked at this, I thought: "Well, sheesh. I don't know if we want this to apply to the private sector. Do we want to take this new set of rules which is going to be used to beat up on public-sector employees and argue that the private-sector employees should also be eligible for beatings under this legislation?" I don't know.

Maybe we don't want to expand it to the private sector. Maybe we want to limit the scope as much as possible of the people who might be negatively affected by this legislation. Maybe what we're going to actually do is try and limit it so that, you know, one person in one office in the back of the Premier's office is the only person that this applies to, and if we do that, we're successful because we want to limit the damage that's being perpetrated by this piece of legislation. I mean, that's one example. I'm going to go through here and find some more, but that's one example where we're actually taking a step backwards, Mr. Speaker.

I thought that we would come in here, and we'd say: well, great idea, great intent, but here are some ways in which we can make it more meaningful and more helpful. I did not expect that I would come in here and after scanning through in a few short minutes be in the position to be saying: "Oh my goodness. This is not only not a step forward in the best way; this is actually not a step forward at all. This is actually a step quite a ways backwards." It's a bit of a revelation to me because I didn't really think that that's the kind of disingenuous strategy that would be adopted on something that is so closely linked to a critical election promise of our Premier, but apparently that's what we're going to do. So, yeah. That's a problem.

Now, because it's whistle-blower legislation and because in theory when you say that, the idea and the impression that is given with that kind of title is that you're protecting whistle-blowers, one would expect to find somewhere in this legislation something which talks about what happens if the whistle-blower has what normally happens to a whistle-blower, which is that they are discriminated against, penalized, subjected to discipline, demoted, or, in the worst-case scenario, fired. In some cases it even goes further than that. They can be publicly criticized and attacked as well. In all those cases you would think: "Okay. What we need to do is to make sure we've got something in place that will protect them and that will ensure there is some remedy."

Yet I've scanned through this act, Mr. Speaker, and nowhere do I see a section that talks about a remedy for the whistle-blower who has been wronged by an employer who is upset about information being disclosed. I don't see the authority for a commissioner to give them their job back. I don't see the authority for the commissioner to pay them damages. I don't see the authority for the commissioner to ask for the perpetrator of the wrong against the whistle-blower to pay pecuniary damages to the whistle-blower. I see none of that.

Of course, those are the authorities that you would see. Let's say you're talking about the authority of an arbitrator or the authority of the Labour Relations Board or the authority of the human rights tribunal or all these other places that in theory, when you have an operational agency of that type, are established to protect the rights of individual employees. That's what this is ultimately about. It's about protecting their rights. In all of those pieces of legislation you have a long list of remedial authorities that are at the disposal of the final decision-maker to ensure that the person who has been wronged is made whole. None of that appears here. None of that. Nowhere. No section anywhere.

What there is, however, is a long list of duties and responsibilities and processes and rules that the whistle-blower must follow, Mr. Speaker. There are a whole bunch of things that the whistle-blower has to do to stay on the right side of this brand new law, a long list of things that they have to do, but nothing about how we're going to make the whistle-blower whole when they are penalized for disclosing information.

So, really, in many ways what we've done here – the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is a wonderful history buff, far more so than I. You know, back in the McCarthyism days there were systems set up where people were encouraged to actually rat out their fellow employees and go after each other. It was generally considered to be a horrific – horrific – morale-killing, job-killing, outcome-ruining process where people were encouraged to rat each other out. It was very, very unhealthy.

Really, since this act provides no venue where any of this information might ever go public and since it provides no protection for the person that's actually disclosing the information, it really reads to me like we're setting up a situation where we're putting a whole bunch of obligation on employees to go after each other, and then we'll keep it all internal. The boss will get to pick and choose what they think is appropriate, and then none of it will ever be made public, which is the irony of ironies because this is whistle-blower legislation.

When the Premier said that we are going to bring in whistle-blower legislation, the Premier was very clearly trying to compel Albertans to believe that she wanted to bring in whistle-blower legislation so that we could swing open the doors of government, invite in Albertans, let them see what's there, and make sure that everybody who helped Albertans see what was there would be protected. That is clearly what the Premier was intending to have Albertans believe when she ran on this.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is not that. This legislation is the exact opposite of that. This legislation is geared towards limiting, constricting, and intimidating workers in this government from ever making anything public. It is absolutely contrary to what it has been sold as. I think that as we deliberate on this piece of legislation over the course of the next few days, that fact will become increasingly apparent to Albertans. They will become increasingly aware of what it is that this legislation is clearly designed to do. The holes in it in terms of doing what Albertans thought this government was trying to do are gargantuan, and it's very difficult to believe that Albertans would be able to . . .

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very interested in the comments made by the hon. member. She indicated that she didn't see any penalties. Well, the government has indicated that there is a $25,000 penalty and a $100,000 penalty for recurrent mistreatment of a potential whistle-blower. How does that relate to her comments that there are no penalties?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I haven't had a chance to go through the bill on a clause-by-clause basis. [interjections] I'm not finished.

What I said is that there is no provision in there for a remedy to the whistle-blower who is wrongly disciplined. It is not clear to me yet whether that penalty can be imposed upon the whistle-blower for failing to keep the information in line with the process. That's why I didn't speak to that issue. I've not yet had a chance to determine whether or not the penalty can be imposed on the whistle-blower himself or herself. But it is very clear that what the penalty does not do is provide a remedy to the whistle-blower who is wrongly disciplined. There is nowhere in that act where the commissioner can give the whistle-blower their job back or where the commissioner can give the whistle-blower damages. That was what I was talking about. The use of the penalty is still unclear.

More importantly, unlike in many other cases, there is no mechanism of appeal one way or the other. Those are things that need to be reviewed, Mr. Speaker. By failing to give the commissioner the ability to give the whistle-blower their job back or give the commissioner the authority to award damages to the whistle-blower if there is a transgression, we have not managed to protect the whistle-blower.

I can imagine a number of cases where the government would say: "You know what? Get rid of that person. If we've got to pay a $25,000 fine, we'll pay a $25,000 fine. This person is much more trouble than they're worth, so get rid of them." Then the $25,000 penalty is assessed. The person says, "I was fired unjustly," and the commissioner comes up with a decision saying: "No. What was disclosed shouldn't have been because I've come up with this new set of rules, which are under the regulations." We don't know what they are yet because the government is suggesting that they'll all be under the regulations.

Then that person can't even sue for wrongful dismissal because the commissioner's decision is final. Or they can sue, but the vast majority of the substance of that decision will not be up for review or adjudication because it will have been finalized by the commissioner, and there'll be no appeal from that process.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? Okay.

I made a mistake in my earlier announcement of the order. I will recognize the Minister of Culture and then the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give my support to this Bill 4 and to commend the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation for taking this important step to protect one of our most valuable resources, our employees. I believe profoundly that this legislation is clearly about the protection of employees if they find themselves in the position of having to make a disclosure of wrongdoing, not public relations management.

Last night during the debate there was much discussion and, dare I say, an accusation that we have introduced this legislation to protect ourselves from having a disclosure made against us as a government. That is simply not true, Mr. Speaker. This legislation is meant to maximize the ability of the employee to make safe disclosure.

We all know that these types of situations can be very difficult and stressful for an employee. Not only does this legislation establish an internal process so that the employee does not have to be subjected to the public spotlight, but it ensures that if the employee does not believe the internal process is safe, they may go to the independent commissioner to disclose the wrongdoing. I emphasize “independent” as the commissioner does not report to the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation or to the Premier. The commissioner reports to the Legislative Assembly, to all of us in this Chamber. Where the commissioner substantiates the wrongdoing, the commissioner will be the public face for the whistle-blower so that the employee can maintain their confidentiality and does not have to undergo the additional stress that public scrutiny can bring.

There has also been a great deal of focus in this debate so far on how this act deals with disclosing wrongdoings, but I would like to talk about an equally important feature of the legislation: protection from reprisal. Reprisal includes any negative, adverse employment action. It can be as simple as removing the employee from an e-mail distribution list or being excluded from office camaraderie. However, it can also extend to more serious and blatant actions such as intimidation, bullying, ostracizing, changing of job duties or location, or being fired or forced to quit. Concerns brought forward by members of this House that intimidation and bullying are not caught by the definition of reprisal are simply false.

This bill makes it clear that employees who believe they have experienced an act of reprisal after disclosure of wrongdoing may engage the commissioner directly. The commissioner is empowered to investigate, report, and offer recommendations if a reprisal is confirmed. Apart from any investigation by the commissioner, those who carry out reprisals against employees will have committed an offence under the act, which may be prosecuted in court.

Mr. Speaker, some members across the way seem to be confused about the role of the court. They have suggested that there is no access to the courts. Not only can the commissioner's decisions be reviewed by the court, as is the case with all other officers of the Legislature, but it is the court that finds whether a person has committed an offence under the act. Upon conviction fines of up to $25,000 for a first offence and $100,000 for a second or subsequent offence may be levied. Reprisals against employees making disclosures in the public interest are a very serious matter, and this act treats them as such.

Mr. Speaker, this government values the commitment and expertise of all public servants. As a minister I am humbled and appreciative every day of the visionary and innovative work that goes on in my Department of Culture. Bill 4 has been brought before this House as a means to assist them not only in performing their daily responsibilities but also enabling the government to operate with integrity and accountability. Mutual respect goes a long way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. minister. A lot of people have mentioned concern about the power the commissioner has and concern over lack of appeals for any of his decisions. Can you address that, please?

Mrs. Klimchuk: With the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistle-blower Protection) Act I think the commissioner is going to be able to do the right thing. What's really important to me is that employees in the public service know they have a place to go, and that's what this is about. It's very interesting to me. This has been brought forward by our Premier and this government. This has been asked for for a long time. We are walking the talk. We are doing what is needed to be done.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can appreciate the hon. minister's passion in this bill because she clearly defends it. I think that's great. I'm actually quite impressed that she got up to speak on it, which is even better. Absolutely. The question I would have to the hon. minister – I'm assuming she has a couple of seniors' centres in her riding. I just wonder: does she not find it a little odd that we didn't include all the seniors' centres, whether they're private or Alberta Health Services? They're receiving government money. Does she not think that maybe those seniors would deserve that same protection that you're so passionately defending? I'm with you on defending it. I'm just curious if the seniors deserve that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister to respond.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to note that this legislation applies to the employees of the government of Alberta, the broader provincial public sector, including agencies, boards, commissions, school boards, postsecondary institutions, and health organizations. With respect to coverage of seniors I'm not sure what the hon. member is getting at. Yes, of course, meeting with seniors in my constituency is very, very important to me, and again it's important for me as a minister to be accountable to the individuals who help me do my job. Certainly, this is a step in the right direction.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

We still have some time. The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Actually, I appreciate the answer, and since she's asking me the question, I'll clarify. I'm talking about the continuing care model that the Minister of Health so valiantly supports. That continuing care model is the seniors' centres like Covenant Health, like Capital health, like the Bethany foundation, and they are not covered in this legislation at all. If you care so passionately about seniors, which I'm sure you do, do you not think that those seniors should be afforded the same protection as those in the Alberta Health Services system?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that's a decision that those boards and foundations will have to make on their own. I think that with us setting the tone for this whistle-blower legislation, people are going to be watching this, and I think that's a decision that those individuals would have to make in protecting their interests.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've just got to question that answer. What you're saying is that an entity like Covenant Health will have to voluntarily go under this act? There are no provisions in this act. I'm assuming you've read it. My question to you is: are you standing by those comments?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm sure the hon. member has memorized the bill and read it very closely. I think that the Lieutenant Governor in Council, if you look at section 36, may make regulations designating entities, including an entity that receives all or a substantial part of its operating funding from the government, as a public entity for the purposes of this Act and respecting the application of all or any portion of this Act to those public entities.

Again, the ball would be in their court.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, the Lieutenant Governor is actually cabinet. The member is a cabinet minister, and it says that there's a discretionary power, "may make regulations." [interjections] I can stand this way.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Other hon. members, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has the floor, please.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Saskiw: The Lieutenant Governor in Council is cabinet. It's a discretionary power that says: "may make regulations." Why don't you actually just show some leadership and say "must make a regulation" referring to these types of entities? Why are you leaving the discretion there?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Lieutenant Governor is indeed not cabinet. I think that the leadership that we're showing as a government is that we are taking leadership by presenting this legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to add another voice to those speaking on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, also referred to as the whistleblower protection act. The federal government has implemented whistleblower protection legislation, as have many other provincial jurisdictions. Here in Alberta there is currently no protection for those who blow the whistle in the public sector. I think it is important for our province to follow suit and put a system in place so that if a person working in a public organization has knowledge of wrongdoing, they are not afraid to come forward. They are doing the right thing and should not be punished for doing this. I have heard a few of my colleagues say that Bill 4 will not really protect whistle-blowers, and I tend to agree. Bill 4 as it is written has no real teeth.

Mr. Speaker, let me outline the three biggest concerns I have with this bill. First of all, what this legislation does is tell people to navigate within their own organization when blowing the whistle on the very same organization. I hope my colleagues on the government benches will take a minute to stop and think about what that really means. Imagine that you witness something at work that you know to be wrong. You are an honest person, and you know you have to do the right thing and report this wrongdoing and help and promote the public interest. You want to make sure you follow all the rules, so you seek advice on how to properly make a report. How do you get this advice?

According to this legislation you could be forced to submit your request for advice on the proper way to blow the whistle not to an independent source but to the very organization in which you work. In other words, your supervisor, your boss, possibly your colleagues will know that you have asked for this information. Talk about a disincentive to even find out how this whistle-blower protection works, let alone actually report something.

Now imagine that you go ahead and write a report on the wrongdoing that you have this knowledge of, but you're not allowed to blow the whistle to the public interest commissioner, the person who has all the power to investigate. No again. This legislation states that you must first try to work within your own organization in regard to blowing the whistle on that very organization. How can the government really think this makes sense? How can they say that this will protect the whistle-blower or promote our public interest?

Now, there's a provision in this legislation that states that if one reasonably believes that a reprisal is likely, he or she can complain outside their organization directly to the public interest commissioner. But will a person somehow have to prove reprisal is likely, and how would they do so? Will complaining directly to the commissioner really accomplish anything when his power is unchallengeable?

Mr. Speaker, if someone is going to blow the whistle, they should have the freedom to do so to any source they determine to be the most appropriate. It is ludicrous for this government to try to legislate how and to whom a whistle-blower can take their concerns. I wonder why this government would even try to be so prescriptive, and the only reason I can come up with is that they are trying to make it as difficult as possible for anyone within the government or for anyone within the public service to actually have their concerns addressed, to actually have wrongdoing looked into to promote the public interest.

The government claims this legislation provides an avenue for people to blow the whistle on any wrongdoing, but because it is written in such a narrow and prescriptive way, even if a person were to bring forward concerns, it is highly unlikely that the public would ever hear about it because this government will not allow individuals to blow the whistle to the media or any source outside the government family.

My second concern, Mr. Speaker, is that there is nothing in this legislation, not one phrase, not even one word, about how a whistle-blower could obtain a remedy if they suffer reprisals because they have blown the whistle. And let's be realistic here; most whistle-blowers do suffer reprisals. But there are no mechanisms written into this legislation, legislation that is titled whistleblower protection, for an individual to seek redress like compensation for a destroyed career. Again, talk about a huge disincentive to report any wrongdoing.

Mr. Speaker, last but not least, I am concerned about how broad the exemptions that the commissioner can make are. As written, section 31 allows the commissioner to exempt anything – any person, any public entity, any information, or any record – from any portion of the act or from any portion of the regulations which have yet to be written. Given that this act provides no method for any decision of the commissioner to be challenged – not even the courts can be used to mount a challenge – giving such broad exemption powers does not seem wise and does not seem to be in the public interest.

I am not arguing that the commissioner should not have the authority he needs to be able to deal with concerns that are brought to him, but, Mr. Speaker, there should be some sort of provision for a decision made by the commissioner to be reviewed if necessary. Yet this legislation does not provide for that. It does not provide even one avenue for a decision of the commissioner to be reviewed. How can the government claim that this is transparent? Not only can no one challenge the commissioner, but if the commissioner has any concerns, he can only complain to a deputy minister, a minister of cabinet, an office of the Legislature, or to the Speaker. This legislation prevents the commissioner from going directly to the Legislature, in other words from going to any elected person outside of the Premier's inner circle, and we know their track record.

This government does not often walk the talk. They seem to think that providing catchy sound bites without taking any action to back them up is all that is required of them. In the case of Bill 4 the Premier said that she is leading the way in terms of accountability. Then I urge her to work with those of us who have pointed out the flaws in this legislation, and I challenge her to fix them and make this a great piece of legislation. If she really cares about being transparent and accountable to Albertans, she should be happy to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to pause and close. In the six or so months that I've been an MLA – and maybe being an opposition MLA has something to do with this – the three, four, five, or six professionals that have come up to me over this time period and wanted to tell me something but didn't want it to get back to the government, didn't want their name out, or have started the sentence with, "I shouldn't be telling you this" make me totally aware of how important this type of legislation is.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, through the chair.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, hon. member. I appreciate your interest and your speech, your talking here. Would you give your position on whether or not you believe this legislation should be afforded to all facilities that are receiving government money, whether they be public, private, whatever they are, and how you would perceive that that could benefit them?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, through the chair.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, hon. member. I for one would be concerned about the input into private. My initial thought is that where there are elements of a significant percentage of public funding that crosses with private service providers or where the government, the taxpayer, the citizen, is funding things, my initial thought is that it should apply because that is public money, and to promote the public interest, that should be protected.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

I'll recognize next the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. This is an initiative that's close to my heart, having spent the last 10 years in politics because of blowing the whistle on a government that I felt wasn't addressing climate change in a serious way and on a health authority that didn't seem to like that news or the health consequences that I saw arising out of climate change, including new infectious diseases, droughts, food production losses, extreme weather events, and floods, which we've seen a growing number of in this last decade in Alberta.

To get to the point, I guess I see a government that is going upstream after decades of eroding public trust. This is really a bill about trust, and I see a government that has, in most instances that have come to our attention, been transparent only about those things that they've been embarrassed about in public, when good media doing investigative journalism have exposed something, when freedom of information requests have exposed something. Only then does this government actually come forward and acknowledge problems within the system: failure of due diligence, wasteful spending, other activities that actually limit and coerce and in some instances eliminate employees within the government services.

Of course, some of the main ones we brought to the fore in the last year or so. Physicians who have actually been squeezed out of the system because they saw problems in the health care system, tried to raise issues with the government, with the health care system, were dismissed and signed confidentiality agreements, had big settlements, as we know. They still don't have the opportunity without a public inquiry to speak to some of the issues that got them fired. What they were really trying to do was improve the system and address some of the queue-jumping that resulted from coercion on them.

I'm thinking specifically of Dr. Ciaran McNamee, whose lung cancer patients were bumped way down the line by cardiovascular surgeons and through influencing the Health minister and the other officials in the department. He was dismissed because he raised the alarm bell on delays in lung cancer surgery because of priority given to others. That's just one example.

I guess that when I say that this government is coming at this bill with a tremendous handicap in terms of public trust and those of us on the opposite side having real trouble believing that they're sincere, it's this history of cover-ups, of unwillingness to address serious and legitimate allegations of penalties to whistle-blowers, in fact, and an unwillingness to open up these issues unless they are absolutely brought to the table and forced to accommodate the reality.

When I think about speaking out in public, I recognize, as someone who has suffered the consequences of this government's approach to whistle-blowers, that it's hazardous to people's well-being. It's hazardous to their mental health. It's hazardous to their future employment. It's hazardous, potentially, to their family's well-being.

This is a critical piece of legislation, and while I applaud the decision to finally get one on the table, I, like many others here, am very skeptical that this is actually going to accomplish what I think it is that we want to see it accomplish.

Several questions have to be answered with any whistle-blower legislation. First of all, does it make it safe to raise objections or concerns about a particular process or expenditure; secondly, will there be anonymity for the individual; thirdly, will there be an opportunity for any kind of retaliation or negative impact on the individual; and finally, will there be accountability for the offender as well as compensation for the whistle-blower should they pay an inordinate or any significant price for their speaking out?

Those questions, Mr. Speaker, are at the heart of what good legislation would have to ensure so that anyone who decided to take the courageous step to speak out would feel a hundred per cent confident. What I'm afraid I see, not so much in what's written but in what is unwritten and from some of the discussions that we've heard earlier, is that the internal process, the lack of an appeal process, the lack of an ability to go to the courts afterwards, the inability to define harm after a period of time if a person has been damaged or let go or voluntarily resigned because it was too uncomfortable to work in that situation, and the lack of significant recognition of the costs to the whistle-blower and commitment to paying for that are serious concerns.

In addition, I guess I would have to echo what a couple of other people have mentioned. One, it's not retroactive. When it comes into place perhaps a year from now, it's extremely cloudy whether an individual who has been part of something that's ongoing should blow the whistle or not because it could be called retroactive if they start to raise issues from the past. It makes it, again, a barrier for people to feel confident in raising it.

Second is the lack of protection for contracted individuals, as I was, in the health care system, the lack of ability to hold people accountable in other partially publicly funded services. Covenant Health was mentioned among others. For many of the seniors' care homes that receive significant funding, even the private ones, again, this doesn't apply there.

One would hope that all of these issues would've been considered and that when we do this, put all the effort and expense of going through this process for a bill, we would make this as comprehensive and as bulletproof, I guess you could say, as possible. What we see is a minimalist approach, an attempt to, I think, give us an appearance of protection, an appearance of trustworthiness. As I say, coming from 10 years of watching this government in action, they're starting at a huge disadvantage with both the public and many of us in the Legislature because there has been very little that has been consistent in terms of a willingness to be accountable and transparent in this government.

It would be a huge cultural shift for us to believe that whistle-blowers would be safe, that they would be compensated, and that the perpetrators of malfeasance, mismanagement, or abuse would actually pay the price. Without that trust, Mr. Speaker, without an overarching sense of trust, which I dare say under the leadership of Peter Lougheed would've just been there – when people in Lougheed's day saw something like this bill, they would've said: "Yes. We believe what he's doing. We believe he wants to be serious about this." If he had considered it, we would have given the benefit of the doubt. In this government we give them no inch because we have seen too much evidence that this is hardly in good faith.

If they haven't done their homework, if they haven't looked at the best in the world – and we have a number of countries that have what's considered to be remarkable and state-of-the-art whistle-blower legislation. They didn't even consider those. That's unfortunate, and it gives us, again, the sense that Alberta has to have a made-in-Alberta solution. We know best, we're going to do it our way, and everybody should trust us.

I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker; we have to do better than that. We have to close all the loopholes. We have to ensure that this process is beyond reproach. We have a distrustful public service. We have a distrustful public. People know the prices that are being paid by those who blow the whistle. We have to have robust and, as I say, bulletproof legislation here that gives people absolute confidence that the best interests of the public, the best interests of good management, and the honest regard for accountability and transparency are held by this government. They're going to have to do better than this to convince us that this is actually going to serve the long-term best interests of this province and the employees working in it.

With that, Mr. Speaker, we'll be making some amendments in the next phase, and hopefully the government will take them in the spirit in which they're recommended. We want a robust bill that all Albertans will be proud of, that people will not hesitate to use when they see malfeasance and malpractice.

I'll take my seat. Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have one question. There's an independent body called the Federal Accountability Initiative for Reform, or FAIR. They issued a press release stating that based on their reading of the bill, it would "simply create a black hole into which courageous employees place serious concerns that affect the public interest – and get no feedback, no result and no protection." I'm wondering if the hon. member has had any dealings with FAIR and what you think of their comments on this bill.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks so much for that question. Yes, I'm familiar with FAIR. Many of you will know about the famous Dr. Nancy Olivieri, who blew the whistle on the federal government around research results and the inappropriate reassurance around some drug trials that she recognized. She paid a huge price for blowing the whistle on government cover-up of some of the important facts around health care impacts from some of these medications. FAIR has tried as a result of that, her years of battle and her tremendous financial costs through the courts, to get compensation and protection for her career and her family costs, tremendous stresses and depression.

She tried through this FAIR organization to raise the level of debate and understanding around whistle-blowing in the country, and I give them all the credit for both being critics of legislation as it's emerged across the country and giving constructive guidelines. I think this government would do well to listen to some of the several concrete recommendations that FAIR has made to improve this legislation, and I hope that will be taken to heart.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, two questions.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: The first one is: who do you think whistle-blowers should be able to blow the whistle to? Secondly, I'm wondering if this lack of accountability harms our government and our public interest in other ways when good public employees don't have the option to blow the whistle and maybe feel a bit bullied, for lack of a better word, if they end up doing worse at their jobs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. From my point of view, any organization that has wrongdoing should allow the freedom and protection of whistle-blowers. We all lose as a culture, as a population when people are doing things that are either fraudulent or damaging to the public good. I could say that almost any organization has impacts on the public good either through the quality of their products and services or in this case, where we're addressing the public service issues, the public purse and, indeed, the services that they provide.

I wish I could remember your second question, hon. member, but it slipped away.

Mr. Barnes: Who should you blow the whistle to?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Barnes: Oh, sorry.

Dr. Swann: Who should you be able to blow the whistle to? Well, clearly, we need independence. If we don't have an independent body through which to speak and to bring evidence, it is difficult to believe that whistle-blowers will be confident and trusting in the process. In this case this bill has only an internal process, or in an extreme case they can go directly to the commissioner. That makes it really difficult, I think, to have confidence in the process. I think we need to have at least some semblance of independence so that people can go wherever they wish to raise the issue, where they think they'll get a proper hearing and redress.

In some cases that may mean to the media. In many cases, at least in the months and years until we can prove up this legislation, I think people need to be able to go to the public, as I did, and make sure that there is full and open discussion of the issues, and people through the media can judge for themselves what seems to be appropriate and inappropriate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is regarding the definition of wrongdoing. In the current version of the act there's nothing about political bullying, cabinet ministers bullying individuals. There are constituents in my area that felt this very strongly before and during the election. I was wondering if the member had any solutions to the wording on the definition.

The Deputy Speaker: The time has elapsed.

I'll recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills on second reading.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we were to implement proper whistle-blower protection in this fall session, that could be something that would benefit this province for years to come. It could be a highlight of this fall session. However, what has been presented to us in Bill 4 is something that will not leave a good legacy. Instead of implementing proper legislation with teeth to defend whistle-blowers, the government decided to bring forward legislation that will defend them from whistle-blowers.

I'm disappointed that this bill doesn't apply to ethical behaviour. There were many examples that I had in my constituency where municipal leaders were bullied into making a decision or would face serious consequences in terms of funding. They were fearful of speaking out on those matters, and rightly so.

The government knew that the public, I think, was looking for action following the alleged intimidation of health care professionals and the accepting of illegal donations. This should have been part of Bill 4. We should take issues like the intimidation of health professionals and other public servants seriously, but the government has chosen not to do so, and it's disappointing.

The bill is also currently structured to keep highly damaging information as private as possible. It indicates that the government wants to hide from whistle-blowers, not protect them. Under the proposed legislation government employees that are seeking advice on blowing the whistle can be forced to submit their request in writing. This seems disturbing and is a way of intimidating people to not even think of blowing the whistle or finding out how to do so.

Further, section 10 makes it clear that you cannot blow the whistle to the public interest commissioner unless you have attempted to do this within your own organization. You know, one example is a health care professional. Are they really going to want to go to Alberta Health Services if those are the people that they feel are intimidating them? There is obviously going to be reprisal. Mr. Speaker, I feel that this was deliberately put in to scare public employees out of doing what is right and coming forward with information that is beneficial for the public good.

Mr. Speaker, let's imagine this. Imagine you worked in a place where your superiors were public employees that were making over-the-top expense claims. Imagine they were charging the taxpayer for thousands of dollars for things that were not necessary to do their job: butler service, a Mercedes, trips around the world. It's very hard to imagine taxpayer dollars being wasted like that, but just try and imagine that. Imagine if you had the good conscience to come forward with this and save the taxpayer from being brutally abused in these situations.

Should you really have to bring this up to the manager that is abusing the taxpayer first? Wouldn't doing that possibly intimidate you from coming forward in the first place? I think the obvious answer to that is yes, and that is why we shouldn't have to force individuals to go through a potentially flawed internal process within the organization that they are trying to blow the whistle on. It just isn't a good idea, Mr. Speaker, and I don't think it's right.

We should work to encourage whistle-blowers. They can help stop ethical lapses and financial mismanagement as soon as it happens. If we had good whistle-blower protection, perhaps a public employee could have come forward in the recent health expense scandal. That would have saved taxpayers thousands of dollars. Why wouldn't we want to include that in the legislation? What are they hiding? What are they trying to stop from being made public?

Furthermore, the act is on a go-forward basis. If we want to ensure that Albertans are getting proper use of their tax dollars, we should ensure that this legislation allows brave whistle-blowers, who are already putting their neck on the line, to be protected if they want the public to know about recent issues. This may include issues that we do not know about yet, but it would be better for the government to learn from previous mistakes than to repeat them in the future.

An example in my constituency is about some municipal leaders in my area as well as their CEO who were in a meeting with the minister, who basically said: you sign this document, or you're never getting another grant. That has to be made public. Those people have to have the ability to blow the whistle on that and not fear reprisal, not fear that their community isn't going to get the funding because they spoke out. It was a shame in our community. It was a black eye on democracy, actually.

Instead of doing this, the government is simply trying to make this effective only from the day the bill passes, and by doing this, the government closes the door on any wrongdoings in the past. This government has done more to cover their tracks than to put Albertans first with this legislation.

Formal whistle-blowing legislation is welcomed by the Wildrose and, I'm sure, is welcomed by all parties. We could have had a full, multipartisan approach, where you put this legislation to a committee that would examine the legislation, look at all the best practices from organizations like FAIR that have come up with substantive recommendations, and get it right. But just like the government's FOIP Act, it is designed to protect the government, not the public.

I still hope that we can work together to create more effective legislation than what has been presented. This is still a first for Alberta. There has been no protection of whistle-blowers in government previously. It's a good thing this government has brought forward this legislation, but we should ensure that this legislation is one that will leave a lasting positive legacy, not just assist the government in sweeping things under the rug.

You know, we've talked in the past about having legislation done properly instead of having flawed bills come to the Legislature, where individuals don't know that the Lieutenant Governor, the Queen's designate, isn't actually the person that drafts regulations. They're the ones that put it into force, make it come into law. We need to have those types of discussions so that the legislation is done properly. Important pieces of legislation shouldn't be left to regulation. It should be right in the substance of the bill. Regulations are only meant for minor details that can change from time to time.

Key substantive provisions should never be left out of the face of the document. The reason for that is that legislation, at least to some extent, is debated in this House. We have the opportunity to provide amendments to it. But with regulations it's at the sole discretion of cabinet. If cabinet wants to make regulations on this, they could. Under section 36 they may. Well, I don't think Albertans can trust them to definitely make a regulation, particularly when answers on protecting employees of organizations, like, you know, employees of seniors' homes, aren't properly given to us.

You know, our caucus is coming up with many substantive amendments. I know that other members of the opposition are coming up with amendments, too. Let's hope that we can work together to actually take this legislation, that I think in many ways is a facade, breathe some life into it, and make it so that whistle-blowers can blow the whistle at any time and in any place and for any reason that's valid. In particular, we would look to be expanding the definition of wrongdoing to ensure that it includes political wrongdoing. I guess the fact is that if you're a cabinet minister or if you're an MLA or whatnot and you're not doing anything wrong, you should have no problem with putting that protection to the public in the definition of wrongdoing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments of the hon. member. You brought up an organization called FAIR. I, too, have looked at some of their stuff. I read with great interest David Hutton's article in the Calgary Herald and other things of that nature. For a government that seemingly was dedicating itself to openness and transparency – there are many examples throughout the world of governments which have actually written good legislation and opened this up to what in that organization's view is very good legislation – why would this government choose to write such a mediocre bill or, as you say, a facade instead of simply getting legislation from another government that was already out there, already proved to be working, as organizations like FAIR said, and just simply cut and paste that and implement that instead of putting in this, to use your words, facade legislation?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The organization FAIR – the member refers to it – talks about legislation that's in other jurisdictions like the U.S.A, the United Kingdom, Australia. If there are precedents out there, then why reinvent the wheel, particularly if it's so poorly done? The quote that they use is that this legislation “compels the whistleblower to enter a secretive, bureaucratic and tightly-managed process which is likely to bury their allegations and is unlikely to protect anyone except the wrongdoers.” I think the member states rightly that if there are other jurisdictions with the legislation out there, surely the legal counsel for this government would have looked at other legislation, but that may not be the case.

My understanding – we've had some communications with this organization – is that the government hasn't consulted with them at all. You have a body that has expertise. This is all they do. They have looked at all legislation. They have tons of reports on it, tons of good information, and this government hasn't even bothered to consult with them. It's to their own detriment. We're seeing in the media, you know, that they're looking at this independent body which is making substantive arguments about why this legislation doesn't work, and I think Albertans are starting to understand that this legislation is a failure.

I thank the hon. member for his question, and hopefully – hopefully – we can take some of the recommendations that FAIR has presented, get to Committee of the Whole, put them forward to the government, and hopefully the new minister will accept those recommendations so that we can actually have real legislation. We hope that the creation of this bill in such a poorly written fashion wasn't deliberate. Maybe I'm just a new MLA and I'm being naive on that. There are a bunch of other amendments here that FAIR has put forward. Some of them are specifically related to certain sections here, but we'll take some of their overall principles, incorporate them into our amendments, and hopefully the members on the other side will judiciously look through our amendments.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake under 29(2)(a).

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. member, we heard over there from the minister of arts and culture that you really couldn't cover seniors' care centres, and she wasn't really sure what the difference between private and public was. I'm just wondering: is there the ability in Bill 4 to ensure that any organization that receives public money could be covered? Is that a possibility in this bill, or is it absolutely impossible, as we've heard?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It so happens that we actually have an amendment on that. It's just amazing how that happens. It's actually even been approved by Parliamentary Counsel, so it is possible that we can put that in the bill. The hon. minister somehow said that this was some type of impossibility, that if an organization has employees that aren't employees of the government, it can't be included. That's not the case. If there is an entity, whatever type of entity, whether it's a seniors' home or some other entity out there, provided that that entity receives public funding and provided that taxpayer dollars are going into it, there should be the opportunity for those individuals, if they see mismanagement – and there's a load of mismanagement; we've seen that – to be able to blow the whistle so that taxpayers are protected.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to speak regarding Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. I have much to say, so we'll see where this carries me.

First and foremost, you know, when I heard that the government was going to be introducing legislation on whistle-blower protection, I was quite optimistic and hopeful that this legislation would actually in fact protect whistle-blowers. Unfortunately, this bill is fraught with problems that I will attempt to outline in the short time that I have. It's frustrating because, again, as other colleagues have pointed out, whistle-blower protection is something that is sorely needed within this province. The legislation that we have in Canada, unfortunately, doesn't go far enough, as other members have pointed out.

I'd like to begin by talking about how, you know, good whistle-blower protection would cover workers, whether they're in the public sector or the private sector. It would cover all workers, which is the first shortcoming of this bill in that it only covers public-sector employees, and even then it doesn't go far enough. I mean, in our great province there are many, many workers who are contracted. As my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View pointed out, when he was working in the public sector, he was actually contracted, so this current legislation would not have protected him either, which is a major shortcoming.

The way I look at it is that if we are spending our time and resources in drafting legislation in this great House, then we should ensure that it's legislation that is well thought out, where we look at different points of view, where we ensure that no stone has been left unturned. I applaud my colleagues from the opposition parties for their due diligence in looking at this bill and thoroughly going through and adding their points of view and trying to close some of the loopholes. My optimism, unfortunately, is not where theirs is in that this is rife with so many challenges and problems that I'm not sure we can plug enough of these holes. If this was a ship, it would have already sunk.

One of the great concerns I have is that we have a commissioner with an unbelievable amount of power. First of all, if the commissioner decides that not a single instance of alleged wrongdoing has occurred, he has unlimited discretion to decide to do nothing about it. The fact that you've got a single entity, a single person that makes that decision of whether or not something will or won't be investigated is a problem right at the forefront. I'll talk a little bit more in a bit about the reporting that the commissioner has to do, but again we don't get any specifics in this bill. Therefore, we're going to see that many of the details, as far as individual cases, are going to be left in the dark.

First of all, there's a lack of an appeal mechanism, the complete lack of ability for individuals to appeal a decision that the commissioner has made. There's no access to the courts, no possibility of a judicial review of that. I'm not sure what my colleagues across the way were thinking. If a person wanted to challenge a decision made by the commissioner, well, clearly, it's: sorry; there's really nothing that you can do about it. You know, according to David Hutton, a gentleman from FAIR whom others have quoted, at least in our federal legislation there is the potential for a judicial review.

In section 52 of our bill here it states that "no proceeding or decision of the Commissioner shall be challenged, reviewed, quashed or called into question in any court." That, of course, is a grave issue. You look at our regular court system, and there is an appeal process. Decisions can get taken to the next level until multiple rulings have been made. Unfortunately, in the case of whistle-blowers, should the commissioner make a decision, well, we're all left with that decision forevermore. Strong whistle-blower legislation should protect and add access to the courts, not replace that access.

The disclosure process and limitations are a challenge. Again, the annual reporting the commissioner will make once a year is pretty weak. This is worse than our federal law because our commissioner, according to this bill, does not need to disclose many details beyond annual statistics. So the challenge is that there is no disclosure or process for disclosure to the public. You know, if we want whistle-blower protection to protect Alberta workers, they need to have that access of going public to ensure that a situation is not only identified, but then something is done about it.

There is some exemption as far as employees for coverage. This is another power that the commissioner holds, where he or she may exempt a person from coverage. The fact that he or she has the ability to freely designate departments, offices, et cetera, from whistle-blower protection – in other words, meaning they are exempted from the law, they're above the law – is a major concern. I mean, it's unacceptable in that it goes completely against the scope of what the government is saying that this bill will do.

In seeking a remedy, at least in the United Kingdom our colleagues' act focuses on remedies for the whistle-blowers, so it provides that compensation will be given to whistle-blowers. So the whistle-blower, for their system at least, is made whole if they suffer damages from that process. This current bill, Bill 4, doesn't have anything that will protect and compensate the whistle-blower. For myself this is glaring evidence that this bill is not about whistle-blower protection. Again, it's about protecting the government from whistle-blowers.

I find it quite interesting that my colleagues across the aisle boast about how proud they are of this bill and how strong it is, yet if you look at section 3(2), it clearly states that: "This Act applies only in respect [to the] wrongdoings that occur after the coming into force of this Act." Well, if this bill is that strong, then why can't you protect whistle-blowers who have had past transgressions, as opposed to saying: okay; the clock starts today. I find that a serious challenge to their position.

Unfortunately for whistle-blowers that do blow the whistle, many of them lose their jobs, face immense legal and other costs. So, you know, it is essential that whistle-blower protection have robust details regarding remedies in order to make it an effective law and to ensure that the whistle-blower is protected.

I'll move onto an example from Australian law. Something that is strong from their own provision is that if bureaucracy refuses to investigate, the whistle-blower has the right to go public, and they are protected. So at least there is a provision where, if the internal mechanism fails, which I'll speak to in a moment – I mean, an internal mechanism for whistle-blowing is already destined to fail – in Australia they have the option then of going forward and going public. They are protected, which is a crucial piece to whistle-blower legislation, where clearly this bill falls flat on its face.

Strong whistle-blower protection must turn delay tactics on their head and not allow for that. It must consider the limitations. There shouldn't be any restraints going beyond the internal. Again, I've spoken in the past in this House that a whistle-blower should have the ability to blow the whistle anywhere, anytime, to anyone. That is the first and foremost criteria of any good whistle-blower legislation. The start of this bill talks about the limitations on who, when, and how and really does itself a disservice and doesn't live up to what it potentially could be.

Talking about the reports, the commissioner's annual report to the Legislature will not provide enough information for the public. Missing details are likely going to include departments, individuals involved in the investigations, remedies sought/awarded, penalties to departments or individuals, and specific steps taken to remedy wrongdoing, which is a great way for one to learn from their mistakes. Of course, if this Legislature is unaware of all of these details I just mentioned, well, I'm not sure how we're going to move forward in a way that's going to strengthen and improve the system upon which this is being built.

You know, I think the way this bill is currently written: there's quite a bit of secrecy. When we look at the internal disclosure process, that will actually, in fact, silence the whistle-blower and intimidate those who do not feel comfortable going through the internal process.

I've mentioned already the monopoly of control the commissioner will have over this legislation, which, again, works completely opposite to what the intention is and has been outlined by the government in this bill. In the end, you've got a commissioner that can effectively shield the government from whistle-blowers, which is a grave concern.

I want to touch again on the five tenets that have been outlined by various organizations and which I feel strongly should be in this legislation. One, first and foremost, is that a whistle-blower has full free speech rights and that their freedom of speech is protected no matter who they speak with, where they go, and that they have access to the media.

You know, again, I'd like to bring up the example that the incident that happened – and "incident" isn't even strong enough of a word – at XL Foods could have been prevented had we whistle-blower protection that protected private-sector workers. It became clear after the fact that there were workers who were aware, that there were some concerns they had regarding their work at the plant but, of course, fear of reprisal, fear for some – there are many temporary foreign workers who work at the now JBS, the XL Foods plant – of being deported, not just losing their jobs but being evicted from the country. Clearly, they weren't about to sacrifice or take that chance. I'll jump to the public example in a second.

Had we whistle-blower protection that would have protected these workers, they could have stepped forward. They could have blown the whistle. This crisis could have been prevented, the incidents of people getting sick, the fact that our reputation was, I'll say, slightly tarnished by this. It all could have been prevented.

I mean, the purpose of whistle-blower protection, folks, is to not only protect the whistle-blower but also to strengthen and improve our public sector and also our private sector. You know, it causes me alarm, and it makes me think that my colleagues across the way haven't necessarily done their due diligence in research, in looking at other jurisdictions, in looking at laws that exist in other countries like the U.K. and Australia that show that strong whistle-blower protection will actually, in fact, help to save dollars, protect workers.

I mentioned David Hutton with FAIR, and he has also written that, unfortunately, our federal whistle-blower law has not been much better than this one in that the federal government has expended roughly $30 million with very little coming out in the way of protecting our workers.

It's my contention and, I believe, my colleagues' on this side of the House that, you know, we write this bill, we do it correctly the first time, we ensure that it's going to do what it set out to do, which is, again, to protect the whistle-blower, to ensure that they don't have fear of reprisal, that they're not going to be either harassed or intimidated or, worse, lose their job for speaking out. We have many examples, unfortunately, in our history of when this has happened. If we want to do something to ensure that they are protected, well, then, we need to rewrite this current bill and, honestly, start from the top and consult with industry and experts in this area. I find it amusing . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, through the chair.

Mr. Stier: Good afternoon, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the House again today. I've enjoyed the . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, this is 29(2)(a), not your opportunity to speak.

Mr. Stier: Fine. Yeah.

The Deputy Speaker: That's fine. Carry on.

Mr. Stier: I've really enjoyed the information that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has been providing us. He spoke an awful lot on things in the bill that seem to be a problem for him. I just wondered, in addition, are there other sorts of legislation perhaps that he might think should be added to this, in his opinion?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member, in response.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. I mean, definitely we need to add to this. Of the five I think I only covered the first, talking about full free speech rights. There's also the right to disclose all illegality and misconduct. There should be protection so that there is no harassment of any kind for a whistle-blower or any form of reprisal that can be taken upon a person who goes out and, again, is reporting on this with the intention of improving a system or correcting measures that aren't right.

I think part of the problem is the way this bill is written. The government will speak about how this is to protect the whistle-blower, but truly when one goes through the bill, we see that it is mostly geared toward protecting not the whistle-blower but the government from the whistle-blower. Section 27, I find, talking about human resource management decisions: well, the way that it's currently written, it basically gives an out for a ministry to let go of a whistle-blower for making – I'll read it. "No action lies against a department, public entity or office of the Legislature, or an employee of any of them, for making a reasonable human resource management decision in good faith."

Part of the issue I have is that when you have a bill like this, where we're relying on the definition of one person's idea of good faith, it can be argued in so many different ways that a person was acting in bad faith, therefore their reprisal or losing their job or other consequences are justified. I don't think public servants or people who are going forward to report this want that decision based on an interpretation of what good faith is. I mean, that's an issue.

Should members go through the bill section by section, I think it's clear that many pieces of this legislation need to be rewritten. There's too much that's either left for interpretation or up to the discretion of one person, the commissioner, which is too much power in the hands of one person and really should be given to the public.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Others on 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to ask the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, because he's enlightened us quite well, how can a bill like this with so many holes in it, some large enough to, say – I'll just sort of warn the members across the way – drive a bus through them, be presented to us in the Legislature? Do you think we're being punked here?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you for that question. You know, it gives me great concern that there are this many holes and, as you've so aptly described, that you could drive a bus through the size of the holes in this bill.

It's just frustrating for myself that there is whistle-blower protection that exists in other jurisdictions that does protect the worker, and I'm unsure why the government hasn't consulted, hasn't looked into these pieces of legislation. We have organizations like FAIR, David Hutton, whose whole scope of work is about identifying and sifting through, line by line, legislation on whistle-blower protection. His organization was not consulted. He was not approached, and he even extended his hand out to the government to give some feedback on this legislation. To my knowledge, my understanding is that he was not contacted and was refused access. So it's quite frustrating.

The potential for this legislation, I think, was great. I think it is definitely needed.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm uneagerly awaiting my chance to speak to this bill because it is an important bill, and I am not an excellent public speaker, but I do believe that it needs to be addressed. I have serious concerns with the methodology of it and the intricacies of it.

Unfortunately, whistle-blower protection in this province is long overdue. We will join the ranks of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Nova Scotia in having protection for whistle-blowers. Whistle-blowers protect the public interest and safety by courageously stepping forward despite the odds against them. In a word, they are heroes. Heroes are selfless, they sacrifice for others, and they are brave when they stand up against insurmountable odds. They are David to Goliath, and we should do everything we can to make sure David wins.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to relate a personal experience that I had in a previous life, when I was in Ottawa and challenged by a Member of Parliament at that time, Dr. Wayne Easter. I was representing the Western Barley Growers. Going forward, I had heard that some serious questions were going to come forward from opposition in the House either that week or the next week coming. I had a chance to greet Dr. Easter at a committee hearing. He was advising me as a westerner how I would be involved in politics of the country coming forward. I had a chance to grab Dr. Easter's hand and shake it and tell him that Canadians were having an increasingly difficult time discerning between a Liberal and a crook. It was only a very few days after that that the sponsorship scandal broke. Allan Cutler, sir, was the gentleman that broke that sponsorship scandal. He blew the whistle on it.

I have to tell you, sir, that I kind of skipped part of my story. For Dr. Easter to understand that I came from western Canada, I made a statement that with federal Liberals it was difficult to discern between their political aspirations and that of being a crook. His face just simply dropped. He was shaken, and I believe in my heart that he knew that there was something afoot. This whistle-blower came forward, and as we all know, the Adscam scandal broke. It wasn't about the incompetent use of tax dollars. It was about the deliberate and fraudulent use of tax dollars for those political purposes. So I believe whistle-blower legislation is extremely important.

For too long civic-spirited public servants have been afraid to come forward or be destroyed if they do. Careers can end, and jobs can be lost. Ultimately, the livelihood of a person and their family is put at risk when someone in the public sector wants to step forward and bring attention to outrageous behaviour. I am pleased that after 41 years of government the party in power has finally seen fit to pass whistle-blower legislation. It's about time. There are also limitations to prevent fraudulent claims against the government. Whistle-blowing is too vital to a free and healthy democracy to be bogged down with the vindictiveness of some. This legislation should be reserved for those who know of serious wrongdoing in public institutions.

With this legislation, sir, I do have serious reservations and will not be supporting the bill in the present form. This piece of legislation before us will protect those in the public sector when and if they blow the whistle. They should not have to fear reprisal from their supervisors or any other management executives in their department. The problem is that I do not believe in this government, and I don't believe that this bill was intended to protect employees of the government. This bill reads a lot like the FOIP Act, and it was intended to protect the government from its employees. If this bill was intended to hold government to the highest standards and facilitate whistle-blowing, it would read much differently.

From the beginning of my reading, Mr. Speaker, this bill seemed a bit suspicious. Why would this legislation only apply going forward? Why wouldn't the government be interested in violations of the public trust in the past? Why wouldn't it want to know about gross mismanagement of public funds or reprisals against employees, and to the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, whether they're involved in health care or not?

One could conclude that there is something to hide, Mr. Speaker, especially since this bill, if passed, would not be implemented for some time. This seems less like whistle-blower protection and more like whistle-blower suffocation. What kind of message does this send to the civil service right now? The expense scandal in our health system was only brought to light by a FOIP request from the media. Government tried to hide the scandal. I would surely doubt that this government claims to be perfect, so why gag the civil service in the meantime? Why not make a promise here in the Legislature now to protect employees against reprisal from this day forward instead of some distant future date yet to be defined?

As it stands in this bill, wrongdoing is limited to gross mismanagement of funds and assets in civil and criminal law. We can do better than this, Mr. Speaker. We should be looking at ethical behaviour. A good friend of mine once said: you cannot legislate morality.

Another major concern of mine, Mr. Speaker, is the exemption section of this bill. To be honest, sir, all barn doors are smaller than this exemption, and there's been comment made about a bus and even a double-decker bus that could be driven through the legislation.

The government is asking us to trust the judgment of the Ombudsman or whomever is designated to oversee this process. Where I'm from, Mr. Speaker, trust is earned, not demanded. Memories are long. We have an Ethics Commissioner in this province. We have conflict-of-interest legislation in this province, and it's clear that former ministers must cool off for one year before re-entering government service, especially in their own department. Yet somehow party hacks wind their way back into government positions before a proper cool-off period. What's the point of conflict-of-interest rules, for example, if this government is going to just waive them when it's in their best interests? What could happen with whistle-blower protection in this province when anyone or anything can be exempted from the act? It's shameful. Albertans deserve better than this.

To that end, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak to a campaign promise that I made guaranteeing personal anonymity in whistle-blower legislation. Well before this legislation was brought forward, I ran in the election campaign with a personal commitment to my constituents that if they knew of wrongdoing, not criminal wrongdoing, I would give them a personal guarantee of whistle-blowing anonymity to the best of my ability.

This whole bill seems designed to keep a lid on outrageous conduct inside government. This seems far too secretive for me. This province thrives on freedom. The ministry that crafted this bill has the words "transparency" and "accountability" in its name, yet somehow this bill does not allow findings of wrongdoing to be made public by the public interest commissioner. Every avenue is designed to lead to the Premier's office and cabinet. If the commissioner is ignored by a minister or the Premier or a deputy minister, there appears to be no recourse so that the public is aware of the situation. Ironically, this seems against the public interest. How can this be?

I find it interesting that this bill closely follows the relevant legislation in Saskatchewan, the people's republic of Saskatchewan. I find it interesting because there's a significant clause in The Public Interest Disclosure Act of Saskatchewan that allows a commissioner to make a special report to the Speaker if it is in the public interest and relevant to a disclosure made to that office. Somehow that section 24 from Saskatchewan did not make it to this bill here.

I seriously hope the government reconsiders their bill and listens to the opposition so that serious progress can be made.

Mr. Speaker, I will not be supporting this bill in its present form. Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, my grandmother's maiden name was Hutton, and as most people here will know, my first name is David. I do want to congratulate the parties opposite from start to finish for their detailed analysis of a website which is run by a Mr. David Hutton – I believe that is his name – the FAIR website. You know, I clicked on one button on that website, and I found a whole series of comments that are eerily similar to what we've heard here for the last while.

Getting down to a question, I find it ironic that on the day that the Results-based Budgeting Act report is tabled in the Legislative Assembly, all the parties opposite – I think I've heard it from all of them, and I stand corrected if I'm not right, and for greater clarity: the Wildrose, the Liberals, and the New Democrats – have all spoken about opening up this legislation to all sectors. As a chartered accountant who ran a CA business, I can only imagine in my mind's eye, with just the clients that I was favoured to be the accountant for, how this legislation, if it was open to them, would be very expensive. To the member opposite: what will it cost if they open this legislation up to all enterprises?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member to respond, if you care to.

Mr. Strankman: I have no idea, member opposite. I think that's in the hands of the government.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there others?

Mr. Griffiths: I'd just pick up where my colleague left off. I think it's very, very important to consider the cost implications that go along with this. I know that when a legitimate whistle-blower comes forward with some issues of wrongdoing that are going on, it has to be investigated. It has to be investigated to also make sure that you don't have some employee coming forward who's got an axe to grind, that just wants to blame somebody. How are you going to hire enough people to police that, and who's actually going to do the policing of that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member to respond.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, I don't think this government is afraid to spend money. It seems quite open in their budget deficit where that money is going. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler has the floor. Thank you.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, I made the personal commitment in my constituency. It might be possible for the hon. members opposite to do the same in theirs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm intrigued by the personal commitment the hon. member mentions, and I'm curious as to how many people have come forward to take him up on his personal commitment and have done whistle-blowing through that commitment.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, do you care to respond?

Mr. Strankman: I'm sorry; could I just have clarification, sir?

Mr. Horner: You mentioned that you gave a personal commitment for whistle-blower protection, that you made a personal commitment of guarantee. I'm wondering if you've had in the last eight months any people come forward to take you up on that.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, sir. I've had several.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Dorward: Just to clarify that comment, I thought that on that side were the ones who wanted to spend the extra money out there on other entities, not this side. Are they the side that wants to spend that money on opening up the legislation to all entities?

Mr. Strankman: To the hon. member: I thought I answered the question. I said that I made the personal commitment and that I would do that in my constituency.

Mrs. Towle: I just want to clarify . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Sorry. Through the chair. It's my understanding, because I spoke about it, that nobody on this side said that it would go to private companies. We said: anybody receiving public money. I just want to clarify. You're not hard of hearing, correct? That is your understanding. I just want to make sure. Is that your intention? Is that what you mean when you're talking about putting it forward to other companies?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm talking about government money. I'm talking about public spending going forward. If people are saying that there is public money being spent improperly, I would like to know, and I would bring that forward from my position as an elected representative from Drumheller-Stettler.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, there's only one taxpayer. When you add administrative burden, which I think is the suggestion here, you add cost. Is that not the case?

The Deputy Speaker: That opportunity has expired, hon. members.

If there are no other speakers, I'd invite the hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation to close debate.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As sponsor of Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, I have appreciated the lively and very selective debate by the members of this House. My only wish is that they would have taken the time to read our legislation with attention to detail. Over the last week I've been closely monitoring the commentary about Bill 4. I am proud to see that there has been unanimous support for the core principles of this legislation.

With this in mind, I believe there have been some misperceptions and mischaracterizations of the operation of our proposed legislation. Let me reiterate what Bill 4 really does. It establishes a formal process to facilitate the disclosure of wrongdoing, conduct investigations into wrongdoings, and protect those making disclosures from reprisal. It also applies to the public sector and is one of the broadest in Canada in its application. This legislation will apply to the Alberta public service, agencies, boards, and commissions, academic institutions, schools boards, and health organizations upon proclamation.

Mr. Speaker, I remind the House of these principles because now I would like to take a few minutes to address some of the statements made by members last night and this afternoon and, in doing so, to set the record straight about how the legislation will actually operate.

I'd like to thank my colleague the Minister of Justice for clarifying the difference last night between retroactive and retrospective application of this new legislation. There was a perception that past wrongdoings are outside the scope of the legislation. I would like to provide some more detail around the matter of retroactivity. Mr. Speaker, investigations by the commissioner can address any wrongdoing, including those that happened before the act comes into force. Furthermore, the commissioner can report their findings and refer the matter to the appropriate authority for action. Sections 18 and 19(2) . . . [interjections] Read the act. I feel like I need to educate everyone here. Read the act. Read it. It would be a nice change if the members on the opposite side of the House read the act before they commented. That's the difference that I think I would like to see from this side.

Mrs. Towle: Did you even read it?

Mr. Scott: You know what? I think I'm the only one when I compare what I've listened to from the other side.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. associate minister, through the chair, please.

Hon. members, the hon. associate minister has the floor. Thank you.

Please proceed, sir.

Mr. Scott: Furthermore, the commissioner can report their findings and refer the matter to the appropriate authority for action, section 22. For example, if the commissioner investigates and confirms an allegation of fraud that occurred in 2011, they can report their findings publicly, make recommendations, and refer the matter for criminal prosecution, section 22.

An Hon. Member: We're looking.

Mr. Scott: Yeah, open it up.

Of course, offences that are created by this act – for instance, a reprisal or obstructing a commissioner's investigation – cannot be applied retroactively because they were not against the law at the time they occurred. [interjections] You should have been listening instead of talking, and then you would've heard the answer to your question.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please. The associate minister has the floor.

Mr. Scott: It would be like prosecuting someone for talking on a cellphone while driving before this government brought in distracted driving legislation.

Last night some members also raised concerns with the definition of wrongdoing. There was some suggestion that the definition is not broad enough. Mr. Speaker, the kinds of wrongdoings reportable under the act are consistent with comparable legislation in other Canadian jurisdictions. A wrongdoing includes violations of provincial or federal law, actions or omissions that create a danger to public health or safety, gross mismanagement of public funds, and counselling any person to do any of the above, section 3(1).

We've also heard members of this Assembly say that individuals should be protected from intimidation and bullying and that the protection against reprisals that this legislation guarantees doesn't go far enough. What this legislation does is guarantee that should a member of the public witness a wrongdoing, they receive protection from reprisal, which will include:

- (a) a dismissal, layoff, suspension, demotion or transfer, discontinuation or elimination of a job, change of job location, reduction in wages, change in hours of work or reprimand; [or]
- (b) any measure . . . that adversely affects the employee's employment or working conditions.

To repeat, Mr. Speaker, "any measure . . . that adversely affects the employee's employment or working conditions." Clearly, this provides far-reaching protection for employees and includes intimidation and bullying. While this wasn't quoted in the FAIR report, it is in the legislation under section 24.

Earlier today the Minister of Culture explained why the act is structured to enable disclosure through an internal process or to the commissioner. Bill 4 is designed to maximize the ability of the employee to make a safe disclosure. We all know that these types of situations can be very difficult and stressful for an employee. Not only does this legislation establish an internal process so that the employee does not have to be subjected to the public spotlight, but it ensures that if the employee does not believe the internal process is safe, they may go to the independent commissioner to disclose the wrongdoing, section 10(1).

There were many liberties taken last night with interpretations of transparency by this government. Some even went so far as to say that public reporting is not transparent enough and that the legislation prevents wrongdoings from being made public. This is simply not true, Mr. Speaker. The legislation contemplates public reporting in two ways. At a minimum the commissioner and all public entities must report at least once annually, and these reports will bring to light descriptions of wrongdoings found and any systemic problems. That's section 32 and section 33. In addition to the annual reporting requirements, the commissioner is enabled to report about any matter whenever they feel it is in the public interest to do so, section 33(3).

Another mischaracterization of the act suggests our legislation creates red tape. This legislation does not create a bureaucratic maze or black hole into which complaints could disappear. In fact, Bill 4 clearly prevents this for the following reasons. First, an employee making a disclosure internally may simultaneously notify the commissioner to ensure appropriate oversight, section 9(2). Second, employees may disclose directly to the commissioner, where appropriate, and this includes when an employee fears reprisal or is reporting about the individuals charged with administering the internal procedures. That's section 10(1).

Allegations have been made that the commissioner, an independent officer of the Legislature, will abuse their discretion when administering this act by granting exemptions. The power to exempt is necessary to allow the commissioner to ensure that the act applies fairly to a wide range of public bodies. For example, where public bodies are so small that it would be impractical for them to comply with the act's full requirements, the commissioner may exempt them from establishing an internal process, and all disclosures would go directly to the commissioner. Furthermore, to ensure that the exemption power cannot be abused, the commissioner must make public any exemption and supporting rationale, section 31(3). The commissioner will be accountable for every exemption they grant.

One of the most perplexing comments about this act is with regard to the commissioner's independence. As I've said repeatedly, the commissioner will be an independent officer of the Legislature and will have full discretion to carry out their responsibilities.

There will be situations where it would be simply inappropriate for the commissioner to investigate. In those circumstances they must have the discretion not to; for example, where a complaint is clearly frivolous or malicious, section 19(1). I believe accountability will be achieved through the establishment of an independent commissioner.

Another mischaracterization of Bill 4 is that there would be no way for the courts to review the commissioner's decisions. The courts in Alberta have the ability to judicially review any exercise of discretion by any officer of the Legislature. Let's be clear. The decision by the commissioner is subject to judicial review.

There were two other questions that arose last night about the commissioner. The first was how disclosures about the commissioner would be handled. Disclosures about the commissioner are made to the Auditor General. In these circumstances the Auditor General assumes the powers and responsibilities of the commissioner, section 12. Second, the act clearly states that the commissioner will be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Legislative Assembly – I'm looking forward to that discussion with all parties – and that's found in section 38.

As I said before, extensive research was undertaken to ensure this bill reflects the best practices nationally and internationally. Some members have suggested our legislation doesn't have any commonalities with the best practices from the Australian legislation. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the commonalities of Bill 4 and the Australian legislation include but are not limited to broad application of the public sector, establishment of an independent commissioner or similar body to oversee the operation of the act and conduct investigations where appropriate, similar reporting requirements for both annual reports and investigation reports, and allowance for disclosures to be made anonymously.

This sets the record straight on the multiple mischaracterizations of Bill 4. Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:10 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Allen	Fawcett	McIver
Bhardwaj	Fraser	Olesen

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 2 Responsible Energy Development Act

The Chair: Amendment A1 is on the floor. The hon. Member for Airdrie to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Just as an observation to the House, there's a very bad snowstorm outside right now. My understanding is that Edmonton public transit is going to be shutting down or already has shut down. We do have a lot of staff in the Leg. and in our caucus offices and so forth, and there are some amongst them, I'm sure, that do use public transit. I'm not sure about those folks on the other side. But it would be something to consider that after we're done here, in half an hour anyway, with the city essentially shutting down with regard to this storm, we might want to think about doing the same so that we can keep everybody safe and get home safely tonight. I would just like to put that on the record as something to think about. Hopefully, in half an hour we can adjourn for the day. We've been working till midnight virtually every day we've been here, which is fine, but it's just something to think about for the safety of folks. If something were to happen, it would be a real tragedy.

The Chair: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. On amendment A1.

Mr. Hale: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment A1 is something I will be supporting. I just have a couple of questions for the hon. Energy minister about it. When we talk about changing it from a regulatory review to a regulatory appeal . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, if I may, just a moment. Based on the discussions last time the committee met, amendment A1 was broken into A1A, A1B, A1C, A1D, and so on. For the record the decision was made that we would deal with these as A, B, C, so we would be dealing with A1A at this point.

Please proceed. Thank you.

Mr. Hale: Thank you. I would just like some clarification on changing the word from "reviews" to "appeals" and if that has any bearing on the process within the act. It seems to me that they're just changing the word in the act. It doesn't really explain what the change will mean. Is there a difference, I guess, between an appeal process here or a review process? I was just hoping that maybe the Energy minister could elaborate on that.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the member's question, and I also appreciate the approach he's taken to working through this, very much so. I look forward to working with him through the various amendments that we've got on the floor in the important outcome that we're seeking together for Albertans.

Really, this is a change of the name of the process from a regulatory review to an appeal. It has no substantive impact, but it does help communicate to people that this is indeed an appeal process and that it's an internal appeal process at this stage. It makes it very clear that there is this appeal mechanism in addition, of course, to the appeal to the courts, which is also another part of the bill as well, as is the case in other existing legislation.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm just looking at amendment A1 and the change of the terminology from a review to an appeal under division 3, part 2 of the act. One of the main issues that we had with the bill was the right to a full and independent appeal process that was originally in the Energy Resources Conservation Act. I'll just quote from it briefly. In that section it had a provision that if it appears to the Board that its decision . . . may directly and adversely affect the rights of a person, the Board shall give the person

And that, of course, is mandatory language.

- (a) notice of the application,
- (b) a reasonable opportunity of learning the [surrounding] facts . . .

So it's also slightly a disclosure requirement. It also gave them

- (c) a reasonable opportunity to furnish evidence relevant to the application or in contradiction or explanation of the facts or allegations in the application.

My understanding is that the opportunity is probably dependent on the facts situation, whether or not that type of evidence would be provided by written appeal or orally.

It also provided what in our judicial system is very important, and that's a right to cross-examine – that was under 26(2)(d) – anyone who presented the application and who presented the facts. Why cross-examination is important – and this has been stated by judges across our country – is that it's one of the only opportunities to really get to the truth of the matter, where you have a free flow, an uninterrupted flow of a direct question and a direct answer back. To my understanding, such a right of cross-examination currently isn't under the proposed Bill 2.

5:30

And then under (e), "an adequate opportunity of making representations by way of argument to the Board or its examiners." Representation I think would be defined as oral representation as well. I get that, you know, the change has been made from "review" to "appeal," but my question is whether or not the meaning of "appeal" now actually includes all these normal rights that are associated with an appeal. You can name something under a statute, call it something, but if the underlying rights associated with that word aren't there, then it's rendered meaningless. So I guess my question is whether or not the changing of the words in this amendment A1A to "regulatory appeal" furnishes the landowner that's been adversely affected by an application with those rights that existed previously under the Energy Resources Conservation Act; namely, the opportunity to learn the facts, the opportunity to provide evidence, and the opportunity to cross-examine anyone who has put those facts within that notice of application. Without those rights a mere word is meaningless.

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Chair, I believe what we're doing here is going through on a clause-by-clause basis. Is that correct? So perhaps that question could be addressed more appropriately with the part of the legislation that addresses that and not imputed into this clause.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm hoping to be able to meet with some members of CAPP and SEPAC next week. We're lining up a meeting for early in the week to be able to go through some of the amendments that the minister has brought forward as well as the amendments that we're bringing forward. I know we're going to be getting through this over the course of the next half-hour or so, so I'm just wondering if the minister can help me answer a couple of questions.

We know that we're trying to balance the interests and rights of a number of different parties here: environmental groups and landowner groups as well as the energy companies. Now, I'm curious. From the minister's perspective when he made the decision to put "review" in there in the first place, who was it that he was consulting with to get that language? Then when he made the decision to switch to the word "appeal," on whose consultation and what advice did you get to make that change?

The reason I'm asking that is because when I meet with these energy industry companies next week and they're asking me the question about this change from "review" to "appeal" and the kind of impact that it might have on how this legislation is interpreted, I want to be able to have an answer for them about where the consultation began, why "review" was chosen, why it's now switched to "appeal," what impact that would have. Is this in response to something that the energy companies have brought forward to you as a concern? Is it something that the environmental groups have brought forward as a concern, or is it something that the landowners have brought forward as a concern? If you could address each of those three different groups so that I can have some satisfactory responses if we do indeed make this change so that I can understand the difference in the terminology.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister to respond.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the question. It was clear in the early drafting. The consultation was done with all of the groups that the hon. leader has questioned about with respect to leading up to preparing the first version. You know, what we saw out there in various communities over the past 10 days or so since I first introduced the legislation was that there seemed to be a lack of recognition that there actually was an appeal process that was consistent with what people had seen historically. In some of the predecessor legislation like the ERCB the term was actually "appeal" as opposed to "review."

We started out with "review." That was something that was familiar to people in administrative law, but, in fact, what became evident was that it would probably be helpful to revert back to the term "appeal" in order to ensure that there's greater clarity. We're just trying to seek greater clarity here. So I hope that answers the hon. leader's question.

The Chair: Are there others on amendment A1A?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1A carried]

The Chair: We'll move on to a discussion on A1B.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you. Under this one the heading to part 2 is amended by striking out "Regulatory Reviews" and substituting "Regulatory Appeals." First, some clarification on this. When you're saying "regulatory appeal," does that mean that it'll be an outside appeal source through the commissioner that will be listening to the appeals? I guess I can't call them reviews anymore. Or does it go through the board of directors? Do they just have a look at the application and then make their decision? I'm just trying to clarify if every one of these appeals goes to that commissioner. Or does that board of directors make that decision without going to the commissioner?

The Chair: Hon. member, we go back and forth here, so if you're asking that question to the minister, I'll invite the minister to respond.

Mr. Hale: Sure.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In fact, what I would say is exactly what I said in the previous comments in the exchanges that we had. This is simply substituting the word "appeals" for the word "reviews," and that's consistent throughout the whole piece. We'll see this several times in the course of this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just in the interest of time and easing things through, I guess I'm just wondering, because I notice that when we get to a later amendment in M, you do sort of an omnibus section change to change this wording. I think that's maybe why we're getting a little bit hung up on why these ones are separated. We're just trying to figure out why you wouldn't have included these kinds of changes under section M or N when you seem to be making kind of similar changes there. We just want to make sure that we are not missing any important nuance about why these are itemized separately before we get to some of the other more substantive amendments. If you could just clarify that, I'd be grateful.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much. Yes, in fact, Mr. Chair, these are simply the same amendments, the same changes for the same reasons and with no greater import other than they're headings as opposed to substantive parts of the other pieces of the legislation.

The Chair: Any further questions or comments on this amendment A1B?

I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1B carried]

The Chair: We'll move to A1C. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In this one section 31 is amended by adding “public” before “notice.” In the bill it says that “the Regulator shall on receiving an application ensure that notice of the application is provided in accordance with the rules.” So my question to the hon. Energy minister is: what sort of public notice? Will it be a mail-out? Will there be public meetings? How will these people being affected, be it urban or rural, receive this public notice? Will it go out to the surrounding area, the province of Alberta? We need some clarification, I guess, on how public the public notice is, how the public is going to receive that notice.

“In accordance with the rules”: well, in the rules it says that the regulator is going to make the rules or the cabinet will make the rules. Is this something that can be predetermined now, or is it something that’s going to have to wait until the regulator is formed, the board of directors is formed, and then they’ll decide what sort of public notice it is going to be?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Chair, thank you. As the hon. member would know, today there are certain normal practices by regulators in terms of how they give notification to adversely and directly affected parties. There are other aspects of this legislation which make it clear and which actually up the bar in terms of the requirement on the regulator not only to notify people but also to allow people to self-identify, saying: you know, I think I’m directly and adversely affected here over and above whoever you, the regulator, think is affected. That’s all dealt with later in the legislation.

In this case what we also wanted to do was that over and above the process, that we can address later in the legislation, we wanted to ensure that there wouldn’t be just notice but that it was, in fact, public notice. There are many practices that evolve over the years that regulators use for that kind of notice. One would assume that there would be, certainly, a website presence in terms of awareness. That is not necessarily done for all applications today. It’s one step of disclosure and awareness that will be helpful, we believe, to landowners to help ensure that people know if there’s something coming that might affect them, even though they haven’t been notified for whatever reason by the regulator, that the regulator thinks they’re directly and adversely affected. It’s a step up in terms of trying to ensure that there is one more opportunity to make people aware of the application coming before the board.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that definition, but I’m probably going to need a little more help on it. One of my criticisms of the act is that there appears to be – actually, not appears to be. There is no longer any public interest provision. Public interest is no longer part of the act and the like. So because there is no public interest, I’m very interested in what “public notice” is. You also know that “directly and adversely affected,” despite what people may think, really limits the definition of who these regulatory bodies or this new Responsible Energy Development Act needs to communicate with.

Given that the scope of the act has been cut down on public interest, I’m asking, really: what were the requirements before for a public notice? Was it by newspaper? Was it by publication in a newspaper? Was it the like? That, to me, is what public notice would be, something in the newspaper or some other communication tool. What was it then, and what is it now in this current act? I think that if you can tell me that, that would be great.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Interesting question, actually. What we’re witnessing here is an evolution of an understanding of what the term “public interest” really is. In fact, I would challenge the hon. member to define public interest. I think we all know what it is conceptually, but it’s exceedingly difficult to actually define it in a way that has meaning and that gives strength to the public interest that one might be trying to accomplish. It was a term that was used quite widely, perhaps, when the ERCB legislation was put in place, and it really over time has effectively lost its meaning. So we need to be much more specific. This act is seeking to be much more specific. However, this particular amendment is not speaking to public interest at this time. We’ll get to that in later parts of the bill.

What this speaks to is simply ensuring, Mr. Chair, that the regulator must – I repeat must – provide public notice. Public notice reflects current best practices. The Energy Resources Conservation Board today and the environmental regulators, that we’re bringing together in the new regulator, probably pursue slightly different ways to ensure that there’s public notice. There are best practices that regulators follow, and we would be looking to see that they actually follow those best practices. It could involve website – you know, we’re talking here about thousands of applications in a year. There are different grades of sort of impact that different applications might involve.

The goal is to ensure that we get everybody who has an interest into the discussion at the front end of the process, and that’s why you have a public process. There are people who are identified at the front end as adversely and directly affected. Then there are people who self-identify and say: “Hey, what about me over here? I think I’m adversely affected. Here’s why, and here’s the impact.” If you get them all into the discussion at the front end, you get a much better outcome in the regulations process than you do if you end up with a subset of those people in the discussion at the front end, and then somebody says: “Hey, wait a minute. What about me?” after they’ve already gone through the process of review and have tried to make a decision in good faith.

This is an attempt to ensure that we have as wide a base, as wide an engagement as possible of the people who should be there at the front end.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m hoping that the minister can just clarify a little further. I apologize for not knowing this in detail. Public notice. I’m just wondering if there’s any kind of parameter around what constitutes this, if there’s a clear or identifiable amount of public notice that must be given or if it’s a one-off: they throw up a poster on a billboard, and that’s taken care of, and they can cross it off the list. Are there any stipulations or requirements defined either in the act or that are meant to be read in this that will just provide clarity? How does an application – how can they check that off, or how do they ensure that they’ve given public notice? Please.

Mr. Hughes: That’s a fair question. For those of us who don’t do this every day, you know, we want to make sure that the intent of the legislation is appropriately followed through on. I would say that the intent here is, clearly, appropriate public notice. Appropriate public notice is to get the job done to ensure that people who maybe believe they would be adversely or directly affected, if they haven’t been notified, would have as good a chance as possible of receiving public awareness through a public notice of some form. Clearly, common sense tells you that that's not a poster on the wall, that it's not through means that don't achieve the objective of ensuring that it is a genuine public notice.

It could be the website. It could be other means as well. It depends upon the size of the application as well. This could be quite different for an oil sands plant in northeastern Alberta as opposed to a gas well on a quarter section in southeastern Alberta somewhere, where there's nobody living within five miles. You know, it could be quite different.

What will evolve and what has evolved over time is a practice of best practices and rules of conduct by the board, historically by the ERCB, and by the environmental regulators as well. So they would build on that history and those steps to make sure that the objective of public notice was achieved appropriately.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm not going to ask for clarification on, necessarily, what public means, but there are a few things that I would just like to further massage if we could. When you say the rules, it says that "the Regulator shall on receiving an application ensure that [public] notice of the application is provided in accordance with the rules." The question I would have is: given that you would be creating one regulator and that each of those regulators, that were previously separate, would all have different rules as to what their standards were – I'll give you an example. My husband and I were turkey farmers, and we were an intensive livestock, 150,000 birds, and the rules were different. We had one set of rules with the ERCB, and then we had a different set of rules with the NRCB, and then we had a different set of rules with the county, and a different set of rules with, you know, the adjacent farmers.

When you're bringing together multiple organizations, which we all agree is a good thing, to offer one-stop shopping – a fabulous idea – who is going to decide what those rules are? I see that the regulator is going to apply them, but who is actually going to decide what those rules are? And in that decision of what those rules are, who is going to oversee that those rules going out to the landowner are appropriate?

Alternatively to that, if you're going to have a discussion on what the requirements or the rules are going to be in terms of public notice – I know in our case with the turkey farm, we had to notify everybody around us. Then we had to notify through the NRCB everybody within a certain distance of us, and then we had to through the county do a public notification in the paper and also attend a little hearing thing.

Who, then, will decide that all of those rules that you're creating for the public notice are appropriate? Who, then, will be going to the stakeholders to have a discussion with them on whether those rules actually hinder the process or make the process go further, which is ultimately our goal here?

Alternatively to that, you mentioned that you're not really sure who defines public interest. I can appreciate that because bringing multiple regulators together has got to be a little bit difficult. If you're not sure who defines the public interest and the public notice goes out through this section 31, notice of application, then who would define the rules that affect the interest of the public that it could affect? If we're not sure who defines public interest, then I think we need to ensure that we're making this actually applicable and ensure that public notice actually reflects public interest.

Otherwise, you know, my father-in-law owns a dairy farm, and he has to buy acreages all around him because they might oppose something 20 years from now. It's business planning, right? That same philosophy could be applied to industry. What we don't want is industry struggling and landowners frustrated. We're trying to appease that. So if we're not defining public interest at this point, then how can we make sure that the rules apply to public notice if we don't know who the public is that it's applying to?

Alternatively to that, does anyone get to set it? Ultimately, if the rules are set – we're not sure yet by whom – is it the ultimate distribution of those rules, that are supposed to cover the public interest for the public notice, by cabinet that has a say in coming in and overriding when those regulators get together? And they say: okay; this is what we believe is in the best public interest and what we're trying to achieve. I know it's a lot. Sorry.

Mr. Hughes: That's okay. I appreciate it. I'm just glad to know who I can call when I need a turkey or 10 just before Christmas.

Mr. Chair, let me try and take a crack at this. I didn't say that we don't know who is defining the public interest. At least, I didn't intend to convey that. The concept of public interest is a concept that is ill defined just by practice over the last few years. What we're trying to do is move away from an ill-defined, mushy, well-intended concept to something that's quite specific every time we're drafting legislation. That's the reference to public interest.

With respect to who sets the rules for what "public" is in terms of public notice, first of all, the new regulator would take a look at past practices of all of the previous regulatory aspects of this. So the ERCB, the environmental regulators that are being pulled together into this one regulator would look at those. It would be my expectation as the minister that they would go to the highest standard of public notice. If that isn't adequate in some way or if people feel that that is not adequate in terms of public notice, then people have an opportunity to engage with the Minister of ESRD and the Minister of Energy through the policy management office, where we will be setting policy and receiving input on policy issues in general rather than focusing on one application by one applicant.

You know, it might be a little bit like your experience with the NRCB, but every regulator is different – right? – so there's going to be a different experience, I suspect. What we've got to do in bringing together these entities is that they will be charged, first and foremost – the new board and the CEO and the responsible people in the Alberta energy regulator – with ensuring that they have first-class public notice processes. If it isn't adequate, I know I'll hear about it, and so will you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just on this amendment, the inclusion of "public" prior to "notice." I really have no concern with that. I guess the one concern is with the rules. It says: "The Regulator shall on receiving an application ensure" that, if this amendment goes forward, the "public notice of the application is provided in accordance with the rules." Given that notice is so important to landowners if there's an application for a project that's going on their land, it's again going back to this principle that if there's something that's material, something that's important, we should put it directly into the act rather than leaving it to either regulation or, in this case, you know, in accordance with rules. I'm assuming that the rules are the equivalent of a regulation, that the rules would have the force and effect of a regulation.

I guess when looking at this, if you're a landowner and you see this piece of legislation passed and you're worried about notice and you've seen notice provisions in previous legislation, there may be some cause for concern that the rules, once they're drafted, may not afford that landowner sufficient protection. I guess the way these rules are drafted is that the regulator will be the one that first initiates the drafting of the rules. My understanding is that – I'm guessing – the rules that will initially be drafted will be the same rules that were in force under the previous act, the ERCA. That would probably be the foundational starting point for the rules in this act, but I guess as a landowner you're concerned. You're thinking with the new rules that the regulator is going to put in: is that going to afford you sufficient protection, or are you not going to get the appropriate notice that you would normally receive to defend yourself in a full and open hearing?

I guess the other concern that I do have is that not only can the regulator draft rules that respect this amendment in section 31, but the cabinet minister, in my understanding, can amend any rules under this legislation. Section 60 sets out the areas that the Lieutenant Governor in Council . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, it's 6 o'clock. The committee stands recessed until 7:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 7, 2012

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

The Chair: Hon. members, we will call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 2 Responsible Energy Development Act

The Chair: When we recessed, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was speaking. Please proceed, hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, on amendment A1C.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Previous to the break we were talking about section 31 in the proposed amendment, to put the word “public” in front of “notice of the application.” Some of the issues that are outlined in that is the fact that the section reads: The regulator shall on receiving an application ensure that, if the word is inserted, “public” notice of the application is provided in accordance with the rules.

Later on in the act it’s section 60 that sets out which regulations the Lieutenant Governor in Council will make. Then section 61 provides that the regulator may make rules, and it delineates roughly 20 different grounds upon which the regulator can make rules. It’s section 61(a) that says that the regulator may make rules “respecting the contents of notices of application” and a bunch of other different issues.

I guess the concern that we would have is that if the rules are going to provide for substantive notice to a landowner on a proposed project, would it not be better to specifically outline what notice has to be provided right in section 31? There are obviously the traditional principles of natural justice that should be incorporated or codified into section 31 so that landowners clearly know what rules will be put forward by the regulator, or at least there should be some parameters so that it’s not an all-encompassing power that the regulator has under section 61 and so that the rules that are created are held accountable here in the Legislature rather than giving an unfettered power to the regulator.

Of course, second to that is that the minister has power under this act to essentially override any single rule that’s created by the regulator. That relates to this amendment as it deals with notice that should be provided under the rules. It’s just my submission that the rules themselves should delineate exactly how notice will be provided. On such an important issue we shouldn’t leave that to a regulator. We shouldn’t leave that to a cabinet minister in the future. We should put it right into the piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Did you care to respond, hon. minister?

Mr. Hughes: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the comments of the member opposite. I think the intent of his comments is completely consistent with the intent of the legislation in other parts, which is to specifically say that people who are directly and adversely affected must be given notice, and then you have the public notice over and above that as, let’s call it, additional insurance to ensure that there’s a full and complete engagement at the front end of the regulatory process. But I appreciate the sensitivity.

I think it’s difficult, perhaps unwise, to put into legislation today all means of communication. After all, five, 10 years ago who communicated by tweeting? The technology evolves, and the use of it and how it’s taken up by people in society changes and evolves over time. What we want to do, though, is to have the intent reflected here fully. It’s got to be appropriate to achieve the objective of ensuring that all directly and adversely affected parties, or those who believe they are directly and adversely affected, have the opportunity to engage at the front end of the regulatory process.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. There was one part of the question that I asked you before that I didn’t get an answer to, so I’d just like to pose the question to you again really quickly. When you talked about the rules and the public notice going back to notice of application, I had asked how we’re going to verify that and who’s going to determine those rules, and you had answered very well that we would all be working together and those regulators would be working together. The question I had, though, is: would there be stakeholder contact and stakeholder consultation as to what rules would be in place and what would constitute public notice? Would they be consulted as we go through this process?

Mr. Hughes: In short the answer is yes, in fact, because what we’re creating is a mechanism for the engagement of a wide range of stakeholders at the policy level, the policy level being the Department of Energy, the Department of Environment and SRD. There’s a policy management office. It’s a new organization that we’re creating, and their role is to engage with stakeholders, make sure that any evolution in policy – let’s call it that – takes place in an open process. I expect there to be quite a bit of activity around the policy management office. I expect not-for-profit organizations and interested parties and others to be quite engaged around this on specific issues until we get to a comfort level with how the new regulator is functioning. But the first opportunity will be for the regulator to get it right right off the bat and go to best practices right off the bat, and then it would be unlikely to have a lot of people coming and speaking to the policy management office about public engagement policy.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you very much because that actually does answer most of my question. I just have one quick other clarification on the policy management office. I’m just curious. Will there be a tender? Clearly, we don’t want every single person coming to you. That’s overly burdensome on what we’re trying to achieve. Will the policy management office do a call-out or have terms of reference that would say: “Okay. These are what we’re looking for. These are the kinds of stakeholders we’re looking for.” Those people could then have an application process of some sort and would be notified that they could come on certain days. There might even be public notice to those groups that we’re looking for input on X, Y, and Z. Is that process in place, or is that going to come afterwards once we pass the legislation?

Mr. Hughes: Yeah. The process itself would come after we’ve got through the legislation process and this has been passed. Then we’d start to build the machinery of the operation to make sure that we have a wholesome engagement with stakeholders.

The Chair: Any other comments on amendment A1C? I recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Hearing the other members that I had an opportunity to listen to, I have a lot of concerns with the narrowness or the vagueness of the whole issue of public notice. This is an opportunity, I think, to maybe make this – I don't want to use the word "broad" – more definitive.

Let me give you an example. There are numerous cases now in Alberta where the public was not notified, and I'll give you a prime example. Section 34(1), 35, and 36 of the Electric Utilities Act would be one example where the public is supposed to be notified. You go back to the old EUB. There were instances when the public was supposed to be notified, and they weren't notified. There are court cases that have resulted from the fact that notification wasn't given.

I'm going to read something that I'll table tomorrow, but this is pertinent to this whole issue that we're dealing with. It comes from my riding, the James River area, and it's the public meeting that was scheduled for November 14. What the notice says – and I'll actually pass one to the hon. minister here if I could. It says:

Unfortunately Alberta Surface Rights Group is going to cancel the public meeting at the James River Hall, scheduled for Nov. 14/12.

We were really looking forward to this meeting as we planned to use a totally new format. Instead of bringing in a guest speaker . . . on a specific topic, we were going to run this meeting as an information [session] . . . an information meeting for our group, to find out what the concerns were within the area. It was going to be an open mike, where people could share their concerns, their problems, maybe their successes!

We knew the area had been subject to a major pipeline spill and a concentrated shale play.

Hopefully we will be able to hold this meeting at a later date.

The reason we had to cancel was the recent introduction of "the Responsible Energy Development Act" (Bill 2) in the Alberta Legislature, late last week.

Quite frankly it caught us by surprise! This is really bad legislation . . . really bad. This legislation takes away most of the tools in your negotiating tool box. It almost completely destroys your right to an independent and fair hearing on whatever you might find unacceptable. The inclusion of water for energy development under the regulator puts all of our water at risk. Perhaps the very worst thing is it denies you due process of the law . . . it takes away your right to the rule of law . . . fundamental to any democracy!

The spin the government is trying to put on this one surpasses all the lies they told us before about the land theft bills (19, 24, 36, 50). Several lawyers have contacted us telling us just how bad this one is!

We feel this is the "hill to die on"? If the Redford government succeeds with this evil legislation . . . we truly don't believe there is much point in having a landowners rights group . . . because quite simply . . . we won't have any rights!

We need to fight this bill with all our might and all our resources.

Please keep your eye out for future public meetings we will be holding. Please support your opposition MLAs! If you have a PC MLA please send him/her a message that you expect them to stand up for your rights and freedoms . . . and not the oil companies profits!

Truly if there was ever a time to stand up and do your part . . . It might be your last chance.

You don't like that, and I understand that.

Some Hon. Members: Who wrote that?

Mr. Anglin: I'll find the author. I pretty much know who the author is. But you've got the group name. It's the Alberta Surface Rights Group. [interjections]

But let's talk about it.

An Hon. Member: Did Joe Anglin write that?

Mr. Anglin: No, Joe Anglin did not write that. Joe Anglin just read it into the record, ladies and gentlemen. [interjections] So let's take a look at how it affects this amendment.

The Chair: Please. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has the floor.

Mr. Anglin: It's interesting. I know you don't like it, but the reality is that it is a concern with the public. I'll give you an example about that concern. Granted, the letter I read would be considered by many in this room objectionable. I understand that. But what you're not understanding is where it came from. That's the point I'm trying to bring to you.

I'm going to give you an example from right here in the House. The hon. member the other day read during question period a statement. I have to get the right . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, keep your comments to the particular amendment. I would really appreciate that.

Mr. Anglin: I am. I'm talking about the public interest.

The Chair: Please try.

Mr. Anglin: Okay. Basically, what I want to say is that the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville – I wanted to make sure I've got the right riding – read a question that is pertinent to this whole issue of public interest. This is what concerns these people. She was reading section 26(2) of the ERCB. It says: "It goes on to quote section 26(2) of the existing Energy Resources Conservation Act, which says . . ." Then she read the act. Then she goes on to say: "We must look at the act and how it relates to the other sections. In this case the author has looked at section 26(2), which I read, and not looked at section 26(1)." Then she goes on to read 26(1).

Now, the people who drafted that letter picked up, very simply, that section 26(2) makes a comment right at the very beginning. You could look it up. It says, "Notwithstanding subsection (1)." Now, these people understand the law. The reason they understand the law is that they go to these board hearings. They have input even in the board process. What they're having a difficult time doing is following this government's thought processes as it creates this new bill, as it creates this new regulatory body.

I want to make a comment in that regard. The people who do protect the public interest are good people for the most part. The lawyer that was mentioned in that question period was a lawyer by the name of Keith Wilson. He is one of the leading experts on landowner rights. If you don't like it when you run up against a capricious government decision, you will hire somebody like Keith Wilson. But he's not alone. There's another person by the name of Fitch, other persons by the name of Carter, Niven, Secord, Bur, Henry Loots, Johanna Price, Luke Kurata, and Scott Stenbeck. These are the lawyers that practise law in a very, very small field in this province, and they are the experts in landowner rights. They are the experts in the public interest when it comes to oil and gas development. Those are the lawyers that represent the public interest. Now, you may know this, but most law firms in this province are in a conflict of interest with oil and gas because that's where they make most of their money. That pool of lawyers that represent landowners is a very small pool, and two of the names I read for you came from out of this province. It is a small pool of law that is practised.

I will tell you – you can shake your head – that I have actually participated in a number of these board processes, and there are always the same lawyers there, always arguing 26(2), always arguing the definition of the public interest, always arguing notice. That's what we're talking about here with this amendment. You can shake your head, but the people on the outside are shaking their heads, and if you don't want to listen, then this is going nowhere.

I want to point out – you can mock what was just read, and I will table it tomorrow – that these people are talking about: this is where they want to plant the flag. This is the hill they want to die on. This is where they plan on standing up and fighting. It will not serve the oil and gas industry. It will not serve our development. This is important. It will create chaos if you don't make these people somehow believe that what you're trying to do is going to work for both sides. Here we are right here, dealing with this issue of public interest, which is a very broad term in law, and rightfully so in many ways, but it can be narrowed in scope in the parameters of: how are we going to give public notice, and what exactly is public notice? There's a difference between the public and the individuals that are adversely and directly affected, and this one right now is all encompassing. It just says "public."

What people are worried about is when they are notified in the newspaper in the typical advertisement. By the way, in most of your local newspapers – pick any one out as an example – there are probably five or six notices today, all looking pretty much the same unless you look at that map. You may or may not have a chance to read it because you're that typical person that doesn't pick up your weekly newspaper until four or five days later, or you may not even see that week's newspaper. You get that public notice out there, so-called in the public interest, but the people who need to be notified aren't exactly given the proper notice. That's what creates the problem.

I said this once before in this Assembly, and I'll say it again. It's never been the money in settling the issues with oil and gas development. It's not. It's always been about respect, and it's always been about the fact that either they don't get notice, or even when they get notice, they don't get standing. That is all about the public interest.

I understand what you're trying to do, but I don't see the meat in the matter here. I don't see where the public is protected by this idea of: okay, we're just going to put out a public notice. As an example – and it may have been given today – somebody wakes up, and there's equipment 75 feet from their home working, and they never had any idea. They just find out that it's actually on somebody else's property over the fence, and they weren't told. Again, that was a failure not just of public notice, but that was a failure of the individual who was adversely and directly affected, and it was a failure of the system. So it starts a problem right there.

Let's be honest: most reputable oil and gas developers don't run into this problem. They generally go above board. They raise the bar, and they do amazing things. In my riding we have an organization called SPOG – it's Sundre Petroleum Operators Group – and they function really well working with the industry. [interjection] You can mock me, but I've got one of your members agreeing. They're a good group. They set a bar. They work with industry, and they feel frustrated right now by this bill. They're the ones that actually sent me a copy of that letter. They said: did you see this?

Here we have a group that wants to work. Here we have a group that understands what the public interest is in their jurisdiction or their geography of where they operate. They do an outstanding job, and they feel slighted by what's going on here. What I'm trying to tell the hon. minister, as I'm looking at your amendments, as I look at each one of these amendments – I've read the bill – is that I'm looking for the amendments to actually do something. What I'm seeing here is just a little play on words. I'm not saying that you're intending to do that, but what it's not doing is putting some teeth into the various sections.

On the issue of notification what I would prefer to see in the legislation is that mandatory: they will be notified. And not just that, but it has to go to those who are adversely or directly affected. When we leave it up to the rules, the rules have sometimes failed us. The rules sometimes change.

We are right now dealing with an issue of emergency procedures. You may know this. It's in your department. There's a draft memorandum going around, and it has to do with sour gas. That issue dealing with notice is going to be a contentious issue, and we're dealing with a directive. I think it's directive 051, but I may stand corrected. It might be 057. You might have to double-check my number on that; 056 is the notification one.

That's what I think is frustrating people. SPOG is one of these groups. They have channelled that one emergency directive around to their members to take a look at. They are working on that. They're hoping the government will respond. What they're worried about is that the whole issue of public interest and public notification is getting washed, and they're concerned. So as we bring this amendment forward, while we insert a word, we don't give it any great depth or any great meaning. To the hon. minister: I'd like to hear your comments concerning that.

With regard to the letter I just passed you, that I will table tomorrow, in good faith, I just received that tonight. Aside from heckling a little bit, I didn't write it. I know who wrote it, and I know the group, but there are lots of groups like them. What I'm looking for is: how do we answer these groups? That's really important. But saying that lawyers are fearmongering is not really going to help the situation. Working together, coming up with a solution, is something that we can do to calm fears, to give confidence, and to give trust to the public. That's my goal here, working with you, trying to get some amendments and some depth to these amendments.

To the hon. minister: I was hoping you'd comment on my submission.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's hard to know where to start, but let me take two or three pieces. I'm sure I won't address all of those aspects, but I'll do my best to hit the salient ones.

First of all, how do we respond? How should the hon. member, how should members of this House respond to inquiries such as that which he's received? My counsel is to tell them the truth. The truth is, Mr. Chair, that under the existing system, the ERCB system today, notification to directly and adversely affected landowners is not mandatory. Under the new rules that we're creating here, under the new legislation that we're putting in place here under Bill 2, it is mandatory. So we are improving the notification process, not in this one small section that we're debating here but in other parts of the bill.

I appreciate that there's a lot of meat to this bill and that there's a lot of substance to it. The hon. member may not have noticed it in his review through it, but there are aspects here which clearly spell out that the regulator must give notice to people that it has determined are directly and adversely affected. If they get it wrong, people can self-identify and bring it to the attention of the regulator. "Hey, I think I might have been affected. I might be directly and adversely affected here. Here are my views, and here are my concerns." The regulator has to take that into consideration at the front end of the process.

So I think that's an important aspect of this. I would note that what we're talking about here is public notice, not public interest. We can have the debate about the public interest aspect of this in a relevant clause, but that actually doesn't speak to this clause.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Other comments? The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to add to the comments that the hon. minister has made with regard to the hon. member from Rocky Mountain House-Rimbey-Sundre. Sorry, hon. member. We're going to get this right.

With regard to the public notice when we did the consultation for two years with a variety of groups, if you look at the regulatory enhancement review Enhancing Assurance, it lists in there who all the stakeholders were, so I'm not going to talk on that piece.

But what was really important that we heard from the landowners' groups was this. The landowners' groups brought this forward to us, and when you see that we talk about this, making sure that notice must be given, under the current regulator, the ERCB, they choose whether or not notice will be given. What we heard from landowners that they thought would be very, very important is that we would take it back and that notice shall be given. So when you see that in there, that's what the current piece of legislation reads, that notice shall be given. The hon. minister is strengthening that to say that public notice must be given, in hearing some of the discussion that we've heard. I think that really clarifies. Landowners currently may be notified. Now they shall be notified, and I think that's very important because that was one of the fundamental things of many that the landowners gave us and that we put into the legislation.

The other fundamental piece that the landowners gave us – and I had the opportunity to speak in Red Deer a week ago to the Synergy Alberta group. SPOG is one of the members of that group, and I would agree with the hon. member that SPOG is known for the good work and collaboration that they do in the province. They are a good synergy group. When I spoke about the single regulator and the regulatory enhancement project amongst other things of integrated resource management, the question that came from the landowners was: when can we start registering on the registry? So people are really engaged to do this. This was key for the landowners, and one of the first things I brought to industry when we were bringing this forward is: this is what the landowners want.

As the hon. member has mentioned, the majority of the industry companies are very good and honour their agreements, but when a landowner decides not to take a company to a hearing and they come up with agreements, the landowners, on occasions when you've got a company that won't fulfill those agreements, really wanted to make sure that there was a place that it could be enforced. Now under this new regulator that the hon. Minister of Energy is bringing forward, the landowners will have an opportunity to register that if they choose. That's the key part that landowners want.

Some want to be able to register, and others want to make sure that they don't have to register. We've made it very clear. First of all, this has been brought forward by the landowners, and the opportunity to choose to register is certainly something that they have brought forward and certainly something where we listened very closely to what the landowners said would be important to them.

The other piece that the hon. member mentioned that I'll raise – we'll talk about it later on in the evening and in the coming times that we'll have a chance to talk about it, but because it was raised in the discussion, I'd like to address it for a couple of minutes – is with regard to water and water issues and how people will make sure that they can still have an appeal mechanism. When the legislation was drafted, we looked at appeals being more clear so that we would have a regulatory review and that appeals would mean to the courts. We've heard what people have said with regard to that, that it's not entirely clear, so the hon. member has done a very good job in saying that we'll move from an amendment, from a regulatory review, to a regulatory appeal.

The policies and legislation regulations that apply today in the department of ESRD will apply tomorrow with the new regulator. I think what people are thinking of and maybe forgetting about is the fact that they're thinking that this new regulator is ERCB enhanced. Well, it's not. It's a new regulator made up of Environment and SRD, ERCB, all coming together and holistically, in a one-window approach, having an application come before them for oil, gas, oil sands, or coal and that they will all look at it together instead of how we currently do it, in three different formats and not holistically.

So people have to come to grips with what this new regulator is. It's not just the ERCB taking over water issues. What it is is a new regulator regulating under all of the regulation, policies, legislation that we have.

The important piece of this is that government will make policy. That is the job of government, to work with Albertans and to create policy. The policy will then be given to the regulator to implement. So whether it's under the Water Act, the Public Lands Act, or 10 of the acts of Energy, the regulator will be implementing under those.

If, indeed, the regulator, the government, or Albertans identify a policy gap, that will then come to the policy management office. The policy management office will then have the opportunity as crossministries to, once again, holistically look at the policy gap, have the opportunity as Energy and ESRD and any other ministry that it may affect to come together, look at that policy, consult with Albertans on that, and then be able to give that policy to the regulator to implement.

We will not see the cases that have happened before where the regulator under the ERCB once in a while – and people were busy – created directives which were in fact policy, which was the role of government. This will be the role of government, to ensure that we develop the policies, and the new regulator will implement under those policies.

These are the things that we spent two years talking about individually with landowner groups, with all different sectors that we talked to, and then brought back collectively. I think it's very, very important. When we look at the piece about notice, that came directly from landowners. The piece about the registry came directly from landowners. The piece about the policy management office actually was an idea from the environmental groups and landowners with regard to: we don't have the time to have the discussion at every particular well application, but we want a policy management office so that we can talk broadly about policy in a big fashion, whether it be water, land, whatever the policy happens to be, and we don't have to do it at every well application.

We had great input from so many Albertans with regard to this over two years. What's excellent about this and what I think what was very good at the Synergy group was when the landowners stood up and said to me: how soon can we register our agreements? That, to me, said that we've taken what they've said, we've listened to what landowners have said, and they are asking: when can we turn this on so that we can do it?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Other comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. On the amendment. That's right. I missed the beginning of the amendment process, I think, this afternoon. I apologize.

The Chair: We're dealing with this, hon. member, in individual pieces, A, B, C. We've voted on A and B. We're now dealing with C.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. That's right. I've got you.

The Chair: Please proceed.

Mr. Eggen: I'm good. Thank you. I know where I am. I was out shovelling snow, so I apologize for missing the first parts.

An Hon. Member: It's better than shovelling something else.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah, well, that's true.

I appreciate us having some time to go back on this amendment. It's very substantive – well, at least at first impression I thought it was quite substantive, but in fact when we go through it, there's mostly just superficial changes to language. While it took us a while to figure out where it was going, I think we only really found a couple of areas where we wanted to make specific comments on this amendment, so I'll do it in just a couple of different parts.

We all worked to build individual amendments that could be studied separately, you know, to ensure that the substantive issues of this bill could be separated into different amendments. This larger amendment that we see here today doesn't follow that practice. It seems to lump together changes which go across the entirety of the new legislation. It made it a bit difficult. We had to go back to the bill to look through our amendments and then look for correspondence through that. All of this duplication of effort is necessary now by us and by the other opposition members, and really what we see is nothing very substantive.

I guess the section that is before us now here in terms of adding "public" before "notice" is useful, but again we could've maybe seen this change earlier. Part of what I think I see with this amendment sort of coming out – it took me a few hours to kind of figure out what was happening. On first blush it seems to me it's a reflection of this bill not being fully formed before it came to us here in the House. I find that a bit disturbing because it's not a superficial bill by any means. For the level of change in language that I see here – like for section 31, C here, for example – it just gives me this feeling that: has this whole thing, in fact, been tested and formed the way that it should, commensurate with the gravity of the issue?

I guess, as we go through this, I don't want to make a great deal of comments, but I just did want to express that concern. I don't think a lot of people have seen this particular process happen like it did yesterday. Again, that gives my constructive critical eye a sharper focus, which I am continuing to use now as we move through this.

Thanks.

The Chair: Any further comments?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A1C.

[Motion on amendment A1C carried]

The Chair: We'll now move on to D. Any comments? The hon. Member for Little Bow – no. Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think by the end of tonight you'll probably get that figured out.

The Chair: Absolutely.

Mr. Hale: In this amendment here they are adding "believes that the person." So the way it'll read after is:

32. A person who believes that the person may be directly and adversely affected by an application may file a statement of concern with the Regulator in accordance with the rules.

It's just a little confusing with the grammar. A person who believes that the person: to me, that doesn't make sense. Should it maybe be: the regulator who believes that the person? Like, it doesn't sound right: "a person who believes that the person." That's a little bit I have, a little question or not. I'm not sure about the grammar.

Also, throughout this act there's nowhere in there that has a definition which defines "directly or adversely affected." Now, I know that, you know, we're taking the ERCB, the Environment and SRD, and putting everything together, but in this act nothing defines that. So when someone who has an issue with a project – and by all means if I didn't see it in here, please point it out. But we've looked and can't seem to find it.

People will have different views of how they are directly or adversely affected. I think one thing that we want to accomplish with this bill is so that we don't see the same instances in the Northern Gateway where, when people believe that they are to be affected by it, they have thousands and thousands of people applying to the regulator. We agree that we want to streamline this. We want to make it more efficient for the oil companies and the gas companies. So a definition of "adversely affected" may be needed. We can kind of put something definite in there so we don't get a group of individuals that feel that, you know, if they have their heart set on saving some forest somewhere, that may be part of a project where they feel that they're going to be affected. They might not live close to it or they might not have much to do with it, but in their mind they think that they're going to be affected by it.

You know, I've got many neighbours at home that are affected by different things. Their view of how they're affected is different than my view. I've had oil companies come on my land and drill shallow gas wells. A big snow storm blows in one spring, and they couldn't get down their access. I said: "Drive across the field. You know, point A to point B. Go straight. Don't worry about the access." They were actually pretty surprised because the neighbour down the road is going to fine them for every tire track that's off access, and then they come onto my place, and they can drive wherever they want. To me, that didn't affect me. I drive on it; they can drive on it. That doesn't affect me, but it affects my neighbour. So I think there could be some confusion there about who's adversely affected.

Now, I want to talk a little bit more about the rules. It says you can "file a statement of concern with the Regulator" according to the rules. When we go look at the rules, again, a rule means:

... a rule made

- (i) by or on behalf of the Regulator under this Act or by the Regulator under an energy resource enactment.

Okay. Fine. You know, the regulator is going to come up with some new rules. But in the other section below it:

- (ii) by the Lieutenant Governor in Council pursuant to section 68.

If you go to section 68, it says that

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make rules in respect of any matter for which the Regulator may make rules under this act or ... enactment.

The way I read that is that the regulator can make the rules. They can make the rules for how these issues are dealt with, but then the Lieutenant Governor in Council, so the cabinet, can come at any time and change those rules. That doesn't give industry or landowners any sort of specific guidelines, knowing that those rules could be changed at any time. If the rules get changed, the people who believe that they're adversely affected is going to change.

I would like to see somewhere in that, you know, that there's a definite set of rules that cannot be changed on the whim of cabinet at any time. We do have quite a few reservations about this section, so we do have a subamendment and the required number of copies.

The Chair: Okay. Hon. members, this will be a subamendment to D, so this will be referred to as A1D-SA1.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The amendment we're proposing is that section 32 is struck out and the following is substituted.

Notification and hearings

32(1) If it appears to the Regulator that its decision on an application may directly and adversely affect the rights of a person, the Regulator shall give the person

- (a) notice of the application,
  - (b) a reasonable opportunity of learning the facts bearing on the application and presented to the Regulator by the applicant and other parties to the application,
  - (c) a reasonable opportunity, after filing a statement of concern in accordance with the rules, to furnish evidence relevant to the application or in contradiction or explanation of the facts or allegations in the application,
  - (d) if the person will not have a fair opportunity to contradict or explain the facts or allegations in the application without cross-examination of the person presenting the application, an opportunity of cross-examination in the presence of the Regulator, and
  - (e) an adequate opportunity of making representations by way of argument to the Regulator.
- (2) When by subsection (1) a person is entitled to make representations to the Regulator, the Regulator is not by subsection (1) required to afford an opportunity to the person
- (a) to make oral representations, or
  - (b) to be represented by counsel,

if the Regulator affords the person an opportunity to make representations adequately in writing, unless the statutory provision authorizing the Regulator's decision requires that a hearing be held.

Section 33(1) is amended by adding "section 32 or" before "section 34."

What this would accomplish for us and, hopefully, you is that this actually specifies what these people are going to receive, the people that are going to be affected. They will get a notice of application. We talked about public notice. This says that they will get a notice of application. They will have an opportunity to learn the facts. This will ensure that for the people that are being affected, all their questions will be answered from the start. That's what this bill is trying to accomplish: have everything run smoothly, have the energy companies not have any backlash when they get halfway started in a project.

I mentioned this the other day. If those energy companies know the questions that they have to answer before they start and if the landowners that are being affected have that opportunity to approach the regulator before anything starts, everything can be solved. This will not slow down the process. I think this will actually speed up the process because then during the middle of the process you're not going to have any issues. Everybody can start on the same page when these projects are put forward by the regulator.

I'm hoping that you guys will look at this. I know the hon. Energy minister has received a copy before. We feel that this would answer some substantial questions to landowners plus provide the energy companies some satisfaction in knowing that they're working with the landowners, that they're going to be able to solve the problems before they start and just get to work.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy to respond.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I must say that I think I see a consistent pattern here of trying to create work for lawyers. I'm not in the business of trying to create work for lawyers of any kind, and I'm not about to promote them or do anything of the sort in this House.

I do appreciate the intent of the subamendment put forward by the hon. member, but really the unfortunate unintended consequence of his motion is that it would actually not contemplate what we have proposed in this section of this amendment, and that is to ensure that landowners, if they believe that they are directly and adversely affected, can self-identify. That's a critical factor. We're trying to widen the ability for landowners to engage at the front end of the process. That's an important principle we're establishing here.

What I think it is unwise to do is to try to prescribe rules of practice and administrative practices of an organization that has to remain nimble, that has to remain responsive, and that over time may need to change those practices to respond to getting that right balance between landowners and energy developers and the environmental concerns that people have as well.

Mr. Chair, I would not support this subamendment.

The Chair: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the hon. member's comments. You mentioned that you thought that this was more work for lawyers, but it would seem to me that if we're talking about the statement of concern, I believe that currently section 32 reads, "A person who may be directly and adversely affected by an application may file a statement of concern with the Regulator in accordance with the rules." I believe that your amendment says: a person who believes that the person may be directly and adversely affected by an application may file a statement of concern with the regulator in accordance with the rules.

I'm not a lawyer, clearly, but that whole statement just sort of seems a bit roundabout. It doesn't really say who is affected. It says that a person who believes somebody may believe that somebody believes that somebody could be affected. So then they now have standing. It would seem that we need to drill that down and make it much more clear as to who the person is and who the person is that believes that the other person could be adversely affected because, really, what this does is open up the door for anyone – literally, anyone – to come in and say: well, I believe that Mr. So-and-so is adversely affected, so I now have standing at the hearing. That wouldn't necessarily give the landowner standing. The clause that you've suggested that would make the amendment isn't clear. I would suggest that that in itself would make more work for lawyers.

More importantly, when you go to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks' amendment, what's important about that is that it's saying specifically, "What is the notification, and what are the hearings?" in comparison to the amendment that the hon. member across the way has provided, which just says: a person who believes that a person might be adversely affected. I understand and I appreciate that the hon. member has been very good so far about wanting to be clear and consistent. You answered very good questions with regard to public notice and who the stakeholders are and how that process would happen. But then we get to statement of concern, and it sort of just gets mumbled and jumbled together and doesn't seem to make a lot of sense.

Notification and hearings, section 32, which the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks has presented here, would really allow for the rights concerning notification and hearings for landowners to follow what we had in section 26 under the Energy Resources Conservation Act, which was passed by this fine House, and everybody was okay with it at that point in time. What we have to really understand here is that energy companies with subsurface leases have the right to enter people's land. Short of the oil sands lease, really you're a guest of my land and every other Alberta family's land.

It doesn't matter if it's a farm, a ranch, an acreage, a recreational or an investment property. Why wouldn't we be very clear what the notification process is, what the hearing process is? Why would we just leave it open to somebody who believes that the person may be directly and adversely affected? I would think that the government on that side would want to set out the rules very clearly because we're trying to create a single regulator which we want to streamline the process, but the amendment from across the way really allows for any member in Alberta to say: well, I think he's adversely affected, so I'm going to join in. That person could be in Fort McMurray talking about a property in Strathmore-Brooks, or it could be any group. An aboriginal group could easily come in and have a say, as rightly they may need to.

At least with the notification and hearing section that this hon. member has proposed, it is clearly laid out. It says that you need a notice of application, that you should give the person "notice of the application." That seems reasonable to me. You should give the person "a reasonable opportunity of learning the facts bearing on the application and presented to the Regulator by the applicant." I can't imagine that the regulator wouldn't want that, a reasonable statement of facts.

The regulator shall give "a reasonable opportunity, after filing a statement of concern in accordance with the rules," which you told me would be written a little bit later, to explain the facts or why he's bringing it forward. I would think that that would lessen the workload on the regulator, which is ultimately the goal here, and allow for the person presenting the application to do so without cross-examination initially and an opportunity of cross-examination in the presence of the regulator. I would think the regulator wouldn't mind that either. It allows for a back-and-forth.

Furthermore, 32(2) of the amendment says that a person is entitled to make representations to the Regulator [and] the Regulator is not by subsection (1) required to afford an opportunity to the person

- (a) to make oral representations, or
- (b) to be represented by counsel.

Now, like I said, I'm not a lawyer, but it seems that that's a pretty clear layout. I don't know. I can't imagine that anybody in this House would actually disagree, but if I'm actually being told that somebody is coming onto my land, I should get a notice of application. I don't know why that would be so disagreeable. I should have an opportunity to learn about the application and have a discussion with the regulator. It would seem to me that's reasonable. And after filing, if I have a disagreement with why that application is coming forward, I would have a reasonable opportunity to make my case to the regulator.

These are all things that we ask for every day. If our employer asks for us to be disciplined or something like that, we ask for an opportunity to state our side of the story and give the facts and then make a decision. In a court of law we say every day that we make an application to the court and the court offers an opportunity for us to be heard, and we take that opportunity. Now, in the end if they rule against us, then we'll deal with that.

It seems to me that to take this section outright and not even give it any value is doing a huge disservice to what you're trying to achieve. I think what you're trying to achieve is very honourable and that it's the right way to go, but it seems to me that we're going to make a vague statement, saying that a person who believes that the person may be directly or adversely affected, when we can clearly drill it down and say that it is only fair that I get a notice, that I'm allowed to talk to that notice, and that I get an opportunity to make my argument to the regulator. There just might be a time when it's actually valid that you maybe don't need to come onto my land or that maybe there's a better route, and if you just had that conversation with me, you might see that there's a better route. By offering the opportunity, then this legislation provides landowners to know, whatever is happening on their land, that every opportunity of appeal or discussion was given to them.

What I heard from this House so many times this last two weeks is that we want to be fair, we want to be open, we want to be transparent. If that's the goal, to do all of those things, it would seem clear to me that we would want to err on the side of being overly cautious to allow the landowner to have a say on what goes across his land.

I don't know if we've all forgotten in here, but I paid for my land. I don't know. I mean, I make the payments to the bank. I own it. I don't know if that's a shocker to anybody who owns property, but each one of you owns land. What this is saying to you right now is that if somebody comes onto your land, you don't get a say. Whether you're rural or urban, this should cause you to stand up and just take a look. Are we really asking for too much if we ask for notice of application? Are we really asking too much if we say: I'd like to be heard on what's going across my land? I guarantee that you would if it was a pig farm coming in beside you. You'd want a notice. You'd want a hearing. Absolutely you would want all those things. Just because it's an energy company now, are we going to throw all of those normal things that we do every other day out the window?

Literally, people, we need to take a look at the bigger picture. I mean, it all looks good to just sort of shove it into section 32 here, but what we're really doing is taking away a landowner's ability to receive notice, a landowner's ability to speak – to speak – to that, a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts. This is something you already had. You had it under section 26 of the ERCA, the Energy Resources Conservation Act. I'm sure the minister of environment, who keeps shaking her head at me and mouthing whatever she's mouthing – I have no idea; I can't hear her. You are the minister of environment, and you are the Minister of Energy. You agreed with these under the Energy Resources Conservation Act. Are you saying that this section 26 is so egregious and so insulting that you would have it in those acts but you wouldn't consider protecting landowners under the Responsible Energy Development Act? It's just kind of mind boggling how under one act it's perfectly okay and it's perfectly reasonable, but under the Responsible Energy Development Act this is just unheard of. It's like: what are you asking for?

Literally, you're standing over there or sitting over there, you know, and you're just mind boggled that we're even asking for a clearer definition of notification and hearings, yet we already do this. We already say this is a landowner right. We incorporate it in other acts. It's a standard part of the act. I'm not asking for anything that's not – we're not re-creating the wheel here. It already exists. Why wouldn't you?

I'm actually surprised the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake doesn't support this given how many of her people it's literally going to have implications for if this comes across their land. So that's interesting to me.

It's something that literally is already covered, so there's no reason why it cannot be applied to this act very clearly. There should be no reason why any member wouldn't support the opportunity to receive notice of application. That's what this is asking for. It's not asking for the world. It already exists. It can easily be done. Remember that, rural or urban, this affects you. [interjections] You can cackle at me all you want. I've been cackled at by worse people. It's not a big deal.

The important part here is that we're talking about landowners. We're talking about people who own any parts of land. That includes every landowner. It includes our aboriginal people. It includes urban. It includes rural. Everybody should have the right to have this notice. Everybody should have an opportunity to learn the facts. Everybody should have a reasonable opportunity to stand up and defend their own property. This is fundamental to Canada. This is fundamental to Albertans.

The reality is that if you don't take this seriously, what you're going to have are landowners who come up and are going to revolt. They're already revolting. They're telling you that there are parts of this bill that are key to them, and this is one of them. Offering them notification when we offer them notification under several other legislations doesn't seem unreasonable.

I think the Minister of Energy has done a fantastic job – you've done a fantastic job, a hundred per cent – I absolutely do. My understanding is the Minister of Energy and our critic have worked together to work through some of these amendments, and I think even the Minister of Energy has acknowledged that they have been working together. I think you're doing a great job. What comes down is: let's not stop there. Let's continue to do a great job and make sure that we're protecting landowners and creating a simpler system for energy and for industry. That's the goal here.

Allowing landowners the right to speak to things that are on their land is not really that big of a burden. But telling landowners that it's anybody, any person that believes the person may be adversely affected by an application, is going to be a nightmare. It's going to be a nightmare for the regulator, an absolute nightmare. So let's solve the problem. Let's sort it out and work on the subamendment and see if we can't come to an agreement. That's what we're here for. That's what we're here to do.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other comments? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I passed that letter to the hon. minister earlier because it's really about this section right here. This is it. This is what the landowners are trying to tell you, but it's not just landowners; it's what property owners are trying to tell you. Because when you have a conflict with a small oil and gas developer with another oil and gas developer that comes onto the same quarter section, there are conflicts and issues that have to be resolved.

Now, keep in mind that the issues that are generally resolved are almost always resolved, 90 per cent, without any problem whatsoever. Of the 10 per cent that remain, 90 per cent of those get resolved without a board hearing process. So we're talking about 1 per cent here. Realistically, what they're looking for is respect for due process of law.

Now, it's interesting that there was some cackling going on about this because the reality is that it's in the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. It was in Bill 46 back in 2007, and it was all there prior to that, but it's missing in the Responsible Energy Development Act. What we're trying to do is to give that respect back to landowners so that they have some sort of right to say: "I've got to have my concern heard. My concern can be resolved." I'm not going to tell you we're going to have to guarantee to them that they're going to be satisfied. What I'm saying is that there has to be due process for them because it is that 1 per cent that can take down the system. It is that 1 per cent that starts getting everyone else upset. It's also the ability to abuse property owners, to abuse landowners, that causes the problem. When companies – I won't say companies but landmen – are not reputable and abuse the language or the situation, they cause tremendous problems throughout our community.

