Mr. Anderson: If we had just saved the interest, that $30 billion of interest, left it alone, not added another cent from 1986 on, not even the $3 billion that were added by the government during that time, Mr. Chair, today our heritage fund would be worth well over a hundred billion dollars, likely closer to $200 billion because of the power of compound interest. But we didn't do that. We leeches onto it. We spent it. The government of Alberta spent it like its own personal piggy bank, and we are here in 2013 with nothing to show for it. We've wasted our savings. We haven't grown the trust fund. Nothing. It is the most incompetent fiscal mismanagement that not only this province has ever seen but this nation has ever seen. Don't come and talk to Albertans about fiscal discipline and about all the wonderful things that you've done with a record like that.

Now, you can campaign and talk about what you're going to do different to make that not happen over the next 10, 15, 20 years, but don't say that you've got a sterling record of managing this province's finances. It is the most damning indictment possible. What has occurred under previous administrations is awful, and it needs to stop on a go-forward basis.

You know, I do look forward to the budget debate, and we'll be bringing a lot more forward. We'll be bringing some solutions forward for how to deal with this, and we hope that the government will be open to those solutions. We hope that they will have already adopted some of those solutions as their own, which is great, fantastic. If we can come up with solutions that we all agree with for cutting spending in places where we don't need it, that's something to celebrate. I don't care who gets the credit.

Let's just get on the road to financial recovery and not do what we just did over the past 25 years. It's 25 years of total embarrassment other than a brief time where Premier Klein cut the debt that had been put in place primarily by Premier Getty. It wasn't for his whole tenure, unfortunately – the spending got out of control in the last five years – but in those first few years that was a bright spot, and that was something to show.

The Chair: Hon. member, your 10 minutes have expired.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much.

The Chair: An opportunity for the minister to respond if he chooses.

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Chair, I shouldn't get up, but I'm going to. A lot of rhetoric there. I think that first of all we have to understand that this is now a province of 3.8 million people. It's not 1.2 million people. Some of the people in the opposition like to think that we're still back in the good old days. The fact of the matter is that we're not. When I came here in 1978, I think there were 1.2 million people in this province.

An Hon. Member: I wasn't even born then.

Mr. Campbell: Well, there you go. There you go.

You know, Mr. Chair, we've heard comments about different jurisdictions. People are saying: well, look at Alaska, for example. Let's look at Alaska. The roads are in disarray. Employment is not very good. They're asking us for bitumen because their pipeline is not going to be operating here very quickly if they don't get product going through it.

Mr. Hehr: They're getting out of oil.

Mr. Campbell: Well, they're not getting out of oil. They've got no oil. They'd like to stay in oil.

The Chair: Through the chair, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Campbell: Also, Mr. Chair, as I say, you know, we've seen unprecedented growth in this province. When I look at the opposition and I look at the demands that they've made, they have the same concerns in their ridings, but they don't want to talk about that. They want new schools. They want new hospitals. They want new roads. They want recreation centres. You know, to sit there and say, "We're going to be fiscally responsible" and then to come and say to the government, "Well, we want these same demands from you" is a little hypocritical.

Our Premier, Mr. Chair, has made it very clear that we're going to spend within our means, that we're going to continue to build infrastructure, and that we're going to have a savings plan. We're going to keep money in the heritage trust fund, and we're going to have a savings plan. Even in tough times we're going to save money. So we are moving in the right direction.

I think that, again, to sit here and say that 25 years ago the government did bad things – the fact of the matter is that you look at what happened over the years. To bring Premier Getty's name forward, I can remember that in rural Alberta people were very happy with the decisions that Premier Getty made at the time when he made them because rural Alberta was in real tough shape. There were people about to lose their farmlands, and Premier Getty and this government made sure that they didn't.

As each Premier has come through this Chamber – and, fortunately, they've been Progressive Conservative Premiers – they've all done good things for this province. I'm proud of what Premier Klein did, I was proud to serve with Premier Stelmach and proud of the work that he did, and I'm proud to serve with this Premier. They all came with different ideas and different visions, but at the end of the day they all came forward to look after what was best for Albertans and best for this province. I have complete confidence in our Premier. When she goes forward, when she talks about the Canadian energy strategy, when she talks about world-class education, when she talks about ending child poverty, when she talks about looking after the most vulnerable, Mr. Chair, you can take those words to the bank. She will do that. This caucus is proud to stand behind her, and I'm proud to be part of this government. Again, as I said before, I'm looking forward to our budget, and I'm looking forward to our Finance minister going out and having that dialogue with Albertans. Albertans can be excited about where this province is going to take us in the next 20, 25 years.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The next 20 minutes are for the fourth party.

Ms Blakeman: Third.

The Chair: The third party. My apologies, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you have the floor.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It has been an interesting afternoon so far. I don't know how successful we will be at getting answers for some of the more minute questions I had proposed for each ministry given the fact that we only have one representative from cabinet here to deal with all that. Frankly, I will say that I am disappointed in that. [interjection] Sir, we're all here for three hours. We take supplementary supply relatively seriously. It is $500 million in spending that is occurring that's going to affect Albertans, affect our budget in a manner, and in my view the government didn't treat this exercise seriously. I'll leave that as it may be. I understand the hon. member here is doing the best he can.

Nevertheless, I will pick up and use this as an opportunity to talk about some things that I saw happening out there over the course of the last 40 years and where we are now and to say that actually I agree with many of the comments made by the hon. Member for Airdrie, and I don't often do that, you might know. We don't see things the same way. We don't see the role of government the same way. We usually don't see spending or fiscal matters the same way. But I will say that he is absolutely correct in using the term "intergenerational theft." He used that term, which is a bold term and one that I think he discussed very well. That is what has happened over the course of the last 40 years, intergenerational theft. That is the only way you can describe where we are at this juncture in Alberta.

I'll elaborate on that. Since 1971 we have brought in $350 billion in nonrenewable resource revenue. As you are aware, Mr. Chair, once you sell a barrel of oil, you never have that barrel of oil to sell again. Wise fiscal planning would say that you have to convert that into another asset. You have to convert that cash you get from a barrel of oil or a hectolitre or whatever of natural gas or something of that nature into an asset. We have a vehicle to do that. It's called the heritage trust fund, that was devised to recognize that this is a one-time opportunity that we're going to get to sell these treasured resources. To be honest, sir, we have not done a very good job as a government in planning for the eventual day when, one, we'll either run out of oil and gas or, two, the world will move on. Those are two things that are without a shadow of a doubt going to happen to Alberta, and if people in this room believe that agriculture and tourism are going to carry the day after that's gone, well, I believe they are fundamentally misguided.

Turning towards the time I've been in the Legislature over the last five years, let's talk about the spending. I had in the main agreed with Premier Stelmach's decision to continue to build Alberta at that time. I continue to agree with this Premier, depending on what's happening in tomorrow's budget – we'll wait and see – to build infrastructure and the like. I understand why it behooves us to build schools, roads, and hospitals. I do not have a problem with that. In fact, I think those are wise government expenditures. But, believe me, that intergenerational theft continued under the last year of this administration, and depending on what happens tomorrow and, I guess, in future years, that intergenerational theft could continue.

There are a couple of moral propositions out there that you can do. You can cut the budget by $6 billion – okay? – and take that to the electorate and say: "You get your low taxes, you get to drive on substandard roads, your kids can stay in schools that are overcrowded, and that is the price you pay for low taxes, or you can continue to spend and build Alberta." Here's a novel approach. You can ask Albertans to pay for the services that they're using today, for the services that they have used over the last 40 years that we have just decided to pay for through intergenerational theft, or the use of our nonrenewable resource revenue.

That, to me, if we do not raise revenue, is just saying that that's all right, that it's simply all right to treat this nonrenewable resource revenue as something we paper over deficits with, use in our daily lives. Let the future generations take care of themselves because – guess what? – they don't vote anyway. It's probably, actually, the wisest strategy for your party to go with. There are projections out there that maybe see oil and gas revenues going up, and by the sheer volume of bitumen we may – and I use the term "may" – be selling into the marketplace, we'll be all right. The Tories save the day. By the way, it's common knowledge out there for many people that you guys put the oil and gas in the ground anyway. So let's just carry on this way and leave it to the next crisis for a government to have the temerity to deal with our fiscal structure.

I am a recovering lawyer; I am not an economist. If you look at virtually every economist over the last 20 years, in the main they say that our fiscal structure is broken. You guys can get up in your press conferences and deny that, but I'd encourage anyone with an ounce of care for the future of this province and who wants to save something for when this province may not be in a better position to look at those reports. Ask yourself: what is right? If you ran as a progressive – and I think many of you over there did – ask yourself: was being a progressive just simply to spend the oil wealth faster? Well, if it was, you know, to me, that's not right, and you obviously didn't have a concept of finance or what that entails. I mean that. If you want to continue doing this, ask the citizens to pay for it, okay? I believe it would be the right move.

Between us and Saskatchewan, the second-lowest tax jurisdiction, there is a $12 billion gap. From a perfectly moral principle you'd say: well, why wouldn't we just adopt something to that effect and save this oil and gas revenue for the future? I realize that may not be politically easy. It would be a tremendous moral argument to make. But, to me, even taking back half of that, looking Albertans in the eye and saying, "We're still the lowest tax jurisdiction by a country mile; we're going to pay a little more as we go and save some of this one-time resource for future generations," if your government wants to continue building Alberta, which it sounds like your Premier does – I understand the caucus is all over the place on what they want to do. I guess you guys have got to decide that in the next year.

Really ask yourselves. If you are a progressive, you've got to ask citizens to pay for it. If you want to be, I guess, a fiscal hawk and do what the Wildrose is doing, well, whack the budget by $6 billion. Okay? Having it both ways is really just lazy. It's lazy politics. It's unfair. It is intergenerational theft. That's why I agree with the Member for Airdrie when he said that. I believe it was a valid and fair comment.

How much time do I have, sir?

The Chair: Thirty seconds, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Out of his first 10?

The Chair: Out of the first 10.

Mr. Hehr: Thirty seconds. Well, I won't be able to get into any detailed questions. Nevertheless, I might see if the minister can provide for me the number of students that came into this province that you had to top up on a per-student grant.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Minister, would you like to respond to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo?

Mr. Campbell: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I always enjoy hearing the Member for Calgary-Buffalo talk about his ideas. I always find them quite interesting. I can say that I don't always disagree with everything he says, but with some of the things he did say today I do have to disagree.

You know, the sense I got from across the floor is that on this side of the floor we're getting rich doing something here, that we're walking away with piles of money, that we just take great delight in spending money, that we make lazy decisions.

I sat as an MLA and found it challenging. I found the work challenging. One thing I can say is that nothing prepares you for coming into this House as an MLA. There's no job out there that prepares you to come here. Then the Premier had the faith to make me a minister, and I can tell you that it's no place for lazy people. [interjections] No. Let me finish. I mean, we don't make lazy decisions on this side of the House. We make very informed decisions. We make decisions based on what we think is the best for Albertans.

Going forward, when we're looking at our budget, as I said, our Premier has a vision. We're going to save money. We're going to continue to build infrastructure. We're going to spend within our means on our operating side of things. You know, I think it's important to understand that saving money in good times and bad times is a step out of the ordinary. Even when times are bad, we're going to put money in the bank, which means that we're not going to be able to finance some programs as we have in the past. That's going to bring some hardship to some Albertans.

I look at, you know, the roads we build and the infrastructure. I look at our schools, our hospitals. I look at the wages that we pay our public sector. We're the highest paid anywhere in Canada. Again, we're taking that money and investing in our future. When you talk about oil and gas, the fact of the matter is that as we diversify our economy – and we will do that because the Premier has a vision of that – the oil and gas is going into research and technology. Money from oil and gas and from forestry and from coal mining and from agriculture is going into building some world-class institutions in this province, our postsecondary institutions. We have some of the best research people anywhere in Canada or the world working in this province right now.

From that, we will diversify our economy. We're moving so that our budget is not dependent just on oil and gas. We know that's not going to be there forever. We know that, coming out of the ground, once it's out, it's gone. We've got to get the best bang for our dollar when we bring it out. We're going to continue to work on that. We're going to continue to invest in research and technology, and we're going to continue to make sure this province stays competitive in agriculture, for example.

There are lots of good things going on in agriculture. One thing is important. There are going to be six countries in this world in the next decade that are going to be able to export food. Canada is going to be one of them. When you go down to Medicine Hat and look at the commercial greenhouses they have in Medicine Hat that they've been able to build through the irrigation work that we've done, that I think they're heating with natural gas from the area, we're taking land that probably in any other part of the world wouldn't be farmable. The minister was just down there last week. I flew back with him, and I saw the red peppers and the cucumbers and the tomatoes that he took out of those greenhouses in the middle of winter. That's what we're investing in. That's how we're going to diversify our economy and make this province what it is today.

The fact of the matter is that oil and gas is going to get us there and that forestry is going to get us there. We'll continue to invest in forestry. Why? Because next to agriculture, forestry is the most sustainable industry in this province. It's a green industry. We cut the trees; we plant the trees. We cut the trees; we plant the trees. Forestry gets it. I mean, they've had to change their ways of doing business to be able to sell their product world-wide because the customer dictated to them to do that. As we move forward as a province, we're going to continue to look at that innovation that you're talking about, we're going to continue to look at research and technology, we're going to continue to diversify this economy, and we are going to have something here for future generations. You know, it's not all about us. It's got to be about our kids.

When I go around the province in my portfolio, Aboriginal Relations, when I visit the chiefs and councils on 48 different reserves in this province, of which I think I've hit 27 now, we talk about doing things for the children. People like me: they're going to stick tubes in me and keep me alive because we have a good health care system, right? But the fact of the matter is that we have to make sure that we have a system in place for education and health care and economic opportunities for our young people. When you see our budget tomorrow, it's going to be about that. It's going to be about the future. It's going to be about making sure that we live within our means.

I look at, you know, the supplementary estimate for education. We're asking for $24 million, and $12 million of that is related to unexpected increases in student enrolment. As the committee knows, much of our funding is tied to students. As the number of students rises, so does our investment. That's what we spend it on. Then, of course, we have to have more teachers, so we're going to spend money on teachers. The actual increase in cost due to enrolment is $29 million. We've been able to offset a significant amount by year-end savings in the department.

The remaining $12 million that we're asking for, $12,289,000 to be exact, is for the Alberta contribution to the new College Park school in Lloydminster, which is cost shared with our neighbours in Saskatchewan. Under the Lloydminster charter Alberta funds the new construction in accordance with the government of Saskatchewan's capital planning processes, approvals, and guidelines. The total amount of Alberta's share is based on the residency of students who will eventually be attending that school. Again, we're able to reprofile $1.4 million from other school construction projects to put towards the total cost of $13,714,000. I look at what the Minister of Education is asking for for student increases. I mean, we're increasing. That's just the way it is. We can't build schools quick enough. We'd like to build more, okay?

When we go to advanced education and we talk about why we're looking for money in advanced education, two key areas. First of all, it's due to the enhancement within the student aid program. We have a 29 per cent increase in students going to postsecondary, and to me that's a good thing, that we're going to increase our student loans and allow more people to go to postsecondary. Without those student loans some people would not be able to go to postsecondary, and I think everybody should have that chance or that choice to go. The cool thing about this is that we recover over 98 per cent of our student loans, so this is a very good program. We're helping people get an education, they're graduating, and they're paying the money back to Albertans. Again, I think that when we look at advanced education, the lion's share, you know, is for the student aid program.

The other part of the program that we're looking for is in the minister's capital budget, and that's $13 million. Of course, that goes to the fact that the University of Alberta is looking at basic infrastructure upgrades for the Devonian Botanic Garden, and that's to accommodate the new Islamic garden, to be funded by a gift from the Aga Khan. Again, this money was initially approved in 2011-12, contingent on the gift from the Aga Khan. Unfortunately, that didn't happen. There were changes in the project plan, but it's expected that agreement will be signed this year. I look at that, and I think we're in pretty good shape.

I look at, you know, SRD. We're asking for $17.4 million for the joint Alberta-Canada implementation plan for oil sands monitoring. We're asking for $258 million for wildfire management and $39.8 million for mountain pine beetle mitigation. Now, I've already talked about the wildfire management and the importance of that, and I've talked about the mountain pine beetle mitigation and the importance of that.

The joint oil sands monitoring plan calls for unprecedented steps to enhance monitoring for air, land, water, and biodiversity. This plan improves our ability to detect changes in the environment and manages the cumulative effects on development. The enhanced monitoring program will be one of the most progressive of any industrially developed region in the world. Industry has committed to fund up to $50 million per year until fiscal year 2014-2015. In order to collect those funds in support of the joint plan, SRD is asking to increase its budget by $17.4 million, so we're spending $17.4 million to get $50 million from industry. I think that's a pretty good trade-off.

The other reason the joint monitoring is so important is that it gives us social licence. When you hear in the news about the Keystone pipeline, they're talking about social licence. When we talk about the oil sands or any natural resource extraction on the land site, people are talking about social licence. What does industry have to do to get that social licence? Again, I can tell you that in talking to First Nations and Métis around the province, areas like air quality, water quality, and biodiversity are all very important.

Some of you sat on the all-party committee on natural resources, and you listened to the presentations on the hydro proposal for the Slave River run of the river. You heard the concerns. There's social licence that we have to have for something like that go through. I think it's a great project. Then when you go and you talk about the Peace River and what B.C. wants to do in putting a dam on the Peace, you know . . .

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The next 20 minutes are reserved for members of the fourth party, and you can go back and forth. I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll make a few initial comments, and then I have several questions relating to the different portfolios. You know, I find it interesting that today we're debating roughly $500 million and the government's approval to spend that, yet we have only one minister of the Crown sitting here to debate on five different ministries, and when I say interesting, I mean that I find that frustrating. Acknowledging that, though, I realize that the minister across the way might not be able to answer some of my questions.

To start off the debate on this budget, I think it needs to be recognized that cuts to essential services won't be acceptable to many Albertans. I've had the privilege of touring Alberta for the last several weeks, visiting multiple cities along the way, listening to Albertans on the proposed deficit budget and how it's going to affect the services that they provide and deliver on the ground. I can tell you that the bulk of Albertans that I've spoken to and listened to have said that the last thing they want to see are cuts, especially in the areas of education, health care, and social services.

I find the most fascinating thing is the fact that many Albertans are left scratching their heads and wondering why they are facing a recessionary-style budget when they look around and see that our economy is quite strong at the moment. We've got healthy growth, as the Leader of the Official Opposition pointed out. Statistically Alberta has a very low unemployment rate right now – I believe it's around 4.3 per cent – and in cities all around the province workers are talking about having lots of opportunities for work. Our GDP is strong. So the question comes: well, then, why are we facing this style of budget?

It can only mean a couple of things. I know my colleagues from the Wildrose would say that there's a spending problem on the other side of the floor. I think there's more of a management issue going on here, you know, with things like hundreds of thousands of dollars going to be paid to high-level executives having extensive expense accounts instead of investing those dollars into front-line workers, that provide the bulk of services that we experience day to day.

I think the government should be looking at the revenue side of our situation. Again, Alberta is the wealthiest jurisdiction in North America, many argue, yet when we look at what's left in our heritage trust account, when we look what we're anticipating to be a skimpy amount left in the sustainability fund, there are no excuses. There are no reasons for this. As has been pointed out by colleagues on all sides of the House, the bitumen bubble argument is almost laughable considering that last year, at the start of the PC leadership race, the differential was somewhere around $36 a barrel. So nothing new.

Albertans, the ones that I've spoken with, I should clarify, have made it clear that they're not opposed to moving back to a progressive income tax system. They're in favour of charging a competitive rate for our royalties, competitive in other jurisdictions, maybe even collecting the royalties that are due to us. I find it almost laughable that we have companies with outstanding royalties due to Albertans, to the Crown, that they aren't even paying and that this government is failing to collect.

As well, looking at having a competitive corporate tax rate. I mean, there are many ways to address the revenue shortfall that this government is experiencing, but the fact of the matter is that if we continue to kick the can forward, to pass ailing and aging infrastructure and maintenance to future generations, we are merely robbing future generations. I think that's unacceptable, and many Albertans have communicated quite clearly that they're opposed to that.

Again, we need to look at investing in things like education. I've said this many times, that it's clear that on this side of the House education is viewed as an investment while I strongly believe that on that side of the House you view education as a cost as opposed to investing in our future generations and ensuring that Albertans will be competitive in the future.

The other thing that I find fascinating is diversification. The term "diversification" for this government, as was made clear in the Economic Summit, just means building more pipelines and shipping more of an unrefined product to an area where they already have a glut. I find that ironic coming from the party that should have a better handle on supply-and-demand economics. You know, when you're already getting a low price for something, pumping even more supply into the market isn't going to somehow magically increase what you're going to get paid for your product as opposed to looking at a long-term solution of investing in Alberta and investing in Albertans, whether we're looking at upgrading more of our product here.

Again, fascinating to learn that Alberta is the only jurisdiction that pumps out the least-refined product as opposed to other provinces in our own country or looking down south, where at least they understand that if we add value, we keep quality jobs in our own province. We can sell a much higher quality product.

I think what I'll do is that I'll allow the hon. minister to respond to that, and then I have numerous questions regarding the various ministries being debated this afternoon.

The Chair: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, for a young guy I think he needs some hearing aids. I think that within our MLA plan we can help him out because he hasn't been listening.

Education is an investment for this government. The Premier has made that clear on numerous occasions. The Education minister has made that clear on numerous occasions. If he's attended aboriginal communities, he's heard me say that on numerous occasions, that education is the key to close the socioeconomic gap between aboriginal communities and Albertans. We're going to continue to work on that. As a matter of fact, we came to agreement with the national chief last week in Edmonton and with the Premier on the work that we're going to do in education. To say that education is not an investment is totally wrong.

The other thing that the hon. member hasn't listened to is the Premier's talk about the Canadian energy strategy. She's talking about pipelines to the south, to the east, to the west, to the north, about opening up markets. We know that we have to get our product to tidewater to get the best market, but we understand that when you're a landlocked province like we are, you have to work with your neighbours. You have to form partnerships and alliances to get that product to market. We're doing that right now, and the Premier is leading that charge. She's been to Washington on a number of occasions just on the Keystone, but she's also talked to the different Premiers across the country and the Prime Minister about a Canadian energy strategy. People are now starting to wake up to that. They understand the importance of it.

What we do in Alberta helps everybody. It helps people in Ontario. It helps people on the east coast. You know, when you leave Alberta and you go to some of our other provinces, especially when you go to the Maritimes, businesses are boarded up. My family comes from Glace Bay. I can remember that Glace Bay was a booming coal-mining community for years. All of my family worked in coal mines. If you go to Glace Bay now, everything is boarded up. There is no more coal-mining industry. People are coming out here to work in Alberta because that's where they have a chance for a future. When you go into Ontario, look at all the manufacturing plants that were shut down that now have a future because of the oil and gas industry in this province and our Premier's vision of a Canadian energy strategy. So we are looking at what's good for Alberta, but we also understand that what's good for Alberta is good for Canada.

You know, again, I think that we are making decisions today for the future. I can tell you that we're making some tough decisions. As I said before and the Premier has made very clear in her prebudget talks, we're going to save money, we're going to build infrastructure, and we're going to live within our means, within our operating budget.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll start off just talking a little bit about Education. One of the areas is that $12 million has been requested to address unexpected increased student enrolment. My question to the minister: what was the enrolment projected to be, and how has it been exceeded?

Mr. Campbell: I'll get those numbers for the member, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.
Back to the hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. I imagine this is going to be a lot of back and forth. The Fort McMurray public school board talked about its budget problems based on a decreased enrolment even though the city is growing quite rapidly. Specifically, I'd like to know: where in the province has the unexpected increased enrolment occurred, whether it's a school board or even within a region?

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, those are numbers that I don't have at my fingertips and I would suggest that the minister wouldn't have at his fingertips either, but we'll get the numbers for the hon. member.

The Chair: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you for that.

Still on Education, looking at school facilities infrastructure, there's a request for just over $12 million for infrastructure. And a comment: priority initiative 2.4 of the 2012-15 business plan is to develop a strategic long-term plan to provide and maintain Alberta's school infrastructure. Considering that supplementary funds are being requested to support school facilities infrastructure, can the minister update this body on the progress that's been made on the strategic long-term plan?

Mr. Campbell: Again, I'd have to talk to the Minister of Infrastructure to get those numbers.

The Chair: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Moving over to Transportation. There's a certain irony that at this time last year the House was being asked to approve supplementary estimates for the GreenTRIP initiatives and the light rail transit. Now we're in the process of debating cost overruns for P3 ring roads, which seem to be somewhat problematic. Ring road costs were estimated at $305 million and now have a supplementary estimate of another $100 million. This is an enormous difference and a very poor original projection. What explains the massive cost overrun this past year? What are the unpredictable aspects of these projects, in fact, $100 million worth of unpredictability? If we could get some clarity on that, please.

Mr. Campbell: I'll make sure that the Minister of Transportation gets the information to the hon. member.

The Chair: Thank you.
Back to the hon. member.

The Chair: You have seven minutes and 33 seconds, sir.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. Moving on to Environment and Sustainable Resource Development – this was touched on previously, but I think it's something that is important enough to come back to – we're looking at $258 million of emergency spending for firefighting costs as a result of high wildfire hazard levels and high fire activity in some parts of Alberta's forest protection area. I find it interesting that for numerous years the practice has been to budget zero for fighting forest fires, yet every year Alberta finds itself in a position where, amazingly, we have forest fires. It must catch everyone off guard. Last year we budgeted zero and spent $250 million, that was approved during supplementary supply. That's a significant amount of money, so the question is: why doesn't this government plan a budget when it knows that there are going to be fires every year?

Mr. Campbell: I'll make sure that the minister of SRD gets back to the hon. member.

Just on the money, it's for firefighting, but it's important to note that $16 million is also to supplement the $990,000 that was made available from lower than budgeted capital in other programs. It's to convert a department-owned air tanker from piston to turbine engines. There are only two turbine conversion kits available world-wide. The department owns four amphibious aircrafts, which have been used in wildfire suppression since the mid-1980s. The department would like to proceed with converting the fourth aircraft, which is currently grounded because its engines are not serviceable, parts are in short supply, and it faces corrosion issues. This conversion will give ESRD greater suppression capability along the eastern slopes during wildfire management operations. Being that I live in the eastern slopes, I find that a pretty important thing to get accomplished.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. I'd like to thank the hon. minister for that clarification.

Looking again at Environment and SRD, there is $40 million of emergency spending for ground survey and control operations to fight the mountain pine beetle infestation. We know this problem exists. It happens on a yearly basis, yet again the government has budgeted zero for this. Question to the minister: knowing that this is a challenge that we're going to be facing and we're going to be spending money on it, instead of returning to this discussion year after year, why won't the government budget for the mountain pine beetle infestation?

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, it's not as easy as just budgeting the money. But I'll make sure that the minister gets back to the hon. member.

The Chair: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. I'm going to move on to Enterprise and Advanced Education. We have $18 million, roughly, requested for new completion grants, expanded part-time grants, and increases in program delivery support for student assistance programs. Question of clarification: how have the new completion grants been prioritized? According to the institution or demographics or region or type of program?

Mr. Campbell: I'll get the minister to get the answer back, but I am being told that every student that graduates gets a completion grant. I can also say that with the introduction of a flat-rate contribution of $1,500 reduced to zero for single parents; the elimination of savings, RRSP, part-time earnings, or parental contributions in determining loan eligibility; and replacing the previous loan remission program with completion incentive grants, what will happen when they graduate is that they'll get the grant.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
Hon. member, you still have three minutes.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, hon. minister.

Next, still sticking with advanced education, $13 million has been requested for postsecondary infrastructure, specifically at the U of A. I'm going to throw out some numbers here, so please bear with me. The postsecondary infrastructure budget line was around $600 million in 2010-2011 and forecasted at $268 million for '11-12. Estimates for '12-13 and beyond are at $76 million or below. With such a sharp decrease in postsecondary infrastructure funding expected going forward, how can we ensure that high supplemental amounts relative to this budget line will not be repeated in the future?

Mr. Campbell: Again, Mr. Chair, I'll get the information back to the hon. member from the department.

The Chair: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Continuing with this, nonbudgetary disbursements for support for the adult learning program – and nonbudgetary disbursements come from the general revenue fund – a sum of $124 million could be used to defray the costs. The $77.5 million is a large sum to allocate to support for the adult learning program. That's in addition to the almost $18 million being requested as a supplemental amount under 2.1 and 2.14 of the department's program spending. The question is: what steps are being taken to more accurately assess the higher than expected student loan disbursements?

Mr. Campbell: Again, we'll get the department to get the figures back to the hon. member.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, you still have a minute and a half.

Mr. Bilous: A minute and a half. Okay. I'll try to get this in.

Now moving on to Municipal Affairs, approximately $60 million is being requested to address the disaster recovery and municipal wildfire assistance programs. The requested amount is for both disaster recovery and municipal wildfire assistance programs. While disaster recovery is a specific line under the program spending for the Alberta Emergency Management Agency, municipal wildfire assistance programs are not a separate item. Does the municipal wildfire assistance program fall under disaster recovery?

Mr. Campbell: Again, that's an answer I'll have to get back to the hon. member on.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: The last question which I'll get into Hansard: what portion of the disaster recovery budget was originally dedicated toward the municipal wildfire assistance programs?

The Chair: The same: you'll endeavour to get that, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Campbell: Yeah, we'll get those numbers.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are you concluded, hon. member?

Mr. Bilous: Yes.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, the next 20 minutes is afforded to members of the government caucus should anyone wish to ask a question of the ministers. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Yes. Mr. Chair, I was actually quite shocked to hear the Leader of the Official Opposition speak so casually and unknowingly about results-based budgeting, quite frankly. It's all on the website.

Results-based budgeting was a bill that came in in the early part of 2012. Then the various departments and ministries have been working on information to be able to go through their costs in a results-based budgeting way. We call those people proponents. There are six categories of broad costs that are being looked at by the results-based budgeting process. There were six committees. The six committees met just before Christmas and sat with the proponents. The proponents actually laid out their plans to go through the results-based budgeting process right now and, indeed, up to the end of April, in that kind of time frame. Then the committees will come together again and look at the results of that.

I guess my question is: has anybody on the other side done any reading of the website, or do they have any idea at all what results-based budgeting is all about?

The Chair: Is this a question of the minister, hon. member?

Mr. Dorward: Well, sure, I will frame it that way. Minister, have you had any interaction with the results-based budgeting process, and what are your thoughts on it?

Mr. Campbell: Well, you know, my department hasn't been up yet to be involved in the process. But I can say from talking to the different MLAs that have been chairs of the committees that they found it a very worthwhile exercise and the public that we brought in to sit in on those committees have found the exercise very useful.

I think that, you know, going forward with what our Premier wants to do in results-based budgeting and what our Finance minister wants to do, we are headed on the right track. Again, we've just started the process. You know, I'm quite confident from what I've seen of it sitting on Treasury Board and what I've heard in the feedback from both MLAs that have chaired the committees and MLAs that have sat on the committee that we are headed in the right direction with results-based budgeting.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

For the rest of your 10 minutes, hon. member, do you have an actual question about the estimates?

Mr. Dorward: No.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other members of the government caucus that might have a question?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre for the next round of questions. You have five minutes, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: It's five and five?

The Chair: Yes.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. For those few that are following along at home and on the computers, thank you for expressing your interest in what we're doing here.

What's essentially happening is that the government has spent additional money, extra money above and beyond the budget that they presented last year, and they are required to come before the Assembly and explain to us why or give us the opportunity to ask questions about why they needed to spend extra money. In this case we've got about $450 million that they've actually gone over the budget with, and that money has been spent in the departments of Education, Enterprise and Advanced Education, Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, Municipal Affairs, and Transportation.

For three of them it's disaster recovery money. This government has an ongoing choice, and as you can tell, it makes everybody in the opposition a little crazy. They always underbudget it, and then every year they're back in front of us with a sup supply request when they know exactly how much money they've actually spent. It's sort of budgeting after the fact. I haven't been able to knock them off that particular way of doing things in my 17 years, so good luck to the rest of you that are trying.

On page 19 of the supplementary supply request from the general revenue fund for ESRD a total is being requested of $286,497,000. So, you know, it's a chunk of change. Now, $17 million of it is for the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan for oil sands monitoring, fully offset by revenue from the oil sands industry. Well, did we spend it or not? It sounds like we spent it.

Are we expecting to get money back from the oil sands industry? What exactly was it spent on? Was this hosting, travel, consultants, communications, brochures, media press releases? What was that $17 million spent on? Was it research scientists? What? We've got no information in front of us here.

There is $258.6 million of emergency spending for firefighting. The government always underestimates, and then they come and fess up with the real amount that they spent.

Another $39.7 million of emergency spending is for continued ground survey and control operations for the mountain pine beetle infestation. Oh, my Lord, that little bugger has cost us a lot of money in this province and other ones. But I have to say that it looks like we did not a bad job, not terrific – not honours, not 90 per cent – but a pretty good job of managing the pine beetle infestation, so I'm not questioning that money.

But I do want to know what this joint Canada-Alberta plan for the oil sands monitoring is all about. To be honest with you, I'm pretty good about details, but I have lost track of the number of studies, strategies, reports, committees, and implementation plans that this particular minister of environment has managed to get rolling, and now we can't get any information because everything is tied up in one of these committees.

I think I'm nearing the end of my five minutes, so I'm going to ask the minister who is with us today. And thank you very much for showing up. We appreciate your effort. There is silence while I stare at the other empty chairs here. I really appreciate your being here. Are you able to answer my questions?

Mr. Campbell: A pleasure to be here, hon. member. I think I can answer your questions, but to be safe, I'm going to have the minister give you the breakdown on the monitoring. I'm confident I could, but I want to make sure we have the right numbers and you do get the right answers, so I'll have her get a hold of you and give you the proper amounts.

The Chair: Hon. member, your time is up, unfortunately. I'll put you back on the list.

Ms Blakeman: Please do so. Thank you.

The Chair: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have a couple of questions. I suppose this is the difference between the private sector and the public sector. But this is a bit of an embarrassment – no disrespect to the hon. minister who is here trying to answer the questions; I have a great regard for that – the fact that the other ministers are not here. We are dealing with something that is not new, zero-based budgeting. You can call it results-based budgeting, or you can call it deceptive budgeting. I want to talk about that for a second. When you mislead, it's deceptive. This isn't rocket science. It's a budget. A budget is nothing more than a tool.

I will tell you, having been a person who has done a lot of budgets and done it professionally in a corporate setting, that it is not hard to budget for emergencies. It is a fact of life. Boy, we would love to make sure at year end that the emergency budget was zero on our expenses, and we'd all be happier for it. The fact is that there are trends. In the utilities, where I came from, we always had ice storms, tornados, windstorms, all these natural disasters that followed weather patterns, and we had to deal with that.

Forest fires are no different. We know we have forest fires during the annual fire season, and we have to deal with that. There's nothing wrong with budgeting that along the trend line.

Everyone is better off if it comes in at zero. We would love to not have forest fires, but they are a fact of life. It's not that hard to predict the trend when we have a trend line. So it's unreasonable to not take a look at that and say: we've been under by a hundred million dollars a year, year over year over year. At what point do you realize that you're not budgeting properly? That is a question that someone needs to address.

What I'd like the hon. minister to talk about – and I'm not sure you can answer it. I have the same concerns you do over this pine beetle. I represent a large number of constituents who are in the forestry industry. It's an extremely serious matter, and it does need to be dealt with. It is going to take funds – we all realize that – but that's not the issue. The issue is that we're just about doubling this. When I look at the action plan and I look at the management strategy, which is, by the way, on your Internet websites – and I follow that because I have constituents that are very much involved with this – what I don't understand is how that money is being expended within the management strategy and within the action plan. That's the key. The whole part of accountability is to make sure we are following the plan. You know, when we look at the budget and those numbers start rising, what are we doing that we missed when we created the budget? What happened there? So we can go back and ask those questions.

If the minister could, I would like an answer to how this extra $17 million goes into the action plan or goes into the management plan. How is it broken down? How did we miss it? See, that's the key. On dealing with the pine beetle, we're not talking about sudden forest fires. This is something we've been watching for years. We know how far it's gotten. We've actually had one point where we got ahead of it. Now the forestry industry is telling us that we have to relook at this because it is real. As the member said, with this warm weather that we've had this winter, we can fully expect that there's going to be more to deal with in the coming season. This is logical, and this is how we should budget. So if the minister could please address that particular issue on where that money has been spent. What effect does it have on these plans, the management strategy and the action plan? That is really important.

But the real thing I want to talk about is the accountability. Any time anyone does a budget, the person responsible for these extra expenses should be here to answer that. You have to do that in all private sectors no matter what business you're in. You just don't get to throw this out and say, "I need so many millions more, so many billions more," and nobody is there, when we go to approve this, to answer those tough questions. I will tell you this. It is disrespectful to Albertans that not all the ministers are here that are directly affected by this request, that they have their staff so they can answer these tough questions and put it on the record. [interjection] I didn't mention them by name.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister to respond.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I mean, I can't give you a breakdown of exactly what the $40 million is going to be used for. The minister can probably do that. I think it's important to understand that you're talking about mitigation, you're talking about control, and you're talking about rehabilitation. To me here's the real challenge of fighting the mountain pine beetle. No matter what good work we do in Alberta, if we're not doing the same work in B.C. and the federal government is not doing the same work in the national parks, all we're doing is maintaining.

I can say to you that living on the eastern slopes, I go into the Willmore wilderness area. If you fly over the Willmore wilderness, the Kakwa, the sea of red is there. I mean, you go over the Coquihalla; they've cut everything down. There's nothing there anymore. It was red for a while and dead, and then they cut it all down. We're going to continue to invest this money into Alberta because we have to make sure that our forest industry stays sustainable. For the $40 million we're spending, industry is doing the same thing. To fix this problem, we have to get the feds involved. The federal government has to be involved. We have to have a better strategy for our national parks.

I was down in Banff a couple of years ago meeting with the Banff town council and the Jasper town council, and we were talking about tourism. I think we were at a lodge on the side of the road before you get into Banff.

An Hon. Member: The Rimrock.

Mr. Campbell: No, it's not Rimrock. It's outside of Banff.

Anyway, we were looking at this vista of green. I said to the folks in Banff: if you don't get on board and get after the federal government, you're not going to have a vista here anymore; it's going to be red because the beetle is coming. Again, we can't predict climate, but the last two winters have been fairly warm. We all know that. Last year was a great ski season. I don't know about the rest of you, but I had a good time on the slopes. We had a record snowfall. Again the beetle continued to infest. We're working with the province of Saskatchewan on the pine beetle because it's getting into Saskatchewan now.

We're going to continue to invest these monies because we have to. It keeps the workforce of a number of our rural communities engaged. We understand that we have to have a broader strategy. It has to involve the federal government, and it has to involve the province of B.C. In some ways we're spending good money after bad, when you think about, in the sense that all we're doing is maintaining.

I'll make sure that the minister gives the hon. member a good breakdown, but I know that this $40 million that we're spending on the beetle, to me, is money well spent because it's helping a lot of rural forest communities to survive. As I said earlier, all we're doing is maintaining right now, and we have to get ahead of the problem. That's going to take a three-pronged approach of the provincial government, the federal government, and other provinces working together to deal with this infestation.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, I have a partial list of speakers, but I'm going to try to rotate it through the parties, just to be fair. Is there a government member that wishes to ask a question?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, goody. Thank you. I have four questions this time around. I'm going back to page 22 for the department of environment. Looking at the breakdown, it looks like under vote 8 for lands there is $12,600,000 being spent there.

Mr. Campbell: What page are you on?

Ms Blakeman: Page 22, vote 8, lands. Land, Scarlett, land.

It says $12,600,000. What's that for?

Oh, I see there are more ministers that have joined us. Welcome. You're most welcome. Thank you for coming.

Mr. Campbell: I'll have to get the minister to get you an answer.

Ms Blakeman: I'll give you a few more questions that you can ask the minister.

The Chair: Okay. Hon. minister, did you care to respond, or are you going to get an answer for her?

Mr. Campbell: I'll get an answer for her.

The Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Well, while you're getting that answer, in the Department of Municipal Affairs, there is $530,000 for the Whispering Pines lodge in Grande Cache. You should know this one.

Mr. Campbell: I can speak to that one.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. That'll be great. I'm looking forward to the answer. Let me just get all my questions on the record, and then you can let 'er rip. I'm looking for the details. Is this a new seniors' lodge? It turns up under vote 10.8, assistance to Alberta Social Housing Corporation, seniors' lodges. Is it new? Was this a grant to a private corporation building this? Is it specifically long-term care, which has a medical component to it, or is it assisted living or supportive living? Is it a private one, an NGO, or completely government. Finally, is there any kind of special housing? I know you know a lot about that one, so you'll tell me.

Back to Environment. Does the minister accept that severe weather is on the rise? We are all experiencing the results of that, I would argue. What changes have been instituted in the budgeting in Environment for severe weather? This is sort of a policy decision, but what are you doing about it? When you look at organizations like CEMA, for example, they are actually looking at what kind of trees we should be planting now because the old lodgepole pine, much as we love it – emblem of Alberta, tree of Alberta – is not going to do so well in a more arid environment so not the right thing to be planting today as we deal with climate change. I'm wondering what changes have actually been instituted in the policies around budgeting to deal with severe climate, severe weather.

I asked the same question for Municipal Affairs because under the disaster recovery programs in Municipal Affairs it's the same thing. Severe weather is a huge issue to us. It's Grande Prairie flooding. It's Medicine Hat flooding. It's Slave Lake fires. I mean, it's affecting Alberta, so what are the policy changes, and how have you instituted different budgeting to deal with that?

I'm talking faster and faster. A Transportation question because you know how much I love that. The west side of the Henday was paved a few years ago. Now it's being repaved. I'm wondering: was this a P3 contract? Oh, I'm getting nodding. Excellent. Well, the Transportation minister could answer me. Was it a P3 contract? Does the contract between the provider and the government designate who is responsible for the repaving or for the repairs? What exactly are the costs?

That's three of three. I think somehow I snuck five questions into there, so I look forward to the answers. If I can go back on the list, please.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll start with the easy one, the seniors' lodge in Grande Cache. This is an assisted living facility, and this is owned by the Evergreen Foundation, which is all of the municipalities in West Yellowhead that put monies in. They have homes in Grande Cache, Jasper, Edson, and Hinton. This is for renovations to add six more beds to the facility. The facility is actually adjoined to the hospital. You can go from the hospital to the facility through a door. This $530,000: the Evergreen Foundation asked for that money to build some more rooms, and we're giving the grant from Municipal Affairs.

Do I believe that severe weather is happening? Weather patterns are definitely changing. I mean, we see it every day, right? You can't deny that. I know that we've had discussions within our ministerial working groups about greenhouse gasses, about changing weather. I would say that we're not at that level yet where we could actually bring forward a policy, but we are starting to have those initial discussions. Again, you said the lodgepole pine. I mean, I live in an area where the predominant tree is the lodgepole pine, and in some areas it's hard to tell if it's actually drought killing the trees or if it's mountain pine beetle. It is definitely something that we have to address in the near future.

I'll turn it over to my colleague the Minister of Transportation to talk about the Anthony Henday.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

You have three minutes.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. The questions you asked on the Henday really, respectfully, don't have much to do with the sup estimates, but as a courtesy I'll do my best to answer them anyway. The hundred million dollars for construction of the Henday ring road was more in the way that the P3 contract was financed. There was a piece that wasn't included in the initial estimate that had to be added in as a supplementary. That's simply a matter of a contractual obligation that wasn't in there.

You were asking about some additional paving on the Henday, the P3. My understanding of that – well, first of all, it's typical that when we pave a road, we go back a couple of years later, and we put an additional lift on. What that allows is some of the fine settling, when the road gets built, to be in place and then have another coat with a nice smooth surface for Albertans that, hopefully, will last longer.

In this section of the Henday I think what you're referring to is a piece where there's a different base under that section of the Henday than there was under other parts of it. Consequently, the decision was made in the interest of innovation to try something different to see if it'll last longer, which it's supposed to do. An interim step that had to be added was another lift of asphalt to be put on after the fact, which was done. There were some additional costs, but it's still felt – and I'm pretty sure I was asked and answered this in the House in question period at some point earlier – that it'll still be less expensive going through this extra process than it would have been through the normal process.

Now, for the member that asked the question, Chair, since it's not part of the sup estimates, I don't have the dollar amount of what that cost, but I will make it my business to go find that answer and get it to the member. Despite the fact that it's outside of the supplementary estimates, it will be my pleasure to do that for the member.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Your time is up, hon. member, unfortunately. I'll have to put you back in the rotation.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

The Chair: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. Campbell: We answered four questions. I think the hon. member had five.

The Chair: It's a timing problem, hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Okay.

The Chair: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to join in the debate and the discussion. I think it's getting better as we go along. We're getting some questions answered. I'd like to start with a tip of the cap to the minister of aboriginal affairs for being here, and it's good to see a couple of colleagues, some reinforcements, join him for the last half an hour or so. I wonder if he pulled a short straw or was on the naughty list or how this worked out today.

The member to my left who spoke a few times formerly – and I forget her riding. Edmonton . . .

An Hon. Member: Centre.

Mr. McAllister: How could I forget it?

Ms Blakeman: Fabulous.

Mr. McAllister: The fabulous riding of Edmonton-Centre. I think she did a nice job, for those who are tuning in, of explaining why we're here and what we're trying to accomplish. I believe in the same type of set-up, Mr. Chair. This is the point that I'd like to make. We're discussing $500 million here. That's half a billion dollars, Mr. Chair. It's public money. It's taxpayer money. Those responsible for it ought to be here to answer the questions for their specific portfolios.

As far as education and advanced education go, it's tough to look at where the money is going and say: hey, you shouldn't be spending it there. The amounts specified are in areas where we all want to see money spent. You know, I bet there's not a person in here that couldn't find a school project that we'd like to support in our own riding or even neighbouring ridings where we know people.

I've had the pleasure of travelling around and talking to schools, to boards and school councils, about projects and capital plans, and obviously this is money that's needed. I guess what I'd ask – and I don't want to do a back-and-forth, but I'd like the minister to consider, perhaps, how to answer the question. Maybe he can. It might be to the Minister of Transportation's point on the P3 model. I'm just wondering how that money came about late into the game on the Lloydminster school because there are so many others on all sides of this House that would like to be in that same situation where they would have money available for a school project.

To talk about our student population growing is wonderful if we have higher than expected enrolment because I know currently in postsecondary enrolment, Mr. Chair, we have the lowest enrolment rates in the country, so I'm happy to hear that.

Again, I'll just sort of pile some questions in here in my three or four minutes. You can try to address them, and I think that probably the Minister of Education would be the one with the answer on this specific question. I'd like to know, as the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview asked: where is the enrolment increasing? He mentioned Fort McMurray. I think, specifically, we'd like to know that also. But then the money that's distributed: where is it being distributed and allocated? How is it being broken down to individual boards? I think those would all be very good questions that I know the people that I meet with would like to know.

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Mr. McAllister: They are good questions.

We have so much evidence, I think, that funds are going to other areas. The problem that I'm having with this $500 million – I don't begrudge the fact that budgets change and emergencies happen and things happen through the year and you need, you know, potentially to increase that budget. I won't die on that hill. I can understand how that happens with this amount of money. But what we are trying to say on this side is: could we not prioritize where some of that funding is going a little bit differently before we just go back to the banker and spend half a billion dollars?

We learned this year – just recently a story broke, I believe today, about Athabasca University feeling that they had to spend money for lobbyists to secure funding from the government. I think this is the point that I'm trying to make. This is where we could save money. Public money goes to a university to then hire a lobbyist, presumably somebody with connections to the governing party, so that they can then lobby the government for more public money. It just doesn't seem to make a lot of sense, and if that's how the system works, then, you know, we ought to address it. Those would be areas, I think, where the money would be better off in the classroom. It'd be better off in research if we were spending more money. Universities shouldn't have to use money to go to a lobbyist to meet with a minister. The minister of advanced education should be able to pick up the phone and talk to them.

The Chair: Is there a question that you're hoping the minister would answer, hon. member?

Mr. Campbell: Well, let me address the last question, Mr. Chair. We expect all of our institutions to have the ability to pick up the phone and talk to the minister of advanced education. As a matter of fact, we encourage it. You know, I've done business in a number of different provinces. I've done business in a number of different states. One of the things that's great about Alberta is that anybody can pick up the phone and go see a minister or see an MLA. That's one of the great things about this province. The government is open. It's not a problem to go see a minister, MLA for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Fabulous.

Mr. Campbell: Fabulous Edmonton-Centre.

But having said that, it's also important to understand that all these postsecondary institutions are autonomous, and they have boards of directors. They determine how they're going to spend their money and how they're going to do their staffing, but they should follow the rules.

Mr. McAllister: You appoint them.

Mr. Campbell: Well, no, that's not true. The boards hire their people. I mean, again, to say that you have to hire a government consultant to come and see us: you don't have to. If a president wants to pick up the phone and talk to the minister of advanced education, he or she should feel quite comfortable doing that, and I would suggest that about all the ministers in this Premier's cabinet, that we are accessible. We spend our days meeting with Albertans. That's what we do. From the time we get up in the morning to the time we go to bed, we're on the phone talking to constituents or meeting with stakeholders.

Again, looking at prioritizing our schools, we do the best job we can on growth issues. As I said, the phenomenal growth in this province: all indications are that next year is going to be just as bad. We're going to continue to see growth. I think we will do a good job of prioritizing where we need our schools. We depend on our MLAs and our school boards, that are duly elected, to come to us with those challenges and with those pressures and do the best we can with the money we have allotted to make sure that we are providing a first-class education to all of our students.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

5:30

Ms Blakeman: Edmonton-Centre the fabulous? Thank you.

Back to the Minister of Transportation. You have me a bit puzzled when I look on page 28, reason supplementary supply estimates requested. This is for the Department of Transportation. It says:

This supplementary amount of $38,986,000 is requested, together with $89,600,000 made available from lower than budgeted capital investment on other projects, to provide:

- $99,986,000 for continued construction of the Anthony Henday ring road in Edmonton and the Stoney Trail ring road in Calgary.

This is where I'm puzzled because I think the Transportation minister got up and said that this money has got nothing to do with that, so I'm a little puzzled about what it does have to do with. I'll just remind the minister that I did ask whether this was a P3 contract, and he omitted that information. I'm sure he would like to give it to me, so I'll give him another chance. But I do take it, then, that that Anthony Henday $99 million is a contract. We're going to find out if it was a P3.

It sounds like the government is having to pay for that repaving. It sounds to me – please correct me – like the government, in fact, didn't sign a very good contract if they have to go back and pay for the renovation the following year. It sounds to me like you might have paid twice for the same kind of thing. I can tell that he really wants to jump to his feet and answer that for me. I would be delighted to hear what his answer is.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Chair. The hon. member asked what I thought was a whole bunch of questions. I was trying to answer different parts of the different questions, and perhaps I wasn't as clear as I ought to have been about when I was stopping with one of the answers and continuing with one of the other answers, which might be leading us to where we are right now. So let me try this again if you please.

I think I was clear – and if I wasn't, I'll try to be clearer now – that the hundred million dollars was most definitely part of the P3 contract in the supplementary estimates, and that was added to fully fund the project after final approval was received for the P3.

Then the hon. member asked a question, which I thought was a separate question, about paving on the Anthony Henday after the initial batch of paving, and that was what my other answer was about. It wasn't entirely clear to me then – and I think I said that in my remarks – whether she was referring to a different piece. At least to me it wasn't very explicit about what piece of the Anthony Henday exactly she was referring to. So I was trying to be helpful, saying that if it wasn't part of this, it might be part of that other piece where there was a little bit different base under the road and, consequently, that required a later lift of asphalt.

Okay? Hopefully, that's more clear now as my intention is to be more clear. There it is.

Ms Blakeman: I think I still have a little bit left in our combined time.

The Chair: Very little. Thirty seconds.

Ms Blakeman: Great.

Minister, I'm still trying to figure out why we had to pay an additional hundred million dollars on this P3 contract – it was originally budgeted; it looks like it was paid – because supplementary supply is extra money, more money, supplemental money. So why are we paying a hundred million dollars more to a P3 for the Anthony Henday?

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I'll try it again. We're not actually paying twice or paying more. A hundred million dollars for construction of the northeast Anthony Henday ring road in Edmonton was added to fully fund the project after the final approval was received for the P3. It was only after the final approval was received that the total cost of it was clear, and at that point we still needed to add a hundred million dollars to fully fund it.

Ms Blakeman: It was underbudgeted, then, and this gets it right.

Mr. McIver: I don't know whether you would say it was underbudgeted, but the fact is that there was a hundred million dollars less approved than was required to complete the P3 project; consequently, the need for the supplementary estimates. So I guess you could say underbudgeted, yes, but the reason for that, in my view, is that the full cost of it wasn't clear until the negotiations were finalized.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chairperson. I just have a couple of opening remarks, and I have four questions for the Minister of Transportation as well, please. First of all, people in Cypress-Medicine Hat are telling me that they're very, very concerned about record spending; $41.8 billion and here we are asking for another half billion dollars, 2012-2013 record spending.

A couple of hard-working Cypress-Medicine Hatters told me they were very, very concerned that we're back to the end of the Getty years, where we had to make some 5 per cent cuts across the board and as Albertans we all had to work hard to balance the budget and get back in surplus. I asked one of our researchers what that meant, and the long and the short of it is that in the Getty years Alberta spent $10,100 per person. Adjusted for inflation, we are now spending more, $10,500 per person per year, headed down possibly the same road of year after year of deficits, of a big accumulated deficit that we will have to deal with someday. Better us than future generations.

A lot of people new to Cypress-Medicine Hat have told me that they're concerned when they hear some of the rhetoric about the cost to the Alberta government to pay for all the new people. They want it acknowledged that new Albertans are taxpayers, too, that start paying taxes and creating wealth immediately, adding considerable amounts to the quality of life.

To the Minister of Transportation, if I could start with one of my questions. I see there's $28.6 million being proposed to spend on highway 63. I'm wondering exactly what this $28.6 million is going to get us. I'm wondering if it's part of the $1.1 billion that was just borrowed to complete this twinning out there. I'm concerned about cost escalations. Are we headed towards a south Calgary campus situation, where the cost of this may snowball?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you. The hon. member asked a question and actually made the remarks first that his people are concerned about the cost of infrastructure. I would draw the hon. member's attention to the hon. member's own remarks in the last session, where I think he asked for something in the order of $747 million, or at least in that neighbourhood, for his own riding. So perhaps he could temper his requests for his own riding just slightly if he's truly concerned about what he says he's concerned about. If he said it, I believe that he's truly concerned. Nonetheless, those requests were made by the hon. member in the last session.

However, to answer the question that was asked on the sup estimates, the $28.6 million is for twinning and passing lane projects along highway 63 as part of the funding approved to twin the highway from House River north to Fort McMurray.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, I'm sorry. You should have asked at the beginning to combine your times.

Mr. Barnes: Okay.

The Chair: I have to recognize another speaker now. If there's a chance, I'll come back to you.

Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, would you like to combine your five minutes with the minister?

Mr. Rowe: I'll try.

The Chair: Okay.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My question would be to the Municipal Affairs minister; however, with him not being here, I'll ask the question to whoever can answer it. Why are the wildfire supplementary estimates in two different ministries? To further muddy the waters, wildfire estimates are combined with the disaster recovery estimates, being $59 million, and SRD is 270-some million dollars. Why are they in two different ministries?

The Chair: The hon. minister to respond.

Mr. McIver: Sorry. Which one?

The Chair: Hon. member, would you like to rephrase your question?

Mr. Rowe: I will rephrase it. Why are wildfire supplementary estimates in two different ministries? They're in both Municipal Affairs and sustainable resource development. I wouldn't suggest that one of them is trying to be hidden. The waters are further muddied – no pun intended – where they're combined with disaster recovery in Municipal Affairs. How much is being spent on disaster recovery in Municipal Affairs, and how much is being spent on wildfire assistance?

Mr. Campbell: Well, I can tell you that $258.6 million will be spent within ESRD on fighting wildfires, and within the disaster recovery program within Municipal Affairs we will spend $59.3 million. Looking at the disaster recovery programs, again, the majority of that being flooding down south, we can get an answer for the hon. member for which is which. I mean, I think I have a good idea, but we'll get the correct answer for him.

The Chair: Thank you.

I'll recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chairperson. Now I'd like to combine my time for three more questions. Is that okay?

The Chair: Yes. That's allowable. Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. First of all, the good people of Cypress-Medicine Hat know that infrastructure doesn't get built overnight. We've waited six or eight years for a hospital. We've waited three or four years for an overpass. We're still waiting for a detox centre. We're happy to have a prioritized public infrastructure list and wait our turn in fairness to all Albertans.

I'm concerned about where the $89 million was saved, made available from lower than budgeted capital investments on other projects. I've heard from a number of stakeholders in the road-building industry that highway rehab and paving has been stalled. There are not projects out there even though we're already behind on what needs to be done for keeping our roads safe and in good condition, apparently not spending enough a year. I hope the money has not been pulled from that or from the government's three-year construction program.

There appears to be a constraint-induced fracture on a North Saskatchewan River bridge on highway 831. The limited information I have about constraint-induced fractures is that they're unpredictable and they're hard to assess with inspections. It may be an area of concern that I would hope for the safety of all Albertans would not be overlooked.

Again, my concern, Mr. Minister, is where this $89 million is coming from. Hopefully, it is not coming from those two areas.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Chair, the short answer is that the money comes from where all money comes from. It's from the taxpayers. That's why it's a supplementary estimate, and because it's a supplementary estimate, then perhaps the hon. member should understand by the nature of the fact that it's a supplementary estimate that it didn't come from another project, that it's additional taxpayers' money just by definition. Again, the $89 million is requested together with the other amounts that are in the supplementary estimates.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, you still have a couple of minutes.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. I'm sorry. Maybe you misunderstood. I understand from the first sentence that it says that $89.6 million was made available from lower than budgeted capital investment on other projects. Did those other projects happen? Was there a significant savings? Were there some things that were promised but not completed or not done?

Then my last question is back to the ring roads. I appreciate your earlier answers on what happened with the Henday and the earlier questions to get us to where we were, but I'm concerned.

Did we end up with a cost-plus contract for this final almost a hundred million dollars, one-third of what was estimated? Did we go back to a full and fair bidding process? What percentage of the total road was this, and how was it missed in the first place?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Chair. The money from the other projects: all those projects were either completed or are under construction, so there is nothing that didn't get done as a result. That's what was required to complete that project.

One of the other questions that was asked in earlier remarks was about a bridge with fractures on highway 831.

Mr. Barnes: Yes. I understand, Mr. Minister, from your three-year report that 831 north of Lamont: constraint-induced fractures. We're concerned because it's an overdimension load corridor critical to getting things to Fort McMurray. Is any money going to fix this bridge?

Mr. McIver: I will get the hon. member that answer.

A little more detail on the $89.6 million. The money lapsed due to other spending: the interchange at the Queen Elizabeth II highway and 41st Avenue S.W.; other projects like the twinning of highway 43 west of Sturgeon Lake Indian reserve, which is under way; as well as the paving on highway 88; the twinning on highway 2A; and the work on the Little Bow reservoir. That is where the money came from that lapsed from those other projects.

I apologize to the hon. member for not giving you that information just a little bit quicker.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just have a quick question for the Transportation minister seeing as he's right now getting into the groove here. How much of the hundred million dollars that is in this supplementary package here was for the ring road, specifically in Calgary? Which specific projects in Calgary? If you could again explain if that was cost-plus contracts or cost overruns or underbudgeting in the first place.

Thank you.

Mr. McIver: No. The hundred million dollars is for the northeast Anthony Henday. It's part of a P3 project. It's not part of a cost overrun or underrun or anything else. It's part of fully funding the final contractual price of the project. That is what I have here.

Mr. Wilson: In the document it does suggest Stoney Trail in Calgary as well as the Henday.

Mr. McIver: Indeed, it does. I have two different documents that say two different things, so I will get clarification for you.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Vote on Supplementary Supply Estimates 2012-13 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: Seeing no other speakers, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called.

Agreed to:
Education
Expense $24,289,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

The committee shall now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again. The following resolutions relating to the 2012-13 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, have been approved.

Education: expense, $24,289,000.

Enterprise and Advanced Education: expense, $30,900,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $77,451,000.

Environment and Sustainable Resource Development: expense, $286,497,000; capital investment, $16,010,000.

Municipal Affairs: expense, $59,318,000.

Transportation: capital investment, $38,986,000.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: So ordered.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 11, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing that it's almost 6 o'clock, I would ask that we adjourn the House until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:51 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 7, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. Let us be grateful for that which unites us, let us be respectful of that which sets us apart, but let us always be mindful that we are here to address and serve the needs of others first. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a brief reminder. Further to the memo I sent you all at 1 o'clock today, we have almost 30 introductions to be done today, so please be ever so brief so we can get through them all. Thank you to those members who have already withdrawn or postponed their particular introductions.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 20 interns who began their local government careers in the municipal internship program in May of last year. The program has provided them with the opportunity to gain real-life experience within the municipal government setting, supporting our province's towns, villages, counties, and cities. They'll join more than 170 interns who have been part of this program since 2002 who have demonstrated incredible leadership and administration and a dedication to ensure our communities from one end of the province to another are strong. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly students from Our Lady of Perpetual Help school, some of the brightest and best from our community. They are seated in both the public and members' galleries and are accompanied by their teacher, Sinead Taylor, and a large contingent of volunteers. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been truly blessed in my life. I've been raised in a great family and been blessed by a great partner and family of my own. Two things that make me capable of fulfilling the duties of this job are the foundation of my faith and the rock of my family, and I'm very proud of them. Each is a gem on the ring of life that makes up our home. As I introduce them, I'd ask each of them to rise as I call their name. First, someone who is the half that makes me whole, my wife, Rose; my daughter Aukje Meghan; my daughter Jacqueline; and my son, Sean. I'm so very proud of all of them. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier about how blessed I was to be raised in a great family. I have four brothers, each successful in his own right, and I'm very proud of them as well. With us today are two with whom I was fortunate enough to start and operate several companies, including Westglen Milling. They are Bruce Horner, currently the CEO of Great Northern Grain; and Dave Horner, president of Horner International. I see they've risen in the gallery. I'd ask you to give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. Finally, my next introduction is someone who has been with me since I was first elected. She has been the foundation of the tremendously important constituency work we do, and on each of my campaigns she has been a tireless worker. She is a member of our extended family. I would ask Carol Stewart from Spruce Grove to please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several guests of mine. These guests are watching these proceedings in another room and are looking forward to the budget: first, Gary Duffett, a retired RCMP veteran of 32 years and the current Two Hills regional economic development officer; Paul Belter, the vice president of Colliers International; Gordon and Eileen Taylor, the president of the Battle River-Wainwright Wildrose Constituency Association; Kelly Dales, a partner at Rosetown Consulting; Joseph Snape, with wealth management at CIBC World Markets; Carmen Glossop, the president of the St. Paul local ATA; John Corie, a senior manager at a consulting firm here in Edmonton. Please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association local 37, Ed Butler. Ed is a teacher with over 35 years of experience and leadership to the district. Ed, like many teachers across the province, is working with our most treasured resource, our children. Children are the future of our province, and great teachers just like Ed make it their life's work to ensure that their future is a bright one. He and his colleagues are asking for more teachers, more support for those teachers, and better schools so that Alberta can have a better future. I'd like everyone to welcome Ed Butler to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a community leader from Calgary-Hays, Doug Hayden, and his son Dexter. Doug and his son travelled to Edmonton today to watch the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance deliver the budget. They're great public volunteers, and I'd invite the House to give them the traditional warm greeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest, Professor Carolyn Sale. Carolyn Sale is an associate professor in the department of English and film studies at the University of Alberta. She's also chair of the Academic Faculty Committee of the University of Alberta's Association of Academic Staff. The Academic Faculty Committee represents the interests of the University of Alberta's over 2,000 faculty members. Professor Sale hopes to hear today that the government of Alberta's budget reflects a commitment to postsecondary education as one of the province's most vital public goods. I would now ask Professor Sale to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you the most important person in my life and possibly the most beautiful woman here today in the Assembly, and that's my wife, Ashley. She's been a huge supporter of mine through the ups and downs that normally come with public life. As many members know, they can be many, and quite often it does take a toll on our significant others as they go through them with us. She has been by my side, an unwavering supporter and someone that's been my best friend through the last five years in going through this process. She's a marketing manager for global operations for Paradigm geophysical, a large geophysical software company. She's got a great career. I'm very proud of her. Ashley, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two talented and hardworking representatives from the Medicine Hat & District Chamber of Commerce. Mrs. Paula Stodalka is the events and communications co-ordinator and has been on staff for 12 years. Next is Ms Lisa Kowalchuk, the executive director. Last year Lisa was awarded the Alberta Chambers of Commerce executive of the year award. Congratulations, Lisa, on this fantastic achievement. We are proud of these two hardworking individuals, and Medicine Hat is blessed to have their talents among our midst. I would ask these two great Hatters to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of my closest friends and mentors, who have travelled here from Fort McMurray to witness question period and the budget announcement this afternoon: first of all, Mr. Mike Evans, who previously was the adviser to the mayor of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, now serving in government relations; and a long-term resident who is the vice-president of government and public relations with Syncrude Canada and the newly appointed chair of the Keyano College board of governors, Kara Flynn. I ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature two of my friends: the mayor of Parkland County, Rod Shaigec; and the mayor of the town of Stony Plain, William Choy. Gentlemen, if you would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me today to introduce a friend and colleague from the city of Calgary, Joe Ceci, a city councillor for 15 long or short years, depending on how he interpreted that. He currently works for an organization in Calgary called Momentum, an organization committed to community economic development, and is the manager of public policy. He led the poverty reduction initiative called Action To End Poverty in Alberta, that put out the Poverty Costs report last year. Joe has been a tireless advocate for social justice and enhancement of preventive social services. Please welcome him to the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you Mr. Tom Burton, director of district 4, northern region, of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. Elected to the MD of Greenview council in 2001, Tom has served on a variety of boards and committees. He has also held the position of chief of the DeBolt fire and rescue for the past 13 years and has also been involved in the Grande Prairie Rural Crime Watch. Mr. Burton is a registered EMR and is very active in his community. I'd ask that Tom rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and all members of the House two gentlemen seated in the members' gallery today. Mr. Richard Gotfried is the vice-president, corporate and community engagement, at Calgary Economic Development. In previous roles in the private sector he was instrumental in the establishment of the PEAK home ownership attainable housing program in co-operation with the government of Alberta and Habitat for Humanity. He's been active in the Calgary Asian communities for over 30 years.

I would also like to introduce Mr. Ram Chengkalath, also from Calgary. Ram has 33 years of experience as a chartered accountant in public practice, including as auditor for the town of Banff, town of Canmore, municipal district of Bighorn, and town of Sundre. Ram is a founding partner of Chengkalath Gangi LLP chartered accountants. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mrs. Towle: I'll be stepping in on his behalf, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents from Lacombe-Ponoka, Christine and Melissa Warkema. These ladies work very hard on the constituency association and worked very hard during the last election to elect the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Maryann Chichak and Darlene Chartrand. Maryann and Darlene are councillors for the town of Whitecourt and are very interested to be here and watch the budget. I'll ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you six wonderful constituents of mine who are not only leaders in the community but are considered personal friends of mine. I would ask them to rise as I call their names: first of all, Mr. John Irwin, councillor for the town of Bonnyville; His Worship Craig Copeland, mayor of the city of Cold Lake; Bob Buckle, councillor for the city of Cold Lake; Roger Nippard, superintendent of Northern Lights; Arlene Hrynyk, board chair for Northern Lights; and Don Nuttall, president of the Bonnyville-Cold Lake PC association. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you the director of the Calgary Society for Persons with Disabilities, Mickey Greiner, and her colleague Sheri Wyllie. Based in Calgary-Currie, this unique not-for-profit organization has provided residential support to 45 individuals with physical and developmental disabilities and their families for over 35 years. It goes without saying that CSPD's day-to-day service allows clients to flourish and participate in community life. I'd ask Mickey and Sheri to stand now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I have two introductions. If you'll indulge me, I will endeavour to be brief. First and foremost, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple of people who are no strangers to the Assembly and no strangers to public education either. In the gallery today from the Public School Boards' Association are Patty Dittrick, the president, and also Mary Lynne Campbell, the executive director, strong advocates for education in this province. With them today is Patty's daughter Ally, who is missing a grade 12 class today for some better education potentially, I guess you could argue. In any event, I'd like my colleagues to join me in wishing them well today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly my guests Natasha Prihoda and Keathann LaFlamme. Natasha is a field placement student at the Alberta College of Social Workers, and Keathann is a client care assistant at Alberta Health Services' youth residential addiction services. I'd ask them to please stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View, for your second introduction. My apologies.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It was a surprise to you, so thank you very much.