I'm going to share a story with you about a number of landowners who showed up at a hearing really looking for respect. There were three board members assigned to this hearing process, and all they had asked was for one of the board members to have some agricultural experience. Now, interestingly enough, the board chair agreed, so they dismissed one board member and brought another board member on. But he didn't have any agricultural experience. We got into this little discussion, and the only agricultural experience he had was that he was arrested for a grow op back in the 1960s. Well, the argument was that at least he had a cash crop going. But the reality is that it made a mockery of the whole process for those property owners that were dealing with the board. That disrespect, not only to the people attending that board hearing, tarnished the reputation of the board. The more that happens, the system starts breaking down.

We're in a situation that you're dealing with right now, that this amendment can address, which is – you saw the letter that came from the Pine Lake Surface Rights Group. That's where it really came from. Those were the authors under that. [interjection] Yeah, but they're the largest group in central Alberta by far. They've got close to a thousand members, and they attend meetings well. You don't have to agree with them, but you need to know they're there. They are a significant group, and they do affect the dealings with oil and gas companies in that whole central Alberta region.

I will tell you that the Pembina Surface Rights Group, right up in the hon. Environment and SRD minister's riding, is right in there also. They're in agreement with that.

So when you look at that letter that I gave you and then you look at this amendment, this is the cure. This is the treatment. It can mitigate some of these concerns. You need to think about this point by point by point because it's not asking for a whole lot. It's saying that they've got to get notice, that they have a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts. They need to be heard. It's so important that whoever comes in front of regulator is given respect and dignity and that they are heard. Again, we're not looking to create legislation that guarantees them a remedy. What we're looking at is to guarantee them a process, a process where they can have fairness and they can have basic justice.

I will tell you that nowhere in this bill does it say that these people, whether it's a company or whether it's a landowner, have to be treated fair or get justice. It is a word that is missed a lot of times in our legislation. This section right here, that we are proposing, is already in other legislation. It has just been removed from this new bill. I don't know why it's been removed. It's a valid question because what caused much of the rumblings out in the rural areas right now was when they saw this language removed. They want to be able to have an opportunity.

Oh, by the way, I had to compromise in my own constituency to agree to this because this section 2(b) is one of the ones that I've always had a problem with. I always think it's a right for somebody to be represented by counsel. There are situations where there are people who don't read very well, that have a very difficult time, and when they come in front of this type of board process, it's new to them. It's not something they're used to. It's a first-time event. They're scared. They're intimidated. They're told they can't make an oral representation; they have to make a written representation. That's extremely difficult for somebody who doesn't write very well.

There are people in my riding who are illiterate, as there probably are in some of yours. You may or may not know them. But I know a few. We have a retired postmaster who actually is illiterate. He is an amazing man, and he's a good man. But he actually never quite learned to read. It was quite fascinating how he could deliver the mail. It's a great story. The fact is that he would never be able to go in front of a board and provide a written representation.

So I compromised with my own caucus because this is the way it was: the only thing I'm really concerned about is losing ground for the rights of those who are directly and adversely affected. They have a necessity to have a right. What this bill is doing is taking that away, and what this amendment is doing is trying to put that back. It's trying to restore something that they once had. If you cannot look at this with an open mind, then just as that letter said: they're going to plant the flag on this hill to die on. This is where they're going to fight for their rights. If you don't believe that, then I don't know where you've been for the last four years because that's what's happened out in the rural areas.

I have to tell you that there's a situation brewing right now up in Peace River that is on the verge of exploding into violence. I know some of the members over there know about it. I've been contacted about it. It's a situation that is extremely tense right at the moment. It has to do, again, with respect. It has to do, again, with process. If we give that respect, if we allow the process to work, we can stop violence where in these situations it builds. I say this with all sincerity. We've had a couple of people already in the last decade, the last 20 years get killed out there. The reason violence broke out was the frustration of: "I don't get heard. I don't get the respect. There are no teeth in the regulations."

Property owners, landowners, businesses all want the same thing. They want to set clear-cut, concise rules and regulations that they can follow. We can streamline this. But you can't streamline this by taking away people's rights. That's not going to work. There'll be push-back out there. And when there's push-back, what you will do is hold up energy development. You will cause a lot of problems where there should not be problems. It will end up doing just the opposite of what you want to do.

We have the ability to have our cake and eat it, too. We have the ability to streamline the process, to get rid of some regulation that is unnecessary, particularly the red tape that companies go through. We want companies to be able to apply, to be able to look at the rules and know exactly what those rules are so that they can get their permits, they can get their licence, and they can get the job done. We want in the same process exactly what's in this amendment so that the property owner, whether it's a company or whether it's a farmer, has the ability to look at the application, has the ability to learn the facts of the matter, has the ability to take those concerns forward and be heard. That is so critical to this process. If you don't accept this in one form or another, then it's absent from the whole process.

I will tell you that this is an important gear to make this work. This is fundamental to the new regulation, the new legislation that the hon. minister is proposing. It is so paramount that those who are directly and adversely affected understand that they can count on this if it is something that they require.

I'm going to share – because there are problems with all of the boards. There have been problems developing over a period of time. I don't think the boards see it. But time and time again people have come forward. Some companies have come forward, and I'm going to share one. It was the group dealing with the MATL line south of Lethbridge. They had concerns. They had concerns about their property – some of them were potato farms – and mostly with irrigation.

What happened was that the Energy and Utilities Board, even though this applied because this was part of it at the time, told them to take their concerns to the NEB because this was an export line, so they had to go to the NEB. They took their concerns to the NEB. The NEB, the National Energy Board, said: "No, no. You don't take your concerns to us. That's a provincial matter." When this goes back to the provincial hearing process – "You take this concern to the provincial hearing process" – they got to the provincial hearing, and the energy regulator in this province told them: "Sorry. It's too late. You should have taken that to the NEB."

These people never got justice. They never got a chance to be heard. Their concerns were never addressed. That issue ended up going to the courts, in my mind unnecessarily. What was ruled in the courts was that those property owners had no rights. They voted Wildrose in the last election as a result.

So here you have it. This isn't something that's designed to tie anything up with lawyers. As a matter of fact, it says that they don't even have to be represented by counsel, so we can't be taking that kind of criticism, although I still think they should have the right to counsel. But this is designed to give the board, the regulator, the guidance on how they're going to treat these people when they come forward so that we know that when they're going to be developing oil and gas or any other resource extraction, there is a path to follow to make sure that people's rights are protected. That's what this amendment is all about.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Little – Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. These late nights are getting to all of us, I'm sure.

I just wanted to make a comment about section 26 of the ERCA. My understanding of it – and maybe the minister can comment on this – and I will promise to be brief, sir, is that it's been thoroughly interpreted by the courts. What you're presenting here in Bill 2 under section 32 is inherently vague and will just open yourself up to further court challenges, which is counterintuitive to why you're rejecting this subamendment that the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks has put forward.

It does not create work for lawyers. Section 26 has been well established, and the ERCB understands and respects it. It has a history of striking a balance, which again is the intent of this bill, and I guess what we've been hearing from the other side is that we're striking a balance to ensure that everyone who is truly affected – and not just frivolous complaints. That's not what this is about, introducing frivolous complaints. It's to give them their chance for a hearing. These hearings are not court. They are simply a chance to have your say. Mr. Minister, if you have a moment, I would like to hear your thoughts again on that, please.

The Chair: Other speakers? The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Yeah. Mr. Chair, I'll just respond to that one aspect. You know, there's much being made of section 26 under the old ERCB legislation. It's really important to note that under the current act the granting of notice of hearings is actually at the sole discretion of the board. What we're proposing in this new legislation actually opens that up considerably.

First of all, they absolutely must give notice to landowners who are directly and adversely affected. Over and above that, we're creating a public mechanism, an aspect we addressed earlier. We're making sure that there's public notice as well, which is not a requirement historically. Thirdly, we are ensuring that if somebody believes that they are directly and adversely affected, which is actually the subject of the amendment that this subamendment we're discussing is related to, they can self-identify, and they can make sure that their input is in at the front end of the process, which is what we really want, really robust, all the information together at the right place at the front end of the regulatory process.

I'm not worried about creating work for the regulator. I think the process will settle out just fine over time. You know what? For a regulator to have to read an extra letter or two or three on any given hearing is not going to slow things down, but what it will do is ensure that it's fair to the landowner and it's fair to all who are directly or potentially directly adversely affected. I think that's in the public interest, very much so. That's the subject of that.

The subamendment that we're addressing here right now, Mr. Chair, has the potential to create a very time-consuming set of processes. There are 40,000 applications that go through the ERCB today, plus or minus. There's a lot of stuff that goes through the regulator, and then you look at the environmental side as well. The last thing you want to do is create an exceedingly onerous process that ties up the economic activity that pays the bills for our whole province in a lot of ways as well.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill this evening, to the minister particularly, whom I've met and talked to on numerous occasions.

Mr. Chairman, I have a background in oil and gas. It was in the seismic world, but certainly I was exposed to many of the things that went on in downtown Calgary for 25 to 30 years. I also have a background in municipal government. I spent a lot of years working with development appeals, subdivision appeals, and assessment appeals, and I even had the opportunity to go down to speak to the Municipal Government Board on many occasions on behalf of our municipality and, often as not, sometimes later on against our municipality. So I have some of that background.

I look at this amendment that we have presented here and this subamendment, and I feel that this one has a lot of merit. I wonder if it isn't something we should take a moment to review a little bit in the sense that when you look at section 78(f) of the new bill, it talks about how regulations could be brought through by the Lieutenant Governor in Council at some later time. I'm just wondering if it's the case where we're going to see, as we do in some of other acts, regulations come through later on regarding this appeal process that would perhaps change things somewhat and make this more of a favourable amendment to consider in that light.

I say that because in the Municipal Government Act they describe different kinds of developments and development appeal processes. They also talk about subdivision, but when they went about looking at appeal processes in subdivision, they also produce a set of regulations later on. Those regulations are fairly specific about how appeals can be conducted and how proper notice is given and to whom the appeal goes. When I look at the Surface Rights Act, the Surface Rights Act mentions a little bit about appeals, but they also in the regulations have more definite clauses regarding those topics.

I'm just wondering, then, to the minister: is it not the case that perhaps as a consideration these kinds of appeal clauses might be coming up in regulations, or is it perhaps better that we deal with this at this time?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much. I appreciate the intervention by the hon. member opposite, very thoughtful and, clearly, out of your many years of experience. Yes, there will be regulations that will be developed as a result of this legislation. In fact, that will form an important part of the structure that governs how the new regulator will function, just as is the case today with the ERCB and the other regulatory processes in ESRD. It's an important point to make, that there will be greater clarity. In fact, the greater flexibility comes about if you can create some of the processes in regulation as opposed to in legislation because then you can be more flexible and ensure that the regulator is able to respond to changing dynamics.

This industry, the oil and gas industry in particular, is particularly nimble and is evolving fast, with different technologies being used in different ways. The regulator really has to be on its game. What we want to do is create a regulator that actually is able to respond to evolving situations because there are potentials for conflict in the future, I'm sure, as there have been in the past between landowners or environmental objectives or development objectives simply because of the fact that the technology has changed, and that technology creates a new kind of conflict or a new kind of dynamic in the relationship with the landowner. You need to be able to respond to that. It's probably way better to ensure that that is embodied in regulation rather than trying to predict how we're going to run all the process in legislation at this time.

I appreciate the member's comments.

The Chair: Other comments? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. To the hon. minister. You just mentioned something that I think is paramount, not just to this amendment but to the entire scope of the legislation. We don't want to create anything that's onerous and would hold up the development of our natural resource extractions, that is unnecessary in many ways, basically. You didn't describe it that way, but you mentioned that the whole idea is to streamline the process.

Now, if I heard you correctly, and I need you to clarify this: is anyone actually saying that giving a person a right to notice of the application would be holding up the process? Is anyone actually saying that giving a person a fundamental right to a reasonable opportunity for learning the facts of the application is holding up the process? Is anyone here saying that when you get that information and you have an opportunity to learn the facts, that having a right – you don't have the right to cross-examine, but if you're not given the right to cross-examine, at least you have the right to cross-examine the evidence so you can present your facts and the counterfactuals, I guess you would describe it, so the regulator can make a decision. In other words, that's a fair opportunity to be heard. I don't think anyone here is saying that that's going to hold up the whole process. It's really important.

When the regulator agrees that you're entitled to make a representation, I don't think anyone here is saying that being able to make a written representation is holding up the process. That's really what's going on here. If the idea is that what you're not accepting, what you're not bringing forward into the legislation, are those sections of the former legislation, those sections of the former regulations that, in your opinion, hold up the process, this section right here is the fundamental rights of many farmers, many landowners, many property owners for whom their property is their small business. That is paramount to their survival in many ways, to their economic activity.

Remember, when we talk about property rights, a lot of times many people in this Assembly are thinking rural people, farmers. But property rights are many of those small businesses. Many of those are located in the cities, that come out into our areas, and they work and they do business out there because they are oil field service companies. They have property, and there are conflicts between developments on their property. It's really important that we always settle these conflicts. All this amendment does is provide them with a right in legislation, and that's all we're asking for. So I would ask the minister to clarify: is there any portion here that he says is holding up any type of development of our resources?

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, and to the hon. member through you, Mr. Chair. You know, the fundamental right that is being prescribed here for landowners is the right, as any of us would expect, to engage in a process if they are going to be directly or adversely affected and to be engaged at the front end of it. We're widening the ability for people to do that by this new legislation. We're widening the opportunity to participate. We're making it mandatory for the regulator to notify people, and we're making it mandatory for the regulator to make it public notice, and we're creating an opportunity, if people feel that somehow they've been missed in the process, that they can self-identify into that process.

The appropriate thing here is to ensure that we have all of the input at the front end so that the regulator can make a complete, fully informed decision on doing the right thing in each circumstance.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I understand what you mean when you say that you're widening it. I understand that process. But this language is more prescriptive, and what it does is that it becomes definitive. It is in more plain English for people to see exactly where their rights are. When you say that you have a right in these broader terms, I have to ask you, looking at the legislation: where's my right? This amendment says it in clear, concise, plain English; here it is.

Once the regulator makes that decision – now, remember, it's based on the regulator making the decision – that on application you may be directly and adversely affected, so they've made that decision, you have a right to a notice of application. You have a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts. That's being a little bit more prescriptive, and it's more definitive in plain English so that people know the rules. They can rely upon that. When you say broad, there's nothing very prescriptive in your broad language. It's just that we have this umbrella. I have to tell you that the experience of many people having to deal with these board processes has not been fair in many ways.

I want to explain that. I don't mean it's unfair because it's uncharacteristically designed to be unfair. What's happened that's unfair is that these people come forward, and they're not legal minds. They really don't want to hire lawyers. What they want to do is present their case. If you have it broad like you say, then definitely some of these farmers have to get lawyers. I will tell you that a lot of people – and I've represented them myself, and I told them: "This is how you go. You prepare it. You go in front of the board. You tell the board your concern." I think the board likes that.

These rules help those people. It is definitive in that nature. I have seen the boards, whether it's the ERCB or whether it was the EUB or whether it's the AUC, not respect individual concerns. I would suggest to you that it's much like this Chamber. When people get tired, they tend to want to get things on faster. I don't think the board is any different than that. If you've ever sat through a long, boring board hearing at the end of the day on a Thursday or a Friday, when they're thinking of going home, that is an awkward time to have a 75-year-old grandmother come in front of the board to present her concerns, which are valid concerns, and get dismissed because she is not given these prescriptive rights.

I don't believe that holds up the process. I don't. I think that helps the process. I think that the energy company can look at this and say that when they're dealing with Mrs. So-and-so, they know they have to give her the information because it says so. They know that if she has a concern, if they don't deal with that concern and the board agrees she has a concern, she has a right to learn the facts and a right to make her evidence and, you know, check their evidence.

If they come to the board and say, "Here's what we're going to do to your land," and she says, "No, no, no; that doesn't happen on my land because this is what happens on my land," she has a chance to challenge their evidence because it's in writing. What you're proposing is not in writing. It's just a broad umbrella. The board can misinterpret that late on a Friday afternoon. The regulator can. I've watched them do it. They can dismiss people because it's not prescriptive.

I'm saying that that will not hold up the process at all, and I'll tell you why. If it's in writing, the energy companies know it's in writing. They can deal with it long before it ever gets to the board. This is where regulation sometimes actually assists companies to make sure that they take care of these matters. You all know it. The good, reputable companies don't end up in front of the board. They get out there. They talk to the people. They hear their concerns long before the board ever hears their concern, or it may never hear their concern. The energy company itself addresses those concerns. The lease agreement is signed, the lease is constructed, and business is taken care of.

Properly written legislation with guidance for the regulator: the industry itself will look at these rules. These are the rules that they go by. They know the rules that are going to apply to these landowners, property owners, and these other small businesses they may run into. They will take care of business because they know how to do that. That's all I'm saying. I don't think any one of these holds anything up. It actually smoothes the way to get things done by providing certain rights.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I'll be very brief. I think this subamendment really gets to the bottom of the issue. In these types of situations it's the last resort that a landowner has when their land is being affected. We have to remember that these projects don't happen just on Crown land or the land of energy companies. It's their land. It's farmland and ranches. It's quite significantly different, our subamendment, compared to what the Energy minister has come up with. It reads very clearly:

If it appears to the Regulator that its decision on an application may directly or adversely affect the rights of a person, the Regulator shall give that person

(a) notice of the application,

Shall give them:

(b) a reasonable opportunity of learning the facts,

Shall give them:

(d) an opportunity of a cross-examination.

All of these rights are here. If you're a rural MLA and have landowners that are going to be affected by energy projects or by these applications, I think you should read this subamendment because this is what we're going to be debating two years from now, when there's an uproar across the prairies just like with bills 19, 36, and 50. We're going to be coming back here, and we're going to be debating a similar type of amendment because the public pressure is going to be huge if you don't accept this.

I just implore the members opposite to take a look at this and know that these are very reasonable provisions. They were in section 26 of the RCA. They've been litigated for years. There's a well-established jurisprudence. Everybody knows what the rules are. It's not going to delay energy projects. Please take a look at this, and I hope that you consider this amendment.

The Chair: Further comments?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on subamendment SA1.

[Motion on subamendment A1D-SA1 lost]

The Chair: We'll move on to amendment A1D. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes. Thank you, Chair. Back to the original amendment that the hon. Energy minister put forward, I would like some clarification on the wording: a person who "believes that the person." Is that any person? What person? We need clarification on that.

32 ... may be directly and adversely affected by an application may file a statement of concern with the Regulator in accordance with the rules.

We go back to the rules that the regulator is going to make.

You go down to:

33(1) Where a statement of concern is filed in respect of an application, the Regulator shall decide in accordance with the rules [that the regulator makes] and subject to section 34 . . .

Section 34 says:

(1) Subject to subsection (2), the Regulator may make a decision on application with or without conducting a hearing.

The rights of all the landowners are gone. The regulator makes the rules. The regulator decides whether the landowner gets to have an appeal. The regulator decides on the appeal. Everything is directed at the regulator.

Now, we all agree – everybody agrees – that we want the energy industry to be streamlined. That's a given. Everybody agrees to that. We want to get rid of the red tape, help out. It's all about making it easy on the oil companies. This is not going to make it easy on the oil companies. There's going to be such a huge backlash of landowners. It's actually going to be detrimental to the oil industry. They're not going to have any favour with the property rights owners. What would make for a better industry is if the oil company, the landowners, the regulator, everybody, get along. They're happy to see you coming. It's not going to happen.

33(2) If the Regulator makes a decision on an application without conducting a hearing, the Regulator shall publish or otherwise make publicly available the Regulator's decision in accordance with the rules.

It's very vague. Are they going to put it in the paper?

This strips the rights of everybody. You know, it's not going to be received very well, and I'm fearful that the oil companies are going to take the brunt of it because we're allowing the regulator to make all the rules. As I've said before, when you go to the rules, the cabinet can change those rules which the regulator is going to have to adhere by. That gives so much indecision to the oil companies because they don't know if the rules that they're following are going to be changed. The oil companies are trying to do things right and by the rules, and all of a sudden one day the rules get changed. They don't know where they stand. We need to have some substantial information that these oil companies and landowners can go by so that they can make the proper decisions.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there further speakers on amendment A1D?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1D carried]

The Chair: We'll move to amendment A1E. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Well, I'm just going to talk a little bit more about the regulator and the decisions that they can make. Section 34 states:

(1) Subject to subsection (2) . . .

where the regulator makes a decision,

... the Regulator may make a decision on an application with or without conducting a hearing.

It's up to the regulator to decide whether he wants to make a hearing or not.

- (2) The Regulator shall conduct a hearing on an application
  - (a) where the Regulator is required to conduct a hearing pursuant to an energy resource enactment,
  - (b) when required to do so under the rules ...

The rules, again, that the regulator makes.

- (c) under the circumstances prescribed by the regulations.

Well, the regulations are what the regulator makes. Everything is based around the regulator.

Then they want to add:

- (2.1) If the Regulator conducts a hearing on an application, a person who may be directly and adversely affected by the application is entitled to be heard at the hearing.

But if the regulator decides there's not going to be a hearing, what good is (2.1)? They don't have any justification as to whether they receive a hearing. Only the regulator, who makes the rules, who enforces the rules, says if they can have a hearing or not. This is very, very, very empty. It doesn't specify any rights, any privileges.

Again, it's going to affect the oil companies. They're going to receive backlash because if people don't feel they have had due process in a decision, they're not going to be happy. If they can go through the proper steps, if they get to plead their case and then they get turned down, then: "You know what? I tried. Not much else I can do about it." But if they don't even get that process of where they're heard, they're not going to be happy. It's going to make it tougher on the oil companies, and the process we're trying to streamline is actually going to get worse.

I'm not convinced that this is the best legislation out there for the oil companies or the property rights owners.

The Chair: Are there other speakers on the amendment? We are on A1E.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Section E of the government's proposed amendment says that it's necessary to say that hearings which are held for consultative purposes will be used only for consultative purposes. You know, that just seems a bit redundant to me. The amendment says specifically, "If the Regulator conducts a hearing on an application, a person who may be directly and adversely affected by the application is entitled to be heard at the hearing." My question is: shouldn't this entitlement already have been included in the original? What's the point of holding a consultative hearing if you don't allow those affected to participate?

This amendment, you know, it seems to me, is a demonstration again, as we've heard from the Wildrose, that this government is missing the mark on the public interest in regard to this bill and using this amendment as some sort of Band-Aid for an otherwise much larger gaping hole in this bill.

As well, this amendment really doesn't, in my mind, do the necessary work to ensure that those who may be affected will be, in fact, personally notified. The old section 26 of the Energy Resources Conservation Act ensured that if the board thought people might be damaged by a decision, the board would personally notify them. Not only that but the board would give people a reasonable amount of time to put their case together and could provide them a platform for their case to be heard. All this amendment does is that it says that individuals will be allowed to come to the hearings and speak. You know, that just doesn't seem sufficient, in my mind.

Finally, this particular change I don't think really does much to ensure that a hearing takes place when it comes to a major project that will seriously affect people as a result. I notice that this amendment begins with "if." A big fat if. If a hearing takes place. That means that individuals can be heard only if there is a hearing called by the regulator. In other words, there will still be decisions made by the regulator without a hearing, following logic here – right? – where individuals may be adversely and directly affected. Therefore, two original problems with this bill remain despite this change. How will the regulator ensure individuals are personally notified of energy projects?

Then, number two, will the regulator ensure that directly and adversely affected individuals are in fact being heard in the cases where hearings are not being held? Again, this brings back unpleasant memories to me of when I was dealing with issues around energy, specifically electricity power lines. This is something that can not only affect, I guess, people's sense of what is just and right, but it can actually get in the way of moving a project forward. Once people are agitated on these issues and perceive injustice to be taking place or that they're being railroaded or steamrollered, then things can go sideways so quickly.

You know, we're at a certain point where I think we need to step back and not streamline our consultative process but expand the consultative process with landowners in this province because I think, quite frankly, that you're playing with fire if you don't deal with these things properly. Again, my original comments on Bill 2 were that because we've had these amendments come through, it seems as though a lot of Bill 2 is, in fact, a bit half baked and needs to go back to where it came from to be finished off and then made more palatable for general public consumption by the landowners here in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: Further comments on amendment A1E?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1E carried]

The Chair: We'll now move to amendment A1F.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1F carried]

The Chair: We'll move to A1G. Questions or comments? The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. So I just want to ask the hon. Energy minister or the Minister of Environment and SRD about section 36. To me it looks like in this section you're just changing the order around. Instead of reviewable decision, you know, it's pretty much the same thing. This is something that is not going to have much bearing on the process. This is something that happens after. This is taking away from the Environmental Appeals Board. It's not letting anything go to the Environmental Appeals Board.

If you're adversely affected, then

- (i) a decision of the Regulator in respect of which a person would otherwise be entitled to submit a notice of appeal under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act or an appeal under the Water Act or an appeal under the Public Lands Act or

- (iv) a decision of the Regulator that was made under an energy resource enactment . . . [that] was made without a hearing, or
- (v) any other decision or class of decisions described in the regulations are reviewable decisions. And if you're an eligible person under any of those as it stands now, you can go to the Environmental Appeals Board, which is arm's length, which does not have anything to do with the regulator.

For issues that happen after the process – so you have a pipeline going across your land, and after the well is drilled, after everything is done, it has a leak, so you call, and they come and clean it up, but you don't think that it's been cleaned up properly – you can go to the Environmental Appeals Board. That is not going to have any bearing on the approval process for any projects of the oil companies.

I would like to propose a subamendment to this one if I could. I've got the proper number of copies if we can hand them out.

The Chair: Yes, please.

Hon. members, this will be subamendment 2. So we'll be dealing with A1G-SA2.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment says:

- (a) in the proposed section 36
  - (i) in clause (a) by striking out subclause (i), (ii) and (iii)
  - (ii) in clause (b) by striking out subclause (i);
- (b) by adding the following after the proposed section 36:

36.1 A decision of the Regulator in respect of which a person would otherwise be entitled to submit a notice of appeal under

  - (a) section 91(1) of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act,
  - (b) section 115 of the Water Act, or
  - (c) section 121 of the Public Lands Act

may be appealed in accordance with that section notwithstanding that the decision was made by the Regulator.

This allows people, if they have issues that the decision was not made by the regulator, to go back to the Environmental Appeals Board.

We feel that the Environmental Appeals Board is a very, very substantial board that deals with issues that happen after projects are completed. This is something that is very, very important so that people have somewhere to go. If they have to go back to the regulator – again, the regulator makes the rules, the regulator enforces the rules, and the regulator makes the decision. This gives them another avenue to go and voice their concerns. It is not going to hamper the process of streamlining, which we all agree we all want, the streamlining, the one-window shopping. This has absolutely no effect on the bill.

I would like to ask the hon. minister of environment if she can explain to me how she thinks this will have an effect on the streamlining, the one-window shopping of this bill when all this is doing is looking after issues through the Environmental Appeals Board.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment and SRD or the Minister of Energy to respond.

Mr. Hughes: Let me start, and my colleague will deal with the difficult questions. This subamendment to the amendment really has the effect of not achieving a single regulator. I would note that it's my understanding that, for example, some of these appeal mechanisms that are today in existence have very limited use.

There might be 15 applications in a year or something like that, so it's not as though this is something that is a big normal course of business for a lot of applicants, important though it is.

I would note that the commissioners that we're going to appoint are separate from the governance of the new energy regulator. They do have an independence, which will provide very good oversight in terms of these kinds of important environmental acts that are regulated by the regulator. On that basis, Mr. Chair, I would not support this subamendment.

My colleague the hon. minister perhaps has additional items to add to that.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister of Energy has done an excellent job of explaining that.

I talked about this earlier this evening, that I think we have to think about this regulator as a new regulator. It's one regulator. It's one window. The current regulators of ERCB and Environment and SRD are now one regulator. To bring that together, we have different pieces of legislation that currently fall under ESRD, and we have the ones under the Energy department. These all come together, and the regulator will be regulating under all of these pieces of legislation.

To deal with what the hon. member across the way is talking about, if you go to section 36 and look at that section in its entirety, that explains with regard to if someone has an issue with regard to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, the Water Act, the Public Lands Act from the area of the Ministry of ESRD. That is where the reviews are. That talks about the definitions and who becomes eligible and the reviewable decisions. Then if you look into section 38(1) and (2), it then talks about the review requests and how the eligible person can actually make the request.

I know it's hard for people to understand – and I don't mean that negatively at all when I say that – what this one new single regulator will be. It's all of these together with all of the pieces of legislation, looking at it holistically. All of those pieces of legislation that apply now today under the two regulators of ERCB and ESRD all apply under the new regulator but will be looked at at one time, holistically. So all of those areas still apply to people under the Water Act, the environmental protection act, the Public Lands Act. All of the statutes under the Energy minister's responsibility also, then, fall under this regulator.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yeah. That's the place, sir. I'd like to question either the hon. Minister of Energy or the hon. minister of environment. Recently I've asked the environment minister questions about endangered species. Going forward, if in that case the energy company would have affected endangered species prior to or, in this case, after the licensing of the facility, who would have been in charge of the investigation? Would it have been the regulator, or would it have been the ESRD?

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you. And thank you for the question. What the single regulator is doing is approving or denying applications with regard to oil, gas, oil sands, and coal. If something falls under the Species at Risk Act or, in our particular case, the Wildlife Act, that is different than the approval of the regulation. If something happens under the Wildlife Act, we regulate that. Of course, the hon. member knows that the Species At Risk Act is a federal regulation.

Mr. Strankman: To the question, though, in the case of the energy company, if the energy company would have violated the act after the energy company received a licence for their development, how would the process fall?

The Chair: The hon. minister to respond.

Mrs. McQueen: Yeah. So the enforcement piece after an offence may occur is what you're talking about. Is that correct, hon. member?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Chair.

Mrs. McQueen: Okay. That then falls within the different pieces of acts, so depending on if it's under the Wildlife Act, if it's under the Species At Risk Act, if it's under different provincial park acts or federal park acts, depending on what the case is, that's where it would be. Those pieces under the current ministry would follow under the ESRD ministry with regards to that because that is not the approval of the regulatory application.

The Chair: Further comments? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A question. Either one of you can answer. In this amendment all you did was change "reviewable decision" to "appealable decision." Why, then, did you switch and put "eligible person" under section 36(b) when it was 36(a) before? Why was that switched?

Mr. Hughes: It's alphabetical.

Mr. Hale: No. In section 36 you have:

In this Division

(a) "eligible person" means . . .

Then you have what defines an eligible person.

Then you go to 36(b) and you changed "reviewable decision" to "appealable decision," and then you list it in this act. Go to page 22. All you did is switch them around. Is there a reason why you switched them around?

Mr. Hale: It's not alphabetical because in here you have 36(a). Section 36(a) on this one is now 36(b) on here, and 36(b) on this one is now 36(a), and you just changed two words.

Mr. Hughes: Yeah. Just to answer that, Mr. Chair, as I understand it, when you get into the nuances of drafting legislation, alphabetical actually does apply, so in this case "appealable decision" begins with an A under section 36(a), and "eligible person" follows in alphabetical order. That's all it is in terms of drafting the legislation. It's nothing more complicated than that, surprisingly.

The Chair: Further comments on subamendment SA2? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Obviously, I'm rising to speak in support of the amendment. I sort of feel like I was asking this question a little earlier because once again this government seeks to take out the right to appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board, which is something that's been existing since 1993, and it's something that's been providing landowners with an appeal of last resort for the last 19 years. They thought it was okay then.

They thought it was okay yesterday in other options, but Bill 2 brings that to a complete end.

Why would we want to bring that to a complete end if we've been offering it to landowners for 19 years and there really was no amendment to those things that it was affecting all that time? But all of a sudden in this specific act we're saying, "No; we had that, but now we want to just completely end that," which really means no more independent appeals to the EAB for landowners whose lands might be contaminated. This bill is proposing that the new energy regulator will make all of the environmental decisions relating to that land.

It would seem that we're right back to what we discussed in the previous amendment, when we were talking about the statement of concern, when we took out the ERCA, section 26, which, once again, protected landowners. You know, it just seems a little odd to me that everything we're removing is exactly what the landowners are asking for for protection. I would think that as government and as legislators it's our job to not only work for the industry – and it's my understanding that that includes the Minister of Energy, that it's not his job to only do whatever benefits the industry – but you also have to make sure that it benefits the landowner and to streamline that process.

If it doesn't benefit the landowner or it's not a win-win for the landowner and the industry, what you're going to have is absolute chaos, which we saw with those bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. This is really bringing that right back into there. It doesn't seem to make a lot of sense to remove something that we've had for 19 years and put an end to independent appeals to the EAB for landowners. That just doesn't even seem democratic.

If a landowner thinks the energy regulator missed something or got something wrong, his only remedy is to ask the regulator to review that decision. There's no independent review. Yet in the House today we talked about justice. The Minister of Justice went on and on and on and on about the importance of independent review. When we asked for an external review of that situation, he said: "No, no, no. We've got an independent review." He was adamant about it. He said that the government's mandate is an independent review. But we're taking that away from landowners. We're now saying: "No. Not only do you not get a review; you don't get an independent review. The regulator will review its own decision."

I mean, when does the regulator ever overturn its own bad decisions? Time after time I think most of us can agree that regulators almost always will decide that they got it right the first time. Why would they reverse on appeal unless it was so grossly unjust that they were forced to or unless landowners revolted, which we saw with Bill 50? Bill 50 was brought back to this House to be rediscussed and re-evaluated because we got it so wrong. This government got Bill 50 so wrong that for the last two years you have been inundated by landowners who were so disappointed in Bill 50 that they said: "You will hear us, we'll make sure you hear us, and you will make changes to Bill 50," which you had to do.

But then we're right back to this bill, the Responsible Energy Development Act, and literally we're saying: we know we got it wrong the first time, but we're going to try this all over again and do the exact same thing. An independent appeal process is a standard in modern democratic countries. It's an absolute standard. Everything has the right of appeal but this, which is mind boggling. This does not have a right of appeal. I just find it hard to believe that the only people who are seeing that is this side. I find that mind-boggling.

Right now under the current system a landowner appeals to the EAB a decision of Alberta Environment that the landowner thinks was inadequate. Alberta Environment makes a decision. The landowner has the opportunity to appeal to the EAB. Then Alberta Environment has an opportunity to take a position at the EAB hearing that Alberta Environment got it right, that there's no need to change its own decision. Often the EAB is actually an excellent advocate for landowners. They'll often rule against Alberta Environment. There have been cases where the EAB finds that something was missed and that additional steps need to be taken to deal with those environmental concerns, so it would appear that that system kind of works. Why would we not restore that and ensure that the people falling under this act would have the same rights to appeal that people falling under the other acts would have?

It seems like you're purposely punishing landowners because you want to create a single regulator, yet landowners are begging for a single regulator. They just want to be treated fairly in the process. By removing the right to appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board, you're saying to them: we just really don't care what you have to say. I don't see how they could read it any other way.

Quite honestly, that can easily be fixed by quite literally taking a look at the amendment by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, that actually puts that protection for landowners right back in there. I would think that if you have the protection for landowners back into the act, then landowners know that they can negotiate in good faith with industry. They can come to an agreement, and most of them do.

My husband works in oil and gas. He works for an oil services company. Most of the time, most good companies – this is all that we're dealing with here – do the right thing. That's the majority of industry. But the regulator is now forcing animosity between the industry and the landowner and the government.

It would seem to me that if we're going to streamline the process, why don't we make it clear what those rights to appeal are?

Over and above that, it's not enough that we took away the rights to appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board. It goes further. We took away the rights to appeal any energy-related decision to the Public Lands Appeal Board. That means Bill 2 strips people of that right as well. Neither appeals to the EAB or the Public Lands Appeal Board delay any energy projects. The project still goes ahead. The appeal just gets to be heard, and you give landowners a voice at the table. They only occur after the energy project has been approved, so there's no harm in ensuring that this right to appeal is in the act.

It would be a complete win for the government side to say: "You know, that's not bad. We can appease the landowners. They have some protection." Industry still gets a streamlined process, and if there is a problem, it doesn't act as a stay. The appeal is fine. It allows the government to show that there's a fair process, and it recognizes the importance of fairness. From what I'm hearing from landowners and from industry – I'm not solely hearing from landowners – industry is saying that they want it to be fair. They want it to be a just system. Landowners are saying, "We want it to be fair for industry, but we want it to be fair for us, too." So if it's fair for one, why can't it be fair for landowners as well?

It would seem to me that our northern friends across the way would have the same issues as our southern friends. It would seem to me that our rural friends across the way would have the same issues that our rural friends on this side are expressing. It would also seem to me that our urban friends across the way would have the same issues over here as our urban friends. Now, I don't know of anybody who would say that it's the right thing to do to take away any abilities from the person who owns the land, whether that be city, rural, wherever. If you own the land, you should have the right to appeal a decision that you don't think is fair.

It's offered in every other system, every other act. Why in Bill 2 would it be removed specifically, when it occurs in a majority of your other acts? It may not be under the Environmental Appeals Board, but, you know, the Minister of Justice talked about the right to appeal, about due process and the rule of law and how we have to make sure that everybody who has an issue can appeal. We heard that. We've heard it in health. You have the right to appeal any decision. We hear this every day. All we're asking for is that landowners be treated fairly, that the person who owns the property has the ability to have a fair decision made, and if they feel that it's been an unfair decision, they have the ability to take it to the next level to ensure that they are heard.

It would seem to me that that wouldn't be that much to ask of this government given that these current boards, the Environmental Appeals Board and the public lands board, already exist, already are in place. In the case of the Environmental Appeals Board it actually works. You know, the Environmental Appeals Board is actually a board that landowners trust. So you have a board that's working. It would seem that you could make that the model.

The Minister of Energy has done a really good job on this bill, and he seems to have hit all the right notes, and he's worked really hard. I know that our critic here, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, has worked equally hard on trying to ensure that what we're bringing forward is reasonable and not unrealistic. It would seem to me that it would be imperative for us to actually consider those options given that they already exist in other acts.

I would implore the Minister of Energy to remind himself that the Environmental Appeals Board works. Landowners like it. Industry likes it. So why not appease both groups and make sure that the right to fairness is in this act?

Thank you.

The Chair: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm actually ashamed of this amendment. It saddens me, hon. member. This is an antilawyer amendment. How is a lawyer to make a living if we allow people to go to an appeals board that is some independent? These lawyers need to go to court. They need to charge $500 an hour to take their case to the Court of Appeal. I'll guarantee you one thing. I don't like lawyers anyway, but I like this one, by the way. I like this one. [interjection] Well, I don't know. I won't even mention my hon. member. I have issues with lawyers, as I have issues with many things.

The reality is this, hon. member. Without a process what this will do is save money. I will guarantee you. I don't care how you write legislation; you will find two lawyers to take each side of the argument, and they will find a way to take this to court. They will find a way to take it to court. What you have here is the process that is actually in place now that has been removed under this act and that we want to put back into it.

So there's a process to appeal to an independent body to resolve the issue, to prevent it from having to go to court. That should be paramount in trying to accelerate the approval processes, to get things moving along, in the end finding a compromise to resolve the issues. We're talking about resolving. Sometimes the issue is pride more than it is anything else. We resolve these issues through the whole board process. If the board gets it wrong, by having an independent appeal, we can alleviate the necessity of going to court. That, to me, has tremendous value in streamlining what your intent here is, the approval process, so these companies can get on with the business of extracting resources in the best interest of the public.

By not having an independent body, you create a problem. I understand what you're trying to do with the bill, but it doesn't make it. It doesn't do it. You're appealing to the regulator, and there's this human psychological condition called: people don't like to admit they're wrong. It's very difficult for that same regulator to make a decision and then have somebody appeal it to them.

An Hon. Member: He's baring his soul here.

Mr. Anglin: At least I've got a soul.

An Hon. Member: Says who?

Mr. Anglin: Say a lot of people. Come on over on this side.

I also have integrity for standing up for landowners. I have the courage and the integrity to go to those people who don't understand the process, who have a fear of going in front of a board, who don't trust lawyers but have an issue, and sometimes it's an important issue. So when a single little old lady living alone, who still wears a cookie apron, is told by somebody working for industry that if she doesn't sign the papers, they're going to bring the police – now, to a normal person that's not even a valid threat, but to an immigrant who came from Nazi Germany, who still fears the police showing up, that is a real threat, and in my mind that's an act of terrorism by that individual. Who's going to come to her aid? Who's going to stand up for her? You, the members on the other side?

An Hon. Member: Yeah.

Mr. Anglin: Really? That's really nice to know. I didn't see you there when I stood up for her.

The reality is that there are people out there that need a process to go through. They are innocent victims, and many of their concerns are valid concerns. They are resolvable. They don't have to go to court, but if you remove this right to go to an independent appeals body, all you're doing is making a case for lawyers to charge more.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Other speakers on this amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to speak to this important amendment, I think probably the most important issue that this bill and this amendment omit. With your permission I'd like to quote, and I hope to pass this on in writing to the minister. This comes from Nigel Bankes, an environmental lawyer from Calgary. Because it's so well and so succinctly expressed, I thought I would just read it.

He asks the question:

What then are the most important differences between the current scheme under [the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act] and the Water Act which provides for an appeal to the EAB and the scheme that will prevail under Bill 2 where there are "powers, duties and functions" "in respect of energy resource activities."

He cites six problems that he sees with this, and they can be easily remedied, as I think others have suggested, by reinstating the EAB.

The first problem, which he expresses so well:

- (1) The review is internal to the Regulator. There is no opportunity for a view from the outside.
- (2) It seems unlikely that the review panel will be receptive to creative and purposive interpretations of the legislation that are markedly at variance with those that informed the original decision by the Regulator that is under review. That is, I think, an observation on human nature as much as it is an observation of law. And if a creative interpretation is unlikely to succeed on a review application it is even less likely to succeed if included as part of a judicial review application given the deference that the courts say is owed to the expert body when interpreting its own statute.
- (3) The current bifurcation of responsibility between the EAB and the line departments creates the possibility for a form of "conversation," shall we call it. That is the idea of a conversation between the courts and the legislature in relation to Charter issues – i.e. not a real-time conversation – between the EAB and the Department . . . It seems unlikely that the Regulator will have a conversation with itself (i.e. it won't be critically reflecting on what the "other" has decided or observed).

- (4) The review will be a review and not a de novo appeal, i.e. it will be a review on the record. It seems unlikely there will be an opportunity to introduce new material except in exceptional circumstances (but here much may depend on the rules that the Regulator develops).
- (5) Access to the courts following the review is channeled to the Alberta Court of Appeal, with leave, rather than directly to the Court of Queen's Bench on a judicial review application (without leave).

I don't know what that means, but obviously this is a lawyer saying that this doesn't address real justice concerns of people who are trying to get redress for something they feel has been wrongfully done to their property.

Finally:

- (6) The new scheme has done nothing to advance the accountability function of a review/appeal by sanctioning a form of public interest standing to supplement the current rules that confer standing based on direct and adverse effect (a test which favours private interests rather than broader public interests).

To me that relates to the question of reducing the ability of interest groups to act on behalf of public lands where there is no directly affected person. We need to have the ability as individuals who represent a broader, nongovernment organization or as individuals with special expertise to stand up for public lands that have no direct, perhaps, adverse effect and no one to stand up for them, therefore.

And finally there is the sheer incongruity that will result from the application of Bill 2 to statutory approvals that relate to energy projects while the same air and water approvals for non-energy projects will continue to be subject to the existing regime.

There's an incongruity there that he cites.

It makes sense to me on a number of levels, but the language is legal, and I put that to you to please review that. I think that's going to be a hill for us to die on over here.

The Chair: The hon. minister to respond.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I thank the hon. member for his thoughtful intervention. As he has observed himself, this is a fairly technical area and a fairly technical argument made by somebody who obviously has a really keen interest in this and knowledgeable interest.

Let me just sort of clarify a couple of points that I think might be helpful to the person that you've heard from and to others as well. That is that the commissioners that we will be appointing to fill out panels on behalf of the new regulator will have a kind of independence that does not exist today in the ERCB and even in some ways in other regulators that are being affected by these changes as well. Again, they're appointed by cabinet. They will be selected on a competency basis, so it'll be a mix of people and a mix of skill sets and understanding and life skills, all those kinds of qualities that you look for in a good panel.

Those commissioners are not involved in the preliminary decisions, so when there's an appeal, it's not appealing to the same person. It's appealing to people who are specialists in the area who are skilled at understanding whether or not the folks in the organization have actually gotten it right in terms of interpreting regulations properly according to the policies that they've been given. There is a greater independence there, and that goes some way at least, I believe, to addressing some of the technical concerns that the hon. member has raised.

With respect, though, to the concerns of interest groups who have a concern about a particular policy area, we're creating a policy management office, which is a new entity, which will be responsible to the two ministers and which will be a place to focus debate around policy issues, which doesn't exist today, which we think will be very helpful particularly to engage folks who have a policy concern and would rather deal with the policy issue at the policy level as opposed to at a particular application level, where there's an opportunity to intervene or try to intervene. What we're trying to do is ensure that the policy debate is at a thoughtful level, where it engages all the right players who want to be part of that, and not have policy developed by wrapping it around a particular application because in today's world that's kind of the only place where people have a chance to engage.

I hope that helps clarify a bit how this is an improved process in a single regulator. I mean, you either have single regulator or you don't, and we're proposing a single regulator. That means, as a result of that, that there are some changes in who appeals go to. What we have structured here is a number of changes that have to be looked at in the full, broad spectrum of changes that we're bringing forward that will create a new, more efficient, more effective regulator that respects that balance that we're all trying to achieve as Albertans between development, environmental responsibility, and landowner respect.

The Chair: Further comments on amendment A1G-SA2?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on subamendment A1G-SA2 lost]

The Chair: Back to amendment A1G.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1G carried]

The Chair: We'll move to amendment A1H.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called on A1H.

[Motion on amendment A1H carried]

The Chair: We move to amendment A1I.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1I carried]

The Chair: We move to amendment A1J.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1J carried]

The Chair: We move to amendment A1K.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A1K carried]

The Chair: We move to amendment A1L. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: We were on a roll. Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment doesn't seem too bad. In their amendment it says . . . [interjection] No, I'm not done yet.

Section 84(1)(a) is amended by striking out "at least 2 other members" and substituting "such other members as the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary." That's something that we're in favour of, having more than two members.

Now, the issue is: what members? I'd like to propose a subamendment that I'm pretty sure you guys will all find favourable. I have the proper number of copies.

The Chair: Please, if the pages could distribute the amendments. Once we have a copy at the table, then the member can start to speak to that.

This amendment, hon. members, will be SA3 to amendment A1L.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In this subamendment section 84 is amended (a) in subsection (1)(a) by striking out "2" and substituting "4" and (b) by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (1.1) Members appointed to the transition committee shall include at least
  - (a) one individual with demonstrable expertise in property rights,
  - (b) one individual with demonstrable expertise in environmental conservation, and
  - (c) two individuals with demonstrable expertise in the energy industry, each in different sectors of the industry.

What we're trying to achieve here in the transition committee is that there are representatives from the major players affected by this single regulator. The energy industry, which is a huge industry, has many different types of industries within it. You know, it could be someone with shallow gas and conventional oil expertise and someone with oil sands expertise. We feel that there needs to be someone with environmental expertise to look after the EUB decisions, all the environment. Then someone with property rights experience is someone who can relay the property rights expertise that needs to be implemented in this section.

Now, I noticed that on November 5 one of the government members actually touched on this. It's in Hansard. It was the Member for Banff-Cochrane talking about a roster of people . . . those commissioners, that, in fact, have the background, the knowledge, the education, and not only the industry perspective but the landowners' perspective, the social perspective, the environmental perspective.

And he carries on.

Now, that's talking about the commission. This is talking more about the transition committee. But I'm honoured to realize that he sees that, you know, there needs to be equal representation so that the voices can be heard. That's why I'm putting forward this subamendment, to ensure that all facets of this industry and the industry players are represented.

Thank you.

The Chair: Further comments on the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be short and brief on this one. This is logical. This makes sense. It's not telling the government who to appoint. What it's saying is that when you make your appointments, find these areas of expertise to balance the board, to get the appropriate knowledge. To us, that's common sense. It just puts it in legislation to guide further governments down the road, particularly when the Wildrose is sitting over there.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy to respond. Did you care to respond, Minister? No? Okay.

I recognize the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've sat here most of the evening now and heard the different comments, looked over these bills until they're blurry, to the point where I thought I should get up and say something. Through this whole course of this bill, from beginning to end, there's one theme that keeps coming up on every amendment in every clause of this bill. It's mainly the reason why there are 17 members sitting in this opposition, and that, fellow members, is property rights. That's key to every one of these bills, to every clause in them and to every amendment. It was key when the government of the day enacted Bill 19, Bill 24, Bill 36, and Bill 50, and we're back to it again.

We have a chance here to address these issues. This amendment to the amendment does exactly that. It puts people with property rights expertise on a panel to address these issues. If there ever was a chance to fix this, this is it. I would ask that we get some support for at least this amendment on this bill because it will make a difference, a huge difference. During my campaign a common theme kept coming up again. Every farmer that I talked to, every rancher, everybody that was impacted by those power lines: they kept going back to property rights, property rights, property rights. It's not about landowners and energy companies. It's about property rights and being treated with respect and dignity and being included in the process. This will do it, so I ask you to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. member for Livingstone – Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: You're going to get it right, sir.

I'd like to chime in to support my member also on that. I spoke to it earlier in another statement, where I talked about having an elected board of directors. That may be too advanced for some people's thoughts, even for one of my members here, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I'd like to compliment the member for bringing this amendment forward.

I'd like to challenge the government to appoint people of proper expertise to this board and to speak to private member's Bill 202.

When the member was in my riding and I had a chance to meet him, I said: if you can go forward with this private member's Bill 202, I'd like to be seen in a public arena giving you a hug because that would guarantee my re-election. The minister for environment actually spoke in favour of my position on Bill 202, and I'd like to compliment her for the record on that.

Going forward, I'd like to just say that I'd like to have you endorse this amendment.

The Chair: Further comments? The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Wilson: Calgary-Shaw.

The Chair: Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Again, Mr. Chairman, I understand. Long nights. No harm, no foul, sir.

I, too, would like to speak in favour of this amendment. I think that it demonstrates a clear objective. If we're going to have this board, having these people with these specific skill sets on the board and defining what those are is the best possible way to ensure that that balance is being struck on all levels. I do hope that the hon. ministers who are in charge of this bill give this serious consideration because this is one of those things that just seems to make sense. If what we're here to do is put forward good, common-sense policy, this is one of those amendments that simply just makes sense.

Thank you.

The Chair: Further comments on amendment SA3? The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: See? You've been dying all night to say it. Thank you.

Again, I just want to reiterate what the rest of my colleagues have been talking about, property rights. That's right in this amendment here. This is what people want in this province. I think it's been identified, and I think we'll hear about it for weeks because we have lots of colleagues in here that either understand property rights or they don't. If they don't, they're going to soon understand them because it keeps coming back to that hour after hour in here. We're not going to give up on what we feel is right.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you. I just wanted to add that as much as many of my colleagues are consistently bringing up the idea of property rights, what we have here is an opportunity to ensure that we've got a three-pronged approach, that we're also looking after the industry's interests by having at least two members with identifiable experience in the energy industry and that we're also looking after the environmental side of things by ensuring that someone has demonstrable experience in environmental conservation. Again, we're not just simply suggesting this is all about property rights. This is about striking the balance that this whole bill was intended to do in the first place. I just wanted to add clarity to that and ensure that that was on the record as well.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
Other comments?

Mr. Hughes: Well, perhaps, Mr. Chair, if I could wrap up the discussion on the amendment and the subamendment but address the proposals in the subamendment. You know, I'm very sympathetic to the intent of the message that's being sent here. When you're appointing people to take on an important transition, you want people who actually understand the subject matter very deeply. I completely accept the intent of this. I just think that the part that isn't perhaps as commonsensical is to put it in legislation, but I know that the hon. members will take me at face value that I will take on the representations and the intent that they have made here tonight when we're making a judgment about who should take on the leadership role here. I appreciate it, but I would not support putting it in legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: Further comments?

I'll call the question on subamendment SA3 to A1L.

[Motion on subamendment A1L-SA3 lost]

The Chair: We're back to amendment A1L.

[Motion on amendment A1L carried]

The Chair: We'll move to amendment AIM.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called on AIM.

[Motion on amendment AIM carried]

The Chair: We'll move to A1N.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

[Motion on amendment A1N carried]

The Chair: That concludes amendment A1.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have one more amendment to put forward, and I shared it with our colleagues across the way earlier today, or at least most of them. The amendment is being circulated now, I believe, or is available for circulation. It really speaks to section 15, where section 15 is amended by adding "including the interests of landowners" after "prescribed by the regulations."

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

For the record, hon. members, we will treat this one as amendment A2.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Chair, I move that we adjourn at this point so that people can return to their warm homes.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10

Employment Pension Plans Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I was going to spend 10 minutes talking about the virtues of lawyers, but it would be very difficult to consolidate all those good ideas into 10 minutes.

I was very pleased to see the support that Bill 10 received in second reading. This support rightly recognizes that the new Employment Pension Plans Act is meant to make it easier and more affordable for private-sector employers to offer pension plans to their employees. With estimates showing that only 1 in 6 Albertans working in the private sector have pension coverage, this legislation is more important than ever.

This act isn't all we're doing to improve pension coverage for Albertans in the private sector. The federal government recently passed legislation allowing for pooled registered pension plans. These plans will help private-sector employees and the self-employed who are without access to a workplace pension plan by creating a voluntary retirement savings vehicle that will be cost-effective and easy for employers to offer. This will help improve both pension coverage and retirement savings income for Albertans. This is the type of targeted solution Alberta has been advocating for years to address concerns that many middle-income Canadians are not saving enough for retirement. We are looking at ways to bring these types of plans forward for Albertans.

I'd also like to respond to some of the questions raised. One of the points brought up during second reading was around the experiences of Nortel employees, some of whom are in my constituency. Their pension plan didn't have the necessary assets to fully pay for their expected benefits when the company went bankrupt. I believe the question was whether or not Bill 10 would prevent that unfortunate situation from happening again. No pension legislation anywhere in Canada would have prevented that from occurring. Legislation to prevent a Nortel-like situation would require plans to be 100 per cent funded at all times. This would be a very difficult and expensive requirement given that pension funds are invested in the markets. We all know that markets carry various levels of risk and that they can perform very well at times but also very, very poorly at others.

What our legislation does is to introduce new funding policy requirements and also call for more transparent disclosure to members. In addition, provisions have been added to require the plan administrator to notify the superintendent if insolvency proceedings begin. This means the superintendent can take immediate action to protect plan members' interests. This action includes the ability of an administrator to wind up the pension plan to ensure that members' interests are considered. The new act also makes provision for an equitable distribution of plan assets between all members if there is a bankruptcy.

This new act also allows for the development of solvency reserve funds. Under current pension legislation employers are responsible for making regular contributions to the pension plan. They must set aside contributions in a pension plan to pay for future benefits, and they must invest the fund. If the plan is a defined benefit plan, the employer is also responsible for making special payments to fund any deficiencies that arise in the pension plan due to adverse events such as investment losses or drops in interest rates. This deficiency must be paid back over no more than five years, and the special payments are paid into the pension plan fund itself. If the plan ends up in a surplus position in subsequent years due to better investment returns or additional required funding, the employer may be legally constrained from removing any excess dollars from the pension plan fund due to the old wording from the plan's rules. Because of this restriction employers may be reluctant to fund benefits at greater levels than the minimums required.

This act permits the creation of a solvency reserve fund account, which would be in addition to the regular pension fund and subject to the rules set out in legislation. The employer would make solvency deficiency special payments into that account. Of course, the employer would still make regular contributions to the main pension fund. If the plan funding improves and the assets in the main pension fund are sufficient to pay for all benefits, the employer would have the ability to access the excess funds in the solvency reserve account. Before a withdrawal could be made, the employer would require consent from the superintendent of pensions. They would also have to leave a contingency amount in the account. With this change employers may be more willing to fund benefits at greater levels, and employees' benefits will continue to be protected as well as or better than under previous rules.

This legislation includes changes that benefit members and employers. Immediate vesting, which gives members immediate entitlement to benefits that accrue under the plan, has been added to recognize that pension plans are part of an overall compensation package. Pensions are part of employees' compensation.

I said earlier that this legislation is meant to make it easier and more affordable for private-sector employers to offer pension plans to their employees. It sets out standards for two new types of plans, target benefit plans and jointly sponsored plans, and allows the superintendent to consider other types of plans as ideas arise. Both of these new types of plans will see employers and employees sharing the risk that comes with funding them, which has traditionally fallen mostly on the employer. This will help the private sector provide pensions at affordable costs without disproportionately burdening anyone with risks.

These are just some of the highlights of Bill 10, but there are many others, which I won't cover tonight. We sincerely hope that this will increase pension coverage for working Albertans. At the end of the day, Mr. Chair, our goal is to help working Albertans prepare for their retirement years. In order to do this, we don't want to force employers into a one-size-fits-all regulatory environment and make it even more challenging for them to offer pensions. This doesn't serve anyone's needs. What we can do is give the private sector the tools they need to develop plans that will work for them and will work for their employees. We very strongly believe that Bill 10 does this, and I look forward to the support of all members in moving this legislation forward.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: The third time is a charm, sir. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to stand up and briefly point out that when legislation makes sense, this opposition is here to support it, not to needlessly oppose it, and that is what we will be doing tonight.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I concur with the Member for Calgary-Shaw. Certainly, it's a good thing. But I think when we have an opportunity to talk about pensions – and I will again when we bring this back to third – we know that there are a lot of workers in Alberta that are not covered by pensions, right? We have about 2.2 million workers in this province, and there are only 236,628 people in registered pension plans, so we have a lot of work that we can do on pension reform. The goal for us should be that all workers have some sort of security for the future to ensure a reasonable standard of living when they are retired.

This bill, I think, is a good first step, and I appreciate the review that we had in regard to it. I will make further comments when we move into third.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

If there are no further questions, no further comments, I'd ask: are you ready for the question on Bill 10, the Employment Pension Plans Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 10 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that the committee rise and report Bill 10 and rise and report progress on Bill 2.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The chair recognizes the Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 10. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report by the hon. Member for Calgary-East, do you concur?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 3

Education Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Education, the MLA for Athabasca-Redwater, I'm very pleased to rise today to move third and final reading of Bill 3, the Education Act.

The Education Act is a blueprint for where we want to take our education system, a blueprint built by Albertans for Albertans, and we are proud of that. We are proud that the vision Albertans shared with us during Inspiring Education, Setting the Direction, and Speak Out is reflected in this legislation.

We are proud that the act puts students first. We are proud that it helps all of us take a stand against bullying and will ensure our schools are welcoming places where diversity is respected and every child feels safe. We are proud that it empowers school boards to make local decisions, and we are proud that the Education Act affirms the important role the family plays as the primary educator of their children.

We sincerely hope that you will all join me in supporting this extremely important piece of legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this bill. This has been a long-awaited bill, multiple tries. Yes, we offered amendments, and maybe some way down the path in the future we'll get to correct some issues dealing with the bill. But it is a necessity, and it is anticipated that this bill is going to do some really good work in our system of education.

I want to compliment the hon. member and I want to compliment the hon. opposition members for working together to try to get this bill passed for the benefit of all Albertans. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We brought up a couple of amendments that didn't quite make it through, but that's part of how the world works sometime, I guess. I think this is a good bill. I think it's a much better bill than the original Bill 2, that was introduced back in the spring. It has a lot of highlights in it. It eliminated a lot of the controversial language in section 16, which in my riding was key and crucial, where my constituents said that this is a better bill now. There's general support for the autonomy for parents with elected boards, the agreement to combine with other boards, the allowing of boards to appoint superintendents without the approval of the minister. With most of the school boards in my riding that I talked to, that was one of the key things.

I just think there are a lot of bonuses to this. I think there was some good work put into it. I think there was some good debate around it. In saying that, I think it's a good bill.

Thank you.

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we've had good progress tonight and that we adjourn the House until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:32 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 8, 2012

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members and guests, let us pray. Holy Creator, as we recall and reflect on the great privileges we have and the ones that we enjoy in our province and our country, let us be ever mindful of those who sacrificed so much to allow us those privileges. Let us never forget that the poppies we wear at this time we wear in their honour. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very distinguished special guest, Mr. Jean Gauthier, former Deputy High Commissioner of Canada to Nigeria. Mr. Gauthier has just recently retired after more than 35 years with Canada's foreign service. The countries he's served in include Egypt, Kuwait, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Yemen, and most recently Nigeria, which is where I had the good fortune to meet Mr. Gauthier. In 2005 Mr. Gauthier was the recipient of a Professional Association of Foreign Services Officers award in recognition of his dedication and commitment. He's found himself in the thick of many a crisis and participated in assisting in the evacuation of Canadians and Americans from Baghdad in 1990 and negotiating with rebels in eastern Zaire in the mid-1990s. Mr. Gauthier is joined by his wife, Mrs. Danielle Fortin, and they are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I would ask that Mr. Gauthier and Mrs. Fortin receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour and pleasure to rise today and introduce to you a school from my riding, Kameyosek elementary school. "Kameyosek" is a Greek word that means beautiful, like the students that are here today. They spent all day here and observed the services we offered today in our rotunda. Now I would request them to please rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am just thrilled today because I have two introductions, both of people that are pursuing their education. The first group is a number of people. There are 16 visiting us today from NorQuest College in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. These people are always self-motivated. They're upgrading; they're pursuing training. I have a lot of admiration for what they're doing. Could I please ask the class from NorQuest along with their teachers and group leaders Brenda Chwyl and Carol Spence to rise. Please welcome them to the Assembly.

The second group I get to introduce today is a special school for me for a couple of reasons. This is the school that my father retired from. He was vice-principal there in the '80s and '90s. I also have a very good friend who is a teacher of one of the classes, and that's Nancy Adamson. The second teacher with us today from Victoria school is Stacey Taylor, and we were lucky enough to have Mrs. Joanne Lappa come with them as the parent/guardian/supervisor. Now, Mr. Speaker, I did go and visit this class, and you will all be thrilled to know that I taught them all how to do amendments. I knew you would love that. Please join me in welcoming the grade 6 class, 65 of them, from Victoria school.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think that concludes the introduction of school groups. We're now going on to other guests. We have 14 introductions at least, so I would ask you from this point on to please bear that in mind as we begin with the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my much better half, Angela Kolody. Angela is a realtor in Medicine Hat, the community we are proud to call home. Among her numerous accomplishments she is also on the cover of the November issue of the Women in Business magazine for Medicine Hat. I think all of my colleagues, especially the hon. Minister of Transportation, can appreciate just how very lucky I am to go home to a beautiful cover model. I would like to ask Angela to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two sets of introductions today. In the first I have the honour this afternoon of introducing to you and through you four women who are seated in your gallery who joined us this morning in the rotunda as we paid our respects for Remembrance Day. These brave women were here today representing the families left behind when a soldier is lost, those who wear the one military medal that no one ever wants to be awarded, and that, of course, is the Memorial Cross. As I introduce them, I'd ask them to stand and please remain standing.

With us today we have Darcia Arndt, widow of Master Corporal Raymond Arndt and cofounder of the Memorial Cross network, a support group for families of the fallen that two brave Alberta widows started several years ago. Her husband, Master Corporal Raymond Arndt, served in the Loyal Edmonton Regiment and was killed in August 2006 in Kandahar.

With her in the gallery is Sherry Clark, mother of Private Joel Vincent Wiebe, 3rd Battalion Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, and Joel's sister Amanda Wiebe. Joel's wife, Anna, was the other cofounder of the Memorial Cross network. She's not here with us today. Private Wiebe was killed by a roadside bomb in June 2007 along with two other Canadian soldiers while serving in Afghanistan.

We also have Amanda Anderson, widow of Corporal Jordan Anderson, 3rd Battalion PPCLI, who was killed in July of 2007, only two weeks after he was part of the ramp ceremony for Private Joel Wiebe.

Mr. Speaker, in honour of all that they and families like them have done and sacrificed so that we can be here today, I invite and I encourage the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the contestants, organizers, and judges from Miss Rodeo Canada, seated in the gallery today. We welcome Miss Rodeo Canada Arleta Bowhay; Miss Rodeo Australia Bobbie-Jo Geisler; Miss Rodeo Airdrie Gillian Shields; Miss Rodeo Okotoks Nicole Schlaak; Miss Rodeo Grande Prairie Sarah Michel; day judge Shannon McCarthy; the president of Miss Rodeo Canada, Jocelyne Lambert; the vice-president of Miss Rodeo Canada, Anne Lamers; pageant co-ordinator Sharon Coke; and photographer Linda Finstad. In the days leading up to the Canadian Finals Rodeo in Edmonton, contestants from across western Canada will participate in a rigorous pageant that produces a female ambassador, who in turn brings Alberta's authentic western culture of the rodeo community to the world. I would now ask that my colleagues please join me in giving the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly students from the Faculty of Law at the University of Alberta who are enrolled in a course on legislative process and legislative planning taught by the Law Clerk, Rob Reynolds, and the Chief Legislative Counsel, Mr. Peter Pagano. I believe that they are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that these fine members of tomorrow's bar rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a young woman who as part of the Edmonton Youth Choir was involved in the wonderful singing we heard this morning as we honoured our heroes at the Remembrance Day observance, Tobyn Walker. Tobyn has been in our chorus since the age of eight and has sung around the world in various choirs, and most notably she sang O Canada for the Canada Day celebrations at the Edmonton Garrison. Tobyn has been an active political commentator at Victoria school of the arts, where she's in grade 10, and she's been nominated by the Deputy Speaker, the MLA for Leduc-Beaumont, to represent the constituency in the TUXIS Parliament. Not only that, but she is the daughter of one of our research analysts and, I believe, a future MLA for Leduc-Beaumont. Tobyn is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask her now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly special guests seated in the Speaker's gallery from the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada and affiliate organizations. My guests this afternoon will be attending the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada's 37th national convention, which opens today in Edmonton, our province's capital city. Also, with pride the organization will be commemorating their founding, which occurred in 1932 at a historic meeting in Edmonton. Congratulations to the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada for 80 years of dedicated service.

I would ask that the representatives please rise and remain standing as I call their names: Mr. Taras Pidzamecky, national president, Ukrainian National Federation of Canada; Mr. George Yopyk, president, Edmonton branch of the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada and national vice-president west; Ms Mary-Ann Sech, president, Edmonton branch of the Ukrainian National Youth Federation; Mrs. Yaroslava Iwasykiw, national president, Ukrainian Women's Organization of Canada; Mrs. Tamara Vorotilenko, president, Edmonton branch, Ukrainian Women's Organization; Mrs. Olya Grod, executive director, Ukrainian National Federation of Canada, who could not be with us this afternoon; Mr. Olek Wowk, Edmonton branch, a long-standing member of the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada; Mr. Leo Zalucky, Edmonton branch member of the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada. I would now ask my guests to please accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: [Remarks in Ukrainian] Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you a special guest from my constituency, West Yellowhead. I'd like to welcome, seated in the member's gallery, Kristie Gomuwka from Edson. Kristie is the assistant executive director of the Edson Friendship Centre. The centre is not only an important place for aboriginal people in the Edson region, but it's a highly respected organization that brings the entire community together through various events and programs that it offers. Besides her work at the centre, Kristie has an eight-year-old daughter, Keira, and still finds time to be an active volunteer in the community. This includes the Edson Boys and Girls Club, the regional Edson Parent Link Centre, and the Edson and District Drug Action Coalition. Probably her most important volunteering this spring was when she knocked on a few doors with me during the last campaign. I'd like Kristie to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of very hard-working, dedicated, and determined guests from Fort McMurray. Annie Lelièvre's son was tragically killed on the notorious highway 63 on December 1, 2011. Today with her is a group of friends and supporters who have helped collect 16,245 signatures and an additional 23,000 online signatures in a petition to force the government to finally take action to twin this deadly highway. We'll be tabling these signatures later today. The promise to finally twin all of highway 63 by 2016 cannot become yet another broken promise from this PC government. The NDP opposition, Annie, and the nearly 39,000 people who signed this petition will make sure of that.

I'd now like to invite my guests to rise as I call their names: Annie Lelièvre, Trieva McBeth, Lisa Avery, Deborah Cinnamon, Jane Glavine, Jessica Lebedynski, Brenda Isbister, Hilda Kristman, Marlene Fargey, John Fargey, Katie Stacey, Michelle St. Jean, Dion Lefebvre, and Henry Hollett. I'd now ask my colleagues to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly five great Albertans: Ludvik Marianych, Sheila Miller, David Jackson, Darren Boisvert, and Olesia Luci-Andryjowycz. David, Olesia, Sheila, and Darren joined me and 45 other Albertans to help oversee the elections in Ukraine and help with the democratic process. The composition of our team was broad, including academics, current and former MLAs, public servants on leave of absence, current and former Canadian professional electoral officials, retirees, students, and professionals. Every province and every territory in this great country was represented. We are proud of our participation in the democratic exercise in Ukraine. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Miss Kianah Howk, a grade 6 constituent of mine who earlier this morning shared her poem, Soft and Free, with members at the Remembrance Day ceremony in the rotunda. Kianah received first place in the Alberta-Northwest Territories Command 2012 junior poem competition and first place in the 2012 Royal Canadian Legion Dominion Command competition for her wonderful poem. Joining her are proud parents, rightly so, Loren and Shelley Howk, and her younger brother, Kaeler. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Laura Fitzgerald, one of my constituents, along with Leigh Allard and Janis Seville of the Lung Association, Angeline Webb of the Canadian Cancer Society, Les Hagan of the Action on Smoking and Health, Paul Dowson of McNeil Consumer Healthcare, along with Arleta Bowhay, previously introduced, Miss Rodeo Canada.

The rodeo swap to stop is a partnership of the Lung Association, Canadian Cancer Society, Action on Smoking And Health, Miss Rodeo Canada, and McNeil Consumer products. This group has visited two rodeos this summer and will be at the Canadian Finals Rodeo to provide information to rural Albertans and support Albertans on how to quit smoking and other forms of tobacco, including chew. To date they have talked to 3,000 rural Albertans, and they hope to speak to many more at the CFR. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you five wonderful neighbours and friends who have trekked up for the CFR this weekend. Two of them don't live in the riding anymore. They moved a half-mile out. Bruce and Joan Gateman are long-time friends and neighbours. I'd ask them to rise. Bill and Carol Steiner, some friends and neighbours from Arrowwood, are also farmers in the area, and Iona Wark, who is travelling with them, is also a next-door neighbour. Her daughter is the same age as me, and we went to school together all the way through. I'd like to ask this House to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any others? I don't think so. The clock is marching, so we'll carry on. Just a moment, please. You have one brief intro?

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Yes.

The Speaker: We'll hold the clock, and then we'll be done intros. Please, quickly.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Ms JudyLynn Archer and Mr. John Young. They're joining us today to acknowledge the work of Women Building Futures, a remarkable not-for-profit here in Edmonton. JudyLynn is the president and chief executive officer. I'd ask her to stand. John Young is also a director on the board. He was with the Calgary Police Service as aboriginal liaison and now works in energy, has been adopted into the Siksika, Piikani, Kainai, Stoney, and Seabird Island communities. They are both seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is inclement weather happening. Some people have driven a long way, so we're going to allow one final introduction by the Government House Leader with your indulgence, please.

Mr. Hancock: Not an introduction, Mr. Speaker, but an unusual unanimous request to ask that we proceed with Ministerial Statements before question period today and that we also extend past 3 o'clock for the Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would ask you one question, then, and the question would be: are you all in unanimous agreement to allow the request as presented by the hon. Government House Leader, and that is to proceed with Ministerial Statements at this time? That would delay question period for a few minutes. Does anyone disagree with that?

[Unanimous consent denied]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MLA Remuneration

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're getting hundreds of calls and e-mails about the giant pay raise that the PCs pushed through under the direction of the Premier. Now she's uncomfortable answering questions, which is understandable. It's pretty hard to explain how $156,000 is actually less than $145,000. Maybe they'll get it when they get 156,000 complaints. Let's see if the Premier is willing to share her thoughts today with the Assembly and with Albertans. Does the Premier still think that this 8 per cent pay raise is a good idea?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what one can easily get tired of is explaining simple mathematics that I know this member understands and I know every single member of this Chamber understands but chooses, simply, to play politics with. The simple fact is this: the day before the last election, aside from the fact that the Premier eliminated committee pay and transition allowance and made sure that there are no pensions and no outstanding liability to Albertans, we also changed the pay structure so that altogether MLAs are receiving, from what used to be $170,000, now $156,000.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most Albertans want MLAs to be paid fairly, and $145,000 is certainly fair. That's what everyone who ran for us in April was prepared to earn, but six months later under the orders of the Premier her MLAs just grabbed themselves another 11 grand. The Premier eliminated the transition allowance, as the Deputy Premier acknowledged. Will she now eliminate the 8 per cent pay raise?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it is also very tiring to hear this member right now applauding this Premier for eliminating transition allowances and actually making Alberta the only province in Canada that doesn't have a transition allowance when she is on the record just a few weeks ago arguing for a transition allowance.

Ms Smith: That's not true, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask the Deputy Premier to check the Hansard.

Mr. Speaker, if a retailer raises the price of a product and then lowers it and calls it a discount, he is subject to prosecution under consumer protection laws. Albertans find it offensive that the PCs are trying to argue that up is down and left is right and black is white and more is less. Will the Premier do the right thing and eliminate this 8 per cent pay raise?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think the member is simply insulting Albertans by trying to introduce explanations about used cars and other things. Albertans know one thing for sure. The Premier made a commitment to have the most transparent method of paying MLAs in the country, she made a commitment that there will be no hidden pay, she made a commitment to lower MLAs' pay, and she has delivered on all of them. Albertans know what is right, and they showed what is right in the last election by giving this Premier the mandate to govern this province.

The Speaker: The hon. opposition leader for her second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Well, they certainly didn't campaign on that.

Mr. Speaker, in his desperate attempts to spin to Albertans that big is small, that over is under, and that here is there, the Deputy Premier apparently also believes that false is true. He told a radio audience that $156,000 is the total cost to taxpayers for each MLA and that they don't receive any other expenses or allowances. Wrong. There are mileage allowances, fuel expenses, car washes, housing allowances, daily session allowances, not to mention cellphone, home Internet, home security systems, parking, rental cars, and so forth. Will the Deputy Premier set the record straight and acknowledge that he misled the public?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I guess one could be calling points of order on this question all over the place.

I was under the impression that up until this time we were discussing MLAs' salaries. Indeed, there are no added expenditures to Alberta taxpayers relevant to MLAs' salaries. It's all laid out, and the opposition is getting very upset because it is very transparent and very easy to understand. But, yes, the member is correct. MLAs do get cellphones, and MLAs like the Leader of the Official Opposition who don't live in Edmonton also get to have some accommodation allowance.

Ms Smith: Well, he told Rutherford something completely different.

Mr. Speaker, questions about government behaviour seem to bother the Premier, and she obviously doesn't want to be seen to be defending her leadership on this issue, but we suspect she's doing all of this because she needs a way to keep her caucus in line after forcing all of them to chip in to pay back the no-meet committee pay. Is this what the Premier calls raising the bar on accountability? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Premier has the floor. Let's respect that, please.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 23 Albertans voted for a government that had a vision that defined the future of this province, and in every constituency in this province they voted for candidates that they believed represented their vision and their values. As a result of that, we have a front bench and a caucus of Progressive Conservatives that I am proud to stand with, that I am proud to call colleagues, and whom I trust completely to deal with the issues that the opposition raises in question period.

Ms Smith: Glad she started answering questions, Mr. Speaker.

The way this RSP scheme works, we get an extra cheque sent to each MLA every fiscal year for $17,400 and another $4,900 in matching funds as an RSP benefit, for a total of $22,300. Now, in May the Assembly ordered the Members' Services Committee via Motion 11 to report its recommendations on alternatives to the MLA pension plan. Presumably, this is to give us a chance to review, debate, and vote on those recommendations. When will that happen?

The Speaker: Hon. members, the report has not yet been completed, as you know, and it will be coming forward to the Assembly once it is.

I've noted a point of order from the Government House Leader and another point of order by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. We'll deal with those at the right time. At that time we will hear the point of order, and then we'll also address them.

Mr. Saskiw: No. Point of clarification.

The Speaker: You need something clarified, do you? Something that I have said that you need clarified?

Mr. Saskiw: Yes.

The Speaker: What is it, please?

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, according to Government Motion 11, that was passed on May 29, 2012, the report was supposed to be tabled to this Legislature once it was done. On November 6 there was a report that was produced in the committee, and we're wondering whether or not that report will actually be put forward, or will the will of the Assembly be neglected?

The Speaker: Thank you. I'll clarify that for you later. We're running a little late right now, but I will clarify that for you.

The hon. leader.

Justice System Review

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've seen the government avoid a number of crucial issues, from illegal political donations to out-of-control executive expenses and now the most serious matter of child abuse and sexual assaults. The Premier has refused to talk about it in the Assembly. The Justice minister then brushed it off as an isolated incident, yet the Justice department itself now admits that there are multiple cases of stayed prosecutions, which means sexual predators are at large in our communities. Why won't the Premier and the minister order an independent, impartial investigation to prevent more victims from being denied justice?

Ms Redford: The information that came before the House last Thursday was tremendously serious, very important, and needs to be looked into. It's very important that we ensure that justice is obtained in every case that we have before the courts in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice and I along with the Minister of Human Services this morning were at a Breakfast with the Guys event with 500 people in Edmonton who are all fully aware that there are very difficult and tragic circumstances affecting victims of domestic abuse and child sexual abuse in this province. We take that seriously, we work through our programs with our ministers to ensure that happens, and we will ensure that this issue is dealt with appropriately in the justice system.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the department investigating itself is not the answer, and the investigation needs to go far beyond this case of the little girl in Airdrie who was repeatedly abused and never saw her abuser face trial because of delays. There are many such cases. In fact, judges are warning us that something is terribly wrong. One ruling said that the court cannot simply accede to the government's allocation of resources and tailor the period of permissible delay. When will the government admit that it's allocation of resources is failing Albertans?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we know that in our justice system the Crown prosecutors, more Crown prosecutors than five years ago when our safe communities program started, are doing their work every single day to ensure that people are brought to justice. The strength of a justice system is that we ensure that there are rules in place. That is part of what we need to deal with with respect to this issue. It is not helpful to have people making political hay of the fact that there are victims suffering in this province. We need to ensure that we are healing victims, protecting victims, and preventing people from becoming victims as well as strengthening the justice system, and that is what we are doing.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we need to make sure that justice is served, and we think this matter of funding is critical for the administration of justice in our province. Either there are too few resources or the allocation of those resources is seriously flawed, and the consequences are horrific. The investigation of this matter by the department itself is not adequate. We don't understand. Why won't they simply order an independent investigation so we can get to the bottom of it and fix it?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, every day in the justice system we have professionals that are working to deal with these issues. These are the professionals that run our system, including the assistant deputy minister of public prosecutions. It is entirely appropriate for us to ask our professional public servants to ensure that the circumstances in every court in this province are exactly what they should be, and that is what we are doing today.

Child Poverty

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has its priorities all mixed up. We face a moral crisis in child poverty, with thousands of aboriginal children in government care, yet these Conservatives are more concerned about padding their own RRSPs while Alberta Liberals want to focus on values of equality of opportunity for less fortunate Albertans. The Finance minister has no funding plan to deal with these 70,000 children in poverty other than to wish them good luck. To the Premier: will you do the right thing and institute a government-funded school lunch program so children living in poverty don't have to learn on an empty stomach?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we are looking into, through the social policy framework discussions and further, a program to reduce and eliminate poverty in this province at a higher level than simply on a program-by-program basis. Yes, it's important that every child go to school having had something to eat and ready to learn, but solving child poverty is not just as simple as the hon. member would suggest. It's a lot more complex than that, and simple solutions will not solve the problem.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, basic nutritious food is one of the basic needs we as human beings have. Given that these children are our children, their future is our future, and their care is our shared responsibility and given the overwhelming evidence that investment in early childhood leads to higher literacy, graduation, employment, better income rates, better health outcomes, and less crime and actually ends up saving the government money, to the Premier: will you keep your promise to Albertans by funding early childhood learning, full-day kindergarten, preschool and after school care, especially in communities of high risk? Please, Premier, will you do the right thing?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing that this hon. member has said that our government does not agree with. That is one of the platforms that we ran on in the last provincial election. It's why we have introduced this terribly important work with respect to the social policy framework, and it's one of the reasons that we support organizations such as Women Building Futures, which I know another hon. member will be speaking to later. We have to ensure that families are strong, that parents are employed, that parents have skills so that they can participate in the economy. We have to make sure that our Department of Human Services is putting programs in place to support vulnerable children. That is how we will ensure that every child is able to excel to the best of their ability.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, Albertans don't need excuses, and they don't need to be wished good luck. They need real action.

Given that Alberta's parents are working harder than ever to make ends meet, all they need is a hand up, yet this government demands a handout from them in the form of mandatory school fees. If they can't afford to pay, they send the collection agencies after them, and the kids can't even attend grad. This is shameful in the wealthiest place on the planet. To the Premier: why do you insist on nickelling and diming our families for school fees? Why can't you just bring in a progressive tax system?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, our education system is the best funded in Canada. Certainly, we do have some school fees, and those are set locally by the school boards in consultation with the parents. We had a long discussion about that in committee and in second reading with respect to what we're going to do in the Education Act and what the strategy is going forward. I don't recall the hon. member chiming in on that debate. It's nice to hear his feedback now. Maybe he can take part in the regulatory review on school fees that we promised after the Education Act.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by Little Bow.

Election Finances Legislation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every time we ask this government a question about election financing, the Minister of Justice jumps up to tell us that he'll be introducing changes in legislation in this session. What he has apparently forgotten in drafting this legislation is that the PCs are not the only political party in the province. No one representing the Alberta NDP was consulted by this minister while he was considering changes to the act that most impacts our ability to do our work as a political party. To the Minister of Justice: did he simply forget about other political parties while he was drafting the legislation, or was this yet another attempt to create a piece of legislation that only works for his party?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's rather untrue comments they're just that, untrue. My office and I have met with people from the Wildrose caucus, people from the Liberal caucus . . .

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order.

Mr. Denis: . . . and an invitation was also sent to the New Democrat caucus. I'm not exactly sure what's happened with that. At the same time I take it seriously that when we have these meetings, they're also on an embargoed basis. There have been meetings, and there have been offices – I'm not exactly sure what this member is talking about.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you had a point of order. It's noted.

The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this government is quick to differentiate between the government and PC MLAs and the PC Party when it suits them and given that a bill briefing with an MLA is entirely different than a consultation with appropriate officials of a political party, that should be necessary to draft legislation affecting the electoral process, why is this minister attempting to confuse the issue in order to dodge responsibility for failing to consult with affected political parties except, of course, his own?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, if anything is confusing, it's this member's rambling comments. I really don't know where this member is coming from. Regardless, we will be introducing the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012, the week after next, next week, of course, being the break week. I welcome the member to join the debate.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, for the record will the minister tell the House whether or not there was consultation with the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta in the drafting of this legislation and, if so, what the nature of the consultation was and which individuals were involved?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, again, I don't know where this member is coming from. We've had consultations with all three opposition parties here. I'm not really sure what his issue is.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you have another point of order. It's noted.

I believe, Edmonton-Centre, you had a point of order. That is also noted.

On that point, let us move on to the hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Victims of Sexual Assault

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A story in the Lethbridge Herald last week tells of a heroic 15-year-old girl who was proud enough to stand up and defend herself from what happened. She got assaulted when she was six years old. The young offender served time for the crime, was prosecuted, and his therapy was paid for by this government. However, the victim of this case was not able to have her therapy fully paid for. Due to the court order, the restraining order, the victim was forced to drive to Calgary from Coaldale for her treatment. To the Minister of Justice: can you please look into this case and ensure that the family is fully compensated for their therapy and their travel costs?

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for that question. I'm not aware of that particular case, but I will look into it right after question period. We'll be in consultation with his office.

Mr. Donovan: To the Minister of Justice. I thank him for that, and I will get you all the information. To the same minister. I think there's not one Albertan that would want the victim of sexual assault to receive second-class service. Given the offender priority will this minister tell the House how we can go about changing this government's misguided policy and make sure we put our victims first?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are many elements to the justice system. This member is quite correct. I think that victims do deserve to be put first, and I look forward to the meeting that he and I can have to discuss this particular issue in a private forum and also to talking to the victim myself.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night I had the opportunity to talk with a good friend of mine, Sheldon Kennedy, who is a strong advocate against sexual predators. He told me we need to educate the public, attempt to prevent the abuse before it happens, and also how to help all of these victims. To the minister: what programs do we have in place to educate the public on sexual abuse and sexual predators?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier mentioned, just this morning I was at a private-sector event that seeks to raise awareness of women that have had violence against them. That also includes sexual violence. I again thank the member for his passion on this issue. I look forward to talking to him further.

I also wish to critique the Leader of the Opposition. At no point did I say it was an isolated incident. Even if it was, one is too many.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Bitumen Upgrading

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta's Industrial Heartland we've heard the question asked several times: are you there yet? We have finally had the answer: yes, we are. I note that the North West Redwater Partnership upgrader has announced that it will begin construction next spring on a refinery, the Sturgeon bitumen refinery, in the Industrial Heartland to process bitumen that the province has taken in lieu of cash royalties for the benefit of all Albertans. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Does this mean that the government is back in the business of being in business, and are we using tax dollars to prop up big business?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to receive the question from the hon. member. There are no public funds going into this. What we have done is that we are using bitumen in kind that can be upgraded to give greater value for Albertans. It's a very responsible policy. This is the first new refinery to be built in this province in 29 years. This refinery takes raw bitumen and turns it into much more valuable commodities such as diesel, which are then worth much more than bitumen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I believe that you've somewhat answered that question. Could you further explain what the benefit is to all Albertans of taking bitumen as the product instead of royalties in cash?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many good reasons to take bitumen in kind. One of them is that you can use it as a strategic asset to put into play to help ensure that we get value-added refineries in this province like this one. You know, this creates some 8,000 jobs during the construction, Mr. Speaker, and the province is also making a much better margin on our product when we sell it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you. My last question is to the same minister. I understand that this upgrader will also incorporate carbon capture in the initial design. What are the benefits, please?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are several benefits, obviously, to incorporating carbon capture in this. One that people will notice right off the bat is reduced emissions. Just as importantly, carbon dioxide that is captured has additional value and can be used for enhanced oil recovery; i.e., put back into the reservoir. It helps improve the production at the end of the day, so we're getting more oil out of the ground as a result of this investment. Of course, that means more longer term jobs in rural Alberta and more royalties for the taxpayer over the long term.

Of course, we all await the policy on climate and science from the opposition.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Sherwood Park.

Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's sad that this government continues to insist that the case of an Airdrie rape victim's day in court being dropped is just a one-time incident. The cracks in our justice system have been clear since 2007, when I chaired the safe communities task force, when the report clearly said: "The current criminal justice system is not working." "The system is fractured," and we will need to increase "the number of Crown prosecutors" in the province "to handle the increased volumes of cases." Could the Justice minister then admit that the justice system in this province remains fractured? How many Crown prosecutors . . .

Mr. Denis: Yes. I'm very happy to answer that question, but first I must correct an inaccuracy. At no time did I use the words "isolated incident." Secondly, we've added 69 new prosecutors since 2006. Mr. Speaker, this year I've added two new Provincial Court judges. Next year I'll appoint two more. On top of that, as we've discussed over the past few days, we've also advocated that the federal government put four more Court of Queen's Bench justices. If there's one thing that this member could do, it's join me in advocating for that from the federal government because it's a federal responsibility. It's the least she could do.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to join him in getting more judges in this province.

Given that the federal minister has said – now, I want you to listen – that the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act is stronger than the federal legislation and, in fact, is in concert with the federal bill, can the Justice minister please explain why he continues to hide behind excuses instead of proclaiming our bill and protecting our children?

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The same question several days ago; the same answer is going to happen today. Just last week I brought this very issue up to Minister Rob Nicholson, the federal Minister of Justice, and he indicated to me, quite correctly, that if we want to proclaim this bill, it supersedes the federal bill. There are different reporting issues here in this particular bill. We're on this topic. We have the same end goal in mind as this particular member, but at the same time it really puzzles me as to why she doesn't understand the division of powers in the Constitution.

Mrs. Forsyth: I understand the divisions because I did it with the PCHIP legislation along with the Criminal Code.

Given that the Justice minister voted against the Justice System Monitoring Act – it's on record – that followed recommendations from the five-year-old safe communities task force report to require annual reporting on our justice system and given that this government has failed to implement the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, how can this minister keep making excuses for his lack of action on keeping Albertans safe?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, it is beyond me how this member keeps making excuses for her own bill versus the federal bill when I've clearly outlined what the issues are. If she'd like a meeting, all she has to do is call my office.

The Speaker: We're going to recognize Calgary-East, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Driving Competence Test

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of questions and statements made in this Assembly in recent days, I have been getting calls from seniors in my constituency concerned that the government is going to take away their driver's licence. Can the Minister of Transportation please tell this House and all seniors around this province, once and for all, what is going on, sir?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to assure this member and this House and all drivers in Alberta that the privilege of driving will not be suspended for medical reasons without proper information from a doctor. There is testing, which may include a supervised road test, and suspensions are only at the decision of the registrar of motor vehicles in accordance with the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators medical standards for drivers, which is the national guide used by both physicians and others. I will table that today in the House.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister clear up the confusion related to driver ability reporting and issues about testing methods that have been raised in this House and are concerning to all of my constituents?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, anybody with a concern about a person's ability to operate a motor vehicle can, under the Traffic Safety Act, provide information to the registrar of motor vehicles. The registrar reviews the concern, and if he sees validity, he can request that the licence holder meet with the registrar or have a physical condition assessment completed by a physician and sent to the registrar in accordance with the CCMTA medical standards for drivers. This could include eyesight tests, hearing tests, DriveABLE and SIMARD tests. These test results are provided by the licensee's doctor and are kept confidential by the registrar.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, talking about these medical conditions and medical reports, all these medical reports and results can be complicated and difficult to understand. I know I can't always read my prescriptions from my doctor. How does the decision to suspend a licence occur?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a Medical Review Committee, established under section 59 of the Traffic Safety Act, as an advisory body on matters concerning health and physical conditions that may constitute a hazard to the public in the operation of vehicles. The registrar uses the committee's advice, and the driver's physician completes the medical examination for motor vehicle operators form as part of its review of a driver's licence. If the decision to suspend a licence is made, the registrar provides written notification to the licence holder. This decision can be appealed to the Transportation Safety Board.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Oil and Gas Royalty Revenues

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has said that we need to ensure that our actions are fiscally responsible and fair not only to this generation but to those that follow. I agree with this statement, but actions speak louder than words. Currently this government spends all of the $11 billion it brings in in nonrenewable resource revenue. The province is taking on substantial debt to pay today's bills, while Norway has saved $600 billion for when the oil and gas runs out. To the Finance minister. Given the heritage trust fund is worth less in real terms than it was in 1976, does your government believe it has a God-given right to spend all of the oil and gas revenue as soon as it comes in?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do not have a God-given right to spend taxpayers' money. We have a responsibility to taxpayers to spend their money wisely. They entrusted us with that responsibility on April 23 of this year over the social credit policy, or the tax me more policy, or the tax me even more policy. We will be bringing forward in this Legislature a budget that is balanced, a budget that will include operating, a budget that will include savings, and a budget that will include a capital plan. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know it's Thursday. [interjections] Hon. members, I know it's Thursday, and I know that we're all a little bit anxious; however, I would ask you to please return to the decorum we had a few moments ago.

Hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition, you rose on a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: Thank you. We'll note that point of order. I believe that is point of order 6, and we'll deal with those in the order in which they arose.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you have the floor.

Mr. Hehr: I realize this House seems to have a lot of fun with actually paying for things that we use with revenue we bring in, but I stand by that first statement. I don't think the hon. minister answered it in any way, shape, or form. Do you consider the royalty wealth that we bring in in this province our God-given right to spend in one generation? That is what we have done.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I did answer the question. No, it's not anyone's God-given right to spend the natural resources that this province has been blessed with. What we are doing is spending taxpayers' money wisely based on the financial policy that we have brought forward. It's unfortunate that they don't agree with it. Obviously, Albertans did, or they wouldn't have put us on this side of the House.

As I said, we will be bringing forward a balanced budget in the spring that will include an operating plan, a savings plan, and a capital plan. I've said it before, I'll say it again, and I'll keep saying it even to those folks who don't seem to listen to it.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Has this government simply given up the hopes and aspirations of former Premier Lougheed of saving something for when this province is out of oil and gas? That's what I'm hearing from this minister.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, as someone who grew up with many members of the Lougheed family and with someone who was very close to Mr. Lougheed – he was somewhat of a mentor to me – I can say no, we have not given up on the future of this province, as some others may have. We believe in the vision of this province. We believe in the opportunity that it presents not only for the pioneers who came here originally but for all of those new Albertans that are coming and the Albertans that are here. They are here because we create opportunity for them now and into the future, and we will continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Pathology and Radiology Standards

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to a report by the Alberta College of Physicians & Surgeons there are serious deficiencies in the accuracy of health care diagnoses, but there are no provincial standards. Patients are forced to gamble with their health. Yesterday the minister was quoted as saying that he's not concerned about the quality and safety of health care services in Alberta as a result of this report. My question is to the Minister of Health. Why isn't the minister being straight with Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the report to which the hon. member refers was not prepared by the college of physicians of Alberta. It was prepared by Dr. Dennis Kendel, the former registrar in the province of Saskatchewan for the college there. The report was in response to a request by me, following a series of incidents last year in which errors were detected in radiology and pathology tests, to look at how we can, in fact, strengthen our system and improve it, to do all we can to prevent further errors from occurring in the future. The report does not present any concern to me, nor should it to Albertans, about the quality and safety of radiology or pathology services in this province.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. Given that 29 men at the Royal Alexandra hospital were falsely led to believe that they did not have prostate cancer and given that in Drumheller alone almost 14 per cent of cases were either misdiagnosed or misread, to the Minister of Health: what evidence do you have that no one has suffered unnecessarily, when your ministry has failed to set standards to protect Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what's given here is that it appears that the hon. member is attempting to engage in fearmongering for patients in our health care system about the quality of services they receive. There was no evidence presented. In fact, the point of the review, as the hon. member should appreciate, was, first of all, to look at the systems and processes that were in place in the specific facilities, see what could be done to strengthen them. At no time and in no case was it indicated that there was any serious harm done, nor did anyone die as a result of these errors. Errors occur in our health system from time to time. Our responsibility as government is to do all we can to prevent that.

Mr. Bilous: I'm sure the Minister of Health will appreciate this quote. Given that the report clearly and explicitly states that "no one, including the Minister of Health, can assure Alberta citizens of uniformly safe and high quality of care regardless of where health care is accessed in Alberta," why did the minister mislead Albertans by saying that he has no concerns about the quality of health care services in Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I guess we should have come to expect from the hon. member, the quote is presented entirely out of context. The report concluded that there were a number of areas, particularly information sharing, where the College of Physicians & Surgeons and Alberta Health Services needed to work closely together to document privileging of physicians in Alberta facilities, to provide information to support the licensing and the privileging process, and that with the strengthening of those processes in Alberta we would in fact be in a position to provide even stronger assurance in the future that our health services are safe and that they are effective. That is the only message that should be presented.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Sherwood Park.

Lobbying Government

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With PC cronyism seemingly at an all-time high in this province, I'd like to report to the Justice minister that I have taken his advice with the Ethics Commissioner regarding a pair of possible breaches of the Lobbyists Act to slosh taxpayer money among the government family. However, I am shocked that the minister should have to rely on us to clean up the ethical disasters of this government. Doesn't the Justice minister agree that when evidence surfaces of possible illegal lobbying activities, it's his job to take the bull by the horns, not ours?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, to anyone who has any information of a wrongdoing I always say: take it to the Chief Electoral Officer. I'm very happy that this member has taken my advice and done so.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, given that the Lobbyists Act intends to curb inappropriate influence on government and that the Treasury Board president and Finance minister admitted to meeting with the $430,000 PC donor demanding money from the government in 2011, will the Justice minister finally do the right thing and once and for all call an investigation on these lobbying activities?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, once again, it is not incumbent upon the Justice minister or anybody else in this government or in the opposition to call for an investigation. Investigations are independent. If this member has any information – he's a lawyer, I know – he should just forward it over to the appropriate authorities. It seems like he has.

Mr. Saskiw: Mr. Speaker, I took the Justice minister's advice, but it doesn't let him or the government off the hook. Will the minister tell the Assembly why it is necessary for the opposition to fight for answers that taxpayers are entitled to in a free and democratic society and why this government won't do the right thing right off the bat? Why wait?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, what I would really like to know is why the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills keeps dragging people's names through the mud here when there has been no finding of guilt whatsoever. Let's let this process work. He's a lawyer. He knows people are not presumed guilty in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Medicine Hat.

Strathcona Community Hospital

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, health care is one of the top priorities for all Albertans. As our municipalities continue to grow, our health care system will have to meet growing demands in order to ensure quality health care for all. Recently there have been many new hospital announcements. To the Minister of Health: what is being done to ensure that phase 1 and phase 2 of the Strathcona community hospital are constructed on schedule to meet the pressing health care needs in my constituency.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate and commend the work the hon. member has done on behalf of this project and continues to do on behalf of the people of Sherwood Park. Phase 1, scheduled to open next year, is on track. Work is under way. The building exterior and roof area have almost been completed. Work on the interior spaces has begun. Floor slabs have been poured, and mechanical and electrical service rough-ins are now being installed. The construction continues, and phase 1 is on track to be completed in 2013.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health: what type of advanced medical services will be available in this hospital to ensure that my constituents can receive the quality health care they deserve and need?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, plans for the scope of services at the hospital were the subject of extensive consultation with area health professionals and community leaders. Some of the services include 24/7 emergency department service; urgent care; allied health services such as rehabilitation, occupational and physical therapy, chronic disease management; a full-service laboratory with diagnostic imaging, including X-ray, CT, and ultrasound; and several ambulatory clinics, that will include addressing needs such as IV therapy and orthopaedic follow-up in the community.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. To the same minister. I have received actually dozens of calls from my constituents in Sherwood Park who would like to see dialysis treatment offered at the Strathcona community hospital. Can you tell me if dialysis treatment will be included in the plans for phase 1 or phase 2 of our hospital?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for the question. Access to dialysis treatment is a subject of growing interest across the province as more people develop kidney disease. We have not yet completed the final functional program for phase 2 of the hospital. Dialysis treatment is certainly one area that could be considered as part of the planning process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Addiction Services in Medicine Hat

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are honest, Albertans work hard, and Albertans are truthful. So when someone makes a promise, Albertans take them at their word. Unfortunately, this PC government has shown just how out of touch they are, breaking promise after promise after promise. Frankly, Albertans are more surprised when this government actually does something that they say they're going to do. Medicine Hat has been promised a much-needed detox and treatment centre, and this government has yet to follow through on their promise. Will the Minister of Health please tell the people of Medicine Hat when he will keep his promise?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has made a commitment to a new detox and treatment facility in Medicine Hat. We have been working diligently for some time now with the local community. As the hon. member may or may not know, one of the key steps in the process is to determine the site for the project. I understand that a very important meeting involving the city has or is about to take place to confirm that point.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Medicine Hat is still the only major community without a residential detox and treatment centre and given that the 2007 safe communities report, of which the Minister of Transportation was a member, said that the number one priority is to take action and treat addictions, can the Minister of Health explain why the PC government can't keep their promise?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I've just indicated, we are keeping our promise. I know that I personally have met with the municipal elected leaders in Medicine Hat in the last few months as well as the key community stakeholders in that area to discuss this issue and others that are of importance to them. No government that I'm aware of in Canada has placed as much focus and attention on addictions treatment and mental health services as this government. We will continue to pursue the needs across the province, including those in Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government is starting to come around on the Wildrose proposal to have an infrastructure priority list, will the Minister of Infrastructure give us some kind of indication of where the Medicine Hat detox and treatment centre ranks on the government list?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that this government and this caucus has had a priority list for some time. We presented it in the weeks leading up to April 23, and the people of Alberta endorsed it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Long-term and Continuing Care

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard a great deal about seniors requiring long-term care and also that seniors are taking up acute-care beds in hospitals and creating problems in acute-care systems. There is an important distinction between continuing care and long-term care, which is under the Health Act. My questions are for the Minister of Health. How many of the 1,000 new continuing care spaces being created this year and next do you estimate will be used to accommodate seniors assessed as requiring long-term care?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you to the hon. member for the question. The answer, of course, depends on how many seniors require long-term care. What we are finding is that the majority of people who are waiting for placement in continuing care, in fact, require everything from home care to supportive living. A small number do require long-term care. Our philosophy and our approach – and I'm pleased to restate it – is to bring health care to people in their home environment, and that includes supporting people at home as much as possible and providing them with facility-based long-term care when their needs require it.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you. To the same minister: given the requirements of the Nursing Homes Act how does the minister plan to find the staff required to operate the significant increases in the number of long-term care spaces?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the Nursing Homes Act and a regulation under that act do prescribe the number of hours of skilled nursing care that are to be provided to residents in long-term care facilities, one of the classifications of care. It is an ongoing challenge across the country to recruit nursing staff, particularly registered nurses who are available both part-time and, increasingly, full-time, to ensure that we can meet those requirements. I guess going forward, we'll continue the work on our health workforce strategy. We'll continue to try to create the most attractive working environment for nurses and other professionals in our province. I dare say that we've had a lot of success at doing that.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you. Finally, to the same minister: given that many constituents of Edmonton-Decore have asked about the seniors' advocate, can the minister provide more information about the role and mandate of the seniors' advocate that is proposed? Will it be similar to the mandate of the Child and Youth Advocate? If not, how and why will it differ?

2:40

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are currently in the policy development stage with respect to the seniors' advocate. Our government will meet the commitment that we made during the election to establish the advocate. In doing so, obviously, we're looking for what the advocate can do in terms of addressing specific complaints that are brought forward. But we are also looking at the role of the advocate and the advocate's capacity to assist seniors to navigate the health system. We all find as MLAs on this side of the House that the vast majority of the concerns that are expressed to us by seniors are a health-related concern. So we're looking not only at the dispute resolution process, but we're looking at supporting seniors to make informed decisions.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Calgary-Bow.

Berry Creek Reservoir

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The local disaster at the Berry Creek reservoir started this past September, and the only contact affected landowners have received is the contractor calling to say that it wasn't his fault. My questions are to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. When will this minister show leadership and have her department contact the landowners who have been affected by this unnecessary blunder?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, our department is in contact with landowners in that area. Twice a year our department meets, at the beginning of the season and on November 21, as I've shared with the hon. member and with a certain constituent of his whom he asked me to call. We've shared that our department will be meeting with stakeholders in his constituency on November 21 to talk about this particular item. We meet with them twice a year every year.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that fixing this problem will be expensive enough and given that hard-working farmers, ranchers, and landowners have told me that this may be a complete disaster for them, will the minister ensure that farmers and ranchers will be compensated if they have any financial losses due to this unfortunate government blunder?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the constituent that this member asked me to call – I asked that particular constituent what his issues were, and Mr. Pedersen let me know that there were two issues that he had. One was safety issues with the valve, that we get that right when we're repairing that, and that absolutely is happening. The other issue that he talked about was the reclamation, and it had to do with the silt, that when we are doing that reclamation, the silt will not interfere with the irrigation equipment.

Mr. Strankman: Given that this ministry has blundered on the ferruginous hawk issue in my constituency and the government failed to protect Alberta's precious environment and the ecosystem of the special areas, how can we trust that they will take the local disaster at the Berry Creek reservoir seriously? We want action now.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we take this very seriously, and we take all of the issues in our department and in this government's departments very seriously. As I've said, we are working on this issue. The safety issues are first and foremost to us. We are working on the safety issues to repair this to make sure that in the spring if there are water issues, that will be provided for the irrigators as well. We are working on this. We are dealing with safety issues, we are dealing with landowners, and we are making sure the community is very well informed.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Care Home Scalding Incident

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my sad duty today to inform the House of a serious incident that has taken place within a care home. On November 2 at a home in southern Alberta a person with a disability was given a bath. The water was too hot, and the person was injured, receiving burns and blisters to their ankles and buttocks. I learned of this incident just yesterday, on November 7, and this is my first opportunity to inform the House.

I will begin by expressing my profound regret to the family and to the person involved. I expressed the same directly to the father and mother in phone conversations last night and this morning. Mr. Speaker, I'm sure I speak for all members of this House when I say that I am shocked and outraged that this has happened within our province, that it has happened to a person unable to fend for themselves and fully dependent on others for their well-being.

While more details will emerge as a result of the investigation, I can currently share the following with the House. A staff member prepared a bath for this person and lowered the person into the bath using a lift device. It became apparent that the person was experiencing distress, and they were removed. The person developed blisters and was transported to the hospital for medical attention. The person was attended and diagnosed by an emergency room physician, and treatment was administered, Mr. Speaker.

The worker responsible fully briefed their supervisor on November 4. The supervisor and employee of a contracted care agency notified the persons with developmental disabilities authority, and they subsequently notified our department. As I stated earlier, I was notified yesterday.

A protection for persons in care unit is currently investigating, and it is not my intention to interfere in that investigation. However, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel it is acceptable or responsible to wait before proactive steps are taken. Accordingly, department staff have moved the injured person to a different care setting, and home care, through Alberta Health Services, is providing care and attention at this time. Further, I have asked the department to review all of the facilities of the contract service provider involved, to review the files of all of the people in the care of this particular agency, and to review the inspection and maintenance records of their equipment. I will stress that at this time I have no reason whatsoever to suspect that this examination will unearth anything untoward. I take these steps as a precautionary measure.

Mr. Speaker, I'm particularly troubled because this has happened before in our province. In one case familiar to all of us in this House it led to the tragic death of a person in care. Since that horrific incident the government has paid to install over 2,000 temperature control devices in care settings and has facilitated the training of some 850 workers.

I am currently of the understanding that the home involved in this case was in fact equipped with a temperature control device and the staff trained in its use. I also understand that the staff were trained in proper bathing protocols and that the proper bathing protocols were posted at the bathing site. Given these precautions I cannot currently speculate as to why the incident occurred, and I'm forced to await the outcome of an investigation in order to answer those questions. Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to assure this House that department staff will again review bathing protocols with all care agencies' staff and with our own front-line care staff.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to close this statement by again expressing my profound regret and deep feelings to the injured person and to their family. I can assure this House that we will co-operate fully in the investigation that's now under way, and we will learn from the results of the investigation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I ask for a response from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, unanimous consent has been asked for from the Liberal caucus and the NDP caucus to allow them to also comment. I would ask for that unanimous consent at this time, which would allow them a little bit of time to prepare some comments.

Does anybody object to giving unanimous consent to the Liberal and NDP caucuses to offer brief comments on this subject matter? If so, please say so now.

The Speaker: We'll recognize first Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is truly a tragic situation, and I thank the minister for his statement. Our thoughts are with the victim, the family, and everyone involved, and we commend the associate minister for reaching out directly to the family members yesterday.

We look forward to working with the government to ensure that this type of event does not occur again. It is disturbing that it's not the first time this issue has been raised, and I believe we all know how important it is to correct this issue as soon as possible. We are glad to hear that the government will be looking into this situation and implementing the recommendations that will help ensure that our most vulnerable Albertans are kept safe. As more details emerge, I'm sure the minister will keep the Assembly apprised, and I'm confident that together we can work to resolve this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, extend my serious condolences to the family and the individual involved.

I want to make a few comments about this repetition of problems in the Alberta health system. Once again we are shocked and dismayed that one of our most vulnerable citizens with disabilities was scalded in a bath four days ago. Six years ago the Auditor General pointed out inadequacies for persons in care in a scathing report focused largely on long-term care. In 2006 a judge at the fatality inquiry of that individual made a number of recommendations, some of which have been implemented by the government. The Seniors minister last year said that he took the issue very seriously and committed to preventing it from happening again under his watch. In January he committed to ensuring safety in Alberta's group homes. It appears both he and the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities need to look again at the deficiencies that still threaten the lives of dependent individuals in care.

There are many questions about this. Was the home accredited? When was it last reviewed? Were there sufficient staff, and were they adequately trained to deal with the needs of the persons living there? What oversights exist to ensure that training, safe physical conditions, and temperature monitors are in place and working? A full investigation is needed to assure everyone, especially our dependent populations, that this will not happen to them. The case is tragic and preventable.

As important, how are we addressing underlying problems of high staff turnover, low salaries, and very challenging work conditions? How can we attract people to this important public service when we fail to financially recognize their importance? Government must examine very concretely the training, the career path, and compensation as well as ongoing professional support for these critical workers. Long-term solutions require that the government go beyond the crisis and address root problems that continue to threaten our most vulnerable citizens.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I offer my sincere condolences to the individual and their family after this accident has taken place and appreciate the swift action of the associate minister in bringing this to the attention of everyone. We know that our long-term care and care for persons with disabilities has been an ongoing problem here in the province of Alberta for the last number of years. Perhaps this is a chance for us to all rally together, to come to a cathartic moment, to build a provincial standard of care for all persons with disabilities and all persons staying in continuing care and long-term care.

We have a pattern of this sort of incident taking place in the province, and since I've been following it, it usually is stemming from overwork and overcapacity of individuals who have to administer the care to our most vulnerable persons in this province. We have not just a duty but, I think, a responsibility to ensure that we build a pattern of responsible care that ensures that these sorts of things don't happen again. We as a caucus and, I think, all of us here this afternoon have some sense of unity that we can now deal with this in a systematic and reasonable way with the best outcome for everyone.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, might I again ask for unanimous consent? Because I bungled the two before, I think it might be appropriate to ask again that we extend the clock at 3 o'clock and allow Members' Statements to be completed as well as the rest of the Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the clock is moving toward 3 o'clock, which would signal a change from our Routine to Orders of the Day. However, unanimous consent would be required to go on with Routine, should it become necessary, beyond 3 o'clock. Does anyone object to that request for unanimous consent? If so, say no now.

The Speaker: I'll ask the House, just while we're waiting here, if we could briefly revert to Introduction of Guests. If so, please say it's okay, and if not, please say no.

Introduction of Guests (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a couple of special guests joining us in the audience to, I imagine, pay close attention to the potential debate on the Education Act. We have with us the president of the Public School Boards' Association, Patty Ditttrick, and the executive director of the Public School Boards' Association, Mary Lynne Campbell. We also have Dean Sarnecki, the executive director of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. I'm sure we want to extend the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The first of the members' statements goes to Edmonton-Decore, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ukrainian National Federation of Canada 80th Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you. It's an honour and privilege to rise today in recognition of the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada and its affiliate organizations for their lasting accomplishments and contributions, which span over eight decades. The forerunners of the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada were the Ukrainian War Veterans' Association, established in 1928, and the Ukrainian Women's Organization, established in 1930. They became Ukrainian National Federation of Canada affiliate organizations along with the Ukrainian National Youth Federation of Canada, which was established in 1934. Mr. Speaker, 1932 saw their historic formation in Edmonton, and within four years 50 branches were established across Canada. The organization was formally incorporated by an act of Parliament in 1950.

Mr. Speaker, the growth and vast contributions of this organization in the early days included pioneering the development of Ukrainian dance and choral ensembles across Canada, establishing youth leadership and cultural educational courses, participating in the World War II war effort, and advocating for the establishment of an independent and democratic Ukrainian state.

The Ukrainian National Federation of Canada along with the work of Senator Paul Yuzyk advanced the vision of Canada as a multicultural society. As a result, they were one of the leaders in promoting the government of Canada's multiculturalism policy in 1971. Today, Mr. Speaker, their focus remains dedicated to the preservation of Ukrainian Canadian history and the cultural heritage of Ukraine, the promotion of good Canadian citizenship, and the development of youth through the Paul Yuzyk Institute for Youth Leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my heartfelt congratulations to all those who have tirelessly added to the success of the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada and all its affiliates. Thank you for the immeasurable contribution to our great country, provinces, and communities. God bless.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Battle of Kapyong, Korea

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each November 11 we reflect on service, sacrifice, and selflessness. Honouring the men and women who served the rest of us in the military is a privilege. We enjoy the nation we have today because of their actions on our behalf and for millions of others around the world as well.

When we participate in Remembrance Day events, when we wear a poppy, we're usually thinking about Canada's participation in some major conflict like the Great War or World War II, or we're reminded of one of the more recent conflicts in Afghanistan, Iraq, or Bosnia or one of Canada's many peacekeeping missions. But let me on this Remembrance Day remember the men who fought, were injured, or died in what has become the forgotten war, the Korean conflict.

The story of just one battle site, one engagement with the enemy in April 1951 tells a lot about the strength, courage, and resolve of Canadian soldiers. It was the Battle of Kapyong, where the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, affectionately known as the Princess Pats, were all that was preventing a massive Chinese assault across the entire Korean front that would have swept up the Kapyong Valley and allowed a recapture of the capital of Seoul.

The Princess Pats D Company bore the brunt of the attack as the enemy assaulted in large numbers from two sides. One platoon was overrun, and another platoon was cut off. There was hand-to-hand fighting. Company HQ in the rear was surrounded. Cooks and bottle washers had to man the machine guns that had been sent in for repair. They inflicted heavy casualties on the enemy. The fighting continued throughout the night, but each enemy attack was driven off by artillery fire.

By dawn the Patricia's were still there, victorious. What did the victors and their leadership say about it? "It was no big deal. We just did what soldiers do." That's the Canadian way: calm, devoted, steady, resilient, effective.

We must not forget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Philanthropy

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's no secret that Albertans are among the most generous Canadians when it comes to charitable giving. The people of this province understand that philanthropy is not just about wealthy individuals donating huge sums of money to a cause. They know that the true meaning of the word is the desire to do good, to create positive change, and to help others. Whether it's through volunteerism, personal financial decisions, or endowment, Albertans have always found a way to give back to our communities.

The principle behind a charitable gift is simple. It's an investment: investments that help conserve the natural beauty and splendour of our province for future generations to enjoy; investments that support the most vulnerable in our society, from children living with debilitating diseases to newcomers making their new homes in Alberta; investments that create additional funding resources for our nonprofit and voluntary sectors, enriching the arts, heritage, and cultural institutions that make Alberta such a vibrant place to live, work, and visit.

As someone who has worked in the field of community development with different organizations, I have seen first-hand how the generosity of Albertans can help make a big difference. These donors are motivated by different reasons, but the one thing they have in common is that they're united in their commitment to leaving a lasting legacy.

Mr. Speaker, November 12 to 16 is National Philanthropy Week. It is a wonderful opportunity to recognize the contributions made by benefactors, whose donations have impacted the lives of Albertans of all ages. These gifts are a testament to the spirit of generosity for which our province is known.

Through the community spirit program the government of Alberta is committed to making sure that donations see a return on their investment through one of the most generous tax credit programs in our country. It helps to ensure that nonprofit and voluntary sectors receive needed support and encourages Albertans to continue enjoying generosity to their favourite organizations.

In the following week and throughout the year I will encourage all members and all Albertans to take time to thank and honour the philanthropists in our community for leaving a lasting legacy to future generations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Ukraine Election Mission

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 18 50 Albertans and I left to supervise the election in Ukraine with Missions Canada. Prime Minister Stephen Harper greeted us in Ottawa and provided a beautiful send-off and expressed the importance of this mission. The government of Canada sponsored a total of 500 Canadian observers to participate. Most of these went through Missions Canada, an independent, stand-alone, bilateral observation mission. Canada's stand-alone mission was the second-largest international observation mission in Ukraine, with 422 short-term observers and 65 long-term observers, who were there for three months getting things ready for us.

We went to help Ukrainians to have a free and transparent election. We visited 10 to 12 polling stations a day, observed the opening and closing on election day, and even stayed up till 5, 6 o'clock in the morning observing the count. The Ukrainian people were warm and hospitable. They could not believe Canadians would cross the ocean to help them achieve democracy. Our job was not to judge. We were to observe, record, and report. The mission management was to analyze and assess the pre-election environment and the electoral framework.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, 51 Albertans took part as short-term observers. We made up around 12 per cent of the election observation force, from a province that comprises almost 10 per cent of Canada's population. The composition of our team was broad. Every province and territory was represented, and our team was deployed to every corner of the Ukrainian soil.

I am thankful that the Premier allowed me to go and participate in this mission. I'm even happier to be back in Canada and to be a Canadian. We have much to be thankful for living in this great nation. Mr. Speaker, we are proud of our participation in this democratic exercise in Ukraine and hope that the democratic dreams will be one day be realized by the Ukrainian people.

Thank you.

Women Building Futures Program

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that the stereotype of truck drivers, forklift and crane operators, welders, plumbers, and electricians being the exclusive preserve of men is now a thing of the past in Alberta. That's in part because of the work of organizations like Women Building Futures, a capacity-building organization located right here in Edmonton. A few weeks ago the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations and I had the opportunity to visit the Women Building Futures facilities. It would be an understatement to say that we were impressed.

Women Building Futures started as a nonprofit society in 1998. It was a small group of women, mostly social workers, who set out to fulfill their shared dream of helping women achieve economic prosperity through trades training and mentorship.

Today this organization has grown from that small grassroots group to a market-driven organization providing hands-on training, realistic understanding of nontraditional workplace culture, academic upgrading, placement support, job retention coaching and mentoring, and on-site housing for students and their children in housing that is safe and secure.

Students come to Women Building Futures from all over Alberta, even from other provinces and territories. Thirty per cent are from rural Alberta, and 30 per cent are aboriginal. Over 600 women have trained through Women Building Futures, with an employment placement rate of 90 per cent or greater, helping Alberta achieve a more than 60 per cent increase in the number of women in the construction workforce in the last decade.

Mr. Speaker, Women Building Futures isn't just pushing the edges. They're breaking the boundaries, and they've only just begun.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Progressive Conservative Party Anniversary

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a new MLA I'm so proud to be a member of this Progressive Conservative government caucus, that has led Alberta for the last 41 years. Today Alberta is one of the best places to live, work, and play in Canada. This is why people like me and thousands of others from all over the world continue to choose Alberta as our home. Alberta has the best education system in the world. Alberta has world-class postsecondary institutions. Alberta has a thriving cultural sector that promotes the vitality of our community and the unique Alberta pioneer spirit. Alberta is the economic engine of Canada and leads the nation in economic growth. Alberta has the lowest overall tax and the highest average income in Canada. Alberta is the only province that has a net assets position, and it has the lowest unemployment rate in Canada. Alberta now is a place where people don't just come to make a living but come to make a life.

Mr. Speaker, all of those great things and enormous accomplishments did not happen by accident. These are the results of 41 years of inspired leadership, from Premier Peter Lougheed to the current Premier. It is the result of the sustained efforts of Progressive Conservatives sharing the value and vision of Albertans and working with them to push for innovation, entrepreneurship, and open and transparent government to build a climate where family, community, and business thrive.

Mr. Speaker, we're so proud to have governed Alberta for the last 41 years, so proud to have earned Albertans' continued support today, and so proud to continue to lead Alberta onto the new world stage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by Rimby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development and MLA for Drayton Valley-Devon I'm pleased to rise and table five copies of the environmental protection security fund annual report for 2011-12. The environmental protection security fund ensures that money is available to reclaim land used for activities such as coal and oil sands mining, landfills, hazardous waste, et cetera, to ensure Albertans aren't left with the cleanup costs.

Mr. Anglin: Mr. Speaker, last night I read into the record a public notice, and I am tabling the requisite five copies for this House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition demanding that the government take immediate action to twin highway 63. The petition contains 37,751 signatures. I am tabling 3,010 of those signatures today.

3:10

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent to the Minister of Justice from the provincial secretary of the Alberta New Democrats in regard to not being consulted on the proposed election legislation that's coming up here in this fall session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. I have the requisite number of copies of two poems that were submitted to my office from constituents, one by 11-year-old Janine Hachey called What Remembrance Day Means to Me and a second poem, also titled What Remembrance Day Means to Me, by her older sister, Chantelle Hachey.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first one is on behalf of the Minister of Health. It is Review of Physicians Licensure by the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta, conducted by Dr. Dennis Kendel, independent consultant.

Mr. Speaker, the second tabling is the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators medical standards for drivers, which I referred to in answering questions in question period today. The medical standards or guidelines proposed in this document were developed by medical advisers and administrators from Canadian provincial drivers' licensing bodies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? Seeing none, I would take this opportunity, hon. members, pursuant to section 39(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act to make a tabling. I will present the Assembly with five copies of the following order that was passed at the November 6, 2012, meeting of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, Members' Services Committee Order 09/12, Members' Allowances Amendment Order (No. 24). This order is effective November 6, 2012.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Denis, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, the Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board 2011 annual report; pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Alberta Law Foundation annual report 2012 and financial statements and other financial information for the year ended March 31, 2012.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: Someone from the Official Opposition, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 7(6) I'd like to ask the Government House Leader for the projected business for next week.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We anticipate that on Monday evening in Committee of the Whole we will continue to deal with Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act; time permitting, Bill 4, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act; Bill 8, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2012; and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, November 20, in the afternoon we would anticipate, after having first reading on Monday the 19th, second reading of Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012; time permitting, Committee of the Whole on Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act. In the evening we would anticipate dealing with those same two bills, depending on progress, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, November 21, in the afternoon Committee of the Whole on Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act; third reading of Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, and as per the Order Paper; in the evening the same two bills, depending on progress, and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, November 22, in the afternoon for third reading Bill 5, New Home Buyer Protection Act; Bill 6, Protection and Compliance Statutes Amendment Act, 2012; Bill 9, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2012; and Bill 10, Employment Pension Plans Act; and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I think we're moving on to points of order. There are several. I believe the first one is the Government House Leader on a point of order, so let's try and hear that one first. That point of order has been withdrawn.

The second point of order, almost at the same time, was likely Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did stand up when the hon. House leader made his point of order. It was with respect to a tabling that was made today, actually, just prior to me getting up here. It is with respect to a decision that was made on November 6 that was just tabled as a report. It's a really awkward situation because if we look at Government Motion 11, that was made on May 29, 2012, it stated: Be it resolved that the Assembly refer to the Special Standing Committee on Members' Service the report that was made . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry. I just didn't hear the citation you were referring to. It's a point of order you're doing now?

Mr. Saskiw: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. Which citation is it just so that we're all clear and we can follow?

Mr. Saskiw: Section 23 sub – just one second.

The Speaker: That wouldn't be a point of order. That might be a clarification motion. I recognized you for a point of order. Do you have a point of order, or should we just move on?

Mr. Saskiw: Clarification.

The Speaker: Okay. We'll come back to that.

We're just going in sequence here. I think the next point of order was likely Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Ms Blakeman: Indeed it was, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. The point of order was raised in response to the Minister of Justice's third response to a series of questions asked by the leader of the fourth party, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. The citation that I'm using is on page 508 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice. Replies to oral questions "are to be as brief as possible, to deal with the subject matter raised and to be phrased in language that does not provoke disorder in the House." Clearly, it provoked an exceptional amount of disorder in the House in that the member had already made a few statements using particular wording that was disputed by others.

Mr. Speaker, saying something is so, even if you're a government cabinet minister, does not in fact make it so. The minister continued to repeat his statement, which under Standing Order 23(j) I considered abusive and insulting. In looking at 23(h), there is an allegation that was made as part of that.

Mr. Denis: What was it?

Ms Blakeman: The minister is trained in law and will know from this process that he will get an opportunity to speak as compared to yelling at me across the well, and I'm sure he'll take advantage of that.

The member is trained in law. He knows or should know that language is very important and that the precision of language is very important. For example, the difference in legislation between shall and may is an immense difference.

In particular, the hon. minister continued to say that he had consulted with the Liberal caucus and the ND caucus and maintained that a briefing would accomplish that and that we had had meetings. I can tell you that using my handy-dandy dictionary a consultation indicates an action, an activity that has taken place prior to something. It is to seek advice from, to consider, especially in making plans, and to confer. All of this is in advance of something. A briefing is an end product. It is a summary, a synopsis. It is of short duration. It is points of fact or law for conducting a law case. Finally, a meeting is the act of coming together an assembly of persons, a place, or a point of contact.

To clarify, Mr. Speaker, at no point did the government approach the Alberta Liberal Party and, my understanding from the tabling, the Alberta New Democrats for consultation in advance of preparing the bill that the minister is referring to. Indeed, he did give us a briefing. He supplied me with several pages and told me: this is what was going to be partially in the bill. There was no consultation. There was certainly no invitation for me to give input that would actually be considered as part of the bill being done. It was already done. It had been drafted.

For the minister to continue to insist that his department or he consulted the political parties that will be affected by the changes made in the legislation is simply not true, and to try and pretend that a briefing given by a minister to a critic or a member of a caucus somehow replaces that or, in fact, is that consultation belies every dictionary in the English language.

I would like to have the member acknowledge that and that he has in fact created disorder in the House and withdraw his statements. Yeah, I think he should be withdrawing the statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for her comments, but I refuse to withdraw my statements as they were not inaccurate. Throughout this time I appreciate that question period can get heated on both sides of the Chamber. Dealing with a particular bill, I sent someone from my staff to meet with the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills' staff. The Member for Edmonton-Centre insisted I meet with her directly, and I did meet with her directly and then dealt with the matter of the fourth party.

I would put to you, Mr. Speaker, that if there was no consultation, no meeting at all, how could the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood even bring up items which he had in a letter that has already been tabled by Edmonton-Calder earlier today? It refers to specific things in the bill that he thinks would be in there. I have had a conversation with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but again the very fact that that letter was sent proves that there were meetings, proves that there were consultations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to also mention that the Member for Edmonton-Centre had indicated problems with my language, but she has failed or neglected to point out any specific term in my language that she found offensive and no specific term whatsoever in Beauchesne's, and I would indicate that that must be respectfully thrown out.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 7 will be introduced, as I have indicated, the week after the session break, which is only a few hours away, and I would suggest that the time for this debate would be at that juncture and not here by way of a point of order.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would indicate that at no time during the question period did I indicate that I had met with any particular party but, rather, the members themselves.

The Speaker: Thank you. I've ruled on this a few times before.

Mr. Saskiw: May I speak on the point of order?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, briefly.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you for the point of order from the hon. member. I would also refer to 23(h), (j), and (l) as well. In his comments the Justice minister had clearly indicated that he had consulted with us. That never occurred. You know, he may have given us some type of document. Under no definition, whether it's in a statute, in a dictionary, anywhere, would it ever say that giving one document is a consultation.

Why that's particularly offensive is that we've seen in this Assembly that various pieces of legislation have come forward with no consultation, and we've seen the disastrous results. So for him to stand up here and say that he has consulted with us, that's not the case. We had no input into this legislation. So when this disastrous bill eventually comes forward – that's the expectation – if he hasn't done proper consultation, we want nothing to do with that.

I would refer the Speaker to references as well. Under 23(l) part of that deals with misleading the House, and the references there are the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the second edition, page 86, footnote 128; page 83; and Erskine May page 132.

I guess what we would suggest is just a retraction that there's ever been a consultation, that you've provided a report. That's it.

The Speaker: Thank you for that clarification.

Hon. members, we have a number of other points of order still here. We're going to consume the whole afternoon on points of order, and I do not wish to see that happen. However, I'm at your mercy, so very, very briefly, please, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on this point of order.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly at your service as you are at my mercy. Just very briefly, the key here, I think, is from our standing orders, section 23(h), (j), and (l), and specifically from the House of Commons Procedure and Practice as well, page 86, talking about misleading the House.

The idea here is the difference between consultation and a briefing, and this is quite serious because it will put this legislation in jeopardy. Maybe you did some briefing, you met with some of our staff, talking about what you're intending to do, but that's different from the construction, building that legislation in the first place. We're not just talking about something like paving a road here or a new Education Act or something like that. We're talking about something that is fundamental to the construction of our democracy itself.

Let's not forget, Mr. Speaker, that we have other parties as well in this province. Did the consultation take place with the Social Credit Party or the Green Party or the Alberta Party? This whole idea of consultation on a construction of our democratic process is confusing it with a briefing and, I think, is misleading this house.

The Speaker: Thank you. You're quite right. We do have a number of parties, and I've now heard from all of them. I believe the subsequent points of order probably deal with the same issue, according to what we've been able to extract from the Blues. So we'll deal with this one, and then we'll go to the point of clarification, and that should end all of this.

You know, hon. members, it's not infrequent, as you well know, to have two very differing versions of the exact same occurrence, event, activity, statement, whatever have you, and I've commented on this at least once if not two or three times in this House already just in the time that I've been in the chair. However, for those of you who are new, I want to just take you back to Beauchesne 494, as I did on October 29 or thereabouts, when I indicated to you under the title Acceptance of the Word of a Member: "On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident." I think that's partly what we have occurring here right now. We have some people for whom the word "consultation" means one thing. For other people it might mean the other.

Now, I'm not here to judge whether or not a consultation took place the way that one member meant it to take place or another one meant it to take place or whether it was a conversation or a phone call or a casual bump into each other on the street or whatever it is. One member says that a consultation occurred; another one says that it hasn't. I think both the person who raised the point of order and the respondent have amply clarified their positions on this. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills on his caucus' behalf has clarified his, and Edmonton-Calder, you have clarified your position.

What I would caution you to do, though, is to please choose your words a little more carefully when you're both asking the questions and when you're answering the questions to be really clear, as clear as possible as to what you mean. If you mean that a true, honest consultation in this occasion did occur, then please be prepared to say so, defend it. Give us dates, stats, facts. You have almost an hour from the time that this particular point of order was raised until now, and some of that information, hon. Minister of Justice, could be available to you.

I'd ask you to please reflect on that over the break and come back. You can augment, or you can provide more information as you wish, and I would invite you to do that. The same with the hon. members for Edmonton-Centre, Edmonton-Calder, and Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. If you have some additional information you'd like to bring that would enlighten the Minister of Justice in that regard, I invite you to do the same.

As such, we will move on to the point of clarification.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was hoping to discuss this after the Government House Leader's point of order, but he has withdrawn it. I think we have a very serious issue here.

The Speaker: You're asking for clarification under 13(2)?

Mr. Saskiw: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Just tell me briefly what it's about because if it's to do with the Members' Services Committee, I've already ruled on that. I can comment briefly if you like.

Mr. Saskiw: Yes, I would like clarification. Under that motion, Government Motion 11, it stated that once the matter was referred to the Members' Services standing committee, "subject to the following exceptions" a bunch of things would happen, and under (d), it states: "the committee examine alternatives to the pension plan for members proposed in recommendation 12 . . . including defined [pension] plans, and report to the Assembly." Report its recommendations.

3:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I think we've had this particular discourse once before in the House, and I've ruled on it before. I will just remind all members about that because, clearly, there is a Beauchesne citation in this regard. I believe it's 411 that would tell you, in this respect, the following: "Some further limitations seem to be generally understood. A question may not . . . seek information about proceedings in a committee which has not yet made its report to the House." That is the rule. It's not my rule. It's not your personal rule. But it's a rule that we all must follow.

That report has not yet been brought to the House, and the reason it hasn't, I'll remind you once again, is that the committee has not yet completed its work. There is still one outstanding item. Those of you who are on that committee know very well that we're still dealing with the issue to do with a review mechanism.

Let's not consume any more time on this. That is the clarification I gave once before. I've just given it again. So if you wouldn't mind to just be patient, we'll get that committee's report into the Assembly as soon as it possibly can be ready. Thank you.

As such, that clarifies that matter, and I think we can move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 3

Education Act

[Adjourned debate November 7: Mr. Khan]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was getting quite concerned that I wasn't going to get a chance to speak to this bill at all, so I'm really glad that it came up while I was still here.

This has been an interesting process because this is round 3. I guess it's appropriate that it has the number of Bill 3 because it is round 3 in trying to put together a new and modern version of the Education Act. We did have an opportunity to have some debate on it, but, as I argued with the Government House Leader recently, there were a number of changes between version 2 and version 3. A lot were in reaction to issues that were raised on the floor, but I have the sense that even more was related to pressure that came from outside of the Chamber from various groups that were particularly interested.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

There are kind of three categories of issues that I see here. There are the issues that were resolved or strengthened in some way, shape, or form; some that were left on the table, or not dealt with; and some problems that were created. So we have some resolved, some parked, which could be a problem, and some that were created.

Let me just go through some of what I see happening here because we're in third reading, we're talking about the anticipated effect of the bill. It's a done deal. You know, this is our last chance, this is our last – well, no; that would be abusing animals. It's our last opportunity to speak to this bill, and we are directed through various parliamentary rulings to concentrate on what we think will be the effect of the bill once it's in place.

What I did was: I started to churn my way through all of the amendments that had come from the previous Education Act, Bill 2, which was debated at the end of the last Legislature. I also looked at the amendments that were brought up this time in response. I think some things were, in fact, resolved or strengthened. There was an integration of, I think it was, an amendment from my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo to recognize that bullying in the schools is not just a matter between children, between school attendees – let me put it that way – but can in fact be between the people in that community, and the wording "in the school community" was adopted, which I think solved a few problems.

There was recognition of some of the concerns that had been raised around the charter schools, that there needed to be a clear statement that their business was restricted to that of offering the classes, and in fact that happened. Also, the local school boards had, if I may paraphrase, the first right of refusal, and it was an expectation that those wishing to start a charter school would go to the local school board, who had first right of refusal to say: no, we're not interested in taking you into our school board. I'm very glad to see that. I think that's another issue that got resolved there.

I don't want to minimize the successes in this bill because I know there are people in the gallery from the Alberta School Boards Association . . .

An Hon. Member: Public School Boards' Association.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Sorry about that. They were introduced earlier.

... who are very eager to see this passed. I know the various school boards would like to see it passed, individual trustees. I haven't heard from the ATA, but one assumes we'd all like to get on with this.

Now, I'm the child of two teachers, so I'm very aware of how decisions are made, how important that act is as an overriding policy umbrella, with the specifics of how things go. There were some things that got parked. Sorry. I was saying all of that by way of going: I'm not going to go through the whole list of things that I think got resolved between the second and the third version. It's a pretty good list. My compliments to the minister for having done that. I guess if he really feels lonely, I could go through the list, but I think he's aware of the work that he's done, and I don't need to spend any more time on it.

The next category I had was the issues that were left on the table, or parked is one of the ways you talk about it. This concerns me because for big acts like this it takes a long time to get this stuff in front of the Legislature. For any of you that are listening or watching the live streaming or sitting in the gallery, it took – what? – 10 years at least to get this new act to this point. There are a lot of, you know, problems that get noted and brought up, and it moves along, and the staff start to work on it in the department, and the minister gets involved. We've had three different ministers on this file. We had the first minister do two years' worth of consultation on it. The second minister also did a consultation on it. The third minister just got down to business.

It does take a long time to get legislation here, and I always have to say to myself: "Okay. You're going to have to live with this for a good 10 years. Can you live with it? Is this as good as we could get the act to be? Are you going to be happy with it? It's going to be at least another 10 years before we get it back in front of us, at which point it needs evergreening or reviewing of some kind."

I'm reminded of this because I just had a woman who's very irritated at daylight saving time, and she's writing to me saying: "Tell me how to stop daylight saving, to get rid of it. What is the process I have to do?" I said: "You know, I'm sorry. You're going to have to go and lobby the government to change the law. That's the only way that's going to happen here. There's no way for the public to force a plebiscite or a proposition as they do in the States or even a referendum. That is the prerogative of the government to decide to put that up at an election time if they wish to do so." We're in the same position here. This is what we're going to have to live with.

So what's being left on the table? I think what was not resolved, in my opinion – and the minister certainly has an opportunity to get up and tell me his point of view on this – was the whole issue of the blending of school boards, the incorporation of schools that are following other faiths. That didn't get done up as far as I was concerned. We have some constitutional requirements that are laid out in front of us. We have to remember when we talk about the public school system that for the most part, and there are a few exceptions, the public school board here is a religious-based Protestant system for all intents and purposes. It's not based on Muslim teachings. It's not based on Jewish teachings. It's based on Protestant teachings. The separate school board for the most part, not every time, and there are a few exceptions, is based on Catholic teachings. It's important for the Catholic schools to have their religious items in the school and that the school follows a particular religious teaching there. Okay. So that's our public and our separate school board.

Now, into this we've started to sort of drift off into other places. We've got the private schools, and we've got the charter schools. I'm beginning to think that the intention of the minister is to let the other particular ideologies or religions or race-based instruction drift off into that category of charter schools. This is something that got left on the table. It didn't get resolved, in my opinion. It's still sitting there. It's parked if you want to call it that. Are we going to be able to leave it parked there for 10 years? Is that a reasonable assumption? One of the effects of this bill is going to be that some of these things were not resolved, and this is one of them.

The whole concept of school fees was also not resolved or, let me say, it was maintained. One of the issues that the Liberal caucus has continued to raise is that it is allowed for schools to charge fees for things that are not just ancillary activities like a school trip or participating in athletic activities. We strongly believe that school fees should not be charged for educational material or for the educational portion. That issue is still in there. I believe that it sits in that parking lot of unresolved issues.

The issue that was created was for me around the changes in definitions around section 16. That's the breaking point for me. If I can't have values that I can stand behind and believe in, if I can't serve my constituents, then I shouldn't be here. Despite the fact that I can see merit in what has been proposed in this Education Act – and I've admitted that it is by no means perfect; there are some things that have been left – I absolutely cannot vote for an act in which discrimination against an identifiable group of people is permitted. I just can't.

What happened here was that between version 2 and version 3 language was changed in section 16. The original version – you know what I mean – referred specifically to the Canadian Charter and to the Alberta Human Rights Act. I don't know which group, but certainly from correspondence I received and newspaper articles I read and members opposite that I spoke to, there seemed to have been a great deal of pressure from people who put themselves out as representing home-schooling people that wanted that reference to the Charter and to the Human Rights Act to be removed. That's my point of no-go because to me it was an unforgivable caving in to pressure in that it exposes a group to prejudice, to discrimination.

Even though under section 33(3), which appears on page 42 of the bill, it talks about reducing the – it's around bullying. I know that some of the members opposite said: "Oh, come on, now. We're still protecting people. Go and look at that section." Well, I did. Really, it's in specific reference to bullying between students, and then it refers to a code of conduct for those students, and then it talks about: when the school writes that code of conduct, they must have at least one line that refers to the Alberta Human Rights Act. That is not the same as saying that instruction should be given in a way that does not allow discrimination against, specifically, the gay, lesbian, transgendered, bisexual, queer community in Alberta. That's a community that is important to me. I represent a lot of people in that community. I represent people in your constituency that you don't want to represent. I'll take them all. But I cannot vote for an act that deliberately took protection away from a group of people and allowed other people to use that in a way where I don't know what will happen. There's no protection there.

Finally, the government refused to move that odious, hideous section 11.1 into the Education Act, where, if that thing must live, it should live. The refusal of the government to do that is regressive. It is nasty. It's just not the modern Alberta that I want to live in.

I will not be supporting this bill. I didn't support it at any of the other stages, and I most certainly will not be supporting it in third reading. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now applicable. Are there any members that would like to question and comment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and I'll thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre. I was just curious. Could I hear a few more of her thoughts regarding this bill and pieces that are missing from it that she thinks should be in an education act?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Let me get my glasses on here. Actually, if you go backwards through the various amendments that were brought forward, you do start to get a real sense of what was missing. Now, I wasn't here, so maybe I'm wrong, but there was an amendment brought forward to allow teachers to assign grades of zero for work that wasn't submitted. Did that pass? Well, there was a suggestion, right?

I said that I was the child of two teachers. I cannot see either one of them ever giving marks for work not done. They weren't going to let me get away with that, and I cannot see that they would ever have done that with their students. My parents were exceptional teachers. You know, there's an idea that didn't happen.

There were a couple of other suggestions that came forward about audit committees. They did resolve the problem around the trustees. There was an inequity in the francophone trustees. They did in my opinion fix that. You are not required to have a child in the francophone system in order to vote for their board of trustees. To run as a trustee, you have to meet the requirements of anyone else running for public office: Canadian citizen, over 18 years of age – and I'm missing one here – and a francophone. So they certainly did deal with that one.

I think that raising the age was actually a good idea as well as increasing the age of access. The point here was to get people to complete high school at a better completion rate, and if that's what we need to do, I'm all for it. I had one parent that was in the high school system for a long time, and he talked about that a lot.

There were a couple of other issues around charter schools, but the member might know more specifics about that than I do because he was in a specialty school. Maybe he wants to make a statement about that.

I hope that was helpful.

3:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We still have a minute and a half left in Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any other members that would like to question or comment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: I just have a question of the hon. member from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. What part of section 16(1) do you disagree with? It says:

All courses or programs of study and instructional materials used in a school must reflect the diverse nature and heritage of society in Alberta, promote understanding and respect for others and honour and respect the common values and beliefs of Albertans.

Ms Blakeman: The issue around that is that once you start a list, you have to put everybody on the list because when it gets to court – and we have enough Supreme Court decisions that are made on that – if you're not on the list and there's a list, you're not on the list. Right? When they started, they switched from section 16, which said:

All courses or programs of study offered and instructional materials used in a school must reflect the diverse nature and heritage of society in Alberta, promote understanding and respect for others and honour and respect the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act.

In changing it from that to the newer version, what they did was take out the reference to the Charter and to the Alberta Human Rights Act. So those are no longer paramount here, and they start a list. Guess what? On the list in section 16(2) you "must not promote or foster doctrines of racial or ethnic superiority."

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak in third reading of Bill 3, the Education Act. I will acknowledge that the process of arriving at this version of the Education Act has seemed to be kind of tortuous for all of us, but I think that in the end it's been worth the pain that we've all gone through.

Madam Speaker, as I mentioned in my second-reading speech, the Wildrose has consistently supported the underlying principles of creating an Education Act to replace the outdated School Act. I can tell you that, having spoken with the superintendents that are overlapping the area that I represent, they are very pleased with most of the elements of the act and are looking forward to seeing it implemented. Again, the School Act has served us well, but I think we can all agree that the new bill is going to serve Alberta students, parents, and teachers well in the years to come.

Madam Speaker, I also want to express my satisfaction with three elements of the bill which were in there when the government introduced it but were not there in previous versions of the act. I think there have been some changes that have been good, and I would say, with some small measure of satisfaction, that the Wildrose led the fight in modifying against those previous bills. The first, of course, was the removal of the reference to the human rights code applying to home-school families. We do know how concerned our home-school families were about that. I'm very pleased that the Education minister listened and changed the language to be more reflective of what was in the previous School Act so that everybody's rights are protected, and we can also protect those minority groups who would face discrimination. I think that was a good change.

The second, of course, was the reintroduction to the act of recognizing the fundamental primacy of parents in being able to choose the type of education they want for their children. This is one of the reasons, I think, why when you look at the government's record over the last 10 to 15 years, education reform has really been one of the shining examples of where they're doing things mostly right by giving parental choice, having a number of different options. We are very pleased to see that they recognize that fundamental primacy of parents.

Then, of course, the issues dealing with Catholic school boards. I know that the Catholic school trustees were quite concerned that some of the language would seem to indicate that they would be forced into amalgamation. We do know that there are some interests out there who want to eliminate Catholic school education altogether and have everything rolled under one massive public school board. I happen to think that having two schools boards, a public school board and a separate school board, to give that additional choice to parents is something that our Alberta parents have been asking for us to maintain. I'm glad that the Education minister acknowledges how important it is to maintain the independence of the Catholic school board as well.

Originally, though, the government didn't listen to the concerns that were raised, so 2,000 parents, you may recall, rallied on the steps of the Legislature. The Wildrose was proud to be there. I remember the hon. member for, at the time, Airdrie-Chestermere spoke to that group of 2,000 parents and their kids. I think also that after an intense electoral scare, the government came to their senses and made the improvements that were requested. I'm glad to see that. Truly.

Madam Speaker, at second reading I suggested that we generally like the changes that were made in the Education Act. The act has been improved through the amending process – I'll get to that in a minute – but I do think it could have been further improved, and I think that there were some missed opportunities. I'm disappointed that the Education minister didn't take seriously three of our amendments, which I think would have gone a long way towards improving the act.

First, on charter schools, to be able to acknowledge the important role that the innovation in charter schools plays in improving our public education system altogether. We want to make sure that we have continual innovation. We want to make sure that teachers and school boards are able to try new things. I think that the amendment that was put forward about charter schools would have gone a long way towards sending the signal about how this government looks at charter schools as being important.

I'll give an example of why I think charter schools have a great role to play in improving education for all students. I look at the school Foundations for the Future. When it began as a traditional learning centre, it was so popular that it very quickly grew to four campuses in Calgary. Very quickly there were news stories out there about them having 4,000 parents waiting to have their kids on the waiting list to be in the school. The Calgary board of education responded to that. They created their own traditional learning centres. The last time I spoke with someone from the CBE, they now have 15,000 students enrolled in traditional learning centres. To me, having this positive interplay between charter schools being able to set up, establish, innovate, and being able to take our successful models and see them come into the public school system so that more students are able to take advantage of that – I think there was a missed opportunity in not reinforcing just how important a role our charter schools play in doing that and expanding and encouraging more of them.

The second point I would make is on the no-zero policy. I know the argument that the Education minister made about not wanting to be prescriptive, but, Madam Speaker, I'm holding Bill 3, which is 188 pages prescribing how school boards should act, how principals should act, how teachers should act. It really would not have been any additional burden to have put in the simple amendment. It's true. It would have been in section 197.

I mean, just to give an example of what we're already prescribing principals to do, just so that we can put it into context for parents puzzling, as we are, to understand why the province rejected this, in section 197 we have 10 different provisions prescribing what principals should do. I'll just read this into the record because I think it's important for us to remember that it is part of the act and part of the job of the Legislature and part of the job of the Education minister to respond to what parents and students are telling them and to create prescriptions in the event that we see a behaviour that we want to make sure doesn't occur again. I would say that the no-zero policy, the no-zero firing is an example of that. We say that

197 A principal of a school must

- (a) provide instructional leadership in the school,
- (b) ensure that the instruction provided by the teachers employed in the school is consistent with the courses and programs of study prescribed, approved or authorized pursuant to this Act,
- (c) evaluate or provide for the evaluation of programs offered in the school,
- (d) ensure that students in the school have the opportunity to meet the standards of education set by the Minister,
- (e) direct the management of the school,
- (f) maintain order and discipline in the school and on the school grounds and during activities sponsored or approved by the board,
- (g) promote co-operation between the school and the community that it serves,
- (h) supervise the evaluation and advancement of students,
- (i) evaluate the teachers employed in the school, and
- (j) subject to any applicable collective agreement and the principal's contract of employment, carry out the duties that are assigned to the principal by the board in accordance with the regulations and the requirements of the school council and the board.

So you see, Madam Speaker, this act is very prescriptive of what a principal can and cannot do. It would not have been a hardship to add an additional clause to ensure that teachers are free to assign grades of zero for work not submitted by students. I don't buy the minister's argument on this. I don't think Albertans buy the minister's argument on this. But it's not enough for me to vote down the bill. I did just want to say that I think we could have improved it if we'd put that in – and who knows? – we might see a private member's bill in future dealing with this as well.

The third point is on the issue of school fees. Now, I know the Education minister took great delight in digging up a column that I wrote 10 years ago, but I think we have to put into context that in a decade what we have seen is an increase across the board of a whole range of school fees. I remember that when I was in elementary school, we used to get scribbles provided for us. We didn't even have to pay for those. We used to also have big red thick pencils, I remember, that were provided for us as well. How funny I think it is now when you think back to then, about the kinds of things that the school system used to provide.

But as we went through the difficulties of the '90s and needed to get back into a balanced budget, I do think that parents were willing to pay for school supplies. They understood that. I do think that parents by and large understand that paying for field trips is something they should do. I know busing fees have become an increasing difficulty.

When I went to school, I took public transit. I was delighted that public transit actually paid for my bus passes during the school year so I didn't have to pay for that. But busing fees have become a growing issue. I don't think it was the same issue when I was in school. When you see what our hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View brought up, about how actually busing fees are now being used as an additional source of revenue, that it's actually being overcharged in the case of some school boards, I think that that points very clearly to something going quite wrong in the way fees are being levied, and I think that's what happens.

The minister may want to point to something that happened 10 years ago; I'd like to sort of speed up a bit and point to what's happening today. What's happening today is that parents are being dinged for textbook fees. Parents are being dinged for instructional fees. Parents are being dinged for locker-room fees, for classroom fees, for administration fees. There's a whole range of different fees that are now being levied against parents, who are now being taken to collection agencies. I think it's been mentioned in this Legislature: 3,000 parents being taken to collection agencies. I don't think this was the world I was talking about 10 years ago when I was writing a column, but this is the world that exists today.

In the world that exists today when I was asked by parents to raise this issue, we actually developed a policy and campaigned on making school fees transparent, first of all, so we could figure out how big a ding parents are getting and, secondly, to eliminate them, to eliminate these mandatory school fees so no one has to pay to send their kids to chemistry class, so no one has to pay a locker fee so that their kids can store their stuff in their lockers between classes. We're talking about two different things.

I'm very disappointed that the minister, when he had the opportunity to do something about it, chose to vote against it. Now, I campaigned on eliminating school fees. My 17 colleagues here campaigned on eliminating school fees. When we had the opportunity to bring forward an amendment to eliminate school fees, we did. We spoke in favour of eliminating school fees, and I made a special effort to be here the night it was being voted on so I could vote to eliminate school fees. I would point out that the Minister of Education voted to keep them. Voted to keep them.

That, I think, is what parents need to understand. The Minister of Education once again had an opportunity to show that he was listening, to show that he cared, and to stop this practice of taking parents to collection agencies to pay for fees that should already be covered under the amount that is paid for through provincial education funding. We have this real problem with dollars not flowing down into the classroom. Unfortunately, the Education minister did not demonstrate that he's taken this issue as seriously as we think he should. Having voted it down, I think that sends a message to parents that he is not as concerned as the Wildrose caucus is about making sure that our middle-class families are not overburdened when they send their kids to public school.

The one last thing I would say is – and I'll go back to talking about the positive because I have talked about three of the things that I wish the minister had fixed to have made this bill better, but being that he didn't, well, I'm sure we'll have lots and lots and lots of time to talk about this in this Legislature and, certainly, lots and lots and lots of time to talk about that during the next election.

I also would say that in many ways the work on this bill is a good demonstration of how work in this Chamber can be done well. I was delighted to see that the minister did vote to accept one of our amendments. Of course, this is the amendment that was put forward by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek introduced an amendment dealing with bullying and improper behaviour in schools, something I know she feels very passionately about. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has served in this place for many years, and she has built up a wonderful group of stakeholders that she can go back to again and again to get advice on various things that she brings forward, and I think that's why she's so successful. She can always be counted on to introduce issues that Albertans want considered in legislation but are often overlooked.

This time the government saw fit to accept her amendment, which was based on many, many discussions that she had had with law enforcement officers who deal directly with schools. I appreciate that the whip worked closely with the hon. member to ensure that that amendment went forward and was approved in his caucus. We're grateful for it, because I think that this bill has been much improved by those efforts and by the willingness of the government to consider adopting that amendment. So I'm glad to see that.

As I say, I do think that this is an example of how legislation can work properly. It was brought in the first time, and it was flawed. It was brought in the second time, it was still flawed. It was brought in the third time, and it looked pretty good, but we were able to have some discussion to make it a little bit better. I wish we'd been able to tweak it on a couple more areas so that we could have made it even better, but I do think that this is exactly the kind of thing that a certain leadership candidate for the Progressive Conservative Party saw when she campaigned and wrote: we need to change how the Legislature and MLAs operate, more free votes so MLAs can reflect constituent views, more time between proposing and voting on legislation.

The amount of time that was taken to make sure that this bill was drafted in a form that was acceptable to all the stakeholders, to trustees, both public and Catholic school systems, to those who are involved in different types of education, whether it's private or charter schooling, whether it's home-schooling or virtual schooling, I think the product at the end of this reflects the incredible amount of stakeholder consultation, give-and-take, and, I think, positive dialogue and discussion that took place in this Chamber. So I would like to congratulate the Education minister for that.

While I commend the government for doing a good job on this bill, I will note for the record that the government is not heading in the same correct direction regarding the ongoing and very important debates that are happening on Bill 2 and that are happening on Bill 4 and which I fear will happen on Bill 7.

Hopefully, this can once again be looked at as a constructive example of how at the end of the day if you take the time, if you listen to the opposition, if you listen to parents and stakeholders, if you listen to those who are impacted by legislation, you can end up with good legislation. I think that if we took those same lessons on those other bills, we might be able to move further along in making sure we're passing the very best legislation for Albertans. Once again, I think the government should strive to meet the Premier's standard of raising the bar on accountability and transparency by using the talents and skills of this place to improve legislation like what was done with the Education Act.

Now, Madam Speaker, in closing I will say that I will vote in favour of this now much-improved bill on third reading. Hopefully, I will get the chance to be able to repeat that same phrase over the next three and a half years.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any hon. members who wish to question or comment?

4:10

Mr. Dorward: Madam Speaker, school fees are essentially a user-pay mechanism which, I think, is best talked about at the school board level. As we talked about it in Committee of the Whole, it was debated back and forth and back and forth and discussed in that context. Fees are all over the map. You know, they vary between schools and school boards, so that's where they need to be left and not in legislation.

I note that the Wildrose are again in favour of spending more money and adding a cost and a burden to the overall people of Alberta. The question for the Member for Highwood is: if school fees were somehow covered, say magically that cost was there, what would happen if five years later that list of school fees was even greater? Would it grow and grow and grow and grow, which seems like a Wildrose Party concept in terms of spending money? Whereas I hear from this government that we're concerned about not spending money and, thus, have the policy that's in place now.

Ms Smith: Well, I thank the hon. member for his question. I think the context for all of our comments on this side whenever we're identifying priorities is – and we ran on this, too, we ran on our balanced budget initiative, which would have required that we return to a no deficit rule in our Fiscal Responsibility Act, that we limit year-over-year spending increases to inflation plus population growth, that we have a limit on capital funding that is consistent with the per capita funding of other provinces. So that would be about $4 billion per year. Over a 10-year period that's $40 billion. If you develop a priority list over a 10-year period and spend $40 billion, you actually can clear the infrastructure backlog as well as get ahead and start building for the future. That's part of what I think the hon. member often misses when we're looking at the framework of how we would manage to balance the budget as well as meet priorities.

The last thing I'd say is that we'd cut wasteful spending. I mean, I don't know if I could, in this short amount of time I have, list all of the areas of wasteful spending that have been exposed over the last year. Obviously, we do not share the government's enthusiasm for giving $2 billion for carbon capture and storage. We do not share the government's enthusiasm for other corporate welfare grants, whether it's through the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency, whether it's through the BRIK program, whether it's through any number of other initiatives. We wouldn't support giving funding, direct or otherwise, to arenas for taxpayers to pay for. We certainly thought that there were infrastructure projects that could have been deferred to a year or two down the road to be able to pay for high-priority items.

On this issue of education, in particular, I suspect that we're running into the same problem in education as we've seen in health care, as we're seeing in justice. Even though we have seen an increase of 63 per cent in education funding over the last 10 years – and these are numbers from the government's website – that 63 per cent increase in education funding over the last 10 years I believe compares to something like a 10 per cent increase in student enrolment. The money is going in, but it's not, actually, getting down to the front line, and we're asking the question: why not? Where's it going?

One of the things we would observe is happening in the health care field – and I've spoken with AUPE president, Guy Smith, about this as well. He remembers back in the 1990s when former Premier Ralph Klein made some of the significant cuts to the layers and layers of middle management. The AUPE was initially quite excited about that because they got to a level where the government was hiring one manager for every 16 front-line workers. Well, today we've got one manager for every three front-line workers.

I suspect that this is a problem across the board. Do we really need more senior executives making $100,000-a-year salaries with overcapped pensions that are noncontributory, that you can't get rid of even if they do make mistakes otherwise you have to pay them massive severance packages, that continue to ding the taxpayer for hundreds of thousands of dollars of expenses?

So when I'm asked the question, "Do I think that in a $4 billion education budget we can manage to squeeze out $40 million to eliminate school fees?" I would say: you sure bet you can.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm delighted to get up to speak to Bill 3, the Education Act, in its third reading here this afternoon. You know, this bill has been a very appropriate reintroduction for me into the procedures in terms of legislation that take place here in the Legislature and outside the Legislature, too. One refreshing change that I saw from when I was here previously was that I had a constructive and interactive discussion with the Minister of Education on this bill on a number of occasions, so I wanted to thank the Minister of Education for doing that. It was a nice new world to be able to actually discuss these things, including amendments and so forth.

However, I also was reintroduced to something that had always troubled me about the Legislature and the way we do things here, particularly in Alberta, and that's this thing that we do here more than other provinces, which is have legislation and debate late at night. You know, I think it had something to do with how we approached the amendment process for this Bill 3, the fact that I was introducing five amendments after midnight of the day that we were doing it. We worked really hard on this. I mean, this is not just a process of putting words on a page and watching time pass. We worked hard on this because I take this critic area very seriously as a teacher of more than 20 years – right? – with all of my children going through public school, and considering just the landmark legislation that we're dealing with here, which is Bill 3, which will become the Education Act.

I look at this bill as not just being another small piece of amending legislation but as something that we can send a message with for the next 20 years and 30 years. Who knows who will be governing then? Who knows what the circumstances will be? We want to have certain signposts in place that send a definite message on what we consider to be public education and the direction of public education here in the province of Alberta.

We went through the bill, which was no small thing, and found a number of places where I think the potential act could be strengthened. As I said, all of my amendments were defeated. I expect lots of things like amendments to be in fact defeated or changed, but I suddenly just realized that I couldn't sleep or in good conscience proceed without speaking at length and explaining exactly what we were doing with these amendments. I've also been shopping these around to different places, amongst teachers and amongst different public organizations here in the province of Alberta and even across to other provinces, too, to see how they approached rebuilding or modernizing their education acts across the country. Certainly, I'm speaking here with considerable deliberation and concern about this.

The first amendment that I had had to do with section 16 of Bill 3, the Education Act, as it stood, and the troubling thing that we saw from the spring session, when this was Bill 2, to this legislation that we have in front of us now – the thing that changed was, of course, that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act were removed from the legislation here before us today. I know that this was a sensitive topic because people had quite significant explanations and excuses for doing that right away. The argument that was mostly used against my amendment was: "Oh, well, those two pieces of legislation, one being provincial and one federal, exist anyway, right? We don't need to have them in the Education Act because we already have them in other places in law." Well, I don't think that that argument holds much water, Madam Speaker.

Let me just go back to another place of emphasis in this proposed Bill 3, which was on bullying and antibullying strategies. I am very strong on this as a teacher of 20 years or more dealing with, you know, perhaps some of the most destructive behaviour that we see in schools, which is bullying, and having a comprehensive and focused attack against this unfortunate human behaviour. But using that argument back that was used against the removal of the Human Rights Act and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: well, we do after all have laws against assault; we do have laws against defamation and other things that constitute bullying as a practice. Extending that logic, then, why should we mention the bullying in here?

Well, I think we should, and I think we do, but I think we also need to make sure that we mention and redouble our commitment to the Alberta Human Rights Act and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms for the very same reason, because we believe that that's important as a society, and we believe it should be emphasized and carried as a signpost for not just the five years but the next 20 and 30 years down the road to tell and guide how our public education system should be constructed and conducted. That's the way I look at it. I think it's a compelling argument. Certainly, whenever people start removing or taking shots at the Alberta Human Rights Act, for example, that's the time to get your back up as a person who believes in social justice, as a person who believes in equality, as a person who believes that we can enshrine those values into law.

People did believe that here in this House, presumably, back in 1971, when they created the Alberta Bill of Rights, I think, the Bill 1 of a former Conservative government that realized the value of modernizing our human rights legislation in this province to carry us through and to have that permeate through all of the things that we do here in this province in making legislation and laws. So, yes, the Alberta Human Rights Act and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms do belong in our Education Act, and I really, really regret that they were removed here for whatever reason.

The second area where I wanted to just make some change here – right? – on this Bill 3 was in regard to school fees. I know there's a compelling argument talking about school fees on a school board level, on a school level, on a very localized level, but once again we're inserting a signpost here, a direction that we want to go as a society for public education, to say that we do not, we should not, and we will not have instructional school fees built into our public education system.

If you don't have those signposts firmly in place, then there is that insidious creeping of charging for this and that that we are constantly having to beat back. That tension is always there, but we can set our line in the sand, a firm line in the sand that tells people that, no, you do not do that and you will be pushed back by law if you try to do so, once again building something we can be proud of, a cornerstone of public education. For 20 or 30 years we needed to have language on the banning and the prohibition of instructional school fees here in the province of Alberta. We missed that, and I regret it. Certainly, you know, we need to remember that kind of stuff. That's the second one.

The third area of concern that I had in regard to Bill 3, the Education Act – and it really hardly got any mention at all, and I regret it – was a moment of brilliance that I saw from the Ontario Education Act. It was brought to my attention by the Edmonton public school board, by one of the trustees there, and it was on having language in our school act that said that we are responsible for the health and the well-being of all students.

Now, you might say: well, that sounds like a self-evident truism. Right? Of course we are responsible for the health and well-being of all students. But the intent behind this amendment was to say that we are building programs and we're building a curriculum that deal specifically with all aspects of mental health and physical health, including food. We've made some progress in regard to promoting healthy eating and food in our schools, but this would have taken it a step further, not necessarily on cost but just in terms of direction, ensuring that we look after the nutritional needs of students and that we look after their physical and mental health as well. It would have been a very, I think, useful addition, and I think we missed an opportunity there as well.

The next area that I wanted to talk about that I think is very important – and I can see this on the horizon right across all 87 of our constituencies here in the province of Alberta – is the issue of school closures. Now, we know how destructive and disruptive school closures are, the process. We have dealt with that here in the city of Edmonton, but, you know, like I say, I don't think anyone escapes the spectre of school closures anywhere in the province of Alberta.

The amendment that I put forward in regard to school closures is that we share some of the responsibility in regard to closing schools, not just putting it onto the individual school boards but bringing it back to the ministry specifically to say that we go through a consultative process through the Education ministry to ensure that we are making the right decision in regard to a possible school closure.

Further to that, there is a whole range of things we can do through this Assembly to ensure that the full extent to which a school is being used in a community is recognized as part of the utilization formula, that determines whether a school is being used to its reasonable capacity or not, so that, again, we're not just using the same blunt tool to have school closures take place around the province, but we are sharpening it, and we are using better equipment to make sure that we have a utilization rate that recognizes all uses of a school, as a community centre and so forth, and that we're not closing schools unnecessarily.

We know that once a school is closed, it's very unlikely to be opened again. We know that it's like chickens and eggs, right? You will not have more young families moving into a community because if the school is closed, they will move to where there's a school. I know it's not an easy thing. I know that we will be dealing with this lots in the next number of years. Then what better place to have a thematic direction than in the iconic school act, that we will be, you know, presumably passing here in these next few days?

Those are some of the areas that I was most concerned about in terms of my amendments. As I said before, you know, we went through a process here that I think really involved a number of years, and I think that there's a lot of structural framework here in this new act that is good.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it is 4:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday, November 19, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 1st Session (2012)

Activity to November 08, 2012

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 19, 2012

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Gracious Lord and Holy Creator, fill our hearts, our minds, and our hands with the wisdom, determination, and action to always do what is right for our constituents, for our province, and for our country. Amen.

Please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem led by Mr. Paul Lorieau. I invite you to join in in the language of your choosing.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Merci beaucoup, M. Lorieau.

[Translation] Thank you very much, Mr. Lorieau.

Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very distinguished special guests, Tawakkol Karman and Leymah Gbowee. These two women shared the Nobel peace prize in 2011 for their nonviolent struggle for the safety of women and for women's rights to full participation in peacebuilding work. They did this by spearheading and sustaining social revolutions in Yemen and Liberia, traditional societies dominated by men. Today I had the honour of cohosting a luncheon with the hon. Minister of Human Services and the hon. Minister of Education to celebrate these two women and introduce them to our female parliamentarians and to many female youth from Alberta.

Tawakkol Karman was born in Yemen, earned a master's degree in political science at Sana'a University, and in 2005, when I met her, she helped found Women Journalists without Chains, an organization that advocated for press freedom in Yemen. At 32 she earned the nickname the Mother of the Revolution, and some tribal leaders I know call her the reincarnation of the queen of Sheba.

Leymah Gbowee grew up in Monrovia, Liberia's capital, was a social worker in the late 1990s but fled to Ghana, and in 2001 earned a degree from Mother Patern College of Health Sciences. She is a leading member of the women in peacebuilding program and the West Africa Network for Peacebuilding. She is now director of the Women Peace and Security Network in Africa and the author of the 2011 memoir Mighty Be Our Powers: How Sisterhood, Prayer, and Sex Changed a Nation at War.

Mr. Speaker, they are joined today by their husbands, Mohammed and Jay, and are seated in your gallery. I would ask that Tawakkol and Leymah receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Congratulations, and welcome.

The hon. Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House one of my predecessors in the constituency of St. Albert, Mary O'Neill. Mary served as the MLA in my riding from 1997 to 2004. She's a prime and wonderful example of the great PC leadership my constituency has been blessed with. Mary continues to serve in our community and to serve Albertans through a number of different initiatives, most recently as past executive director of the Glenrose Rehabilitation Hospital Foundation. She continues to work in our community and is a mentor to me. I am so honoured to introduce her today. She is seated in the Speaker's gallery. I'd like everybody in the Assembly to welcome Mary O'Neill.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly former Alberta Liberal MLA Rick Miller. Rick was the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford from 2004 to 2008 and served as the Alberta Liberal caucus chief of staff from 2009 to 2012. Prior to that he was the Liberal Party president from 1999 to 2001. As you may have noticed, I'm growing a moustache, and I have a Chia Pet on my chin for Movember. I'm growing it in support of Rick in his battle with prostate cancer and the 1 in 8 men in society who get prostate cancer. Rick was diagnosed in February, and despite that, he campaigned through the election. If all members, and you, Mr. Speaker, would like to donate to Rick's fight, not just for him but for all us – the sons, the fathers, and the grandfathers in society – you can donate to mobro.co, and his account number there is 3396525. Hon. members, please welcome one of us in the Speaker's gallery. Rick, if you can please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a long-time resident of the Edmonton-Gold Bar community and first-time attendee at question period, Mr. Stan Edwards, who is here with his son James. Stan is an avid ham radio operator and is active in the South East Edmonton Seniors Association. Stan's son James now lives with his wife and two daughters in the hon. Speaker's constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek, and, a surprise, his eldest daughter, Claire, a first-year political science major at the U of A, is a page here at the Legislature. So we have three generations of the Edwards family gracing us with their presence today. Stan and James are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and Claire is here with us. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three introductions if I may. First of all, it's a pleasure today for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four alumni members of the Youth Advisory Panel: Nicole Baker, Catheryn Derker, Kirsten Mandes, and Samantha Sperber. The Youth Advisory Panel is committed to supporting Alberta's children and youth to reach their full potential by ensuring that the voice of youth is reflected in the work of the Alberta government.

It's also my pleasure to introduce four grades 11 and 12 students from my constituency: Kristen Falconer, Zeinab Elbarrad, Erinn Mills, and Magie Aiken as well as their teacher, Davey Thompson. They have each shown leadership and initiative at Lillian Osborne high school. This morning both groups attended the special luncheon in honour of the two female Nobel peace prize winners, Mrs. Gbowee and Mrs. Karman, whose stories have no doubt inspired these gifted young female youth to work with even more conviction and compassion to create a better world. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also an honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Deborah Miller. Last Friday night I had the pleasure of presenting the inspiration awards to members of our community who have made outstanding contributions in the prevention of family violence. Ms Miller is one of those community leaders. In fact, she is the recipient of a lifetime achievement award. She's spent more than 33 years supporting survivors of domestic violence. Through her career as a lawyer Ms Miller has provided legal advice and support to women in shelters. She spearheaded the establishment of the family law office within Legal Aid Alberta to assist vulnerable and low-income Albertans who experience family law problems, including violence in the home. Deborah is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's inspiring for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a wonderful group of 29 grade 6 students from Monsignor William Irwin school, located in the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying the students is their teacher, Michael Leskow, along with student teachers Andrew Wiens and Kelsey Reimer and parent helper Maura Balante. Wonderful students, inspiring future for this province, and I'm pleased to have them here with us. They're in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and also receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to everyone in the Assembly 26 brilliant students and an outstanding teacher from St. Alphonsus school. Mrs. Laura Galbraith is the teacher. They've had a tour, and they're here all week for School at the Legislature, which you put on and organize. Having very much enjoyed their tour, I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you a class of grade 6 students from St. Elizabeth Catholic school in my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. You know, there is so much brightness coming from them. They are so bright. I had a chance to meet them last week. They've come today to go through our Legislative Assembly and learn about how the Alberta government works. Also, they are accompanied by their teachers and a parent helper. I'm just going to walk through their names: Kristin, Shauna, Cindy, Tania, and Kirstie. Please rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by the Minister of Education.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I actually have two sets of introductions, but I will indeed keep them short. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two guests from the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta. Dianne Dyer is the president of CARNA. She is an RN from Calgary and has served as the president of CARNA since 2009. Joining Dianne is Mary-Anne Robinson. She is the CEO of CARNA. Later this afternoon CARNA's annual report will be tabled, and I'm so pleased that Dianne and Mary-Anne are able to join us for that tabling today. I would ask them to rise as I invite all members to provide them with a warm welcome.

The second introduction. It's a pleasure to introduce two guests from the Alberta College of Pharmacists. Kaye Moran is the president of the college. She is a clinical pharmacist at the Foothills family medical centre in Black Diamond and is a pharmacy practice leader with the Calgary Rural primary care network. Joining Kaye is Greg Eberhart. He is the registrar of the college. Later this afternoon the Alberta College of Pharmacists' annual report will be tabled, and I'm so pleased that Kaye and Greg are able to join us for the tabling today. They're standing, and I'd ask the House to give them our very warmest welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions here this afternoon. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you a young Albertan who has taken some strong action on stopping bullying in her school. Jaren Voigt is in the fifth grade here in Edmonton at Sister Annata Brockman school. She's here with several members of her family: Petra, Roman, Michelle Wiley, Greg Voigt, and Joan and Carl Voigt. They're also with Jaren's teacher from last year, Ms Monica Murphy, and the principal of Sister Annata Brockman school, Doris Leboldus-Campbell. We'll be hearing more about the amazing work that Jaren and her classmates have done to teach about antibullying and a great project she did, but I can attest she is a fantastic girl. I met her earlier today. They're up in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some members of my Student Advisory Council who participated earlier today in a luncheon honouring the two Nobel peace prize winners that were introduced earlier and who have of course done some amazing work. These students had the opportunity to hear first-hand from these women today, as I did. I trust that they will be able to take those remarkable stories back to other members of the council and learn from the example. In the members' gallery we have Julie Carter, Maria Baclic, Nadia Baheri, Amy Berlinguette, Khadija Farooq, Mikaela Gilhooly, Emily Marriott, Mackenzie Martin, Nicola Singer, and Heather Whitfield. Also joining them is the department lead for the council, Mr. Al Chapman. I'd ask them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce four members of the Service Alberta team who have come up from Calgary. I'd like Mike Areshenko, Trevor Schulz, Shawnti Enns, and Stephen Macumber to stand. The four members of the Service Alberta team who are here this afternoon drove up from Calgary to pay respects to our fallen Deputy Minister of Service Alberta, Doug Lynkowski. I'd ask all members of the Assembly to give a warm welcome to these great public servants.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the Associate Minister of IIR.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege and an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly one of those young people who came and listened and met the two Nobel prize winners today at the luncheon hosted by the Minister of Human Services and the Minister of Education. She is a young lady from the community of Peerless Lake, and her name is Joanelle Netowastanum. She is in grade 10 and is a mover and a shaker in that community. She indicated to me what an honour it is to drive that far, because it's an eight-hour drive, to meet the honoured guests. I'm sure this day will mean more to her than we can explain to anyone about the luncheon. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that she stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of International and Inter-governmental Relations, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly our special guests from Chongqing, Beibei, in central China. This delegation represents some of our greatest connections in the area of international education and the latest example of a successful and mutually beneficial partnership between our province and China. During their stay this great group of people, following up on an earlier visit in China by a group of Alberta school superintendents, will be meeting with their Alberta counterparts to identify and develop co-operative programs which will connect the students and teachers through a wide range of initiatives.

I would ask that they please stand and remain standing as I introduce them: Mr. Xiao Biao, educational inspector and head of the delegation from the Chongqing, Beibei, Education Committee; Mr. Dan Hanguo, head teacher at the Jinpei high school; Ms He Xiaoxia, deputy head teacher at Chongqing Jianshan high school; Mr. Zhou Ji, deputy head teacher at Chongqing Chaoyang high school; Mr. He Jianqiang, school supervisor at Chongqing Chaoyang elementary school. They are accompanied by Mr. Doug McDavid, associate superintendent at the St. Albert public school district; Ms Jenny Luo, education officer at the Alberta government office in Beijing; and Ms Fang Xinxin, special Chinese language adviser for Alberta Education; and Mr. Waldemar Riemer, director, international education services, also at Alberta Education. I will ask the members of this Assembly to join me and give our guests the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, the clock requires us to move to Oral Question Period. We'll begin with the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Capital Infrastructure Financing

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to get to the illegal donation scandal in a minute, but first, over the break the Premier officially broke her promise to balance the budget and is taking Alberta back into debt. She claims there's been a change in the fiscal reality. The fiscal reality is this: PC governments have blown through our savings, they've squandered our prosperity, and now they have to borrow to cover the basics, like building roads and schools. They can't prioritize. That is the reality. When are they going to balance the entire budget? Is it going to be this year, next year, or never?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, you don't have the luxury in this House of dealing with some matters later and some matters sooner. As a matter of fact, this member has been rising in this House and accusing many members on this side of the aisle, including the Premier, of inappropriate conduct, of inappropriate donations. Guess what? Today we find out that while attending a federal Conservative fundraiser, she expected the Alberta taxpayers to eat the cost of those tickets by claiming them from taxpayers not only for herself but also for her husband.

Ms Smith: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lukaszuk: While accusing the Premier of maintaining Law Society membership, this member, as a matter of fact, has expected Alberta taxpayers to pay for her Chamber of Commerce membership.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've noted a point of order from the Leader of the Official Opposition. We've noted another point of order from the Member for Airdrie. We aren't even through our very first question and answer, and we're already running on that fine line of disorder. I'm not going to let that happen.

I'm going to remind future questioners and future responders that under no circumstances are you to bring issues into this Assembly that pertain to party business. I don't care which party it is, and I don't care which member it is, government or opposition. The rule is the same for both sides of the House.

Hon. Leader of the Opposition, please proceed.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister says that there are two components to budgeting. There are operations, and there's capital. It looks to me like there are two components to PC budgeting. It's actually overspending and borrowing. The Premier now blames her choice to go into debt on decisions that were made 15 years ago by her predecessor's predecessor. When will she take responsibility for our finances because she has overpromised, mismanaged, and is now personally taking us back into debt?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, there's financial literacy, there's literacy, and I would ask the hon. members whether perhaps they need some remediation in the literacy component. Frankly, this was part of the budget that was delivered this spring. There was a component in there that talked about alternative financing. We will continue to do that. We haven't blown through Albertans' savings. The Alberta heritage savings trust fund is there. The sustainability fund is there. You don't let ideology and dogma punish Albertans and make them wait for the infrastructure they need today and take all of the tools out of your toolbox.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has blown through our savings. It was a high of $15 billion. It's going to be wiped out within the next year or two. The Finance minister is in love with the household mortgage analogy as he tries to spin this debt and borrowing as something else. A household mortgage is paid by the homeowner. It's not passed on to the homeowner's children and grandchildren. If the minister can't balance the budget today, when budget revenues are at record highs, why does he think that it is going to be easier at some point in the future?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the kids in that home enjoy that home while they're there, and then they'll buy a home afterwards.

Let me go back to this, though. Alternative financing is nothing new to this government. We've been doing alternative financing since 2005. It would probably do the opposition a little good to do some homework for a change as opposed to simply reading what they produce themselves. The tools that we have at our disposal are for proper financial management. That includes P3s. That includes borrowing. That includes capital financing through other markets or other means, including bonds.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They did not campaign on going back into debt.

Health Regions' Expense Reporting

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the political donations scandal involves more than 40 illegal donations to political parties, and then, of course, there's the health expenses scandal, where precious health dollars are being spent on lavish dinners and car repairs. Well, now there are new revelations that bring both of these scandals together. An employee with the former Calgary health region made expense claims for thousands of dollars in donations to political parties. Will the Minister of Health agree that enough is enough, that it is time to start a full investigation into all of the executives at all of the health regions going back to 2005?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if this is not hypocrisy, I do not know what it is. While this member will stand up and accuse the Premier and accuse civil servants of making inappropriate donations – as she very well knows, if she has any proof thereof, she should file it with the electoral officer, who will investigate it – what she will not tell you is that she attends federal Conservative Party fundraisers and expects the government of Alberta to pay for it. [interjections] This is the federal Conservative Party.

What she will not tell you is that she pays for professional memberships and expects the taxpayer . . .

The Speaker: The hon. opposition leader.

A point of order from Airdrie?

Mr. Anderson: Yes.

The Speaker: It's noted.

Hon. leader, proceed.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a cloud of suspicion over all of this. Whether it's complete disregard for the taxpayer, with lavish personal expenses, or whether it's a complete disregard for the elections law, with partisan donations, it needs to be investigated, exposed, and eradicated. Why won't the Health minister order Alberta Health Services to come clean and release all of the expense reports?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge all of the expenses that have been requested through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act have been released. The fact of the matter is that this province and Alberta Health Services employ one of the strictest policies with respect to political donations that you will find anywhere in this country. If the hon. member wants to persist in talking about former health regions that no longer exist, that's entirely up to her. We're focused on the rules that we have in place today. Those rules are being followed.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problem is that all of those same executives are in the current Alberta Health Services. The government seems to be hoping that they can sweep this all under the rug just by hanging out Allaudin Merali to dry, but now there's Lynn Redford: two executives out of hundreds, two regions out of nine. We believe there are more out there. If the government is confident that there aren't, why not clear the air and release all of the expenses today?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I've said and I'll say again, what this government is confident about is that we have the toughest regulations with respect to political donations and with respect to travel and expense claims that will be found anywhere in the country. Those rules have been in place since the Alberta Health Services Board was formed. They comply with provincial law. They were strengthened a number of years ago, again under the new board, and I continue to have confidence that those rules are being followed today.

Political Party Financial Contributions

Mr. Saskiw: Well, another day, another example of this government's culture of corruption. We know the Chief Electoral Officer confirmed that thousands of public dollars flowed illegally to a political party. There was the Merali expense scandal with the health dollars being spent on butlers and car service. Now we find out that a senior executive in the Calgary health region has been busy reimbursing expenses for MLA barbecues and fundraisers. Now, I know this government family is close but not that close. How can Albertans trust this government when hard-earned taxpayer dollars are wasted on politics instead of public services?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I'll tell you how, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you how. While this government has been focusing on governing this province, while this government has been focusing on building infrastructure – schools, highways, hospitals, seniors' homes, and the list goes on – while the government has been focusing on delivering good health care in this province, while this government has been focusing on working with agriculture during a time of disaster not too long ago, these bottom-feeders have been only poring through receipts and hoping to find something scandalous while not telling us that they are actually charging Albertans for . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling
Questions about Political Party Activity
Referring to a Nonmember

The Speaker: Please. I assume that Airdrie rose on a point of order, and we're getting right to your time, Deputy Premier, so let's just take a short breather here. There. I think we all feel better now.

Let's be very careful, again, about issues pertaining to political parties. And while I'm on my feet, let's also be careful when we start naming people out there by their first and last name who are not here and unable to defend themselves. Let's please be very careful about that going forward. You were cautioned once.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I may have you on the list later, so please await your turn. That would be appreciated. Thank you.

Let us proceed onward with Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a change of leadership hasn't changed the culture of the government family and this Premier turns a blind eye to clear ethical lapses and breaches of her own laws, will this government admit that it can't put an end to its own culture of corruption?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, while the leader of this government has posted all of her donations from her leadership race, we are still waiting for the Leader of the Opposition to tell us who donated and how much. [interjection] They rise on a point of order.

While this government is focusing on governing this province, the MLAs on the other side are denying writing e-mails that they have written, are recalling events that have never occurred, and continuously are trying to insinuate that there is something unscrupulous going on, accusing Albertans of wrongdoing who don't even have the ability to defend themselves in this particular Chamber. If it is not true, be clear that it isn't. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has the floor. Let's let him go.

Mr. Saskiw: Given that the most recent scandal was only made public after multiple FOIP requests and it is clear that thousands of tax dollars are being inappropriately wasted, will the Justice minister admit that it's time to fix the ineffective legislation and make sure public dollars are being spent on public services and not politics?

Mr. Lukaszuk: The most recent scandal is the one of about 30 minutes ago, where I learned from reporters from CTV, the best research source that the opposition has ever had, that the Leader of the Official Opposition expenses fundraising events and memberships to professional organizations in the hopes that the taxpayers of Alberta will eat that up. This is the most recent scandal. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I hope that they will stand up and speak to some of their conduct instead of insinuating that there is wrong conduct being done on this side of the House.

Speaker's Ruling
Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, we noted your point of order at 2:02, just so you know. That so far is the fifth or sixth point of order. Perhaps there will be more. But I wonder if we could stop with the outbursts. It really is rude to whoever has the floor. Again, I don't care which side of the House is speaking or asking or questioning. They deserve to have the floor at that time.

The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Physician Services Agreement

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move away from the culture of corruption to the culture of fear and intimidation. Last Friday the Health minister continued his tradition of bullying Alberta physicians when he reneged on the agreement in principle that he signed just before the election. He walked away from negotiations, and he unilaterally imposed a contract. The president of the AMA calls this minister's actions a frontal assault across the board and another form of physician intimidation. To the minister. You've had a weekend to think about your mistake. Will you do the right thing now and rescind your heavy-handed approach and get back to the negotiating table?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, this government has been in negotiations with the Alberta Medical Association for over 20 months now. Alberta has the distinction – and we're proud of it – of providing the best pay in Canada for our physicians, at 29 per cent over the national average. The increases that were announced on Friday extend that by an additional $463 million over four years. This is a very important development that will provide stability for physicians and their ability to plan after a very long period without any knowledge of additional monies coming their way.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the doctors have been negotiating, you've been busy changing leaders, deputy ministers, and ministers.

Given that there's a major shortage of family doctors in urban and, especially, rural Alberta and that the physician retention benefit and office costs programs keep experienced practising doctors practising longer, why is the minister going to make this crisis much worse?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, in addition to paying our doctors the best in Canada – and we believe we have the best doctors here in Alberta – the hon. member should also know that Ontario physicians are facing a fee cut and that the additional funds that were announced on Friday exceed the recent deal that was entered into in British Columbia with their physicians.

With respect to the two programs that the hon. member mentions, he should know that that $120 million is earmarked and will stay earmarked to support family physicians in practice in our primary care networks, in our family care clinics, and in physician offices.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the doctors of Alberta don't know what this guy is doing. He didn't talk to them. He just walked away from them. They had to read about this in the newspapers.

To the same minister: given that this minister has completely lost the confidence of the physicians of this province, the AMA, and the public and has proven that he is not a responsible leader, Minister, will you resign? Will you resign, Minister?

Mr. Horner: Just say no, Fred.

Mr. Horne: Just say no?

Mr. Speaker, as usual the gap between what this hon. member knows and what he thinks he knows continues to widen. The fact of the matter is that this is a very generous financial offer to our physicians. We will continue to work with them in order to improve the allocation of physician compensation resources within our global budget. We're anxious to begin that work. I've had some very constructive discussions with the new president on how we might go about that. Albertans can remain confident that we will work in close collaboration with our physicians to improve the system.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, I want to just remind you briefly that there should not be any preambles to questions. Those of you who are coming up on the roster soon, please bear that in mind. I know that the next speaker will demonstrate to the best of his ability how this is done.

The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Mr. Mason: I will try to live up to your ideal, Mr. Speaker.

Political Party Financial Contributions (continued)

Mr. Mason: Documents from the former Calgary health authority show that Lynn Redford, the Premier's sister, charged the authority for political donations. If true, this is not only morally wrong; it is illegal. But this government refuses to do anything about it, and I wonder why. To the Premier: what did the Premier know about these illegal acts, and when did she know it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer the question on what she knew – she will be in the position to tell you that when she will be in the House – but I can tell you one thing. If there is anything that this member knows or believes has happened and believes was illegal, as he now indicates it was, and believes he has some documents or evidence to substantiate it, file it. File it with the Chief Electoral Officer, who only reports to this House, not to the government, not to the Premier. He will conduct an investigation, report it to you, and we will find out what did or didn't happen.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier tries to hide the truth, and when that doesn't work anymore, the government hides the Premier.

Given that this government refused to prosecute illegal political fundraising activity when asked by its previous Chief Electoral Officer and that the current one insists on keeping the results of any investigation secret and won't even tell us if an investigation is under way, will the Premier help lift the cloud of secrecy and corruption that is hanging over this PC government and tell Albertans what she knew and when she knew it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you two things. I certainly hope that this member is not insinuating that the Chief Electoral Officer is in any way going to, quote, unquote, hide the truth. I can tell you that tomorrow is a very special day in this Chamber. Tomorrow the Minister of Justice will be tabling the new elections act, which will also be dealing with election finances, and that member will have all the privilege and ability to deal with this act. I think he will be shocked to find out that yet again Alberta will be leading the way in Canada relative to transparency with election finances.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that I and other members of this House have referred several cases to the Chief Electoral Officer as the Deputy Premier suggests and we don't even know if an investigation is under way and given that Albertans are demanding to know that illegal activities are prosecuted and given that the expenses of the Premier's sister appear illegal, will this government ask the Chief Electoral Officer to investigate this case and, if illegal donations were in fact made, prosecute Lynn Redford?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if there are cases that are prosecuted, this member would definitely know about it because (a) he would be a witness as a complainant, and (b) the dockets of our courts are public information. However, as I said earlier, this government will make sure that we have one of the most transparent and progressive legislations relative to campaigns and financing of campaigns. He will see the bill tomorrow, tabled in the House, and I think he will be pleased with what he sees.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, since 1993 this government's policy has been to not go into debt. The Premier changed this policy last weekend, saying that Alberta will go back into debt to build capital. The Finance minister followed up, stating that anyone who believes in a no-debt policy, which would presumably include former Premier Klein and former Treasurer Jim Dinning, was a Socred retread. Minister, the only retreads Albertans see are the failed Trudeau-like, borrow-and-spend policies of this government. Why can't this minister just admit that it is your highest-in-the-nation wasteful spending that has Alberta back in debt?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I am shocked to hear that, because as a former Progressive Conservative this member should know that, as a matter of fact, the first P3s that were brought into this province and have proven themselves to be successful to the point where our current Premier just picked up an award for the best P3s in Canada were by Premier Klein. Mr. Speaker, he would be surprised as a former Progressive Conservative. I guess he forgot that it was Premier Klein as mayor of the city of Calgary who financed the Olympics, who financed the Saddledome, and who financed the light-rail train system in Calgary, all by deferring the cost of infrastructure, from which we are so greatly benefiting today.

Mr. Speaker, if they want some ideas for cuts, here are some. Why don't they cut the 8 per cent salary increase that they just gave themselves? Why don't they cut the million-dollar junket to the Olympics that they just gave themselves? How about $800 million for carbon capture and storage to Shell Canada? The fact is that your government is wasting away the taxpayers of Alberta's money. You should be ashamed. What are you going to do to get our budget balanced?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting, especially coming from this particular member, who is the Finance critic, that he obviously has not read any of the budgets going all the way back to 1993, or he would know. He would know that we have had debt on our books for some period of time if you include the tools of a P3, which the Leader of the Opposition has been in support of in the past. I'm assuming now she has changed her position and doesn't support that alternative financing anymore. You know, coming from a party that says that we should have more infrastructure spending in Nobleford, new roads, protection for seniors, health services that are needed today . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Apparently, now Premier Klein is the master of debt. He's the one that brought debt to this province. Premier Klein brought debt to this province according to this minister. Incredible.

Minister, you did not campaign on this. You did not campaign on returning Albertans to debt. Will you at least do the decent thing? Call a referendum for Albertans. Ask them – ask them – whether they want this province to go back into debt. Quit campaigning on one thing and then changing your mind after the election just to save your political skins.

Speaker's Ruling

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, I cautioned you about preambles, and now it's time to enforce the caution. We've just heard some examples here of preambles that are bound to lead to some disorder in the House, and I said earlier that I will not let that happen. I took an oath, just like you did. My oath is just a little different in this respect, and that is to ensure that we don't go into the kind of behaviour that leads to the kind of disorder that we've seen in other parliaments around the world. That's not going to happen here, so you're all on advisory now. No more preambles today. I'm talking about preambles to supplementary questions, by the way. To supplementary questions.

The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Capital Infrastructure Financing

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the ruling.

In our budget, tabled in this House prior to . . . [interjections] Obviously, they didn't hear you, Mr. Speaker.

We tabled a budget in this House prior to the election. If the hon. members would take the time to do what they should be doing as representatives of their constituents and as members of this Assembly and read the document, they would see that we clearly articulated that we would be using alternative finance for capital. We intend to do that.

Mr. Speaker, the referendum was in April of this year. We won.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, you're on deck, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Campaign Financing Disclosure Policies

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following the April provincial general election the opposition has been almost singularly focused on creating scandal and conspiracy theories. This is their version of politics. This is their version of hope: anger and scandals. My question to the Deputy Premier: given there has been a significant discussion on the accountability and transparency of government expenses, how is this government leading in expense and disclosure policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been very clear for months already. We have taken the lead with our Premier disclosing her leadership campaign financing, not only indicating who donated but also how much they donated. We're still waiting to see that from the Leader of the Official Opposition. We are tabling a piece of legislation tomorrow in the House that will make financing of campaigns and financing of provincial elections in Alberta the most transparent and the most rigorous in the land. We have also mandated our political party to list all donations that were inappropriate.

They did for a few minutes, but they took that page down from the Internet shortly after.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, let's see how we do with no preamble, please.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Deputy Premier again: given that it was revealed today that the Leader of the Opposition posted an expense for the federal Conservative barbeque but then removed it when it became inconvenient, can the Deputy Premier assure this House that government expenses will be fully disclosed regardless of the convenience?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm looking at a document, which I will be tabling later. It tells me that the MLA for the Highwood constituency, which makes it the Leader of the Official Opposition, and her husband have attended a fundraiser for the federal Conservative Party for the Macleod electoral district association, purchased tickets for that fundraiser, and expensed both of those tickets to their constituency office budget.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Another point of order, at 2:18 p.m., from Airdrie.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, you did well with no preamble. Let's see if you can do it again.

Mr. Quadri: Mr. Speaker, back to the Deputy Premier again: although the opposition is not concerned with the true issues of Alberta, our province is faced with some serious issues, significant growth that we need to be prepared for. How are we building our future, our province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I spoke to that somewhat earlier. While they're digging through receipts and are hoping to find something and making allegations which in most cases are unfounded, this government has been focusing on a number of fronts. As a matter of fact, right now our Premier is meeting with other Premiers and discussing our Canadian economy, not just Alberta but our position in the world economically. We have been meeting with a Nobel prize awarded economist, helping us and advising us on how to structure our economy in the province. We've been meeting with stakeholders and discussing infrastructure. While they're asking for hospitals and urgent care clinics and highways in their ridings, they don't want us to pay for it. We've been focusing on governing this province, something that the opposition hasn't offered.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Alleged Intimidation of Physicians

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's record on the bullying and intimidation of our health professionals is truly shameful. The Health minister has tried to deny that there is a problem, stating: "Don't worry; be happy. We'll collaborate. Of course I care." But when doctors got too vocal, the minister responded by failing to call an inquiry into physician intimidation, shutting doctors out of the family care clinics consultation, and ending all contract talks by imposing a long-term deal. Given that the engagement of our physician community is critical – and, Minister, those are your words, not mine – how low does physician morale have to fall before it hits rock bottom?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, hopefully no lower than the premise of the question that was just asked of me this afternoon.

We're very proud as a government of our collaborative work with our physicians both within our agreements with the Alberta Medical Association and outside of those agreements in our everyday work to improve health care across the province, especially in areas such as primary health care. We're proud of the fact that our physicians are paid 29 per cent more than the national average, and we're very proud to be in a position as a government to supply them with an additional $463 million over the next four years to improve that position further.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, with no preamble, please.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that the Alberta Medical Association has said that family care clinic consultations are being held in the dark, away from the input of doctors, does the minister think shutting physicians out of consultations is in the best interests of Alberta families?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware that anyone is saying that at all. In fact, I just came from a conference in Banff called Accelerating Primary Care, during which I met with many, many family doctors working in PCNs, some working in family care clinics across the province, working very collaboratively with us. In fact, a committee of the Alberta Medical Association called the Primary Care Alliance is an integral part of our Advisory Committee on Primary Health Care, which is guiding the future direction of this important area in our health system.

Mrs. Forsyth: Will you immediately begin clearing up your own terrible record, fix the wrongs, rebuild broken relationships, and expand the scope of the health inquiry to include the issue of the intimidation of our health care workers?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, that question has been asked and answered in this House many, many times in the last two sessions as well as of the Premier. The answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Highway Safety

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This last Thanksgiving weekend in Canada Calgary Janice Cairns was killed – she was killed – when a rock the size of a baseball dislodged from a semi tractor-trailer and smashed through the windshield of her family vehicle. Just last month, no word of a lie, my very own sister-in-law JoAnne had a rock the same size smash through her sunroof as she travelled down the QE II highway around Red Deer. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. What is your ministry doing to ensure that our highways are safe from these hazardous projectiles?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to express my sympathy for the person that died from the incident. I think we all agree on that.

I'd like the hon. member to know we do take this and the overall safety of Albertans seriously. Our maintenance contractors patrol Alberta highways on a regular basis, the high-volume highways at least once a day and the lower volume highways at least once a week. Their instruction is to pick up debris as soon as it's discovered and remove it right away. Of course, we encourage all Albertans to work with us, because this truly is a partnership, to call us if there is something there that we haven't picked up yet.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question, to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: what is your department doing to enforce existing laws and ensuring that these offenders stop spewing fatal projectiles from the back of their rigs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills for that question. To date this year there have been over 30,000 inspections done, and there have been just over 3,500 infractions. I want to take the time to say thank you to our Transportation officers as someone who travels the highways a lot. These are some unsung heroes that really protect us. Really, many people do not even say thank you or do not know the good things that they are doing.

Mr. Webber: Back to the Minister of Transportation: given that education is an important tool in addressing poor practices, what are you doing and what is your ministry doing to educate the trucking industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. We meet regularly with the industry associations and the Alberta Motor Transport Association. They actually provide cargo securement courses, workshops, instructional videos to their member carriers. When that fails, we actually take a harder stance, and we give fines. The fine for failing to properly secure a load is $575. Again, this truly is a partnership. I encourage the hon. member to keep on me and my department on that because I don't think this problem will ever go away. We're dealing with real life.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has reneged on the agreement in principle with physicians signed just before the election, where physicians clearly agreed to zero increases for year 1 and year 2. This is clearly not about money, Mr. Minister. This is about respect and not token consultation, which he talks about frequently. To the minister: does the minister not see a connection between our demoralized family physician workforce and these disrespectful negotiations on quality of care for Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of many governments in this country that have invested willingly and will continue to invest more than 20 months in negotiations with our physicians. It is a reflection of the trust and the respect that we have for the medical profession, and it is in that vein that this government, recognizing that we are at present in an impasse in those negotiations over fee increases, provided certainty and stability for our physicians in announcing an additional $463 million in support.

Dr. Swann: Trust and respect. It's not coming from the profession, Mr. Minister, and you know that.

Cancelling the public inquiry into physician intimidation now makes sense, Mr. Speaker, since this government is the bully. Why doesn't the minister just admit that this is clearly part of the Premier's strategy to emasculate the AMA? Admit it.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is hardly a question of government policy, but I'll take the opportunity to say this. The issue of physician intimidation was investigated thoroughly by the Health Quality Council of Alberta in a report that they released last year. In the report they suggested that it would not be a wise use of resources for the government to re-examine this through ordering another inquiry to cover the same ground. They advised us to take note of the steps that they outlined in the report to improve the workplace culture for physicians in our province. We've taken that advice. We're well on our way to implementing those recommendations. That's what trust and respect are.

Dr. Swann: Well, with another deficit of $3.5 billion in this province, this is clearly another desperate attempt to find dollars for the Premier's pet project, family care centres, regardless of the cost to health professionals. Is this the best you can do, Minister, to improve primary care in this province?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'd suggest to you that in an environment where physicians are facing fee cuts in other parts of the country, retaining our position of paying 29 per cent above the national average to physician compensation is a pretty good deal for physicians.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before he was fired for just doing his job, former Chief Electoral Officer Lorne Gibson referred 19 cases of illegal donations to the Justice minister, but the Justice minister, who is now the Premier, refused to prosecute these cases. Today we learned that Lynn Redford, the Premier's sister, made illegal donations at the same time. Albertans need to know that wrongdoing will be prosecuted even if the culprit is related to the Premier. We need to know: what did the Premier know, and when did she know it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Justice minister will speak to this question in detail, but I suggest to you that you would get much better answers in this House if the questions were prefaced with factual statements. The Chief Electoral Officer for this province was not fired. He was not laid off. He served this province to the end of his contract. His contract ended, and it simply wasn't renewed. This Chamber chose another Chief Electoral Officer. His employment was never cut short. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Nonmember

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's be reminded for the last time today: please, let's not raise first and last names of people who are not here to defend themselves. I would do this regardless of whom it's about because it's simply unfair to them. If you want to refer to positions or come at it some other clever way, please feel free to do so, but if I hear another personal name mentioned, I will intervene and move to the next questioner or the next answer person. Those are the rules that we try to abide by, and I'd really, really ask to you to please abide by them from your point of view as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Justice ministry at that time refused to prosecute illegal fundraising, which may have included the former Justice minister's sister, Albertans need to know: what did the Premier know, and when did she know it?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to remind this member that all prosecutions and investigations throughout this entire province are fully independent. Further to that, the Chief Electoral Officer is a fully independent body.

Mr. Speaker, I'm bringing in Bill 7 tomorrow. We could have a further discussion about elections and accountability at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier may very well have placed herself in a serious conflict of interest by not prosecuting friends, family members, other people, and fellow PCs when she was Justice minister, Albertans have the right to know: what did the Premier know, and when did she know it?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I really question whether or not this member and his caucus want the Justice minister, be it me or anybody else, picking who to prosecute. Prosecutions are independent, as are investigations, and they will remain so.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you rose on a point of order at approximately 2:31 and also at 2:29? They've both been noted.

Calgary Ring Road Southwest Portion

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transportation suggested that the best way I could help him with the negotiations of the southwest portion of the Calgary ring road was to sit back and shut up. His own backbenchers publicly ask him puffballs about the progress, so I figure this is fair game. Residents of south Calgary have been held hostage by failed negotiations for 28 years, and they are understandably cynical about this minister's ability to deliver results. In the spirit of being open and transparent, does the minister have a timeline in mind for this round of negotiations specific to when he may have to accept failure and move on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is actually correct. I didn't use the pejorative terminology that he used, but I agree with what he said. I did suggest to him that the best way to help is: don't help. Just for the record I've said the same thing to members of our caucus because negotiating in the Legislature is just not really a good strategy for success. I think the hon. member might even agree with that.

Our neighbours to the west, the Tsuu T'ina, are in the midst of an election right now, which takes place, I believe, on the 26th of this month. After that point I hope to restart negotiations as soon as possible with the intent of getting a good result for this member and all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that past results are the best indicator of future results, would the minister articulate what his plan B is in the event that negotiations fail?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, it calls for an opinion, but I'll allow you to answer if you want.

Mr. McIver: Fortunately, I have opinions. One of those opinions is that negotiating a business deal in this House, as it's being suggested I do here, probably isn't the best path to success. So I won't do that, and I hope the hon. member can respect that even if the hon. member doesn't really appreciate that. So, Mr. Speaker, that's where it is. I'll be doing the best I can on behalf of Albertans, and when there are results, this House will surely know about it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have no answer for a timeline, we have no answer for a plan B, and the minister, formerly known as Dr. No, campaigned on being able to fix the congestion on Deerfoot Trail and is now in a position to do so, can Calgary residents expect him to follow through on his personal commitments, or will he be saying no to them as well?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I'd almost think the questions are coming from our side of the House. I appreciate the question. The attention to congestion in and around Calgary, including Deerfoot Trail and other places, is high on my agenda, of course, but even as Transportation minister I need to balance it with the whole rest of the province because I am responsible to all Albertans for their network. But, yes, that most certainly does include the areas in and around where I get elected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East, followed by the Member for Little Bow.

Traffic Congestion in Southeast Calgary

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary-South East is growing at a very aggressive rate with the attraction of downtown corporate offices relocating to our business parks, retail businesses setting up shop to service our growing families, the addition of seniors' complexes, and the 100,000-plus people that will come and go on a daily basis to receive world-class health care at the south health campus. To the Minister of Transportation. Traffic in Calgary-South East is quite terrible. What are the government's current strategies, progress, and dialogue with the city of Calgary to install the southeast leg of the south LRT?

The Speaker: Through the chair, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Through the chair, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. I agree with the premise of the question that traffic congestion is a challenge in southeast Calgary. I would say to the hon. member that aside from working on the road projects which were previously mentioned, the city of Calgary is primary in deciding when and where and if the next LRT lines go. I've had several discussions. They do know that I'm aware that the only quadrant of the city that doesn't have a line is the southeast. Hopefully, that will lead to some success.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first supplementary, without preamble, please.

Mr. Fraser: My constituents are impatient, and I don't blame them. In the short term what are your plans to reduce the bottleneck of Ivor Strong Bridge, Anderson Road, and Deerfoot Trail to move traffic along?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the thing that I must do is put things forward, take it to my department, and then I need to convince the Treasury Board that it's a high priority amongst all the other priorities of Alberta. I certainly plan to do that. As the Finance minister will know, nothing for the next year's budget has been confirmed yet; that is, it hasn't been formalized. When it is, I'm surely hopeful that there will be some good news.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The final question is on behalf of my constituents in the southwest end of my constituency. Like the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, they want to know what's happening to build trust with the Tsuu T'ina Nation and the city of Calgary on alternative routes for the southwest ring road.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's like: is it live, or is it Memorex?

Similar to what I said earlier, one of the things I'm doing to build trust with the Tsuu T'ina people is not negotiating in the Legislature. Now, I appreciate that this hon. member is very keen for an answer, and I appreciate that other hon. members may really want an answer, but the standard is the same for all members on this question, and that is that negotiations in the House will not succeed. I'm doing my best to get that done, and I'm sure all members in and around southern Alberta will be very happy to know the results.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Little Bow Continuing Care Centre

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The events this summer came as a shock to the community of Carmangay when Little Bow continuing care centre was hastily shut down and misinformation was spread by this government. Now, almost four months later, we are still waiting for a FOIP inquiry to come out with the real reasons why this facility was shut down. I'd like to know if this government will commit to releasing the full report, including the minister's correspondence, on the rash decision to shut down the Little Bow continuing care centre.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member appears to be referring to an information request that he has made or someone has made on his behalf under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. My best advice to him is to await the due processing of that request. This government does not make those decisions. They're made independently under the provisions of the act.

The Speaker: Hon. member, without preamble, your first supplemental, please.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the FOIP request can take months or up to a year even, is expensive and complicated, and is at the discretion of the minister, will the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation please explain how this government believes this is a transparent process?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud that we have one of the leading FOIP processes in all of Canada. We're reviewing the FOIP process, and we're going to be consulting with all Albertans to improve that process. I'm looking forward to the input of the opposition in that process. We want a constructive and meaningful piece of legislation that's accountable to all Albertans, and that's exactly what we're going to aim for.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given this government's recent trend of disrespecting Albertans' right to public information, can the Associate Minister of AT and T take the first step in the right direction and produce the information that this Health minister obviously seems to want to hide?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud that we have a Premier that supports openness and transparency. That's why she has instructed me to review the freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation. That's what we're going to do, and we're going to do a very effective job. We're going to consult Albertans, and we're going to consult all the interested parties, and I believe that we're going to come up with a very good result. It's going to serve Albertans. We believe that the information is Albertans', and Albertans are going to have a right to get it. We want to set up a fair process where that can be achieved.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Literacy

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Literacy is so critical to our daily lives. Literacy is more than just reading. It is words but is also numbers, synthesizing information, and solving problems. As politicians we know as well as anyone that our jobs would be impossible without these skills. My questions today are for the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. We know that there are a number of Albertans who struggle with literacy. Can the minister advise the House as to the levels of literacy in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question, and thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore for her outstanding work on this very important issue that affects so many Albertans. I would agree with her that, unfortunately, literacy challenges affect too many Albertans in day-to-day issues as simple as reading prescriptions on their medical bottles. That's why predecessors in my ministry have worked very hard to develop a living literacy framework. The main goal of the literacy framework is to increase province-wide literacy rates by 10 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm familiar with that document and the goals outlined in it. Can the minister advise the House as to where we are on the path to accomplishing those goals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As previously mentioned, the key goal of that framework is to see significant increases in literacy across the province. That 10 per cent increase by the year 2020 will equate the equivalency of high school and post-secondary entrances. We're hoping that by increasing those levels of literacy, more Albertans will be able to be engaged in all of the benefits of this wonderful province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are going to be short of skilled workers here in Alberta in the next 10 years. I think it's 115,000 workers. What are the minister and his department doing to address that need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My department is working on a number of initiatives. For example, our community adult learning program provides $16 million in funding and other supports to 125 community-based organizations so they can add to basic offerings in terms of adult literacy. Our postsecondary is also playing an important role in developing literacy. This fall I toured Keyano College, and I was so impressed with their LINC program, whereby they engage brand new Albertans from all over the world in increasing their literacy so that they can be a vibrant part of their community and the workforce in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I will continue with Introduction of Guests.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a young lady who is near and dear to my heart. My daughter Cheryl is making her first visit to question period. Since finishing high school at Bishop Grandin high school in Calgary-Glenmore, Cheryl has completed her bachelor of science degree and her master's in public policy at Carleton University in Ottawa. This past summer Cheryl moved back to Calgary and now is a resident of Calgary-Buffalo. Cheryl works as a policy lead in an environmental consulting firm. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask her to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Red Deer-North.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a distinct pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great group of 30 energetic seniors from the village of Willingdon along with their mayor, Ms Lillian Bezovie, and their deputy mayor, John Boychuk. Also in their company happens to be a senior, the Speaker's brother, and I've been told that he's much better looking and smarter. That's what was on my paper, Mr. Speaker. These seniors are actively involved in the Willingdon Senior Citizens Association along with the Willingdon seniors' drop-in centre, hosting card tournaments, floor curling bonspiels, and various community dinners and events. These seniors appreciate the opportunity to witness the democratic process in action that takes place here in the Assembly. I'd like to thank them all for attending the House today and ask them to rise, and I invite all members of this Assembly to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I rarely have family who attend, but I'd like to welcome my brother John and his lovely wife, Marie. John is the one that's waving. Now, he's the much better looking one referred to.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Lawrence Lee, the board chair for the Red Deer public school board. Lawrence is also a director on the Executive Committee of the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta, and he's the president of the Red Deer & District Chinese Community Society. Lawrence has two daughters. He's in the members' gallery. I just want to say that it's a pleasure working with Lawrence. He's more like a peacemaker than a chairman. I'd ask Lawrence to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you two wonderful constituents of mine that just arrived, and I would be remiss if I didn't introduce them. First of all, Colonel Pat Laroche, the colonel of 4 Wing, Cold Lake, the largest air force base in Canada. Could you please stand? Also with him is the mayor of Cold Lake, His Worship Craig Copeland.

Welcome to our Assembly. Please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Bullying Prevention

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to tell you a story about a book, a book written by Jaren Voigt, a fifth-grade student at Sister Annata Brockman school in my constituency, and her former teacher, Ms Monica Murphy. This book is called Bulldoze Bullying. It was written last year by Jaren and her classmates to help people learn how to recognize a bully and how not to become one, but it's so much more.

As chair of the Youth Secretariat I can attest that bullying does exist inside and outside our classrooms. That's why it's such an honour to talk today about Jaren and her incredible initiative. Bulldoze Bullying is a group of young students' way of reaching out to say stop, that bullying is not okay; it is not just part of growing up.

The lessons within Jaren's prose are relevant to any age, culture, or belief. I quote from Jaren's poem, titled The Possible Dream.

My possible dream, is when the world gets along,
Always singing, always a song!
In the dream, sharing is caring,
And it's all clear as the clothes you are wearing.
There's a culture of kindness here and there
There's a culture of kindness everywhere!

Mr. Speaker, this dream is possible, and I congratulate everyone involved in the creation of this book. Jaren and Ms Murphy are examples of the amazing teaching and learning that happens in Alberta's classrooms, and that makes me inspired for the future generations of this province. This Premier has made a commitment to bulldoze bullying, so I think that we can all take a page from Jaren's book and put a stop to bullying everywhere.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Capital Infrastructure Financing

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week a great Albertan received a long-overdue honour. Former Premier Ralph Klein was given the Order of Canada at a small ceremony in Calgary. Colleen Klein accepted the honour on his behalf while wearing one of Ralph's old campaign buttons.

Premier Klein is and always will be one of Alberta's iconic leaders, his warmth and personal touch matched only by his unwavering commitment to his promises and his determination to see them through. His legacy: Alberta liberated from deficits and debt, able to meet its priorities and put money in the bank for the future. This is a legacy Albertans are proud of. It's a shame the government members don't share that pride. No sooner was Klein's induction announced than senior ministers of this government were out pitching opinion pieces that blasted the former Premier's debt-slaying legacy.

Of course, nothing says more about their contempt for Klein's legacy than their decision to take us backwards, back into debt. This government's rationale for returning us to the Getty era, that Albertans have to choose between schools, roads, hospitals, or debt, is ridiculous.

In Wildrose's balanced budget alternative we show that Alberta could spend $50 billion on infrastructure over the next 10 years and remain debt and deficit free. We believe that $50 billion spent in a transparent and prioritized manner is enough to build the infrastructure that Albertans demand and need.

The government's case, that debt is needed to finance high-priority infrastructure, is wrong, and it's an insult to Albertans. Albertans know that high-priority items are just that, high priority. They get paid for first, no debt required. The real reason debt is back, Mr. Speaker, is because this government can't say no to any of its pet projects, corporate welfare, new MLA offices, and seemingly endless pay hikes. It's an affront to the Klein legacy, a legacy this government seems all too willing to ditch.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Nobel Peace Prize Winners

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I introduced two remarkable women, Tawakkol Karman and Leymah Gbowee, two women who had been awarded the Nobel peace prize, and one of the questions I asked myself was: how did these two young women, both mothers, both wives, lead this kind of change in such traditional patriarchal societies? I just want to introduce some ideas to this House.

Tawakkol Karman was a political activist in Yemen. She was a member of the Islah Party, Yemen's most conservative Islamic opposition party. When I first met Tawakkol in 2005, she was wearing a flowered head scarf in the midst of black chadors. She was also launching an advocacy organization called Women Journalists without Chains. She wanted to partner with the Canadian organization I was part of, Bridges Social Development, to build the capacity of female journalists in Yemen and integrate females into Yemen's predominantly male workforce. She knew how to reach out across cultures and across faiths, across many lines. She wanted to train media to be able to tell stories of girls and women in Yemen. It was an amazing partnership and one I'm grateful for.

When the Arab Spring gained momentum in the Middle East and North Africa, she was perfectly positioned to lead Yemen's social revolution and challenge the status quo. At great personal risk she set up a tent in the middle of downtown Sana'a and stayed there until Saleh left.

I also looked at the story of Leymah Gbowee. She won the Nobel peace prize for her part in ending Liberia's civil wars. She was a trauma counsellor and worked with the ex child soldiers of Taylor's army. She was a Christian who reached out to the Muslim community and helped organize widespread nonviolent prayer protests that in 2003 helped to bring an end to that civil war. She gained fame for leading a sex strike, urging Liberian women to refuse intimate relations until the war stopped.

I'm quite impressed by both these women.

Economic Indicators

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It may come as no surprise to everyone in the Assembly today that I love numbers, real numbers. Earlier this month Statistics Canada released the latest job figures. These figures showed that in October for the fourth month in a row Alberta created jobs, 5,000 jobs to be exact. [interjection] This has helped Alberta have the strongest employment growth of all the provinces so far this year and maintain Canada's lowest unemployment rate at 4.5 per cent, well below the average of 7.4 per cent. [interjection]

Our strong employment figures are part of an overall big picture, a picture that shows Alberta's economic future is bright. Private-sector forecasters continue to predict that Alberta will lead the country, indeed, in economic growth this year. Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Conference Board of Canada, Bank of Montreal, Royal Bank of Canada are just some of the organizations that expect Alberta to be Canada's growth leader. In fact, CIBC World Markets recently released a report predicting that Alberta would be the country's economic growth leader for the next decade. That's 10 years, Mr. Speaker.

Other positive signs include strong year-to-date housing starts and retail sales, which are up by 33 per cent and 8.9 per cent respectively over last year. Manufacturers saw shipments grow by almost 9 per cent over the first nine months of this year compared to the same time last year.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans know our province is strong, and others realize this as well.

We continue to lead the provinces in population growth, people are coming here, with Alberta gaining more than 54,000 people in the first two quarters of 2012. That's like adding another city close to the size of St. Albert to our province. People from other provinces are moving here because it's the best place in the country to be. People from abroad, around the globe are also choosing to make Alberta their home. They see the potential, Mr. Speaker, and they want to be here as we continue to lead the way.

Speaker's Ruling

Interrupting Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a long-standing tradition in this House to not interrupt members during private members' statements, nor to heckle them, nor to add our own comments, but to yield the floor to them. I am reviewing this current practice, just so you know, and I expect I'll be making a statement on it very soon.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a growing infestation that is threatening the livelihood of Alberta's very treasured and majestic forests. Mountain pine beetles, indigenous to American pine forests, measure about four to seven and a half millimetres in length, or the size of a grain of rice. These pests may be small in size, but they have the potential of annihilating our pine population by infecting our forests with blue stain fungi. The fungi is carried in one of the mouthparts of the beetle itself, and when it starts chewing the bark, the larvae feed on the phloem of the tree, destroying its living cells.

Alberta has 6 million hectares of pine forests at risk, and if infestations are not managed while numbers are low, an outbreak can wipe out thousands of hectares of our mature pines in just a few years. In B.C. 60 per cent of the pine forest is affected, leading to drastic economic impacts on its own forestry industry. In Alberta estimates suggest that the mountain pine beetle could have the negative economic impact of $420 million to $600 million per year if the beetle population is not controlled.

The hon. Minister of ESRD and I toured the forests southwest of Grande Prairie earlier, in September, and we got a first-hand look at the damaged areas of green forest of the infected areas. Recognizing the potential disaster to our forests, the government of Alberta has dedicated $30 million for detection, control, and prevention programs while allocating another $10 million for reforestation in affected areas.

Mr. Speaker, protecting the natural beauty of Alberta's forests begins with proactive approaches, and that's why I am very proud to see our government stepping up to ensure that we'll be enjoying our forests for many, many years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we have less than two minutes remaining before 3 o'clock. Before I ask for Calgary-Mountain View to deliver his member's statement, I wonder if the Government House Leader wanted to address the Assembly.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I would ask for unanimous consent to extend past 3 o'clock.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has requested unanimous consent to proceed beyond 3 o'clock in order to finish the Routine. We need unanimous consent, as I indicated. Is anyone objecting to that request for unanimous consent?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for our final member statement today.

Physician Services Agreement

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week this Health minister dealt another blow to our cherished health care system even as it teeters on the brink of crisis through four years of mismanagement. After 18 months without a contract and speaking softly last month about working constructively with the AMA and physicians, the big stick has now come down with the reckless imposition of a four-year contract. In the words of the AMA president, Michael Giuffre, quote: everyone from primary care physicians to specialty care physicians will find this imposition astounding, disappointing, and far reaching. This truly is a frontal assault across the board. End quote.

Axing support programs will especially hurt primary care doctors, where the need is greatest, taking out as much as $30,000 a year in the face of rising Alberta overhead and staffing costs. The Premier, reneging on her commitment last year to a public inquiry into doctor intimidation, has again contradicted Alberta Health Services' claim to be developing a just culture and trust among its workforce, including physicians.

Earlier this year the Health Quality Council confirmed widespread bullying of physicians who advocate for their patients. Responsible advocacy clearly comes at a price with this 42-year PC government. With physicians having agreed last year to zero increase for the next two years, clearly this is not about money. It is about power, disrespect, and token consultation on the direction of our health care system and how to improve quality of primary care.

Astonishingly, this minister does not appear to understand the connection between our demoralized family physician workforce, these disrespectful negotiations, and the decline in quality of care for Albertans.

With a projected $3.5 billion deficit this year, removing $120 million from physicians is another desperate attempt to find dollars for the Premier's pet project, family care centres, regardless of the cost to comprehensive patient care and public trust. The minister has lost the confidence of physicians, health workers, and the public in this latest abuse of power. He must resign.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table a petition put forward by the Alberta Grandparents Association, that happens to reside in my constituency. The organization is encouraging the government to amend the family law statutes to enable grandparents to more readily obtain access to their grandchildren when access is denied. As is the case, I'm pleased to table this motion on their behalf.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness or someone on behalf of.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and table the requisite number of copies of the 2011 College of Dietitians of Alberta annual report and the 2011-12 Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee annual report on behalf of the Minister of Health. These reports illustrate the college's and the committee's dedication to fulfill the Alberta government's commitment to health.

Sir, I have three more tablings. As well, I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the Alberta College of Pharmacists 2011-2012 annual report. The college governs pharmacists, pharmacy technicians, and pharmacies in Alberta. Since 1911 the college has worked to ensure that Albertans receive the highest quality of care from their pharmacists. For the past 100 years the college has taken responsibility for pharmacy practice by setting and enjoying high standards of competence and ethical conduct. They have led the practice of pharmacy in Canada by being the first to implement mandatory continuing education, patient medication records, and to gain the authorization for pharmacists to administer drugs by injection and prescription. Thank you, sir.

As well, I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the College & Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta 2010-11 annual report. CARNA is the professional and regulatory body for Alberta's more than 33,000 registered nurses, including nurses in direct care, education, research, and administration as well as nurse practitioners. Its mandate is to protect the public by ensuring Albertans receive effective, safe, and ethical care by registered nurses. This year's annual report highlights many of the technology-based initiatives that support their work. It also showcases the many ways CARNA and its members are creating global connections that will support the quality and safety of patient care in Alberta.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table the requisite number of copies of Physician Credentialing & Practice Privileging for Pathology & Radiology: A Review of Alberta Health Services report, referred to as the Kendel report. The report was released by the hon. Minister of Health on November 8, 2012.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first two are from the AUMA. Resolution 2012 provincial scope 10 pertains to physician licensing and privileges. I have five copies.

The second resolution is again from the AUMA. Resolution 2012 provincial scope 9 is about physician recruitment in rural Alberta. I'd like to table five copies.

The last two tablings are from the AAMD and C fall 2012 convention, on October 24, 2012, resolution 7-12F on physician licensing and privileges, endorsed by the Foothills-Little Bow district. I have five copies.

The last one, Mr. Speaker, is again from the AAMD and C 2012 fall resolution convention, dated October 24, and it is resolution 26-12F. It's about access to health care and economic development, brought in by the MD of Big Lakes. I have five copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have the requisite number of copies of two documents. One is a PayPal payment made by the Leader of the Official Opposition purchasing two tickets to the Conservative Party of Canada Macleod Electoral District Association. It depicts that one ticket is for her, and the other one is for one David Moretta, whom I believe to be her husband, shortly thereafter claiming those very two tickets as an expenditure to her constituency office in the constituency of Highwood.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a copy of an e-mail and the requisite five copies sent to me by Mr. Paul Gray, a constituent of mine who is very concerned about access to the HPV vaccine in school boards across this province regardless of religious aspects of it. He finds it a health care aspect and believes it should be available in all schools as a priority.

There's another letter I have from another constituent, Mr. Terry Sherwood. He had a recent stay in a local hospital and was concerned about food preparation and some of the nutritional contents. I table this for the record.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the office of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for providing these documents on such a short notice. I have five copies in my hand of a receipt from the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in which it clearly shows that the leader of our party, once she became aware that she was not able to claim this expense, immediately withdrew that claim of expense, which we'll go into in the point of order. It's very clear. The LAO is preparing a letter showing that the Official Opposition Leader requested as soon as she knew that.

Anyway, facts are fun things, aren't they, Deputy Premier?

The second piece of information is two articles. The first is an article printed in the Calgary Sun which is entitled Game On for Opposition as Election Call Looms: Smith Releases Leadership Donors. It lists all of those leadership donors. The Official Opposition leader, while she was running for the leadership of the Wildrose Party, obviously received substantial donations. It lists them individually.

So, too, from our website. It looks like indeed the donors were listed on our own website as well, Mr. Speaker. Five copies of that as well.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition demanding that the government take immediate action to twin highway 63. The petition in complete contains 37,751 signatures. Today I'm tabling 2,996 of those.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, I would take the liberty of tabling the requisite number of copies of the office of the Ethics Commissioner annual report 2011-2012. The report has been prepared pursuant to section 46(2) under the Conflicts of Interest Act.

3:10

Hon. members, we're going to proceed with some points of order. Before we do, I just want to note that we have eight of them to deal with so far. We've recorded the times, and we'll do our best to have them heard. However, I suspect that some of them might be grouped under one general heading. We'll listen to the first point of order, which was raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition. We'll hear a response from the government, perhaps from one or two others, and we'll just see how we can deal with these issues. I suspect they are mostly to do with some of the cautions, warnings, and admonishments that I gave not only today but in previous days. You can probably expect to hear that.

Let's proceed with the first point of order. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: On behalf of the Official Opposition leader, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin, real quick, I think that one of the reasons things get off the rails a little bit is that I know that on our side there is not one person in this House with more integrity than this Leader of the Official Opposition. Not one. That's why it was quite something to see the Deputy Premier make such a spectacle of himself today.

The citations that I'm citing under the orders here are Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), and (l) as well as Beauchesne's 485 regarding unparliamentary language. I'll group everything under one so we can just deal with this all at once, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, dealing with the easiest one first, the minister across the way talked about this member, implying that this member over here was a bottom-feeder. I don't know whether he was looking in the mirror when he said that, but that was the accusation that he made. The fact is that that was very unparliamentary language. There are ample examples of what's considered unparliamentary language in Beauchesne's. "Debased" is one of those things. I did not see in there "bottom-feeder," but I would suggest that bottom-feeder is far worse than most of the phrases used in that section.

We just had a member last week saying that the other side was being pathetically cowardly. He had to withdraw that comment, and he did, and he apologized. In the interest of fairness I think that it's very clear that this minister should do the exact same as our hon. member did on this side of the House and withdraw that comment. So that's the first piece, the issue of saying "bottom-feeder."

The second piece, Mr. Speaker. As you've said many times, we do allow for a disagreement on the facts, and we have these discussions in here, but when a minister of the Crown, indeed the Deputy Premier, stands up in this House and says two things that are just completely factually false and impugns the character of the Leader of the Opposition, obviously it's going to raise a huge amount of disorder in this House. It imputes false motives to this member.

Here are the two things. The first issue, that she hadn't posted her expenses from her leadership election: with regard to the copies that we just tabled in the Legislature on that, clearly that wasn't true. She has in the media and on our website publicly disclosed all of her leadership donations from her campaign, and she did that, I would say, at great personal risk. She had to phone every one of those individuals because a lot of them were scared of having their name put out there, known by the PC Party as supporting her. She had to phone them and get their permission to do it, and she did that of her own time and put them on there so that . . .

Mr. McAllister: Leadership.

Mr. Anderson: That is true leadership. Indeed, that is leadership.

We'd ask him to withdraw that erroneous statement.

The next piece is this idea that the Leader of the Official Opposition attended an event for the Conservative Party of Canada, which is true – I don't know the exact amount; $150, $100, something like that – and then was reimbursed for that expense by the Legislative Assembly Office. Well, not only is this not true – and we've produced the documents, and we will have a letter forthcoming to confirm that that was not true, that the opposition leader was not reimbursed for those expenses – this is what happened, Mr. Speaker. A new employee, who had just been hired, was asked to do the expenses because our leader had already committed during the election to post all of her expenses online.

So you can imagine that one of the first things she does is that she has all of these receipts . . . [interjection] This is what the truth is. She has all of these receipts, and she looks to try to submit those receipts. What occurs is that after putting these receipts to her secretary, she fills out the paperwork, and her assistant notices: oh, there's a document here that we can't expense. Upon knowing that, they immediately sent word to the Legislative Assembly Office – we will get a letter in writing that this was done – saying, "Sorry; we mistakenly submitted that receipt; that's not a receipt that we can submit" and immediately took that receipt back. So it wasn't even a mistake; they took it back. I mean, they just took it back before the LAO even had to tell us that it was a mistake. Again, that's what transparency and accountability look like.

I would also point out that the Deputy Premier talked about the chamber of commerce membership, that the opposition leader's office is now a member of her local chamber of commerce. Well, Mr. Speaker, you well know that those expenses have been submitted by many MLAs in this House. It is standard practice and can be done and is something that is reimbursed by the LAO. But I'll tell you one thing that's not reimbursed by the LAO, and that is Law Society fees. I personally asked, "Are those fees reimbursable under the LAO rules?" and was told they were not. That's why it's kind of funny that he would list those things when the Premier herself is getting the government to pay for her own Law Society fees. A little bit of hypocrisy, isn't it?

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this member – and the only reason he knew about those fees, by the way, was because this hon. Leader of the Official Opposition posted the fact that she had purchased that chamber of commerce membership online, you know, before anybody else, and it's a credit to her.

I would ask the Deputy Premier to withdraw the false statements that he made, to withdraw the unparliamentary language that he used, and that perhaps he could take a lesson from this leader in what integrity and transparency look like because he has neither.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd gladly speak to some of those points raised by the member. First of all, let's start with his objection to my usage of the term "bottom-feeder." I have to assure the member that my comment was not directed at the Leader of the Official Opposition but actually was a more general application and was aimed at all members of the Official Opposition. Let me explain why and what I meant by it, and then if you find it to be unparliamentary, I will definitely withdraw that particular term but not the underlying reasoning for which I used that term.

Mr. Speaker, you've been in the chair now for some six months, and you know that for the last six months if there was one overarching theme in this Chamber that is coming from the Official Opposition, it is continuous allegations and innuendoes, very often unsubstantiated, of wrongdoing, calling individuals liars, cheaters, dishonest, immoral, accusing them of criminal activity, that they should be prosecuted. Those terms are all in Hansard, and they're used interchangeably by all members of this opposition, often levied against members of this Chamber or, even worse, individuals who have no privilege of sitting in this Chamber and have no ability to defend themselves. Yet none of those allegations are ever made outside of this Chamber because they know that there would be consequences if they made such allegations outside.

So how do you refer to this kind of practice of playing politics, Mr. Speaker? Is it something that all politicians should aspire to? No. I often say that that is scraping the bottom of political discourse, so saying that one is bottom-feeding would not be far fetched. If they take objection to it, perhaps the best way to resolve it and never have to hear a term of this nature or anything similar again is to simply disengage from this kind of practice of waging innuendoes against individuals and focus on more important matters that should be discussed in this Chamber, and that is the matters that are important to the province and managing this province. Perhaps that will address this particular issue.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to donations it is interesting that this member will say that the hon. member made an honest or a dishonest mistake or no mistake. However you term it, the fact is that she did attend a federal political event, which is a donation to the federal party, with her husband, and then she claimed it. Whether she caught it later or somebody else caught it later, the fact is that she made that donation, much the same as others have.

They have been accusing honourable Albertans who are sitting on boards of colleges or work for colleges who made by mistake a donation to a party, later withdrew it or reimbursed the institution for it. That is never said. When the Leader of the Opposition does that, that is called an honest mistake. When a member of the public does it to the PC Party or a member on this side, even though often they have no proof, that is called criminal, cheating, lying, and the list goes on and on.

Mr. Speaker, I accept the fact that she did make an honest mistake, and I do accept the fact that our staff are not infallible. They will err from time to time either in process or judgment, but so will it happen among Albertans in general. If you want to engage in this kind of practice, do so, but do it at your own peril because excusing it yourself as a, quote, unquote, rookie mistake or a staffer's omission or error simply doesn't quite cut it. When you choose to judge others by a different standard, you should live up to that standard yourself.

Now, the same goes, Mr. Speaker, for the issue of the membership in the chamber of commerce. Questions were raised. Why would the Premier, who is a lawyer by profession – and her legal expertise is often utilized in the carrying out of her duty as Premier but definitely as a Minister of Justice. Why would a Minister of Justice hold a membership with the Law Society and have government pay for it? Well, the only reason she can be a Minister of Justice is to be a lawyer, a practising lawyer, a lawyer in good standing with the Law Society. So I don't see anything wrong with that.

The fact is that this member chooses to be a member by choice of a chamber of commerce and to be reimbursed for that. Again, is this criminal? No. Is it defrauding Albertans in any way? No. Is it acceptable? I would say perhaps. The fact is that the moment you start judging others and you start throwing arrows and spears at others, expect to have the same done to you. I strongly suggest that discontinuing this kind of activity will put an end to all of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the leader posting her donations from the leadership race online, it's true. She did do so. I will have to rely on members of the opposition, but she became a leader of this party sometime in 2009, I believe – correct me if I'm wrong – and she posted the donations, after significant pressure from media, from this side of the House, and from Albertans, in 2012, some two years later. I accept the fact that she chose to call those who donated to her. I'm wondering what she would do if they said: no, we don't want you to post it. Would she then not post it? I'm wondering if this list is complete, because maybe some haven't agreed to it, if it's only done by consent.

The fact of the matter is that, again, rising in this House, they're questioning members of this side of the House on how we fund raise our money for leadership. They want the full disclosure. It took them more than two years to make a disclosure. We still don't know whether it's complete or not. Mr. Speaker, in frankness, if they want to engage in that, if they think that their only role as an opposition is to continue dredging and looking through receipts – and let's not forget one thing. Yes, they did post all of the leader's expenses on their website, only to soon have it disappear. They took it down from their website instantly and then reposted just a fraction of the receipts that had been posted initially.

If you want to talk about disclosure, if you want to talk about transparency, if you want to make sure that you are immune from accusations and innuendoes, the best way to do it is: don't do it yourself.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, we've had about 15 minutes or so of comment from the Official Opposition and from the Deputy Premier. I'm wondering: are there any other members who wish to join in on this point of order? No? All right. Well, thank you for that.

As I indicated earlier, hon. members, I've commented on issues like this before, and I suspect I may be called upon to comment on them again. The hon. Member for Airdrie rose on a point of order and wrapped, basically, two items into it, which perhaps is part of the capsulizing of the entire list that I had said that we have today in terms of points of orders.

On the first point of order the hon. Member for Airdrie was basically asking the hon. Deputy Premier to withdraw what, in the Member for Airdrie's opinion, was unparliamentary language. Now, I have dealt with this issue before, and I'm going to try and save the House a little bit of time, but suffice it to say that the tone and timbre as well as the actual words used are important factors in determining whether or not something is unparliamentary.

On the one hand, you can see a term like "bottom-feeders" referring to a particular type of fish or perhaps a type of hook used when fishing. I mean, there are many different ways that that can be used, and it would be totally acceptable, I suspect. Nobody would be offending any fish.

However, when they're used in this House, the way in which terms like that are used can be offensive. They can give rise to what the Member for Airdrie characterized as 23(h), (i), (j), and (k), under the pretense or the reality of what he felt was making allegations against another member, imputing false or unavowed motives to another member, and then using abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder, or 23(k), which is rarely referenced: "speaks disrespectfully of Her Majesty." I don't know that I would agree with that one being raised in the context in which you raised it. I realize that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is used for the party that has the official status. However, that would be stretching it a bit.

Nonetheless, with respect to the unparliamentary language that was used, let me just remind all members that the knife of egregious comments slices both ways in this Assembly. If I were to rise every time that I heard a questioner or a responder use something that I thought was on the borderline of creating disorder or might be unparliamentary in my view, I would be on my feet very, very frequently, and I think all of you know that. In fact, I have been on my feet rather frequently trying to get all of you to abide by what I thought we had some general buy-in to back in May, when I made a few comments that I referred to as the credo speech.

That having been said, I do find that the way the term "bottom-feeder" was used was perhaps inappropriate in this instance, Deputy Premier. I appreciated you saying that you were prepared to offer a withdrawal of that comment, so I'm going to allow you an opportunity to do that in just a moment.

However, on the bigger picture, let us be reminded of the rules that the House leader of the opposition referred to, which is Beauchesne 485. I'm going to read some of this to all of you again. It doesn't give me any joy to use up the House's valuable time, particularly on a Monday, which is set aside for private members' business, but we're dealing with eight points of order, and hopefully by taking a few minutes here now, we can avoid having to go through six or seven more.

The Member for Airdrie quite correctly cited as part of his statement, under Unparliamentary Language, Beauchesne's 485, and here's what it says, again, as a reminder to you.

- (1) Unparliamentary words may be brought to the attention of the House either by the Speaker or by any Member. When the question is raised by a Member it must be as a point of order and not as a question of privilege.
- (2) Except during the Question Period, the proper time to raise such a point of order is when the words are used and not afterwards.

That was all done.

It goes on to say:

- (3) Unparliamentary language offending against the proprieties of the House, when the Speaker is in the Chair, cannot be withdrawn in Committee of the Whole.

Here's the last part of this. Beauchesne's 486 states:

- (1) It is impossible to lay down any specific rules in regard to injurious reflections uttered in debate against particular Members, or to declare beforehand what expressions are or are not contrary to order; much depends upon the tone and manner, and intention, of the person speaking; sometimes upon the person to whom the words are addressed, as, whether that person is a public officer, or a private Member not in office, or whether the words are meant to be applied to public conduct or to private character; and sometimes upon the degree of provocation.

And it goes on and on and on.

I think we all get the point. At least, I hope we do by now because I have quoted from this section or sections similar to it before.

3:30

Now, all of this starts during one of our favourite aspects of the House called question period, which more and more of you are getting more and more familiar with now, I'm sure. Let me remind you as well of what House of Commons Procedure and Practice says on page 502, where it states about question period: "Furthermore, a question should not . . . concern internal party matters, or party or election expenses," and there are other admonishments in here as well.

On that score I noted who it was that first raised a party matter this afternoon. I'm cautioning the government side and I'm also cautioning again the opposition side to please stop referring to partisan political party matters in the House because they are expressly forbidden and ought not to be raised by anyone at any time. I'm not talking specifically only during question period in this regard. You might want to refresh your memories of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 504, where it specifically says that issues that "concern internal party matters, or party or election expenses" ought not to be raised in the House. It is not the purview of the House, it's not the purview of the government to comment on partisan political activities or fundraising or whatever else is abided by according to the traditions of the House.

I've reminded you of that before on several occasions, and I hope it's the last time I have to remind you because if it comes up again, I am obliged to enforce these rules. I think I have given sufficient cautions to both sides of the House now, and I'm not going to have to give any more cautions, I hope. I will simply intervene, and it will be rejected.

Now, hon. member, let's deal with the first point, and that is your offer to withdraw any comments you may wish to make. Let's hear from the Deputy Premier with respect to that first.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that reminder of the rules. I will take this opportunity to withdraw my naming of all of the members of the Official Opposition as bottom-feeders, and I promise that I will find pronouns much more accurate in the future.

The Speaker: Thank you. That will conclude that matter. We appreciate the withdrawal.