I am proud to also have a couple of postsecondary students here today that I hold in very high regard, and I think most of us should. Matthew Armstrong is the vice-president external of the SAIT Students' Association as well as chair of the Alberta Students' Executive Council. Joining Matt is Franco Rizzuti, who is the president of the University of Calgary students' association and chair of the Alberta Graduate Council. I would ask Matt and Franco to rise, and as they do, I would like to point out that we often refer to postsecondary students as the leaders of tomorrow, but I think that given what people like Matt and Franco do, we should also recognize that they are very much leaders of today, too, in representing other students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two very special guests of mine. As I mention their names, I'd ask them to stand: Mr. Doug Stevens and Ms Kelli Taylor. Both are active volunteers in my community and long-time PC members and are sitting on the executive team of the PC Calgary-Hawkwood association. They bring their strong values to the table such as living within your means and being socially conscious when you do spend what you have so that every Albertan has the opportunity to succeed in our soaring economy. I can't help thinking that those fundamental, balanced, and responsible principles are the ones that connect us to my constituency and Alberta. I would like to ask my guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to introduce to you and through you my guests today, who are seated in the public gallery. Brad Trumble, a resident of Calgary-Glenmore, works in the venture capital field, serves on the marketing committee of Hockey Calgary, and assists me as the CFO of my constituency association and campaign team.

My other guest is Stephen Lougheed, a friend for over 30 years and a trusted political adviser. Stephen is also the CEO of Alberta Innovates: Technology Futures, an organization that is working hard to further research and development initiatives in support of diversification for Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that these guests receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, let me just quickly, in 10 seconds or less, before we start question period, introduce someone very special to you. It was on this day just a few years ago that she came into this world, and today we're celebrating her birthday. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, otherwise known as our Premier: happy birthday.

Now let's see what gifts this day brings.

Oral Question Period

Ms Smith: I'd like to wish the Premier a very happy birthday.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Ms Smith: Back in 2004, when Premier Klein announced that we had paid off the debt racked up during the '80s and '90s – remember paid in full? – Albertans were justifiably proud of the fact that we were debt free, but that was then. Today we are back in debt thanks to the overpromising, overspending, and overborrowing. The Premier's mixed messages on this are the main reasons Albertans do not trust her. Whatever you call it and whatever they do to try to hide it, it is still debt. Why can't the Premier just admit that?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The one thing that I find often with the opposition is that they're very fond of saying: that was then. The part they've forgotten is that this is now.

Alberta in 2013 is a province that is the strongest economic engine in this country. It is because of that that we are presenting a budget today, presented by our Minister of Finance, that will build Alberta, will continue to ensure that Albertans live within their means, will put in place a savings plan, will ensure that we're investing in infrastructure, and will allow us to continue to open new markets to continue to grow our economy.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that's what has Albertans so upset, that the strongest economy in the country can't pay its bills.

Given that they use euphemisms galore like "once in a generation" and "going to the capital markets" and given that they will attempt to bury or disguise the real number by splitting things into multiple different budgets, why have they destroyed our paid-in-full legacy?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure why it's so difficult for the opposition to understand a financial statement, but Albertans understand it. We have made a commitment, as we have since the time that I became the Premier and our Minister of Finance took on his responsibilities, to set a clear picture with respect to our fiscal situation to ensure that Albertans understand that we do have to make tough choices. The budget today will represent not only a clear picture, a transparent picture, and an honest picture, but it will reflect the values of Albertans, that want us to keep building this province for the future.

Maybe we'll get a clear answer to this question. Given that Albertans have worked hard to pay off that old multibillion-dollar debt and given that the Premier has plunged us right back into new multibillion-dollar debt, does this Premier have a plan to ever return us to paid in full?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we are very proud of that is a Progressive Conservative legacy is that Premier Klein was one of the first Premiers in this country to introduce the approach of building infrastructure through P3s. P3s are important because they allow us to build infrastructure, to transfer the risk, to retain ownership of the asset, and those are good decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: It's another euphemism. It is still all debt.

Provincial Tax Policy

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it was instructive to listen to the Premier yesterday as my colleague from Airdrie was seeking a very clear picture about her future plans to raise taxes. Even to a simple, plain, unambiguous, clear question the Premier still couldn't say yes or no as to whether or not she would be increasing taxes before the next election. Perhaps we can try again today. After this once-in-a-generation budget, according to the Premier, let's talk about future generations. Will future generations have to pay for the debt, or will the current generation pay for it when she introduces a provincial sales tax?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, the exciting thing about a budget is that it doesn't just set the plan for the year. It sets a long-term vision. It puts in place the fiscal plan for the next three years, that allows us to paint the picture of the future. I think that the Leader of the Opposition and the opposition parties will be very interested today to see our Minister of Finance's comments with respect to how we will continue to build Alberta, a very clear fiscal picture and a commitment to Albertans that will ensure success for generations to come.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's about as clear as mud.

I'm going to try for the fifth time in a row asking this question. Since there is every likelihood that the government's affection for overspending is going to continue for the balance of the Premier's mandate and since the Premier's non-denials are, quite frankly, unconvincing, perhaps she is going to raise personal and corporate income taxes. Is that it?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I don't know why it seems to be acceptable to stand up over a period of 18 months and make wild allegations that are never proven to be true, yet the opposition still continues to do it. I have stood up every day since the Alberta economic summit and said that we will not have a provincial sales tax in Alberta, and this is my opportunity to say it again. The budget that gets tabled today is going to clearly set out how Alberta will succeed. It will succeed because we are making the tough, long-term decisions that create a fiscal framework based on pragmatism and not on extreme ideology.

Ms Smith: It certainly wasn't this party that was locking the public-sector unions out of the budget lock-up if you're talking about ideology.

Being that we still have not received a clear answer to the previous question, let me try for a sixth time, Mr. Speaker. Given that we know that the Premier wants to keep overspending for the rest of her mandate because she keeps on insisting that all of this debt that she is racking up is the result of a revenue problem, what is it going to be: personal and corporate income taxes, health care premiums, liquor taxes, fuel taxes, or some other taxes? What is it the Premier is going to raise?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in that very question we see three absolutely incorrect statements. I understand there was a lock-up today that included absolutely everybody that wanted to be there. Not only that, but we continue to see ridiculous allegations that never become reality because we are making thoughtful choices. The budget that is tabled today will clearly set out a plan for the next three years that again will prove that the opposition is not prepared to have an intelligent conversation about this debate but to keep throwing out political allegations that are incorrect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Alberta Health Services Parking Fees

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to make a mess of our health care system. Now it's the people versus parking. This government has announced another parking fee increase for Alberta patients despite the fact that year after year Alberta Health Services fails to meet its own pathetically low targets while executives continue to drive up the cost of the health care system with outrageous expenses like video games or butlers. With this in mind, how can the Premier possibly justify nickel and diming vulnerable Alberta families with another parking fee increase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member conveniently ignores the fact that Alberta Health Services has the lowest administration costs of any health delivery organization in Canada, at 3.3 per cent. I'm personally very proud of that. The hon. member should also know that Alberta Health Services charges parking fees for its facilities on a cost-recovery basis only. These are reasonable changes made in a reasonable way with full notice to Albertans. They reflect a commitment to value for taxpayers that we see throughout our health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the minister should know is what they use the parking fees for, and that's Calgary Lab Services also.

The fact is that AHS collected $61 million in parking fees that came straight out of the pockets of patients and front-line workers. Now, given the fact that over 26,000 managers at AHS spent over a hundred million dollars in 17 months alone on questionable expenses . . .

An Hon. Member: Shameful.

Mrs. Forsyth: . . . does the Premier really believe that parking fees are the problem with health care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what's shameful is the premise of the question. The suggestion that the organization has spent a hundred million dollars on executive expenses, on frills is actually not correct, and it's been very well documented by AHS and in the media. The vast majority of these expenses are spent in services that directly benefit patients: travel of health care professionals across the province; procurement of supplies that are used in services such as home care; many, many other services that Albertans depend on. [interjections] This member needs to check her facts. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's be a little bit respectful of both the people asking the questions and the people answering them. Some people may not like to listen to the questions, others may not like to listen to the answers, but we have a large number of guests up there who might be interested in both. Let's be respectful of them as well.

The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that AHS executives feel they are entitled to half a million dollars in performance failure bonuses, how do you think Albertans should feel being nickelled and dined with more fees when those in charge of the health care system continue to use it as their own personal piggy bank?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are very, very proud to have a board at Alberta Health Services and a chair who has in the last several weeks spoken extensively about the board's plans to reduce administrative expenses, furthering their position as the lowest in the country. The board has talked about plans to revamp management positions in the organization, to look at issues such as compensation compared to other jurisdictions across the country. This is a board that is clearly focused on improving value for taxpayers' dollars, and to suggest anything less is a disservice to this health system as a whole.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Minister of Municipal Affairs

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Premier, happy birthday.

Yesterday I couldn't believe my ears as the Minister of Municipal Affairs expressed his Romney-esque disdain for the 83 per cent of Albertans who live and work in cities and towns. I asked the Premier who her government planned to be mean to, and I guess we just got the answer. To the Premier: do you condone your minister saying that 83 per cent of Albertans "sit in high-rise condos and don't . . . contribute to the grassroots of this economy"?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of reviewing the back and forth in the House over that discussion, and I think the unfortunate part is that what prompted that sort of comment really was an overgeneralization with respect to the importance of rural economies in this province. There is no doubt that we are all productive and contributing members of society, whether we live in rural Alberta or in urban Alberta. In fact, we have people who live in urban Alberta who work in rural Alberta and vice versa. What I was really disappointed by, frankly, was the reaction, which was then to see other people pit different communities against each other. That's not the Alberta way.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, what prompted that was a question about fairness that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre asked. This is at least the third eruption of Mount Griffiths in the past year. The minister is clearly at war with municipal leaders. He bullied the AUMA president, Linda Sloan, calling her a liar; he insulted the mayor of Calgary, calling him a puffed-up peacock; and now he's offended 83 per cent of Albertans. To the Premier: why do you have a Minister of Municipal Affairs who doesn't like cities?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, you know, one of the things that I think is really appropriate in this House is for us to respect the fact that there are lots of people that have lots of different leadership roles. In fact, since the hon. member brought up Ms Sloan, I would say that I did receive a note from a number of councillors in the city of Edmonton, including Ms Sloan, talking about what a wonderful job our Minister of Municipal Affairs did at the last AUMA breakfast, so I would actually pay him tribute for that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, what's appropriate is that the Premier and the minister show respect to elected representatives. I'm sorry; I'm not convinced. We're talking about a minister who discriminates against cities and towns, refuses to deliver on the promise of the big city charter, and blows up at anybody who questions him. To the Premier: will you apologize on behalf of your government for the minister's behaviour and give him a time out?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I'm kind of stunned that this is the most serious issue that has to be brought up in the House today. Look, I have worked very well with every single municipality, like I said, from Fort Macleod to Fort McMurray, from Edmonton to Edgerton, from Calgary to Cold Lake, and I respect every single municipality regardless of the size. We work very well together.

All I ever pointed out was that there was no us versus them, that Edmonton feels that they contribute and feels sometimes that they don't get enough, but rural Alberta feels the same way. Dwelling on that will not serve building a better province or building stronger communities, which is our focus here in this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before the election the Minister of Municipal Affairs attempted to organize a PC boycott of an Alberta Urban Municipalities Association event because the president said something the minister didn't want to hear. Yesterday we heard outrageous statements by the minister dismissing urban dwellers in the latest in a series of hotheaded and insulting comments. To the Premier: will she ask her minister to apologize to urban Albertans, and if he refuses, will she do the right thing and sack him?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I have complete respect for people who live in the city and live in condos. I own one. I lived in one while I went to the University of Alberta and got two University of Alberta degrees. I've spent half my life in the city. I have full respect for people from both sides, but I will not tolerate or indulge people who try and say that rural Alberta has too much money. They make the impression that people in rural Alberta are driving down streets paved with gold. Lots of those streets in rural Alberta aren't paved at all. Everyone is struggling with infrastructure, and everyone deserves respect and the resources available to them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that recently the Minister of Municipal Affairs compared the mayor of Calgary, the largest city in Alberta, to a peacock because he dared to suggest that this government has broken yet another promise to municipalities, will the Premier force the minister to apologize to the mayor and all Calgarians for his gratuitous insult, and if not, why not?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I represent a Calgary constituency. I'm a Calgarian. I actually received today from the mayor of Calgary a beautiful birthday bouquet, which I was very appreciative of. I think the relations we have right now with respect to amendments to the Municipal Government Act and the city charter are exactly what we're able to work with with municipal leaders across this province, including the mayor of Calgary. I think we're all looking forward to seeing that concluded quite soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that the Minister of Municipal Affairs seems to be more interested in positioning himself for a run at the Tory leadership than he is in building partnerships with urban municipalities, shouldn't he be doing his job instead of jockeying for your job?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear right now. I have no intention of ever seeking the leadership again because we have the most exceptional leader that this province has seen in a long time. I am honoured and proud to work with our entire team, and we will continue to work with municipalities on the Municipal Government Act, on the civic charter, and on the Calgary Regional Partnership. We're months ahead of schedule on the civic charter alone, and I'm looking forward to continuing that work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-South East.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Municipal Affairs decided that insulting the mayor of Calgary just wasn't enough for him. He had to take it right up to the next level. After calling Mayor Nenshi a strutting peacock, the minister one-upped himself by saying that urban Albertans "sit in high-rise condos and don't necessarily contribute to the grassroots of this economy." I am a proud Calgarian, proud to live in one of Canada's best and most economically vibrant communities. To the hon. minister: given your position, sir, when are you going to swallow your ego, retract your insulting remarks, and apologize to all urban Albertans?

Speaker's Ruling Repetition

The Speaker: Hon. member, you can see what happens when you dance on the fine line of breaking the rules and things. There is a section in Beauchesne's and elsewhere that talks about that questions ought not be repetitious or refer to matters that have already been addressed. However, on this occasion we will allow one answer, and then we'll listen to one sup and see if we're in order or not.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been asked this already, and I've answered it very clearly. We're going to work with every single one of the 349 municipalities in this province to make sure that every single one of them has the opportunity to be successful because I want every single Albertan, every single one who lives in a community to know that for the next 20 years they're going to enjoy long-term prosperity in strong communities.

Now I look forward to any policy questions the opposition might like to ask.

Mr. Wilson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that quite qualifies as a retraction.

Given that the Premier continues day in and day out to lament the tone in the Legislature and given that the same minister in a different exchange yesterday labelled the opposition as arrogant and ignorant, will the minister accept responsibility for his role in contributing to the tone that his leader finds so troubling?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, my comments were directed at the fact that the opposition had insinuated that there was no reason whatsoever to locate medevac services at the International Airport, which is patently untrue. It disrespects the city of Edmonton and their desire to alternately use the municipal airport lands. That's what was ignorant, deliberately ignorant of the facts.

Mr. Wilson: My final question is to the same minister. Given his numerous gaffes over the past couple of weeks I'm sure he's learned a lesson or two about how to conduct himself as the minister responsible for cities. I just want to know if he plans on adding another chapter to his bestselling book, The 14th Way To Kill Your Community. It could even be called How To Insult Mayors and Tell Urbanites They're Lazy.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate him pointing out that it's a bestselling book and that many people have read it. It's great advertising.

My dedication to communities has been exemplary for 11 years as an MLA. I've dedicated most of my life to working to build stronger communities in this province, Mr. Speaker, and I will continue to do that going forward every single day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Ground Ambulance Services

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a registered advance care paramedic and the MLA for Calgary-South East I hear from Albertans that there is inadequate access to ground ambulance. I hear they're waiting longer for ambulances to arrive at their home and that when transported to the hospital, patients are waiting needlessly in the hallways before they receive care from nurses and physicians. To the Minister of Health: how will your announcement this week on ground ambulances lead to tangible changes in how Albertans access ground ambulances and receive further care in the system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question. As the House knows, the Health Quality Council of Alberta recently completed a year-long review of ground ambulance service across the province. What they told us very clearly is that we are correct in believing that EMS is health care and that we need to complete the very elaborate plan that we have put in place to get us to the point where all ground ambulance services function as an integral, central first point of contact in our health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was born and raised in the city, but I started my career in rural EMS. The decision to resume consolidation of EMS dispatch operations from 15 into 3: how is this going to impact the rural dispatch centres? Can the minister assure rural Albertans that there will continue to be reliable dispatch service for ambulances in rural Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we certainly can assure Albertans that through the consolidation of dispatch across the province we can provide better ambulance service. The reason for that is that it gives us the opportunity to manage all ground ambulance services as one fleet. When an ambulance is called out of a given community to assist in another community, we can arrange for appropriate backup. The system also allows us to ensure that the rural ambulance, if that happens to be the case, is able to return home as quickly as possible. This is a job that was started a while back and needs to be completed. The report provides a road map for that, and we're committed to finishing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a private member I have a responsibility to ask questions for my members of Calgary-South East and my fellow paramedics. I hear a number of times that ambulances are tied up transferring patients with nonurgent medical concerns, and in fact I've experienced that. Will the minister be exploring all options that will appropriately use interfacility transport units for nonemergent transports and allow emergent ground ambulances to respond to the critically ill?

Mr. Horne: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is, in fact, an issue that was not specifically referred to the Health Quality Council but one which I have directed Alberta Health Services to explore. In our growing population across the province we see communities that are seeing increasing demands in both hospital services and for ground ambulance. We need to make sure that our best equipment and our most highly trained personnel are available at all times to serve those who are most in need, most critically ill. There are options available that AHS will be bringing forward to make sure we do not use those resources for nonurgent situations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Volunteer Ambulance Services

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've lived in the village of Stirling since 1972. Volunteers using the ambulances supplied by the county of Warner were saving lives before I came and continued doing so until stopped by Alberta Health Services. My neighbours and I neither asked for nor needed our service upgraded through credential creep. The system wasn't broken. It didn't need fixing. To the Minister of Health: when will AHS stop meddling, start listening, and allow our villages and towns to keep their volunteer ambulance services?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, in many small communities the volunteer first responders are also the fire departments, which is why, when the Health Quality Council's report was released, we pulled out 911, the volunteer fire departments, and first emergency responders, to make sure that they're interconnected into the system to make sure that we get the best possible service for every community, including Warner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health. Given that AHS has notified the village of Warner that its volunteer ambulance service will be taken away soon, I've been inundated with phone calls and letters, some claiming you're jeopardizing the viability of their world-class girls' hockey school by creating unnecessary safety issues. I suspect they've told you this, too. Will the minister do the right thing and immediately allow their ambulances to continue serving the needs of the village of Warner?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, one thing needs to be made very clear. This government made a commitment a long time ago to recognizing a very basic fact. EMS is health care. In order to make full use of all the resources that EMS has to offer, we need to operate EMS as part of our provincial health care system. AHS contracts with many municipalities and other agencies to provide specific services, but one thing must be made clear. We have made a commitment to improve ground ambulance service in the province. That commitment depends on capitalizing on all of the opportunities that a single provincial health system has to offer. We'll continue to work with the municipalities, but it will not divert us from that commitment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health: given that many other communities in my riding and throughout the province have historically received good service from dedicated volunteers, will you also undo the harm AHS is causing them and restore their right to continue operating their ambulances as they've successfully done for decades?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has already noted, we have in place a strategy to work with municipalities, to work with volunteer fire departments in order to make sure that we're making the best use of everything they have to offer in delivering a first-class EMS system for Albertans.

With respect to the specific community that the hon. member refers to, again, Alberta Health Services works with municipalities in terms of contracting for services. But, Mr. Speaker, make no mistake. The EMS system in this province is grounded on standards, it's grounded on equity of access to all, and we will continue to deliver that level of service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Municipal Government Act Review

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2010 AUMA and AAMD and C completed a joint task force report on assessment and taxation, and in 2012 AUMA completed a second report on issues identified by urban municipalities. Both reports identified issues of transparency, accountability, equity, and functionality in our current assessment and taxation process. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What are the minister's plans to deal with the obvious disparities and transparency issues identified by the task force report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over a year ago we undertook to review the MGA. It's the document that really guides what municipalities do and how they operate. I indicated then that we were going to undertake a very vigorous review over a couple of years so that we could rewrite the legislation because our modern communities need a modern piece of legislation that can help them be flexible. One-third section of that document is on taxation assessment, and I know the AUMA, as a very important stakeholder in municipal relations, will be inputting that information into the process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that many of these issues have existed for decades, what is the minister willing to do to address these issues on a more timely and comprehensive basis than the MGA review will allow?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, the MGA itself is the single largest piece of legislation the province of Alberta has. It's a very complex document, and it has a lot of stakeholders that are going to be very interested in what it says. We already have a very vigorous timeline for the MGA review, and I would prefer that it was done within the context of the MGA review so all stakeholders, whether it's private business, the public sector, municipalities, AUMA, AAMD and C, all have the opportunity for input so we can come up with the best, most comprehensive document to guide municipalities for another generation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the minister willing to do to address the long-standing disparity and detrimental effects on municipalities, both urban and rural, that tax and assessment breaks create by transferring the tax load from one sector to another, especially in the case of the education property tax?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's why the MGA review is going to be a very detailed and thorough review, and it's going to have a lot of discussion from a lot of different stakeholders. I can tell you that in the Department of Municipal Affairs and in the context of the MGA review we have four principles. We understand there is only one taxpayer from which we all collect our resources. We know that we have to make sure that we're competitive as a province and as municipalities. We say every day that there is no us versus them; there's only us. We're all Albertans, and we need to work together. Finally, it's about the cost-effective, efficient delivery of services for the clients that we all serve collectively.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Municipal Charters

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. As any woman can tell you, one size does not fit all. So it is no surprise that Edmonton and Calgary, with two-thirds of Alberta's population between them, have different issues and need different powers and tools than smaller cities or towns, but the MGA is forcing the large and the small into the same one size. Why does the Minister of Municipal Affairs insist that two large cities and three smaller cities must work within the MGA one-size pantyhose?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about pantyhose, and I won't comment on that.

Mr. Speaker, we have worked very vigorously on a civic charter so that cities who want to take on new roles and assume new responsibilities will be able to have an enhanced relationship with the province and the co-ordination on how we're going to deliver those services, knowing there's only one taxpayer and knowing we all serve the same client. We had proposed to have it done before the next municipal election. We are months ahead of schedule and look to be signing it this spring. So we don't have one size fits all, we know every municipality is unique, and we're trying to work with them to make sure they can deliver services as best they can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that big cities, small cities, and towns in Alberta have all been supportive of each other's need for different tools under or outside the MGA, why is it that the minister is the one who doesn't support the Calgary and Edmonton charters?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I was just very clear that we are months ahead of schedule in signing the civic charter. I am incredibly supportive of that. I don't know how else to say it to make it more clear. That's what we're working on.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I think, to be very clear, in fact, he's signing civic charters. He is not signing big-city charters, an Edmonton city charter and a Calgary city charter. That's why it strikes me as so odd that Edmonton and Calgary, again large urban centres with most of the province's population, are treated like unreasonable teenagers by this parental province. What is it about this minister or this government that they don't seem to respect what these cities and their citizens want, their own charter?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, there are 349 municipalities in this province. If I tried to write a charter for every single one of them, we would have a mishmash that wouldn't be very competitive and very good for the citizens that live in those communities. I am working very hard with the municipalities to sign a civic charter that enhances the relationship with the province for those that can take on more roles and responsibilities, but it's important to note that the MGA the province currently has, the one we're going to write is going to be less prescriptive and more open for municipalities to manage their own affairs than any other piece of legislation in North America, and that's where they're going to get their power.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Little Bow.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, yesterday Albertans learned once again that they'll have to pay significantly more to park at hospitals so that Alberta Health Services can pay for crucial maintenance on their infrastructure. This is nothing more than a tax on the sick and on their families. My question is to the Health minister. Why has the government put Alberta Health Services in this kind of financial position, which means they have to gouge sick Albertans and their families to pay for parking?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member had the first part of his question exactly right. Parking fees are charged to assist with site maintenance and reconstruction and all of the other things that make parking facilities possible at our health care facilities.

The second part of his question, however, could not be more off base. Any major centre in this province that delivers health care has to charge parking fees on a recovery basis in order to make parking viable at these facilities. Equally, any large organization that employs staff also charges staff for parking at the place of employment. These practices are not out of line with anywhere in Canada. To suggest that somehow they're aimed at disadvantaging people who are ill is simply not the case.

Mr. Eggen: Well, let me get this straight, Mr. Speaker. Given that the staff in our hospitals are already facing financial hits and layoffs before the budget starts and people need to go to visit their loved ones regardless of if they get gouged or not, why is this Health minister asking the workers and families visiting sick people to pay more to park at the hospitals where they need to go to do their jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member couldn't be further off the mark. First of all, health workers in Alberta are among the best compensated anywhere in Canada, and we're very proud of that. Secondly, my belief is that they understand that, as with other employees in other large organizations, they do have to contribute to parking costs for their own vehicles at their places of employment. Finally, I guess, and most importantly, the hon. member is attempting to suggest in some way that the government is gouging or disadvantaging people who are ill and who require health care. That's simply not the case.

Mr. Eggen: Well, that's not what people feel when they have to reach into their pockets and pay outrageous sums to see their loved ones in the hospital.

Perhaps the minister can explain to me why health care workers and sick Albertans will wind up paying more once again for this PC government's broken promise when we know that people find it unaffordable to pay?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what promise the hon. member is referring to. We've certainly made no promise to freeze parking rates at our facilities. That said, I'm assured that our rates are comparable to other major centres across Canada. I know, based on my own questions of Alberta Health Services, that they attempt to keep them as low as possible. But I also know that they're a very real cost. I trust that Albertans understand, that they would want us to charge people in order to park at our facilities if it meant that that money could not be spent on health care services, which they value much more highly, I assure you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Calgary-Fort.

Fusarium Management

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Agriculture is a large part of this province's history and economy, and through thick and thin it has remained Alberta's largest renewable resource; however, in the early 2000s the government implemented a Fusarium management plan with a zero-tolerance policy in order to reduce the Fusarium, a serious fungal disease affecting cereal crops. This plan has not been properly enforced. Considering the lack of enforcement and that it is costing this industry millions of dollars every year, will this minister please explain the current situation and why seed cleaning plants in Alberta are not adhering to these regulations?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. I know that in his area of the province this is something of significant concern. Actually, if you go back in history to the early 2000s, that was at a time when there was early detection in southern Alberta, largely in irrigated crops. But it seems as though this problem is moving north. We take this very seriously because, as he points out, agriculture is a very important industry for Alberta, and in order for it to maintain its profitability, we have to make sure that we manage these diseases.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that there's a lack of enforcement regarding the Fusarium management plan and the fact that it's virtually impossible for pedigree seed growers to grow a zero per cent standard to meet, will this government work to change the policy to the ministry accepted standard of 0.5 per cent, which would be acceptable and through best management practices could be followed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member does make a good point because these criteria were developed early on. There has been an evolution of this disease in the province, and as I say, it is moving northward. There has been a significant amount of debate. We do have a committee working on this and reviewing our current policy. We are working with producers as well as industry, ag fieldmen, ag service boards, and we are going to review whether or not the current policy is still the one that we should have.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that large companies are turning away from investing in our hybrid seed-growing industry due to this unattainable standard and given that even the Premier has been taking my good advice lately, will this minister be willing to work with me and with seed growers in Alberta to address this industry-wide problem? Or I'll write a note.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we already are doing that. Just for example, in 2010 we tested some 900 wheat crops, the following year another 400 wheat crops. We've also randomly tested corn crops, barley crops. We are working on this. I take his concerns very seriously. We will continue our conversations, and I'm happy to discuss them with him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Electricity System

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To build Alberta, we need electricity. Electricity is the lifeblood of our economy and quality of life. Given that Alberta has adopted a deregulated regime of electricity generation, that brings uncertainty and fluctuation. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Energy. What can the minister tell Albertans about the situation of electricity supply and demand? Are we an importer or an exporter of electricity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to take that question. You know that we're building in this province in many ways, and one of the ways is that we're building that critical enabler of economic development in this province, which is the electricity system. Now, some suggest that we're building infrastructure in order to export, but if you look at the history over the last 10 years, we actually continue year after year after year to import electricity on a net basis, over 4 and a half per cent last year. I would say that that's because the opportunities are right here in Alberta, a great province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like natural gas needs pipelines to transport it, electricity generation needs transmission lines to transport electrons to end users. My question is to the same hon. minister. What is the situation of transmission line networks in Alberta to meet the demand?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, like any house that has a roof, it needs to be upgraded. It needs to be replaced after 50 or 60 years. What we're doing in this province is upgrading the transmission infrastructure. What I can tell you and can reassure all Albertans is the fact that we are very concerned about the cost to consumers of this. If you reflect upon our decision back in January, we ensured that there was indeed going to be greater oversight, six different initiatives to ensure there's greater oversight over the cost structure of the electrical transmission system in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same hon. minister. Given that electricity can be generated with natural gas and that the natural gas price is low, my constituents would like to know why the electricity price is still high and gas is low?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans are paying a fair price for electricity. If you look at the facts in a StatsCan report most recently published, last month Alberta was the only province to post a year-over-year price decrease for electricity. This happens in Alberta. It doesn't happen in most of the rest of the country. We have a very competitive electricity system, and on top of that, there isn't one cent of public debt on the electricity system in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Care Workforce

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to mismanage our health care system. Instead of taking aim at the layers of upper management and bureaucracy at AHS, this government continues to make foolish cuts that impact the most vulnerable. At the long-term care facility in Three Hills we have heard there has been a 30 per cent reduction in staff presence even though patients in these beds are still in need of care. Will the Health minister, then, please explain why front-line health workers and services continue to be targeted?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, front-line health services workers across Alberta in our health system are being supported as they never have been before. When we hear the budget later this afternoon, we'll be talking about other things that we are doing to support them in their work and to make it easier for them. Our long-term care system and all of the continuing care services that we provide in Alberta are based on patient need. Funding and staffing levels are based on regular assessments of patient need, assessments that are conducted by health care professionals.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the nursing aides at these facilities provide Albertans with some of the most cost-effective care for our most vulnerable and that the reduction of staff will just add further cost to our health care system, how can the minister justify another cut that impacts Albertans in need?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more with the hon. member about the role that personal care aides and health care aides and others that work in continuing care play. They put the care in continuing care for the residents in our facilities. As I said in response to the last question, decisions about staffing levels in individual facilities are based on the actual needs of the residents who live there. This is what allows us to ensure quality and safety in the system. It's what allows us to do the best job we can of supporting residents, and it's a system that's working well for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think cutting staff accomplishes that.

Given that this government has tried to cut nurse practitioners in Airdrie and has shut down a cost-efficient transition centre right here in Edmonton, can the minister explain to Albertans why cuts are being made to long-term care centres instead of taking aim at executive and management perks in our health care system?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to answer that question. First of all, the closure of the transition unit at the Royal Alexandra hospital is not a cut in service. It's a reflection of the fact that we have managed to significantly reduce the number of patients waiting in hospitals for access to continuing care. That's a very good thing, and Alberta Health Services deserves credit for it. The allegations around staff cuts – again, I'm not sure where the hon. member is getting his information, but decisions around staffing levels in individual facilities are made based on resident need. Resident needs in facilities go up and they go down, and staff levels are adjusted accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Aboriginal Relations

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have First Nations peoples in the constituency of Gold Bar as well as Inuit and Métis residents. My question is directed to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Alberta's aboriginal people are the fastest growing and youngest segment of our population but have some of the highest unemployment rates and socioeconomic challenges in the province. What is your ministry doing to address these concerns?

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you for that question. It is a very important question, and this is a very important priority that is closing the social gap for all First Nations and Métis people in this province. When our Premier talks about families and communities, she talks about social outcomes. When she talks about world stewardship of our natural resources, she's made it very clear that First Nations must be at the table and partner with this province as we move forward. We are working with First Nations. I've now toured over half of the Nations in the province. We've had very good discussions with the chiefs and councils. I'm confident that we're moving in the right direction and that we will be able to close that socioeconomic gap as we move forward in the coming years.

Mr. Dorward: Also to the same minister: let's talk education, then. Has any work been done to address the low school graduation rates amongst First Nations peoples referenced in a memorandum of understanding, that I've reviewed, on First Nations education, signed in 2010?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, it's important to realize that the purpose of the MOU is to address gaps in funding, services, legislation, and to increase collaboration and co-ordination in the education system. There are over 40 commitments at eight subtables that we have, with a tripartite agreement that our Education minister has worked on very closely with the federal government and with all of First Nations. We're moving forward on this MOU very quickly. In fact, the Premier and I and the Education minister met with Shawn Atleo, the national chief, and representatives from all treaty organizations last week, and we agreed that this is a priority issue. We're going to work very closely on it.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, I've been following closely on social media, and I recognize the things that are being done in this area, but I'm also concerned about the treaty rights of First Nations and how all of this work may infringe on that and if it's been done in harmony with the treaties that are in place.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The Premier made it very clear to the First Nations that none of the work that we will do will infringe on treaty rights, and that was recognized by the national chief last week.

Mr. Speaker, I want to leave you with three words: language, history, and culture, language because you should be proud of who you are, history because you should know where you came from and where you're going, and culture because you should be able to celebrate that heritage. We're going to make sure that all First Nations and all Métis people in this province have the ability to do that and to be proud of who they are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Grizzly Bear Management

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently in southwest Alberta many constituents on ranches, farms, small acreages have seen their livestock be targeted by grizzly bears, and many other constituents have felt scared of close contact with these bears on their property. This leads me to believe that the BearSmart program has been poorly designed by the government by applying too broad a stroke for the entire province without regional needs being strongly considered. Will the ESRD minister please update the House on what the current status of the grizzly bear population is in southern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy for the question. I would say that our grizzly bear recovery program is working. This is a very important species for Alberta, and certainly we're starting to see the recovery happening throughout the province but particularly, as the member raises, in southern Alberta. The importance, though, is that we are working with ranchers and farmers in southern Alberta and across the province to make sure that we're helping them to manage the populations. This is a very important species for us, an endangered species, and we continue to make sure that we recover the numbers that are needed in this province for the important grizzly bear population.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Well, thank you for that, but I actually asked something specific: if the population was increasing or not. Perhaps if it is, does it need to be the case where we have to refocus on the BearSmart program, then, or are we just going to carry on with the same old, as we've seen in the past?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, as I said, the grizzly bear population is increasing. We know that's happening, and that's a good sign of the good work that the department is doing with regard to the grizzly bear recovery program. The BearSmart program is working as well, but we know that in southern Alberta there are more of the grizzly bears surviving there, so we are working with the ranchers to ensure that we're working with them on the protection of their livestock. We have programs with them to do that as well. We're happy that the numbers of the grizzly bear population are increasing because that's the whole point of the recovery program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thanks for that. Given that they are increasing and given that there's a lot of stuff in the media today and in the past few weeks with regard to possibly culling or moving animals, does the minister have anything to say in that regard?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly, if we have problem grizzly bears in different parts of the province, the department looks at how we can work to move those populations. We're making sure that, first and foremost, the recovery plan is in place, that we have BearSmart in place, working with the ranchers to make sure that we can mitigate the issues for them. We certainly look at: how do we move some of the problem bears? That's important for us. But, first and foremost – I'll say it again – what's most important is for us to get the recovery program working and to make sure we can get this species, that's very important to Alberta, off the endangered list.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 15 seconds I will call on the first private member, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, for her statement.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

International Women's Day

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta, as we all know, is home to thousands of extraordinary men and women, but tomorrow we will be recognizing the women of our province as we join with people from around the globe in acknowledgement of International Women's Day.

Alberta is home to some of Canada's first suffragettes. It's in their honour that we created the Persons Case scholarship to commemorate the efforts of our Famous Five Alberta women, who fought and won the right for the women of Canada to be officially deemed persons under the law.

Our government has made a pledge to the women of Alberta not only to celebrate with them on International Women's Day but throughout the year such as our Minister of Human Services did when he joined others in the One Billion Rising movement. You know, we can make a difference in the lives of women around the world and here at home. I'd like to commend the International Women's Day committee of Strathcona county on their four-day celebration as well as the city of Fort Saskatchewan on their first International Women's Day event for raising the profile of the wonderful women in their communities.

On a personal note, as a female parliamentarian I would like to recognize all the brilliant and innovative women in the House, including Alberta's first female Premier. Ladies, you are models of resilient dynamism, as are many of the women in our communities, and I am proud to work alongside the women on both sides of this House.

I am looking forward to the day, though, when the granddaughters of Albertans question the need to have a day to recognize one gender over another. You know, we've come a long way since the Famous Five, but we still have some ground to make up. I ask that the men and women of this Assembly join with me in recognizing the accomplishments of women from all across this glorious province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek in place of Calgary-Shaw.

Economic Value of Cities

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like all members of this Assembly representing urban constituencies, I am a proud city dweller. Alberta's major cities are the envy of Canada, if not the entire world. Rich culturally, blessed with stunning natural beauty, and as the Minister of Municipal Affairs apparently needs reminding, they are the economic powerhouses. Edmonton and Calgary are expected to grow well beyond the Canadian average in 2013. Edmonton's 2011 real GDP growth of 3.9 per cent doubled the Canadian figure and even outpaced Alberta's growth by almost a full percentage point. Calgary, the city I live in and love and am proud to represent, currently has Canada's best paid and most productive workforce, highest personal income, and the second-lowest unemployment of Canada's six major cities.

If there is one person in the Assembly who should understand and appreciate the economic value of the cities, it's the Minister of Municipal Affairs, but yesterday the minister shocked us when he said that Alberta urban residents sit in their high-price condos and don't necessarily contribute to the grassroots of the economy. Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves. The minister is wrong, and he owes my constituents and every single resident of Edmonton and Calgary an honest apology. This isn't the first time this minister has gaffed when it comes to Alberta cities. You'll recall he called Mayor Nenshi of Calgary a strutting peacock when he had the utter nerve to actually question the government's treatment of cities. I humbly suggest that his comments towards urban Alberta residents yesterday offer a glimpse of where the insult came from.

Mr. Speaker, ultimately, in the end I think Albertans were simply disappointed with the minister's comment yesterday. They expect and they deserve better from the minister, whose job is to represent, stand up for, and understand all Alberta municipalities, rural and urban.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Sherwood Park.

Calgary Society for Persons with Disabilities

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a group of individuals in my constituency who demonstrate forward thinking and capacity building for those in our community with developmental disabilities. The Calgary Society for Persons with Disabilities is a nonprofit organization that provides housing services to persons with disabilities in Calgary. I had the pleasure of collaborating with their team towards the goal of providing housing for their aging clients.

They have raised considerable funds towards their long-term goal, construction of a side-by-side duplex. CSPD has even engaged their own clients in launching their own fundraising ideas. A penny drive and the sale of handcrafted greeting cards are just two examples of their community spirit. I even have today a card for our Premier for her birthday, which I will pass on to her after.

Our government's Ministry of Infrastructure's support in extending their land lease to 30 years has ensured that this group will meet their goal to build housing in Calgary-Currie for an aging developmentally disabled population. I look forward to our continued work together in the coming years, and I thank them very sincerely for their advocacy for some of Alberta's most vulnerable.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Blood Donation

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a prominent and beloved member of my community had a very serious operation. He is alive today because of the investment Albertans have made in medical facilities and training, certainly, but also because 15 Albertans took the time to donate blood.

When surgical procedures are undertaken, there is an inevitable loss of blood that must be replaced for the patient to live. He required 15 units. Some accident victims can go through 50 units before they are stabilized. Standard hip replacements require two units, and some leukemia sufferers require eight units a week. Thanks to the voluntary contributions of thousands of Albertans, Canadian Blood Services is able to ensure that blood is available to meet the needs of the injured and sick as required, and it is a cornerstone of our universal health care system.

Our voluntary system also endeavours to ensure that the blood provided comes from healthy members of our society, which is not the case in some countries that may rely on the purchase of blood. Blood is not purchased here, and users are not charged. While blood donor clinics are used to solicit donations, our system depends on regular donors. Prospective donors can register online and schedule regular appointments into their busy lives. Check out www.blood.ca for more information on where to donate or to set up an appointment.

The gift of life is precious. We all rely on blood being available to meet our needs and those of our loved ones, friends, and neighbours. Let's find room on our calendars for an appointment to donate. Thank you to the hundreds of thousands of Albertans who have given blood and special thanks to those who do so on a regular basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Calgary-Fort.

United Nations Commission on the Status of Women

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week I was granted the opportunity to attend the United Nations 57th Commission on the Status of Women in New York City. Along with my colleague Donna Kennedy-Glans and a Canadian delegation led by Minister Rona Ambrose, we were privileged to experience first-hand the great work our international community is doing to end violence against women and girls.

During our visit the Canadian delegation presented an event featuring an international panel of experts committed to developing a strategy to engage men and boys to prevent violence against women. This is an initiative that I know our government is working on as well through the taking a stand project developed by the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General. Change begins at home, and I am proud that we are working with our communities not only to prevent but to eliminate violence against women and girls. I encourage each and every one of you to take note of efforts being made in your constituencies to understand and address gender-based violence.

The Hope Resource Centre in Westlock provides support to individuals affected by family violence and abuse. These are the types of initiatives that help create hope and stability in our communities. The creating change treatment program is a great example of support developed by the Hope Resource Centre in partnership with communities in Barrhead and Athabasca. This collaborative program operates in rural Alberta with a success rate that is pretty extraordinary.

As we mark International Women's Day tomorrow, I am privileged to have spent part of this past week with some of the world's most prominent and progressive women. These are the moments that make me proud to be a Canadian, an Albertan, and a woman, and I am thankful to have the opportunity to serve as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, the best province in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Immigrants of Distinction Awards

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to recognize the work of the organization Immigrant Services Calgary. On March 1 I attended the ISC annual immigrants of distinction awards gala. Attending with me were the Minister of Transportation, the Minister of Justice, and hon. members for Calgary-Bow, Calgary-Glenmore, and Calgary-Hawkwood.

The immigrants of distinction awards were given to deserving individuals who have successfully integrated into our local Canadian society, are extremely accomplished themselves, and work very hard to build Alberta. The awards also were given to businesses and organizations that help newcomers and promote diversity. Their efforts showcase what Alberta is. It's a good model for integration within a new social environment, a leader in building new relationships not only in Alberta but in the world. I wish to congratulate all recipients and all nominees.

Immigrant Services Calgary is an organization that has provided newcomers a variety of services for over 35 years. They help new immigrants find language training opportunities and other community resources. They help them adjust to life in Canada by supporting them in their settlement process.

At this time I would like to acknowledge ISC Board Chair Alicia Backman-Beharry and CEO Din Ladak, board members, and all staff for their great work.

On this note, I would like also to commend all other immigrant service organizations for their contributions to help newcomers integrate quickly into our local societies and communities, to realize their full potential, and to build Alberta together.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table this petition signed by 1,162 Albertans supporting the implementation of newborn hearing screening or early hearing detection and intervention. These concerned Albertans encourage the government to mandate and fund a program to screen newborn children for hearing disabilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. member, just remember that all petitions must be vetted past and approved by Parliamentary Counsel, and I assume yours has been.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, March 11, 2013, written questions 20, 21, 22, and 23 will be accepted, and written questions 19, 24, 25, 26, and 27 will be dealt with.

Also on Monday, March 11, 2013, Motion for a Return 4 will be accepted, and motions for returns 3, 5, and 6 will be dealt with.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Fiscal Management Act

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

This bill has been developed as a result of the extensive consultations that occurred across the province last fall. It fulfills the Premier's commitment to rebalance the fiscal framework and reduce our dependency on nonrenewable resource revenues. Bill 12 will ensure that we are able to meet the needs of a growing province while living within our means. More details will be available later today when I present Budget 2013.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an ad campaign this PC government ran in the 2012 election. In this ad Premier Redford clearly promises the people of Alberta that there'll be no new taxes and no service cuts. This ad is proof that promises from this PC government are not worth the paper they're printed on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings with the requisite copies. The first is an e-mail dated March 6 from a resident of Slave Lake, with respect to her son who was in a tragedy, and she's imploring the government to keep the runway at the municipal airport open as it will save lives. That's signed by Elizabeth Lund, Patrick Lund, Tyler Lund, Kaitlin Lund, Jillian Lund, and Kristen Lund.

My next tabling is an e-mail dated March 6. It's by Bob Hetherington. He's from Cold Lake. He is urging the government to keep the runway open past March 15, to "be human and consider the lives of all Rural Albertans," and he has signed it, "Concerned Rural Albertan and supporter of the PC party for years."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite number of copies of some of the letters, e-mails, and phone calls that I received from the concerned citizens of Warner.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, I have several tablings that support the comments he made during his questions today. There is support for the reference to the Minister of Municipal Affairs' comments about rural Albertans doing all the work and people in high-rise condos not contributing to the grassroots of the economy, two of those; additional support for the comments that were made by the Minister of Municipal Affairs to the mayor of Calgary calling him a politicking peacock; and a second support for the name-calling of the Calgary mayor. Unbelievable.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in order to allow time to prepare for the Budget Address by the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, I will declare the House recessed until 3:15 p.m. today.

[The Assembly adjourned from 3:01 p.m. to 3:17 p.m.]

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I've received certain messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, and recommends the same to the Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Please be seated.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the 2013-14 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2013-14 government estimates. Further, I now wish to table the government's business plan, titled Strategic Plan, and the ministry business plans.

Mr. Speaker, the government has introduced Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, which will define the fiscal and financial reporting requirements of the province beginning April 1, 2013. The content of these plans anticipates this new legislation.

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now wish to table the government's Budget 2013 fiscal plan, which contains the operational plan, savings plan, capital plan, and major economic assumptions used in developing these plans. Once again, these plans anticipate requirements proposed under Bill 12.

Budget Address

28. Mr. Horner moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mr. Horner: Premier, happy birthday.

It is my privilege today to present the government of Alberta's proposed budget for the fiscal year 2013-14. This has been a highly anticipated budget, probably one of the most anticipated ones in some time. We are facing a number of sizable challenges. Our current fiscal situation means we are tasked with making some necessary decisions and some tough but thoughtful choices.

The essence of Budget 2013 is responsible change. Indeed, there is no question that today we have reached a turning point for Alberta. I like to think of it as a lookout point. It's the perfect place to look out into the distance and clearly see the opportunity on the horizon while recognizing the dangers of being too close to the edge.

Budget 2013 is a watershed moment. It finds us embarking on an new era in Alberta, one that finds the balance between delivering for Albertans today and looking down the road to ensure success for Albertans 20 years from now.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has grown to be the great economy it is today, the economic engine of Canada, in part because of the hard work undertaken 20 years ago. Nearly two decades ago, in 1994, the government under Premier Klein delivered an aggressive budget that changed the direction of this province. Like the government of today, that government was tasked with taking action in the face of growing concerns about deficits and debt. It wasn't easy, and not every decision was popular with everyone, but those decisions helped to eliminate the province's operating debt, transform the public service, and set a new direction for Alberta, one that continues to breed success for our province today, 20 years later.

We can go back 20 years prior to that, to 1973, to see how events of the day would shape Alberta for the next two, three, four decades. It was 1973 when the world oil crisis sent energy prices skyrocketing from $3 a barrel to $15 a barrel to $40 by the end of the decade. This was the boom that put Alberta's oil sands on the map and created untold wealth and unprecedented growth in our province.

Peter Lougheed and his team, of which I'm proud to say my father, Doc Horner, was a member – I thought I'd skate over that one, Mr. Speaker – knew that this would create tremendous opportunity amongst the challenges of growth. The fortunes and the foresight of that generation's government are among the reasons Alberta continues to be home to all of the tremendous infrastructure, financial assets, and opportunity that we must preserve today and into the future.

Here we are, 40 years later, in an Alberta that was built on the measured and thoughtful decisions and the inspired vision of Progressive Conservative governments that came before us.

With Budget 2013 it's our turn. This government is carving out a new path that will lead us to where we need to be 20 years from now. Mr. Speaker, Budget 2013 is rooted in the realities of today while focusing on the road ahead. This budget builds on Alberta's strengths, our strong economy and our ability to stand tall in the wake of turbulence. It creates an action plan to address volatile nonrenewable resource revenue and the tremendous impact these revenues have on our budget. This budget is the building block for future budgets and for the future of this province.

As you will hear today, Budget 2013 is sharply focused on three priorities: building Alberta by investing in families and communities, including the new roads, schools, and health facilities we need; living within our means by challenging every dollar this government spends; and ensuring, Mr. Speaker, that our resources get to market – that's food, technology, and especially today oil and gas – so our resources, which belong to the people of Alberta, get the highest price possible. We will accomplish these goals by continuing to deliver the responsible change Albertans expect, addressing today's challenges while bringing security and prosperity for a new generation of Albertans in the decades ahead.

But, first, let's begin with today. On March 7, 2013, what does Alberta look like? We certainly have our strengths, a fact we should all celebrate. In terms of economic indicators Alberta continues to be a key driver of the Canadian economy. In 2012 our province led the country in both economic growth, more than double that of the rest of the country, and employment growth, consistently leading all other provinces in the number of jobs created over the year. In 2013 our economy is expected to continue to expand but at a more moderate and sustainable pace over the medium term.

Alberta continues to have one of the most competitive business tax environments in North America, and that's enticing a growing number of businesses to come to our province to open up shop. Our tax regime is inviting. Alberta offers low income tax rates. We have no provincial capital taxes or taxes on financial institutions. We have no payroll taxes, no sales tax, and a publicly funded health care system that is the envy of everyone. Our Premier has been clear, concise, and consistent. There will be no new taxes, no tax increases, no sales tax, period.

Because there's no question that Alberta has an economic environment that continues to attract investors and continues to draw more people, we are expected to grow to more than 5 million people in less than 20 years. Our province is a place where we can continue building our economy and continue building Alberta by making it sustainable.

While our strengths make us attractive, it's our challenges that make us even stronger. It's no secret that we do have challenges, immediate, serious challenges that Budget 2013 speaks to. For example, for the past 10 years on average we have increased spending by 7.3 per cent per year and this year zero. Zero, Mr. Speaker, because it was the responsible thing to do in light of our fiscal situation. We are faced with declining resource revenues, thanks primarily to lower energy prices; the discounted price Alberta producers get for oil in our only market, the United States;

After last year's budget some of our critics said that we should have seen the drop in oil prices coming. Some said that the Alberta government's forecast was too high. If that was the case, then everyone's forecast was too high, including the opposition party's. Last year's budget contains a full page of forecasts from private-sector economists, industry experts, and banks, who were forecasting at the time that west Texas intermediate oil would average $100 a barrel in 2012. The federal Conservative government, our neighbours in Saskatchewan, and our government used that benchmark as the basis for our budget forecasts. So, too, did the opposition parties. Alberta's forecast was actually slightly lower, just to be safe. The WTI average turned out to be $94, closer to what we expected, but even with our lower forecast that difference in price alone cost our province.

Going forward, we intend to change the way we forecast. As John F. Kennedy once said: "Change is the law of life. And those who look only to the past or present are certain to miss the future." This summer the government will hold an energy forecasting summit. We will bring together experts from around the world to explore and share best practices and fresh ideas on forecasting.

Despite the surprise of the lower prices, we did see the market access problem on the horizon, and we did know it would impact our revenues. It was a dramatic hit. The bitumen bubble means more than a $6 billion drop in resource revenue from the Budget 2012 forecast, and we expect even larger declines in the coming years.

Bitumen belongs to the people of Alberta. Right now this resource is selling for 30 per cent less than the comparable world price. That's costing us $4 billion in lost revenues this year, and it's impacting our health care, education, and services we hold so dear. This is precisely why opening new markets across Canada and around the world has become job one for this government.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier has led the charge, pushing for a Canadian energy strategy that would allow all Canadians to make the most of the many energy resources with which our country has been blessed. Just two weeks ago the Premier met with the National Governors Association in Washington, DC, her fourth trip to the U.S. capital, to build support for the Keystone XL pipeline and to share Alberta's track record as a leader in responsible energy development. And the Premier took Alberta's case directly to the American people because it's a track record every Albertan should be proud of. It's a track record of success in environmental leadership that this government has led, a record that, dare I say, others in this House should pay close attention to.

The Premier and our colleagues in government have also been continuing to develop relationships with leaders in Asia and other growing economies to pave the way for entry into these new and lucrative markets. That's the kind of hands-on leadership that's required to build new markets and get the fairest price for our resources, and I'm proud of the Premier for leading the charge, Mr. Speaker.

Opening up new international markets for our products is not a new concept for Alberta governments. Four decades ago Premier Lougheed's team had a vision of expanding their access to new international opportunities. In fact, I can quote my dad, who in this very room on February 27, 1973, said: "There are tremendous markets around this world for all things that we can produce, if we are able to market them effectively. That means that we have to know how things are marketed in these various countries." Just like the government under Peter Lougheed, our government under this Premier is committed to success in expanding market access.

Mr. Speaker, the budget I am presenting to you today represents the steps this government is taking to address our immediate fiscal challenges. Budget 2013 will deliver the responsible change that Albertans expect. It will show how we are not only reining in spending but that we are also spending smarter. That means focusing tax dollars on core programs and directing our spending to where there is the greatest need.

The decisions in Budget 2013 are also rooted in the long term. Just as choices made 20 and 40 years ago helped create economic success and quality of life for Albertans today, our decisions today are made with foresight and optimism and a determination to become the province we want and need to be 20 years from now. In 2033 we need to be the place that can meet the needs of a much larger number of Albertans. Certainly, our province will reap the benefits that come with new people, including higher housing starts, more consumer spending, and more tax revenue. But what these new Albertans won't be bringing with them are schools, roads, or hospitals. The Alberta that we need to be is one that will keep building our province by investing in families and communities, including those new roads, schools, and the health facilities we need.

The Alberta we need to be will be home to leaders in industry, industries that include among the most qualified workforces in the world. The Alberta we need to be will have a more diversified economy, one that relies less on nonrenewable resource revenues and more on Alberta innovation. Alberta innovation has of course been our strong point for more than a century. Alberta continues to focus on its most important resource, its people. That's why it's been so important for us to connect with that resource.

We've had many conversations with Albertans over the last year: during budget consultations, at the Dollars and Sense fiscal framework town halls, and at last month's economic summit. The principles and values of the people of Alberta are the foundation for this document. Albertans have told us they value health, education, and infrastructure. They've told us they expect a budget that is responsible, balanced, and facilitates economic growth. Albertans are driving the responsible change that we are undergoing today and tomorrow as we become the province we need to be in the future.

Budget 2013 marks a new direction for Alberta. The budget itself has a new structure, representing an important transition for this government. I think the team of 1971, including my dad, would be proud of where Alberta is today and of our Premier's vision for the future, and that's a future that includes tomorrow as well as 20 years from now.

Budget 2013 is guided by the Fiscal Management Act. This new act sets out clear fiscal rules and creates the requirement for an operational plan, a savings plan, and a capital plan. It will focus our finances on areas Albertans told us are important like savings and priority services like health care and education and will ultimately reduce our reliance on nonrenewable resource revenues. It will ensure we live within our means and continue to be one of the most fiscally responsible jurisdictions in the world.

Budget 2013 represents a once-in-a-generation restructuring. It brings a renewed fiscal framework that will help us ensure success for Alberta now and meet the evolving needs of a growing Alberta in the long term. Our plan includes an operational plan that protects core services but ensures we are living within our means, a savings plan that ensures we save in good and in challenging times, and a fully funded capital plan that will enable us to meet the needs of a province of 5 million people.

Mr. Speaker, our approach to Budget 2013 is not unlike how a responsible Albertan would approach their own household budget. As a banker I learned that valuable lesson: before you spend on anything, put some away to save first. In Budget 2013 before we spend any of our revenue, we will first take money off the top to put into savings. In fact, the new Fiscal Management Act legislates that we put aside in good times and in bad. Our forecast total revenue in 2013-14 is $38.6 billion. That's a reduction from our original forecast of $44 billion. Before we do anything else with it, we are putting $297 million into the heritage savings trust fund, our long-term savings account. We are also keeping back $238 million to pay the cost on our capital borrowing, part of our debt repayment plan.

Alberta's new savings policy will replenish the savings in the contingency account, which replaces the sustainability fund, and will also grow the province's longer term savings vehicles, including the heritage savings trust fund. Under our plan, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's savings will grow to over $24 billion over the next three years. As we grow our savings, we will continue to build the programs and services in the areas that Albertans have identified as priorities, including health, education, and supporting those Albertans who are most vulnerable.

Budget 2013's operating expense is forecast to be $36.4 billion. As I said, this is a zero per cent increase over the operating expense forecast for 2012-13. In a time when population growth plus inflation is 4.3 per cent, we are significantly holding the line on spending and living within our means. There will be changes, but they will be not be across-the-board reductions, where everyone gets a haircut. Instead, we are embarking on important and necessary structural change in this government with an eye to ensuring that Albertans continue to receive the outcomes that they expect. We will protect core services and provide for Albertans' priorities. This is at the heart of results-based budgeting, which I will speak more about in a moment.

First, I want to talk about what we're doing in specific program areas, beginning with Health. Our government is increasing the Ministry of Health's operational budget to $17.1 billion, an increase of nearly $500 million, or 3 per cent. The increase reflects the priority that Albertans and our government place on building a strong and accessible health care system.

Alberta Health Services is receiving a 3 per cent increase in base operating funding for the delivery of health services across the province. This is lower than the 4 and a half per cent increase the health sector was expecting, but we believe AHS can provide better outcomes for better value by using its resources more effectively. AHS is also receiving $393 million for operating costs of new health facilities in the province.

Starting in 2014 all Albertans will have access to comprehensive drug and supplementary health benefit coverage. Currently 20 per cent of Albertans have no such coverage, Mr. Speaker.

With the new seniors' property tax deferral program we are focusing our funding on the greatest need. This program will ensure that seniors will be able to keep more money in their pockets by deferring taxes until they sell their home.

This budget will also provide increased access to primary health care through family care clinics and primary care networks. It will see Albertans paying less for generic drugs, and it includes early childhood development initiatives that will improve maternal and infant health.

The Premier has been clear that despite the difficult budget, we will continue to support our most vulnerable Albertans. While the operating expense for Human Services does see a $9 million reduction from the 2012-13 forecast, at nearly $4.3 billion we continue to focus on positive outcomes for vulnerable Albertans and maintain funding in priority areas. Through responsible spending funding will increase slightly for supports for persons with disabilities, child care, child intervention, family support for children with disabilities, homelessness, and the assured income for the severely handicapped program.

Funding for the 10-year plan to end homelessness will also increase slightly, enabling it to provide outreach support services and help house about 1,800 homeless Albertans this year as well as fund over 3,200 spaces in emergency/transitional shelters. As part of government's focus on early childhood development we will provide $89 million in 2013-14 for early intervention and fetal alcohol spectrum disorder initiatives.

We are changing how we do business. Employment training and income supports will see a reduction, and caseloads for Alberta Works are expected to decline as Alberta's economy and job prospects continue to improve. We are suspending indefinitely the summer temporary employment program, and we will work with our nonprofits to address their unique needs. We will be sharpening our focus on long-term career development and connecting Albertans with sustainable employment.

Budget 2013 will focus our education spending where it matters most, on the classroom, putting students first. Education's budget, including capital, increases by $204 million from the 2012-13 forecast. Despite the current economic challenges we are maintaining base instruction funding for school boards at 2012 levels. To do so, we had to make some tough but responsible decisions. To this end, we are suspending funding to the Alberta initiative for school improvement. To ensure we lessen the impact on those with the greatest need, we are increasing inclusion funding. This gives school boards the flexibility to support the unique needs of every learner. We are also increasing our support for the small class size initiative. We are looking to spend smarter. We want to ensure that we are focusing on core areas that support the vision of Inspiring Education.

Postsecondary education remains a key priority area for our province, and we will continue to support postsecondary students. Alberta will continue to provide more money in scholarships to deserving students than all other provinces combined, with 38,000 students sharing in over $71 million. As well, Alberta's publicly funded postsecondary institutions will receive over $2 billion in base operating grants in 2013-14. We maintain our position as one of the highest rates of per capita funding in Canada to postsecondary institutions.

To truly lead in education and innovation, we need to more closely align university research funding with the government's economic diversification agenda. To help achieve this dynamic new direction, institutions will be given mandate letters defining their roles and government's expectation for a more unified postsecondary system. Alberta Innovates corporations will also receive mandate letters.

Alberta has an international reputation for producing world-class research in important fields like health, food safety, environment, and energy. The Alberta government is committed to finding ways to deliver that research to market. That's why we are continuing our work to more closely align publicly funded postsecondary education, research, and innovation in our province. We will strengthen the connection of Alberta's postsecondary institutions, called Campus Alberta, with our research and innovation body, Alberta Innovates. We want postsecondary institutions, businesses, and government to share resources, experts, and ideas to solve complex problems while at the same time diversifying and strengthening Alberta's economy.

We are developing a new umbrella organization dedicated to unleashing more robust collaboration throughout Alberta's postsecondary education, research, innovation, and technology commercialization system as we diversify and evolve Alberta's economy. Through this new institute the Alberta government can strategically focus its research agenda and financial resources in areas where they will have the greatest impact and benefit for Albertans. The areas include energy and the environment, health, agriculture and food, and water. The creation of this institute will work toward achieving the Premier's vision of where we want to be 20 years from now.

The Premier has continued to make it clear. We will not be balancing the budget on the backs of municipalities. With the Ministry of Municipal Affairs budget at $1.4 billion, we remain clearly committed to municipalities. Our municipal investments are strategic and drive positive transformation. They are not based on the price of oil today but with the next 20 years in mind. By maintaining municipal sustainability initiative funding at nearly $900 million in 2013-14, we are demonstrating our commitment to municipalities and the continued importance of investing in local infrastructure for the long-term future of our province. Today's fiscal situation is an opportunity for government to spend smarter as it supports Alberta's municipalities, and we'll be doing that in several ways. Among them, we will be shifting money into grants that encourage municipal collaboration, and we will be making smart use of existing resources and consider P3 opportunities to invest in affordable housing.

Through Budget 2013 we will continue to work for safe and secure communities and an innovative and accessible justice system. Funding for police, prosecutors, and judges is being maintained. We've increased funding for the provincial policing contract, which will mean more RCMP officers are on the job in Alberta. In 2013-14 we will also be adding two new judges to the system. We will continue to support important programs for Albertans, including the victims of crime fund and legal aid. We're also working to ensure Albertans can continue to access justice services by making them more sustainable, effective, and efficient. This work will include streamlining how fines are paid, increasing the claim limit in small claims court – lawyers like that one, Mr. Speaker – and integrating programs and services that help Albertans with court-related processes.

Energy continues to be a driver of Alberta's economy, and with Budget 2013 we will continue to ensure Alberta is a leader in responsible energy development. For example, approvals for all oil, gas, oil sands, and coal projects will be processed through a single energy regulator. This one-stop shop will enforce legislation related to our energy resources such as land and water acts. If you break the rules, the Alberta energy regulator will have more tools to hold you accountable, including larger fines. The province will also continue to honour its commitments to current bioenergy and carbon capture and storage projects. We are committed to projects that have the right combination of technology, financing, and overall benefit to Albertans. These projects effectively reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and they encourage private-sector investment.

Agriculture is Alberta's largest renewable industry. It is a proud part of our heritage, and it will play an even greater role in our province's future. Budget 2013 is changing the way we invest in agriculture. We are focusing dollars on programs and initiatives that will grow our industry and ensure that it's sustainable and internationally competitive. With the federal government scaling back income support programs for producers and with the elimination of the farm fuel distribution allowance portion of the Alberta farm fuel benefit program, we can focus on research and innovation, on food safety, and on building the value-added side of our industry and opening up new markets and new opportunities for our producers. We will continue to invest in rural communities, and our farmers will continue to be fully exempt from provincial fuel taxes to ensure they remain competitive with producers in other prairie provinces.

The ability to do more with less is essential. While the operating budget for Environment and Sustainable Resource Development is $516 million, it is a decrease of $22 million. We are spending smarter with the funds we have. For example, we're allocating $2.2 million to Asian market access for our forest products. Expanding market access for Alberta's natural resources and products is one of the government's top priorities. We're saving $2 million by creating the integrated resource management planning division, which allocates staff from within the ministry to develop the land-use framework plan. This move reduces the need for contractors and will result in increased efficiencies, and it won't impact the timing of the current projected land-use plan development.

As we address fiscal challenges, Budget 2013 provides us an opportunity to make government more effective by reshaping our organization. Public-sector compensation makes up roughly half of our spending every year. The fact is that Alberta has the highest paid physicians, postsecondary faculty, and teachers in Canada. Only Saskatchewan pays more to the top-earning registered nurses. In light of this and our fiscal reality, Budget 2013 makes no provision for increased public-sector compensation costs. Our government has shown leadership on this issue. Last month we introduced a three-year wage freeze for all government managers. We're also planning to reduce the size of management by 10 per cent over the same three years. That's almost 500 positions. We want the right people, in the right positions, doing the right work.

We're also embarking on a review of Alberta's public-sector pension plans to ensure the sustainability of these plans. The pension boards are reviewing four major public-sector plans: the local authorities pension plan, the public service pension plan, the management employees pension plan, and the special forces pension plan. This review will ensure these plans remain part of a competitive compensation package for the public service while protecting taxpayers' interests. Reports will be provided to me by the end of this month.

Responsible change means making thoughtful decisions to ensure our organizational structures are effective, efficient, and delivering the right outcomes. This is at the heart, as I said, of the results-based budgeting process. This process is already under way, and the review will look at some 800 government programs and services, including those provided by government agencies. We are looking to ensure we are effective at delivering the outcomes that Albertans expect, and this work is accelerating. All reviews are now expected to be complete in May 2014, one year earlier than the original plan.

We're also looking at the outcomes that a much larger number of Albertans will be expecting over the next two decades. Right now our province is growing by almost 100,000 people each year. In about 17 years Alberta's population is forecast to reach more than 5 million people. That's the equivalent of adding a city the size of Calgary to the province. This tremendous growth will have a significant impact on our province, on our public infrastructure, and on the way we work as government to meet the needs of this much larger population.

This is one of the main reasons Budget 2013 is changing Alberta's path forward. Given today's fiscal challenges and given the challenges ahead as the province grows and changes, we can no longer proceed with business as usual. Of course, with every challenge comes an opportunity to do things better, but we need to be prepared.

Albertans have told us they want infrastructure in place to meet their needs today and the needs of their growing communities tomorrow. We know that investing in roads, schools, and hospitals both in good times and in challenging ones is critical to our quality of life. We also know that there is both a financial and a social cost to deferring capital projects until we have the cash in hand. That's why Budget 2013 includes a fully funded capital plan, one that allows this government to continue building Alberta for future generations.

Over the last 15 years Alberta has invested over $72 billion in infrastructure. Our capital plan spending will average $5 billion per year over the next three years, including $5.2 billion in 2013-14. Financial experts, business leaders, academics, and Albertans have told us we should borrow for capital when it makes good financial sense, and right now it does make good financial sense.

They also told us the importance of having a plan to pay back the debt. Interest rates are at historic lows, and on top of that, Alberta's triple-A credit rating means we have access to the lowest possible borrowing costs. Budget 2013's fully funded capital plan will be supported by a responsible borrowing strategy to finance infrastructure projects. It includes a plan for borrowing that sets limits on the debt and a plan for paying down the debt. Our priority is to protect Alberta's triple-A credit rating and grow our net asset position, a testament to our fiscal responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, we must continue to make prudent choices, as we have done with a comprehensive review of approved capital projects. Some projects were cancelled, and others were deferred beyond 2016. Last August we announced that the Alberta public safety law enforcement training centre in Fort Macleod was cancelled. It has also been determined that the TransAlta Project Pioneer and Swan Hills Synfuels carbon capture and storage projects are not economical at this time, and the provincial funding for these projects is no longer included in the capital plan.

However, even though the 2013-16 capital plan is lower than in recent years, we're continuing to build Alberta, and the plan includes some significant additions. For example, the capital plan includes $503 million over the next three years and more than $2 billion over five years for 50 new schools and 70 school modernizations, as our Premier committed to. The capital plan has allocated $282 million over the next three years and over $650 million over five years for new postsecondary facilities at the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, NorQuest College, the University of Calgary, Lethbridge College, and Mount Royal University. Promises kept, Mr. Speaker. As well, $60 million is being provided over the next three years as part of the Premier's commitment to complete multidisciplinary family care clinics across the province.

Just like governments before us, this government is adjusting to current realities. We also recognize that some of the issues we are dealing with today are not the same as past governments had to deal with 10, 20, and 40 years ago. Mr. Speaker, Budget 2013 includes some tough decisions that won't be popular with all Albertans today, but they ensure we are focused on delivering the right outcomes for the people who need them most. This budget also ensures that Alberta continues to have the best financial situation in Canada. We will be in a net asset position of $44 billion by 2016.

Budget 2013 is a blueprint for responsible change, enabling us to achieve this government's plan of building Alberta, living within our means, and ensuring that our resources get to the markets they should. This budget resets our compass, and it opens up new possibilities for charting exciting new paths, empowering us to become the province that we need to be.

Mr. Speaker, it is both an honour and a privilege to present Budget 2013 to the Assembly today, and I look forward to supporting this budget.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 11, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray for the wisdom we require to represent those who sent us here and for the strength we require to address the many demands our duties necessitate and for the patience we require to engage in civilized debate with those who may not share our views in this Chamber and beyond. Amen.

Please remain standing now to listen to the wonderful tones of Mr. Paul Lorieau as he guides us in the singing of our national anthem, O Canada.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Please be seated.

Hon. members, today, as all of you would know, is indeed a very special day in our Assembly. As such, we're going to welcome everyone and give them an opportunity to be seated while I introduce the next topic. Please proceed.

Statement by the Speaker

Commonwealth Day Message from the Queen

The Speaker: Today is Commonwealth Day, and throughout the world our Commonwealth nations are celebrating with a special message given by Her Majesty the Queen. We have some guests who are here in relation to this event.

Please note that this message from Her Majesty has been placed in writing on each of your desks for your private review and sharing with your constituents. In the meantime allow me to read Opportunity through Enterprise, the message from Her Majesty the Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, on Commonwealth Day 2013.