Again, I'll take this opportunity to remind all members that perhaps there are some things you may have said or done in the past few weeks that might require a revisit as well. That goes to all members.

On your second point, hon. Member for Airdrie, you raised an issue about a political partisan party event. You tabled a number of items which clarified that issue quite succinctly, in my opinion. I think even the Deputy Premier indicated that he accepted that she made an honest mistake or may have made an honest mistake or words to that effect. We're grateful for that.

You also talked about setting a standard, Mr. Deputy Premier, and that standard ought not only apply to one particular side of the House. It ought to apply to everyone, including the Speaker and including all of you. We all have standards to guide our lives by, and there's no need for those standards to be lowered, lessened, or diminished when you walk into this Assembly either.

I will just remind you in that respect about what I suspect might be appropriate at this time, and that's one final guideline regarding personal attacks. Perhaps this will close the issue, and we can get on with the day. On page 422, chapter 10, of House of Commons Procedure and Practice under guidelines it states:

In presiding over the conduct of this daily activity, Speakers have been guided by a number of well-defined prohibitions. In 1983, when the procedure for Statements by Members was first put in place, Speaker Sauvé stated that . . .

- personal attacks are not permitted.

And it goes on and finally says:

The Speaker has cut off an individual statement and asked the Member to resume his or her seat when:

- offensive language has been used.

I'm very mindful of this, and I'm going to be enforcing it a little bit more.

I recognize that we've had a week to work with our constituents, and we've come back full of vim and vigour and other things. You've all missed each other terribly, and you're anxious to engage with each other, and I respect that. However, I will intervene the minute I hear any personal attacks.

My final reminder is that people who are not in this House and cannot defend themselves ought not to be slurred, maimed, derided, chastised, or assassinated with political words.

Those are the rules that govern this House. I would ask you again to remember them.

Please follow some of the other leads, with respect to preambles, for example, to supplementary questions. I noted that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek got through their main questions and both their supplementals with no preambles, and it was wonderful. The decorum was preserved. I'd ask that you look at either of those two as an example from today's Hansard of how to handle yourselves.

Accordingly, clarifications have been given, and I hope that this concludes these particular points of order for today. However, there are other points of order that may still be required to be raised. Perhaps I haven't covered them. If there are, then I will turn to the next person on my list, who is the Government House Leader, if you have one.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to briefly rise on a point of order relative to a question that was raised by the Member for Edmonton-Calder earlier today. That point of order is being raised under Standing Order 23, which is:

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder . . .
- (l) introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly.

I also would refer to Beauchesne's 375 although you have commented at length on the naming of a person outside the House, so I won't deal with that aspect of it.

This point of order was raised, Mr. Speaker, when the member did two things which violated those particular rules. One referred to the government firing the CEO, the Chief Electoral Officer, which, of course, the hon. member knows is not accurate. He knows that it's a complete mischaracterization of what happened. The Chief Electoral Officer reports to the Standing Committee on Leg. Offices. The Chief Electoral Officer is on a fixed-term contract, and in that particular circumstance the fixed-term contract expired. The committee determined not to renew that contract but, rather, to go to a competition and, in fact, in that competition hired a new Chief Electoral Officer. No one was fired. The term was completed. You can like it or dislike it – much comment was made at the time – but to characterize it over and over again as a firing of the Chief Electoral Officer is just a blatant misapprehension of the facts and does not suit the House very well in terms of the discourse that we have here.

The second part of the point of order is relative to a reference, and this is the one that's particularly egregious, I think. There were a number of references today in the House to somebody outside the House who is purported to have made a contribution to a political party and who is purported to have charged it to an employer who's not eligible to make contributions. Now, quite apart from the admonitions that you've made relative to discussion of political parties and political party financing in the House, the allegation that was being made here was that the Premier in a previous portfolio as Minister of Justice may have in some way interceded in prosecution of an offence which may have been reported to, presumably, the prosecutors branch at the Department of Justice at the time that she was the minister, which may have included the offence that was being discussed.

The hon. member has absolutely nothing to suggest that any of that happened. It was all rumour and innuendo. It was particularly egregious and totally offensive to suggest that a member, to make an allegation – there was an earlier reference in a point of order in this House to: not one person with greater integrity. The fact of the matter is that in this House we all have integrity. In this House integrity is one of the things that are key to our being able to carry out our affairs.

I don't have any problem at all with tough questions and with people holding government to account for things that government should be held to account for in terms of policy. I have no problem with people intelligently putting questions on any manner of subjects, including very spicy matters of discussion. But for someone to stand up in this House, someone who knows better because he's been here – he knows the process, he knows the procedure, and he knows that this House relies on us having intelligent discourse and integrity – and make a drive-by smearing like that is absolutely outside the rules and untenable.

The hon. member knows that if he has any – any – information of such an offence, he should supply it to the CEO. He also knows that a commitment has been made because of the CEO's interpretation of the act, which says that he can't disclose the results of an investigation that has come to a conclusion. That will be amended when the act is brought forward. That's been made clear in the House. Until it is, he can make hay on that one all he wants. But the fact of the matter is that he's not entitled to add the innuendo and aspersion.

There is one further thing, Mr. Speaker, that I want to raise: "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." The hon. member ought to know – and if he doesn't know, he should consult another member of his caucus, who surely ought to know because she was employed by the Department of Justice – that one of the things in our justice system that we hold sacrosanct is that there is no political interference in prosecutions.

In fact, that's the one area where even the Minister of Justice has to hold himself or herself separate and apart from colleagues in cabinet to say that there is no ability to interfere with prosecutions. There is no political interference with prosecutions. Nobody tells Crown prosecutors who they prosecute and who they don't prosecute. Sometimes that provides for some embarrassing opportunities, but that is the nature of the role that the Minister of Justice carries with him or her.

To have the innuendoes that somehow a Minister of Justice interfered with a determination as to who might have been prosecuted or not prosecuted, when some 19 files are alleged to have been referred to the prosecution for further work, is absolutely inappropriate. It's wrong. It not only brings this House into disrepute, but it brings our system of justice into disrepute. The hon. member should know that. He should stand in his place, and he should retract those comments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anyone else? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to respond to some of the concerns raised by the hon. Government House Leader relating to the questions that were asked today in question period by the Member for Edmonton-Calder. Let me start, I guess, with the third point first.

It is correct, I believe, that at one point in his questioning the Member for Edmonton-Calder, rather than saying that prosecutions were abandoned by the Justice ministry, suggested that the prosecutions were abandoned by the Justice minister. I believe that was an inadvertent slip of the tongue, and he informs me that he is more than prepared to withdraw that part of his question. What he's doing is outlining that the charges were abandoned by the Justice ministry when the now Premier happened to be in the position of Justice minister. Those are two very separate things because, of course, as the Government House Leader rightly points out, Justice ministers do not engage and interfere in conversations about whether issues should be prosecuted.

However, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that there is the occasion where issues that come up for consideration for prosecution appear and have on the face of them the potential for there to be a conflict of interest, and just the simple appearance becomes an issue. It is well understood in law that there is this notion that justice must not only be done but must be seen to be done. For that reason there is a long tradition – particularly in other jurisdictions it's a much more advanced tradition than what we have here in Alberta – where within the Ministry of Justice there is a provision for the Minister of Justice to appoint a special prosecutor to review whether certain issues should be prosecuted in order to deal with that appearance of conflict of interest.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that when the Chief Electoral Officer referred 19 matters to the prosecution for them to be prosecuted and the prosecution chose not to proceed with them, our caucus asked the Justice minister to appoint a special prosecutor to ensure that any potential appearance of conflict would be remedied. That decision was ignored and rejected by the then Justice minister, the current Premier. That was the context that informed the questions that were offered up by the Member for Edmonton-Calder, and that was what he reviewed in his first question, where he was allowed to give a bit of an introduction to his question. That was the point where he also referred to the fact that it was a decision made by the ministry rather than by the Justice minister. It was in that context.

Absolutely, Mr. Speaker, we should not be suggesting that the Justice minister made a decision not to prosecute because it's quite true that's not what happens. The ministry itself, or an element of the ministry, actually the Crown prosecutor's office, does make that decision.

It is true that there are occasions when, if there is a concern about an apparent conflict of interest, the Justice minister has it within her purview or his purview to appoint a special prosecutor. It has not been done often in Alberta. It's a much more advanced, much more commonly relied-on process in other jurisdictions, but it is one that is commonly understood to deal with these kinds of issues where political parties, for instance, that may well be the political parties that happen to be the governing political parties become subject to criminal and/or other types of prosecution. In this case we're talking about prosecution under the Election Act, and we're talking about 19 files that were referred to the Crown by the former Chief Electoral Officer. Again, Mr. Speaker, happy to withdraw or to clarify that one point, but giving the context of why that question was the way it was.

The Government House Leader also indicated that the Member for Edmonton-Calder implied a number of things or did a drive-by smear, I think was what the Government House Leader suggested, with respect to the Premier. Mr. Speaker, I think that it is very important for all of us in this House to try to have as respectful a conversation as we can about issues like this, which are highly sensitive, where we are tasked with essentially governing ourselves and our own conduct, including the process and the conduct that gets us into this building. It is absolutely appropriate that when we are talking about the enforcement or the writing or the application of the Election Act, that is totally, appropriately within the jurisdiction of this body to discuss in question period or anywhere else.

When the application of that act and the enforcement of the act and potentially the prosecution of that act have implications for individual members of this House, then we need to identify that. It doesn't mean that there is an intent to be corrupt or that there is an intent to mislead. What it does mean is that there is an appearance, and all of us as legislators, Mr. Speaker, need to acknowledge that appearance, address it head-on, and then talk to the rest of Albertans honestly about how we're going to ensure that we're dealing with this in a balanced and fair and transparent way.

I would suggest that simply raising what is obvious to anybody from the outside looking in, the fact that there is an awfully dramatic and problematic appearance of some conflict of interest here, and saying that we need to come up with a way to deal with this and then saying that that is somehow smearing somebody, well, just shuts down debate. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that that's not healthy for this Assembly, and I would suggest that that's not what the Member for Edmonton-Calder was doing. He simply laid out the facts, laid out the role that was played by the Premier, then Justice minister, laid out the fact that there were certain files that were forwarded to the Crown, and then asked a simple question: what did the Premier know, and when did she know it? Had there been an answer saying, "I knew nothing of this; I never did," then the issue would be addressed. By simply saying that we can't ask that question, then you might as well suggest we never debate anything.

The third thing, Mr. Speaker, that the Government House Leader raised is the issue of what happened to the former Chief Electoral Officer. Now, as you may know, we had a Chief Electoral Officer who right before his term ended did in fact refer 19 files for prosecution to the Crown. Interestingly, even though on his own admission the current Chief Electoral Officer has investigated and found some substance to about 1,200 breaches of the Election Act, none of them have been referred to the Crown for prosecution. Nonetheless, the fact of the matter is that the term of the previous Chief Electoral Officer was not extended.

Now, there is a way of speaking in this House where we talk about how that is a decision of the committee and that's not a decision of this House. Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd just simply like to quote from a comment that was made by the Deputy Premier of this province about a week and a half ago, where he said:

It's a caucus decision. Keep in mind that it is something that we have deliberated as a caucus . . . It's a very difficult decision to make . . . It is something that has been pondered [a lot] by our caucus . . . This is a decision that, finally, Conservative MLAs came forward with . . .

Now, in that case the Deputy Premier was talking about a decision of the Members' Services Committee around pay. Of course, it was a decision of the Members' Services Committee, yet the Deputy Premier is saying that, well, actually, it was a decision of the Conservative caucus.

The fact of the matter is that the Legislative Offices Committee, which decided not to extend the contract of the former Chief Electoral Officer, was dominated by Conservative MLAs, all of whom voted not to extend the contract of that Chief Electoral Officer. According to the Deputy Premier now these kinds of things are commonly discussed in caucus, and they are government decisions. So I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it was an absolutely reasonable characterization for the Member for Edmonton-Calder to make, that, in fact, it was a decision of this government to end the term of the former Chief Electoral Officer, who coincidentally had been the one who had referred a number of charges to the Crown for prosecution about – wait for it – illegal donations to certain political parties in this province.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that all being the case, I would suggest that the questions that were asked by the Member for Edmonton-Calder were completely appropriate. It is difficult to navigate such a sensitive and potentially inflammatory topic without getting people's backs up, but the fact of the matter is that were we to suggest that somehow we cannot talk about things that are governed by law, are prosecuted according to the letter of the law and laws that are written in this House, and that were we to suggest that those things are somehow off limits for this House, then I think that we would deeply – deeply – compromise public faith in this House.

Those are our comments. Again, as I say, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Calder I'm quite happy to withdraw the statement that the Justice minister made a decision about prosecution, but in fact it was the Justice ministry that chose not to prosecute several charges. With that amendment in mind, I will take my seat.

Thank you.

The Speaker: We've had an interesting afternoon.

There's one more speaker on this? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, briefly.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regarding the first part of the Government House Leader's comments with respect to whether or not the Chief Electoral Officer was fired, I think it's very important that in these circumstances you look at all the surrounding facts and circumstances to actually look at the definition of that term. What we saw was a former Chief Electoral Officer who made numerous recommendations to this government, part of which was to have stiffer penalties for illegal donations, part of which was to have people who are found guilty of either illegally accepting or soliciting donations made public so that everyone could see those wrongdoings.

The Chief Electoral Officer made those recommendations to the Premier, who was the then Justice minister, and she rejected those recommendations. Then subsequently, lo and behold, the Chief Electoral Officer is no longer there. The Government House Leader talks about how, you know, his contract was not renewed, but you have to take a look at all the circumstances. The government was obviously embarrassed with all of these recommendations, none of which were actually implemented into law.

I think it's an arguable point. If someone's contract isn't renewed, there is a termination. That relationship has subsequently terminated. Whether or not the word "fired" is the appropriate word to use in that circumstance, you have to look at all of the circumstances. I think it's a fair argument for the Member for Edmonton-Calder to make that statement. It reflects what I think a lot of laypersons would see in this situation. The Chief Electoral Officer made a damning report on this government. They ignored it. His contract was subsequently not renewed. So I think that this is just another situation where there is a reasonable debate on the language.

The second was with respect to the Government House Leader's comment about a drive-by smear. The facts here are that there were, I think, 19 cases in which the Chief Electoral Officer found that people had been guilty of illegally making donations to a certain party. Typically in these situations those cases would go to a Crown prosecutor, and that Crown prosecutor would use the full force of law and punish those people. So, you know, what the hon. member was questioning was why those people weren't punished. There was no inference that the Justice minister interfered with it, but he had valid questions surrounding that whole subject matter. I think it would be a very, very disastrous precedent to prevent an hon. member from making these inquiries no matter how difficult it is for the other side.

Those are my comments on these two points of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think we've heard enough on this particular point of order. The Government House Leader has stood up and indicated some enlightening information, I'm sure, with respect to a former officer of this Assembly, the Chief Electoral Officer, and cited 375 as being one of the citations under which he was rising. Just for your information, hon. members, 375 says this:

Members have been cautioned to try to avoid using statements as a vehicle for naming persons who are not Members of the House and thus have no opportunity to respond to negative comments.

Without using the actual person's name, everyone knows who was being referred to because, of course, this person was an officer of this particular Assembly. I listened very carefully to what it was that the Government House Leader had indicated by way of what he termed innuendo and words to that effect as offered by the Member for Edmonton-Calder. In fact, I think he asked for Edmonton-Calder to withdraw his comments in the process of all that.

Now, I would again remind all of you on this point to be very careful with the choice of words and perhaps be even more careful with the research that you have done into the background of your question. Is it truly based in fact, or is it based in opinion or he said, she said, they said or some other form of questionable repute?

In that respect, there are examples in our traditions that you need to be reminded of. Let me give you a short quote from Beauchesne's 409 citation, which is under the heading Oral Questions. It says:

In 1975, the Speaker expressed some general principles in order to clarify the regulations and restrict the negative qualifications which traditionally have guided the Question Period:

"A brief question seeking information about an important matter of some urgency which falls within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the specific Minister to whom it is addressed, is in order.

(1) It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate . . .

(3) The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations.

There are other examples in House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 502, which I would refer you to, again with respect to question period. It says, "Furthermore, a question should not . . . be hypothetical." I could cite you many other examples of that.

So whether the issue raised and the way it was raised by Edmonton-Calder is a matter of opinion or a hypothesis or a representation that has or doesn't have grounding or merit is perhaps questionable, perhaps not, but I know that in this House there are frequently offered two differing versions of the same occurrence. I have mentioned this to you before. In fact, if you want clarification of that, you can go through Hansard that you've experienced in the last few weeks, and if you need more, you can read Beauchesne's 494.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, I'm going to call on you in a moment to clarify, if you wish, your comments, but before I do, I want to move on to a few comments that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona made, where I thought I heard her either offer to have some comments withdrawn or perhaps asking for the hon. Government House Leader to withdraw. I couldn't quite hear it; there was a little bit of chatter here. So I'm going to ask for that little bit of clarification from you, please, before I ask the Member for Edmonton-Calder. You're quite correct. There are a number of facts that have been laid out in this Assembly during these points of order, but I'm hesitant to agree or disagree when there are such differentiations between what one person perceives as the facts versus what another perceives to be the facts. Let me hear that very briefly, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Would you mind just giving me a quick comment on what you were exactly referring to when you used the term "withdraw" certain comments, please.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the Blues with me, but I do believe that in perhaps his second, perhaps his third question, not his first one, the Member for Edmonton-Calder referred to the Justice minister as having not prosecuted or having rejected prosecution of some charges. What I was suggesting was that the Member for Edmonton-Calder is quite prepared to withdraw that comment because what he meant to be saying was that the Ministry of Justice chose not to proceed with the prosecution. So he was quite prepared to make that clarification.

The Speaker: Understood.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, would you prefer to comment any further, or does that clear up the matter?

Mr. Eggen: No. Thank you. It's been very . . .

The Speaker: It's the custom of the House to have the member who offered the statements actually correct himself or make some comment about it, so I'll offer that opportunity to you. You can rephrase it however you wish.

Mr. Eggen: Sure. This being my first occasion to be in this position, I am edified and have learned a great deal. Yeah, my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona has expressed pretty much what I feel about it and how we choose to proceed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The chair had a little difficulty hearing you, hon. member. I want to make sure before I rule on this that we heard correctly that the essence of what you're saying is that you're going to withdraw the comments, the way you made them. Is that what I'm to understand?

Mr. Eggen: Yes.

The Speaker: Yes? Would you please rise and indicate that, then, quickly, and we'll move on.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. As I said, I was suitably chastened. As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had pointed out, I was saying the Justice minister when I meant to say the Justice ministry. So if there was any confusion about that, I certainly withdraw that and thank you for your ruling.

The Speaker: Thank you.

At the same time I wonder if the Government House Leader wishes to rephrase the comment about the drive-by smearing, which was referred to by one of the hon. members. Perhaps that would help conclude this matter, and we could move on with that given the nature of the withdrawal that was just made by Edmonton-Calder in particular.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that any time anybody puts three different comments in the same sentence, there creates an association and thereby an innuendo. People can say, "Well, I meant Justice ministry rather than Justice minister," but what they really meant was prosecution. They confuse the public, and they create that innuendo by using that kind of language. So I don't think it's been appropriately dealt with. Quite frankly, that's a nice way out.

Now, if you believe that "drive-by smearing" is the wrong way to characterize that type of slyness, then I will withdraw the term "drive-by smearing," but I still believe that it's inappropriate to string things together, create innuendoes, and call into question the integrity of members of this House.

The Speaker: Thank you. I think everybody would agree with that. So that would conclude this matter.

I thank you for engaging in almost an hour's worth of clarification and debate on these eight points of order. I am assuming we have now dealt with them all in this sort of aggregate fashion. However, if there are any other points of order – I had eight listed altogether – which have not yet been called, I would recognize anyone else who might have a point of order that was brought to my attention. If not, then we'll proceed in a few seconds here to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I will now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 201

Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act

The Deputy Chair: I would recognize the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure to finally rise and open the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 201, the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act. I'd like to thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for sharing their thoughts and comments over the course of second reading and thank the organizations and committees across Alberta who have endorsed this bill. This is beneficial to all Albertans.

Quickly I'd like to review the key components of Bill 201, and then I'd like to move an amendment. If the Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act is brought into force, all scrap metal dealers will be required to request proof of identification from each seller, record specific information about each transaction as determined by regulation, make that information available to law enforcement officers upon request, and report suspicious transactions such as purchases above a certain weight or with identifying features. The intent of this bill is to narrow the market for stolen goods. It won't get rid of all scrap metal theft, but it will make it much harder for thieves to find a buyer.

Given that first reading for Bill 201 took place last spring, there's been a lot of time for stakeholder consultations. In response to the concerns raised during the last several months, I'd like at this time to move an amendment to Bill 201. We'll pass around copies of the amendment and then bring them to the table.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll pause for a moment while we distribute the copies of the amendment. It will be known as amendment A1.

Hon. member, we can now proceed with amendment A1.

4:10

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Madam Chair. There are a couple of very important changes to the bill, so I'd urge all members to consider this amendment seriously and follow along. To begin with, section 1(b) currently contains the definition of peace officer as found in the Provincial Offences Procedure Act. This definition of peace officer includes park wardens, traffic officers, and persons appointed under the National Defence Act. That's a little broad and unnecessary for my liking and for the Privacy Commissioner as well.

So we're proposing that section 1(b) be amended by striking out and substituting the following peace officer definition:

- (i) a police officer under the Police Act, while the police officer is in the exercise or discharge of the police officer's powers or duties,
- (ii) a member of a police service under the Police Act, while the member is in exercise or discharge of the member's powers or duties, or

- (iii) a peace officer appointed under the Peace Officer Act, while the peace officer is in the exercise or discharge of the peace officer's powers or duties.

Make note that the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police and the Privacy Commissioner support this change in definition.

The next two parts of the amendment are rather straightforward, so I'll just read them through. Section 3 is to be amended by adding the following after subsection (2):

- (2.1) A scrap metal dealer or recycler shall, at the time of the transaction, take reasonable measures to ensure that the proof of identity provided under subsection (1)
  - (a) has not been altered or defaced to misrepresent the age or identity of the person,
  - (b) was issued by the issuing agency to the person, and
  - (c) is not otherwise forged or fraudulently made.

And the following is to be added after section 3:

- 3.1 If a scrap metal dealer or recycler has reasonable grounds to believe that metal in the possession of the scrap metal dealer or recycler is stolen property, the scrap metal dealer or recycler shall immediately report the matter to a law enforcement agency.

These are two bits which, although seemingly self-evident, were clearly outlined and stipulated in the pieces of legislation from other jurisdictions.

Now, the next amendment, concerning reasonable and probable grounds, was a bit of a hot topic for some of our stakeholders. Sections 4(1) and 4(2) and section 5(2) currently use the terms "reasonable grounds" and "with the permission" in reference to investigatory powers. Various conversations we had, including with law enforcement authorities, indicated that the legislation requiring permission to inspect would essentially leave peace officers in the same position they are now: with their hands tied. We consulted with the Privacy Commissioner, reviewed similar legislation in other jurisdictions, and spoke with business owners and operators to conclude that the term "reasonable grounds" needs to go. I understand that this does raise some red flags and want to ensure that this change is consistent with what we see in legislation regarding other regulated businesses.

For example, the Traffic Safety Act, the Tobacco Reduction Act, and the Fuel Tax Act set out powers of inspection without establishing a threshold for reasonable grounds or requiring an officer to obtain a warrant. Section 2.2(1) of the Traffic Safety Act authorizes an investigator to - enter any premises, other than a private dwelling, and investigate, inspect and audit the premises and any records, including electronic records, reports and documents, and any vehicles and equipment within the premises to ensure compliance with this Act and the regulations.

Under section 9 of the Tobacco Reduction Act inspectors may enter and inspect at any reasonable time any place or premises, other than a private dwelling, where tobacco products are sold, and about Alberta's Gaming and Liquor Act, for example, or Edmonton's business Bylaw 13138, which regulates pawn shops, amongst other businesses, stating: "A Licensee shall permit a Peace Officer to enter and inspect any Business premises for the purpose of determining compliance with this bylaw."

So what we see here is that for regulated businesses and industries, authorization to inspect without reasonable grounds is a fairly typical law enforcement power. I'm sure we'll hear more about the removal of "reasonable grounds" in the discussion, but I want to ensure that this is consistent with the other legislation that we see here in Alberta.

After section 5 we added the following:

- 5.1 No person shall obstruct, impede or refuse entry to a peace officer who is exercising powers or performing duties under section 4, or under an order issued pursuant to section 5, for the purposes of enforcing this Act.

Consultations indicated that the bill didn't expressly say that it is an offence for a person to obstruct an inspection by police. The addition of this offence provision can operate in conjunction with the penalty provisions in section 7.

The last two proposed changes were developed in response to discussions with the Privacy Commissioner, who advised an express statement authorizing law enforcement agencies to indirectly collect personal information under section 34 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

That sums up the proposed amendment. I know there's quite a bit there, but I think it signals the amount of time, thought, and consideration that has gone into the drafting of this legislation and the amount of consultations that we've held and the degree to which we're committed to ironing out the wrinkles in this bill before it is passed.

I know some of you had concerns about the photo identification requirement. This raises a barrier to transact for those who don't have access to a driver's licence. I want to assure them that this was discussed and taken into consideration. We know that anyone who does not have a driver's licence still must have a form of photo identification in order to access such services as health care. For those unable to afford your standard photo identification, the Boyle Street community centre, for example, provides the government alternative for photo identification for $5.

I hope that adding some context for the proposed changes has made it a bit more clear so that you can be more informed about the choice going forward. I look forward to hearing your feedback and urge everybody to support the amendment because it does represent a thorough response to the various concerns raised over the past six months or so.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Is there anybody else who wishes to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park for bringing this bill forward. This is indeed a very good piece of legislation and a very timely piece of legislation as theft of materials has become an increasing problem in the province. I've had the opportunity to look through the proposed amendments, and on the whole I like what I'm seeing here.

I did have some questions, though, in regard to section 4, what you've got listed here as amendment D. I'm just curious if there will be a set regulation on how often a peace officer may enter a business and ask them to produce this. I would hate to see that become a way to badger a business owner. I don't know if there's a precedent on that or not or if you have an answer for me on that. Would you like to answer that now? If you don't mind going back and forth, that would be great.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Quest: That would have to be established, I think, in regulation. We also have to assume that our law enforcement are going to execute their duties in the best interest of the public, the dealers, and all involved.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the hon. member. I do appreciate that. I actually have had a chance to speak with law enforcement at length on this bill, and I am happy to say that they are in support of this. They do like this piece of legislation. They were asking me how I was going to be voting on this, and I can't see many reasons why I would think to oppose this. It's, as I've said before, a very good piece of legislation.

Now, there was a question that I had on section 8, on G, as well. Maybe I'm too far ahead here. Sorry. It's amendment E, section 5, about "a specified period of time." Is there a reason we are adding this? I kind of like a peace officer to be able to answer at a time that would be timely for them rather than having to give notice to the owner that they're coming and giving them the opportunity to maybe shred the documentation that the peace officer would need to see. I don't know if you have a comment on that or if you'd like me to keep going.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, there is no question-and-comment part to Committee of the Whole unless there are no other speakers, but we have a large speakers list.

4:20

Mr. Fox: Okay. Well, we'll keep going then.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Fox: Thank you for clarifying that.

Amendment B, reasonable measures to put the onus on the recyclers and the scrap metal dealers to make sure that there's proof of identification. I am in support of that. I think it is prudent that the law expect the recycler and scrap metal dealer to request identification. It is also reasonable to ask them not to accept any obvious forgery or altered identification. So I am in agreement with amendment B here as well.

Amendment C. What I get from this is that it's making it mandatory for metal dealers or recyclers to report immediately to law enforcement any metal in their possession that they suspect to be stolen property. Again, I am in support of this, but what I do worry about is that in their holding onto that material until law enforcement can come in and deem what it is, they may be incriminating themselves and risking confiscation of property without compensation. We just want to make sure that in exercising their rights under this piece of legislation, they don't indeed incriminate themselves in a legal matter later on.

Amendment D I believe has to do with adhering to the letter of the act and making sure that the dealers themselves are acting in compliance with the act. I really have no issues here either. I'm happy to see that a peace officer would be able to go in and inspect premises and make sure that those that are operating that business are operating it within the confines of the law and that they are operating within the confines of this act.

Amendment E is that they may request the Court of Queen's Bench for an order based solely on the oath of a peace officer, and it states that law enforcement must provide a specific time period in order to enter the premises. I think I brought this up a little bit earlier, that I don't know if we really need the peace officer to be specifying a time period. Just give them the opportunity to enter that place of business and inspect the books so that they can verify that the company is operating within the confines of this act.

Amendment F, from what I get, is reinforcing the powers granted under amendment D. I would hope that if law enforcement does have to go to the Queen's Bench to get an order, the individuals will not obstruct entry and that if they do, they will be prosecuted for doing so.

Amendment G I didn't really have any issues with at all either.

Amendment H. We just want to make sure that compliance with these orders is in relation to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, the FOIP Act, especially under sections 33 and 34.

Again, I think these amendments on the whole are good amendments, and I am happy to say that I will stand in support of them and will be voting in favour of this bill. I do think that it is a good bill, and I commend the member opposite for a very good and a very timely piece of legislation. Thank you for bringing it forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is my pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment. First, I'd like to say a few words about our sponsoring member. I know all members can see the tenacity and dedication that the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park has put behind this bill. The member's efforts are admirable and an example for all of us.

While working with the Edmonton Police Service, I was involved in efforts to implement a city bylaw with similar objectives. At that time it was widely recognized by the police in both Edmonton and Calgary working in this area of stolen metal that provincial legislation was required rather than a region-by-region approach with a patchwork of municipal bylaws.

It has been a long road for the member, and the advancement of this bill to this point is very welcome. Through this amendment I can see that he's continued to work on making this bill work for everyone. I speak in favour of this proposed amendment. I think it's admirable, and I can confirm that this member has engaged and listened to the full spectrum of stakeholders that are affected by it.

I want to specifically address part D of the amendment. Part D strikes out section 4 subsections (1) and (2). Section 4 specifically deals with investigative powers under the act and those circumstances which warrant an inspection. Those who enjoy powers under the act are peace officers, and I'm glad the definition was narrowed to the satisfaction of both law enforcement and others. The proposed specific change to the definition of peace officer for the act has been addressed previously, so I'll focus on section D. Under the proposed amendment it is the removal of the reasonable grounds test for the powers of investigation. Currently section 4 (1) reads:

A peace officer who has reasonable [and probable] grounds to believe that a person has committed an offence under this Act or the regulations may, after explaining to the person or to the person's agent that the peace officer wishes to enter the person's business premises for the purposes of carrying out an investigation, request permission to enter the business premises.

Now, this is just not practical. The folks that I've talked to have said that this just does not work, so the amendment is very well received.

Some may wonder why this was seen as not as adequate or forceful enough to ensure that the bill would empower peace officers under the act. Simply put, the reasonable grounds test is always in place for criminal offences such as theft or possession of stolen property. Subjecting the activities of inspection to reasonable and probable grounds negates the purpose of increased record keeping. In fact, that provision would leave scrap metal dealers subject to less scrutiny than vehicles under the Traffic Safety Act, places of business under the Tobacco Reduction Act, the fuel distribution at processing facilities under the Fuel Tax Act, and, as mentioned previously by the sponsoring member, bylaws regarding pawned property that parallel this amendment.

That's why I'm happy that the hon. member has proposed this amendment to strike out the existing section 4(1) and replace it with "A peace officer may conduct an investigation for the purpose of determining whether a person is in compliance with this Act." The amendment continues with subsection (2): "For the purposes of an investigation, a peace officer may, during normal business hours, do any of the following," and there's a list there that's quite appropriate. Those are all the elements required for a proper investigation.

The proposed amendment changes four subsections and gives real teeth to the bill. Without the proposed amendment if a scrap dealer refused a peace officer access to their premises, a peace officer's only recourse would be to fulfill their reasonable and probable grounds requirements before a judge in order to conduct an investigation. Given the nature of scrap metal theft it is rare that officers of the law could gather enough reasonable grounds before having done the investigation. The whole idea of the inspection is to conduct an investigation of criminal activity so you can form reasonable and probable grounds and make that arrest.

The principal activities for the purpose of an investigation outlined in the proposed amendment to section 4(2) are very reasonable. In fact, the powers are limited to the application of normal business hours to reduce the disruption to the business. To the point from the member opposite about badgering or being unduly onerous on the business owners: this is not the case. In fact, the pawnshops in many of the major centres are under similar bylaws and comply with this, and I would argue that they are maybe not as sophisticated as a large industrial recycler.

The power to question a person for the purpose of an investigation is also very important and just simply germane to a proper investigation.

I'm just going to skip forward in light of the time. This is clearly well supported by not only the law enforcement, the metal recycling businesses in terms of best practices, but this amendment is going to give it the teeth required.

Thank you very much.

4:30

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on amendment A1?

Seeing no one, we will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Now we'll move back to the bill itself. Are there any members who would like to speak on it? The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment that I'd like to make to this bill in section 3 and section 8. I have the appropriate number of copies that I would like to circulate. I will get it circulated before I speak to it.

The Deputy Chair: So we'll pause for a minute while we circulate the amendment. This will be known as amendment A2.

It looks like most members have their copy. We can proceed.

Ms Smith: We received a letter from the CAODC in support of this bill, so we do recognize that this is something that industry wants, that there are many victims of this type of crime, and they are hoping to be able to give law enforcement the tools that they need to be able to effectively address it. That being said, we want to make sure that we are going after the criminals rather than treating the small-business dealers as if they are criminals.

I think the amendment that the hon. member put forward and that was just passed goes a long way towards addressing some of the concerns that I had, particularly section 3.1, the way it's reworded:

If a scrap metal dealer or recycler has reasonable grounds to believe that the metal in the possession of a scrap metal dealer or recycler is stolen property, the scrap metal dealer or recycler shall immediately report the matter to a law enforcement agency.

My sense of this is that scrap metal dealers and recyclers want to be able to get to the bottom of those who are committing criminal offences. They don't want to enable those who are committing criminal offences, and I think they probably have a fairly good radar for when a certain amount of material comes in, whether or not it is something that should be reportable. That's why I think that with the amendments that were made, some additional amendments should be made just to make sure that we are focusing our law enforcement efforts on the people who are committing the crime rather than those who are the victims of the crime. Let's face it: the scrap metal dealers and the recyclers are also going to be ones who are potentially victims of this type of crime.

If you look at the amendments that I'm proposing, I'm proposing that now that we've got these new amendments in place, we can strike a couple of sections. I would propose striking subsection (5) and subsection (6). I'll read subsection (5), and hopefully you'll see as I do the extra burden and difficulty this might create not only for the scrap metal dealer but for law enforcement as well. Subsection (5) says:

Within 24 hours of purchasing or receiving scrap metal of a weight that is greater than a weight prescribed in the regulations, a scrap metal dealer or recycler shall provide the prescribed information collected under this section to a law enforcement agency.

In addition to that, subsection (6) says:

For the purpose of calculating the weight of scrap metal received or purchased as required under subsection (5), any transaction or series of transactions with the same individual during a 7-day period is deemed to be [more than] one transaction.

Now, if we strike these two, the related section that would have to be struck is section 8(e), where we prescribe a weight for the purpose of section 3(5). The problem with these two clauses and the reason I do think that they need to be struck is because we don't want to be in a position where we're putting an undue and unnecessary paperwork burden onto our scrap metal dealers and our recyclers. We don't want to make our scrap metal dealers and our recyclers criminals just because they weighed material wrong and they didn't report it within the prescribed period of time or they weighed it wrong over a seven-day period and didn't report it in the prescribed period of time. We don't want to create reporting crimes with this. We actually want to create tools for law enforcement to go after real criminals. So it does seem to me that with the amendment put in, where if an individual believes that it has been stolen property, then they would use their own judgment to contact law enforcement, I think that's a better provision than this arbitrary requirement of 24 hours.

There are a couple of reasons why I think this will actually work against our law enforcement efforts if these are put into place. If you, for instance, prescribe that one tonne or maybe 100,000 kilograms is the amount that you determine to be a suspicious amount, then you can well imagine that criminals are going to divvy up the amount of product that they give to a scrap metal recycler so that they are just below the prescribed limit so that they can avoid having this provision catch them. I think that would then create an unnecessary burden on the scrap metal dealer and the recycler, but it would also give guidelines to the criminals about how they can get away with doing this kind of theft because you're actually prescribing what you think is a suspicious level for each of the different types of metals.

I don't know how many different types of metals, frankly, are subject to this kind of regulation, but I think if you have this kind of requirement on our scrap metal dealers, you're going to be spending an awful lot of time filling out forms and paperwork and dealing with the different types of weight: whether they should go up, whether they should go down, amending the amount of weight up and down, looking at the different types of metals up and down. It seems to me that that gets away from what it is we're trying to do. We're trying to give law enforcement the tools that they need. If they hear that there has been some scrap metal that has been stolen, then they will be able to proactively go out to these different dealers and be able to go through their books. That's a perfectly legitimate and reasonable portion of this bill.

Turning the onus back to the recyclers and turning the onus back to the scrap metal dealers I think gets us away from what it is we're trying to achieve with this legislation. We don't want to treat our small-business owners like they're doing wrong just because they happen to be in this business. I would hazard a guess that the vast, vast, vast majority of metals and scrap that they deal with is above board, is legal. Yet what you're doing with this provision is making them potentially guilty of paperwork crimes if they end up recording it wrong, not doing it over the seven-day period, misunderstanding how the regulations are written, maybe not knowing what it is for one piece of metal versus another piece of metal.

Let's make it easy for our scrap metal dealers and our recyclers to work with law enforcement to be able to enforce this. The onus really should be on the peace officers. The onus should be on law enforcement once they've identified that there has been a theft for them to proactively go out to the dealers and look through their books. We shouldn't be forcing our scrap metal dealers and our recyclers into a position where they're having to keep reams and reams and reams of unnecessary paperwork, essentially creating a needle in a haystack when it comes right down to it. We want to make it easy for our law enforcement to be able to identify the perpetrators of crime rather than put the onus on our dealers and our recyclers, who I think under this type of proposal would feel like criminals themselves.

So with that, I'm hoping that the hon. member will consider striking out subsections (5) and (6) and amending section 8 to strike out clause (e). If we can do that, I think that this legislation is something that would be welcomed not only by law enforcement, also clearly by companies that have been victims of this kind of theft, but also something that can be embraced and supported by the scrap metal dealers and recyclers themselves, who really are going to be at the front line on making sure that we identify those who are doing wrong and making sure that we can punish them.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak to the amendment A2? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I think we sort of appreciate where the intent of the amendment is. Practically, first of all, this needs to be left to regulation because values will change. What 100 pounds of copper is worth today may vary years from now, and we're not going to want to come back in legislation and start relooking at these things.

I don't think it's onerous on the scrap metal dealer. I think we have to have confidence that those who'll be responsible for the regulations will set the weights at reasonable levels so that it's not onerous on the business owners. It's interesting because in the discussions I had with the scrap metal dealers association, they didn't actually bring it up with me. But perhaps it's arisen since. That was a few weeks ago.

With respect to the comments from the member about the sort of divvying up of, say, a spool of copper wire, while the intent of this legislation is, as I said earlier, not going to stop all scrap metal theft, it's to make it harder. It's going to make it harder on thieves if they do have to start divvying things up. Because of the provision for reporting numerous transactions in the same week, again, if they want to start running all over Alberta trying to sell tiny pieces of copper wire, well, that's going to make it a lot more inconvenient for them, and it's going to make the product a lot less attractive to steal.

Those are my points, and for those reasons I won't be supporting the amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain View-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Close. Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, Madam Chair. Thank you very much.

I'm going to stand and actually speak in favour of this. I did not speak to the last amendment, but there needs to be consistency in language in the legislation. I think it's important. As a former police officer I do believe there needs to be reasonable cause to think that somebody is violating the act. I think the language needs to be consistent across all legislation. I understand how that last amendment came to be. I'm definitely going to be supporting this act. I think it's a good act, that we take a positive step to reduce crime, and I don't think there are too many people here that disagree with that.

I do want to speak to small businesses, though, and particularly the onus of whose job it is to investigate crime. Under the former amendment it was made clear that if the scrap metal dealer suspects there's been a crime, they are compelled to report it. I think that's good. What this amendment does is it relies upon the previous amendment to do its job. It removes the paperwork and the necessity of possibly penalizing an innocent business.

I'm always cautious of unreasonable search and seizure. I'm always cautious of penalizing those who are trying to abide by the law. I don't want to make them victims of an administrative fine or civil problem because their goal was to comply with the law. They determine according to the other amendment that there was a situation where they suspected a crime. They reported it properly to the authorities. The local authorities now have the ability to come out and investigate and do the work that we want them to do. What I don't want to see is somebody that's in trouble because they miscalculated the weight or they missed that time frame and they could be subject to a violation of this act. That's why I support this amendment, because that's really important.

When I ran a small business, there were so many things that you had to do to comply with rules and regulations depending on your business. Scrap metal dealers are no different. But when you add one more, if they were to honestly miss this – I'm not talking about the scrap metal dealer who's looking to violate the law. This act does a very good job of bringing them under the umbrella of the law, where we can prosecute them. I'm focusing on those dealers who are conducting an honest business, who are looking to just do their daily routine and not have this extra onus put upon them.

Madam Chair, I have to compare both amendments because they're so new. The previous amendment, just passed, did the trick in my mind. It puts the onus on the business. If they so much as suspect, they are compelled to report it. If they don't, they would be in violation of the act. But having subsections (5) and (6) in there also is just a tripping stone, for me, on these honest businesses who are trying to comply with the law. What we've done here is just submit an amendment that says that everything flows well. What we don't want to do is put someone in violation of the act who had no intention of being in violation of the act.

As the hon. member said, the weights will change. The value of copper will go up and down. Regulation will have to chase that accordingly, and that's unnecessary, really.

What we're after is the theft, regardless of the weight. That's really important. When you have that 24-hour reporting, it makes sense sitting here in the Legislature; it may not make sense if you're running a business, and you're not watching the clock, and somebody points out to you in two days or 48 hours. It's like: you didn't report that in 24 hours, so that would be a violation. I'm not saying we would prosecute them, but they would be in violation of the act, unnecessarily, and they shouldn't be.

That's how I look at this, and I would hope the hon. members would give another look at this and say: does the act do what we intended to do? I submit to you that it does. It looks at the crime. It looks at how we can make it so that the peace officers, the RCMP, whoever is investigating has the ability and the authority to conduct their investigation properly. It also allows us to get these people to justice, where we can hold them accountable for breaking the law. I think the act does that. What we don't need to do is overburden anything with this language in sections 5 and 6. I'm curious if anyone else shares that same opinion.

But I do support this amendment. To me, it makes it a little bit more streamlined. I know if the Energy minister were dealing with streamlining, he would always agree that we should streamline various legislation.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there any other member who wishes to speak on amendment A2? The hon. Member for — uh-oh.

Mr. Bikman: Wherever I'm from. Cardston-Taber-Warner. Unless you're from Taber, and then it's Taber-Cardston-Warner.

The Deputy Chair: Cardston-Taber-Warner. Thank you.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I support this amendment, of course, because it does simplify things. We don't want to put these scrap metal dealers in a position where they're reluctant to draw attention to themselves for fear that there might be some little letter of the law, an i not dotted or a t not crossed, and I think that the friendly amendment that's been suggested will accomplish that and make them more likely to comply because they're not fearful that somehow there's some other tiny little regulation that they've missed. I support what has just been said and add to it that thought and perspective.

In addition, I think it's important that we realize that a basic law of economics is supply and demand. People aren't likely to steal if there isn't a place that they can sell it to, so we try and make it more difficult for them to find places to sell their stolen goods at, and the bill, I think, does that. But I think it still correctly leaves the onus on the scrap metal dealer to report it. We are proposing a bill that will affect all scrap metal dealers. I think most of them are honest — at least, I hope they are — but I know there are some who aren't, and we want to make it more difficult for them to get away with continuing to create or remain in demand for product. You know if something is stolen. I think you have a sense of it. You know, it doesn't pass your sniff test. Where did this come from? What's the provenance? How did this guy just happen to show up with a coil of wire, or whatever quantity that he proposes to sell?

I think the bill addresses these things, and this amendment makes it easier for the bill to do its job. I hope also, as my colleague suggested, that we'll consider this amendment as facilitating the result that we're all seeking.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

This is on amendment A2?

Ms Blakeman: It is.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. This is one of these amendments that I wish we could sever because there are parts of this that I agree with, and I'm going to break it out here. When we look at amending section 3 and striking out subsection (5), which is the time period that is prescribed here, that within 24 hours of purchasing or receiving the metal with a certain weight that's prescribed, the dealer has to provide the information that they collect to a law enforcement agency, presuming that they think there's something wrong, the issue with the 24 hours is that our world doesn't work that way. We have statutory holidays, we have weekends, we have extended Christmas holidays, and this doesn't allow for any of that. If on Christmas Eve or the day before Christmas Eve you take in something, you're now going to have to report on Christmas Day, supposedly, and if you don't, you're in trouble.

I think part of what really offends me — and I will try very hard not to go over ground already trod, Madam Chairperson — is that this is not doing what it was supposed to do. Already in the discussion I've been hearing in this House that the focus is entirely on the dealer. When you guys get out in front of the media, you're going on and on and on about how this is going to stop the thief, but you actually look at the bill, and this is about requirements from the dealer. So you are making a small businessperson jump backwards through hoops while holding, you know, a glass of water. All of the onus here is on the small-business dealer. You have failed utterly to convince me that that is going to stop any thief.

Everything that's in this bill is after the fact. The theft has occurred. All you're trying to do is build a database in which to chase somebody down after the fact if you can actually find them. In the meantime you have now put a whole sector of people, a whole — I don't know what you use to describe a certain kind of business — certain kind of business under all of these prescriptions. They have to report it within 24 hours. It has to be a certain way. All of the onus is on them. They have to do all the work.

The 24 hours thing. Well, I mean, I'm remembering the movie Garden State, in which, you know, there was a scrap metal dealer in there that was doing very strange things, and he might well have worked 24 hours, seven days a week. But most people in North America still manage to close their business for some period of time, so this is an unreasonable requirement of any businessperson. It doesn't take into consideration any kind of – like, if you want to say 24 hours of a business day, okay, I'm in. If you want to say 24 hours Monday to Friday, okay. But this is 24 hours. Stop.

You now expect someone, you know, if you sell it at 8 o'clock at night because you're open – I'm getting a bit silly here, but you get my point. Because you're open late on a Thursday night and at 8:55 you sell something, that means the next night when you close at 6, it doesn't matter. You've got to stay late in order to hit your deadline unless you can manage to get it done earlier. It's just the kind of thing that makes me nutty about legislation because it doesn't take into consideration the way people actually work, and I really resent making the small businessperson the bad guy here, which is what this does.

Just to close that circle, I am in favour of striking out subsection (5). Subsection (6) I'm a little less exercised about because I'm assuming that it's in there to make sure that somebody doesn't cut something up and come back day after day after day with seven pieces and altogether they make one big spool. Am I correct in that? I'm looking at the member. This section 3(6) was to make sure that they couldn't bring in pieces of the same thing because it's talking about a seven-day period being all treated as one? Well, that actually helps out the small businessperson because they don't have to register seven different things, so that actually, I think, helps them. Then section 8 is just following up on the weight requirement that turns up in the regulations.

I'm really in favour of the A2 amendment that strikes out subsection (5) because I just think it's unworkable and not fair, less concerned about striking subsection (6) . . .

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member. I hesitate to interrupt you, but according to Standing Order 8(6) we are now required to rise and report.

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

I'd now ask the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill to read the report.

Dr. Brown: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on Bill 201. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Thank you.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

School and Community Facility Partnerships

503. Mr. Fraser moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to construct new school facilities in collaboration with municipalities, school boards, and other stakeholders which would function as schools during the day but have the ability to offset operational expenses by partnering with compatible public and private enterprises such as but not limited to libraries, daycares, and recreational facilities.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 503. I'm proposing this motion because innovation in the construction of school facilities holds promise for cost efficiency and multiple community purposes. Motion 503 urges the government to explore potential partnerships between public and private enterprise in school construction and maintenance. By doing this, the government would decrease the costs of building and maintaining school facilities.

In addition, Madam Speaker, these partnerships would allow for other temporary and permanent uses for school buildings. Multiple-use school facilities could result in other revenue streams for school boards, which could in turn reduce operational expenses. While there are already examples of this type of public-private co-operation in Alberta, Motion 503 would encourage the government to pursue more of these partnerships in the construction of future schools in order to lower capital costs.

Students spend a lot of their time in school facilities, and it's essential that these spaces are capable of offering world-class programs. These buildings must be safe, clean, and fully outfitted with the technologies and tools of modern learning. To fulfill these requirements, we need cutting-edge innovation at every step of planning, designing, constructing, and operating our schools. Resources such as gymnasiums, libraries, laboratories, swimming pools, and outdoor sporting facilities contribute to an exceptional learning experience. As well, these spaces also create the opportunity for joint use in the community. All communities require public facilities to interact socially, exercise, study, or read, among other things.

Schools are natural centrepieces of our communities, providing focal points and meeting places for families and neighbourhood events. Because of this, Madam Speaker, it makes social and economic sense for these community facilities and services to be consolidated in local schools. From a social perspective the combination of educational, recreational, and other infrastructure allows for a common meeting place for a community. Economically speaking, consolidating these facilities reduces the number of sites that are needed to be developed and subsequently maintained.

Madam Speaker, Motion 503 proposes partnering with compatible public and private enterprises to effectively pursue further construction and utilization of joint-user facilities. Joint-use facilities constructed and operated through these types of partnerships can already be found in this province. For instance, the Red Deer public school district has partnered with the city of Red Deer to enhance and enlarge a public school's library so that it can be used by the public library as well. In Lac La Biche a new high school will be connected to a multiplex recreational facility built by the county. These are only two examples, and they hold great promise. In addition, they illustrate the types of partnerships that are feasible in both urban and rural communities.

As many of you know, the capital plan has already seen the completion of 14 schools in Edmonton and Calgary by the close of 2012. By 2012 nearly 13,000 new student spaces will have been added, with a further 8,000 in subsequent years. However, in the past, analysis by the government found that results could be improved through a combined procurement approach. These combined methods include private-public partnerships, regionally bundled projects, and design-bid-build projects. Madam Speaker, it is expected that this combined approach could result in savings of more than 10 per cent over the traditional procurement procedures. By pursuing such innovative practices and these combined methods, the province could increase the number of joint-user school facilities in service.

Madam Speaker, despite the evident economic advantages offered by Motion 503, the social impact on the community is no less important. A joint-use facility can become a community hub accessible to all citizens, and it focuses and centres an entire community. These facilities can provide expanded recreational opportunities both indoors and outdoors in the form of hockey rinks, gymnasiums, swimming pools, track and field areas, or fitness centres. They can also ensure ready access to print materials through shared library services. These facilities can house expanded student, community, family, and other social services. Importantly for the educational system the presence of these facilities and services in a single location can mean that the school curriculum is enriched and enhanced with access to library, laboratory, and recreational resources that may not otherwise be available to students.

I'm certain that we will agree that Alberta is the forefront of education both within Canada and around the world. My reason for tabling Motion 503 is to encourage the continuation of that tradition of excellence and thinking outside the box that allows Alberta to be prosperous and the province that it is. Motion 503 exposes children to innovation from a young age, and they will innovate for the future. Motion 503, Madam Speaker, is meant to encourage the government to rethink its approach to the delivery of both education and community services across this province.

I urge all hon. members to take an interest in this debate and consider fully the advantages of pursuing the changes proposed by Motion 503. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to give my support to Motion 503 and to thank my colleague from Calgary-South East for bringing this motion forward for us to debate. We know that a school facility can be more than just a school. A school can also be a community hub, especially when it houses a community library, daycare, or rec centre. In many schools, especially in rural areas but also in urban areas, partnerships like these are already occurring.

This motion calls upon the government to actively collaborate with a community when constructing new school facilities by urging the government to work with municipalities, school boards, and other interested stakeholders before the construction of a new school facility. This is because there are many compatible enterprises both public and private that could partner with a school facility to meet the needs of the community and, in turn, share in the operating expenses of the facilities.

Madam Speaker, I much prefer the approach outlined in this motion to the approach recently outlined by the government. The government's approach is to borrow its way into debt, claiming that the only way infrastructure in our province will get built is this way. I much prefer the approach, outlined in this motion, of actually working with the local community to see what other needs it has that could be partnered with a new school. This will ensure that the community gets the best value for the money spent to construct and operate both the school and whatever other enterprises it partners with.

A great example is in my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat. It's an example where a partnership like this between a school and a community facility and the municipality is working very, very well. In Medicine Hat Notre Dame academy and the Medicine Hat Family YMCA are located at the same site and share the use of facilities. Students at Notre Dame use the YMCA facilities, some six gyms combined, as well as the activities offered by and run by the YMCA itself. The city of Medicine Hat also co-ordinates recreation and other activities such as classes and meetings using both the YMCA gym and the school facilities. Clearly, this arrangement is working well. It is a first-class, very-well-used facility and school. This arrangement is working well not only for the school community of Notre Dame but also for the wider community of the city of Medicine Hat and the area of Cypress-Medicine Hat.

I agree that I think it would certainly be beneficial for research into whether there are community partnerships available for a new school facility to be a standard part of the preliminary planning when the government is considering where to construct and how to share new schools. Partnerships between a school and an enterprise that will be using the school's facilities would lower the cost to taxpayers when everyone using the facility shares in its operating costs. Of course, Madam Speaker, there is only one taxpayer. In some cases, particularly in rural areas, a partnership between a school and another community enterprise may be the only way either of these facilities could feasibly and economically be built.

Madam Speaker, these are some of the reasons, along with some of the other very good points raised by my colleague, why I will be supporting this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you have very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to talk in favour of Motion 503, brought by the Member for Calgary-South East, which calls for innovation in building combined facilities for new schools. In fact, the motion actually calls upon the government to seek new ways of building schools that will not only save costs, one of my favourite topics, but will also amount to an investment in the communities in which schools are built. Now, examples of these schools include combined school and recreation centres as well as combined school and library services. The result of this innovative approach to constructing schools as providers of multiple services is the increased use of facilities by community members as well as construction and maintenance investments from parties other than the government.

Madam Speaker, given the consolidation of services that these combined new schools offer, what this motion proposes could potentially be practical throughout the entire province but, I'd say, specifically in rural communities, as the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has mentioned. Smaller towns may not have the population necessary to justify the construction of multiple buildings in which to house services nor may they possess the space required for a large number of separate facilities. It may be unlikely that a rural community that houses, for example, a school, a library, a community centre, and a recreation centre would see all of these services utilized to their full capacity, but all of these services, though, are very important and vital to the particular community.

This has already been recognized by a number of communities across the province and elsewhere. There are already a variety of examples of combined-use facilities that are in the planning stages, that are being constructed, or even some that are already in use. In fact, Madam Speaker, a number of these buildings are located in smaller rural communities, as I mentioned.

For example, there's currently a project under way in the town of Penhold, which I have the pleasure of driving by twice a week. This project is the result of co-operation between the town of Penhold and also the Chinook's Edge school division, and it entails the attachment of a multiplex centre to an existing school. Penhold has a population of about 2,000 people, and it would be very difficult for a town that size to support multiple specific-use locations, but again these are very vital to the community itself. By appending a new multiplex facility onto an existing high school, costs that would otherwise have gone toward building an entirely new structure are spared.

In addition to this cost-saving initiative, Madam Speaker, the town of Penhold has a new and more versatile centre that can function as a centerpiece for the community. When completed, this joint-use building will serve as a common area not only for families with children in attendance at the school but also for community members seeking a venue for recreational activities. To cap off the many advantages of the new facility, the students enrolled in the school will have access to new, fully equipped spaces that will enhance both the physical education curriculum and the health and wellness of students. It is encouraging to see rural communities pursuing such projects of their own accord.

Madam Speaker, the nature of joint-use facilities such as the one that I discussed is not only in the utility once built but also in the dynamic partnerships formed in planning and building them. To cite the Penhold example once again, the combined school/multiplex project was made possible by a partnership between the town of Penhold and the Chinook's Edge school division. Partnerships of this kind can contribute to an exchange of ideas that may help maximize fiscal efficiency and nurture social and cultural vibrancy regardless of the size of the community.

5:10

I'm pleased to see that Motion 503 acknowledges these already noteworthy accomplishments. Nongovernment involvement in these projects could allow rural communities to benefit from self-sufficiency in the maintenance and operation of joint-use buildings. This province was built by enterprising citizens, Madam Speaker, and it appears, again, that the hon. Member for Calgary-South East recognizes this and wants to move forward on this path.

If Motion 503 is adopted, there is a potential that costs to schools may be reduced. I've mentioned the rural community aspect, but speaking to this as someone who represents a rather mature community that has not had a school built for many years, we could also look at ways that we can employ the usage of existing facilities to make these end gains regardless of where you are in the province.

I'd like to thank again the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for bringing forward this motion that's allowed the House to highlight the accomplishments of rural communities in pursuing their innovative solutions to the challenges. Madam Speaker, we also have to realize that in these rural communities you're going to have some places where you can't have all of these facilities, but if you put them together, they can make for a very vital community. At the same time you may see a net cost reduction in construction but also places that might have individuals, groups rent the particular facility not only for this year but for many years ahead of us. This may be something where we may be really on to something good here when it comes to the vibrancy of our local communities regardless of where you may be in the province.

With that, I will take my seat, and I look forward to hearing from the next speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to this motion. It raises a number of important issues. Certainly, we've heard a great deal of debate in this House over the course of the last several years that I've been here, actually, about the need for new school facilities and about the struggles that we are seeing in a number of communities.

There are a couple of things that I'd like to comment on in relation to this. First of all, as a member who represents a riding that's in the inner city, we have a significant concern in that there is a tremendous amount of pressure being brought to bear by this government and its policies on school boards to close inner-city schools. Unfortunately, what tends to happen is that it's presented as an either/or sort of scenario. The school board is told: well, if you don't close these inner-city schools, we're not going to open anything or build anything out in the suburbs. Quite frankly, Madam Speaker, I don't think that that is the right approach to dealing with the problem.

In no way, shape, or form do I negate or deny that there's a tremendous need for school infrastructure both in the suburbs as well as in many of the rural communities that the previous speakers have identified, so there needs to be work done in that regard. However, we also need to take on the fact that at this point the administration of school infrastructure and the processes which impact on it are actually governed by three levels of government: it's the school board, the municipality in terms of the development that they approve, and then the Minister of Education through his funding.

By failing to bring those bodies together, we seem doomed to make the same mistakes over and over and over again, mistakes that we've seen happen in much more mature jurisdictions than ours, where we see inner-city communities dying as a result of sort of very short-sighted infrastructure decisions being made with the decision-makers being spread across three different authorities with three different interests in play, and then you're left with what could have been vibrant urban communities being challenged as a result of many of these infrastructure resources being eliminated through a failure to plan. So I just think it's really important to talk about that.

Our party in the last election talked about creating a community regeneration fund that would go hand in hand working with municipalities and school boards to ensure that we did what was necessary to preserve the integrity of our school infrastructures in inner-city communities so that with the expected evolution and sort of revolution around where people choose to settle over time, we still have the resources in those central communities to maintain the health of those communities and to maintain the viability of those schools.

Having said that, there are many good points in this motion, in particular the idea of bringing together different types of community activity in one building.

When you're talking about child care, for instance, when you're talking about recreation, those are all really important things, the idea of using these institutions and having them maximize their benefit to the community so that we're not just looking at the hours of the school, but we're looking at the weekends and the evenings and all that kind of stuff because schools are community hubs, and they are integral to community development and community health. That's why I made the other points previously that we just can't blindly go about pressuring school boards to close schools in currently functioning, mature communities.

The one thing I would say that I'm a bit concerned about is this notion of partnering with compatible public and private enterprises not limited to libraries, daycares, and recreational facilities. Those are really good. I could see adding arts facilities to them. I'm little nervous about partnering with, you know, the Walmart rock-climbing centre or the Cineplex/Coke cinema centre. I don't know. I'm just making this up as I go along. The point is that the way the motion is crafted, I'm not entirely sure who it is we might be partnering with and what limits might be placed on it.

Of course, as you know, Madam Speaker, it is our party's position that any kind of P3 scheme being used as a means of funding school infrastructure is problematic because, essentially, P3s are debt. They're debt the same way as is borrowing on the market to build the new infrastructure, that has been the subject of so much conversation for the last two weeks. In the same way that's debt, except in many ways it's the worst kind of debt because we have even less control and oversight, and taxpayers have less accountability for the debt that we've taken on. So we take on a debt. P3s are a politically expedient debt because we take it on and we keep it off the books. But it's still a debt that ultimately comes back to the taxpayers. It's a debt where we have less control over how we use those facilities, we have less control over the size of those facilities, and we have less control over how we can build onto those facilities.

Of course, we have already seen examples of that with respect to the P3 schools that are already in existence in Edmonton, where the P3 arrangement has prohibited rational common-sense use and development of an infrastructure that was designed for the community, but unfortunately because of the P3 ownership relationship we're not able to get the best bang for our buck. So on one hand, we're on the hook for the ultimate cost of that P3 because, just to be clear, P3s, you know, are like the quick and dirty. You get it right away, but the financial liability rests with the taxpayer. It always does, and it will in the end. So we have that liability, but we don't have the control and the ability to maximize it in a way that's both commonsensical and rational and clearly designed and suited for the best interests of the community for whom it's built.

I am concerned about this motion in that it doesn't seem to preclude the increase in P3 funding. Indeed, it seems to potentially invite it. That would be a concern that I have because I don't think that is a wise long-term path forward. In some cases it does make sense to borrow for infrastructure, and I'm sure that Madam Speaker is aware that members in our caucus have identified that for many, many years now. But when you do borrow, you don't give away the keys and say, "Geez, I hope you don't mind if I use it every second weekend," and then leave it at that, which is what you're essentially doing when you go with the P3 funding model.

However, I do want to end on a positive note. I think the idea of collaborating with municipalities and school boards is good. I think the idea of having a multiplicity of uses in these institutions is very good. Of course, you know, the government has been talking about wraparound schools for as long as I've been elected. However, it doesn't seem to be happening quite as quickly as we would hope. Perhaps that sentiment will be more persuasively shepherded through the current version of this Conservative caucus, and we'll see more of that in the future.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and speak to Motion 503, the goal of which is to seek partnerships and other innovative approaches in the construction of new school facilities. I'd also like to thank and congratulate, in fact, the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for bringing forth his first, and hopefully not last, motion in this House.

Madam Speaker, this is an issue that is dear to my heart. Many will know that I've spent a good portion of a decade – that sounds like a long time – of my life in a project that I felt was necessary for the city of Edmonton. The building, indeed, is called the Saville Community Sports Centre, often referred to as the GO Centre. That centre was a need in our city somewhat because we don't have extensions of the schools. In fact, it was very difficult at the time that I was doing the initial work on that project to get into the schools to be involved in sport and, indeed, to get youth and kids off the streets and out of the malls. Not that malls are bad, but it's better for them to be in a place where they can bounce a ball and have some athletic endeavours in their life. This bill speaks to those kinds of issues, and I do hope that the government will certainly pay attention as we move forward with this motion.

As we have continually heard from both sides of the House, Alberta is growing and requires more schools. With one of the best educational systems in the world it is important that we strive to provide the amenities that support that system. To achieve our goal, this government is always seeking new and innovative approaches to planning for, designing, building, and managing educational facilities. The hon. member's motion seeks to encourage just that by partnering with public and private enterprises when building public schools.

The greatest benefit would be to alleviate the cost to government, indeed, for building and maintaining schools. This, in turn, would free up more funds for priority education projects. By allowing other temporary and permanent uses for schools, we could open up operating revenues for school boards by aiding them in reducing operating expenses. We've already seen a number of arrangements that involve private partnerships. We've heard about them already. However, this motion entrenches this approach whenever feasible.

As I have mentioned, Madam Speaker, Alberta is growing. This province has experienced the highest population growth across Canada in the last decade. Since 1996, in fact, Alberta has surpassed the average national population growth rate of 1 per cent by more than double, at 2.1 per cent. I think it's a pretty safe assumption that we will continue to see this extensive growth in Alberta. Actually, statistically speaking, Alberta has the lowest mean age at 35.7 years – some people are surprised at that – and the lowest population of seniors at 10.4 per cent across the country.

Currently, however, we have approximately 600,000 school-aged children, and it's estimated that we will increase that by about 100,000 students by the year 2020. So the Alberta government has to find a way to accommodate that 100,000 more children in eight short years. That's why we need to continue to be innovative when planning to accommodate the rise in population of school-aged children, and that's why we need to build the necessary infrastructure for this province.

I think it is great that the hon. member is looking to the future and making us all take a good, hard look at different options for infrastructure planning in the debate today. Presently the Alberta government is constructing 22 new and replacement schools, with a focus on meeting local needs of our fastest-growing communities such as Airdrie, Beaumont, and Fort McMurray. I think I saw some sod-turnings in that regard recently.

In addition, to handle the growth pressures and to maintain infrastructure, Alberta's capital plan calls for the modernization of an additional 15 schools. As we heard, I think it's possible that we can weave this into those as well. These 35 school projects, that are in the 2012 to 2015 capital plan, have a combined budget of over $550 million. Half a billion dollars, Madam Speaker.

In an analysis conducted by the government, it has been found that when using combined approaches such as those that the hon. member proposes in this motion, the cost savings are more than 10 per cent of the traditional procurement methods. Madam Speaker, there are a variety of methods that can be applied to the construction of combined-use facilities. Indeed, I had to go through this process with the Saville Community Sports Centre. They include private-public partnerships, or P3s, regionally bundled design-build projects, individual design-bid-build projects, and regionally bundled design-bid-build for modernization projects. Those are interesting terms when you dive into them, very, very interesting.

Now, there's much that can be said about these diverse options, and I would encourage my colleagues to become familiar with them. It is important that we understand infrastructure and the need to properly plan for our future. By using these approaches, not only will we see projects being completed more quickly, but they have the opportunity to provide optimal value for hard-earned tax dollars.

However, in part the 10 per cent savings I've mentioned, Madam Speaker, will be realized as a result of utilizing government expertise to manage the large construction projects and provide oversight of project scope. This government is able to achieve economies of scale through this bundling. For example, this can result in scheduling, administrative, and consultant fee savings. Additionally, when the government of Alberta tenders the project, it receives a guaranteed fixed construction price. By contracting out the projects, much of the financial risk is transferred to the contractor and not the government.

That being said, Madam Speaker, I look forward to discussion on the motion and to further pursuing research on these other possible cost savings. Once again, thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for bringing forward such a timely and important topic for discussion, one that's very close to my heart.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Madam Speaker, thank you. It is a pleasure to rise and speak to this Motion 503 from the Member for Calgary-South East. I like the tone in here a lot better than we had a couple of hours ago. It seems we're all in agreement on this motion, which is a good thing. I think on the focus of education we pretty much always are. Although we might have a different idea of how to get to the end goal, we all agree that we want what's best for our kids.

I think the intent of this motion is a very, very good idea. We want schools, of course, to function as a hub in the community, someplace that we can all go to and share time, watch that community grow. If there are measures that we can take to encourage partnership with local enterprises where new schools are built, how facilities are constructed, I think that could benefit not just the school community but the community as a whole.

There are sort of two angles to looking at this motion, and I see them both as potentially positive. I just want to make a point to all of us to remember back to our childhood here for a second. I had the great pleasure, Madam Speaker, in my previous career of moving around the country quite a bit. Although I've spent 25 of my 40-plus years here in Alberta, I've lived in half a dozen provinces, and this practice is applied in most provinces in the country, to my knowledge. I can think of being a youth in New Brunswick and attending a youth group at a school, and I can think of being in Ontario and going to use the school for community floor hockey, out on Vancouver Island the same thing. Currently here in Alberta the church service I attend on Sundays in Chestermere is in a Catholic school. It's Our Lady of Wisdom.

These are hubs, you know, for communities. I don't think everybody does it the same way, and I'll come back to that point in a minute because I never want to get to the point where we try and pigeonhole a one-size-fits-all approach, but I think we all support that notion.

As the Education critic, or advocate, as I like to say, for the Official Opposition, I have had the privilege of engaging with students, with teachers, with school board representatives right across the province, and I think it is accurate to say that in many communities the idea is already being practised. Many school facilities are so much more than classrooms. They might house a library, as some have mentioned here today, community meeting centres, gymnasiums used by groups as well. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat mentioned Notre Dame academy in Medicine Hat. What a wonderful example of how a community works with a school district to have a facility for the entire city. My son was a member of Notre Dame academy for four or five years, and I used to use the facility when I was in Medicine Hat. You know, it's looked upon very favourably by the city of Medicine Hat, and it's a great example, I think, that we can look to as we look to expand the hon. Member for Calgary-South East's motion.

An example is the Rocky View school district in my constituency. I had the pleasure and opportunity to meet with the board last week. You know, they talk about, for instance, the critical hours from 3 to 6 when school gets out and when some kids more than others need more programs. They really focus on those hours, and I bet many boards do in working with the community, again, to use those schools as hubs to provide them. In this case on the financial angle, while it might not relate to the motion, it might be something to be aware of from the government side.

I'm pretty sure that Rocky View school district runs a deficit of $120,000 on this issue just to contribute to the community programs, and I know they see it as a positive to give back, but it is something to look at going forward, to be aware of. They pick up the electricity costs and all the rest of it for their community groups.

As I said, you know, the Medicine Hat example is, I think, a great example of building a facility that can be used in partnership. Now, it might be tough – and I don't think this is the intent of the member, and I would even ask for a quick response if that's permitted or if the member wants to respond. I don't think the intent is to come up with a one-size-fits-all approach because I don't think that would work. There are so many school districts in this province, and everybody has a different idea of how things are working. Some of them have been doing it for so long that they do have very effective plans, and we'd never want to see them take a step back to try and fit an approach that we are mandating for them.

On the expenses, going forward, I know we're trying to save money as a province. I know we often talk about the debate in here: well, you guys are calling for infrastructure cuts, yet you're calling for expansion of programs at the same time. I see the valid argument when that's thrown our way, and I always try and counter it with prioritizing. You know, that's how I view it, in terms of where you're spending, but I wouldn't want it to come to a place on a private member's motion like this where, if it ever came to fruition, we were making up lost money by putting it on the backs of somebody else in user fees and all the rest of it. While recouping costs is necessary and facilities are expensive to run as community centres, we want to make them accessible to our community groups. I think we need to keep that in mind.

I would just say that I am supportive of the motion, as I said, as long as it doesn't, to me, have a one-size-fits-all approach. We should also look to those that are doing it right. There are many boards in this province, many of yours maybe, that have examples. The Member from Edmonton-Gold Finger – Edmonton-Gold Bar gave a good example. [interjections] That is a compliment, sir. I think it's important that we look around and see who is doing it right and learn from it as we develop it.

To the Member for Calgary-South East: thank you very much for the motion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to Motion 503, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-South East. It's actually kind of humbling to rise to speak to this motion. I remember being a newly elected MLA back in 2008. I think it was Motion 509 of the day, in which I brought forward the concept of creating an urban planning organization, specifically for our two major cities, that would involve bringing together all the entities that go in and plan public infrastructure development in our cities. This went from the municipalities, the provincial government, the federal government to school boards to the health regions or the health authorities at that time, that delivered health care, to the stuff like the airport authorities and these types of things.

Far too often my experience with building public infrastructure is that it typically tended to be very siloed and very disconnected from the reality, and the reality is that at the end of the day taxpayers and citizens are all of the same. What we need to do is make sure that we're delivering services, whether they be services such as education or health care but also public infrastructure, in a way that's co-ordinated because (a) that means citizens are getting much more value in their services, and (b) taxpayers are in the end going to get much more benefit or much more value for the dollars that are being spent. Obviously, that was a much broader concept than the one that's here in Motion 503 before us today, but there are some very, very similar entities.

I think that the values that underlie both the motion that I brought forward at that time, in 2008, and the motion here are the values of innovation and collaboration. I think it's important to know that this does happen out in our communities quite often. There are some very, very good examples of projects that have moved forward with these values, but I still think we still have a long way to go, Madam Speaker, because we do talk about schools not necessarily as hubs of communities but as just schools. We know that in reality, when it comes down to how the communities view these types of buildings, that's not exactly how they look at those. They do look at those as hubs of communities, and I think they look to their government to show leadership to recognize that and make sure that we deliver programming and the physical bricks and mortar that are consistent with that. This is a very good motion, that I think we in the Legislature should be supporting.

One of the challenges around moving ahead with this at a very broad level is that when you start talking about innovation and collaboration, it really throws the whole model out the window. I know that the members opposite have always talked about making sure that we prioritize things and that sort of thing. Prioritizing is very easy when you're comparing apples to apples or oranges to oranges. When you start having to compare apples and bananas and oranges and those types of things, it becomes much more difficult to do.

That becomes a challenge. When you start to collaborate and when you start to bring in other entities that are bringing certain groups of funding into projects or when you start to bring forward innovative projects that have multiple groups, how do you put that into the prioritization list? An example of this is that in northeast Calgary there's a need for a high school to be built there. The community has come up with a great idea to partner with the YMCA to build a great community facility that would serve generations of people in northeast Calgary for years and years to come: their recreational needs, their community meeting needs, that sort of stuff. We've got a great facility up there. The government has put a lot of lottery money into that facility, that partnered with the YMCA.

The problem is: no school. Why is there no school there? Because it wasn't on the priority list for a school. But are we talking about schools, or are we talking about serving communities? That becomes the huge problem. When we talk about collaboration and innovation, we have to allow ourselves to be flexible enough to allow these projects to come forward and say: hey, this one might need to be treated a bit differently, right?

I saw in the media some members of this Legislature being very critical of an innovative project that the Calgary board of education was bringing forward in regard to a sports school and building a facility there. Well, the problem is that that's a very innovative, very collaborative project that is different than community schools. Trying to compare whether that should get the priority or community schools should get the priority becomes very, very difficult. What we need to do is use common sense and say: hey, does this make sense for the people that it's trying to serve? For those people it does make sense. It makes fiscal sense and it makes common sense when it comes to building those types of facilities.

You know, Madam Speaker, I'm very supportive of this. It means that as government we need to be more flexible, more adaptable to identifying needs in communities and putting the financial incentives out there to allow communities to come forward with ideas. When they come forward with ideas, we can't just go, "Oh, can't do that; it's not a priority," like what's happened in northeast Calgary. We need to come forward and say: "Hey, that makes sense. It makes sense in the long run financially. Let's not delay this. Let's look at ways to get this done." That might mean possibly looking at bringing other entities in to help finance it or looking at the government to expand its options on how to finance these types of things.

At the end of the day what usually does happen with a lot of these types of projects is that they do typically become more expensive, both on the operating side and on the capital side at first, but over the long run they tend to save taxpayers money in the end.

There are a number of challenges when doing this on a practical level. My great example is this. You know, along with the Minister of Service Alberta I had the fortunate opportunity to attend Lester B. Pearson high school in Calgary.

An Hon. Member: The Patriots.

Mr. Fawcett: Exactly. The member knows what he's talking about.

That was built in I believe the mid-90s and was supposed to be sort of the flagship school, what modern schools were supposed to look like, very technologically advanced. One of the things is that it was built right across the road from the city-owned leisure centre, the public library. There were hockey rinks, wave pools, gymnasiums. What a great idea. Why don't we, you know, utilize those resources? So a +15 was created between the two buildings so that there would be seamless interaction between the two buildings. I know that the hon. member would be able to tell you what a waste of money that was because that +15 was always closed. It was for security reasons. You can't really leave the school open to a public building for security reasons. You could have people walking in and out. The safety of our students is, obviously, a very, very important value.

The reason why I say that it's a bit of a joke: I think the only valuable thing that that thing was used for was the one time that a bunch of chlorine fumes from the pool funneled down the tunnel, and there was a bit of an issue in the school, and we got half a day off school. That was great. That was about the only value.

My point is that this is great to talk about – I think we're all in agreement that this is a really good idea – but at the end of the day there are some real practicalities that go to making sure that this happens on the ground. Those are the challenges that we face as government and that we will continue to work on. I'm glad that this member was able to bring this forward so that we could have this discussion today, highlight some of those challenges, and continue moving on. Hopefully, the good work that was done in my motion, Motion 509, back in the day and on this motion could go to help the government keep pushing this agenda forward.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this motion, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-South East. I think it's an excellent motion. I think it addresses some situational realities that we are all aware of, and I'm grateful to hear from others that what happens in my own community of Stirling and in other parts of my riding of Cardston-Taber-Warner is also happening throughout the province.

I appreciate, too, the comment made by my colleague that we don't have to reinvent wheels that already exist and are working in other parts of the country. We should never be too proud to borrow a good idea, perhaps tweak it and apply it to our own circumstances. One size doesn't necessarily fit all, but the concept is so valid and is based on common sense and the logic that suggests that a facility that costs as much as a school does ought to have more use in general than just the time from perhaps 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. There are many uses that could be made of it, as has been mentioned, and I don't think I need to reiterate them.

But I can tell you that it is occurring in our riding. The three school districts that constitute the educational system within Cardston-Taber-Warner are all in favour of this concept and are doing it, more or less, at the present time. They're supportive and hope that it can be expanded.

We do need to address the reality, again, and need to respect that the buildings are, first and foremost, schools. They need to be designed to address the needs of our young people and our students but also could be built and designed with the idea in mind that they will be multiple-use facilities that will respect the rights of the school to their privacy and their needs but also allow for other uses, as has been mentioned.

One other thing that could be considered perhaps, although not necessarily part of this motion, would be finding ways to expand their use within the school system. I attended a university where classes began at 7 o'clock in the morning, and the final class of the day ended at 10 o'clock at night. We had a school, then, that was covering 15 hours of the day perhaps through some creative use and, obviously, negotiations with various stakeholders.

Mr. McAllister: Where was that?

Mr. Bikman: Where was that? It was in another place, in another time, in a Jurassic era.

But it's a still a good idea that we could in fact use the schools more extensively for their intended primary purpose of education. There may be ways to create some sort of a shift use of the school.

Certainly, to speak specifically and exclusively to the issue raised in Motion 503, I think it's a terrific idea. As has been mentioned by the associate minister, who just spoke prior to me, it's not going to be without challenges, but good things are worth addressing those challenges for and finding creative solutions. This is in a sense continuing with a common-sense approach, thinking a little bit outside of the box, and trying to include more uses for the schools, this great asset that we have that represents a huge investment in money across the province. If we can find ways to make them multiple-use facilities, expanding existing schools, we're going to all be better off.

As has been mentioned by several speakers today – and it's great to see it acknowledged and recognized – there is really just one taxpayer. Government doesn't have any money of its own. It's got our money as taxpayers to use prudently and judiciously. This motion addresses that and will help that be accomplished. I'm certainly in favour of it, recognizing that it will be challenging to implement and execute, but I think we're up to that challenge. Certainly, it's worth striving for.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other speakers on the motion? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, I'd like to definitely give kudos to the Member for Calgary-South East on this motion. In my riding already this has been done for numerous years, involving this government in funding it, and I'd like to thank them for that. In Vulcan they had the cultural centre, which is tied to the high school, which is used for multiple facilities. In Lomond they've fundraised over the years, the community itself. The county paid into it, and also the province helped fund that, which is also commendable, to make a multipurpose facility that the community could still use.

In rural Alberta and even in the cities, as I've heard from my colleagues here, it is key to keep these facilities open and usable for everybody. I think that everybody wants to have something that's tangible and usable, where you're not going to waste money having two facilities side by side. I think that's always been done in this province. In my neighbouring riding of Strathmore-Brooks the Strathmore high school is tied to a rec facility, which works quite well and allows the kids to be able to do what they need.

To me, it's a great idea, and I think the motion has done well. Also, to hear from my colleague from Calgary-Klein, who thought of it four years ago – obviously, it's catching on slowly but surely.

Mr. Hale: It's his idea.

Mr. Donovan: Okay. Well, they can fight over that later in the playground.

I think it's good. I think that the key to this is that if we're doing P3s, we've got to remember always that in P3s the private sector assumes the majority of the responsibility. I think that's the key to it myself. I think there's definitely a difference, in doing P3s, in making sure that we have the risk and the finance shared over top with the actual sector that's doing it and that we're not doing debt financing, which is a different way to do things. I mean, how you balance the money: I think that always needs to be identified amongst everybody. I can list out numerous things, as many of my colleagues have here, on how we tie things together, but I think we want to definitely identify the difference between a P3, which I think is in this member's motion, which I'd be supporting, the concept of a P3, versus going to debt financing, borrowing the money to make this work over time. I think we need to identify the differences in that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Motion 503?

Seeing none, I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-South East to close debate on Motion 503.

5:50

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to all my colleagues that have spoken tonight in support of this motion. You know, when I thought of this motion, I was coaching basketball for my children. I'd go to the local school, and I'd coach the kids. Right away after that practice, that one-hour period, the school would shut down. I would look at other districts, and I would look at other areas where they had joint-user agreements with recreation facilities or libraries. Some of them might even be tied to churches. In respect to the Christian schools that did create that community hub. I was always asking myself, you know: why isn't this happening with every single school?

To kind of answer your question as I close debate, we recognize and I certainly recognize that one size does not fit all. Another big part of this, when we look at examples from places like California, Arizona, where it's not just a motion that a government put forward, is that it was out of necessity, out of population growth, and a lack of revenue. In Alberta we're so blessed to have so much all the time that sometimes I think we can be a little bit lackadaisical in terms of how we see our community infrastructure. We get stuck in a mould.

The motion was really to promote, you know, what the hon. Associate Minister of Finance mentioned, about being innovative and collaborative and working with communities. The one thing that I recognize about this province and why I'm standing here is that I believe that we can do it better than anybody else anywhere in the world. I know that we can build on our strengths. I hope this motion catches fire and that we continue to build on our strengths and build on the strengths of people in this province. I believe that's what we're here to do. I think that with purpose we can do things that other regions have done.

It's interesting to me when we hear about other regions failing in certain concepts. Again, I'll dare to say that I know we can do it, I know we can do it better, and we'll be successful because we've been successful for hundreds of years and will continue to do so.

I'd like to close debate on this. I believe it's going to be of benefit to our children and our families for years to come. Creating families and communities: I'm certainly committed to that. I believe the Premier and this government are committed to that, you know, not just in education but in health care because we do recognize that with those public services one size does not fit all. That's why we need to be adaptable, whether it's family care clinics, and build on the strengths of primary care networks, all these different things. I just believe that we're in the best place in the world. Let's build on that. I hope this motion speaks to that and moves that type of thinking forward.

Thank you to everybody.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn till 7:30 p.m.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Bill 2 Responsible Energy Development Act

The Deputy Chair: The Committee of the Whole has under consideration Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes, Madam Chair. I do have an amendment. I have the recommended copies that I would like to pass out now.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause while the amendment is being passed around.

Seeing as most of our members have a copy of the amendment, we'll call this amendment A3. You may proceed.

Mr. Hale: Great. Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment I passed out amends section 9(1) under the duty of care. We feel that there needs to be a little more wording regarding public interest. In the amendment I passed out, we would like it to read:

- Every director, hearing commissioner and officer of the Regulator, in carrying out powers, duties and functions, shall
- (a) act honestly, in good faith and in the public interest,
  - (b) avoid conflicts of interest, and
  - (c) exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise under comparable circumstances.

We are just adding the words "in the public interest."

This bill works for all Albertans. The regulator will be working for all Albertans in the best interest of Albertans. We are leaving a lot of power in the hands of the regulator, and we want to ensure that the decisions they make are in the best public interest. Again, we support the energy industries. We think there needs to be expansion within industry. This will make it easier. We just want to ensure that what they do is in the best public interest. We want to ensure that the decisions that they do make will not benefit just one company or two companies and put members of the public at risk. We want to ensure that when they make a decision, it's for the good of everybody, so there isn't a winner and a loser. We want everybody to win with this act.

The public, the people of Alberta, own the resources, and they need to be represented. They need to ensure that the development is approved in a respectful and responsible manner. We feel that if the regulator has the mandate to do that in the best public interest, that is what they'll do. You know, we, obviously, are putting quite a bit of faith in the regulator when it makes up its rules, so we're hoping that when it makes up these rules, it will make them up in the best interest of all Albertans, not just the oil companies, not just the landowners but for every Albertan involved, that this bill will continue to serve everybody.

There are going to be many projects that are opposed, but if the regulator has the mandate – you know, not everybody is going to be happy all at the same time. There are going to be some people that maybe won't agree, but if the regulator, like it says here, can "act honestly and in good faith," say that this is in the best public interest to approve this project, then that's something that we as members of the Legislature and Albertans, I think, will agree with, that we have to look at the one good common goal for the province of Alberta.

There are many projects now that are being opposed and many projects that are going to come up, but if we can ensure that the public interest is upheld and, you know, good communication skills within the regulator and within the oil companies to portray the goodwill and the benefits of the oil industry and the gas industry and what these certain projects will provide for Albertans, if we're upfront and honest right from the start, it's going to be hard for people opposed to have legitimate concerns.

We have to act as legislators in this Chamber. Our job is to do what's best for Alberta and our constituencies, and if we can enforce that on the regulator, to do what's best for Albertans and the oil industry and the landowners and the environment and, you know, get a good handle on everything, make up a good set of rules, I'm confident that through proper communication and public input and public communication and public notice we can carry on in the energy industry and have a very bright future.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. As I begin to speak on this amendment, I first want to thank the hon. minister. We actually spoke about this amendment unbeknownst to me when he came down and visited Vulcan. I would like to say that this issue of the definition of public interest and the public interest test is an important issue, and as the hon. minister may remember, that topic did come up at that public meeting in Vulcan.

Now, we also had a public meeting in Sylvan Lake, as some of you may have heard, and we may discuss that at another time, but the reality is that the hon. minister came down, there were some people who were emotional, and he answered their questions. He treated them with respect. He agreed where he could agree, and he disagreed where he just didn't want to be agreeable. But the reality is that we left together, and I think the public for the most part respected the fact that you discussed public interest.

This test is section 3 of the ERCA. This is important because I actually don't think this amendment goes far enough. This amendment is basically putting the public interest test under the duty of care. That is acceptable, but under the old act, under the ERC Act, the public interest test was under section 3. It was well laid out, and it was quite explicit.

It's interesting because if you flip to section 3 – it's quite extensive, but I'm just going to read the very last portion of it rather than the whole thing. It says that when they look at the public interest, the board must "give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment."

We're not looking to define the words "public interest." We're satisfied with using it in the broad context that jurisprudence has always applied. What it does do is it now puts the onus of this responsibility beyond just the development. It says that the social and economic interests of all the public have to be considered. It mandates that the environment is now under consideration on how we protect the environment. It also mandates that First Nations interests are covered.

So this public interest test is a broad term, but it's been one of the criticisms this hon. minister has heard now out in public, that it is not covered, that it has been removed from this Bill 2. Here is an opportunity to put it back in, to satisfy some of the criticism. I've not heard a satisfactory answer yet to why the public interest test has been removed from what has been our current statutory makeup, and under this bill it is no longer there. To me that's problematic because most all our laws do basically look at the public at large. We just got done discussing this on the private member's bill dealing with law enforcement. The whole purpose of that is the public interest, the protection of the public.

In this case who owns the resource? Well, the public does. This is their resource. This is our resource. So by putting this test back into legislation, then it's reinstalling what I consider a right of the public, to make sure their interest is looked after. If the regulator doesn't do that, then the public has recourse to question that. They have recourse to take that error in law to the appeals court if the regulator does not comply. That is a check and balance.

We are looking at streamlining this process. As some lawyers have pointed out, there is a problem here because without the public interest in this legislation, the public interest test, there is other jurisprudence legislation, even federally, that the public interest test could be drawn upon to go to court and challenge decisions made under this.

If you look at the criticism of the Environmental Law Society, they say, if they're correct – and anyone can debate that – that this would probably cause more lawsuits to go to the appeals court to have the court decide what is correct versus what we think is going to happen, which is streamlining. In other words, it would be counterproductive. I happen to believe that, seeing some of the things I have seen tested in court. It makes sense, particularly if a decision is made that would be contrary to what has been done normally in the public in the past.

Here we have an amendment trying to reinstall the public interest test, which is I believe a basic right for the public, a basic right for all Albertans. I'm not sure why it went missing under this Bill 2. The hon. minister and I actually debated this a little bit down in Vulcan, and we talked about this significantly. There are a number of examples we can draw upon. When you are looking at an owner of land – and a lot of people were discussing this – or an owner of a business that would fall under this legislation, what about those who lease, who are not the owners of the land but they are the leaseholder? When you take a look at this bill, it actually excludes them. The minister knows what I'm talking about because this was brought forward when we actually talked about the disposition.

Beyond that, there are a number of other examples. When you take on a major project, drilling multipad wells – and I'll use that as an example – a whole community could be affected if it is tapping into their water source. I'll give you an example. West of Rimbey a company came in to use water injection, potable water, a whole lot more than the town of Rimbey would consume in a month, and they were planning on doing that every day. The town now had an interest in what this company was doing. Under Bill 2 that's not the case anymore. They could apply. They could actually file, but under the bill they do not have a right. There's no public interest test, and then, of course, there's no right for them to intervene and actually bring their case forward.

Projects are not always streamlined in the sense that one project is the same as the next. They can affect property owners or a community in a very, very small geographical area like a quarter section, or they could be significant and affect a much larger area, particularly when you're dealing with issues of water and water rights. This is where the public interest test is of great value to the community.

Now, there are other aspects to this. The narrow term “directly and adversely affecting” eliminates the participation in some of these hearings of experts that might have tremendous value to the board or to the commission, in this case, when they are hearing a proceeding. That has happened in the past, when the commission or the board, in this case, has engaged in a hearing, and somebody, say, from the University of Calgary or the University of Alberta or even some company with experts came into the hearing process because they had an interest in what was happening. They were not necessarily directly and adversely affected, but they had an interest. Again, here we are back to the test of the public interest.

There are a number of examples that I could bring forward. I don't want to bore people in this Chamber.

An Hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Anglin: Well, I'll have lots of time to talk.

I support this amendment because we need to make sure that the public has faith and confidence in this legislation, and if we don't achieve that, everybody is going to lose. The industry is not going to gain any type of streamlining if the public at large doesn't have confidence and faith that this legislation protects their interest. That's paramount. Without that, it all begins to fail.

If companies don't get the streamlining process that this bill intends to achieve, then what's the purpose? What's the purpose? We've failed. There's no reason for us to fail on this one. We want a streamlined bill so the public has confidence. I know the hon. minister wants a streamlined bill so that we extract our resources and we do it in an orderly fashion. But what we want to have is the language that has not just the confidence but that has listed out in very plain English for the public so they can exercise a right when they feel that their right has been denied. That's important. I cannot emphasize this enough. If the public doesn't have confidence, the bill begins to fail. The system is not streamlined.

I will use the example now of our meeting with the minister in Vulcan versus a meeting that took place in Sylvan Lake. In the same context there were people that attended that meeting that attended both meetings. I will tell you that the meeting with the hon. minister went well. He may have a different idea, but the fact is that I think it went well. The meeting in Sylvan Lake did not go well. It did not go well at all. The difference is what? Well, I would argue that the difference is the confidence of the people, that they thought they were being heard. That was the major difference.

Now, we can get into personalities if you like, but I don't think we need to go there. The reality is that people needed confidence that they could at least bring their concerns forward. They may not have liked what the hon. minister said. In some cases they didn't, but at least they felt they got heard. That's the difference between a process that I would say was positive in the sense that it worked versus a process in Sylvan Lake that did not work. That's a real microcosm example, but it is still an example. If we go and create this commission that does not have a public interest test and end up with a process where the public does not feel like they can be heard or that we do not listen, then we're going to end up with on a macro level what we saw on a micro level in Sylvan Lake. And I will tell you that the industry will not win. They will lose.

We need a process that even if property owners or businesses or even oil companies and gas companies don't like the decision that they got, as long as they know they had a fair process, that they got a decision in a timely fashion – and you know as well as I do that some people are just not going to be happy at the end; that's true. But if the process generally is fair, they will accept it, and we will get on with doing the business that we should be doing. By removing certain rights from this Bill 2 that are in the ERC Act, I think we're heading down the wrong way. We're not going to achieve what we want to achieve, and we will then fail. We will fail industry. We will fail the landowners, the property owners. We will fail those small businesses, and we will fail those communities.

It is imperative that we have the public interest test reinserted back into this bill. Doing it under the mandate of duty of care is sufficient. It's not exactly how I would like to have seen it. I would like to see it with its own section as part of the decision-making processes. Maybe one of my fellow members might bring that amendment forward later, but right now we're dealing this amendment, and it is an extremely important amendment. If you reject that amendment, I think that's a rejection of the public at large.

An Hon. Member: Oh, garbage.

Mr. Anglin: Seriously. I really mean that. [interjection] Well, if you say that we don't want to have the public interest test, what does that say to the public? I mean, that's really what we're saying here.

I realize we engage here a little bit differently than when we engage out in public, but I will tell you this: the public sees these words differently than maybe we do, and they see our actions maybe a little bit differently than we do. We're not talking about us here across the aisle. We're talking about the public's participation in a hearing process so that we can get on with the business of extracting our resources. We can do it in an orderly fashion, and we can treat people fairly and justly. By the way, those two words "fair" and "just" don't appear in the bill anywhere. We're not treating people like that. It's not mandated.

By putting the public interest test back into the bill, we're partway there, and that's important, to keep going in that direction versus the other direction we're heading. The other direction we're heading is that there are going to be battles out there in the development of our resources, and with that nobody gains.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I am seeking unanimous consent to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the House for agreeing to this. I want to introduce a very dear friend who's in the gallery joining us here this evening, a great volunteer in our community, the treasurer of my constituency association, and the chair of our school board for Drayton Valley-Rocky Mountain House. Nancy McClure does an outstanding job for students and for parents and families across this province. Nancy, would you please rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly?

Bill 2 Responsible Energy Development Act (continued)

The Deputy Chair: We shall proceed. On amendment A3 are there any other comments? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: I would like to speak to the public interest piece of this. I think there's a very legitimate reason why it's not included in this. It has nothing to do with property rights, and it has nothing to do with taking anyone's rights away. I've lived a very real example of this for 20 years. A decision was made in our community by the NRCB in the public interest. People somehow confuse the public interest with an individual in the singular term, in the case of a landowner, or a community concern, but that's not the case. That's one of the reasons why it's out of the act. It's because there's confusion around what it really does mean.

If you interpret public interest to mean in the greater interest of all Albertans, then from a landowner perspective you couldn't want anything more detrimental to be put in this act than reference to community interests because that adds justification to anybody to overrun you, to put the interests of what they perceive to be those of all Albertans ahead of you as a landowner. That, Madam Chair, is absolutely out of line with anything to do with property rights. This is not about property rights. You know, the statement of public interest has nothing to do with individual property owners having a say. The act that says that if you consider yourself or that you believe yourself to be affected does. The part in the act that speaks about registering your agreements and having the province step up and defend those for you does have something to do with property rights. But public interest is an extremely dangerous term for any landowner in Alberta.

I can tell you that after 20 years of dealing with that term and I don't know how many hundreds of thousands of dollars in legal fees that we have spent as a municipality as well as the landowner has spent trying to figure out what public interest really meant and how far that could really go, at the end of the day it was in nobody's interest, no one's, not the public, not the community, not the landowner.

So I think that it's more than appropriate that any reference to public interest be out of this act. If you need that kind of detail about who and when and where and what would be considered, then put it in the regulations so you can amend it from time to time to reflect the importance of the community, the importance of landowners as you move forward. But the wrong place to put it at this point is in this act.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour and privilege to be able to rise and speak in favour of this amendment. I do so on a few fronts. One thing that struck me when this bill was brought to the table is that most bills are given quite a bit of a preamble or some purpose of intent of what the new Responsible Energy Development Act will be in essence used for, what will be some of the interpretive language used not only to guide people who serve on this board but also to give some people who are utilizing the act to defend their interests or garner some purpose as to what an act is actually about. That is sort of contained in the preamble.

You saw that, of course, with the Education Act recently. There was a long preamble on what the legislation was supposed to provide, what was the balancing act that the government was trying to achieve, and what were the goals listed that the government was trying to achieve by the act. One of the difficulties with the Responsible Energy Development Act is that there is no preamble that gives some sense of direction or some sense of well-being or sense of purpose to what the act is able to do or trying to achieve. Oftentimes a preamble is necessary. It's necessary for people working under the Responsible Energy Development Act and also for people trying to use it. Without that broad stated purpose of what the act is supposed to entail, well, that gives me some concern. It leads me directly to this amendment.

If there had been a broadly stated purpose of the act and what it's supposed to do, what goals and overarching abilities it had, and what it was trying to achieve, I would be less worried about there being a reference to public interest. I would be less worried about the lack of it from that kind of perspective. As pointed out, public interest is a very difficult – everyone understands it, but they always understand it through their own lens. It's very difficult to get a broad handle on public interest because everyone has a different viewpoint on it.

Nevertheless, legislation is not supposed to be easy. Governing is not supposed to be easy. In fact, a responsible energy development community would not be worried about making things easy. One of the reasons I am in favour of this is that this omission is new here in Alberta. Previously, in section 3 of the ERCB Act, they were to make decisions on energy projects “in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.” This was fundamental to the ERCB's mandate. People knew it, they referred to it, they understood it, and they understood it in different contexts, although it wasn't always easy to convey that message.

I do note that the last speaker did point out that this was obviously difficult to do. The government apparently has bought into that and sought to do away with it. But the thing is: what will stand in its place? Since we have no preamble that says what the act is trying to accomplish, what the roles and responsibilities are of the people, or what the overarching goal of this act is, what is to replace it? There is no clarity into what is supposed to replace it. We're supposed to trust that this is going to be subsumed in regulation, where it will be listed with more clarity that will describe what is meant by public interest or what, in fact, will be the new public interest of this body. We're supposed to just simply trust that that is there. It might be that this is where the act falls short.

If the government in its wisdom was going to do some new version of public interest, this should not be stated in some regulation that can change from government to government, that can change from minister to minister, that can change with, I guess, the stroke of a pen. Sometimes acts like these need to have it referenced somewhere within. Since the government hasn't given me any other clear indication of what is to replace public interest but is more just dealing with the words “safe” and “environmentally responsible,” which they're reviewing on a project-by-project basis, safe and environmentally friendly, that causes me concern.

Maybe there's going to be something in the regulations dealing with cumulative effects. Maybe there's going to be something in the regulations that deals with the overarching concerns of Albertans around cumulative effects and the like and dealing more with that broad public interest mandate that would be reflected in that. At this time I don't see it. Since I don't see it at this time, I feel it is necessary to fill in some of the blanks as to what, actually, an act of this magnitude and with this direct effect on not only our energy industry but on our citizens at large and future generations at large – we need some more clarity around this.

So in that way I applaud the hon. member for bringing forward this amendment to try and clarify what this act is trying to achieve, what is the broader mandate, and what the people working under the Responsible Energy Development Act can refer to: what is their mandate, what are their goals, and how are they supposed to apply these broad-based principles?

I would urge all members here tonight to support this bill or, in fact, maybe try and bring some of this stuff forward in a more clarified fashion so that we can understand what the overall goal, the overarching mandate of this bill is. To date I'm having trouble getting some clarity on that.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other comments on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just with respect to the amendment that was put forward by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, essentially it includes “in the public interest” in section 9(1)(a). You know, there's some commentary about how public interest is a very vague type of concept, whether it means an individual or community. The fact is that public interest has been in previous legislation for years. There's been a vast amount of jurisprudence generated through court decisions and administrative decisions. You have a bunch of principles that have been put in place, delineated tests that decision-makers look at when they consider public interest. It's been in place for years and years and years. That's one of the parts of the system that works quite well. If you don't have an overarching principle like public interest, you get narrowed in on your decision. As a decision-maker you're stuck according to a bunch of very hard-and-fast rules.

Instead, with the public interest you can actually take a broader perspective of things. There's a simple analogy. Should you put another cow in the pasture? Well, you have to look at everything. How many other cows are there? What's the field like? Are there neighbours that have a problem with it? Public interest allows the decision-maker to take a much broader approach throughout the process.

The other thing that I think is becoming readily apparent is that this was a deliberate removal from the act. We see from the previous legislation that they've taken out every single reference to public interest. This gave landowners the legal foothold upon which they could base their appeal. As a result of this act, they've completely taken away that right, and I think this is going to backfire when you go out to the public. I've talked to my constituents about this, about the fact that they won't even allow the decision-maker to take a look at the public interest. I think most people find that pretty obvious, that a decision-maker should look out for the public interest, that they should take a general, broad-based viewpoint when they make their decisions.

There was some commentary about leaving this to regulation. Of course, again that just goes back to the same flawed decision-making when you make laws. If it's an important principle, it should be explicitly stated in the act so that there's no debate on whether it's in there.

Now, with respect to the amendment under section 9 – it's under the duty of care provisions – one of our members mentioned that it probably doesn't go far enough if you look at previous legislation in different areas. That's why I think, you know, that this is another argument for the minister to actually take a look at this and accept such a very reasonable amendment. This is something that this government should get behind. If we go out in the public forum, if you go to a group of landowners and say, you know, "Should the decision-maker look at the public interest?" I think they will all say: yes, obviously. Then when you further indicate that this has been done for many years, that it's worked very well, that all sides, whether it's landowners, companies, or environmentalists, saw this public interest and it's worked well for many years – if you make that further argument, I think it becomes even more apparent that public interest should be included in the legislation.

You know, it's just interesting what the reason or rationale is for taking it out of the legislation. Why has this not worked in the past? What's the rationale for this? I haven't heard what it was. Maybe it was discussed in Vulcan what the reasons were. I'm wondering if there's anybody that has some examples of where the decision-maker looked at the public interest and why it's especially important in this context.

8:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Rimbeys-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would disagree with the hon. member on the fact that it is not really directed at property owners per se. That's the best thing about that public interest test. It can be applied very broadly, or it can be applied very narrowly, and courts in jurisprudence have done both.

I'm going to give an example where the public interest test is absolutely paramount, and that deals with a situation where Suncor built a gas plant in the county of Clearwater. Now, all of you, particularly from rural areas, know that counties really get very good tax dollars from the development of oil and gas, particularly when a gas plant is built. They get good taxes from the pipelines that feed those gas plants.

So you have the county of Clearwater who gets this gas plant, and now they're going to get the tax revenue from this gas plant. Unfortunately, the only road to the gas plant goes through the county of Ponoka, which gets no tax revenue, but they get all the beat-up roads as a direct result. That's part of the public interest, and it got missed. What happens is that the county now has an objection under our existing law saying: "Hold on a sec. We get no revenue from this. We're not against this development per se, but we're taking all the costs, we're assuming all the risks, and we're paying the price on the wear and tear on our roads."

So there was an imbalance there. Now, I will tell you that that imbalance has been adjusted not by tax dollars but by other means. Suncor stepped up to the plate, realized – hopefully, they're going to continue to realize because that example goes beyond the counties – that there are property owners right there, individual property owners who are inconvenienced per se by the traffic. I'm talking the B train chemical trucks coming in and out, lots of truck traffic where there never was before.

They are the public interest. They weren't adversely and directly affected by the proposal itself. That proposal is further down the road. They saw no adverse effect initially when that first was proposed. It was only after the fact that they realized that their country road turned into a massive highway with trucks up and down 24 hours a day. These people had an issue. Again, that's the public interest because it's the way that a term applies to the public at large. I'm working with Suncor now to resolve this. It's not hard to resolve. Sometimes it just takes an effort.

The fact is that under the current law, with the public interest test there, this is where those people can draw upon the current legislation and say: this is my right. Now, they have the right to go back and ask for a review in variance under that public interest test. I don't think we're going to have to do that. I think we will resolve that. [A cellphone rang] Jeez, I could have called over there, too. Not guilty.

Having it in legislation is an example of where the public interest test applied broadly to the counties, to the county councils, and where the public interest test applied to the individual. In both of those examples they had the right to go back to that legislation and say, "There's an issue here now," because that legislation said that the board must – the board is not perfect. They can't be perfect. They will make mistakes. In this case they did make a mistake because nobody saw the adverse effect for the public interest on two scales. Now we get to go back and we get to correct that because the legislation says that public interest matters. That's important, and that solves an issue.

Because it's in legislation, we're probably not even going to have a review and variance hearing. We're going to get things settled because all parties just want to come to an agreement. We've already agreed in principle on a few issues. There are a couple remaining, and I think we're going to get agreement on those. But the leverage to get the agreement is the legislation. That's what gets our agreement because if we can't come to an agreement, we have a recourse on the public interest test to go to a hearing. So, clearly, it does apply broadly, and it does apply specifically. Individual landowners can call upon that public interest test because they're part of the public.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Madam Chair. I cannot speak for this amendment, that be sure. If I'm reading this correctly:

9(1) Every director, hearing commissioner and officer of the Regulator, in carrying out powers, duties and functions, shall

(a) act...

the amendment says

... honestly, in good faith and in the public interest, which forces a director, hearing commissioner, or officer to act in the public interest.

The public interest is indeed an ambiguous and confusing term. In fact, one could argue that an individual that is a subset of the general welfare of the population is part of the public interest. I don't think anybody would understand that a decision made by these folks would be in the positive interest of absolutely everybody in the population. Thus, I think I think it would fail on that test alone.

Madam Chair, I think that the good Member for Banff-Cochrane said it best with his personal experience in this regard. I think that a policy debate as to whether something, in general terms, is being treated in the public interest is all right, but to entrench it in legislation I think is wrong.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess I'm speaking in favour of the amendment because I think the public interest needs to be added to this whole point. I think that's what we're all here for, for the greater public interest, even to the point where your own government has tabled a bill, Bill 4, the public interest disclosure act. [interjections] I know. It's true. It's right here. It's in writing. To me: why is it good for one thing and not for the other? It's public interest for all of us.

I understand that the Member for Banff-Cochrane has some issues with that. I understand that. The point is that I think we're here to do what's right for Albertans. Yes, it is inconvenient sometimes. Yes, there are public hearings that last too long. But, I mean, your own book puts it right to it. You're saying in one bill, Bill 2, that you don't want public interest, and in Bill 4 you make a whole bill about it. So I guess I'm confused on it, and I'd like your support on that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms DeLong: I find this very strange. You know, I actually do believe in private property rights. I actually believe in it, okay? It's basic to my personal beliefs. And I find it very strange that for political reasons you would want to abandon private property rights just to put in the phrase "in the public interest." Now, I'm also a believer in the public interest, but I am not a believer in putting in a phrase, "in the public interest," that would totally override private property rights just to get a little bit of political spin. It makes no sense to me at all because I actually do believe in private property rights.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. Let's pull it back a little bit. Let's just be logical. Based on my past actions and behaviour, I would not put anything out or support anything that would violate property rights knowingly – knowingly. If I make a mistake, I will absolutely admit I made a mistake on the property rights issues and then go back to defend property rights. But putting in this issue of public interest is significant in many ways because it is about property rights. It's not overriding property rights, and it's actually done very well. I'll tell you something else. It's in law now. It's called the public interest test, section 3 of the ERC Act. It's now been taken out. Why has it been taken out?

When you read the section in the amendment, it says that they must act honestly. If you don't understand what the heck public interest means, then what does honestly mean? How can you prove they acted honestly? How can you prove that they acted in good faith? It is really a determination of a court if you actually went there. You're looking at what the obligation of the commissioner is. So if you would like to put a subamendment that the commissioner should be acting honestly, in good faith, in the public interest, and in the interest of the individual property rights owner, I'd be happy to accept that subamendment also, but I don't think it's necessary.

I think what is necessary is that we put the public interest test somewhere back in this because the entire bill is missing it. This is serious in that sense because in all our acts, as one of the members just mentioned, we do look after the public interest. That is our responsibility. And if we don't put it in legislation, then it is not a mandate of that regulator or commission to look at the public interest. That's what's important here. Public interest does affect every individual. That is important.

We always try to balance the individual's rights with the public at large, and I'm not saying that there's a clear-cut formula. Every situation is different, and we know that. That's why section 26(2) should be back in this legislation, which was that issue dealing with the individual landowner on actually getting notification, the reasonable opportunity to learn the facts, and the right, the actual right, to challenge the facts as they were presented. That's not in this bill, but that protected the individual landowner. The public interest test now threw the balance back in here, and that's what we're missing out of this entire bill if we want to make it work for industry.

I understand the minister wants to make this work for industry, so how do we get there? If you say that we get there by eliminating the public interest, I think you're wrong. I disagree. The public interest actually plays a very important role in the whole process of our legislative makeup, of our legislation, even dealing with individual property rights. It is that balance. It's always the balance that we have to measure. What we have here is a bill that's missing the various elements that are so important to make this a streamlined bill.

An Hon. Member: Over the rights of the landowner?

Mr. Anglin: I don't know how anyone figures it's over the rights of the landowner. The fact is that having the commission act in good faith is over the private landowner, acting honestly is over the private landowner, taking the public interest under consideration, which includes the environment, by the way. I think every property owner out there, every farmer out there will tell you, and I will tell you this: they are more environmentalists than anybody that ever wore dreadlocks. These farmers that are third and fourth generation who love the land are people who know the land, and they are the true environmentalists. They are the people who will protect the land, and they're the ones that will actually guide the public interest test.

I do not believe for one instant that you can be serious to say that having the public interest test in this bill eliminates property rights. That's just a play on words that has no value whatsoever, and I will tell you why it has no value. It's in various legislation all throughout North America, the public interest test. What we're trying to do now is remove it from legislation, and I don't understand why. I don't understand why. I'm going to tell you what: this bill on another level eliminates many individual property rights, and we're going to discuss that as we go further down the bill. When we get to there, that's another argument.

On this amendment we're looking to make sure that the commission itself, the regulator acts in the public interest, and I think that's actually a good thing because this is the public's resource. This resource doesn't belong to anyone else except the public. So having that as a broad base to start from is a good base to start from.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise this evening to speak in favour of this amendment.

Mr. Anglin: That's the socialist.

Mr. Bilous: Social democrat. Social democrat.

I rise to speak in favour of the public interest on numerous different fronts. I do find it most interesting if we go back to the basic question of why the government took out the public interest when it was part of a long-standing bill and law in this province. It concerns me greatly that under section 3 of the ERC Act public interest was included. As my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre so eloquently put it, it was there to serve a purpose, to ensure that all different perspectives and points of view were looked at.

There are numerous examples, I believe, in history where people thought that they looked at all the different implications, all the different possible outcomes of a decision, but that turned out to be untrue in light of bringing more people involved into the discussion to look at the different implications. I find it really interesting that this public interest piece is now taken out. Actually, I find it quite disheartening and quite scary. Decisions that are being made need to include and look at the overall benefit, the cost benefit of not just individuals or groups but of all Albertans and, larger than that, of all Canadians and people around the world. I mean, we talk about the environment. Well, the environment is something that's shared by everyone, not just, you know, divvied up on one plot of land or one small section.

In order to ensure that decisions are well thought through and go through due process, public interest needs to be reinstated in this bill. Again, I find it quite frustrating that our friends on the other side are at this moment unwilling to listen to something you have half of the House calling for, something that not only is reasonable but has been a part of so many other bills in Alberta's history.

I'd also like to mention that it's unfortunate that the public interest test has been completely removed. How can Albertans be confident that all of our interests collectively are going to be expressed or protected under this new regulator? I for one have my own concerns, I mean, by the fact that this leads to some other issues. You've got a regulator that's now obviously appointed and dealing with making decisions that are going to have long-term impacts and consequences on all Albertans, and not only on us but on all Canadians.

It's my contention that reinstating the public interest, voting in favour of this amendment, is a step in the right direction. The majority of Albertans are behind ensuring that their ideas regarding the economy, the environment, social policy are given an avenue and are going to be taken into consideration when we're looking at different projects.

I'd ask all members of this House to seriously consider including public interest, that, as I've mentioned, has been in many other bills that this government has passed in Alberta's history, reinstating it, bringing it into this bill to ensure that we're looking at a wide scope, that processes are in place. It's just another way to ensure that we're really looking at a cost-benefit analysis and looking at all the different sides and all the different perspectives that are being represented.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm moved to participate in this debate for a number of reasons. I'll try and be very succinct. First of all, section 9 is talking about the duty of care, essentially, of a director, hearing commissioner, or officer. If you think about what the duty of care of an individual appointed to a board is, that relates to their personal duties relative to their obligation to avoid conflicts of interest, to act honestly and in good faith, those sorts of things. It doesn't relate to the broader interest of the act in terms of ensuring that the goals of the act are carried out in the public interest. Obviously, the act itself is being promulgated in the public interest, and the duty of the hearing commissioners as with commissioners at any hearing is to balance the public policy interest that has been established.

8:30

Clearly, one of the effects of bringing this act into place is to put in place the clear distinction that the now Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development put into her report, which is the backdrop for this, which clearly says that the policy interests should be determined by the Legislature and by the government through the enactments, and the regulatory agency that's set up under this act basically enforces those policy interests and makes determinations with respect to those policy interests.

Members, I would humbly submit, are confusing the role of a director under section 9 in terms of the personal requirement of a director to act responsibly, a duty of care, a duty of fidelity, in essence, as a result of being appointed, with the public interest, which underlies the whole concept of the act and which is represented by the split in jurisdiction between the policy-setting role of government and the regulatory function that's carried out by the act. Nobody is losing the public interest here. The public interest underlies the whole thesis here. This particular section is basically saying that a director must avoid a conflict of interest. That in itself speaks to the question of public interest because what it's saying is that you have to avoid looking at your private interest. That's what a conflict of interest is: looking at your private interest instead of looking at the public interest.

Here we're talking about the appointment of a director or a hearing commissioner and where that director has their obligation. It's not a private interest that they're being appointed to serve. It is, in fact, a public interest. That's inherent in it. With respect, members are confusing the whole concept of a public interest test and even the idea of a public interest disclosure act, which is an entirely different beast for an entirely different purpose and is intended to serve a whole different area, with the very narrow confines of this particular section in terms of the duties of a director in the context of a much larger purpose, which is to divide the policy role of government and the Legislature from the regulatory role that's enacted in the act here.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, I'm going to disagree with the hon. member. Surprise. Surprise. But he raises a very important point. The presumption is that the public interest test underlies the entire act. That's the presumption because the public interest test has actually been removed in a literal sense because section 3 of the ERC Act laid it right out. It says: this is the public interest test. That was the title. Then it specifically states what has to happen on that public interest test.

What's happening here – and the member is correct – is about a fiduciary duty of the commissioner, or in this case the director, and this is about what that director has to undertake on a personal level in dealing with a conflict of interest. That is true. What this amendment does is that it then adds to that and makes sure that that commissioner must act in the public interest.

I'm going to give a couple of examples of where this is really important. Enbridge is proposing something called the Gateway project, which is fundamental to our economic system here in Alberta. It is fundamental to the business advancement and profitability of Enbridge. Absolutely. It's also fundamental to the profitability of some companies that will be shipping their products down that pipeline. It's also a public interest test, and it's fundamental to the public interest of this province that we get this built, get this online, and get product to export markets. The Gateway pipeline could be considered the same. There's a public interest that is paramount beyond the private interest, which we want to enhance, to encourage, but we also are doing this because of the public interest.

What this does on the individual commissioners – because it's nowhere else in the bill. Literally nowhere else in the bill is it written. What it does is that it places that onus now on the individual commissioners that they must act honestly, in good faith, and not have a conflict of interest. That is a presumption on that and rightfully so. But they must act in the public interest, too. Again, these resources belong to the public, and we benefit from the extraction of these resources. It needs to be somewhere.

As I started out in speaking to this amendment, I don't think it goes far enough. I think we should have a public interest test in another section, but I will support this because at least it gets us partway there, that we have the commissioners thinking in terms of: I have an individual responsibility to act honestly, in good faith, and in the public interest. I think that is an important aspect of the fiduciary duty when we list it out specifically.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of this amendment as brought forward by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I'm a little confused by what the Member for Banff-Cochrane was talking about, and maybe this is just my newness to this position. Basically, he's defining the public interest more like private interest, and I was a bit confused there.

When we're talking about public interest, I think that's why we're all here. We wouldn't be here if it wasn't for, you know, the public interest, so I think it's very, very important that public interest is in there. If you narrow it down to private interest, it's a whole different story. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud said that the public interest is implied in this bill. So why don't we just add it? If it's so obvious, then let's just put it in there. Let's make sure that we legislate it and don't leave it up to the regulators.

In discussions with different individuals on this bill or any other bill the advice to me was: try and legislate as best as you can up front because once you leave it to the bureaucrats who are the regulators, they tend to not consult the stakeholders, and then you have all kinds of changes. You have a mess. Whereas if we legislate it, it may be a pain to bring it back to the House to make some amendments, but at least it's brought back to this group, and we all make those agreements for the changes. They said: "If you leave things wide open, it's just horrible because then the stakeholders never ever get consulted. Bureaucrats love making their own rules for the sake of rules, and they'll just bury you with paperwork and regulation."

I mean, everything that we do in the resource sector has to be done in the public interest. It's one of the things that makes Alberta great. If we didn't have the resource sector – that's oil and gas; that's forestry; that's mining. It's for the benefit of Alberta. It's for the benefit of the public interest.

If we don't go forward with this, you know, it just doesn't make any sense. Denying what is best for the public would be the ultimate form of denial of acknowledgement of what is the most important to the public, and that is being recognized as the ultimate stakeholder. That is why we're all here. I think the public interest addition amendment covers off the property owner, the resource company, the environment, and all residents of Alberta. It's a balancing act. This is key to keeping all of the above groups in a harmonious and balanced fashion, to help reduce the friction between these parties as much as possible.