This year's Commonwealth theme, 'Opportunity through Enterprise', is a celebration of our achievements, particularly those that may have seemed challenging, daunting or even impossible, which have helped to build strength, resilience and pride in our young people, in our communities and in our nations.

Great achievements in human history have a number of common characteristics. From climbing the highest mountain, to winning a sporting competition, making a scientific breakthrough, building a successful business or discovering unique artistic talent – these outcomes all begin as a simple goal or idea in one person's mind.

We are all born with the desire to learn, to explore, to try new things. And each of us can think of occasions when we have been inspired to do something more efficiently, or to assist others in achieving their full potential. Yet it still takes courage to launch into the unknown. Ambition and curiosity open new avenues of opportunity.

That is what lies at the heart of our Commonwealth approach: individuals and communities finding ways to strive together to create a better future that is beneficial for all.

Our shared values of peace, democracy, development, justice and human rights – which are found in our new 'Commonwealth Charter' – mean that we place special emphasis on including everyone in this goal, especially those who are vulnerable.

I am reminded of the adage, 'nothing ventured, nothing gained'. As we reflect on how the Commonwealth theme applies to us individually, let us think about what can be gained with a bold heart, dedication, and teamwork. And let us bear in mind the great opportunity that is offered by the Commonwealth – of joining with others, stronger together, for the common good.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Acting Deputy Premier and Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this Commonwealth Day 2013 I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House members of the Royal Commonwealth Society, an organization that has had a considerable and positive evolution since its founding in 1868. Founded in 2005, the Edmonton branch is active in promoting a wider appreciation of a modern, progressive, and dynamic Commonwealth and the basic principles for which it stands – tolerance, diversity, freedom, justice, democracy, human rights, and sustainable development – to a generation living in an increasingly interconnected world.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that you spoke at a well-attended and successful RCS Edmonton Commonwealth dinner on Saturday evening. I'd like to introduce the guests that were in attendance. Seated in your gallery are the chair, Joe Zasada; the vice-chair, Dr. John Dugan; vice-chair, Mr. Alex Tsang; treasurer, Dr. John Slade, and his wife, Barbara, also with him; the secretary, Jenni Reiz; and members Earl Chadwick and the Reverend Joshua Phillpotts. I see they've risen. I ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome to you all, and thank you yet again for the incredibly wonderful and important work you do. Please be seated.

The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great day for Whitecourt-St. Anne. We have 30 students here from the Niton school. They are joined by their teachers, Mrs. Varty and Mrs. Verbeek, and a number of parents and helpers. They are seated in both galleries. I'd ask them to stand and be recognized by this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly teacher Michael Hamilton, parent helpers Corinne Weeks and Carmen Macdonald, and 37 of Hardisty junior high's best and brightest in my constituency and almost across the street from my home in Edmonton-Gold Bar. I am pleased that they're able to be with us today and take part in conversations regarding the Commonwealth to help them learn more about democracy and the workings of our government. I would ask now that they please rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to the Assembly Mr. Paul Sir, who is the executive director of Basketball Alberta, and Ms Candice Stasynec of the office of the city manager here in Edmonton, both tireless workers on behalf of everybody in the province and particularly in the capital region. Please, the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly 25 students from York academic elementary school. They are visiting our Legislature and are learning a lot about our building and our government. They are future bright leaders of this beautiful province of Alberta, Canada. These grade 6 students along with their teacher, Ms Dora Strasdin, are seated in the public gallery. I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise before you today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a large group of students from Woodbridge Farms elementary school. They are some of Sherwood Park's brightest and best and our leaders for tomorrow. Accompanying them are many teachers and volunteers: Anita Sisson, Christina Ganert, Antonia Triska, Mona Sawatzky, Antonia Tiede, Judy Andrekson, Linda Holan, Richard Bylsma, and Tyson Parker, who is a grandson of one of Strathcona county's very famous reeves. I would like them all to rise today and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a very special person, Dr. John Dugan. Dr. Dugan is sitting up in your gallery. He has been a friend of mine and a supporter for the past 13 years. He is a very passionate Albertan who questions everything and has some very sage advice for me always. He has been honoured for his role in St. John's Ambulance. He is a member of the Monarchist League and of the Commonwealth association. You can see the row of medals that he proudly wears on his chest, proclaiming his honour, his duty, and his loyalty to our country and our province. Dr. Dugan is also a veterinarian with whom my dogs, Abby and Tikka, are very familiar. Dr. Dugan has risen. Would you please join me in giving him the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Nizam Saab and Zeki El-Hakim. Nizam is the president of the Yanta Cultural Society here in Edmonton, and Mr. Hakim is a history teacher and principal of the Yanta elementary school in Lebanon who has many connections here in Canada and many former students who now reside in Canada. Speaking with Mr. Hakim, he tells me that Canada is his second home. They are both seated in the members' gallery. If I could ask everybody to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a wonderful friend and a community leader who is seated in the public gallery. Her name is Marilyn Gunn. Marilyn is the president and CEO of the Community Kitchen Program in Calgary. I'll be recognizing her contributions shortly in a member's statement. I ask that Marilyn please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have another introduction. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a friend of mine and a friend of Alberta's natural lands and environment, Greg Wagner. Greg is a professional biologist and a well-respected authority on Alberta's grassland ecosystems. Greg is here today accompanied by his mother, Eleanor Wagner, and by Taylor Wagner. They will be touring the Legislature for the first time. They've come today to show their support for grasslands preservation in Bill 202. I ask that Greg, Eleanor, and Taylor rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Marilyn Gunn

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I want to salute today an outstanding volunteer and community leader who is a friend of mine and a constituent of mine in the electoral district of Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. Her name is Marilyn Gunn. I've known Marilyn for over eight years and have grown to admire her courage and her tenacity in tackling the tough social issues in our community. Marilyn is a faithful and valued member of her church community, and her faith guides everything she does as she dedicates herself to help those who are less fortunate.

Marilyn together with her husband, Bill Gunn, founded the highly successful Community Kitchen Program in Calgary, which helps families to help themselves through collective grocery shopping and group preparation of meals, at the same time providing knowledge about good nutrition and cooking. Over the past 21 years this program has helped supply tens of thousands of nourishing and economical meals for low-income Calgary families.

Marilyn recognizes the fact that government alone cannot respond to all of the social needs of the less fortunate in our city and that progress is best made by partnerships between the government, private corporations, and community-based charities and their dedicated volunteers. Marilyn routinely volunteers for many community projects and has fostered co-operation among like-minded Calgary charities, leading to efficiencies in delivering social programs such as the Storehouse-39-3-10 project in northeast Calgary.

Several years ago Marilyn faced a struggle with serious illness and overcame the odds to make a full recovery. While this event may have caused most of us to reassess our life priorities and to perhaps take more personal time, Marilyn immediately returned to her usual busy schedule of volunteering and helping others.

Marilyn has been recognized for her outstanding contributions to her province and her country by being awarded the Alberta centennial medal and the Queen Elizabeth II Diamond Jubilee medal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, last week this government introduced a shocking back-in-debt budget. To understand how shocking, we need to review our province's recent history. Unlike the Premier, who didn't spend very much time in Alberta during the 1990s and early 2000s and, therefore, has no credibility when she complains about how awful it was to live here during that time – let me fill her in a bit. Growing up in Alberta at that time was great. The schools I attended were excellent. In fact, I received almost a year of free credits at a U.S. college just because I was an Alberta grad. The economy was strong and creating jobs. Businesses were flourishing, and home values were appreciating.

As a province we had a collective purpose. The majority of us were united in our goal to pay off our provincial debt and build a job-creating machine through low taxes and job-friendly policies that we proudly called the Alberta advantage. In fact, it is not an exaggeration to say that the entire direction of our nation was profoundly altered for the better by our relatively small but principled and feisty province during that time. But as the Premier often says: that was then, and this is now.

In 2008 our province had almost no debt and a $17 billion rainy-day fund. By election 2016 we will have a $17 billion debt and no rainy-day fund. The Premier contends that anyone who doesn't feel we should go back into debt is an extremist, yet right before the 2012 election she stated, and I quote: Alberta does not have a debt, and we will not incur debt; that is fundamental to what Albertans are proud of, and we are committed to making sure that that continues. Unquote. How very extreme of you, Premier.

The ugly truth is that this Premier's views on structural debt have been discredited by the lessons of the ongoing world debt crisis. It is she and her party that are taking us back a generation. It is she and her party that have proved to be fiscally extreme. The good news is that Albertans now know that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Budget 2013 Benefits

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to represent the residents of Calgary-Glenmore and to speak up on their behalf. I rise today to share with this Assembly constituent issues that were addressed in the budget tabled last week.

Families are welcoming the $5 million commitment for an insulin pump therapy program for eligible Albertans with type 1 diabetes. Parents of newborn babies, 5,000 of which were born in Calgary-Glenmore, are thrilled with the $8 million investment in early childhood development, especially the inclusion of a universal newborn hearing screening program. Patients and health care workers are supportive of the $65 million investment for an Alberta electronic health record project. One of those health care workers told me that he'd rather have that project completed than a new piece of fancy equipment.

Those stuck in traffic are encouraged by the $51 million for GreenTRIP allocated to Calgary.

For the senior population whom I'm honoured to represent the property tax deferral program will provide assistance. For students in the classroom there is $248 million in class size initiatives and $50 million for student health services. For those concerned about water supply and the environment, there is a $25 million commitment to the water for life strategy.

To the many constituents who called my office, who e-mailed my office, who snail-mailed my office, and who came into the office and were absolutely adamant that this government control spending and not increase taxes, I say: we did it. To the residents of Calgary-Glenmore: this party and this government heard your priorities to continue to build Alberta by investing in family and communities, to live within our means, and to continue working to ensure that our resources get to market.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Reporting

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, in its first postelection budget this government has saddled future generations with billions of dollars in new debt. Now, I'll get to the issue of exactly how much debt in just a minute, but there is no question that we are back in debt. The problem is that the government's new way of calculating and presenting the numbers has resulted in a wide range of estimates for this year's annual deficit. Will the Premier give us one number today for the total cash shortfall for this year? By that, I mean the difference between what they'll take in and what they'll spend.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that question because one of the things that I've been most pleased about is the fact that we've been able, as I promised in this House last week, to be completely clear and transparent with respect to our fiscal situation. We have an operating account, we have a capital account, and for the first time in 25 years we have a savings account. It is very clear. We have said to Albertans that we have a $451 million shortfall, which will be covered by the sustainability fund. That is the answer to the question.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, that's not the answer to the question. I'm going to make this super easy for the Premier. I just need three numbers. What's the total revenue the government will take in this year, what is the total amount of money the government will spend this year, and what is the difference between the two?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, what they're asking about is: what is the cash requirement included in the budget documents totally around the savings, the capital plan, and the operating plan? We don't consider that putting money back into Treasury Branches is part of a deficit. We don't consider that student loan financing is part of a deficit. We don't consider that the savings that we're putting aside is part of a deficit. It is irresponsible; it is ignorant of accounting to even come up with the question.

Ms Smith: Well, speaking of ignorant of accounting, given that the Premier and her Finance minister claim their new budget presents the fiscal picture accurately and given that accounting standards say that when you report the numbers, when you change the way you report the numbers in a budget, you're supposed to actually restate the previous year's in the new format, why wasn't the historical fiscal summary table in the budget, and when can we expect to see an apples-to-apples comparison?

Mr. Horner: You know what, Mr. Speaker? We are not hiding the fact that we are changing how we present the budget. In fact, in this province we force municipalities to separate operating from capital and provide us with the savings. Do you know why we do that? Because we lend to them. We lend to them a lot. We want to make sure that what they're spending on operating is operating and what they're spending on capital is capital. Shouldn't Albertans have the same right?

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Well, hopefully, the Auditor General will be able to give us an answer to my last question because the Finance minister couldn't.

Provincial Debt Repayment

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, all of that deficit money and all of that borrowing is why we in the Official Opposition call this the back-in-debt budget. Now, by the end of the next fiscal year there will be an additional 3 and a half billion dollars or so in new debt, and the government is draining our savings by an additional $2 billion. By the time of the next election their total debt just for capital will be $17 billion. What is the plan to have that $17 billion paid in full?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that we said to Albertans that this was going to be a tough budget, and despite that, we held the line at a zero per cent increase in spending. Within that, the answer to the hon. member's question is that a year from now we're going to have more schools, we're going to have family care clinics, we're going to have hospitals, we're going to have roads, and we're going to have irrigation systems because that's what builds Alberta. That's why Albertans decided that they would trust us with building this province. It is a long-term view, it is for generations to come, and that is what a Progressive Conservative government is getting straight.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I can see why the Premier doesn't want to answer the question. She doesn't actually have a debt repayment plan. The debt repayment plan that this Premier is proposing does almost nothing to pay down the $17 billion debt. In 2016, for instance, this budget will allocate only a paltry $200 million to principal, kind of like making the minimum payment on a credit card. Does the Premier know that if she only pays the bare minimum, it will take 85 years for her to pay off her $17 billion debt?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I heard about this 85 years today, and I was kind of curious about where they came up with that number. Now I understand where they came up with the number, a very simple extrapolation of one number out of the budget, kind of the way they built their budget, an extrapolation of a whole bunch of numbers that I have no idea what they're doing.

Mr. Speaker, within the fiscal plan itself we talk about matching debt repayment amounts to their maturity profile. We said we would borrow for highway 63. We said we'd do it over 20 years. We will pay it back over 20 years. We have a debt repayment plan. We're going to set dollars aside. The hon. member should do her homework and read the budget.

Ms Smith: I did read the budget, Mr. Speaker, and they're not putting away nearly enough to be able to pay off this debt in a lesser period of time. I look forward to seeing the full plan.

Mr. Speaker, that $17 billion does need to be paid off somehow, sometime. For instance, in 2016 they expect to pay $600 million in interest on that debt, which is three times the amount that is going to go to the principal payments. Even if they never incur another dollar of debt, it still might take three or even four generations to pay it off. Is this what the Premier meant when she said that this was a budget for the generations?

Mr. Horner: You know what, Mr. Speaker? What Albertans understand is that when they go in to talk to their banker, the banker wants to know among other things: can you pay your monthly bills every month? What do you have at the end of every month? Second, what is your net worth? Is it going up or down? I would refer the hon. member, because she said she's read the budget, which I doubt, to page 135. At the bottom is the net assets for fiscal policy purposes. It's going up. The net worth of this province will be more than $44 billion when this plan is done. We'll have a debt repayment plan, and we're building the schools, hospitals, and roads that Albertans need.

Postsecondary Education System Autonomy

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. My questions are for the Premier. Our postsecondary institutions received quite a blow in this last budget. Not only did the government break another promise on increasing postsecondary funding; it also slashed funding considerably in the process. It's yet another example of saying one thing before the election and doing another after the election. We have put the leaders of tomorrow and those that instruct them in a precarious situation. To the Premier: are you not concerned that this is going to have a negative impact on our classrooms and the quality of education that Alberta students receive?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, from my perspective the government of Alberta is the custodian of taxpayers' money. Our view is that we want to get the best services possible for that money, and the view of this government on our postsecondary policy is that that means we want to ensure that universities are investing in research and innovation that leads to development of our economy and to training people who can be skilled to compete in the economy. We have been very clear with our postsecondary institutions with respect to that. We've set out a policy that allows them to make those decisions to ensure that that happens. That's what allows for economic growth, and that is what will put us on the path to success.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, adding to the frustration is the fact that the Minister of Education has promised a mandate letter in which he is going to explain to our great leaders and academics how they should conduct themselves. Given that the government loves to centralize – we know they've done it in land planning, they have done it in health care, and they are trying to do it in ambulance service – again I ask the Premier: do you really believe that you and your government know how to run postsecondary institutions better than those that are currently running them?

Ms Redford: First of all, the hon. member should not be presupposing anything with respect to a mandate letter. We are in constant dialogue with leaders of 26 postsecondary institutions across this province to make sure that we are seeing excellence in education. What we've been very clear about, Mr. Speaker, is that we want to ensure that we're going to be able to train people and to focus on research and innovation that is directly relevant to economic growth, partnering with industry, partnering with businesses, to ensure that we can grow and diversify the economy. That is what we ask our postsecondary leaders to do.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, postsecondary independence and autonomy are at the heart of true democracy, and from your Commonwealth letter that you read today, "Ambition and curiosity open new avenues of opportunity." So I would again ask the Premier: can you assure us all today that these mandate letters will pose no threat to academic freedom and that our post-secondary institutions will continue to pursue research free of any of your government's intervention?

The Speaker: Hon. member, that would be Her Majesty the Queen's honourable message, but proceed.

Ms Redford: A very honourable message, Mr. Speaker, which, of course, we agree with.

I guess that on March 11, 2013, this will be the bogeyman of the day. There is no doubt that postsecondary institutions matter. The relationship that we have with postsecondary institutions has allowed our economy to thrive. We're going to continue to ensure that happens, Mr. Speaker. We are going to make sure that the research that is done, that Alberta taxpayers invest in, is relevant to economic growth in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of the bogeyman, Alberta's combined postsecondary tuition and mandatory noninstructional fees are amongst the highest in the country, which helps to explain why Alberta has the lowest postsecondary participation rate in the country. In the budget speech we heard a lot of rhetoric about preparing Alberta for the future. To the Premier. Your budget featured the biggest cuts to postsecondary education in decades. While most Albertans consider education an investment, it's clear that you consider it a cost. Can you please explain how gutting postsecondary funding prepares Alberta for the future?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the exciting parts about the budget speech last week was when the Minister of Finance talked about the fact that it's important to take an approach to working with our campuses across this province to ensure that we're investing in economic growth, research, and innovation. There is no doubt that we want to give every student in this province the opportunity to succeed, and that is one of the reasons that we have more combined bursary and student loan money available to students in this province than the rest of the country combined. This is what will lead to economic growth and success. This is what students have asked for, and we're going to ensure that it happens.

Premier, your ideologically extreme devotion to trickle-down economics means burdens are trickling down to students and their families. Student leaders tell me that your deep cuts will negatively impact class sizes, already so full that students have to sit on the floor, and that when they graduate, they have an average debt of $27,000. To the Premier: how is that helping Alberta prepare for the future?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one of the great things about our opportunities in this province is that we're always prepared to have conversations about how to improve processes, and when that happens, we're able to see further opportunities for success. There is no doubt that doing things differently is sometimes challenging for people to understand. We've certainly seen that in the past couple of weeks in terms of this debate. I'll tell you that we are committed to ensuring that we are investing taxpayers' dollars in research, in innovation, and in excellence internationally so that we can compete, grow this economy, and provide jobs for students.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, gutting Education Alberta is not doing things differently.

Alberta's postsecondary students have a desire to work in the summer to help pay their way through school and get that all-important first job. For decades the summer temporary employment program, or STEP, has helped students, the nonprofit sector, and small business. Premier, cancelling STEP is the ultimate in penny-wise and pound-foolish. Will you at least correct one mistake and restore STEP funding?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, a little bit of a historic lesson although I was only seven years old. The STEP program was started in 1972 when we had high student unemployment. The unemployment rate in Alberta varies day to day but is essentially 4 and a half per cent. We have students and people that are participating in the economy and the not-for-profit sector who are quite able to find employment opportunities without the STEP program. Now, there is also no doubt that STEP has been fundamental to the not-for-profit sector. The Minister for Human Services has already met with stakeholders about how to design a program that is appropriate, not a crutch from over 40 years ago.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Mr. Mason: Wow. A crutch. A crutch: the STEP program.

Trust in Government

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I have here a campaign advertisement for the Progressive Conservative Party in the last election. Headline: No New Taxes, No Service Cuts. It contains a pledge by the Premier, signed by the Premier, that there will be no service cuts. My question is to the Premier. Now that she's broken her promise not to cut the services that Alberta families depend on, will she admit that the whole PC re-election campaign was a desperate and cynical attempt to mislead Albertans in order to cling to power?

The Speaker: Hon. member, please be careful where we go. You know it's against the rules to raise questions about political parties and political fundraising, so we'll listen carefully.

Meanwhile, hon. Premier, I invite you to answer.

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, not as desperate and cynical as that question was.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that we had to make tough choices in this budget. With a hundred thousand new people coming to this province, we were able to keep spending to zero per cent. We were able to ensure that we did not make across-the-board cuts, that we did not raise taxes, that we invested in a savings plan, that we protected vulnerable people, and that we continue to build this province. Now, that is a record that we are proud of. It's a commitment we made to Albertans, and we're glad to be able to keep it.

Mr. Mason: I suppose closing the Michener Centre was taking away a crutch as well.

Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand the NDP list of top 10 broken promises contained in this budget. Given that this Premier insisted on Friday that she did not break her promises to the Albertans that voted for her and given that we the New Democrats could easily come up with 10 significant broken promises from this Premier, can she explain to Albertans how this PC government did not betray their trust?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's been pretty wonderful this weekend to be able to speak to people throughout southern Alberta, throughout Calgary and Edmonton about the budget on Thursday. What was really interesting to me was the fact that a lot of people said: "Look. We know that times change, but you kept your word. You made tough choices. We knew you were going to make tough choices." But as we promised, we did it in a thoughtful way and a responsible manner.

I'd like to ask the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities to supplement with respect to the Michener Centre.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had taken the time to read the budget, he would have noticed that we have an increase in the . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, perhaps in the next supplemental you'll have that chance.

Meanwhile, the time has run out, and we go on to the third question from the leader.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's amazing to me how the Premier can break almost every promise she made and stand in this House and say that she kept her trust with Albertans. Albertans just can't trust this PC government to stand up to protect the services they need. Given that the Premier's government is gutting our postsecondary institutions and denying schools the stable, predictable funding they were promised, will the Premier do the right thing and keep one promise, which was to make sure that we have adequate revenues to pay for the programs we need? Why do you refuse to do that?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, if we take a look at the state of the world this month compared to the state of the world six months ago, what we see is that Albertans said to us: "Continue to move forward on a path for success. Continue to build this province. Ensure that you are providing services to vulnerable people, ensure that you are building schools, ensure that you're supporting the public sector, and make sure that you're being responsible with taxpayer dollars." Now, that's a tall order, but in the past six months we have been able to keep those commitments, which is a fine distinction from anyone on the opposition side who comes up with theoretical documents that are meaningless.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the numbers for this back-in-debt budget are bad enough: new deficits, new borrowing, new debts, squandered savings, plundered heritage fund. It is a grim fiscal picture. And the trust picture for this government is equally bad. The list of broken promises is long and growing. Of course, the Premier promised a balanced budget: nope. Of course, we were promised no debt: nope. Stable, predictable school board funding: nope. Hospitals in Sherwood Park and Whitecourt: uh-uh. Why won't this Premier acknowledge that she has not kept her word?

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to invite you on Wednesday to not use any preambles as an experiment. [interjections] It's been my observation over many years that preambles lead to a number of complicated things when they are accompanied – excuse me; excuse me – by supplementals. Okay. Supplementary questions ought not. I was listening to the previous exchange, not this one that we're engaged in right now, and I wanted to bring it to your attention now to give you lots of warning. On Wednesday let's try and get away with no preambles ahead of supplementals.

Meanwhile could we have someone, the minister or the Premier, to answer this first question?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, last April, on the 23rd, we promised Albertans that we would build this province, that we would build schools, that we would build postsecondary institutions, that we would ensure that we have public services available for vulnerable Albertans. We have kept that promise, we are proud of that promise, and that is why a Progressive Conservative government can be trusted to support building the future of this province.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, given the length of the list of broken promises we can understand why it is that Albertans have lost trust in this government. Capital projects like the twinning of highway 881, social programs like full-day kindergarten, and a recreational tax credit for seniors: promises broken. Why won't the Premier just admit she can't keep her promises?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, both of the last questions have a premise demanding balanced budgets but also demanding new projects be spent. It's hypocritical to demand both. But I have a long list here of promises made and kept. Building family care clinics in 2013: $235 million for 40 of them. Promise made, promise kept. Funding insulin pumps: $5 million for new insulin pump therapy. Promise made, promise kept. Improved pharmacare: a new pharmacare program that will provide access to drugs and supplemental health benefit coverage to all Albertans. A promise made, a promise kept.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, when a government promises to balance the budget and doesn't, promises to stay out of debt and doesn't, promises to raise the bar on accountability and transparency and does none of it, why should anyone continue to believe anything this Premier and this government say?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, in this government, which I think Albertans are fortunate for, we don't adhere to an extreme ideology that means we can't be responsive and reflective in times of need. Albertans in the last election, in April 2013 decided that they wanted a government that was going to hold the line on spending, which we did at zero per cent; continue to invest in families and communities, which we're continuing to do from one end of the province to the other. We're continuing to find access to new markets for our goods so that we can continue to grow this province and provide good jobs to Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's Commonwealth Day. Let's show some class in this Chamber, please.

Let's go on with Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been hearing about cuts to drug costs and drug programs, and I've met with pharmacists and had conversations with pharmacists on the phone. To the Minister of Health: can you explain why you are reducing the prices of generic drugs even though the move affects the income of the pharmacists, especially the small-town pharmacists?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are reducing generic drug prices in Alberta because we made a commitment to responsible change in health care. Alberta has lagged behind most of the rest of the country in terms of setting prices for generic drugs. The changes that were announced earlier in the budget will benefit not only government in terms of the sponsored drug programs that we offer; they also benefit private plans, employer-sponsored plans, and people who pay out of pocket.

Mr. Dorward: To the same minister: given the high cost of those drugs he mentioned, can you explain how you plan to extend pharmacare to all Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll thank the hon. member for the question because it's important, of course, not to consider only the price of generic drugs in the question of how we expand drug coverage to all Albertans. Pharmacare will bring all of government's drug programs and health benefit programs together under one roof. It will offer for the first time drug coverage to the 20 per cent of Albertans who have no coverage today. It will deliver more for less money, and it will deliver a more equitable degree of drug coverage to all of our citizens.

Mr. Dorward: If you're introducing income testing into that, doesn't that mean that the seniors that live in Gold Bar may end up paying more for their drugs than they do now?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the laudable goal of extending drug coverage to the 20 per cent of Albertans who have none today does of course mean that those who can afford to pay a little more may be asked to pay a little more. But I would think that most hon. members in this House would agree that one of the tenets of publicly funded health care, which this government supports and leads in Canada, is that we provide an equitable level of access to all Albertans for the things they depend on most, and that includes drugs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Red Deer-North.

Infrastructure Capital Planning

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 26 the Minister of Education, in response to a question about releasing an infrastructure priority list, said in this House: "We actually do publish the lists. The lists are online of all the projects that are approved." We've never been able to find it, so we FOIPed it. The FOIP came, confirming that indeed such a list does exist but that, quote, it must be withheld. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why are you hiding this secret list from hard-working Albertans, who need to know when their schools, hospitals, and roads are being built?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, our priority list is our capital plan, and it is posted on the website for Infrastructure. Any project that's under way and has been approved is posted on the website. It would be irresponsible to post projects that have not yet been approved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a priority list does indeed exist and the government is just hiding it and given that hard-working Albertans have a right to know what the government's infrastructure plans are and where their tax money is being spent, when will this government have the courage to tell the truth and stop playing politics by tabling this list?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I just said, the list is posted on our website, so I don't know how that can be hiding it or keeping it a secret. I've gone there and checked. It's there.

We continue to invest in public infrastructure to ensure Albertans have the quality of life they deserve now and into the future. Our government works hard to deliver the right infrastructure projects at the right places at the right time in a cost-effective manner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No wonder Albertans just don't trust this government. They won't come clean on how they are spending taxpayers' dollars. Given that the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation's mandate is to assist with the responsibilities related to access to information, will that minister do his job and order the release of this list?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, this government is delivering an open and transparent government. We are delivering it. We have the toughest expense disclosure policy in Canada. That's a promise delivered. We are delivering on the Premier's mandate to have to the most open and transparent government. We have whistleblower legislation. We are conducting a review of FOIP. This is delivering to Albertans the open and transparent government that they have asked us to deliver.

Transition of Michener Centre Residents

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, for over 50 years Michener Centre in Red Deer-North has been home for people with developmental disabilities. Some of the residents of Michener have lived there for 50 years and along with their parents and guardians have chosen to stay there. Michener is their home. Today our government announced that Michener's north and south facilities are being closed. Parents and guardians are very concerned. My questions are to the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities. How are you going to ensure that the very vulnerable residents of Michener Centre, some of whom need very specialized care, will receive the high level of care that they require once they are moved?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the changes that we announced today at the Michener Centre are indeed, I'll acknowledge, gut wrenching for the families and loved ones of people there, but we intend to make changes there that will improve the quality of life and the outcomes for the residents. We already have a fleet of group home community living facilities that can handle a full spectrum of high health needs and high behavioural needs, and we will assess each of those patients individually and put them in proper settings.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we have known for many years that Michener would eventually be closed, but why is the government taking this action now, when there are still 230 residents?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the facility once housed 2,400 people. It now houses 230 or so, about 100 of whom are in the group home setting, and those ones will remain, so we're talking about 125 residents here. It's just at the point where the buildings are old, it's just not an up-to-date model of care, and it's time to move those patients into a proper setting and achieve better outcomes for them.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, given that the highly trained staff of Michener have cared for these residents for many years and 50 have reached the golden years and are now seniors, what will happen to the staff who have worked at Michener for many years?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I thank the hon. member for the question because it's obviously a very important part of our planning here. We're expecting that about 75 of the staff will be redeployed in the service agency sector. [interjection] We think somewhere around 50 will be redeployed within our ministry. Mr. Speaker, we care deeply about the staff there and the care that they've given over the years, and they're to be congratulated for their service.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I do have you on the list.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Hehr: Future Albertans, future children and grandchildren of this province, call the cops; you've been robbed. Actually, robbed is too generous a term. This hasn't been a rank-and-file break and enter or minor shoplifting offence. You have been the victim of grand larceny of the highest order. It's on par with the scam pulled by Bernie Madoff, and it makes the Great Train Robbery look like child's play. With the release of the budget we have learned that over the last 25 years this province has taken in and spent virtually $150 billion in resource revenue. Does the President of Treasury Board think this has been wise stewardship of our resource revenue?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of this Premier's direction in creating legislation that will save nonrenewable resource revenue moving forward. I'm also very proud that over the past 15 years this government has spent over $72 billion on the infrastructure that those very Albertans will be using in future generations and are using today because they want their schools, they want their hospitals, they want their roads, and they want them there when they need them, not sometime in the future to defer some number.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be reminded that questions ought not be hypothetical, and they ought not seek opinion. If we could rephrase accordingly.

Mr. Hehr: Given that virtually every economist over the last 25 years has stated unequivocally that we need to raise revenues to ensure that this intergenerational theft that has occurred is not repeated, why, despite the overwhelming body of research that says that the right thing to do is to raise revenue, has this government refused to rework our tax code?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, I would take issue with his comment about every economist having said to raise taxes; they haven't. I would also say that the benefit that Albertans have reaped from the nonrenewable resource revenue is the fact that we have no net financial debt for this province. It's the fact that we have the lowest taxes in the land. It's the fact that we have no sales tax. It's the fact that we have $41 billion of net financial assets for every Albertan. That's better than anywhere else, I would suggest, per capita in North America. That's been a huge benefit, and it will benefit future generations because of the financial stability it creates.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that the President of Treasury Board obviously considers these economists to be off their rockers, does this government believe that two former Finance ministers, Mr. Morton and Mr. Liepert, former minister Mel Knight, and chief of staff Lee Richardson have all stated that additional taxes need to be raised in this province, or does he consider these people to merely be fearmongering?

Mr. Horner: No. Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I value their opinions greatly, just as I valued all of the opinions of the Albertans who told us: check and live within your means before you dig into my pocket again. And that's exactly what we did.

I'll give you an economist's opinion. This is a quote from Ben Brunnen, chief economist with the Calgary chamber: the approach of using debt to finance capital is actually a prudent one in the sense that these infrastructure assets last decades, and it makes – get this, Mr. Speaker – good sense to finance them over their useful life. There's an economist. I wholeheartedly agree with his opinion on that one.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this Premier pretty much breaks every promise she makes. For instance, the Premier promised to support seniors but instead chose to hit vulnerable Albertans by forcing most seniors to pay more for prescription drugs. The sicker you are, the more you pay. To the Minister of the Health: will the minister admit that his new pharmacare program is simply manipulative marketing of clawbacks that will hurt Alberta seniors?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that the hon. member fails to acknowledge in her question that the concept of fair pharmacare was in fact pioneered by the New Democratic government in British Columbia 10 years ago. She further fails to acknowledge that 20 per cent of Albertans today have absolutely no drug coverage at all. What pharmacare will deliver is not a drug program that's based on your age, where you live in Alberta, or what government ministry delivers your program. It will deliver coverage based on your need and, to the extent that you can contribute, your ability to contribute.

Ms Notley: You're asking sick seniors to pay for this change rather than wealthy Albertans.

Given that this budget cuts hundreds of millions of dollars by reducing drug benefits, cutting property tax assessment, and limiting eligibility for the seniors' benefit, does the minister truly believe that a chronically ill senior who lives on $30,000 a year is really the fair person to ask to pay for this government's fiscal mismanagement.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the former New Democratic government of the province of British Columbia certainly proved successfully that the pharmacare approach can deliver an equitable access to drug coverage for an entire population, including those who have the ability to pay and those who do not. We haven't released any details yet about the income thresholds that would be involved or any of the other details that might allow someone to make an informed judgment or proffer an opinion as to whether or not they believe this is fair to all concerned. We will do that toward the end of the year, and the hon. member would be welcome to ask her questions at that time.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, he's already said that he's going to cut almost $200 million from the program, so we can draw some conclusions.

Now, given that this minister isn't just breaking the promises the Premier made last year but even the one he made this morning on the radio and given that honest answers are just one of the many victims of this budget, will the minister tell us why this government finds it so easy to break promises to seniors but so hard to ask corporations and the wealthy to pay their fair share?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I would say to the hon. member in addition to my response to her previous questions: if she and her party truly believe in universal publicly funded health care for Albertans and for Canadians, that treats people based on their health care need and not on their ability to pay, then she should be embracing this program, she should be celebrating the success that they've seen in British Columbia over a decade, and she should be defending this initiative to all Albertans as a way to improve our public health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

New Hospital Construction

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's back-in-debt budget is full of broken promises and shows we can no longer believe what they say. Just two weeks ago this Premier told constituents in Sherwood Park that her government was committed to the new hospital, but on Thursday the Premier scrapped the project. In Whitecourt a new hospital that had been promised for 20 years and promised by the Premier in the last election has also been delayed. Can the Infrastructure minister explain to these communities why their priorities are no longer this government's priorities now that we're no longer in an election?

Mr. Horne: What this government is committed to is delivering a comprehensive range of health care services based on the needs of the communities we serve. In the case of Sherwood Park, Mr. Speaker, residents are going to enjoy a first-class health care facility delivering a broad range of primary health care services 24/7, urgent care services, and all in a location that is less than 30 minutes for most residents from major downtown hospitals.

The Premier did deliver on her promise as well to the residents of Whitecourt; $10 million has been allocated in this budget for planning and design for a replacement hospital in that facility, which is needed, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What this minister needs to do is quit reading his briefing book and start talking to Albertans.

Given that this government promised a new hospital to the people of Sherwood Park, to be completed in 2009, and given that the Health minister now claims that an AHS needs assessment says that the hospital is not needed, will the Minister of Infrastructure please explain how a hospital that was supposedly not needed was ever approved and partially constructed?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this Premier and this government clearly delivered to Albertans when we allocated a 3 per cent increase in this budget, or just under half a billion dollars, to expand health care services in this province. That's speaking directly to Albertans about their priorities and showing them how those are reflected in this budget.

With respect to the facility in Sherwood Park, as I've stated before, we are meeting the needs of those residents, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member wants to hang on to the notion of in-patient care as the only way to deliver services Albertans rely on, then I suggest to her that she has a seriously outdated notion of what primary health care entails.

Mrs. Forsyth: What the government originally promised was a 4.5 per cent increase on a five-year commitment.

Given that the Premier promised the people of Whitecourt a new hospital but there is only $10 million given to the project over the next three years, will the Associate Minister of Seniors explain to the citizens of Whitecourt why they are not getting the new hospital they have been promised since the election in 1993?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud that we have the recognition in the budget for the new project. Before you do any project, any of us knows – it's well known – that you need to do engineering, you need to do planning, you need to do functional planning, and you need to do site work. I'm sure that the $5 million in this year's budget and the $5 million in next year's budget will address that so that the following year we can put the money in the budget to build it.

CRTC Wireless Code of Conduct

Mr. Quadri: Mr. Speaker, cellphones and other wireless mobile devices are so prevalent in Alberta that many households do not even have a land line. The problem is that it's very hard for Albertans to compare contracts and decide what is best for them. Data and roaming charges are not very clear. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what are you doing to protect wireless consumers from billing confusion?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the member for that question. I pressed the CRTC and Industry Canada to move forth with a national code to protect wireless consumers from coast to coast in this country. I'm very pleased that they responded to my request. They initiated hearings on this issue, and just about two weeks ago I put forth a number of recommendations to the CRTC. It's my hope that they'll move forth with a new national code by the end of this year.

Mr. Quadri: I'm glad to hear that the CRTC finally decided it's worth considering.

Again to the Minister of Service Alberta: what are you doing to make sure that Alberta consumers are heard during this consultation?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, once again, I was the only provincial minister from across the country to actually put forth recommendations on this. Some of the things that I'm pushing for are to notify consumers free of charge when they're about to incur additional charges, have plain-language contracts, use consistent units of data consumption, limit cancellation fees, and ensure cellphones are unlocked when you get them.

Mr. Quadri: If the CRTC draws up a national code and does not address Alberta's problems, what are you going to do to make sure they heard our concerns and protect Albertans with this national code?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that I was the first provincial minister in Canada to push for this and that they responded to my request and initiated hearings, I've got their commitment that they're going to move forward with a national code by the end of this year. Now, in the rare event that they don't continue to follow my request, you better believe we'll be ready to take action, bring in legislative or regulatory changes here in Alberta to make sure that Albertans are protected. But through this route I'm hoping all Canadians will be protected as a result of Alberta's initiative.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Medevac Services

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Moving life-saving medevac services will result in deaths, suffering, and reduced health outcomes for thousands of northern Albertans. You don't have to take my word for it. There are now over 80 doctors who have signed a letter stating that the Premier's relocation plan is flawed and will result in "needless deaths and disability" for northern Albertans. Now, I know the Premier is no fan of doctors, but to continue to ignore their advice is spiteful. Will the Minister of Infrastructure do the right thing, listen to the 80 doctors, and just delay the relocation of medevac services past March 15?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the Premier of this province does listen to physicians and has listened to all points of view and all of the evidence that's been put together to plan the move of the medevac service to the Edmonton International. The opposition can say what they want. The fact of the matter is that this move has been in the plans for over a year now. It's based on evidence by the independent Health Quality Council of Alberta. There have been well over 65 flights already directly to the new centre at the international, and we stand by this decision as one that will continue to deliver on quality and patient safety as job one in medevac.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier's video and robocalls to over 200,000 Albertans stated incorrectly that the City Centre Airport is functionally closed on March 15, incorrectly stated that only five critical patients are transferred a month, and incorrectly stated that emergency health services for northern Albertans will not be compromised, does the Premier just not know the facts, or is she not prepared to do the right thing, to truly lead for once and protect health services for all northern Albertans?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, our Premier and our Minister of Health have been showing stellar leadership through this event. The airport may stay open for a bit longer, but the city has already declared that it will be closing and could close it at any time, which is why it's very important, as our Minister of Health indicated, to move the medevac now so that we can be preemptive and make sure we have all the services in place, before it becomes a critical situation, to deliver the same or better medevac care services to northern Albertans, just like they deserve.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has refused to implement several of the Health Quality Council recommendations, including the construction of a dedicated overpass and the installation of an ambulance lane on the QE II, is it not clear that the government's premature closure of life-saving medevac services on Friday is unnecessary, costly, and will have fatal consequences for northern Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member says is not true. This government has accepted all 18 recommendations and is moving forward on implementing all 18 recommendations. The opinions that the hon. member proposes represent a lack of understanding of the evidence and, I would suggest, almost a deliberate attempt to scare Albertans, who should have no reason to be concerned about quality and patient safety. Unlike the Official Opposition, this government will not wait until the day after the municipal airport closes to take responsible action on medevac.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Smoky River Bridge Demolition

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An abandoned railway bridge in my constituency that crossed the Smoky River near Watino gave way during demolition, leaving a large part of the bridge in the river. This bridge now lies just under the water's surface and, with varying water flow throughout the year, poses various threats to navigation. My question is to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Would you please inform the House as to the progress that is being made in removing this bridge from the Smoky River?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly thank the member for this question. I want to recognize the concerns that the county has but also that this member has about the safe and enjoyable use of the Smoky River. Work is ongoing, and we've made several attempts to remove the truss. However, there have been a number of weather-related incidents and challenges, including high water levels and ice conditions, which have slowed the progress, but our department continues to work with CN so that we can ensure that this will get done as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that this bridge in question was a private railway bridge, who in the end will pay for the removal of the bridge from the Smoky River?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another great question from the member. Canadian National Railway is the owner of the bridge, and they are the ones that are responsible for the removal and the associated costs as well. It's not the taxpayers of Alberta that will pay for this. It is the Canadian National Railway that is responsible for these costs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of

Environment and Sustainable Resource Development: given that this bridge segment has been in the river for a number of years now, will you consider taking a compliance action under the Water Act and/or the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to ensure that this work is done as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Our staff have been working with CN and its contractors, and I am pleased to say that progress is being made. We fully expect that the truss section will be removed before the end of summer, but I do want to make sure that this member knows as well that if it becomes necessary, my department will consider taking compliance action.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're going to proceed with Members' Statements in just a moment, and I'll give you 30 seconds. However, in the meantime could we have unanimous consent to revert to a brief introduction?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 26 guests from my constituency, including members from the Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills Wildrose Constituency Association Board of Directors. We have quite the mix on our board. Half are under 35, and half are women. There are also a few other visitors and some family members. These passionate individuals put their time, energy, and resources into getting this Wildrose MLA elected. Without their continued support and dedication I could not do what I do. I'm truly grateful. I hope that each day that I serve Albertans in this Legislature, I make them proud.

My parents, Ronnie and Dianne, are here today as well, so, Mr. Speaker, when I misbehave in the Legislature – and I want to make this clear on the record; it's for my dad and not my mother – you can feel free to call them.

I would ask each individual to rise as I say their name: Debra Lozinski; Marlon Biollo; Greg Paranych; Jon and Kathleen Skjersven and their children Jewel, Jeremiah, Naomi, and Gabriela; Jodi Weening and her children Aliya and Tanis; Amy and Ben Dyck; Ronnie and Dianne Saskiw; Marshall Taranko; Daryl Toma; Tristen Pesaruk; Neil Gorda; Donna Hanson; Lillian Sparks; Sandy Kummetz; David Inscho; Ken and Carl Christensen. Please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, please be reminded that on Wednesday I will be enforcing the rule of no preambles to your supplementals. Let's see if we can get through Wednesday with no preambles on supplementals.

In 30 seconds we will resume with private members' statements, and I believe, Edmonton-Gold Bar, you'll be up first.

Members' Statements

Canada Basketball Initiative

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, in Calgary this past weekend 1,200 young people ages nine to 17 along with their families were involved in the annual Basketball Alberta youth provincial championships. Basketball is the second-most popular sport in the world. Canada is a major player on the global stage, and Alberta is a significant contributor. Canada has eight players in the NBA, and next year we will surpass France for having the most players in the world's best league, next to the Americans. Over 200 Canadians play basketball professionally around the globe, including 15 Albertans, both men and women.

There are many Canadians on the top U.S. college teams, including two starters on the number-one ranked team in men's NCAA basketball, Gonzaga, with one who is in the running for national player of the year honours. The top-ranked high school recruit in the U.S.A. is a Canadian.

University and college basketball in Canada are thriving. In Edmonton we boast the largest stand-alone basketball facility in North America, the Saville community sports centre, located at the University of Alberta. This building, Mr. Speaker, was built with the support of the community, all three levels of the government working together, including the great contribution from the city of Edmonton and, of course, with Mr. Bruce Saville being a major contributor.

Mr. Speaker, Basketball Alberta has been in negotiations with Canada Basketball to bring the national sports organization's national team programs to our capital city. This would not be possible without this centre. The benefits to all Albertans would be immeasurable and many. The outreach programs of the 10 national team players and coaches in our community would inspire youth to be active in their lives and strive to reach their personal goals and reach their potential. I hope that our community, private and public, gets involved in this outstanding opportunity. We again would be welcoming the world to the capital region in Alberta.

I want to thank Basketball Alberta, Canada Basketball, the city of Edmonton, and sponsors for the work done on this initiative to date, and I want to encourage all the parents of Alberta to get their children and youth involved in the great game of basketball.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

2012 Alberta Winter Games

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the outstanding work that three local municipalities have done to co-ordinate the success of the 2012 Alberta Winter Games. In fact, this is a perfect example of the Queen's Commonwealth message. The town of Stony Plain along with Parkland county and Spruce Grove collaborated to host what was recently deemed the most successful winter games ever. Their achievement can be measured by the impact that the games and its organizers had on the three surrounding communities. The organizing committee was able to return more than $28,000 to KidSport Parkland, $1,500 to the Parkland Potters Guild, $100,000 to the TransAlta Tri Leisure Centre, and finally, $20,000 to the legacy rock to symbolize the games' accomplishments.

This impact would not have been as far reaching if it wasn't for the work of Mr. Brad Schneider and the board of directors, who kick-started the organization for this event and set its success in motion. Mr. Schneider and his board also implemented a revolutionary sustainability and recycling project as a part of the games, and this initiative continues today.

Mr. Speaker, the triumph of the 2012 Alberta games truly makes me proud to represent the constituency of Stony Plain. More than 3,000 volunteers sacrificed their time to make the Winter Games an enjoyable event for all athletes and people in attendance. Every single one of these volunteers is helping to build Alberta through their selflessness and community involvement, and this is the true legacy of an event such as the games.

To quote from the Queen's Commonwealth message, "individuals and communities finding ways to strive together to create a better future that is beneficial for all." Mr. Speaker, it is clear to me the municipalities that set aside their differences and embrace collaboration can achieve greatness and show opportunity through enterprise.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is Agricultural Safety Week, and we'll no doubt see some celebrations by the government, but this Premier's promise to address the unjust and unsafe working conditions for paid farm workers, including children, remains another promise unfulfilled. Ironically, Alberta's farm animals will be celebrating their 30th anniversary of legislated health and safety standards, Mr. Speaker: animals with legislated health and safety standards, the strictest farm animal care legislation in North America. For example, it's illegal to carry farm animals in an open pickup truck in Alberta, but farm workers? Not a problem.

Politically motivated exemptions for industrial farming operations for occupational health and safety, workers' compensation, and child labour legislation are appalling to conscientious Albertans, as they should be. This discrimination leaves workers and their families at peril and transfers, according to the most recent Alberta statistics, $374 million for farm injuries over the past 20 years onto the health care budget instead of costs being borne by the agriculture industry through WCB, as is mandatory for all other industrial operations.

Now there is the much-touted social policy framework from a minister who formerly, as child and family services minister and Health minister, took no action on unregulated child farm workers and safety standards for agricultural operations. His glossy brochure calls for all Albertans to be "Safe, Healthy, Secure and Resilient"; that is, unless you're a paid farm worker. Small wonder that this government and this framework are viewed by most Albertans as all about political spin. Agriculture workers, including children, deserve the same rights as every other worker.

Agricultural Safety Week: only the farm animals have anything to celebrate.

2:50 Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the all-party Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship I am delighted to table five copies of the committee's report, dated March 2013, titled Review of the Potential for Expanded Hydroelectric Energy Production in Northern Alberta. Copies of this report are being distributed to members today. This report was an independent undertaking of our committee, and I believe it's the first of its kind under our relatively new legislative policy committee system.

I would like to thank my vice-chair, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and all members of the committee from all sides of the House for their co-operation, professionalism, and even civilized debate during this entire six-month process. As well, I'd like to thank the members of the LAO for their support in helping the committee with this work. Finally, I'd like to thank the stakeholders and presenters who met with us and shared their opinions.

This is a report that we can all be proud of, and the committee looks forward to receiving a response to our recommendations from the government within the 150-day period as laid out in Standing Order 52.09(1). Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 13, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, as you know, today is private members' day. Let's be reminded to be brief in our presentations, tablings, and reports.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a proposed bill put together by the group Poverty Talks! It's An Act To End Poverty in the Province of Alberta. One of the items they are pushing is the guaranteed living income, which many people like Senator Hugh Segal have brought up and have made the rounds on. It's an excellent bill that I hope everyone will take a look at.

The second one is a tabling from Mr. Ayuz Mukadam. He's living in northeast Calgary. He's concerned about his inability to get a job after graduation and concerned that there are no opportunities for him in his chosen field for various reasons.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of e-mail submissions that Albertans have made to our prebudget tour, which visited seven cities in the last few weeks. Katrina, Angus, Cori, and Clarissa are some of the Albertans who have provided interesting input. For example, Cori is a mother of two young children and is concerned with the quality of education they receive. Cori feels that children in Alberta should have access to top-quality education and should not be the target of budget cuts. Submissions like this clearly show the priorities of Albertans and how out of touch this PC government actually is with its broken-promises budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is from Tracy Kjenner, dated March 6, and she is pleading with the Premier to listen and keep the air medevac open. I have the requisite copies.

The second tabling is an e-mail dated Friday, March 8, from a fellow named Jacques Plante, who is indicating that he is pleading with the government to keep the medevac services open.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is from a Mr. Gordon Steele. It's an e-mail dated Wednesday, March 6, 2013. Mr. Steele has in his e-mail very complex and comprehensive arguments as to why the flat tax is flawed. I table five copies.

I have five copies of a brochure from CAUS, the Council of Alberta University Students, the 70,000 students at the U of A, U of C, and University of Lethbridge. It's long-term thinking on postsecondary education. The students want the promise of low tuition, investments in postsecondary education, and the closing of the noninstructional fee loophole.

I also have five copies of an e-mail from Dillon Hargreaves dated February 28, 2013. Dillon is from the Lethbridge College Students' Association. They're very concerned about the likely loss of the summer temporary employment program.

I also have five copies of an e-mail from Marianne Cole dated March 5, 2013. Marianne is concerned. She's a board member of the Hastings Lake Lutheran Bible Camp and is quite concerned about the loss of the STEP funding as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, hon. members, I am tabling five copies of a March 7, 2013, letter from the Ethics Commissioner to Chandra Flett.

Orders of the Day

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, at this time I'd like to request unanimous consent of the Assembly to transfer the sponsorship of Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, to my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Statement by the Speaker

Amendments to Bill Titles

The Speaker: Hon. members, merely as an advisory and as you are likely already aware, this spring session commenced as a continuation of the First Session of the 28th Legislature. As a result, all matters present on the Order Paper at the conclusion of the last sitting remain on the Order Paper for the Assembly's continued consideration.

Members will note that in tomorrow's Order Paper there's a small amendment, and it will have been made to the title of Bill 207, which appears in the Notices section of the Order Paper, to reflect the current year, 2013.

Bills introduced in 2012 that contain the year in their title will continue to bear that title because they have already been introduced as such. However, should these bills reach the Committee of the Whole stage, members may wish to bring forward amendments to the bills to reflect the current year in the title so that members of the public will know how to locate these acts in the 2013 volume of the Statutes of Alberta.

Thank you.

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Incremental Ethane Extraction Program Credits

Q20. Mr. Hehr:

Which companies have been granted royalty credits by the Department of Energy through the incremental ethane extraction program since its inception to December 31, 2011, and what is the value of the credits?

Disputed Oil and Gas Royalties

Q21. Mr. Hehr:

As of June 1, 2012, what was the value of unpaid oil and gas royalties that were in dispute?

AGLC Data Communications Expense

Q22. Dr. Sherman:

What is the breakdown of operating expenses listed under the heading Data Communications for 2009-2010 as reported in note 12 to the financial statements of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, Solicitor General and Public Security annual report, 2009-2010, page 113?

3:00

Nursing Graduates Employed by AHS

Q23. Dr. Swann:

What is the percentage of new graduates from registered nursing programs in Alberta postsecondary institutions who gained employment with Alberta Health Services in each of the fiscal years 2008-2009 to 2011-2012?

The Speaker: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Seniors' Care Facility Staffing

Q9. Mrs. Towle asked on behalf of Mrs. Forsyth that the following question be accepted.

What is the ratio of front-line staff to patients or residents at long-term care facilities, seniors' lodges, and continuing care facilities, with ratios differentiated between public and private facilities?

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Basically what we're looking for here is obvious. We all know how important it is to have great care and how important that care is to the people who are in facilities. It's important to understand how the staff role exists in that facility. We all know that these numbers are budgeted, that the government books their budgeting based on the numbers and how they come up with those numbers. We also know that the budgets are passed on to the facilities with an idea in mind of what the ratios would be as to how the time is allotted to the patient. The question becomes: how is that time allotted to the patient, and how is that care reflective of the budget? What we're looking for is how many health care aides to patients are in long-term care, continuing care, and lodges and how many LPNs and RNs to patients are in, again, long-term care, continuing care, and lodges.

We also know that there's a difference between public versus private beds, but what we really want to know is: is it 1 to 1, is it 1 to 40, is it 1 to 20? Is there a different ratio? Is it based on activity-based funding? Is it based on patient-based funding? How are they allotting the resources in the budget to be reflective of the care that is important to all people in the facility?

The other question is that the ratios do matter on the person receiving care. We know that you can have, you know, 40 relatively high-needs seniors in one facility that might need less staff than 25 high-needs seniors in a different facility that might need more staff.

We also know that there may be high-needs seniors in a long-term care setting that require 24-hour nursing care. Is that being provided by health care aides? Is that being provided by LPNs? How is that funded? Given that the current budget actually reflects an allocation of funds to salaries, to patient care, then it would be important to know how that is going forward to each facility.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on May 28, 2012, asked the Minister of Health regarding staffing ratios for LPNs, health care aides, and RNs in long-term care and continuing care facilities and lodges and, unfortunately, didn't get any answer at all. This isn't the first time this question has come up. It comes up all the time. It was in last year's budget estimates. It was the year before that in the budget estimates. The hon. Minister of Health responded: "Residents receive the appropriate level of care in the appropriate place at the right time." The question to that is: well, what is that ratio? What is the appropriate ratio for the appropriate amount of care, and what is the budget that constitutes that?

In the same question on May 28 the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek asked about staffing ratios directly relating to long-term care facilities, seniors' lodges, and continuing care facilities. She said that the Health minister in the past had talked about health care standards, setting the ratio, and had said that those standards are set by the government. At the same time she asked for the Health minister to provide those ratios, and again his response was, "We will continue to . . . [provide] the appropriate level of care to the residents" as per their circumstances. Once again, not a straight answer. It would seem to me that the Minister of Health, who sets out the budget accordingly, should be able to provide very easily what he sees as the staffing ratios for long-term care, continuing care, and lodges and public versus private so that Albertans all across the province can understand how the money is being spent in health care.

Additionally, on May 29 the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek also asked the Health minister once again to clarify where these staff ratios are in legislation and regulations, as he'd so said. The answer to that was that the patient-staff ratios are in "various places in legislation and regulation where one can look."

So she did that. She and I both did that; we spent months doing that. Actually, staff ratios are not in the regulations. They're not in the legislation. They're not anywhere to be found. Clearly, the only way to find them out is to bring them to the House, to actually ask a written question on them, and once again we're learning that the Health minister does not want to answer this question. It seems unfathomable to me that we need to keep asking for this information.

The budget is set and the budget is funded according to patient care. We know that residents receiving care in facilities is done on care needs. We also know that care hours are allotted to them, half-hours or quarter-hours, but those hours are allotted to them either through their home care plan or through assessment within the facility. Then the budget is also done in accordance with that.

So it shouldn't be that hard to figure out. If you're in a continuing care facility that has SL 1 or 2 or 3 or 4 or supportive living with dementia, 4D, at any point in time the hon. Minister of Health or the Associate Minister of Seniors should be able to pull up relatively easily the staff ratios there are per patient or per client and also pull up relatively easily the budget allotted to that.

It seems that the only reason there would be to not provide that information is that we're either worried about the ratio to client or that there's some sort of alternative reason for not providing the information. If the information is so clear-cut that it's in the regulations and the legislation, it seems that these written questions shouldn't have to keep coming to the House. They could just answer them. Why would you not want to let Albertans know how the dollars are spent and how the care is allotted?

There really is a mistrust of the government in allotting the resources. We hear every single day about how there's not enough staff on at any one type of facility. We hear every day that at night there's not an RN or there might not be an LPN. We know that medication administration can be done by a multitude of levels of care. I saw at a lodge where medication administration was done by a health care aide. Additionally, I've seen it being done by an LPN. And then, of course, in long-term care facilities the majority of the time it's done by an LPN or an RN. Yet there seems to be no ability to figure out exactly how those hours are allotted back towards the budget and how many true patients or clients the staff members are looking after.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek asked the question and the Minister of Health replied to her that these ratios are in various places in legislation or regulations, where one can look. She asked the Minister of Health to table – to table – the regulations and the legislation showing where the ratios are that are so clearly defined, as he said. To this day that has not happened; hence, the reason that she's come forward with a written question. She also asked the Minister of Health to table the licensing act, the accommodation standards, the regulations, anything that would give any indication of what the ratio of care provider to client is.

It just seems to be an inability to answer the question. So either they don't know what they're paying for staffing as they take care of clients and what the care needs of the client are and how that relates back to patient need or they don't want everyone else to know how they're funding patient care and how that funding is being applied in a public facility and in a private facility. It would seem that they could clear up a lot of confusion about what staffing requirements there are.

It would also seem that if we knew what the staff ratios were, we could actually start engaging with our universities, our educational facilities, or even some of our on-site facilities that offer health care aide programming, LPN programming to make sure that we are meeting the needs of a growing population who is going to need continuing care, who is going to need lodges, and who is going to need long-term care. Without that information it makes it very difficult to plan for the future. As we all know, we have a rising boomer population that's going to be coming forward, is going to need care, and if we don't know today what we're looking at for patient need versus staffing, then we're really not going to be able to plan going forward.

It also will have a huge impact on the budgets going forward if all of a sudden we have an increased need for long-term care, which the demographics recently said we do. We know that long-term care is the most expensive type of care going forward, and we know that dementia and Alzheimer's is happening much, much earlier than we originally expected. If we're not entirely certain where those needs are, then it makes it very, very difficult to associate that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'd recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health to respond to this question. I recognize there is a bit of a parade on today with a lot of these, so I will make my comments brief, but I do want to provide some context around staffing levels in long-term care, seniors' lodges as well as continuing care facilities, one of which my grandmother lives in.

The government does not legislate ratios of front-line staff to residents in continuing care facilities. The nursing homes operation regulations specifies that long-term care operators shall provide a minimum of 1.9 paid hours of combined nursing and personal services per resident per day in a nursing home. While 1.9 hours is a minimum requirement, an average of 3.6 paid hours has been achieved by long-term care facilities in the province. The nursing homes operation regulations apply to all long-term care facilities, whether public or contracted providers. In order to determine the right staffing and services to meet the health needs of residents at continuing care facilities, Alberta Health Services has a tool in place to provide consistent and ongoing assessment. These assessments provide information to health professionals and/or facility operators to ensure that the appropriate health staff and supports are in place for individuals.

Mr. Speaker, all operators are required to comply with continuing care health care standards. These standards ensure that the care provided to individuals can take into account their health needs. Publicly funded care and services provided to home-care clients, whether they're residing in their own homes, in seniors' lodges, or in supportive living, are based on their assessed needs.

Since the hon. Minister of Health is unable to respond to the written question and in light of the rationale he has provided, I'd ask that all hon. members respectfully reject this question.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's too bad that the party on the other side is not going to support this question because it's a serious question and it has serious implications. I'm going to use an example that I have right in my own riding, which is the Rimbey lodge. When we ask what the ratio is, what we're trying to do is hold the government accountable, and this accountability has to do with the quality of life and the safety of our seniors.

Now, for the Rimbey lodge alone when you say 1.9 paid hours and that we may have achieved 3.6, what we don't know is: are we running up those hours in some part of that location versus where we need people, staff members or physical staff people, to work?

I want to bring up a problem that has a direct effect on the lives and the quality of care of these seniors. In the Rimbey lodge, as compared to Carmangay, the hallways are too narrow in one section, so when a situation occurs with a senior, which is very commonplace in these lodges, where somebody needs to go to the hospital, needs 911 emergency-type services, they're not able to have gurneys go down the hallway and turn into the room. So now we have to dispatch the fire department to come out and actually physically carry a patient outside to where a waiting gurney can be. It's a safety issue that requires labour and requires people.

The problem we have is simply this. What we're trying to figure out is: is the care up to standard, and what is that standard? Saying a number of hours per resident does not give us the ability to look at a bar so that we can, say, measure maybe one facility against another facility.

I would say that the minister's excuse is not acceptable in terms of hours. What we need to understand is the ratio of employees. I don't think that's hard. I think it's imperative. When we look at that ratio, then we can kind of go back and start making some significant evaluations on the quality of care. That's the goal here. That's why the question has come forward.

This government has bragged in some respects, but it certainly has promoted its commitment to transparency.

When you look at this, there are not a whole lot of reasons why this number needs to be hidden. This is about transparency and accountability. What we really want to know is this ratio of front-line staffpeople, not the number of hours. Now, this is important because when we talk about front-line staffpeople, I want to talk about the people on the floor who are taking care of these seniors, not about the maintenance guy who's racking up overtime working on a boiler change-out, not about the cooks who are maybe working in the kitchen on some other matter, not even including working on the meals.

I mean, there are some issues here in dealing with what we call front-line workers. This is important because in the Rimbey lodge, which is a significant lodge, it's quite sparse. We have three separate buildings, so one person from the midnight to 7 shift, in my view, is not acceptable. If somebody were to fall – and this does happen at the lodges. Somebody gets up and starts wandering.

One of the issues we have is this measurement on the quality of care of our seniors. We try to establish what level of care they require. Anyone who has a parent, a friend, or any connection to someone in some of these seniors' facilities knows that some people have very good days and that some people do not have some very good days. People with dementia sometimes slide in and slide out. There are those days when they're quite independent and need very little care. Then there are those days or those moments when all of a sudden they require supervision and a higher level of care. If you're understaffed on that front line, you cannot necessarily pick that up or not pick that up that easily.

We've had situations where people have fallen down and not had a chance to get up, and luckily one of the other tenants of the facility was able to track them down and then had to go find help. In my view, that's unacceptable. We've had that happen more than once, and the cause of that is directly related to the ratio of front-line workers to the number of people in the facility providing that care.

I'm not looking for the solution to some of the problems that I just gave you as the example. What I'm saying here is that getting the answer to the very question that we asked will help us dig deeper into this problem and find out: are we doing the right thing? Do we just need to move resources from one location to another? The whole premise of trying to find the solution is based on getting information, and I see no reason why information should be withheld. That's really the key here.

Again, I want to go back, and I want to be critical of this government in the sense that this government has said from the beginning that you want to be transparent. From the beginning you said that you want accountability, and here we're looking at a simple question and asking ourselves: why are you trying to withhold the information? For what purpose? That doesn't make sense. It just doesn't make sense from where I stand here as an MLA. It doesn't make sense, if I were the chairman of the Rimoka Housing Foundation, trying to figure out what my staffing needs should be when the board meets.

Again, this is not about managing Energy or ESRD or Infrastructure. This is about the quality of life of our seniors, the people who deserve better from us, the people who actually built Alberta. This is about not just their quality of life. It's about safety, and it's about emergency services. It has that direct effect. I would have hoped – I would have hoped – that this government would have put a little bit more emphasis on the effect that it has on our seniors versus just: we don't want to do some accounting to give this information to the opposition party. Our seniors deserve not just our respect, but they deserve some dignity also. What they also deserve is accountability and transparency from this government. That's not a lot to ask for from a government that says that they want to do it. Again, now we have a disconnect between what our government has been portraying as its values and what's not happening.

Again, just in support of why I think this member deserves to get this answer, I want to finish by saying that our seniors deserve it and that they deserve better from this government. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to close debate?

Mrs. Towle: No.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek?

Okay. Either way either member will close debate because one was acting on behalf of the other hon. member. So either one of you will close debate.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to this. As the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre just explained, this is yet another example of this government's failure to actually be honest with Albertans. They wonder why people can't trust them.

We have a very simple question in front of us here, Mr. Speaker. It's asking for a ratio. I mean, this is fundamental to our ability to be able to challenge what you're doing and to be able to challenge and find efficiencies in the delivery of health care, to be able to understand what's happening. What we hear on the front lines is critically important, and what we're hearing is that quite often those ratios are not very good, quite frankly. I heard today that we have one LPN who is looking over 81 beds overnight in one facility with one helper. Imagine that. It's insanity. Why can't we just simply get some numbers? Long-term care facilities: we understand how those are defined. Is it that hard to really take a look at what the number of patients is versus the number of staff at any given time, average it out, find all of the long-term care facilities in the province, get that number, deliver that number?

The whole purpose of Written Questions is to have the government provide a more detailed response to a question than what they could be expected to during question period, yet here we go again, another rejection. The government doesn't like the question. It's not going to make them look very good, so they just flat out reject it. Seniors' lodges, continuing care facilities – and it's also very fundamental for us to be able to understand how to challenge you to understand what the different ratios are in public versus private care. We accept that there are two models of care out there that you are funding, and rightfully so, but what if the public is providing better care than the private facilities or vice versa?

That is information that we as the opposition and Albertans in general should have a right to know. If you want to be accountable to Albertans, if you want to have an open and transparent government, this is just simply information that will help everyone understand where the money is being spent. Is it being spent wisely? Are there efficiencies in different systems? Can we do a better job? Apparently, the answer is that you guys are perfect, that you've got it under control, and we should just trust you. You know what? Quite frankly, we don't.

So here we are. You're giving us further reason to turn around and tell Albertans that you can't be trusted. You don't even have the opportunity, when given, to put out a forthright answer and provide it to us when asked. Here we go again; déjà vu all over. I'm sure that this won't be the last time that we stand and that I speak along these very same lines, but, you know, again, I just want to congratulate the government for being more open, honest, and transparent; promises made, promises broken.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had the pleasure of talking to my friend the Associate Minister of Seniors about this issue as there have been some concerns brought to my attention with facilities in my area. On some facilities I hear zero complaints; they're wonderful. There have been other facilities that have received many complaints, and many of those complaints are due to the staffing. The staff that are there do an excellent job, but there aren't enough of them.

When it's lunchtime, they have to go and help serve lunch to the residents that come to the cafeteria, the eating area. They spend a lot of time helping them. There are residents that cannot get to the eating area, that have to stay in their room. By the time they're finished giving the meals out and cleaning up after the residents in the cafeteria, by the time they get the meals delivered to the residents in their rooms, it's 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The food is cold; the food is old. You know, they're not very happy.

Many times I've heard that residents are left in their beds after they've had an accident because the staff is too busy with the other patients, and by the time they get to come and check on that patient, you know, he's been lying in his bed for quite some time.

I really think there need to be ratios, how many staff members per patient, so that the seniors in our facilities get the excellent care they deserve. You know, as many of our members have stated, the seniors are the ones that built this province. They're the ones that we need to look after. They have to be cared for in the manner that they deserve, and quite frankly I think there are some facilities that are lacking in the number of staff per patient that allows the staff to do the best job that they can to ensure that these patients and these seniors are looked after.

I think it would be very well received if the government could come and say: "Okay. Well, you know, we have this many patients. We have to have this many staff." We really feel that the staff in that ratio must be actual nurses, nurses' aides, and those health professionals that are looking after the patients. As the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre stated, we hope it isn't the janitors and the cooks that are then included in these staff hours per patient.

You know, the Associate Minister of Seniors – we've discussed this – assured me that he is going to be looking into some of my concerns. Hopefully, the government will take them into account as we continue these discussions for the next three years, that they will actually act and ensure that the seniors are getting the proper care that they deserve.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How much time do we have for each of these?

The Deputy Speaker: Ten minutes.

Mr. Anderson: Ten minutes.

I'd like to stand and, obviously, support this written question. I'm very puzzled as to why the government wouldn't be jumping at the opportunity to answer it. It seems like a very basic question of accountability in our health care system.

Just to again remind people what it is, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has asked the question as follows: "What is the ratio of front-line staff to patients or residents at long-term care facilities, seniors' lodges, and continuing care facilities, with ratios differentiated between public and private facilities?" Now, I don't understand why such a basic question of accountability can't be answered by this government. You know, if they don't have this information, if the Associate Minister of Seniors is lacking this information, I guess the question would be: how are they able to do their jobs effectively?

I'm always amazed when we get into these written questions and we start talking about things. I'm always dazed and confused at the fact that the government does not have this information. Maybe that would explain some of the erratic and poor decisions that are being made by that side of the House, because they don't have these pieces of important, critical information at their fingertips. We give them a lot of time in advance. We give these questions months in advance to be looked at. You would think that with the armies of staff and researchers that they have in their departments and in the government, they could find this information and make it public. It's hard enough, Mr. Speaker, to do our jobs effectively without having proper, relevant information in our hands to make good decisions.

With regard to this issue in particular, it's very puzzling that the government wouldn't know everything about this area because this is one of the most critical areas of crisis, I would say, in our health care system today. We all know in this House that we do not have enough long-term care. We do not have enough long-term care. We specifically don't have enough public long-term care. Because of that backup in the system, those seniors, when they should be in long-term care, are instead in much more expensive and much less comfortable accommodations in acute care. Because of that, not only are they not getting the care that they need to be comfortable in their golden years, when they need assistance, but it's also costing the health care system more. It's costing us more money.

So we build these Taj Mahal acute-care facilities like the one that just opened up in the south, a beautiful facility. No expense was spared. That's why it came in three times over budget. We put this huge facility out there. Do we need all the beds in there? Well, we do if we don't have proper long-term care. If we can't free up some of the acute-care beds we have at other hospitals with proper long-term care, yeah, I guess we'll keep needing to build these expensive, massive hospitals that cost a fortune to staff and maintain.

That's called poor planning. That's why we are sitting here, Mr. Speaker, with a massive, close to $6 billion cash deficit. That's why we're borrowing $4 billion this year. That's why we're draining our sustainability fund by $2 billion this year. We keep making dumb decisions on things like this. We keep on putting seniors in acute-care locations when really they should be in proper long-term care, which is cheaper. They want to be in those kinds of situations. They don't want to be in hospitals if it can be helped. They want to go there temporarily, and they want to leave, like any other human being, yet they live there for years in some cases. One need only talk to residents in Fort McMurray, where there are seniors that have lived in that facility for years and years and years, waiting for a bed, because they want to stay close to their families in Fort McMurray. That's just one example. There are many others.

It's a very serious problem, so I guess the question is: if we want to fix the health care system so that it's more cost effective and it cares for people more and in a better way, then why on earth are we not able to answer simple questions like staffing ratios at long-term care facilities, both public and private? We could make better decisions. We could understand the problem better as a society, as a province. Certainly, as opposition members I'm always amazed. The government says, "Oh, if the opposition had done their homework" and this, that, and the other thing. Then we ask questions so we can do our homework, and they won't give us the answers to the questions.

You know, it's just like the infrastructure priorities. Show us the list. We asked for the list. They say, "Which projects would you cut?" We say, "Show us your list, and we'll talk about it." We FOIP it, and they won't give it to us because they say that it's confidential, as was mentioned earlier today. I mean, it's nonsensical, the hypocrisy of sitting there and saying that we shouldn't be asking these questions, that we should do our homework, and then not giving us the simple information that would allow us to have the information at our fingertips so we don't have to ask them these questions, so we could do our homework. It's very hypocritical. It's truly wrong, is not how to run a government, and certainly is not transparent.

Mr. Speaker, we're just talking about this one, but as I look down the list, these are all very reasonable requests for information. There's nothing here that's a risk to the confidentiality of the Treasury Board. There's nothing here that's a security risk or something like that. There's nothing improper being asked for here. It's just some basic information. If the government doesn't have that information, then one would have to believe that the government is entirely incompetent as it relates to that, as it relates to the issue of long-term care. Any competent government would have that information and would be able to provide that information at a moment's notice, let alone after months and months and months of asking for it.

Mr. Speaker, I would submit to you that this government should go back after we all vote in the affirmative that this question be answered. I know that the government members are going to support it because it's the right thing to do. After this is passed unanimously by this House, the associate minister should go back and find this information and provide it to the House so that they can make proper and rational decisions with it.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the vote, and I hope that we can move forward on the issue of long-term care because it's a serious issue in our communities, and it's an issue that affects Albertans day to day in very personal ways. I think we've all had loved ones in long-term care, or I would assume we've all had loved ones in long-term care at some point in our lives. If not, I'm sure we will soon.

Mr. Dorward: Don't look at me when you say that.

Mr. Anderson: Sorry?

Mr. Dorward: I'll be in there soon enough.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. The hon. member points out something very good.

The Deputy Speaker: Through the chair, please, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar points out a very key issue here. I'm actually asking this for him. I'm asking that we improve the long-term care system for that hon. member because, as he stated, he'll be in there soon enough, you know? And he doesn't want to be sleeping in a hospital. I mean, that's lame.

Mr. Dorward: I don't want any accidents.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Exactly. Exactly.

Mrs. Forsyth: You've been so quiet, and then all of a sudden you just woke up again.

Mr. Anderson: No, but he had a very relevant point. He had a very relevant point, hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, through the chair. Through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, he had a very, very, very rational point, and I think that that needs to be recognized for its rationality and its uniqueness, its unique rationality. [interjection]

You see, I'm very distracted, Mr. Speaker, by all of the heckling from my side of the House. Anyway, I hope we can take care of this moving forward and get an answer to this question.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of this written question. You know, from the onset and in rereading this, as other members have, first of all, it seems like a very simple, straightforward request. But for myself, upon listening to some of the responses on the other side, yet another example of something that I don't understand and can't explain is how this ratio that's being requested is not at the fingertips of my colleagues on the other side of the House. I'm going to extrapolate on the implications that that brings.

First and foremost, in order to get a sense of how well our system is working or, perhaps, how well our system isn't working or is underperforming, it needs to come from measures and performances. Just like students in school need different measures to see how they're doing, how well they're learning the material, et cetera, in order for the government to make decisions based on spending and on funding and on the quality of care, for example, that we're providing to seniors, as in this question, that's a very difficult question to answer if we don't even know what is the ratio of staff to patients.

You know, I think it's frustrating that this information is so difficult to get a hold of. In this written question, I mean, it's a breakdown that was written very well, talking about the ratio of front-line staff to patients who are residents and then going through the different types of seniors' lodges from long-term care facilities to continuing care. Especially important for me and my caucus is looking at that differential between public and private facilities. Again, let's get to the bottom of this as far as: are facilities providing different qualities of care, different levels of care? That can be seen most easily, first and foremost, through ratios of staff to patients.

You know, a colleague of mine from the Wildrose stood up and gave an example of how there was one staff overnight at a hospital with somewhere around 80 residents that they had to supervise. I don't know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I wouldn't want my parents to be in that type of facility, where there's such little care because of the number of staff. Again, I'll make it very clear that it's not because the residents and the folks and the LPNs and RNs that work in these facilities don't care. They care more than ever, which is why they're still there when they have wages that are sometimes unacceptable, why they work very long hours.

The bottom line comes to the point that if we value our seniors, the people who built this province, if we want to treat them with dignity and respect, which I've heard from the lips of many of the members on the other side of the House time and again, well, then what are they doing to ensure that there are measurements in place so that we know what quality of care our seniors are getting?

It all comes down to accountability. In order to be accountable, we need to have these numbers, so it seems absolutely ridiculous that there's a reluctance to either produce these numbers or to share these numbers with not just all members of this House but all Albertans. You know, ever since the ministry of transparency was created – I think that is the sweetest piece of irony in this government's portfolio of ministries because, if anything, that ministry is more the Ministry of Building Walls and Hiding Things. If we're asking for this information, well, then it should be forthcoming. If this government claims to be the most transparent, accountable government that has been in power in years, then show it. Prove it. Quit speaking with lip service, and let's see the numbers. Let's show Albertans that we are offering a high quality of care for our seniors, that we are hiring enough staff.

I mean, earlier we talked a little bit about the budget and its implications. Again, I find it quite fascinating that the current government loves to build new, shiny things and put up buildings, yet when it comes time to staff them or to operate them, well, that's when the dollars fall short, and it's somehow less important, as seen by the number of facilities that have been half constructed or are incomplete around the province or completed yet underused or understaffed.

So I'm speaking in favour of this, and I'm sure I agree with all my colleagues on this side of the House, but I truly hope that on the government side they look at these requests as being reasonable requests. Again I'll remind my colleagues that during the election they campaigned very strongly on working with members from all sides of the House, on being open minded and willing to entertain amendments that truly speak to improving a bill or improving the lives of Albertans, for them to let party lines drop aside and put Albertans and the people of this province as our first priority. So when we have pieces of either legislation or recommendations or written questions that are being asked, if it speaks to the betterment of our society and works toward that, then accept it and vote for it.

Honestly, Mr. Speaker, I find it shameful when members cannot vote regarding a bill or legislation or a written question if they honestly agree with it but feel: I can't because my party is inhibiting me from doing so. So I ask members across the way to look at these reasonable requests and show Alberta that lip service isn't the only thing you have to offer them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief. Firstly, I was going to raise a point of order earlier on, but maybe I'll just mention it for future reference. The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake failed to actually move acceptance of the question, so I'm not sure we actually have a valid question on the floor. Maybe we can just deem it moved and then make sure we do that as we go forward.

The hon. members opposite failed, I think, to listen to the hon. Solicitor General when he responded to this question. It's not a question of not providing information; it's a question of doing your homework and understanding exactly what information is useful. Flat ratios are not a useful measure. As hon. members will know, the ones that have delved into this will know, the level of care changes with respect to the individual and their care needs, and the number of hours of nursing service or attendant service that is to be provided is legislated based on the care needs of the patient, not a standard ratio for a facility.

It's care of the patient that matters, care of the individual that matters, not the institutional model, so a ratio for an institution is quite irrelevant. What's relevant is the mix of patients in the particular facility and the care needs of each of those individuals. The question does not ask for relevant information insofar as one wouldn't look at a particular building and say that there's a ratio that's required for the building. One would look at the patients that are in the building, the care levels of each of those patients, and then the number of hours of care that's provided for each of those patients. It's a more complex thing, I know, but a much more relevant way to look at it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader. I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, notwithstanding the minister's comments, without adequate measures for long-term care it's extremely difficult to know what standard one should be holding staffing accountable to, what standard this government is going to accept in terms of both quantity of hours per person and quality of care. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has the floor. Thank you.

Dr. Swann: The lack of ability now to monitor what's happening in these nursing homes and to clearly articulate a standard for various levels of acuity or severity or need is the big problem here. This is a beginning step. This written question is a beginning step to at least allow us some information about why we get all these complaints in our offices from family members and seniors themselves about not only inconsistent care but inferior care in so many seniors' care residences. The move towards private operations is only aggravating the perception that we don't have sufficient standards and that we don't have sufficient monitoring of those standards, and then we don't have enforcement of those standards.

This is a government that likes to waffle around terminology and not set in place clear standards, a consistent pattern of monitoring them, a public report on how those standards were or were not met, and then on enforcement of these standards. I'm afraid that it flies in the face of this minister's comments that, well, it depends on the severity. Well, of course it depends on the severity. Why don't we have standards that show what level of staffing ratio is for the most serious level and what level of care goes down from there? Are we meeting the standards, Mr. Minister? No, we're not according to many people across this province.

I heard from one yesterday in a coffee shop who made a special attempt to meet with me before this session, knowing that we were going to be discussing this issue. Her mother was in a ward of 54 long-term care patients where there were only four staff that night.

I asked: why were there only four to deal with 54 people? Because two people were sick, and nobody else would come in. Well, this is the kind of story that she says happens on a frequent basis, where either there is sickness or there is cost-cutting or there is an unwillingness to hold themselves accountable for both the quantity of staffing and the quality of care that results. The quantity is integrally related to quality of care.

What I see is a government that's been unwilling to actually put in place standards, a consistent monitoring of those standards, a public reporting on those standards so that people can actually have confidence that we are doing what we say we're doing in government, and finally, enforcement of standards. What's the penalty if people are not meeting the standard, if they're sloughing off one or two staff a night to save money or because they can't find anybody to go in that night? I think that's what we're concerned about. I know all of you across the floor are concerned about the quality of care of seniors, so why will you not take more seriously your responsibility to monitor and enforce basic standards?

You're moving to activity-based funding now. How are we going to be measuring, and are staffpeople going to be registering seniors as lower than they actually are just in order to get away with lower staffing ratios? How are we going to monitor this activity-based funding so that it's legitimate and we can have confidence that people in these institutions are not being shortchanged? The whole fight about the one or two baths a week is symptomatic, to me, of a system that simply is not working and does not have the confidence of people to say: "You know what you're doing. You have standards in place. We know you're monitoring, and you're monitoring without informing them that you're monitoring."

I hear many stories that at seniors' centres they know when the inspectors are coming, so they put on the dog. They make everything look great. They have the staffing beefed up, and everything looks good. That's not acceptable for a government that says that it wants serious objective indicators of quality of care.

All we're asking for is a set of standards, a real serious commitment to irregular monitoring – let's make it irregular so that there's no consistency in the monitoring that can be predicted and can be acted out in the workplace – and then some consequences when companies or public facilities fail to meet those standards. I want that for my mother. You want that for your mother. Why will you not put in place a serious commitment that can gain the trust and respect of everyone in Alberta?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I'll recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It just goes back to the question-and-answer part. It's a legitimate question. I get that some members feel that there's an unobtainable answer for it, but you've got to sit there and ask: why are we comparing things? I mean, the key part of the question here is: what would work better, the public versus the private? What's the differential on it? What's working? I think we're all looking for the answers in this province, something that will work. [interjection] Well, it says that right in it. I'm just reading the question.

The question is: why can we not come up with the answers? It's straightforward. It's not a catty question that we're asking, which can happen sometimes in this Chamber. [interjection] Yeah. The odd time we can maybe be a little out of bounds on the questions. But I think this is pretty straightforward. It's hard for some people to grasp, I guess, when you're just asking a straightforward question, why we can't have the answers.

What can we do better? Health care is obviously a huge issue in this province. We've got a question here that could lay it out. Now, I know someplace in the back somebody has the answer for this because there had to be a standard set somewhere for it. It wasn't just: we've decided what the numbers are for long-term care and everything else so what the ratio is for the front-line workers. There has to be a base somewhere in there. I can't understand why we wouldn't want to share that. At some point we could probably try to work together to get the proper answers to: what will work in this province?

I'll leave my debate short on that. I don't understand why it's so hard to answer a fairly simple question instead of just saying: we need to remove the question; we don't want to be part of it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My apologies to the Member for Little-Bow for jumping up in front of him. I would never get in front of him on any point. He's a guy I have great respect for, and I'm glad he got to speak first. [interjection] Where is that member from that continually blurts out?

An Hon. Member: Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. McAllister: The Member for Calgary-Lougheed may be the best heckler, but he always describes it like this. I just wish you'd stand up and talk when it's your turn, Calgary-Lougheed.

I want to speak to the issue, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Please do, hon. member.

Mr. McAllister: . . . and to the question from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, but I think we should go back for those at home that are watching so they know exactly what it is we're speaking about.

Again, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek asked the following question: "What is the ratio of front-line staff to patients or residents at long-term care facilities, seniors' lodges, and continuing care facilities, with ratios differentiated between public and private facilities?" Just to revisit it so we know where we're going, it does seem like a pretty relevant question to find out how things are going in seniors' care in this province, but for those that aren't familiar, government has chosen to not accept the question. They reject the question, which means they don't have to answer, effectively, to us, who are trying to ask it on behalf of you at home to better represent seniors in this province.

The Member for Airdrie made a point. He thought the reason, Mr. Speaker, that the government wouldn't answer this question is because they were incompetent. I tend to disagree with the Member for Airdrie on that point, for what it's worth. I don't believe that to be the case. I think that the reason governments choose which questions they want to answer or not is because they recognize how the answer will make them look to the public. That is why, for instance, the budget was broken into three sets of numbers also. It's a way of disguising to the public what's really happening, clearly to try and take their focus from the bottom line.

The answer to this question: somebody has it. I don't believe for one second that the government is incompetent on everything. I think they've been there 40-plus years for a reason, but I think that somewhere in that 40 years they forgot that the reason they are in those chairs is to answer the question when asked. The reason that we sit here is because seniors and our loved ones voted us in. When we ask for a ratio, it's so we can find out what the quality of care is, so we can find out that they're being taken care of. That's a legitimate question, but again, Mr. Speaker, it was rejected.

Now, the hon. House leader across, the Minister of Human of Services, I believe, spoke to – how did he put it? – the ratios being inconsequential because of different levels amongst the seniors and the care provided them. Don't we ask for the same thing in education? Don't we ask for class sizes and teacher ratios? What is the difference? I don't think the Minister of Education would rise and suggest that's inconsequential for one second. I would suggest we recognize there are varying levels of students in classrooms. Don't we? The same with seniors. There are varying levels of care needed, depending on the senior.

We have students in class that are learning English as a second language. We have students needing supports. We have students that are above the bar and below the bar, whatever that bar is, and we ask teachers to provide the best care that they can, the same as with health care providers. So when we ask what the ratio is of those looking after our seniors to the number of seniors, we're asking a pretty darn relevant question so that we can find out what the care is that is provided for our loved ones, Mr. Speaker.

I don't think for one second that the government is incompetent. I think they have gotten to a point where they don't recognize anymore that they were put here by Albertans to answer these very questions, and nearly 500,000 Albertans put us in the Wildrose Party here as the Official Opposition to ask the questions that they forget to answer. This is a good one and a good example.

There's nobody in here, of 87 members, that doesn't have a parent, a grandparent, somebody aging that probably will be in a facility at some time, you know. I should say, although we all have said it, that we believe the quality of care provided in Alberta to be as good or better than anywhere in the country, probably the world, that the compassion of Albertans is amazing, so we tip our cap to the caregivers. We'd just suggest that, you know, government ought to come clean about the numbers so that we can know that our seniors, those close to us, are being cared for.

In asking this question, I also try and ask myself why it is that they wouldn't answer it. Why is it that they don't want us to know it? I think I touched on it, but maybe it needs some fleshing out a little bit. If there's something there, Mr. Speaker, that the government would be embarrassed by, it often will avoid providing the facts that we need to see. I just think they ought to be more transparent, and they ought to be more forthcoming with Albertans and those that have put us here to ask these questions. There are members opposite, you know, that have seniors' facilities in their ridings, as I said, that have loved ones that would like this question answered. They have to look their constituents in the eye. I think it's become the era of government, where government assumes it will only do what it feels is right, not what the public feels is right, that it will only answer what it wants to, not what Albertans really want to hear about.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here proudly on behalf of the 10,000-plus that put me here, just like my colleagues and the half a million people in this province, because we deserve answers to questions like these. Albertans deserve answers to questions like these. You can continue to reject them, and we will continue to ask them.

Thank you.

4:00

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's kind of baffling, I think, to all of us on this side of House at least why these kinds of simple questions can't be given simple, straight-forward, plain-English answers. It's a little bit troubling. Those of us that come from a management or a business background recognize that if you don't measure something, you can't manage it as well. You can't manage it very well at all. What we're really asking for is some clarity on a ratio that's relevant and will speak to the issue of consistency between facilities, whether they're private or publicly funded. I think it's important that the people of Alberta have that feedback. We're simply asking for some numbers that ought to be readily available. If they aren't, I think that's a serious concern. If they aren't and that's why we aren't getting them, then that would be an embarrassment to me if I were charged with the responsibility for providing a consistent level of care across the province to those that are among our most vulnerable, as we've said.

My own parents, 92 and 93 years old, are in a long-term care facility. I appreciate the care that they receive, but I, too, would like to know how that's determined and how it's measured because even though they are getting good care, sometimes there are some inconsistencies that I wonder about. I'm sure to someone like our Health minister and those that are responsible for this that's a small piece of a great big picture, but nevertheless it's a piece that I'm personally interested in. I think that, as has been mentioned numerous times today, it's not just the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that's going to be there soon. All of us one day or another may be in that position if we eat lots of bran and look both ways when we cross the street.

Anyway, why is it such a secret? What's so special about this little bit of knowledge that it has to be kept close to your chest like a full house in a card game? I don't get it. I think that if it's fear, if you're going to be embarrassed by the answer, well, you're adults. Take your lumps. Give us the information. What's the point of forcing something like this to happen, where we have to point out how paranoid-appearing this kind of reluctance is to the people of our province?

Again, to repeat: if you don't measure it, your ability to manage is reduced. Are you guessing? Are you going by gut feel? If there aren't any standards, then that speaks to a breakdown in the system. Systems are perfectly aligned to produce the results they get, and right now we're seeing some inconsistencies that are a cause for concern. We're hearing about this from our constituents, the members of our ridings, and probably from your ridings, too, if you were allowed to speak up and speak out on behalf of them.

Anyway, I think that it's shameful and disgraceful that this simple request continues to be rebuffed. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Ah, my gentle ones, this is a learning day. This is a learning opportunity for you. Yeah, I know. This is what the government does. They keep information in such a way that you can't get the answers that you're looking for. This is a very familiar scenario to me.

I am really heartened to see how many people are concerned about the seniors that are in their constituency. I'm sure that's true for some of the people over there, and I urge them to join the conversation.

I would argue here that there is a difference. What the government has done and how they would answer you, if they answered you, is to say that they do keep track. They keep track of the number of hours that any given patient gets attention, gets one-on-one care, but they don't necessarily keep track of or won't admit to keeping track of and won't give you the information about what the ratio is. They say: "Well, it doesn't matter. It's how many hours of attention the person gets. That's what we need to know."

This was actually changed and improved, let me say, four years ago, five years ago. I'm sorry; I can't remember her name. It's got a lake in it or a river.

An Hon. Member: Calgary-Fish Creek.

Ms Blakeman: There we go. Calgary-Fish Creek.

She'd remember. The number of hours of care that anyone was getting in long-term care went up from like one point something to 3.2, I think, and this was a big leap forward.

Let me talk a little bit about the ratio and why it matters. I think the ratio matters when you're looking for basic health and safety if you have one RN on for a facility that has three floors and 60 rooms on each floor and, as happens every single year without fail at this time of year, you start getting norovirus or some sort of flu going through there and you start getting a couple of people upchucking in the middle of the night and they're not people who can particularly get themselves into a position to do that, shall I say, appropriately – I'm sorry I'm so graphic here – where you can lean over the bed and actually puke into the wastebasket or whatever. You don't get that very often in long-term care. Literally, people can't turn themselves over. This is where that ratio becomes important.

The next thing the government is going to say is: oh, it's Chicken Little, and the sky is falling; you're always talking about worst-case scenarios. Well, no, not particularly. The flu happens every year. People start throwing up in the middle of the night every year, and you've got one person that is an RN on duty for an entire facility, and then on each floor of that facility you're going to have probably an LPN that's on. They are now going to try and start to deal with all of this.

God forbid that you have someone in that facility that needs an ambulance because almost none of these facilities will have the permission of the patient or the resources to be able to deal with anything more difficult than providing oxygen. The machine that – help me with this: the shocker machine that they all have on the little stand on the wall now.

An Hon. Member: A defibrillator.

Ms Blakeman: A defibrillator. Thank you very much.

If you do have someone that needs an ambulance and is going to have to leave the facility, then you have your staff tied up with getting the ambulance people in, getting them into the right room, and making sure the patient gets taken out. This is when it becomes critical.

The government is sort of playing a game of risk and time here. They say: well, you know, that doesn't happen very often, so we can risk not having a higher staff ratio on because we don't think it's going to happen. The thing is that when it does happen, everybody turns to the government and goes: "Why didn't you protect those seniors? You alone had the ability to make sure these people were looked after and you didn't." A fire, a flood, snow causing a roof cave-in: it's not hard to think of those occasions where you would need to have skilled staff on hand. That's not to say that the personal assistants and the nursing aides aren't wonderful people – I see them twice a week; I know they are – but they don't have the skills, and they don't want to be put in that position either.

I know it's frustrating to the Official Opposition to be flogging what we wish was a dead horse, but there we go. The government is not going to give us this information because it's not going to make them look very good. Those ratios are bad. Let's face it, folks. If this was a good-news story, they'd be fighting each other to get to their feet and tell us what the ratio is, but they're not. They are not meeting my eyes. They are looking anywhere but at my eyes right now. Yup, there we go. [interjections] I'm sorry. We've got two of them over there that are being particularly difficult, so we will give credit to Edmonton-Gold Bar and Calgary-Glenmore. Thank you for the eyeball.

That's how these kinds of questions get answered, and that's why it's so frustrating to people in this House when we get the government kind of playing jiggery-pokery with the numbers and/or a shell game.

Mr. Anderson: They wouldn't do that.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, they would. I'm so sorry, Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I know that you are . . .

Mr. Anderson: Just Airdrie.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm sorry. Okay. Don't change your names anymore.

That's why it's frustrating, and that's why it's so frustrating to all of us to hear the government put itself out as being transparent. As we try and dig out things that we think are not going well, we've got to have proof, and as we try and dig that proof out, the government won't answer the questions that we're actually asking because it's going to make them look bad. I'm sorry to stand up today and give you a little bit of historical perspective and the bad news that they are never going to answer this question. But it doesn't mean that you should stop trying.

I have spent a lot of time in long-term care facilities over the last going on 12 years, and I've got to say that even the hours of care are just kind of pitiful. I mean, the idea that someone would go into a long-term care facility in Alberta and not be in diapers within six months – it does happen here because the staff don't have time to deal with taking someone to the bathroom and then waiting for them and supervising them and then getting them back into their bed or into their chair. They don't have time. That could be 20 minutes or 45 minutes. We all know the biggest discussion when you're in the hospital is bowel movements. Well, that's why. I'm sorry; it's very graphic today. I apologize for that.

That's what happens. They don't have time to do that. People wait. They press that call bell. I've never been in the facility my mom is in without the call bells going off, at least one call bell, the entire time I'm there. People are waiting for someone to come and help them. They're not going to get that help. There's a euphemism they use. It's not: there's been an accident. It's: incontinence, several episodes. That's what it is. Then they say: "Well, you know, we can't do it anymore. They're going to have to be put in diapers."

There they are, you know, perfect people who were the top of our society. The leaders in our society – respected and important and even powerful – are wearing diapers. They didn't want to. They want to be able to go to the bathroom, but they can't because there are not enough staff. Pretty undignified, huh? Probably not a bank manager – they're probably in private care, and they actually do have someone that will wait long enough for them to go to the bathroom – but certainly a nurse or radiologist or teacher. All those people are sitting in long-term care in diapers. And it matters. It makes a difference to them that they're in diapers. It affects their ability to keep going and take themselves seriously and strive to eat their meals and all those good kinds of things because they're sitting there in diapers.

Gee, this got really depressing, didn't it?

Mrs. Towle: No. It's true.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. It's all true, but it's still depressing.

Anyway, my friends, that's why you're not going to get an answer. And I'm sorry to give that information to you and to those backbenchers that are just discovering for the first time that that's why people end up in diapers, your parents, yes indeed, my mother in diapers. Uh-huh. Yeah. So keep up the work. We'll keep pressing to get answers to things. But in the meantime I kind of think we got the answer because they won't answer.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise here today to speak to this question. Of course, the question, as stated by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, is to ask the government the following question: "What is the ratio of front-line staff to patients or residents at long-term care facilities, seniors' lodges, and continuing care facilities, with ratios differentiated between public and private facilities?"

I guess, you know, we see again and again in the news that Albertans can't trust this government. Obviously, a lot of that has to do with an ongoing series of broken promises, but I think that equally as well it's the fact that they just won't be open and transparent and answer some very, very simple questions like this. To me this is just basic, empirical evidence that one would want to obtain to be able to make proper decisions. One has to ask the question: what do you have to hide in such a straightforward question?

We have a Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation. I'm not sure what exactly he does if he doesn't deal with things just like this: to be more open and transparent, to provide information so that Albertans can see what's going on, so that decision-makers can use that data to come up with proper decision-making capacity. If there was ever a role for the Associate Minister of AT and T to step into, it's right here. He's got the opportunity to step in here, to show some true leadership on this issue, to show that the PC government is doing things differently, that they're actually being open and transparent, not just talking about it, yet apparently he's unwilling or unable to step forward for whatever reason and come out here.

We, of course, know that this is a very big issue, where seniors are stuck in acute-care beds when they should actually be in long-term care facilities or other types of facilities. We know that in his own riding the Associate Minister of AT and T has a situation where seniors are stuck in acute-care beds for years and years and years. This information should be very important to him, and the fact that he's unwilling to stand up for his constituents, to find out what this information is – we'd like to see some action on this. Of course, there are numerous, numerous seniors that are stuck in hospital beds and in some cases very deplorable conditions.

I've had the opportunity to meet some seniors in my local area that have been waiting and waiting for another type of care. Of course, for the longest time they were fed this prepackaged food that tasted disgusting, and they're stuck in these hospital beds with disgusting food when they should be getting another type of care. This prepackaged food that reeks, sent from some other province: our seniors are stuck eating this kind of garbage while they're stuck in acute-care beds, still not getting the proper care that they should get. On top of that, it's even more expensive for these seniors to be stuck in acute-care beds than in long-term care or being provided the type of home care that they could utilize if they have the capacity to stay in their own home.

You know, the Government House Leader mentioned that this type of information is inconsequential, and I couldn't disagree more with him. How many staff are there compared to the patients that are at a particular facility? Well, I can tell you that if you actually go and meet the seniors in those acute-care beds or continuing-care facilities or long-term care beds, those are very, very important ratios, the number of staff that are taking care of those individuals. To just merely dismiss it as inconsequential I think is a disservice to those people in the industry. Maybe it's his opinion that they're inconsequential, but to . . .

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, noted that the Government House Leader rose on a point of order at 4:17.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: And the citation, Government House Leader?

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Hancock: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). The member totally misrepresented the representations that I made earlier in debate, and I think it's necessary to clarify that. I didn't say that the number of staff was inconsequential or that it was unimportant. What I said was that measuring a ratio based on an institutional model as opposed to measuring the hours that are available to care for a patient based on a care model are two entirely separate things. The public and the care sector and everybody else has moved away from an institutional model of care and moved towards caring for patients on patient need and a patient care plan basis.

That's what I said, and if the hon. member wants to make his own representations about what's important, wants to go back to the past on institutional models, that's for him to do, but don't put that in my mouth. What I said was not anything to do with not respecting the care for patients but, rather, with how much respect we have for patients by allocating care on the basis of the need of the care plan of the patient, not on the institution that they're in.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I'm very, very thankful for that clarification. Clarification is always good. There's obviously no point of order here, Mr. Speaker. We've been in question period and have seen these disputes resolved by the Speaker many, many, many, many times. I think it's very clear that you can have two interpretations of what was said. In this case, I think, from what I was hearing, he was saying that what was being asked for, the ratios – it was completely inconsequential to have that information. That's certainly what I gleaned from it, so I'm glad for his interpretation. I think that, you know, we can interpret from his comments what they seemed to say. That's part of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Hon. Member for Airdrie, a clarification.

Hon. Government House Leader, can we agree that this is a clarification and move on?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, you can do whatever you want.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. We will do that. The matter is clarified.

Please proceed, Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just thrilled that that whole issue is clarified, just really helpful here when we debate this question.

Debate Continued

Mr. Saskiw: Just going back to the question here, very simple information that we're trying to seek from the government, it's a ratio, a ratio between the staff and the patients. Very simple, but it seems that the government is unwilling to even provide this type of simple, simple information. It's a little alarming when you think of the fact that there are so many complex decisions that are made in a government, yet they cannot provide you with a basic, basic piece of data.

Of course, no one would suggest that you would make a decision based purely on a ratio, that that would be the sole material determining factor when you make a decision, but of course that should be relevant. That should be relevant when one is looking at the overall system. You cannot take statistics in isolation, you cannot take them alone, but clearly they would be one factor that a person or a decision-maker would look at.

Of course, why this is even more important is that we saw in the throne speech – this is a continuation of the last session – that the Premier talked about being open and transparent, but unfortunately to date those are just words. She's unwilling to talk the talk, and the rejection of this question just illustrates that. Why not be open and transparent? Give the ratio. You know, it's a little shocking that we can't have this basic information.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to this question, why it's utterly important is that we get questions from our constituents. When we go back during constituency break or during the year, they often talk about how there is a shortage of front-line staff. We know this government can give all this money to the executives, we know they can give the chief financial officer for Alberta Health Services a $1 million severance package and then an additional $10,000 a month for 10 years, but when it comes to front-line staff, that's where they begin cutting. That's why this is important.

We get these questions from our constituents. They say, you know: what is the government's ratio with respect to front-line staff and patients? We'd like to be able to go to our constituents and say: "Here. This is the ratio that the government has thought is appropriate in these circumstances." But when they don't even give us the information, what are we supposed to tell our constituents when they ask us this specific question? I guess the answer is that the government is unwilling or unable to provide this basic information or they just don't know or they're deliberately hiding. We just don't know why they wouldn't provide this ratio.

I'm very pleased that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek brought this question forward so that we can now go to our constituents and say that we asked this very simple, basic question of the government to ensure that patients have the appropriate level of care with front-line staff, yet the Government House Leader came forward and said: "No. We can't provide that information. We're not going to provide that information." When you talk to the public, I think they're going to be astonished that the government cannot even provide this basic, basic information. You know, I guess that at this stage we'll simply go to our constituents and explain that they're unwilling and unable to do this. Quite frankly, if you're unable and unwilling to do this, it's astonishing.

I think that it's important that we stand up for seniors, that we stand up for other patients that are receiving this care, and part of that is the appropriate level of front-line staff. Instead, of course, of having all these multiple levels of bureaucracy within Alberta Health Services, we need to ensure that there is the appropriate level of front-line staff. This ratio, if we were provided this information, would show where we are at with respect to front-line staff services for long-term care facilities, seniors' lodges, and continuing care facilities.

I can appreciate the secondary information that we wanted to receive differentiated between the public and the private facilities so that you can use that evidence when making decisions on different topical matters. I appreciate the question from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to a very important question asked by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Now, for a government that claims to be open and accountable, I don't understand why they're trying to be so closed and opaque. It's a very simple question. In fact, there are many other questions that need to be asked. The reason it's important to ask what the staffing ratios are in the private and public and nonprofit facilities is so we can assess the amount of care, the level of care that our seniors are getting. Equally important to me is: what kind of value for money are we getting?

Now, here are certain facts. Let's stick to facts. I had a major problem with this government when I was inside it. This was, in fact, the issue that got me expelled from government. I wrote an e-mail saying: "We're failing our seniors. We're neglecting them and failing them." The reality is that many of our seniors today lived very healthy lives. They had good nutrition, they moved a lot, they were very responsible, so they're living longer. The other issues are the fact that the medical system can do amazing things, so people are living longer with multiple problems, multiple complex problems. You know what? That's a good thing. The bad thing is that when people actually end up in care, they need a lot more care because of the complexity of their issues.

Now, in Ontario in wards they actually are so open and accountable that they put on the walls how many falls and how many bed ulcers patients in a medical ward have because simple measures like falls and bed ulcers are measurable signs of neglect. If you have lots of falls and bed ulcers, they lead to injuries, which actually lead to higher costs. This is not only a humanitarian issue; it's actually a money issue as well.

If you look at the data, the government has built thousands and thousands of beds, thousands of them, but the paramedics will anecdotally tell you – you know what? – that they're bringing a lot of people back from these facilities. Anecdotally, the paramedics get them out of there to the hospital. You know, there's an hon. member who's a paramedic. If he talks to his buddies, they'll tell him that, that they're actually just bringing them back to hospital because there's not enough staff to care for the complexity of that patient's care. Or if they fall – they break a hip; they break a wrist – if they get a bed ulcer or get an infection, they're coming back to the ER. They're getting stuck in the hospital again at $2,000 a night or $1,200 a night, whatever the cost may be.

In fact, we know that despite the thousands of beds they've built to fix the acute-care system, in two years they essentially haven't moved on their eight-hour performance measure to get admitted people upstairs because people are just coming back. This is just a very basic question that should be answered.

The other question that we actually need to ask is: if we build so many of these beds – God knows how many tens of millions, hundreds of millions have been spent to build these buildings – then why today do we have a hundred more seniors back in acute-care hospitals according to AHS's performance report of the last quarter? Why? We have a population that's actually getting younger. Alberta has one of the youngest populations in the country. So if we build so much seniors' capacity, why are there more people awaiting placement in the last quarter alone? I'll tell you why. You know, I suspect that they're probably just coming back.

The other question we have to ask, that should be answered: what is the occupancy rate of all these beds that have been built? Are they all filled up? Another thing we have to ask is: what is the return rate of people who get into these private facilities? How many of them end up back in hospital again?

The other question that we have is on the contract with the private providers. If they've contracted to give a hundred beds and if they're not all filled up, are you paying for the care component of all 100 beds? Are we paying for the care component of empty beds?

The other questions that need to be asked are: how much is being billed? What are the providers getting paid for the cost of an RN, an LPN, and a nursing aide? What are the providers getting paid, and what are the staff getting paid? How much is the profit component for each of the staff? Cost of staff plus the profit equals price.

I'll tell you that in the for-profit private model all evidence, international and local, in the many reports that have been done – these are facts, Mr. Speaker – is that the fact is that if seniors spend more time in bed, they fall more, they eat less, and they bathe less. These are facts. The neglect shows itself in numbers of falls and numbers of bed ulcers.

Pre-election we had many cases of seniors neglect. You know, it's not just having two baths a week. In fact, I'd challenge any of the government members to sit in a soiled incontinence pad and only get two baths a week. Jeez. You need two baths a day when that happens, Mr. Speaker. Right? Two baths a week is nice and all – it's a hundred per cent better than one – but it's still only about 20 per cent of the time a human being should bathe. So I give kudos to them for a big improvement.

Now, the question is: if they're not increasing the funding and the staffing levels, if we don't know what the staffing levels are, if we don't know that they've actually increased the number of staff, the qualifications of the staff, what is being neglected?

Mr. Speaker, the other question, actually, is not just the staffing ratios here, but it's: who is being placed in these beds that we currently have? Are we placing people that should not be placed? I do know as a front-line health professional – and there are a few on that side as well. There's a paramedic and a nurse, and they'll recognize these issues. The fact is that because you cut home care – you know, first they privatize the delivery of all of home care so that because of the profit, people actually get less care. If they cut that privatized home care even by 15 per cent, we know that every paramedic and emergency nurse and doctor, even the cleaning staff in the ER, will tell you that people are coming back to emergency because of cuts in home care. So are we actually placing people in these facilities that can actually go home if we just had more home care?

Mr. Speaker, I do know that when I was in government as a parliamentary assistant, the deputy minister and I said: well, look, 50 per cent of people die within two years when they go into care. So we said: what's happening to those new beds – well, these old beds – that come up because somebody, unfortunately, died? Eighty per cent of the people coming to those beds were coming straight from home because of such inadequate home care. So we said: hey, maybe we just need to double up home care. You know what? Why don't we triple up home care? Why don't we give 10 times as much home care, so much home care so that you don't actually need to go into long-term care? You can stay in your own home, with your own partner, in your own community. You know, you'll pay your own lights, and you'll pay your own bills. In fact, I met with the Auditor General and asked him to do a forensic audit of value for money for home care and these beds. I said: "You've got to look at these things. You have to look at these things."

If we cannot get even basic information on what the staffing ratios are – these aren't even complex questions I've asked. These are not complex questions.

Now, I will say that there are a lot of very learned, very bright people on that side of the House. You know, I would ask the backbenchers to please ask these questions at caucus. Please. This is a money issue, and it's a human issue. I would contend that, hey, we can get Albertans better care and better value.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close debate. Five minutes.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up and, I guess, add a few words on my question, that talks about the ratio of front-line staff to patients or residents in long-term facilities, seniors' lodges, and continuing care facilities, with ratios differentiated between public and private facilities. What I'm not pleased about is the fact that the government has obviously stood up and rejected this particular written question. I guess I shouldn't be surprised, yet I am a bit. It's been brought up before that you should never be surprised at a difficult question, especially when you have a government that doesn't want to give the answer.

What is surprising to me is the fact that while the government flatly rejects the particular question, they don't seem to be bothered by some of the comments that have been made as people have gotten up and spoken over and over again about the importance of dealing with this particular question. But, Mr. Speaker, we're in 2013 under a new Premier and a new government, so I guess we know exactly where we're going.

With that, I say, you know, that there are surprising things that are coming out in the budget that we're dealing with right now as we start digging through things within the budget. We all of a sudden find that the Health Facilities Review Committee is gone, a very intricate part of government who had the ability to go and check the facilities and question how people are being treated and the condition of the facility. The health advocate: gone. The seniors' advocate: gone. You know exactly the direction that the government is going.

I can tell you that over the last three years – and I've had some comments with my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, that spent two weeks travelling this wonderful province that we live in and spent a lot of time talking to people who deal with seniors, talking to seniors alone. She and I have had a talk over a beer, and she shared some horrific stories of what she's hearing. I can tell you as the Seniors critic and someone who has a mom in a seniors' home, who's gotten to know the seniors in my mom's home very well, that we're heading down a very, very rocky path.

I understand where the government is going with their continuing care and how they're changing the continuing care model. I sometimes wonder if they know exactly what they're doing or how they see this continuing care model and if they really realize that putting seniors in continuing care – do they understand that over time the seniors' health needs change dramatically? The level of care – or I shouldn't say care. The care has always been exceptional, but the staffing is where there's a problem. You cannot blame the unbelievable RNs or LPNs or NAs that are working in seniors' facilities for that. They're there because they love seniors.

When you ask about the ratios, one must ask the question: well, do they understand the ratios? Do they think 121 to 1 is a good ratio? Is 89 to 1 a good ratio? I think people have to understand that it's about the level of care that you're providing at that particular time.

My friend from Edmonton-Centre, who I have a great deal of respect for for her debating ability, talks about the flu and about seniors not having the ability to get out of bed if they're suffering from throwing up or, for that matter, diarrhea and the LPN or the NA at that particular time having to take on the responsibility of not only trying to take care of seniors who are all suffering from the flu – I mean, I've been in the seniors' facilities enough times. When you walk in the door, you see the big sign that says that because of the flu they don't want anybody to visit, et cetera. They're just trying to cope at that particular time. Does the staff ratio change? No.

What bothers me more than anything is why the government is so reluctant to provide the numbers. To me, that sends a signal to all Albertans that this is not good news. You know, I look back over the last year . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Written Question 9 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Nonrenewable Resource Royalty Revenues

Q10. Mr. Hale asked that the following question be accepted.

For the fiscal year 2012-2013, how many oil and gas operations paying reduced royalties will reach their payout stage, and what effect will that have on nonrenewable resource revenue?

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason I ask this question – and I have strong suspicion there is going to be an amendment to it shortly. The hon. Energy minister and I discussed this question before. I do think that the gas and oil revenues are important. I do believe that, you know, there are many projects that will be coming to the end of their reduced rate. I guess I'll ask this question a little later.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
I recognize the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, I'd like to thank the Member for Strathmore-Brooks for his written question. He has asked how many "oil and gas operations" will reach payout in the 2012-13 fiscal year. Upon reviewing the question, I would ask that it be amended to the following: "For the fiscal year 2012-2013, how many oil sands producers paying reduced royalties will reach their payout stage, and what effect will that have on nonrenewable resource revenue?"

The original question could appear to confuse the conventional oil and gas royalty regime with the oil sands royalty regime, which are two quite different structures. The conventional oil and gas royalty regime is based on a sliding scale formula that adjusts according to price and, of course, well productivity. There's no concept of project payout in that particular regime, so the question wouldn't actually apply to conventional oil and gas regimes. However, the oil sands royalty regime does include a project payout concept in structure. The royalty kicks into a higher level after payout is completed, so that actually applies more directly, more correctly in this respect.

If there are other questions around that, of course, I'm always happy to talk to the hon. member about it. If he has other questions, I'm happy to discuss them with him.

I thereby move the amendment to Written Question 10. I move that Written Question 10 be amended by striking out "oil and gas operations" and substituting "oil sands producers."

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. minister has moved an amendment to the written question.

Speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to accept this question as amended. As the hon. Energy minister said, I will be asking him other questions with regard to conventional oil and gas.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 10 as amended carried]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Property Rights

505. Mr. Strankman moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to ensure that all Albertans have an inalienable right to full, fair, and timely compensation with recourse to the courts when a new government initiative negatively impacts the value of their property.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know it's a long ways out there, but thank you for remembering.

It's an honour to stand before this Assembly and speak on the issue that has always been close to my activist's heart. It's property rights. Property rights have been built into our laws for the past 800 years, since the Magna Carta. They guarantee every citizen the right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness without the interference of government. There is nothing that is more important when we talk about good government than preserving this right. It is a cornerstone of a prosperous society and a fully functioning democracy.

The Alberta Bill of Rights was created by the legendary Premier Lougheed to restrain the government's power and to defend individual freedoms. As we have seen with bills 19, 24, 36, and 50 and most recently with Bill 2, the rights enshrined in the Alberta Bill of Rights are not the ones the government feels that they must respect. This is a disappointment to me and a failure to Albertans on the part of this PC government.

The original Alberta Bill of Rights listed six fundamental human rights. The first was the protection of property rights. Let us not forget that Premier Peter Lougheed put the protection of property rights ahead of religion, speech, assembly and association, and press. The government has chosen to ignore the original intent of this bill, and thus it is necessary, I believe, to strengthen it. That is what my motion proposes to do.

Currently the bill recognizes "enjoyment of property." While I have heard from Albertans that they respect the original intent of the bill, it is evident to them that due to the government's blatant disregard of property rights, the word "enjoyment" is not strong enough. Mr. Speaker, according to Wikipedia property is any physical or intangible entity that is owned by a person or jointly by a group of people or a legal entity like a corporation. Depending on the nature of the property, an owner of property has the right to consume, sell, rent, mortgage, transfer, exchange or destroy it, or to exclude others from doing these [same] things.

Replacing "enjoyment" with the "inalienable right to full, fair, and timely compensation with recourse to the courts when a new government initiative negatively impacts the value of their property” will affirm that the right to property is respected by this Legislature. It will also protect future generations from governments that believe they have the right to disregard hard-working Albertans’ property rights, whether they are urban or rural. I have a personal affection for property rights since I was one of the 13 farmers who were arrested for what I would call un-joyment, not being allowed to sell my property, my wheat, at a fair and marketable price.

Finally, property rights played a major role in encouraging me to run for the Wildrose Party in 2012. As a landowner, farmer, and rancher I knew the ultimate destructiveness that could come from a government who longer respected property rights and believed that they had an inalienable right to push through legislation like bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. I also know that the government’s blatant disrespect for property rights led to the election of 17 Wildrose members on this side of the Assembly.

I ask everyone in the Legislature to support this motion. To those in government: if they never meant to threaten the property rights of Albertans, then they should prove it by supporting this motion. If they don’t, they are showing their true colours. They are showing that they put the grand plans of the PC government ahead of rights and fairness to all individuals and Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Drumheller-Stettler for bringing this forward. Indeed, with his background dealing with the Canadian Wheat Board and how the Liberal government used to treat our farmers here and his specific issues, I really think that this is not a man who is just any Joe Albertan. This is a man who actually has dealt with property rights on his own, and I want to say thank you to him for bringing this forward.

Now, Mr. Speaker, although I may appreciate where he’s coming from, I think the endgame, what I personally would like to see, may be a little bit different. I wanted to talk a bit about how our government continues to respect property rights and how it continues to expand the role of places like the Property Rights Advocate.

Before I do that, I want to mention first off the Expropriation Act, which has been here since – I don’t know the exact year but much longer than I’ve been a member. I was elected in ’08. The Expropriation Act governs expropriation of land in Alberta. It guarantees compensation for expropriated land. And guess what? It should. It also provides for due process, including notice to an affected landowner, the ability to object to the “necessity” or “reasonableness” – and I use the last two words in quotation marks – of the expropriation and to obtain a hearing before an inquiry officer, and the determination of compensation by the Surface Rights Board or the Land Compensation Board when the owner and the expropriating authority cannot agree. As with any body, Mr. Speaker, again, these are reviewable in the Court of Queen’s Bench in Alberta on the grounds of a denial of natural justice if that, in fact, is the case.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans expect their government to show leadership in planning for the future, keeping in mind long-term outcomes and not just political expediency for the day. That is what our government is doing. We have thoroughly debated in this Legislature over the past year numerous bills that allow for effective land-use planning where at the same time we’re strengthening property rights. In fact, members from the opposition have praised some of our legislation. I’ll say a quote again:

At first glance much of this legislation may be interpreted as a regression on property rights, but it would be a very large mistake to think so as this bill, in my view, does the exact opposite. It strengthens landowner rights.

I would agree with that suggestion even though I believe the member who indicated that has indicated that he changed his mind. Now, as a lawyer of over 12 years, I’m sure that the member at the time read and analyzed the legislation and came to the conclusion that, in fact, the legislation strengthened landowner rights.

I would also like to talk about one initiative within the Ministry of Justice that I believe illustrates this government’s commitment to property rights, and that is, of course, Alberta’s new Property Rights Advocate, located not in Edmonton, not in Calgary but in Lethbridge, who has received bipartisan support from this Legislature.

As I have discussed, Alberta has numerous legislation, be it the Appropriation Act, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act . . .

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order noted. Go ahead, Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) obviously we don’t want to say something in here that is going to incite any disorder. So far this side of the House in no way, shape, or form has ever endorsed the straw-man Property Rights Advocate or whatever you call it, the property rights grief counsellor. We certainly as an opposition do not support that waste of taxpayers’ money. Frankly, the person that was appointed there is a PC partisan, and we do not support that as a caucus. There may be one or two members that have expressed some friendliness towards that individual, but certainly as a caucus we do not support it, so it does not have bipartisan support. We want to make that clear on the record.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Maybe, hon. Deputy Government House Leader, a clarification might be in order?

Mr. Denis: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Denis: My exact verbiage, Mr. Speaker, was that I said: “bipartisan support.” At no time did I suggest this particular member or any member of his caucus. I also would refer you, respectfully, to when the Property Rights Advocate Act was passed. My recollection is that it was not totally drawn across partisan lines; rather, there were members of the opposition. Again, I did not mention this member or any other member in my comments.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

For clarification, this party was not singled out. Hon. Member for Airdrie, are you satisfied with that?

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely satisfied.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you very much.

We would continue with your speech, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I welcome the ruling that there was no point of order.

Debate Continued

Mr. Denis: I wanted to mention that this is why one of the key functions of the Property Rights Advocate is to provide this information about the Property Rights Advocate to the public. Mr. Speaker, this includes, without limitation, providing information to landowners about their right to compensation during expropriations and other property rights impairments for which compensation is payable.

Although I have mentioned that the Property Rights Advocate is in fact located in Lethbridge, it's not designed just to appeal to rural Albertans. I have heard from many urban Albertans who have issues with their particular local city or municipality trying to expropriate their own property. This Property Rights Advocate shall be there for them as well.

It also will provide information on new legislation. It also will identify dispute resolution mechanisms for landowners, and it will help landowners navigate the expropriation process. Again, Mr. Speaker, nothing wrong with lawyers. Far be it from me if people want to pay legal fees, but at the same point in time I don't believe that people should have to go and hire a lawyer to get information about a complex and important issue. That is why under the leadership of this Premier our government is moving in this direction.

A second key function of the advocate is to hear complaints from affected landowners and prepare a report on any findings and recommendations that result from that complaint. This report will then be provided to the landowner, the appropriate board, and any other third party the advocate deems necessary.

Third, the advocate is required to provide an annual report to you, Mr. Speaker, not to me, as the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly. This report will outline the activities of the Property Rights Advocate office during the year as well as make recommendations on property rights issues. [interjections] I will continue with my speech and ignore the jeers and catcalls opposite.

Mr. Speaker, as I have outlined, first, how this government protects Alberta's property rights through legislation and, second, outlined how we have an advocate to advocate for Albertans' property rights on their own behalf, this is why I oppose this member's motion, made by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, to amend the Alberta Bill of Rights given what our government is already doing in this area. We already have strong property rights protections in this province, and Albertans can rest assured that under this government we always will have strong property rights protections.

Finally, I just would like to mention one other thing. The Member for Drumheller-Stettler had talked about life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. These are obviously noble goals, but they are nowhere in our Constitution. Rather, our Constitution in this country talks about peace, order, and good government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others to speak to the motion? I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Here we go. That is correct, Mr. Speaker. I will guarantee you we will go to the carpet on this one.

Property rights are something that I'm quite familiar with, and I'm also quite familiar with the issue that this government does not respect property rights, has never respected property rights.

Mrs. Leskiw: Oh, get off it.

Mr. Anglin: I'm on it. I'm on it, good member. This member here from Cold Lake . . .

Mrs. Leskiw: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Anglin: . . . from Bonnyville-Cold Lake had a chance to come out and debate me on property rights and failed to show up if I remember correctly.

Now, this issue dealing with property rights is a significant issue, and it goes beyond land. It deals also with business property rights. It deals with intellectual property rights. Those are also property rights.

I'm going to bring up an example. There was a business right here in Edmonton that was developing a piece of land, and the hon. Minister of ESRD might remember this gentleman. She met with him. His business was developing a piece of land on the south side of Edmonton, one whole quarter section, a $30 million investment, and this is significant. It was an oilfield service company, and all they needed to do as part of this development was take an old dugout probably created in 1960. It was dry. I'll stand corrected if any member wants to correct me, but I believe it was called the Stewart and Kantrud, however you pronounce it, methodology on the reclamation of wetlands, where it's nothing more than an environmental study that actually declares what level of wetlands are being reclaimed and then there is a donation or a fee that goes to somebody like Ducks Unlimited to reclaim that section of wetland. In this case, it was a dry dugout.

Now, this business was fully aware of this. They had lawyers working on their development, and then they had their environmental engineering firm work up the study, everything according to the practices that this province has had in place for quite a long time. Unbeknown to them, unbeknown to his environmental engineering firm, unbeknown to his law firm that worked on his behalf, ESRD showed up and said: oh, by the way, the $3,000 that you were going to donate to Ducks Unlimited is actually $3 million, and that old system does not apply.

Now, where is that business's rights in dealing with this issue? This was significant, and they were up in arms. I believe the minister may have had to settle this, but I will tell you something. There was nothing in law to protect this developer, nothing at all. ESRD, this government, owns that wetland. Private businesses, private owners pay taxes on that. We had a system in place, and without telling anyone, now all of a sudden the first business along was notified that the system has changed. Yet the businesses behind them were never notified, and they were still going by the old system.

Now, without some sort of recourse it makes it very difficult to conduct business, and it makes it very difficult to actually go about doing your business. I believe that's the whole reason behind our single regulator, that we would streamline regulation, make it more efficient so that there would not be excess delays. This was one prime example where a business was affected by this. I don't know exactly how they resolved it, but I do know this. If they were not going to be able to resolve it, they were willing to break the law and let the government sue them and deal with the issue then in court on how this was to be resolved. All that business was looking for was to be treated fairly, fairly and justly, something that this government, this party refuses to put into law and has rejected in the past. Here we are dealing with some very basic issues.

To the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: to say that the Expropriation Act applies is an interesting observation because if you look under the Land Assembly Project Area Act when it was first drafted, the Expropriation Act in particular was excluded. The law said initially that the Expropriation Act would not apply, and we had to fight, not here inside this Chamber but outside in rural communities before that party, that government would amend it. But when you amended it, you didn't say that the Expropriation Act will apply or shall apply. What it did was that it went silent on the matter. It went silent. If you read the act the way it is currently amended today, this government still has the ability to circumvent the act. That was one of the biggest problems and still exists to be one of the biggest problems with that act.

We've had in place for quite a long period of time an Expropriation Act that was similar to or even better than in other jurisdictions. All jurisdictions have this methodology, have statutes in place so they can expropriate property in the public interest. I'm going to talk about the public interest here in a second and for a long time if I could. The Expropriation Act works. It did work. It has worked, yet this government actually tried to prohibit the Expropriation Act under the Land Assembly Project Area Act. So now what it has done is that under that act, if you look at section 3(1), it says that the minister may make regulation concerning any type of use over any kind of matter, and if you leave anything else out, it just basically makes sure it circumvents the whole process on any other issue dealing with that property.

Now, I for one am in favour of utility corridors. I think they're a good idea. It's how you do it that makes it a bad thing. You have to do it right. People need a mechanism so that their property interests are protected. There aren't very many property owners out there that do not understand that we have to sell land or give up land for things like roads, for pipelines, for transmission lines. That's never been the issue. The issue has always been: are they going to be treated fairly and justly? That's always been the argument. That's always been the fight. It's not just about compensation. It's about respect, it's about dignity, and it's about justice. That's been the problem, yet this party in power has not figured that part out, and it has caused more problems than it's been worth. You're looking at one of them. We caused one of those problems. How did the government react? Well, they tapped my phones.

I will tell you this. The whole issue of embedding these property rights into something like the Bill of Rights does now give us some sort of protection when these other pieces of legislation come along.

Now, I want to talk about section 19, actually, of what we referred to as the land stewardship act. When that act was written, the former agricultural minister actually said that that section enhanced people's rights to compensation, which is a very odd statement because that section at that time basically stated that no person has a right to compensation by reason of this act or any regulation made thereunder. End of story. So why did the government write that in there? Well, I presume – and maybe I shouldn't presume. I never took it that they weren't going to compensate property owners, but I took it that they wanted to make sure the property owner didn't have any rights to compensation or any recourse.

I always felt that the MLAs and cabinet ministers who were selling the bill fully believed that they would compensate property owners, but the act itself said that nobody had any rights to compensation. That section was changed, and now what it says is, quite simply, that you as a property owner have a right to compensation by reason of this act and any regulation made thereunder. That's a good thing except for one problem. There are no rights to compensation under that act. Giving them a right to compensation within the act, but then the act is hollow or silent, doesn't really achieve a thing.

So what we've done is actually take something that was quite blatant and draconian, in my view, and just went silent on the matter. The way the law currently reads is that there is really no right to compensation. If you check under section 19.1 of the act, what it states there is, when you get down all the way to subsection (9), that nobody has a right to compensation by this section. It's quite interesting to go full circle around that bill.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak in opposition to this motion. I'll outline my position. I do not doubt for a second that property rights need to be protected, and I believe everyone in the House would agree with that. I believe that the current government went about it all wrong when they introduced Bill 36, Bill 50, Bill 19, Bill 24. The issues that I have are several. Property rights are already enshrined within the Alberta Bill of Rights. Alberta does have a patchwork of legislation that deals with compensation, and it's fair to say that we need to ensure that legislation is full, fair, and timely and that there is recourse to the courts when the process is not followed to a T, to the letter of the law.

The Alberta NDP opposition were generally supportive of the idea that there needs to be fair compensation when land is expropriated, but the idea of value in this motion is too radical for us. Even when you compare property legislation to the United States, this piece of legislation, or this motion, is far more radical than what exists in the United States. There are possible unintended consequences, and that's what draws my concern and the concern of my colleagues.

When we look at the terms "value" and "property," we don't have sufficient definitions in our court system, according to our legal advice, on those two different terms. So there might be unintended consequences, where individuals or corporations benefit from compensation for value that would otherwise have been created either in the future or in lost opportunity.

The definition of property: I mean, that is one problem. What would apply to this definition? I'll give you some examples. We can all imagine a field of wheat. What about the lost revenues in the future for wheat that was never grown? What about intangible properties such as proprietary information in the seed used to grow the wheat or the brand recognition that might be used by the farmer in the farmers' market or in sales of wheat now allowed with the abolishment of the Wheat Board?

In some legal circles the idea of new property has been popular. This can include government pensions, disability benefits, marriage and separation benefits, labour laws, et cetera. What would be the ramifications of these if they were ever recognized in Alberta's jurisprudence as property under this motion? Interestingly, would people on AISH be able to sue the government if benefits were ever decreased, even indirectly?

Property might someday be defined as income or rents. Labour legislation such as minimum wage standards might sometimes affect the bottom line of corporations. These regulations can hurt the bottom line of corporations. Would companies then be able to sue governments for lost income if they start to change our labour codes?

Moving to the definition of value, one of the biggest grey areas pertains to value itself. Nowhere in North American law is value protected as a right. The only thing that's protected is the right to use land or property. Even in America, where private property and the right to fair compensation have been enshrined in their constitution, there is no reference to value. In the U.S. one must show, essentially, a total loss of any economic value in order to give rise to compensation. Without going into details, some public thinkers have pointed to the chilling effect on decision-making that these laws have had. Think about trying to implement environmental legislation, for example. We should certainly study what effect it has had in the U.S. and how that would inform the Alberta debate.

Let's consider how it would be inherently very difficult to determine value in a couple of different scenarios. One example is the power line debate. While we sympathize with those indirectly affected such as farmers where the power lines run near but not on their property, it would require a significant amount of effort to determine what the negative value of those lines would be to the indirectly affected farmer. What would be the trigger for compensation? Would there be a minimum amount? Conceivably, people would have a right even if the amount was one penny.

The idea of value might also be applied to opportunity cost. Imagine that a landowner is about to receive a windfall of profit when the government decides to allow a nuclear power plant on his land. Then at the eleventh hour the government decides that it was following the wrong course and cancels the project. Should the government then be on the hook to pay the landowner for his lost revenues that would have been there if a nuclear plant was built?

The idea of changes to value also implies causation. Proving causation has proved to be very difficult in the past, for one thing, and it would involve serious legal costs if it always had to be determined in court. Some people might not be able to afford this, then limiting the access to justice. If causation was left to the courts, it would cost the province a lot of money in judges. As well, the amount of litigation that would come from this would be overwhelming. So there should be more clarity on the issue of what value is as well as other issues such as the definition of property before allowing the courts to be flooded.

Looking at this principle and how it applies to corporations because they're essentially treated as individuals under our laws, we must also consider their angle. There are a multitude of ways the government might impact the value of land or property owned by corporations with regulatory decisions. For example, under this motion it's conceivable that heavy industries might be able to sue the government when they implement higher air emission standards since a government initiative negatively impacted the value of their property. New mine reclamation rules might also decrease the amount of money a corporation can make off the land, thereby reducing its value.

What about the impact of Crown corporations who may at some point find themselves in direct competition with a private firm providing the same service? Would this also fall under government initiative? Is this the intent of the motion, really, to support corporations?

What impact would it have on other forms of government, namely municipalities? Back in the '80s the Alberta government was opposed to adding property rights to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms because they were afraid it would create a standard set of rules around land use for the whole country. They did not want to lose their ability to develop their own land-use laws. This motion would likely be vehemently opposed by municipalities for the same reason.

Municipalities often make zoning changes that impact the value of property in any given area. Sometimes it increases the value; sometimes it decreases it. Would municipalities, then, be on the hook to compensate landowners or businesses affected? What if a municipality decided they want to tackle urban sprawl and rezoned land that had already been purchased by a developer? Should municipalities be on the hook to pay for the costs associated with real estate speculation? What about if someone feels that a new bus station has negatively impacted their property value? What if they have a home business that was affected in a positive or negative way?

This motion would have a chilling effect on the ability of any government to undertake initiatives in the public interest that might affect the value of a private interest. While we should not burden individuals unfairly with the costs of implementing the public interest, governments must be allowed flexibility to deal with public policy issues. In order to pass the test of fairness under the law, there would need to be a uniform system developed to deal with any and all kinds of scenarios that municipalities might face. This uniformity might take away from creative initiatives to deal with the issues of compensation when the public good is involved. In my short time I haven't even begun to touch on how this might impact aboriginal communities and aboriginal titles.

It is, therefore, my position and the position of the Alberta NDP opposition that although it may be a laudable goal to ensure fair and timely compensation, there are many problems with this motion, and it could have a number of unintended consequences. It would be prudent to have a significant amount of legal, social, and economic study of this type of motion before it should ever be considered by this House.

Therefore, I stand in opposition to this motion and ask for more research to be done on protecting landowners' rights without resorting to such radical proposals as this one.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next two speakers, the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, followed by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really a pleasure to rise today and talk about Motion 505. Certainly, myself as minister and our ministry do not support this motion. We don't support it for the following reasons. This government is well aware that property rights are an important issue for many Albertans, and we have taken every step to protect those rights.

As you know and many in this House know, we spent a lot of time, myself personally and other members of cabinet and other government MLAs, travelling across the province and talking to property owners about their rights. The things that we heard in all of the communities across the province when we chatted were things that were important to them. Property owners knew that we needed to plan this province not just for today but for future generations. They know that it's important that our kids and our grandkids will have land that's set aside for economic development, for recreation, for important heritage, and for important wildlife species. They want all of that. But with that, they also wanted to make sure that if their land was taken for the greater good, they would be fairly compensated, that they would have consultation about that, and that they would have access to the courts.

Indeed, the other part that they brought up to me many times and, I know, to our colleagues that travelled along with me: they wanted someone there to help them. Many of these landowners had only dealt with an industry company or the government once or twice in their lifetime, and they didn't feel they had the information that they needed to make the decisions. So they asked for some help. To respond to that, not only did we do that, but we made sure in our legislation that compensation, consultation, and access to the courts are there. Indeed, we put in a Property Rights Advocate, someone that will be there for the landowners to make sure, first of all in the education portion, that they can educate them on what their rights are, and second, when they have individual questions, they can go to the Property Rights Advocate.

I can tell you from travelling the province, over 20 different communities over a couple of months, that in every community people wanted to make sure fundamentally that those were in place for them. They understand the greater good. They also understand long-term land-use planning. That's why the Land Stewardship Act provides Albertans with fair, full, and timely compensation to the courts. The intent of the act has always been to protect individual property rights, and we made that purpose even more explicit when we introduced amendments to the act in 2011.

The purpose of these amendments was to clearly establish that the government will always – always – respect the individual property rights of citizens, that government will never limit any existing right to compensation for land, and that government will respect all existing provisions for land-use decisions. These amendments also give property owners more options if their land is required for public use, and they ensure that landowners will receive applicable compensation when their land is designated as part of a project. Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. The safeguards are already in place. They already exist. The legislation is in place.

The desire to listen and to respond to public concerns on this matter is something that this government does and is concerned to do. That's why the Premier established the Property Rights Task Force in November 2011 and the minister recently announced that person in the position, with the office being opened.

We heard from more than 1,400 Albertans across the province. We acted quickly on the recommendations of that task force when we received them. Albertans told us they wanted government to establish an independent Property Rights Advocate, and that's exactly what we have done. Alberta's first Property Rights Advocate was named in December 2012, and his office in Lethbridge is now operational. On the advice of the task force we have also committed to reviewing relevant provisions of the Expropriation Act and the Surface Rights Act as well as the compensation guidelines applied by the Surface Rights Board and the Land Compensation Board.

In short, this government's existing legislation already provides property rights guarantees, and we are committed to responding quickly and decisively to remaining public concerns that arise on this topic. This motion, therefore, is unnecessary, and we do not support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would first like to commend the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler for bringing forth this motion. I wholeheartedly support it, and I feel it should be resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to ensure that all Albertans have an inalienable right to full, fair, and timely compensation with recourse to the courts when a new government initiative negatively impacts the value of their property.

A number of reasons for this. First of all, in my opinion, a strong economy, strong individual rights, and the foundation of our wealth start with three things: property rights, where a government knows its limits, where the line is drawn between an individual's rights and responsibilities and the government's, and individuals have the opportunity to grow wealth for their families, themselves, and their communities; secondly, stable electric costs – and we know where Bill 50 is taking us in this province with that – and competitive taxation and regulation. We have seen Manitoba and other western provinces reduce their corporate tax lower than ours, and we know that the CFIB continually gives Alberta a failing grade on removing regulation.

Property rights is an area that Alberta can excel in and Alberta can take the leadership in for the benefit of our wealth and the benefit of our individuals. Canada lacks a legal framework that compels government to provide restitution when it infringes on individual property rights in the pursuit of the public good. Again, Alberta can become a national leader in this area. Alberta's Bill of Rights was a good idea, but it didn't go far enough. The clause that protects property rights is followed by this phrase: "and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law." We know what due process of law is: Bill 36, Bill 19, Bill 24, Bill 50, and Bill 2.

I represent Cypress-Medicine Hat. As I've indicated before and as most of you are maybe aware, it's about the south 25 per cent of Medicine Hat and the town of Redcliff, where about 65 or 70 per cent of the voters and constituents live. The other 35 per cent of the residents are in two counties, Cypress county and Forty Mile county, making my constituency approximately 60 miles by 80 miles.

Ms Calahasen: That's nothing.

Mr. Barnes: That's nothing. I've heard that.

Well, speaking of that's nothing, Bill 36, the regional advisory committee plan, has come out in our area with some preamble, and in Cypress county my guess is that some 30 or 35 per cent of it – 30 or 35 per cent – is designated as potential conservation areas. Some 10 or 15 per cent of Forty Mile county has been designated in brown as potential conservation areas.

When we read the preamble that was provided in the stuff that is apparently quite far from regulations, it says something like potential conservation areas will be voluntary on deeded land and may be enforced on leased land. It seems like not too big a deal except when you realize that the vast, vast majority of ranchers and farmers in these two counties own a combination of leased land and deeded land. Sometimes these ranches have been in their family for six generations. Amazingly, some of those parcels of land, that these people have had good stewardship of, paid a tremendous amount of taxes on, and raised wonderful Albertans on, I'm told have never ever been patented, never ever been deeded for whatever reason. So now we're looking at a situation: property rights reduced, impacted by what these bills are doing.

What's the difference, you say? I know a rancher in the special areas who wants to move on, wants to sell his land. He's had it on the market for about a year. He has told me that his deeded land has attracted strong offers, but he's having tremendous trouble getting what used to be fair value on his leased land. He's farmed it for years and years. He paid money for it. It's been a mixed bag how the government on the other side of this floor has treated all these lease owners.

It's also interesting to me that three time – three times – in my campaign and once after, when town hall meetings were called to discuss these things, you get some 200 pickups in the parking lot, people wanting to protect their property rights, strong Albertans, people who love Albertans, people that have built Alberta, people that want their property rights protected.

How does all of this matter? I have a copy of the Financial Post here, and I'd like to read a headline from about three months ago. Walmart Canada is taking 39 of the leases on which Target Canada bought on option to take over from Zellers – so we're talking leases – in a $1.8 billion deal. So Walmart is buying from Target, which bought from Zellers, a transaction of $1.8 billion. My goodness, what tremendous wealth for Albertans. What tremendous wealth for Canadians. What an opportunity for society to tax some of this wealth to build education, health care, the programs that we need, not the type of thing that I would want to see destroyed.