If we have a balance between all the parties involved, there's a better chance that there will be progress. There'll be a chance for new projects going forward because the last one went so well. We have to make sure that we set the groundwork and the framework for each project that comes across. That's going to build support in the public, it's going to build support in the resource, it'll build support with the landowner, and it'll build support within the environmental groups. If we build on every success, we have a better chance of going forward with the next success. If we take the public interest out of it, I think we're in for trouble.

My other concern is that by having public interest added, it will help to balance or reduce the bias or power by any member or group of appointed individuals to the regulator board. I guess what I'm saying there is that, yes, they are supposed to act on behalf of the public. You know, they're supposed to act honestly and in good faith, but if we put public interest in there as well, I think we have a better chance of making sure that we're not going to be overrun by a group of people making decisions with a very, very small mindset. If we include public interest, it broadens that. It extends a scope across all levels of the parties involved, and I think we have a better chance of having a successful approval at the end.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in support of the amendment and substituting the words "honestly, in good faith and in the public interest" because to me and the vast majority of my constituents property rights are in the public interest. My constituency week break was hallmarked by two things. Number one, my two oldest boys were home from university. It was very good to see them again. Number two, some side of 15 or 20 of my constituents and landowners called me to say: "What is happening with Bill 2? Here we go again."

An Hon. Member: There's no bogeyman.

Mr. Barnes: Well, there's a perception that there's a bogeyman. Sometimes perception is reality, and sometimes it's best to deal with the perception.

Constituents are very, very concerned that their property rights are being attacked. I came from a meeting earlier, in between the session, where a couple of big businesses talked at length about the importance of certainty in their business, the importance of some cost certainty, and the importance of the property rights that they were looking for to make huge projects go that would have been very, very much in the public interest of Alberta. I think that sometimes we have to look past the narrow definition of property rights: 20 East Glen Crescent or your back quarter or your small ranch. Property rights are so much broader than that, so much bigger. Property rights include our chattels, include our ability to sell our labour, include our ability to make Alberta grow and to make Alberta strong. This certainty is going to be crucial in the next two or three years.

Another reason that my constituents called me a lot over constituency week was that they were concerned about the deficit, the spending, and the potential for the long-term price of oil to be at $85 compared to the budget at some side of $114.

An Hon. Member: Or less.

Mr. Barnes: Or less.

To me that makes it all the more important for the good of all Albertans, for the good of our economy, the good of our quality of life that we get our legislation right, that we do it as well as we can the first time, and property rights in the public interest is getting it right.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Madam Chair. Is this the first amendment tonight, by the way, that we're discussing? It's like one of those – you know, maybe we need a refresher just to go back to it briefly while I make my points. I'll try to be succinct also. The amendment as proposed, that I support, strikes out "honestly and in good faith" and substitutes "honestly, in good faith and in the public interest."

I've listened with great interest to what's been said tonight from all members of the Assembly, from all parties. I think it's important to do that and not just have a blind approach: we're right, and you're wrong. I'm really trying to hear from the government side on this. I'm trying really hard, but here's the thing. What's being referred to us from the other side is that you want this put in. What we're saying is: you have taken it out. Putting it in, taking it out; tastes great, less filling: it's the same thing. They have taken it out. We are saying: put it back in.

The Responsible Energy Development Act has zero references. Now, it did, but they've been taken out. Zero, nada, zilch, goose egg. That's the problem landowners have. Even if the intent is not to create any bias or to make governing more convenient, the perception from landowners, Madam Chair, is that this is another infringement on rights.

One member spoke – I believe it was Calgary-Bow – and said: you know, I'm all for landowner rights. We all pounded our desks and said: that's great. I wonder where that member would be on Bill 19, Bill 24, Bill 36, and Bill 50. See, if it's just about governing for convenience, the problem is that landowners are skeptical of the government. They have had it because of these bills. Bill 8 is repealing Bill 50 after the horse was out of the barn. People don't trust you when you do things like that. When you take out public interest, even though it may be an inconvenience sometimes for the governing party, you've said to landowners: you don't matter. That's what I'm hearing in Chestermere-Rocky View, and that's what we're all hearing. Remember that we have to take this back to the people that we represent.

I'm supporting this amendment. I don't see it as any colossal problem, anything that should be of great concern for the government to be willing to put back in "in the public interest." As the member beside me said, that is the reason that we are here. There is no faith right now from landowners. This would go a long way to restoring some of it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to speak on this amendment again. I'm always wise to listen to the hon. Minister of Human Services. He is a very thoughtful gentleman and often brings some clarity to the issue. I agree with him on one aspect of this. It's a fact that possibly – possibly – the term "public interest" has been shoehorned into this amendment, okay?

Nevertheless, I'm still supportive of this amendment because it's important that public interest is involved in this act.

I respect the hon. member who put forward this bill to try and get some of that component recognized in the new Responsible Energy Development Act. I go back to it because this amendment is dealing with the directors. The directors are the people who will be responsible for this act and its interpretation and the like.

I go back to my first point. Right now, because of the writing of this act, there is no detailed preamble or introduction to what the bill is about. It does not say what the purpose of the bill is, what it will do, what it will define, what its goals are, and the like. Like many of our other acts, like, as I said, the Education Act, it doesn't tell people who work for that organization what their goals should be, what their mandate should be, and the like. How will the decision-making by the new AER be guided in situations of legislative uncertainty without such purposes in the event of a lack of specific direction by a regulation, where we don't know what the regulation will hear?

Actually, if members of this honourable House want to get a good briefing on this, it's done by Ms Nickie Vlavianos at ablawg.ca. That's ablawg.ca. Ms Vlavianos has been a long-time practitioner with many reputable firms in Calgary and, in fact, has brought up some of these in her commentary and some of the questions she has in this regard.

It's not just members of this side of the House that are concerned with distinctions and definitions and how this is going to work. It's esteemed members like Nickie Vlavianos of our legal community and other people who have written on the workings of this bill. I indicated that there are other people who have written in great depth about this. Professor Nigel Bankes of the University of Calgary law department has brought up some very cogent arguments as to some of his questions with the bill. Some of those questions outline what the act is trying to achieve, how public interest is now going to be defined, how government policy is now going to directly affect what these institutions do.

Remember, Madam Chair, that these are supposed to be set up as arm's-length jurisdictions or arm's-length governing bodies. There is no more arm's length to this new energy regulator. It is directly tied to the whims and the will of what the government of the day wants, and they can change that with the stroke of a pen because it's not referenced in our legislation. That, to me, is the broader concern. Even though, as the hon. minister may have pointed out, it may be shoehorned into this amendment, I think it's necessary because we want some of that clarity in there.

Again, I speak in favour of the amendment. If not here, at some place in this act there has to be some reference to: what is the mandate of this organization, what is the public interest, how will it be defined, and how will that be changed?

Anyway, thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, I will add to my colleagues on this side of the House. I will be speaking in favour of the amendment provided by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. But I think it's important to understand that the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow talked about that she's a supporter of property rights and landowner rights and that she believes wholeheartedly in those. I am curious, as many others are, as to exactly what her position would have been on 19, 24, 36, and 50, especially Bill 50, which was brought back to this House.

It was so erroneous that it needed to be brought back here for a reconfiguration because, clearly, there were so many mistakes in that one.

More importantly, with regard to this bill here, eliminating the issue of public interest, that aspect has been in force and has been a long-standing part of the social contract that was the mandate of the regulator, that said what could and couldn't be done by the energy industry on a person's private land. I think we need to dial this all back and just remember exactly what we're talking about. We're talking about a landowner who paid for his or her land that they control, they live off, and it's their land, period. With anything you want to do on their land, we need to be respectful of that. Clearly, by eliminating the public interest portion of it, we're just not being respectful.

More importantly, section 3, consideration of public interest, read:

Where by any other enactment the Board is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation . . .

And this is the important piece.

. . . give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

Now, there's absolutely nothing about that section that's controversial, offensive, and in no way does it hinder the government at all from doing the right thing. Clearly, it doesn't. It actually says – and I'll say it again because I'm not sure if you heard me:

Give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

At what point in time does that clause there say that you're not protecting landowners? At what point in time does that clause there become so offensive that you need to remove it from the bill? It just doesn't make any sense.

The interesting part is that we actually take that consideration of public interest and we apply it to everything else we do. You want to build a school? We look at public interest. We look at the social and economic effects of building that school. You want to build a highway? Once again, consideration of public interest. We look at the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment. But for some reason, when we're talking about utilities or when we're talking about the energy industry and we're talking about landowner rights, everything that we normally would be doing we toss out the window, and we say that we don't need it because it's implied. Oh, it's implied all right. That's the problem, literally.

The hon. House leader talked about the duties of the director, the fiduciary duties and the duties of care, and I agree with him a hundred per cent. The problem, as I understand it from the bill, is that the appointment of the director position is done by the minister, who doesn't have that same obligation. If the minister doesn't have that same obligation, then it would seem to me that consideration of the public interest would absolutely need to be put right in there. We saw this with Bill 50. It was a mistake then, and it's a mistake today.

The other part of it – and the hon. Member for Little Bow brought it up. It's interesting with Bill 4, the Public Interest Disclosure Act. I'm not a lawyer, and I'm new. Clearly, you know, I probably don't understand half of this. But consideration of public interest that talks about the consideration of the environment and socioeconomic impacts: my 10-year-old could probably understand that.

In Bill 4 it talks about:

Disclosure must be in writing and must include the following information, if known:

- (a) a description of the wrongdoing;
- (b) the name of the individual or individuals alleged
  - (i) to have committed the wrongdoing, or
  - (ii) to be about to commit the wrongdoing;
- (c) the date of the wrongdoing;
- (d) whether a disclosure in respect of a wrongdoing has been made pursuant to the procedures established under section 5 by the department . . .
- (e) any additional information that the designated officer or Commissioner may reasonably require . . .
- (f) any other information prescribed in the regulations.

This is from Bill 4. So we thought it was so important to write that anybody making a complaint under the whistle-blower legislation would have to disclose, would have to provide all the information, but landowners don't get that consideration. Hmm. Maybe we need to cover landowners under Bill 4. That might be a good idea.

Also, when we go into the office of the public interest commissioner – we now have a public interest commissioner, but we don't have consideration of public interest in the bill – it talks about who they are, so that's good. We've covered that in Bill 4. We've also talked about: the office of the public interest commissioner should be fairly independent, answer to the minister, all those fun things. But we have a whole bill here that's – I don't know – 40 pages long that talks about the importance of a public interest disclosure, yet landowners don't get that same respect. It would seem to me that if we're going to ask those who fall under the whistle-blower act to follow a public interest disclosure, why would we not ensure that landowners have those same abilities?

Landowners' groups have come forward. They've come in droves. They've posted. You know, if you don't care about the landowners' groups, that's fine; you don't have to. But they're Albertans, and they have an opinion. They have a vote, they have a say, they own land, and they're not happy with this bill as it's written. So we can all shake our heads. That's fine. We can do that. Or we can actually stand up and take a look at this bill and realize that it was always in there before, so why can't it stay in there? If it's implied, there's no reason why we can't be clear. In the interest of being more open and transparent, raising the bar, all those fun things, there should be no reason why consideration of public interest shouldn't be included, because as I said and as I read, the actual statement is clearly not offensive and doesn't hurt the government in any way and shouldn't hold up the process.

9:00

I'd also like to mention that this bill hasn't even passed yet, and there are already public meetings going on. Most recently the hon. Member for Little Bow held a public meeting in Vulcan. The hon. Minister of Energy attended, and I understand it was actually a very good meeting. There was a lot of nice dialogue back and forth, and it seemed that, you know, two people were coming together to have an opinion and listen to Albertans. It's what we should be doing.

The reality of it is that that was just 60 people at one meeting on a Friday night. If this goes through, you're going to see what happened with bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. The reality of it is that it's not just going to be 60 people. All of a sudden we're going to be in Eckville, and we don't have Mel Knight and Luke Ouellette to come down and have a visit.

While it's disappointing, because I'm sure we'd love to make another video, I think it's more important that we do the right things so that we don't have to have 600 people show up to Eckville and literally cause this government a problem. It's 60 people showing up today, 600 people are going to show up two months from now, and 1,200 people are going to show up from there. They rallied against bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. They will organize and rally again.

We all might want to say, "You know, with that side of the House over there and this side of the House there and nobody gives in – oh, my gosh, I just can't give in to those Wildrosers. Oh, that's just too much to ask." Rather than doing that, you might want to take a listen to the people in Vulcan, the 60 people who spoke there. You might want to take a listen to their concerns about this bill. You might want to engage with the land surface rights groups and have a sit-down with them. Hey, they're not perfect. Nobody says they are. But removing the public interest portion of this bill isn't the right thing to do.

We need to make sure that these bills are a win-win for industry and landowners because without landowners you don't have land. We cannot erode their rights. They paid for it. They bought it. They own it. It is unfair of us as legislators to stand up and to just run roughshod over them and literally tell them they don't matter. The public interest disclosure is easily done and easily put back in there. There is no way that this amendment offends the government or will stall the process.

It also guarantees the landowners some say and some consideration on carbon capture and storage because the reality of it is that we don't really know where that's going yet. It's just starting. It's just beginning. To say to landowners that we're going to ignore them when we don't even know what carbon capture and storage means yet, that is unfair. We as legislators are elected here to represent all Albertans, not just the ones we cherry-pick to represent. All Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. One of the members over here just said it fairly succinctly. We're not asking for something new here. What we don't understand is why you removed it from the bill. To the hon. House leader, who doesn't think that it belongs in the fiduciary duty of how the commission or, in this case, the director should act, let me just back up everybody here, and let's talk about property rights and the protection of those property rights because there is a contradiction going on now that either this party in power is supportive of property rights and has gotten it wrong all the way until now or that it is doing something that is protecting property rights by removing property rights in the public interest.

The initial bill, the bill that is being repealed, the Energy Resources Conservation Act, basically says under 6(1): "Every member, in exercising powers and in discharging functions and duties . . . shall act honestly, in good faith and in the public interest." All we're asking is to put it back in.

When you go to Bill 46 in the year 2007, this government passed something called the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. Under section 6(1) of that act it says that the commission and every commissioner "shall act honestly, in good faith and in the public interest."

That's in one act after another act after another act. It was in the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act, that was repealed when the Alberta Utilities Commission Act and this new ERCB Act came into effect in 2007.

What we're asking here is simply this: why did you take it out? Why did you take it out? The fact of this matter is that it has been in law for the last 20 to 30 years and probably goes back further. It's been there. The public interest test and the duty of the commissioners to act in the public interest has been there. It's there now under the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. It is in the Energy Resources Conservation Act. Under this new bill, the single regulator, it is removed.

Basically, what I'm hearing then is, if this is true from the hon. members, that those people that are dealing with transmission lines are being abused on their property rights because the public interest test is the duty of the commissioner, the fiduciary duty of the entire commission, and I don't believe that. I don't believe that one bit. I think that that section of law comes from a time when we treated property owners with respect and with dignity, we treated the community with the same respect and dignity, and we balanced that. It was in law. It's in law till we pass this bill. So what gives? Why are you taking it out?

What you've done now is you've taken out section 26(2), which actually gave a property owner a right of notification, a right to have just a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts, a right to challenge the facts. That's been removed from the individual property owner. Now we come down to this section, and we take out the public interest altogether. There is no public interest test in the legislation, and there's no fiduciary duty for the commission or the directors, in this case, to act in the public interest. It's been stripped out. So what do you tell the public? "We've taken your rights away." That's what you've done. You don't like it, but that's literally what's happened in this bill. All we're asking is to put it back in – to put it back in – to respect the public at large, to respect the individual landowners. We're not asking for anything new. We're asking for what you're taking away and to put it back in.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms DeLong: I'm finding this fascinating – fascinating – because on this side of the House we actually do believe in private property rights. We don't see it as a political toy to play with. We actually believe in individual private property rights, okay? One of the things that we're doing in this bill is strengthening private property rights, okay? This innocuous little phrase that you want to add in here, you know, it isn't just a little phrase that gets added in here and, oh, it makes people feel good. This is a phrase that is extremely dangerous to private property rights. Now, you can put a phrase like this in other places, and it wouldn't make that much difference. It would just make everybody feel good. Unfortunately, in this case you're actually taking away private property rights. I'm speechless.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Well, I'm flattered that the member would think it's a violation of property rights because it's in the Alberta Utilities Commission Act as it sits today, but as I understand this government, it's not violating property rights when the hon. minister is approving transmission lines. You can't have it both ways. It is in the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. It's not an innocuous phrase. It is a section of the law, and that's what it is. It is in the ERCB Act right now, section 6(1). It is there, and it has been there since this act was passed and came into force. It was there under the Energy and Utilities Board Act. It's not something that we just want to slip in as a phrase; it is a right of the citizens of Alberta that we want to reinstate in the law.

I'm not sure who is counselling people under the law out here because I will tell you this: since it was in the act, somebody must have counselled this party in power at one time to put it in the act. It's been there for the last 20 to 30 years. All of a sudden, we're removing it, and somebody needs to explain why to the public because you're taking a right away from the public. You're telling the commission, in this case the directors, that they no longer have a fiduciary duty to act in the public interest when all of the other acts say that. What gives? That's a valid question.

Thank you very much.

9:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. He's going to keep standing to speak until you get it right every time. You know that, don't you?

I'm surprised that it hasn't come up yet, but this needs to be said. It needs to be on the record. I for one and I suspect many others here, particularly in this little group that I'm part of, resent very strongly any reference to being fearmongerers because we speak up for our constituents. I think that's a load of hooey, if I'm allowed to say that, to suggest such a thing, that anybody who speaks up for their constituents is fearmongering. That's ridiculous.

I suspect, Madam Chair, that what's being proposed by leaving out this little tiny phrase, that apparently scares all of you a lot more than it scares the rest of us, is that it will produce some short-term gain. I think you're looking at that and the expeditiousness of the act itself, Responsible Energy Development Act, which we certainly support and agree with the principle. But the devil is in the details, my friends, as you all know. You didn't get to your ages without realizing that. We're looking for short-term gain, but we're going to suffer some long-term pain if we don't include and respect the public interest, which includes property rights.

People need a say in decisions that affect them. The public at large must perceive that their interests are being respected and protected. They're suspicious, they're skeptical, and they've been fooled four times by the hon. members on the other side, or at least the government and the party they represent, with bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. Acts are now being proposed to correct the mistakes and the deficiencies in Bill 50 that will have resulted in a waste of perhaps $16 billion to $32 billion by the time those unnecessary lines are built.

I understand, too – it just sort of has come to me as I've listened to the discussions tonight and over the last few weeks – what it is that bugs all of you about us over here. It's that we've staked out a part of your constituency that you have chosen to abandon. That's the true small "c" conservative people in Alberta that wonder why their party left them. Somebody asked me: Gary, why did you leave the PC Party? I said: I didn't leave the party; the party left me. There are a whole heck of a lot of people where I'm from and where these other good folks are from that feel the very same way.

What are you afraid of? You're afraid that your constituency that you've abandoned is going to come up and bite you in the behind. It will if you don't respect their rights. I'm suggesting to you that all we're doing is speaking up, not fearmongering but representing people who feel like they lost their voice. That's why they voted the way they did. We're doing our job in trying to remind you to come back and be true to your roots and the original values that you once had and remind you of those values. You all need to get back to them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I am seeking unanimous consent to revert to introductions. If there are any who are opposed, please say no.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be brief. I just wanted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly here this evening Mr. Tony Sykora, chair of the Elk Island Catholic school board and chair of the Catholic school boards of Alberta; Charlene Melenka of Vegreville, school trustee for Elk Island Catholic; and Dean Sarnecki, also of Sherwood Park and Elk Island Catholic. Thank you so much for being here this evening to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I, too, rise to introduce a member in the gallery, a constituent. Mary Martin, who is chair of the Calgary separate school board, is joining us this evening as well. Thank you, Mary, and I'd like to welcome you to the Assembly.

Bill 2

Responsible Energy Development Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others who wish to comment on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. A lot of comments have been made about this debate. I've heard a few comments about placards. I will tell you this. I do not believe there were placards when the hon. minister came to Vulcan. I don't remember seeing one, but I will stand corrected if he says he saw one. We talked about this very issue with the public interest test, as he's fully aware. I did see some placards in Sylvan Lake. I believe there was a widow, somebody who lost their husband on a different issue than this. I have to tell you I was embarrassed at the reception she got. I saw a placard dealing with an intersection but not a placard dealing with this amendment.

Those people that came to Sylvan Lake to listen to this amendment were told to gather at one end of the room while a certain individual who said that he would listen to them fled and left by the back door, a straight beeline. So I will tell you this. Those people still want to hear from that honourable person. Hopefully, they still will.

I saw two signs in Sylvan Lake. I don't think they were offensive. No one ever said they were offensive, but I understand now – I was pointing out incorrectly – there were actually other signs. There were little children running around with signs, but I didn't actually count those.

I was more interested, when I went to Sylvan Lake, in this particular issue, which addresses this particular amendment, which is the public interest test. I will tell you that right across the aisle I know the hon. Minister of Environment and SRD attended a number of public forums I did on other bills. I know two ministers there have attended forums that I did on other bills, and I will tell you that I had nothing whatsoever to do with organizing Sylvan Lake. I attended. I didn't participate, but I listened, and I didn't see anything different from any of the other public forums, at a minimum four, that these ministers have attended. So I can't explain to you why placards would drive someone out of a meeting. If I knew that would work, I'd probably bring a placard in here, but I don't think it works, and I don't think anyone here has a fear of a placard.

The fact is that we do get emotional, as we realize, Madam Chair. Even in here it sometimes gets a little loud, and the Speaker has to bring things back into order. We understand that. We try to behave a little bit better. But we can't lose sight of what the issue is here. The issue here is the public interest, and it is the public interest that matters.

I have to put this question to the hon. ministers who have brought this bill forward. I think there are actually two responsible, and they share responsibility. Why was this taken out? This isn't something we're putting in to say: this is new. It's in law now in the ERC section 6(1). It's there, and I don't know why it's been removed. It's called the public interest test. This is the fiduciary duty portion of the commissioners, or in this case this will now be the directors who have to "act honestly, in good faith and in the public interest." That's a very good question because the public wants to know.

Somebody says that this is a violation of property rights. Well, if that's the case, then everything that has been said up to this point in time under the ERCB, under the AUC, under the EUB, has been a violation of property rights, which means I was right all along. So I don't think they want to say that just yet.

We need to keep the public interest test up front. We need to respect the public's rights. We need to respect individual property rights. What's happened in this bill is that the public test is gone. The fiduciary duty of the commission does not have to respect the public interest. It's been removed. The individual property owner's rights under 26(2) that they currently enjoy now are missing in this bill, and that's not right. That's a violation of the public trust, not having the public interest in this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you. Again, there's been some good information and conversation back and forth. I do thank the minister for coming to Vulcan on Friday night. It went very well, I think. We had both sides. We had some good discussion. I did have to cut Joe off a couple of times because I was a mediator at that one.

An Hon. Member: You can't say his name.

Mr. Donovan: Oh. Sorry. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I can't here? Okay.

I cut him off a lot, but anyhow the point is that you can sit back and forth, and you can have a discussion about what's valuable and what's not and whether people always take it or not. I slid over to that side for a second to show a couple of members just what I had pulled up quickly on the Internet. "The public interest refers to the 'common well-being' or 'general welfare.' The public interest is central to policy debates, politics, democracy and the nature of government itself." To me, I think, that's the key to it. I think that's what we're trying to hammer through here, public interest.

I've sat on council for 16 years. I get that there are a lot of times when you're at a meeting, and there's a process that goes through, and you're, like, "I wish we could shortcut this," but it's not right. The right thing to do is to sit back and listen to people's concerns and issues. That's democracy. That's how the process works through.

I mean, there have been 800 and some ahead of us through this House itself as sitting members, and I'm sure there'll be lots after us. It's the process. I mean, there are multiple lawyers in the room who understand how process works, and that's great. We need that. You can sit and argue about process and the due way to get things done, and sometimes, yeah, it does take time. Sometimes you need to sit there and figure out that there might be a quicker process, but you don't want to cut somebody's rights short of that. That's just what I have to add about public interest.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I certainly have a great interest in the discussion here this evening. I appreciate all the observations. I also actually would like to thank the hon. Member for Little Bow for facilitating my attendance at the meeting in Vulcan on Friday night. I did think it was a very constructive event. It clearly was carried out in the spirit of good public interest, so that was very constructive.

Now, Madam Chair, I'd like to assure all hon. members here that the concept of the public interest, in fact, remains a factor that the new regulator must take into account. The public interest provision actually is included and will continue to be included in the statutes administered by the regulator that will not be changed by this bill, Bill 2. They obviously will continue to be a factor guiding energy resource development.

I'll just remind everybody here of the nature of what we're doing here today. We're creating a regulator with one act, Bill 2. That bill and that act, when it becomes proclaimed, will regulate industries under 10 different acts that already exist, six of those related to the energy sector. Those are specifically the Turner Valley Unit Operations Act, which predates the concept, probably, of the public interest as a common usage; the Coal Conservation Act; the Gas Resources Preservation Act; the Oil and Gas Conservation Act; the Oil Sands Conservation Act; and the Pipeline Act. Those six acts are all the energy-related acts that continue to apply and be used as the basis for the regulatory actions of the new regulator. Five of those acts speak specifically to and make reference to and include the public interest in the way that was common historically in this province.

I would simply say that far from it being gotten rid of, we're simply reflecting upon the historical usage that has been defined and clarified in law in this province of this term, "public interest." We're seeking greater clarity in this act, Bill 2, so we're not including it in this act.

There are four other acts that this regulator will be referring to as governing acts as well: the Water Act, the Public Lands Act, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, and part 8 of the Mines and Minerals Act, which relates to certain seismic and geophysical aspects as well.

For those who are so deeply attached to this concept, the concept remains there in the legislative construct that the regulator will be using. I would say, though, that in all honesty there is greater ambiguity about that concept than one might wish to be ideal in new legislation.

We heard from a lot of stakeholders. Our colleague here, who did a couple of years of consultations with Albertans, found that Albertans really wanted greater clarity as to what specifically public interest means. That's why the bill actually makes provisions of explicit factors that the regulator is required to take into consideration. Those will be set out in the regulations as well after even more consultation with stakeholders. Madam Chair, in addition to the public interest provisions that exist in the energy statutes, the regs will provide more specific factors that the regulator must take into consideration when making decisions. These factors will be informed by public engagement. That is my commitment to this House and to the people of Alberta.

With that, Madam Chair, I would say that the amendment is perhaps redundant at best, and I would not be supporting it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do not deny that the hon. minister is well intentioned and acting in good faith, but that's not what happens in this legislation. This is important. Section 25 of this new act states:

Except to the extent that the regulations provide otherwise, an application, decision or other matter under a specified enactment in respect of an energy resource activity must be considered, heard, reviewed or appealed, as the case may be, in accordance with this Act and the regulations and rules instead of in accordance with the specified enactment.

What it says is that this act is paramount. It is paramount. It is what is going to happen. You are correct in the sense that the public interest does appear under these other enactments, but this act overrides that and is paramount. That's what's important.

I believe the minister when he says that we're going to take care of this in regulation. I think he's saying that in good faith, and it is important that, you know, I accept that, and I do. But what's happening here is not in legislation. Having that in legislation is really important because, yes, you can change legislation. You have the ability. But you have to propose the legislation first. We go through this whole public debate, this whole process. We've removed it from legislation. It is now something done in regulation that may be done, may not be done. We can't see that until it happens, and the fact is that regulation can be changed retroactively. It's rare. It's happened. Even legislation – we got into this argument before, but I'll say it respectfully – has happened retroactively.

That's not the issue here. The issue is the public interest. Despite these other enactments that were just brought forward, the law is absolutely clear in Bill 2 that this bill applies. Everything will be considered under this legislation, not that legislation, and that's important. From the public's perspective, the public interest: where is it in legislation? It's not in legislation. It has now been demoted to regulation, which does not yet exist. What we want is for the public to have that right in legislation, so they can rely upon that. That's what we're asking for here with this amendment.

Thank you very much.

9:30

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I know this is the third time I've spoken. I wasn't planning on speaking this much to this amendment, but you remember the odd thing, and you try and learn a little bit here. I think the hon. minister made some of the arguments for this side of the House in his submission. Before I go on to those, I will say that this has been an extraordinary task you've undertaken. Putting 10 bills into one piece of legislation was an awfully difficult task regardless of which government was going to be in this House. I recognize that. It is arduous, onerous to do this new proposed legislation.

At the same time I also understand when the minister says to me that the public interest will be referenced in regulation. That's what gives me concern. Throughout the act we have an absence of what public interest is or any reference to it. In fact, I will go back to my starting point, when I got up a little earlier. This act does not have a preamble, any detailed preamble that says what the goals of the act are, what the guidelines are, what the overarching concerns of this new regulator will be. It has none of that statement of principle that people who work for this organization can go to and look to to guide their daily actions.

I mentioned this earlier, and I'll mention it again. If you look at our Education Act, which we'll probably be discussing a little later, in its preamble it's very detailed. It goes through the goals, the aspirations, the hopes of this government and what they're trying to bring through to the act and what they want our educators to bring through. This is absent from what is present currently in Bill 2. The minister says: "Don't worry. It's going to be in regulation." Well, that's when I get worried because regulations are created – and I know he's an honourable man, and I know he has the public interest at heart, but I do not know that the next Minister of Energy will be so committed to such a just and social responsibility to include in our legislation. I don't know what the next Minister of Energy will believe or three ministers after he has gone on to other things.

That has to be clear, and that's the challenge. If I would see some overarching statement of principle in the preamble or some reference to, in fact, public interest or some other words to describe the fact that our oil and gas resources need to be developed in a socially responsible, economically friendly way that benefits the long-term interests of this great province – and I understand. Public interest is a difficult concept for structures like this to deal with, but at the end of the day that has to be there. There has to be a vehicle where the public interest can be balanced. At this time I don't see that in this bill, and it does not give me any comfort that the hon. minister says: "Don't worry. They'll be in regulation."

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

It's a beautiful evening this evening for guests, and I would seek unanimous consent once again to revert to introductions. Are there any who are opposed? Please say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly some members of the Grasslands school board that are here for a couple of days. I'd like to have them all receive the warm traditional welcome.

Bill 2 Responsible Energy Development Act (continued)

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other comments on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. A couple of points that I'd like to make. Numerous occasions in this House we've heard how this current government is open and transparent, so I would actually challenge the Minister of Energy. If we're referencing public interest in other acts, then why not put it at the forefront of this bill, this piece of legislation? Let's include "public interest." Let's even go beyond the step of saying "the public interest" to put some parameters around it. You know, I'd love to use the words that are actually in the current ERCB bill, which talks about "regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment."

Public interest is really looking beyond our own scope, beyond our own sights. We're talking about the social, economic, and environmental impacts of decisions that we are making today for the long term, so looking at how that's going to affect not only people, but we're talking about wildlife, we're talking about the environment, we're talking about air quality and land quality, we're talking about water and not just for us and within our own limited lifespans but looking at how a decision today is going to impact and affect our children, our grandchildren, our grandchildren's children.

I'm not comfortable with a bill that implies one thing, that is up to the subjective judgment of an individual or a group of individuals how they define something or whether they're acting on the best behalf of Albertans and Canadians. For myself it needs to be legislated. It needs to be included in this. You know, again, one person may have great intentions. The hon. minister may have great intentions. The person who is appointed to this new board may not have such great intentions. Regardless, it needs to be included in the legislation so that we can ensure that the public interest is protected, is acknowledged over the long term, over the span that this bill is law, and to ensure that all projects are looking at different points of view but especially looking at, again, the impact on the environment.

It's interesting. I've read different accounts from the proposal of the expansion of the Jack pine project, that there are environmentalists that are saying that is not in the best interests of the public, that is not in the public's interest. What are they basing it on? They're basing it on the impact on wildlife in the area, the impact on the air and land, the water sources. They're basing it on how it's going to affect the environment over the long term. That piece needs to be in every decision or every project when it's being evaluated and judged on whether the impact is worth the cost. Without public interest being included in this bill, without it being legislated, I have gross concerns that the public interest is not going to be first and foremost, which it needs to be.

Again, we're here representing 87 different constituencies and millions of Albertans, and we need to ensure and they need to know that their interests, not just the interests of one group or another, are going to be taken into consideration.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. No one has responded yet as to why we're removing this from law and removing it out of legislation. There should be a valid reason for that. It's an important question that has not been answered, because there's a contradiction here. It's in law now. It's been in law for 20 or 30 years. It probably goes back further. It's going to stay in law in the Alberta Utilities Commission Act as we propose this amendment. If it's wrong, why is it in law now? That's a valid question.

It has an important role. I believe it has an important role. I believe that's why this government put it in all these other bills. I only checked a few bills that I'm quite familiar with because I knew it was there. We're talking about a public resource that we are developing for the public good, but we remove from law the public interest test, and we remove from law the duty of the commission to act in the public interest. I don't understand that, and I'm not sure anyone can explain that. If you say that that's a violation of property rights, it's just not a valid argument. It's something we've lived by. It's a right we've had as the public.

I can go on and on naming a number of examples where the public interest test has come to the aid of the public. So I don't understand why we're removing that right, and it's no longer going to appear in legislation. In the same bill individual property rights have now been diminished one more time. Something has to be driving this in the sense of: what's the end goal? If we go down this path – and this was pointed out. I think I may have referred to it earlier, and I apologize if I'm being repetitive, but one of the arguments given earlier or that should have been given earlier is that this could prompt unnecessary lawsuits because there are things in our Bill of Rights, there are things in our Charter of Rights where you can infer the public interest. I won't go down that road, but the Environmental Law Society did in their draft, and the University of Calgary law professor did in his draft.

To streamline a bill so that we can be more efficient makes sense, I think, to everybody in this Chamber. That's the purpose of this. But if we don't get it right, we didn't streamline the bill; we created a bill that is going to cause more hang-ups, more delays unnecessarily. This is problematic for what our end solution, our end goal is.

When I look at this, I see that the public interest test is taken out. I know it's going to get rejected. I sense that from across the room. But it is an important issue for me. When the minister says that all these other acts apply, this Bill 2 specifically says: no, it doesn't. This act, the way we construct this act is going to apply, and our right in legislation, the public's right in legislation is gone. So much of what we do for our economy is all about the public interest. Yes, it is about private business doing private business, but in the end the overriding force is the public interest. The development of our resources in this economy is all about the public interest, and it's not here.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A3?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A3 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:43 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I believe everybody is here now that's coming. I wonder if we could have unanimous consent to shorten any further bells this evening to one minute.

The Deputy Chair: We are asking for unanimous consent to shorten any more bells for a division in the future to one minute rather than 10 minutes. Are there any who are opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: What that means, for those who haven't experienced this before, is that we will ring the bells for 30 seconds, there will be a one-minute pause, and then we'll ring the bells again for another minute. That's what we'll do for the rest of this evening.

We are back on Bill 2. Are there any members who would like to speak on Bill 2?

Mr. Hale: Madam Chair, I do have another amendment. I have the required number of copies that I'd like to have passed out.

The Deputy Chair: We will pause while the amendment is being distributed, and then we'll go into debate on the amendment. This amendment will be known as A4.

We'll now move to debating the amendment. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment that you have now deals with section 16, disclosure of information to the minister. I'll just read into the record what it will say when this amendment passes.

The Regulator shall, on the written request of the Minister, provide to the Minister within the time specified in the request any report, record or other information, excluding personal information, that is specified in the request.

We're saying to cross out "including" and put in "excluding" personal information.

The reason I'm putting this amendment forward is that I can't in my wildest dreams figure out why the minister would have access to personal information. There's nothing in here that specifies a limitation to the personal information. As I read it, it says that the minister may request personal information regarding any resource enactment approval with a landowner, you know, between landowners and companies.

That personal information could mean anything. That could mean mortgages, bank accounts, your wife's information, your children's information. It's too broad. It leaves the door wide open to any kind of personal information that's available. I mean, that goes against your personal privacy rights. I can see him requesting information dealing with, you know, contracts that you have between the oil companies and landowners, the oil companies and different oil companies if they're subletting leases, roads with special areas, information that deals with the energy sector, but I do not think there should be a clause in here giving access to any personal information.

Now, I don't know. Maybe the hon. Energy minister can explain why he should have access to any personal information. I'm hoping that was maybe just an oversight in this bill, that, you know, maybe he would clarify that it means information dealing with a contract, but as it's written here, it does not say that. It's "personal information." I'm sure many of you have personal information that you don't want the hon. Energy minister to see. If you say that your book is wide open, that he can request any information that you have, I'm sure maybe your husbands or wives or your children would disagree with that. I know mine would, and I know that many of my colleagues would.

Mr. Saskiw: What are you up to?

Mr. Hale: That's privacy. That's the privacy act.

You know, that's the main reason we put this forward. Sure, we can register our agreements with the regulator as landowners. That's good. That's something that we're not opposed to. We think that's a good section in this bill. If this information requested was just about those contracts, then we wouldn't be having this amendment put forward. It just leaves the door too wide open to retrieve any information dealing with our personal lives. That's the reason I put this amendment forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think that perhaps I can shed a bit of light on this because I know members have asked about this specific clause. Perhaps before we get into a lengthy concern, a bit of clarity would be helpful.

I would observe, Madam Chair, that I don't think the amendment proposed by the opposition is consistent with public expectations. This section actually requires the regulator to disclose information at the minister's request. Now, the kind of information that one would look for provides for a greater accountability. For example, there will be situations that require personal information like expense information submitted by the board of directors, the CEO, or the hearing commissioners. This is required, obviously, to meet public expectation. Of course, timely exchange of information is required for the government to carry out its constitutional duty of aboriginal consultation.

I'd also like to assure the hon. member opposite that this clause does not override the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. In fact, personal information is still protected by FOIP. I do think that this is an important aspect that it is critical that we retain.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Any other members wish to comment?

Mr. Hehr: Well, I guess that since the minister is here, I'll ask him: is it defined in the act what data the regulator will be allowed to collect? Are there any fences put around this at all, or is it open to interpretation? If you could help with that, then I may or may not have to speak after that.

Mr. Hughes: Madam Chair, I'm not sure I can give an answer that cuts him off at the pass, much as I might wish to. The specific aspects will be defined in regulation, obviously, in terms of what will be required, but this is the normal course of business in terms of managing agencies, boards, and commissions that are agents of the province of Alberta, doing good work on behalf of Albertans. It's important to have that exchange back and forth.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but we have other speakers, so we can't keep going back and forth.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess that answer by the hon. minister served a half measure towards me. I think we've got to take a look at, overall, the way society is nowadays. We have a tremendous amount of technology, a vast ability to collect information – governments and corporations and the like – and we see a growing trend to this collection of information by governments, private businesses, and the like. The key to success oftentimes is information: knowing where people live, knowing what they do, knowing the way they vote, and all of those things. There's a danger in that. If we write legislation that lets us use this information or collect this information with impunity, it is fraught with peril. Things from people's lives and their personal lives, things that the government has no business knowing and should have no right to, are all of a sudden collected, and although they are not collected for any untoward purpose, nevertheless the danger lies there.

We can take a look at the United States. There's a perfect example of that happening right now. There's a very famous general who is involved in, I guess, what would be called a sex scandal. This information was compiled by the CIA and the FBI, and it was for no one else's broader purpose or information. It had no impact on the way he was performing – you know what I'm saying – and the like. Nevertheless, this information was leaked. It was leaked from government departments, from the CIA and the FBI. It was leaked because the government had the information and someone found it, and of course society is often interested in salacious details.

Oftentimes when governments collect information on too broad of a scope or passage, that information can be used against an individual, or something else can be investigated, or something can be looked into. The nature of the collection of private material is that it doesn't remain private if someone is collecting it. So I'm always nervous, especially when we don't write our legislation to attempt to narrow down the scope of what people will be collecting this information, what they're going to collect, and what it can be used for. In my view, I do not accept the argument: well, this is all going to be fleshed out in regulation.

Privacy rights are very important. I think that some broad measure of what that personal information should be that the government can collect, whether it be name, address, phone number, whether it's a contract or the like, some fences around what materials the regulator will be able to request and the like I think would go some way to improving this bill and improving the personal information of Albertans. I think we've got to get in the habit here in the Legislature of trying to encompass that into our legislation. This has been around now for about 15 years. With the increase in technology, the ability for people to get this information, I think it's high time governments took a more earnest look at the reasons why people have private lives, the reason why people don't want governments to have information. Once governments have that information, the power of the state can be used in an unwieldy, unmannered approach that can trample personal lives and personal freedoms. That's why we have civil liberties.

I'm going to support this amendment. I think it's a good amendment. In any event, even though it may not be accepted, I think it'll spur the minister on to writing some clear and distinct regulations that put some fences around what information the Responsible Energy Development Act and the regulator will be able to get.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

10:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to speak briefly on this amendment, what's interesting when you read this piece of legislation, in particular section 16(1), is the very broad nature of the language used here, including personal information, without any type of limitation whatsoever. Actually, I'm not sure whether or not the Lieutenant Governor actually has the ability to make regulations on that particular section, but even if there was that regulation-making authority, one would think that all you have to do is define personal information under section 1, the section of definitions for interpretation. If the minister has valid concerns about the requirement of certain information, it should be put out there, and it should be as specific as possible right in the statute.

It's interesting that he mentioned that FOIP still applies. I think that, potentially, the way this reads right now is that the minister could request any type of information: income tax information from a member of the public, business transactions, any type of information that's readily available or collected by a provincial or the federal government. I find that rather scary, that type of nanny state power that's put in this piece of legislation. It's not to say that the minister will go out and do that, but the power exists. It is so broadly stated. If someone does challenge this piece of legislation, particularly this section, I think there are valid, arguable legal arguments to be made that this is a very massive infringement on someone's personal rights. I'm wondering whether or not this actually conflicts with other existing legislation. You know, there's no privative clause or anything like that in place here.

I'm speaking in support of this amendment. Hopefully, you know, the hon. minister will take this amendment in stride. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members who would like to comment on amendment A4?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I certainly think this is an important consideration. I'm not sure – if I missed it, I apologize – what the reason would be to require personal information without limiting it, narrowing it a bit. I mean, we know Big Brother is watching, but does he really need to know the size and all the measurements? I think not. There needs to be some restriction, whether it's by definition so that we can be specific or whether it can be just eliminated altogether if it doesn't serve a specific purpose. If it doesn't, we ought to know, and I think that people ought to know.

But I don't think that should be there as a sort of disincentive to step forward to object or complain. At this point I think it is. As the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks said, it has the potential to create problems. I think that in good faith we ought to send a message to the people of Alberta to say that we do respect your right to privacy and that we do respect your right to keep some things to yourself even though you want to come forward and object to something. There are a few things we need to know, but we sure don't need to know everything. I hope that in good faith you good folks over there, who value your own privacy and the right to keep some things sacred and perhaps confidential, will support this amendment. I think it deserves your support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others?

Mr. Donovan: Again, I'm getting up to speak in favour of this amendment. As it's been covered by my two colleagues earlier here, just how much information does the government need on something? I understand that when the minister spoke, he said, you know, that it's going to exclude. Then the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo commented that all these things are planned out, probably good motions and ideas, but stuff gets leaked, information get's taken out of context, and I guess you're just leaving yourselves open for something to come back down the trail and bite you later on.

I guess, in saying that, I'll keep my comments short. I'm in favour of the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move back to debating Bill 2. Are there any other speakers on Bill 2? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do have another amendment with the required copies that I would like passed out, please.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause while those copies of the amendment are being passed out. This will be known as amendment A5.

Seeing as most members now have a copy of the amendment, we can continue. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amends section 18 of Bill 2, and I will read my amendment into the record. I move that Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act, be amended in section 18 by adding the following after subsection (4):

- (5) prior to or within 9 months of the execution of an agreement under subsection (2), the Minister shall ensure that a Member of the Executive Council introduces a motion in the Legislative Assembly that would have the effect of facilitating a debate in the Assembly on the question of whether the agreement should be approved by the Assembly.
- (6) if an agreement under subsection (2) is entered into prior to receiving the approval of the Assembly, the agreement shall include a provision providing that the agreement shall be of no force or effect if it is not approved by the Assembly.
- (7) if the Assembly does not approve an agreement under subsection (5), the agreement shall not be entered into or, if the agreement has been entered into, the agreement is of no force or effect.

Now, this section of the bill grants the cabinet the power to direct the regulator in negotiating interprovincial and international agreements that could make essential industry beholden to groups that do not share interests. This could lead to agreements that are detrimental to Alberta's energy future. We think that the House should have the ability to look at these agreements.

You know, there are many pipelines that are being proposed now, many interprovincial agreements, international agreements, you know, for exporting our product. It's something that affects not just one company, not just one individual, you know, as a single well does, not just one area as in the oil sands. This is something that has a huge provincial effect on all the people in the province, so I feel that it shouldn't be up to a single minister or a single regulator to make those approvals. It should be something that we can make as a whole group because it's something that is going to affect everybody in Alberta.

There are good parts about this section already. You know, we need these other pipelines to export our product. If we give the regulator the power to make these dealings on behalf of the people of Alberta, they can have one hearing with all the provinces there. They don't need to have hearings in every single province. They can do it as a whole group, which will speed up the process, which is the intent of this bill. It should be something that is talked about by all the MLAs, not something left just to the regulator or the Energy minister of the cabinet to make a decision on their own.

In regard to international exports as we're seeing now, it's something that all the provinces need to work together on. It's something that one group cannot make on its own. It's a decision that needs to be made as a whole. So we feel that adding these in will allow the regulator and the Energy minister to bring these proposals forward to the House. We can have a debate on it; we can hear the pros and the cons with regard to these dealings that are going on and have the ability to take it back to our people and get their input on it.

This deals a lot with the openness and transparency that's talked so much about in this House. This is just another step to be open and transparent, to communicate with all Albertans how, you know, we're being affected, how the energy industry is being affected. We're all in agreement that we want a single regulator. We just want to ensure that the single regulator acts in the best interests of Albertans. These amendments are a way to bring it back to the House for a good debate to ensure that everything is handled through the proper channels and that we do have the consent of the majority of Albertans when dealing with the resources that they essentially own.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A5? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. In speaking to the amendment put forward by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks in reference to section 18, it just seems to be an extraordinary power that's been given to the regulator, something that you don't often see in legislation. That's under section 18(2), which essentially allows the regulator to enter into any agreements that it considers desirable with the Government of Canada or an agency of it with respect to a matter relating to the purposes of this Act or any other enactment or with any government of a jurisdiction outside Alberta or an agency of that government in respect of the effects of such a matter in that jurisdiction.

What that says is that the regulator can simply go out and make agreements with governments outside the jurisdiction of Alberta. There's no limitation on whether that's just with other provinces. There's no limitation on whether that's North America. Anywhere in the world the regulator may make deals, may make arrangements on behalf of the government of Alberta. It just seems like an exceptionally odd provision to have in a statute.

I think, you know, that we should have a provision in there that's quite similar to the way other jurisdictions handle extra-provincial agreements that are made, and that is to have the agreement approved in principle or ratified subsequent to the agreement by the Legislature or, federally, by Parliament. It just seems to me that would be the requisite due diligence that we should have when entering some potentially very important agreements.

Maybe this provision is in place for this so-called national strategy, or whatever term the Premier is calling it, in the sense of creating that type of plan. To have this power in the regulator to enter into any agreement without limitation with respect to virtually anything – the only limitation is “agreements it considers desirable,” which, of course, is a subjective test and could include virtually anything. So if the regulator decides it wants to enter into an agreement with South Dakota, it can go and enter into that agreement without it coming back to the Legislature here and without having the appropriate debate on that agreement.

I'm standing in support of this amendment to ensure that there are at least some safeguards. The main safeguards in subsection (5) state that “prior to or within 9 months of the execution of an agreement,” then a bunch of verbiage, and then it basically states that it “should be approved by the [Legislative] Assembly.” One would think that should be a very realistic, proper way of dealing with potentially very serious contracts that have large ramifications for our province. One would hope that the regulator wouldn't enter into some type of agreement that could bind the hands of the province and of all Albertans. So I'm speaking in favour of the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on amendment A5.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I will admit that this is a very interesting amendment, one that I, to be honest, hadn't thought of myself. Frankly, while I'm speaking on it, I'm not sure whether I'm going to support it. I'm going to hopefully work through some of the arguments here and see if I can add something to the debate. That will be up to you to judge, but I'll give it a fair whirl.

Now, if you look under the Constitution, our oil and gas reserves are the people of Alberta's, stewarded by this government and members of this honourable Legislature. Hopefully, we are doing this in the best interests for the long run. Often I've also said that in the long run we're all dead. So that's awfully difficult to do, but that's what we should be doing.

If you look at what is currently happening in Alberta, that many people are paying attention to, the Nexen energy company is being purchased by an arm of the Chinese government, their national oil company. To date we've been relatively, in my view, silent on what our wishes and hopes and dreams are on behalf of the Alberta people and, in fact, what we want for our oil and gas industry. I also understand that it's the federal government's job to regulate trade and commerce. Okay. I understand that. Nevertheless, we have been relatively quiet on whether we deem it in our provincial interest to have a state-owned Chinese oil company come into Alberta and take a play in our backyard. It's just one of those questions.

If we really want to develop ourselves as a province, to see ourselves as being the stewards of our resources, to be a voice in what we want for the development of our oil sands and other oil and gas regions, then this amendment would add to that voice. It would give us an opportunity to discuss in this House situations where a foreign country may be involved or outside pipeline agreements are entered into with other provinces. That, in my view, would be a good thing.

In my view, we haven't discussed the ramifications of the Nexen deal very much. In fact, currently, Madam Chair, if the CNOOC deal goes through, we will have 14 national oil companies competing in Alberta. Fourteen national oil companies. Now, I guess that would beg the question, Madam Chair, why they're here. I think it's a simple question, but what's the simple answer? They come here, they pay royalties, and then they make lots of money. Allegedly, there's money in this business. They send that money back to their home country to pay for roads, schools, hospitals, and the like. There are 13 of them doing that right now.

At one time, in my view, I thought we had a broader vision of what it meant to be in the Alberta interest. It was under Mr. Lougheed, when he in 1971 or '72 started the Alberta Energy Company – okay? – a company that lasted till approximately 1993 and was a very integrated energy company. It provided a lot of the infrastructure for the oil and gas industry as well as returned a lot of profits not only to this government but to shareholders, who were primarily Alberta citizens. Now, that was a neat idea.

I won't go into the ramifications of what, in my view, was a fit of government not quite thinking about the long run, the selling of the Alberta Energy Company. That was done, and I thought it was a mistake then. I think that to this day the sale of that company left us without a voice in our own future, our own direction, our own ability to have a stake in our own future. I think Mr. Lougheed recognized that, and he often recognized: think like an owner. That means having your own oil company. Or what else does it mean? I think that's something where, you know, if we're going to have an oil and gas industry, we should look at whether that was the best course of action. Allegedly, the oil and gas business is going to be around for another hundred years or so, so there may be no time like the present to investigate whether we're getting a fair return on our oil and gas resources.

You know, I read a report by the Parkland Institute that says that we're receiving approximately I think it's 13 per cent of the total take from the oil and gas industry. There's a country out there, Norway, who developed their oil and gas industry based on some of the ideas of Lougheed, having their own oil company and the like, who bring in roughly . . . [interjection] No. Just wait. I'm talking. That was the hon. Solicitor General. He wasn't sure what I was going to talk about. I'm not talking about savings. I'm talking about their organization of their oil and gas industry, and I'd encourage the hon. Solicitor General to do some research on this issue. I will forward to him the research of a brand new report that came out by the World Bank that analyzed some national oil companies, their responsiveness to market conditions. I know the hon. Solicitor General is a believer in the free market, and understandably so – that's fair enough – as am I in certain instances. But did you know that Statoil, Norway's national oil company, is traded on the New York Stock Exchange? It is valued and recommended by stock traders all over the world. They say that this is a great thing to invest in. They do despite the fact that government is involved in that.

Back to my main point. The Norwegian government collects roughly 75 per cent of the total take of the energy industry – okay? – because they're actively involved in partnerships with other oil companies. Guess what they figured out? There's profit in this, lots of money to be made. I know it may sound novel, but allegedly there is, okay? The Norwegians have figured it out, like Mr. Lougheed had figured it out.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you're speaking on amendment A5.

Mr. Hehr: Now back to the amendment. I think that this would create some of that ability for us to look at our broader future as an energy producer, as having a viable voice for Alberta citizens to take part in, and would allow us to review things in this honourable House.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to comment on amendment A5?
Seeing none, we'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back to Bill 2. Are there any other members who wish to comment on Bill 2? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have another amendment.

The Deputy Chair: We'll call this amendment A6, and we'll pause till everyone has a copy.

Seeing that the majority of members have a copy of amendment A6, I would ask the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks to continue.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment deals with division 2, the hearing commissioners. We have an amendment to section 11(1). Section 11(1) states:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall establish a roster of hearing commissioners consisting of a chief hearing commissioner and such other individuals as are appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

My amendment, then, states:

(1.1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall appoint the chief hearing commissioner on the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices.

The reason I put this amendment in is because as it stands now in the bill – one subamendment I already have put forward – the transition committee is appointed by council, the board of directors are appointed by council, the chief hearing commissioner is appointed by council, and the roster of hearing commissioners are appointed by council. This amendment allows transparency and accountability. There seems to be a common theme with the picking of the people involved in this bill, and it seems that it's left up to the hon. Energy minister and the cabinet.

Again, this bill affects everybody in Alberta, and everybody should have a voice through their MLAs, through an all-party committee. That's why we suggest sending it to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices to make a list of recommendations. We're not saying, you know, that they have to do it. This is something that they can send to Legislative Offices. As it stands now in that committee, it's one-party heavy, so chances are that it's going to be who they want anyway, but at least there can be other voices heard.

This way it's not open and transparent. It's only open and transparent in one room. This needs to be something that's discussed and talked about through all the parties because it does have a huge effect, you know, on the hearing process, the appeal process that's in this bill.

That's why we think that this decision should be made not solely by the cabinet and the hon. Energy minister. It should be made by the all-party Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. You know, it'll go a long way in picking this hearing commissioner so that it doesn't take the form of a specialized appointment, that it is open and transparent and that the right person does get the job. Once again, we need to get this bill right. We need to ensure that when there are appeals that go through and there are issues that need to be dealt with, they're dealt with in a professional manner, that they're dealt with by someone who has a vast knowledge of the industry and the workings of Alberta and how the industry relates to people in Alberta.

This should be an amendment that passes. I mean, I can't see why the government side of the House would say: "Well, no. We want to solely make the decision on our own." I mean, for the simple optics effect, at least you can show that you're being open and transparent. It's practising what you preach. It's something that people need to know, that the person picked for this hearing commissioner is the right person, not an appointment made solely by one party.

I hope that you will vote in favour of this amendment, and I look forward to the discussion.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on this amendment?

Mr. Dorward: Did the hon. MLA give any consideration at all to the fact that a person's name would be discussed in an open meeting of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices in order to be able to make the recommendation to the Lieutenant Governor in Council?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just in regard to the member's comments this happens in every other jurisdiction on very important bodies, whether it's judges, whether it's senior bureaucrats, whether it's chairs of certain entities. There are discussions that are in public about those people, whether they have the requisite qualifications for that job. For a Premier that gloats about being open and transparent, every single act that has been taken subsequent to that completely negates that argument. It's unfortunate that the member opposite wants to have a secret process when it comes to the appointment of such an important person.

I think the other reason why – I'm surmising – the Member for Strathmore-Brooks is putting forward this amendment is because we should take the politics out of this appointment. Just take the politics out. There are certain circumstances. For example, potentially, the Health minister previously appointed a certain chair of Alberta Health Services, who may or may not be partisan. I think that's one aspect of this. We should actually ensure that the person is nonpartisan. We do this, of course, with other chairs. We do this with the Ombudsman because that person should be truly independent. That's why a legislative committee makes that decision.

Of course, as the Member for Strathmore-Brooks said, it's not that the other opposition parties would put forward one name. It's a bunch of names, and the ultimate decision would still rest with the government, but there's at least some due diligence in the process that's being done. To think that for some reason this has to be a secret process is quite baffling.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I appreciate the sentiment being put forward in this particular amendment, but it's simply a complete and utter error in law. The Standing Committee on Legislative Offices is involved in appointing six officers of this very Legislature. These are the officers of the Legislature who are appointed by the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. That's the Auditor General, the Ombudsman, the Chief Electoral Officer, the Ethics Commissioner, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and the Child and Youth Advocate. At no time, Madam Chair, either in any of the many amendments that have come forward from all sides of this House or in the original legislation was there a suggestion that the commissioners should be officers of this Legislature.

But I can assure my colleagues on all sides of the House that the appointments to the board of directors of the regulator and also the roster of hearing commissioners will be a process which is well adhered to by this government, which is publicly advertised, a thorough process, a process that is appointed by the cabinet and that will be competency based. I give that commitment to the House.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other comments? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess that with respect to the amendment, saying that it's an error of law is simply not correct. The Standing Committee on Legislative Offices can within their jurisdiction make a recommendation. It's not binding on the minister, and it doesn't have to be an officer of the Legislature. They can make any type of recommendation to the hon. minister, so there is no exclusionary clauses on the mandate of that committee. It's just simply incorrect.

I think we can respect some of these assurances that there would be an open competition, but we, quite frankly, haven't seen that in the past. We saw this with senior bureaucrats in agriculture, where there was no open job competition. It wasn't based on merit or competency. You know, all sorts of laws were being broken.

This just seems to me to be a very valid, reasonable amendment. The governing party would still have the ability to eventually appoint an individual to such an important position, but reasonable due diligence would be done. I would hope that they would accept that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm rising to speak today in favour of the amendment brought forward by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. It seems very reasonable, but it also seems that we can't come to reason in this House at this moment.

One of the things that I find interesting is that the hon. Minister of Energy mentioned that it would be a fair and open process. He's assuring us, and that is fantastic. That's what we want to hear. The problem with that is we've heard that before. We saw it specifically in creating a job for Mr. Evan Berger, creating a job description for said person, and also creating a wage and everything for a job that didn't exist. That job did not go out to open tender, did not go out to any open competition. Why would that be any different than this? There's a pattern with this government that shows that that isn't the way they proceed, and it would seem to me that if it is the intention to proceed that way, then there's no harm in making sure that it's actually protected within the act.

The other part of it is that given that all of the directors are appointed by cabinet and all of the hearing commissioners are appointed by cabinet, we've created a political monopoly, and in no way does that monopoly answer to anybody but cabinet. Given the track record of this government of appointing their cronies and their friends and people in the government family, it would seem that if you want to be open and transparent, you would make sure that that can't happen. You want to make sure that you engage in ensuring that you have trust from the public and from Albertans.

I think it's also important to show Albertans that these appointments are not political. I actually believe that the Minister of Energy does believe that they shouldn't be political, and I think that's great. I think that if he actually believes that, then he would very clearly be able to put it in there, that he's making his appointments on the best wishes of Albertans.

I guess the bigger question that I have is – we've talked a lot and this government has talked a lot about being open and transparent. They've also talked a lot about having the most robust transparency policies in Canada. I believe the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation has gone on and on and on in this House about how open and transparent this government is and how everything should be on the table. Yet at the same time he says: if you want information from the Health minister, you have to FOIP it; if you want information on expenses, you have to FOIP it; if you want anything done, you have to FOIP it. But we have the most robust and open and transparent policies across Canada.

It would be interesting to hear from the Associate Minister of AT and T exactly how transparent this policy really is. Literally, you'd want to ensure that the openness and transparency of this bill – you as the minister would of course want to ensure that that is fundamental in this process, and you would want to ensure that you have fairness, and you'd want to make sure that everybody who is appointed to this board is done so through an open and fair competition process. Given that that's your brand new associate minister role it would a hundred per cent be: if you want Albertans to believe you can walk the walk, then it would seem to me that you need to talk the talk.

If we're going to have an Accountability, Transparency and Transformation associate minister, then it would seem to me that he would want to ensure that the bills coming before this House are in line with what his goals are. That would just seem to make sense. But if we're going to just have cabinet appoint the directors, have cabinet appoint the commissioners, then how open and transparent is that? I guess if we want to know what their expenses are or what they're doing, we might have to FOIP that as well. I mean, that seems to be the track record we're on. It would seem to me that we need to make sure that this process is the most fair to all parties involved. The only way to do that is to go to the public, to have it open, and to have nominations come forward, have an all-party committee submit those nominations.

What's the fear if the ultimate power ends with the minister and the minister can ultimately pick whoever he wants anyway?

Really, he gets the best of both worlds. He can still pick his guy, and then literally tell Albertans: “Well, I followed the accountability, transformation, and transparency rules. I picked my guy, but I had a public process to make sure it was all fair for everybody.” At least then he can have the insinuation that we had a fair and open and transparent process. It’s a win-win, really. The Minister of Energy really gets it both ways. He gets to have a fair and open procedure. The Associate Minister of AT and T gets to, you know, lobby on: “Woo-hoo. Look at how good we’re doing.” The public get to believe that you actually were fair and open and transparent. Yet you still get to pick your guy. So what’s the big deal?

I mean, you could have done the same thing with Evan Berger, but instead we chose a different route where it was all secret and quiet, and then all of a sudden, you know, we threw him into a job that didn’t exist, with a job description that didn’t exist, and created a wage for him that didn’t exist, and then once it went to the Ethics Commissioner, we created a job description and made sure he had an appropriate title and all that sort of thing.

Given the lack of trust from the public, given the history with Evan Berger, and given that, you know, this government repeatedly appoints their friends and family members to these types of boards it would seem to me that if you want to do that and you want to make sure that we’re open, transparent, and accountable, the best way to do that is to maybe have a conversation with the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation. Then maybe you could come to an agreement about how that process can be open, accountable, and transparent.

Then you could literally – I mean, we’ve done the work for you. But God forbid, we know that you won’t be able to do that. We’ve literally shown you how this can be open and transparent. You can literally see the establishment of a roster. We already knew you weren’t going to agree with it, so that’s okay. But if you want to be open and transparent, what’s the big deal if it goes to an all-party committee? The government controls the all-party committees too, so literally it’s a win-win. You can control it from every angle you have. It’s all a win-win. But you at least give the semblance of seeming to be open and fair. I don’t know what the opposition would be to that because you win anyway, but at least you can start a process where you can actually build on what the Associate Minister of AT and T is trying to do.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to comment?

Mr. Bikman: I heard someone utter, Madam Chair, that this process that’s being recommended through this amendment would be a waste of time. Well, let’s be candid. What goes on in here is a waste of time, I submit, because you already know what you want to do, and you’ve got a majority. You’re just sort of pandering in a sense to an appearance of an open debate, but you know how you’re going to vote, and you know how you have to vote. You can protest as much as you want, but the facts speak for themselves. No one dares vote in favour of what your constituents want. You assume that because you’ve been elected, that gives you the freedom to vote the way that the party tells you to vote, and that’s really not fair and open. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has the floor.

Mr. Bikman: Glad to see that you’re all still awake.

An Hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Bikman: I am and the people that voted for me. Are you?

You can’t just say that you have a policy of transparency and openness and accountability. Just saying it doesn’t make it so. You’ve got to actually walk the talk. I think that’s what my young friend was trying to say. Talk is cheap. We need to walk the talk. If you’re going to be accountable and transparent and open, you can’t just say it; you’ve got to do it. We’re just asking you to do it. The people that we represent would like to see that happen. People really do need a say in these kinds of things. We need to see what the qualifications are of people and why they’re being considered. And you know what? If you didn’t have the track record you’ve got, you wouldn’t have this opposition to what you’re trying to railroad us into doing.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A6? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’d just get up and again support this amendment. I think that when it goes through the process of having it through the Standing Committee on Leg. Offices, it gives everybody an opportunity to talk about it. I guess I don’t see the problem with having a discussion about who’s qualified and who’s not qualified for a position.

In that, I support the amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to comment on amendment A6?

Seeing none, we’ll call the vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A6 lost]

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chair. The debate on Bill 2 tonight has been scintillating, to say the least. I’m sure we would want to do much more, but we have had guests patiently waiting for us to get to Bill 3, so I would move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 2 and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Mr. Casey: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 3 Education Act

[Debate adjourned November 8: Mr. Eggen speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 3, the new Education Act, that will be enshrined in law after this. Now, I will tell you at the outset that I will be voting against this bill, but I will go through some of the things that I found positive in the bill, some of the things that I hope will be reflected in a new education system, and then get to the more contentious aspect of the bill, which is more a principle or a philosophy, something that I personally can't compromise on, and in fact the Alberta Liberal caucus won't compromise on; that is, the way we treat the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as well as the Alberta Human Rights Act in this province. Under no circumstances will we support a bill that either does not enshrine those rights or, even if it does, sends mixed messages to groups that those rules do not apply.

I understand this act has been a long time coming. The hon. Minister of Human Services, I believe, started the inclusive education talks in 2008. He then continued around the province for a great many years, moving the stages and processes and consultations on this bill widely and broadly for much of his tenure as the Minister of Education. In fact, he originally tabled the Education Act. I believe it was Bill 18 in its prior form, and in that bill were much of the provisions we see here at this time. That hon. minister in his wisdom chose to include the reflections in section 16 of the act, the contentious portion, that the terms of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act were applied. Like I said earlier, the hon. minister is an intelligent man. He understands that words matter and the way that we write legislation matters.

We then had the hon. Deputy Premier take over the file. He did some more consulting, did some more work, had some more meetings with community groups and stakeholders throughout this province. He, too, then tabled a bill. I believe it was last March, and I believe it was Bill 2, the Education Act. That bill, too, contained a recognition that our Alberta education system in all its forms, fashions, and the like would be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act. I would also suggest, because he's a smart man, that he understands that words matter and that people interpret them by what was written and what was done.

Let's get to the merits of some of the act. I like the fact that some of the language in the act reflects an inclusive education system. It reflects the fact that we have many people with special needs in our province who deserve an opportunity to learn. It includes a provision that will enforce the laws to have children go to school till 17. I know full well that's a difficult law to enforce, but it's a statement of principle from this government to members of society that school is so important that you will attend until you're 17. It's a statement of principle. We all know that we can't necessarily enforce that, but as a statement of principle that says something about us. It's a statement that I am proud of, that that happened.

I note that I also enjoy the provision that says that you will be allowed to receive education to complete your high school until the age of 21. A noble cause. We have significant challenges with our graduation rates here in this province. Allowing kids who drop out, maybe to pursue the working world or something else, an opportunity to know that the school doors will be opened to them when they are ready and encouraging that opportunity to complete their high school education is very important. I believe this government should be applauded for it. We have a recognition that if our society is to go anywhere, our kids need to be educated further. If they don't complete their high school education, the consequences are not only dire for that individual as they generally earn less and have more recidivism with the law and the like; it also hurts our province. It hurts us in the fact that we don't have an individual who could be reaching his fullest potential. I agree with that.

I know school boards were very happy with the natural power provisions. Hopefully, when the details come out in regulation, this will enable them the freedom and flexibility that they need to run the best education systems in their local jurisdictions. I believe that was also a good move.

There is much in this bill that I admire, much in this bill that sets the direction for the next probably 25 years. It was 25 years, I think, since the last education bill came into this province, so this is not a bill that's going to be opened up on a regular basis.

But now I have to get into my concerns. Largely, they stem from what I went through earlier: the process by which this bill, at least under two former ministers, included protections in section 16 under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act. This is important because words matter and messages sent to the education community at large about their importance are very, very important to me and to many members of this community. For instance – let's be blunt – people were worried about the term “sexual orientation.” Okay? That was what they were concerned about. Many groups in our province staged a protest at the Legislature saying that they had an obligation to not be included under this act, that, no, the law of the land did not apply to them because of their unique circumstances. Largely that was home-schooling groups.

I understand. I'm a pragmatist. Madam Speaker, I understand that home-schooling is something that we allow in this province and something that I think works in certain instances. I'm also fully well aware that home-schooling by its nature is a private responsibility of the parents. By no means did the act, whether it was written in legislation – there was really little application to the actual principle. It's much like the situation where we say to kids: you shall go to school to 17. Well, Lord knows, if a 16-year-old doesn't want to go to school, the Minister of Education is going to have a pretty hard time getting him to go to school. It's similar to the way the home-schoolers presented the argument.

One. Let's face it; for them really to be covered by the act, essentially, their son or daughter who is being home-schooled would have to file the complaint that they were being discriminated against. Does it seem logical that that's going to happen? The second thing. If people had bothered to read the Alberta Human Rights Act, the only section that could in any form or fashion apply is on publications. It says that for publications people have every right if they're of the same religious group or otherwise to communicate as they see fit. In any event, if people had bothered to look at the legislation, to look at the way it was written, it had no practical or real application to them. It was simply, I guess, to use a statement from the Bible, a banging gong and a noisy cymbal that was clanging outside of the Legislature, and people saw rights being infringed on that really weren't.

Nevertheless, because this government has now taken that language out of section 16, that group of people and others do not believe that the Alberta Human Rights Act applies to them. I read it on the Alberta home-school defence website: we won; we're allowed to do our thing, so send a thank you letter to the Premier for recognizing that this draconian language in the Alberta Human Rights Act does not apply to us home-schoolers; we are allowed to do what we would wish to do on promoting whatever values. Those were generally – let's be blunt – to teach that being gay is a sin.

I'm also pragmatic enough. My father filled my head full of nonsense, and every parent in this province has the right to fill their kid's head full of nonsense. We have to figure it out for ourselves, okay? That is the right of each and every parent in this province.

That being said, the way this government writes legislation matters for what we believe in as a society. It matters what messages we're sending out, and they're statements of what we as a society believe in. To use an American term, we hold these truths to be self-evident, okay? We hold the Alberta Human Rights Act and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to be self-evident. Because of the process that is involved, that two former ministers included the Human Rights Act, section 16, and the new act didn't include that, it sent a mixed message, whether it was real, implied, or otherwise. That language says something about us. In my view, that is wrong. I don't think we're on the right side of what is fair and reasonable and creates an attitude of respect. For that reason, I will not be supporting this bill, for that alone.

Now let's get back to the overall Education Act. Everything that's included there is all words. It's all bluster. Unless we commit ourselves to funding education, to moving forward with some of the things that we've said in this House are true – moving to kindergarten, junior kindergarten, and the like – putting our money where our mouth is, that we recognize that education matters, all of the words and rhetoric in that bill do not mean a thing. We have to properly fund education. We have to ensure through our funding, through our cheque writing, that every kid has every opportunity to learn. Our examples through the way we support our education system through proper funding will be more the telling of the tale of how we survive and thrive as a province, more so than any bill that is written.

Thank you for allowing me the time to speak, Madam Speaker, and I look forward to the rest of the comments.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) now applies. We have five minutes for any questions or comments. Would anybody like to use Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll call the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I feel like it's déjà vu all over again. I'm pretty sure I was clean shaven when we started the discussion on the Education Act. That said, actually, I'm pretty sure I was clean shaven when we started the discussion on Bill 2 tonight, too, for what it's worth.

I think we've made some great headway on the Education Act, and I am going to be supporting it, but I would be remiss if I didn't mention a couple of things that still trouble me and, I think, many Albertans. I think there's much good in this legislation though, Madam Speaker.

You know, the bullying aspect of it is terrific. I just want to share a couple of things. My daughter is in grade 1 at Prairie Waters elementary school. I think a lot of schools are trying to deal with bullying. They have a pledge that they read out on the loudspeaker, and she was one of them that got to read little things like "I won't stand by." "I will stand up." "I won't watch someone get picked on because I'm a do-something person." You know, on and on and on. I think we're trying to change the culture of bullying and get rid of it, frankly, in schools. I think teachers, administrators, parents all play a hand in it. I'm just absolutely stoked to see that our government is trying to lead the way on it as well. I think it's one of several really good things in the Education Act, and I want to applaud that.

I also want to applaud the Education minister for his work on the bill and the countless stakeholders that took part. I can't imagine all of the hours, all of the people that were consulted and had their viewpoints put forward. Education is such an immense field. Everybody is so passionate about it. You'll never get something that everybody agrees with. I just think it's a magnificent effort, as we said, 25 years in the making. Let's move ahead, not backward.

That said, there are a couple of things I want to mention that I think we could have done better on. Anybody want to guess what the first one is about? I'll give you a hint. It is the no-zero policy employed in some parts of this province. I think we had a real opportunity, Madam Speaker, to change for the better the education system for Alberta kids. I think we let one go by, probably for political reasons, when we all knew what the right thing to do was.

There are two sides to that debate. I will say first and foremost, before I speak to it, that I completely respect the stakeholders that did not support, you know, pushing forth some kind of amendment to eliminate the no-zero policy. They have reasons on that side of the debate, and I understand it. I don't necessarily agree with it, but I've had great discussions with those that are opposed to it, and you always have to respect the other side of a debate.

I don't necessarily respect the government on it because I think that our job as MLAs, our job in government is to listen to Albertans, and Albertans spoke loud and clear on this. The noise was deafening in this province that it's not good for students to teach them that accountability doesn't matter. We had a chance to put forth 16 words: ensure that teachers are free to assign grades of zero for work not submitted by students. I would just put to you that if that's offensive to somebody, I cannot understand why that would be. I cannot understand why that would be. When Albertans rise up and say, "We would like this for our students," why can't we make that change?

If you've read it, the act has hundreds of references to what the minister can do, what the minister should do, what the minister shall do. This would have been another clear indication that we did listen to Albertans and we did do what was right, what our constituents asked us to do. That's where I always come at it from. I heard it loud and clear, and I would bet that many probably did, and we're still going to hear about it for the next, oh, three and half years or so. I would suggest it will probably come up again. I don't think it was really offensive.

To the point on teachers, who best to judge what mark to give our kids? Who do we want to make an assessment of our children and their work? I would suggest that we give them the freedom to do that.

An Hon. Member: Not the government.

Mr. McAllister: I would agree, not the government and not the bureaucracy. It's shameful that we would allow the bureaucracy to determine what we do. That's what I'm getting at.

Again I say with respect to the stakeholders that have their own agenda, that I understand autonomy and how they're coming at it, but I think that we needed to come at it with some courage and say: this is better for our kids. It's probably better for teachers, too, from those I speak to. We could have made some headway there. Thank you for listening to me make my point on that.

The other point I'd like to talk about is school fees. I'll say right up front that there is no easy answer to this subject, but I think we again have an opportunity to show some leadership and ban at least mandatory school fees in this province. It's gotten to a point where as a parent of three now – well, one has just finished and one has not started, so I guess I'm paying for one – you're not really sure what you're paying for from year to year.

I do have a great privilege as education advocate to travel and talk to, you know, boards and parents and teachers, and I hear it all the time, particularly from those that are having a tough time making ends meet. We may not be in that category here, so it's easy to dismiss it and say that you can write these extra cheques. But for those that do, it adds up when you have to pay for noon supervisory fees, and you have to pay for locker fees, and you have to pay for administration and photocopying. Look, face the facts. At some point in the last 10, 15 years – I don't know when it was – something went awry here with fees.

Now, I'm not quick to assign government the blame and say, "Maybe you're not giving boards enough money" or to assign boards the blame and say "Maybe you were doing the wrong thing," but I think we have to recognize that this went awry somewhere, and we need to fix it for Albertans because it's why we're here. People are PO'd about it, and I know we're going to hear more about it in the years to come. Fees have gotten ridiculous. We have 3,000 parents being chased down by a collection agency for not paying their public school fees. That's a problem, so I wish we would've acted on it.

There are 62 boards in the province. I believe completely in autonomy, and I believe that they have a tough job to try and balance what government gives them with the needs of their parents, with the needs of their students. You know, it's an admirable attempt to try and make up for shortfalls.

Lethbridge, for instance, does not charge mandatory school fees. I always say, no matter what the subject – I said it earlier tonight on another issue – that we can always look to a model that works and learn from it. Maybe there's something there that we could take and apply, open up the dialogue and find out a way to give parents a break because I do believe they're being nickelled and dimed to death, and I do believe that they're tired of it.

We have another issue that I think is probably going to become a bigger issue. I would just ask for those of you that haven't heard about it in here in terms of education to talk to some of the teachers in your riding, and maybe we can put our heads together and find out a way to fix it. The issue of inclusion is causing some problems in schools. It's not because the concept isn't right. It is right. It's because, again, there isn't a one-size-fits-all approach to inclusion.

I tell you that I've heard this in at least 10 different areas that I've been, not just my own board. What's happening in some of the ridings is that when you have a class with three or four ESL students, English as a second language students, which may have a different acronym now as they change frequently, and then you've got two, three, four, five, six students that are below the level of learning by two, three years, and you have a couple of special-needs students, maybe somebody with severe – pick the condition – Tourette's or something like that, you've got a problem.

The teacher can no longer be all things to all people. I hear that the supports aren't there. It would be easy for me to say: well, geez; I wish that government would just give everybody way more money and we could really fix that. But I believe in fiscal responsibility, so I don't think that's the answer. I do believe there's a shortage of supports getting to the classroom, but my biggest concern is that we're putting teachers in a position that they're not comfortable with, that goes beyond the realm of teaching. I've heard it from several teachers.

An Hon. Member: Hundreds of students.

Mr. McAllister: You're right.

I think what happens is that every student suffers from that. It's not fair to the student with special needs. It's not fair to the student that's Larry Lunch Bucket, you know, that's trying to get through, like the Member for Little Bow. I mean, he might need a little extra attention.

It's not fair to the advanced student that might get a little more one-on-one time. In the end we're punishing students, so I just tell you that this is a big issue. I hope that maybe – the Member for Calgary-South East today came up with a private member's bill that was very good and that we all discussed. Maybe we can put our heads together on this one and meet with stakeholders and find a way to make a positive because I really believe that we've got a problem. I've heard it from several teachers.

Mr. Hancock: It's both action and prudence. It's been discussed for years.

Mr. McAllister: Sorry. I'm half distracted because I'm trying to answer that question, and I didn't quite catch it all.

Whether we can do anything about it or not after the fact, I guess, is maybe, as a rookie, what I need to understand. I just think it's an issue in education, and I raise it as we discuss the Education Act because I hear it from educators.

I've made a couple of points that I think are pertinent, and again, as I said at the start, I do so with respect to the other side of that argument and the other side of that presentation, particularly from the stakeholders because I believe that they have reasons for doing the things that they do. I just know this: I was put here, you know, by people that expect me to do what they asked me to do. I think that in this case we could have gone a little bit further. I'm proud of the changes made to the Education Act by the current minister. I wish the previous minister had been a little more forthcoming back in the spring, but it is what it is. May we all do all we can for the betterment of our kids going forward and put this bill through, and then do all we can for our administrators and teachers to make sure they can do the best job they can for our kids.

Madam Speaker, it's always a pleasure to speak on a bill such as this. Thank you.

11:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now in effect. Are there any members who would wish to comment or question? The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to talk to a couple of points presented by the hon. member here. First off, to start with, the no-zero policy. To me as an educator the no-zero policy has no place in a school act. It is a very specific thing that a district along with its district personnel needs to decide upon. A no-zero policy within a school act is simply going to say that teachers, in whatever circumstance that they should decide, don't have to advocate for that child who hasn't handed in an assignment. That's where the no-zero policy comes into play. It's not a no-zero policy for those students who don't want to be accountable. That will catch up to them eventually.

I will tell you from personal experience, Madam Speaker, that when I have had to advocate for students who weren't able to hand in an assignment or who weren't able to keep up with their studies, it had everything to do with the fact that that student needed an advocate and needed somebody to be standing alongside them to walk them through whatever their differentiated need was. I've taught kids that, for them, walking across a desert in order to find their mother was something that they had to do, and then they landed in Canada. Here they are learning a new language and a new culture. For them, handing in an assignment when their parents aren't there, like many students' parents aren't, is a difficult thing.

If we don't have teachers who are being held accountable within a district because that's the district's decision to be able to make sure that they advocate and walk alongside that child, then we affect all kinds of things. The domino effect will continue. That means that we will have higher rates of students who don't graduate. I will tell you this: those students that I have taught who are new Canadians absolutely deserve to graduate and absolutely deserve to have somebody, a teacher, a principal, advocate for them and be able to understand that each and every one of those children that we teach has an individual need.

A personal example as well. My own daughter has what is called a code. She has a learning disability, and she has an anxiety disorder. Without the advocacy of the school, my daughter isn't going to hand in that assignment because she is going to get overwhelmed. She's going to need the principal of the school and she's going to need the teachers in the school to have an understanding of what she requires. Sometimes she might hand in that assignment three weeks later. But you know what? In life that's how things go.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a question?

Ms Cusanelli: I do have a question. I wonder why it is exactly that you think that schools should not on their own be able to decide such a thing and why you think that the government ought to be taking the responsibility that is inherently the district's to work with its personnel and understand the culture of its district. Could you answer that?

Mr. McAllister: There's a lot to speak to. Thank you to the hon. minister. That was top shelf. Thank you for the question. It's interesting that the minister contradicts the Education minister on the other side, who has openly said that the no-zero policy is ridiculous and he doesn't have any problems with a zero. In fact, I think half of that side pretty much said that, but let me get to your point.

First of all, you mentioned the School Act and why we should mandate it in the School Act. This wasn't really the question. It was sort of the start of the pontification. The School Act is in place as a policy for boards to follow. It's public education. It's what we do. As I've said a hundred times during these discussions, there are hundreds of references to what the government, what the minister can, can't do, shall do in the act. We ask ourselves: could we have done some good with the no-zero policy? I don't think for one second that any Albertan thinks this debate is about immigrants that can't speak the language or is about a teacher sitting at the desk with a red Sharpie waiting for the bell to ring and the assignment deadline to pass so that they can circle a zero and say: ha, you're going to fail. I don't think any teacher in Alberta is that kind of teacher.

That's not the point of this issue. The point of this issue is – I'll speak to it from a personal standpoint. Look, I had a son graduate last year who more often than I'd like to admit didn't get assignments turned in. We got a phone call at home. You know, you're on a hockey bus – I'm not making an excuse for him because I rarely do that but just as an example – and you don't get the assignment turned in. At the end of the day, I think, we do our kids . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you very much for that.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

We'll move on to our next speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to the third reading of Bill 3, the Education Act, and also, I feel, my responsibility not only to my constituents but especially to past students and as a teacher. This act is a work that has been a long time in the coming. It's sad for me that there are certain elements that are missing from this piece of legislation that we'll be voting on likely this evening.

First and foremost, I think, I find it a little bit at odds, the fact that our former Premier of this great province Peter Lougheed introduced the Alberta Human Rights Act in 1982, which has been a part of previous education acts and is now being removed by this current government. I find that frustrating for a number of reasons. First and foremost, it's one thing to say that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act have been replaced by nice language that supposedly covers the same thing. Unfortunately, if that were true, then I ask the hon. members across the aisle why they took them out to begin with.

This is something that ensures that people's rights are protected, that students and individuals aren't discriminated against, and it's something that needs to be in there. I mean, I can appreciate the fact that in this new Education Act bullying is a topic that is covered quite thoroughly and is an importance and a priority for this government. I think an antibullying strategy is a priority for all 87 members.

My concern is that with Bill 44 in place there are limits then. If an act of bullying is transpiring in a school and is based on jokes about a student's sexual orientation, et cetera, parents can then opt their child out of being a part of that discussion, which is quite alarming. I challenge members to go beyond the word "tolerance."

I find that word is insufficient in that we should be accepting and celebrating everyone and all people for who they are. Unfortunately, in this day and age we still do need legislation to protect all individuals and their rights. I look forward to the day when that legislation isn't necessary, when we are truly in a society that is respectful and accepting of all people everywhere. However, there's much work to be done. It's with great sadness and frustration that those two documents are taken out of this current bill.

As well, I think, something that other members have touched on: the issue of school fees and how they're continuing to climb. You've got many families that are struggling to make ends meet. You know, they're being hit with fees that 10, 20, 30 years ago didn't exist and were covered. So it begs the question: given the fact that we're living in the wealthiest province in the country, how is it that we continue to download these costs onto families and parents which should be included and should be a part of our public education system?

Another point I'd like to touch on. The Minister of Education recently had talked about his position of being in favour of the corporatization of our public school system. For myself and New Democrats in this province I have a real concern when Walmart can open a high school or we can have a McPlayschool. I find that there isn't a place for businesses and corporations to be running schools. Public education needs to be just that. It needs to be public. We need to have true, open, and spirited debate on different sides of different issues, and when you have a business or a multinational corporation that's able to invade a school and to put forward only their position or their point of view, students aren't getting a holistic education. They're not looking at all different sides of the story, as it were.

Again, you know, if we open the door an inch, well, we know what happens when we do that. We need to keep public education public. It needs to be publicly funded, publicly delivered. Corporations and businesses can be discussed but should not be running our schools or paying for much-needed supplies. Again, if this government takes education as a priority – you know, it's a matter of how we're managing our dollars. If education is a priority, then our education system should get the dollars it needs, which leads me to my next point, talking about school closures.

The issue that I have with this government downloading that responsibility solely onto school boards to make that unilateral decision is that it's a way for this government to basically opt out of and shirk their responsibility. I say that because at the moment with this current bill the government can say: "Well, if a school closes, that was a school board's decision, not ours. Our hands are clean on this." Unfortunately, no, they're not. I mean, you look at how school boards are funded and that formula. They're not the ones that decide how many dollars they get. There's a formula, and I'll speak to that in a moment, how that's quite antiquated in today's day and age. That responsibility needs to continue to be shared.

My concern with school closures is that schools are really the hub of a community. I mean, that's where you have families and people gathering not only for what goes on in the school during school hours but in the evening as well and on weekends. There are many families that will move to a community because of its school and often what mature neighbourhoods can offer. When you have a school closing in a mature neighbourhood, it now contributes to families moving out of that neighbourhood, which further gentrifies the neighbourhood, which further, you know, hollows out our mature neighbourhoods and does the opposite of what I believe we should be encouraging, which is the best possible use of our space and land so that we can cut down on the urban sprawl that many of our urban centres are experiencing.

I think school closures is an issue that we and this government need to do much more to prevent. One of the other reasons that schools are having to close in mature neighbourhoods is part of the utilization rate, the formula on how schools are funded. Many mature schools are actually penalized. There's a space utilization rate formula that takes into consideration square footage and space usage. Well, mature schools have larger gymnasiums. They have large hallways, stairwells, and all of that space is actually counted against them. Unless we want our teachers and our educators to be teaching in the coat room and in the hallway and under the stairs, they're going to be penalized for having a larger facility.

Earlier my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View commented on inclusive education. I'd like to continue or at least add to what the hon. member said. I think inclusive education, being an educator, is a wonderful concept. It's fantastic. However, if we want it to do what it is intended to do, then there needs to be the appropriate amount of supports available.

What I'm talking about is that, you know, you have a classroom with 25 to 35 students, and you have one teacher. You have a handful of students with a variety of different needs. Some of them might be behavioural. Some of them might be physical, special needs that some students have. We have English language learners, students that are learning English for the first time, all placed in one classroom alongside other students. How can a teacher or an educator possibly deliver the highest quality of education to every student in that room? The truth of the matter is that they can't. Sure, we may say: well, we'll throw an aide in the classroom. Again, for that number of students that's a disservice to all of the students in the classroom. It's unfair to the teacher, it's unfair to the parents, and it's unfair to the education and future of all of our students.

Therefore, if we want inclusive education to work in this province, there need to be the supports. When I say "supports," I mean there needs to be adequate teacher training so that they can work with students with a variety of needs in order to provide the best possible education and services. There needs to be access to supports, whether we have students coming with empty bellies that are hungry, that need nutrition in order to be able to concentrate and learn, or students coming with inappropriate clothing or students that need a variety of other supports to be there.

I am a fan of the concept of inclusive education. I've seen it work. I've actually experienced it in my own teaching career. But I can tell you that in order for it to work, there need to be a large number of resources available from materials to adequate staff to reducing our class sizes to ensure that, again, students are getting the highest quality of education and that we are truly preparing young Albertans for the future and to take us forward in the 21st century.

You know, it's with frustration that I have to share with this Assembly that I will not be supporting this bill. Although there are certain aspects of it that I think are a stride forward, there are too many things wrong with this bill. Unfortunately, our amendments that the Alberta New Democrats put forward, that addressed each of these issues that I've spoken of, were voted down. Otherwise, the New Democrat caucus would have been happy to support this bill.

It doesn't go far enough to protect our students, to ensure that their rights are protected. It doesn't go far enough to ensure that our public schools are not going to be overrun by corporations and that schools aren't going to be closed down and that this government can again wash its hands of its responsibility and pass it on to our school boards.

I mean, there are other issues that I haven't touched on. The fact that there still are provincial achievement exams for grade 3 students is a ridiculous usage of resources. An overwhelming number of teachers have called for diagnostic assessments for students in grade 3, that can then help teachers identify what supports these students need in order to be successful as opposed to seeing how they rank on an exam that isn't going to serve their own needs as lifelong learners.

So it's unfortunate that I stand here and say that I will not be supporting this bill. The Alberta New Democrats do not support this bill as is.

I thank you, Madam Speaker.

11:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View under Standing Order 29(2)(a). Please proceed.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you. I appreciate where the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is coming from. You know, I don't often say that. I think that quite often we differ in our viewpoints on an issue. I'd like to ask him to go a little bit further on the subject of inclusion because I believe the member to be a teacher and a parent. I'm wondering if the member has heard, Madam Speaker, from teachers on the inclusion issue specifically. You know, how are they describing the situation in the classroom to him, or what does he see?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I'll thank the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View. That's a great question. You know, as a teacher I have spoken with many of my colleagues. I have quite a few friends that are teachers. Honestly, they find it quite frustrating. Suddenly you have an idea where you want to throw all these different students with differing needs and differing levels into the same classroom. We call it inclusion, and we say: look how fantastic this is. But if the schools, the teachers, the school boards aren't given the resources they need to help all of these students to be successful, it's a system that's set up to fail. It's unfortunately failing students, it's failing teachers, it's failing parents, it's failing families, and it's failing communities.

The concept is correct in that I do agree that students can benefit from being in a classroom, being together with different students of different abilities. But in order for that to happen, teachers need the supports. We need to reduce our class sizes to ensure that there's a lower ratio of students to teachers or students to staff. We need to ensure that staff have the proper education for this.

You know, when I went through university and took my bachelor of education, there was only one class in a four-year degree that I had to take on inclusive education, on inclusion, one class to deal with all students with various needs. That's insufficient. It's inappropriate. It's not enough training.

Alberta is a booming province. There are many families moving to Alberta, so we have a higher number of new Canadians. We have a higher number of English language learners. That's the old ESL. They're now called English language learners, for those of you who aren't educators. That's fantastic, but a lot of them will come and be thrown into a grade 6 classroom when they speak less than a sentence of English. A teacher feels torn. They want to help this student, but they can't be in 20 places at once. They either don't have the training or the skills or the time to help that student to improve their language. Therefore, that student, then, is flustered, is frustrated with the system, doesn't understand what's going on, and now we have other behaviours that could possibly erupt, or we have students that don't feel like going to school.

I've talked to schools. They might be able to pull a student out for a class here or a class there to do some small instruction for improving their language. Wonderful. But it needs to happen more than one block a day when for the rest of the day the student doesn't understand what's going on.

You've got a teacher that feels frustrated. I mean, teachers in this province and, I would argue, in this country and everywhere want their students to succeed. I mean, people go into teaching because of the sense of pride and accomplishment that they feel when they help students to be successful. It's unfair to teachers to put them in this predicament where they cannot help every single one of their students to be successful.

It's frustrating for parents. You know, some at one time had an adequate number of supports if their children had severe needs where now that worker is being shared amongst 25 students, 35 students, and now a lot of that one-on-one time is cut back because of inclusive education.

You know, I'm very much a fan of it. I think it's possible. But, again, the resources need to be allocated. The government needs to do a better job consulting with teachers, consulting with educators, consulting with those in the field who know what they need to be successful.

Again, we're living in the richest jurisdiction in the country. If education and ensuring that our students are getting a proper education was a priority, the government would allocate resources for that. I mean, it's a matter of priorities. Unfortunately, this is another example of the government saying something that sounds wonderful on paper and failing to deliver in practice.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 3, the Education Act, and I will be supporting the Education Act going forward. But before we go to that point, I'd like to just make a few points.

As a parent of two children and one of them in the system right now, it's really important to me that when my child goes to school, she knows that there are consequences to everything she does. She also knows that she's accountable to the teacher, she's accountable to me as a parent, but more importantly she's accountable to herself. Each and every day we drill into our children's heads that in order to be a good citizen of this province, in order to be a good Canadian you need to have a work ethic, you need to have responsibility, you need to be accountable, and you need to be trustworthy.

Part of that comes with your homework assignments, and some of that is taught by the teacher. The teacher in my own school is awesome.

Mr. McAllister: Most are.

Mrs. Towle: I would agree that most are. I'm not saying that at all. I'm just talking about my school. I've a fabulous, fabulous school in my riding. St. Marguerite's is where my child goes.

In the case of my student's teacher and her students all the way up to grade 5 there was an expectation of each and every student in her class that when an assignment was given, they had to actually hand it in. There was an expectation that when that assignment was handed in, it would be graded. There was an expectation that if you missed the assignment, then you would get a zero. There's also the expectation that if you get that zero or if you fail that assignment, you have the opportunity to rewrite. This is important. The teachers in my school go above and beyond, as most teachers do. The no-zero policy is not about punishing our students. Almost every single teacher that I've talked to – and I know that in my daughter's school literally every single one of them gives them every single opportunity to make up that mark.

To be fair, my 10-year-old daughter was lazy. She got an assignment, she was supposed to study for a test, and she blew it. She blew it on Thursday afternoon. She came home with 21 per cent. She said: but, Mom, that's satisfactory. So I went through an education process of what's a passing grade and what's not a passing grade and how that's not satisfactory. We spent all weekend learning about cumulus clouds and all those fun things because her teacher gave her the opportunity on Monday to redo that assignment and to redo that mark, gave her that opportunity.

Mr. McAllister: Didn't they all fail?

Mrs. Towle: Yeah. To go further than that, the whole class failed. There was not a single mark higher than 36 per cent, and that teacher offered that opportunity to every single student. I don't know what her mark is because it's midnight, and we're here. I have no idea how she did today, but I know for a fact that if she was not successful today, her teacher would give her another opportunity in a different manner.

That's teaching my daughter responsibility. It's also teaching her that she has a role to play, that if you're given something and there's an expectation of you, you have a role to play in the response that you give back. That's creating better Albertans.

I also know that in a neighbouring classroom where that teacher has sort of a similar teaching strategy, there's a child with autism. They don't give that child zeros. They find different avenues to ensure that child is learning, to ensure that child has the opportunity to have a positive education experience, and to ensure that that child goes through the school system without being punished. My child is given the same opportunity, but that teacher knows the difference between what abilities each one of those students has.

We talk about local autonomy. We talk about: give it to the school boards. Well, if we're truly going to talk about autonomy, who better to know the capabilities and understand the abilities of these students than the teacher who is with them five days a week, eight hours a day? That teacher knows if that student is capable of performing better than a zero. That teacher knows if the will is there to make up that mark.

If we truly want to be fair about autonomy, autonomy doesn't end at the school board level. Autonomy can go further, and that's what the amendment from the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View allowed for. If we're truly going to talk about autonomy, let's talk about it. But why are you saying to a teacher that you can't do something when that teacher is with that student every single day?

There's an added effect there. As we go forward, when these young learners head out into the workforce at 18 or 21 or whatever day we choose that they're going to go to the workforce, employers have an expectation that they show up for work, that they're given a task, and that they perform it properly and perform it with capability.

In university if you get a zero, you don't get a degree. There is no leeway in university for passing and getting your degree if you don't try. If you get zeroes all the way through, you don't get a degree, period. So literally what we're doing is that we're saying: with all from grade 12 downwards we'll be tolerant, and we'll do all these things, and you don't really have to work that hard. But when we hit university, it's a whole different world, and then when we hit employment, it's a whole different world.

If we literally want to create better Albertans, we have to consider that that amendment would have done that. Clearly, they didn't, and that's fine, but it has to go on record that not every school board supports this and that not every teacher supports this.

Mr. Dorward: That's why we give them the choice.

Mrs. Towle: Absolutely. Let's give them the choice. That's exactly what that amendment did, a hundred per cent. It didn't say that you have to give a zero, and it didn't say that you didn't have to. It said that it allowed the teacher to give a zero if they chose to.

It's interesting. The other night I attended the ASBA awards, a fantastic event. I appreciated that there were six new teachers there that received awards. Each one of them talked about how engaging they were with their students, how each of them had created different methods of teaching. Most of them created different methods of teaching to teach special-needs students or ESL students or students from rural communities that were difficult to keep in school. It was fantastic. They had innovative ideas. They brought tools into the classroom, SMART boards, laptops. The one teacher talked about literally using iPads to work with autistic kids. What a fantastic ability.

The background to that is that we've now come up with a funding model that hurts special-needs funding, and it hurts some schools. In my own area there are at least two schools that are going to be short of upwards of $3 million because of the change to the new funding model for special-needs children. We're talking about inclusiveness, and we're talking about inclusion. As the hon. member with the NDs had said, it's great to talk about inclusion, but if the resources are there – it's not always in funding; it might be in training; it might be in ensuring that class sizes are appropriate, those sorts of things – then we need to do it in the right way.

Some of the boards that I've been chatting with have even talked about how they may have to go back to segregation. Well, how does that help our Alberta children? How does it help when we've worked so hard and literally come leaps and bounds forward with inclusion, that just because we changed a funding model, we might have to separate and go back in time? That doesn't seem to me to benefit Alberta children.

I think it's important that we absolutely keep that in mind. When you talk to the new teachers who received the awards last night and you talk to teachers who have been teaching for 30 years – my own mother-in-law was a teacher for 30 years; one of my good friends is a teacher at a French immersion school – each and every one of them is dedicated to this profession. Each and every one of them that I've talked to is literally dedicated to each and every child in their room. All they want to do for each and every one of those children is create a better learning experience. We need to make sure that they're able to do that.

By not acknowledging the no-zero policy, by changing the funding model of inclusion, we're not doing that, and that is going to create a situation 10 years from now that is going to be damaging to our children. We need to make sure they're responsible, and we need to make sure that our children know that for the tasks that they're given, there is a consequence and an action for everything they do. We do it at home. We do it in the community. There's no reason why that can't extend to schools, and every single teacher that I've met is doing that. The problem is that they're limited.

We can go on and on and talk about why a certain teacher was fired, whether he was fired for insubordination or if he was fired because the insubordination came as a result of him giving a zero. That's all semantics. The reality of that amendment to this bill did not force any school board to enforce a no-zero policy, and it didn't put any teacher in a position where they had to be insubordinate to their principal so that they could get fired. What's important is that right now we are putting some teachers in the position where the only way they can effectively teach their students and the only way they can give a zero when it's deserved, and only when it's deserved, is that they have to be insubordinate to their principal and have it result in a disciplinary hearing. That's just not the right way to do things.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a), five minutes of comments or questions, now applies. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to follow up on a point that my colleague raised in referring to the no-zero policy. Earlier it was mentioned that perhaps teachers would flunk kids that couldn't speak the language, flunk kids that were having learning difficulties or maybe with special needs. To the member: did you ever think that that was the intention of the no-zero policy, that any teacher in this province would be ready to do that sort of thing, or is that just ludicrous?

Mrs. Towle: I absolutely a hundred per cent believe that it is not the intention of any single teacher in this province. I believe every single teacher in this province is trying their best to make sure that students get through the education system in a positive manner. They're trying to find the best learning tools to ensure that that happens, and they're trying to ensure that each one is successful in whatever goals are set for them.

Clearly, that is not the intention of any of them. However, in the instances where a student puts zero effort into the assignment that's given, where a student ignores their ability to get any mark, a zero says that they actually, literally, did nothing. They could have gotten 14 per cent; they could have gotten 21 per cent. If that's the best that they can do, that's fine. But zero implies absolutely zero. It means you put no effort into it whatsoever. Then the teacher goes and he or she says: oh, I'll give you another opportunity to do that. The student takes the opportunity and does nothing again. Then the teacher finds a different method to create the same result of getting a mark. I don't think for a second that any single teacher is sitting in the classroom ready to flunk a student. I think a teacher that would make that decision to give a zero doesn't do it lightly. I think they literally probably stew over it.

I know that in my daughter's case there are many chats with parents long before that zero would ever come. I know even in my case the teacher was kind enough to call me to let me know that, actually, the whole class failed, and she was asking me, "What can we do to help this classroom understand better?" I looked at her and said: "What can I do to help my child understand what you're saying better? You're doing a good job. I don't know the curriculum. How can I assist my child in her study habits or what you're trying to teach her so that she can get a better mark and you can achieve your goals?" I think every single teacher tries to do that. But when we literally say to our students, "It doesn't matter if you get a zero, and I can't give you a zero" and that if they don't want to do the work, they don't have to because they know there's absolutely no consequence to them, that's a sad day.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hehr: Just a question to the hon. member. I appreciate her passion. Does she think that maybe teachers and school boards and the ATA, professional associations who have developed these policies and protocols around marking, encouraging kids to stay in school, might know something about what they're recommending? Or do you think that this is all buffoonery? They use this body of knowledge to craft programs to go forward. The ATA, which teaches 95 per cent of our students, says that they're fine. Okay? School boards across the province say that they're fine. Or do you think they're making these decisions in an absence of any information whatsoever, a vacuum?

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, hon. member. I absolutely do not think that the teachers that have made these decisions in certain school boards are not making them validly. A hundred per cent they probably are. What I am saying is that not every single school board follows that policy, and those school boards also have a validity and a statement to make as well, and those teachers who choose not to follow a no-zero policy have as much value and have as much education and as much input into the system as the school boards that choose to.

The other thing that I would suggest is that I'm not so sure that teachers are making the decision. School boards are making this decision, but I'm not so sure that it's actually coming down to a full teacher level. What I'm hearing in my riding and neighbouring ridings is that that's not the practice of my riding and neighbouring ridings around me. They don't use the no-zero policy. There are two very big school boards in our area.

I'm not suggesting that those who decide to use it are buffoons or anything like that, but what I am suggesting is that there is some ability to be flexible. The amendment allowed for: those who want to use it can; those who don't can't.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. There's no Albertan who does not have some connection to the education system. We all went to school. Many of us have children who are currently in school or have completed their journey through the school system. Many Albertans are teachers or have a friend or relative who is a teacher, who works at a school, or who is involved on a school board.

The Education Act we are debating, which is basically the updating of Alberta's School Act, is so important because, as I said, our education system is one of the few things in the province that almost every Albertan will use. Madam Speaker, we certainly learned last spring that the Education Act is a complex piece of legislation. It is very important that we take the time to get it right.

In general, I am supportive of this third version of the Education Act, as are many of my Wildrose colleagues. Without a doubt, a lot of work has gone into Bill 3, and I think three is the appropriate number for this bill since it is the third stab at the new Education Act. There has been a lot of hard work poured into this legislation from education stakeholders, from public servants, public servants in the Education department, and from folks here in the Legislature, including three different Education ministers. I have been impressed to see that the current Education minister did do his homework before bringing Bill 3 forward and actually talked to Albertans about what they wanted and what they didn't want to be included in the third try of the Education Act. Yet I can't help but feel that despite efforts from all the different sides and all the different groups who have worked hard on this Bill 3, the government has passed up a chance to listen to Albertans after the introduction of this bill and after Albertans had a chance to read through the specifics of the legislation.

Madam Speaker, Albertans had a couple of ideas that the government could have incorporated into this legislation to further improve it. Many Albertans – parents, teachers, and students alike – as has been so often expressed here again tonight, have expressed disagreement with the no-zero policy employed by some school boards in our province. This policy basically prevents teachers from giving a zero to a student for incomplete work, and as has been pointed out, sometimes with the best interests of the student in mind, with the best interests of the student's family, with the best interests of all, it is the right policy to help advocate for this young person.

Albertans across the province became aware of this policy when a teacher in Edmonton was fired for giving a student a zero. I don't think that anyone would dispute that in general teachers will do all they can to make sure that students complete all of their assignments. But when a student absolutely refuses to do their work, teachers should have the discretion to give that student a zero. I have heard parents say so, and I have even heard students themselves say so. The only people who seem to disagree are some of the members on the government side. As a father of three boys sometimes they deserve a zero, sometimes they need a zero, and sometimes it is the best course of action.

Madam Speaker, over and over again I have seen Albertans unite on an issue such as being opposed to a no-zero policy, and I've heard them call upon the government to take action. Over and over again my colleagues and I on this side of the House have reminded the government that the reason all of us are sitting in these seats is to do what Albertans have called us to do, yet over and over again this government tells Albertans that it knows best and refuses to do what Albertans are asking it to do. Too much management.

Another perfect example of this in regard to Bill 3 is on the issue of mandatory school fees. It is increasingly and alarmingly becoming common practice for schools to charge parents more and more in the form of these mandatory school fees. For example, parents are often required to pay fees to cover administration costs, and parents are even charged fees to cover the costs of programs that are mandatory, that students must participate in as part of this curriculum. These fees can certainly add up when you have a few school-aged kids.

I've talked to a few educators and administrators that spend far too much of their productive time chasing fees, turning them over to collection agencies in some instances, phoning parents for bounced cheques, phoning parents who, unfortunately, maybe aren't in a situation where they can currently afford it, wasting important professionals' time and resources and putting undue stress on the important education of some of our children. As a matter of fact, participating in the MLA for a Day program about a week or two ago, I went to a school in Cypress-Medicine Hat that actually had a full-time person sitting there collecting fees. I can't imagine the effectiveness of that position. I can't imagine how that could impact some of the people who temporarily cannot afford it.

What Albertans have asked is for the government to establish some guidelines for school boards around what they can and cannot charge parents for so that parents are required to cover the cost for things like extracurricular programs their children choose to participate in but are not required to cover the cost for things that are a mandatory part of our school system. This seems like common sense to me.

Madam Speaker, the Alberta School Act came into effect in 1988. Twenty four years passed before Albertans will now soon see their school system updated through Bill 3. Twenty four years is a long time. Will Albertans have to wait another 24 years before their concerns such as ending the no-zero policy and getting rid of unnecessary school fees are addressed? I certainly hope that will not be the case.

I have highlighted some of the measures Albertans wanted to see included in the Education Act that, unfortunately, the government refused to include. However, I'm not afraid to give credit where credit is due, and I do thank the Education minister for listening to Albertans and removing the controversial language in section 16 that we saw in the previous Education Act, that could have potentially made all education subject to both the federal Charter and the Alberta Human Rights Act.

It's very, very refreshing for me to see parents involved in school, parents involved in home-schooling, parents with the best interests of their children at heart so willing to take a stance and let the government, let all Albertans know that the education of their children is very, very important and that they want to have the paramount responsibility for it. The decision to instead use the antidiscriminatory language of the previous school act, which, I understand, is what the Wildrose suggested back in the spring, was the right adjustment to make, and I've heard a lot of positive feedback about this from Albertans.

Madam Speaker, as I have said, I am generally supportive of Bill 3. It is a fairly good piece of legislation. Although I am disappointed that the government would not work with the issues that Albertans raised, again, around the no-zero policy and mandatory fees, I will be supporting and voting for the bill, and of course I will still be raising the views of my constituents on the measures they wanted to see included but were not.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, while I'm still on my feet, I would like to thank all the people who worked hard on Bill 3, even to 20 after 12 in the morning. To all the teachers, for all the tools that they need in the education system – I thank all of them for all of their hard work.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

12:20

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a), that allows five minutes for comments or questions. Are there any members who would like to participate?

Seeing none, I would ask if there are any other members who would like to comment on Bill 3? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll make this as fast as possible.

An Hon. Member: No, no. Take your time. It's important.

Mr. Pedersen: It is. I mean, I just want to be on the record for my constituents, so if you could just give me five minutes.

I'm rising in support of Bill 3 for the most part. Although I don't have the good fortune or the privilege to be a parent, it was a hot topic during the election, and we heard a lot about it before, during, and after. It was an issue for parents, it was an issue for teachers, and it was an issue for boards. I heard time and time again from parents how they wanted their rights to be respected by the government and that they wanted the best for their children not only inside the classroom but, you know, to allow the teachers to teach their children. I also heard that the teachers and the boards have been looking for an updated Education Act for some time to deal with today's reality, and I hope that Bill 3 will deliver on this request.

Madam Speaker, we're proud to live in Alberta. You know, we are very lucky to live here. There's no reason that our children should not have a world-class education in a province as great as ours. There's also no reason that our children should not be raised in a strong and free Alberta, an Alberta where parents' rights are respected, and an Alberta where students are truly being put first.

I'm glad to see that the current government has listened to the many concerns that were raised in this sitting as well as the previous session and that parents will have the ultimate say in their children's education. I know that the recognition of parental rights will ultimately provide a better education for our future generations, and making sure that the parents are the ultimate decider will go a long way in that.

Madam Speaker, it's great to see that we have an Education minister that has recognized the many flaws in the previous versions of the legislation and has listened to the concerns of the opposition and the parents and the teachers and the boards. I really appreciate that. You may remember that parents had to actually march to the steps of this very building in order for their voices to be heard. You know, going forward, although it took such measures for their voices to be heard, I hope that the government has learned that you need to meet with the stakeholders and listen no matter what bill we're dealing with. By doing so, the best possible results will be achieved.

I just want to raise one issue. We did bring an amendment forward. The Member for Airdrie, I think, requested a change to the charter schools system to make it easier for them to gain access to the system to make some changes. Right now they're kind of limited in the way that they operate. Medicine Hat is very fortunate to still have operating one of the first three charter schools in the province. That's the CAPE school, and they are a K to 9 school. CAPE stands for the Centre for Academic and Personal Excellence. I've had the good fortune of touring their school. I was awkwardly put in place to be a judge at their science fair this past Saturday. I mean, I haven't done anything like that for 30 years, so it was very interesting to be intimidated by grade 8 students.

An Hon. Member: How'd that work out for you?

Mr. Pedersen: They taught me a lot, and I sat and listened.

Anyway, the amendment, I think, would have gone a long way to allowing charter schools to extend what they're trying to do, to do things a little bit differently, and to make sure that everybody realizes that charter schools are public schools. They are fully funded, and sometimes people get that misconstrued.

Lastly, before I close here, I think probably one of the most important things that this act has brought forward is the tools that teachers and boards and parents and students have been asking for in tackling the bullying issue. I know that efforts were made in previous sessions by other Education ministers to update this act, but I think that the bullying issue is probably one of the most important things, to me anyway. I sincerely hope that this new bill gives the tools to the educators, to the boards, to the parents, to the students to finally put an end to bullying in school systems. I think that's very important. I sincerely hope that this bill does provide the tools and the guidance and the direction required to end this.

You know, let's put this through. Let's get this bill into the hands of the educators, the parents, the teachers, the boards. Let's see them make a future of this. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) is there any member interested in participating? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you. Just wondering, the member mentioned his intimidation by grade 8 students. Have you seen the movie Adam Sandler starred in, and could you have taken any of those tips as to how you might have fended off those kids?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, see if you can make it relevant.

Mr. Pedersen: I can't.

Mr. McAllister: You know, I think I'm just going to withdraw the question, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak on Bill 3 in third reading?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Denis: I move that we call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:28 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 20, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, let us be reminded of the great privilege we have to live in a province and in a country that allows us to be free, free of persecution for our cultural or religious or other personal beliefs. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to tell you it brings me particularly great pleasure today to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Alberta Legislature fine Polish-Canadians who are members of the Polonez Polish Folk Arts Ensemble. They are sitting in your gallery today. You, I know, know them through your previous engagement in the world of culture and dancing, but I know that all members would have met them at one time or another as they perform not only throughout the province and the country but throughout the world. With us today are John Szumlas, the honorary consul of Poland; Patrycja Zatonska; Daniel Komaniecki; Marek Komaniecki; Monika MacDonald; Courtney Flisiak; Mikolaj Moss; Zygmunt Bloniarz; Dr. Walenty Michalik, the choreographer and long-time mentor of the ensemble; Anna Michalik, his wife; Izabella Common; Czarek Dembowski; Marcin Szczepanski; Joanna Walczak; and Aleksandra Cieslik. Also joining them today is Zack Ziolkowski, whom you would know as legislative assistant to the hon. Member for Calgary-East. I would like them all to rise and receive our welcome today.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five members of the GANG, Grandmothers of Alberta for a New Generation. Their names are Jan McGregor, Grace Hamilton, Laretta Howard, Louise Barr, and Judy Dubé. GANG is a nonprofit, grassroots group of grandmothers who raise money in the Edmonton capital region and over the past six years have raised over $352,000 for worthy causes, including the Stephen Lewis Foundation. Their latest project is a food memoir called Reflections and Recipes. It's a collection of 80 submissions and recipes. There we are. They're $20 a book in case you're interested.

An Hon. Member: Available in your nearest gallery.

Ms Redford: Available in your nearest gallery, and it now includes my granny's shortbread recipe, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly five special guests: Mr. Leonid Korownyk, Mrs. Anna Korownyk, Mrs. Natalia Talanchuk, Mr. Peter Dackiw, and Mrs.

Motria Dackiw. The five guests are visiting the Legislature to mark the fourth anniversary of this House passing the Holodomor memorial day act. Mr. Leonid Korownyk and Mrs. Natalia Talanchuk are survivors of the Holodomor and stand in testament that a tragedy like this must never be allowed to happen again. They are seated in your gallery, and I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group from the Parkland Home Educators Association which includes nine parents and 21 children ranging from grades 3 to 12. This volunteer organization of home-schooling families is a Christian support group for home educators in Parkland county dedicated to supporting quality home education by sharing ideas and resources and offering help and support with the challenges of home-schooling. They also offer a physical ed program for home-educated children in the area. They are accompanied by Mrs. Kari-Lynn Hastman, Mrs. Bobbi-Lynne Rushton, Mrs. Roxanne Jegodka, Mrs. Dana Kangas, Mrs. Christine Ridderikhoff, Mrs. Lisa Baron, and Mr. Jay Valencia. It's a great example of choice in our system. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you members of the Three Hills school who are visiting us this afternoon. There are 68 visitors. In the interest of time I won't introduce them all, but there are 60 in the members' gallery and eight in the public gallery. I would like to introduce the teachers – Mrs. Christina Hoover, Mr. Jamie Keet, and Ms Melissa Matwychuk – and the parents accompanying them as helpers: Mrs. Laureen Smithers, Mr. Cody Ferguson, Mrs. Brenda Jewel, Mr. Brad Luijckx, and Mrs. Jody Varga. I would ask that they stand and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 54 students from the Almadina charter school. Almadina charter school is home to students from 40 different countries located in my constituency, the great constituency of Calgary-East. Accompanying the students today are Mr. El-Masri, Mr. Tarrabain, and Miss MacGillivray. They're seated in both galleries. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly retired Inspector Lance Valcour. After 33 years of service with the Ottawa Police Service he now works for the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, fire and emergency medical services, as the executive director of the Canadian Interoperability Technology Interest Group, or CITIG. CITIG recognizes that if first responders can't communicate during an emergency or major event, lives can be in jeopardy. The Canadian Interoperability Technology Interest Group was created to improve Canadian public safety communications interoperability and spearheaded the creation of the communications interoperability strategy for Canada. This government was a proud signatory in 2011. Mr. Valcour and CITIG continue to work closely with the Alberta Emergency Management Agency on a number of issues and priorities, including cross-border interoperability with Montana and issues of 700 MHz broadband for mission-critical public safety data. I ask that Mr. Valcour rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a respected elected official, a long-time constituent, and a friend of mine, Natalia Toroshenko. As we commemorate the Holodomor today, I think it is important to recognize Alberta's rich Ukrainian heritage and along with that the many Ukrainian families who survived this genocide and came to Canada to create a homestead in our province. Natalia's family is one of those families, and I am honoured that she is here today. Natalia is a municipal councillor with the town of Vegreville and recently returned from the Ukraine, where she was the division leader of the Alberta delegation sent to observe the Ukrainian election in October. She brought the international Holodomor flame to Vegreville in 2008. I would like to ask Natalia, who is seated in the Speaker's gallery, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly our guest, Denise Baillie. Denise is a constituent of mine who suffers from multiple sclerosis as well as chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency, or CCSVI. Denise is campaigning to improve awareness of CCSVI in Alberta. She is asking the provincial government to help Albertans suffering from MS and CCSVI by funding clinical trials of experimental treatment. I would now like to ask Denise to wave and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two wonderful Albertans who have devoted their lives to agriculture, youth, and rural Alberta. They are the Alberta 4-H Hall of Fame inductees Edith Walker and Timothy Church, who are both sitting in the members' gallery. Edith since 1952 has been involved in any number of organizations involved with agriculture and 4-H in the Wetaskiwin area. She was involved with the creation of the Alberta 4-H Centre. For Timothy Church the same type of story: since 1969 he's been involved in numerous positions with the Hesketh and the Hesketh-Orkney 4-H beef clubs and director of the Alberta 4-H Foundation. Edith is here with her husband, Bill, daughter Fern Walker Armstrong, and friends Connie Matson and Marguerite Stark. Timothy is here with his wife, Kelly. I'd ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to stand on behalf of the United Church women's initiative for child well-being. My wardrobe today has been significantly enhanced by the work of these women. The United Church women and men are headed up by Carolyn Pogue, Sharon Prenevost, and Lillian Stewart. They are here asking why Alberta is nearly the last province to have a concrete plan with timelines and budget to end child poverty. I'd like them to stand in the public gallery if they would and be recognized by the Legislature. Some are in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: Good job, hon. member. Thank you. Jackets are required, but there are special occasions when important introductions have to be made, I guess.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you four hard-working individuals from the Alberta Barley Commission. The commission represents Alberta's barley producers by not only providing a multitude of services but advocating on their behalf at all levels of government. They are seated today in the public gallery, and as I call their names out, I'd ask them to please rise: Trevor Petersen, Shawn Gorr, Bryan Adam, and a friend of mine, Glenn Logan. I started in politics in 1995, and Glen always jokes that he knew me before I hit puberty, before I could shave, so he has gotten to watch me go through the whole process. I'd ask this House to give the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Maurice Fritze, who is a communications specialist with international experience as a producer of Canadian performing artists. He spent many years as Canada's Bob Hope, producing entertainment for our armed forces serving in United Nations peacekeeping roles and in areas of armed conflict. Maurice's shows have toured four continents representing private interests, the Alberta government, and the Canadian government. One of Maurice's Alberta initiatives was the celebration of Japan project. Today he's a mediator, and he teaches conflict resolution at MacEwan University. I would like members of the Assembly to join me in giving Mr. Maurice Fritze the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my favourite GANG and the leader of the GANG as well. I know the hon. Premier did make mention of the grandmothers with the Stephen Lewis Foundation, but she did omit a couple of details. First of all, Lauretta Howard, Grace Hamilton, Judy Dubé, Jan McGregor, and Louise Barr are all good friends of mine, and Louise Barr, the GANG leader, is my auntie as well. If they could stand one more time and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you four people who are visiting us from Calgary. First, I want you to please welcome

Tammy McCorkell, who resides in the great constituency of Calgary-Foothills and does terrific work with the Calgary Youth Justice Society. Please also welcome Kimberly Nelson, who does great service for persons with developmental disabilities and is a constituent of beautiful Calgary-Acadia. She indicated to me she had the privilege of meeting the Premier two weeks ago in an elevator in Calgary.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce two Calgarians well known in political circles, David Crutcher from Calgary-Acadia and Craig Chandler from Calgary-Hays. Please give them a warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Holodomor Memorial Day

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask each member of this Assembly to consider the people in their lives: their family, their friends, colleagues, and Albertans they serve and interact with each and every day. I'm certain that several of the people on your minds are of Ukrainian descent. In our province there are more than 332,000 Albertan-Ukrainians. That's 1 in 10 people, making Albertans of Ukrainian heritage the fourth-largest ethnic group in this province.