I will close with, again, my support for this motion, my support of individual property rights. I would ask others to do the same.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 505 brought forward by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. On a subject that the opposition purports to be passionate about, it saddens me to see so many empty seats across the aisle.

Motion 505 urges the Alberta government to further entrench property rights in the Alberta Bill of Rights. As we well know, this bill is a fundamental piece of legislation that serves to protect the basic rights of Albertans. The bill is formed on the principle that everyone has the right to life, liberty, and security of the person and enjoyment of property and that no private property shall be taken for public without going through legal proceedings.

Section 1 of the bill states:

It is hereby recognized and declared that in Alberta there exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely:

- (a) the right of the individual to liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law;
- (b) the right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law;
- (c) freedom of religion.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who brought forward this motion is proposing we add the following under section 1 of the Alberta human rights bill for greater certainty: the right to enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law under this act shall be construed such that where a law of Alberta authorizes the Crown to acquire property owned by a person other than the Crown, that person is entitled to "full, fair, and timely compensation [and right of] recourse to the courts" to determine the compensation payable. The addition of this clause to the Alberta human rights bill would be redundant. It is stated in the aforementioned quote from the Bill of Rights that an individual has the right to property and the enjoyment of that property. It is only through the due process of law that a person may be deprived of that property.

Mr. Speaker, the bill already ensures property rights are legally protected. With that, any seizures of property need to have legal cause and are subject to legal recourse. There would be no benefit because the bill already protects property rights. There is no point in adding that clause simply to reiterate something which is already there.

Today I'm standing against Motion 505 because it doesn't improve the Alberta Bill of Rights. If anything, it detracts from it. I encourage my fellow members to do the same. I am proud to point out that Alberta leads Canada in the protection of property rights and that no other jurisdiction safeguards those rights like this province does. For the reasons I have articulated, I will not be supporting this motion, and I encourage my fellow members to do likewise.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks on Motion 505. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good afternoon, everyone. I would be remiss if I didn't speak a little bit on this particular topic, I would suggest. I'd just like to thank the minister for getting up and speaking the words that she did, making us aware that she was well aware of the issue. I have no doubt of that. Over the past couple of years, since I've been involved with this situation, I've attended many of the meetings that she made mention of, and I've seen with my own eyes how powerful this has been, how many hours were spent by a lot of people travelling all over Alberta to ensure that they were not only informed on what was happening but that they had their voices heard. I assure you that at most of the meetings, including the most famous one at Eckville, a lot of voices were definitely heard.

You know, we have to look back, I think, and look at the situation over those past few years and realize that an awful lot of work and time was put in both by the people of this wonderful province and also by the people involved in legislation. I often think that there's got to be a reason why this occurred. It seems to me the basic reason is that we don't have property rights enshrined in any of our basic laws. Unlike the United States and most European countries where they are constitutionally protected, that's not the case here. I've had volumes of information sent to me from as far away as Australia, where they're debating these very same issues. One has to wonder why we can't do something to remedy this situation.

I speak in support of this legislation that is being proposed by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, to my right. I think that we have to keep in mind that these things underpin economic rights, and they're kind of critical to the foundation of our democracies. We have an awful lot of things that we could entrench, I suspect, in the Alberta Bill of Rights, but this has got to be a very, very crucial one. Just look back and think: would we have had to spend all these weeks and months and perhaps two years of debating and arguing over this very fundamental thing if we'd had that in the Bill of Rights?

I leave you with that final point. That's my key point for my submission. I thank you for the time this evening.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to speak today on Motion 505, brought forward by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. The stated purpose of Motion 505 is to entrench property rights in the Alberta Bill of Rights. This motion stems from a principle that everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person, enjoyment of property and that no private property should be taken for public use without full and fair and timely compensation.

Mr. Speaker, this is by no means the first time a motion of this kind has been brought forward by the opposition. In fact, the proposal was previously introduced as a private member's bill by a former member and current adviser of the opposition. This attempt at legislation was previously defeated because the government already has in place protections necessary in the form of consultation, compensation, and court access. In addition, we have initiated ongoing consultations with landowners on the issue of property rights, and Albertans recognize that.

Mr. Speaker, during her bid for the leadership our Premier pledged to add consultation, an explicit compensation model, and access to the courts moving forward with land-use legislation, and on November 24 of last year the consultation process was initiated by the Property Rights Task Force. The hon. Minister of ESRD led this initiative, as she mentioned, which had the objective to talk with Albertans about the approach they would like to see taken to property rights in our province. The task force met directly with some 1,100 Albertans in 10 communities and heard from more than 300 others online, via e-mail, or over the phone. Additionally, they met with a number of stakeholder representatives in an effort to strengthen the individual property rights of landowners and ensure that all voices were heard.

In response to this consultation our government further enshrined our commitment to protecting property rights in law. Mr. Speaker, Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act, was passed last year, establishing the Property Rights Advocate, which has been mentioned several times. Bill 6 supports the government's position that landowners must have recourse to an independent tribunal, the courts, or both for the purpose of determining full and fair compensation for access to their land. Reporting to the Minister of Justice, who has also been up, the Property Rights Advocate's office shares independent and impartial information about property rights and helps individuals determine the appropriate resolution mechanism should a problem arise, including the courts.

Mr. Speaker, the advice of Albertans is invaluable to the future of this province, and that's why the information received by the task force has directly influenced policy development by this government. In May 2011 we passed the amendments to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act with Bill 10, and this bill was a response to Albertans' concerns about property rights and the pressures of growth. The amendments made a clear statement that government respects property and other rights of individuals. Throughout these consultations Albertans asked for an additional awareness of property rights. They asked for and received an active and ongoing consultation process. Further, Albertans also asked that they be consulted on plans to accommodate growth.

Out of concern expressed by Albertans specific to aged industrial infrastructure impacts on land, the government has committed to undertaking a comprehensive review of the requirements for industry to reclaim and remediate land and remove unused infrastructure. This process will also include examination of standards and guidelines which regulatory bodies use to apply those requirements. Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, this review and examination are a result of a successful consultation process with Albertans. This government has already committed to taking steps to engage even further with Albertans on property rights.

This motion simply reiterates past proposals and existing regulation and legislation. If you ask me, Mr. Speaker, this motion lacks the common sense that this member's party claims to advocate for. It's out of touch with the reality that people's property rights are well protected in this province and rightly so. The government has not only passed and amended legislation . . . [A timer sounded] Et cetera, et cetera.

I will not be supporting, obviously, Motion 505.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler to close debate on Motion 505.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's been an interesting last few minutes here in listening to the responses. I've got a list, and hopefully it'll be coherent as I proceed through it.

I enjoyed the quick and early response of the Member for Calgary-Acadia. You know, I've lived near the province of Saskatchewan, and I've seen these products of the social gospel throughout my lifetime. I've taken great interest in that, but sometimes their arguments aren't relevant. Now we've seen the response to the social gospel of Saskatchewan with a new government. It's quite enlightening, and I'm pleased and proud to actually be close to Saskatchewan for the first time in about 45 years.

I'd like to also speak to my friend from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, where he commented about the abolishment of the CWB. At a further occasion I'll have to advise him on the incorrectness of that statement because the CWB has not been abolished.

I'd also like to speak to Bill 2, that's been brought forward by the present government, wherein they talk about the public interest. Nowhere in that bill is public interest mentioned. This party tried to add that as an amendment, and we were succinctly and roundly voted down in our attempts to put that in there.

I'd like to continue on with the Member for Stony Plain, wherein he talked about the human rights bill. This isn't the subject of our discussion. The subject of our discussion is the Bill of Rights, so I think there is a miscommunication there going forward.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to say that I put the motion forward in a democratic fashion, and I'll stand to the vote of the House. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 12 Fiscal Management Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am extremely pleased today to rise and speak to the Fiscal Management Act. As part of the budget tabled on Thursday in this House, the Fiscal Management Act really is about putting the rules, the fences, and the milestones around what this government and governments in the future are going to be doing. It will replace the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act, but when I say “replace,” I don’t mean that we’re going to take out a lot of the rules that used to be in those. We’re combining the two and bringing out a Fiscal Management Act.

It does reflect extensive consultations that myself and the Associate Minister of Finance and the Premier and many of our colleagues did around the province last year. We had town halls. We had online surveys. We had a number of one-on-one meetings with financial experts in the province and outside of the province. We had a long discussion as it related to the budget preparation but also, Mr. Speaker, to the future of the province. How do you establish that? How do you ensure that we reach Albertans’ priorities?

There were a number of things that we heard loud and clear. One was: live within your means. There had to be some fences around how we operate into the future, and there had to be some clarity and transparency about what it was we spend on operating, separating it out, as I mentioned today in this House, the same way that we tell municipalities to separate it out, for some very good reasons. The very good reasons are that Albertans want to know what we’re spending on operating, and they want to know what we’re spending on capital, and they want to know how much money we’ve saved and where that’s going. The reflection of the extensive consultation indicated that savings is an important priority for Albertans.

There’s a fundamental difference between financing for operations and financing for capital. This Fiscal Management Act is going to provide a clear set of fiscal planning rules and the requirement – the requirement, Mr. Speaker – for an operating plan, a savings plan, and a fully funded capital plan in future budgets and in this one. It provides guidance for accountability requirements for the new fiscal planning approach and will outline the transparency of government reporting requirements.

Key aspects in the new act. We’re going to have savings through the nonrenewable resource revenues. We’re going to ensure that the heritage fund income is retained. We’re going to ensure that the contingency account or sustainability fund is replenished and the clarification and enhancements of quarterly reporting. Obviously, my intention here in moving second reading of the Fiscal Management Act is to ensure that all of these aspects come to the fore for this budget and for future budgets.

We’re going to maintain the 1 per cent spending rule that also was included in one of the other acts. We’re going to bring that forward into this. We’re also going to introduce a debt obligation limit, something that we have not had in the past and that we’re going to indicate and put into this budget. The province will reduce its reliance on nonrenewable resources for funding current expenditures because, Mr. Speaker, we’re going to ensure that we take the dollars off the top, and we’re going to take the debt servicing costs off the top.

There will be a renewed savings strategy which addresses both the inherent volatility of resource revenue and the eventual depletion of the nonrenewable resource revenues. Through this act the government is going to commit to saving in both good times and in challenging times. Every year a predetermined minimum percentage of nonrenewable resource revenue will be set aside for the purpose of saving before we even calculate what our operating revenue will be. In any given year as the nonrenewable resource revenue rises above those predetermined threshold levels, the percentage of the nonrenewable resource revenue that is saved will increase. Savings levels will be driven by the province’s revenue intake, not by the operating balance. In other words, savings will be taken off the top of revenue and will not be driven indirectly by expenditure.

Mr. Speaker, the sustainability fund, which currently under the changes in the act will become the contingency fund, is now going to serve as a pure fiscal stabilization fund solely for the purposes of addressing short-term revenue volatility, not for paying for capital and other things that it has been doing in the past. The government will commit to a plan which ensures the growth of Alberta’s long-term savings over time through retaining the Alberta heritage savings trust fund’s income within the fund, something Albertans have been asking for for some time. We’re going to make it law.

Where economic and financial circumstances warrant, the government will undertake borrowing for capital infrastructure within prescribed limits and with a clear plan of debt repayment. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we’ve presented that plan in the House already. The proposal has been through a number of consultative processes. It has been through a lot of discussion within the legislative review that we have here. There are no federal government implications.

We are in the process, obviously, of debating the budget, but this financial management act is really the keystone of how we’re going to move this province forward with a fiscal framework that is a once-in-a-generation opportunity for us to guide and set the posts for future Albertans. I’m very proud of this new act: the new debt limit, the savings as being an intentional act, the separating of the capital and operating plans to recognize the differences between operational and capital expenses.

I’m also very appreciative, Mr. Speaker, of the stakeholder consultation we did and now the stakeholder feedback that we’re getting on the act. I was going to cite the Alberta Chambers of Commerce as a big one. There are a lot of their recommendations in here around the fence posts around debt, around changing the name of the contingency account, around legislative savings, around making sure that we’re spending every dollar wisely, and around separating out the operating and the capital accounts so that we can have a very transparent look.

In fact, there’s more information provided under this format than what was previously provided. As future budgets start to stack up comparative to this one, all Albertans and all businesses and all financial management analysts will start to see why this is such an important aspect for the transparency and for the accountability of future governments.

Mr. Speaker, as in previous acts, balanced budgets are required by law. The definition of the balanced budget is very similar to what was in the previous acts. We've brought that forward, changed the name of the sustainability fund to the contingency account, and we've done a number of other things that meld these things together.

Included in the act as well are a number of consequential and related amendments that will be coming into force as well. There are a number of bills that are in the back piece of Bill 12 that are the consequential changes, the majority of those being simply because we've changed some of the names.

Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of very, very good things in this bill. I'm very, very proud to present it to this House. With that, having moved second reading, I would adjourn debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 11

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013

Mrs. McQueen: I'd like to move the act for second reading, please.

We had some questions the other evening with regard to this. I was not here the other afternoon, so I'd like to speak to those right now if I can. I'm going to go through the questions that were asked by the opposition parties, just go through those and answer as best I can.

The first question we had was: how does transfer from the government of Canada on disaster funding work in our funding model from ESRD? Municipal Affairs actually deals with disaster funding with the federal government. ESRD does not receive the federal funding, so that will be answered by Municipal Affairs.

Why is disaster relief funding a supplementary estimate and not a budgeted item? Wildfire and mountain pine beetle are managed as an emergency request. There is no way to determine the funding required for wildfires prior to a season. The funding model provides the department with a base budget to be prepared and standby but no funding to fight the wildfires. The mountain pine beetle overwinter survey is completed in the spring, and that is how we determine the beetle infestation. The department-based funding is available to determine what action is required before an emergency is declared and the required funding needed.

The $59.4 million: what caused this specific line item? Nineteen overland floods. Again, Municipal Affairs and the municipalities are responsible for this line item.

Why do ESRD and Municipal Affairs both have line items for wildfire? ESRD responds to wildfires in the green zones, the forested areas of the province. Municipal Affairs has the responsibility to deal with fires in municipalities.

Why don't we budget for mountain pine beetle? There is a department-based budget to analyze survey results and determine if an emergency should be declared. Subsequent work is completed utilizing emergency funding based on the extent of the infestation.

The breakdown of mountain pine beetles was another question: control, survey, and municipal grants and a forest rehabilitation plan. The budget is broken down by survey and control, $30 million, and $10 million for forest rehabilitation.

The survey and control $30 million is used to hire wage staff and aircraft contracting services and to provide grants to deliver the provincial mountain pine beetle action plan and management strategies, including population risk assessments to determine the overwintering success of the beetle and the risk of its spread this summer. We conduct detailed, helicopter-based surveys of the leading-edge zone to detect the location of red trees, some fixed-wing photography surveys to assess the impact of beetles outside the leading-edge zone, and some fixed-wing sketch mapping of other areas of the province.

We complete ground surveys and control of high-risk infested trees; acquire data for tree inventory and planning initiatives; complete placement of early warning baits in noninfested areas of the province to detect major in-flights from British Columbia or spread in Alberta; deploy repulsion baits to protect provincially listed, endangered whitebark and limber pine trees and genetically important sites and research plots; collect pine seed in key areas for forest renewal; implement initial forest renewal strategies in areas where there is significant mortality; communicate with Albertans about the mountain pine beetle program and government actions; provide grant funding for municipalities to conduct survey and control activities and replanting of trees that were killed by the mountain pine beetle; and invest in research to guide control activities and rehabilitation efforts.

The $10 million is for rehabilitation of stands that have been killed by the beetles in previous years north of Grande Prairie, near Peace River, and some areas around Slave Lake. It would include developing plans and options for forest renewal and reforestation activities for stands destroyed by mountain pine beetle, mechanically preparing stands identified for reforestation, purchasing seedlings for planting in the spring of 2013, and follow-up monitoring to ensure reforestation timelines and outcomes are being met.

For the question on the breakdown for $17 million of oil sands monitoring, there is approximately $16 million for monitoring work done by the federal government and approximately $1 million for biodiversity monitoring done beyond the base monitoring of ESRD. The $16 million will be paid to the federal government for the work that they have completed in 2012-13, and the $1 million will cover the costs incurred by ESRD. As we know, this program is cost neutral as the funding will be collected from industry to pay for monitoring in the oil sands area that has been part of the process to date.

The oil sands industry through the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, CAPP, has agreed to pay $50 million per year for three years to support the enhanced monitoring outlined in the joint plan. Industry expects this funding to replace the current system, where each year companies fund independent monitoring organizations such as WBEA and others directly to perform ambient environmental monitoring on their behalf in order to satisfy the conditions of their approvals. The intention is that company support for monitoring activities outlined in the joint plan will meet the requirements for ambient environmental effects monitoring outlined in the environmental approval conditions. Companies will still be required as a condition of their approval to continue monitoring their individual facilities.

Finally, a question about page 22, vote 8, lands, $12.6 million. What are the details around this? The net amount of $12.6 million is for a $13.5 million legal settlement, and a $900,000 department programs surplus offset the expenditure of this program line. The total $13.5 million surplus amount was found internally by not paying some contracts and grants in 2013 which we normally prepay.

Those were the questions that were there. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to them.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Glad to stand in second reading of Bill 11. I think the comments of myself and my caucus will be brief as we talked about this a lot in estimates. I'm grateful for the Minister of Environment and SRD and other ministers – I'm assuming the Education minister and others – who are here to answer the questions put to them that were not answered in the last go-around. It probably won't be the case for Enterprise and Advanced Education. But, certainly, for Education and Transportation and Municipal Affairs, hopefully, we can get those answers.

Again, I'd like to reiterate my comments on the supplementary supply act, that it is a mystery – and I wish the Finance minister would answer this question – as to why, when they were doing their results-based budgeting activity and they had said that they had found hundreds of millions of dollars in year-end savings, if that's the case, that they found these savings, they are back here asking for more money.

I mean, we know the revenue side has changed from their predictions over the first few months – we understand that – but why the expenses? That's a question that I think needs to be answered. If we have hundreds of millions of dollars in in-year savings . . .

Mr. Horner: Because legislation requires it.

Mr. Anderson: Even with hundreds of millions of dollars in savings you would still require it. Well, thank you for the answer to the question. I love answers to the questions. That's fantastic. Okay. So there is an answer to the question. I'm not quite clear where that is in the legislation that he's talking about, but I will talk with him after about it. He can point it out to me. I'm always open to learn, hon. member.

Again, what that doesn't change, though, is that – we did talk about this as well. I want to commend the hon. Finance minister. I did notice in his budget, if I'm not mistaken, that you did budget this year for emergencies about $200 million. This is a very, very good improvement in this process because we're always back here, every year, asking for more money for natural disasters. We know they're going to happen. You know, we don't hope they're going to happen, but we're 90 per cent sure they're going to happen every year. So it's good to have a little bit of money there set aside so that if they happen, when they happen, we have money that we can allocate. And if there's a surplus at the end of the year because a disaster didn't happen, that's fantastic. We can put that money towards . . .

Mr. Horner: Savings.

Mr. Anderson: . . . savings. Absolutely.

Debt repayment would be fantastic. That would like double the amount of the debt repayment they're planning for the next four years. It's fantastic. So there are all kinds of great things that they could do with that money.

I think that that is one very positive thing, that this may be the last time – maybe not the last time because there always could be that big once-in-a-hundred-year disaster that requires much more than $200 million to deal with. But we hopefully will not be back here on a year-to-year basis asking for more money for disasters . . .

Mr. Dorward: It depends on the disaster.

Mr. Anderson: . . . because we have started the process of budgeting, which is good. Right, hon. Member for Edmonton-

Gold Bar? Disasters aren't good. We don't want that. We don't want disasters.

With that, I think we can move forward and hopefully approve this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the member for explaining particularly with regard to the plan and strategy dealing with the pine beetle. I'm going to get right to that, without a doubt.

The question, though, really centred around the budgeting. Looking at the plan, looking at the strategy, talking to industry, no one's going to doubt that this is a serious problem. We have to stay on top of it. It requires consistent and stable funding. We know that. The question was: why is this not reflected? Rather than coming back for supplements, given certain parameters we should expect to spend so much. If there's an emergency, there's an emergency on top of that. The programs for actually dealing with the pine beetle, the plans and the strategy, are well laid out. It appeared that it was not budgeted properly, and it should be. That was really where the questioning was going. We can deal with that when it comes to estimates.

On the other side, dealing with issues like forest fires in particular, I understand there are other mechanisms for funding. The sad reality is that we've been underestimating it in our budget about a hundred million dollars a year consistently, year over year. Sadly, it's come in at that. We would love for it not to be true. I believe every member of this House would probably agree that if we spent zero on that because we didn't have any forest fires or natural disasters, that would be just great. The truth is that historically we know that this is what we spend, so we should plan on that in the budget accordingly. We know what the numbers should be, and if it comes under that, great. If it comes more than that, then we know we need to supplement the budget. Those are the two points that were basically raised.

To finish off, that's the question. We'll be talking about that come estimates, why we should be planning for that consistently and, basically, logically so we have a good handle on what we think we may or may not spend. Of course, as everyone knows, if the pine beetle infestation actually becomes more problematic, the risk for forest fires actually then becomes more problematic. The risk rises. These are things that we need to plan for and to budget for properly.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a question or comment for the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Hancock: I'll ask the hon. member a question or put it in the form of a comment. I wonder if the hon. member realizes that supplementary estimates are not simply about voting additional spending. The way the estimates are approved and the line-by-line votes that are done in the estimates: you actually have to get approval to spend money in a different place. We can go through a results-based budgeting process, we can go through a year of saving money in various spots, not spending all the money that was voted in one area, but that does not give licence to spend it in another area. You have to actually get approval of Treasury Board and come back in supplementary estimates in most circumstances to vote the money in a different area. So a savings process and a results-based budgeting process can go through and save monies, but it doesn't give you the authority just to move it to a higher priority area or a different area. I wonder if the hon. member was cognizant of that?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader. I recognize the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I am. That wasn't the question I was raising. The one I was raising was not so much the zero-based budgeting or results-based budgeting, as you call it. What I was raising the question about was the actual budgeting and the planning perspective. Historically you know what you're going to be spending money on, so to properly plan for it with the expectation – I'll give the member an example. If you come in every year and say, "We're going to start off at zero for fighting forest fires," well, that's admirable. But is that realistic knowing that we have a history and a trend of spending, you know, where we're going to be under a hundred million dollars, and that's been the trend for a five-year average? That was the point and the question I was raising.

Then it also went back to the pine beetle. The issue of the pine beetle being that there was government, there was private industry, and there were nonprofit agencies, lots of different stakeholders involved. The strategy, the plan is well laid out to some degree – we can talk about that at a different time – but to plan and budget for the defence of that is not something that, in my view, is unanticipated. So, yes, you can make the mistake, and an honourable mistake, which is that you didn't expect to have an infestation spread quickly because of weather – that is a possibility – but have some sort of a benchmark in a budgeting process to measure yourself against. So if you have a plan and a strategy in place for the pine beetle, and then you have that benchmark that this is how we're spending money to execute the plan, to execute the strategy, you can measure yourself accordingly.

By the way, if you have surpluses, then maybe you have to adjust the plan. Of course, if you have an infestation that grows, you have to come back and adjust your plan. You're going to need to provide more resources. I understand that. I was just looking at the history, the trend year over year, and wondering why at this point the budget didn't reflect the trend that was in place, that was happening historically over the five years. That was actually more accurate if you looked at the trend.

Thank you very much.

I'll recognize the hon. associate minister for PDD under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Oberle: Thank you. Just a quick question for the member. What you're actually measuring here is not your activity or the success of your activity but Mother Nature's activity through the summer, not just in forest fires but in pine beetle as well, what was their winter survival and those sorts of things. So I would point out that if you forecast zero, you have about the same chance of hitting that as you do if you forecast the average. I wonder if we could have the hon. member's solemn commitment that if we do forecast the average going forward, he'll never again question our estimates.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One can hope.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo to speak to second reading.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise in second reading of Bill 11. I actually appreciate the commentary that's going back and forth here. I've been here now for five years, and I think I'm starting to figure out what supplementary supply is. I know every year we go around the bend as to why we're not planning more for disasters and for pine beetle and the like. Although seemingly we've come to agreement that this question won't be asked again next year, I can pretty much guarantee that this question is going to be asked. So we'll go through it again and again. I'll hopefully remember for the next year, and maybe it'll stick that time. You know, who knows? One never knows.

We had an interesting chance here to go through our supplementary supply on I believe it was Wednesday afternoon. We had some discussion regarding some of the ministries. I know the Minister of Aboriginal Relations was here and conducted business on behalf of the government and the like.

Needless to say, I appreciate the minister of SRD giving me a little bit of background on what the money is being used for, in particular some of the agreements we've now entered into with the federal government in terms of, hopefully, developing a more realistic and a more relevant oil sands monitoring of emissions and the like. It sounds to me that we're actually making some, albeit maybe smaller than we'd like, progress on this file.

In my view, it has been one of the things that we may have let fall through the cracks. We were in such a hurry to develop the oil sands and to get that economic engine running that we may have forgotten to put the environmental protections in place, ensure that our monitoring systems were of world-class standards, and assure the world community that we were, in fact, doing our level best to not only do things environmentally friendly but to actually use scientific evidence and base our decisions on fact rather than just dogmas.

As everyone is aware, it's becoming increasingly challenging to be in the oil and gas business, not only for this province but for many other jurisdictions and, in fact, companies who play in this space. We have to establish a social licence to continue on in this business. And I don't think it gets easier from this point, Mr. Speaker. I think it will become increasingly more difficult to continue to do this. It will be in our best interest that we act on some of the concerns expressed not only by the environmental community but, in fact, by citizens of the world and citizens of this province, that we are doing things to the best of our ability. I appreciate that.

It sounds like we're moving away from the day when we thought – and I'll be blunt – naively so, that self-reporting, or companies monitoring themselves, was a good idea. Frankly, I always thought that seemed to be a little bit of a misguided notion. It appears now that the government has recognized this and is moving on the folly of that decision and moving towards something that can be monitored and effectively dealt with, so I appreciate hearing that from the minister.

I do also note that many of the expenditures in Bill 11, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013, are sometimes just necessary adjustments that need to happen on the government side of things to allow for some flexibility in the process. I note the Minister of Education is here. Many of these dollars are simply a flow through to reflect the fact that we've had increases in the number of students who are attending our various different schools throughout this province, and we have an obligation to fund these education systems with the per capita grant dollars that were agreed to in the previous budget. It's my understanding that the vast majority of expenses in the Education department were related to those numbers and an increased and growing youth in our education system, that some or much of that expense was made of.

We do have some Transportation capital expenses, some Municipal Affairs expenses, and the like that appear to be not necessarily new but needed to be topped up given our necessary agreements and the like.

Like I said at the beginning, I've now seemingly got a reasonable handle on the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, and I appreciate the Minister of ESRD giving her comments here tonight.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Acting Deputy Premier.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just call me Minister of Municipal Affairs.

I was not available previously to provide detailed information on our supplementary estimates as requested, so I wanted to provide just a couple of details now. Our total request is for $59,318,000. We have two offsetting amounts, almost identical amounts. We are also requesting $530,000 for some upgrades necessary at the Whispering Pines lodge in Grande Cache, which was an emergency situation, and we are returning $583,000, which was made available because the home warranty program that we had anticipated is coming into effect a little bit later. So they almost cancel each other out, for that final request of $59,318,000.

The remaining $59,371,000 we're seeking is from a series of disasters that took place across the province from flooding to forest fires. We had a press release, actually, about those. I'm happy to provide details at another time if anyone has particular questions about those disasters.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a clarification. I had requested 29(2)(a) on the member previous, Calgary-Buffalo.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceed. Seeing that I missed it, go ahead.

Mr. Anglin: Okay. Good enough. I just wanted to make that clear.

To the hon. member. You mentioned world-class environmental monitoring. Something that we often hear in the rhetoric of government is world-class this, world-class this. We're dealing with budgetary issues. I wonder if you would elaborate on how you would quantify and qualify a world-class monitoring system.

Mr. Hehr: Well, that's an interesting question given that I am neither a scientist, nor do I understand much of the engineering that goes on in producing our SAGD or our emissions program and the like. I guess what I would like to see is something where I hope that people who evaluated your systems in place, who looked at what you were doing and evaluated it, people with credibility and people with the background that I don't have, gave it a thumbs-up.

Up until this time, over the course of the last 10 years, what the Alberta government has done has not passed scrutiny of those people with the relative expertise in what would pass as world-class monitoring. In fact, this government has been royally panned on their performance to date when it comes to evaluating or at least getting a baseline of not only what is happening in our rivers and streams and lakes and such but as to what actual amounts of CO<sub>2</sub> emissions we're putting into the environment.

You were at the meeting of Public Accounts a couple of days ago, where the Auditor General specifically noted that the government has no idea how much CO<sub>2</sub> we're pumping into the atmosphere. When your Auditor General says that he has no confidence in your emissions program or that it has any air of reality, to me that's a concern. It seems to me that if your Auditor General is saying that, it backs up the fact of what many of the environmental community and others are saying. We often dismiss them as being, you know, just against development and against people having access to our products, but when your own Auditor General comes out in a report in Public Accounts and says that what we're doing is not credible and does not actively monitor emissions, I think that should give us cause for concern.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona under 29(2)(a) or to speak on second reading?

Ms Notley: On 29(2)(a) to the speaker after Calgary-Buffalo.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Proceed.

Ms Notley: Can I do that? Do you want me to blend it?

The Deputy Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Notley: I just was wondering if the Acting Deputy Premier would like to provide me with just a little bit more information about the in-year savings with respect to the $583,000 from the home warranty program. Where did that money come from? How was it delayed? What was it expected to go towards? When was it expected to go? Maybe just a little bit more detail about what the explanation was for that savings.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to. Our first anticipation of the Alberta home warranty introduction, which we then changed the name of, was for this spring. It was actually anticipated and hoped that it would come in in February, but we were delayed with some consultation and a few other things that went on. We don't anticipate the regulations that go along to complement the legislation. We're in consultations on those right now. We still anticipate that this fall will be when we actually get the program up and running, which means we haven't had to hire the staff that would be doing the registry of the warranties and the monitoring, which is where the savings have come from.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Other speakers to second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to participate in second reading of Bill 11, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013. I wasn't here during the estimates discussion, the supplementary supply. I do know that at the time there was not a small amount of frustration on the part of those who were participating in that some of the ministers were not available to answer some of the questions that were put to them at the time. That really, you know, calls into question the sort of degree of respect that the government has for the Legislature when they come to us asking for what is in essence, I believe, an extra half a billion dollars, which in the overall context of things, I guess, doesn't seem like much. But I think that to the regular Albertans out there who pay their taxes, the idea of an extra half a billion dollars is somewhat significant, so I appreciate that the Minister of Environment and SRD was here today to be able to answer some of the questions that were sort of put on the record in her absence and, as well, the Acting Deputy Premier.

Notwithstanding that, the difficulty is that with the estimates debate there's more of a back and forth, so you're able to sort of follow up on some of those questions. As much as some of the information provided by the two ministers who are with us today is helpful, it's not the same as being able to have access to that information from a knowledgeable, informed person and to follow up on questions if the answers are not entirely clear. That undermines the integrity of the debate and, indeed, of the debate that we're having right now, Mr. Speaker, because we don't really come to it as informed as the legislative process would suggest that we should be because of the inability to really have full access to the ministers through the estimates debate process.

That being said, there are some key elements in this bill which do warrant further discussion and some consideration. You know, we've already talked about the whole issue of the sort of unpredictable expenses, the wildfire, the beetle, and we've had the discussion, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo rightly points out. I've also participated in this discussion a few times where we debate back and forth: how much of it could you have predicted, and should you put more into the budget in the first place? All that kind of stuff.

But there are other overruns that I think we could have predicted and, indeed, in one or two cases did predict, so I'm a little concerned that we're here now. One of them that occurs to me is the issue of enrolment going up in the Ministry of Education. I am pretty sure that last year when we were going through the budget, certain school boards did in fact suggest that the predicted enrolment increases were not properly reflected in the government's budget and plans. There were concerns raised at the time that we were underestimating the demands that were going to be put on the system as a result of failing to properly predict the rate of growth of students in our K to 12 system. Now we have the Minister of Education coming back to us asking for I believe it's $29 million, and the question is simply: ought we to have known that last spring, and should that have been included in the budget, and should the implications of that extra cost have been something that perhaps Albertans could have turned their minds to in the election? So that's a question.

The other one that I would have liked the opportunity to have more back and forth on, Mr. Speaker, as I just did with the Acting Deputy Premier, is the issue of in-year savings because that's really important. As a couple of members have already pointed out, we just went through a process in Public Accounts two weeks ago, I guess it was, where the Auditor General and officials from the Ministry of Environment and SRD had a discussion and ultimately disclosed that we were not going to get anywhere close to our targets when it comes to reducing CO<sub>2</sub> emissions.

If that's the case, the question then becomes: well, where are we finding these in-year savings? To what extent are those in part or in whole connected to the failure of this government to meet our targets with respect to CO<sub>2</sub> emissions? What other areas are being compromised by these in-year savings? I mean, we're looking at essentially $30 million worth of in-year savings in the Ministry of Environment and SRD. Mr. Speaker, I'm very worried about that. This year, in this budget coming up, we're somewhere around a $22-million cut to Environment. I'm not exactly sure; we haven't quite managed to figure out the money coming in and the money going out and all that kind of stuff. In any event, we're looking at that, yet apparently we were able to find $30 million last year.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo talked in response to the questions from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. They were chatting, these two, in response to questions about this whole notion of how at least some people have managed to reach the conclusion that this idea of industry monitoring itself is an absolute recipe for disaster when it comes to establishing any sort of credible reputation both in Alberta or outside of Alberta, on the international stage, with respect to the integrity of our environmental protection system. Yet there are so many different programs within the ministry of environment right now that to this day – not just the oil sands monitoring, Mr. Speaker, but almost every activity of the energy and gas sector relies on industry to report to the ministry of environment.

Some of us with good intentions, always assuming the best of others, sort of have this idea that we've got these very well-resourced and informed environmental officers, who are out there checking on what industry does pretty regularly to make sure they're playing by the rules. It's quite shocking, Mr. Speaker, when you discover that in fact what's going on is that in something like 85 per cent of the cases all that's happening is that industry is filling out a bunch of forms, sending them in to the ministry of environment, and an administrative assistant is stamping them as received and checking to see if certain questions on the form have been filled out and then filing them. There's no auditing of industry's self-reporting. And we're not just talking about oil sands. We're talking about pipeline cleanup. We're talking about well reclamation. We're talking about any one of a number of things.

When the minister is able to find $30 million in in-year savings, what it probably means is that we went from 80 per cent of the environmental protection being premised on the industry representative filling out a form and then having that form stamped by an administrative assistant and then it's all fine to 95 per cent situations where industry has filled out its form, and the administrative assistant has stamped it as received, and we're all done. Then we turn around and say: ah, we have world-class monitoring.

So $30 million is a big problem, and I am very worried about a $30 million in-year savings. We in our caucus have been very up front that with the level of development and the complexity of the development and the volume of development as well as the incredible impact that the nature of our particular industrial development has on the environment in Alberta, we could easily double the budget of the ministry of environment, and we could maybe make a good start on starting to monitor and enforce and protect our environment, not only for the sake of generations to come and for our clean air and drinkable water and nontoxic soil but also for the purpose of convincing anybody outside of this little bathwater-drinking community in which we live that we actually are credible on this issue, Mr. Speaker, because at this point we truly aren't. Nobody is buying the notion that we are except the folks drinking the bathwater here in Alberta. The reason for that is that we have such a starved environmental protection and monitoring system in this province.

I am very concerned that we have a $30 million in-year savings but we don't have the kind of opportunity that we would have had in estimates to really go back and forth and talk about each program, each line item where that money was saved, and why it was saved in a time of industrial growth and activity in this province over the last year, how it was that we were able to save that kind of money.

Now, another question I had. In response to a question that was asked last week, the minister who was responding on behalf of all ministers, the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, indicated that the money that was coming from industry to fund the oil sands monitoring program – industry had agreed to pay up to $50 million. Mr. Speaker, that is, of course, what I have heard consistently since the joint oil sands monitoring program was announced by this government and the federal government and the various and sundry industry reps who were invited to the press conference, but then I just heard this minister say that industry has committed to the full $50 million.

I really am very interested about that because I had not heard that they had absolutely committed that they would provide $50 million to this program. If they have, I think that's good news. That's a step forward because we have not gotten that black-and-white commitment. I certainly would be very interested if perhaps in the form of 29(2)(a) the minister were prepared to get up and ask me a question about how happy I am that, in fact, it has been definitively committed that they will pay no less than $50 million as opposed to up to $50 million. Since they were funding already about $18 million or $19 million and since the program itself calls on industry to give $50 million, that's about a $30 million differential, so I'd sure like to know if we've actually got them to agree that they will give that full $30-million-a-year increase every year. That is one thing that I certainly would have liked to have heard more about.

Student loans, Mr. Speaker. We are being asked to approve an additional $76 million for higher student loan disbursements. I won't spend a lot of time talking about the priorities of the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education and nonacting Deputy Premier in terms of where he chooses to spend his time in what period or point in the budget cycle except to say that I find it utterly appalling and, frankly, an intense breach of ministerial responsibility under the most basic of parliamentary tradition. That aside, if I could just talk a bit about the $76 million for higher student loan disbursements, I would be curious about how that came about and the number of students that generated that increase.

With the draconian cuts that we've since seen in the budget that was tabled on Thursday, I expect that there are going to be two competing factors. On one hand, the costs for students are probably going to go up, and the quality of education is going to go down, so I suspect we're probably going to see an increased pressure on that student loan amount. Has that been budgeted for? Conversely, I believe it was the president of the U of A who suggested: well, no; actually, we might see the opposite effect. Really, Alberta's most mobile and probably most successful students will be fleeing the province as quickly as possible. Between an 8 per cent cut that's going to seriously affect the quality of their education plus a series of mandate letters, which is going to fundamentally compromise the notion of academic integrity and independence in this province, the two combined, you're probably going to see some of your best students leave the province.

Then the question becomes: are they still eligible for student loans? Well, certainly the ones who are in postgraduate work are as are the ones in law and, I suspect, medicine. Are we going to actually be giving them more money to pay the cost of them leaving home to go to a different university that will actually still provide a high quality of education with some semblance of academic independence and integrity? Will that cost our student loan program more or less? I'm not sure. These are questions I would have loved to have discussed with the nonacting Deputy Premier.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona, might I remind you that it is not proper to refer to the presence or absence of any member. I believe you transgressed twice during your remarks. I'm sure you'll take that under advisement.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the member would comment on the matter of auditing that she raised, particularly with regard to environment's auditing of the inspections and how that would relate to how we should see this in the budget.

Ms Notley: Well, I mean, there are a lot of ways in which this shows up in the budget, Mr. Speaker. There are so many things that industry reports to the ministry of environment and then we just take it on faith. For instance, the contribution to the mining reclamation funds needs to actually be audited, and the whole issue of how many of those audits are done or are no longer done or have been cancelled is something that matters not only to Albertans today but to Albertans long in the future because, of course, that mine reclamation fund is the only thing standing between us and our grandchildren having to kick hundreds of millions and billions of dollars out the door to clean up the tailings ponds, which nobody has had any success in making any kind of serious progress with, for instance.

Also, when there's a spill, a leak in a pipeline, the ministry of environment assesses the cleanup. You had this idea – or I certainly had this idea – that we had ministry of environment officials going out to where the oil had spilled and the water had been contaminated and the soil had become toxified and they spent a lot of time on-site watching over what was done to make sure it was done right. Oh, no, no, no, Mr. Speaker. That's not what happens. What happens is that the industry does it themselves. They clean it up. They clean it up on their own. Nobody watches over it. They fill out the forms. They describe: "Scout's honour. We did it. It's clean. It's good." And then it's sent in to the ministry of environment.

Now, if it's a really huge, gargantuan spill like the one that was, you know, the second biggest in the history of the country two or three years ago or the one that almost took out the city of Red Deer's water supply, well, then, sometimes the ministry of environment might actually send some folks down to take a closer look at it. But for the regular ones, the ones that happen almost weekly in this province, the small ones that rarely get reported publicly, for those ones we're just relying on industry to tell us that they've got it all right.

It's sort of like how we heard that the pipelines had been reinforced as per the recommendations of – I think it was the National Energy Board. We heard all that work had been done. Now, I guess that's more the ERCB. I'm now moving into the ERCB stuff. The cleanup is Environment; the preventative stuff is mostly ERCB. But, still, what happens is that we're still 9 times out of 10 or maybe 8 times out of 10 relying on industry to report on how well it's cleaned up after itself.

Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I ask my kids to clean up their rooms. They come down, and they proudly tell me that it's all done. I go upstairs, and you would be amazed at what I still find in that room and the shape that it is in and the garbage that's spilled all over the place, and somehow no one noticed that three banana peels from four days ago actually are still garbage and need to go. It was really important for someone to go and check on that. If you don't check on it, it just stays there. That's what happens when you cut monitoring and you cut auditing and when you make $30 million of in-year savings cuts.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for her comments. It was interesting when you posed some of those numbers on our student enrolments. It goes back to the budgeting around last February, when there were some concerns around the entire budgeting process, and it even seems that may have been done on the postsecondary side of things, too. There might have been an underestimate of how many student loans were coming out. Had you heard in previous years that this mistake was made? Was there something about last year that the reporting mechanisms weren't getting through? Is your spider sense tingling in some other way as to why maybe the numbers were underrepresented?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, my spider sense was tingling because it was part of one of the most misleading budgets ever introduced in the history of the province. For that reason, my spider sense was tingling about the accuracy of the student loan numbers.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers on second reading.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Government Motions

Alberta Treasury Branches Act

20. Mr. Horner moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur with the continuation of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, section 35 of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act requires that a motion be introduced at least once every five years which will facilitate a debate on whether the Alberta Treasury Branches Act should be repealed. The purpose of this clause is to assure Albertans that the government will review their investment in Alberta Treasury Branches to ensure that it continues to serve a valuable purpose. The timing of this motion is not a result of any budget pressures. It is simply good governance to do a periodic review. As it happens, the five-year period required by law takes us to this session.

Prior to putting forward this motion for debate, I would like to take this opportunity to discuss what ATB has provided and continues to provide Albertans and the impact it has had on our financial services marketplace. In 1938 the members of this Assembly made the decision to invest $200,000 and create Alberta

Treasury Branches. While the Alberta Treasury Branches started as Alberta's piggy bank, its purpose was expanded to promote a voucher program designed to encourage Albertans to support a variety of Alberta-made products and services. Alberta Treasury Branches has been supported by Albertans and has grown such that today's Alberta Treasury Branches, often referred to and branded as ATB, is focused on facilitating access to financial services for all Albertans as well as fostering competition between financial institutions throughout Alberta.

While the Alberta government has been a strong advocate of promoting connectivity, including enhancing access to the Internet throughout the province, we also recognize that access to financial services means more than picking up a phone or clicking a mouse. It means being able to walk into a branch and meet face to face with decision-makers, people who know you, know where you operate, and know the economy you operate in. It also means that the products and services you must have are accessible.

By restricting the activity of ATB to Alberta, ATB remains focused on the needs of Albertans, and it promotes reinvestment in Albertans and in Alberta companies. This focus also fosters a competitive environment throughout the province. To further encourage this competition, the government will continue to strive to neutralize competitive advantages and disadvantages unique to ATB as a result of government ownership. This mandate will be applicable in both good times and challenging ones and for the benefit of all Albertans, both rural and urban.

With respect to the impact ATB has had in Alberta's marketplace during times of economic stress, two recent events exemplify its presence, the recent market events that caused a general tightening of liquidity throughout Canada and most of the world and the more localized impact that BSE, or mad cow disease, had on Alberta farmers. In both circumstances ATB was not subject to a national or international decree to claw back on credit granting, and it continued to make credit available in Alberta. This was possible as Alberta is ATB's home market, and it is already enabled by its knowledge of Albertans and the local economy.

ATB has also been there to support Albertans during the good times, and I'm proud to say that Albertans have embraced ATB to that extent currently. It provides some or all of the financial services, including deposit taking, lending, and wealth management services, to over 635,000 Alberta customers. It operates in 242 communities throughout Alberta through 170 branches and 130 agencies and finances roughly $29 billion in loans to Albertans and their businesses.

ATB has been a valuable part of the province's past, and I remain confident in ATB's ability to continue to contribute to Alberta's future by providing excellent service to Albertans, ensuring stable access to core financial services throughout the province, attracting and retaining highly skilled labour within Alberta, and operating in a financially responsible manner.

As you are all aware, the government has committed to a results-based budgeting review of all areas of government to ensure that programs and services align with the outcomes that Albertans have identified as priorities. The timing and the purpose of this motion result from the requirements under the Alberta Treasury Branches Act and will not serve to exempt the review of ATB Financial's role in government's overall goal to build relationships and markets in Alberta. The results-based budgeting review of ATB Financial is being done as part of the review of the enterprise and ministry support line of businesses.

In view of the above and as a means to notify Albertans, we believe that Alberta Treasury Branches should continue to operate in Alberta. Pursuant to section 35 of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act I move that the Legislative Assembly concur in the continuance of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to stand on behalf of the Wildrose caucus and support this motion. Alberta Treasury Branches: you can't say it enough. They're just a part of our province. They're a part of our province and our history. They've done a lot of good things for this province and for the people not just of rural Alberta but of urban Alberta, too.

You know, I would say that there are two main reasons that I personally support them. The first is the security that they bring to our province. The Finance minister ably pointed some of those things out. When credit dries up on the world market or nationally for various reasons, it's just good to have that security of a bank, a financial institution, that can be there for Albertans no matter what. There are some basic services that we have to have, and banking is one of those. We've got to be able to have credit and banking to perform business in this province.

Although for the most part there are many different national banks and international banks that Albertans have access to in a competitive free market – and that's good – if something were to happen, whether through a financial crisis or some kind of tightening of credit and so forth, and we couldn't get access to funds, that would shut down the entire economy. That's not something that we can have here in Alberta. So having that stable backstop, that financial institution always there is very, very, very important. We cannot rely for essential services on the outside world. It's good to have them. We welcome that competition. There are some great banks out there. But we've got to have that backstop for the people of Alberta. It's very important.

The second great thing it's done – really, you can see it in rural Alberta. There are some rural communities that are simply too small to justify some of the bigger banks setting up shop there. Sometimes they're so small that you can't even justify a credit union there. So it's very good to have the option of having ATB in those small rural communities to provide that service to farmers, ranchers, and other entrepreneurs and families to use in those small rural communities.

The other thing it's been very effective at is helping new families get into their first home. That's something that I used ATB for. I had to get out of that mortgage down the road once I joined the Legislative Assembly or was elected. I had to switch my mortgage from ATB to another institution because you're not allowed to have a mortgage with ATB and be a member of the Assembly, so I had to switch that, but I remember that it was a very good thing to have. My wife and I were coming out of university at the time with, you know, no real credit to our names, and ATB was certainly an institution that was available to us for our first home right after I got my first legal job after law school. These are just some examples of the good that ATB has brought our province.

I would note that some people might say: well, why would a party or a caucus that espouses the benefits of capitalism and free markets and competition and so forth be supportive of a Crown corporation? I certainly can't speak for all my colleagues by any stretch, but I would say that this is again an indication that unlike what is sometimes claimed by other parts of this House, this party is not an ideological one. We look for solutions, and sometimes the free market doesn't solve everything.

Ms Notley: Oh, I need to keep that.

An Hon. Member: You know this is in Hansard, right?

Mr. Anderson: It's in Hansard.

There are instances where because of whatever it be – for security purposes, as I just talked about, for lack of competition, for other reasons – there are reasons that do exist for Crown corporations to occur. They are rare, very rare, but they do exist. Having a banking institution in this province that will always be there for our needs is one of those things.

I hope that it continues a long history, that we make sure we do everything we can to level the playing field between ATB and other banking institutions. I think that that's exceptionally important. I think that we're doing that. I think over time the government has levelled the playing field and made it so that ATB doesn't have an unfair advantage over other banking institutions. There's probably a little work still to be done on that, but overall I think that this is a very worthwhile institution.

I hope all members will support the Finance minister's motion to keep ATB running and functioning and a part of our Alberta family. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to just be brief on this. [interjections] I can please the other side every now and then.

For a small community that doesn't even have a stoplight, the ATB has provided not just some essential services, but it also helped provide some access to capital for the farmers, for the community so we could grow, so we could prosper. That has to be recognized as a real success story.

I urge all fellow members of my caucus to support this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order (29)(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes in this House up is down, east is west, north is south. What I just heard come out of the hon. Member for Airdrie was truly one of those moments where I didn't see it coming. If I didn't have the side rails on my wheelchair, I would be lying on the floor right now, and people would be helping me back in. Nevertheless, I will compose myself and try to formulate some thoughts because I'm still flabbergasted a little bit here, sir.

We went through a little bit of the history here with the hon. Minister of Finance. The ATB was founded in 1938 under our Social Credit government. That would have been under the hon. Premier Ernest Manning. I must digress for a brief story. My father would the odd time channel Ernest Manning when he would catch me doing something wrong or when I was in trouble or something like that or do something stupid. He would say to me: well, son, if you haven't suffered enough, it's your God-given right to suffer some more. That was a quote from Ernest Manning. There you go.

An Hon. Member: That was Aberhart.

Mr. Hehr: Maybe it was Aberhart. Yeah. I'm getting them mixed up. It was Aberhart – sorry; I'm mixing my metaphors – and 20 years earlier. There you go. Nevertheless, you're perfectly correct.

In my view, the Alberta Treasury Branches has been a wise institution on behalf of the Alberta people. It has supported not only individuals, families, and small business, but as the hon. Member for Airdrie rightly pointed out, it has allowed us to have some skin in the game, have some control over our own destiny, and have a backstop if, when, and in case the need arises that we need to have a bank for Albertans and the like should things go to heck in a handbasket.

You know, luckily we resisted in Canada much of the move in the '90s and the early parts of this century to allow too much competition in the banks. We saw movement in the United States to have a lot of that open up. There was a lot of pressure put on the Canadian government at the time, the federal Liberals, and in fact from the current Prime Minister to, I guess, liberalize the banking system. Okay? That urge was resisted, and it was a move in the zeitgeist of the time, and in my view it was probably a wise decision. In fact, a lot of the things that we're doing today in celebrating the Canadian banking industry are the result of the wisdom of Paul Martin and Mr. Chrétien in this regard. We're seeing the country do much better as a result of having some of that thing.

I note, when I talk about some of the good things that possibly the federal Liberals did, you know, that the hon. Solicitor General should be longing for the days of the per capita spending rates of the Paul Martin-Jean Chrétien government. At this point in time, after watching Mr. Harper out per capita spend even that government, he must be longing for those days. But I digress.

Let's get back to the ATB and its benefits. It allows us to have some skin in the game. I always look back into the history of Alberta and the success of some other Crown corporations that we've had in Alberta and primarily the Alberta Energy Company. Its success from, I believe, 1971 through to 1993, when it was sold, was really, truly something to be celebrated. It established us with a foothold in the industry, it allowed us to have a base of knowledge and understanding, it allowed us to control our own destiny, and it allowed us to have a backstop against some of the private oil companies should they up and want to do something else. We always had an Alberta Energy Company, that was there on behalf of the people and would provide us with that knowledge base.

I look back, and the decision in 1993 to sell the Alberta Energy Company is, I believe, probably one of the true tragedies that has occurred in this province. I'm glad to see that we are not considering doing that with the ATB at this time. I think it allows us to have, really, some strength. It allows the Alberta people to have a position. The simple fact of the matter is that many Crown corporations work, and this is an example of that. It's my greatest hope – and it was, I guess, allegedly so when the election occurred – that we are going to turn the page on some of these ideology-based decisions that the free market knows everything. You know, to be honest, if I have to take two days off work to get the Shaw cable guy in to fix my Shaw cable, well, you know, let's face it. The free market really isn't as efficient sometimes as it's cracked up to be.

That's not exactly a direct parallel, but it just shows that governments have a role to play. Governments have a role to play in shaping our societies, and sometimes that's through Crown corporations. I know we had much discussion in our last committee, where we discussed the hydroelectric dams that could possibly be going into northern Alberta. One of the discussions around the table was on whether we should be doing that through a Crown corporation given that these are capital intensive and have a hundred-year life cycle. It's something that I urge this government to really consider. I know it's loaded with conten-tiousness, and people have opinions one way or another, but when we look at those projects, really look at it as: what's best for the Alberta people over the length of the hundred-year life cycle of that institution?

You know, in 1938, when William Aberhart started the ATB, if he was looking at it from a one-year projection, he would have said: "Oh, my goodness, this is going to cost some capital outlay. My goodness, it'll be a one-year bad cycle on our debt. Oh, my God, what's going to happen?" But, no, he had a vision for this playing out over the long haul, a vision of this supporting Albertans from not only 1938 through to 1939 but hopefully throughout the life cycle or for as long as Alberta is around. That's what governments need to do, look at things for the long haul. Let's try and get out of planning on the four-year election cycle, which I know is awfully difficult. Nevertheless, we should try to do it in most cases and consider opportunities that exist in terms of Crown corporations like the Alberta Treasury Branch.

Thank you very much. I know that was all over the map, Mr. Speaker, but thanks for bearing with me.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a quick question for the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I always enjoy his comments even though I don't always agree with them. He's talked a lot about Crown corporations tonight. As he knows, Saskatchewan is king of Crown corporations: a publicly owned telephone company, a publicly owned power company, a publicly owned energy company. Would he like to see these services nationalized in this province?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you care to respond?

Mr. Hehr: You're bringing up a hypothetical that I don't think has any type of relevance. I thought Lougheed had an amazing vision on the Alberta Energy Company having a role to play. I'll use the Alberta Energy Company as an example here. Peter Lougheed understood that in order to keep the private corporations honest, the other oil and gas companies, he had to have some skin in the game. He had to have government shored up in the expertise of drilling, shored up in the expertise of accounting, shored up in the expertise of how much money you actually made in this business to go from there and actually spur investment into upgrading, refineries, and pipelines.

You know, Premier Lougheed controlled much of the pipeline industry, so the government could through an arm's-length, independent corporation – that's what the AEC was; we forget that. Many people who went on to other private businesses in this province were the best and the brightest that Lougheed selected to run the AEC. It had a tremendous role to play, and I think that at its height the Alberta Energy Company controlled about 40 per cent of the Alberta energy market at that time because they had a knowledge of the industry and because they always had the backstop. They weren't worried the private companies were going to say: "Well, we won't drill. We'll just go drill elsewhere." "Well, fine. That's more for us to drill. All right. If you don't want to drill it, we'll drill it."

You know, it allowed us the opportunity where we weren't held at gunpoint or knife-point by the threat of mass exodus, and Premier Lougheed understood that. Really, we haven't had that ability since that time. Oftentimes when we try to do things in our energy markets, well, we're beholden to what they say because we don't have that option, that expertise, seemingly that will that Premier Lougheed had to establish the Alberta Energy Company even though it wasn't very popular. You've got to remember that his brother Don ran Shell Oil. Do you think he was that happy about the Alberta government starting up its own oil company? No, he wasn't, but he understood it.

In any event, everything is in a balance, so we don't have to get all hyperbolic and say that I'm the second coming of Hugo Chávez because I think we might have a role to play in our energy industry – okay? – which is what I think the hon. member was attempting to suggest.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

Other speakers? I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm somewhat conflicted in standing up to speak to this motion. We support the motion, just to be very clear. I was going back through the notes, frankly, provided by our staff and some of the review they've done, and in the past, in 2002 and in 2007, our caucus's typical and quite regular position was, you know, that of course we support this motion, and we're irritated that this has to keep coming back to us because it potentially jeopardizes the ATB every time we have to do this. I think the MLA for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said in 2002 that we're playing "sort of a game of Russian roulette" and that "sooner or later the chamber's going to come up with the bullet" every time we insist on doing this review.

To some extent he's not incorrect because in 1998 former Premier Klein did muse quite openly about privatizing ATB. Indeed, just a month and a half ago at the Premier's so-called Economic Summit in Calgary several of the panelists raised the prospect of privatizing ATB and talked about how it would be worth a good $4 billion to Alberta. Of course, at this point in time there's a bit of a gap in the budget, and you know the two match up a little bit. So it's a little worrisome. However, we're very glad that this motion is here now.

On the flip side, as much as those were the points made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and the previous Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I personally quite enjoy listening to both the Finance minister and the Official Opposition House Leader get up and extol the virtues of this Crown corporation. It makes me very, very pleased that people can every now and then look past their otherwise very conservative but not at all extreme positions on some of these issues because, as has been rightly pointed out, the ATB has played a critical role in the development of Alberta.

It was first established to deal with the fact that small farmers needed protection against the banks who, notwithstanding the purity and the wonderful morality of the unfettered capitalist free-market system, took advantage of small farmers and made it very difficult for them to build their businesses and grow our province the way it needed to grow. So it played an important role then, and indeed, as the Member for Airdrie pointed out, it plays an important role today.

I would simply ask that members of the House turn their minds to the possibility, as outlined by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, that Crown corporations can actually do good things and that sometimes they can do other good things, too. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo talks about an Alberta energy company. We have examples in other provinces where we have, you know, Crown corporations that develop hydro, which, of course, is now a profound foundation of economic stability and strength as a result of that work having been done by a Crown corporation. We have examples of other provinces where right-wing governments have come into power on the plan to privatize public auto insurance only to discover that it is a win-win-win situation for the voters and the taxpayers of that province and that it would be utterly ridiculous to privatize auto insurance.

The fact of the matter is that Crown corporations can and do help citizens of the jurisdiction to which they are accountable just like the ATB helps and grows our jurisdiction. So we are pleased to support this motion. We hope that at some point we just give the ATB and its investors and its members, or its clients, the security that they need without having to worry about it being up for a constant review every five years and being a potential source of quick cash for a cash-strapped government because that would be short sighted in the extreme, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers?

Then the Minister of Finance to close debate.

Mr. Horner: Question, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Government Motion 20 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour and in light of the fact that members of the House have requested a little bit more time to look at the Fiscal Management Act before we debate it further, I would have to conclude that we should move to adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 12, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Dear Lord, may each day we serve shed light on our true purpose here, may each hour we toil be for the common good, and may each minute remind us that what we seek may well be found in others. Carpe diem. Seize the day, and enjoy the moment. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Election Anniversaries

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go on to Introduction of Guests, might I take a moment to congratulate several members who were elected either today or yesterday several years ago, depending on how the leap years went.

I want to recognize and congratulate the crowd of 1997: Edmonton-Centre, Calgary-Fort, Edmonton-Whitemud, and yours truly. I also want to congratulate and salute Calgary-Bow, Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, Spruce Grove-St. Albert, Edmonton-Castle Downs, Whitecourt-St. Anne, and yours truly, who are the crowd of March 12, 2001. Congratulations, members.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members the finest musicians Brooks high school has to offer. The students, who are currently on a tour of the Assembly, are here today to learn about the legislative process and develop their skills as artists. Accompanying them today is their musical director, Brian Stone. Brian teaches music to elementary, middle, and high school students and is described simply as the best. Accompanying them also are chaperones Celina Everett, Karen Peters, Liana Nielsen, Harold Nielsen. I would ask that this Assembly join me in providing the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 11 visitors from l'école À la Découverte. It's a French-immersion school in Kensington. It's really a reflection of the wide world around us, including students from Algeria, Morocco, Senegal, Lebanon, Afghanistan, Somalia; a teacher, Mme Uwantege, from Rwanda; and a parent supervisor, Mme Zouyene, from Lebanon. If they could please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 59 students from Ellerslie Campus school in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. The students have had the opportunity to tour this building and learn a bit about the history and are now getting to know the question period. These students are joined today by their teacher, Mr. Blair Faulkner, and by Mrs. Marci Augustin. At this time I ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very important person in my life in the Two Hills area, Michelle Henderson. Michelle is my older sister, and I won't say how much older. Mick has worked at the immigration centre in Vegreville since it was created. She and her husband, Stu, live on the farm with their two children, my nephew and niece, Andrew and Ava. We have a very close family, and Mick has always been there throughout my life. I'm sure all members can agree that the unconditional support we receive from our family makes our job here possible. I'd like to ask Michelle to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Merci, M. le Président. Il me fait plaisir de vous présenter aujourd'hui, à vous et à tous les membres de l'Assemblée, des leaders de la communauté francophone de l'Alberta qui ont participé au lever de drapeau ce matin dans la rotonde de la Législature dans le cadre des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, une célébration pan-canadienne de la culture et de l'histoire francophone.

Le gouvernement de l'Alberta est très fier d'entretenir de bonnes relations avec la communauté francophone en s'assurant que les Albertains qui parlent français ont accès aux services et aux ressources dont ils ont besoin. Nous apprécions aussi tout le bon travail que fait la communauté en s'assurant qu'il y ait des collaborations solides et significatives entre le foyer, l'école, et la communauté.

Je demanderais à nos invités de bien vouloir se lever lorsque je les présente: de l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta, Mme Dolorèse Nolette et M. Denis Perreux, et de la Fédération des parents francophones de l'Alberta, Mme Claudine Lajoie et Mme Mireille Péloquin. Se joignant aussi à eux aujourd'hui pour cette occasion spéciale sont les membres de mon équipe au Secrétariat francophone: M. Denis Tardif, directeur général; Mme Cindie LeBlanc, directrice adjointe; Mme Kate Peters, agente de liaison communautaire à Calgary. Ces personnes sont tous assis dans la galerie du Président.

Merci à mes visiteurs francophones. Je leur demanderais de bien vouloir se lever pour recevoir l'accueil chaleureux de notre Assemblée.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly leaders from Alberta's francophone community who participated this morning in a flag-raising ceremony in the Legislature rotunda as part of Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a national celebration of French culture and history.

The Alberta government is proud of its strong relations with the francophone community in making sure French-speaking Albertans have access to services and resources they need. We also appreciate the good work that they do in ensuring strong and meaningful collaborations between the home, the school, and the community.

I would ask our guests to stand as I introduce them: from the Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta, Dolorèse Nolette and Denis Perreux, and from the Federation of Francophone Parents of Alberta, Claudine Lajoie and Mireille Péloquin. Also joining them on this special day are members of my staff at the Francophone Secretariat: Mr. Denis Tardif, executive director; Ms Cindie LeBlanc, assistant director; and Kate Peters, community liaison officer in Calgary.

These individuals are all seated in the Speaker's gallery today. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly special guests here today from Alberta's Métis settlements who are seated in your gallery and the members' gallery. As many people know, Alberta is the only province with a designated land base for Métis people. There are eight Métis settlements in the province, and I'm proud to say that I've visited them all. Today our Premier signed a long-term arrangement with the Métis Settlements General Council that will set a new direction for the settlements to become self-sustaining communities over the next 10 years. This is a commitment we made in 2011 and is yet another commitment kept by the Premier and her government.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome – they are seated in the Speaker's gallery – Randy Hardy, the president of the Métis Settlements General Council; Stan Delorme, chair of the Buffalo Lake Métis settlement; Gerald Cunningham, chair of the East Prairie Métis settlement; Archie Collins, chair of Elizabeth Métis settlement; Dave Lamouche, chair of Gift Lake Métis settlement; Floyd Thompson, chair of the Kikino Métis settlement; Alden Armstrong, chair of Paddle Prairie Métis settlement; and Ken Noskey, chair of the Peavine Métis settlement. Also with us in the members' gallery: Loretta Calliou, Métis Settlements General Council secretary; Robert L'Hirondelle, Métis Settlements General Council vice-president; Denise White, Métis Settlements General Council treasurer; Sherry Cunningham, vice-chair of Peavine settlement; and Derek Andrew, communications director for the Métis Settlements General Council. I would ask that you to give a warm welcome to all these people.

The Speaker: Thank you. While they're standing, why don't we greet Archie Collins with an extraspecial thumping; it's his birthday today. [applause]

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two outstanding individuals from my constituency, the community of Boyle, and, I'm proud to say, good friends: Terry Mudryk-Harbarenko and her son Bryan Mudryk, a TSN sports anchor whom many of you would know from the show. Bryan is one of our constituency's favourite sons, and I have to be careful how I say that because one of the other TSN sports anchors, Jay Onrait, is also from Boyle and Athabasca.

Bryan was diagnosed with Hodgkin's lymphoma when he was only 18 years old. Fortunately, he was able to overcome this obstacle with the support of his family, friends, and staff at the Cross Cancer Institute. As a cancer survivor he has been showing tremendous strength by turning this hardship into a way of giving back to the community. While he now lives in Toronto, where he's a sports anchor for TSN, he returns to Boyle each summer, lending his personality and his fame and bringing all of his celebrity buddies to the Bryan Mudryk Golf Classic, which both he and his mother organize. This year will be the 11th year and their million-dollar year in terms of raising money for the Cross. While he lends his fame, the real work is done by his mother, an incredible community volunteer. It's an honour to have them here, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional thanks of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests, who are representatives of Alberta's international development sector: Heather McPherson and Chris Chang-Yen Phillips from the Alberta Council for Global Cooperation. The Alberta Council for Global Cooperation engages in important international development abroad. Recently ACGC members got their funding cut by $500,000, a 50 per cent reduction. This is a significant reduction from when Lougheed recognized the value of their work. They are here to ask for their money back. I would like to now ask Heather and Chris to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you the policy co-ordinator at the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce, Jonathan Seib. Jonathan recently joined the chamber team and has taken the lead on working with businesses in the Red Deer region to identify leading industry issues and policy concerns. He looks forward to working with government to create a better economic future for Alberta. This past couple of days Jonathan attended the Northwest Chamber Leaders Conference here in Edmonton, and he'll also be attending the Alberta Chambers of Commerce Political Action Day tomorrow. Jonathan is here today to observe the Legislature and members of the Assembly. I'd like to thank Jonathan for joining us today and ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. So many distinguished guests here today. It's my pleasure to rise and add to it. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students who are leaders in their student unions and also hold leadership positions with the Council of Alberta University Students, which, as you know, is also referred to as CAUS. They're having a busy week educating some of the members in here about some of the most important issues in postsecondary education, and we certainly appreciate their time.

I'd like them to rise as I call their names, beginning with Petros Kusmu, the CAUS vice-chair and University of Alberta Students' Union VP external; Raphael Jacob – he had to leave to do media – the CAUS chair and University of Calgary Students' Union VP external and, I should note, also a resident of the fabulous constituency of Chestermere-Rocky View; Colten Yamagishi, the University of Alberta Students' Union president; Hardave Birk, the University of Calgary Students' Union president; Andrew McIntyre, the University of Calgary Students' Union marketing manager; Armin Escher, the University of Lethbridge Students' Union president; Julia Adolf, the University of Lethbridge Students' Union VP academic; Adam Woods, the University of Alberta Students' Union VP external elect; Conner Brown, the University of Calgary Students' Union VP external elect; and Duncan Wojtaszek, the CAUS executive director. Mr. Speaker, we all know these are not only leaders of tomorrow but leaders of today, and I'd love to ask all of my colleagues to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is Fraud Prevention Month, for which I will be doing a member's statement shortly. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly friends and colleagues from the economic crime section, the auto theft unit along with fraud prevention partners here in Alberta. I'll ask them to stand as I announce their names. Seated in the Speaker's gallery we have superintendent Bob Hassel, Acting Inspector Keith Johnson, and Inspector Kevin Brezinski along with Staff Sergeant Dan Service. Seated in the members' gallery we have Detective Dave Hawthorne; Detective Patti Nichol; Detective James MacDonald; Detective Jon Coughlan; Constable Linda Davidson; Constable Nadine Swist; Constable Elvin Toy; Detective Bob Gauthier; Detective Bill Allen; Corporal Rob Harkin from the RCMP; Detective Peter Bagan; Constable Glenn Thursby; Deborah Zukiwski from admin support; Janine Czernick, who's an analyst; Wendy Mah from AMA; Scott Hood from Service Alberta; Val Taylor from Service Alberta; Ron Mycholak from the Better Business Bureau; Marc Trudel from the Bank of Canada; and Anne Gray from corporate communications.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to introduce three representatives of the Alberta Students' Executive Council. They met with our hon. Minister of Health earlier today, and they discussed issues facing students in the postsecondary system and, importantly, the role that the Alberta Students' Executive Council will play in the delivery of $1.5 million in grants to students' associations across Alberta to support mental health programs for students here in Alberta. Joining us today are Al Dickison, Matthew Armstrong, and Justin McDonald. Our guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise now to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two constituents of mine who are here in the city this week for chamber business: Mr. Tab Pollock, chair of the Alberta chamber, and Mr. Dan Percy, CEO of the Grande Prairie chamber. These gentlemen are truly leaders of my community, and it was very nice chatting with Mr. Pollock and how supportive he was of the government's budget moving the province forward. I'd now ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Mr. Goudreau: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui je me lève à l'Assemblée pour souligner Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, une célébration annuelle pan-canadienne de la culture, de la langue, et du patrimoine français, qui se déroule tout au long du mois de mars.

Le 1er mars les Albertains ont lancé les festivités avec des levers de drapeaux communautaires partout à travers la province. Et comme vous le savez, M. le Président, les Albertains ont également eu la chance de se joindre à vous, à notre hon. Première ministre et l'hon. ministre de la Culture pour une célébration toute spéciale ici à la Législature ce matin. Les festivités se poursuivront tout au long du mois de mars avec des rassemblements communautaires, des cabanes à sucre, des festivals, et l'ouverture d'une nouvelle exposition qui honore les archives et les histoires francophones spécifiques à l'Alberta. Le 20 mars les Canadiens se joindront à plus de 50 autres pays à travers le monde pour souligner la Journée internationale de la Francophonie.

La diversité culturelle de l'Alberta et son riche patrimoine continuent à enrichir notre province, la rendant plus forte et vibrante, et notre population francophone grandissante ne fait pas exception. Avec plus de 238,000 Albertains qui parlent français et plus de 390,000 Albertains d'origines françaises, Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie nous offre une excellente occasion pour tous les Albertains de profiter et de célébrer nos communautés francophones.

M. le Président, je tiens à remercier les membres de cette Assemblée pour leur appui continu à cette merveilleuse célébration.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the Assembly today to highlight the Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, an annual national celebration of French culture, language, and heritage held during the month of March.

On the first of this month Albertans started celebrating Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie with community flag-raising ceremonies across the province. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Albertans had the great pleasure of joining you, the hon. Premier, and the hon. Minister of Culture in a celebration today right here at the Legislature. The festivities continue throughout the month with community gatherings, traditional sugar shacks, music, festivals, and the public opening of a new Provincial Archives of Alberta exhibit tomorrow which showcases all our uniquely Albertan francophone records and memories. On March 20 Canadians will join more than 50 other countries across the world in marking la Journée internationale de la Francophonie, International Francophonie Day.

This is the 15th anniversary of the Rendez-vous, and this year's theme celebrates the joie de vivre, or light-hearted enjoyment of life, that often characterizes our francophone communities. Joie de vivre is expressed through conversation, good times with family and friends, or a general appreciation for all of life's pleasures.

Alberta's cultural diversity and rich heritage continue to enrich our province, making it both strong and vibrant, and our province's growing francophone population is no exception. With more than 238,000 Albertans who speak French and over 390,000 Albertans of French descent, Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie is a great opportunity for all Albertans to get out and experience and celebrate the irresistible energy and joie de vivre our francophone communities bring to the cultural fabric of our province.

Mr. Speaker, I thank members of this House for their continued support of this wonderful celebration. [As submitted]

Oral Question Period

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Finance minister quoted an economist to try to justify the government's decision to send the province 20 years back with their back-in-debt budget. Let me quote another economist, Jack Mintz. Now, while I don't agree with Professor Mintz on his advice to the government to bring in a sales tax, I do agree with him on this. He says that the government's $17 billion borrowing plan is contrary to sound public policy because, and I quote: a jurisdiction with nonrenewable resource revenue should be saving rather than borrowing funds. Unquote. How does the Premier justify going so deeply into debt, contrary to this advice?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are saving. We have a fiscal management plan, that we introduced last week in the Legislature, that for the first time in 25 years is saving Alberta resource revenue. I will tell you that we are proud of that, and the reason we're doing it is because we listened to Albertans, who told us that saving was a priority in good times and in challenging times.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the Premier missed the emphasis on the borrowing part. The $17 billion in borrowing is what Dr. Mintz says we shouldn't be doing because he says that borrowing is a double-dip against future generations. This is because provinces with natural resources are already borrowing significant amounts from the future since they are selling off physical assets that would provide support to future generations. How can the Premier justify this double-barrelled borrowing from future generations?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that the hon. member opposite wants to pick one piece of Dr. Mintz's suggestions and ignore the other pieces because in order for you to do the one piece that he's suggesting, you have to do the other piece, which is a sales tax, which this side of the House is saying no to. I would also point out that we're going to take some good advice from those in this province who are creating the economy and creating jobs, like the Alberta Chambers of Commerce: "It supports the provincial plan to leverage its solid credit rating to borrow at today's low interest rates in order to proactively build infrastructure to accommodate Alberta's growth." We're building Alberta while we're living within our means, and we're saving, which they aren't doing.

Ms Smith: There is another way, Mr. Speaker. They could balance the budget without raising taxes and without going into debt.

The Premier justifies huge borrowing, ignores the need to pay back the debt at all, and also ignores the effect of selling off nonrenewable natural resources to pay for day-to-day operations. When will the government begin to act responsibly and stop double-dipping into the future of our kids and grandkids?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, this is coming from an opposition that presented – I guess they call it a budget. It's interesting, and I guess we should understand why they're having difficulty reading financial statements. In their budget there are no financial statements. There are no statements at all.

It does not serve the Alberta public to not build the schools, not build the hospitals, not build the roads that they're going to need for tomorrow's growth. Living within your means means that you make prudent, responsible choices, which is exactly what this Premier and this government have done.

The Speaker: Second main set of questions. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: This Premier continues to claim that balancing the budget without going into $17 billion in debt will result in extreme and damaging cuts. This is puzzling because just prior to the 2012 election the Premier published a video stating, quote: we are not the party of deficit; it's entirely possible for us to continue to provide the quality of life that we as Albertans have without going into debt, and I am committed to that. Unquote. Premier, you summed up the Wildrose position perfectly there. Why do you now label as extremist those Albertans who do not support your new pro-debt position?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I find this incredibly ironic coming from a member who says that we shouldn't invest in infrastructure when this government is investing in four schools in his constituency. You know why we're doing that? Because infrastructure matters. We want to make sure that Albertans and families and kids understand that we're a government that is committed to building the future of this province in good times and in challenging times. The reason that we can talk about that with great clarity is because we have presented a very clear fiscal picture to Albertans, clearly setting out the choices that we have made in order to ensure that we continue to invest in future generations.

Mr. Anderson: We have a $50 billion infrastructure plan. You should read it, Premier.

Premier, immediately prior to the last election you said on the campaign trail, "Alberta does not have debt, and we will not incur debt. That's fundamental to what Albertans are proud of, and we're committed to make sure that continues." Why would you promise Albertans during a campaign that you would not go back into debt, then break that promise, and then tell Albertans, including those whom you fooled into voting for you based on that promise, that they are backwards-looking extremists? Do you not see what that does to your credibility?

Ms Redford: I have not called any of those people who made the right decision on April 23 to vote for the future of this province backwards-looking individuals. I've called them, the opposition, backwards-looking individuals, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: Given that you recently told a columnist that "for the people who decided to get involved in politics because they believed in a better future for Alberta . . . this is a budget that still keeps that dream alive . . . in a really big way," is the dream you are referring to that sweet one where Albertans wake up a day before the election knowing what they know now about your promises, or is it that nightmare where we realize we have to wait three more years before putting an end to this absolute disaster, or is it, Premier, that you are just sleepwalking and sharing the trip with the rest of us?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, this government has done exactly what Albertans are looking for in striking the right balance. We've balanced the budget with zero increase, but we haven't done it on the vulnerable. We've made very strategic priorities that ensure we can still invest in families and communities. The only people that are saying one thing and doing another are the opposition, who continually stand up and say, "Balance the budget," but in their very first maiden speeches they demanded $1.5 billion in new spending for their constituencies alone.

Transition of Michener Centre Residents

Mrs. Towle: I'm fraught with worry going forward; we're caring for some extremely vulnerable people: powerful words made by the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities after announcing the closure of the Michener Centre, forcing 125 vulnerable and fragile Albertans to move out of their homes. With no guarantee of enough space and resources to appropriately house Michener PDD patients, the minister's comments leave Albertans with little confidence that this government can be trusted to keep them safe. The minister is clearly worried, so how can the Premier tell clients, families, and caregivers that they should not be worried, too?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the changes that we announced yesterday are part of an evolution in how we deliver care to disabled persons in our province, indeed in Canada and across North America. It's not something that started yesterday but something that's been going on for a long time and has been talked about in this House before.

We will ensure that there are places. Obviously, we're not going to turn people out on the street, as the hon. member would if she had the position, Mr. Speaker. We currently have the positions available. We will do individual planning that will involve the families and guardians of each of those people, and they will be placed in appropriate settings.

Mrs. Towle: Shame on you, Minister.

Given that there are 400 highly trained and specialized staff who have loved and cared for these clients of Michener and given that the minister has suggested this closure is about dollars, when will the Premier truly stand up for vulnerable Albertans and ensure that they continue to receive the much-needed and specialized support that is provided by these staff?

Ms Redford: Well, I think that the hon. member should probably decide if she's concerned about the clients in the centre, Mr. Speaker, or the staff in the centre. We're actually concerned about both. From our perspective, we know that community living is the most important way for people that are living with challenges and disabilities to live with dignity. It's important for us to continue to talk about this plan. That is fundamentally exactly what our minister did yesterday by taking the time, very importantly, to meet with families, to meet with community partners to ensure that there is a dignified transition that's going to allow for further expansion of community living, which is appropriate in Alberta.

Mrs. Towle: Communication is the key. Given that this is not the first time this government has left vulnerable Albertans at risk, displacing seniors in Carmangay on a whim, and given that this government put this closure under embargo through the budget, when will the Premier raise the bar on accountability and transparency by letting Albertans know when facilities in their communities are going to close and release the list of obvious closures happening?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously doesn't know how such decisions are taken or announced. Obviously, I couldn't announce it before the budget because I have funding in the budget that requires that.

Mr. Speaker, this is part of a transformation of care that will allow us to offer a broader array of services to a broader array of persons with disabilities in this province, and that's the right thing to do, which is why we're doing it. I don't know who the hon. member is standing up for, but it's not persons with disabilities in our province.

2:00 Seniors' Drug Coverage and Housing Programs

Dr. Sherman: Thank you. I'd like to talk about a moral debt and a regressive taxation. A former member from Calgary-West twice tried to ram through a seniors' drug policy, which essentially was a tax on the sick. The sicker you are, the more medications you need, the more you pay. It was good for low-income seniors but brutal for the rest, as you know, Mr. Speaker, because you put a stop to it. But this Premier wants to resurrect pharma-fail 3. Premier, how can you justify taxing the sick seniors? Why not just bring in fair progressive taxation to cover medication for all seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, what is fair? Our view and the view, we believe, of most Albertans is to offer for the first time drug coverage to 20 per cent of this population who currently have no access. That involves a little more careful thought than simply proposing that we raise taxes to do it. It involves an appreciation of the fact that there are people in this province that are choosing between paying for drugs that they need and paying rent and paying for other expenses that support their ability to live independently in the community. That's what Albertans expect.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this minister wants to do it on the backs of 80 per cent of other grandmas and grandpas.

Mr. Speaker, given this PC government is cutting enhanced home care and rehab funding, forcing those who built our province into expensive private care clinics instead of helping them live their lives with dignity in their own homes, in their community, with their own partners, to the Premier: do you consider home care for our seniors just to be another crutch? Is that why you're taking it away, Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's been really interesting to travel across this province in the last two years and talk to a lot of Alberta seniors who are very happily living in their homes and want to keep living independent lives. That's one of the reasons that in this budget we brought in a seniors' property tax deferral program to ensure that people would be able to stay in their homes and not have to deal with some of these undue financial burdens.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are an awful lot of seniors out there – and I would imagine some of them might even support other parties – that actually believe that if there are people that can afford to make payments with respect to some of their care and support and in return also get choice with respect to the care that they might choose to have and where they want to live, that's also a reasonable policy position, and that's why we have both.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that all evidence points out that seniors in private care clinics spend more time in bed, eat less, bathe less, have more falls, and get more bed ulcers and that, despite this, this PC government continues throwing our seniors and money into private care clinics, crossing their fingers, hoping standards are met, wages are fair, and there's enough staff on duty to care for them, again to the Premier: you promised to be open and accountable; why do you still refuse to tell Albertans the truth about staff ratios and pay in these private facilities?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to have the opportunity to have this discussion with the hon. member because this is the second day in the House that he's stood up and cited reports and put forward figures and statistics as if they were actually real. I don't actually know why he keeps doing it if he doesn't actually have the evidence to support the allegations. There is absolutely no reason to believe that there are differences with respect to level of care. We do believe that people should have the choice. Many of the people in my constituency, many of the people that I've talked to across the province do want to have that choice, and it's part of our responsibility to ensure that they have it, which also lets us take care of other vulnerable Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition, followed by Highwood.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This PC government and its estranged siblings in the Wildrose Party have a couple of things in common. First, they are both proposing multibillion-dollar deficit budgets. They're the Deficit Twins. Second, they both refuse to reverse Ralph Klein's unjustified tax cuts for corporations and Alberta's wealthiest citizens. Will the Premier admit that by refusing to reverse the Klein tax cuts for wealthy Albertans and very profitable corporations, she has plunged Alberta back into debt and cut services to the most vulnerable Albertans?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think that the hon. member might actually want to take look at what the definition of a deficit is. If we actually look at the operational plan that we have in place in the operational budget, we see that there is a sustainability fund, which we will soon be renaming the contingency fund, which is made up of savings which will be used to ensure that we can support all of the services in this year's budget that are going to continue to allow us to build for the future.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this Premier believes she can make reality change by changing the definitions of words. I recall reading a novel by George Orwell that pioneered that concept.

Given that this PC government will not stand up to the Wildrose and scrap Ralph Klein's tax cuts for the rich and powerful, does the Premier plan to reduce Alberta's dependence on volatile resource revenues to pay for badly needed programs, or is she planning to continue with deficits and cuts year after year?

Mr. Horner: You know what, Mr. Speaker? It's interesting that he put us in the same league as them. The difference is that we understand financial management and we understand the financial statements. We do understand the financial definitions, not one of which is in their alternative plan. Not one. The alternative to paying cash for everything is putting money aside in savings. We are legislating it. We are bringing in legislative savings, which they did not put in their platform. We're going to make sure that we build the pot for tomorrow so that we can remove ourselves from nonrenewable resource dependency.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, they both want debt and deficit, and they both want to cut programs. It's just a matter of emphasis.

Given that this PC government won't stand up – oh, that's my last question. [interjections] This one's good, too, Mr. Speaker.

Given that yesterday the Premier called the student temporary employment program a crutch, can she tell us how many more crutches she intends to kick out from under Alberta families to protect the tax cuts for the wealthy and the corporations?

Ms Redford: When this government was elected on April 23, the first piece of legislation that we brought in was results-based budgeting, and the reason we did that was to ensure that we were supporting programs that were actually achieving the outcomes that Albertans wanted to see, Mr. Speaker. As I said in this House yesterday, the STEP program, while very valuable at the time, was a program that was 39 years old. It was time for us to look to better ways to achieve the outcomes that we want to have in place to ensure that students can get gainful employment in their chosen profession and to ensure that we were supporting the not-for-profit sector. That is what the minister intends to do, and I'm looking forward to the discussions.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Nonmember

The Speaker: Hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition, you referenced the name of a person three times. I let it go all three times, but as you know, it's not always appropriate to reference people who are not here to defend themselves. One day a Speaker may have to stand up and defend you, so let's be careful and mindful of that rule.

The hon. Member for Highwood. [interjections] The hon. Member for Highwood has the floor.

Compensation for Pharmacy Services

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there's a big health care problem brewing in Alberta, and this government is to blame for it. They are changing the way that pharmacies are paid for dispensing generic drugs, and what it has meant is that smaller, independent pharmacies will suffer dramatic revenue loss. Many, we are hearing, are going to be forced to close. It's more regulation and more intervention in the marketplace that is going to create a big hole in health care delivery right across the province. Doesn't the Premier see the danger of this?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we announced in Budget 2013 was a reduction in the price that government will pay for generic drugs. This is consistent with similar changes that have been made across the country. The savings that accrue from this benefit not only government-sponsored drug programs; they benefit people who are part of private and employer-sponsored programs and people who pay out of pocket. It is a reasonable measure. It is well supported by transition funding that's been provided to pharmacists over the last four years, and it is in the best interest of long-term drug coverage for our population.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is not a government spending issue. This government has changed the regulations three different times since last summer. Pharmacies need to be viable in order to continue serving their communities. Changing fees, eliminating price flexibility, and restricting revenue opportunities all contribute to a direct, real, and immediate threat to the survival of independent pharmacies. Doesn't the Health minister see that this is a problem?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member doesn't present a very reasoned argument in favour of her position. The fact is that drug costs are one of the fastest growing components of health care across the country. The fact of the matter is that this province made a decision and led the country four years ago when we recognized pharmacists as full partners, as professionals in delivering health care. We offered last year, with their support, a full professional services framework complete with payments for services, including renewing of prescriptions, modifying prescriptions, and developing care plans. This government is prepared to deal with pharmacists as professionals. I'm sure they're wondering why the opposition is not.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we are asking for is a solution that recognizes that if the government eliminates a source of income, there is going to be more of an impact for the entire community, not just for the pharmacy. While the large corporate pharmacies that have multiple streams of income can survive, the small independents cannot. What is the minister going to do about this?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, over the last four years government has provided $95 million in transition funding to support pharmacists in moving from their traditional role as dispensers of medication to full professionals working as part of primary health care delivery in this province. This is a responsible approach to 21st century health care. It is not, as the opposition would have us believe, a stuck-in-the-past attitude toward the important role that pharmacists play. It also, I think, is quite revealing that the hon. member ignores the important additional value for taxpayer dollars that results from this initiative. Why isn't she interested in that?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In last week's budget the government announced that it would be implementing a pharmacare program in 2014, that it was reducing generic drug prices from 35 to 18 per cent for brand name prices and is investing $5 million in new insulin pump therapy. To the Minister of Health. People with type 1 diabetes are anxious for more details on the Premier's promise to fund insulin pumps. When can they enrol in the program, and when can they pick up their pumps?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Consistent with the Premier's pledge we will be offering an insulin pump program beginning later this spring. All insulin-dependent diabetics in Alberta will be eligible for the program based on clinical criteria that are being developed now. The program, for those participants who are eligible, will cover a hundred per cent of the supplies. This is an investment in quality of life for the increasing numbers of Albertans that suffer from type 1 diabetes.

Mr. McDonald: Also to the minister: can you explain how the pharmacare program will benefit constituents in northern Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the pharmacare program will benefit all Albertans, as has been said in response to previous questions. About 20 per cent of Albertans currently have access to no drug coverage. We are concerned as a caucus and a government about seniors and other vulnerable people in the population who not only have no access to ongoing coverage but often have to choose between paying for drugs and other necessities of life in order to support their independence. That's not right, that's not the way Alberta works, and that's not a situation this government is willing to tolerate.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you. Also to the minister: how can you say that reducing the generic drug prices will not affect anyone in the rural pharmacies in northern Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've never said that the reduction in generic drug prices, as it has across the country, would not affect particular business models for pharmacists. In fact, as part of the $95 million in transition funding we currently have a $15 million fund to support rural and remote pharmacists across this province in transitioning to the new model. The coming fiscal year will see year 2 of the program. It will continue after that. We're working with the Pharmacists Association of Alberta to make sure the eligibility criteria for this program are actually meeting the needs of those pharmacists most affected.

Mr. Anglin: Access to rural pharmacists is a good way to provide and manage care. Due to poorly drafted regulatory changes, the pharmacy funding model is destroying a rural pharmacy's ability to recover costs. Some pharmacy fees have been frozen for six years, and the rural pharmacy access grant program fails to offset financial losses. The new funding model put in place by this government is backfiring. Why does this government seem so anxious to drive rural pharmacies out of business?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. No government in Canada that I'm aware of has done more to support pharmacists, including rural pharmacists, to transition to a place where they are full partners in the delivery of health care in Alberta and recognized as the professionals that they are. I can tell you that as recently as last night I had a teleconference with many stakeholders in pharmacy across the province. Many rural pharmacists were part of that call. We're continuing to work with them to allocate the $10 million in funding that has been dedicated to support them in transitioning to the new model. We'll continue to work with their association to make best use of those dollars.

Mr. Anglin: Pharmacists say that they have not been consulted in good faith. This government says that it's consulting. Why should Albertans trust this government given this government's trail of broken promises and its questionable history of not telling the truth?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, hardly a question of government policy, but I'll reiterate for the hon. member that this government has provided over $95 million in transitional funding to support the move to the new pharmacy services framework. This framework was not designed by the government; it was designed by the pharmacy profession across this province. It represents the dedication on their part to playing a greater role in the delivery of health care. It also represents a commitment to transition business models from the traditional dispensing-fee approach to one where we compensate people for the professional services they can provide. This is the direction of the future. It's well supported by the profession, and we stick by it.

Mr. Anglin: Bleak future.

Given that the freeze on utility costs has just been lifted – defrosted, so to speak – and utility bills are now expected to rise, how can a local rural pharmacist be expected to pay these inflated utility bills and stay open for business to serve their communities when the failed regulations of this government prevent pharmacists from recovering their costs?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, it takes quite a stretch to connect drugs with electricity, but only this member could do that. It is crystal clear and it was crystal clear back in January when, we made the announcement, that the impact upon all consumers, including pharmacists, is actually exceedingly marginal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Métis Settlements Agreement

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1990 I was proud as an MLA to have been involved in a historical settlement between Métis settlements and the Alberta government called the accord. This provided Métis with land, a governance structure, and limited years of funding. Today I was in another historic moment, and that was the signing of another agreement for a long-term governance and funding arrangement and partnership with the Métis settlements, called the LTA. It took a long time in negotiations. Would the Minister of Aboriginal Relations please provide clarity on this new agreement for all Albertans?

Mr. Campbell: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to say that the Premier and I did sign a long-term agreement with the Métis settlements. I think the important part to remember is that while these are strong Métis people and strong with their heritage, they're also strong Albertans. When we sat down to look at the long-term governance agreement, we understood that we had to work together to actually bring together the socioeconomic gap between Albertans and Métis settlements, and this governance agreement is about that. It's about governance, bringing accountability and openness to the governance structure. It's about essential services. It's about building infrastructure. It's about providing economic opportunities both on settlement and off settlement. We're very proud to work with the Métis settlements.

Ms Calahasen: To the same minister: given that we have many skeptics, how do we ensure that we are going to get value for the dollars invested with these Métis settlements?

Mr. Campbell: Well, again, thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, what's great and important about this document is that the Métis Settlements General Council and the negotiating committees came to us and said: "Listen. We want to be part of the solution." So when we put this document together and negotiated the terms of it, there are benchmarks in place that the Métis settlements will reach as we move forward and provide the funding. You know, it's important for people to realize that the leaders of the Métis settlements have thought outside the box and taken a very big step moving forward in making sure that their communities are part of the solution.

Ms Calahasen: Again to the same minister: does the long-term arrangement impact governance and accountability on settlements? Some of my Métis members are worried that it may not.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I said earlier, the biggest part of this agreement is the strength in governance and accountability on the settlements. This is an important aspect of the agreement. We will work together to clearly define the roles and responsibilities of councils, improve financial management and transparency, and build government capacity. This will be done in partnership with the Métis general council, and that's the most important part of this agreement. It is a partnership, and it is a working agreement. We will continue to work with the Métis settlements over the next 10 years to bring them to where they want to be as true partners in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Surgical Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The latest surgical performance measures continue to shed light on Alberta Health Services' failure to improve basic surgical wait times. For example, semi-urgent hernias, shoulder surgeries, knee repairs still wait months for repair. As our population grows, so do our wait-lists. There's no relief in sight coming out of this latest budget. These unnecessary delays not only cost the health system more; they lead to lost productivity, increased suffering, and have dire long-term consequences. To the minister: given that hips, knees, and cataracts are not the only surgical needs, are you simply creating the conditions for more private options such as the failed Health Resource Centre in Calgary?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, part of the answer to the hon. member's question was found within his question, and that is the fact that this province continues to grow, by over 100,000 people this year, and the demands on our health care system increase accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing the hon. member ignores is the great improvements that have been made in waiting times for many high-demand elective procedures across the province. This hasn't been a function of the budget; it has been a function of the dedicated professionals in Alberta Health Services organizing care differently, using evidence to identify clinical pathways that deliver better outcomes. That's the type of improvement that this government is pursuing.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this minister seems to be surprised that Alberta is growing still. How many years have we been growing and not planning for increased needs in our population? Apart from a few notable exceptions, wait times for surgical procedures have not improved. What is plan B?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems confused as to whether he wants to talk about money or whether he wants to talk about improvements in the health care system by being open to doing things differently. Fortunately, Alberta has had both. Budget 2013 provided for a 3 per cent increase in health spending. This is on top of an average 9 per cent increase in health spending over the last 10 years. At the same time we're seeing advances in areas like depression and access to lung cancer surgery. These things are the result of supporting the people that deliver care and allowing them to make the improvements in the way they best see fit.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, we're still not seeing the changes in community care services, seniors getting into the appropriate placement, home-care services, and recent examples once again show that the PC government is forcing Albertans into private care clinics. Why won't you stand up for citizens as opposed to the privateers?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's this hon. member that insists on making ideology around providers an issue in health care. The fact of the matter is that we're focused on actual improvements in our system, as I've said, by supporting our system with above-average financial growth compared to the rest of the country and also by focusing on improvements for which the hon. member should frankly give Alberta Health Services credit. We've seen many reductions in overall wait times. We're seeing a continued move of more services to the community through primary care networks, through family care clinics, and through increased home care for seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans would be surprised to learn that while this year's Education budget is effectively frozen, the budget that directs public money to private schools has increased by more than 5 per cent. Factoring in growth, the public education budget is, in fact, a cut that will result in larger class sizes, staff layoffs, and possible school closures on the public side, but then there is a healthy increase of public money to finance private schools. How can the Education minister possibly justify this?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, private schools are providing kids in Alberta with great choices and great options, and they should be celebrated and not condemned. Yes, funding for private schools went up because enrolment is going up, simply because of that, just like in the public system. In fact, we've seen a huge spike in enrolment, and 70 per cent of the funding increases to the private schools are going to the early childhood services operators, so the pre-K.

You know what? I encourage the member to actually visit some of the private schools before writing them off as posh boarding schools, like Inner City high right here in Edmonton, that serves students who are at risk of not completing high school; or Elves Special Needs Society, that provides programs for children with severe disabilities. That's the face of private schools in Alberta, and we'll continue to support them.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this budget increases public money to private early childhood education by a very substantial 11.6 per cent, how can the minister justify this generous increase to private kindergarten and early childhood education while breaking his promise to provide the option of full-day kindergarten in the public education system?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, just let me get this straight. The member wants us to stop funding projects like the Janus Academy in Calgary, that supports autistic students who need specialized supports, or the Calgary Quest school, that supports kids who are too medically fragile for large public schools. [interjections] What about the schools that are focused on religion? No funding for them either? [interjections] Just to be clear, the hon. member supports diversity; he just doesn't want us to fund it.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and Edmonton-Strathcona, we were doing reasonably well. These interjections: really, let's cut them out because each time I stand up, I take five or 10 seconds off someone else's time. You know that I'm trying to get more members up for questions, not fewer.

Hon. member, next question.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To suggest that is entirely dishonest and spurious. You should include those programs in the public system.

Given this minister's decision to continue to use public financing for private schools while cutting public education, can the minister tell us why this sorry and deeply ironic Education budget is anything but a slap in the face to students, parents, and staff who rely on the public, not private, education system?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that this is a challenging budget for everyone. Let's be clear that there are funding cuts on envelopes and decreases on envelopes to the public system and the private system. The increases that are going into the public system and the increases in the private system are driven by the same thing, and it's simply enrolment increases.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I think where we disagree is that we both respect diversity; it's just that they don't believe we should fund it. They respect diversity as long as everyone is getting the same education. Well, that's not diversity. Every child is different, and we need to provide different options and choices for different children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Ground Ambulance Services

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to just take a moment to mention that the school I introduced is here now.

The Wheatland and Adjacent Districts Emergency Medical Services Association was created by a number of municipalities and has received an average of over 3,000 emergency calls per year for the last 25 years. Despite the AHS superboard's lavish bonuses, waste, and abuse, they recently chose to cut WADMSA's essential front-line service contract by half a million dollars. To the Minister of Health: given that this cut will make carrying on operations next to impossible, why is he targeting front-line services rather than executive waste as a place to find savings in the health budget?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect to Wheatland county and emergency medical services there, as the hon. member knows, the government just received and responded to a report of the Health Quality Council on improvement of ground ambulance services across the province. That report mentioned specifically and delved specifically into issues that municipalities are facing in looking at ways that we can build the strong provincial ground ambulance system that we all want while still making best use of all of the resources that are available across the province in rural and urban Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the balance of the hon. member's question we are cutting waste in the system and will continue to.

The Speaker: And we'll hear more soon, I'm sure.

Mr. Hale: Given that this government always strong-arms stakeholders, will the minister explain how this very efficient agency can provide the same quality of service with a much smaller budget, or is this local service being degraded to help cover Calgary's EMS budget shortfalls, putting my residents in Strathmore-Brooks at risk?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear about the policy direction in Alberta with respect to ground ambulance services. We made a decision – a number of members in this House participated in a debate – about moving to a provincial emergency medical services system a number of years ago. The benefits have been well discussed in this House, including the ability to provide backup services for small communities in the event that their ambulances are involved in interfacility transfer or supporting larger cities. The commitment to a centralized approach to ground ambulance service delivery continues. We're not interested in going back to the 1960s and 1970s era, when every municipality was left to fend for themselves.

Mr. Hale: Mr. Speaker, given this government's obsession with centralizing services and given the ridiculous claim that maps are enough to address the serious concerns of dispatchers with little or no local knowledge, why is the minister willing to endanger lives by cutting out local EMS dispatchers, who live in and know our communities?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member by this time, I would hope, would understand the importance of central dispatch to the success of our provincial system for ground ambulance services. The very fact that municipalities that run dispatch services and other dispatch providers are out of the system does not allow for a province-wide approach to management of our ground ambulance fleet. That very well can mean that communities in the hon. member's own constituency could be left without coverage. The answer is clear. The report makes it clear. We need to move to central dispatch for this province to provide Albertans with the quality of ground ambulance service they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Little Bow.

Teacher Administrative Workload

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former teacher I understand all too well the workload challenges facing teachers. In particular, I often hear from teachers in my community about the increasing amount of paperwork that they're expected to do on behalf of their students. I know the Minister of Education has recently worked with a group of teachers to try to reduce this paperwork burden, but I am concerned changes will take way too long. To the Minister of Education: I know you were talking about improving workload, but what have you actually changed to reduce the unnecessary paperwork process for our great teachers in this province?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, our teachers in this province do work hard, and we want to make sure that they stay focused on the task that matters, and that's our kids and their learning. Our desire to reduce the adminis-trivia in the business is genuine.

We've been reaching out to teachers recently and got some great information from the e-mails back and from a visit to teachers in Lac La Biche. Several have mentioned that they've got a lot of unneeded paperwork with respect to diploma exams and accommodations. So we worked with teachers. We brought a whole bunch into this building, spent a day with a facilitator in my department, and we fixed it. They've designed the new process, re-engineered that for us, and we're going to roll that out, some of it in June and the rest next year.

Mrs. Leskiw: To the same minister: why aren't all these changes coming into effect immediately? Why the two-part staging?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this is coming from the people that have to work with it on a day-to-day basis, who specifically requested a phased-in approach. We've respected that. Some of it is going to happen this June, the rest is going to be brought in halfway, and we'll have it fully commissioned for the next school year.

Mrs. Leskiw: My final question is again to the same minister. How will these changes make it easier for constituents like mine, who need these supports and were growing frustrated with the process?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, I think the most important thing is that the kids on the ground, the students, aren't going to see any difference. It's going to be completely transparent to them. Once all the changes are made, the schools will see a 90 per cent reduction in the number of diploma exam accommodation requests that are required. The intent is that this is going to take a lot of unneeded paperwork off the plates of teachers and administrators on the ground. It's not going to create any extra issues for students or parents. Maybe it's something that we should've done a long time ago, but we're going to do it now.

Agriculture and Rural Development Staff Levels

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, in this back-in-debt budget tabled Thursday, the government decided to cut staff of Alberta Ag by 30 people. Will the minister clarify which positions were eliminated? Were they front-line workers, middle managers, or senior bureaucrats?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There were, indeed, 30 cuts in my department, but I want to stress that even with these cuts we feel well able to manage the responsibilities that the department has. There were actually 10 positions that were empty positions, not occupied at the time. There were 20 positions that were made up of 17 in my department, middle managers, mostly people in Edmonton, and three people at AFSC in Lacombe.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we're living in the red and living in the pink-slip times and considering the costly price of severances for managers and bureaucrats, how exactly did you determine who would get the pink slips and who wouldn't?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, my deputy minister manages the department. Those types of decisions are made there. I don't know the names of the people who were given their notice. That's not a policy question. That's a question that could come in estimates, perhaps.

Mr. Donovan: All right. Well, I can't wait for estimates.

With this government so committed to cutting and making such a huge cut in this department, actually dropping 30 positions out of the more than 1,600, did the minister ever consider cutting the completely political position held in this department by the former minister and defeated candidate Evan Berger?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, here we go again with this preoccupation with Evan Berger. I'm interested that the opposition has four failed candidates working for their caucus, and I want to just remind the hon. member that the Ethics Commissioner approved of this hiring of Evan Berger. He's doing great work for our department.

The Speaker: We're going to look into the appropriateness of mentioning names, as I mentioned earlier – we just repeated that again – and if there are special categories of people that should be exempt or not. Just so you know, that's all being researched. Meanwhile let's move on.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Public Native Grasslands

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2010 the Premier, responding to widespread public opposition, cancelled a request for a proposal on development of 25 square miles of native mixed-grass prairie rangeland north of Bow Island. In the spring of 2012 the Brewin ranch near Purple Springs was purchased by a new owner, including three sections of native prairie Crown grazing lease. However, it appears, according to reports, that the new owners are trying to acquire freehold title to that Crown land by trading it for freehold land in order to plow it under. My questions are for the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Is the government planning to sell or swap three sections of Crown grazing lease lands for private lands near Purple Springs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You and I know that Alberta's public lands are really an integral part of this province and the heritage of this province, and we have a rigorous application process that must go through for land sales and exchanges. We are aware that an interest has been expressed in obtaining land near Purple Springs. However, at this time government has not received an application to purchase or exchange grazing lease lands near Purple Springs.

Dr. Brown: Will the government ensure that qualified professional biologists will conduct assessments on any grazing lease lands and any land which may be proposed to be swapped for them?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Land sales or exchange proposals are reviewed by resource management specialists, including biologists from our ministry, and as you know, biologists play an essential role because they help determine if an exchange offers a net benefit. Government has not received an application, as I said, to purchase or exchange grazing lease lands near Purple Springs.

Dr. Brown: Will the government support the policy of no net loss for public native grasslands in southern Alberta? Yes or no.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we recognize the value of native lands, prairie lands, and we support its protection on public land through existing policy and legislation. The South Saskatchewan regional plan encompasses a large portion of native grasslands, and the plan will ensure that the preservation of native prairie remains a priority for this government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds we'll commence with Members' Statements, but might we have your permission to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of home-schoolers from St. Paul and Lac La Biche. It is encouraging for the Official Opposition to see, visit, and listen to families from the home-schooling community, and I will definitely say that we will continue to stand up and advocate for choice and parent-driven education policy in Alberta. I would ask that each of you stand up as I say your name. First, the Spiess family: Glenn, Susan, MaryAnne, Maximilian, Benedict. Then the Schalin family: Pam, Naomi, Brannon, Donovan, Justin, and Morgan. I would ask that my guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, did you wish to put something on the record about your guests?

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The guests that I introduced from the Brooks high school before my question are here now, so I'd just like them to rise and receive the warm traditional greeting.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements, starting with the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Members' Statements

Transition of Michener Centre Residents

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday's news that Red Deer's Michener Centre will close and that its residents will be relocated was devastating for the community in more ways than one, devastating, of course, because moving 125 developmentally disabled adults out of familiar surroundings and away from loved ones is never a desirable course of action but also devastating in how it was handled: no consultations, no discussions, not even a courtesy heads-up. When the budget dropped, so did this bombshell: 125 residents, their families, and all the staff blindsided with absolutely no plan for where they all would go. Now, the minister said that families could not be notified because it was a budget decision. What a cold and callous way to justify their actions, Mr. Speaker. These residents aren't a line item on a budget, and they deserve better.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, this isn't the first such instance of erratic, seemingly arbitrary decisions in health care. Just this summer the government abruptly pulled the plug on the Little Bow continuing care centre in Carmangay, forcing 18 dementia patients out of their homes against doctors' orders and away from their families – several of them have already since died – despite the facility meeting all 12 compliance standards stipulated by AHS just three months prior. Now here we are, almost a year later: another blindsided by this government against our most vulnerable citizens. Just like Carmangay, the residents of Michener are being forced out with nowhere to go.

Now, the minister is saying in the paper today in his quote that he is “fraught with worry” about what will happen to Michener residents once they are moved. I appreciate the minister’s concern. However, I dare say that he owes everyone, especially the residents of Michener, an explanation on how this decision was taken despite his serious reservations. Then again, as we’ve seen before, maybe this is just the way things are done. Shoot first; ask questions later.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Canadian Agricultural Safety Week

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From March 10 to 16 we recognize Canadian Agricultural Safety Week. As we all know, agriculture is part of the foundation of this province and our largest renewable resource industry. Each and every year we celebrate Agricultural Safety Week as a way to raise awareness, but the truth is that farm safety needs to be a year-round priority. My father was involved in a farming accident involving a grain auger, and I know firsthand how important a safety plan is not only to avoid risks but for what to do should an accident occur.

This year the Canadian Agricultural Safety Association’s theme for farm safety week is Get with the Plan! We are urging all producers, farm workers, communities, and organizations to develop written health and safety plans to identify hazards and control them.

Our government is committed to working on initiatives that promote a culture of safety on our farms. Our farm safety coordinators work hard across this province on assessment improvement and the further development of farm safety systems. We also work with organizations such as 4-H and agricultural societies to enhance awareness of farm safety. Education, awareness, and planning are the keys to making sure our farms are safe.

To kick off Canadian Agricultural Safety Week, Agriculture and Rural Development has teamed up with Health Services to provide a fun, interactive health and safety learning environment for kids of all ages at the Peace Country Classic Agri-Show in Grande Prairie. People can always go to Agriculture and Rural Development’s website to access the latest documents and links on farm safety.

I encourage all Albertans to consider the role they have in farm safety and to look for ways to participate in their community, whether by implementing a farm safety plan or by teaching our children how to play safely on the farm. Farm safety needs to be a year-round commitment for everyone, and this week is a good reminder of that commitment.

Budget 2013 Benefits

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m very pleased to have this opportunity to stand and recognize this year’s historic provincial budget and speak to what it means for our future and take a moment to make note of what it means for my constituency of Edmonton-South West. Investing in families and communities has always been a fundamental principle of this PC government. If we are to ever worry about our future, then we must look at what we do today and how it impacts the upbringing of our children as they are our future.

I can think of nowhere else that speaks to the importance and payoff of this than in the communities of Edmonton-South West. I am proud to call these communities home. Our communities are comprised of new families and the young children that will propel Alberta into the future. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, the well-being and education of our children and the quality of the environment in which they are raised are of the utmost importance to our future. We hold ourselves to a very serious commitment to our children, and this budget reflects that.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that our Education budget has set us on the right path for building up a strong future for young Albertans and the province they will come to shape. Although some tough decisions had to be made and some restraints taken, it is important that our children have access to the facilities and learning spaces that will allow them to be successful. This budget proves that this PC government remains dedicated to making the important infrastructure needs in Edmonton-South West happen. The future belongs to those who prepare for it today, and for me, with the future I envision and that many of the families in Edmonton-South West envision, this budget ensures success for our future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Trust in Government

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has a way with words. In 2011 she said that she’d bring transparency and accountability to her post. She wants an energy strategy and sustainable development. She says that she wants dialogue and conversation, and anyone who questions her must be extreme or ideological. The Premier is a fan of buzzwords. She manages to devalue these words so much every time she says them that they sound like white noise. These words mean nothing coming from her.

Let’s stop the buzzwords, political jargon, and lawyerly language for a moment and take a look at the Premier’s actions and words. She’s broken fixed election dates, balanced budgets, and no debt. She’s broken all of them. She’s promised to raise the bar on accountability, but her government is just as antidemocratic as her predecessors’.

Look at this year’s budget estimates. A process that usually takes a month is now going to be crammed into just 10 days. That’s 477 pages of detailed financial information that the opposition is now expected to read, analyze, and scrutinize in less than two weeks.

Mr. Speaker, this Premier has a habit of saying one thing and doing another, and she uses it to escape accountability at every turn. Lawyers, after all, are taught that every position is defensible. While the opposition comes prepared every day to engage in real debate to advance the province, the Premier is stuck on talking points and political jargon. Albertans are sick of it.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are the real heroes in this province, not the government, and they are neither extreme nor ideological. They can tell when they’re being misled, and you know what? They don’t like it. Maybe that’s why more and more Albertans are losing trust in this government every single day. Regardless, the Premier would do well to stop mincing her words and start actually sticking to them.

The Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I want to thank him for allowing us to change the batting order today for private members’ statements. Some people had an urgency to leave sooner than later, and you were gracious enough to go last, and I just wanted that noted. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you for the kind words, Mr. Speaker.

Fraud Prevention Month

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to draw attention to Fraud Prevention Month. This is another example of a commitment to build safe and strong communities. On a fundamental level the purpose of prevention programs is to raise the awareness of citizens' role before, during, and after a fraud. It is important to emphasize prevention, mitigation, and loss avoidance. By making citizens more aware and involving them, citizens are the stakeholders in their own assets.

While there are several forms of fraud, what it means to every victim is loss. We are seeing a widening gap between these victims' losses and the fraudsters' ability to separate these victims from their assets. It can take its toll on a person's credit rating, finances, and personal life. Our government, crime prevention partners, and law enforcement are working to reduce fraud.

Mr. Speaker, we have the Edmonton Police Service economic crime section, the auto theft unit, and some of their partners here with us today. I'd like to thank them for taking the time from work and travelling to be here with us.

Let me outline the facts. Fraud is a large and growing problem in Canada. It is estimated that approximately 1 million Canadians are victims of mass marketing fraud and identity theft in Canada annually, at a cost of about $10 billion. Nearly 80 per cent of mass marketing fraud using the telephone, mail, or Internet can reach a large pool of potential victims. It is conducted by organized crime groups and is currently the second most common criminal activity funding terrorist activities.

Despite the pervasiveness of the problem 9 in 10 Canadians do not speak to anyone about fraud. Fewer than 5 per cent of fraud victims contact the Canadian Anti-Fraud Centre to report the offence. In 2011 the CAFC reported that e-mail, Internet, and texting were the most common solicitation methods, and these methods resulted in the highest dollar loss by Canadian victims.

I want to take this opportunity to invite my legislative colleagues on both sides of the House to support this initiative.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood or someone on behalf of. Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of e-mail submissions that Albertans made to our prebudget tour, which visited seven cities in the last few weeks. Tina, Mathew, and Stephanie are some of the Albertans who provided interesting input. For example, Stephanie would like this PC government to ensure that oil companies pay their fair share for resources and pay the full cost of cleaning up after themselves. Submissions like this clearly show the priorities of Albertans and how out of touch this PC government actually is with its broken-promises budget.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. I have the appropriate number of copies of all of them. The first one is an evaluation of the summer temporary employment program, the only one I was able to find. It was completed in 1972, the last completed evaluation of this program.

Moving on to my next tabling, there is an RFP, a request for proposal, for a similar review of STEP from October of last fall. This review wanted to determine the value and impact on stakeholders and the value to students. This review was, we believe, suspended before its completion, before this budget was released by this government.

Also, Mr. Speaker, today I met with a number of students from the Alberta Students' Executive Council. They are concerned with proposed cuts to secondary education and how this budget hinders the future economic growth of this province. I am tabling their document for the record.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to table some documents that have come to me in the form of letters and e-mails from concerned citizens in my riding that express a view diametrically different from the one expressed by the hon. Minister of Health regarding rural ambulance service as well as the impact of the budget on pharmacists and the patients who rely on the local rural pharmacists for the important care that they receive. I have the requisite number of copies here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an e-mail dated March 10 of this year from Andrew DeGruchy. The individual is from Cold Lake. He's asking that the government suspend the relocation decision, consult with the doctors and affected communities, and states that "there is no need to be rushing the medevac changes – especially when lives are at stake." I have the requisite copies.

I also have a second tabling, an e-mail dated March 11 of this year from Jon Knutson from Lac La Biche, who's indicating that where minutes count, rerouting would take additional hours, and he's urging the government to reconsider the relocation of the medevac services. I have the requisite copies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Redford, the Premier, pursuant to the Public Service Act the corporate human resources annual report 2011-2012.

Statement by the Speaker

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go to Orders of the Day, a polite reminder that tomorrow I do intend to proceed with what I called yesterday an experiment, and that is to review how preambles do or do not fit ahead of supplementary questions. I am prepared to grant some leeway to opposition leaders, obviously, but to the rest of you, please be reminded that tomorrow your preambles must not appear before a supplementary question if at all possible. I'll be a little concerned and lenient as well, but we're trying to shorten up the time it takes so that we can get to more members.

Typically, if you take 35 seconds for a question and 35 seconds for an answer, you're going to wind up with about a three-and-a-half-minute exchange per item, and that takes us to about 15 members. We should be getting up to about 16, 17. We used to do that, and we're going to try and get there through some means if we can. That's what I'd like us to try tomorrow, please, and I seek your co-operation today in preparing yourselves for that tomorrow.

Government Motions
Provincial Fiscal Policies

28. Mr. Horner moved:
 Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate March 7: Mr. Saskiw]

The Speaker: I have the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills ceding to the Leader of the Official Opposition. Please proceed.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise for the first time to give an official budget response. But I have to say that it does make me want to reminisce a little bit about when I first started getting involved in politics and when I first started looking at budgets for not only the province but also the federal government. It was back when I was Progressive Conservative. Back in 1992-93 I was a campus club president at the University of Calgary, and it was a pretty . . .

Mr. Hancock: Redemption is still possible.

Ms Smith: Well, I'll tell you my path to becoming a Wildroser because I think that probably some of the members opposite are probably going through the same kind of thinking that caused me to go down this path. I just want to walk through this.

When I was a campus club president, it was pretty exciting because we had five elections that year. There was a provincial leadership race, a federal leadership race, there was the Charlottetown accord, a federal election, and a provincial election. Of course, at the federal level I was a Charest delegate, went to Ottawa. It was a pretty exciting time.

But one of the things that I became frustrated about in the 1993 election, having been a campus club president and trying to argue about why the Mulroney deficit and the Mulroney spending were justified, was some of the crazy talking points that we were given from the federal counterparts, that they had slowed the rate of year-over-year increases in spending from the previous administration. No longer were they increasing operational spending at 14 per cent per year; it had now been decreased to 9 per cent per year. Somehow we were supposed to argue that that was an improvement.

They also sent talking points to argue about the difference between an operational surplus versus an overall surplus and why it was okay that they were overspending because they were actually running an operational surplus. So if you didn't include the amount that you had to pay for interest, then things were actually okay, when meanwhile, of course, debt-financing charges were continuing to consume a greater and greater portion of the overall amount of operational spending. I have to tell you that it was pretty demoralizing to be a federal Progressive Conservative in those times.

Then I remember 1994, when the Liberal government brought through their very first budget. It was very close for us hitting the debt wall at that time, you may recall. At that time we were at a point where we almost could not flow our national bonds because we were so indebted as a nation. There was an upstart party from Alberta, the Reform Party, led by Preston Manning. Listening to him really resonated with me. I think it's no small compliment and no small feat what the Reform Party was able to accomplish under Preston Manning's leadership. I think Preston Manning probably is the reason why the federal Liberals at the time finally managed to go back into surpluses within a couple of years. They pressed the government to go in the right direction, and year after year after year they were able to run surpluses.

Now, they weren't the only government that was doing this, the Liberals in 1995, becoming a government that was offering surpluses. They had allies in the west. In western Canada the NDP government of Manitoba and the NDP government of Saskatchewan were also running surplus budgets. They had also realized how important it was to have balanced budgets even though they were NDP. Now, of course, they did it the same way the Liberals did, by increasing taxes.

But I would say that one of the other big allies for the Reform Party to be able to have that influence at the national level was, of course, Premier Ralph Klein, the Progressive Conservative Premier of Alberta. He took a different approach. When he was running for the leadership of the Progressive Conservatives in 1992, he gave an historic speech in Leduc where he talked about the three things that he wanted to do if he became Progressive Conservative leader. He had a passion and a vision even before he actually won the leadership. He said that he wanted to balance the budget without raising taxes – so not raising taxes was the important part – he wanted to make sure that they were in surplus and managed to maintain surpluses, and he wanted to pay off the debt. His three big promises, his big vision based on those three major objectives.

It galvanized the province. The province got behind him. They were excited about the idea that we would put aside the $23 billion worth of debt that had been racked up by previous administrations during hard economic times in some cases, for certain, and also because resource revenues were off – that is certain – and because of a flawed approach to support a number of different business ventures on this failed idea that governments could somehow diversify the economy by taking our tax dollars to do it.

Premier Klein had a very different idea about how Alberta should be run, and I think Albertans bought into that idea. It was very exciting during that time. It's part of the reason why I was proud at the time to be supportive of that party. I think the proudest day for me was when Klein put that sign over his head back in 2004 during the Calgary Stampede that Alberta's debt had been paid in full. What a remarkable thing to see a politician who set out with three objectives and kept every single one of his promises. He didn't raise taxes. In fact, he reduced them significantly. He did return us to surpluses year after year after year. He did end up paying off the debt by putting enough money in the debt-repayment account so that as it became due, he would be able to pay it off completely.

I noticed some worrying signs shortly after that occurred. I remember going back through some of the columns that I had written back when I was at the Calgary Herald and then onward when I was with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. I've been analyzing government budgets for some time. The signs of worry actually began for me about a decade ago, and that was when we began to see, once we had met this target, that the rules were starting to be played with a little bit. We used to have legislated rules about how much money had to go towards debt repayment and how much money could go into spending. My recollection of it is that at the time 75 per cent had to be earmarked for debt repayment and only 25 per cent could be used for current spending.

Well, of course, once they started getting closer and closer to achieving that target, it was time to change the legislation. I was worried about what would happen when it came through, so I wrote columns at the time about that. One of the things that they came through with – and I think this was a Liberal Party idea – was the idea of having a sustainability fund and creating a new fiscal model now that we were into a new generation, having been debt free. Again, once that first came through, I thought that it was a pretty good idea, the notion that government would have a contingency fund that they would set up to be able to shield them against short-term fluctuations as well as to also, then, have some disciplined approach to how they would be managing future surpluses.

When that sustainability fund model first came in, the recommendation was that the government should take no more than $3.5 billion worth of resource revenue for current operational spending. No more than $3.5 billion. That was the idea when the sustainability fund model first came in. Not a bad idea. The way they came up with that number was that they looked at the historic average of what resource revenues would be and they wanted to make sure that they were always below that level so that if there was a moment or a year or two where you might have some fluctuations, you would be able to rely on your contingency fund, your sustainability account, to see you through one or two years.

Now, imagine if 10 years ago the Progressive Conservatives had actually stayed true to that commitment when they first passed that legislation, especially during this last boom, if they had managed to stay true to only keeping $3.5 billion a year in resource revenue for operational spending. In the past 10 years we've brought in over $100 billion worth of resource revenue. What that would have meant is that there only would have been a third of that brought into operational spending, which means two-thirds of that would have gone into the sustainability fund, topped it up, and then, beyond that, into the heritage fund.

What is so compelling about this thought is that if we could go back and do it all over again from 10 years ago, where would we actually be today?

Ms Smith: It's true. It would be like Alaska. It would be like Norway.

What we would have, actually, is $100 billion to $150 billion worth of revenue in that fund. And guess what it would be doing? It would be generating at least $7 billion to $8 billion per year worth of ongoing, sustainable investment income, which would actually be enough to fill this revenue gap that we often hear the Premier talking about.

Just having made a couple of smart decisions 10 years ago, look where we would be today. We wouldn't be talking about a revenue gap. We wouldn't be talking about how we are still victim of the rise and fall in volatile resource revenues. We would actually be on the sustainable path that the founder of the party opposite, the Hon. Peter Lougheed, had intended for us when he started off the heritage savings trust fund in the first place. But the government ignored the advice that was given. They ignored their own policy. They ignored their own law. That's what happens when laws get in the way, that are inconvenient to what the government does. They pass them at the time because they want to do it because it appears popular, and then when it becomes difficult to do, rather than make the difficult decisions, they just change the law.

We saw this happen again when Premier Stelmach came in. Initially I was actually quite hopeful because he talked about – I think he probably saw some of the same things I did – the need for more discipline in managing budgets and surpluses. He talked about how the in-year spending was becoming part of the reason why the government wasn't able to meet some of its commitments. He actually came up with a new plan: one-third for infrastructure, one-third for maintenance, and one-third for savings. That would be how he would divide up year-end budget surpluses. Great idea.

An election came and went, and then, of course, in 2008 we saw that there was a surge in oil prices. In that exuberance the Finance minister at the time announced that there would be $19 billion worth of resource revenue that would come in that year. Nineteen billion dollars. As a result, Premier Stelmach threw those promises out the window, threw his model out the window, and came up with a plan to put $2 billion into the unfunded liability for the teachers' fund, $2 billion into carbon capture and storage, and $2 billion into the GreenTRIP fund, spending money he didn't have before it was actually realized, one of the things he promised during his leadership that he would not do.

That was it for me when I saw that there was absolutely no discipline in the management of the province's finances, when I saw the direction that this government was going. Sure enough, at the end of that year was the first deficit, the first of what is now six deficits and, unfortunately, the first of what are prolonged structural deficits that this government has no idea how it's going to get out of. That was my path to deciding that I could no longer support the Progressive Conservatives and needed to do something, needed to join the Wildrose.

Aside from that, let's remember what happened. That was also the time that Mr. Stelmach started his war on our energy industry. That was when he came through with the new royalty framework, which shattered investor confidence at a time when he should have been working with our industry to make the case internationally about how we were developing the resource in a way that was environmentally responsible, about why we needed pipelines to be able to get our product out to markets because we're a landlocked province. All of that work needed to start five years ago when, unfortunately, the leader of the government and his ministers were at war with their industry. It was the time that they needed to be doing that groundwork because now here we are today. We find ourselves five years behind at least on being able to make the case to get these pipelines approved.

Now, I'm very hopeful. I'm glad the Premier is doing some work in Washington and writing columns to be able to support the Keystone pipeline. That's exactly what the Premier should do. I'm glad that she's working with colleagues in Saskatchewan as well as our federal counterparts to push that ahead. But it's not a done deal. If you talk to people in the industry, they're actually thinking that there's a 50-50 chance that it might not get approved. I hope that's not the case. I hope that we can make the case to our international friends and customers that we are developing this resource in a way that has less and less impact on the environment so that they will approve our pipeline.

But I think it points to what happens when you make bad decisions and the economic consequences roll out from that years later. We are suffering today from bad decisions that were made in some cases 10 years ago and in some cases five years ago. Now it's going to take five to 10 years for us to be able to build the pipelines, get our product to market, close those differentials, realize the higher prices, get more resource revenue. We are stuck with dealing with the environment that we have today and the revenues that we have today. The question is: what is the PC leadership now going to do about it?

Well, I have to say that when I watched the PC leadership race back in 2011, I was watching to see what some of the candidates would be promising in their election platform. I have to say that there was one candidate who, if I had ticked off the boxes of the number of policies that she proposed that were actually out of the Wildrose playbook, would have had the most number of policies that coincided with what it was that the Wildrose wanted to do.

Mr. Anderson: Who was that?

Ms Smith: That person is the current Premier, who's remarkable to see. I've often said that if she did everything that she said she'd do, she would be a formidable leader and she would be leading a formidable government. Yet she's not. Yet she's not.

Let me tell you. I mean, this is a member's statement that I probably could have read in my first days in the Legislature. Let me read this to you because it tells you just how far the evolution of this Premier has gone since Monday, October 24, 2011.

We have all heard of the crises in Europe. Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams. Many European countries are struggling with debt burdens that in some cases exceed a hundred per cent of GDP. Those unfortunate nations spent too much and took in too little. Now they are faced with hard choices: raise taxes and kill jobs, cut spending and devastate the social safety net, or both. Their citizens are paying the price. The homes they loved have changed beyond all recognition.

Alberta has no net debt. In fact, we have $5,700 in assets per person and the highest credit rating available. We have the lowest overall taxes in Canada. We have disciplined spending priorities and no long-term debt. We are blessed with a strong economy built on a powerful industrial base and a young population. We have one of the greatest energy sectors in the world. We are better off than many other places, and we have a future anyone else would envy, one this government will work to make better still.

But we can't take this for granted. Good fortune will not fall into our laps because we ask for it or [because we] think we're entitled to it. We have to earn it. We [have to] stay safe from these threats. This government will protect and strengthen our province. We will make it better. We will make the tough decisions. We will spend wisely and save intelligently, managing our finances to protect future Albertans from . . .

You guessed it.

And just to finish:

We will introduce the necessary reforms to make sure that this province keeps growing. There is no other way.

There is no other way than to avoid debt.

Now, that was what the Premier said in October of 2011 after having just won the Progressive Conservative leadership in the months leading up to an election. That, I guess, is what I think most people thought they were voting for when they voted in March, because that is a pretty clear statement. That was the kind of statement she had been making for well over a year or well over six months as she began her campaign.

Then, of course, we see the evolution of the thinking on debt and the comments from the Finance minister, and it begins on Monday, May 28, 2012. As I've said before, we were already concerned that the government's budget estimates were off and that they needed to start taking action to do something about it. At that time a number of questions were asked of Mr. Horner, but one of the things he said on Monday, May 28, was: "We expect that we will be balancing the budget in 2013-14 as we committed, as we promised, Mr. Speaker."

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, careful with the personal names.

Ms Smith: My apologies, Madam Speaker.

On Thursday, May 31, we kept at it, and the Finance minister said then: this "will allow us to finish the year on target in 2013-14 with the balanced budget."

Fast-forward. We got through the summer. October 23: we're back already, and what the Finance minister says is that "our commitment is that it [the budget] will be balanced."

Wednesday, October 24: "As I've said before and I'll say again, we will have a balanced operating plan, [and] a balanced capital plan." This is where we start seeing a little bit of division in the language.

Tuesday, October 30: "In fact, what we've said is that we will balance the budget, and included in that budget will be the funding of our capital plan like any responsible financial manager would do."

As you can see, there's been an evolution in what the government has said, but all the way up to the end of last session they were giving a very strong indication that what we would actually see is a genuine balanced budget and an economic plan that included a capital plan that would be fully funded. That's not what we got. It is remarkable how things have changed in such a couple of short months.

I do have to wonder that if this has been the breaking point for me, it's been a breaking point for a lot of our members here. A lot of our members here at some point in their past did also support the governing party. I just wonder what some of the breaking points are going to be for the members opposite. How can you actually run on one set of priorities and plans and promises and then less than a year later have to go back to those same constituents and be trying to argue that the budget that was put forward was actually part of the plan? That's what I'm sort of having some struggle with, Madam Speaker: wondering how they're facing their constituents, having actually done a complete 180 because that is what has happened on the approach that they've taken to the budget. There has been a complete 180.

If they're not going to listen to me, maybe they're going to listen to some of the commentary that has come out on this budget since it was first passed and first introduced and we started seeing some of the details.

This is Licia Corbella in the Calgary Herald on March 7.

While [the Premier's] government is trying to spin its projected $451-million operational deficit as some kind of modern-day fiscal conservatism, this is sophistry, saying that operational spending "flatlined from the 2012-13 forecast." Everyone knows that last year's pre-election budget was wildly optimistic to the point of being little more than a fairy tale. Holding the line on spending based on the Alison Wonderland budget is utter madness.

Rick Bell, March 8:

Even when it comes to the budget just for day-to-day expenses, the province's operating budget, that set of numbers is also in the red.

The operating budget is also in the red.

They were in the red in the 2012 budget year by $1.4 billion.

We didn't find that out until just recently.

They will be in the red in the 2013 budget year by almost half a billion [dollars].

We haven't seen the province unable to balance their daily expense chequebook like this since back when Ralph took over the reins, pledging to sort out the financial dog's breakfast of that day – and . . .

Let's remember.

. . . doing it.

This is a budget with pain and not a whole lot of gain: Don Braid from the Calgary Herald, March 8.

Finance Minister [blankety-blank] went almost bug-eyed Thursday explaining why one government needs three budgets, and why that should make the finances easier to understand.

Harried finance officials, when pressed, did acknowledge that the "old" system would show a deficit of $1.97 billion in 2013-14.

Horner certainly doesn't deny . . .

Mr. Anderson: Oh. Blankety-blank.

Ms Smith:

[Blankety-blank] certainly doesn't deny that Alberta has a big deficit problem. He claims, though, that the triple-play budgets will produce clarity.

Mark Milke, Calgary Herald, March 8:

Post-1993, the . . . reforms laid out the bare facts, for good or ill, whether flattering to a government or ugly in the light of day.

On a go-forward basis, regardless of whether one wanted higher taxes, less spending, more borrowing or some combination, the books would at least make clear the state of the province's finances.

Post-1993, anyone with rudimentary mathematical skills could glance at a one-page summary, the Historical Fiscal Summary, in the back of the budget and get a clear sense of the provincial finances over the past several decades.

No more.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I think that it would be a good idea if you tabled the documents that you're quoting from, please.

Ms Smith: I certainly will.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: The Calgary Herald editorial, March 7:

. . . [If] John and Jane Q. Public want to know the answer to a series of simple questions: How much money will the government take in in the upcoming budget year; how much money will the government spend; and what's the deficit? The honest answer on Thursday took civil servants at closed-door briefings some time to come up with [the answer]: $6.3 billion.

Graham Thomson, March 8:

We now have a budget that is arguably the most detailed, complex and comprehensive yet delivered in Alberta. It is also arguably the most opaque, obscure and cynical budget yet delivered in Alberta.

For the first time, the budget ignores the size of the overall provincial deficit. This is the number you come up with when you take actual revenues and subtract actual expenses. It's the simple money-in-money-out accounting that the government has used for decades.

Graham Thomson, March 9:

Redford didn't even fulfill the modified promise made just weeks ago to balance the operating side of the budget, which accounts for the day-to-day expenses of government. That deficit will be $451 million.

Lorne Gunter, March 11:

"Besides," he added . . .

This is in talking to a loyal Tory supporter.

. . . "if Alberta weren't a good credit risk, banks wouldn't lend to us."

Oh, wouldn't they? Banks are still lending to Ontario and Quebec, and those provinces' finances may as well have been managed by untutored chimps for the past decade.

They're still lending to Greece, for crying out loud.

The government's own calculation of its deficit is $1.97 billion. But that doesn't include a $4.3-billion [for the] "cash requirement" for infrastructure construction. Since those added billions have to be borrowed, call the deficit $6.3 billion.

And here's the last one. Bev Dahlby, Calgary Herald, March 12:

A case in point is the budget's reference to the new policy of "saving" $5 billion resource revenues by 2016. However, the budget documents forecast that Alberta's net financial assets will [actually] decline from $10.86 billion at the end of March 2013 to [$5.1] billion by March 31, 2016. In effect, we will be "dissaving $5 billion" . . .

And why is that?

. . . because we will be borrowing more than we are squirrelling away in the Heritage Fund and the newly renamed Contingency Fund. It is as if the government is pointing to the money that it is accumulating in its savings account while ignoring the even larger and growing outstanding balance on its credit card. No prudent household would delude itself into [thinking] that it is saving under those conditions. We should expect no less from . . . government.

If you don't want to listen to me, that's a good 10 commentators who've been following the budget for a number of years who have been saying the exact same thing that we are saying, that the path that the government is taking us down is fundamentally flawed.

Now, I know that when we raise the issue of the $17 billion worth of debt that the government is going to rack up by 2016, the Premier and the Finance minister just evade it. They don't like to answer the question. But regardless of what else we see in this budget, let us be absolutely clear about what is being done in this budget. It is taking us back in debt in a massive way. It is taking us back in debt to levels that we haven't seen since the Getty era.

Let me just talk about how big this reversal has been in 10 short years. Premier Klein left his administration in 2006 with no debt and $17 billion in the sustainability fund. Ten years later, when we are going back into the next election, we're going to have $17 billion worth of new debt and virtually nothing in our savings accounts. What a dramatic – dramatic – reversal over the course of 10 years.

I've been trying to think of why it is that the Premier seems to say one thing and do another. I don't know. It could be the legal training that she has. She often comments that I'm not a lawyer, and she's right. What I think happens – and I don't think the Premier is a bad person, but I do think that she has the ability to see both sides of every issue. So part of the parsing comes in, and maybe it's the lawyerly training that she has. You can argue any side of any issue depending on who your client happens to be. That may explain why one day she is able to argue that black is black and then the next day argue that black is actually white.

I have a different background. My background is in economics, and in economics I've been watching the battle go back and forth. They call it the battle of the century between two different economic philosophies, the Keynesian philosophy and the Hayekian philosophy, the Keynesian philosophy being that you can just keep on borrowing to keep the party going, and when it looks like the economy is slowing down, you just keep borrowing some more. The Hayekian philosophy says that at some point when you've borrowed too much, you kind of have to rein it in, get your spending under control so that you can actually get real savings so that you can have real investment and real economic development. There are a couple of videos that I often post from time to time, a little rap that's been done by actors, one representing the Keynesian position and one representing the Hayekian position. It's called the battle of the century. I'd encourage the members opposite to have a look at it because it is kind of a fun way of looking at what it is that we're actually battling about here. There really are two different ways that we can go forward.

If you don't want to look at that, I'll also be posting a really interesting YouTube video by a young girl by the name of Victoria Grant that's gone viral. I think she's 12 years old. She just spoke at a meeting of bankers recently about the Canadian situation and how as a young 12-year-old girl she feels that her governments are putting her on the hook to pay back billions of dollars not only in interest charges but in future debt payments. She makes a very compelling argument about why she thinks that just isn't fair. It's now got over 825,000 hits on YouTube. I'll post that, and the members can have a look at it. Both are great.

Let me do my best to make the argument about why it is that this budget goes so far off the rails and why it is a budget that we can't possibly support. I would hope some of the members opposite are feeling just as uncomfortable with this budget as we are.

The first problem is the issue of a lack of clear documents. One of my favourite pages I used to flip to whenever I used to go to budget lock-up, which I've been doing for some years, was the back page of the fiscal summary, where it would have the historical fiscal summary so that you could actually see, going back some 12 to 15 years, exactly how the government has progressed on its debt repayment, how it progressed on its savings, compare how it increased spending, how the revenues increased, compare the lines for resource revenues, so you could actually get an apples-to-apples comparison.

I mentioned to the Finance minister the other day that failing to restate the previous historical budgets using the new methodology is actually not in line with the generally accepted accounting principles, and I hope that does get corrected because I think that's very key. If we're going to see where we're at today with all the smoke and mirrors, with seven or eight different estimates about what the deficit is, we actually need to see what we're comparing today versus how it would be restated if we did it in previous years. That's one issue that we have.

The second major issue, though, is going back to the Premier's comments about how Alberta will not have a deficit. She was right in one strange way. We're not actually going to have one deficit. Since they've split the budget up into three different budgets, we're actually now going to have three deficits. We're going to have an operating deficit, something that the Premier even up until a couple of months ago was promising that we wouldn't do, an operating deficit that was massive last year but even this year is going to be half a billion dollars.

We're also going to have a capital deficit, and this is the number that the Finance minister and the Premier don't like talking about. Even though we don't have money left over to pay for all of our operating expenses, that's not going to stop them from spending and borrowing over $5 billion to spend on capital. So that's another deficit. Then we've got this deficit in savings. I've already mentioned that, that we're actually going to have a lower amount of our financial resources after the next number of years by at least $5 billion.

The other area is the level of debt by 2016. We're going to have $17 billion worth of debt by 2016. I know that the Premier and the Finance minister are doing a lot to try to argue that debt that government takes out is just like the kind of debt a family takes out or just like the kind of debt that a business would take out, but it's not, and let me explain a couple of reasons why.

In the first case, when a family takes out a mortgage, they do that once or twice in the course of a lifetime. When they take out a mortgage, they also don't take it out for such a long term that they hand it off to their kids and their grandkids to pay the mortgage back. The other thing that households typically do when they take out a mortgage is that they structure it in a way that they're paying a portion of the payment in interest and a portion of the payment in principal so that over time the amount of the principal gets lower and lower and so that the amount of the interest gets lower and lower, and you're getting more bang for your buck.

That's not how this government has structured its debt. The debt that it's taking out has absolutely no relationship to what they say that they're borrowing for. We've looked at the debt. It's structured on a variety of different terms. There is some that is, I think, out for seven years, some that's out for 20 years, some that's out for a little bit less. It's a variety of different interest rates, some as low as 1.6 per cent, some up to 4 per cent, which makes me curious about what future debt issues are going to yield since the government keeps bragging about its credit rating and being able to get debt at low figures. Four per cent doesn't seem like the kind of figure that I was expecting to see.

But the main thing is that in the way they've structured this, they don't actually pay down the principal on the debt, so when we get to $17 billion worth of debt in 2016, they have to put money aside in a debt repayment account. It's kind of like a mortgage that is an interest-only mortgage with a single balloon payment at the end of it of 100 per cent. That's the kind of debt structure that the government has taken out. That's not the kind of debt structure a typical family would take out.

The reason this is problematic, the way they are doing this, is because it doesn't take much number crunching to realize that they are putting aside vastly fewer dollars than they need to be able to make that 100 per cent balloon payment in 20 years' time. This is a simple calculation. I know that there's a lot of dispute about the numbers, but I'd ask the members opposite to just take out their calculators, and they can do this simple calculation, too. If we have $17 billion worth of debt in 2016 and we're going to pay it off in 20 years, you need to set aside at least $850 million a year each and every year to have enough money in 2036, when it all comes due, to be able to pay it off. But if you look at the budget documents, that's not what's happening.