As a Ukrainian-Albertan I am proud of my roots and feel it is a fitting and true honour to acknowledge the fourth anniversary of the Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day Act. Passed unanimously in 2008, the act commemorates a horrific man-made famine enforced by Stalin's regime that brought misery and death to millions of men, women, and children living in rural Soviet Ukraine between 1932 and 1933.

Known as the Holodomor, which means the extermination by means of starvation in Ukrainian, this famine was an act of genocide. Farmers were forced to fulfill unrealistic government quotas that left them without food for themselves and their families. Those who resisted had their crops, livestock, and seed grain confiscated. Those who tried to keep food for themselves were executed. It was a cruel policy of forced starvation that must never be repeated and always be remembered.

As a province we honour every fourth Saturday in November the fallen victims and those who survived, and on November 24 I urge all members and all Albertans to recognize this important day. It is an opportunity to honour the value of democratic freedoms, human rights, and rule of law. It reminds us to cherish the multicultural vibrancy of our province and helps us acknowledge the many Holodomor survivors and their descendants living in this great province called Alberta, who have enhanced our cultural, economic, political, and educational life. This day also helps us ensure that by remembering the dark times of our past, we can ensure a bright, inclusive future for all Albertans.

[Remarks in Ukrainian] Eternal memories.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Health Regions' Expense Reporting

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to look into the government's horrible decision to take us back into debt in a minute, but first there are pressing issues about the health care system and the erosion of public confidence. When an employee of Edmonton's former health region was found to have lavish but legal expenses, he was fired. Now an employee of the former Calgary health region was reimbursed for expenses that were directly related to partisan political activities. This, of course, is illegal. Since the employee is still under employment with Alberta Health Services, we wonder: what is the Health minister going to do about it?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as we discussed yesterday in the House in response to similar questions, these expenses that the hon. member refers to occurred among health regions that no longer exist. Since the creation of Alberta Health Services in 2009 the policies and procedures around political donations have been made very clear. They are in conformance with provincial law, they are enforced, and I have no reason to worry as minister that those policies are not being followed today.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that was the same case with Allaudin Merali.

The Deputy Premier challenged us yesterday to produce evidence of illegal donations, and we have produced such evidence, thousands of dollars' worth, and so has the media. We believe that there could be more evidence, yet the Deputy Premier's colleague the Minister of Health doesn't want to look at it. What are you both covering up?

Mr. Horne: Okay. The first thing that should be very clear to the hon. member is that the Minister of Health does not make hiring or human resources decisions for Alberta Health Services. The policies and procedures that the hon. member is aware of today, that are in place today, are what are of primary concern to this government. If the hon. member wants to talk about health regions that no longer exist, perhaps she could explain to us why she ran to be the government in 2012? That's a non sequitur, Mr. Speaker, that we don't understand.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problem is that it's the same executives who are in positions in AHS who were in positions in the former health regions.

Now, yesterday we asked the minister to do something to help erase the growing cloud of suspicion over the health care system: expenses, donations, bullying and intimidation, queue-jumping, forced contract settlements, and even the threat of a doctors' strike. It's a mess. When will the minister clear the air, begin to release all of the expenses of all of the executives for all of the health regions going back to 2005?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what is clear is that the hon. member, with all due respect, is very adept at construing, loosely, conspiracy theories from one issue to another. The fact of the matter is that this party and other parties in this House have the opportunity to avail themselves of the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. They have had ample access to information that makes it possible for these discussions to go on and on ad nauseam in the House. The policies and procedures are clear today. This is a government of 2012. We stand by the policies of Alberta Health Services. They are in conformance with provincial law.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's sloppy management has badly eroded Albertans' confidence in the health care system. There is a judicial inquiry under way over the issue of health care system queue-jumping. Job expenses for a former government relations executive at the former Calgary health region indicate that her job was largely partisan in nature. That same individual was described by a former minister of health in an exchange with the former MLA for Calgary-Varsity as the person to speak with if an MLA had a constituent access problem. He even claimed that they could get service within two hours. Does the minister agree that there's at least an appearance of a problem with this?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we continue to see the hon. member attempt to construe one unproven allegation after another in the hopes of fearmongering and diminishing Albertans' confidence in their health system. Every time she does that, she insults the health professionals and other support workers that work very hard to deliver health care services every day. She knows full well that the information is available to her. She's accessed that information. There is really nothing further to say on behalf of this government with respect to these unfounded allegations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is something further to say. I've written Mr. Justice Vertes, pointing out some of our concerns and suggesting that such government relations employees be called as witnesses before his inquiry to explain how their jobs related to helping certain politicians work through the health care maze. Perhaps the minister can tell us: what does a government department need a government relations person for?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that I am troubled to hear that the Leader of the Official Opposition has written letters trying to influence the justice relevant to what the opposition has been asking for for months, to have an independent judicial inquiry. Now as an opposition they ask the minister to interfere with the justice to direct the inquiry, which way it should be moving and who the witnesses should be. That is directly contrary to what they have been asking for for months. They've been asking for an independent inquiry, and they shall have an independent inquiry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Queue-jumping, illegal donations, lavish expenses, bullying, and intimidation have added to a cloud of suspicion, yet the Minister of Health seems unwilling to look into the obvious issues that have existed for years, insisting that everything is okay now. Will he join us in asking Justice Vertes to call all the government relations officers before his inquiry so we can get to the bottom of the queue-jumping scandal?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the very fact that the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition would ask in this House during this question period for a member of this government to work with her in order to interfere in an independent, judge-led inquiry, that this opposition asked for, is an answer to the question in and of itself. It's not only inappropriate; it's an affront to the independence of the judicial panel, and the hon. member should know better.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition for your third set of main questions.

Capital Infrastructure Financing

Ms Smith: Now, Mr. Speaker, my debt question. This government is taking us back into debt to cover the basics like roads and schools. They have a variety of stories to cover it, but the stories keep on changing, especially when you listen to what they said before the election, what they said during the election, and what they're saying now. The Premier blames the change on the fiscal reality, saying that the economy is forcing them to take on debt, yet yesterday the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was telling us that employment is up, private forecasts are bright. Housing starts, retail sales, and manufacturing: they're all up. But the Premier thinks there's a downturn. Which is it? Are we in trouble or not?

Ms Redford: It was very interesting last week to be at AAMD and C, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and to talk about community investment, to talk about schools and hospitals and roads and water systems. We made a commitment on April 23 that we would build Alberta for the future, that we would not look back, and that we would be a pragmatic government for Alberta. Now, I don't know what the Leader of the Official Opposition thinks has happened in the past eight months, but one of the things that you need to be able to do if you want to be a good government that reflects the values of the people that elected you is to understand – hear it, Mr. Speaker – that sometimes things change. Good government adapts to that, and that's what we're doing.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good governments keep their election promises.

Now, the Premier made an election promise to build and renovate 120 schools and said that it would be paid from budget surpluses. It was obvious after the election that there would be no PC budget surpluses. Rather than adjust spending, the Premier is now determined to go into debt. Why don't they cut their wasteful spending, balance the budget, and build schools?

2:00

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I just can't miss this opportunity. Good governments keep their promises. Good oppositions keep their promises, too. I would suggest to the Leader of the Official Opposition that she should be preoccupied for the next two or three days with her upcoming convention and how she will keep her promise and not turn her party into Wildrose Lite and talk about conscience rights and talk about all the switches that they have done. That is something that the Leader of the Official Opposition should be concerning herself with right now.

Ms Smith: At least, the media are invited to our convention.

The government did not campaign on alternative financing. They did not make election speeches about going to the capital markets. They did not put going into debt into their campaign brochures. If they're so convinced it's a good idea now, why didn't they mention it in April during the election?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to rise again and say what I said yesterday, and that was that we did tell Albertans that we were going to use alternative financing. We passed the budget in this House, which had it in the budget. I would also say as a past member of the Klein cabinet and a past member of his Treasury Board that he understood that you use certain financial tools in certain financial circumstances. In fact, Premier Klein was the first Premier of Alberta to use alternatively funded P3 projects. The Anthony Henday ring road in Edmonton in 2005 showed that he knew when to do things differently and to make the right changes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following the passing of Premier Lougheed one writer compared the province he created to the one that exists now and noted that the current structure of this province from our oil and gas industry to our fiscal management systems was established by Mr. Klein. Calling yourself a progressive without changing this is just window dressing. It's simply code for spending the oil wealth faster. To the Premier. You recently stated that government decisions must be fair to future generations. Is it your view that spending all $11 billion of our nonrenewable resource revenue and now taking on debt is fair to future generations?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what is fair to future generations is what Albertans know, that if we invest now, we will have successful future generations. That means investing in schools, investing in education, investing in universities, and making sure that we are qualifying people who will be able to participate in our economy. Other people that think this is a good idea include the managing director of the National Bank, the vice-president of capital markets at RBC, the CEO and president of Maclab Enterprises, successful businessmen who understand that you need to make smart, strategic, long-term decisions for the future and that that's what leads to success and is fair for future generations.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Premier. We need to build schools, we need to implement full-day kindergarten, build family care clinics, and the like, but is it fair to future generations to be the lowest taxed jurisdiction by a country mile, spend all of the oil wealth in one generation, and now go into debt? Is that really fair to future generations?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a passion about the future of this province that ensures that future generations are going to be well taken care of. We know that we've had success with this in the past. We certainly follow the legacy of previous Progressive Conservative Premiers who've been pragmatic, who've been innovative, who've been creative, and who've understood that if you invest wisely now, future generations will succeed.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's an old saying in my neighbourhood: you lie to my friends; I'll lie to my friends; let's not lie to each other. If we look at what is going on – the spending of all the oil wealth, the going into debt, and not being willing to tax anything – it's simply lipstick on a pig. Will you admit that your current resolve shows no regard to the future generations of this province?

Ms Redford: I believe that this discussion that we're having now is fundamentally what we talked about in the last provincial election, and I have no doubt that for the next six months we will talk about this. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, this government, this caucus, and this cabinet would not be doing this if we did not have a resolve that this was the right thing for future generations in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Political Party Financial Contributions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Apparently, there have been a number of illegal campaign donations that were made in previous years, including the time that the current Premier was the Minister of Justice. I want to put the same question to the Premier I tried to put yesterday. What did the Premier know about these offences, and when did she know it? [interjections]

Mr. Lukaszuk: I'm starting to think that they don't like me, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] Now I know that they don't like me, but they don't like me because I throw some of their questions right back at them, and they don't like that very much.

But, Mr. Speaker, in answer to this, I've been clear on a number of occasions. If any member of this House believes that they have an allegation and believes that they have some evidence of an allegation, there is a process that is very much a time-tested process not only in this Legislature but throughout this land. File a complaint to the Chief Electoral Officer or to the Ethics Commissioner, have it properly investigated, and then we can talk about facts. These are just allegations, and we won't be dealing with that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's be reminded of what the rules of the House are regarding matters pertaining to partisan parties and to campaign or election funding. I've raised it before.

Hon. member, let's see how you do with that reminder.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Deputy Premier suggests that we just take these things to the Chief Electoral Officer and that when we do, the Chief Electoral Officer won't even tell us if he's going to conduct an investigation, much less the result of that, and given that that legislation was put in place by the current Premier when she was the Justice minister, can the Premier tell us with regard to offences under the Election Act that have taken place during her tenure: what did she know, and when did she know it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I happen to have some good news for the leader of the fourth party. Today in this Legislature we will be debating an act that will be speaking to that very issue, election financing, and all the rules and laws and regulations that pertain to electing officials into this Chamber. I suggest to this member that he hold on to his powder, keep it dry, and he will have all the opportunity in the world to debate that bill and make sure that the transparency that he's seeking will be there. I can assure him of one thing, Mr. Speaker. We will have with the passage of this bill the most transparent piece of election legislation in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that given that Albertans are very tired of the kind of corruption of this governing party, which seems more concerned with covering its own illegalities than with creating legislation to ensure it doesn't happen again, will the Premier ensure that the legislation that is introduced by her government will in fact allow us to look back retroactively to the period going back as far as 2007 and 2008?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, only in this Chamber and only members of the opposition will use terms like "illegal" and "corrupt" without having any evidence or without even giving a person the opportunity of having that evidence presented and having it investigated. If that member indeed has any documents or information where he believes that anyone in this Chamber is doing anything illegal or is corrupt, table it, have it investigated, and stop making these inflammatory accusations.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Physician Services Agreement

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's relationship with the doctors of our province is deteriorating rapidly. On Friday afternoon the Minister of Health decided to throw his weight around, and he imposed a long-term contract on physicians. This ended months of good-faith negotiations. Doctors feel bullied, undermined, intimidated, and disrespected. The AMA has asked the minister to mend this relationship, come back to the table, and negotiate a deal by the end of December. To the Minister of Health: will you commit right now to rescinding this imposed deal and return to negotiations with the AMA?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is true that this morning I received a letter from the president of the Alberta Medical Association asking to return to negotiations toward a new agreement between government and the association. I take this as an encouraging sign for a number of reasons, not the least of which is that the president has clearly recognized that an agreement between doctors and government is in the interests of our health care system and the Albertans that we serve. That said, I need to be very clear that with respect to a financial offer government did put forward its best financial offer, the maximum amount of money, $463 million, that is available.

2:10

Mrs. Forsyth: Minister, it's about respect. That's what it's about.

Given that the AMA contends that all options are on the table and that options could include job action, does the minister not see in the end that his bullying and intimidation behaviour isn't going to harm doctors, that it's going to harm the patients?

Mr. Horne: What I see, Mr. Speaker, as I said in my previous answer, is an interest on the part of the AMA in resuming discussions. I will tell the hon. member that I think there are a number of issues on which we could resume discussions with the Alberta Medical Association. That said, I think we need to be very clear about what the issues are that we would like to address, and we need to ensure that we are positioned to be successful in the discussion of those issues. I'm going to give some very careful thought to the letter that was sent to me this morning, and I'll be replying as quickly as I can.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, if he would have done this last Friday, we wouldn't be here today.

Given that the AMA is willing to live by the findings of an arbitrator, why won't the minister use this resolution tool to come to a mutual agreement?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we will not do is that we will not negotiate a new agreement with the Alberta Medical Association via this member or via this Legislature. As I said, we feel that there are a number of areas where with a focused discussion and a clear plan to position both parties for success, we may in fact be in a position where we can resume some discussions. I'm going to look at this and consider it carefully in my reply to Dr. Giuffre, and I will have any discussions that we wish to have with him and with the Alberta Medical Association and not with the opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Public-private Partnerships for School Construction

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I had the opportunity, the early opportunity, to have breakfast with 400 or 500 school board trustees from across the province. It was clear that many of them had a renovated or new school on their mind. So many made it clear to me that the need for schools is significant and that it can't wait. To the Minister of Finance: can you elaborate on your comments just recently on the alternate financing you mentioned to allow the building of these schools now?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who is a chartered accountant, I would add, would appreciate that we will consider all of the financial tools that are available to us to get those schools built that Albertans and their communities need today, and we're going to choose the method and the tool that makes the most financial sense. P3s have been one of those tools that we've been using since, as I said earlier, 2005. We've used them to build the Light of Christ Catholic and Saddle Ridge schools in Calgary, the Elizabeth Finch school in Edmonton, even the Westmount school in Okotoks, which is the Leader of the Opposition's riding. I'm sure she appreciates that P3s are a good way to go.

Mr. Dorward: To the Minister of Infrastructure: how do you justify using the P3 option when I noted at the ASBA breakfast this morning that those trustees, in fact, overwhelmingly supported borrowing for the infrastructure we need?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, this government will do what's right for Alberta families and communities. Alberta's use of P3s to deliver needed public infrastructure such as schools has proven successful. Benefits include fixed costs, fixed delivery dates up to two years sooner, with maintenance and warranty for 30 years. P3s are only used when they make sense and when value for money can be demonstrated compared to the cost for more traditional project delivery.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure we can all agree, including the members across, the faster we can build schools for the students and families of today, the better. We need them today, not five and 10 years into the future.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, to complete the trifecta, to the Minister of Education: can you update us on the progress of the P3 models from your perspective?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I hate to point out the obvious, but P3s are actually borrowing and allow us to build schools faster than normal. This government has built 28 P3 schools recently, and we have 12 more new schools under construction right now. As a matter of fact, we just broke ground on three P3 schools this last Friday alone, two in Airdrie and one in Chestermere.

While the members opposite criticize and confuse Albertans with sound bites on why we shouldn't borrow to build infrastructure, their members are more than happy to celebrate these P3-financed school groundbreakings provided they're in their constituencies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After 41 years of the same government, it doesn't matter who's in charge. The entitlement and mutual back-scratching stays the same. We know that a community relations officer at Calgary health expensed thousands of dollars that she donated to the war chest of a political entity, and this, according to AHS, was just how business was done. Now we know that that same individual is working within AHS as a provincial officer for special projects. Can the government simply clear the air and tell the House exactly what is the job description of an officer for special projects?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information, nor would I think that the hon. member would expect the Minister of Health to have detailed job descriptions for people within Alberta Health Services. If the hon. member is making an insinuation that that particular position is somehow not important or significant or otherwise of value to the health system, I suggest that he's got a bigger challenge than he already realizes.

Mr. Saskiw: You don't even know what the job is, so how would you know what I'm insinuating?

Given that it is imperative that Albertans have full confidence that their taxpayer dollars won't be used to benefit any political party, will the government clarify whether or not the latest donations to a political party expensed through our Health budget will be returned to Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the opposition persists in talking about issues involving health regions that no longer exist. What Albertans can have confidence in is very clear. They can have confidence in the fact that Alberta Health Services policy with respect to donations has been updated twice since AHS was created. It fully conforms to provincial law. He can also have confidence that there is an independent officer of the Legislature, a Chief Electoral Officer, to whom he can report his concerns, and they can continue to have confidence that this Minister of Health is in close contact with the board of Alberta Health Services, which is doing an excellent job and providing oversight in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you want to return the money, there's a poverty group out there that sure could use it.

Given that the Premier broke her promise to hold a full health inquiry covering the time in which her sister worked at the Calgary health region and was publicly known as the go-to person for politicians to deal with wait time issues, can the government explain whether the Premier's sister is at all involved in the planning, co-ordination, or execution of the queue-jumping inquiry?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, if we're seeking clarity, Mr. Speaker, maybe I'll ask for some clarity because I'm still a little lost from yesterday. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition first said that she would never write off expenses of donations to political parties. Then 15 minutes later she admitted the fact that she has but that it was a rookie mistake. Then 15 minutes later she said that she has, but she doesn't know whether she sent it to the Assembly for reimbursement or not. Now she's denying it, and she threw her secretary under the bus to take the rap for it. I would like some clarity on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Orthopaedic Services in Northern Alberta

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Westlock hospital is in desperate need of a new and enlarged orthopaedic surgical unit to fulfill the needs of the large population in northern rural Alberta to access the hospital not only because it is in close proximity to their homes but due to the world-class level of care that the doctors and surgeons provide at that hospital. We have a doctor from South Africa who is world renowned for his hip and knee replacements. My own brother had two knees replaced there. My question to the Minister of Health: will the minister please advise us as to what is being done in regard to reviewing any plans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: I bet he knows the answer.

Mr. Horne: Thank you. Well, Mr. Speaker, like the rest of my colleagues here sitting before you, we are up on our briefs, and we are prepared to answer.

I've had the privilege of meeting with the orthopaedic surgeons that the hon. member refers to twice, both through her and through her predecessor, the former MLA in that area. I can tell the hon. member that Alberta Health Services is looking very closely at the role of Westlock hospital in orthopaedic surgery as part of a north zone regional plan for the delivery of orthopaedic surgery services. It's true, Mr. Speaker, that there is considerable capacity that is available in terms of surgical capacity at the hospital, and we want to ensure that we make the best use of it as part of the regional plan.

Ms Kubinec: My second question is to the same minister. Will the minister please advise as to what is being done in regard to reviewing any plans and when we can have an answer as to when that might happen?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, certainly appreciating the hon. member's desire to have some resolution of this particular issue, we are looking at a plan for the north zone that involves all health care services; in other words, going beyond orthopaedic surgery, looking at all primary health care and tertiary level services. It's expected that that review would be complete in 2013.

Ms Kubinec: Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the minister: will those plans be made public so that the people in my constituency will know what is happening?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the public is actually part of the planning process. Alberta Health Services is actively engaged with the communities throughout the north zone in looking at the resources that exist in the community now, what may be needed in the future, and also, very importantly, how the hospitals and other health facilities and health professionals who are practising in that area work together to deliver a system of care that meets all of the needs of the people in the north zone, including Westlock.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Alberta Police Integrated Information Initiative

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Employers are using police information background checks to vet possible employees, and volunteer agencies are required by law or public demand to check their volunteers. But police keep more than conviction information on citizens in their databases, and this nonconviction information is regularly released. To the Solicitor General: what action is the government taking to work with employers and NGOs to make sure that they understand the distinction between conviction and nonconviction information disclosed in police background information checks?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for that question. You're right. She's quite correct. There is a distinction between conviction and nonconviction information, but her question was very vague as to what specifically she is alleging. I would just ask her to please clarify that in the follow-up.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister. Given that information collected and kept as part of Alberta's police information database, now known as API3, can include officer observations, opinions, and even hearsay, why does Alberta persist in allowing the retention and release disclosure of nonconviction information during background checks? It's just not right.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, it really saddens me that this member has very little regard for public safety but also for the facts. API3 is going ahead. You want to know what API3 is, I say to everybody here? API3 is a system that will allow police information on other jurisdictions if they actually happen to come in contact with a suspect. It's about officer safety, and it has undergone a full and complete privacy assessment. Back to this member.

Ms Blakeman: And it still includes hearsay, officer opinions, and observations.

But the legal framework in Alberta is feeble and allows significant individual officer discretion over what information is released as part of these police checks. So why is training, monitoring, and compliance not mandatory for all officers working in this area? They can do whatever they want.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I say again that the API3 system has undertaken a full and complete privacy impact assessment, and we worked with the Privacy Commissioner. We have been given a clean bill of health. Again, it saddens me that this member has very little regard for officer safety but also for public safety.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted by Edmonton-Centre at 2:25.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Political Party Financial Contributions (continued)

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Albertans discovered that the Premier's sister directed Calgary health region funds to Alberta's Conservative Party in violation of the Election Act. In defence of the Premier's sister Alberta Health Services stated that, quote, the Premier's sister and the Calgary health region were meeting the expectation and norms at the time. End quote. To the Deputy Premier: if AHS can casually state that illegal election donations by the Premier's sister were just another day in the office, how can Albertans be expected to believe that this illegal activity is not endemic to the whole government run by this Premier and this party?

Mr. Lukaszuk: You know what, Mr. Speaker? If the Member for Edmonton-Centre sat down with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, they would have an interesting discussion because the Member for Edmonton-Centre just argued that unless you're convicted, you're not convicted, and there shouldn't be any negative information spread about you. This member over here argues that even though nothing has been proven, even though there are no allegations, no investigations, all of a sudden those individuals are somehow criminals. Why don't you two get together and discuss that issue?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I'll allow your first supplemental, and I'm going to listen carefully to how it goes.

Ms Notley: Well, to the Minister of Health: given that illegal funnelling of public money to the Conservative Party was apparently, quote, meeting the norms and expectations at the time at Alberta Health Services, will the Minister of Health take immediate action to dismiss all those who were involved in and aware of this activity, or will he further compromise the remnants of this government's integrity by suggesting Albertans should accept this as water under the bridge?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, again, recognizing the nature of the question and your previous rulings on the issue, what I will tell the hon. member and what she well knows is that the responsibility for overseeing the operations of Alberta Health Services is with a board that is appointed by this government, that is accountable back to this government. If the hon. member wants to persist in discussions about the operations of health regions that no longer exist, that's entirely up to her. The AHS board has made it clear and clarified on two occasions that the organization's policies with respect to political donations conform to provincial law and they continue to be followed. This government stands by that.

The Speaker: Let me just remind everyone again. Questions to do with party financing, party matters are expressly forbidden according to the rules, so let's be very careful how we word our questions.

Final question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the Attorney General: given that illegal funnelling of public money to the Conservative Party was, quote, meeting the norms and expectations at the time and given that the Election Act currently prevents investigations that would go back past three years and would be done in secret regardless, can the minister promise this House that his new elections law will permit full and historic disclosure of this endemic illegal activity, or will he simply come up with new ways to sweep it under the rug?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, if this member would like to wait just a little bit more than half an hour, that's when I intend to table an act. I think that under the standing orders it would be inappropriate for me to comment on it in detail at this juncture.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Health Services for Rural Alberta

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Livingstone-Macleod and in all of the rural areas of Alberta people travel hours to regional hospitals for medical treatment. With the recent raw deal imposed on doctors and support personnel, the challenges affecting rural health facilities are even more acute. Last week's unilateral decision by the government will negatively impact delivery of health services in rural primary care networks. To the Minister of Health: considering this negative impact on rural health care delivery will this government please go back to the negotiating table with doctors?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, earlier in question period I answered a specific question about the letter that was sent to me today by the president of the Alberta Medical Association. This hon. member is attempting to connect that issue with what he obviously feels are some issues with respect to rural health care delivery in his community. Rural health care delivery is of significant interest to this government. In the last five hospital expansion announcements, that were made just a few weeks ago, the hon. member may have noted that a number of specialty services have been placed in rural hospitals to avoid the situation that he describes. A recent example would be the inclusion of a dialysis unit in the Edson hospital. That will prevent many people from making a trip into Edmonton for that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering the deteriorating relationship between the Alberta Medical Association and the Minister of Health and considering that the new fee schedule will be harmful to recruiting and retaining rural doctors, what will the minister do to remedy the glaring problems facing rural health care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member referred to a fee schedule. What this government announced last Friday is the addition of $463 million over the next four years to a physician compensation budget, which on average pays 29 per cent more than the national average in this country.

Mr. Speaker, we're proud of the fact that we have the best doctors in Alberta. We're proud of the fact that they are the best paid.

We have a number of issues that we are working with the Alberta Medical Association on, and I will be responding to Dr. Giuffre's letter in due course.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Considering that the Minister of Health accepted the Health Quality Council report, how can the minister justify imposing huge changes on Alberta Health Services such as with the family care clinics without close collaboration with those doctors at all?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. We would not have the quality of health services in urban and rural Alberta that we enjoy today without close collaboration between this government and our physicians. They deserve as much credit as anyone else for our success. They are also actively involved in practical ideas to improve access, particularly in areas like the hon. member's constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Agricultural Societies

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government last February at the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies recognized their 100-plus year contribution to Alberta's largest sustainable resource, agriculture. Agricultural societies and regional exhibitions manage the infrastructure of the largest facilities of their kind in their respective communities. To the minister of agriculture: what is the plan for provincial investment in these valuable agricultural community builders, rural economic providers, tourism drivers, and community gathering places?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The plan is to continue supporting these organizations. As the hon. member points out, they are integral to many, many communities. There are 295 ag societies around the province, for which our government provides some $30 million in annual support. We plan on continuing with that support.

Ms Pastoor: Well, that's good to hear. Thank you.

Again to the same minister. One of these regional exhibitions in particular, Lethbridge & District Exhibition, is in need of a major renewal in the very near future in order to maintain its community commitment. What role is the province prepared to play in investing in this project, which will be a game-changer in southern Alberta?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may not surprise you to hear that this isn't the first time I've heard this from this member. She is a great advocate for her community, and we talk fairly often about this issue. I have had meetings with that particular agricultural society. We do provide to the seven regional societies funding of about $358,000 a year, $258,000 of which is unconditional and $100,000 of which is for operations. We also in 2005 provided $40 million for the seven regional ag societies, including $6.5 million for the Lethbridge ag society for capital.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much. This question isn't just about me; it is about all the others. I know that it's a generous amount of money, but clearly, to keep these organizations going, we're going to need a change in what we do. My last question is about the rest of the B and C exhibitions. What kind of discussions are going on regarding the importance that they play in our rural communities and in our medium-sized cities, keeping agriculture to the fore, where it belongs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have one of the regional ag societies, one of the seven regionals, in my constituency. I know that these agricultural societies, no matter what their size, from the smallest of the small to Northlands and the Calgary Stampede, are very, very important for their community. Everybody wants the government to support them. I'm fully engaged in discussing these issues with all of them. It's a work-in-progress. I'm not in a position to make any commitment to the hon. member right now other than my absolute and unconditional interest in discussing these issues with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Sylvan Lake Public Meeting

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Deputy Premier visited Sylvan Lake and held a public meet-and-greet. Constituents were disappointed to learn that the meeting was really a handshaking session with no format to ask questions publicly about the issues they were concerned about. The Deputy Premier went on to call my constituents a mob. He went on to insult the widow of a gentleman who had recently passed away for bringing a placard. Then he went on to tell a small group of property rights advocates to wait until the end of the meeting to speak to them, only to slink out the back door. To the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: is this type of behaviour from the Deputy Premier what was meant when the Premier said that she wanted to raise the bar of accountability?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, you know, this is almost unbelievable. First of all, this member has written an e-mail and asked everybody to spread that e-mail even further, asking for everybody to show up and show force and bring placards. Then in an interview to the media she says: "Oh, I never wrote such an e-mail. I never asked anybody to bring placards." Then, much like the Leader of the Opposition, she flip-flopped again and said: "Oh, yes. Sorry. I forgot. I was asked too many questions." Furthermore, this is the MLA that needs a mediator to allow her to talk to her city council. Furthermore, I left through the front door, and there is actually news footage to show that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'll invite you to give us your second supplemental, and I'll invite your colleagues to allow the answer to be heard by you.

Mrs. Towle: Sure. Unfortunately, I was there, and you went through the back door.

To the Minister of Health: given that the Deputy Premier chastised a widow for bringing a placard of her husband, who'd passed away, saying that all she had to do was request a meeting with you, and given that that constituent has requested that meeting with you since August, since her husband died, will the Minister of Health finally meet with the Boychuk family, as the Deputy Premier says that you're willing to do?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, I have had contact with residents of Sylvan Lake on a number of matters, including the elected officials, the mayor, and council, with whom I have met to discuss the issue to which she refers, which is the desire for an urgent care centre in Sylvan Lake. We're continuing our work and Alberta Health Services is continuing its work with the elected local representatives in Sylvan Lake. I am happy to continue to provide the hon. member with updates on the progress of that work. But the fact remains – and I think this is evidenced by the Deputy Premier's visit to the community – that we do not require an intermediary as government in order to work with local communities.

Mrs. Towle: Well, given that the Minister of Health didn't answer my question, given that the Deputy Premier chastised a widow for bringing a placard of her husband, who'd passed away, saying that all she had to do was request a meeting with you, and given that Annie Boychuk has requested a meeting with you, Mr. Minister, since August, since her husband died – we're not talking about urgent care; we're talking about Annie Boychuk – will you finally meet with the Boychuk family, as the Deputy Premier has said that you're willing to do?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I will not participate in the use of an extremely sad and tragic situation, referenced by the hon. member, as fodder for whatever interpersonal issues she may have with other members on this side of the House or other sides of the House. I have corresponded with the family to whom the hon. member refers. I have expressed the sympathy and the condolences of this government and of all of my colleagues to that family for that tragic incident. We are engaged in a policy issue with elected representatives of Sylvan Lake in determining how best to meet that community's health care needs.

Front Licence Plates

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, rural crime watch associations provide a valuable service to law enforcement agencies across the province, acting as an extra set of eyes and ears because, of course, the police can't be everywhere. At their recent annual general meeting the provincial Rural Crime Watch Association passed a resolution urging government to require that licence plates be shown on both the front and the rear of vehicles once again to help identify vehicles possibly involved in illegal activities. To the Minister of Service Alberta: has any consideration been given to offering support to our selfless crime watch associations by honouring this simple and common-sense request?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government appreciates the work that the Rural Crime Watch Association does. They are the eyes and ears of law enforcement in many rural communities, and we appreciate everything they do. As the member knows, front licence plates were discontinued in 1992. Since then we've had a vast amount of public input on this issue. Upwards of 80 per cent of Albertans have in fact said that they prefer just having one licence plate, but we will always look at new ideas and new options and evaluate the merits of them.

2:40

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, a supplemental to the same minister. Now, I realize that back in 1992 the minister was merely a young lad watching the hon. Member for Calgary-North West reading the news on TV, but does he know what the motivation was for making the change from two licence plates to one licence plate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 1992 I was a young lad, and in 1992 I could grow a better mustache than that individual.

Mr. Speaker, this change has saved the taxpayers approximately $12 million, and it's saved Albertans themselves a lot of money. Should any changes be required now, it would require additional costs on the part of Albertans.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that I'm cut to the quick, but I guess I'm shaved to the quick.

In any case, my final supplemental to the same minister, facial hair aside: will the minister undertake to conduct a full investigation of the feasibility, logistics, and costs involved in returning to a two licence plate system and report these findings back to the members of this Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nearly 30 jurisdictions in North America have in fact moved to a single licence plate, and that number is growing. However, I will take this member's recommendation and the association's recommendation, and we will evaluate this issue next time we come to working on our plates.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes Oral Question Period for today.

In a few seconds from now we will resume with Members' Statements, commencing with Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Public Meetings in Vulcan and Sylvan Lake

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I attended two public meetings, one in Sylvan Lake with the Deputy Premier and one in Vulcan with the Minister of Energy. The meetings were similar in context and content. I listened and I watched in Sylvan Lake as the Deputy Premier berated some people in attendance. He insulted proponents of a highway intersection, which prompted a very sharp rebuke. When the Deputy Premier insulted the widow of a gentleman whose death might have been prevented had there been a critical care facility in Sylvan Lake, emotions exploded. Elevated voices demanded an apology. However, the Deputy Premier was unresponsive and unapologetic.

The meeting ended after the Deputy Premier asked all those with concerns about Bill 2 to gather at one end of the facility. He then abruptly turned and fled out the back door with people shouting at him: you said that you would talk to me. Later it was discovered that the Deputy Premier hid outside in the parking lot after everyone left, and he re-entered the building and now claims he never left. There were no placards of protest at the meeting. None. I only saw two placards promoting two causes, not protesting.

The meeting in Vulcan was no less emotional than the Sylvan Lake meeting, but it was organized completely differently. I debated the Minister of Energy in Vulcan. We both discussed the issues. We agreed where we could, and we agreed to disagree. Emotions were equal to what I experienced in Sylvan Lake, but I can say without hesitation that the Minister of Energy conducted himself honourably and deserving of respect. That said, two people that attended both the Sylvan Lake and Vulcan meetings witnessed two entirely different outcomes. They were treated with respect by the Minister of Energy no matter how far they travelled. In contrast, the Deputy Premier and his supporters are still ridiculing the people that travelled a long distance to attend the meeting in Sylvan Lake. The difference between the two meetings is the difference between class and classless.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a cautionary note about Members' Statements. I referred to this a little bit yesterday. You might want to revisit what you said in the first half of your statement there. Members' Statements is a privilege given to us, at which time they should not be statements that deride or particularly try to verbally assassinate any member of this House or any member of the public for that matter. I'd just ask you to keep that in mind when you craft future statements, please.

I indicated yesterday I might have more to say about this, and I will have more to say about this now, definitely.

In the meantime let us hear from the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

National 4-H Month

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will speak on a topic that you all know I am passionate about, and that would be agriculture and 4-H. This is national 4-H show your colours month. Throughout this month of November we have been celebrating the positive contributions of the 4-H program which are so important to the well-being of our rural communities and bring enthusiasm for agriculture and the rural way of life. Maybe that's why I'm so passionate about it; I was a 4-H'er as were all my kids.

The 4-H is one of the most respected and longest running youth mentorship organizations in our province, helping to shape the lives of more than 250,000 young Albertans over the past 95 years. Club members and leaders have gone on to be successful and accomplished members of society who understand the meaning of community service. The 4-H program brings together the young and the young at heart. The program depends on family support and community volunteers who share their time and their knowledge with the leaders of tomorrow, volunteers like Edith Walker and Timothy Church, who were introduced today, this year's 4-H Hall of Fame inductees. They demonstrate how giving back to the community can be such a rewarding experience. With the motto of Learn To Do by Doing, 4-H recognizes the importance of giving youth the opportunity to take part in activities that increase their knowledge and the development of life skills.

Members today continue to acquire a well-rounded understanding of agricultural industry but also learn about such diverse topics as running a business, preparing food, computer skills, performing arts, public speaking, photography, veterinary science, and more. Whether they are involved in a project or taking on a summer camp, 4-H youth build lifelong friendships with people from all over the province and through these opportunities develop leadership skills and enhanced confidence which helps them throughout their lives. Our youth want to be involved, accepted, valued, and heard. The 4-H program is the way that they can do that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Alberta Men's 65+ Hockey Team

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2012 Canada 55+ Games were held this past summer in Sydney, Nova Scotia. Competition took place in over 20 events with participants from across Canada. Alberta athletes did well, finishing with over 100 medals, which I am proud to say was more than any other province.

Today I rise to recognize the Alberta men's 65+ hockey team. This team won all of their preliminary games, defeating their opponents with scores such as 10-nothing against Nova Scotia, 7-nothing over P.E.I., and again playing Nova Scotia and winning 1-0. Most importantly, the Alberta team won the gold medal game when they defeated Ontario with a score of 3 to 2.

Mr. Speaker, team members came from across Alberta, and I would like to read their names so we can recognize their achievement: from Banff, Graham MacDonald; from Strathmore, Doug Blaney; from Okotoks, John MacKillop; from Edmonton, Tony Saulnier; from Calgary, Jeff Bowles, Phil Bullough, Rob Chartier, Gord Christensen, Barry Dorin, Pat Halas, Peter Kneeland, Eric Shepard, Rich Shillington, and Rick Turpin. Arnie Godin was a player and team manager. Another member of the team was the former MLA for Calgary-Hays, Art Johnston.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this Legislature I would like to congratulate the team and all the 2012 Canada 55+ Games participants for a job well done.

Métis Week

Ms Calahasen: November 11 to 17 marked the annual Métis Week in which the Métis people proudly celebrated Métis language, culture, and history. Last week's events highlighted a tradition going back to a time before Alberta was a province and before Canada was a country. In the Métis world this long history is punctuated by one person in particular, the leader of Canada's Métis people, Louis Riel.

Louis Riel lived at a critical time in our country's history, when Canada was struggling to take hold of its nationhood. We were a country in our infancy, trying to find our footing, defining our boundaries, our people, and our direction. Louis Riel's life embodied many of the characteristics of our emerging nation. He spoke the languages of early Canada: English, French, and Cree. He was a catalyst that forged east and west, bringing Manitoba, the first western province, into Confederation. He was the son of a new nation, born from the intermarriage of First Nations people and newcomers.

On November 16 we honoured the life of this remarkable individual here in the Legislature. When we honoured Louis Riel, we also honoured the Métis people of Alberta. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for hosting this event.

As we continue to celebrate the continuing journey of a people who helped Alberta become a thriving, diverse province with infinite opportunities and unlimited promise, let us build a future together that is bright and filled with even greater promise and vision. Let us be inspired by the legacy of strength and determination that defined Louis Riel and his people, the Métis.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Child Poverty

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In relation to the scourge of child poverty hundreds of women of the United Church in Alberta and men, too, rallied today in front of the Legislature. They're asking important questions. What are this Premier and this Human Services minister going to do to eliminate the common experience of hungry, homeless families, including children, in their church basements moving each day to another church? Why is Alberta among the last three provinces to have a child poverty plan, with a timeline and a budget and actions to stop this travesty in the richest province in Canada? Finally, how is it that in 2012 there are 91,000 children, by latest count, living below the low-income measure, hungry, unsafe, unwell, losing potential daily mentally, physically, emotionally?

Leadership is critically needed. These women applaud the Premier for committing herself to eliminating child poverty in five years. But according to the deputy minister a report isn't expected till mid-2013, that means 2014 before a bill. Children cannot wait. Children deserve concrete actions to protect them today and for life. After decades of studies we know what programs are needed.

The Poverty Costs report issued by Vibrant Communities Calgary this year indicated that keeping people in poverty also costs Albertans financially between $7 billion and $9 billion a year in health care, lost productivity, addictions, and remedial services. Increased resources, material and educational, for children and their families is what's needed. Children need good food, a consistent safe home, stimulation, and love.

The Liberals child poverty initiative involves the establishment of a school nutrition program, a child benefit program. We need to work towards universal, quality, affordable child care and full-day kindergarten. Child poverty is not a partisan issue. We will support real targets. We want to work together with government to celebrate real investment in children and families. Let's get on with the job, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

Mr. Casey: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise today and table this petition signed by 311 Albertans from Fort McMurray to Calgary and all points in between. These concerned Albertans petition the Legislative Assembly to "pass legislation requiring that all interviews conducted by Alberta Child and Family Services be videotaped."

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Bill 7

Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to rise to request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 7, the Election Accountability Amendment Act, 2012.

This act will amend the Election Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, the Senatorial Selection Act, and the Local Authorities Election Act. Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments will help make our electoral system more democratic and will enhance accountability and will also update and improve how provincial and municipal elections are held. I would like to say a particular thank you to the Government House Leader as well as to the Minister of Municipal Affairs for their assistance with this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling the necessary five copies of the Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities Barrier-Free Health and Medical Services in Alberta: Understanding the Needs of Albertans with Disabilities research document, which identifies barriers to health and medical services experienced by Albertans with disabilities when accessing preventative and ongoing health care services. Through an extensive literature review, needs assessment, and discussions with Albertans with disabilities ACCD developed recommendations for improvement to Alberta's health care system.

Albertans with disabilities are passionate about health care issues, and they contributed to the development of the recommendations. The intent of the document is to inform and assist decision-makers to produce policies that will remove barriers so that Albertans with disabilities will be able to receive adequate medical and health care services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview or someone on behalf of.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition demanding that the government take immediate action to twin highway 63. The petition has 37,751 signatures, of which I am tabling 3,007 of those signatures today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a few tablings by the University of Calgary Faculty of Law blog on developments in Alberta law, their commentary and critique and the like of Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. They're done by professors Nigel Banks, Nickie Vlavianos, and Shaun Fluker. I hope all members of this House look at it and look at how this bill needs to be improved.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Gaming and Liquor Act the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission annual report 2011-2012.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we get into points of order, I see it's one minute to 3. I know the Government House Leader would probably allow us to continue here. We'll go beyond 3 a little bit with my ruling.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. The first citation I'm going to direct the Speaker to is our own standing orders, and that's 23(h), which specifically prohibits making allegations against another member. Now, this refers to the exchange in question slot 10 between myself and the Solicitor General. As part of that – and, of course, I don't have the benefit of the Blues – in his second and third responses he makes allegations specifically toward this member. It wasn't a general statement of everyone in my caucus or everyone in this House. It was specific to this member, that I somehow didn't like or respect or hold in high esteem members of our police service, and with that I would include the RCMP and the sheriffs. [interjection] Well, if the minister would like to provide me with the Blues, then I'm sure I'd be interested in doing that.

I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that the member clearly intended that others hearing him would believe that I do not support our police services, and I think he intended that that was what people hearing this exchange would believe. Now, Mr. Speaker, I didn't say that. In reviewing my notes for my question, there's no commentary on the behaviour of services. It's asking the government why they weren't giving them support by giving them training, asking them why they didn't have legislation around the disclosure of information that's kept and the very fact that nonconviction information is kept. None of that is a commentary on the character or professionalism of people involved in that particular sector.

What we do have – and I'll direct the Speaker toward page 508 in House of Commons Procedure and Practice. The member didn't answer the question. When you look at 508 in House of Commons, it does say that there aren't explicit rules about the form or content of replies to oral question periods. If I may quote, it is to deal with the subject matter raised and to be phrased in language that does not provoke disorder in the House. As Speaker Jerome summarized . . . several types of responses may be appropriate.

That is to

- answer the question;
- defer their answer;
- take the question as notice;
- make a short explanation as to why they cannot furnish an answer at that time; or
- say nothing.

Now, what we got instead, Mr. Speaker, was avoid-and-attack politics, none of the things that are suggested as appropriate as a ministerial response to a question. No, what we have is the member attacking the character of another member and making allegations on how she views a particular sector of workers.

I'll direct the attention of the Speaker to page 619 of the same House of Commons book, in which it asks that the Speaker takes into account "the tone, manner and intention" of the person that is delivering the particular remarks. I ask the Speaker: what does the minister intend the effect of his attack to be, that somehow these officers would now refuse to assist me or to offer services to me because he claims I don't believe in them? Why would he say such a thing unless it was to diminish what I was saying and to pivot to some non answer? I think that, if anything, that casts a very bad commentary upon the police services, that they would somehow not assist a citizen because of what she had said in the House. That may be what he tried to do. I don't believe that would happen.

I will also remark, Mr. Speaker, that this issue has been raised and argued and published by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association in depth. It has been published, and I would have expected that he as the Solicitor General would be familiar with the content of this as it does fall under his ministry. Now, if he is not familiar with it, then I could understand his unwillingness to directly answer the question.

As it is, I do not believe that what he did was appropriate. I ask the Speaker to find him in violation of 23(h) and in violation of the replies to oral questions as set out on page 508, and I would ask that he withdraw those comments. They were made to offend, they were made to create disorder, and they were made to cast an allegation upon me that I did not make. I resent it, and I ask that he be made to withdraw the comments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm going to do something uncharacteristic before I invite the Minister of Justice to reply. I'm going to read you what was said in Hansard according to the Blues. This is unofficial; however, it may guide you in your comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre rose and asked a question. In response the Minister of Justice replied:

Mr. Speaker, I say again that the API3 system has undertaken a full and complete privacy impact assessment, and we worked with the Privacy Commissioner. We have been given a clean bill of health. Again, it saddens me that this member has very little regard for officer safety but also for public safety.

I will now invite the hon. Minister of Justice to explain this.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I'm saddened by this member's comments. I know there are no points of order on points of order, but I'm rather offended by her last comment. At no time did I ever suggest that the Calgary Police Service, the Edmonton Police Service, any other police service would not be willing to assist or anything in that regard. At no time does that appear in the Blues. At no time did I make any allegation whatsoever.

I just think that for the edification of this House we should know what API3 is. The main objectives of the API3 system are to "increase officer safety" and to "increase public safety." I'm referring from my own department's website. My comments were that in opposing this item – she clearly does indicate throughout this exchange that she does not support this measure, which has regard to increased officer safety or increased measures for other people – without this system, Mr. Speaker, police and the public are more at risk. There have been situations – there was one in Calgary even – where a particular member of the Calgary Police Service was put at greater officer risk because of a lack of knowing this particular system.

I reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that at no time did I say that the police should somehow fail to assist this member. We live in a free society. This is the base of the rule of law. She'd have the same protection as myself or anyone else here. So I would indicate to you that the onus is on the member, like proving a case, to assert where another member has been wrong.

As I've clarified my comments as to whether or not she would support this increased safety, I think that that was a reasonable conclusion having regard to her issue. I apologize if she was offended, but I do not feel that I should have to withdraw the comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Briefly, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, according to the standing orders a member will be called to order if he makes allegations against another member. That's 23(h). But Standing Order 23(i): "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member."

You know, we have a lot of disagreements in this Chamber, absolutely. Even on this API3 issue I'll have some disagreement with the Member for Edmonton-Centre on it, but there is no doubt in my mind that this hon. member cares about the safety of our police officers, about our sheriffs and all of these officers in the RCMP, city police, or otherwise just as much as the Solicitor General does, just as much as I do, and just as much as anyone does. When somebody comes into the House and accuses them of essentially what you just read, Mr. Speaker, essentially accused this member of literally not caring about their safety, the safety of our police officers, that is a despicable thing to say.

You know, things are said in passion. I've had to retract statements in this Chamber. Members of my caucus have had to retract statements in the Chamber. That is definitely something that should be retracted, and this member should be apologized to.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, I read the Blues out intentionally in advance of the hon. Minister of Justice's reply because I was hoping to draw a distinction between the API3 system as was described by the Minister of Justice. That is not what is in question. What is in question here is what followed that. I'm going to read it again, where the Minister of Justice said, "it saddens me that this member has very little regard for officer safety but also for public safety." So I'm going to invite you, hon. minister, to just rethink those comments and perhaps do the right thing. Otherwise, I can go on with a more lengthy ruling if you wish.

Mr. Denis: I'll reluctantly withdraw those comments. I will be calling further points of order against this member.

The Speaker: Well, hon. minister, I appreciate the withdrawal. You know, a reluctant withdrawal is a withdrawal, and I'll accept that, but let's be very, very careful here, ladies and gentlemen, as we go forward in the discussions, whether they're in debate or whether they are questions during question period or whether they are private members' statements or whether they are petitions or some other instrument or vehicle that we use in this House, to not impute motives to others even in the heat of the moment. But if we do, then stand up, realize what was said, realize what was recorded in Hansard. The Speaker oftentimes does not hear the exchanges that go on because of clapping, pounding, heckling, and so on.

But we've clarified here. I think the Member for Edmonton-Centre is right. She has clarified her position. I don't know that there are any members in this House who have no regard for public safety. Hopefully there are none.

Hon. Minister of Justice, we accept your apology. I don't know where else you might want to go with this, but we'll leave it on the record that you have withdrawn it albeit with some reluctance. It may lead to further complications down the line. I hope not. But if that's what you want to stand by, then I'll have to have a look at it a little further, a little more deeply. Again, I'm just going to ask you if wanted to make one final comment on this matter.

Mr. Denis: I think I've made my comment, Mr. Speaker, that I will reluctantly withdraw it. It was not my intention, and I'm not going to belabour the point. Leave that as the end of the story.

The Speaker: All right. Thank you. I'm happy with that.

I hope, hon. member, that you're okay with that as well. If you wish to make a concluding comment, I'll recognize you for it, and then we'll move on.

Ms Blakeman: Well, you asked me if I was satisfied it. Mr. Speaker, I'm not. A reluctant withdrawal – I will respectfully disagree with you – is not a withdrawal of a comment. Further, to have him utter, which I'm sure will turn up in Hansard, essentially a threat to me that in the future he will be pursuing many more points of order on me on this account is exactly that. He meant to threaten me, and he did. It's on Hansard. So I don't think this was, as far as I'm concerned – and that was your question – a satisfactory conclusion to this. He did impute something against me. I think you've recognized it. You asked him to withdraw. He gave a weak withdrawal and then threatened me. So, no, I'm not happy with it.

The Speaker: All right. Nonetheless, the point stands, clarified, explained, and a withdrawal was made in the second offering, which was, in my view, better than the first one. With that, we conclude this matter.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 2
Responsible Energy Development Act

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order. Are there speakers that wish to speak? I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm happy to rise and speak on Bill 2. I guess my comments here this afternoon begin with what is not there in this new Bill 2 but rather what was omitted from the previous legislation that governed these things. I have an amendment here that is really going back to the essence of, I think, what was important in the previous legislation.

The Chair: Hon. member, if you would just have the amendment distributed, a copy to the table, and then I'll ask you to speak to it.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. No worries. Here it is, the appropriate amount of copies, and the original is on top.

The Chair: Hon. members, for the record this will be amendment A7.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, please. I believe it's almost there.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. It looks like we're almost there. Well, you know, I can perhaps just make a few introductory comments, and then we can get it.

This amendment I'm bringing forward on behalf of our leader from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. The amendment reads that the Responsible Energy Development Act be amended in section 2 by adding the following after subsection (2):

- (3) Where by any enactment the Regulator is charged with approving the development of energy resource activities in Alberta, it shall, in addition to any other responsibilities, give consideration to whether any proposed energy resource activity is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

The main deal here, Mr. Chair, is that the current bill makes no mention of the public interest in regard to the responsibility and role of the proposed regulator. This amendment will ensure that Alberta's regulator and associated staff will continue a commitment to responsible energy development in the name of the aforementioned public interest. The public interest is central, I think we all can agree, to responsible energy development, and it should be enshrined in the mandate of the regulator to ensure that its conduct reflects the best interests of Albertans.

As it stands, the bill currently emphasizes resource development over the public interest, and the Energy Resources Conservation Act provides a section that enshrines the public interest as a commitment of the soon-to-be-dissolved Energy Resources Conservation Board. Since the ERCB will soon be dissolved and a new regulator will take over much of the ERCB's roles and responsibilities, it is also crucial that the regulator be similarly committed to the public interest. The ERCB was the backbone of our energy regulation in this province for many decades, and it's simply not good policy to throw out the accumulated wisdom and authority of this former board in this new regulation.

A discussion document was put out by Alberta Energy, released in 2011, Enhancing Assurance, that said that a single new regulator must act "in the public interest." So even the government's own recommendation studies and recognizes the importance of the public interest in energy resource regulation. No worries. Obviously, this language is a bit of a signpost that tells us where we need to be going with our energy development in all respects, not just with fossil fuels but all forms of energy, and which direction we should be going in.

It's a different world here in Alberta, Mr. Chair, from 40 or 50 years ago, when we were drilling light sweet crude oil and natural gas with much fewer people, much less development, a much smaller population, and so forth. Here in 2012 we have the fastest growing population in the country, have many more different industries developing, and it's very important that we have a respect for the public interest enshrined in this new legislation to ensure that we're not trampling over the toes of the people who live here in the province.

We've all seen experiences of where public interest is compromised. Quite frankly, it's in the best interests of energy companies and corporations to have tough regulations and laws in place so that we don't end up with conflicts and clashes that result in really losing money and time and resources because the legislation wasn't put in place with a sufficient degree of thoroughness. I know that we've seen examples of this. I'm just thinking of my own personal examples, not starting with an oil story but, rather, with electricity, where we had a plan to run an electricity power line down the west side of highway 2, starting from Lake Wabamun and going down along the west side of highway 2 through Rimbey and so forth. Because there was a lack of attention to the public interest, so many resources and much time and energy were devoted to a power line. By slipping up on this one small issue, we ended up with a lot of social unrest, a great deal of money being expended and wasted, and eventually the whole project being shut down.

When we can build legislation here to look at all the contingencies that might be put in place that we can foresee and some that we cannot even foresee, it's not a question of constraining our energy industry, but it's a question of clarifying what their actions and responsibilities are. When you do that, I believe in the long run you build a much stronger industry that is not constantly second-guessing or having to look over their shoulders to see if other legislation might be coming down to change the way things are. Energy companies do not leave a jurisdiction because the laws are too stringent. They leave because the laws are too variable and uncertain and decisions coming out of the governance, whatever it is, provincial or national or whatever, are not stable.

Here we have an opportunity now with Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, to put in place that level of stability. That level of stability does not mean that anything goes, that it's a Wild West, drill where you want, build where you want, and away you go. Rather, I think what the oil companies should want and ultimately do want is a strong sense of good, solid, tough, responsible laws that are functioning in the public interest.

That's why we have decided to insert this amendment into section 2(2). It's not a big change. Really, I'm just reaching into the past here to reinsert something that was already there.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I get to speak to the public interest test again. I can be accused of a lot of things, but not being passionate about this issue is one thing I haven't been accused of.

Here we are again trying to reinsert the exact language that has been left out, the exact language that is in the law as it is today. I never got an answer – and it would be appropriate if we got an answer – as to why this language is being removed. That's really what we need here. That's what the public deserves because this is a public resource that we develop in the public interest. We use private enterprise to develop it, and we use a competitive marketplace to exercise, basically, that competitive right that we give industry. But in the end this is a public interest resource. This belongs to all Albertans.

When we look at the previous legislation, which is the current legislation, the Energy Resources Conservation Act, this is the language. It mirrors the language in the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. It mirrors the language in the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. It's all there. If the language is wrong, why is it in the other acts? It is staying in the other acts. Why has it been in law for the last 30 years? Can someone actually say: "This is where it did not work well. This is the reason the previous legislation did not work well"?

I can't find an example, but I can find numerous examples of why it worked well and how it served the public well, both private industry and the public because both participate in the public interest. That's why that broad term "public interest" is not just necessary but fundamental to the streamlining process. When we remove it, we create an imbalance. That imbalance, in my opinion, is going to counteract any streamlining intent.

As some members here know, there are other public interest tests, the Alberta Human Rights Act and also dealing with Charter issues. They are very significant public interest tests that are broader in terms. Albertans deserve to know that answer. Why is this government removing the language? Why is this government not carrying this language forward? What is wrong with "the public interest" that it now has to be removed from legislation? Why is it in other legislation? Why was it in past legislation, and it cannot be brought forward?

Here we deal with an amendment that is just basic to protecting the overall public interest. We've not yet gotten to the private interest, which we will, hopefully. Someone will bring an amendment forward to give us that balance. The real test of this legislation will inevitably be the regulation. We haven't made that regulation. Nobody knows what that regulation is going to be. If we don't put the public interest test back in the legislation, then there's no mandate to make regulations to do that. That's why it needs to be in legislation, in these words. Then it forces the regulator to obey the legislation, make the regulations to abide by this process, and to make sure that this interest is protected. It's significant because when you look at this bill, this bill gives a tremendous amount of power to the regulator. In whose interest is this regulator working? It's a good question because the law should tell the regulator exactly whose interests they are working in and for, and the public interest test is not in the bill.

I would hope that one of the members or at least the sponsoring member might rise to the occasion and explain some of the deficiencies and why this public interest test is no longer required and what the justification is for removing it from the legislation. How is it going to streamline the process by eliminating the public interest test? What are the obstacles? Can someone give specific examples where the public interest test has stopped a process from going forward?

That's really important because that's one of the criteria that we're dealing with here when we bring this bill forward and say: we want to streamline a bill. I can tell you that the members over here would like to streamline a bill, get rid of unnecessary regulation. But we're not talking about regulation; we're talking about legislation. Where is this unnecessary legislation? Again, the devil is in the details. The details are yet to be known. By making this into legislation, those details now have rules to be guided by so that they will create those details, those regulations with the public interest in mind, and the regulator can be held accountable to the public interest test.

3:30

This is a very important aspect, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to actually address it more than once. It is fundamental to this process going forward. I'd be hopeful that somebody would speak up and explain a lot of those questions that I just asked, why this is happening.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others that would like to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would also like to speak in support of the amendment. Whatever we do in this House we do for the good of Albertans, for the good of the public. I don't know how not leaving the public interest in the bill would help the public interest. I think with any developments going ahead, we should, you know, look at the tax and revenue, and all that is spent on Albertans, all that is spent on the public, and I think that is in the public interest. I don't know how this would slow down the process, to leave it in there. We should be cutting red tape but not taking the public interest out of the bill. We should leave it in there.

I would also like to hear why we are taking it out. How would it speed up the process, and how would it cut down the red tape? I think it will bring more chaos if we don't leave it in here. It goes to show: what are we trying to hide here? I think, you know, it should be plain and clear. The public interest should be in here, and I support this amendment because this will put the public interest back in the bill. I think that that would be the right way to go instead of fixing it later on. Why don't we do it right to begin with?

I'm going to fully support this amendment because everything we do here is for the public interest. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that would like to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm sure many other colleagues have a sense of Groundhog Day, that we've perhaps spent quite a bit of time on this. Here we are, a different time, but it's still Groundhog Day today after talking about the public interest at great length last evening.

You know, Mr. Chair, we agree, obviously, that the public interest should be taken into account when developing legislation such as this. What we've done, really, in Bill 2 is ensure that in its taking responsibility to create the regulator for 10 acts, 10 pieces of legislation, there are amongst those at least five energy-related acts. There are six from the energy field, four from the environmental field. The new regulator will be responsible for regulating under those acts. Those existing pieces of legislation actually do include reference to the public interest, and those will continue to be referred to in the interpretation by the regulator. All of those past references continue into the interpretation as it will be done by the new regulator.

So I would argue, Mr. Chair, that this amendment is, in fact, redundant.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As we discussed last night, I understand the other acts do apply but not to the extent that I think the member is stating. Now, let me explain. Section 25 of this bill states specifically:

Except to the extent that the regulations provide otherwise . . .

So, again, we don't know what the regulations are.

. . . an application, decision or other matter under a specified enactment in respect of an energy resource activity must be considered, heard, reviewed or appealed, as the case may be, in accordance with this Act and the regulations and rules . . .

And the key word here is "instead."

. . . instead of in accordance with the specified enactment.

Clearly, what's happening here is that this bill is paramount to these other enactments by that wording alone.

Here we're dealing with a situation where the hon. member is saying that the public interest test and the public interest mandate are covered by these other enactments. What we know to be true is this. Hearings are conducted under this act and not under those other enactments. They're always conducted under this act. That's important to note when we look at the wording. That's why the wording belongs in this act. The wording was and still is in the existing act when the ERCB holds a hearing. As I understand the member, what he is saying is: we want to protect the public interest, and we're going to protect the public interest. That's great. Then let's put it back into the legislation so we know the public has that right. It's there.

What we're asking is simply this: do what you say you're going to do. Write it into law. Actually, how about this? Let's not remove it from law. [interjection] I always stand up to speak for the public interest and property rights, hon. member, and I will continue to do so and will go on and on and on. I will tell you that the public and property rights will have no greater advocate than the person standing right here. I will fight for them and continue to fight for them, and I will not go away.

Here we are dealing with the public interest test. It is absent from this legislation, yet no one has given a justifiable answer, a valid answer to the number of questions I have posed. Why is it being removed? Why is it already in law in the Hydro and Electric Energy Act, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act? It was in the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act before that was repealed. It's been around for 30 years or longer. I only went back about that far. I'm sure it was there, you know, going back even further. It is in other jurisdictions as far as dealing with resources.

Here's a real mandate. In all these decisions dealing with the development of energy, the great public interest here is those royalties we get from this extraction. We talk about the debate over budget. That's where our funding comes from. That is what makes us unique as a province. That's where our local municipalities get, really, the bulk of their tax dollars. When you go out to these counties and you look at how they receive their local funding, it is right here in this bill. It is the oil and gas plants. It is the pipelines. It is the development.

It isn't like we have people opposed to this. We're not trying to hold this back. There is industry, there are property owners, there are municipalities who all want this, but when you put all three on the table, they are the public interest as a whole. Their interest as a whole has to be balanced with the interest of the company which is developing in that, with the interest of the landowner who is affected by that, with the interest of the municipality. If we do not balance that, we basically fail in protecting their interest.

Again to the hon. minister, I fully understand what you're pointing out, but if it was put back into legislation, we would have no more discussion left. What we're asking to happen here is for you to do exactly what you say that you want done, which is to protect the public interest. I'm curious as to why there would be a fear to have that language in this legislation, as it has been in the past, as it is now in other legislation that doesn't apply necessarily to energy development.

It's really interesting. We were looking today in other jurisdictions. You'll find the public interest test in the Municipal Government Act. You'll find the public interest test in a number of other ministries to the point that we pointed out. We have legislation coming forward dealing with the public interest. So this is actually quite important.

We're dealing with the language of the legislation, and we don't have a satisfactory answer as to why we're removing accepted language that has been part of the process for more than a few generations. Again, I really would like a more specific answer as to why this language has to be removed and cannot be reinstalled into legislation.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

3:40

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Banff-Cochrane, and then Little Bow.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess a couple of points. Number one, I have to say that I feel slightly offended by the fact that there seems to be an implication that only this member or this party happens to care about property rights.

Mr. Anglin: Let's give him, everybody.

Mr. Casey: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman. I thought I had the floor.

The Chair: Yes, you do, hon. member. I'm sure the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre will make sure that you have your time on the floor, sir.

Mr. Casey: As I did with him. Thank you. [interjections] Sorry. I lost my thought for a moment.

The Chair: Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Thank you.

An Hon. Member: Your own members are distracting you. Those are your members distracting you.

Mr. Casey: No. It was your members here. Anyway, thank you very much.

If I might, Mr. Chairman, I can't speak as to why it's not in here, but I can talk to this. I can't say enough how important it is if you are a landowner to think about this. I have been on the landowner side of this albeit from a municipal point of view. This is in legislation not to protect landowners but to simply override landowners. It is in legislation to give the government, to give these boards a veto over any decision on land rights of the individual because you can do it because it is in the greater public interest.

Any individual landowner in this province would be ill served by having the public interest inserted back into this because the only thing that that protects is the mandate of the government. The only thing that is protected in that is the mandate of the province of Alberta, not the individual landowner. I'm concerned with the individual landowner, Mr. Chairman, as well as I am concerned with the overall good of the province of Alberta. One does not necessarily have to be counter to the other. In fact, if you want to have personal property rights entrenched, do not put public interest back into this bill. It gives an automatic veto for any private landowner to object to any project that is deemed to be in the greater public interest.

If we are arguing that the greater public interest should be put back into this to ensure the government mandate can be met, then put that forward. Say it in those terms. But don't tell me you're putting public interest back into this bill to save landowners and property rights of individual landowners because, Mr. Chairman, that is nothing but bunk.

Thank you.

The Chair: The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the Member for Banff-Cochrane for bringing this up because we were outside having a coffee about it, and we just discussed it. The nice part of being in my party is that I'm allowed to talk to everybody else and listen to their ideas and thoughts, and I might not get lynched. Anyway, we'll find out. I'll get dealt with afterwards.

It was interesting. The member brought up how it gives the government the right to go through, and you actually take away from your property rights, as he's just stated. I sat and thought about that for a bit. You get thinking of all the different bills that we have it in. The member has a valid point, that that gives the government the right to ram something through.

As we all know, I'm not real big fan of rules and regulations and everything that goes on. I understand that we need to have it to govern, to go to a point, but I'm not a big fan of red tape and being told what you can do on stuff. It brings a very valid point about all the other legislation that we have that has that in there. Is that truly in our, quote, public interest to have that in the other legislation that we have? We've named it off. My colleagues went through the Municipal Government Act. There's everything else in it.

The question comes back to: is this really what we want in this? And it's the play on the words "public interest." It goes back to – I mean, you've got to look at the whole thing for what is good for your province. Whether you're the landowner or you're the guy that is producing power or you're guy that's producing the oil and the gas that's going through the pipeline, you've got to look at what's good for the whole province. It's that balancing act. When you put public interest into it, is it the public interest – as the colleague from Banff-Cochrane had kind of said, it gives the government the right to take away when you have that in there. When you look at both sides of the coin, it's always an interesting time, I guess. You sit and you wonder: is that why it was taken out? If that's the point, then my question is that I guess we need to really have a pretty diehard thought about what public interest is for this province.

I don't want the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud to come out of his seat when I get on about Bill 4, the public interest act, but it gets you really thinking. In one act we talk about how the public interest is actually giving the government too much control, and when you take that out, if you listen to my colleagues from across the floor, that takes away the landowners' rights, which would dial into what Calgary-Bow was talking about yesterday, the public interest in it. Until you sit and you look at it that way, their thoughts are, if you use their rationale, that if you have public interest in there, the government gives them the veto right to go in and do what they want to do with something. If that's the case, then how many other pieces of legislation do we have and how many things have we gone through, other bills or other acts in this session alone, that have public interest written into them?

The question, to me, is: is the government picking and choosing whether public interest is put in a bill or not put in a bill depending on what the situation is? I think it's kind of a good litmus test of whether we're picking it just because it's energy – I mean, hey, that's what makes this province. I'm not here to kid anybody. I've got the odd pumpjack on my land. I've got mineral rights. I'm all for helping me out a little bit. Don't worry about Ian. But the question is that we take public interest out of this one. And we've fought very vigorously. Honestly, until I had coffee with the Member for Banff-Cochrane here, I really wondered what side of the moon you people are on when you're so defensive of having public interest in this. The other side of the coin is: why do we have it written in so many other bills and amendments that we've brought in this fall session? I throw it back.

I like the debate; I truly do. I know it feels like Groundhog Day as we were just here hours ago debating this whole thing from our side as a motion. But the question, I guess, lies back into: if the member is right and the rationale is that public interest actually takes away property rights, which the Member for Calgary-Bow talked about yesterday – in all honesty, I sat and I couldn't figure that one out. Then when I had the opportunity, as I said, to talk with the Member for Banff-Cochrane about it, it was: well, if you have that in there, it gives the government the right to take away because it's in the public interest; a.k.a. I don't want a massive power line through my land, but in the public interest for the whole province it has to go through there so that the members for Strathmore-Brooks or Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre could have power. In that rationale, that's public interest for the province.

Yet there are other bills that have been brought forward this fall that have public interest in them. As the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said: for 30 years public interest has been in the MGA. Has it been abused? That's the question that I guess arises. I know the Member for Banff-Cochrane talked about how he's been a long time dealing with that and fighting with it on the municipal side. Again, I was on the municipal side for 16 years. The question was that when it's in there, it actually gives the government too much power, too much control because it gives them the veto right to go through because they say it's in the public interest.

It's kind of the age-old question: what are we here for? Are we here for the public interest? Of course, we are. I think there are 87 of us in here most days, when everybody is here, that are here for the public interest and the best for Alberta. But if the government has been given this and it's been put in legislation for as long as I've been alive, the idea was that it's for the public interest and for the best. But the concept, now that we're reiterating and digging into it, is that it actually gives the government too much power, that it gives them the right to go into everything.

So if it's been identified in this bill that it's in the public interest and we're taking it out to give landowners property rights and to give everybody their property rights back, how many other bills are out there? How many other bills have been brought forth even in this fall session – in all honesty, I'm throwing out a question, and I've got absolutely no idea what the answer to it is. How many of them have the public interest written in them, other than Bill 4 because that's the title of it? I get confused on that.

If we've identified that in Bill 2 we're taking out the public interest to make sure that all people actually have more rights, then why are we making a bill, Bill 4 – you know, it's the whistle-blower; it gives everybody the right for public interest and the best thing to do. I guess I'm confused on it because, you know, if the comments are correct – and I have no reason to doubt the Member for Banff-Cochrane on it – we've taken it out of Bill 2 because we want to give everybody more rights. So how many more bills and motions have we brought in this fall that have public interest in them? If we have, why is it we have to have it out of Bill 2, yet it's okay for the other bills?

I'm just throwing it out there. It just really got me thinking, sitting outside. As we sat and talked about it, I was wondering: why are they so passionate about not putting public interest in there, and if this is the rationale and if this is right, then how many other bills have we brought forth this fall that say public interest? Just too many hot chocolates and coffee for the afternoon.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on amendment A7.

Mr. Anglin: On amendment A7. You know where I'm going with this. To the hon. member's comment about bunk, it's really important that we bring this back a little bit. There's a piece of legislation out there – and I really do respect the fact that we want to talk about private property rights, but we're talking about the public interest. The private property rights had been removed when 26(2) was not brought forward and was rejected.

So we're dealing with a bill here that has a balance. You have the developer's right to the resource, to extract the resource and develop the resource. You have the right of the private property owner, which is now missing from the bill. We have not brought it forward to reinsert it. You can't find me that in this legislation; it's not there.

Now what we're dealing with is the broader scope, which is the public interest, because the public interest test is the private property owner's last resort for protecting their private property. In our province, in our economy, in our society it is in the public interest to protect private property rights. That is something that is well established in most legislation, and it is well established in jurisprudence. It is not something that is fabricated or made up. It is always about a balance. It has always been about a balance. What we're looking for is the language in the bill to make sure that we maintain the proper balance.

Nobody here at this chair or on this side is saying that we're going to railroad private property because we're going to put the public interest test back in. That's not the intent, and I would say that it was never the intent of putting the public interest test of any legislation. What's happening here is that we've removed private property rights. Now we are removing the public interest test. What is left? This is important because the resource itself is the public interest.

That's why we have the Surface Rights Act. That act was developed so that property owners had to allow the resource to be developed because that resource was now bid and sold to be extracted. We had this balance we had to deal with. I'm not a big fan of the Surface Rights Act. Don't get me wrong. I've had to deal with it. I think it's unfair to many property owners, but it is something that has been well tested in time. It's well accepted in Alberta, and that's what we work with. That's the public interest.

Now, dealing with existing legislation, I would ask the members who claim to protect private property rights to go to something called the Land Assembly Project Area Act, look at sections 4(1)(a), (b), (c), and (d), and then tell me that this government has abided by protecting private property rights. That did not happen in that legislation.

We're looking now to try to restore balance to this legislation, put back in a person's right to have a reasonable opportunity to be informed of the facts, to have a reasonable opportunity to at least be notified to be able to challenge the facts of a project, and that's been denied. Now, all of a sudden if they were to come back under this amendment under the public interest test, they do not have that right either. Every private property owner is part of the public. Nobody here is advocating railroading landowners. That's just what we're trying to stop. This bill without these amendments is heavily weighted to the development at the expense of the private property owner, at the expense of the public interest, because when they do not appear in the bill, then there's no legal recourse for these people to come back.

By putting it in the legislation, as the amendment has it laid out, what it requires to happen is that the regulation has to abide by the legislation. So the regulator has to make those regulations to make sure, and what should be in this bill is the public interest test because the public does have a right as a public because it is the public's resource. This is where we actually get our revenue to run this province. Private property rights should also be reinstated in this bill, which will be another matter. We've already dealt with it once on the notification, the right to a reasonable opportunity to be informed of the facts and the right to challenge the facts. But to say that just inserting the public interest is somehow railroading landowners, then what we're saying is that every bill you've passed so far in the last 100 years has railroaded landowners. You can't have it both ways. You cannot have it both ways. It's one or the other.

Looking at the issue of public interest, this is about taking this one step at a time, dealing with one issue at a time. The public has a right to have the public interest test here. We'll deal with the private property and private landowner when we get to that yet one more time.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I find this very interesting in that, you know, bills are not just little phrases here and there that you just pull out when you need a special few words to get someone excited about something. You know, bills are actually structured. They have meaning within themselves and within the context of them. They're made out of full sentences rather than phrases, they have intentions, you know, usually at the beginning of the bills, and they are complete documents. They are not just odd phrases that are thrown in as in "private property rights" or "public interest" or whatever catchphrases you want. They are actual full sentences. They are an actual part of a bigger whole.

Now, as a government we have absolutely nothing against the phrase "public interest." We have nothing against the phrase "private property rights." In fact, both of those are things that, you know, we hold very close to our hearts. These are things that really matter to this party. Okay? Bills are actual complete documents, and just because you like a phrase, it doesn't mean that you can throw it anywhere in there and not affect the actual meaning of the bill.

You know, if you guys want to search through and find a place where public interest should be put without taking away from private property rights, I'm all for it. Get in there, get searching, find that special place where you can put it in – okay? – but don't put it in a place where it's destroying private property rights. You've got to be smarter about this.

Thank you very much.

4:00

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure for me to speak on this bill because I, too, am a landowner, and I have what I believe to be property rights. I have a lot of energy development on my property, and I recognize that those energy producers have access to their property. This bill, even though it's quite thick – I've got lots of little tabs here of points of interest, if you will – is very significant to me personally, to my constituents, and, I believe, to this province. I'd like to talk also about the public interest because I believe, somewhat differently, possibly, than the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, that private property rights are the trumping thing, and that is necessary for the public interest. Property rights and individual property rights are the basis of a complete and free democratic society.

In the British model that we have – we call it Canada – in the formation of the province we decided to segregate the property rights from the mineral rights. That has created onerous responsibilities and, therefore, complicated ongoing legislation, which we need here to try and effect the property rights of the mineral rights holders, which are below the surface. We've been developing and debating this, and we are going to probably be debating this long after this bill came forward.

I was astounded to see the presentation of this bill when it first came forward, that the government itself came forward with lots of legalese-type amendments. I was astounded that they should have had this brought forward prior to ever even tabling the legislation. I take great heed of the word "responsible" here because that is our position. Our job here in this Chamber is to be responsible when we pass legislation. To the hon. member opposite who just talked about legislation: I view that legislation should not simply be words picked from the atmosphere at a whim. This will be written in history. This will be debated and talked about long after we're in this Chamber.

I think that we have a very serious responsibility to do things correctly. I think this amendment needs to be translated correctly in the minds of all the members of this Chamber. The public interest is ultimately what we are trying to achieve.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Maybe there needs to be clarity on what the motion is that we're dealing with. It says:

Where by any enactment the Regulator is charged with approving the development of energy resource activities in Alberta, it shall, in addition to any other responsibilities, give consideration to whether any proposed energy resource activity is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects.

Those social and economic effects have a lot to do with our resources as far as the revenue. I would argue that, and I would also say to the hon. member: words do play a very important role in every little part of legislation. What we're trying to do here is not quite absolute, but it's a little bit more prescriptive.

I will remind the members that we're not removing public interest according to the hon. House leader. As he stated last night, the underlying premise here is the public interest. All we're trying to do is say: "Make it more prescriptive. Put it back in legislation." Nobody here is saying that we're going to take over property rights. As a matter of fact, I would rather take that debate up right now, but right now we're dealing with the public interest. The public at large, Albertans at large, have certain vested rights, and I don't think that's disputed. What we're making sure of here is that those rights are carried forward in this legislation. As the hon. minister who is authoring this bill has already said, the public interest test is in these subset bills, the coal act and a few other acts beyond that, that this bill is the umbrella for.

No one is actually saying – at least, I'm not hearing it – that we're getting rid of the public interest per se. It's just not written in this bill. It's not prescriptive in this bill, and that's problematic when you go forward in the development because somebody can make an argument that coming forward, opposite to what the minister has just said, the public interest test will be protected.

What we're saying is that that should not be left up to a court to decide. That should not hold up a project. You should list it right in the legislation so that it's clear to the regulator to make regulations so the public interest test is protected. Now, we'll deal with property rights on another issue altogether, and we will get there, but I will tell the hon. member that when a bill says in specific and prescriptive terms that no person is entitled to compensation by reason of this act or any other enactment or regulation made thereunder, I think it's real clear to a landowner that they just lost some rights. We had to fight that and get this government to change that in other legislation.

Here we're dealing with the situation where there are no landowner rights to be found, which is only one element of the three parts of this development. The public interest test is not in the legislation now although the hon. ministers say that it's the underlying premise. This creates an imbalance for the developer. If that's your intention, then state it to be so because I've not heard that. I've heard nothing but: we want balance.

It is absolutely clear that singular words aren't just pulled out of the air. They are very much prescriptive. When you put in the words "may be" versus "they shall," that's prescriptive in the sense that you know how this thing is going to be interpreted. So this is not something that is a hodgepodge. This is something that is well established in legislation, and we're only intending to put it back in legislation. It's not just being put in another spot. It's put in the spot where it was originally under the legislation. It wasn't something that was thought of randomly. It was well discussed not just in our own caucus; it was discussed between various parties. And I will tell you that I suspect some of you would agree if you did not have to deal with the fact that you're going to oppose it.

It's common sense. It's not stupid. It's smart. That's what it is. It's about protecting the public interest, and we need to address the balance of property rights. It's always been the Alberta way, and no one is asking for a change here. What we're asking for in this bill is a streamlined process. Nobody is asking to remove the public interest or to remove private property rights. What we want is a bill that functions well for what we want to do as a society. We want to streamline the unnecessary regulation.

This bill doesn't touch upon the regulation yet. It's always the regulation that causes the hang-up. The bill gives us the umbrella to tell the regulator how to create those regulations, and that's what we want. We want to make sure the regulator takes in the public interest as well as private property rights. We have our work cut out for us. We have to get that language back in, and we have to be able to get this bill so it does exactly what it's intended to do, to streamline the process so we can get the development of those developments we're supposed to get but that we treat every party to the process fairly and justly and that they feel as if they have a venue. If they have concerns, if they are directly and adversely affected, they have a process where they can be heard.

You need that public interest test to make that work, and I tell you now that if you do not put that back in, you will create more problems, not fewer. You will not streamline. You will end up going to court and letting the courts decide by jurisprudence what that's going to mean without these words, and there are going to be some significant issues that we'll have to deal with.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The minister claimed that the public interest is protected under other bills, and this bill may override the public interest which is covered under other bills, so my concern is the motive here. If it's protected in other bills, why can't we leave it in Bill 2? I think the public interest should be paramount. Whatever we do here – we brought in Bill 1, Bill 4, Bill 3. All those bills we brought in here were done in the good of the public interest. If it's okay to leave the public interest in other bills, I think we can put that back in here, too.

Those are my comments on this, Mr. Chair, and that's the reason I'm supporting this amendment. Thank you.

4:10

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you wish to speak next?

Mr. Eggen: No. I think I'm okay. Thanks.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Chair, I'm not wanting to unnecessarily prolong debate. However, I feel that there have been some questions levelled by members opposite about sort of the background and the interest and where we're coming from on some of these things. I'm going to try a slightly different interpretation, but you'll find that there are similarities to the comments made by my colleague from Banff-Cochrane.

With regard specifically to public interest let me just back up a little bit on where this comes from. First of all, I'm not a landowner – okay? – but throughout the course of this debate I've often heard the phrases "I've owned land for X number of years" or "I own this much land" or "I own that much land." I'm not sure if that preface is always attached to the comments in order to indicate that therefore you have more authority when speaking on the issue. I don't own land, but that doesn't make me less interested in property rights. I don't own land, but that doesn't make me less interested in those who have land and who are concerned about it.

When I ran in the election this spring, I met with many of the people that I had done work for for close to three decades. These were people that in many cases put their livelihood, their financial well-being into my hands, sometimes in a small matter but sometimes in a much larger matter. The trust of those people was something that I'd built up over a long period of time. That trust was challenged in some situations where they felt that some of the issues surrounding some of the acts dealing with property rights were not in their favour. What I will tell you is that in many cases what we were dealing with was the interpretation of certain words. We've heard that said a lot here this afternoon, that words are important, and how individual words are interpreted is very important.

I will tell you that a lot of the objections that a lot of these constituents of mine had to some of the legislation that has been passed in the past years comes from interpretation of certain words and phrases within that legislation and specifically because these are legal documents and how different lawyers will interpret those specific words. I mean, that is one of those questions that can be very difficult. I have had constituents tell me that, in fact, they see public interest and the notion that something could be acting in the public interest as being very contrary to their personal property rights.

I'll give you an example. I would use a hypothetical example. I'd say, "What if in the public interest it was decided that we needed to build a school or a hospital or a water reservoir on your land?" They said: "Well, wait a minute. I've got property rights. I don't want that there, and I could care less about the public interest. The public interest can't trump my individual property rights." So the insertion of public interest or putting it back, if you call it that, into this act I think, at least for my constituents, would cause a great deal of consternation. They would have concerns with that. From my standpoint, if we're going to have terms like "public interest" – and let's face it, public interest can be interpreted very broadly – I know my constituents are going to look at that and say: "Wait a minute. What happens when the public interest doesn't happen to align with my personal property rights?"

That's the basis of my objection to reinserting this. I mean, you folks have asked, and you folks have intimated that all of us here are just thinking like sheep. Well, I don't, because I know how sheep think, and it's not pretty.

You know, from my standpoint and from the conversations that I have had with my constituents, I'll tell you that these constituents, that are very passionate about a variety of issues, including property rights, are also people that became my friends. They're my clients, and they're still my friends even though now I don't get to see them at 3 in the morning anymore. The reality of it is – and I told them when I was elected – that I would continue to act on what I felt was their behalf and that I would continue to act in my new capacity, as I had for the previous 28 years, in their best interests. So in acting in their best interests, I don't believe that insertion of "public interest" here into this legislation is helpful to them. You asked for a reason why I was against it. There it is.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you very much for that response. But there are some real open questions now. If we don't have a public interest test and this is not going to be in the public interest, how does this now impact what we want to do?

I don't think we're going down this road, but if I hear you correctly and if I hear other members correctly, what happens now when – I can give you a lot of examples here – a developer comes in to develop the resources? Now, you have the person whose property is directly and adversely affected, and they have their issue. But you know and everyone else here knows you've got to build a pipeline to get to that property. If it's going to be an oil and gas well, you've got to get it out. Okay? For my example, we always build pipelines. Out west of me it's always pipelines. We don't truck. It's a lot of fuel to truck. We've got lots of pipelines. As a matter of fact, I don't think you can buy a quarter section out by me that doesn't have a pipeline under it. That's just the way it works.

Does a property owner, then, have the right to say no? That's a good question. I actually think they should, but they don't have that right. I actually think that if a property owner had the right to say no, that would make a much more level playing field. Most property owners want the development to go forward. We know that. We know that from our own history. Ninety per cent of all applications are approved, settled without any problem. Of the 10 per cent that are left, 90 per cent get settled without a board hearing. This is a standard statistic that is still true in our province.

We're really dealing with the 1 per cent that need to go to a hearing. They may not go to a hearing. They may go to an ADR, which is an alternate dispute resolution – that's the process we use – and they have a success rate. What we find – and I've always found this in dealing with property owners – is that it's very rarely about money although money generally settles it in the end. It's always about respect and the disrespect that developed when the initial negotiations started.

What happens when a gas plant starts leaking fumes? That is a public interest, depending on where those fumes go. What happens when that infringes upon a property owner who is not even in that near vicinity, but now their individual property rights have been infringed upon? Again, you have the clash between the public interest or the clash between private and private.

One of the reasons that the public interest test is so universal in all our legislation is that it does give these judges the ability to look objectively on a very macro level in addition to a micro level, and that is important. I believe that's why that wording is in a number of pieces of legislation where quasi-judicial boards make decisions. It is not trumping one over the other. It is in addition to. That's what it says here in this amendment. It basically says: giving consideration "in addition to any other responsibilities." It's not about trumping one over the other. It's about balance. That's the way it's always been constructed in legislation, and that's why it's been put in legislation. It is the scales of justice.

When I look at this, having known this, going to court with this argument in the public interest, it is important. Every property owner knows, particularly in the rural areas, that you at some time might be confronted with having to sell your land for a road; in other words, a road widening. You may have to sell or give up some of your rights, which we compensate them for, for gas pipelines and oil pipelines. You may have to allow a transmission line to cross your property for the public good. That is all part of the public interest test. What we want is for these people to be treated fairly, justly, and compensated and made whole if they have losses. We're not looking to have people abuse the system. We want the system to work, and I will tell you that the public interest is all part of that. The public interest is about protecting landowner rights. It is not about violating them.

Let's back up a sec. Property rights, not necessarily land but your property as a business owner, which are the tangibles and intangibles: that's public interest, too, and that plays an important role. Public interest is not something arbitrary that trumps one thing over another or abuses. Public interest is an umbrella test to make sure that we as a society, we as a regulator, because we're going to create this regulator, take into consideration in addition to others, not trumping over others. That's the balance. Those are the scales of justice that property owners also need. It is important.

If it is so wrong in this legislation, why is it right in all the others? Why has it been right for so many years? Where did it go wrong? I don't know. This is important. If we can't come to an agreement, maybe we ought to put this back in committee and have some serious discussions and bring people in to give testimony to it to resolve this.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to amendment A7?

Mr. Donovan: One last comment. It's interesting. This is what I think is probably what we're supposed to be doing here as MLAs, sitting back and listening to different ideas and thoughts. You kind of get the juices flowing on what should be done or not done. The Member for Calgary-Bow had stated that you can't pick and choose where you put in the wording of public interest or, you know, land rights and stuff like that, the situation with public interest. It's very resounding, I guess, from this side of the floor. I'm going to probably have a better mustache in a week than the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster by the time we get this done if I shave tonight. There's just no way it's going to be allowed to have public interest written into Bill 2. It's resounding. It doesn't matter what we say or where we put it.

I just find it intriguing that, say, on some bills public interest is key, and on some it's not. I'm not trying to play politics on it. I think there are a lot of amendments that have public interest. And it's not that it's just using it as a key word. I think it's worded correctly. I mean, this is an NDP motion, too, I believe. I'm talking to that also, I guess. It's public interest. The Member for Calgary-Bow put in that you can't just pick and choose where you put in the words. Who gets to decide the pick-and-choose part? I think that with amendments people look at it, they go through it, they come up with things where public interest is allowed to be put in, and I'm not seeing why we're not allowed to be part of that choice or that process.

I get that the hon. Minister of Energy has done a ton of work on making this bill and doing that. There were – what? – 14 amendments that came from the government side on it that showed that maybe it wasn't quite the right bill. That was fine; I respect that. I like the concept that there were some things identified, and I liked the fact that the minister came out to Vulcan to talk to landowners. And to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster: you know, it's not whether you have farmland. I mean, you have a lot number where your house is at if you own it. Even if you don't own it, you're paying rent, which is part of the process. Somebody owns that land. Everybody is basically a property owner at some point unless they're a lifetime renter, which I'm not sure everybody is or isn't, whatever. I'm not here to judge. It's not the end of the world.

This even goes to the lot plan. Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre mentioned block number also in his comments, whether it's, you know, the northwest quarter of something or if it's block number 210 Centre Street, Vulcan. I mean, it's property. It's an actual, defined piece of land, whether it's farmland or not.

I guess that from this side I look at: if we bring up the idea of public interest – this is just my biased opinion of it, obviously – right away it gets shot down. "No. There's no public interest in this. You can't put it in there. It doesn't matter what words we use or don't use. You've got to pick and choose where it goes." I think we've looked and it, and I think it's been looked at. I don't think people are making amendments just to make amendments and add words into it. I think people are looking at it as to what's right for their constituents.

I mean, I respect the fact that the Vermilion-Lloydminster MLA talked to his constituents, as I have to mine. For my constituents public interest is the thing they bring up. They feel that's what it is. I find it interesting when another member brings up that it gives the government too much power, and that's why you want it back out of there now. It makes you sit and think. One member, Calgary-Bow, says that you can't just pick and choose where public interest is put in and especially from this side of the floor, it would seem, yet on that side of the floor, if there's an amendment made, which is just as important as an amendment from this side, I would think, if it was allowed from that side, then it should be allowed from this side.

It would be neat if the Minister of Energy put it in, but obviously it's not going to happen. It's the fact that it just seems like we get stopped all the time. As soon as it's something, I feel, that we come up with – and I don't think people pick and choose where “public interest,” if those are the key words today, goes in. People work hard, put through amendments, my colleagues from the fourth party and the third party, and we're the Official Opposition. I guess that is how it all rolls out when we're rolling it out. People take their time, and they put through what they think is right and what needs to be changed to something. That's the idea of amendments.

I mean, it was identified by the government right off the bat when they brought out the bill that there were some amendments to be made. My colleague from Drumheller-Stettler brought up, you know, that when it was first brought out, obviously, some stuff was missed because there were amendments brought from the government side to change it. I sit there and go: why can we not listen back and forth on the stuff?

An Hon. Member: Why can't we just get along, right?

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. Well, it's a little Kumbaya, obviously.

You know, the question is: how do you sit there? It's okay for that side to bring amendments, and it's considered gospel and it's fine then. If this side brings amendments – we've been told by the Member for Calgary-Bow that you can't pick and choose where public interest goes in. I respect, say, Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, that your constituents feel that public interest shouldn't be in it, and I believe that. I believe there are probably some people that have those thoughts and ideas and values – I guess we have ours – but it always comes to the loggerhead back and forth of “Oh, you can't use it in this act, but we're going to make another act that has it,” which is totally different in other ways. I get that.

But it's the challenge, I guess, of being in opposition, and I understood that when we took that role. You sit and you wonder: why do we sit up till 1 in the morning arguing over stuff? It's because we believe in it. I believe in it. I think most of the colleagues believe in what we're saying. We're not here just to argue. We're not here just to talk eight hours on it. It's to sit here and actually look at what makes sense. If the wording in something happens to be the words “public interest” – you know, I think that in this motion alone that's why we're supporting it, because it has a purpose. It has a purpose in this. It wasn't just thrown in there to say that we've put public interest in Bill 2 just to cause the Minister of Energy a slight heart problem or a blood pressure problem on it. You know, these are reasons why they're put in here.

It's interesting, I guess, from my side on why sometimes it just feels like it's a challenge to throw out words, and there's a challenge as to whether it's something good or not. You know, you feel the challenge in here of trying to get something put through, key words. Obviously, there could have been a memo sent around over there that if they say “public interest,” jump on it and abandon ship; get on top of the grenade because it's going to go bad for everybody.

Then another comment made by Calgary-Bow, that you can't just put public interest in here or there. I don't think it is. I think people have actually looked at their amendments, and when they're putting in an amendment – and public interest isn't the only one they put in – it just seems like you get stopped. You get blocked right away. As I say, it can be a challenge, which – don't get me wrong – I'm all for, but you can see how you sit there and wonder sometimes why you put through all these amendments. It seems like not everybody even wants to listen to them. As soon as there's a catchphrase or a word in it, it's just ditched. I don't know. I just find democracy weird some days in how it works.

But that's the end of my rant.

4:30

The Chair: Are there other speakers on amendment A7?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to the bill. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks on the bill.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: It looks like you have an amendment.

Mr. Hale: I do have an amendment to put forward.

The Chair: Okay. Would you circulate those, please? This will be amendment A8.

Hon. member, you can start speaking to amendment A8.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The section I'm amending is the mandate of the regulator. This would be put in as 2(1)(a). We would like it to read:

2(1) The mandate of the Regulator is

- (a) to provide for the efficient, safe, orderly and environmentally responsible development of energy resources in Alberta in a manner which respects landowners through the Regulator's regulatory activities.

I'm happy to see all of the great discussion about property rights and landowner rights from the other side. This is a great example of a place that we can show respect for landowners. Not just landowners, but we must also respect the leaseholders of our public lands. This is something that we've talked about on many of the other amendments about property rights. Just this afternoon many of the government members stood up and said: you know, we love property rights. Well, this is the place to show it. This is in the mandate of the regulator where we can show that we are respecting landowners. There's nothing in this amendment that's going to hold up the single regulator, nothing that will stop the streamlining effect.

You know, a couple of our members have stated in their talks that landowners want respect. It's not all about the money that they get from the lease agreements and the money that's paid to them. It's about respect. It's about being asked if they can come on their land. Property rights are the essence of every democracy. Property rights doesn't mean just the landowner. You own a car, that's your property. You own a house, that's your property. Your clothes on your back are your property. Property rights doesn't mean just landowners. Property rights means the rights to the property that you own.

I have a couple of letters. Actually, I believe this one was addressed to the hon. Energy minister. I was CCed on it. It talks in here, and I'll quote: this inevitably will do serious and irreparable damage to the good neighbour relationship between landowners, energy and industry companies. This has a lot to do with respect. You know, if the landowners are shown respect from the start, it will go a long way to streamlining this regulatory process. There will be fewer holdups. There will be fewer appeals if they're shown that respect: the respect of consultations, the respect of notices, the respect of the ability to challenge the regulator on decisions that they're making.

The respect that the hon. Energy minister has talked about with landowners that is going to be put in the regulations cannot just be implied. People want to see it. The oil companies want to see it. Everybody wants to see what their rights are, what their privileges are. Inserting this statement in here, "in a manner which respects landowners," is very broad, but it gives the landowners a sense that: "You know what? Maybe they are going to look at our concerns. Maybe they will respect it if it's put in legislation."

It's something that every one of us – I mean, the hon. member opposite mentioned he doesn't own land, but he owns a house. I believe he mentioned that he owns an acreage. I mean, that's property rights. You deserve respect if someone wants to come through your property. I think we all understand that. We deserve respect for anything we have. You can't just go in and say: yeah, I think I'm going to take your car for a joyride. You know, we have to respect that owner's rights to his property.

We've received many e-mails and letters. One e-mail from a lawyer from the University of Calgary . . .

Mr. Denis: Lawyers.

Mr. Hale: Yeah, lawyers. There you go.

He talks about the competitive advantage, and in his statement he said: industry is not entitled to a competitive advantage at the expense of landowner rights. This goes a little way into showing the landowners that they will be respected.

Now, a lot of it is going to be left up to the regulations that the regulator makes in how they're going to deal with that respect, but I think this is a good start. It's a good start to showing that: hey, we actually do care about property rights, and we do care about landowners. You know, I think this should be a really hard one for the government to vote down considering the comments that we've heard today about property rights and landowners.

This is common sense. We're not asking for anything outrageous. We're asking just to put in there: show a little respect. I think that will be well received in the energy industry. Many of them already respect landowners. They have consultations with them before they come on. You know, the companies that are doing great work in the communities already respect landowners. It's an unwritten rule, but it goes a long way to write it in this legislation saying: hey, we're going to respect them.

I've mentioned it before. The company I used to work for had a lot of respect. They would go out and have consultations before the projects even thought about starting. That's respect. It's good. The companies do that, and if the companies continue to do that and for some new companies that start up, you know, if there's a little bit of law here to show them that we as Albertans demand some respect, I think that will go a long way into helping our industry and streamlining the process and meeting at the end what we all want, a single regulator that's going to work well for industry, work well for landowners, work well for all Albertans.

I hope you guys take into consideration this statement and vote in favour of it. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise in favour of this amendment. I would like to tell the hon. members that the reason we had such a long discussion about the public interest is so we could get here, and here we are. All we want to do is make it a mandate of the regulator to respect landowners, and it's in the right spot. It's under the mandate of the regulator so that when they make decisions, they respect the landowners.

That interpretation is broad, but it is also very flexible in the sense that the regulator is basically going to make regulations that have respect in this hearing process for a property owner, a landowner because those are the ones that are the individuals, not the broad public but the individuals, that will be coming in front of a board, in front of the regulator with a concern, whatever that concern can be. We can come up with multiple concerns, but that's the whole hearing process. All this does is say to the regulator: you have to respect the landowner – and you could actually extend that – that will be coming before you, in every sense of the word.

As one of the members said I think a couple of weeks ago: even a blind squirrel can find a nut every now and then. I think we might have found a nut. I would hope so, that we can agree on it and say: "You know what? This is good. This is protecting a landowner in the sense that at least we're going to make regulation that respects the landowner." Because that's what's happening here. This is in the right spot. It is the spot that says: this is the mandate of the regulator. When the regulations are made – and they will be forthcoming – those regulations dealing with those particular landowner issues are going to be complex. We know that. I mean, this is a very broad bill. It takes in a very wide area, everything from the environment to energy development.

This is paramount to me, that the regulator respect the landowner. It doesn't say that it gives them rights above anyone else. It doesn't say that one has supreme rights that are paramount to another. It just says that when they are exercising their fiduciary duty, they will respect the landowner. I think this is a very positive step forward in dealing with some particular landowner issues and property rights issues.

I think this is really important because a lot of this development is on private property and a lot of the development that's on SRD land are really issues dealing with many of the aboriginal peoples, traditional lands that are not necessarily reserve. As anyone knows who has aboriginal peoples in their ridings, traditional lands can be quite expansive. We're not saying anything other than that we're going to respect them. It does even apply to aboriginal peoples as much as it applies to the individual landowner who owns a quarter section or a section of land.

The whole process, then, now starts to flow because it gives us a little bit of balance. We are telling the regulator in its mandate that it will make those regulations with this in mind.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers to amendment A8? The Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I would like to stand and support this amendment from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I think it is a very reasonable amendment.

I enjoyed the speech from the Member for Banff-Cochrane. I like it when members of the governing party get up and defend their bills. That's a good thing, and they should be commended for that. He says that he's tired, and so he should be, of folks questioning his government's commitment and devotion to upholding landowner rights.

The reason that people feel that way is because this government has an abysmal record on upholding and protecting landowner rights, which is manifest by the fact that we have 17 MLAs mostly from rural Alberta sitting on this side of the House. Landowners slightly north and then south of Red Deer felt – and, of course, how could we forget Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills? I'm sorry about that. All those folks felt very strongly that, indeed, this government does not respect landowner rights. You can tell that.

It's very interesting. If you go into the Elections Alberta data that they release, the different poll-by-poll constituency election results you will see, particularly in southern Alberta, the results in some of these rural areas where the power lines are coming down, where some of these changes in the law will have the most effect, it's 75 per cent, 80 per cent in some of these areas. It's just incredible. Places like Madden, by Crossfield, up by Lochend in my constituency just overwhelmingly voted Wildrose in the last election.

The reason they did that was not because of my sparkling personality.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, yes, it was.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I don't think it was, Member. I don't think it was my sparkling personality. I think the government will agree with that. [interjections] Yes? We have agreement? But I think it had something to do with those . . . [interjections] Okay. There you go.

I think it didn't have something to do with that. Maybe not everything but certainly a huge portion of it had to do with the government's inability to support landowners' rights or protect landowners' rights adequately enough.

Now, that said, do I think that the government is antilandowner? No, not really, but I think that they have made a lot of mistakes and that they have let the ends justify the means, so to speak. In the interest of promoting a province that is well planned and maintained and so forth, they feel that they need to undercut certain rights among landowners. I think that that is a pattern that the previous administration fell into prior to the last election. That is a huge reason why 34 per cent of Albertans, more than one-third of Albertans, including many, many in rural Alberta, voted for the Wildrose. That was a key issue in the last election, and that's why I'm surprised that the government is not seizing this moment to take a very important issue, an arrow in the quiver of our party, I would say, away from us.

Why are they not seizing the mantle of protecting landowner rights? Bill 2 does not adequately protect landowner rights. The government has the ability to show that with this bill they protect landowner rights, and they can balance those with the need to make sure that we have effective, streamlined regulation with regard to oil and gas development and other developments in our province. That's what Bill 2 could do, but it falls remarkably short of that.

Because of that, they're essentially freeing up my friend from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and many other folks to tour the province for the next four years and talk about this bill and other things that the PCs are doing with regard to going ahead with power lines, in particular, despite admitting that they shouldn't have given that power to cabinet, as we see with Bill 8, which is on the Order Paper. Because of those mistakes, now we will have many more town halls. Frankly, they weren't necessary. This could have been fixed, but now we will. People will be upset again about it, and rightfully so, because this government has again shown that it is unable to compromise and hear out landowners and the issues that they bring forward.

I think that if the government were serious about some of these amendments – not only that, but we have this process now where we have a chance to look at some of these amendments and actually put them into law, again giving the government a chance to take away the battering ram. Why do they love pain so much? I don't understand the pain. I don't understand why they like it so much. It's like they enjoy these town hall meetings. They enjoy it. The Deputy Premier must enjoy going to Sylvan Lake and being as warmly received as he was the other day. They must enjoy that.

I don't understand why we're not just doing what clearly needs to be done, which is to start with an amendment like this. Just put an olive branch out to landowners. Change section 2(1) to say: the mandate of the regulator is to provide for the efficient, safe, orderly, and environmentally responsible development of energy resources in Alberta in a manner which respects landowners through the regulator's regulatory activities. How is that hard? How is that difficult? Why is it so hard to mention landowners? It's not asking for tons. It's just saying that the decisions the regulator makes will be in a manner which respects landowners.

Now, of course, if we don't pass this amendment, then what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and our good friend Keith Wilson can go around saying to everybody is that the government voted against adding "in a manner which respects landowners" into this mandate of the regulator. By voting against it, what they're really saying is that they are voting specifically to say that the regulator should not have the mandate of ordering efficient, safe, orderly, and environmentally responsible development of energy resources in a manner which respects landowners. That's, effectively, what they're saying. "No, we don't think that should be the mandate of the regulator. We think that they should be obviously making sure there is efficient, safe, orderly, and environmentally responsible development, but that development does not need to be in a manner which respects landowners."

You know, when folks are voting against that, again, you're just giving these folks a club, metaphorically of course, to beat you senseless with for the next four years. I just don't understand it, Member for Little Bow. I do not understand. It's almost masochistic. I don't understand it.

So here we are. But I feel that my words are striking a chord with the government over there. I can see opinions swaying, swinging over to a yea vote on this amendment. Yes. See, there are smiles in the back. I know it's coming. Oh, sorry. That was laughter. My bad.

I think that we can all agree that we need to respect landowners, so let's actually do something which shows that we're serious about that. I'd love to hear from the members of the Wildrose Party, a party which clearly respects landowners and has done so repeatedly with our actions, not just our words.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Other comments, questions? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. There are a number of examples where the whole issue of respect comes into play, and I want to use one in particular. Some of you may remember an incident that happened last summer with a company that had an oil leak in the Red Deer River. Now, that is a matter of environmental concern. That's a matter of an after-the-fact decision, cleanup, and all that. That's actually still under investigation. Here is a situation where you have an event that took place, property owners that were adversely affected, and then all of a sudden another application comes before the regulator dealing with these exact same property owners.

So you have one property owner who had a massive oil spill across their quarter section. They're trying to clean that up. They're trying to deal with that issue, and now you have an application coming in for a well site at the same time. Now, the conflict that that property owner is going through is one where we need respect because the circumstances are unique, hopefully will never be repeated, but the reality is that the circumstances, in effect, have to change how this regulator is going to deal with the situation. The current law actually takes care of that in many ways. In this new bill it's very important that the regulator have some sort of guideline on how it needs to deal with this issue.

Now, you can say: trust the regulations. That would be exactly the way this bill is going, but if we have in the bill that these regulations will be constructed to respect the landowner, then this situation can be dealt with. That's why we think this is important. That's why we think that some of the members across, in the government, are really contemplating supporting this amendment because it's smart. Well, I hope you are smart. We don't need to question that. I think you are. I want to believe you are, in good faith. I don't think you should necessarily doubt that. By the way, what better way to shut me up than to pass this thing? [interjections] Now you're awake.

The Chair: Hon. members, please. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has the floor.

Mr. Anglin: There are times when I can gain their attention, Mr. Chairman.

I know they would want to, and I would be willing to give it up if we can get certain provisions put back into the bill so we can make sure that this respect to landowners is brought forward. I think we have that opportunity now.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just need to get this off my chest, so it shouldn't take that long. I've been around the public policy world, although on a much smaller scale than this, for the last 15 years at every level, and I've been in a thousand different debates and a thousand different arguments with provincial governments down to regional governments and you name it. I'm more than familiar with debate, but never in all of that time have I heard an argument to vote for an amendment being a threat of my political demise.

For the last three weeks we've heard nothing but: if you don't vote for this, you are going to lose the next election. Well, this is about doing the right thing. If you want to put an argument forward that speaks to the bill, that speaks to the amendment that happens to be on the floor, then great. But to threaten me with some political bogeyman every time you put an amendment on the floor, I have to say that it just puts me a little bit over the top. If you wouldn't mind just sticking to the bill and sticking to the amendment and leaving out the threats, the rhetoric, and the innuendoes, then we'd have a productive meeting here.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We can have a really productive meeting here if we just pass this amendment. [interjections] Well, you asked.

As I've said before in speaking to this bill – and I'll get back to the election. I won't mention anybody else's campaign, but I'll mention mine. The recurring theme that kept coming up in discussions, in door-knocking, constantly, was property rights. That was the main theme that I heard the whole campaign. We're not asking for special rights here. We're just asking for equal rights. We're asking for respect for each other. We're asking that landowners' issues be dealt with in the same light, in the same vein as energy companies' are. We all want the same thing. The energy companies want to get along with the landowners; the landowners want to get along with the energy companies.

As I said, we're not asking for special rights for property owners. We're just asking for equal rights and equal respect. I think we sometimes confuse property rights as being just a strictly rural issue. It's not. Property rights are an Albertan issue. If you live in downtown Calgary or downtown Edmonton, who's to say that a wireless company can't come along and say, "We need that piece of property for a cell tower"? If they can do that with power towers, if they can do that with energy drilling, why can't they do it with a wireless tower? It's a huge issue.

We're arguing over semantics here, I think. As was mentioned by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, he was seeing those issues as a threat to property rights. There's another way to look at that. Property rights are paramount to all Albertans. It's not just a farming issue. It's not just a rural issue.

This is a no-brainer, in my eyes. This is where we can show all Albertans that we can co-operate and we can do the right thing here. I ask for your support in passing this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

5:00

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With the greatest respect to the hon. member, there's some validity or some merit to his claim that he doesn't want to hear certain verbiage, but I would not call it a threat. I would never intend to threaten. But I will tell you this as a reciprocal. I do not particularly like it that when I go out to tell the truth, somebody calls it fearmongering, but I have to listen to that a lot. But I will tell you this. When I go out and debate in these public halls, I put up the legislation, and we discuss it. Now, some people are good with that. The hon. minister who came to Vulcan sat there; he listened. He disagreed. We disagreed.

The situation in Sylvan Lake did not serve this government well at all, and I know that some of the blame is being pointed over here. I can assure you that no one over here organized it. We only attended. Yet that behaviour was an example of what these landowners have come to know and expect sometimes, and they're tremendously disappointed. If that doesn't concern you, that's fine, but it concerns me as an Albertan.

I will also tell you that when I go out to these public halls and when I organize them, a lot of people come out. In some cases industry – I should back up, not industry but these agencies that the government has appointed like the AESO. I should say that industry, I guess, like AltaLink don't like coming out to those hearings with me. I've had them sitting in the front row, their heads down, not participating, and then thank me for saying something nice about them during the evening, but they didn't like what they heard. To me that was the greatest compliment because they could have argued like the hon. member did here, saying that it was threatening or something like that. But they didn't do that.

I actually have a lot of respect for many of the engineers that I have met in other areas, but I disagree with the way things have happened, and it goes right to this amendment about respect for landowners. This is a real issue out in Alberta. It's an issue of trust; it's all about trust. If you were to go out in my area right now, you'd hear that loud and clear. That's all the Deputy Premier was hearing, but I'm not sure he actually heard it. I don't know what he heard, so he'll have to explain that himself, but that's what I was hearing. What people wanted to do was exactly what the hon. Minister of Energy did. They wanted to let a government minister know exactly what their feelings were. The last thing you can tell people out there and think that you can keep the respect the same is: when somebody tells you the opposite of what I'm telling you, that's fearmongering.

Now, I will agree that we can disagree on interpretation, but it's not fearmongering. There are certain things we cannot disagree on: when the fact is the fact, which is exactly what is in writing. That's left to their interpretation, and that's it. So when you have a piece of legislation like the Land Assembly Project Area Act, that is quite specific on how much control the government has over a person's property, you may or may not want to discuss that in front of a bunch of property owners, landowners when that's up on the board. When you're dealing with this amendment and you're out in front of the public and this amendment says specifically "which respects landowners" and you oppose that, well then that would be a fact if you do indeed oppose that. Then you have to deal with that. If one member here were to say: we put this amendment forward, and that governing party opposed it . . .

An Hon. Member: Threat.

Mr. Anglin: That's not a threat if you did it. That would be fact. That's the difference.

That's what I'm trying to point out. If it is the fact, then it's not a threat, and then you have to deal with the consequences of the action, which is what you supported or what you didn't support. That's all. It's not a threat, and it's actually not dangerous, but it is the reality of the decision, and it is left to the interpretation of the public. I have to tell you that the public doesn't have trust right now. If you don't believe that, then you haven't really been out in the public a lot. The public doesn't generally trust government. It is incumbent upon all of us, even us as the opposition, to encourage the population at large to trust government. It is. It may sound like a lot of BS to some of the members, but it actually is part of it. I mean, we want it to work for all Albertans. I may have to retract that BS statement. Okay. I retract that.

I think the point was taken that it is incumbent upon all Members of this Legislative Assembly to gain that trust of the public. Here is an amendment that is a step in the right direction. I'm not saying it's going to do it. I won't threaten you with that. I'm saying that it'll get you on the path to gaining that trust.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I think this goes back to what everybody in this room talks about, "in a manner which respects landowners." I mean, the amendment says it. It's not asking for the moon or the sky or the things in between.

It was great for the minister to come out to Vulcan and talk to landowners. I think the universal conversation that night was how the government guaranteed they would respect landowners' rights. We talk at different meetings. I wasn't at the Sylvan Lake meeting that the Deputy Premier was at. You know, it's different personalities, and it's the different ways of how some people interact with others. It's the confrontational mode of how things were set up. I think there could have been the chance of failure being set up at the one meeting because it was interpreted that way, that it was going to be confrontational, and it was. If you think you can or you think you can't, you're always right. That was the situation there. Sylvan Lake looked like it was going to be confrontational, and it was. It came across that way for the Deputy Premier. I wasn't there.

I reassured the Minister of Energy when he came to Vulcan that I'd chair it and that I'd make sure there were no problems. It went well. It was a reversal of the flower between two thorns. We had two Wildrose and a PC in the middle at the front table there, but it went well. It went back and forth. We had good dialogue. At the end of that I think everybody came back out of it – it's simple wording: "in a manner which respects landowners." We're not asking for public interest. I've accepted that that one probably isn't going to be accepted in Bill 2. I'm starting to get off that horse a little bit. Don't get me wrong; I like arguing with everybody over stuff, too. I think it's very plain and simple, "in a manner which respects landowners." I think that's all we're asking for on this.

With that, I'd hope, please, that everybody would accept our amendment, which adds that to section 2(1)(a). Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure today to rise and speak to the amendment put forward by my fellow colleague, which amends section 2(1)(a) by adding "in a manner which respects landowners" after "Alberta." Now, the reason why I'm standing to speak to this is more to go back to the principles of government. Why are we here? What brought us to this point in history? Why do we sit in the Legislature like this under a Commonwealth democracy like we have? Well, we can go all the way back to the Magna Carta and thank the work that was done on that. You know, that was brought forward to limit the power of government back in 1215.

Why was that? Why are governments in existence, and why do they all fall back to this? Well, it's because life, liberty, and property do not exist because we make laws. It's the fact that life, liberty, and property existed in the first place. This is the reason we are here to make laws. We need to take this to heart. Property: it's right there. Property existed before we were here to make laws. We need to respect that property is owned by Albertans and that what they want for their property, what they want for Alberta comes out of that. Where an excess of power prevails, property of no sort is duly respected, no person is safe in his opinions, no person is safe in their faculties, and no person is safe in their possessions.

We as a government have no other end but the preservation of property. By standing here, by debating this, by talking about this and even, dare I say, passing this – and I hope you will pass this – we are just giving respect to all Albertans in their ownership of property. Winston Churchill said way, way back – well, it seems way back to me; I'm sure there were a few of you around then – that 10,000 regulations kill all respect for the law. Let's not have that.

Albertans need to respect the laws that we craft here in this House, that we pass in this House. We are here as their representatives. We want to make sure that they have respect for these regulations and that these regulations respect them. Without that respect we're going to have more of what we've seen in the past. We're going to have people standing on principle and fighting: fighting regulators, fighting energy companies that are looking to enter their property. Do we really want this? Is this really what's best for Albertans, just standing on principle because there is a regulation somewhere that doesn't even say that it respects somebody's right to own something, to own property?

I think that's not why we're here. We're here as a matter of honour. We're here because we were humble and we stuck up our hand when asked who would speak for the constituents. We are here to speak on their behalf. Landowners, property owners are every Albertan. We are here on their behalf, and we have to make sure that we are passing laws that respect them and their rights.

I think this is a no-brainer. This doesn't change the bill. All this does is give landowners, property owners the ability to say: yes, our regulators respect us. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to rise and speak in favour of this amendment by my hon. colleague from Strathmore-Brooks. I'd like to challenge the member that earlier talked about the public interest. I feel that the gentleman from Vermilion-Lloydminster took umbrage at my comments about being a landowner. He viewed that property rights were only relating to landowners. Not unlike his clients that have livestock, they too have property. Even the hon. member's place of business is a property. His licence to practice is a property right, and his clientele are landowners.

I think we're getting hung up on this word "landowners" as a single, improper faction there. I don't see the name "landowner" very well represented in this Bill 2. I think this is the beginning. As I spoke earlier – I'm sorry, hon. members – I do own land, and I do recognize the rights of the energy person, the person who has access to that energy. I believe it was an ongoing mistake and it will be an ongoing mistake to have division between the energy rights and the landowner rights. They should have been all encumbered as one under the landowner, the property rights owner. A country south of the 49th parallel does that. This country, based on the British model, did not, so we are therefore going to be struggling with legislation like this for ongoing generations quite possibly: nuances, wordage, and everything going forward.

I'd like to start right here and now. With a new party, a new view on the provincial landscape, and a new bill – we're coming forward with a new bill – with a new vision coming forward, we would specifically put in there that we would recognize the people who are affected by this legislation. It's very important, Mr. Chairman, and I'd like to speak in favour of the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other speakers on amendment A8? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the representations made by members on all sides of the House on this. Clearly, we all have great respect for landowners and have sought to ensure that we take into account landowner interests in the course of this work on this bill.

Colleagues will recall that before we broke for the constituency week, we passed an amendment which actually addresses this and in a more practical, more businesslike fashion. That is the way I would characterize it. That was under division 3, General Powers, Duties and Functions of Regulator, in section 15, Factors To Consider on Applications. That is where we added specifically as an amendment that I proposed that we include the interests of landowners. So the paragraph does now read:

15. Where the Regulator is to consider an application or to conduct a regulatory review, reconsideration or inquiry, it shall, in addition to any other factor it may or must consider in considering the application or conducting the regulatory review, reconsideration or inquiry, consider any factor prescribed by the regulations, including the interests of landowners.

This, Mr. Chair, is a very specific, applied, practical, and on-the-topic kind of amendment that this House made, this committee made a couple of weeks ago. So I would say that the amendment here before us today actually has already been addressed in a very substantive, where-the-rubber-hits-the-road kind of way, that serves the interests of landowners, actually, better than a generic reference to landowners in the mandate.

With that, I recommend that we actually not accept this amendment today.

The Chair: Thank you.

Further comments on amendment A8? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much. I'm going to actually disagree with the hon. member on this although I do respect the fact that you did introduce that amendment. What this does under the mandate is also balanced out. It makes sure that it is covered in both sections of this act. One is only dealing with the interests, but the other, which is proposed right now, says "respects," and that's a different term than just the interests. Respect the landowners. That's important. So I just want to point that out.

If you say that this is going to harm the bill, then I would be interested in how it harms the bill. What it does is that it puts it into the mandate of the regulator under this amendment. So what you have now is not just the hearing process that takes into consideration the interest, but in the design of the regulation under the mandate of the regulator all aspects of regulation will have to take into consideration the respect of the landowner on those particular points that would affect the landowner. In my view, that's why it is important, why we should put it under the mandate so that it gets carried forward.

I would argue with the hon. member that your amendment is specific to that one hearing process. Respect of the landowner is very broad in many other terms in the creation of that regulation, and that is important, in my view, to the landowners and, in my view, expressly for this government to show that you are true to your word, that you respect the landowners, that you have the actual, literal word in the legislation.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Other comments? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to reiterate and speak to comments by the hon. minister. If you go to section 33(2), the section I have before me says, "if the Regulator makes a decision on an application without conducting a hearing." I have great credence in that because we seem to be tagging on wordage here, and we're talking about reiterating landowners' or property owners' rights in this case.

They have written into the legislation the word "if." It's quite disturbing to me that in legislation that should be definitive, this type of wording is brought forward. I would like to encourage that we try and be as succinct as we can and support amendments like we're trying to bring forward here that would support property holders' rights in the legislation.

The Chair: Thank you.

Other comments?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A8.

[The voice vote indicated that amendment A8 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:21 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

For the motion:

Anderson	Forsyth	Saskiw

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House that in the situation that further bells are required this afternoon or this evening, they be reduced to one minute and that at the start of the evening session you remind members of the one-minute bell.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader has moved that on any further divisions for the rest of the evening the bells be shortened to one minute.

Mr. Anderson: Can I just suggest that we separate the motions? I think that we'd be happy to do it for the rest of the afternoon, but for the evening I'd have to confer with my caucus.

The Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, just for the rest of the afternoon, then, and we'll deal with the evening once we reconvene at 7:30. The motion is on the floor. It requires unanimous consent. Is anyone opposed to the motion by the Government House Leader? Seeing none, so ordered.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: Any future bells, then, will be for one minute in duration.

Back to the bill. I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. You will all be delighted to know that I have an amendment to Bill 2. It is at the table. I will ask that it be distributed now. For those of you that want to work ahead, it is amending section 16 under general powers, duties, and functions of the regulator.

The Chair: Can we maybe just pause while we distribute the amendment? I'd appreciate it. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Sure. I was just going to give you a page number, but okay.

The Chair: Okay. So you're not speaking to it; you're just telling us where it is? Would you then proceed, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. It is under division 3, the section on general powers, duties, and functions of the regulator. Specifically, it appears on page 13 of the hard copy.

The Chair: This amendment for the record, hon. members, will be A9.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

The Chair: Proceed, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Well, it will be no surprise to most of the people in here that the section I'm looking to amend is around collection and disclosure of personal information, which is a topic near and dear to my heart. I was a little surprised to find that in this bill, but when I did, I didn't like the way it's in there. We collect too much information, and then we keep it too long and use it for purposes beyond what we've collected it for. Then we're not careful about how we get rid of it. And we repeat that. The government through legislation and policies and regulations repeats that over and over again.

It's not just, you know, the example that I gave recently in the House around safekeeping of records with personal information, which was a private business, the hospitality group that managed to lose their USB. What are those things called that you poke in the side of the computer?

An Hon. Member: A thumb drive, a zip drive.

Ms Blakeman: Thumb drive. Zip drive. Okay. Here we go. High tech. Thumb drives.

On it was all the personal information of every employee they'd ever had, and it wasn't encrypted. That's the same group that also scanned and kept all of the drivers' licences with the permission and encouragement and assistance of this government, for which I will never forgive them. You know, that's a private company. We've got examples of doctors' offices where the doctor retires, and they don't know what to do with his files. They end up going to his nurse. The nurse retires. It's in a box in her garage. She dies, and somebody is trying to throw out a bunch of medical files that were in a garage. You know, there are lots of different ways this can happen.

So, one, don't collect so much information. Collect only what you need to use. The one piece of legislation where the government actually managed to do that right was in the Health Information Act. It very specifically says: collect only what you need, and that must be the least amount that you could possibly collect. That's the collection part of the information.

Just so that you're all with me here, this is amending section 16 under division 3, general powers, duties, and functions of the regulator. Then we've got the powers of the regulator, factors to consider on applications. Then the third one, which is actually section 16, is disclosure of information to the minister. Right. We've got:

The Regulator shall, on the written request of the Minister, provide to the Minister within the time specified in the request any report, record or other information, . . .

Here it comes.

. . . including personal information, that is specified in the request.

Where we're changing it to say:

. . . any report, record or other information, including personal information if the person whose personal information that is specified in the request consents in writing to its disclosure.

Remember, there are three parts to this, right? There's the initial collection of the personal information, there is the use of the personal information, and there is the disclosure of the personal information. What we're talking about here is the disclosure of it, essentially, because it's already been collected. The minister has now said: I want to see this information. Now, interestingly, it doesn't say why the minister wants it, and he/she is not required to tell anybody why they're collecting that information. You know, I just don't want my personal information collected by the minister when he can't tell me why he wants it.

I'm going to ask my colleagues from the Wildrose to talk about what kind of personal information is collected that would be in these files, that could then be requested by the minister, because they're much more up on that than I am. So we've got a situation where the minister can say: I want this information. The regulator hands it over. The person doesn't know it's been requested by the minister, doesn't know it's been handed over to the minister, and if it's incorrect or unverified has no ability to know that it's now being disclosed to somebody else, the minister specifically, no opportunity to correct it. They don't even know it's happened.

The second piece that I'm trying to change here is that where the minister does request it, that request has to be made public, that that's part of it so that it would come out that the minister has asked for a report, a record, or other information, including personal information. Two things are happening here. One, the individual whose personal information is being disclosed to the minister would have an opportunity to sign a consent. And if you guys accept this and you make it a blanket consent form, I will haunt you because that's the other thing that the government . . .

An Hon. Member: That's a threat.

Ms Blakeman: For a long time.

Because that's what happens. You know, when we brought in personal information, we were supposed to be protecting everybody's personal information. And what happened? Well, every doctor's office, dentist, massage therapist, hospital check-in, just about anywhere that you went where they could possibly have your name, they now say: before we can give you service, you need to sign this. People go: "Oh, okay. Well, whatever." And they sign it. It's a blank consent form, which then gives them permission to pretty much do whatever they want with the information without ever coming back to you again. We don't call that informed consent on my side of looking at this stuff.

We're asking for two things here. One is that the individual gets an opportunity to decline, and if they're going to give permission, they're going to give it in writing so that we've got a record of it all; and two, if the minister makes that request, it's going to be public so that we all know that the minister requested that information. This is important because so much information is being collected on individuals – and we don't know why, and we don't know, again, how long they're going to keep it – just because it's so darn handy, especially when it's in those electronic databases. You can just – there's a visual here – hit the button with your finger, and that information goes out and can be data matched with other banks of information, and now all of a sudden even if you had managed to use just bits of information, you can literally reconstruct the individual by data matching. I think this is important. I know people laugh at me about this, but there's too much information about us out there in the world, where we might say: "Okay. Well, hopefully, the government has our best interests at heart when they're collecting our information."

There are so many points of interconnection between the public sector, the government now, and the private sector, who really don't have our best interests at heart and shouldn't. They're there to make money. They're there to make money for their shareholders. That's what makes the economy go round. They have no obligation to be nice to us, nor should they.

As a result, in those points of interconnectedness – now, where does that happen? Let's talk P3s for schools. I mean, everything is contracted out with this government: cleaning services in the hospitals, whoever services the fleet of cars for the government, whoever provides child care beds. All of that stuff is now contracted out. Every time that happens, some information goes out into the private sector.

You know, I'm not saying that they're bad people. They're not. They should be making money for their shareholders. Good on them. But part of that is not a commitment to do the right thing with our information, and there are certain requirements. PIPA would cover them, for example, but it's not the same commitment as what we expect from government.

I want to put the onus here in the legislation that they have to get the person's permission, which means that they would know, which I think is fair. I can't see a reason in here, but I look at the minister to see if he's going to stand up and give me a compelling argument, like an earth-shatteringly accurate, pithy, to-the-point argument about why you would need to be collecting someone's personal information and not letting them know. I can't see that you're going to be able to come up with that one. Secondly, why are you collecting that information? For what purpose are you going to use it? And how do you make sure that anyone else that gets that information doesn't misuse that?

Now, why is that possibly the minister's concern? Well, because that's the way we do privacy of information. We say that whoever has it is responsible for doing the right thing with it. In this case, if the government gives it off to a contractor, they are responsible for making sure that the contractor does the right thing with that information. As I said, it's not the contractor's business to do that, so they have oversight from the government, who is ultimately responsible for the protection of our personal information. None of that protection is built into this act.

I don't need to belabour the point, but I am going to ask some of my colleagues that have a deeper understanding of how the act works to just talk about under what circumstances somebody's personal information would be held by the regulator and possibly asked for by the minister. It's important to know under what context this kind of thing is going to happen, you know, and what kind of personal information. There's a difference between the tombstone information of, you know, name, address – well, actually, as soon as you start putting together any two of a photograph, any biometrics like a fingerprint or an iris print, a signature, a full name, address, birthdate is a big one, with the biometrics could also be blood types or DNA, you've got a lot of information on people.

Why would they be collecting that? I'm going to let my colleagues talk about for what purposes they would be collecting personal information, and you'll start to get a picture of why it's important to make sure that you have to go back to the individual to get consent for them to pass that information on to the minister and that the minister would have to make public the fact that they've requested that information.

Just so that you know this isn't unusual, did you know that the Minister of Health can request any of your personal health records?

Mr. Hancock: Why would he want to?

Ms Blakeman: The Minister of Human Services says: why would he want to? I don't know, but he can, and you empowered him or her to do that in the act. They are able to, and they wouldn't have to tell us about it at all.

This is the kind of thing I'm trying to prevent here. So if the minister wants to collect that personal information, you've got to come and get my permission and, two, you're going to have to publish the fact that you asked for my personal information. That's the amendment. It is on the books now as A9, and I hope this is going to generate a rousing discussion and the blessing and support of the Minister of Energy along with his colleagues on the government side and my colleagues in the opposition.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll offer the minister a chance to respond, and then I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Blakeman: Ooh, pithy and brilliant, let's go.

Mr. Hughes: Well, I can't promise it will be either pithy or – what?

Ms Blakeman: Brilliant.

Mr. Hughes: Brilliant, yes.

An Hon. Member: You just said that so she'd say it again.

5:50

Mr. Hughes: Yes. There you go.

Mr. Chair, really, we need to be practical here in terms of how we look at this. Everybody needs to recognize the fact that we're not overriding FOIP here. Personal information is still protected by FOIP. All of the individuals involved within the government as well as the regulator are still under the constraints of FOIP and ensuring that personal information is protected.

There might be times – you know, the hon. member asked for examples of what might include personal information. One example is – oh, I don't know – the expense accounts of the CEO or the board members or the commissioners. Those are things where you would need to have this in place in order to enable the receipt of that kind of information.

The goal here is to ensure that there is good open communication between the regulator and the Department of Energy so that policy issues as they're being considered can be looked at in the full light of the knowledge of both the regulator and the Energy department.

Those are just a couple of examples. I suspect it's not a whole-some enough answer to satisfy the hon. member, but she did ask for examples, and those are the examples I can give.

The Chair: Thank you.

Did you need to respond, hon. member?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, I do.

The Chair: And then I'll get to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'm afraid, Minister, it wasn't brilliant, but it was clever, using examples of things that the opposition have recently requested or like to look at for appointed people that are on boards and commissions. But the fact of the matter is that you don't need personal information to get that because there's a financial hook to it. You don't need, for example, to actually be naming the person. You can ask for, as you did, the expense reports for the CEO of X board. You don't have to name them. So you can get the information that you described without getting additional personal information from them but by going through a financial request. I don't accept that that is a reason for you to decline your support for the amendment.

I know there's a practicality to this. I know sometimes it would be hard to chase people down and get their consent, but you haven't been able to tell me how many people you'd usually be requesting information from. If you can stand up and tell me it's a million and a half people every year. Okay. We're talking a little bit different approach to this. But that still doesn't, in my opinion, excuse the government from having to get permission from someone to take and use their personal information.

I cut off my hon. friend, here, so I will take my seat. You know, maybe I can engage the minister again.

The Chair: I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment I rise to support, very much so. One of the greatest defences of democracy is to eliminate, basically, the power to abuse. It's not about the abuse of power. It's about giving government the actual power to abuse. And for what reason? There always has to be checks and balances, and that's why the hon. minister mentioned the FOIP Act. Unfortunately, I would disagree that the FOIP Act does not stop the collection of information.

There are a couple of things that are problematic. We're going to allow landowners and companies to register agreements, and I still don't understand that concept. I like the concept of the regulator being able to enforce an agreement. We don't have people register their business agreements with the courts. We just have people go to the courts when they have a disagreement, particularly on contractual law, and they deal with that issue when they show the court their contract, their disagreement, and they get a decision.

Here we're going to have a situation where we're going to encourage them in many ways – and I think it's not necessarily a bad thing. But people will register their business agreements with the regulator with the intent that: "I don't need to go to court if there's a disagreement. I can get the regulator to make a decision or enforce my agreement."

That's powerful information not just on the personal level but on the business level. If that were to be abused, that would be significant. That is tremendous information. So there is a situation where I think it's not the intent of government to abuse power here, but what we're doing here without any limitations is there is a power to abuse as we go down the road because information can be used against individuals. It can be used against people.

I'm going to draw on my own example. As I tabled in this Legislature – I forget when, but I think it was the very first week. I was challenged by the hon. whip of the governing party, and I tabled an instance where information was collected on me by private investigators hired by the regulator. That's not in dispute. That's a matter of fact. But what happened was that two days after the private investigators were hired, there was a communications log with the Premier's office, approved by the Premier's office.

Of course, that information was not released to me, but the subject was me. I don't get to see what information they collected, but clearly they collected information. You shake your head, hon. member, but the fact is that those notes were there, and they were passed along. We just don't know what the Premier's office involvement was. All we know is that the communication log said: subject, Joseph V. Anglin. That's this person right here.

Clearly, we need some sort of limitation on the abuse of power. And I will tell you, quite honestly, that there have been violations in the past. We're going back to the issue of trust with the public. What you have here is the ability of government, the minister to just direct the regulator to turn over information.

Now, this amendment does not stop the flow of information in any way, shape, or form that's particularly legitimate. It doesn't stop that. It doesn't infringe upon that. That will automatically happen. But what it does do is something this government has proclaimed it will do: it will require transparency. That will give the trust to the public that if the minister gives that direction and that is publicly disclosed – because I can't think of an example of why the minister would request information and not want that information to be public. I'd be willing to hear some other arguments on that.

When I look at this amendment or amendments, however you want to look at it, this is about putting a cap on power. One of the things that has been pointed out I think by another member was that we have these rights, and when we pass laws, we eliminate or reduce or restrict rights. That's a philosophical way of looking at the creation of governments and legislation. On another philosophical level every time we pass a law, we eliminate, reduce, or restrict rights, and where the power of that legislation ends, that's where that right is generally returned to the public.

I do not believe – and I don't read it in this amendment – that this is going to restrict government from collecting information. This is not going to inhibit or clog the system. The underlying principle of the bill is to do one thing, which is to streamline the process. The information will still flow, but it does throw a little added protection for the privacy of the individual, which I believe I've heard from a number of members here that they respect although I don't think we added that in on the other amendment. But I believe you do. In good faith I believe you do.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but it is 6 o'clock. The committee will stand recessed until 7:30 p.m.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 2 Responsible Energy Development Act

The Chair: Hon members, I'll call the Committee of the Whole back to order. We are continuing with debate on Bill 2, amendment A9.

I'd look for the next speaker. I recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Obviously, we're back on Bill 2 here, the Responsible Energy Development Act. Everyone is getting back settled from dinner. We're on A9 with regard to the amendment. I believe this is an amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Just to review it real quickly, it is moved that Bill 2 be amended in section 16. So if we go to section 16, which currently is talking about disclosure of information to the minister, the amendment is asking us to strike out subsection 1, which currently says:

The Regulator shall, on the written request of the Minister, provide to the Minister within the time specified in the request any report, record or other information, including personal information, that is specified in the request.

It is being suggested that we change that to:

The Regulator shall, on the written request of the Minister, provide to the Minister within the time specified in the request any report, record or other information, including personal information if the person whose personal information that is specified in the request consents in writing to its disclosure.

Then, under subsection 2 adding subsection 2.1, where it would say:

Where the Minister makes a written request under subsection (1), he or she shall make the request publically available.

I really like the intent under which this amendment was brought forward because it does speak to a real problem with regard to this idea in society that we should be allowing the government to have essentially unfiltered, unbridled personal information. We always think that when these laws are passed or when we write these laws: "Well, we would never use this for harm. We would never use this for anything nefarious." But the fact of the matter is that governments around the world have used their authority when they have this type of authority to compel personal information like this. If it's not this government that chooses to abuse this, then it could be a future government.

I think it's very important that we really make sure that when we pass these pieces of legislation, we do everything in our power to make sure that there's no room for abuse of power if at all possible or to keep that room for the possibility of abuse of power as small as is justifiable. I don't think the legislation as currently written does that. I think that it's quite a broad power. If you look at it:

16(1) The Regulator shall, on the written request of the Minister, provide to the Minister within the time specified in the request any report, record or other information, including personal information, that is specified in the request.

That is a very broad power, and it's unnecessary, frankly. Why should the regulator on the written request of the minister be able to compel any type of personal information that they want?

I'm trying to be open minded about this, but as you look into subsection 2 – please point it out, minister, if I'm missing the clause that should be in here – there's no restriction on that power at all. As you look at it, one has to wonder if there's going to be no restriction on the power of the minister to compel personal information. I mean, what could that include? If you notice, it doesn't say "relevant information." Perhaps we should put that in there, members of the government. Just at least keep it relevant, because right now, as it reads here, there are no limits. They could compel medical information under this. They could, Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, who's a lawyer and a very good parliamentarian. I read this, and on the face of it, I see absolutely no restrictions on the power that's being granted under this. This is section 16(1) of Bill 2. It could be medical records; it could be school records; it could be any record. A personal record or personal piece of information could be requested under this clause.

Now, I'm not saying that it's the intent of the government to do so, but then why give the regulator that kind of power, and why give the minister, frankly, that kind of power to be able to compel such information? That's a little bit disconcerting, I would imagine. If there's a limitation in here that I'm missing on that, please point it out to me. I'd like to know what it is. If it's reasonable, if it somehow narrows or contains this power, then I think we can agree to it. On the face of it, if it's saying that the minister can request any type of personal information, that's pretty scary. That's really scary.

Obviously, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain-Sundre has had some first-hand exposure to how disconcerting the power of the state can be with regard to the well-documented and well-publicized case of the spying scandal on landowners. That's bad enough, but this seems to say that the government, the minister, if they wanted to, could just request any personal information. We have former police officers in this Chamber that could speak to this. We've got certainly quite a few lawyers on the other side who could speak to this. [interjection] Well, I mean, exactly. You're the Solicitor General of the province. Does this not concern you? Does this section not concern you? Section 16: the minister within the time specified can request any report, record, or other information, including personal information, that is specified in the request. That doesn't concern you at all? Bueller? Bueller?

An Hon. Member: He's over there.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, no, not Bhullar. Bueller. I'm not asking him another question for a long time.

This is a little bit disconcerting, for sure, so what the Member for Edmonton-Centre is suggesting, I think, is very reasonable. Again, if this isn't the right language, by all means – we have subamendments that are allowed on the floor, so let's have the government bring a subamendment to bring in language that they're comfortable with. What the Edmonton-Centre member has said gives the regulator the power:

... on the written request of the Minister, provide to the Minister within the time specified in the request any report, record or other information, including personal information if the person whose personal information that is specified in the request consents in writing to its disclosure.

In other words, they can request any report, record, and other information, but with regard to the personal information the person has to give their consent. I think that's a reasonable restriction. If it's not, if there has to be something more narrow or it has to be more clearly delineated, what we're talking about here, then fine. I think we'd all be willing to hear what the government could come up with with regard to a subamendment on this. I just don't see how we can support a bill that gives such broad, sweeping powers.

I would just ask members opposite for somebody to please speak to this and why it's in here. That would be a good first step. Why it's in here, and what restrictions are on this other than just the goodwill of the minister, because that – I'm sorry – is not good enough. This Energy minister might surely be a man of integrity and honour, but there is no guarantee that his successor will be. We've got to always think about that when we pass these laws. Heck, you know, who knows who could be in charge? I mean, the Member for Little Bow could be the Energy minister one day. Do you want him to have this power? Really? I don't know about that. I don't know

7:40

Anyway, I'd like to see what other members have to say to this. I think it's a good amendment, and I hope the government will bring a subamendment that they're comfortable with because it's inexcusable to pass this as currently worded.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Before I recognize other members, might we revert briefly to the introduction of guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my very great pleasure to introduce to you and through to you to all members of the Assembly 23 young people who are in attendance tonight as members of the Forum for Young Albertans. This group of young people are on a week-long program to study democracy, to learn about various facets of public and democratic life in Alberta and in Canada. We had supper with them, and I think we can be very confident that the future of our province is in very, very good hands, especially given that four of these young people are from the highly democratic constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster. I would ask at this time that they along with their chaperones rise in their places and receive the traditional warm greeting from the members of this Assembly.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. members.

Responsible Energy Development Act (continued)

The Chair: We are discussing Bill 2, amendment A9, and I'll recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think maybe I can answer the hon. Member for Airdrie. The hon. Energy minister has given the same answer twice. Last night, when I was amending a similar section with regard to property rights, his answer last night and today was that "there will be situations that require personal information like expense information submitted by the board of directors, the CEO, or the hearing commissioners," but never once did he mention the other side of that equation, which is the person, the landowner, the property rights owner who has that application to go on their land. Nothing was ever said about that.

I think it may be advisable if the hon. Energy minister would make a subamendment to this stating that we will obtain personal information with regard to the board of directors, the hearing commissioner, the members of this new regulator if that's the intent of this statement in this bill. If it's not the intent of this statement, then maybe, you know, we should support this. If somebody wants to know my personal information and I give them the authority to do that through a signed document, well, that's fine. But there's no reason that without my consent my personal information can be requested. I would pass this on through the Deputy Premier to bring it up with the hon. Energy minister to see if maybe he wants to put this subamendment forward and clarify this issue so that everybody involved knows what the limitations are of what information he can request.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is an interesting bill for me. When I spoke on it when we were in second reading, I had talked about . . .

The Chair: On the amendment, hon. member. Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'll get to the amendment.

I had talked about balancing the rights of property and the industry. I've sat very quietly through this whole debate as I listened to amendment after amendment after amendment. I've found all of the amendments very interesting, listening to my colleagues and some of the colleagues that occasionally get up on the other side to speak.

This one intrigues me, and I'll tell you why it intrigues me. The Member for Edmonton-Centre, who spoke about this amendment earlier on, no one, absolutely no one, in this Legislature, period, knows the FOIP legislation or anything to do with personal information like that particular member. I say that as a member when I was with the government, and I say that as a member of the Official Opposition now because I've run into this member on several occasions when we've discussed FOIP legislation, both as the former minister of children's services and the former Solicitor General and then being on a FOIP committee with the member.

When I saw this amendment cross our desks this afternoon and then as I listened to her – you know what? This is when your senses kind of go off and you think, hmm, maybe I better listen to what that particular member has to say and what she's bringing to the floor of the Legislature in regard to her concerns about FOIP.

What I find very interesting in this is that when you read her amendment, it talks about striking out subsection (1) and substituting the following:

The Regulator shall, on the written request of the Minister, provide to the Minister within the time specified in the request any report, record or other information, including personal information if the person whose personal information that is specified in the request consents in writing to its disclosure.

Then it goes on.

I'm trying to rationalize it in my brain. My colleague from Strathmore-Brooks brought up some comments that he used in Hansard after debating for the last two days when the Minister of Energy was asked why this particular clause is in the bill. My colleague from Strathmore-Brooks read into the record of Hansard what the minister has said, and . . .

Mr. Hale: Twice he said that.

Mrs. Forsyth: Twice.

... he still has not really answered the question.

So I kind of put myself in the place of: why would I want to give any personal information about myself to anybody? While I try and figure out the situation, I'm not so sure that I'd be handing over any personal information to any regulator to try and figure out why he would need that disclosure of my personal information anyway.

Now, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre spoke in the House, actually, in regard to his concerns about this particular amendment and some of the things that have happened to him. It was like an I Spy movie or a 007 movie, and I'm not a James Bond kind of girl.

Mr. Anderson: What do you mean? You're not a Bond girl?

Mrs. Forsyth: No, not a Bond girl at all.

I can imagine why people would want to find any information about something. I mean, there are times when the FOIP has to be shared, and I can say that I'm on the record as the former Solicitor General and the former minister of children's services in regard to FOIP being shared amongst agencies. If you have a child that's in some trouble and you know that there are some difficulties that the child is going to be facing in school or any of those kinds of things, I think that information has to be shared with the schools. Having said that, it's probably one of the biggest complaints that we're hearing from the police and other agencies like that in regard to the sharing of FOIP information. All of a sudden we're reading in Bill 2 about how they want to share that particular information.

I guess that I, like my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks, would like to understand why the government would want this particular section in a bill that's probably close to 80 pages long and for what value or for what reason. I know the Minister of Energy has gotten up twice on this particular bill. He says, for example, that there will be situations that require personal information like expense information submitted by the board of directors, the CEO, or the hearing commissioner. What do they exactly mean by personal information? What personal information? Is it their SIN number? Is it their address? Is it their personal bank accounts?

I mean, when you start talking to me about personal information, it's exactly what it says. It's personal information. I'm very hesitant about sharing any personal information myself. I mean, I've learnt, not only through my previous ministries but through age, that you just don't give out personal information because of all of the things that are happening in the world and social media, et cetera, like that. They're stealing your ID, identity theft, and all of that thing.

So I'm going to wait to hear from the government, let the government explain not only to the Official Opposition about this clause in the bill, but I think, more importantly, they need to share with Albertans in regard to why they are looking at putting this in a bill.

With that, I'll sit down and let someone else speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I started speaking to this amendment earlier, there are a couple of problems with the current legislation, the way it's drafted. One of the most glaring problems is giving government the ability to abuse. Now, I'm not making an allegation that the government is being abusive. What I'm saying is that you never in a democratic society give the power to abuse. I know the hon. member is giggling at this, but this is a government that has abused in the past. There are regulators that have abused in the past, and it's important that in the defence of democracy there are always limits to government powers. That is one of the primary defences in a democracy. If you read the current legislation, the way it's drafted allows the government to collect any information it so desires from the regulator, even personal information.

Now, given the fact that we're going to have contracts allowed to be registered with the regulator, there's nothing there that stops the government, basically the minister, saying: I want to see a copy of those contracts. FOIP doesn't stop that. FOIP prevents the so-called release of that information to the public, but it does not stop that information from going to the minister.

In my own example we had a regulator who hired private investigators. That is not something that is subjective. That is fact. The regulator admitted it. They spied on citizens. They collected information. The evidence submitted was that it was covert intelligence gathering, and that information was tabled right here in this Chamber. You had a regulator that absolutely was being abusive. But what has never been explained is why the government had information on me at that very same time and did not release it under FOIP. It is clear by the record that it existed, and I tabled the evidence. If you don't believe it, then just research it, because the evidence is absolutely there. If you want to see more, I will then table more. It speaks to this amendment. It speaks to this amendment.

The Chair: Can we keep the level of noise down, please? Thank you.

Mr. Anglin: There need to be limits on what the government's powers are with regard to the collection of information.

Now, this amendment does not prevent, it does not stop or inhibit the collection of information. What it does is it protects the privacy of particular individuals, and what it does is it creates transparency. We know the government wants to collect reports and a number of records and a number of other materials that would maybe be relevant to what the government needs to do concerning policy. I don't think anyone is in disagreement with that. What we're talking about is putting into legislation a cap on the power of how that information is collected and also making sure there's a guarantee that there's transparency. That's all. I don't think that's a whole lot to ask for.

Going back to this example of the power to abuse, it is not my allegation that anyone here is intending to do that. That's not what I'm bringing forward. What I'm saying is that you're putting into legislation that power for any government to abuse, and that is fundamentally wrong. You should never hand that over to the next government. You should never even be able to have the right to exercise that power. It is paramount that we protect privacy of information. When you put no limits on what the government can collect, you create a situation where abuse can take place, whether intentionally or unintentionally. By making sure that that abuse doesn't take place, by passing this amendment, then the allegation can never appear.

Again, this does not stop, this does not inhibit, this does not restrict the government from collecting information. What this amendment only does is make sure that it gets consent from the individuals, which is no different than what FOIP requires, to collect the information, and it makes sure that the public is aware of whatever information the government does collect so we have that full transparency. That is important on a number of levels.

I want to go back to the idea of registering contracts. I'm in favour of what has been proposed, where the regulator can enforce a contract if there's a disagreement. If we can keep the courts free of these disagreements, particularly when they can be resolved by the regulator, I think that does in effect what you want the bill to do. But if you require the registration of information, the registration of the lease agreement, the contract, that's a lot of information that I don't think is absolutely necessary to do what you intend to do. That information can be used or abused, not for what it was intended, particularly if the government decides to collect that. I don't understand that.

No court collects all civil contracts. The only time a courtroom ever sees a civil contract is when it goes to court. I actually think that's what should happen here. If there's a disagreement out in the public and it is under the jurisdiction of the regulator, only then should someone be able to go to the regulator with the contract and ask to have that contract enforced.

It is this idea of being sort of proactive, where we do not allow the collection of information unnecessarily. That to me is about balance of power. That is also about protection of democracy. It's about protecting the public from too much power of a government authority. Again, I'm not saying that you're going to abuse that power, but by keeping the legislation the way it is, you have the power to abuse, and that's wrong. That's wrong in my mind. You need to look at that because if you say that you're not going to abuse that power, which I believe in good faith you don't intend to or don't have any plans to abuse that power, then why would you want that power?

Those are some very good questions that I think need to be answered by those who would be opposed to this amendment.

Going back to my own particular example, that caused the disruption of an entire hearing process. It should not have ever happened. It caused the system to fail. Had the law been abided by, had the rules and regulations been followed, the system would never have broken apart.

We're here to talk about a bill where we're trying to streamline a process so there are no infringements upon these applications unnecessarily, there's no delay unnecessarily, and we can make this work. It is my view that if we allow this to stand unchecked, then there's always that potential that something can be abused, which would then interrupt the process unnecessarily, infringe upon this process unnecessarily as far as the streamlining process, and do exactly the opposite of what we intended to do with this bill.

Before I sit down, I just want to say that we are in favour of a single regulator and a streamlining process. We can come to an agreement if there are certain measures that are taking place to protect the property rights of individual people by protecting the privacy, which is the collection of information this amendment speaks about. That is really important for a universal sort of support or unanimous support to try to get this bill right. We can get it right. I think industry wants it. I think landowners want it. I think the public interest wants it. We're not going to go there right now, but if we get it right, then we're all happy and better off for it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other comments? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment. I'm certainly in favour of it. I'm in favour of the bill itself, as my colleague just mentioned, with certain tweaks that will vouchsafe and preserve and guarantee and ensure that certain rights are protected. Good laws are clear and focused, not vague and global and not easily interpreted in ways that could allow for government abuse. Laws should not rely solely on the integrity of those who govern or their agents. We have learned by sad experience that it is the nature and disposition of almost all persons in government that as soon as they get a little authority, as they suppose, they eventually, often immediately begin to exercise unrighteous dominion. So why write laws or pass acts that could allow it?

No act will be perfect, but when we pool our intelligence – there's a lot of intellectual horsepower in this Assembly, I submit – and the perspectives that we all bring given our various backgrounds and differing life experiences, together we can produce better and safer laws that restrict the government or its agents from infringing on more rights than absolutely necessary. I believe, personally – and many others do, too – that all rights reside in the people, not the government. People collectively can agree to delegate a certain few of their rights to form a government for purposes of peace and security and greater good, but people can't delegate a right that they do not have themselves.

For example, picture this. A pioneer farmer in the 1800s relies on his horse to plow land. His horse dies for whatever reason. His neighbour has two horses, so he goes to his neighbour and asks for one of his horses. Now, he may offer to rent it, he may offer to buy it, he may just want to borrow it, but the horse isn't his. It's the neighbour's. The neighbour can choose to be kind and share it, or he can rent it or sell it. But if he chooses not to, that pioneer whose horse just died doesn't have a right to go to the sheriff and say to the sheriff: make my neighbour give me his horse or sell it to me or rent it to me. He can't delegate a right that he doesn't have. We can't do that either as a government. We can't take to ourselves rights unless the people give them up.

We need to be careful and protect the rights of individuals and certainly the right to privacy, the right to not have my personal information shared with the world or with the regulator, who may use it or abuse it in ways that I don't approve of, unless it's absolutely necessary. I haven't yet heard anybody present to us sound reasons why a lot of personal information would need to be shared with the regulator or their agent. I think there needs to be that privacy. I think that putting in this little amendment, simple as it is, that I should have to be required to consent in writing to someone seeking my personal information, is critical. I shouldn't have to provide it just to intervene or appeal something that's going to affect my right to enjoy my private property in peace and without unnecessary trampling of my rights.

I submit that this amendment is consistent with what philosophers throughout the ages and certainly with what intelligent political scientists have concluded, that we need to restrict the rights and abilities of government to abuse their power. We shouldn't be relying on the integrity alone of the people that have been elected to govern. I believe that this little amendment does that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there other speakers on amendment A9?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the bill.

Mr. Hancock: I certainly don't want to interrupt, but might I ask for unanimous consent to reduce the bells to one minute?

The Chair: Oh, yes. The motion from the Government House Leader is to reduce the ensuing bells to one minute.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo I'd like to move the following amendment to Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act.

The Chair: Would you hand the amendments to the page, hon. member? Just give us a few minutes, and then you might speak to it.

This will be amendment A10, hon. members.

Hon. member, you may speak to the amendment.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. Mr. Hehr to move that Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act, 2012, be amended in section 33 by adding after subsection (2):

- (3) Subject to the regulations, the Regulator must render its decision within a specific prescribed time period based on the nature of the application.

I think it's pretty self-explanatory, Mr. Chairman, that applicants – that involves investors, citizens – would like to know that some kind of reasonable timeliness will be followed with respect to decisions and that matters will not be in limbo. The current clause 33 makes no reference to any particular timeline or any expectation of movement and decision, and I think all would benefit from having at least some indication that there will be a concrete timeline. I think everyone would benefit from that. It's not a major thing, but I think most people would agree it's helpful that in these kinds of significant investments and decisions we apply some kind of reasonable time limit to allow things to move in a responsible way.

Thanks, Mr. Chair. I'll wait and hear how people feel.

The Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Anyone else to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Anderson: Well, I would like to speak in favour of this amendment. I think it's a very practical amendment. We have an amendment that deals with a different section, but it's somewhat similar in nature, and perhaps we'll spend a little bit more time as a caucus talking to that amendment when it comes up. It's a little bit more specific than this one. However, it's the same spirit.

Really, the whole point of this single regulator was to reduce the time that it took between the application for a project and so forth and the time a decision on whether to move forward with that project is granted or not granted or granted subject to certain conditions. That's the whole point. I think we all agree that that's one of the major points of this bill. That's a good thing.

Obviously, our energy industry is very important. We've become very uncompetitive with regard to our regulatory regime in that it takes a long time to get projects approved. One thing industry can't stand is uncertainty, and that includes uncertainty for the time they have to wait for determining whether they're going to be permitted to move on with their project or not move on with their project and so forth. When a project is kind of in the holding pattern, that means that a whole bunch of capital and a whole bunch of resources – staff resources, capital resources, borrowing resources – are all being held kind of frozen until the application is approved or not approved, and then they can either go forward with the project or not and so forth.

I think it's a little odd that the government would present a bill like this – the whole purpose of this is to streamline the energy development process – and then not put in any kind of teeth, any kind of benchmark to ensure that these applications for these developments are indeed processed in a timely and expeditious fashion. I think that this is certainly an amendment that is needed. You know, what's the point of passing this thick piece of legislation if we're not holding the regulator to account, essentially, and saying, "Regulator, we're not saying how you have to find – yea, nay, or yes with caveats – we're just saying that you have to find within a reasonable period of time?"

Obviously, there are different types of applications. You know, some are going to be shorter in duration than others to assess, but there should be some sort of benchmark that makes us competitive with other jurisdictions and decreases the overall time of the energy development process.

I think this is a good amendment, and I would urge members to support it.

The Chair: Thank you.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to speak briefly to this amendment because I'm not sure I understand why the amendment would be put forward. As I read the amendment, it says that "subject to the regulations, the Regulator must render its decision within a specific prescribed time period based on the nature of the application." In other words, there needs to be a regulation to deal with time frames. Sections 33(1) and 33(2), both of those sections, are made in accordance with the rules. The rules are, essentially, as differentiated from regulations, things that apply to the regulator as opposed to regulations, which are passed by order in council.

Under the definition of rules on page 7 of the bill it says:

- (r) "rule" means, except in section 47, a rule made
  - (i) by or on behalf of the Regulator under this Act or by the Regulator under an energy resource enactment, or
  - (ii) by the Lieutenant Governor in Council pursuant to section 68.

In other words, regulations. So the provision is already in the act to set the regulations by which the regulator would operate. Presumably, one of those regulations would be with respect to the time frames. I mean, I can understand why the hon. member wants to have it clear in the act, I suppose, that there need to be time frames, but the reality is that there need to be time frames, and they'll be in the rules.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. That's a good presumption, but it's not in the legislation to govern the regulations. I know the hon. minister had an opportunity to discuss some of these with industry because we had the opportunity to sit down with industry and discuss this also. Having goals, specific goals, is something only the regulator can do. What this amendment does is just basically tell that regulator that once you set out to set out the rules and regulations, one of those goals has to be a time frame. The section that was just quoted actually doesn't say that. It just refers to the rules, but it doesn't say specifically to set out time frames for approval.

Now, I will remind hon. members that this is actually in law in other legislation dealing particularly with transmission lines. It's actually a smart idea. It used to say that a transmission line had to be approved within 180 days, and now I think it's subject to 180 days and allows the regulator to extend that if they need to extend that. That's the flexibility you allow a regulator. What this does is that it makes it very clear in legislation that the regulator has to look at the different applications, which is the nature of the application. When you talk to industry, it's complicated because certain categories of applications probably can be decided within a week; certain categories of applications are going to take months. What you're asking here is for the regulator to set out timelines. It sets its own goals.

This does two things. It helps to streamline the process by setting goals, but it also informs the industry: when you file an application, here's what the regulator has said. When you table that application for submission, they have an idea of what kind of time frame they're looking at. Hopefully, the regulator can meet its goals. I see no reason why it can't. The fact is that they can now take a look at what type of application they plan on filing, and they can have a reasonable expectation. If the regulator has set out in regulation that it has to be done in three months or one week or 180 days, whatever the regulator sets, that gives that company a chance to take a look at the overall picture and plan appropriately.

There's nothing worse for industry than to file an application that it thinks is routine and not get an answer back and not understand why it hasn't got an answer back when applications of that same type have generally only taken a matter of a couple of days. I would ask some of the members to contact some people in the industry, and they will tell you that that type of approval process has always frustrated them. Where they could not see a roadblock, they just don't understand why the application is sort of in never-never land. It hasn't been rejected. It hasn't been approved. It is somewhere in the chute, so to speak, waiting for adjudication.

When I look at this on specific terms, dealing with the actual statement that they have to set out the time frames, I think this is one of those – as the hon. member said, even a blind squirrel can find a nut on a given day. Maybe we have a nut here that the blind squirrel can agree on. If you're opposed to the amendment, the question I would have, then, is: how would this possibly hold up the streamlining process? All it does is provide guidance to the regulator in legislation. To me the whole purpose of the legislation is to provide that guidance.

Now we would know that the regulator, if you were to adopt this and pass this, would then on its own merits, based on the legislation, start figuring out how it's going to set reasonable time frames, reasonable goals that it can achieve so that the public knows. I think that enhances this piece of legislation, and it allows this process to work exactly the way you want it to work, which is streamlining. Without that, yes, the rules will be the rules, but there are no time frames and no requirement to set a time frame in those rules. We just know there are going to be rules forthcoming, but nobody knows what those rules are going to be.

Setting it out in legislation gives us some sort of clear indication of what some of those rules will be. That's a very good thing for industry. That's actually a very good thing for landowners, too. They will have some sort of reasonable expectation of when that decision will be forthcoming. I think that serves everybody on each side of the equation should anything go to a hearing process or any kind of dispute resolution process, some sort of indication of what they're dealing with with the application.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

8:20

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, I appreciate the opportunity to be here and to participate in this discussion. I'm learning a lot, and it reinforces what I think good legislation really looks like, what a good act will accomplish. Just to draw upon something my hon. friend mentioned about goals, a goal or a good intent of the purpose, of the result that we're looking for is really just a wish until it's written, and by writing it, it makes it crystal clear. It crystallizes it and helps us have something to strive for.

One of the key tools to help streamline is to have deadlines as well as timelines for parts of the evaluation and decision-making process. They need to be realistic, of course, but without them we have the Parkinson's law situation, which I'm sure you all know: work will expand to fill the time allotted for its completion. So we need to keep the time frame as short as practicable. There need to be consequences, certain, not severe, for success or failure to encourage the expeditious processing and arrival at the desired conclusion.

A good management tool that ought to be considered as we work towards making this really be an effective streamlining process would be some kind of performance agreement. It's just part of good management. We have mutually agreed upon desired results so that the parties involved understand what's expected, clear expectations, critical to success, and clear expectations that are specific, not global. We have guidelines. For example, one of the guidelines would be that it has to be legal, moral, and ethical. Another might be that we need to meet certain timelines. Then we've got the resources that are available to help us achieve the desired result. Those need to be clearly specified as well, I submit. Then you've got accountability, how you're going to report your stewardship, and then the consequences, as I said.

Certain, not severe, perhaps performance bonuses for achieving certain successes within or under the timelines, and then penalties or consequences if the regulator isn't performing at the proper level. They certainly shouldn't be getting bonuses as has happened in AHS and other governmental departments for underachieving. We need to set the bar high. The expectations need to be clear because industry as well as the public and the landowners will want this process to be swift. We want to be able to compete with our neighbours to the east and west of us, who seem to be able to approve projects much quicker than we've been able to do.

So I believe that this will help. I think it's critical that we have timelines so that we don't just have it loosey-goosey and it can take as long as it wants but that it's a strict requirement for the performance of the job of the regulator, or they need to be looking for a new job.

Thank you.

The Chair: Again, are there others? I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In any typical industry if a company setting out a business plan to engage in a project, particularly with project management, it is always set according to timelines, whether you're dealing with financing, whether it's the logistics of purchasing material, costing your labour. It doesn't matter. It is all based on timelines under a project management system.

If we require the regulator to set out reasonable timelines – and it doesn't even say reasonable; it just talks about setting out the timelines – it gives a mandate to the regulator to put that into its regulations so we're assured that it is done in regulation. That now can be used in any project management plan. As these applications come forward, they can now not just look at the geology, you know, on the resource development and the logistics of the drilling and everything that takes place prior to it, but also they can back right up to when they're doing the planning stages. They'll know when they file that application what reasonable timeline they can plan for to engage these services.

That is not perfect in every sense of the word, but that gives a better planning tool to our industry. All that's happening here is that we are asking to put it in legislation so the regulator must comply and create reasonable timelines – I'm going to make the assumption that they would do that – and there are reasonable goals, and people, industry can rely upon that. That makes for a seamless application process. Without that, if there is no mandate – yes, it can happen without the mandate. That is possible, but it's possible it might be missing. All you're doing here by accepting this amendment is making sure that does not go missing so that we can create a seamless approval process.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others to speak to amendment A10? Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: Hon. members, just a reminder that when you submit amendments to the table, we need the original that was signed by Parliamentary Counsel and signed by the member proposing the amendment.

I'll recognize the next member on the bill, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I would like to propose an amendment to this bill, and I will provide copies to the table. I do not see the original here, so I will defer to my colleague for Calgary-Mountain View until I find the original signed copy.

The Chair: Okay.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have a further amendment to Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. I'll circulate it before I comment.

The Chair: This amendment, hon. members, will be A11 once it gets to the table.

Hon. member, you may speak to the amendment.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Under part 4 Mr. Hehr moves that Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act, 2012, be amended in section 67(1) by striking out the word "and" at the end of clause (a) and striking out all of clause (b), which appears to be entirely redundant.

The existing section 67 states:

67(1) When the Minister considers it to be appropriate to do so, the Minister may by order give directions to the Regulator for the purposes of

- (a) providing priorities and guidelines for the Regulator to follow in the carrying out of its powers, duties and functions, and
- (b) ensuring the work of the Regulator is consistent with the programs, policies and work of the Government in respect of energy resource development, public land management, environmental management and water management.

We fail to see how that adds materially to the bill and may give a false impression to some ministers that they can carry out far more intervention than is appropriate. So we see nothing that isn't included under subsection (a) and would suggest that part (b) is either redundant or could be misused.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Government House leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd have to speak against this amendment. Clause (b) is clearly a very important part of the bill. What the report that was done as a backdrop to this bill very clearly set out is that in order for us to do appropriate sustainable development in this province, balancing the interests of industrial development and the environment, the interest of Albertans, there needs to be a policy process that's set by government through the Legislature on behalf of Albertans. The government sets the policy. The Legislature sets the legislation. Those are the structures that are put in place. The regulators don't make policy. They carry out policy in terms of implementation.

Section 67(1) very clearly says in (a) that the minister can give priorities and guidelines in terms of how they carry out their duty and in (b) ensures that the way they carry out their duty is done in compliance with the policies, rules, and processes set out by government. It sets out the very clear delineation of responsibility. Policy is the role of government and the Legislature. Carrying out the policy with respect to this area is the role of the regulator.

The Chair: Are there other speakers on amendment A11? Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Chair: We'll move to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have an amendment to Bill 2. I will provide the necessary copies to the table, and you can tell me when to proceed.

The Chair: I will, hon. member.

This amendment, hon. members, will be A12.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, be amended in section 16 by renumbering subsection (1) as subsection (1.1) and by adding the following before subsection (1.1).

16(1) In this section, "Minister" means

- (a) the Minister of Energy,
- (b) the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, or
- (c) any other Member of the Executive Council responsible for energy or environmental matters.

I'm pleased to speak to this, Mr. Chairman. Presently the bill only provides for disclosure of information to the Minister of Energy, who is the sponsor of the legislation, meaning that all environmental data and analysis gathered by the regulator will not be shared with the minister responsible for the environment.

This amendment ensures that if the minister of the environment requests information pertaining to energy resource developments, he or she will be given that information in order to be able to assess the regulator's work on environmental monitoring. The regulator will be responsible for the protection of the environment when it comes to energy development, but nowhere is there any mention of the ministry of the environment. The ministry of the environment is invested in assessing and managing the cumulative effects of human activity. In order to more effectively study cumulative effects on the environment, the minister of the environment must be able to access the full information regarding resource development in Alberta.

According to the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development the province's cumulative effects management system is evolving, and the new Responsible Energy Development Act should evolve with it. This amendment will show a real connection to the province's cumulative effects language and policy because cumulative effects research must be based on open collaboration and the sharing of knowledge. The regulator will have key information on potential environmental effects of proposed and approved energy development plans that pertain to specific regions.

The lower Athabasca regional plan intends to balance large-scale economic growth in northeast Alberta with so-called world-class environmental monitoring. If the single regulator is solely responsible for environmental monitoring, how can the lower Athabasca regional plan be successful in its vision? This amendment will provide the avenue for the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development to examine whether energy projects comply with overall development plans such as the lower Athabasca regional plan.

The Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development has committed itself to increased environmental monitoring, beginning in the oil sands region and extending to cover the province. This monitoring will likely focus on regions in Alberta where resource development will have major effects on the environment. According to the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development this agency is a new step in addressing how we monitor the development of our natural resources. In order for environmental monitoring to be effective, information on energy development must be readily available from the regulator. The regulator will have the most immediate and complete information from energy project applicants, and rather than duplicating efforts in different offices, this amendment allows for the quick sharing of information generated from the regulator.

Mr. Chairman, it's clear to me that if the regulator under this act is responsible for gathering data and monitoring the impacts of development in considering applications and afterwards, that regulator should be sharing that information not just with the Ministry of Energy but also with Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. This is an attempt to correct what we think is a major flaw in the approach of going to a single regulator. The environment will be sacrificed and with it the rights of landowners. You cannot protect the rights of landowners if you don't protect the land itself. I think that that's a critical link that needs to be made in consideration of this bill. You cannot separate those two things. This is an attempt to at least ensure that the ministry of environment is in the loop when it comes to the impact of large-scale energy developments on the environment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd draw the House's attention to the definitions section in Bill 2, which indicates:

- (n) "Minister" means the Minister determined under section 16 of the Government Organization Act as the Minister responsible for this Act.

Under the Government Organization Act section 16(4) says:

Two or more Ministers may be given common responsibility for the same Act, and in that case any reference in the Act or a regulation . . . to a Minister, the Minister's deputy or the Minister's department is to be read as a reference to any of those Ministers and their deputies and departments.

We have a naming protocol, which was established in this province a number of years ago, under the Government Organization Act which facilitates the changes, reorganizations that happen from time to time. Sometimes the ministry of environment is called the ministry of environment and water. Sometimes it's called the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, depending on how the organizational structure is. You don't go through then and amend all the acts to change the names. The Government Organization Act facilitates the naming and transference of responsibilities with respect to any specific act.

I would suggest that this amendment is not only unnecessary but complicates the process because it's very straightforward to name the ministers responsible for an act. There can be more than one minister, in fact, responsible for an act. Different ministers can be responsible for different sections of acts. That's all clearly set out under the Government Organization Act and the regulations that are made there from time to time.

The Chair: Are there others to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: They come fast and furious at us. I need caffeine, clearly, because that was a mouthful.

I'm just flipping to section 16(1) first. We're dealing with the section regarding disclosure of information to the minister. This did come up earlier, and there was no explanation given with regard to our questions on this. I think the hon. House leader obviously has a very good grasp of this bill, so I would like to understand the explanation for why this is in here. In section 16(1) it says right now:

The Regulator shall, on the written request of the Minister, provide to the Minister within the time specified in the request any report, record or other information, including personal information, that is specified in the request.

Now, that to me seems very broad, and it's a little bit disconcerting that there just seem to be no parameters on that section. In other words, it seems to be saying – and please correct me if I'm wrong. No one was able to point out to me in the act the reason why that's there. That seems to suggest, unless I'm wrong, that a minister could ask for someone's medical information under this or they could ask for something like that. So if you could address that.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, obviously, it's not that broad. The only information which the minister can request is information that the regulator has. There's no good reason for a regulator to have medical information on an individual unless, perhaps, they're regulating some environmental impact piece that has medical impacts. If there are medical impacts on individuals in an area, then that might be part of the report. Rather than sever that from the report, the minister would be entitled to get the report, including any personal information that was in the report with respect to medical impacts. That's speculation there.

It's only the information that a regulator has in a report or an application or a regulatory review that's available. If the regulator has the information, presumably it's information which is attached to something that they're reviewing or looking at and, therefore, is relevant to the subject matter. All it's saying is that the minister can have the same information that the regulator has in order to be able to look at the policy implications that might be needed out of that information.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. That's a good answer to that question. So we're only talking about information that the regulator already has in their possession.

Now, I would be a little bit concerned still that, you know, the regulator could – for example, let's say that a landowner feels that they're being negatively impacted by some fracking in the area, and they submit to the regulator, as I've seen if you've been to some of these fracking conferences, just awful pictures. They're just claims. I'm not an expert on fracking. I'm not saying that there's a problem with it. I just know that there are a lot of people that do feel there's a problem with it. They submit some graphic details about how they're being damaged. It includes medical information, very detailed pictures, and all kinds of bad stuff.

So if that went to the regulator, then at that point that information, if I'm understanding it, would be made available to the minister if they asked the regulator for it. Is that correct? Is that your understanding?

Mr. Hancock: In the circumstance of this particular section my understanding would be that the regulator is carrying out a function on behalf of government in terms of carrying out policy that's been put in place with respect to the implications of how people who are applying to do things are regulated under those policies. If the information is in the hands of the regulator, it is in the hands of the minister to request, as it says, a "report, record or other information," but then the minister has the same duty and obligation as the regulator with respect to how you handle that personal information.

One could assume that if there's information that's provided to a regulator that's relevant to what the regulator is doing, then it may be relevant to the policy-setting process, which is in the hands of government. The minister can ask for that information because the minister is the person who advises government with respect to how policy needs to be changed from time to time. The issue is: why does the regulator have the information, and what's the purpose of the information?

8:50

The Chair: I recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Listening to the hon. House leader, I follow the point about the Government Organization Act. I don't have that act in front of me, but I remember looking at that act on a number of occasions on different matters. Looking at this amendment, I'm not sure how it impedes or contradicts or would make things complicated in the change of the title of the ministry. Maybe I'm wrong. It would be section (a) more than (b) or (c). This is the Responsible Energy Development Act. I mean, this is about energy. It is presumed that the Energy minister by any other name is the Energy minister. If I'm wrong on that, then please say I'm wrong on that.

What it says beyond that is:

(b) the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, or

(c) any other Member of the Executive Council responsible . . .

Now, it's not talking so much about the ministry but the area of the responsibility for energy or environmental matters. It doesn't say the ministries as much as it's talking about those matters that deal with both energy and the environment. That, to me, would not make it difficult to change the title of the minister, to require a legislative change or anything.

When I look at section (a), that's where my question lies. I can't imagine changing the title of the minister, but it's possible that we won't call the Minister of Energy "the Minister of Energy" for whatever reason. I just don't see where that's problematic.

When I look at this, other than being specific in literal terms, it just provides a little bit more clarity to the bill, to exactly what you intend it to do. I would encourage anyone to comment. Particularly, does section 16(1)(a) of this amendment violate what you just described in the Government Organization Act? Does that cause a problem?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, it doesn't violate anything. It's surplusage. It's unnecessary, and it creates issues down the road when you change names of departments. The Minister of Energy at one time, if I recall correctly, was the minister of energy and sustainable resource development. Names change from time to time for various reasons. That's why the Government Organization Act was set up, so that you could actually facilitate those changes without having to go through, find all the mentions in all the statutes, and amend them from time to time.

It doesn't create any particular problems because – you're right – it says that it could be the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, or any other person who is responsible. The Government Organization Act clearly sets out who is responsible for what acts and what sections of acts and sometimes co-responsibility.

It's surplusage. It just creates issues down the road when clearly the way the legislative drafting has happened over the last few years is to take those references out of these acts. Everybody knows where they are, and you can go to one place to see who is responsible for any act or sections of acts.

Mr. Anderson: I love it when the Government House Leader is here because you learn new words like "surplusage." I didn't know that word. That's a good word.

Mr. Hancock: Hopefully, this is the penultimate amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Fair enough. Surplusage, umbrage, all these great words.

I really want to thank the minister for answering those questions. It does seem to me to suggest, though – and I think that you did answer it clearly – that it's anything that's in the regulator's hands that's subject to a request by the minister, anything that's been given to the regulator. So that could include medical information. It could include some very personal information about landowners, about anyone else adversely affected who submitted that information that the regulator has gotten a hold in some way, whether through a proceeding or a forum or if it was just mailed to them and so forth.

I would say that that's still too broad. I guess we'll have to agree to disagree on that. When somebody submits something to any government body, especially when it comes to personal information, certainly personal medical information about a sickness that they have because of what they perceive to be development and so forth, that is to them a very personal thing. They're doing it because they feel that they have to. They have no other choice but to submit what can be some very sensitive and embarrassing facts to the regulator in order that they are heard and perhaps compensated or perhaps so the project won't be expanded or won't go forward, or whatever. I don't think that the minister should have the blanket authority to ask for that information and have it in his or her hands. I think that that's too broad.

If we could put something in there that just said: relevant to his duties, relevant to his duties as minister, relevant to whatever. I mean, there's got to be some limitation that shows it's not a complete free-for-all, that they can ask for any information. You know, who knows? I mean, maybe somebody submitted their credit card number to the registrar in order to purchase copies of forms and stuff like that. Well, you would think that that information would be private. Again, I think we've got to realize that we have to be very careful when we start giving blanket powers to ministers to simply say, "I will take whatever I want when I want it from the regulator," because that could include some very personal information that was never intended for the eyes of the minister.

Other things, too. There are a lot of people, obviously, that live on acreages or hobby farms or other places that may have jobs in the public service. It's quite possible that they might not want to be identified if they were to write, say, a really sharp letter criticizing the government for something, and they send it to the regulator as part of their package or submission on a certain issue. Then if the minister can ask for all that information, again, that could be problematic, as could his contact information: his e-mail addresses, his phone numbers, his address, his business address, his place of employment, whatever.

Again, if it's relevant to the minister's duties – and I agree with the Government House Leader – then that's fine. But if it's not relevant to the minister's duties, if you're just giving a power that is essentially unfettered for the minister to ask from the regulator anything that it has in its possession from an individual, regardless of whether it's material to the minister's duties or not, I think that that is problematic or could be problematic, and I think that that should be changed.

With regard to this particular amendment I think it is reasonable because, as stated here, it's the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment and SRD and then subsection (c) catches what the Government House Leader was saying: "any other Member of the Executive Council responsible for energy or environmental matters." If the names of departments did change, then that subsection (c) would clearly catch the new name, whatever that is, of the minister that deals with energy, environment, or sustainable resource development. So I think that it's a reasonable amendment.

I think that, frankly, it should be much broadened with regard to narrowing what the minister can and can't ask with regard to personal information. Reports, I agree. Any report the regulator has, I think that's fair game, anything generated by the regulator. But when you're talking about personal information that's been given to the regulator in confidence, I think that this is a very problematic section.

Thanks, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Further comments on A12? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to thank the minister for explaining that. I'm not sure it causes a problem in the sense that the Government Organization Act and any other piece of legislation that changes a department's name generally makes reference to what once was and what will now be. Everything is assumed to be exactly as it should be. Far be it from me, though – I just hate the idea of naming another minister that will get private information. I was trying to limit the power of this a few amendments ago. I'm still more inclined to look for limits on the amount of information that should flow.

I think I will be supporting this, particularly on the environmental side. It does provide clarity that information can flow, if anything. I don't think it harms the bill. I don't think it affects the bill and what the bill's intention is. I think what it does is to make some clarification for the public at large so they get some sort of sense of trust – I don't want to use the word "trust," but I guess the word "trust" is applicable here – that the information goes where they think it should be going regardless of what the Government Organization Act stipulates. You know, one of the things that has to happen with this legislation is that it has to give the public confidence. It has to give the public a sense that they are not just getting a streamlined regulator but that their rights are being protected in the process by stipulating in legislation who is going to be getting the information, particularly when you are dealing with environmental matters. That was brought to this.

Now, I will tell you from personal experiences that there are problems with fracking. This is not something that is arbitrary or alleged. It is something industry has to deal with. It happens every now and then, and it happens sometimes in strange and weird ways. It even surprises industry. These would be issues that landowners would take to a regulator. Now, one of the most recent ones, of course, happened down in Innisfail. We had a blowout. The fracking company was over the hill on another section of land altogether, and all of a sudden the farmer had a blowout. I don't think it was an abandoned well. I think it was actually another shallow well, if I'm not mistaken. We had a huge blowout happening there.

Now, in that situation the energy company was not following the proper protocols, and that led to probably more of a mistake than there needed to be. Again, this would be a case where the property owners themselves would want the regulator and possibly in this case the ministry of environment to get involved. This was not just an energy development issue. This now became an environmental issue when we had that unexpected blowout, that unfortunate blowout, and there was a tremendous problem created as a result of that.

We had the same thing with the pipeline crossing down on the Red Deer River. We had a spill. It appeared to be significant downstream. What we found out after the fact is that it was significant, actually, right there for the adjacent landowners on both sides of the bank. It, unfortunately, happened, but at the same time fortunately it happened at the same time that we were at the high-water mark for the year. On the fortunate side it actually placed that oil well up high. Unfortunately for the landowners that were up there, they got covered with oil, so it had that drawback to it.

Again, it's about: now what happens? Who gets the information? Who has the power to get the information? If we were to pass this amendment, it would be laid out in very clear terms.

Listening to the hon. House leader, I understood what you said, and if I'm wrong, I know you'll stand up and say that I'm wrong. The Government Organization Act and any other piece of legislation that we pass, including this one, will make reference – and it does – to where it comes from and what changes. I don't think that creates a problem in the future at all. We have that flexibility. What this does is make it clear and concise for the average person to understand how this bill works and says in specific terms that they can bring these environmental concerns and ask the ministry of environment to get involved in those situations where they need to.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to amendment A12?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment, and I have the required number of copies I'd like to hand out.

The Chair: Have you got the original, hon. member, sent to the table?

Mr. Hale: Yes.

The Chair: Thank you. Just a brief moment while that's circulated.

Hon. member, you may speak to the amendment. This will be amendment A13, for the record.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As you can see, we want to amend division 4, reconsideration by a regulator, specifically section 43. As it reads in the bill now, it says, "Subject to the regulations, the Regulator may conduct a reconsideration with or without conducting a hearing." My amendment will strike section 43 and replace it with 43 The Regulator shall provide a minimum of 60 days' notice of a reconsideration to any landowners, companies, or other persons directly affected by the decision and shall provide those persons with the opportunity to present evidence to the Regulator before the reconsideration is complete.

Now, this amendment is good for everyone involved. It's good for the companies. It's good for the landowners. It gives everyone a sense of certainty. They know what's going to happen not on the day that it happens. This will allow the rug not to be pulled out from the oil companies. We've already witnessed up north the oil sands leases that were cancelled. These oil companies spend thousands, hundreds of thousands, millions of dollars preparing and going through this application process. To all of a sudden have the decision of the regulator stop their process costs them lots of money.

We're still not a hundred per cent sure. I did ask a question in question period regarding the repayment to these oil companies of the leases that were cancelled. Are they going to be repaid the original costs? Are they going to be repaid the original costs plus a rate of return? Or are they going to be repaid their costs plus a rate of return plus lost revenue? That could cost the Alberta taxpayers millions and millions and millions of dollars.

This amendment will allow the oil companies to have a voice with the regulator. It'll allow them to make recommendations, to plead their case, if you so wish. You know, it'll allow them to be involved in some sort of a discussion as to why, give them time to make their cases, to make their point, to say: why are you pulling these leases from me? It's not necessarily about the landowners. I mean, it could be that the decision of the regulator is to not allow it on a piece of land, then all of a sudden on a whim the regulator decides to approve it without giving any sort of notice.

I believe – and the hon. Energy minister may correct me – that this section of the bill deals more with cancelling of leases, suspending application processes. We feel that these oil companies deserve the respect of the regulator to give them notice, to give them 60 days, two months. Many of these oil companies spend months and months right now going through this process, deciding on their projects. This will allow them time to make recommendations to the regulator, to, hopefully, change the regulator's mind as to why this resource development is good.

You know, we've heard throughout the amendments of this bill, we've heard throughout proceedings in this Chamber for weeks now about accountability and transparency. This amendment allows for accountability and transparency between the regulator, the energy companies, and the landowners. I don't think that this is too much to ask for companies that spend all this money on the taxpayers' dime. I mean, taxpayers own the resources – they own them – and when situations arise where we have to spend extra taxpayer dollars to compensate these oil companies when maybe they have good reasons and they can persuade the regulator to allow them to continue their resource development, you know, these companies must be allowed to provide evidence.

I can almost hear the answer of the hon. Energy minister to my questions and to this amendment, that it will be dealt with in the regulations, in the rules, but again that leads to so much uncertainty. You know, these companies that are worth billions and billions of dollars want to know where they stand. They don't want to leave it up to the whim of the Energy minister or the regulator. They want to know cut and dried what's going to happen. I think they deserve the respect of this Chamber, and I think they deserve the respect of the Energy minister and everyone involved to have that certainty, to know where they're going to stand.

So I would hope that you guys would take a look at this and come up with some really good explanations as to why you don't want to pass this amendment or, you know, clarify, other than saying that it's going to be in the regulations later. I'd like to see in the bill where this will provide certainty to the energy industries.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other comments? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. I personally think that this amendment is more than reasonable. It's, frankly, essential. Again, it's good that the Government House Leader and the Energy minister are here to answer our questions in this regard, but if you look at section 43, again, of the current act it says, "Subject to the regulations." I know, regulations. You could put something in there maybe, but you can't take that to the bank, so pretend that's not even there. "Subject to the regulations, the Regulator may conduct" – may conduct – "a reconsideration with or without conducting a hearing."

Now, I don't see how that is due process, frankly. I'm not understanding how folks can go through this process and go through a proper hearing where a decision is rendered, and then the regulator is free to go back, reconsider that decision, and change its mind, essentially, or alter its decision without consulting or hearing from the impacted folks. That doesn't make sense.

I'm fully aware that this is a very thick bill. I've a lot of respect particularly for the Government House Leader and his ability to understand and weed through government legislation and point out where we're missing things and where we're misinterpreting things and so forth, but on 43 I don't understand why we would want to give the regulator the ability to reconsider a decision and alter a decision without hearing from the folks that are affected by it. Again, that to me is a little bizarre.

The amendment here states:

43 The Regulator shall provide a minimum of 60 days' notice of a reconsideration to any landowners, companies, or other persons directly affected by the decision and shall provide those persons with the opportunity to present evidence to the Regulator before the reconsideration is complete.

I'm glad that our Energy critic also brought up the fact that this applies not just to landowners, which is important – it should apply to landowners – but it also applies to companies. Under this a company could essentially get a permit to drill or to do its work, and then there could be a reconsideration of that without a hearing. So the company could go through all this effort. There are hearings and all that. They get the permit, and then all of a sudden for whatever reason, political or nonpolitical, the regulator decides to reconsider the decision to allow that drilling permit and makes a decision without even hearing from the company, whom it would just devastate.

Again, I'm not saying that the government plans to do something so nefarious as that, but that's what this seems to do. Is there an unintended consequence here? Perhaps the Energy minister or the Government House Leader or the ag minister, also a great parliamentarian and someone who understands legislation very well, could explain if that is indeed the case. Why do they need to make it so that a regulator may conduct a reconsideration with or without conducting a hearing? Doesn't that seem like a problem?

The Chair: Before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Chair: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I notice that we've had some visitors just arrive in the members' gallery. I was at a dinner reception earlier this evening, and it was to celebrate the agriculture industry. It was sponsored by Alberta Pork, Alberta Barley Commission, Alberta Lamb Producers, Alberta Pulse Growers, Alberta Canola Producers Commission, Alberta Sugar Beet Growers, Alberta Wheat Commission, and the Potato Growers of Alberta. I actually might have mentioned to some people there that sitting here evenings is somewhat reminiscent of an intensive livestock operation where we sit, and we sit, and we sit, then we go out and eat, and then we come back and sit some more. Anyway, these gentlemen were, I think, curious enough to come over and see what we do here in the evenings. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members here Chris Perry, John Boorman, Louis Ypma, Laus Stiekema, and Jake Hoogland. My apologies if I've mispronounced any names. Welcome.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 2 Responsible Energy Development Act (continued)

The Chair: We'll return to debate on amendment A13. Are there other speakers? The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege and a pleasure to rise and support this amendment about giving a minimum of 60 days' notice of a reconsideration to any landowners, companies, or other persons directly affected by the decision and shall provide those persons with the opportunity to present evidence to the Regulator before the reconsideration is complete.

The reason that this amendment is actually quite important is because in the act itself, the Responsible Energy Development Act, section 43 is pretty vague. It really just says, "subject to the regulations, the Regulator may conduct a reconsideration with or without conducting a hearing." The most common-sense thing to do would be to literally be able to provide the landowner and the company with a minimum amount of notice. Why would we expect that anybody should get zero notice, that the regulator can make a decision, and then after that decision is made can come back and change that decision with no notice to the landowner, no notice to the company, really, no notice to anybody but themselves and probably the minister?

In the interest of being as fair, as open, and as transparent as possible, it would seem that we want to make sure that this is a win-win for all. I would think that industry would need this as well so that these decisions don't bounce back on them. You know, time and time again we repeatedly hear about how much investment industry makes into these projects, how much effort and time and months go into the planning, into the permits, into the development of whatever this project is going to be. In order to make sure we're not shortchanging industry at all, if there's going to be a hearing or there could be a hearing or there might be a hearing or there was a hearing or a reconsideration of any sort, then surely the industry would want and the government would want to make sure that all those who might be affected have an opportunity to know that that has changed.

The importance of that is that it then allows that industry member to redirect funds if they need to, change permits so that the project isn't stalled, and allows the industry member to further meet all of the guidelines that the regulator is actually putting on them. A change or a reconsideration literally could mean that you're changing the guidelines that the industry person has to meet, and we would want to give them notice of that. Just as important, surely, is that we'd want to give the landowner notice that we're going to reconsider or conduct a hearing on something that, again, is on their private land.

The problem with leaving it so vague is that it really is a concentration of power. I believe that this government wants to be more open and transparent. That's what they've said they want to do. A perfect way to do this is just to ensure that there's no secrecy. Nobody is saying that they want it to be secret but just to make sure that that is an open process.

Requiring notification of a hearing with affected persons and giving them 60 days' notice is a reasonable amount of time. If there's a different amount of days, you know, I'm open to hearing that as well. If there's a little different wording that the government needs to have in there to make sure that there's some sort of notification to the landowner, to the industry, and all the affected members, then certainly I'm sure that the Minister of Energy could provide that reasoning.

It seems that there would only be very few reasons as to why you'd purposely leave it out. There doesn't seem to be any logic and any reason as to why you wouldn't notify not only the landowner, the person's land that they own that you're going to be affecting, but also the industry member so that we can ensure that industry is able to meet all the requirements that are placed upon them. This is not onerous on the regulator when changing the decision. It's a simple notification allowing everyone to know exactly what's going on and allowing everybody to have the opportunity that if they don't like the notice or they don't like what's going on, they can take whatever avenue is open to them.

We've already heard that one of the avenues that is open to them is to have a discussion with the minister because that's how they're going to appeal that decision. But if they don't have any notification, how does either side make that happen? If industry doesn't know that you're going to change or have a reconsideration with or without a hearing, then it almost makes it impossible for them to put it in their side as to why this is a good idea or not.

More importantly, once again, by omitting it, it's not open and transparent. That is the most important part of everything that we're doing here in the Legislature. It needs to be open and transparent. If you're not going to allow the industry and the landowner any notification that you've held a hearing or that you might have a reconsideration with or without a hearing, then there's absolutely no way that that process can be seen as open and transparent. It is imperative that both the industry and the landowner know what's going on, are kept apprised of the process all the way through, and are allowed to have the opportunity to make any changes or adjust their budgets or adjust their business plan to make sure that some of these projects go through.

We know on the government side there's a pretty heavy emphasis on carbon capture and storage. They've invested a lot of money, $800 million, into carbon capture and storage, and I would think that any of those plans that go through – you'd hate to see one of them go off the rails because you had a reconsideration or a hearing that was done with no notice to industry. So it protects industry just as much as it protects landowners. Actually, I think in this case it almost protects industry more because industry is the one who's shelling out a significant amount of money. Given the subsidies that some of these companies get on carbon capture and storage, it actually would protect taxpayers, too, because if they're given the 60 days' notice and need to make some adjustments in their plans, then they have the ability to do so.

Once again, I mean, 60 days' notice is not onerous. It's not difficult to do. It shows that this government is open and transparent. It allows the landowner a say, and it allows the industry a notification, which is a simple process. We notify about many, many different things. You know, in our municipalities they notify when they're going to pour sidewalks. The government notifies when they're going to build anything. If you're going to operate an intensive livestock farming operation, you have to notify all of your neighbours – you have to put out the little billboards, send some notices – and then they have 60 days, usually, 30 or 60 depending on what type of operation it is, to actually reply, and the neighbours around them also know what's going on. Providing 60 days' notice to the landowner and the industry when the regulator may conduct a reconsideration is just really good business practice.

I would suggest that we take a minute to take a step back and seriously consider these amendments. A lot of hard work has gone into them by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. These are not frivolous amendments. He's put a lot of effort into talking with industry and with landowners. He's just trying to provide better options for a bill that I think could be good but, certainly, could be better. Ultimately, as legislators that's our goal is to make sure that the best bill comes forward to the public and to industry and that we have a win-win.

To ensure that we do that, I think one of the first and foremost issues that we have to deal with is the trust issue. Currently there is a trust issue. The public doesn't trust that when you come onto their land, you're always going to do the right thing. The public doesn't trust that everything that we say is going to happen in this bill is going to happen. That's a reality. That's what we're facing today. We saw it with bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. They are lacking trust in what politicians do, and in order to rebuild that trust, we need to make sure that we don't make the same mistakes that we saw in Bill 50. Bill 50 came back to this House because people literally rallied up and said: this is not an appropriate bill; it doesn't do what you thought it was going to do, and we need to make some revisions. I applaud this government for bringing Bill 50 back and recognizing that it wasn't as good as it could have been.

I think that this is one of those instances where this one certainly could be a lot better and could literally put the government in a position where it's a win-win for them as well. They're clearly open and transparent if they were to provide notice. It's not onerous. You know, it would certainly make the bill better, and it would build public trust in what we're doing here. The reality of it is that what we're going here is very, very important work, but we have to make sure that we're talking about all Albertans, and we have to make sure that we're talking about all industry and the regulators.

I know for a fact that I can't imagine there's a single person in here that if something was going across their land and was affecting their property and may or may not affect what they do with that land or any setbacks or anything else that they wouldn't want reasonable notification that something has changed. It would seem to me that any reasonable landowner and any reasonable industry person would also like that same courtesy.

I would suggest that the government take a look at this amendment and support it as I will. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise today to speak in favour of this amendment. I think that the intent behind this amendment speaks to an element of fairness when, you know, the regulator is given this power to sort of pull the rug out from underneath others, whether that be industry, whether that be landowners, which seems to be what our caucus talks about quite often over here.

But the reality is that the intent of this bill is to streamline a process, and pulling the rug out from under people has the unintended consequence of potentially bogging things down on the back end. You know, if lawsuits and/or further appeals are held trying to, I guess, challenge the regulator's decision on a reconsideration, I think that having the ability for evidence to be presented by all parties affected by a reconsideration just simply makes sense, and it will allow this bill to actually fulfill its intent.

Absolute power is a frustrating animal for anybody and truly can only lead to negative outcomes if not tempered. There is, as the Member for Airdrie suggested, the potential for politics to be at play, again, whether that's a perception or a reality. If a lease is cancelled and it's because a company did something that the government didn't appreciate or if there was, again, an individual within a company that blew the whistle on somebody and then all of a sudden the regulator decided to pull their lease, there is the potential for this perception of absolute power.

You know, I say this sort of tongue-in-cheek, but it relates to a situation we have here, where despite strong evidence and undeniable logic being offered from this side of the floor on many of the amendments that we're putting forward, the regulator on the other side, being the government, at least hears us out. At least you hear us out. You may not like what we have to say, we may not get our way, it may not go our way, but that little token of at least being able to present our case lets us go home at night and sleep well.

I think that that's what this amendment speaks to. It's going to allow those impacted individuals to be able to do that, to have their voice be heard when they are impacted. In the case of industry, where we have millions invested, I mean, this can be a pretty big blow. In the case of an environmental impact assessment being done, that needs more clarity or more – if they need to be at the table, at least having the regulator notify them and hear evidence from all sides just simply makes sense.

I would implore the hon. minister to give this amendment strong consideration because I do believe it just simply speaks to fairness. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Just to answer some of the points that colleagues opposite have raised, really this is a matter of practicality. We all know that no one size fits all applications. You know, the ERCB today deals with 30,000 to 40,000 different applications in a year. Some are through in two days, like to drill a well in an existing program. Some take two years, like for a large plant in northeastern Alberta.

To write into the legislation sort of a one-size-fits-all notice of reconsideration perhaps creates a process which is unduly constrained and not responsive, actually, to either landowners or any of the parties: environmental concerns that are raised, landowners, or applicants into the system. Actually, one of the reasons why this section under division 4, Reconsideration by Regulator, is there is that people make mistakes. Sometimes the regulator can make a mistake. You don't want them to be hung up in a very tightly prescribed process in order to correct a mistake that's been done.

So for many reasons, these included, this is best addressed within the regulations, which it will be, Mr. Chair. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you very much for the explanation. I will say this. The regulator is the master of its own destiny. That's the way the bill is constructed, and that's what we want in real terms. The regulator will make regulations accordingly, based on this legislation. As with all regulators existing right now, the Alberta Utilities Commission, they are the masters of their own destiny. They have those powers that they can exercise.

This amendment would not hold up the regulator one iota if they have to reconsider. What the amendment says is that they do give 60 days' notice before the reconsideration is complete. What is actually in legislation – and it's consistent across our regulators now – is that if the regulator needs to act, they have the power to act. They do have that power to change immediately, based on the need, but the process itself for reconsideration can still be open so that they can get evidence.

The real key is exactly what the minister said: "Mistakes do get made, and we realize that. Those mistakes need to be corrected." The bill empowers the regulator to correct the mistakes. That I don't dispute. But what allowing mandatory 60 days' notice before the reconsideration is complete does is that that allows for those industry members in particular, those people who want the efficiency of a seamless application process, if they do receive a decision that is going to be rescinded for whatever reason – we can come up with a number of reasons – at least they will have the opportunity of notification and realistically about 60 days before the reconsideration is complete. There's nothing here that says that the regulator upon receiving that evidence might not change their mind.

By putting that there – and you could put any time frame at all in there: 60 days, 30 days, 15 days, or even 90 days; it doesn't matter – the regulator can take whatever action it deems necessary to do its functions. That's already embedded in the act, and it has been embedded in all these regulation acts dealing with the ERCB, dealing with the AUC, dealing with the former EUB. It's all consistent. They had the ability to act.

What this motion just says: you've got to go tell those people who are directly and adversely affected and give them 60 days before your reconsideration is complete. I would argue that the completion is when they file that report. So they have the ability to take the action – let's say that it's in the public interest; I don't want to argue that one again – because of safety reasons, and they have to rescind a licence that they just granted for whatever reason. On the rescinding of that licence, if they give 60 days' notice before they make that reconsideration and close out the formal process – they create the process in regulation, anyway – before the process is absolutely complete, they're allowing at least 60 days here for those people to be notified and to provide evidence.

Now, will the regulator change their decision? Maybe, maybe not. But at least they gave those industry members, those people that are directly and adversely affected a time frame to get evidence together to say: wait a minute; maybe you don't need to rescind that licence.

Of course, it can work in the opposite way, where the regulator decided not to issue a licence and then decided to rescind that decision and issue the licence. Well, somebody has to be in that case probably directly and adversely affected. By giving them notice – and I will say this – when we appeal any of these decisions, that does not stay the order. If the regulator makes a decision to terminate a licence, rescind a licence, or grant a licence, the order is not stayed just because somebody appeals it. That's in the legislation. All that's happening here is that you've created a timeline so somebody can get notice and ample opportunity and let's call it reasonable opportunity to challenge the facts or submit evidence, based on the reconsideration by the regulator.

With respect to the minister saying that it would unnecessarily create a problem, I do not think so. I think it does just the opposite. It helps to keep the system seamless so we can deal with an issue. I will tell you it is the mistakes of the regulator that probably cause the most problems, more than any other aspect of the process. It's very frustrating for industry members when they run across a mistake by the board, the commission, or in this case the regulator. That is the whole intent for bringing this bill forward, so that we can eliminate some of those mistakes. Now, the best way to eliminate or at least remediate or even remedy those mistakes is to get evidence, and what better way to get evidence than to notify somebody who may have evidence or may want to bring evidence forward?

The bill itself does what it's supposed to do. The regulator gets to act in good faith, the way the regulator is intended to act. If they have to rescind a licence, they can rescind that licence immediately. They do not have to close that process out on the reconsideration. They can leave the process open, give 60 days' notice, receive other information. Just because they are under reconsideration, they do not have to and there is no right to stay the original decision. It's just not in the act. It's just the opposite. This act is absolutely clear. Just because something is being reconsidered or appealed, there's no staying power there. Not until the regulator makes it final.

All this does is create that one opportunity that opens up a window that others can bring evidence in. Where this is really important is not so much in dealing with landowners and landowner issues; this is in dealing with companies with issues with other companies. That happens. That happens a lot, and they have to deal with those issues. We have this situation where the regulator generally arbitrates in many cases, and if you have that kind of a problem that the regulator is dealing with, giving 60 days' notice, I think, is not just reasonable, but it's ample time.

Now, if you want to shorten it or extend it, I don't think it changes the context of what's happening here. I don't think it burdens the regulator in any way because, again, the regulator's decision – they are the master of their own destiny. If they pull that licence, it's pulled. The decision to pull the licence is not stayed because they are reconsidering it. It is not stayed because it's under appeal. They still have the right to hold a hearing or not hold a hearing. They have that ability. It starts right out in section 34(1).

The whole idea of reconsidering a decision is important, but to try to limit or minimize mistakes I think is crucial to keeping the intent of the bill. I can give an example of mistakes made by a former commission, the Energy and Utilities Board. They were not intentional mistakes, but they were mistakes nonetheless, where the utilities board decided for whatever reason – and you can look this up in the transcripts – not to go by the regulations. Now, I never could understand that when that decision was first made because the utility board made the regulations. The law is the law is the law. Since they made the law, which is the regulation, then they have to abide by their own law even though they have the power to change it. They didn't do that. That was an error, in my estimation, and of course the courts agreed with that. I think that had a process like this been available, where 60 days' notice was given or any notice was given of the change in the decision not to go by the regulation, had they had the opportunity to get input, that could have been prevented.

That's what we want. We want to be able to prevent mistakes. I think this actually assists in helping to prevent mistakes. It does not hold up any decision of the board. It does not stay any decision of the board. It just opens up that process of reconsideration regardless of the action of the board, but it mandates to the board that they have to give notice, and it gives people the opportunity, which, again, is that trust issue. People can live by the decision of the regulator as long as they feel they've got an ample opportunity to be heard fairly. They may not like the outcome, but at least if we have that process that allows them to be heard, that allows them to submit evidence, that they presume is fair and just, then the system works.

I speak in favour of this amendment because of that one principle, that it gives the sense that we're going to open the process up regardless of the action of the regulator, and in that process of 60 days, if they do not submit evidence, if they do not come forward, the regulator closes the process. No decision has been stayed, and we have a seamless application process that has continued forward.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The bill now reads in section 43, the one we're proposing to amend – and I support the amendment – “subject to the regulations, the Regulator may conduct a reconsideration with or without conducting a hearing.” It makes me wonder and I suspect people looking in on us will wonder, too: where are we exactly? Is this eastern Europe? Are our regulatory models Venezuela or Russia?

The regulator shall provide a minimum of 60 days, and as has been eloquently addressed, that seems to be quite reasonable. Corrections could be made in a day if all parties agreed with them and agreed that there's no need to present evidence. That would speed things up, which, clearly, is the government's intent and would be in the best interests of industry, the companies involved, as well as landowners.

This is about property rights, of course, those acquired by energy companies through purchases of leases and mineral rights as well as the property rights of the property owner, the landowner, where relevant, and in some cases, obviously, it will be government itself on Crown lands. It's respect for the rights and investments, the plans that have been made by corporations, their investors. Companies are owned by people. Companies aren't owned by some nebulous entity. It's people. It's people like you and me.

Many times it's part of our RSP or investment program, and we want the certainty that clauses like this amendment will provide. We need that certainty. It restores trust, and it's necessary to initially obtain and to retain investment in our province. It establishes credibility that the government is prepared to create a level playing field, create rules that are just and logical and based on common sense and are realistic. It provides certainty. Certainty is needed when you want to attract people into a market. It's needed if you want them to remain in the market. It's consistency, which is necessary for long-term plans.

Many of the projects that we're talking about require hundreds of thousands of man-hours and millions and millions of dollars to create the plans that are based upon the trust and the credibility of the government to deliver on what it promises, and that's stability. We need to make sure that the things that we do, such as including amendments like this, will give confidence. Investor confidence was seriously wounded when the unilateral royalty changes were made four years ago, and I don't think that trust, the credibility has yet been completely restored. That confidence is still a little bit lacking, and I suspect that some investors may never return to this jurisdiction.

I think that creating this bill will help. Doing the tweaks that we're suggesting and that others are suggesting are just good common sense, and they'll help restore that confidence and bring investors back because they'll have the certainty that they need. It's all about rights and due process. It's fairly simple, and I think that this simple little amendment will provide what we're looking for to provide a streamlined process or system that companies and landowners can count on.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to amendment A13? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I stand today in support of the amendment of the Member for Strathmore-Brooks to section 43 of Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act. What section 43 currently states is:

Hearing on reconsideration

43 Subject to the regulations, the Regulator may conduct a reconsideration with or without conducting a hearing.

What this member is looking to change it to is:

43 The Regulator shall provide a minimum of 60 days' notice of a reconsideration to any landowners, companies, or other persons directly affected by the decision and shall provide those persons with the opportunity to present evidence to the Regulator before the reconsideration is complete.

The way that I read this is that we're just trying to offer in good faith affected Albertans – persons directly affected, landowners, and the industry – the ability to be brought into the reconsideration so that they are able to be part of the process rather than just a spectator to it. Part of the reason why I sought the nomination and why I wanted to be elected was that I was tired of being a spectator. It was time to become part of the process, to help drive change or to defend those issues that are important to me and important to my constituency.

When we look at things like this, we're talking about Canada's economic engine, the Alberta energy sector. Really, this is what drives our country, this is what drives our province, and it's what drives investment into our province. We want to make sure that this is a stable environment. Myself, if I'm looking to invest, I want to invest in stability. I want to see something that is stable and will give me a return. Well, if you have a reconsideration – you put money into a project, and when you're talking energy, you're talking big money. This is a lot of money that these companies invest and that these landowners and other persons that are directly affected invest into this economy. When you're investing those kinds of dollars, you want to make sure that you have the stability. Then if you are going to be going through a reconsideration, if somebody is going to be looking at your licence, you have the ability to stand up and have input into that process rather than just sitting back and getting told by a regulator what's going to happen.

Any time that I've been involved in a process, I've wanted to have input into it. I've gone to numerous policy delegations, policy AGMs. To just sit back and spectate, it does nothing. You have no ability to sway arguments. You have no ability to have any control over your destiny. All of these entities within Alberta – the landowners, the companies, and other Albertans directly affected by these decisions – they want to have control over their destiny. They want to have control over what they're investing in. To be able to have that control, they've got to at least have some input.

Whenever somebody is talking about reconsidering some of the licences that they've been issued – I mean, when I renew my driver's licence, it's not just that there's a date on my driver's licence. The government actually provides me with a sheet of paper that comes in the mail that gives me notice. It gives me 30 days' notice that my driver's licence is about to expire. With that notice I know that I can go in and see the registry agent and renew my driver's licence. Now, if I have any issues when I go in to renew my driver's licence, there is time because I've been given 30 days' time to talk about or to fight whatever might be there.

With this we're just saying that the regulator has the ability to make a change, make the decision, and notify afterwards. There is no opportunity for input. There is no opportunity for notice where a company, a landowner, or a person can have input into this or even know that it's happening. If somebody is going to pull a licence on me, if I have a business licence, I want to know that that licence might be pulled. I don't want to find out afterwards. I want to find out now so that I can either fight to keep the licence or find a way to move my assets so that I'm not going to be caught unable to do business.

I think the same respect should apply to the regulator under the Responsible Energy Development Act. We're talking about Alberta's largest industry. We're talking about the energy industry. We've got to make sure that we respect all players in this: the landowners, the companies, and all Albertans that are affected by the decisions that these regulators make.

I said earlier that ten thousand regulations can cause people to lose all respect for the law. We don't want to see that happen. We want to make sure that they have the ability to have that notice so that if there is a reconsideration, they may be able to present that evidence to the regulator before the reconsideration is complete, not afterwards, not having to fight to reapply.

It just doesn't make sense. I don't understand why anybody would oppose this. This is just common sense. It's good faith. I mean, we put these things forward in good faith. There are no partisan politics behind these. We are here doing the job asked of us, and we're doing this in good faith. We're putting forward amendments like these that are, I think, very reasonable, and we're doing this because we want to see this bill be passed. We want to see this bill be a strong, strong act and that this new regulator is created and created right. By passing this amendment, I believe we are just one step closer to making this a stronger act.

I'd like to thank you very much for your time here this evening and hearing me out on this.

The Chair: Other speakers? The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. Section 42 and section 43 give the regulator the power to reconsider its own decisions at any time and for any reason. There must be some restraints on this reconsideration power. Requiring notification of and a hearing with affected persons, whether landowners, companies, or others, is not onerous when the regulator is changing a decision. It ensures transparency.

It is about due process, Mr. Chairman. This, again, is about respect for all parties concerned, whether you are an energy company, a landowner, or anyone else involved. It's about huge investments that energy companies may make, huge amounts of money being tied up while this process takes place. This bill is about speeding up the process, not slowing it down, is it not? It's about streamlining our whole process.

I imagine myself as a landowner or an owner of an energy company that has got considerable investment in your livelihood, and having that investment put on hold is going to cost an awful lot of money until this is resolved. As was mentioned, we can do that with our drivers' licences, and in any other number of businesses we don't have to put up with this kind of a roadblock to our success.

I'd urge our fellow members to support this amendment and, as I said, help speed up this process, which is the whole purpose of this bill. With that, I'll close, Mr. Chairman, and turn it over to my compatriots.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to speak briefly to this. I just find it quite depressingly interesting that there would even be a piece of legislation tabled that reads: "Subject to the regulations, the Regulator may conduct a reconsideration with or without conducting a hearing." Why would the regulator even consider it in the first place? Why would anybody even consider that the regulator would have any credibility? They could change their mind before or after, during, at any time going on. It's not unlike the people's Soviet republic east of me called Saskatchewan, where a lot of people left that province in the middle of the '30s and '40s. One hon. member of a certain political vent left more recently to come to this fantastic province.

When you read this sort of stuff, it just makes me upset. I think that this sort of thing needs to be changed, and this amendment would work in that regard. I wish to speak in favour of the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to speak to amendment A13?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A13 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:59 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A13 lost]

The Chair: Back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have another amendment to offer, and I will await your direction to make the motion.

The Chair: Okay. We'll circulate the amendment, hon. member, and I'll give you a chance in a few minutes to speak to it.

This amendment, hon. members, will be A14.

Hon. member, you may speak to the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. [interjections] These Tories are very tricky, Mr. Chairman. You always have to be on your guard. Let this be a lesson.

The Chair: Hon. member, it sounded like someone was calling the question. Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: All right. Mr. Chairman, I will move that Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act, be amended by striking out section 21 and substituting the following:

Consultation with aboriginal peoples

21 The Regulator shall ensure adequate consultation occurs with aboriginal peoples in accordance with existing treaty rights.

I move this because the current bill includes a caveat, section 21, that states that the Alberta energy regulator has no jurisdiction to assess the adequacy of Crown consultation with regard to rights associated with aboriginal treaty rights protected under part 2 of the Constitution Act of 1982. The amendment will ensure that the new regulator takes responsibility for ensuring that applicants have adequately consulted aboriginal people according to their current treaty rights.

Currently section 21 of this bill abdicates all responsibility for ensuring adequate consultation with aboriginal peoples by deferring to the Constitution Act of 1982. This is insufficient reasoning due to the fact that the responsibility for the development of energy resources in Alberta falls under provincial jurisdiction, and the regulation of this development will, according to this bill, fall to the single regulator.

The bill as it stands places responsibility with the regulator when it comes to hearings, decisions, and appeals with regard to energy resource activities. It also places the responsibility with the regulator when it comes to communication of decisions, section 33(2). Therefore, it stands to reason that adequate communication and consultation of applications to aboriginal people should be ensured before decisions are made. Alberta's First Nations Consultation Guidelines on Land Management and Resource Development, 2007, states that it "acknowledges a duty to consult with First Nations where Alberta's actions have the potential to adversely impact treaty rights." That's something that this government signed onto, Mr. Chairman. Seemingly, it's been forgotten. The Department of Energy should ensure that the spirit of this commitment is enshrined in Bill 2 despite the regulator not being an official agent of the Crown.

Currently section 21 brusquely shirks its responsibility to engage with aboriginal peoples by deferring to the Constitution Act of 1982. Although this section may be legitimate according to jurisdictional responsibilities, it sends a negative message, in our view, to First Nations communities, who very likely will be affected by many of the decisions of the proposed regulator in this bill. The regulator should therefore take responsibility to ensure that all consultations and communications have taken place when it comes to energy projects defined in Bill 2.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge all hon. members to support this. I think that it makes eminent good sense. Thank you.

10:10

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I look for other speakers to the amendment. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I stand in support of this amendment. I think that if there's one area where we could actually improve the image of Alberta, improve our relationship with First Nations, improve our consultation process and the accommodation process that's supposed to go along with the consultation, it's in the area of aboriginal consultation. There's an opportunity here to strengthen what has been seen both provincially and beyond the province, even internationally, as being a travesty: the way that we in this province allow First Nations to have token consultations in a lot of these energy developments, often after the forest has been cleared, as we discovered a couple of years ago in a line that was seismic and cleared without the awareness of the First Nations band.

There's an opportunity here to strengthen, I guess, and enhance and actually show the world and show our First Nations people that we are going to go the next step, that we are going to actually encourage and require our regulators here to not only assist with and facilitate consultations but ensure that they are communicated well and that there is a genuine effort, a visible effort, a way of communicating how the accommodation is going to happen with First Nations issues. I think it will be a real lost opportunity if we don't step up as a province and really show some leadership in this area, which has been such a thorn in our side and such a challenge, I guess, to our credibility as a province, that we're serious about First Nations issues.

I hope other members will see the opportunity here. It may not be essential, but it is an opportunity to really show both our First Nations and the rest of the world that we're going to lead, not drag our feet in terms of consultations and accommodation of First Nations' interests. We're going to bend over backwards and ensure that we have a strong agenda that is not going to exploit, that is not going to take advantage of the lack of technical support in First Nations, the lack of manpower, the lack of understanding in some cases, and the distance from, you know, good technical support or the distance in some cases from some of the consultations that would occur. Let's show leadership on this particular and very sensitive issue.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. I encourage all others to at least get into this debate. This is an important issue for Alberta.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The issue of aboriginal people is quite interesting. We're talking about a bill here for streamlining the approval process and the extraction process. There was an article written – I wish I had it in front of me; I just read it last week – that talked about First Nations, Métis, and Inuit. It went looking throughout northern and western Alberta at issues dealing with aboriginal peoples and the development of energy resources. The thing that was dominant in that article was that the lack of consultation and the lack of respect for aboriginal people were two things that caused more problems than not.

I have to tell you that putting the onus on the regulator just to ensure that they consult according to existing treaty rights – I cannot speak for, you know, First Nations people on the various treaties and what treaty sections they have, but I will tell you this. The relationships I have with various bands has always been around the issue of their treaty. When I dealt with the Montana band in Hobbema – I have a relationship with a number of the members of that band – their treaty rights were paramount. I met with the O'Chiese, which are new to me because they're new in my riding; my riding changed in the last election.

I sat down with the O'Chiese band, and I spoke with the elders. Again, in that same conversation the thing that stands out to them most is their treaty rights. That is something that they are just tremendously cognizant of. It was interesting because one of the suggestions to me was: did I read the treaty? That's what they go by.

I don't see where this amendment changes a whole lot. I don't see where it puts a great onus upon any company or even the regulator itself. It just makes sure that the mandate is there, that we are cognizant of the treaty rights. That, to me, is a public relations gain as much as it is the idea of respecting individual First Nations and aboriginal people, the Inuit, and the Métis. This is what we've talked about time and time and time again.

I know one of the biggest problems we have is not so much on the reserves but what we refer to as traditional lands. That's that grey area. Various bands will tell you that that is not a grey area. That is their traditional lands. How do we deal with this? The right way to start down the path to deal with it correctly is to respect their existing treaty rights. All this is saying is that when the consultation occurs, "the Regulator shall ensure adequate consultation . . . in accordance with existing treaty rights." That, to me, is not something that's going to get in the way so much of the seamless approval process; it's something that's going to enhance it. In the end if we do not show respect or if it's assumed to be disrespectful, we're going to have a problem in doing the things that we want to do to develop these resources.

These treaties now have been in place. The experts generally on the treaties are not so much the white man as they are the aboriginal peoples. They are the experts. I'm not sure how many people here have read treaties. I found out there's not too many people that do. Their existing treaty rights are paramount, and they're fundamental to our relationship in dealing with these different bands. Being disrespectful about them is not helpful in the matter. This is important to them. It's important to their independence. What we're trying to do is create an energy regulator that is a one-stop-shop process to get these projects approved and up and working. To be respectful of First Nations, to be respectful of aboriginal people is a right step in that direction.

The way the existing law is read puts it all on federal. I'm not so sure, considering that this is a provincial regulator, that the provincial regulator does not play a role in this. We're not asking the provincial regulator to overstep the boundaries. What we're saying is that they respect in accordance with existing treaty rights. That consultation is something that has to be done every day in a number of areas.

I will tell you that right now in my riding alone there is consultation going on with these bands dealing with their own economic independence on a number of different issues. Sometimes they wish the consultation would go better. I think that's the key word. They want the consultations to go better. This is putting the onus on the regulator to make sure that they understand that and that they take that into consideration. They're only being asked to respect the existing treaty rights. It's not about adding anything more. It's about just putting respect into the legislation.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Associate Minister for Services for Persons with Disabilities.

10:20

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of brief comments, and I certainly stand to be corrected by the hon. minister. With respect to the gentleman opposite I think you may be reading the situation backwards, exactly opposite to what your intent is here, and I'd bet you that we have the same intent. The Crown has a duty to consult. By virtue of the Transfer of Natural Resources Act that duty falls upon the province. The province cannot abdicate or delegate that responsibility. Well, we can delegate, but we don't give up our responsibility to do it. We cannot abdicate our responsibility, and I would suggest that your amendment suggests we do exactly that, to make the regulator responsible to ensure adequate consultation. That is our duty under the Constitution, and we cannot abdicate that.

I further suggest that the very fastest way to make the aboriginal community, the First Nations, very upset with us is an attempt by the government to abdicate that responsibility. We retain it. We know we retain it, and that's why we're clarifying that the regulator does not retain it. That is the intent of this clause.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, if I could ask the hon. minister how exactly consultation takes place when decisions are made by the regulator. Those decisions in some cases will affect aboriginal rights, First Nations rights. How, then, do those rights and that consultation take place when the regulator is making decisions?

Mr. Oberle: I'm sure the member would be aware that through the Minister of Aboriginal Relations we have an ongoing, constantly revisited consultation policy with the aboriginal communities. They have input, and we have input. Those matters are negotiated, and there's a protocol established on how we consult with First Nations. We've always done that. On all projects we consult with First Nations. That's a constitutional duty. That's nothing, as I said, that we could abdicate. We do it, we continue to do it, and the manner of our doing that is subject to continual negotiations between our government and those governments. That's kind of the point. They're looking for government-to-government negotiations. That's what they have in establishing the aboriginal consultation policies that we have.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. I appreciate that clarification. It's reassuring. As the MLA for the largest First Nations reservation in Canada I've had consultations myself with Chief Weaselhead and the band council. They do want and need that respect. They are noble people, as you all know, and have a proud heritage. They want to have a say in decisions that affect them, so it's important that we are working closely with them and consulting them on anything that impacts them as a people and their own treaty lands. I think that this amendment helps make that happen. It helps ensure that it will. With the regulator being an agent of the government, I think it's useful to include this. I believe that the chief and the band would like to make that point with you.

The Chair: Other comments?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A14.

[Motion on amendment A14 lost]

The Chair: We'll move on to debate on the bill. I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have another amendment, which I will pass down to the table, and I await your instruction to proceed.

The Chair: Hon. members, for the record this will be amendment A15.

Hon. member, you may proceed to speak to your amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think this is an excellent amendment. I would recommend it strongly to all hon. members. I think it improves the act immeasurably and would urge all hon. members to vote for it.

The Chair: Other comments on the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question. Oh, the hon. Member for Airdrie. You've got to be quick.

Mr. Anderson: You've got to be quick. You've got to get going.

The Chair: You've got to be quick, sir. Please.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Well, obviously, this amendment deals with section 101, so, everybody following with their own bill binder at home, please turn to section 101, and we'll figure out what the heck this amendment even says. I just like to know what the heck is going on before we vote on these things. Oh, boy, this is a long bill. Page 74. Good grief. Okay. Yeah. Here we are. The minister of persons with disabilities was bang on. It's 74. I've just got to start listening to you from the start. I should have done that before, too, frankly.

Section 101(12).

Section 36 is amended

- (a) in subsection (1)(a) by striking out "and the Department of Environment";
- (b) in subsections (1) to (3) by striking out "Board" wherever it occurs and substituting "Regulator"

It appears here that they want to strike out clause (a), which is "and the Department of Environment." I guess I'd just like a little bit more explanation from the member bringing the amendment as to why this is important. I didn't get it the first time, so if you could explain this. I'm seeing it. I want to believe you. I just want a little more explanation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you so very, very much for that. Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that there are very sound reasons behind this amendment. I'm sure if he reads the bill carefully and the amendment, being a lawyer, it will become clear to him, as it is to me, the value of this amendment, which he should vote for.

The Chair: It would seem that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre could offer some clarity. Maybe not. Maybe the Member for Strathmore-Brooks could offer some clarity.

Mr. Hale: I know what it is, Mr. Chair.

36(1) When a substance escapes from a pipeline and it appears to the Board that the substance may not otherwise be contained and cleaned up forthwith, the Board may

- (a) direct the pipeline operator or licensee, or those pipeline operators or licensees who in the opinion of the Board could be responsible for a pipeline from which the substance escaped, to take any steps that the Board considers necessary to contain and clean up, to the satisfaction of the Board . . .

This is what he wants to scratch: "and the Department of Environment."

. . . the substance that has escaped and to prevent further escape of the substance.

It sounds to me like you just want to get the ministry of environment out of any . . . [interjections] I have the Pipeline Act. It looks to me like section 101 is the Pipeline Act, correct?

The Chair: Through the chair.

Mr. Hale: Sorry.

In here it talks about the Pipeline Act, and your amendment says in section 101(12) that section 36 is amended in subsection 1(a) by striking out “and the Department of Environment.” You want to put that back in. You guys are taking it out, so the department of environment doesn’t have anything to do. You want to put the department of environment back . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, if we can have one conversation through the chair, I’d appreciate that.

Thank you.

Mr. Hale: I really don’t have any other comments than that. Just to kind of clarify it because there seemed to be some confusion there with the member’s amendment that he was putting forward. I don’t know if that helped at all or not, but it’s dealing the Pipeline Act and with the ministry of environment if there’s a spill.

The Chair: Are there any other clarifications that might be offered before we call the question?

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Of course I’m going to get up. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will tell you it is just unnecessary, and that’s why it’s being struck. It should go to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development or to the Department of Energy, one or the other. But the reality is . . .

An Hon. Member: It’s garbage.

Mr. Anglin: Well, it isn’t garbage – well, it is garbage. It’s in the law at the moment, but it means nothing.

That’s why it’s being struck. Does it need to be in there? Not really. Should it be struck? Sure. It should be replaced, and I’ll let the hon. members figure out how they want to fix their bill and the language on that.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other offerings?

I’ll call the question, then, on amendment A15.

[Motion on amendment A15 lost]

The Chair: We will move to continue further debate on the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: I have more.

The Chair: Do you wish to offer another amendment, hon. member?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I do.

The Chair: Please proceed. Hon. members, for the record this will be amendment A16.

Hon. member, you may speak to the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 2, the Responsibility Energy Development Act, be amended as follows: (a) in section 86(13), in the proposed section 49, by striking out subsection (2); (b) in section 91(6), in the proposed section 19, by striking out subsection (2); (c) in section 97(29), in the proposed section 110, by striking out subsection (2); (d) in section 99(11), in the proposed section 26, by striking out subsection (2); (e) in section 101(16), in the proposed section 54, by striking out subsection (2).

Now, Mr. Chairman, in speaking to this, the amendment ensures that the increases in penalties under the Coal Conservation Act are actually enforced by the regulator in all cases where an offence has been proven. The government has been touting this bill by referring to the increase in upper limits to fines that can be leveled against corporations and individuals who contravene agreements with the regulator. The section that we are amending currently gives the regulator much too broad an avenue for interpretation of what offences should be fined.

Without absolute offence fines, which can range from lower to upper limits, corporations or individuals may take liberties with the agreement signed with the regulator. Without absolute offence fines that must be levied by the regulator, the regulator will not be inclined to levy fines in cases where an individual or company may have access to strong legal resources. The administration and legal costs associated with distinguishing between offences that are fined and offences that are not is unnecessary. Instead, the regulator should determine in advance the guidelines that determine the amount of a fine associated with a particular offence and commit to those guidelines, Mr. Chairman.

That is the purpose of this amendment.

The Chair: Are there any other speakers on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A16 lost]

The Chair: We’re back to the bill. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, you have an amendment?

Mr. Hale: Yes, I do, Mr. Chair, and I have the copies.

The Chair: Please send that to the table. Thank you.

This amendment will be A17, hon. members.

Hon. member, you may speak to amendment A17.

10:40

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The amendment that I am proposing amends section 5 in subsection (1) by striking out “2” and substituting “4” and (b) by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) Members appointed to the board of directors of the Regulator shall include at least

- (a) one individual with demonstrable expertise in property rights,
- (b) one individual with demonstrable expertise in environmental conservation, and
- (c) two individuals with demonstrable expertise in the energy industry, each in different sectors of the industry.

Mr. Hancock: Can they all do the same kind of thing like Joe?

Mr. Hale: Well, no, because it went from two to four, so you’d have to clone Joe into four.

This amendment deals with the makeup of the board, obviously. I know we have put forward a similar amendment dealing with the expertise of the transition committee; this one deals with the board. I know that the hon. Energy minister has mentioned that they want to have experts with corporate business experience to run this, not necessarily industry experts. I’m pretty sure that we could find in the province of Alberta experts in all of these fields that have very expansive business sense. Many of the oil companies are run by just tremendous individuals that could be put on this board of the regulator. The same goes for the environment. I mean, there are many, many people involved in the environment, that have a vast knowledge of the environment, that know how to run a business. Same as with landowners, you know, they all run businesses. Many, many of them are very, very successful and run it as a business.

I think we really need to look at the makeup of the board. We need to ensure that all aspects of Alberta that are affected by this bill have representatives that can make decisions with regard to how this bill operates. You know, we mentioned in here two individuals with expertise in the energy industry, in different sectors of the industry, specifically so that someone with a vast knowledge of the oil sands can be on the board, someone with a vast knowledge of conventional oil and shallow gas, that knows how to deal with those plays can be on this board, so they can bring their knowledge forth.

This allows for openness, transparency, accountability. If this board is picked through an open process – and I know the hon. Energy minister has stated before that there will be notices sent out, you know, they'll take in applications. But, ultimately, it comes down to his decision.

We would just like to see these different sectors of this energy industry, different sectors of Alberta that are involved in this bill be allowed to be on this board. You know, there are so many great people in this province of Alberta that have vast knowledge in all of these sectors, that know how to run a business, that will do very well running this business. I think it's something that needs to be looked at. What better wealth of knowledge, dealing with the issues in this bill . . . [interjections] It's not that funny, is it? This is serious business. We're talking about the future of Alberta. You can fill me in later.

I'm expecting some robust discussion again with the makeup of this board, and I hope you guys will take into consideration the makeup of the board and really think deep and hard on what's best for Alberta and, ultimately, best for Albertans and taxpayers and us as a government. You know, if we can put this amendment in, we can say: "Hey, look. We did it right. We did what's best for Albertans." I feel that putting this amendment in will help achieve that and it will help achieve the theory of this bill, which is to do what's right for the energy industry, to do what's right for all Albertans, the landowners, the environment.

You know, we've been saying it over and over again. We support the theory of this bill, but there are some changes that need to be made, and this is one of the significant changes because these are the people that will be running this regulator. It's very, very critical to have the right people in place, to have the right people that know the industries.

I hope you will consider this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to get up and debate this particular amendment. You know, I appreciate what the hon. member and what the Wildrose caucus is trying to do here. They're trying to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear because they find themselves in a bit of a jam here. This bill is fundamentally going to harm the interests of property owners in this province, and it's going to do that for a single reason, which is also the basis of the bill, which is to eliminate dual oversight of oil and gas operations in this province and to remove environmental oversight of those operations, which is fundamentally what it is that represents the attack on landowners' rights because they will no longer have protection. You cannot protect the rights of landowners if you cannot protect their land. This is the fundamental flaw of the bill and the reason why you can't have it both ways.

Those people on the other side long ago decided that when it came to the difference between protecting rural people and their property rights and the oil and gas industry, they know exactly what side they're on. They know where their bread is buttered. They know who finances their political parties and the major economic interest that they support.

We had Bill 50, we had Bill 19, we had all of those bills, and the Wildrose made great hay out of it when they were a small caucus leading up to the last election. But now the Wildrose needs to make a choice. The Wildrose needs to decide which of those masters they're going to serve because you cannot do both. You can try these amendments all you like, and you can put somebody on there with property rights, but when you take away environmental oversight of the oil and gas industry, you open up the property owners of this province to devastating attack. You cannot fundamentally deal with it except to vote against it.

You know, I think there are a lot of people, a lot of rural people, a lot of property owners that are pretty much up in arms over this bill. I don't think they're going to judge the response of the Wildrose as adequate to their needs. Certainly, the response is quite different than the case before the election, when all the organizing took place around Bill 50 and Bill 19 and so on.

I want to be very, very clear on this. I do not believe that even if the Tories pass these amendments, which, of course, they're not going to do, putting one individual with demonstrable expertise in property rights is going to fix the fundamental flaw of this bill. This is a bill that gives the oil and gas industry a free ticket to go pretty much anywhere they want and do anything they want on anybody's property because the basic protection of environmental protection is being stripped away. As long as that's happening, this bill will represent an attack on property rights. I can assure you that if the Wildrose won't stand against Bill 2, the NDP will.

Mr. Anderson: Well, that was a passionate speech by the passionate leader of the NDP caucus.

You know, what's great about our party is that we actually do believe that the secret to the success of Alberta is that the rights of landowners and the need to develop our energy is not a mutually exclusive interest. In fact, we feel that by industry supporting the rights of landowners and landowners supporting the need to develop the resources on their lands, all Albertans benefit in this province. That's what makes our province unique, I think. It's that we feel that those interests are not mutually exclusive at all. In fact, we think that they build on each other. We think that that is critical.

What we do think, though, and where I want to make it clear that we have agreement with the NDP is that this bill is not acceptable as currently written at all. This amendment would improve the bill, but the flaws in the bill are absolutely such that it's going to make it impossible to support this bill. We feel this bill as currently written is terrible for landowners. It doesn't take into account environmental concerns. It doesn't allow landowners to have a right of appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board, and that's necessary if we're going to develop our resources in a responsible way. We think that taking those rights away from landowners is a mistake.

We also think that this bill is not going to help industry that much anyway because it does not set clear timelines and timetables for giving the answer of yes, no, or yes with caveats.

As I said earlier, oil and gas companies want the answer. We understand that sometimes the answer is going to be no. They understand that sometimes the answer is going to be no if they haven't done their homework or if it's not a project that's going to be environmentally responsible or responsible to landowners' rights and so forth. But the point is that they need to know. They need to know yes, no, or yes with qualifications, and they need to know it within, probably, a period of about six months so that they can make the decisions that they need to make and move on.

This bill does not, I think, guarantee industry what it needs, which is certainty within the regulatory process. I think that it's window dressing. I think it's a rushed attempt to create a pro-energy bill that would be helpful to the energy sector, but I don't think it accomplishes that at all.

However, it also does a double bad in that it hurts the rights of landowners even further than they've already been injured. There's no way one can look at this bill and see the processes, the rights of landowners that have been taken out of this bill and say that this is a pro landowner, pro property rights bill. It just simply is not. It does not protect the rights of landowners sufficiently. It does not streamline the process and guarantee industry an efficient and streamlined process that's going to be shorter than the regulatory gridlock they face right now. It does not effectively protect the environment.

What's so frustrating about this whole process is that this bill, if we had done it properly, if we had referred it, taken the work that the Minister of Environment and SRD had done on it, which was good work, good preconsultation, very good work, absolutely, minister – the work that she had done was a good start to things. That draft that had been circulated in first reading, if we had then put it to a committee where we could have brought in legal experts, environmental experts, property rights experts, folks from the industry – we could have brought them in. We could have had a discussion, and we could have come up with a bill that was pro industry, that respected the rights of landowners, and that respected our need to develop in an environmentally sustainable way. We could have done it.

Unfortunately, we have a mess before us, and the government has shown total unwillingness to deal with it. They could have hit this out of the park. It could have been a home run. Instead it's a foul ball. That's right. It's a foul ball. Since the NHL is still on strike, we're not going to use NHL hockey metaphors out of protest in this party. Because the NHL is not on, we're going to use nothing but baseball metaphors until the NHL is back on. So no more foul balls from this government. That's it.

I'm sure the NDP would like to claim the mantle of protecting property rights, wrestle it from the Wildrose, but we're willing to share. That's the thing. We're willing to share that with anybody, with the government, in fact. We're willing to share that.

Mr. Mason: We did it before you even existed.

Mr. Anderson: That's right.

The Chair: Hon. members, through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: Anyway, we're happy to work with any party on protecting landowner rights, making the regulatory process more efficient for energy, and protecting our environmental responsibilities, but this bill does none of those things.

Therefore, I think this is a fantastic amendment, one that shows those three balancing interests. Members to this board of directors of the regulator should include at least

- (a) one individual with demonstrable expertise in property rights,

- (b) one individual with demonstrable expertise in environmental conservation, and
- (c) two individuals with demonstrable expertise in the energy industry, each in different sectors of the industry.

I think that's a very good compromise. That would make sure that this board is robustly hearing all of the interests at stake here: environment, landowner rights, industry. They would make decisions that were well thought out, that were for the good of this province, instead of what I have a feeling might become just another political board appointed generally, a lot of times anyway, out of patronage or at least opens up that danger.

There have obviously been good folks that have served on those regulatory boards in the past, but there have also been many political appointees. This makes sure that if they're going to do political appointees, they at least have some experience in the areas that matter. Hopefully, the government will take that responsibility seriously.

So I hope people will absolutely support this amendment. It's a great amendment, hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will actually disagree with my own House leader. It's not great. It's not fantastic. It is a last-ditch attempt to try to protect property rights. It would be great, it would be fantastic if it were true that property rights and the public interest were in this and the environment was protected, but that's all missing in the bill.

I will tell you this. It is interesting because I know that the hon. minister wants to have this umbrella of experience on the regulator. I will tell you from first-hand experience that so do interveners when they go to hearings. As I mentioned, I think, the other day when we were discussing something about board panel make-ups, we had asked in 2006 that when we were dealing with a farming issue, there be at least one person on the board panel who had agricultural experience. What they gave us was a board member whose only agricultural experience was getting arrested for a grow op in 1969. The standard comment at that meeting was that at least that person dealt in a cash crop.

But we missed the opportunity here. It was important to all those farmers in that hearing that somebody understood what their concerns were. That's so important. Here we are putting together a regulator with expanded powers, more so than ever before, and the purpose is to try to streamline. We do need the expertise that is as expansive as the bill is intended to be, so that is important, putting it into legislation. If the minister would like to respond: how large should it be? I think we put a figure down here of four. The bill actually had two originally. What is appropriate? Looking at four seems acceptable to me. It could be six. This is complicated in many ways. But to ask for a spread of experience, then it seems likely that we would raise that number from two to four, so we would get that. I would even go further, take it to six, if that was something that the minister wanted to deal with.

Dealing with the amendment the way it's written, we would expand at least to four members and have this experience laid out in legislation so that we don't get a grow op operator listed as having agricultural experience. We take it seriously.

Mr. Denis: We're working on that.

Mr. Anglin: You're working on that. That's right. You're Justice, and you have access to that information, too.

It is, I think, paramount to the confidence of the public to create that trust that we talk about creating, that this type of experience be mandated to be represented in the regulator. When these complex issues are brought forward – and they are complex, very much so – at least there are people with certain expertise represented who can understand without going through a massive learning curve. [interjections] Okay. But they would know, and they could help and assist the board process.

How else are we going to deal with this? I know when we spoke with the minister both in private – and I believe here, and I'll stand corrected if he didn't – the minister stated that he would like this umbrella of experience, that he would be in favour of this. I don't understand why we would agree in principle that this is what we would want but not put it in legislation. I don't see where the harm is in getting it in writing.

With the experience that I've had in front of boards multiple times, I think if we had a broad umbrella of experience, some of the problems that we experienced might not have happened. That's theoretical. I mean, we don't know that. But having experts in different aspects of this discipline – and this is the discipline of streamlining the process – I think is important not just in the sense of dealing with the public or dealing with even industry but dealing with making sure the process works effectively. I think this is what the hon. member is intending to do from what our discussions were. Why wouldn't we put it in writing in the legislation to make sure it guides us when we appoint these regulators and we create the board? I think that's really important.