There is $40 million set aside this year, $112 million set aside next year, $205 million set aside the year after that. The question has to be: what actually is the debt repayment strategy? It's one of two things. It's either that the government is still relying on some sort of dream windfall of oil and gas revenues, where they will get billions of dollars of additional unallocated funds, that they will miraculously in 2036 have enough to be able to pay down that debt. That's, I suppose, one option, but it's, I think, a flawed strategy.

The other proposed option is that there isn't really a plan to pay it off after all, that once we get to 2036, that debt will just be rolled over because we won't have enough money to be able to pay it off. What happens when you roll it over at that time? Who knows what the interest rates are going to be 20 years from now? But we have seen what happens with other governments who don't have a disciplined debt repayment strategy. When they do get surprised, when their bonds get turned over and interest rates have changed, all of a sudden what you were banking on for your interest payments can double or triple or more.

Just for context, if we're now looking at having entered into an era of borrowing without paying back, of rolling debt over for 20 or 40 or 60 years, the interest rates that we have had over the past 40 to 60 years have ranged from a low of .25 per cent to a high of 19 per cent. You cannot manage your budget with that kind of extreme volatility, that kind of fluctuation, that kind of interest rate risk. This is why we are going to continue to press the Premier on the $17 billion borrowing plan, and we're going to continue to ask the question: at what point is she going to start putting aside enough money to make that balloon payment 20 years from now? The number that is in the budget is vastly short of what it actually needs to be.

On the issue of debt for business – that's the other argument that keeps getting made, that it's all right to take out debt because businesses take out debt – I talked to a couple of business owners about this notion. What they told me was, "Yeah, we'll often take out debt if we're buying a piece of machinery or a piece of equipment, and we'll want to be able to pay that back within five to seven years" because they don't actually want to be in a situation of perpetual debt. They take it out to be able to have that asset, to be able to generate income. That's not what's happening here. We're not looking to generate income from the construction of schools or hospitals. These are depreciating assets, and you can tell that just by looking at the government's books. They have said that they have $72 billion worth of capital spending over the last number of years, but they don't have $72 billion booked on our books as being an investment. They are depreciating assets, and when you're purchasing depreciating assets, you really should be purchasing them out of current financing.

The other aspect. This, again, goes back to why I'm so concerned about there not being an end point for when we're going to pay the debt back. Any family knows or any business knows, even if they're taking out a longer term debt, you don't want to amortize something over too long a period of time. You don't want to take it out and finance it over too long a period of time. We learned this lesson after the mortgage crisis in the U.S. They had had 35-year loans, and then they reduced them down to 30 years. They just announced recently they would reduce them down to 25 years. Anyone can do the mortgage calculation and figure this out, that the longer you amortize a loan, the longer you finance it, the higher your overall interest charges are. If you end up paying for assets today and you don't pay them back for 30 or 40 or 50 years, you end up paying double or triple the cost in interest payments.

You have to ask the question: penny-wise and pound-foolish, does it make sense for us to have a 10-year capital plan that we can afford to do on a pay-as-you-go model, which is what our proposal is in the Wildrose, or does it make sense to make the politically easy choice, which I believe the government is today, and actually sacrifice our ability to have more dollars available in the future because they're getting eaten up in interest charges?

This is not a small matter, especially when you look at where we're at in 2016. By 2016 we are going to be spending $583 million in interest charges year after year after year because that's where the high-water mark is. Since they're not paying down any principal, year after year after year: $600 million in finance charges. After four years you'd be looking at $2.4 billion worth of finance charges. This is a huge amount of money that is just getting flushed and not going to any beneficial purpose for Albertans. This is another reason why we think that having a long-term capital plan that we can actually afford on pay-as-you-go avoids the danger of having all of those dollars diverted into financing a level of debt for spending that happens once our kids and grandkids are paying it off, far into the distant future.

The last thing that I would say is that the approach we would take in the Wildrose is quite different, and this is the reason why we have gone forward and put out a couple of different documents. I'm going to leave this to my Finance critic to talk about in more detail.

There are two things that we have put out in the last number of weeks. Our 10-year debt-free capital plan – I think that the government may believe its own talking points, that the only way to have capital infrastructure built is by borrowing, but it's just simply not true. We look at capital as being core government business, a core function of government, and it should be built year after year into core spending. Our 10-year capital plan begins with $4 billion worth of spending this year. It increases it over time, right with inflation, so that after the course of 10 years we'd be looking at over $48 billion worth of spending without going into debt for it.

When I look at the government's capital plan, they're now doing the reverse. We actually see that they are at a high-water mark now, as they have been for some time, well above what other provinces are paying on a per capita basis. Our plan works in a per capita amount that's equivalent to other big provinces plus a 15 per cent premium. Their plan actually calls for a decrease in capital spending as we go forward. I have no idea where they're going to be going with capital spending after 2016, but that's the danger if you don't give any certainty to those who are involved in government procurement. Is it going to go up? Is it going to go down? It has been as low as 1 and a half billion dollars in the past. It has been as high as $7 billion. We believe our 10-year capital plan is a responsible plan that gives that certainty to industry that they need.

Our Budget 2013 Wildrose financial recovery plan. We started doing this in 2010, and there were really three simple elements to it to get back into budget balance. One was to restrain year-over-year spending growth. The second was to have a 10-year capital plan that you could afford with a prioritized list and with an objective criteria for how that prioritized list was arrived at. That's why we keep asking the question to the Infrastructure minister, and we hope one day he'll actually produce it.

The last area is also cutting wasteful spending. I think you can tell that my colleagues and I are alarmed that the government seems to be taking the easy way out when it comes to finding spending efficiencies. Rather than going after those senior bureaucrats who are making over a hundred thousand dollars a year, layers and layers of middle management with their lavish expense accounts, we're hearing about cuts on the front line, whether it's to ambulance service in Strathmore-Brooks or whether it's to LPNs in centres in Red Deer or in Edmonton. That is not the kind of approach that we think is responsible, and it's not the kind of approach that a Wildrose government would take.

We do encourage the government to look through the 25 different recommendations that we have given for how we would be able to get back into surplus within two years, avoid the kind of capital borrowing that they're proposing, and also do so in a way that gets at the problem of overspending and waste in government without impacting the front lines. Unfortunately, from what I have seen of the budget document that the Premier calls a once-in-a-generation type of budget, I have to say that I'm disappointed. I'm disappointed that we did not see the Premier live up to the commitment that she made during the PC leadership. I'm disappointed she did not live up to the commitment that she made in the first statement that she made in the Legislature after she became Premier.

This is a budget that I can't support, and I'm hopeful that we can make some changes to it that will allow us to be able to move the government in the right direction. We've seen that happen in other jurisdictions. We've seen it happen at the federal level. We think that that is the job of the Wildrose opposition, and that's what we intend to do.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I would remind you that during the appropriate time of the daily Routine tomorrow if you could table those documents that you were quoting from, please.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to last week's budget speech. This is a profoundly disappointing budget. I say that because it's both intellectually and morally bankrupt. That's why we call it a bankrupt budget. As the rest of the world is beginning to wake up to the fact that the way things have been done for the past 30 years is a complete failure, this PC government is either ignorant of this fact or choosing to ignore it.

The economic philosophy of so-called trickle-down economics is now thoroughly discredited. When it took the world by storm back in the early '80s, the promise was that by slashing taxes on the wealthy and the largest corporations, investment and economic activity would increase and that in the fullness of time the benefits would trickle down to middle- and lower middle-income folks. Well, if you've looked at the shocking levels of inequality that have arisen in every country where trickle-down economics has been tried, you can very clearly see that this has not happened. Adjusted for inflation, incomes for middle- and lower middle-income households have been at least stagnant, and the disparity of wealth between the rich and the rest has grown incredibly.

The wealthiest members of society and the largest corporations have done phenomenally well over the past several decades. For them trickle-down economics has been a great gift, and they have seen their wealth increase greatly. But how have the governments done? The governments are large and powerful entities, so they must have done well under trickle-down economics, right? Wrong. Governments around the world today are in a desperate state. Trickle-down economics has starved them of badly needed revenue to provide the services that their citizens need. As a result, they've been forced to go deeper and deeper into debt.

Now, finally, people around the world and even some governments are waking up to the reality that the only thing that trickles down to regular, hard-working folks are burdens. This PC government, however, refuses to face facts and, instead, has chosen to double down on trickle-down, which is one reason I say that this is an intellectually bankrupt budget. It's intellectually bankrupt for other reasons as well. The lack of vision, creativity, and oversight are others.

There is no sense of mission for Alberta in this document despite the government's fondness for rhetorical flourishes such as preparing Alberta for the future. Madam Speaker, how can we prepare Alberta for the future by cutting the education system of today, one of the biggest cuts in decades at a time of growth? What kind of future will that be? The government doesn't say, but looking at the books, it's clear that they remain committed to a course of continuing to squander our resource wealth and proceeding with a program to privatize or at least partially privatize vital public services such as education, health care, seniors' care.

This fetish for privatization is the insidious companion of trickle-down economics. People have to understand that there is a cost of doing business, and then there's profit. Cost plus profit equals price, the price of public services to the taxpayer and the government and the quality of the service. If the price is higher, then the quality is lower if given through publicly delivered means.

There is no creativity in this budget, and that creativity is sorely needed, Madam Speaker. Don't look to this government for innovative approaches to fixing our vital services because you're going to be disappointed. Don't look to them to position Alberta to gain from the extraordinary new technologies which are already beginning to change our world. Take 3-D printing, nanotechnology, and robotics. This budget is silent on this. I would caution all members of the Assembly that societies that out-educate us today will outperform us tomorrow. The result may very well be that we find ourselves with a 20th-century economy while other provinces, states, and countries across the world blessed with visionary governments build 21st-century economies.

Forget about oversight, too. This is a government that doesn't want anybody to look too closely at what they're doing. Who can blame them when you consider the dire condition of education, health care, and seniors' care?

Madam Speaker, I said that this is an intellectually and morally bankrupt budget, so now I would like to discuss the moral bankruptcy of this document. What we are seeing from this government, quite frankly, is something that can only be called intergenerational theft. The cover of this budget might as well have one of those Ford bumper stickers on it which says, "We're spending our children's inheritance," or "Please, God, give us another boom; we promise to vote in a Liberal government." [interjections] Finally, they woke up on the other side. It's refreshing to know that someone's listening.

That's exactly what the PC government is doing. They're spending our children's inheritance. Over the past 25 years we have not saved a cent of our resource revenue. The trust fund stood at $12.6 billion in 1986. Today it's about $16 billion, plus or minus. They haven't saved one cent. They'll say: hey, we saved about $4 billion. No, no, no. Our heritage savings fund is worth about half of what it was worth 20 years ago in real dollars. Now this government is taking us back into debt. Our heritage savings trust fund is worth a fraction of Norway's savings fund. Norway started in 1996, and they have socked away more than $600 billion. I would love to see the interest that that fund generates. Madam Speaker, it's shameful that this government has not saved any of this money for future generations. They've literally spent our children's inheritance. They've stolen from our children and our grandchildren. They have spent every cent of oil and gas revenue as quickly as it came out of the ground since 1986.

The reason for this is the government's abandonment of fair taxation, a progressive taxation. Since giving up the progressive income tax for the 10 per cent flat tax in 2001, this government has lost billions and billions of dollars in revenue, and billions have been lost since the tax rate for large corporations was slashed down to 10 per cent. It's been a race to the bottom for taxes. Everyone knows you get what you pay for. If you want good public services, you've got to pay for them.

Albertans were told in a press release, Madam Speaker, that they would save about a billion and a half dollars a year in taxes. We did some research. Did you know that taxes were actually increased for the lower middle-income and lower income Albertans? They actually paid more tax, and the wealthiest paid less. So billions were saved by the wealthy few. Think about how much money we could have to invest in a heritage fund or to invest in our vital public services if only we had fair taxation.

Madam Speaker, we ran on it. The Alberta Liberals ran on it last election. We were honest. I'll tell you that it's a tough thing to run on. I'm talking about taxes. Well, we were honest. Our predictions of oil and gas revenues were fair. The Liberal fair tax plan was a central plank to our platform, and I'm very happy to see that these ideas are resonating so strongly today. In fact, a recent poll found that 72 per cent of Albertans want a return to progressive income tax, and 77 per cent want an increase to big corporation income tax. Albertans have known this, and they've woken up. They want this from their government. The overwhelming majority of them now reject trickle-down economics in favour of tax fairness. The Alberta Liberals stand side by side with Albertans on this issue. It's central to the Alberta Liberal plan to save for tomorrow and repair the damage that the PCs have done over the last couple of decades.

The University of Alberta was once the 38th, 39th top-ranked university in the world. Now it has plummeted, so I'm told, to about 108th, and its budget is getting slashed. We once had one of the top-performing health systems in Canada, and seniors were looked after by community organizations. Those days are gone. Our K to 12 education system used to be strong, and now we have overcrowded classrooms, the fewest teachers per capita in the country, the highest high school noncompletion rate, the lowest postsecondary participation rate in the nation, and amongst the highest school fees and postsecondary tuition and mandatory noninstructional fees in the country.

Madam Speaker, imagine if all of our children actually decided to finish school because they saw a future, if they had affordable postsecondary education. Imagine how our classrooms would be bursting at the seams even more than they currently are. All of this is because the PCs consider education to be a cost, a cost to be cut, and that's how they're preparing for the future. All of the evidence in the world, though, shows that they are wrong. Education is an investment, and that's why the Alberta Liberals would invest in early education, invest in our public school system, and invest in postsecondary education. Let's get more teachers and more support for those teachers, and let's fix up the schools that we currently have and build the new ones that we need.

Our goal will be to make education affordable, accessible, and top-notch because we know that our investments will lead to better lives, better health, better jobs, a better Alberta, and eventually savings. In fact, it will save from costs in the health system and the criminal justice system and the social system. These are facts.

We also believe in investing in seniors' care and health care, two more areas which will continue to suffer from severe underfunding and creeping privatization under this budget. To save money – save money – this PC government first began to privatize it, and then they decided to cut the funding for home care and long-term care. When they privatized, we actually got less care for the same dollar. Now they even cut that. To save money, this government cut funding and staff for publicly delivered long-term care and opened it up to privatization as well. The result of all these savings? Seniors warehoused in hospitals, taking up acute-care beds even though they're not sick, resulting in agonizingly long waits in the ER, cancellations of your surgeries, cancer surgeries being cancelled recently, and ambulances sitting idle outside hospitals for hours. It's madness, all to save a few bucks. It's actually cost us our bucks and cost us our morality.

The Alberta Liberals would do things differently. Again, what the PCs consider costs we consider investments. That's why the Alberta Liberals would double funding for home care so seniors could stay in their own homes and their own communities as long as possible with their loved ones and their families. This is why Alberta Liberals believe in investing in additional nonprofit, long-term care beds to moderate prices and ensure an adequate supply of affordable spaces. We believe this because it's the humane thing to do and, fiscally, the smart thing to do. Our seniors would stay healthy longer, it would free up hospital beds for those who are sick and injured, ERs would no longer be crowded, and ambulances could get back on the road. That's how you fix health care, and we'll save money. With an aging population, the problems this government has caused will only get worse if they stay their current course.

Solutions. You know, many people say that we have a spending problem, that we have a revenue problem, a mismanagement problem. You know what? We do have a mismanagement problem. We do have a wasteful spending problem. You've seen many examples. But we also have a major revenue problem. The Liberals do believe in good management and a return to that good management. It's time to cut the waste and make investments that lead to better outcomes for all Albertans, which would save money over the long-term, to boot. That's something the PCs have lost sight of.

We also believe that it's time to bring in big city charters, so Edmonton and Calgary will have the tools they need to tackle their own unique challenges.

These are some things we would do differently because it's time to govern smarter, more humanely, and for the benefit of all Albertans. Madam Speaker, trickle-down economics and privatization have not worked. They've hurt people. They've gutted the public services that Albertans rely on. This is why Alberta Liberals are so disappointed in this intellectually and morally bankrupt budget. The age of trickle-down is nearly over, and even if the PCs don't know it yet, the age of fairness and good government is around the corner.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. colleagues, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available for anybody who wishes to comment or question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: Yes. I wanted to ask the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition if he'd had a chance to finish his speech and if he wanted to say anything else in conclusion?

Dr. Sherman: I'd like to thank the hon. member for the opportunity to answer his question. Thank you, hon. member.

Madam Speaker, we looked at some facts and said: how did the government pay down all that debt in the late '90s? How did they do it? Well, one, they tightened the belt. Well, actually, they slashed and burned, and we're paying the price for that still today. In fact, did we ever pay down the debt? There's $10 billion in unfunded pension liabilities, $4 billion in deferred maintenance. And many responsibilities were downloaded. They were downloaded onto individuals, onto families, school kids and school fees, high tuition, and the fees and fines Albertans have to pay. They downloaded onto seniors, downloaded onto municipalities, that now have $8 billion worth of debt. The municipalities have $25 billion worth of deferred maintenance.

Also, not only were responsibilities downloaded. At the time the debt was paid there was a progressive income tax and the taxes on larger corporations were higher. In fact, Madam Speaker, there was actually an 8 per cent surtax on the wealthy in the late '90s by Premier Klein. Did you know that? Well, I'm telling you that. The top tax rate was 12.76 per cent plus 8 per cent, so that's 20.76 per cent on the wealthiest of Albertans. That's how the debt was paid down. In fact, that tax plan is even more aggressive than the Alberta Liberal and NDP tax plans of today. Madam Premier, between Alberta and – or Madam Speaker. You would make a good Premier, possibly.

Madam Speaker, the second-lowest tax jurisdiction in the country taxes its citizens $12 billion more than Albertans pay. If we had their tax structure, there would be $12 billion coming in. The Alberta Liberals aren't suggesting we raise $12 billion more. We're not even suggesting we take $10 billion more or even $8 billion or even $6 billion. The Alberta Liberal fair tax plan is suggesting: hey, we can raise about $2.7 billion a year more. If we brought back progressive income tax, that will bring in about $1.9 billion more. Taxation for large corporations from 10 to 12 per cent: you know, they'll still invest, but 2 extra cents out of every dollar is not bad. That will bring in $840 million. That's $2.7 billion every year. Whatever the PC plan is, the Liberal plan is $2.7 billion more. It's $2.7 billion better.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we have a minute and a half left. Is there a question or a comment from any other member?

Mr. Mason: I'd like to ask the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition if he'd like to finish. You'd better hurry.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: I'd like to thank the hon. member for asking me to finish. The Alberta Liberal fair tax plan will not only bring us the revenue that we need to provide the essential services that we need to build a better province for education and health care and our seniors and our municipalities, but we'll also start saving for the future. By next election the Alberta Liberal fair tax plan will bring in an extra $8 billion.

Madam Speaker, I think I've said enough. Thank you for this opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. It's an honour to rise and give my reply to the budget speech of the hon. Finance minister from last week. A few weeks ago my caucus and I finished our tour of this province, visiting seven cities and listening to dozens of individuals and organizations in a tour we called the broken promises tour. Madam Speaker, we weren't psychic in naming that tour. We had a very clear appreciation that the promises that were made in the Premier's leadership campaign and during the last provincial election would not be kept, and certainly, in our view, many were never intended to be kept.

Not surprisingly, one of the things that we heard time and again was that Albertans value universal and high-quality public services such as health care and education. Albertans also want a bright future for their children, which includes a clean environment. These are the values that the Premier tapped into during the last election when she and her party promised billions of dollars in promises that she would never keep, including stable and predictable funding for education, health care, full-day kindergarten, reduced waiting times in emergency rooms, improved environmental monitoring, and ending homelessness and child poverty. These are just a few of the billions of dollars worth of election promises.

However, just months before her first budget as Premier-elect she finally decided to tell Albertans the truth, that the PC government would not provide the money to make these promises come true. Now in this budget, true to PC tradition, when times got tough, she did everything she could to protect her rich friends in high places, and instead of addressing revenues, she made cuts that disproportionately hurt working families, seniors, students, the vulnerable, and the environment. Madam Speaker, this is not acceptable.

Before I speak more about these broken promises, I'd like to pause for a minute to examine how the PCs under the last three Premiers brought us into this fiscal mess. Because of the absence of a concerted effort by this government to promote upgrading in our province combined with a policy of unfettered development at breakneck speed, a giant glut of low-value bitumen ran headlong into a large supply of sweet crude oil from the United States with predictable results. The government's rosy picture for the price of oil never materialized, and of course, neither did the Premier's promised billions in campaign promises. Sadly, last Thursday we found out that the Premier has not learned her lesson. We found out that the Premier's much anticipated promise of a new fiscal paradigm for our province turned out to be a combination of debt and service cuts. It's hardly a solution to our systemic problem of overreliance on nonrenewable resource revenues. At the same time, rosy projections for the price of oil once again mirror those of the private sector, who have a vested interest in predicting a high price of oil to attract investors and whose projections failed so miserably. We've been told that pipelines are the solution to all of our problems. It's interesting to note that the Premier's 2013 budget also projects price increases for our bitumen over the next two years even though I know of no new pipelines that will be completed and pumping oil by then.

The budget we have before us today is full of too many broken promises for me to name, so my caucus and I have chosen the top 10 broken promises as follows: number 10, not twinning highway 881 and slowing down the twinning of highway 63; nine, not increasing MSI funding; eight, failing to provide a grant program for aboriginal and rural students worth $18 million; number seven, failing to provide fast-track emergency rooms at a cost of 2 and a half million dollars per hospital; number six, not providing the 2 per cent funding increase necessary for postsecondary institutions at a cost of $650 million; number five, not providing the 2 per cent funding increase for schools in each of the next two years.

That I think deserves a little bit of comment because it's a particularly vulgar move given that so much of her support during the election came from teachers who, sadly, gave her their trust after she returned the $100 million that had been removed by Premier Stelmach's government. I don't believe that stable and predictable and sustainable funding is too much to ask for our children

4:10

Number four is not providing the 4.5 per cent increase to Alberta Health Services for each of the next five years. Broken promise number three, the absence of a five-year plan to eliminate child poverty and a 10-year plan to reduce poverty. Broken promise number two, not providing full-day kindergarten. Number one on the list of broken promises was a promise that "a new PC government will deliver a balanced budget by 2013 with no new taxes and no service cuts," taken directly from the 2012 PC campaign platform.

This list is a testament to the Premier's broken promise that there would be no service cuts. For the record I should note that the Premier has not even kept her promise to not raise taxes. This budget outlines a plan to eliminate the education property tax assessment program next year. This program helps seniors, many on fixed incomes, pay their property taxes. Our seniors built this province, yet shamefully, many still struggle just to meet the basics of life and to stay in their own homes. By eliminating this program, seniors' tax bills will go up in order to pay for this government's incompetence.

Which brings me back to the ultimate problem faced by this government, that they will not recognize that we have a serious structural revenue problem in this province. For years the government has subsidized a low tax regime for the wealthiest and the corporate sector through windfall oil royalties. As a consequence, it has foregone billions in revenues and blown through billions more in potential savings with little to show for it but for the growing income inequality, which is common for states with low taxes, and therefore poor social programs.

Let's pause for a moment to consider Norway. Equivalent in size in oil reserves to Alberta, Norway's equivalent to the sustainability fund is over $600 billion. It is one of the largest investors in the world, and it rose in value by 13.4 per cent last year. Its fund is now 40 per cent bigger than the value of the entire Norwegian economy, compared to ours which by the end of this fiscal year will be a pitiful $691 million.

The government argues that we need a low tax regime to attract investment. The reality is that the oil companies come here for our oil, not because of our tax rates. The vast majority of oil profits in this province have simply walked out the front door and into the hands of large corporations in the United States where, it should be noted, corporate taxes are much higher and any difference between foreign taxes and U.S. taxes goes directly to the U.S. government. So low Alberta taxes mean nothing to these corporations anyway.

Let's not forget that our revenue problem stems first and foremost from the Klein era cuts to wealthy corporations and his rich friends. This Premier's unwillingness to address the structural revenue problem caused by this short-sighted move ultimately has its roots in the political climate of this province.

We need to take a look as well, I think, at the position of the Wildrose Party because its role is to push the PCs further to the right. It's clear that the PCs are not prepared to stand up to their right-wing cousins on very important questions. They cannot be trusted to protect Alberta's social programs from the kinds of cost-cutting advocated by our friends in the Wildrose.

Both parties believe that we have a spending problem that needs to be solved. The Premier's solution is to borrow money until the price of oil goes up. Ultimately, despite any good intentions, she will always find herself moving to the right in order to appease her former colleagues. In fact, Madam Speaker, I'll point out right now that I'm the only leader of a political party in this House that has not formerly held a Progressive Conservative Party membership, something of which I'm very proud.

For the Wildrose only more Klein-style cuts will do. But, my friends, this will not solve our problem. Even the Wildrose with their alternative budget could not achieve a balanced budget for the year. Madam Speaker, if the Wildrose with their draconian cuts can't balance the budget, then nobody can.

That, Madam Speaker, to me is the clearest evidence yet that we have a structural revenue problem in this province and that we are unable to afford the basic social programs that we want to see in this province because we are too dependent on volatile royalty resource revenue.

When natural gas prices were at their height, Alberta was taking in $8 billion a year in windfall royalty revenue from natural gas alone. At that time the Klein government cut corporate taxes, and they imposed a flat tax, which was a giant tax giveaway to the very wealthiest of Albertans. As such, they walked away from billions of dollars of revenue. It was easily made up by gas royalty revenue at the time, but that revenue is no longer there, and we're now in the position, long since predicted not just by us in the NDP but by other experts, including the government's own Emerson panel, where when the price of oil drops, we're laying off teachers and we're laying off nurses. Madam Speaker, we can do better. As a province we have to do better.

When we combine the Premier's elitist and out-of-touch cuts with the Wildrose budget, with its failure to slay the budget deficit, we see that cuts to spending are not the answer. We see that we do in fact have a revenue problem that must be addressed once and for all. At the end of the day, things like the number of teachers in our classrooms and the number of doctors in our emergency rooms should not be determined by the price of a barrel of oil. They should be the result of stable and predictable funding, that does not vary unpredictably from year to year. Albertans should not be asked to move backwards on account of this government's mismanagement, nor should they be coaxed into voting for another right-wing party, that will only offer more of the same.

Albertans are ready for a real alternative, Madam Speaker. During our broken-promises tour we heard from Albertans from all walks of life who understand that quality public services are good for society and good for the economy. They told us that it's time for wealthy corporations and rich Albertans to pay their fair share. They understand that for far too long this government has neglected to act like owners of our resources and has collected far too little in royalties. They are tired of a PC government that looks to balance the books on the backs of seniors, students, the vulnerable, and our environment, and they're leery of a Wildrose Party that promises more of the same.

Madam Speaker, only the New Democratic Party stands up for fairness in this society to ensure that we have the financial ability to deliver the services that Albertans want and to do so by distributing the burden of paying for those services fairly. Only the New Democratic Party offers a real alternative to the Wildrose and PC vision.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Anderson: Although I am heartbroken, Madam Speaker, that I have not yet convinced this hon. member that a Wildrose government is in the best interests of Albertans, I would like to know for sure if he has anything else to say on the subject matter given the importance of this once-in-a-generation budget.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, hon. member, and I'm sorry to break your heart.

I want to just suggest that I have never seen a government get elected on such a false platform as this one has. I have never seen a government so cynical that it will deliberately promise to end child poverty and then attack the very programs that support children in need in our province. This government has set a breathtaking example for all of us of cynicism and the misleading of voters, and I believe that the voters will not forget this. Voters have very short memories sometimes, but this particular betrayal of the very people that supported this Progressive Conservative Party to form another government will not be forgotten, and this party will pay a price.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I realize the hon.

member may be a heartbreaker, but I was wondering if he'd like to comment on some of the issues dealing with outrageous expenses: a hundred million dollars for executives at Alberta Health and so on and so on.

Mr. Mason: Happy to do that. There's no question that this government wastes money and allows money to be wasted. I've never been one to allow the Conservatives to have a monopoly on fighting for public dollars to be spent well and effectively, and I think that there's much that could be done. But I do not think that you're going to solve the structural financial problems that this province faces by cleaning up some of the messes that the Tories have created in terms of overspending on expenses and wages and so on. I think that's clear.

I know that in the Wildrose alternative budget they talked about mandating a 20 per cent rollback in the salaries and wages of non front-line staff. That's the kind of thing that I don't think we should be doing in order to balance the books. We should be making people who don't pay their fair share in our society pay their fair share. I know that the Wildrose takes the view that there should be no tax increases, and that is now reflected as well in the position of their estranged siblings across the floor. [interjections] Well, I think that they're all from the same family, but they don't get along very well, hon. member. At least, that's been my observation. I think that that's pretty obvious.

I don't think that we can tackle the financial problems of the province unless we make sure that everyone pays their fair share. The assumption that taxes shouldn't go up is fine, but it doesn't answer the question of whether they're at the right place in the first place and for whom. It's not taxes for the middle class because middle-class families pay more in taxes under the flat tax than they do in other provinces. I think that if we put a progressive tax in, we'd actually lower taxes for middle-income taxpayers while making sure that people who can afford to pay more do pay their fair share, so I think that getting rid of a flat tax is fundamental.

I think that in a province like Alberta we don't need really bottom-of-the barrel corporate taxes either. I think that some of the corporations post annual profits in this province that exceed the budgets of middle-sized countries, and we're not getting the fair share of that wealth, which is created by all of us in the province, not just by the brilliance of the investors. That's maybe a philosophical difference between us, but I think that unless you tap that wealth in the province, we won't solve our problems.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour today to rise to speak to Budget 2013. Before I get started, it's definitely an honour to speak to it as the Associate Minister of Finance. I can attest first-hand to the hard work and dedication that goes into putting together one of these documents. I want to take the opportunity to thank all of the staff and members of Treasury Board and all the staff in Treasury Board and Finance for their tireless work. I know that the months leading up to delivering the budget saw a tremendous amount of effort, a lot of late nights, a lot of hard discussions, hard decisions, and it was very obvious that that was reflected in this document.

I want to start off this speech of mine, Madam Speaker, and have a little bit of intellectual honesty around some of the comments that were made. First of all, the Leader of the Official Opposition went through a fascinating historical vignette that I think, frankly, was a bit revisionist and left out a significant portion of critical pieces as to why we got here. She applauded her support of a former Premier, Premier Klein, and what he did for this province. I can sit here as the member for the constituency of Ralph Klein, representing the area in the city where he was born and raised, and say that I'm proud of where Premier Klein put us, proud of all the colleagues on this side of the Legislature that worked with him and went through making those tough decisions.

However, let's be quite honest. While Premier Klein and that government did do a fancy, splashy announcement that they had paid off the government debt, there were decisions made later on in his mandate to go forward with P3 projects. P3 projects, Madam Speaker, are significantly different from what this opposition says that they want to do, and that's the pay-as-you-go concept. P3s are an agreement, a contract with a private consortium where they go out and get the financing, and we contract to pay back that financing and the principal over time. That is not pay-as-you-go. That was first instituted under Premier Klein.

Also, let's talk about where Premier Klein was and where he eventually got to. In 2007 Premier Klein essentially admitted that they had a challenge on their hands, essentially admitted that the government had no plan. In fact, these were his comments. "They were right about [us] not having a plan. The plan is being developed, but no one could anticipate the phenomenal growth that was taking place."

Madam Speaker, one of the reasons why I really do respect former Premier Klein is his ability to admit when he has made a mistake, his ability to say: hey, we should actually change courses here. This, in my mind, is the ability that when this province is experiencing the growth that we're experiencing, maybe we should think outside of the box, outside of the ideological thoughts that sometimes constrain all of us, no doubt, about what it is that we need to do to move this province forward. That's what Premier Klein was talking about. It's my guess that it was that kind of thinking that made him think about the concept of P3.

The Leader of the Official Opposition for whatever odd and absurd reason decided to compare what we're doing to the situation in Greece, okay? Let's be honest here. Greece has a debt-to-GDP ratio of 145 per cent. At the end of this three-year fiscal plan the debt-to-GDP ratio in Alberta will be 5 per cent. Five to 145. Let's get real, folks. Let's have some intellectual honesty about what we're talking about here.

Madam Speaker, she then mentioned that this budget lacked clarity, that it had three different components or whatever. She must totally not get municipal budgets, then. It might be very obvious when she talks about her commitments, but go to any municipal financial statement, and it's broken down out into an operating budget and a capital budget.

I actually went and looked at the 2011 – it was the only one I was able to find – city of Calgary budget. In their operating budget, much like it's in our operating budget, they have their expenditures on capital debt servicing. It's 10 per cent of their operating budget. What we've put in place is a limit for capital debt servicing costs to be capped at no more than 3 per cent. Again, Madam Speaker, that's incredibly prudent, and this is going to allow us to continue to move forward.

Again, the opposition put out a document last Friday, 24 pages which, when you take out the pictures, could probably be distilled down to about six pages. I'm not sure that it reflects a financial document much more than a grade 2 picture book, but I digress. You know, Madam Speaker, the point that I'm trying to make is that in that document they've suggested that they would limit capital spending to about $4 billion, about $1.2 billion less than what this government is planning to spend, okay? I can even accept that they might not want to spend money on carbon capture and storage or complete the federal building construction. I can accept that, and we could agree to disagree on that.

But what I challenge this opposition to do is to take the government priority list that's in this document, that's on the Infrastructure website, and list for Albertans a billion dollars' worth of projects that they will not build this year. I challenge you to do that. I challenge you to table in this Legislature tomorrow a billion dollars for those projects that you won't be able to build. Hey, it's fine to talk in platitudes about spending too much money, Madam Speaker, but when you actually have to make some tough decisions, let's see if they're able to go out and do that.

I tell you what, Madam Speaker. What I did and what the Minister of Finance did at the request of the Premier was go out and talk to Albertans over the last number of months. We went out to talk to Albertans about what their priorities are, how they want us to spend taxpayers' money, and what they want the budget to look like. I could tell you that it was undeniable. People wanted us to continue to invest in the infrastructure growth that this province is demanding. You know, the Leader of the Official Opposition stood up just the other day and gave an eloquent speech about how we're leading. [interjections] They're right; we should celebrate this. We're leading in economic growth. We're leading in employment growth. We're leading in investment. We're leading this country, and we need to continue to invest in the infrastructure that facilitates that economic growth and facilitates the quality of life that we deserve as Albertans.

One more piece, Madam Speaker. It's very interesting that the Official Opposition wants to talk about promises that were made during the election and whether they're kept or not. I challenge them to come up with some sort of explanation as to why, if you take their 2011 document and how much they say that they would spend and you compare it to their 2013 document that they released, the combined rate of spending that they're proposing is 10.7 per cent when inflation and population growth over that period are only 7.9 per cent. I don't get it. Pledge 1 of their election platform said that they were going to bring in a law to limit government spending to inflation plus population growth. They can't even deliver it in their own alternative budget. Not only that, but compare the 2011 actuals in this document to the . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the Associate Minister of Finance has the floor.

Mr. Fawcett: Compare the 2011 actuals in this budget to the estimated 2013 spending and government spending that this government has proposed over that . . . [interjection] Madam Speaker, that member has got his time to get up and give his speech. I'd more than welcome that, but I do have the floor.

I would say that increased government spending by this government over that period of time is actually 5.9 per cent, okay?

The problem is that this opposition, every year that they bring up their alternative budget, likes to say: well, we're limiting spending to inflation plus population growth. But what's built into the base of that is the previous government's spending projections. The way that this works, Madam Speaker, is this. They put out a graph that says: had the government stuck to inflation plus population growth over the years, they'd be spending I think it's like $7 billion less or whatever it is. If you guys believe that that's the prudent way, take $7 billion out of this budget. Show us how it's done. But you haven't presented anything that shows that. You're all full of rhetoric and hot air.

Madam Speaker, that brings me to this budget. This is a budget that delivers on the priorities that we heard during the election, that we heard through the consultation where the Finance minister and President of Treasury Board and I went out and did and talked to Albertans. We talked about needing to control spending and needing to limit spending. Like I said, inflation plus population growth over the last two years is 7.9 per cent in this province. This government is at 5.9 per cent. They propose 10.7 per cent. So we're doing some very tough things around public-sector salaries. It's never . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, we have a point of order called.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Anderson: Just because we don't want to incite disorder under 23(h), (i), and (j). We don't want to incite a riot in here, so we may as well just clarify right now that the member opposite's numbers on what we would spend . . .

The Acting Speaker: Your citation, please.

Mr. Anderson: Citation (h), (i), and (j).

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Just to be clear, as we say in our alternative budgets every single year, we go with the government's revenue and expense as a baseline so that the media and the public can compare apples to apples to apples. Every year they've raised spending by a considerable amount, so we've had to increase that baseline. Obviously, we wouldn't want to cut front-line positions.

I just want to make sure that there's a clarification there.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, this was not a point of order. This was a point of clarification. You'll have your opportunity under Standing Order 29(2)(a) to say that.

Hon. associate minister, we did hold the time, so you have the time to complete.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fawcett: Okay. Thank you very much. We have had to make some very tough decisions in this year's fiscal plan. We have made the decision to freeze the salaries of public-sector managers as well as looking at freezing and limiting salary growth in other areas in the public sector. This makes up a huge portion of the provincial budget, Madam Speaker. You know, it's not that this is a war against teachers or doctors or nurses or whatever. It's doing what's proper so that we can maintain a respectful level of public service that is sustainable in the long term. Those aren't easy decisions. We appreciate every day the work of all of our teachers and doctors and nurses and all the other people involved in making sure that our province has the best public services. We appreciate that.

I can tell you that sometimes governments, like the private sector, have certain economic realities. I know that my wife, who works in the private sector, has had her salary frozen for three years. This year the company finally started doing well, and they gave her a raise. I can tell you that I do know she does keep an eye on the job market for what she does, and her comments are around how some of the public-sector jobs with her equivalence of experience pay much higher than what you would be able to get in the private sector, Madam Speaker. There's nothing wrong with that. It's a concern that the government needs to address as part of controlling our spending and living within our means. That's what this budget does.

It also looks at being strategic around how we're spending money so we could spend smarter. There are a number of changes in the health care budget, whether it's around family care clinics, better utilization of health care professionals, how we're dealing with our pharmacare plans, things that will allow us to bend the cost curve on health care spending because we know it's by far outpacing the rest of government. But we'll do so in a way that continues to keep the integrity of what we cherish as Albertans, and that's our public health care system. So these are the priorities that we're investing in, Madam Speaker.

I just want to make a couple of final comments. In this budget as well as in what was tabled in the Fiscal Management Act, that I will talk about later, is something that I've long advocated for and something I've always been concerned about since the day that I got elected, and that's our neglect of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. I think that this is something that Albertans need to invest in. I'm proud to say that this government under the leadership of this Premier and this Finance minister has tabled a plan that is consistent with the principles of everyday Albertans, and that is that you pay yourself first. That's how we're going to grow the Alberta heritage trust fund, not by leaving it to the whims of surplus money. I do not agree with it. This is a better plan to grow that fund, and we are going to do that.

Finally, my last comment is on the taxes.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Far be it from me . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: I'll have a point of clarification from the parliamentary secretary.

I have been told that the practice is to go back and forth, so we'll get you next, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I have three questions. I'll make them brief so that you have time to answer them all.

I'm glad that you're so proud of the Klein legacy. I'm so proud of it, too, that I'm actually fighting to keep it while it seems that that party over there is fighting to flush it down the toilet.

However, this member made a comment about how awful or how ridiculous the comparison that was made by the Leader of the Official Opposition was, how ridiculous it was to compare Greece and the crisis in western Europe to Alberta's situation, how awful and terrible that was, just an absolutely gross exaggeration. I have a quote from the past AGM here from the Premier. The Premier said:

We have all heard of the crises in Europe. Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams.

Hon. associate minister, are you saying that the comments of your Premier are ridiculous, clouded, pathetic, and stupid?

Mr. Fawcett: Madam Speaker, that's not what I'm saying at all. Actually, I think the comments of the Premier should be heeded, and I think we should pay attention to that. I think her comments are more along the lines of: government should be wary of racking up debt-to-GDP ratios that are extreme and unsustainable. One hundred and forty-five per cent to 5 per cent is not comparable. This is why we put in place the 3 per cent cap on debt servicing costs for operating. There are certain risks involved in taking on debt. There is no doubt about that. One of the risks is increased interest rates. However, this rule hedges us from that because if your interest rates go up, you're still capped at the 3 per cent, and it will mean that you will be able to take on less debt. The point is – and I don't care where you go; you know, I've got a number of quotes here, and I seem to have lost my sheet – that smart debt, when managed prudently, can be a very, very smart thing to do.

I've got a picture here: construction begins on Airdrie schools. It's the hon. Member for Airdrie. He's got a shovel in his hand, turning some sod. It's hard to tell, but I'm pretty sure he's got a pretty big smile on his face. He's opening a school or turning sod on a school done on a project that is essentially debt financed. Again, if this member is so opposed to the government debt financing key infrastructure projects, I don't know why he supports these things with such a smile like he has in this picture.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Far be it from me to engage in lawyer-speak here, but I just do want to quote the leader of the fourth party, who was talking about taxes. I've always felt that the . . . [interjection] Again, this is for question and comment if the hon. member with his heckling doesn't understand.

Madam Speaker, we have a flat tax rate of 10 per cent. I'd like this member to comment on how, even though we have a flat tax rate of 10 per cent in fact, it is proportional, for that member's edification.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I did want to talk a little bit about taxes because I am proud that this government has tabled a budget with no tax increases, no additional taxes, that has the lowest taxes in Canada, and is part and parcel of the economic environment that leads this country, as I mentioned. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark suggested, we have a tax advantage as Albertans of $12 billion. That's $12 billion that's in the pockets of Albertans and in their savings account. I'm proud of that. I know members on this side of the House are proud of that, and probably a few over there are proud of it as well. What I will not support – and I've heard this kind of rhetoric come out from over there – is a government that decides to go and take money out of Albertans' savings accounts just to put it in the government's savings accounts.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Now everybody has woken up. That was great. I applaud the member for his passionate defence of the indefensible.

Madam Speaker, in question period last week the Premier showed a clear, stark difference between the current government and those of us in the Official Opposition. It had to do with the role of government in Alberta's economy, and indeed it had to do with each and every Albertan. Alberta has a proud history, as we know, as our nation's economic powerhouse, greatest job provider and financial contributor, and as a first-choice destination for people around the world to make home. We all know our province's extraordinary track record as a beacon of opportunity and prosperity.

But here is where the views part, Madam Speaker. As the Premier said last week, she thinks the Progressive Conservative government built the successful economy. Well, we in the Wildrose know . . . [interjection] The House leader thinks the PCs built the economy. We know this: we in the Wildrose believe Albertans built our successful economy. Albertans took the risks, started the businesses, tapped into the vast oil and gas resources we have been so profoundly blessed with, invested in research and development, provided the jobs, grew the communities, and put Alberta in a league of its own as a national and international leader, a role model of achievement. It was Albertans that did this.

Albertans also endorsed low taxes and responsible fiscal management. This was why Premier Ralph Klein was such a popular leader during the '90s and early 2000s. Albertans wanted a provincial government that made disciplined and prudent choices focusing on priorities, so they chose a Premier that reflected those wishes in Premier Klein. Does anyone really think that Don Getty would have been re-elected in 1993 had he run? No. Albertans made it clear that he and his party would have been removed from government for their debt-happy and irresponsible, spendthrift ways. Albertans demanded change to fiscal restraint, and they got it.

Because of Albertans' choices in this regard combined with our incredible blessing of unlimited natural resources, Alberta enjoyed unprecedented prosperity and wealth. As recently as 2007 the provincial government was debt free, posting 13 consecutive surpluses of more than a billion dollars a year and taking in ever-increasing revenues generated by the ingenuity, activity, and innovation of Albertans. In that year Alberta astonishingly doubled the Canadian and U.S. rates of GDP and experienced its highest job growth in 25 years. All that prosperity delivered consistently increasing revenues to the provincial treasury.

Then came the last five years and, in particular, the last two. Despite the unprecedented wealth over the past five years Alberta's PC government has shown itself to be quite possibly the most fiscally incompetent regime in Canadian history. Instead of prudently managing booming revenues, adhering to disciplined maintenance of the heritage savings fund, and ensuring government expenditures are focused on needs rather than on wants and political whims so that priority programs are actually sustainable into the future, the PCs have squandered Alberta's wealth, depleted its savings, created a structural deficit, and now have plunged the province back into long-term structural debt. Literally billions of dollars have been and continue to be wasted on subsidies to private businesses and pet projects, on exorbitant pay and perks for politicians, executives, and political insiders, funneled to political parties for partisan purposes rather than to front-line public services, and lost in layers upon layers of bloated administration and management.

Now, the government is going on an unprecedented borrowing binge that would make Premier Getty blush. After five deficit budgets in a row they just revealed their sixth despite a balanced-budget promise during an election only one year ago. They are plunging the province back into debt to the tune of $17 billion by the time we go back to the ballot box in 2016. They are breaking promises to Albertans as fast as they can make them, making the budget and quarterly updates as difficult as possible for the media and the public to decipher in order to obscure the scale and magnitude of their financial mess. They have put Albertans and their children into the position of facing billions upon billions in debt interest payments as the years move forward.

They aren't being honest with Albertans about the deficit. The clearest way to understand the real deficit is to focus on the bottom line, the real cash deficit. The real cash deficit reflects how much in savings is being depleted and how much debt is being accumulated in a given year. It states exactly how much more the government is spending than it is taking in. While the Alberta government claims an accounting deficit of $2 billion in Budget 2013, when you add the amount that is drained from our sustainability fund and the new borrowing for just capital, only capital, in this budget, this year's real cash budget deficit is at least $5.5 billion. Most other commentaries have it even higher than that, but we're being kind to the government, as we often are.

The government tries to blame its self-inflicted predicament on declining revenues and the oddly named bitumen bubble, but these explanations, like so much of what the provincial PC government says these days, just aren't true. There is no revenue problem. Including this 2012-13 fiscal year as well as virtually every year previous to it going back over a decade, our government takes in more income and corporate taxes per person than any other province in the country.

As stated, the provincial government enjoyed not a near record, not a great year but a record year for revenue in 2011-12, and in the current 2012-13 fiscal year revenues are projected to come in above the five-year average, at levels similar to those in the boom years of the mid-2000s. The truth is that the Alberta government takes in more overall revenue per capita than the three other large comparable Canadian provinces of B.C., Ontario, and Quebec. This government might lament that resource revenues are billions lower than they'd hoped, but no other province would consider $7 billion to $8 billion in royalties anything but an unprecedented boom.

The bitumen price differential, that the Premier and other government members say that just no one saw coming, has always, Madam Speaker, existed. In fact, at the time of the Premier's recent TV infomercial, that cost $55,000 to tell us what we already knew, the differential was virtually the same – the same – as a year earlier, when she was busy making billions in irresponsible and unbudgeted promises to win an election. Moreover, the overall 2012 differential was only slightly above the average of the last seven years. Clearly, we must work to build the pipelines we need to the U.S. and other key markets, but this is in no way a new problem. The Premier was telling a story.

Our budget problem is the culmination of years of irresponsible governments. The provincial government and the entire public-service infrastructure is predicated on $100-a-barrel oil prices just to barely cover them. Anything less and the province cannot pay its bills. In the 10 years preceding this latest budget, the government raised spending by 100 per cent. That's double the rate of inflation plus population growth. This Premier's first budget increased operating expenses at the staggering rate of almost 7 per cent, or $2.4 billion. This year they were forced to hold the line on spending. Unfortunately, when you need to lose a hundred pounds, zero just ain't quite enough.

But perhaps the most startling and glaring example of the government's reckless mismanagement is the state of the provincial government's savings funds. The sustainability/rainy-day fund, worth $17 billion just five years ago, is gone, nearly wiped off the map. The Alberta heritage savings trust fund is worth less today than in 1976, when Premier Peter Lougheed first created it. To put this in perspective, that fund would be worth today $137 billion had annual interest earned since 1986 just been left alone in the fund instead of put into general revenues. We wouldn't have even had to add a cent of resource revenues from 1986 on. Just trust in the power of compound interest to get us where we wanted to go and $136 billion would be in the heritage fund today. Incredible squandering of wealth. Instead, today it's worth a paltry $16.4 billion. It is quite possibly, literally and figuratively, the most stunning and incompetent record of fiscal mismanagement in our province's and our nation's history.

Where has all the money gone? It's gone to corporate welfare for some of the world's most profitable multinationals, who happen to be big political donors. It has gone to political insiders and patronage appointments; to government executives and managers who receive bonuses for failing to meet targets or for barely meeting targets they set themselves; to exorbitant expense accounts, butlers, car detailing, lavish lunches, and other perks for political appointees; to spin doctors, pet projects, and new MLA offices; to carbon capture and storage; and to the most bloated and expensive bureaucracy in the entire country.

Politicians who say one thing and do another – they've received a lot – who give themselves pay raises right after elections, sometimes behind closed doors, and then have the gall to say that they didn't give themselves a pay raise: those same politicians then tried to claim hard times and expect everyone else to tighten their belts. [interjection] I know that hurts, House leader. I know that last one hurt. Clearly, this predicament can no longer be solved overnight.

In each of the previous three years the Wildrose made an alternative balanced budget proposal in order to show Albertans what we would have done to balance the budget. Because the financial hole this government has dug us into is now so deep, we could not honestly promise a balanced budget this year without impacting programs and services that are important to Albertans. We promised during the election that we would not cut the salaries or positions of front-line workers in education, health care, policing, and other key social services and supports, and unlike this government, we will not say one thing and do another.

This year we have proposed a two-year Wildrose financial recovery plan because that is what Alberta needs now. Our plan will eliminate the operating deficit immediately in Budget 2013, eliminate the real cash deficit of $5.5 billion by 2014, return the provincial government to structural surpluses, institute a long-term spending and savings plan to ensure sustainability of priority programs and services, and protect the Alberta advantage with no new taxes or tax hikes.

The government always asks us: where would you cut? We always answer, and they always deny that we answer, so I will repeat it again for everyone to hear. Where would we cut? Well, listen up. We would start at the top. We would roll back cabinet pay by 30 per cent to pre-2008 levels. We would cut the more recent 8 per cent pay raise for MLAs. We would eliminate minister-without-portfolio positions and reduce the number of ministries to 16 while reducing the LAO budget by 10 per cent and the public affairs propaganda bureau by $10 million.

We would implement a $50 billion, 10-year debt-free capital plan that would prioritize capital projects based on community needs, not politics, on a list that would be publicly available to all Albertans, set with objective criteria so all Albertans could know what to expect from infrastructure projects across the province. [interjection] In answer to that associate minister's question, "Where is the list?" we just FOIPed your department, and you wouldn't give it to us, so button it.

We would save hundreds of millions of dollars by ending all grants to all for-profit corporations, no exceptions, and we would divest ourselves from the Alberta Enterprise Corporation and get the government out of the business of being in business, picking winners and losers, and taking on business risks with Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars.

We would hold the line on what we spend overall on front-line positions and salaries for two years in the public service and work with them to transform and streamline the public service so that the best rise to the top and make public-sector compensation and benefits sustainable into the future.

Finally, we would empower the Auditor General and double his office's budget and bring in independent third parties to fully audit the government and review all programs and services for duplication and waste.

Once Alberta's finances are back on track and a cash surplus is re-established in 2014, it is critical that government does not fall back into the same old habits. Because of that, we would therefore pass the Wildrose Balanced Budget and Savings Act, which we campaigned on in 2012. This act will cap increases in annual government spending to inflation plus population growth in good years and bad. It would reinstate mandatory balanced budget legislation that the current government revoked in 2009. It would mandate that 50 per cent of all cash surpluses, once we return to a total cash surplus, are invested in the heritage fund each and every year, and it would prohibit the transfer of interest from the heritage fund into general revenue until that fund . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions or comment. Are there any members who would like to use 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Two points or two questions I would like you to cover, hon. Member for Airdrie, the two things that you touched on that there seemed to be so much confusion and debate over, depending on what side of the House you sit on. The 8 per cent raise that MLAs voted themselves once we were elected: can you explain sort of in layman's terms how that number changed from one to the next so that we all understand? Secondly, on the corporate handouts I think if we all were aware maybe of where some of this money is going, then we'd be able to look our constituents in the eye and say: do these companies really need Alberta taxpayer money? Could you give us some more examples?

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: I most certainly can, and I will.

Before I get to those questions, I just have a few more comments to preface that question. As part of the Balanced Budget and Savings Act we would also prohibit the transfer of interest from the heritage fund into general revenue until interest from the fund is more than the amount of government revenues from oil and gas, therefore ending our forever dependence on volatile oil and gas revenues.

Alberta desperately needs this Wildrose financial recovery plan. The longer we wait, the worse it will get, and the more difficult it will be to get out of this mess.

Point of Order

Question-and-comment Period

Mr. Hancock: A point of order, Madam Speaker. Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for questions and comments. It has been abused in the past by people saying: would you like to finish your speech? But in this case the hon. member didn't. He actually asked a couple of questions. It's not appropriate for the hon. member to just finish his speech.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, can you return to the question that you were asked, please?

Mr. McAllister: Madam Speaker, can I clarify? I asked the questions.

The Acting Speaker: No. We had the questions. The hon. member can remember what you asked him. He should return to the questions.

Mr. Anderson: It was an 8 per cent pay raise from what we were receiving right after the election compared to what we're receiving today.

Do you have any other questions?

Debate Continued

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was wondering if the member would like to comment on some particular issues on the – I'm going to ask a question – issue of borrowing money to get out of debt.

Mr. McAllister: And finish your point.

Mr. Anglin: And finish your point.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie on the question.

Mr. Anderson: Clearly, I don't think we should borrow to save.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Sure. I have a question for the hon. member. It's the same one that his colleague asked that he mumbled about and couldn't answer, so I'd ask to give him another chance. How does that member understand a major cut to MLA pay being an 8 per cent increase? Before the election MLAs had a transition allowance. They had a tax-free allowance. They had a number of things which, when you added them up, was 8 per cent more than MLAs are getting now. How does he call that an 8 per cent raise?

Mr. Anderson: Well, I own a calculator, and it's really cool because I have pay stubs. I know that your pay stubs don't look like mine because they're, like, twice as much, but under my pay stubs if you compare the month before the election to what I make right now, it's an 8 per cent increase overall. That means it's an 8 per cent increase total. That's the reason for that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: That side spoke, so this side can. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you. I'm just wondering if the hon. Member for Airdrie has any additional comments that he'd like to express.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. That's great. I'd love to express some additional comments.

Alberta desperately needs this Wildrose financial recovery plan. The longer we wait, the worse it will get, and the more difficult it will be to get out of this mess, the more wealth will be squandered, and the heavier the burden will be on our children's and our grandchildren's future. At least, despite the spectacle of the provincial government's mismanagement, Albertans are moving forward. Alberta's economy is, indeed, once again leading the nation both in terms of employment and growth. Albertans are doing what they do best: creating jobs, generating wealth, providing opportunity and prosperity for them and their families. Our best days are not behind us.

Despite the gloomy state of the government's finances, Albertans shine brightly. They give us hope every day and inspire us in the Wildrose to keep working on their behalf and to urge this old, tired, ineffective government to protect the Alberta advantage and get this government on a responsible fiscal track, living within their means just like Alberta families and businesses do every day because the government is lucky – and indeed we are all blessed – that Albertans are driving ahead with the same ingenuity, innovation, and activity they always have. It's not because of this government. It's because of Albertans, because this is the province Albertans built.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Motion 28? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It has truly been an interesting afternoon listening to the responses to the budget, and getting an opportunity to comment on my views and thoughts is an honour and a privilege. Having looked at the budget and seeing the results that were presented therein, I can only feel a great deal of sadness for what has transpired over the course of the last 25 years. I can only look at those budget documents as to what they confirmed, that it should be a day of sadness here.

I mean that not as a political poke at anyone. I have been complicit in this as well. As an Albertan who's lived here since 1969, I have been part of the spoils of having been born in this province, lucky enough to be part of it, having been born on a patch of earth that is lucky enough to have 25 per cent of the oil resources. My life has been greatly benefited as a result of that, and in fact if you look at decisions made and the record of this government, clearly there is a reason why that has been so. I have had the opportunity to go to public schools, had great care in hospitals, had an excellent university experience, and all the while had to pay relatively low taxes. It's the same with my parents, the same with everyone in this room. I guess that has been really quite an advantage to many Albertans.

But I have to go back to the reason why I'm sad. I think it was a real eye-opener, a real wake-up call, a real time for us to re-evaluate whether what we've done over the last 25 years and maybe even what we've done over the entire 40-some-odd year reign of this government is really in the best long-term interest of Alberta's future.

Madam Speaker, not to try and be funny, but I meant this from the bottom of my heart when I said yesterday in question period to future generations: call the cops; you've been robbed. I don't think that's too far off the point. What we have seen over here is essentially intergenerational theft.

When we had this oil and gas wealth, there was a recognition, at least by our government, the early days of it in 1971, that there were two things in Alberta's future that were true, and they are still true today. One day we're going to run out of oil and gas, probably not for a long time, hopefully not, but another thing that's going to occur is that the world may move on or our oil and gas may not be worth as much as we think it is or something else is going to happen that we don't know. So given the precautionary principle I would suggest that the government and even all political parties in here base their assumptions on trying to save a large portion of this nonrenewable resource revenue for a day when we do not have oil and gas reserves.

Look at how we're living right now. I've already said that I've lived probably better than I should have as a result of accidents of geography as well as government decisions. I have benefited. I have been complicit in this crime, okay? I have. My life has been unduly enriched. But if we believe, I guess, that when the day comes when oil and gas are no longer here, tourism and farming are going to carry the day, I don't think they're going to pay the freight the way we need.

Let's look at the last 25 years. Over that time we have taken in and spent $150 billion in nonrenewable resource revenues. Yes, we can point to various times in our past when maybe we've done things better. Maybe we more prudently looked after our resources. Maybe we brought in more revenue or cut taxes or did something like that that impacted the economy one way or government revenues the other way. But in the main one has to look at the 25 years and say: what a lost opportunity for building a real legacy, a real structure on which we can ensure that future generations can and will be sustained, possibly in perpetuity.

I know the other side of the House doesn't like me to bring up the example of Norway. But, really, if we look at a prudent society and what they decided to do with their oil and gas revenue, to save it all as it comes out of the ground – they said: we see this as being a resource that will one day no longer be here, and we will need it then. Their society decided to do that, okay?

Of course, the answer will come back from the other side. I think I heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore and the hon. Solicitor General state: oh, my goodness; they pay higher taxes. Well, are they stupid, or are we stupid? The proof is that they saved the money. It's not a question of who paid higher taxes or who paid less taxes. You know, simply put, if you don't want to pay the taxes, don't provide the services. That's what your government has done. They simply had no accountability with this money or with any obligation to save any portion of it.

The evidence is clear. It came out last week in the budget that not only has this $150 billion not been enough; we now will need an extra – I don't have a very good abacus, so I'm not very good at figuring out the numbers, but we could be by the end of this thing $17 billion in debt. I note that the government does seem to say that we have a savings plan here, but let's look at this savings plan. Really? Come on. Let's look at it. Let's be honest.

Yeah, we can go on the TV and the radio and say: "We have an operational budget. We have a capital plan. We have a savings program." But this savings program is really kind of milquetoast at best, okay? I think the number is, say, 5 per cent of the first $10 billion that comes in in nonrenewable resource revenue, and it doesn't start till 2016, so it'll be $500 million. Well, great. If I can believe the budget documents, which I'm becoming increasingly skeptical about doing after the last election, if you look at that, we're saving $500 million of $10 billion, and we're saying that that's something. Given the unbelievable wealth we're bringing in, we're pointing to that $500 million of what we're going to save when we're chalking up $17 billion in debt. Who are we really kidding here? I hope you're not kidding yourselves. If you are, that's just foolish. If you are believing that this is a reasonable plan going forward, please look at the last 25 years because it seems to me that that is exactly the path – despite the little shell game we're playing, despite the little smoke and mirrors and up and down we are doing, it is essentially a shell game.

Now, you might be perfectly correct. I'll give you this. Maybe your political antenna is up, and you guys sense that this is the best way forward to win the next election. Great. But does it do anything, really, to address the underlying fundamental problem that here in Alberta we have refused to save money for the day when we are out of natural gas, oil and gas, and oil sands and the like? It doesn't. If we think we are solving that problem, we are not.

Let me point out a couple of facts here. I think they're factual, but I'm certain there are ministers here and other members who can correct me. We are the lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada by a country mile. The next lowest is Saskatchewan with their revenue streams amounting to $12 billion. Yes, they have higher corporate taxes, they have a progressive tax system, and, yes, they do have a PST. Okay? Oh, my God, lightning didn't strike. They have those things. You know, if we adopted that tax structure, we would bring in $12 billion more.

In my simple mind, being tied for the lowest taxed jurisdiction in all of Canada is not that bad of an approach. Think about it. Pay all of today's bills, save $6 billion for the future, and there you go. That might not be politically expedient. I understand that. But if you want to continue spending like this – and I would agree with that spending. In fact, given where we are today, given that we're trying to hit reset on this whole last 25 years – I think that's part of this exercise, trying to hit reset on this whole exercise. Going forward, we have to take more of an approach of paying for what we use.

Given that differential – it's a different form of differential – between us and Saskatchewan, or the tax bubble we have, not the bitumen bubble but the tax bubble, if you want to build Alberta, if you want to do these things, which I want you to do, frankly, I think that given where we are today, hitting reset is not the dumbest plan. Nevertheless, convincing ourselves that something is going to change without changing the tax structure is folly. It's complete nonsense. If you tell yourself that, I think you're just playing the role of the ostrich, putting your head in the ground and hoping that the storm is going to go away and we get to win the next election and go from there. That, to me, is not a reasonable plan.

It seems to me, looking at this, that there's this plan that we're going to sell ever-growing amounts of bitumen and that it's just not going to matter one day. But that's been the plan since '08. It still hasn't come in. I think there's some hope over there that it's going to be the plan by 2016, but maybe not. It doesn't take into account the precautionary principle.

In any event, I know I'm getting a question here, so I look forward to taking that. I thank you for the time.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker. I just have a question for the hon. member, who has such concern about the concept of intergenerational theft, coming from a party that wants to raise our taxes and practise current generational theft, I guess. But that's okay. I actually agree with the member and that party there that we need to save some. Obviously, we could talk for a long time about how much, but we need to save some for future generations. I get that.

Wouldn't the hon. member allow that some of the infrastructure that we build today is, in fact, a legacy for future generations, that some of the spending that we do today is a legacy for future generations? It's not just that we have schools or universities. It's that we have a world-class education system that is enduring and is educating already a future generation or hospitals that are protecting that future generation and their health needs and their children's health needs. But for public investment we wouldn't have an oil sands business today, we wouldn't have an OSB business in Alberta. Those public investments are legacies for future generations. When we get there, we will have diversified our economy beyond an oil economy.

An Hon. Member: Is there a question?

Mr. Oberle: Wouldn't that hon. member allow that some of the spending that provided this infrastructure and these businesses is, in fact, a legacy for future generations? That's certainly what it's intended for.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, just for clarification, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is for comments and questions.

Mr. Hehr: I thank the hon. minister for his question. It was a thoughtful one. I would agree that some of these investments we make and have made are investments in the future. But let's be clear. These schools we built are generally for children who are going to be going to school in them now. Generally speaking, some of these investments we've made in the oil sands sector were made for us to use now because we're getting the revenue out and spending it all now. I stand by the proposition that if we really are looking to the future like other forward-looking societies have – Alaska for one, Norway for another – this has to be saved for the future.

He says that I made some comment about picking the pocket of today's taxpayer. I went through the process of how our taxpayer gets a pretty good deal as a result of our nonrenewable resource revenue. Really, how can you say that we don't? We spend all of that oil wealth as it comes out of the ground. If we didn't have it, we'd have to pay taxes or else not have the services. How that is lost on the hon. minister I'm not sure. It really makes pretty common sense if you look at this year's budget. Go back the last five years since I've been here. Go back as far as you want. We have always spent nonrenewable resource revenue on operational spending, which we in the main use today. We use it. To again deny that fact, I think the hon. minister is doing mental gymnastics that I don't understand.

I will agree with him that some investments we've made are a legacy for the future, but those will inevitably break down, will inevitably have to be rebuilt, will inevitably have a deficit attached to them as well. Really, the goal should be to get a fund like Norway has, $700 billion, $800 billion more, to really set Alberta up for the day when oil and gas are no longer here or the world goes on.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: Clearly, this member brings a different perspective to how to solve this issue of intergenerational theft, and that's what it is. This government has clearly, I would say, robbed future generations blind. This is going to be one heck of a discussion to have with generations down the road, with our kids and grandkids when they get older, trying to explain to them how we blew through all this wealth.

I guess I would ask the hon. member if he has any other comments on that or just general comments that maybe you weren't able to make in that 15 minutes that were given to you.

Mr. Hehr: To be fair to the hon. Member for Airdrie, I stole the term from you. Okay? So there it is.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

That's the end of Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Are there any other members who wish to speak on Government Motion 28? The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to lend some additional perspective to today's debate. I want to talk a little bit to members in the Assembly today about an experience that I had back in January which I found very instructive. It helped sort of bring perspective to me as to how decisions made in the past can then affect where things go in future years.

In the month of January I was very privileged to represent the province of Alberta as a delegate to the Pacific Northwest Economic Region visit to the state capital of Alaska, to Juneau. During the course of two days there we had a series of meetings with state legislators. I had the privilege of meeting the state governor and a number of other officials for the state both from their Senate and from their House of Representatives.

I learned a number of things about the state of Alaska that I found very interesting, and perhaps, you know, I'll pass those on. One of the things that the hon. member who just spoke talked about was the Alaska savings plan. They do. They have a permanent fund, that was patterned in some ways after our heritage trust fund, that was started in 1976 and today has a balance of some $40 billion dollars. In addition to this permanent fund they also have about $20 billion in a number of various constitutionally required reserve funds that are there in the event of a budgetary deficit to cover off any budgetary deficit.

In addition to that, they also have an annual dividend payout. Based on a formula that is in law for the permanent fund, that dividend is paid out to Alaskans on an annual basis. Last year that cheque, if you were an eligible Alaskan, was for some $878. The state has no personal income tax. The state has no state sales tax although there are some jurisdictions within the state that do charge a sales tax. I thought to myself: "My goodness. This is amazing. They've saved all this money. They have no taxes. They pay back to people. I can think of a party that wants Alberta to be run that way. That's right. There they are, across from us."

So you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, when I learned all those things, how I was surprised by a few things. I was surprised by the number of legislators that, when they met with us and found out that I was the delegate from Alberta, said: "Talk to me about how you've done it. Talk to me about how you're diversifying your economy. Talk to me about how you've done it in Alberta in such a way that we wish we would have made those decisions." You see?

Mr. Fawcett: Democrats or Republicans?

Dr. Starke: Both Democrats and Republicans who have been in power in the state of Alaska, which now has an economy that is 73 per cent dependent on nonrenewable resource revenue, mostly from the Alaskan north slope, and 90 per cent of their unrestricted revenue is dependent on nonrenewable resource revenue.

They have refineries in Alaska that are shut down because they don't have the workers to run them. They have a power grid system – and I wish that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was here. Well, they don't have a power grid system. You see, they have a number of isolated areas of the state that are not hooked together in any way. They suffer brownouts regularly during the summer and winter months. In fact, a number of their isolated communities depend on the burning of diesel fuel in generators to generate electric power.

They have abundant natural gas, but they have no infrastructure for transporting that gas to where it's used. As a result, in the city of Fairbanks on an annual basis you spend about $6,000 to heat your house with heating oil.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Dr. Starke: Six thousand dollars to heat your house with heating oil.

They do not have an effective infrastructure. Their roads are limited. Let's just put it that way. And again and again I was asked by their legislators: how did you do it; how did Alberta build the universities, the hospitals, the research facilities that we wish we had in Alaska? I told them: well, we made a number of decisions. Not all of those decisions went perfectly, Madam Speaker, but we did make a number of decisions that I do think have paid out for our province. We decided not to just sit on our savings, put them in a tobacco tin and hide them in the back of the underwear drawer. Instead, we invested those savings. We invested them in a number of ways and in a number of things.

Now, as the opposition has pointed out, not all of those investments turned out as well as we would have liked. But instead of just dwelling on the failures and the well-publicized things that didn't go well, I'd like to point out a few partnerships with private enterprise that did go very, very well: the Joffe gas plant as an example, which was as a result of an investment made in the era of Peter Lougheed; and, as the minister sitting next to me mentioned, the OSB facilities that we have and the OSB factories that we have. A lot of these things would not have gone ahead without investment on behalf of the taxpayer in private business.

I want to talk about one that I'm particularly familiar with, and that's the Lloydminster biprovincial upgrader. For years and years and years we recognized in Lloydminster that we had heavy oil in the ground and were not going to get full value for that oil unless it could be upgraded. When I was on city council in 1985 to 1991 we had numerous meetings with Husky officials, and we said: we really think we need to go ahead and do this. The Husky officials said: "You know what? The economics just aren't there." They said that again and again and again to us.

Then in 1988 we had the courage and the conviction of Don Mazankowski; of Bill McKnight; of the former Premier of this province, the person you guys slag all the time, Premier Getty; and of Premier Devine of Saskatchewan. They developed a unique partnership between the federal government, two provincial governments, and Husky in 1988 to announce the building of the Lloydminster biprovincial upgrader. Now, I will tell you that Lloydminster is a city that has enjoyed a huge rate of growth and continues today to grow hugely, largely driven by the biprovincial upgrader.