Moving forward, this amendment doesn't inhibit or restrict or impede the process of developing our resources. What it does is grease the skids so this thing can happen seamlessly, with the knowledge in place that would allow this to happen. All it is is a mandate to make sure that we do it, that we see this board properly and have that experience in place so that it is guided properly. This is an important task not just for the board but for the province. I know the hon. member will be looking for the most experienced people and the most credible people to try to make this work, but to mandate that we have this individual expertise represented I think is going to complement the system that much more.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe this amendment is fundamentally a key component to the success of the board and therefore the bill itself. In my 11 years as a municipal politician I served on a number of provincial boards starting with the AUMA board, which a number of the members in the House here were also a part of. I'll put a plug in for the AUMA, saying that without AUMA experience many of us probably wouldn't be here. What was key to the AUMA board's success was the diversity that that board encompassed, and that was representation from every size of urban municipality in the province, including summer villages right up to the cities of Calgary and Edmonton. That's what made that board and makes that board today a success.

We also in that time on AUMA established AMSC, the Alberta Municipal Services Corporation. It was part and parcel of that. Again, when we did that, we looked for outside experience to come to our board and help guide us through that process. Those were lawyers, accountants, businesspeople that gave us what we needed to make that board a success.

Carrying that theme right through, the Municipal Affairs minister will attest to the success of the Safety Codes Council, that I served on for, I think, seven years or something to that effect. Again, we brought together a diverse group of individuals in all aspects of the building trades: lawyers, accountants, builders, and so on. Today that new board that was formed is a huge success.

I sat on the Beverage Container Management Board. Again, we had representation from all of the fields that that would encompass: pop, beer, milk cartons, and so on. We had all of those people at the table, and that's what made that a success.

So if you delete the expertise that we're recommending here from that board for that regulator, I can't see it helping it at all. It can only add to the effectiveness of that regulator if we have those people sitting at the table helping make these decisions.

I would urge we accept this amendment. It can't hurt. It can only help the whole process.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak in favour of this amendment. We saw something similar to this a couple of weeks ago in a subamendment that the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks brought forward. It made sense then. It makes sense now, I think, even more so today than it did then.

Again, the name of the bill is the Responsible Energy Development Act. If the intent of this is to streamline a process, be responsible, and have these three parties find a way to make energy development in this province work in the future and be streamlined, then the best way to do that is clearly outlined in this amendment. You know, the reasons for it have been discussed. Obviously, we need to take care of responsibly developing the resource that our province is funded by, we obviously need to take care of the environmental aspect when developing that resource, and we obviously need to be aware of landowner rights as we're doing this.

Again, there are flaws in this bill, but having this written into the legislation and not just added as a regulation after the fact on the hon. minister's word that that would happen and that the intent of this amendment would then follow through as they were choosing the board: that's all well and good for today. Maybe that's all and good for 12 months from today. But this act is going to be in place for four, eight, 10, however many years it will be around for. So having this in the legislation ensures that moving forward, that board composition always has the core components to ensure that decisions are being made with input from the three major components. You know, I look at it as sort of like a triangle trying to balance on a ball. If it tips too far in one of those three directions, it's not responsible energy development.

So having this in the legislation just simply makes sense, and I do look forward to hearing the minister's reasons as to whether or not it will be accepted or if they would like to further discuss this. But, again, I think if the intent of this act and the intent of Bill 2 is to move forward and ensure that we are developing our resources properly, with a single regulator that streamlines the process and is still aware of the environmental side, the landowner side, and well aware of industry, this is definitely a key component to it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I may be using harsh words going forward here, but I feel I'm capable. Absolute power corrupts absolutely, and I don't understand what the level of fear is that's being propagated that we wouldn't allow this board or these representatives to be elected. I have an hon. member who has spoken against me on that, and I understand his opinion, but we have a new opportunity here to make some serious changes. This is called the Responsible Energy Development Act. It's going to be historical for the province, and I understand the want and the willingness of the government to come forward with a streamlined regulation.

On our side of the House we understand that, and we are wanting the same thing. I don't understand why this government has a fear to want to even come forward or accept an amendment where we would ask for people who have demonstrable expertise. We were all chosen here by the people of our constituencies based on democracy, and I don't understand why this government is hesitant to bring this sort of thing forward. Is it based on fear? What's the motive here?

In that regard, I would speak in favour of at least some movement towards accountability to the people that this act is designed to serve. I speak in favour of the amendment.

11:10

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. I'll be as brief as I can. I appreciate the amendment, and I compliment the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I think it's an excellent amendment. It provides the regulator with people who will be resources to him or her, and you can never surround yourself with too many good people.

It's specific. It removes arbitrariness, whimsy, or partisanship in the selection of this board, so it passes that test of transparency and accountability, and I think that's a terrific thing. It sends a message to those who are concerned with some of the omissions in the act and to some people who feel threatened because of that. I suspect that some of them are your constituents, too, if you have the courage to speak for them.

One of the sharpest administrators, human resource people that I know has identified six characteristics that every good organization will look for in its people, and he's had tremendous success in creating highly efficient and effective teams that have taken on tasks that are world class. He has recently been identified and complimented for his accomplishments as being world class and is consulting with businesses in Asia, Japan in particular. I think that speaks to his qualifications.

He identifies six things that we ought to look for in people that we want to surround ourselves with when we're trying to create effective teams. And that's what we want. We want an effective team of people that will work with our regulator to make this Responsible Energy Development Act that streamlined process that will accelerate approvals and restore confidence in our province and attract investment back to it at the same time as it reassures our property owners that their rights are going to be protected. This amendment addresses that with the composition that it suggests would be ideal, and I submit to you that it is ideal.

Here are the six characteristics that we look for, in order. Number one, integrity. Nothing is more important than being trustworthy, reliable, dependable, truthful. That's the characteristic that we look for first in anybody that we want to work with us to help us accomplish good tasks.

The second thing is that they need to have motivation. They'll be self-motivated. They'll have the motivation to work towards the task without having to be prodded unnecessarily or nagged.

The third thing we look for is capacity. That's the ability to learn, to develop the skills that they'll need to be effective in this job.

Understanding: understanding of the demands of industry, understanding of the demands of the property owners and their rights, understanding the environmental needs and concerns as has been so well articulated tonight by the hon. Member for Airdrie.

We want that person to have knowledge, so formal training and instruction of some kind or another as well as experience.

Now, experience is the sixth qualification in order of importance because the last thing we would want would be to put that first and have somebody who was not honest or didn't have integrity but was highly motivated and intelligent and had capacity and understanding but didn't have integrity. That's a disaster.

Now, the only reasons that I can think of for the government to reject this amendment would be, number one, that you've got a hidden patronage agenda. You want to stack this board in some way or another. The second thing might be simply fear of having to acknowledge that good ideas can come from other sources than yourselves.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to briefly comment. I think that this amendment is unnecessarily prescriptive. It's restrictive. The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills mentioned the AUMA and a number of other boards which he served on in which he found that there was a diversity of opinion and a diversity of backgrounds and whatnot. What we're talking about here is restricting that certain expertise to certain demonstrable areas, property rights, environmental conservation.

I would suggest that there is a diversity when you appoint someone to a board depending upon what their background is and a lot of skills. There may be lots of expertise which is not listed there. I'll give you a couple of examples: the experience in conflict resolution, the experience in dealing in quasi-judicial tribunals. Perhaps somebody has administrative skills that they could bring to a board of directors like that. To have it unnecessarily prescriptive, where you have to fill a little box with a certain type of person, I think just goes far beyond what is required to get a proper adjudication. What we're trying to do here is get an impartial expertise, a board that can make proper decisions and be a quasi-judicial tribunal. I just don't see where putting people into little boxes achieves that end.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, what a pleasure it is to rise this evening and speak in favour of an amendment that was put forward by my friend and colleague from Strathmore-Brooks. I'm looking at the amendment here and the changes that it proposes to make. I'm going to read here 5(1): "There shall be a board of directors of the Regulator consisting of a chair and at least 2 other members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council." I mean, already I'm seeing a compromise here in this proposed amendment. We're looking at increasing the number of people that the Lieutenant Governor in Council could appoint to this panel. As well, we're not asking for it to come back to the Legislature. We're looking at an amendment where we want the Lieutenant Governor in Council to actually make these appointments.

Now, what we also want to add here, and I'm going to start from the bottom: "two individuals with demonstrable expertise in the energy [sector], each in different sectors of the industry." I mean, I don't see how this could be an issue. We definitely want to see people making decisions on the energy industry who do have expertise in the energy industry. Why would we want somebody from the health care system being appointed to a board that develops the energy of the province? I just don't understand the logic in that. By prescribing this in the legislation, we're actually showing that we do care that we have expertise on this panel.

Again, "one individual with demonstrable expertise in environmental conservation." I mean, I want to make sure that my children can enjoy the environment here in this province. When we're developing the energy industry, which is developing our resources coming out of the province and out of the ground, I want to make sure that there is no damage happening to the environment or that it is mitigated so that future generations can enjoy the pristine environments in this province.

Now we get to the last one here, and the last one is probably my favourite subject, property rights: "one individual with demonstrable expertise in property rights." Well, friends, property rights are the basis of the individual freedom and economic security of this province. I mean, this is something that we need to protect. Without private property rights we lose the ability for wealth creation. What happens when those property rights are gone? Wealth creation stagnates or even declines. We don't want to see this in this country. We don't want to see this in this province. We want to see the province of Alberta continue to drive the economy here in Canada.

When we talk about property rights, there are also two threats to property and property rights: thieves and government. What's really interesting is that one was created to stop the other or protect us from the other. Society has been plagued by governments that have been predatory. We've seen it with Bill 36, Bill 24, Bill 19, and Bill 50. We end up with the same results as the societies plagued with thieves: loss of property, loss of property rights.

Let's reverse that. Let's reverse that right now. We can reverse that with this just by placing one individual on that board that has some demonstrable expertise on what property rights mean. I mean, we don't need to go out and have a conversation with all Albertans to find out what property rights mean to them, but we definitely need somebody who understands exactly how property rights affect the province, affect Albertans when they start discussing companies entering somebody's property to extract the resource from underneath it, which belong to Albertans, so their property.

Again, we have the opportunity to stand up here today with this good common-sense amendment to make sure that not only are property rights covered off but that environmental conservation is covered off and, as well, the needs of the industry are covered off.

I mean, I agree with the intent of this bill. The intent of the bill is to streamline this, but in streamlining it, we've got to make sure that all parties – and I'll reiterate that: all parties – have the ability to come to the table on this. Now, with only three members, a chair and two others, we don't know exactly what we're going to get, but by asking for it and placing it in legislation, we know what we're going to get each and every time a new member comes on that board.

I would submit to you that this is a common-sense amendment to a piece of common-sense legislation. I have to commend you on bringing forward Bill 2 because it is common sense that we streamline regulation. I want to see this happen, but I want to see this happen in a way that benefits all Albertans. I believe that this amendment is another amendment in good faith that will benefit all Albertans. It will benefit our industries, and it will benefit future generations.

I can't understand why anybody would stand up and oppose this. I mean, there's nothing here that, again, attacks anything that anybody said here this evening. This is here to strengthen the province. This amendment is to strengthen the province, not to weaken it. We stand here in good faith. We come here in good faith looking for your support to help fix just a small oversight, maybe, to make sure that we're all working in the same direction and that we have the right intent with this bill.

Now, like I said, we want to move forward with this. We want to make sure that Albertans are protected. I believe that with this amendment we can protect all Albertans, future generations, our industry, and our environment, just by making this simple amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. You know, I'm compelled to just make a few comments. Governments don't attack or take away property rights just because they're governments, just because there's something about them that makes them. It's because they represent interests. When this government brought in Bill 19 and Bill 50 and so on, they were representing the interests of large energy companies against the rights of small property owners, and they trampled on those rights not just for fun but because they had some specific goals in place. They wanted to be able to put power lines in, and they wanted to be able to put pipelines in, and they wanted to be able to put other large energy-related infrastructure in with a minimum of nuisance and fuss from the people who might be affected by it.

The single regulator approach that is at the core of this bill is designed to assist the energy industry to accomplish the very same goals in a different way. That is why I think the landowners in this province are rising up against the bill. You know, in terms of the approach here – one individual with demonstrable expertise in property rights, another in environmental conservation, and two people with demonstrable expertise in the energy industry – it's not going to change the fundamental nature of what's happening here in this bill.

You know, you can put somebody on there from the Fraser Institute for all I care, and you can balance it with somebody from Greenpeace. You can put on somebody from CNOOC, and you can put on someone from Exxon, but it doesn't mean you're going to get good decisions, because they're going to be governed by this legislation and this approach, which is designed – designed – to overturn property rights in the interests of the oil industry, that backs this government.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd actually like to move a subamendment to amendment A17, and I have the requisite number of copies to be passed around.

The Chair: Thank you.

Okay. This amendment, hon. members, will be SA4.

Hon. member, you may speak to the subamendment.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am moving as a subamendment that amendment A17 to Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, be amended in clause (b) by striking out the proposed section 5(1.1) and substituting the following:

(1.1) Members appointed to the board of directors of the Regulator shall include at least:

- (a) one individual with demonstrable expertise in environmental conservation,
- (b) one individual chosen from a list of nominees provided to the Minister by Alberta landowner groups, and
- (c) two individuals chosen from a list of nominees provided to the Minister by energy industry groups.

(1.2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the lists of nominees under subsection (1.1).

(1.3) Subsections (1.1) and (1.2) come into force 12 months after the coming into force of the remainder of this Act.

The reason that we're moving to make a subamendment to this amendment is because stakeholders have told us that a key factor to making this new regulator function properly is to ensure that we have some expertise on the panel. It is important to keep the regulator nimble and reactive to rapid changes in the industry, but some aspects must be written into legislation in order to maintain the integrity of the organization.

The reality of it is that asking for people to be on the board that have a demonstrable expertise in environmental conservation, that a list of nominees be provided to the minister by Alberta landowner groups, and that two individuals be chosen from an additional list of nominees provided to the minister by energy industry groups allows for the public to have input into who's on the board, and it allows for the stakeholders to have input as to who's on the board, but it ultimately still allows the minister the ability to choose whom he feels are the best representatives of Alberta.

That's really the goal here. The goal ultimately is to ensure that we're having a fair and transparent and open process, and by allowing stakeholders and Alberta landowner groups and energy groups all to provide a list to the minister, then the minister can take into account that maybe he does not know every single possible best person for this board, but he actually may be able to be given the opportunity to have a different outlook and ensure that all Albertans are represented and that industry is represented fairly.

The reality of it is that by mandating the backgrounds of the board of directors members, there can be some level of assurance that the right people for the right job are placed on the board of directors without totally hamstringing the cabinet or the regulator's ability to fill the positions. The importance to Albertans is what they want to see as a fair process, and we want to make sure that the person that's on the board is actually doing what they're supposed to do in the best way possible.

Now, I know the hon. member from across the way talked about that we don't want to make it too prescriptive and that that might be restrictive. The amendment clearly says that it "shall include at least," so that leaves the door open for the minister to make changes as he sees fit, and it also leaves the door open for the minister to ensure that it's "at least." It can be more if he chooses to be more fair, but there's a minimum standard required.

Clearly, given this government's track record with appointing people to important positions based more on their loyalty to the PC Party than their qualifications, as we saw with Evan Berger's appointment to a job that didn't exist and with a job description that didn't exist, this ability allows for the government to have an essence of being fair and transparent, which the government clearly touts all the time as their number one priority. The current legislation is very vague about the makeup of this powerful board of directors except to say that the PC cabinet will be appointing a chair and at least two other members.

Now, if you want to ensure fairness to Albertans – and that's what Albertans are telling you – then there are no assurances right now that the members will bring the breadth of experience needed to serve the energy industry and Albertans and landowners and ensure that we have some environmental conservation. If we're going to be open and transparent about it, which we want to do, then we need to make sure that we have that.

Now, an example of how easy this is to do is that the Land Title and Survey Authority Act of B.C. has a board where each of the Law Society of British Columbia, the government, and the Association of B.C. Land Surveyors provides a list of at least three and not more than five nominees for the director, and the director chooses one from these lists. Very easily, it just says:

(1) The board of directors of the Authority is to consist of 11 individuals of whom

(a) 6 are to be appointed from the nominees provided under section 7(1) by stakeholder entities, with 2 directors being appointed out of the nominees provided by each of the 3 stakeholder entities, and

(b) 5 are to be appointed from nominees provided under section 7(2) by stakeholder entities, with one director being appointed out of the nominees provided by each of the 5 stakeholder entities.

Then it goes on to talk about the terms of office and how long a director may be appointed for and what happens when you've served the maximum number of terms. It's not that this has never been done before. It very clearly has been done before, and other organizations are being much more open and transparent than we are being, so there's no reason to say that this can't be done. The system is set up to do it, the layout is already there, and all we have to do is just ensure that it's a fair process. It still leaves the director and the minister the ability to choose from any one of these lists, and these people know exactly who is on the ground and who might be the best person to come forward and protect Albertans as a whole.

The other example is the Arts Board of Saskatchewan. The Lieutenant Governor must appoint a board of nine to 12 where no less than one-third of the members are appointed from a list provided by the arts community. Once again we're seeing the province of Saskatchewan saying clearly that the citizens of Saskatchewan matter, so we're going to be open and transparent with our process, and we're going to make that process very easy to do. Very clearly, in their board of directors under section 14:

(2) Not less than one-third of the members of the board of directors shall be appointed from a list of nominees provided by the arts community.

(3) The list of nominees mentioned in subsection (2) is to be compiled from nominations to the minister provided by the arts community in accordance with the procedures prescribed in the regulations.

Now, these are two examples of what's already being done in other provinces. It's very easily set up, and it allows for this province to literally look at other options and set them up.

I understand. I mean, the members across the way can rip their papers and crumple them up and think they're going to throw everybody off the target, and they're telling Albertans they don't care, and that's fine. That's absolutely fine. If that's how they really want to go about talking about amendments that matter to landowners, to industry, and to average Albertans, if that's the attitude this government has, continue to be like that. That's absolutely fine. It's not going to stop me or this party defending landowners and defending an open and fair and transparent process, which is exactly what our duty and our obligation is to do as legislators. If you want to be a child, you're more than welcome to do that, or you can be an adult and stand here and be respectful and listen to a proper amendment that's coming out.

The minister already has vast powers over the regulator. This amendment allows the minister to continue to have some discretion to choose well-qualified candidates to serve on the board, but they will be able to work alongside people who are suggested by other stakeholders groups. What is the harm in having an open mind and realizing that there might be others out there in the community or out there in the industry or out there as stakeholders who are able to represent Albertans on this board?

The nominating procedure is not set in stone. The minister can still use his or her judgment and decide on a nominating procedure that works well for the government and the stakeholder groups: groups advocating for the environment, groups invested in the energy industry, and groups working to protect property rights. That goes to subsection (1.2), where it says that "the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the lists of nominees" under the subsection. So nobody is saying that it's written in stone that they have to follow this exact process. It allows for some leeway and some development of regulations that work for everybody.

The minister will have the ultimate power to choose the individual from the list of nominees. That will allow the minister to decide on the particular nominee that best fits the needs of the board of directors and also fits the needs of industry, environmental conservation, and landowners. This system ensures that the entire board does not directly owe their positions to the minister, and this structure keeps a board that is connected in a healthy way but also independent. They're free to ensure that they pursue the interests of all Albertans, and that's ultimately what we want, a fair and open process.

Landowners and industry need tools that they can use to have an independent voice, and this allows them to do that. The subamendment to A17 allows industry, landowners, and environmental conservation to come to the table and work together. They could use this for work in their industry in a transparent and positive way.

More important than a lot of this information is that we're talking about streamlining a process. We're talking about making this process faster. What better way to do that than to make sure all the players are at the table to iron out any concerns that may come up long before they hit the public and long before landowners and industry are affected? That is a reality. There are clearly some concerns over this bill, and if you can actually have them at the board of director level, you'll eliminate them, ultimately making this a quicker process and an open and transparent board. Albertans need to believe in the integrity of the process.

Now, under subsection (1.3) nobody is even asking for them to implement this immediately. We realize that there has to be some consultation. There has to be time for the stakeholders to talk to whom they need to talk to, to figure out who the best person is to nominate. We realize it's going to take some conversations across Alberta to make sure that we have the best people in the right job doing the right kind of work. That's why we're saying that this isn't tomorrow, it's not next week, and it's not two weeks from now. It's 12 months after this act comes into force.

That's a reasonable amount of time, that allows the transition board and the current board to get things set up, to figure out what works and what doesn't work. But it says that after 12 months you will ensure that each one of those groups – those with expertise in environmental conservation, those that are representing Alberta landowner groups, and those that represent energy industry groups – has the time to present you with a reasonable list of people that have the expertise in these areas or at least could possibly come forward and say, "You know, there are things about this that I could communicate and contribute back to the board," which thus would then turn around and literally make it so that this board functions better and ultimately streamlines the process.

We may just find that if we open this up to stakeholders to say, "Hey, I could suggest this person and this person and this person," some of those people might actually already be working together. I would find it hard to believe – my husband is in oil and gas. They do talk to landowners, and I believe that most of the industry actually does talk to landowners. I believe they're doing the right thing. I think it's very few people that are actually, you know, overriding or wanting to fight with the landowner. So what we might actually find if we go back to Albertans, who really and truly know who is the best to do these kinds of things – they will literally be able to put the best person forward, and you might find that they're already all working together, which ultimately goes back to streamlining the process, which is exactly what Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, is all about.

We heard at the very beginning that this is all about streamlining the process, so let's get the groups together. Let's have them working together, and there's no reason why they can't do that and have some input into the board makeup. This does not threaten and is not onerous on the minister at all because he makes the ultimate decision. It's literally an easy win-win for the government.

You know, it's an amazing thing. The members across the way are ripping their pages and all that sort of thing, and that's fine. We've had excellent opportunities, and we have actually had ministers in this House who've accepted amendments from this opposition. I know it's shocking. It absolutely is shocking, but we've had ministers who did that. The hon. Minister of Education accepted an amendment from Calgary-Fish Creek, and I believe there was an amendment from the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw that was accepted, which was an opposition amendment. This is not something that we've never seen before.

It is okay to actually say: "Hey, that's not a bad thing. The amendment can be considered, and the amendment might be okay to go through." It seems shocking because we want to believe that we cannot accept anything from the opposition, but the reality of it is that if it's in the best interest of Albertans, it should be considered and it should be reviewed, and it absolutely should be an open, transparent, and accountable process, which is exactly what this government has proposed as their mandate. If that's true, then they'll make sure that this process is open to all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Chair: Other speakers on this subamendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on subamendment SA4.

[Motion on subamendment A17-SA4 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to amendment A17.

If there are no speakers on amendment A17, I'll call the question on A17.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A17 lost]

[Motion on amendment A17 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: It seems we have another amendment, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: I do have an amendment, indeed.

Hon. Members: Question. We're calling the question now.

Mr. Mason: I have notes for this one.

The Chair: Hon. member, you may proceed to describe your amendment. This will be amendment A18 for the record.

11:50

Mr. Mason: Good. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 2, Responsible Energy Development Act, be amended by adding the following under section 33:

Local interveners' cost

33.1(1) In this section, "local intervener" means a person or a group or association of persons who, in the opinion of the Regulator,

(a) has an interest in, or

(b) is in actual occupation of or is entitled to occupy land that is or may be directly and adversely affected by a decision of the Regulator in or as a result of a proceeding before it, but, unless otherwise authorized by the Regulator, does not include a person or group or association of persons whose business includes the trading in or transportation or recovery of any energy resource.

(2) On the claim of a local intervener or on the Regulator's own motion, the Regulator may, subject to terms and conditions it considers appropriate, make an award of costs to a local intervener.

(3) Where the Regulator makes an award of costs under subsection (2), it may determine

(a) the amount of costs that shall be paid to a local intervener, and

(b) the persons liable to pay the award of costs.

(4) The local intervener or a person who is determined by the Regulator to be liable to pay the costs awarded may request that the Regulator conduct a review of the award of costs.

(5) Where the Regulator conducts a review of the award of costs, the Regulator may

(a) vary the award of costs,

(b) refuse to vary the award of costs, or

(c) deny the award of costs.

(6) If in the Regulator's opinion it is reasonable to do so, the Regulator may make an advance of costs to a local intervener and it may direct any terms and conditions for the payment or repayment of the advance by any party to the proceeding that the Regulator considers appropriate.

Now, speaking to that amendment, Mr. Chairman, this amendment was taken from a previous piece of legislation, the Energy Resources Conservation Act. This act will be repealed by this bill if the Legislature passes it. The current bill does not provide for local intervenors' costs, which can be awarded to interested parties who are taking part in the energy project approval process. The local intervenors' cost section will ensure that the regulator takes responsibility for reviewing and ruling on the costs that need to be paid for intervenors.

Mr. Chairman, currently if you participate as a local intervener in a hearing, you may make a request to the panel that some or all of the costs you've incurred with respect to your intervention will be paid by the proponent. A local intervener means a person, group, or association who has an interest in land that might be adversely affected by a decision of the panel as a result of a proceeding but does not include the persons whose business is related to the trading, transportation, or recovery of an energy resource. This amendment will ensure that the act maintains the definition of a local intervener so that those who take the time, energy, and resources to speak to an energy proposal may be heard. In other words, the definition of local intervener focuses on individuals and associations other than those businesses or corporations applying to develop energy projects.

Although individuals could represent themselves in front of a hearing panel held by the regulator, it is often daunting to grasp all the aspects of the energy development proposal. Therefore, hiring a lawyer is often helpful to interested parties to represent their interests. Lawyers are trained to represent a client's case and make arguments on behalf . . .

An Hon. Member: Lawyers?

Mr. Mason: Why am I defending lawyers?

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, the real point here is that people who are affected may not have the resources to adequately research and make their case when they're up against giant energy companies with very, very deep pockets. Previously there was wisdom in this regulatory process in that it provided some equality of resources so that people could actually make a case and argue on a nearly equal footing with proponents of projects that may negatively affect them. Not everybody can afford to do this. Not everybody can afford to hire a consultant or a lawyer or another professional person in order to help them research and make their case. The regulatory process, as I've understood it, in the past provided that by allowing the awarding of costs at the expense of the proponent to people who had an interest at stake and needed some financial support to deal with it.

That's in there now, and this act takes it out. It's part of the process, which I think is represented in this act, of tilting the balance too far in favour of the energy industry and too far away from the rights of ordinary Albertans. We're just putting back what's been there in the past, which in our view has served property owners and served the ordinary folks of this province very well. It's going to be a lot tougher to argue your case against a battery of lawyers of one or more large oil companies when you don't have this section. We want to put it back. We want to ensure that there's at least a little bit of balance and a little bit of equality of resources so that the hearings have at least the potential of representing the interests of both parties. And with the current act not including this, I don't think that's going to be the case. I think it's a shame. I think it needs to be there, and I would urge all members to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm all full of surprises for the hon. member. I rise in support of this motion. Bill 2 contains no statutory power, never mind any obligation of the regulator, for the regulator to make cost awards in favour of a landowner who participates in any regulatory process. This bill repeals the local intervenor cost provision under section 28, and all this hon. member is trying to do is to reinsert it back into this bill.

The only thing Bill 2 does is give the regulator rule-making authority to award costs under section 61, but it removes that statutory power. That's significant in dealing with any application process. People are put at a tremendous disadvantage going in front of these board processes and these board hearings. For many landowners it is generally their once-in-a-lifetime experience. Most farmers may go in front of the board once. Rarely do they go in front of the board twice. Beyond that, it's extremely rare that anyone would go more than that. It's daunting. It is intimidating to these people. It's not the process they're used to.

For anyone who's been part of a board process or a commission process – now we're going to call it a regulator process – this is very much like a court setting. The regulator will have legal counsel there along with experts. They normally do. It is the general rule of the day. When industry comes in, they come in with a team of lawyers, with a team of experts, and you have a landowner standing there generally alone. How do they actually make their case? How do they articulate their argument in front of this regulator, this board, if they do not have the ability to have legal counsel? I will tell you that when it's left to just their pocketbook, then they are at a tremendous disadvantage.

This isn't just about fairness; this is about process. You know this. It's happened. The hon. Deputy Premier was somewhat, I think, part of this at the Sylvan Lake meeting. When people are frustrated, they do get louder. They do. I will tell you that we've had people out there engage in violence. We all know the stories. Nobody has ever asked the question: why does a 70-year-old lady go after a 30-year-old EUB lawyer and try to beat him up? I mean, it sounds comical, and it was to watch it, to be honest, but it's not right. Nobody bothered to ask the question: how did that come to be? How did it come to be that somebody who was law abiding and has lived an entire life and never even got a traffic ticket finds themselves dealing with an assault charge at the age of 72? Think about that for a second. We've actually had people out there killed. It's not something that we've not had to deal with. In each case it has to do with the level of frustration people felt in the process.

If you remove this statutory power and we put these people at a disadvantage, one thing that I can guarantee is that the level of frustration will rise, and then the repercussions of that frustration are something that we will have to deal with. But there will be a push-back in the public. We know that not just from the theoretical; we know that from our real life experiences. People need a process that they can go through where they feel they've been treated justly and fairly. The idea here is to create that, but without these intervenor costs, we have a tremendous disadvantage.

I will tell you that there are companies out there who take no prisoners when it comes to dealing with the legal system. They do everything to their advantage regardless of the landowner or the property owner. It's the way the system is designed, and these people are competent, these industry lawyers. This is what they do for a living. So when they come up against the one individual who has absolutely no experience in dealing with this, we find they get taken advantage of many times. This is a process that if we don't have some sort of equalization here, some sort of remedy so these people can be represented in a fair and just manner – I mean, they can complain about their lawyer afterwards, saying, "My lawyer didn't do a good job," but at least they got a decision, and an argument was made, and their concerns were brought forward. If they can't get that brought forward, that frustration level is going to boil over.

I know where industry's going with this one. By not having it in there, there is no right to that intervenor cost. There is no mandate on the legislative side to actually do this. All it says is that they will make rules. This has been a problem going back in time. It still is a problem. Industry will cry that landowners abuse the system. Landowners, on the other side, will complain that they're at a disadvantage now. But right now the way the system is, the commission or the board – in this case it will be the regulator with its hearing commission – should be able to make that decision. It should basically be in the legislation to level the playing field.

It does another thing, too, besides leveling the playing field. It also helps the process. I will tell you how we won at the board. We didn't get a lawyer. We showed up with 200 people at the board without a lawyer, 200 people who didn't know the process. If you ever wanted to see how that worked, you just let them go to that board without any idea of how the system runs and let the board figure it out. From the board's perspective at the time – you can shake your head, but it's a tactic. Because those lawyers use tactics, we have to use tactics. We want to be heard. If you want to basically get this process up and running, then give them a fair chance. This is what lawyers do. They basically teach these landowners how to navigate through this process.

What you're going to end up doing is just what I told you, that you didn't like hearing about. These landowners are going to be showing up without counsel. They can't afford it. If they show up en masse, then the board or the commission is going to have to deal with it. I will tell you that it's a zoo. It's a zoo if they're not represented well, and then the board has to figure out how it's going to pull that all apart. The system, I tell you, when I went through it, it broke down. It broke down. It was the board that misbehaved more than the landowners misbehaved. The board then declared a 70-year-old lady a terrorist, hired private investigators, and the next thing you know we had a fiasco in the newspapers.

An Hon. Member: Is this to the amendment?

Mr. Anglin: This is all to the amendment. That is exactly what this is about. This is about those intervenor costs and about making the process work.

It's not costly in the sense that it costs more for the applicant, although they will complain. What is costly for the applicant is the holdup of the process. What is costly for the applicant is when they don't get this seamless approval process that they want to get so that they can get on with the situation of developing their energy resource. That's the intent of this bill.

If we do not have legislative intervenor costs – this does not mandate it. You do not have it. It's not there in legislation. It's been removed. Take a look at section 28 under the old act. It does not appear in this new act. What does appear right now is this amendment, which says that if we put it back in, it will then be there just the way it has been all along prior to this bill.

With the greatest respect, making light of this is fine, but this will be a problem. This will be a problem. When you create this imbalance, this is going to be a problem, not so much maybe on the small projects but on those big projects because people are going to want to be heard, and they will not have the resources to allow them to be heard in an orderly manner. They will show up, and that you're going to have to figure out how to deal with.

I will tell you that we are dealing with a situation like that right now up in the Peace River region, and it's almost deadly. If it doesn't get resolved peacefully, there's going to be a problem. The RCMP are involved. There are local negotiators involved, trying to get tempers and emotions calmed down. We know this stuff goes on. So if we know that it goes on, we should take measures to make sure we keep things civil. The intent here also is to make sure we keep things civil.

I'm going to throw out the example of Sylvan Lake versus Vulcan. I would say and I would argue that it was the organization of the meetings that made all the difference, and it was the difference between night and day, between what the hon. Minister of Energy experienced versus what the Deputy Premier experienced.

Again, we can have a board hearing where legal counsel represents landowners and legal arguments are made and professionals come in and basically do their duty, whether it's water, whether it's geology, whatever the application is doing as far as the expertise required, or we have a fiasco of people showing up without the ability to balance or even understand what is happening in front of them. That's usually where the trouble begins, when they don't even understand the legal process and they're going up against a company lawyer without any understanding of the law whatsoever.

This has played a very important role in the process to date. It has actually worked quite effectively. The board has the decision to determine how much, if any, intervenor costs are awarded, but it is in legislation. This bill does not have it in legislation. By omitting this, we now start to think about this system not being able to be streamlined and people getting frustrated. The playing field is not fair. It is not level. We'll get away with it for a while, and then there will be a push-back in the public. How that push-back appears or grows could be anybody's guess.

My argument here in support of this motion is that it's worked, and it's worked effectively. Why would we get rid of it? Yes, there are complaints on both sides of the equation, but overall it has worked well. Why would we get rid of it? Why would we not put this back in and make sure that we keep that level playing field?

The average farmer out there, the average landowner who's running a business, whatever type of agricultural business it is, they're going about their duty whatever their business is, and then the developer shows up and says: "We're going to drill for oil and gas. We're going to build a pipeline across your property." Now, all of a sudden, if you're not aware of the process, you have to not just stop what you're doing; you have to go through this learning curve. This is something that they did not invite into their lives. It is something that just happened to come on probably the most ill-planned day in their lives. Whether it's seeding, harvest, whatever, it doesn't matter. It's never a great time, and they have to get caught up very quickly.

Being able to hire a lawyer or an expert to help them, particularly if the development is complex, and having a right to apply for intervenor costs is significant in streamlining the process. If that's the intent, to streamline the process, these property owners are going to need help. These intervenors are going to need help. If they're left to their own devices, basically, who knows how this system is going to work?

It has its advantages. It has its benefits when we allow the intervenor costs. I realize there are people out there that talk about abuses on both sides of the equation, but overall the board has, I think, the generic support by probably a majority of people that the system is working with the intervenor costs. If you are directly and adversely affected and the board decides that you have a right to intervenor costs, by legislation, then, they will award those intervenor costs.

So I rise in support of this bill. It is significant to keep to this idea that we're going to streamline the process. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there other speakers to this amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, it's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, and speak about amendment A18 that was put before us.

Local interveners' cost

33.1(1) In this section, "local intervenor" means a person or a group or association of persons who, in the opinion of the Regulator,

- (a) has an interest in, or
- (b) is in actual occupation of or is entitled to occupy land that is or may be directly and adversely affected by a decision of the Regulator in or as a result of a proceeding before it, but, unless otherwise authorized by the Regulator, does not include a person or group or association of persons whose business includes the trading in or transportation or recovery of any energy resource.
- (2) On the claim of a local intervenor or on the Regulator's own motion, the Regulator may, subject to terms and conditions it considers appropriate, make an award of costs to a local intervenor.
- (3) Where the Regulator makes an award of costs under subsection (2), it may determine
  - (a) the amount of costs that shall be paid to a local intervenor, and
  - (b) the persons liable to pay the award of costs.
- (4) The local intervenor or a person who is determined by the Regulator to be liable to pay the costs awarded may request that the Regulator conduct a review of the award of costs.
- (5) Where the Regulator conducts a review of the award of costs, the Regulator may
  - (a) vary the award of costs,
  - (b) refuse to vary the award of costs, or
  - (c) deny the award of costs.
- (6) If in the Regulator's opinion it is reasonable to do so, the Regulator may make an advance of costs to a local intervenor and it may direct any terms and conditions for the payment or repayment of the advance by any party to the proceeding that the Regulator considers appropriate.

Now, in reading that and listening to the comments of the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre – look at that; I even got it – I've kind of rethought what I was thinking on this amendment. In this bill, in terms of efficiency, it's essentially taking failed bodies that were in place and stuffing them into a superregulator. There's a clear risk that this is going to be a Frankenstein-like body if the new regulator does not overhaul the process.

In terms of the balance the only place this bill makes explicit gains is in the efficiency. In terms of landowner rights it does not maintain the requirements for landowner involvement at the outset, which was entrenched in the ERCB, nor does it give Albertans the right to appeal to the Environmental Appeals Board if the energy developer on their land causes environmental damage.

I guess what I was hearing from you, Colleague, was that, you know, we need something like this in place. We need it in place to protect the landowner, the person that doesn't always deal in this, that doesn't have the expertise in this, that they can call in somebody to help them out on this so that they can deal with the regulator on almost an even footing with the energy companies. I'm sure the energy companies would appreciate this as well.

You know, we all want to make sure that we have good corporate citizens in this province, and I know that these energy companies and industries want to be good corporate citizens here in the province of Alberta. Doing this is going to give some balance and give a little bit of weight back to the landowner. We want to make sure that the landowner is protected and that the industry and the landowner can come to these boards on a level playing field and discuss their issues and hash them out so that it doesn't prolong the process.

I think that I'm in support of this motion. Again, it seems strange to be speaking in support of the members of the NDP because a few years ago I couldn't believe that I'd be doing this myself. You know, there is some pragmatism in this. I can recognize that there are good ideas that come from all over. They come from the members of the NDP, they come from the members of the Liberal Party, and they come from the members of the Wildrose Party. I know that is something that is hard to fathom. They even come from the Progressive Conservative Party as well. Look at that. I'll even give you credence on that, that good ideas come from all Albertans, all members in the Legislature.

I think there is some merit in this here this evening. Let's not just throw this out. Let's deal with this. Let's look at this. Let's debate this, not just glaze over and go sleep and wake up at 7 a.m. and find me still standing here talking. Now, I'm not sure if there's anybody else that has any more comments on this, but I would like to hear some more.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We're looking at a David and Goliath situation, as has been mentioned several times in this House. I believe this amendment addresses that to some extent, and I rise to speak in favour of it and to talk about the bill generally since I understand that we're expected to be here all night to prove that we're all men and, I guess, women too. [interjection] I prefer to be what I am anyway.

In a masterful speech by the Leader of the Official Opposition a few weeks ago we heard horrific examples of delays in project approval here in Alberta. Compared to our neighbouring jurisdiction of Saskatchewan, similar projects there are being fast-tracked in as little as one-sixteenth the time that it takes here in Alberta. The purported purpose of this bill is to streamline that process, and that's admirable. It's a worthy goal. It's intended to rectify this imbalance with our neighbouring provinces and make Alberta once again a more attractive place for the energy industry to invest.

However, Mr. Chair, it takes a long time to restore lost faith and win back trust. Over many years, dating back to the 1950s, Alberta was held up as a model for the rest of the world. Leaders and ministers from a variety of countries visited to learn how to strike the right balance between providing investors an attractive return while reassuring Albertans that their fair share of resource revenue was received and protecting and preserving property rights. That's a proud heritage, one that we need to I think consider when we have the opportunity to do the right thing and to make sure that everybody is treated equally. This trust between energy companies and our province took a long time to create. It sustained us through decades of growth, ensuring a high standard of living for Albertans.

The protection of landowners' rights in providing a wealth of employment opportunities was a result of consultative engagement among all stakeholders and for many years remained a standard worth emulating. Sadly, over the past five years this government acted unilaterally to change the rules of the game. Investors fled, and jobs followed. I'm told that some investors still haven't returned. The government also lost the confidence of rural Albertans when they rammed through bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, as has been mentioned numerous times this fall session. It was hoped that this act would make our process competitive with our neighbours' and restore energy companies' faith in Alberta and make it easier for them to plan and initiate new projects in a cost-effective way.

I hope we all know that it's private enterprise that creates wealth-producing jobs, that increase our standard of living, and boost provincial revenues. Not public jobs but private-industry jobs create wealth. We do need to streamline project approvals. We need to do it as soon as we can. It takes a long time to re-earn the trust of those companies who saw millions of dollars of planning rendered useless and irrelevant through the unilateral stroke of the legislative pen following . . .

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Chair: Hon. member, are you speaking on the amendment?

Mr. Bikman: I certainly am.

The Chair: Okay. Please, if you could keep your comments to the amendment. Thank you.

Mr. Bikman: And how am I not?

The Chair: Well, it seems you're talking about the bill in general, hon. member, and we're going through the amendment.

Mr. Bikman: I think that this amendment relates to the bill in general, and I'm talking to the generality of the bill and the specifics of why this is important, what we need to do restore the confidence that makes the bill even necessary in the first place.

The Chair: If you could keep your comments to the amendment, hon. member – that's how we get through it; it's piece by piece – I'd really appreciate it.

Mr. Bikman: I thought we were supposed to be here all night and keep you all busy and entertained. Did I misunderstand the rules of this game? [interjections]

The Chair: The hon. member has the floor. Thank you.
Carry on, hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: I was carrying on. I thought that was what you were chastising me about.

Debate Continued

Mr. Bikman: Well, let me see if I can be a little more specific. We're very concerned about property rights. The David and Goliath aspect of this relates to that, and this amendment certainly speaks to that, wouldn't you say? Are we concerned about having the weakest and the least wealthy, in most cases, members of this equation, who are the property owners, having some of their costs covered? As has been pointed out and as I think we all realize, when you're going up against an energy giant and you're simply a farmer or a rancher or a landowner, we're not creating a level playing field. It isn't an equal situation no matter what you think.

The farmers, the ranchers, surface rights representatives, and property rights advocates are concerned about the direction that this government is taking our province in with this bill. They've written all of us letters about that, and I'd be surprised if some on the other side hadn't received some of those letters and concerns. Whether you think they're from credible sources or not, I think people at the University of Calgary from the Faculty of Law there and other landowner advocates are concerned about the ability of farmers and ranchers, landowners in general to play in this game and defend themselves. They need to be compensated, and lawyers aren't prepared to represent them as willingly as they have in the past because they've been unable to collect their normal fees because the farmers and ranchers aren't being compensated. The compensation for their efforts has been cut back and cut back so many times that it's very hard for them to receive payment for their time. I think that's critical, and I think that undermines the credibility of this bill and undermines the credibility of the government itself as it relates to the energy industry itself.

I don't think the energy industry is as interested in railroading or ramming through something that isn't going to keep the playing field level. They want efficiency, but they're not complaining about the landowners creating inefficiency and delaying the process. But the landowners' rights need to be protected. They're concerned about having things fair and equitable. It's in their best interests to see that that happens, and it's in their best interests to see that farmers and ranchers and landowners in general can defend themselves and that if they don't have the wherewithal in their own pocket, their own money, they'll be compensated for it.

We've seen what I would consider to be frivolous lawsuits funded by the government when people appear to be or think that they've been offended by somebody's opinions that they take exception to. Well, if we're prepared to do that, I think that the least we can do for the hard-working people of our province, who have pioneered and have in some cases been on the land for generations – they need to know that they can have access to funding to help fight the battle against inequity. I think that much of the inequity that they're concerned about isn't so much from the energy industry, in fact; it's from the government.

We know that the government isn't the 87 people elected to sit here. We've had it pointed out to us that we're not part of the government, that most of the MLAs that are sitting in the governing party, the party in office, are not the government. It's the Premier and her cabinet that are the government, and the decisions that they make behind closed doors are affecting and impacting our stakeholders, the people that have elected us. If we won't speak up for them, then we're not doing our job. In speaking up for them in defence and in support of this amendment, we're just doing our job. We're trying to help make sure that they will have the ability to defend themselves when necessary, whenever the appeals need to take place, by being able to hire experts whose qualifications and skills exceed their own in advocating for them. I think that's part of what this amendment is intending to do. I'm fully in favour of it.

If I've somehow offended the chair or this House by talking about things beyond this narrow focus, I apologize, but I believe that what you're trying to do tonight is to get this thing rammed through. I don't think we ought to be ignoring the rights of the weakest stakeholders in this equation.

The Chair: No offence, hon. member. I'm just trying to keep us on task. Thank you for your comments.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief. I think the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has put forward a very responsible and reasonable suggestion to strengthen the bill. It's essentially saying to people who are at a huge disadvantage as landowners or as neighbours or as small property owners or people who have a direct vested interest in the development: "We value your perspective. We need to have you onside as much as possible. We want to give you a fair opportunity to raise issues, to defend your right as a property owner, to put forward a well-researched, cogent case about balancing interests here."

The metaphor of David and Goliath does come often to mind as we look at these huge, huge operations and their ability to steamroll whole First Nations communities, as we've seen in the past, let alone individual property owners who have, perhaps, little background, little resource, and little capacity to understand the fine points of legislation and intervention. It just strikes me that this would be in government's best interests, it would be in industry's best interests, and surely it would be in the landowners' and affected parties' best interests to ensure that we provide a fair hearing and give not only the appearance but the reality of support for people who want to just stand up for their rights and want to have a fair settlement at the end of the day that reflects a balanced view from all sides. They cannot do that without resources. They cannot do that without expertise. To do anything less would be to violate, I think, a tradition in Canada, let alone Alberta, where we value landowners and their rights and we value fairness and we value the courts and we value the importance of specialized legal assistance in this modern day.

I don't need to say much more. The technical support, the financial support, the level playing field: it's a no-brainer. We would all want it ourselves, especially if we didn't have much in the way of resources. Let's just offer the same benefit to those among our neighbours who are essentially wanting to make sure that there's a fair process and they have been fairly treated.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other comments on amendment A18?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A18 lost]

The Chair: We're now back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment I'd like to put forward. I have the number of copies.

The Chair: This amendment, hon. members, will be A19.

Hon. member, you may speak to the amendment.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment I am proposing is another amendment dealing with public interest. Section 1(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (c):

(c.1) "carbon capture and storage project" means a project for the injection of captured carbon dioxide conducted pursuant to rights granted under an agreement under Part 9 of the Mines and Minerals Act.

It further goes on. Section 2 is amended by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) Where by any enactment the Regulator is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

This amendment deals with public interest mainly dealing with carbon capture and storage. Some good examples of this – looking at the public interest, I know we've had heated debate, and people think the public interest takes landowner rights away, which is totally false. It does not.

A perfect example of this is proposed carbon capture and storage projects that we really don't know much about. We're going to be pumping gas into the ground beneath landowners that may not even know it's there. There are huge, huge pools of gas that are going to be placed under families that will not know they're there. Who's going to know what's going to happen? We don't know. We don't know how the gas is going to react in the ground, how it's going to find formations to go through. If these projects are approved without any public interest, who's to say they can't eventually pump them under towns? Of course, it's going to be, you know, miles deep, but how do we know what's going to happen to the earth? We don't know. We don't know what's going to happen.

If we allow these projects to go ahead without any public interest, say in a town, if we allow them to pump gas beneath the town and years later the gas comes to the surface and, heaven forbid, people get sick or die, and we think, "Well, you know, we didn't put the public interest into that act; we just let these companies do whatever they wanted in these towns," it's not the companies' fault. It's the mandate of this regulator, which allows them. They're following the rules that were set into this bill. If things happen that we have no control over and we didn't take the interest of the public into consideration, whose fault is it? It's the fault of this legislation.

Another example. This summer they were proposing drilling a well. It might as well have been right in Calgary. I think it was a school or a Walmart or something that was right there beside it. That's in the public interest because it's going to affect the public. You know, if it's a sour gas well and you get a bad wind and there's a blowout, who suffers? It's the public.

These are things that need to be in consideration. We're not talking about the landowner, taking away his rights if it's in the best interests of the oil company to drill a well on that land and that farmer doesn't want it there and then all of a sudden the regulator can say: "Well, yeah. This is bigger." We've got to step back and take a 30,000-foot view and say: well, as industry expands, you know, wells are going to get closer. I've talked to a couple members from the other side that want some sort of urban drilling program, a policy that doesn't allow drilling wells close to towns. Well, with the urban sprawl that we see, cities are continuing to grow and grow. Eventually, if we set a limit of two miles from town, who is to say that in 20, 30 years that well is not going to be right in somebody's backyard?

Those are public interest concerns that we have to continue to look at. This carbon capture should be a huge concern for the public because who's to say where that gas is going to go? Who's to say that eventually, you know, there aren't going to be communities expanding and built overtop of ground that has gas that they don't even know is there? Wrecks happen. We don't plan for these sorts of disasters, but who does? You never know when something is going to happen. It's our job to get this right in legislation now so that we can protect our future Albertans and our communities and our towns and do things that need to be done to protect their safety. That's the public interest we're talking about. It's the general public that can be affected by decisions that we make here.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is a very good amendment. It's one of my favourite subjects, carbon capture and storage. What a gong show. Carbon capture and storage. You know, I don't think I have met one Albertan at the doorstep, not one – I think I, like many others here, have door-knocked literally thousands of doors, especially in that last election. I think we can all agree we door-knocked – I'm sure the other side, too – thousands and thousands of doors. Does anybody recall somebody saying: "Oh, thank you. I'm so glad you're here. You know, whatever you do, stick to your guns on carbon capture and storage. That's the key. If we can make sure to pump CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground, into those aquifers, I know that's going to better the lives of my children. I know that that's going to better the lives of the sick and the disabled. I know that it's going to better their lives."

You know, I'm pretty sure that not once did folks hear that at the door because it's not a priority for Albertans. Apparently the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has said that he did hear that at the door. That's fantastic. That's fantastic. I did not, and I'm sure most did not. Maybe he did hear it at the door. Maybe there are a couple people out there that feel this is a priority for Albertans. I would say that the vast majority do not.

I would say that the vast majority think that – well, they break into several different groups. Some think it's a danger. I heard that quite a bit. It's unproven at such a large scale. This has never been undertaken at such a large scale. What are the effects going to be? Much like fracking and so forth, we don't necessarily understand all the effects, so there are some people that feel that way. I'm open to seeing what the facts and the studies and the research and the science say on that. But, you know, that certainly was one concern that was expressed with regard to carbon capture and storage, the safety on such a mass scale.

Another one you would hear is that it just costs too much money. How can we possibly justify spending $2 billion on projects like this, giving money to some of the largest corporations like Shell? Nothing wrong with Shell, but they sure don't need $800 million, or whatever they got. They don't need that amount of money. They've got plenty of money in the bank to spend, so why are we spending that $800 million?

You know, the other side is always saying: "What would you cut? What would you cut?" Then you give them a $2 billion thing to cut, and they say, "Oh, well, what would you cut still?" Well, $2 billion is a massive amount of money. I don't know if the other side understands that, the amount of money that that would cost, $2 billion for carbon capture and storage. It says specifically that we have to consider the public interest, "having regard to social and economic effects of the project." Dead on. Dead on. If we're looking at the economic effects of the project, as is said in this amendment, we have to consider: what could that money be spent on? What are the opportunity costs of that money, that $2 billion? Well, $1 billion is roughly the cost of twinning the road to Fort McMurray. Half of that amount is enough over four years: $250 million or so a year, if that's how long it takes, four years. You wouldn't have to borrow. Imagine that. You could just twin your road to Fort McMurray.

If you didn't want to do that, you could build schools. Could you imagine, Minister of Education, how many schools you could build with $2 billion? Could you imagine? It would be huge. You could immediately take care of any school infrastructure deficit you had with, probably, less than a quarter of that amount of money. It would be doable.

When we put this money down there, we have to think: well, what aren't we buying in this regard? What are the opportunity costs. What are we giving up? Of course, we're giving up a balanced budget. People say, "Oh, well, you know, we've got a triple-A credit rating." Well, guess what? France had a triple-A credit rating until yesterday. Now they don't. The United States had a triple-A credit till last year. Now they don't.

The Chair: Hon. member, we're not debating carbon capture and storage. So if you could stick with the amendment, please.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely, Mr. Chair. I'll repeat it for everyone's benefit. Section 2 is amended by adding the following after subsection (2).

- (3) Where by any enactment the Regulator is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

So speaking to the bill, speaking specifically to the last sentence there of the last paragraph, "having regard to the social and economic effects of the project," that means that what we're proposing here is that the regulator needs to look at whether these projects, which cost money, will have a social or economic effect that is positive and in the public interest. Obviously, one component of the economic effects and the social effects and whether this is in the public interest is cost. That, obviously, is a huge consideration. If we're spending billions of dollars on these things, what is the side effect of that? What are we giving up because of that? Of course, when we spend any money, that means you're making a choice. You're just deciding to spend it on one item and not on another. That's just the way it is.

So you've got to take into effect what the opportunity costs are. That's why I think one of the opportunity costs is that when we spend money on such costly projects, one of the economic effects is that we are endangering over the long term, not the short term, surely – over the long term we are putting ourselves and our children at risk of falling into the same spiral as France, the United States, Spain, Greece, and other countries that just a few years ago you wouldn't have thought would have had any problems, much like Alberta is today. You wouldn't think that we'd have problems down the road. Just like: who knew that the U.S. five years ago would be having problems? It happened very quickly because spending got out of control on things like carbon capture and storage and other silly projects that were not necessary and that were economically costly. Now major countries are losing that credit rating and are in a spiral of debt and, frankly, financial ruin.

We're not there yet, by any stretch. No doubt about it, we have a head start because of Premier Ralph Klein and his group. Some of the folks across sat with that group and should be proud of the fact that they paid off $23 billion in debt and set ourselves up, gave us this breathing room that we have now. Again, if we continue to spend money on carbon capture and storage, then the economic effect of that, the social effect of that in the long term is going to be one of suffering. It's not good. We need to start thinking about that; that is for sure.

I would like to suggest that when we are speaking with regard to this bill, when we are undertaking something like a carbon capture and storage project and the regulator is looking at it, then we have to make sure that they do take some time to adequately assess what all of the social and economic impacts are and whether they are in the public interest. As I said earlier, when we were door-knocking out there, I don't think you had too many people rushing up, maybe one or two but certainly not a lot, saying that this was a huge priority for the people of Alberta. Because of that I think that the regulator, the board and the regulator being established by this piece of legislation, should spend the resources that it needs to calculate properly the economic effects of these projects, whether they're in the public interest, and what exactly are the social and economic benefits or nonbenefits, damages.

One of the social problems, of course – well, there are many. We talked about the safety issue. We talked about the opportunity cost. If we even had half of that $2 billion, how much could we spend on the elderly? How much could we spend on making sure that we took better care of our autistic children, of our students with special needs, who are chronically underfunded after the preschool program, which is very good, but afterwards the funding goes way down and they don't have what they need. Anybody with an autistic child will tell you that. There are all kinds of different social and economic effects that come out of this, and unless we have a full vetting of those things before we undertake such costly and potentially dangerous projects like these massive carbon capture and storage boondoggles, then I just think that we're setting ourselves up for a lot of unfortunate, deleterious effects.

That's just one way of looking at this amendment. We'll certainly have a lot more to say on it, but I think that we need to make sure that these carbon capture and storage projects, since we are spending so much money, are part of this piece of legislation. I think that our caucus and that caucus should get up and talk about this issue and have a full and frank discussion about it.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's once again a great pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 2 and the amendment put forward by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. It's an honour to be here with him in this Legislature and with the rest of my colleagues.

Now, we are debating the amendment put forward on public interest. I'm going to focus in on section 2, which is amended by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) Where by any enactment of the Regulator is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

Now, we have noticed that throughout Bill 2 all references to the public interest have been removed, and there were four in the previous ERC Act, as difficult as it may sometimes be to ascertain. Given the expanded and consolidated powers of the regulator, it is even more important and it is our duty to consider that the public interest be present in this bill.

Precisely this exemption from considering the public interest is part of what allowed the massive overbuild of power lines to occur under Bill 50. Massive overbuilds. These kinds of exemptions just cost Albertans. They cost me, they cost my friends, and they cost you. They cost all of us. It's really not necessary to add burden to all Albertans, including ourselves here in the Legislature, because of these kinds of things.

Now, I wouldn't want to see something happen that we could have caught with an amendment like this on public interest. I mean, let's focus in on the mandate of the regulator.

2(1) The mandate of the Regulator is

- (a) to provide for the efficient, safe, orderly and environmentally responsible development of energy resources in Alberta through the Regulator's regulatory activities, and
- (b) in respect of the energy resource activities, to regulate
  - (i) the disposition and management of public lands,
  - (ii) the protection of the environment, and
  - (iii) the conservation and management of water, including the wise allocation and use of water, in accordance with the energy resource enactments and, pursuant to this Act and the regulations, in accordance with specified enactments.

(2) The mandate of the Regulator is to be carried out through the exercise of its powers, duties and functions under the energy resource enactments and, pursuant to this Act and regulations, under specified enactments, including, without limitation, the following powers, duties and functions:

- (a) to consider and decide applications and other matters under energy resource enactments in respect of pipelines, wells, processing plants, mines and other facilities and operations for the recovery and processing of energy resources;
- (b) to consider and decide applications and other matters under the Public Lands Act for the use of land in respect of energy resource activities, including approving energy resource activities on public land;
- (c) to consider and decide applications and other matters under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act in respect of energy resource activities;
- (d) to consider and decide applications and other matters under the Water Act in respect of energy resource activities;
- (e) to consider and decide applications and other matters under Part 8 of the Mines and Minerals Act in respect of the exploration for energy resources;
- (f) to monitor and enforce safe and efficient practices in the exploration for and the recovery, storing, processing, and transporting of energy resources;
- (g) to oversee the abandonment and closure of pipelines, wells, processing plants, mines and other facilities and operations in respect of energy resource activities at the end of their life cycle in accordance with energy resource enactments;
- (h) to regulate the remediation and reclamation of pipelines, wells, processing plants, mines and other facilities and operations in respect of energy resource activities in accordance with the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act;
- (i) to monitor energy resource activity site conditions and the effects of energy resource activities on the environment;
- (j) to monitor and enforce compliance with energy resource enactments and specified enactments in respect of energy resource activities.

1:00

Now, I really don't see why we don't want to include the public interest in this and add through this amendment:

(3) Where by any enactment the Regulator is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest, having regard to the social and economic effects of the project and the effects of the project on the environment.

Now, I don't see where there could be any issue with this. I mean, we're here for the public interest. We're here because of the public interest. We're here to speak on behalf of our constituents and to make sure that they are protected under law. Well, this is one where we can protect them. We can protect them through regulation. We want to make sure that their interests are seen, heard, and listened to. Well, not even listened to; comprehended. I mean, it's one thing to listen, but it's another thing to actually listen and comprehend what the speaker is saying. Well, let's listen to and comprehend what Albertans are saying and what Albertans are telling us. They're telling us that their interests are important. Of course they're important. They elected us to be here to speak for their interests.

Now, there are varieties of interests, but I think specifically in this act the interests that we're talking about are their safety interests. I mean, what would happen if we inject carbon dioxide into our aquifers? We hold millions upon millions of cubic feet of this gas underground, and it escapes. It escapes in a town. Are we suffocating? Maybe. Are we getting hurt? Probably. Are we hurting our province? Most likely. Are we hurting society? Definitely. I mean, that's not in the public interest. We need to have the public interest taken into account when we talk about these kinds of legislations. We need to make sure that their interests are protected when we debate legislation, when we craft legislation.

Here we are. We're talking about an amendment on public interest. We have a golden opportunity to include this in Bill 2 and make sure that Albertans' public interests are covered off. Now, I don't understand why we would need to stand here all night and talk about this. I feel that, you know, the way that everyone pays attention here, I shouldn't have to repeat myself and we shouldn't have to repeat ourselves over and over again and that we can extend the olive branch and say: look, we're just trying to make a piece of legislation better, and we can do that as all 87 MLAs in this Legislature.

Now, public interest is probably the number one reason why we're here. I think I said this earlier. I mean, we have to take paramount – paramount – efforts to make sure that we're covering off the public interest, that we're covering off Albertans' interests. I want to make sure that this amendment is debated and considered and voted on and hopefully passed. I stand up here in good faith and speak on behalf of the constituents of Lacombe-Ponoka. I keep their minds in my heart when I'm doing it because they're the ones that are guiding me on what they want me to say here in the Legislature, what message they want to have brought forward, and public interest is that message that's being brought forward.

I mean, we saw it with Bill 36, Bill 24, Bill 19, Bill 50. They didn't feel that their interests were being heard when those bills were passed. Now we're looking at a bill, Bill 8, which rescinds part of Bill 50, and clearly public interest was heard on that. Let's not have to pass a bill without public interest in it and turn around and come back inside six months, a year, maybe two years, after Albertans rise up and say, "Were we consulted? Were we heard? No. Do we need a change? Yes," and then have to go back and go through this all again just to pass something that should have been in all along. I mean, we just shouldn't be having to do that. I'm hoping that the members here tonight will vote in favour of this amendment because it is a good amendment. It's a common-sense amendment. It's an amendment that all Albertans can rally behind. I really feel that all of the MLAs here could actually rally behind it, too, and pass it. There really is no justifiable reason why, I think, we should not pass this.

It's giving consideration back to the public interest, back to Albertans. Albertans need to be heard on this. Their interests need to be thought about every time – every time – we do anything that affects their lives in this province. I would hope that when I sit down here, we have the opportunity to continue to debate this and that maybe we can win some of your hearts and your minds over if you are indeed listening to what we are saying here tonight and listening to what Albertans are saying and put their interest, the public interest, at the forefront of our thoughts. I know that they are at the forefront of my thoughts. I know that they are at the forefront for the Member for Rocky Mountain House – or Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

An Hon. Member: Almost got it right.

Mr. Fox: Almost.

An Hon. Member: It's getting late.

Mr. Fox: Yeah, it is getting late, isn't it?

The Member for Calgary-Shaw, the Member for Airdrie, and the hon. Minister of Energy over there as well – I know that he wants to put the interests of Albertans first and put the public interest first as well, so I would hope that we do support this amendment, that we do pass this amendment, and that we can say emphatically that the public interest is in this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Other speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. This is significant. Carbon capture is not something that the public has taken lightly. It's not something that the government has taken lightly, given the amount of money that has been designated for this. We know that that's only the beginning, not even remotely addressing the problem. Meeting with industry dealing with this very complex issue, industry is not dishonest about this whatsoever. They know that the technology has not been fully developed. It is still in the theoretical stages in every shape, way, and form. There are trials going on dealing with carbon capture, but the data, the results, the findings of how well it is working are not yet determined. There are some initial results, yes, but the overall idea of what we want to do for carbon capture has not been finalized, and the technology itself has not been developed to where they can do the type of carbon capture that they want to.

I get to talk now about my favourite subject, which is the public interest test. I thought I heard somebody pray there for a second. Dealing with the public interest, Mr. Chair, it's one thing for this regulator to be dealing with an individual landowner, farmer, an individual company. When we look at these carbon capture projects, these are significant in size and magnitude. Depending on what we are dealing with as far as geology, there is this level of unpredictability.

What we do know about one of the carbon capture trials that took place – and this happened to be in Saskatchewan. There was a failure in what they did. Now, the interesting thing about the failure, and this is where it comes to dealing with the public interest: it happened to an adjacent landowner. It didn't happen to where they had – I'd have to go back and check the data, but I think it was a substantial piece of land that they retained to trial this project. It was an adjacent landowner much further away that experienced the problem. Again, somebody who was not directly and adversely affected when this was first proposed suddenly becomes now directly and adversely affected.

When we deal with any type of regulatory process – in this case this will be the regulator – they will make regulations making the determination of various distances, dealing with everything from sour gas, everything from flaring, and it gets even more complex. Distances as far as those who are directly and adversely affected will be adjusted accordingly. All that will be taken care of in regulation. We're going to do that with carbon capture.

The question is: when they do it, under what mandate do they make this determination? Do they make it under the mandate of just dealing with the company that wants to incorporate carbon capture, or do they do it just strictly on the mandate of the individual landowner? Really, with carbon capture this is the whole public interest all in one nutshell. The only reason we're doing carbon capture is because of our public image of dealing with the oil sands and the type of development that we do.

Now, truth be known, carbon capture is a real issue in the coal-burning environment. We know that. We have a federal mandate to accelerate the decommissioning of our coal generation or the upgrading, which is significant, to where it does what we call combined cycle gasification. In order to capture carbon from coal, you have to do the gasification methodology. There's no other way you can capture that CO<sub>2</sub>. It's really important because the social and economic effects of this, which are what this amendment addresses, spread out now throughout the entire province.

Carbon capture through combined cycle gasification is extremely expensive. If it is determined that that's the methodology we're going to use for carbon capture, keeping our coal generators versus retirement – those are the two options coming – there are two things that are directly affecting the public at large. One is the cost of carbon capture and what do to with it. The second is the added cost of electricity as a result of the generation because we've taken what used to be, then, cheap coal, and we have now raised that price up to where it's no longer cheap.

Now, a prime example of that is Genesee 3. Genesee 3 is one of those more efficient – it's not really combined cycle, but it's using a different technology where they do not pollute, they do not admit the CO<sub>2</sub>. I shouldn't say that. They do not admit all the nasty other pollutants that what we call the pulverized burning method does. The coal pulverization isn't happening there. They're doing something different, which is basically cooking the coal and doing something very similar to combined cycle gasification. The problem that they've discovered is that they can't be competitive. That's a problem for the entire public here.

We're dealing with the issue of the public interest when we ask this regulator to look at this. The mandate is for the regulator to deal with carbon capture. That has to be part of the equation for the regulator to figure out, how they're going to make a decision that is not just for the public interest but the social and economic effects that the project is going to have on the public. Now, this is important.

We have discussed this with transmission lines on and off, and I know we'll discuss it again in another bill. The cost of energy is paramount to the efficiency of our economic system, particularly growth. If we have a high energy cost internally in Alberta yet we are a very wealthy province in energy development, in energy extraction, in energy export, we're penalizing ourselves and are hurting our own economic activity, particularly when we deal with those subsidiary industries that actually benefit from our energy development. What happens, what they're telling us is going to happen if internal prices in Alberta are high: this is all related to the social and economic effects of a project. We have industry members who are telling us that if costs rise to a certain level, it is then an option for them to relocate to another jurisdiction where they can have consistent, cheap, and reliable electricity prices so they can run their business.

I'll give you an example. There was a plastic manufacturer that I had spoken to who basically gave me a scenario. If they were looking to relocate, they would like to relocate to Alberta because it made sense because that's where the natural resource is that they use in their processing for their business. However, electricity costs that spike up and down would be detrimental to their business. Then it would make better sense if they were to relocate as close to Alberta as possible but in a jurisdiction where they had more stability. They still would be close to the resource as much as possible. The jobs would go to another jurisdiction and not to Albertans. So it does play a role in our economic activity, in our economic growth.

This is not a light subject in the sense that it's one of those fuzzy, feel-good amendments saying that the social and economic impact of any project should be dismissed arbitrarily. It is in the public interest that these projects be evaluated not just on the merits of what they are doing for the industry that's proposing them but also on the merits of their entire broad impact on the public.

Looking at this amendment, it allows the regulator the flexibility to make this determination and this evaluation.

Backing further into this amendment, when it's talking specifically about carbon capture, the impact of what that project could do is not just related to pumping the CO<sub>2</sub> under the ground. Also, there's going to be the necessity for massive pipelines to push that CO<sub>2</sub> to where they want to then pressurize and put it underground. So there need to be pipelines that are built. Do they get built from point A to point B in a straight line? Not necessarily. Should they be built in a utility corridor? That is important. I would say yes. We should look to create utility corridors. It makes sense from a business point of view. Industry likes the idea. The public generally likes the idea although nobody wants to sell their land for a utility corridor unless they get a lot more for what it's worth. But for our future growth that would be one of the aspects that this regulator should have to consider, and that would fall under the economic effects.

On the social effects of a project, it does change the demographics of a community depending on what type of industry is just plopped down. I'll give you an example. I believe it's west of your riding, Mr. Chair, where they were talking about developing a major coal mine. I think it was northwest of your riding if I'm not mistaken. That was significant because that took a large geographical area, and it affected barely 200 or 300 people, but the size of that area was probably bigger than Edmonton. I mean, it was significant because there were large landholders out in that area.

It took a huge area, but then when you develop that, what happens to the water table? That was an important question. So you're dealing with the same situation, where the social and economic effects of a project spread out well beyond those who are participating, well beyond the people who are directly and adversely affected as landowners. Now you're dealing with an aquifer that feeds an entire water system that many communities would feed off, not just individual landowners.

Now, we have that same type of situation west of Rimbey. We have an aquifer that goes from Rimbey all the way back to the foothills. It's well established, it's well documented, and hydrologists and geologists are quite familiar with it. What happens when we start pumping CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground? This is a question that I don't think anyone has an answer for, but it is something that the regulator would have to be concerned with. We know we run into problems because we've experienced problems when we've pressurized and tried to push something down a well and found out it blew out another hole two or three miles away. That just happened down in Innisfail, and I brought that example up earlier.

We know that with carbon capture there's a significant amount of pressure that has to be utilized to push that CO<sub>2</sub> underground. Whenever you pressurize underground, it's always the path of least resistance. One of the huge problems we have in this province is that we've got lots of areas where it's like a pincushion. We've got abandoned wells that people don't know anything about unless you were the person that was there 50, 60 years ago when they first did a test well that was unproductive. We have lots of seismic activity where they barely plugged up the top of the hole, but we have lots of holes underground. Once you start pressurizing, wherever we're going to plan on pushing the CO<sub>2</sub> on this carbon capture, we're going to find out where the weak spots are.

Also, one of the other problems that no one knows anything about is all the fracking that we're doing, and we're doing a lot more fracking than we've ever done in the past. That is done horizontally. As we break those coal seams, we are creating a path of least resistance once we pressurize CO<sub>2</sub>. We know from experiments in Colorado that that travelled great distances and came up in waterways. It shocked them, it surprised them, but they were able to trace that back.

We're back dealing with the whole issue of the public interest test. It's important that it be in this legislation for this particular industry, which is the carbon capture. Now, there are other aspects to this, and that has to do with the whole purpose of carbon capture. The only reason we're doing carbon capture is for the public interest. We have an issue in the world called global warming. We have an issue in the world that is about the rising levels of CO<sub>2</sub>. We deal in an industry that is going to benefit both in a public relations scenario and in a – well, let's just deal with the public relations scenario. Our customers are international customers, our resource is an international strategic resource, but we have people who are giving us a black eye environmentally for our industry's repercussions, let's call it. For our own markets if we clean up our act, we enhance our ability to export our products. That would go to the public interest, that social, economic effect of the project.

Here we're dealing with issues of CO<sub>2</sub>. What do we do? There are a number of things. What is in this amendment that has not been pointed out is that it talks about inquiry and investigation. If the regulator did some inquiry investigation, much like our sustainable resource committee, what they might find is that with the development of hydro up north, the oil sands would no longer need to burn natural gas, in particular coke from the bitumen that they burn, which is about half a million barrels a year according to their own statistics.

If we brought that hydroelectricity down to the oil sands and they no longer had to burn that fuel but that fuel could be used for sale, that's an immediate payback for that industry. But the most important payback is environmental, that they would reduce that CO<sub>2</sub> emission. That is significant compared to the cost of carbon capture. That would fall under the whole idea of investigation and inquiry in the public interest, which is what is brought forward here in this amendment. If you bring that hydroelectricity all the way down to Redwater and tap into the local grid, now we have something to work with to deal with the coal plants that we've been mandated by the federal government to accelerate the decommissioning of.

Now, with a regulator that has that ability and is mandated to investigate and to inquire, we could in effect, if we were to accelerate that hydroelectric development, have one of the lowest CO<sub>2</sub> emissions in North America yet still be a high exporter of oil and gas. That is huge in our public relations in dealing with our major driving economic engine, which is the oil sands. So in dealing with environmental groups who want to do nothing more than give us a black eye, we actually have a mechanism that says that we can improve what we're doing without increasing our export level yet reducing our environmental footprint. That is better than going out and denying that we are something we are not. What it does is that it allows us to go out and say: "Look at us. Look how well we're doing it. We're cleaner than you."

Dealing with the issue of carbon capture is a significant issue. It has tremendous impact on how we as a government, how we as a society, and how we as an industry . . . [Mr. Anglin's speaking time expired]

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to speak in favour of this amendment. I do believe that it is worthy of consideration, and I hope that the government does consider it. I reflect back on my time knocking on doors during the last campaign, and this was a rather polarizing issue. There were many people who were confused as to the government's decision to take a giant piece of an economic pie and invest it in an unproven technology. I will admit that I ran into one individual who was rather up to speed on the whole, I guess you could say, way in which it's done. He's involved in fracking and has a great understanding of the potential for carbon capture, but even he was very much confused about how there could be any economic benefit or net benefit for this.

I will note as well that we're fast approaching 1:30 in the morning. I believe this is a record for the 28th Legislature. I would like to thank the support staff, Parliamentary Counsel, and our pages, who seem to age rather drastically at around 10:30, 11 o'clock at night. It's great to be taking part in democracy in Alberta at 1:30 in the morning. Thank you to all the government members for having us here.

The Chair: Hon. member, if I could just remind you to keep your comments to the amendment and not, maybe, to a larger topic.

Mr. Wilson: Oh, I'm sorry. Am I supposed to be talking to the amendment? I apologize, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: No, no. I appreciate your thanking the staff, but a lot of the speeches recently seem to be going on a much broader topic than what is the amendment. I hope you would keep your comments to the amendment.

Thank you.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you for the clarification, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that.

I do believe that there is reason to have a regulatory process involved, specifically around the carbon capture process. You know, when we look at the fact that it is an unproven technology and that it has been documented, well documented, that leakage does have a potential for long-term impacts, that should not be taken lightly. That is a clear need for a regulator to be able to weigh the balance of an environmental impact with the needs of the public interest of Albertans and the needs of an energy industry.

Again, if you look at some of the economic concerns with CCS globally right now, it is an industry in decline. I believe there are eight actual projects that are up and running, and many of them are not economically viable at all. Because any sort of leakage could cause large-scale atmospheric warming, it's possible that it could require even more investment long term to actually re-sequester the lost carbon. I'm not pulling these facts out of thin air. This is documented evidence that people who are much more familiar with climate science than I am have stated in their case.

The act itself talks about how the mandate of the regulator is "to provide for the efficient, safe, orderly and environmentally responsible development of energy resources in Alberta through the Regulator's regulatory activities" specific to the protection of the environment. So if we have CCS and we know it's unproven, it just simply makes sense to have a body in place that is going to be able to weigh all of the costs.

I guess the global market for CCS is also in decline as well, and Kyoto was kind of a motivating factor and a catalyst for the start of this industry. It seems to have failed. It's not going to come into effect. I think that in the public interest of Albertans it's important that we look at the amount of money we are going to be spending on this. If we do look at specifically the social cost, which is what this amendment addresses, we look at the amount of money that we could be reinvesting elsewhere. We talk about antipoverty. We talk about how this Premier has put forward a promise to Albertans to end homelessness, to end youth poverty, child poverty, yet here we have a massive amount of budget going to an unproven technology.

Again, if we had a regulator as per this amendment, they might have the wisdom. If this board is comprised of the types of individuals that we had debated about earlier in our amendments, that are sound business minds, many of them would probably look at the net benefit of this and go: "This is ridiculous. There's no possible way that there is an economic benefit to Albertans."

I believe that there is plenty of reason for us to look at this, to give it strong consideration. I appreciate the time. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? I'll recognize the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise tonight to address this amendment because it does address the issue of carbon capture and storage and the interesting comments that were made by the hon. Member for Airdrie, in which he called carbon capture and storage a gong show and, you know, some of the other spectres that we're raising with the unproven technology, as it's been quoted, and some of the other quotes.

You know, I've spent a fair bit of my professional career explaining science in some issues that can be twisted. The whole world is not scientific. One of the areas, for example, that I get really frustrated with is some of the half-truths and in some cases flat-out nontruths that deal with, for example, production of beef. That's something that I've defended throughout my career. You know, we get some friends like Dr. Suzuki who tell us that there are hormones and that there's all this other stuff that is going to be bad if you consume beef. Well, we've spent a lot of time defending the beef industry. We've defended the beef industry here. I'm not a geologist, and I'm not a petroleum geologist, so I don't know everything there is to know about some of the background on carbon capture and storage, but I do want to say a few things and clarify a few things to members of the House so that there is a balanced discussion on this issue.

Carbon capture and storage has in fact been going on for not just the last month or the last year, but since the year 2000 carbon capture and storage has been going on in the area around Weyburn, where it's involved in an enhanced recovery oil project in which a coal gasification plant in North Dakota runs a 330-kilometre pipe up to the fields near Weyburn. They've been doing enhanced oil recovery in those fields since that time.

Now, the estimate from geologists is that there are hundreds of years of capacity for carbon dioxide storage down there. The notion that somehow the Earth is going to explode under our feet because there is too much pressure: these are the kinds of things that for a society that maybe doesn't have a lot of scientific background, to start to raise the spectre that these sorts of things are going to happen is, I think, somewhat irresponsible.

I think that what we have to do is rely on the science as best we know it and recognize that not all science is perfect and that at times things change. But to suggest and to speak in public and say that this is untested technology and that there are going to be all these dire consequences from this, it's not an accurate depiction. Not everything is perfect – I recognize that – but to suggest that there are some dire consequences from this is problematic to me.

The second thing that's been raised about carbon capture and storage is this huge amount of money that the Alberta government has devoted to this. With regard to the amendment here and how we're going to regulate this, I'd like to say that the Saskatchewan government, which some of our friends opposite have so often quoted as being such a great government, have also devoted $1.24 billion to carbon capture and storage technology. This is not something that's exclusive to Alberta, but Saskatchewan and, in fact, many jurisdictions world-wide are investing in CCS technology because it's the price you pay for being in energy extraction today. That is the price you pay.

In fact, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said that, that in order to play in this game and in order for your energy extraction industry to be accepted world-wide, you have to demonstrate that you are doing something to address the situation of global warming and carbon dioxide. That is how we are addressing it. It is the admission price, if you like. It is the cost of doing this business. If you don't want to spend the money and say, "You know, that's how we could pay for these other programs," well, that's fine, but if you think that Alberta oil is being hard done by on the world market today, watch what would happen if we dropped all reference to CCS. Folks, whether we like it or not, whether we think it's tested or not, whether we think it's good technology or not, at least for right now it is the price of admission into this game, and that is something that we need to recognize.

Now, the other thing I'd like to point out is that there was talk about: when we were door-knocking, was there talk about this? Well, actually there was, Mr. Chair. I'd like to say that with regard to the regulation of this and what's suggested in this amendment, we, in fact, have carbon capture and storage going on right in my constituency. Well, technically it's not my constituency because it's on the other side of the border, but it's real close, and quite frankly I'm not worried about carbon dioxide bubbling up under the ground on my eight acres. In May of this year I attended at the Husky carbon dioxide recovery plant in Lloydminster. This is a major project, and there's a lot of excitement. Even the CEO of Husky said that it's a double bang for the buck because they are collecting carbon dioxide from our ethanol plant, and then they are using it for enhanced oil recovery from our heavy oil fields around Lloydminster.

Mr. Chair, with regard to the discussion on this amendment and with regard to the whole introduction of the discussion of carbon capture and storage, I will say, members, that while I don't understand necessarily everything there is to understand about geological engineering or the whole petroleum engineering field, when I read on websites that are published, for example, by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and they deal with and list and talk about CCS technology, I tend to rely on the expertise of those people. I would suggest that rather than using CCS as a political football and sort of saying, "You know, under the spectre of this untested technology we're going to pump hot air into the ground" – in fact, it's been going on for quite a long time. It's been going on, as I said, in our neighbouring province, the province that many of us are now saying is catching up to us, and perhaps they are.

The province of Saskatchewan, which I'm at least somewhat familiar with because I went to school there and I can see the province of Saskatchewan from my front door, unlike some references that were made a few years ago, they are doing this. They're doing this very successfully, and I would suggest that they are investing a huge amount of money into this technology as well, not just the province of Alberta. And, by the way, the federal government is also involved in investing in this.

Mr. Chair, those are my comments with regard to the amendment, and I thank you for your attention.

1:40

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: It's always great to hear a government member stand up and talk to an amendment. [interjection] Yeah. I'm just responding to exactly what he said. Ten minutes.

We talk about the price of being an energy producer. It is $2 billion for carbon capture and storage. How is that working for us? We can't get our pipelines built. The environmentalists are all over us on every single level. We can't convince the President of the United States to finish that pipeline. Nothing is getting done. The differentials are worse today with regard to the discount that we take on our bitumen than they have been in a very long time because of that.

You can't negotiate with these people, hon. member. They're not open to negotiation. These are extremists that we're dealing with in a lot of cases who will not stop until we stop producing oil sands oil. You can spend $5 billion, you can spend $10 billion on carbon capture and storage. It ain't going to make a difference. They are going to continue to come after us over and over and over again. So we can either look at that and say, "Okay; well, we're just going to spend $4 billion or $6 billion or $10 billion or $20 billion on this," or we can do things that are actually going to help the environment immediately in Alberta, that are actually going to improve air quality, that are actually going to improve access to public transit, that are going to improve lives and the economy and all these things. Those are the things that we can do that will have environmental benefits and will help the people of Alberta. We can spend it on education. We can spend it on all the things that are going to help Albertans. If it's just about pouring money into this carbon capture for the fleeting hope that these environmental extremists will back off Alberta, they won't. Greenpeace is going to keep on doing it.

I think that we have to be very truthful in thinking about this. We can't just run around and try to claim that throwing more money at a public relations exercise, which is really what this is, is going to somehow benefit this province. It's not. I mean, I've heard former Premier Stelmach talk about this, and I believe his intentions were absolutely sincere. He felt and others feel that in order to play in the energy business, we have to throw some money at this technology or that technology or whatever to be seen as doing something.

The Chair: Hon. member, with all due respect, could you . . .

Mr. Anderson: Well, he just talked for 15 minutes on this exact thing, and you didn't say a word.

The Chair: I did. Did you see me doing the same thing, hon. member?

If we could stick to the amendment, please, both sides.

Mr. Anderson: I'll stick to the amendment.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: All right. When we're talking about the public interest, when we're talking about the social and economic effects of the projects, including carbon capture and storage, I think one of the social and economic effects of these projects is the cost and what it costs Alberta. We do need to think very hard about whether we are just pumping money down a black hole. That's what it feels like. I don't see any kind of benefit that we've received from doing this, nor will we, I think.

Obviously, it's important to go to our trade partners and talk with the reasonable human beings out there that actually care about energy independence in North America and care about having good, low energy prices for economic development and so forth. Those are reasonable people, and they exist in Congress down south and so forth. Let's talk to them and do the best that we can. But the people that we're trying to placate with this CCS stuff – it is not working at all, and I don't think it will work. It's just a black hole. I would say the same thing to the Saskatchewan Party in Saskatchewan or the federal Conservative government. It's a mistake. It's well intentioned, but it's not working, and you'll never satisfy these folks no matter how hard you try.

Going back to this amendment, with regard to the social and economic effects of these carbon capture and storage projects I will say that absolutely we need to look at the best, most recent science that we have on CCS. He quoted studies from MIT and others. There's no doubt that CCS has been used for a very long time but not on a large scale. It's been used, obviously, for enhanced oil recovery. It is a proven technology in that vein on a small scale. But when you're talking about this massive-scale project, these massive aquifers that we're talking about, pumping a huge amount – a huge amount – of CO<sub>2</sub>, that has never been done before at these levels. Enhanced oil recovery takes a fraction of the carbon dioxide. It's a fraction that's used compared to these large-scale projects that we're talking about.

The other piece is that things have to be economical. In a lot of cases here, like with regard to Shell and a lot of these coal projects, some of these projects that are applying for the CCS grant money are not even doing it with enhanced oil recovery. They're just pumping it straight into the ground, and that, to me, is an even worse waste of money. It's not economical to do this, which is why the government has to put so much money into it.

I guess my view of it is that if it's not economical, why are we doing it? If it's not economical for a company as large as Shell, who has all the economies of scale that a company could possibly want or wish for to work with yet still can't make it work without $800 million in a grant to a private corporation – only then can they make it work and justify the economics – I mean, what's the point? Surely, that's a negative social and economic effect, as this amendment alludes to. So that's something to take into consideration, too.

Why do we feel the need to have to sponsor these things as a government? Why do we need to continue to give these corporate handouts? It's just not necessary, and it just hurts us on so many different levels. We could be spending that money not only on balancing the books but just on all kinds of issues. You can talk about child poverty issues. You can talk about any social injustice that's out there. We could help to address those issues with that kind of money. Hopefully, we will. I just wanted to point that out.

That said, I do appreciate the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's comments on it. You know, I understand the argument. I just think that when we're addressing the social and economic effects of these projects, we have to be very careful to not include in that column the fact that we've got to do this in order to placate the environmental detractors. The fact is that our environmental record in this province is very good. It could always be improved, but it is very good.

We're doing everything we can. I mean, the classic example, of course, is the birds and the ducks. You know, the lengths that we go to to try to make sure that we don't lose any of those birds is just incredible, the cost that's spent on it. We do that, and it's regulated. Who knows how many we save, but it's millions of them or hundreds of thousands, anyway, each year. Then at the same time when you're talking about windmills and so forth, they kill far, far more animals than our tailings ponds. It's not even close. Of course, we don't want one duck to perish. But why do the folks with the windmills get to slaughter tens of thousands of them and there's no second thought? I guess that's one good thing about CCS. It doesn't kill ducks. That's a good thing. It's probably a zero-duck killer. That's probably a good thing.

So much to discuss on this amendment. This is such a long amendment with lots of words in it. Lots to discuss. I'd like to see what my fellow caucus members or members of the government have to say about that.

The Chair: Thank you.

Further comments on the amendment? Hon. Members, please, if you could really try to keep your comments to the amendments. I know there is a larger subject here, but for process we're trying to get through this amendment and trying to convince each other of the merits thereof, so if you would.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: In speaking to the amendment, section 1(1) is amended to add the following after clause (c): "Carbon capture and storage project" means a project for the injection of captured carbon dioxide conducted pursuant to rights granted under an agreement under Part 9 of the Mines and Minerals Act." I found it very interesting that the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster provided all that interesting information. I think it actually is very helpful because I myself don't have carbon capture under my property, but I know it's possible.

Some of the more important things that he talked about were all the good things about carbon capture, that this is the way of the future and that, in reality, we'd just better get used to it. But there's something more to that story because on April 26, 2012, Dawn Farrell, the president and CEO of TransAlta, addressed shareholders at the company's annual general meeting in Calgary and talked about Project Pioneer, which is a carbon capture and storage project in which they're partners with Enbridge and Capital Power Company. TransAlta Corporation announced that they have now abandoned their plans to build the $1.4 billion carbon capture and storage facility at an Alberta coal-fired electricity plant because the company had no buyers for carbon dioxide and no way to credit from the plant.

If we're going to talk about carbon capture and storage projects and we're going to funnel money to those projects, then we'd best be making sure that they're actually economically viable and that they have all of the happy effects that the hon. members across the way say. TransAlta noted that its first-quarter profits tumbled on weak power prices and maintenance costs and said it would not proceed with Project Pioneer, a carbon capture demonstration project, with the partners. It also mentions that the project was backed by $779 million worth of funds between the Alberta and federal governments. So now we're backing with taxpayer money carbon capture and storage projects that are not even economically viable. When you are literally talking about that these carbon capture and storage projects should be covered, then we need to make sure that they're economically viable.

The hon. member spent 15 minutes educating us, and I really do appreciate that he educated us on all the good parts about carbon capture and storage and how that could really benefit Alberta and how that is the way of the future and how we just need to get used to it. But if TransAlta, who specializes in this important project and partners with the Alberta government, is spending taxpayer dollars, it would seem that it should concern every single legislator in this House that we're spending taxpayer money on projects that aren't even economically viable to the experts in the field.

Again, this literally goes back to public interest because now we're investing money in projects that have no interest to the public. There's no advantage to the public to throw away dollars on things that aren't economically viable. We will never see the money that we invested with TransAlta ever again. It just won't happen. TransAlta mentions that for the carbon capture and storage project, which is a project for the injection of captured carbon dioxide conducted pursuant to the rights granted under an agreement under Part 9 of the Mines and Minerals Act, it found no firm buyers for the carbon dioxide to be captured at the plant and said that there is as yet no cap and trade system that would let TransAlta and its partners sell emission reduction credits.

That is the situation that we're at. I mean, we can invest in lots of innovative technologies. That's fantastic. But we need to make sure that those innovative technologies actually provide Albertans with an economic future. Carbon capture and storage projects don't necessarily do that. But if they do do that, if they are so great and we're investing taxpayers' dollars into these projects – literally the amendment is talking about carbon capture and storage – then there would be no reason why we couldn't amend this by adding carbon capture and storage projects to the act. If you want to be clear and transparent, then we can easily do that. The process allows for that.

TransAlta also mentioned that two things were instrumental in their decision. The vice president of policy and sustainability for TransAlta said that one was the lack of a suitable price for the pure CO<sub>2</sub> created by the project. So we're talking about carbon capture and storage. We're telling landowners that we're possibly going to pump this stuff under their land. For me, whether or not it's going to emit fumes or gases is not the issue. If you're asking landowners to store carbon on your behalf, then they at least should be getting some sort of economic benefit from it. The second was the uncertainty around the value of emission reductions that would be created by Project Pioneer under regulatory frameworks that are still being developed.

Clearly, even the industry is not so all-in on carbon capture and storage. If the industry itself is not promoting carbon capture and storage, then how can we literally say that we should just ignore it or we should be for it? Again, if you're for it and you're absolutely wanting to do this, then amend the bill to make sure that carbon capture and storage projects are actually included in this bill.

The Alberta government has earmarked $2-billion for carbon capture as it looks to improve Alberta's environmental reputation. At the same time it wants to boost production of carbon-intensive oil sands crude and continue to generate most of its electricity from coal.

That's from your own website. If the province is going to promote and sell this to the people and to the taxpayers of Alberta, that's fantastic, but then also do it in the bill and make sure that carbon capture and storage projects are referenced in here and are clear and concise as to what's going forward.

The province has also backed carbon capture projects planned by Royal Dutch Shell PLC's oil sands operation and Swan Hills Synfuels, which is planning to fuel a 300-megawatt power plant using synthetic gas created by heating coal deposits deep underground. Again, the Alberta government is partnering on carbon capture and storage projects. If you're going to partner on carbon capture and storage projects, then there's no reason to eliminate them or hide them out of the bill. If you're going to funnel taxpayer money, then there's no sense why we wouldn't reference them in the bill and make sure that it's clear and concise and transparent to all taxpayers and also to the regulator. If you leave it out, the regulator has a grey area as to how to deal with carbon capture and storage projects. Clearly, this is a priority of the Alberta government because they're more than willing to spend significant billions of dollars, billions of dollars that could literally be used elsewhere to build infrastructure, to build schools, to add to our health care system. Instead, we're funnelling it into an industry, and the industry itself is not so sure that they believe in it.

You were talking about that the implied experts would have an opportunity to have a say in this bill on the board of directors and everything. Well, here TransAlta is telling you that the project of carbon capture and storage, this one in particular, may or may not be the answer for the future. The project's name is Project Pioneer. It was cofunded by the Alberta government and the federal government. We are putting money into carbon capture and storage projects, but we're leaving them, eliminating them from this bill. If it's not a big deal, then just put it into the bill. If that allows the regulator to have a clear and concise line – "What am I responsible for? What are we streamlining? What projects are what?" – then literally they can do what's best for Albertans, and the board of directors can do their job properly. Ultimately with this bill, clearly, that's what we're trying to achieve. If we really want to talk about fairness and openness and landowners and a win-win for industry and all that, and if we're truly going to funnel money into carbon capture and storage projects, then just cover it in the bill. It's not a big deal. It's not hard to do.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be brief. I did just want to briefly add some comments to what the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster had suggested. I just want to add some context. When we were coming up here talking about how, you know, there is the potential for leaks, it's not about the world crumbling at our feet. I'll table this tomorrow so you can have a look at it. CBC published an article on June 28, 2010. [interjections] Oh, I'm sorry that the hon. Minister of Infrastructure doesn't find the CBC a credible media outlet.

I will just quote from it:

Prof. Gary Shaffer from the Danish Center for Earth System Science examined a range of CCS methods to determine their effectiveness and long-term impacts... "CCS has many potential advantages over other forms of climate geoengineering," says Shaffer. "However, potential short and long-term problems with leakage from underground storage should not be taken lightly."

It goes on to say:

The study reveals leakage of sequestered CO<sub>2</sub> could cause large-scale atmospheric warming, sea level rise and oxygen depletion, acidification and elevated CO<sub>2</sub> concentrations in the ocean.

2:00

The Chair: Hon. member, are you going to tie that back to the amendment?

Mr. Wilson: I most certainly will, Mr. Chairman, and I again will be brief.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Wilson: It goes on to say:

Dr. Peter Cook, chief executive of the Co-operative Research Centre for Greenhouse Gas Technologies, says Shaffer's figures for geological sequestration mirrors the conclusions reached by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change...

Which I'm sure we can all remember as the governing board of the United Nations that basically framed Kyoto and other massive climate change regulations across the world.

Again, I recognize that this is a contentious issue. There are members on the other side that are going to stand up and fight and defend until they're blue in the face the fact that we're spending all of this money on projects. Some of them fail. Some of them don't. Some of them go ahead. Some of them might not. At the end of the day this is Albertans' money. This is taxpayer dollars. There is public interest here. That is why I support this amendment wholeheartedly, and I would urge the government side to reconsider their position because, quite frankly, it doesn't make any sense.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. To the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster: I agree with much of what you've said. I heard that directly from industry also, that if you want to play in this international market today, this is the price we are currently paying. But does it have to be the continued price? That is the question. When I did bring up the issue of a failure, it was in that Weyburn field, but I don't think it was the storage as much as it was the use of CO<sub>2</sub> for enhanced recovery that caused that failure. I would have to double-check the facts on that. My wife is from that region, and that's why we were somewhat involved with the actual landowners that were there.

It is important to realize... [interjection] Oh, absolutely. I'm talking about carbon capture and why we should have the amendment. The amendment talks about any proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage, and it talks about investigation and inquiry. What I'm responding to is that investigation and inquiry. It's important. Investigation and inquiry should be in this amendment because when we look at this on a broader plane, on investigating and inquiring about carbon capture, there are other methodologies that can be usurped and utilized. One of those is carbon reduction. I guess that would definitely fall under an energy resource project because it all ties right back.

If we're dealing with this issue, which is significant because it's in the public interest – our oil sands is the economic engine not just of this province; it is the economic engine of Canada. It is extremely important. There's no one else in here that would be opposed to our Keystone or Gateway pipelines, I do not believe. These both give us access to markets.

An Hon. Member: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Anglin: It has everything to do with it, good hon. member, because this is about an energy project. With the idea of enhancing our energy projects on an economic basis – we're talking about the social and economic effects, which are right here in this amendment – they should be considering this. This is important. To say that those pipelines are not important to our social and economic prosperity, I would disagree with you. They are. They absolutely are. These issues are really important for the regulator to consider.

Now, we talk about the price to play, and I'm going to quote the member on this. It wasn't my intention to incite fear at all, but I did hear directly from the energy people themselves, from CCS, that they know they have to develop the technology. It is not where they want it to be. So it isn't that we're not doing it in Weyburn or not trying to do it elsewhere, but to the level that we want to do it, we have not developed a major technology. That's significant. That's why this amendment is being brought forward so that the regulator has a chance to actually look at this.

When we actually fully implement this, they know that we're going to build a major pipeline. That pipeline has to have a major transmission line to actually power it. There's going to have to be a tremendous amount of energy utilized to push that CO<sub>2</sub> and then push it underground. That's a fact. I mean, that's not something that's even remotely arbitrary in the theoretical sense. They know pretty much what it will take.

There are other technologies that need to be developed to make this work to their advantage on the level or scale that they want it to work. Really, where a lot of that technology is affecting the carbon capture and the consideration of the social and economic benefits of the project, economic effects, is how we're going to be able to capture that. That's really important because not all processes that produce CO<sub>2</sub> can recapture the CO<sub>2</sub>. I mean, that's just a fact.

Dealing with our coal plants is a prime example. In our coal generation only in the gasification combined cycle, or the gasification of the coal, can there be any possibility of capturing the CO<sub>2</sub>. In your pulverizing method, which is the dominant method that we burn coal in, you cannot. Now, the reason I'm bringing up coal is that that produces more CO<sub>2</sub> than anything we have going on up in Fort McMurray. The pictures up in Fort McMurray are great. Mostly that's steam although they do produce a lot of CO<sub>2</sub> but not on the scale that our coal plants do.

Here we're dealing with a situation, when we talk about the social and economic effects of a project and particularly its effects on the environment, where if we're able to deal with this matter in the inquiry and the investigation and come up with alternatives that support this so that you're not just relying upon pumping CO<sub>2</sub> underground but you have a chance to reduce the CO<sub>2</sub> emissions by just straight reductions, that's significant. I talked about that hydro project, which, by the way, the oil sands working group is very much interested in, and those members who are on the SRD committee got a little bit of insight into that and will probably get more.

If we can retire those coal plants that do not meet gasification standards, that is going to make a significant reduction in CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. That helps these energy projects, which is what we're talking about when we give the regulator the chance to inquire and investigate in dealing with the social and economic effects, which, when I look at it, is about the social and economic prosperity. That's a great way to push this. That helps our industry just as much as the capture and pushing it underground.

There is a wide range of what this amendment can do by putting it in there and asking the regulator to look at it with a very broad brush. That's the importance of the public interest. Just to sort of reference back to the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, the public interest is to assist, not subsidize but assist, our industry to get that bitumen extracted and to the market. We are doing that, I think, in good faith and in many cases efficiently, but there are problems in our way. We know we need to build pipelines to make that work better. We know we need to deal with the CO<sub>2</sub> to make it more efficient and more palatable for our market. But one thing is absolutely clear. What we have is a strategic resource, and if you look at that, it's an international strategic resource. There are two main players that are really looking at our bitumen, the U.S. military and the Chinese economy. They both have their eyes on that. At that level, looking at it from there, this is where we have a price to pay, which is the carbon capture. You want to play; you have to pay. I'm just paraphrasing the hon. member.

We know that our market, particularly in the U.S., has significant issues dealing with CO<sub>2</sub> and global warming, climate change, but China is no different. If you really look at the Chinese market, they are doing things that are not good, and they are well ahead in other areas of doing things that are good. There are important aspects of showing or leading the way in the extraction of our resource and developing that in a way that our market is not offended by.

We give this authority to our regulator to be charged with the conduct of any inquiry or any investigation with respect to the project. It will consider matters when it's conducting this inquiry or investigation, "give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest." That's that broad term we've discussed multiple times today, that we continue to discuss, and that I will continue to discuss because this is where that public interest now comes into play.

It is so important. It's not one individual landowner. We all benefit. In my riding, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, we benefit. With the development of our oil sands most of my constituents that work in that industry travel up to Fort McMurray. That's where their wages are earned, and they come back down on their time off. To say that it is not in the public interest would be wrong. It very much is so. I would say that its economic effect is felt in Rocky. It is felt in Sundre, Eckville, Benalto, Bluffton, Hoadley. I represent 37 communities, counting the unincorporated summer villages, and each one on its own merits thinks it's as large as the next one, regardless of whether it's incorporated or not. All of their issues are just as important as the next community's, and rightfully so. This development of our resource, the oil sands, is just as important to each one of those communities.

On this issue of dealing with our resource, giving the regulator the ability to consider the social and economic effects of the project, as broad a term as that is, has practical applications in our society. That's why it's so important that I convince all members to support this amendment.

An Hon. Member: That's going to happen.

Mr. Anglin: Well, you know, if it happened, we'd probably go home, but that's beside the point.

I'm willing to do what it takes to try to convince you. It has all the merits of being a very good amendment, where we could find some common ground, and we could use some common ground, actually.

What we've not talked about and I do want to now start speaking about are the effects on the environment because that's another part of this amendment. What a lot of this is about, the underlying premise of this whole issue, the amendment, the concept of the development of each one of these projects, is the environment. We would not be engaging in carbon capture whatsoever if there was not that underlying concern of: what is going on with the environment? There are a number of aspects to this. In the context of global warming and climate change it is the increased levels of CO<sub>2</sub>. That's why we're engaging in carbon capture. In the context on a local level of pushing CO<sub>2</sub> underground, there is a natural fear. There's a natural fear among property owners that it won't work, and I'm not so sure science can cure that.

I think the only thing that can cure that is time. In the end science will play a major role, but over time the confidence and the trust of a property owner will only evolve once we have systems in place that show that it is working and that it is not causing problems.

Where the fear comes in, it's more the fear of the unknown than the fear of so-called rumours. I think it's a natural fear for a lot of people. They don't have the trust-me attitude towards government, unfortunately. We would like to think they do, but they don't. So here we have government involved and government proposing it, but what we really know is that it is private industry that's doing it.

What people want is to make sure, first and foremost, that the environment is protected. Each energy project in its own right poses certain risks. When you're dealing with carbon capture, it isn't just about pumping it underground and the risk of it bubbling out. You now have pipelines that are considered, and I tell you that there are certain risks with pipelines. First Nations, I just discovered, aren't particularly fans of pipelines because they basically open up areas that affect wildlife. It provides grazing areas for deer, which they feel impacts elk and moose populations. They're very interesting arguments.

So when you're dealing with this and you're looking at the public interest test and you're applying that to the protection of the environment, I will say first-hand that I don't know of anybody that knows the environment better in my riding than the First Nations people that live there and have lived there for, I guess, thousands of years. They still hunt and they still trap on their traditional lands, and they probably know more about the wildlife and the wildlife habitat and habits than our own SRD people. They are an extremely valuable source of information when you're dealing with this issue.

That concept of social and economic: it's not just about the farmer. It's not just about the communities of Rimbey or Sundre. It is also about our First Nation communities that live out there. Their attitude and their understanding are quite a bit different from the residents of Rimbey, the residents of Sundre, and that has to be respected. No one is saying that we're going to disrespect that, but what's happening here is that we get to take that into consideration when we're dealing with the social and economic effects of a project, particularly on the environment. That's what this amendment puts into legislation, and it makes a requirement of this regulator. It expands the vision of what's going on with the development. [interjections] I'm fine. They can gaggle all they want. I'm good. I'm not listening. I'm just talking to you.

This concept is extremely important not just for the particular project but for the mandate of the regulator to apply the law to consider every aspect of these projects, particularly the carbon capture, as it says here, "in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project." So you've got three elements to the amendment, not just one. When you look at the energy resource project, that takes into consideration electricity generation. That takes into consideration the coal extraction, just for the purpose of extracting coal, or any other resource that we would extract and sell to the market. That's only logical. That only makes sense.

Each one, of course, Mr. Chair, will have a different impact or a different effect. How else are we going to gauge the impact of all this unless we take a step back and a broader look at the economic impact? It isn't just about the wages. It is about the quality of life of Albertans. I would argue that that quality of life is impacted by the quality of the environment, a lower environmental footprint, and the science that helps us lower our environmental footprint when we consider the development of these projects. So this amendment opens up for the regulator a broad ability to actually take into consideration all of the various aspects that affect Albertans. It is something that we cannot take lightly. It is something that we must take seriously. It is an important part of what I think this regulator should do.

There are a number of examples I can bring forward. I'd like to use this example because it is significant. I used it in the example of notification, but it actually applies here also. In the community of Tomahawk there was a gas development project right next to an elementary school. This is a very tiny rural community. Like all small rural communities, kids are bused great distances to come into the community from off the farm to the local school. Well, there was a local sour gas well very close to the school. I think it was actually three sour gas wells that were proposed, but it was the one that was the problem, not the other two. The one that was a problem: it was so close to the school that parents were afraid. They didn't like the idea of sour gas and children mixing because they don't mix very well. There was a lot of consternation. There were a tremendous amount of problems. That situation could now pop up again, and this regulator would be faced with that problem.

So how did they handle it? That one is really about the social effect of a project more than, necessarily, the economic, and it's still a balance. The parents of those children had no right to standing for that project. [Mr. Anglin's speaking time expired]

I'll be back.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, what a pleasure it is to stand up and speak to the amendment on Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act, the amendment put forward by my wonderful colleague from Strathmore-Brooks. What a wonderful opportunity it is to be discussing this and being here in this democracy and exercising it at 2:40 in the morning.

I feel that we're on this amendment, and there still isn't consensus. It doesn't sound like there are many people that want to vote for this on that side of the aisle. You know, we're going to stand here, and we're going to convince you of this. I'm happy to be up here to do this.

What is this amendment on? This amendment is on the consideration of public interest, social and economic effects as well as the environment in the mandate of the regulator. What are we talking about with this? We're talking about statements of principle. Statements of principle are important, like the statement of principle that we bring the public interest into this. Now, why do we have statements of principle, and where do we have them? We have them in all pieces of legislation. We have them in our Constitution. We see it down in the neighbour to the south and their Constitution and in their state constitutions. Why do they have these statements of principle? Because they need to talk about things like public interest. We need to make sure that the public interest is being considered. A statement of principle is a perfect place to remind those that are going to exercise this act, our regulators, that this is a principle that is important to Albertans.

Now, if we don't state this, it will be forgotten about. I don't know how often it happened to the other members here, but, you know, when I was in school, if I wasn't constantly reminded of things by my parents, like to do your homework, I just kind of sat over there and never did it. Well, here's our reminder. Every time we open this act, there is that reminder to consider the public interest. When are we going to consider the public interest?

An Hon. Member: Every day, apparently.

Mr. Fox: Well, every day, yes. That's because we're going to pass this amendment to remind the regulators that they need to consider the public interest.

Where by any enactment the Regulator is charged with the conduct of a hearing, inquiry or other investigation in respect of a proposed energy resource project or carbon capture and storage project, it shall, in addition to any other matters it may or must consider in conducting the hearing, inquiry or investigation, give consideration to whether the project is in the public interest.

Again, we're talking about the public interest. Why? Because we need to remind the regulators that when they're dealing with these issues, the issues around conducting the hearing, inquiry, or investigation on matters like carbon sequestration, the public interest is to be given its just prudence.

Now, it's all well and good to say that this proposed legislation supports a balance between industry and landowners. However, we still need to give recognition to the public interest, to those that are affected throughout the province. We want to make sure that society is served by this piece of legislation. Now, the purpose of the new regulator is to move us forward, not backwards. Let's move forward with this. Let's pass this amendment. Let's make sure the public interest has a place in this new act, like it did in the ones that it's replacing.

It's really no secret that there have been times when the government has failed to act in the public interest, you know, especially for landowners. We saw it with Bill 19. We saw it in Bill 24, Bill 36, and Bill 50. I mean, they trampled on property rights, landowner rights. Let's recognize, again, the public interest, people who are citizens, the citizens of Alberta, you and me, who want to make sure that they're heard.

Let's remind the regulators that when they go out and enforce this act, they need to listen to all Albertans, not just to those that they think are directly affected but those that may be subsequently affected, like when the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was speaking about the citizens in Taber and the questions and concerns they had about the project that was going to be put next to that school. I mean, these are things we need to think about every day. We can't just forget because we're not reminded or our regulators are not reminded of having to keep the public interest in mind. I feel that this is important. I feel that this amendment is important. Stakeholders even have told us that this is a factor in making the new regulator function properly.

We need to make sure that this bill works and works properly and that we don't have to revisit it again in six months. I want to make sure that when we put this forward, when this Legislature puts this forward and puts it out there – and we have to abide by it – we don't have to come back and change it in six months. We want to keep a stable business climate in this province, and by having to constantly go back and amend pieces of legislation that we've just talked about, I mean, we're just up and down and up and down. It's not really a stable climate for business. We don't know what to expect, businesses don't know what to expect, and we want to make sure that we have a nice level of investment in this province and that they know that the regulations are level and that they're not going to be changed every six months because we can't get a bill right the first time it comes in front of the Legislature.

I think that it would be a great thing if this Legislature would come together and recognize that public interest needs to be a part of Bill 2, like it was for the preceding regulators, that have existed before the enactment of this bill. When we enact this bill, let's make sure that Albertans are heard, that the public interest is heard and acknowledged, and that our regulators are reminded of it every day. I mean, like I said earlier, this is a statement of principle, and it's an important statement of principle.

Now, I don't know what else I need to say to convince you. I don't know if there's anything else that I can say to convince you, but I'm going to keep going until you're convinced or until we run out of time here, and then I'm sure one of my colleagues would be happy to stand up and continue where I've left off.

As I was saying earlier, the purpose of this and the intent of this is to move us forward, not backwards, so let's move forward with this. Let's move forward with this amendment. Let's pass this amendment and put in legislation the public interest once again.

Thank you so much for your time. I'd like to thank the chair and the members around the centre desk and the lawyers for all the work that they've done on this tonight and for bearing with us as we try and convince you that the amendments that are being put forward, specifically this amendment, the public interest amendment that my friend from Strathmore-Brooks put forward, should be passed here today. Well, I guess it would be passed here early this morning. I keep referring to it as tonight because it doesn't feel like it's morning. It still feels like 7 p.m. It still feels like I've got three hours left before I even want to think about going home to bed.

Again, this is a great amendment. It's a common-sense amendment, and it's one that I think is simple and that Albertans would like us to pass here in this Legislature. I implore you, I ask you: please stand with us. Please pass this amendment so that our public interest is always considered when we're dealing with matters about proposed energy resource projects, carbon capture, and other storage projects as well as other energy projects that are put forward in the province.

Thank you so much for your time here this morning.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. A poor blind squirrel can't find a nut tonight, but we're going to keep on looking. This amendment is a good amendment because of the broad powers it gives the new regulator. It's important that the regulator have these broad powers. This is the public interest, that has been missed so far in all the amendments that we have been speaking about. The public interest is important. It's not public interest in the sense of infringing upon property rights. That's a debate we've already had. It's a public interest test on the economic and social effects of the project for the public at large. This is paramount to our income as a province. It is where we budget and build our hospitals and build our schools. This is what we use to improve and grow our economy.

This whole idea of not having the public interest is something where if it's lacking in this legislation, then we're missing an opportunity to look at a bigger and larger picture. I want to use an example of a situation west of Rimbey where we have a lot of landowners who participate in the oil patch in the sense that they not only work in it, but they welcome the development of oil and gas and pipelines across their property. They participate in this process. But what happens when something goes wrong? We're talking about not just the social but economic effects of a project. In this case what we had go wrong was a situation where on a pipeline that was proposed and constructed, the general contractor did not pay his subcontractor. Multiple property owners along that pipeline, whose value in land was roughly . . .

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. Anglin: That's the economic relevance. It's both social and economic, and I will get to the environment.

What happened to these people was that they ended up with a $6.2 million, $6.4 million lien on a quarter section that was only worth $400,000. The impact of that project on these people significantly affected their lives. We're not talking about just one or two people. We're talking about a dozen or more farmers who were directly and adversely impacted not on the development of the project, not on the application of the project but on the result of a contractor not meeting his requirements and the impact that caused on these citizens, and that's relevant.

What happened was that one person lost a deposit of roughly $30,000 that was going to be used for the purchase of the land. With a $6.4 million lien on a piece of property worth only $400,000, you can imagine that that land deal fell through. Another farmer was hurt because he used his property as leverage to buy his fertilizer. Well, what happened was that he was no longer allowed to leverage that land with a $6.2 million, $6.4 million lien on that.

Under this new bill there is no mechanism for the regulator to consider that wide economic effect. This was devastating for these farmers in the sense that particularly there were a couple of farmers who didn't understand the process, and they were just freaked out – that is the only way I probably could describe it – in the sense that they thought they were going to lose everything and then a whole lot more, and they suffered tremendously from that emotionally. This is what we talk about when we talk about the social effects. That was an emotional effect on many of these people.

When we look at a regulator going to these projects or reviewing these projects and taking the application, what this amendment allows is for the regulator to take a broader look beyond just the narrow scope of: this is where this development and the extraction are going to go, what it's going to do to the surrounding lands, the surrounding communities, the surrounding people, who initially were not going to be affected by it but ended up adversely affected by it. Giving the jurisdiction to the regulator to not only look at that but to regulate it and to deal with the issue is important. It's important not just to the landowner; it's important to the development of our resources. It's important to the streamlining process of getting things done efficiently without having to go to court, without holding up projects. In this case here the only thing that needed to happen was that those landowners needed to be made whole. That's it. Now, that didn't happen because that can't happen under the existing law. They suffered for no good reason because they wanted to participate in the development of our resources. That's unfair.

This amendment can change that. This amendment can bring this back into context and allow this regulator, who now has very broad powers anyway – when they by legislation have to have consideration for the social and economic effects of a project, they can step outside that narrow boundary that is currently in the bill and actually deal with problems outside that narrow scope. That's why it's so important.

It also goes to issues of water, which is a huge issue for the environment. There are a lot of projects dealing right now with water injection for the extraction of our resources. There's competition for our water. West of Rimbey we had a situation where one developer wanted to use as much water in one day as the town of Rimbey used in a month. That was significant, and that had the community upset. All the water was coming out of the same aquifer. As anyone knows, aquifers basically have to regenerate themselves. If the aquifer is not regenerating, then you have to take into consideration: what happens here? How do we deal with it? How do we manage it? That's going to impact the development of our resource.

It is important that we give confidence not just to Albertans but to our neighbours here and internationally. As the hon. member said, we pay a price internationally to play. It isn't just about CO<sub>2</sub> and the capture of CO<sub>2</sub>. It is also about dealing with our environment and setting a good example and going beyond that and actually doing something constructive, lowering our environmental footprint. With a regulator that's tasked with that responsibility, which this amendment does, we can take a look at the science that helps us reduce our environmental footprint. We can make decisions that allow us to optimize how we're going to develop the resource so that we not just protect Albertans but also protect some of our industries.

One of those industries is tourism, and it is significant. It is the second-largest industry in my riding, and I think it is either the second or largest industry that we deal with in Alberta. We draw a lot of international tourists, and there are people who make an income and a livelihood, and it's significant. Mr. Chair, as I focus now on the effects on the environment, in my riding we could easily have as many as 60,000 people head out to the foothills west of Rocky on any given holiday weekend, and that is huge. That is a huge industry and a huge income for all those tourism operators out there, whether they're running lodges or outback excursions. We have helicopter companies out there giving tours of the icefields, and we have buses upon buses with those really, really nice German tourists that come over to spend their money.

An Hon. Member: Because we met them in London at the Olympics.

Mr. Anglin: They stayed in all those empty hotel rooms.

All humour aside, Mr. Chair, it is a huge industry, and any effect on the environment affects that industry. With the development of our oil resources or our natural resources – this amendment talks about “proposed energy resource project” – we have a huge forestry industry that works out on the west side of my riding. For those who don't understand, my riding goes from east of Gull Lake all the way to the B.C. line. It is a two-and-a-half-hour journey to get from one side to the other. There are people that live out there, and it's huge on any given day in the winter with the snowmobiling and the quading, and it has a huge population in the summertime dealing with the issue of horseback riding, quading, hiking, canoeing, and all the outdoor activities that take place.

There's that balance. That's the balance of the social and economic benefits, the social and economic effects of a project. We still want to develop these projects, but we want the regulator to be able to balance the effects, to maximize not just the resource but to maximize how these other industries can flourish out west, where I'm at, and, of course, everywhere else in Alberta where development crosses with other industries or in relations with other industries.

Going back to carbon capture, what happens now is that we develop carbon capture to the degree that industry needs it to rise to. It has to do it without the advantage of actual CO<sub>2</sub> reduction. What we're looking at is significant development of this CO<sub>2</sub> or carbon capture and where we're going to store that, how we're going to store that, how's it's going to affect those communities, and the social and economic impact on those communities. Without the broad authority to evaluate that, to create an inquiry as to the various impacts – how it's going to spread, what it will do to the environment – if the decision is made absent of this, in my mind, we would be creating an injustice on the public at large, which, in dealing with the public interest, would be just a miscarriage of justice. So in creating that mandate, we're back to the public interest. It is important. It is not about stepping on property rights, but it's about also protecting property rights of multiple property owners in the community, in the area, in the jurisdiction where this project is going to be developed. I will tell you that this is not a minor subject. This is not something that is obtuse. This is serious in the overall impact of our economic activity, to be able to look at not just the social benefits but the economic benefits and the effects on both that any project will bring.

Now, on the issue of the environment should we have any type of seepage or leakage of CO<sub>2</sub>, whether it be by a pipeline accident, whether it be by an injection that failed – I'm not talking about the earth itself, I'm talking about the equipment that's actually there. How much CO<sub>2</sub> is released, and what effect would that have? I don't have a clue, but I would want the regulator to be looking at that very scenario to make sure that we do things right.

I'll give you an example of how that changes. We pipe oil and gas today. We have a regulator today that has investigated an oil leak in the Red Deer River. As a direct result, I know that from the Energy side we're going to do an investigation. But what's changing now is quite interesting. We have pipeline companies who are piping the oil, Plains Midstream being one, who are doing things differently. They're not mandated yet, but they don't want these accidents. This is a public interest area now. This is not about just the private owner. So they're doing things completely differently. They're drilling down deeper. They're using what I would call double-hulled – I think double pipe is what they're referring to. They have the technology today that they were not utilizing, that they were not applying prior to the accident. So it's more of a horse-out-of-the-barn routine. What they're doing is voluntarily using the new technology, and other industry members have now adopted that.

What has not happened is for a regulator to come in and say: "You know what? That technology that you are moving to sets the bar a little bit higher than what we were utilizing earlier." Mandating that, giving the regulator the power to mandate that and impose that would be done under this amendment. We're dealing with section B, where they would take into consideration the social and economic effects plus the effects on the environment. That would give them the authority to actually make those changes, to set another higher bar, another standard that industry could meet.

I will tell you this. The projects of reputable members of our industries that actually raise that bar do us a justice. I'm not a big believer in self-regulation only for the reasons of those that would cheat, but on the issue of having a regulator have those broad authorities, that regulator can act universally to raise the bar on the