A couple of years after the biprovincial upgrader was announced, as an example, Lakeland College had a campus established in Lloydminster. So Lloydminster, that had an economy that was very vulnerable to up-and-down fluctuations, now had an economy that was built on heavy oil, on agriculture, on education.

Soon what else happened in Lloydminster? Well, all of a sudden we became known as a retail market. We drag in a whole lot of folks from the province of Saskatchewan to come shopping to Lloydminster because – yes, you guessed it – we have no sales tax and we also have 14 liquor stores to choose from.

Now, Madam Speaker, we can dwell on the negatives and we can say, "The government shouldn't be involved in private business," as a dogma, you know, as something that we just believe, just absolutely, because we can't risk making a mistake. But we have to also be bold, and we have to be courageous. If there's anything that we have been as Albertans historically, it's bold and courageous.

To sit and to say that we aren't going to invest in this and we're not going to invest in that and we're not prepared to take risks and we're not prepared to go ahead to me is just not Albertan. It's just not what we do in this province. We are risk takers. We're entrepreneurs. I think that that's the kind of behaviour that people expect of their government.

Now, are they always going to work out and always be success stories? Well, obviously not. I mean, all of us in our private lives probably pick some stocks that win and some stocks that don't do so well. But we do have success stories, Madam Speaker, ones that I'm very proud of.

That is why we're not Alaska. Alaska can't get people to come up there even though they pay them 900 bucks a year from a dividend fund. They can't get people to come even though they don't have a state income tax. It's because they don't have a diversified economy. Their economy is entirely dependent on nonrenewable resource revenue, and that production off the north slope of Alaska has been going steadily downward since 1988. In fact, it's gone down so far that the one piece of infrastructure that they have invested in, the Trans-Alaska pipeline system, is now running at about one-quarter of its capacity. If it falls a lot more, the flow rate will be so low that, in fact, they won't be able to run oil down the Trans-Alaska pipeline.

We know, of course, from my colleague the Minister of Energy the importance of getting your product to tidewater. In fact, they're very interested in the G7G proposal which involves the construction of a rail line from the oil sands to Alaska to hook into the TAP system. I will tell you that they were really interested in that proposal because that proposal, in fact, could kick-start their refining industry and also their pipelines. I said that, you know, really, we're working on some other proposals that we believe to be more economically sound, but we would keep the G7G proposal in the back of our minds, and if it was something worth considering, we would do so in the future.

Madam Speaker, I will tell you from my perspective and from that trip to the state of Alaska that I came home after three days in Juneau a much more proud Albertan. I was a proud Albertan because I had people from basically every jurisdiction around us – from Saskatchewan, from Alaska, from Montana, from Washington state – saying: "How do you do it? Tell us what you've done so that we can try to do the same thing." When I look at other economies that are largely resource dependent like Alaska, like Montana – I look at the world-class universities we have. I look at the fact that we do world-class research. I look at things like the Mazankowski Heart Institute. I look at Kananaskis Country. I look at all of the things that we have invested in in Alberta because we've chosen to invest using the leverage of the heritage trust fund. I'm very proud of what we've built in this province. While I acknowledge that we haven't always got it right, we've got it right more than we've got it wrong.

Madam Speaker, I am tremendously proud to say that I told the governor of Alaska, I told the Speaker of Alaska: "Well, what mistakes do you think you've made?" The Speaker of their House of Representatives, a Republican, said: "Well, the first thing is that we should be charging people income tax." I said: "Really? That's interesting." He said: "The people here have no skin in the game. They don't have any personal investment, personal stake in what's going on." I go: "Really?"

Then I asked: "What about taking on debt? You've got all this money. You probably can buy everything in cash." The chair of their state Finance Committee said: "Well, you'd have to be a moron not to borrow to build. Of course, we borrow; we borrow all the time. We borrow for schools. We borrow for infrastructure." That which they build. He said: "We borrow, then we pay it out over a period of time. We have bond issues." He said: "But we have a great credit rating. We have a triple-A credit rating. Why on earth would we not borrow? Why wouldn't you borrow when you can borrow for 2 per cent, yet your investments are making 6 or 7 per cent?" I thought: "Gee. You know, that sounds familiar. That sounds an awful lot like what the Minister of Finance has been saying."

Madam Speaker, as I said, the trip to Alaska was very instructive. I think, or at least I hope, that they learned as much from me as I learned from them. When I travelled there and met with their governor, met with their state legislators, met with the Speakers of both of their Houses, and met with my fellow elected leaders from other jurisdictions, I came back home as a very proud Albertan.

This budget carries on that tradition. This budget carries on that tradition of building for our future. This budget makes judicious use of borrowing and debt to build us going forward. We will continue to do that, Madam Speaker. I'm very proud of what our government has done, and I look forward to continuing the Alberta success story in that manner.

I thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) at this moment. The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank the member for talking about Alaska. That was interesting. Just on some of the numbers now when you talked about the heating oil costs there. Up until two years ago I had heating oil in my old house on the farmyard. Now, I'm just going ballpark numbers, so bear with me here. Those nozzles on those oil furnaces only run about .75 gallons an hour. That's the maximum you can blow through them to make those oil furnaces run. So if you use that, it's $6,000 annually at $3.50 a gallon. It's probably higher up there, so I'm not sure. That works out to about 1,715 gallons a year. Now, if you take that at .75 and you divide that, that's 2,285 hours. So running wide open, it would have to be 95 days straight with the furnace never shutting off.

Now, it's the whole cost of it. I totally understand when you say that the cost at $6,000 is high, and I'll agree with that. But I think you also have to take into account what the price of diesel is up there and, obviously, that it might be a little bit cooler for longer periods of the year there than it is here. I appreciate the numbers you used on that. But I think one has to be a little cautious when we throw numbers around for the shock value. [interjections] I'm very glad that everyone over there finds that because it's something that you should probably do. It's just facts of numbers. When you start throwing them out there, I mean, you're not truly comparing apples to apples on that.

I do appreciate the fact that the cost of heating a house on diesel up there is probably high. But at the time when I was running diesel in my house – and the reason I got rid of it was because it was hard to find anybody to work on them anymore, which was one of the issues, because in this province we've gone to gas – it was actually cheaper. My old farmhouse was cheaper to run with the hot water being diesel and the furnace in the house being diesel than what it was on natural gas. That was when natural gas had spiked up to $7 and $8 a gigajoule.

I mean, I appreciate the numbers – and I do appreciate the story because it does give us a different perspective of what they do up there – but there are definitely some different numbers on that. I'd like to hear your opinion on that, just to throw it back at you.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I thank the hon. Member for Little Bow for his question. The specific number with regard to the heating oil costs came at a lunchtime seminar, that was actually given for members of the staff in the Alaska state Legislature Building, where they talked primarily about electrical power. They were talking primarily about their power grid or, rather, their lack of it.

The other thing that they then talked about, though, was how they heat homes because in some areas it is done by electricity. Specifically, they used the example here of the city of Fairbanks. Fairbanks, as we know, is in central Alaska and is a rather cold place. So I'm not sure, you know, how we can compare, necessarily, efficiencies of their heaters or furnaces versus yours, whether they're as well insulated, that sort of thing.

All I know is that at that particular seminar I was told that the average annual cost for heating a home in Fairbanks, Alaska, specifically, was $6,000. That to me was a considerable sum, so that's why I quoted it here. It was, like I say, one of the very interesting – and there was a long list of them – sort of tidbits and facts that I picked up during my trip.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There is still time under 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just to comment on this, during the campaign, I was just wondering, did you campaign on going into debt, or is this a new-found love of debt? I know that the Premier had promised during the election that there would be no debt and that that was a terrible road to go. Did you campaign on that to your constituents?

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, what I campaigned on is giving Albertans good government and using the experience I developed in business and in other areas of public service to make the kinds of decisions that people wanted me to make. People put their trust in me because they trusted me for 28 years with their farms, with their livestock, with their animals. They said: "You know what? He's probably a trustworthy person, and he probably can make good decisions on our behalf."

One of the things that has to be recognized is that you have to make those decisions that are appropriate at the time, that are generated by the circumstances you are faced with. You can't be ideologically in a tunnel. You have to actually have a broad-minded view to recognize that at times you have to manoeuvre, you have to be nimble, and you can't just be on a railway track.

That, Madam Speaker, is why I was elected.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

That concludes our Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Are there any members who wish to speak on Government Motion 28? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, what we've seen with this budget is a budget that's gone back into debt. We were quite surprised when we saw the magnitude of the debt numbers put forward by this government after years and years and years of – and back in 2007, where there was a . . .

The Acting Speaker: Sorry. Hon. member, I just had a point clarified to me. You adjourned debate, and that was considered to be your moment to speak, so unfortunately you won't be able to speak again.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Okay. Sure. [interjection] All right. I'm just checking. I didn't want to get into trouble. There's a lot of finger pointing going on in here.

The campaigning on budgeting and the whole process of it. I guess, I'm a pretty fiscally conservative person as far as how you spend money. We talk about smart borrowing versus bad borrowing and stuff like that, and I appreciate that. Now, I was told by the previous MLA for Little Bow that whenever the government budgeted for new buildings and stuff, they never budgeted for the operational side. It's great to build new schools and hospitals and things like that, but as a farmer – I always turn it back into my lingo – if you're going to build a dairy barn, you'd best have the money put away to buy the cattle and the feed and everything to run it. I mean, we've talked in this forum quite a few different times. The Associate Minister of Finance looked like there was a good possibility of him having a stroke earlier today, but he got her back under control, and that's good. We talk about doing these things, and we talk of the new schools. We talk of all these things we're going to build, but if we don't have the money to operate it, we have more problems. It's that continual ball.

I mean, there are past programs that we've watched. We always hate to look back in history, and it depends, I guess, on which side of the floor you're on and how the argument goes in history. We talk of Premier Lougheed. We talk of Premier Getty. We talk of Premier Klein. If it works for your own situation – and every party in here has done it before – you pick and choose the times that are good and bad from what that previous administration has done to make your point and to validate it.

What worries me with this budget that we're doing is that we're promising people all these infrastructure things that we're going to build, and we're not going to be able to get the teachers or the doctors or whatever they need to put in there.

I received an e-mail this afternoon from a private school in my riding that just got cut $750,000 due to this budget. Now, that's their guess. I'm waiting for them to still roll that out because I don't want to jump up and down on it yet. It's the whole process of: we have these lists, and we're going to do these things, but we're basically robbing Peter to pay Paul on some of these things. So I just caution the government.

I appreciate that we are a growing province. I appreciate there are over a hundred thousand people a year coming into this province and they don't bring their schools and their hospitals with them. I totally get that. It's the whole process that when we go about doing these things, you know, sitting here – and we sit and throw it back and forth all the time. But it's making good investments and having good ideas, and you get into that whole process.

I'm sure that when we sit down and look at it all – and it's been brought up in debate before that our side has been sitting here, the Wildrose, going on about how we applied for $1.5 billion in infrastructure. We all sat here. We got an e-mail from the associate Finance minister asking us what we saw as a representative of our constituency that we needed in our constituencies. So being a blind sheep of faith when I do things, believing everybody is doing it in the right mode, I sit there and send in what I felt my constituents had told me of where in the over 12,000 square kilometre riding of Little Bow there needed to be overpasses and schools and updates on hospitals and stuff like that.

Mr. McAllister: I didn't send anything in.

Mr. Donovan: Well, I know that a couple of colleagues didn't send anything in because they thought it could be somewhat of a trap.

The point is that as an MLA you're there to represent your constituents. It doesn't matter what party you're in; you're there to represent what they need. I think that to not send that in would have been, in my thoughts, not a great idea for my constituents. So I sent in my list. Now, to get it thrown back at you later in conversation I find a little bit spiteful, but that's politics. I get how the game is played. I totally understand that. It's just that it's deceiving when people get up and speak about it and say: well, your party wanted $1.5 billion worth of infrastructure, but you're campaigning on no infrastructure. We never campaigned on no infrastructure. It was a balanced approach to doing it.

On my farm if I get hailed out three years in a row, I don't go and buy a brand new combine, because the other one is not worn out. You have to sit there and take everything in time. I get the times and measures that we're in at times here of how to balance the budget and how to make that work. But I do not recall one person other than our – I guess they're cousins on this side here, the third and fourth parties, because if we're conservative cousins, they're tax cousins or however they work that. They campaigned on raising taxes and doing stuff like that.

We go into the debate of: yes, there have been no raised taxes in this budget. I totally understand that. As the Associate Minister of Finance pointed out, and I believe it was a challenge, he said: show me where that is. Well, I can tell you about farmers. The Alberta farm fuel distribution: 6 cents. To me that's a tax. To my constituents that's a tax. It's going to cost more to fuel now. On the Wednesday before the budget was dropped I could buy farm fuel at 6 cents a litre cheaper than I can now. Now, I have one constituent with a fairly large farm. He farms about 35,000 acres. For him alone it is going to be $20,000 just in that difference of the 6 cents on fuel. And, I mean, he'll go around it. He'll sit there and end up just not hiring as many people to help at springtime and everything else.

An Hon. Member: But your friend from Airdrie doesn't want us to give money to corporations.

Mr. Donovan: It's not corporations; it's farmers. This is a family farm. It's truly a family farm.

An Hon. Member: It's a business.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. Well, everything is a business.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Donovan: Sorry very much. I get easily confused by some of the things that can happen sometimes.

In doing these things, this is where it's costing Albertans more to do business, which is a tax. I mean, it's just the process.

We can sit on the other side as the Minister of Infrastructure talks about the list: we always have a list. I pulled it up. The minister has always said that there is a list on the Internet, so I pulled up the list. I mean, I agree with him. If the information is there, let's pull it up. As you pull it up – and it's right on his web page, as he's laid out before – you sit here and you go through public infrastructure projects in your communities. That's the list you talk of, I believe, Minister of Infrastructure, when we talk about what's going to go on. It's very nicely done. It has schools. It has postsecondary institutions. It has north, central, south. It splits the province up.

Now, the problem is that it's kind of a false bill of goods. You sit here and look on it, and you go: there are some great ideas here. I totally agree. The great ideas came from the MLAs from all those areas they represent. They probably were asked by the Associate Minister of Finance to put out a list for infrastructure. Now, when you read the list, nobody obviously went over it in a little while because we have some great ideas. In Fort Macleod we're going to put in a public safety and law enforcement training centre. Maybe – just maybe; I'm throwing it out there – cross that one off the list because I think you guys did it already. It got heave-hoed. I mean, that's great, but when we have people – and I'm assuming there are a lot of people somewhere in there that should maybe be identifying some of these problems that are out there.

You know, it's maybe nice to leave it on the list. But when we talk about the list and that we've got to use the list and all of those things, make sure the lovely list is updated. It works out a lot better that way. I have constituents that ask me, and I say: they say that it's on the government website, so go look at it. These are things I think we could update and keep everybody a little happier with.

There's not one person that I recall on that side of the floor or on this side of the floor that went out and campaigned on going into debt. I get the whole concept, and it's a great sales pitch you guys have done for this. I do give your comms team full credit for it. You're selling it as a home mortgage. I get the concept of a home mortgage. I have home mortgages. Lots of people have them. That's how we get through. As a farmer I take that next step of how to really leverage yourself at times, but the difference is that it's me paying it. When I sign on that bottom line, it's my butt that's on the line if I default on the payments. The nice part of being in government when you go and borrow money: it's not you that pays it back. You as a taxpayer pay it back, but your names, the 61 MLAs on that side of the floor, are not personally signing an actual IOU to the bank or an actual mortgage. In 2016 if things happen to flip around, the debt is not on your lap, so to speak. Then we'll be sitting here 25 years from now talking about a government that was in power and that built all of these things, and it's almost like a repeat of the Getty years.

I get that we need to have some stuff built. I'm not here to argue that. It's the whole rolling out of: where do we find the time? Are we actually going to build to a point in life of: "Yeah, we identify that we need that. We're not the party of no infrastructure. We've laid it out. You're going to have to roll it out over a little longer time."

Maybe there are ideas out there for how to justify some of the schools we have. When I was in high school, the high school in High River burned down. Not a great time in life, but like most small communities you make it work. What we did was that we went to Okotoks. Now you say: was there an empty school there? No. The Okotoks composite school was sitting there full. What we did was that the Okotoks composite kids went to school from 7 a.m. till noon, and the kids from High River went to school from noon till 5. Perfect use of a school. Made double time in it. Had two sets of staff in there. It worked out great. The High River people came over. I mean, we got the school rebuilt. Obviously, it was the PC government and an insurance company that rebuilt that school in High River. That was done.

These are the things, I think, that we need to really sit back and look at. I mean, people are talking about it. The means of people are that when we get in a spot, we figure out how to problem solve it. We've done that in communities where communities are starting to use school gyms for community halls because it makes more sense to do stuff like that. If we're looking for ideas on education and such, I think that's one. Now, is it going to work for every parent?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but we are coming on to 6 o'clock, and I have two reminders that I would like to give the House before we adjourn until this evening.

Mr. Donovan: I was just getting to the sweet stuff, but continue. Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

One is that there were references earlier by a member to the absence of somebody in the House. I would remind you that it's not acceptable to refer to an absent member in the House. The other thing is that unless it's 3 in the morning, it's also not acceptable to put your feet up on another member's chair.

So I would just give you those two reminders.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 12, 2013

The Acting Speaker: Everyone, please be seated. Before the table calls the items of business for consideration this evening, the chair would like to alert members to some new faces that you will see helping out in the Assembly during evening sittings. We are fortunate to have Ms Fiona Vance joining the table as sessional Parliamentary Counsel to assist during session. Fiona, can you give a wave? Fiona is a lawyer with the firm of Shores Jardine in Edmonton. She received her law degree from the University of Alberta and was called to the bar in 2007. She also holds degrees from Queen's University and the University of Regina. Fiona did part of her articling rotation with the office of Parliamentary Counsel, so she is acquainted with the people and the environment. On a different note, so to speak, Fiona is an accomplished violinist, having played with the Kingston and Regina symphonies. Welcome, Fiona.

Nancy Robert will also be assisting the table. Nancy is a research officer in House services. Members may recognize her from her current role, which involves conducting research for both the legislative policy committees and the Public Accounts Committee. Prior to working as a research officer, Nancy has served in two other capacities since joining the Legislative Assembly Office in 2000, first as a bills and Journals clerk and most recently as a table research clerk. Nancy's previous experience includes a number of positions with the Department of Justice in the Northwest Territories. She also holds a bachelor of arts degree in political science from Acadia University.

One more time please join me in welcoming Ms Vance and Ms Robert to the Assembly. Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 13

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 13, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013.

The act, as members will know, will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and to the government for the period – well, it'll last throughout the year, but actually it's necessary from April 1, 2013, up to a period of about the 10th of May. The required funding authority for the full year is detailed in the estimates, which we'll be getting into, which is why we didn't have a Committee of Supply on interim, because we'll be dealing with that during the estimates.

It is necessary to pay the bills before the budget is passed and the Appropriation Act is passed, which won't happen now until the end of April, maybe early May, so it's quite appropriate and prudent for us to ask the Legislature for permission to pay the bills, pay the civil servants, keep the engine of government running as we go through the long and exhaustive process of discussing estimates and passing the public accounts. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. So we have another bill, Bill 13. For those following these epic debates at home, Bill 11 was a supplementary supply bill, so that helps the government pay the bills for expenses that they incurred that they weren't expecting and, you know, just random stuff that they wanted to spend more money on. So they come back, and that's to kind of top up what they didn't plan to spend in the previous budget.

Bill 13 is an interim supply appropriation act. This little baby, this little piece of work allows the government to function and pay the bills between April 1 and the time that they pass the budget on – well, we've been told that date will be about April 25. In fact, we're told that is what the date will be, so I'm not sure why the House leader would imply in any way, shape, or form that it could be early May that we'll pass the budget because we've been told that it's April 25 no matter what we do. That's what we call a fait accompli. That's when we will pass the budget, at least according to the House leader. Let there be no illusions of transparency, accountability, and democracy in that regard.

This bill is needed because of the irresponsibility of government in not passing a budget prior to the new fiscal year. Because of that irresponsibility, we have to come back and approve – let's see. How much do we have to approve here? Well, let's read it.

1. From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $13 941 000 . . .

That's a lot of money.

. . . towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Legislative Assembly for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, as shown in the Schedule.

Then it goes on to operational. It says:

2. From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $5 396 930 000 towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as operational for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, as shown in the Schedule.

There's lots in the schedule. We'll talk about that in a bit.

Then for capital, because they're splitting it out from operational, of course:

3. From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $1 395 252 000 towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as capital for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, as shown in the Schedule.

Of course, there are no savings, clearly.

Financial transactions:

4. From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $72 133 000 towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as financial transactions for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, as shown in the Schedule.

Then it sets out the amount broken up into departments, so we've got support for the Legislative Assembly, $7.8 million. Then you've got office of the Auditor General, $2.9 million; office of the Ombudsman, $368,000; office of the Chief Electoral Officer, $628,000; the Ethics Commissioner, $106,000; the Privacy Commissioner, $753,000; office of the Child and Youth Advocate, $1.34 million. That's the $13,900,000 or thereabouts that the Legislative Assembly needs to run its affairs for essentially that month that we don't have a budget passed.

The government. You have aboriginal affairs getting just over $3 million. You have Agriculture and Rural Development. They want $61 million in operational and $19 million in capital. By the way, this is the full bill. This is what we're fully discussing and approving today in this bill.

You have Culture: $35 million, $5 million for capital, and another $246,000 for financial transactions. Education: $762 million in one line item just for operational. That's all we're going to get, $762 million. That's all the bill says, you know. I guess $762 million is not that much money. For capital expenses $101 million.

Then we go to Energy: $26 million for operational, $600,000 for capital. Enterprise and Advanced Education: $445 million, $7.4 million in capital, and another $46 million in financial transactions. Environment and SRD: almost $51 million; capital, $7.2 million; financial transactions, $155,000.

The Premier's office: $5.3 million. That's just for a month. Seems like she's really getting into this whole fiscal discipline thing.

Health. Operational for Health, just for the first little bit here: $2.646 billion. That's one line item. That's what we're debating here today. Don't know what that's for. It's for Health. We know it's for Health, but other than that we don't know what it's for because it doesn't split it out at all. So we're approving $2.6 billion because we can, and we like approving $2.6 billion without having any discussion on how it's being spent or what it's being spent on. We'll just approve it. Whatever. Got to keep the wheels greased, you know. Capital, $11 million; financial transactions, $5 million.

Then we go to Human Services: $804 million. No idea how it's being spent. Just throw it out there. Capital, $1 million.

Infrastructure: $71 million in operational. I don't know why we spend so much money on operational for infrastructure, you know. There's got to be some fat to trim there. Capital for infrastructure, $159 million, makes a little more sense. Financial transactions, $7.25 million.

International and Intergovernmental Relations: $3.5 million for the month or so.

Justice and Solicitor General: operational, $155 million; capital, almost $10 million.

Municipal Affairs: $145,847,000, and capital there is $852,660,000. Now, I think, from how I've had this explained to me, that $852 million is apparently what's going towards MSI, so they're doing that all up front, it would appear, which is fine. At least we can understand that line item.

Service Alberta: operational, $33 million; capital, $4 million; financial transactions, another million.

Tourism, Parks and Recreation: operational, $81 million. Probably no fat to trim there. Capital, $2.5 million.

Transportation: operational, again, $52 million. Man, that's a lot of money to approve, an operational budget of $52 million in Transportation. The capital requirement, a little more understandable, is $212 million. Financial transactions, $7 million.

Treasury Board and Finance: $14 million. That's operational. Fourteen million dollars: that is a lot of accountants, isn't it? Holy smokes. I mean, that's a lot. That is an economic stimulus package unto itself. Capital, $313,000. I mean, these might be very legitimate expenses, but I have no idea what they are paying for because that's all the information we have in the bill. But that's how we roll here in the Big Easy of Alberta. Financial transactions, $2 million, and so forth.

So the amount of operational to be voted under section 2 in this bill right here, this thin piece of paper that wouldn't kindle a fire in the summer – this is the description we have right here – is for approximately $5.4 billion of operational spending, and capital in the amount of $1.4 billion to be voted on and financial transactions of $72 million or thereabouts. That's what we're debating today and what we're asking from our most gracious sovereign, as it says at the beginning of the bill: "Most Gracious Sovereign."

We're going to ask our most gracious sovereign to approve and allow $5.4 billion of operational, $1.4 billion of capital to be spent, and we have approximately five pages telling us what that is about. That is one heck of a way to run a government right there.

I guess some people might still find it a mystery as to why this government finds itself hemorrhaging debt and just completely going into debt, doubling the size of the debt just this year, tripling the size of the debt by the time we go back to the ballot box, mercifully, in 2016. Before that time we're going to be quadrupling the size of the debt in our formerly no-debt Alberta or almost no debt; we did have a couple of billion dollars on the books. But we're just tossing that out and launching into a massive, massive borrowing and spending binge.

So that's what we're doing today with Bill 13. We're going to approve a whole whack-load of money, and we have no idea and no ability to ask the different relevant ministers what this money is for. We don't have that opportunity. We will have an opportunity in estimates to talk about the entire budget, but for that month, you know, we're just kind of approving the money: "Off you go. Spend, spend, spend. Have fun." Boy, oh boy. That's quite an advance on your allowance, I'm telling you. That's a serious advance on allowance right there. [interjection] Yeah, we clearly need that. It'd just be nice if it was listed, you know. Like, if some of the stuff would be listed in here, we might actually know what it's being spent on in the next few months before we approve it because – who knows? – the budget might be amended. It might be changed. Well, then again, maybe not. We've got to work hard on this bill, I think, and spend some time on it.

I think one of the most offensive things that we find with bills like this is that, you know, the government might point to the estimates books that are given to the MLAs when the budget is presented and say: "Well, it's just in there. Go look at it." Well, the problem is that the point of estimates is to go through line by line – I know this is a foreign concept to some – and ask what is included in these things, whether these programs are necessary, whether they could be more efficiently run somehow, whether we need to put more into certain programs and less into other programs.

We have these wonderful debates that can last anywhere from two hours to six hours on billions of dollars. We talk and try to figure out where the money is going and come up with suggestions later on in the process for how we can change the budget. Of course, we're not permitted like they are in other parliaments to bring that many amendments because essentially there's a limit once it gets out of estimates and back into the Legislature on how much time we can debate the budget and how long we have to bring forward amendments. So, really, the whole process is rigged into one that is completely unaccountable in every way, shape, and form.

The only time we have to talk about the budget is when we can kind of point a few things out, ask a few questions that we generally won't get answers to, in the estimates process, and then we can bring it back to the House for a grand total of maybe three hours of debate, maybe four hours, five hours, something like that, on the entirety. We can produce some amendments, maybe, certainly no time to debate them in any real fashion, and then we pass a budget. That's how we do business in Alberta.

One would think that one of reasons why we have a fiscal train wreck in this province right now and why we have squandered hundreds of billions of dollars in resource royalty revenues with certainly not what we should have to show for it – we've got some things to show for it but certainly not what we should have – is because we run our business this way, because there is not a lot of scrutiny.

You know, it's funny. It doesn't make a lot of sense. If the shoe was on the other foot – and I'm just thinking out loud here, as I'm apt to do in some situations. One would think that by having a proper vetting of the budget where we spent – and I know we don't want to compare ourselves to other provinces because, you know, Alberta is different. We're different. We are different. We're so different that we can pass $6 billion in, like, an hour and a half or two hours of debate. That's how different we are.

Mr. Hancock: That's pretty similar to B.C.

Mr. Anderson: Well, if you go to B.C., sir, you'll note that they're in there for hundreds of hours on estimates. Absolutely, they are. They go on and on and on, and they've got tons of time to do it. If you look at Parliament, you'll notice that that process went on for a long, long time, and many amendments were brought forth, I would say, in somewhat of a frivolous manner. After a while there were literally hundreds and hundreds of amendments on each thing.

Mr. Hancock: So in that way were similar to you.

Mr. Anderson: Well, we would probably bring forward a little less than that, but we certainly would bring amendments forward, and they would be properly debated, discussed, and voted on and likely voted down. Maybe a few would be changed. Who knows? But that's the point.

If we did it that way, maybe the government would actually pass more fiscally responsible budgets on a year-to-year basis, and that would translate into more electoral support for them. One could even argue that the entire existence of another party, say a centre-rightish party, you know, that gave the government quite a scare in the last election, held the folks on the other side to the lowest vote total in their party's history, that sort of thing . . . [interjection] Oh, sorry; their lowest since 1967.

One would think that that entire political threat just wouldn't exist if the government would learn to budget properly and run their affairs in a competent, efficient manner. We'd still be all singing Kumbaya, saving up money, and running an effective government instead of what has occurred over the last four to five years. But we can't go back and change history, and unfortunately here we are. This is just such a slap in the face of good fiscal management. It just speaks of incompetence.

The other piece of incompetence that it profiles or certainly shows is the fact that one has to ask: what on earth are we doing in January and February? I don't know. I picked up a paycheck – well, I didn't pick it up; it was deposited in my bank account – a payment for my work as an MLA in January, February, and then that same cheque came in March, and I'm presuming it will come in April. It was for relatively the same amount. One would think that one of the assignments that we have as a House is to pass a budget, and I would think and, in fact, some might even suggest that passing a budget is the most important thing that we do every year in this House. I mean, it's kind of the piece of business that has to get done because if it doesn't get done, everything shuts down. We've seen how bad that can be in the United States, obviously, and in other places. In fact, passing a budget is so important, such an important homework assignment for this House, that if we don't pass the budget in this House, an election is called. That's how critical it is. It's a vote of nonconfidence if it doesn't pass. That's how absolutely essential passing a budget is in the grand scheme of things in this Legislature. One would ask how we haven't passed one yet.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 13?

Mr. Saskiw: It's an honour to be here tonight. I'm very excited to be here and to discuss this very important bill, Bill 13, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act. You know, the previous member gave a very riveting analysis of section 2 and section 3, which outlined the different budgetary amounts that we're going to be voting on today, and I'll be going through that a little bit later. I might need some energy soon to keep going.

I think it's important in this Legislative Assembly and I think people elected us here to do the appropriate due diligence and ensure that we spend every single dollar – it's not our money; it's taxpayers' dollars – very wisely. Earlier today we heard about, you know, how interest rates are at 2 per cent and you can have an 8 per cent investment, so you should be borrowing and borrowing and borrowing. You may get some things right; you may get some things wrong. The difference here is that we're dealing with taxpayers' money. It's not our money. If some members want to go and take a risk and borrow money and put it into some type of investment, that's their prerogative, but that's their money. It's not taxpayer dollars.

What we're debating here today is Bill 13. It sets out some sections which give Her Majesty the ability to pass certain sections here. I'll start with what I would say is the main section, section 2, operational, which states:

From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $5 396 930 000 towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as operational for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014.

One has to ask if the money was in fact spent wisely, if this government didn't blow the money on things like, you know, severance packages. We saw earlier this year that the CFO for Alberta Health Services had expensed something like $600,000 for butler services, trips to all these exotic places in Europe, and so forth. He didn't even lose his job. He actually got a full severance package. He got a million dollars initial severance package and then $10,000 a month for 10 years. If someone gets fired, you don't get a severance if there's cause. If you actually looked at the contract: entirely allowed. I know this sounds crazy, that someone could expense booze and butler service and repairs to his Mercedes and the taxpayer would be on the hook for that. Maybe that's why we have to supply Health with this number here. It's $2.646 billion in operational spending. I would assume that that money that was blown by this government would fall under that operational budget.

You know, this isn't the only thing that we see money wasted on. We've seen it in the past under various capacities, whether it's municipalities or other institutions that were bullied to provide taxpayer funds to a political party. These are things that don't need to be spent, and if the government was wise on its spending, we wouldn't have to be asking for more money.

What I think would be alarming is if, you know, we went to our constituents and talked about the expending of close to $5.4 billion and the fact that this would be done over only a couple of hours and the entire budget and estimates would be done over only a 10-day period, the complete lack of ability for people to hold the government to account, to dig into this information to ensure that taxpayer dollars are spent wisely. I think Albertans would be shocked that this government doesn't feel that it's a priority to ensure that every dollar is spent wisely.

We see the results. We see deficits and debt. At no point in April did anybody campaign on debt, but all of a sudden debt is great. I'm sure that the results would have been quite different if during the last election these members had actually campaigned on borrowing $6 billion and then going into debt by $17 billion by 2016. What this does is burden future generations. You know, it took an entire generation to pay off the Don Getty debt. Albertans worked hard to pay that off. They knew that there were significant cuts that had to be made to pay off that debt. Now we're just racking up that entire debt again, and it's going to take a whole new generation to pay off that debt.

I know some members opposite think that we should take a risk with money, throw it into carbon capture and storage. Who knows? That experimental technology may work. You know, it's not for us to experiment with taxpayer dollars. It's not for us to get in the business of being in business and expending taxpayer dollars like that.

What we see as well, despite going into a massive amount of debt, is a continuation of broken promises, and that's why we're here in Bill 13 asking for more money. They've still gone into debt despite promises. We saw recently a broken promise on highway 881, probably soon to become, I guess, close to the most dangerous highway in Alberta. Despite making those necessary improvements with extra passing lanes and turnouts, the government in a series of four months broke its promise.

When you can't trust a word that the Premier says when she makes a promise, how, then, do they have the audacity to come and ask for more money to spend on more things? You can't trust that that money will be spent wisely. You can't trust that promises will be kept. I know that perhaps there are some members here – we've seen the promise of a hospital in Whitecourt for three elections, and now there's a $10 million line item for that. I don't think those residents are going to buy that again.

Just to go back to the bill, it's broken down into operational and capital. They've split it up. That seems to be the new way this government likes to act to try and come up with a definition that would somehow miraculously, because of a legal definition in the act, result in there not being a deficit or a debt. Going through the different monies that they're asking for, starting with the government side, you see that actually the first part of it under section 1 relates to money from the general revenue fund that's applied to the Legislative Assembly. We see here, you know, close to $8 million to support the Legislative Assembly.

Of course, what we know is that the government has decided to spend over $300 million on a brand new MLA office and an office for bureaucrats. I think that clearly isn't a priority. I'm not sure why in these so-called tough times – it depends on the time of day whether they call it a tough time or a good time and whether the economy is doing well but, regardless, pretty much any time – we should be blowing $300 million on brand new MLA offices. In fact, I talked to my constituents about that, and I can tell you that they're dismayed when they hear that their money is being spent on that. They'd rather see the money being spent on front-line doctors, nurses, and those types of individuals. You know, they may like the fancy offices, and maybe there will be a rooftop garden and a movie theatre and all these kinds of things, but I just don't think that's a priority. It's a difference of priorities here.

You know, it's the same thing when cabinet gave themselves a 34 per cent pay raise. My constituents didn't feel that that was a priority. That money wasn't on their priority list. They thought that that money instead should go to front-line nurses, doctors, and other individuals to ensure that Albertans had a significant amount of services that were being provided to them.

If you go down the list as well, of course, there's $3 million for the Auditor General and $368,000 for the office of the Ombudsman. What's interesting is the $628,000 for the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. I can understand why that office would need more money. They had to hire a former retired Chief Justice. They've had to hire a couple of forensic auditors to look into an alleged $430,000 donation to the PC Party, which would have represented a third of the money that they received in the previous election. There are a lot of expenses when you have to hire forensic accountants. There is a lot of money when you have to hire a retired Chief Justice. When you look at this line item, $628,000, it would be interesting to know how much of that money is being spent on the various scandals that we have seen.

Before we vote on this, it would be, I think, important and pertinent to know how much exactly of $628,000, which is in the schedule and is in reference to section 1 of Bill 13, is going towards investigating scandal. In my opinion, I think that, you know, if there are these investigations and it's only relating to one party, then perhaps taxpayer dollars . . .

Ms DeLong: Maybe you shouldn't make so many false accusations. Then we'll save some money.

Mr. Saskiw: I'm hearing in the background here about false accusations. In fact, the Chief Electoral Officer found numerous instances of illegal donations. Thanks for reminding me, though. It's important to recognize that, that it's actually the Chief Electoral Officer who made findings of illegal donations made to the PC Party. I appreciate your bringing that up.

Of that $628,000 for the Chief Electoral Officer, how much of that money went to investigate those illegal donations that went to the PC Party? That would be an interesting analysis to have because normally, for example, in a court situation, where the judge finds that there's wrongdoing on a particular party, that judge would award costs to the losing party. In this case, the PC Party was found to have accepted illegal donations.

I would suggest that instead of spending 628,000 taxpayer dollars to give to the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, perhaps it's the political party that was found guilty of the wrongdoing that should have to pay for those extra expenses that went into the investigation. It's a significant sum. I mean, it's not as much as, you know, a million dollars that you would pay to go to the London Olympics, but $628,000 is still a significant amount of money. I don't know how you would calculate it in terms of front-line staff, in terms of registered nurses or teachers and so forth, but it is definitely a significant amount of money.

The next line item in the schedule under the Legislative Assembly, which is in reference to section 1, is $106,000 for the office of the Ethics Commissioner. Again, one has to question why this extra money is needed for the office of the Ethics Commissioner. Is it perhaps that, you know, he's had to announce a full investigation regarding tobacco litigation? Are there extra resources that his office has to expend to dig into the material, get all the contracts, interview witnesses, potentially hire contracted third-party help to get to the bottom of this?

You know, $106,000: I mean, it doesn't seem like a lot, but I guess when you're spending someone else's money – this is taxpayer money – I think it's very appropriate, important that we closely scrutinize every single penny. Again, if it's $106,000 to investigate the Premier's involvement in the tobacco lawsuit, one would argue that if there is a finding of wrongdoing, the wrongdoer would have to pay for the cost of the investigation. It's a very important dollar amount that we're spending, and I think it goes again to the question of why we'd want to expend taxpayer dollars on these types of funds.

The next line item is the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. This is a much bigger one. For some reason in this section they combine operational capital and financial transactions whereas in the other areas they don't. My guess is that because, you know, we've had one of the governments that has been less than open and transparent, that has been recognized nationally as having one of the weakest whistle-blower legislation, that has some of the weakest access to information legislation, perhaps this $753,000 of additional expenditures is needed to deal with the increased magnitude of the FOIP requests that the government is getting in the various ministries. It's a big amount of money. I don't know whether or not this is because they group the operational with the capital or whether this is more staff to deal with.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are any members interested in Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. One quick question. As we've listened to the litany that the hon. member has read from the bill, each time asking about extra money, I'm wondering if he actually understands the concept of interim supply.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I know that the hon. House leader, you know, went to the same prestigious law school as I did, but I also got an undergrad in accounting. Surprisingly, I actually know some numbers. I would suggest that what we saw is a significant amount of expenditures. I'm glad he asked that question because when we look at the wasteful spending of this government, the fact that despite the five years of, I would suggest, record revenue in this province, unfortunately we're going into a situation of debt. We're back into debt.

Mr. Hancock: Not according to this act. Do you understand interim supply?

Mr. Saskiw: Yeah, not according to this act because there's some weird kind of definition that they're coming up with on deficit.

It's one of these situations where despite having all these resources, we're going back into debt. I mean, if they can't balance the books in these types of circumstances, in these times, when are they going to balance them? You know, the Government House Leader is talking about the litany going on here, but I think taxpayers, when I go to my constituency, are upset when they find out that there's $2 million that Alberta Health Services spent on booze, the fact that in the last 17 months Alberta Health Services spent $100 million on travel expenses and so forth. I think that it's right that we ask those questions, and I think it's important.

For him to be dismissive of that, that's fine. We can blow funds at any time, but I think it's important that we scrutinize it. The fact that he questions that we in the opposition have a right to question the supply of $5.4 billion, that to question this type of expenditure somehow isn't a valuable use of time I think shines on the government's attitude when it comes to taxpayer money: let's not question this; let's just keep spending, keep spending.

I think that to dismiss those types of relevant concerns – we're trying to do our job to ensure that taxpayers' money is spent wisely. I think it's time that somebody actually do that. I think we've seen in the past that when you don't have a strong opposition, the government isn't held to account. They blow money on things like $2 billion on carbon capture, the money in experimental technology to pump CO<sub>2</sub> into the ground. These are the types of expenses that we see. We see $300 million in brand new MLA offices. We see a million dollars on the London Olympics. We see all these types of expenses, and Albertans are wondering, well, how on earth someone could spend on these things, when they're talking about tough times and going into debt.

I think what's illustrated in this bill is the fact that, you know, in addition to this bill and budget estimates, with a $4 billion deficit there's only going to be, I think, 10 days of scrutiny in budget estimates. Of course, I haven't calculated the exact hours, but it's a significantly fewer number of hours than in other jurisdictions. I think the other jurisdictions actually make sure that the appropriate due diligence is done to ensure that the money is spent wisely.

To go back to the Government House Leader's question in terms of Bill 13, I think it's very important, you know, the fact that we are going back into debt, not just back into debt but $17 billion of expected debt by 2016, a significant amount of debt here, and the fact that this is an explicitly broken promise by the Premier. When I talk to people, they say that they can't trust anymore because of the litany. When he talks about litany, he should talk about the litany of broken promises that this Premier and this government have made. The fact is that we're dealing with a significant amount of money here. It's $5.4 billion. I think that it's important that we here in the Legislature ensure that when we look at these numbers, we go through each line item to ensure that the appropriate level of scrutiny is done.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise, and I'm opposed to the act, but I'm going to support the act. I have to. It's responsible in the sense that we've got to keep in operation. What's unfortunate is that it has come down to this, and it should not have come down to this. We could have easily been sitting earlier. We could have easily passed the budget earlier, so this would not have been necessary.

But I do want to say one thing about borrowing. We are borrowing. We're into the next fiscal year doing this, and in the next fiscal year we're borrowing. I mean, to say that this is not going to be part of that – we're just borrowing from the next year's budget, that we will approve in its entirety later this month, so it is part of that package. I have an issue with borrowing and how this government is viewing it.

Now, there's been a lot said, and someone over here talked about Greece, and the Associate Minister of Finance was quite offended. No comparison. Well, there is a comparison, and there's always a lesson to be learned. If you look at the Greece debacle, depending on how far back anyone would like to go, you can look at how it got into trouble. The reality is this. It got into trouble, and it took about 80 years to destroy the country, but it did run balanced books at one time. It was run somewhat efficiently, someone might argue very efficiently, but when they started centralizing and started basically co-opting all the various private institutions, the next thing you know, they started living on debt.

But where they really got into problems was when they started misrepresenting the debt. That actually started much later than 80 years ago. That started, like, 20 years ago, and that misrepresentation is what really took the country down. That has been consistent not just with countries; that has been consistent with private industries. That is a lesson to be learned because there's a situation right here which is: what is the level of debt? This government now has changed the way it's going to start reporting its budget, and that's what we're approving here. We are no longer going to disclose the budget in the terms that we consistently have. We are now changing those accounting measures.

I'm going to talk about those in a second here, but there are significant lessons to be learned. I'm not seeing, really, the government party questioning this government on some consistency and some inconsistencies in its messaging, and that does need to be cleared up. You don't need to listen just to the opposition on this. There are very friendly reporters who have written some very articulate articles in the newspaper questioning how this government is now accounting for this budget, how it is representing its budget. That should raise alarm bells.

Here we are as a province, as an entity, and we're going to borrow to save. I don't get that. Now, I understand the concept that we borrow at a lower interest rate and lend money out at a higher interest rate, and I have to tell you that that doesn't change in the investment world. You invest, you buy low, and then you sell high, and you make money. Sounds real easy. How are you going to execute it? Where are you going to execute this? How is it going to be structured? You tell me this government's credit rating is outstanding – it is triple-A – but you have one problem now. Now you're in debt. You weren't in debt prior; now you're in debt. With that debt, we have one more significant factor that will affect our credit rating. Our operational budget is not balanced. It's in a deficit.

Now, that's not enough to drive our credit rating down, but that is enough to start raising eyebrows, and that's significant. Where are we going to go with this? Well, there is a plan in the budget to address these issues, but I have to tell you that the plan doesn't make sense. There needs to be more disclosure on how it's going to work. If the hon. members on the other side just think that the government can say this and it will happen – it doesn't work that way.

The idea that you're going to borrow money and put it into a savings account and earn more: just look at the heritage fund. I just looked at the transfers in one of the reports that was most recent. The history since 1978: we had the first five years of significant gains, a 17-year trend line of drops in the transfer rates of what monies were made and transferred into the government coffers, and it was sporadic after 2004, but there was a significant loss in that fund in 2002 and 2009. If that's how we plan on investing, I have to tell you that it didn't make a lot of money over the entire history of the fund, and we're just at a good time right now if you look at the returns, which is wonderful. The point is that that's not consistent. That doesn't always happen.

So how does this government plan on borrowing money? Well, it's not going to borrow at LIBOR. That's not the rate we're going to get. We're going to get LIBOR plus a basis point or prime plus a basis point. That gives us preferred status. I understand that. We have good credit. But how do we loan that money out when we say that we're going to loan that money out at a higher interest rate? Who are we competing with? Well, we're competing with the banks that have a credit rating just as equal if not better if you get into the minutiae of triple-A. We get involved with those institutional investors that are borrowing money, and it's interesting because there are very few people out there that borrow money on the market and loan it out and just consistently make a profit year over year over year.

As a matter of fact, some of the major scandals that showed a history of that ended up in a disaster because what happened was that in their bookkeeping these institutions did not report consistently. I do not believe some of them intended to, but when they started to come forward with something like even this bill, which shows various figures – I focused on the $2 billion in Health. Actually, it's 2 and a half billion dollars.

It's a significant figure, and that's all we know. We don't know the details of it. We don't know where it's going. We don't know anything about it. We're just told this is what we need to do. It may very well be justified, but it's not justified in the act. There's no explanation to really give us a full indication of: is this actually what is needed to get us by in this so-called supplement or so-called borrowing into next year's budget? It all depends on how you want to put the spin on it.

It's actually scary in many ways that we're going to say that we're going to go to the market, that we're going to borrow money and then loan money out at a higher interest rate. There's no stipulation whatsoever on who this government plans on loaning money to. What investments? What's the risk? I know the analogy of: well, I purchase a house; I get a mortgage. That's the analogy that has been used more than once in this Assembly. But I have to tell you that when I borrow money for a house, the bank wants to know what I want the money for. The bank wants to go out and look at the House or at least have it inspected and know that the money they're lending is going towards that house and that there's value in that house. They generally don't lend a hundred per cent anyway.

So we're going to go out to the market and borrow money. Is this government saying that we're not going to disclose to whom we're borrowing money from what we're going to do with that money? I don't think so. That's not logical. But there's no disclosure here.

Now, I understand borrowing the money to build bridges, schools, and that's what you want to do. You've disclosed that. But you haven't disclosed – or at least there's no indication that it's been disclosed – that you're going to borrow money to lend out to someone else at a profit. I have to tell you that any institution that lends out money is thinking: why would I lend money to this government to loan out for a profit when I could just skip this government and loan it out anyway on the market?

Now, there's another side to this. The market does have a saturation point. Companies and institutional investors who have significant credit ratings have the ability to shop the market for the best rate. If it's so consistent or if this government thinks that it can just continually do this and make money at a set rate, it's interesting to me because lots of institutions aren't able to do that that are far better than us and that even get the interbank rate.

Again, it's never been disclosed to us or to this Assembly what the rate would be that we would be borrowing on. What rates do we think we're going to get if we loan out a portion of that money? Who are we going to loan that money out to? Who is the market? I mean, that's a very valid question. You shake your head, but I have to tell you that these institutional investors are quite clever.

An Hon. Member: It's a stupid question.

Mr. Anglin: It's a stupid question. I know. I have to tell you that it's a stupid assumption to think that you can just automatically make money the way you think is so easy. If it was that easy, we'd all do it. It doesn't work that way in the finance world. It does not work that way. I'd introduce you to someone called the Lehman Brothers except they're not there anymore. Barclays bank: they're not there anymore. You laugh, but they're not there. You can't talk to them. You know why? They falsified their books. They got into trouble. They got in way over their head, and they're no longer in existence. Now, we have the taxpayers that back us, but nobody has disclosed to the taxpayers how we're going to achieve this so-called miracle, that we're going to borrow money to make money by lending it out and nothing will ever change.

I tell you that there was a $2 billion loss in our own heritage fund in 2009. That's significant. Now, we had some great gains afterwards. That's great. But you can look at the long-term trend of bonds or the long-term trend of the stock market, and I have to tell you that it goes up, goes down. There are some trends over the long term, but the fact is that relative to the cost of inflation it is not a guarantee. In the marketplace – I'm sorry – it's just not a guarantee.

Here we are getting back into the business, which is kind of odd because that's what the ATB is about. It's in the business of loaning out money and getting capital out there. Are we opening another bank? I don't know. It's not disclosed. How are we doing it? That's what I'm getting at. As the members kind of giggle, the mechanism of describing how they plan on doing this is not visible to us. It's not there. Shake your head all you want, but I have to tell you that whoever you're borrowing the money from is going to want to know, and you will have to disclose it. Unfortunately, this is not transparent.

That's what this debate is about. We're looking here at the budget going into next year, and we don't have a lot of answers on exactly what's going on. What we have are just set figures. I'm just going to take a quick time here because it is important. These are some significant disasters in the market, playing around with misreporting how the funds were handled. That's what I'm actually saying that this government is starting to do. When you start to disguise where your deficit is, if you start to disguise your debt – now, I'm making the allegation that that's really what's happening in this change of accounting. Now, you don't like the allegation – I understand – but if you look at what's even happening in the press, you've got multiple sources saying that the debt is at this level, and someone else is saying that the debt is that level. This government is saying that the debt is way down here. Clearly, it is not universal in the assumption of what level of debt this government is planning to engage in.

I want to look at some of the great scandals dealing with misreporting on their accounting systems the level of debt. Waste Management basically lost $1.7 billion; Enron, $74 billion; WorldCom, $180 billion. All this was the result of the way they accounted for their debt, the way they accounted for and misreported dealing with how they were managing their money.

Madam Speaker, that's what's going on here. We are moving into next year's fiscal . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I hate to prolong this – it's so painful – but I do want to ask the hon. member if he understands the concept that the heritage savings trust fund monies and other monies, pension monies, have been invested through AIMCo, which is a very transparent operation. They do a financial report. We're not actually borrowing money from the banks and lending it out other than perhaps through Treasury Branch and through the Alberta Capital Finance corporation. If he goes on their website, he'll see the interest rates that are posted on an ongoing basis. Entirely transparent.

This fiction that he's building, that the government is going to make money by borrowing money and then lending it out and making money on the spread, is purely his fiction. If he actually believes that, then we're going to have some real troubles as we go through the estimates process and the rest of the appropriation process, and if the rest of his colleagues understand finances the way that he understands finances in terms of government, then we've really got a problem.

Now, I would offer to help him understand those financial statements and understand how government is financed and understand the fact that at any point in time if there's a problem with the return on the market, one can liquidate the assets they have and pay off their debts if they wish to. But it doesn't make sense to spend your money to build capital projects when you've got it invested and earning a return in excess of – what is it this year? – 7.1 per cent when you can borrow it at 2 per cent or 1.5 per cent. With the borrowing power that this government has, with the credit rating we have, and the fact that it's not going to be affected by going into debt – because the hon. member might understand that we've actually been in debt, that we actually have P3 projects, which are a form of debt.

We actually hadn't paid off the debt so much as carried the debt at the interest rates it was at and put money away to offset that. That was actually, if you'd read the papers, paid off, I think two weeks ago, the last of the old accounts, which weren't actually paid off because it made more sense not to pay them off. It made more sense to invest the money because we were making more money on the investment than we were paying on the debt.

The hon. member has a lot of reading and understanding to do about the financial side of government if that's his understanding of this whole issue of debt and debt financing and how you invest in capital over the generation of the capital, the lifespan of the capital, and those sorts of things. I would have thought that a man that has expressed in this House before seven or eight or nine or 10 different vocations that he's served in might have in one of those vocations seen a financial statement.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The member is correct. It does not make sense to me. I mean, it does not make sense. I did not come up with this. It's your government that said: we're going borrow money and lend it out. I mean, that's why I brought that out. I didn't make this one up, so you're a hundred per cent right; it does not make sense.

The second part. I'm glad the member said that they were in debt because I've always known they've had debt. I can show you the track record going back last year and the year before where this government denied it was in debt. As a matter of fact, there are some people from this government still out there denying that they're dealing in debt, and you are, see? I'm glad the member got up and mentioned that because that's really important. That's the issue. The issue is the debt.

Oops; no net debt. No net debt. I like that. It's how we fudge the numbers, and that's what I was getting to, the whole point. If you start fudging the numbers, you start believing your own witches' brew of bookkeeping. That's fine, but you're not going to sell that to the average public. You're not going to sell that to the institutions. What you're going to end up doing is risking knocking our credit rating down, and that would be silly given how good an economy we really have.

There's no reason that we have to have an operational deficit. From our party's perspective, there's no reason we need to operate in debt. Now, even the NDPs and the Liberals believe there's no reason to operate in debt. They just would continue spending, but they would raise taxes to make sure they balance the books.

Now, one of the members over there did bring up sometime earlier today a comparison with how our municipalities operate. I heard that, and I will tell you this. Having sat on a town council, one of my many occupational careers, when accounting we had to balance the books. It was required by law, and I think that's a good part of the MGA. It forces every community to balance their books every fiscal year. I just wish that we would stick with that on a provincial level. I really do. I know; don't fudge the books on me.

Mr. Hancock: You say that on one municipal council you didn't have a debt?

Mr. Anglin: What's that? Well, I mean, I know what he's saying.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is finished.

The next speaker for the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This has been wonderful, but I would move that we adjourn debate.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Intergovernmental and International Relations.

Mr. Dallas: I'm informed that I have the ability to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 11 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am thrilled – thrilled – to be here tonight to speak to another appropriation bill. With all this money flying around, it's hard to keep track, but this is Bill 11. Are we on Bill 11? We're on Bill 11, right? Just wanted to clarify that.

This is a bill of the First Session of the 28th Legislature, 62 Elizabeth II, and Bill 11 of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in the year 2013, and it is the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013.

We're in Committee of the Whole. As my illustrious colleague from Little Bow pointed out so astutely, when the mace goes down . . .

Mr. Donovan: The party is on.

Mr. Anderson: . . . the party is on. We're in committee. That's right. So here we are in committee.

I think that it's incumbent upon us to review this bill carefully. We have three pages of bill to cover here, so we'll get started. The bill starts out in Bill 11 here on page 1. Again it shows the title, and I know we vote on the title and the preamble in the bill, so I think it's important that we examine the titles and the preambles of these bills appropriately. The title of the bill is, again, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013. It has a little space there. It's going to be assented to sometime in 2013. There's a little space where I think they're going to put the date once it's assented to.

It starts out pretty graciously by saying, "Most Gracious Sovereign." Then we go into the preamble, which we also vote on. It says:

Whereas it appears by a Message from His Honour Donald S. Ethell, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta, and the Supplementary Supply Estimates accompanying the Message, that the sums hereinafter mentioned are required to defray certain charges and expenses of the Public Service of Alberta not otherwise provided for during the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013 and for other purposes relating thereto:

May it therefore please Your Majesty that it be enacted and be it enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, as follows:

This preamble is a good preamble. I think it's mostly something that we can get behind. I won't speak for my honourable colleagues, whether they think this is an acceptable preamble or not. We have free votes in this caucus, and if this is not acceptable, it's not acceptable. But I will certainly want to be on the record as voting for this preamble at some point in the future.

An Hon. Member: You like it?

Mr. Anderson: I think so. I like it so much that I'm going to make sure I stand and vote on it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, when you turn away, we can't hear you because you're not speaking into the mike, so through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: Sorry. We're talking about the preamble. You're right.

All right. The next section is Expense. In section 1, which is the expense section, it specifically says:

From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $401 004 000 towards defraying the further charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as expense for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, not otherwise provided for, as shown in the Schedule.

Schedule. Some people say 'sked-yool'; some people say 'shed-yool.' It really is a matter of preference.

In the next section, which is section 2, there's talk of capital investment, and it says:

From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $54 996 000 towards defraying the further charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as capital investment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, not otherwise provided for, as shown in the Schedule, or 'shed-yool,' whatever your preference.

This is a very curious section. You know, it's interesting. If you look at Bill 13, which we were just at, and compare the two, it's very interesting. We have a preamble. Those match. If you kind of hold up your Bill 13 and Bill 11, you'll notice – you can follow along with me – the preamble is the same. It has the exact same wording, really, verbatim.

Then it goes into section 1. It talks about expenses in Bill 11, but in Bill 13 you'll notice that it splits operational and capital. Then in Bill 11 it changes it a little bit. It's different in Bill 11. It's expenses, capital investment, and nonbudgetary disbursements and stuff. So it is different. They're similar but different.

I think one of the reasons that they're different is because they do different things. An interim supply bill, which we've been talking about for a little bit, of course, approves money to be spent by the provincial government and does so from April 1 on. It's kind of a way of making sure the bills get paid prior to the actual budget being passed. Supplementary supply, of course, is when extra money is needed or when they need to move money between departments with the budget that had been previously passed the year before.

You'll notice that the language has already changed. They talk about expenses here, capital investment, in Bill 11, which had to do with the old budget, but when you go to the new budget, they've already changed it. It's operational and capital.

It's kind of neat to see history being made because if you put Bill 12, the big connector, how Bill 11 gets to Bill 13 – there's a bridge between the two, and it's called Bill 12. It's kind of like this. It kind of looks like this, and Bill 12 is the reason why the language changes from Bill 11 to Bill 13. In Bill 13 now they talk about operational expenses. Just like the operational deficit and all that, it's split into operational, capital, and savings. It's just interesting how we can see so visually the efforts of the government to move Bill 11 to Bill 13 and how that was accomplished. They're like bookends on this. Very interesting indeed.

Back to the bill and the sections in the bill:

From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $5 396 930 000 towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as operational for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, as shown in the Schedule,

or 'shed-yool.'

Capital is, then, the next section, and that's section 3. It says:

From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $1 395 252 000 towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as capital for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, as shown in the Schedule, or 'shed-yool,' depending on how you want to pronounce the word, of course. We respect that diversity of choice in how we pronounce that word.

Section 4 is financial transactions, and it talks about:

From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $72 133 000 towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as financial transactions for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014, as shown in the Schedule,

or 'shed-yool.'

Accountability, section 5:

The due application of all money expended under this Act shall be accounted for.

That's important. It's important that the due application of all money expended under the act shall be accounted for. I mean, if it wasn't accounted for, God help us.

So we move to the schedule, or 'shed-yool,' and we look at the different votes that we're going to be voting on, and you notice that not all – oh, look what I've been doing. Shoot. Madam Speaker, I am terribly sorry. I was reading from Bill 13. My apologies. In my effort to show and document how Bill 12 is the joining document between 11 and 13, I mixed them up. So back to Bill 11.

An Hon. Member: What's the preamble?

Mr. Anderson: Well, we've already covered the preamble. I don't want to belabour things unnecessarily.

Under Expense in Bill 11:

1. From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $401 004 000 towards defraying the further charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as expense for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, not otherwise provided for, as shown in the Schedule,

or 'shed-yool.'

Then we talk about capital investment.

2. From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $54 996 000 ...

In Canadian dollars, one would assume.

... towards defraying the further charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as capital investment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, not otherwise provided for, as shown in the Schedule,

or 'shed-yool.'

Nonbudgetary disbursements. You'll notice that in Bill 13 they have "financial transactions." Here they have "non-budgetary disbursements." Interesting. Coincidence? I think not.

3. From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $77 451 000 towards defraying the further charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as non-budgetary disbursements for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, not otherwise provided for, as shown in the Schedule,

or 'shed-yool.'

Then accountability. This is noteworthy. In the accountability section, it says:

4. The due application of all money expended under this Act shall be accounted for.

This is identical to what is in Bill 13. Identical. Not a difference other than that one is section 4 of this act and then the other is section 5 of the other act. So there is a small difference.

When we think about Bill 11, we cannot really understand what's in Bill 11 until we examine the schedule, or 'shed-yool,' as it is otherwise known. Under the votes that we're going to be voting on eventually in this House at some point in the future is Education, where $24,289,000 has been expended; Enterprise and Advanced Education, where $30,900,000 was expended, with nonbudgetary disbursements of $77,451,000. Then under Environment and SRD – SRD is an acronym for Sustainable Resource Development – there is an expense there of $286,497,000 and then capital investment there of $16,010,000. Now, if you look under Municipal Affairs, the expense is $59,318,000. Under Transportation you have capital investment, which is $38,986,000.

That means that the amount to be voted for under section 1 – that would be the amount of expense, or operational, as it's called in Bill 13 – is $401,004,000. The amount of capital investment to be voted under section 2 is $54,996,000. The amount of nonbudgetary disbursements to be voted under section 3 is $77,451,000.

I didn't know we were going to go back to this bill so quickly, so I didn't bring with me – and I'm wondering if any of my colleagues have – the estimates for supplementary supply.

Mr. Wilson: Would you like to refer to these?

Mr. Anderson: Yes. That is correct. I do have them thanks to the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, who is a gentleman and a scholar.

It is important here because this is one of the main differences between Bill 11 and Bill 13. In Bill 11 we actually get to see a little bit about what is included in this amount more precisely than in Bill 13, which we can't really know because in the real estimates binder that we get with the budget, it's the whole amount for the year.

Again, we don't know how much money is going where, when, and so forth, so it's a little bit more difficult to tell.

Because this is Committee of the Whole, I think that a thorough review of the supplementary supply estimates from the general revenue fund, which was presented by the hon. President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Finance in this Assembly of Alberta on March 5, 2013 – we need to examine this and understand it as fully as humanly possible. I think that sometimes these things get glossed over, so this is an opportunity for all of us to take a look at these things. One might notice on the other side that we got through second reading of this bill so fast. I think there was an overall spirit of trust and co-operation that existed in the Leg. Assembly at that time – there was good dialogue and co-operation – but since then it's kind of broken down a little bit, and it's unfortunate.

Because that trust has broken down, unfortunately, when we don't have that trust, that means we're going to have to do all the work ourselves and make sure that every t is crossed and i is dotted. That's important. When we have teamwork in this Legislature, I think that we get a lot more accomplished. Good things happen. But when we're bullies in this Legislature, good things don't happen anymore. Things slow down to a grinding halt. As an opposition party you have very little recourse to look over things like this, like the supplementary supply estimates of 2012-13. When you have that trust, you can go through these supply estimates real quick, lickety-split, and people can go home early, relax, put their feet up at 10 o'clock instead of God knows when. It is important that we go over this and make sure that we're doing our job appropriately, so we will do so.

The first part of the supplementary supply estimates is the preface. The preface is important because it comes first in the document and gives us kind of some background information and so forth, and that's a good thing. There's nothing wrong with a preface. It's good to have a little base information out front to help us along this journey. In the preface one of the paragraphs, if you look at the beginning of it, specifically states – and this is why Committee of the Whole is so great. You look at every single clause in the document and the information that relates to that clause, so you can really dig down deep into every possible nook and cranny.

In the preface it mentions – it says right up front – that the 2012-13 Supplementary Supply Estimates reports the additional requirements for public monies to fund the operations of the Government for the year ending March 31, 2013. The estimate amounts presented in this report are supplements to the original estimate amounts provided by the Legislative Assembly in the Appropriation Act, 2012 as detailed in the 2012-13 Government Estimates.

That's an interesting paragraph. It's a very good explanation of what supplementary supply estimates are, which is a good thing to note. I think anybody coming into this Legislature could read that and say: "You know what? I understand what supplementary supply is." That's good. That's solid. So I think we should leave that in there. If we could vote clause by clause, I would vote for that clause. That's how clear it is.

The next paragraph, under the heading Information Presented, is also important to look at. It says, "This Preface outlines the role of this report in the appropriation process for supplementary supply."

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to my fellow Member for Airdrie. What a wonderful, wonderful speech. Very enlightening. I learned a lot about Bill 11.

I also learned quite a lot about Bill 13. You know, I'm kind of looking at the differences in the bills here, pre Bill 12, post Bill 12. I'm noticing that there are some things that I liked in Bill 11, which would be pre Bill 12. When I look at it here, we actually have supplementary amounts by program. In Bill 13 we just have a line item.

Let's take Education, for instance. Here we're talking about Bill 11. Under Education, the expense, the supplementary amount by program, under vote 2, operating support for public and separate schools, 2.1, operational funding, the current estimate is $2,488,140,000. The estimate in extra that they need is another $9 million, which brings the total up.

You know, in Bill 13 that doesn't exist. We actually have some transparency here in Bill 11. In Bill 13 we have none. We just have a line item for $762 million under operational and under capital, $101,000,500. It just baffles me why we can be so transparent in one bill and hide what we're going to be spending on in another. It's frustrating, and, you know, I think it's frustrating to Albertans. They want to see what their government is spending on. You want to be able to recognize what those funds are going to, that those taxpayer funds are actually going towards something that the Alberta taxpayers approve of.

I mean, Bill 11 fosters a bit of trust. With Bill 13 it's just: "Trust us. We seem to think we know what we're doing." You know, I don't really agree with that. I got into politics because I wanted to see transparency. I wanted Albertans to know exactly what it was their government was doing, how they were doing it, and what they were spending on it. Bill 11 does that. You're asking for extra money. Though we may not agree that the government should need extra money, that they maybe should have come in on budget on some of these things, at least it's being responsible and it's giving some level of transparency and accountability back to the taxpayer, who we are ultimately here representing.

Now, you know, we did a lot of talking in the last session about public interest, and this is what public interest is, transparency. This is why we have a new associate minister on the other side whose job is accountability, transparency, and transformation for this government. Well, where is it? Why is it that the new method of reporting doesn't have these breakdowns of line items like expense by program, that I was referencing earlier. I just don't understand it. We're supposed to be becoming more transparent, not less, yet with Bill 12 we seem to be losing that transparency.

Let's move on and keep talking about this Bill 11, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013. You know, the bill is tabled every year because ministries find that they do need some additional resources, some additional funds because they didn't quite get it right. The government needs some more money.

In Education we're looking at a total of $24 million; $12 million is to offset increases in student enrolment, another $12 million is for Alberta's contribution to school construction in Lloydminster. It's great that Lloydminster is getting a school that's desperately needed. You know, it's wonderful to see that the government is actually building a little bit of infrastructure. I don't know if they plan to build in a few other places. I know of another couple of communities that, well, are going to have some problems with enrolment in the next year or the next two years because their population is far, far exceeding the ability of the current infrastructure within those communities. But those problems were seen. It just seems kind of funny that there hasn't been a shovel in the ground even though some of those communities were promised schools years ago.

Enterprise and Advanced Education is going to be getting another $107 million; $17 million is for new completion grants and student assistance. Now, it's great to see that we're supporting students here in the province. It's also interesting, though, that with the actuarial data that's on hand, we couldn't foresee this coming earlier in the year. I guess we're going to ask for more money later on, again something that government seems to be good at: asking for money after they've spent it. So $13 million for basic infrastructure upgrades at the University of Alberta and $77 million for higher student loans.

Environment and SRD is going to get another $302 million over and above what they budgeted for in 2012-13; $258 million is for emergency firefighting costs as a result of the wildfires last year. Well, that can't be helped. I mean, acts of God do happen, and it's a good thing that we can step up and fight those fires. There is $40 million for emergency spending to fight the mountain pine beetle. Well, again, we're protecting Alberta industry, so I guess I can agree with this one as well.

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. member. I hesitate to interrupt you, but the noise level is getting a little high. Can we keep it down, please? If you have to speak in your full voice, you're welcome to go out into the exterior rooms.

Thank you very much.
Carry on.

Mr. Fox: Now, this last line, since I'm a bit of an air enthusiast, kind of interests me: $16 million in capital spending to convert a CL-215 air tanker to turbine engines. Well, you know, I love aircraft. I've spent quite a lot of time sitting around airports watching them fly overhead and going to the different air museums. You know, it is quite the hobby of mine. In fact, I've built a few models and done a little bit of flying when I've had the opportunity, and it's wonderful. Now, the $16 million capital spending to convert to turbine engines. Well, aside from that I don't think the average taxpayer knows exactly what that's for, I would hope that there would be a little bit more information coming up in budget estimates as to exactly what that is and why those air tankers had their engines upgraded.

Municipal Affairs. Well, they need another $59 million over and above last year. That was for some disaster recovery as well that had to do with wildfires and wildfire assistance programs. I don't see any real issue with that.

Transportation is going to get another $39 million as well. Now, Transportation is interesting. My father worked in the transportation industry. I've seen a lot of the highways here in this province, and I've seen a lot of the province itself, and what a beautiful, beautiful province it is. So what are we spending this extra $39 million on? Well, it's for continued construction of the Anthony Henday and the Stoney Trail around Calgary and $28 million for improvements to the northeast Alberta transportation corridor, so highway 63. We've heard a lot of that in the last little while, so I'm kind of happy to see that we're trying to make that highway a little bit safer for those that are travelling it.

Again, I did like in Bill 11 that these things were broken out. We can look through it. We actually know what this money is going to be spent on. When you look at Bill 13, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013, again all we have are these line items. Let's kind of flip through this thing and see what all is in here. Infrastructure: operational, $71 million; capital, $159 million. Very interesting. I wonder what this is going to be spent on. I'm really not quite clear on that in this piece of legislation, but I am clear in Bill 11 as to what those funds are going to be spent on.

It's quite interesting, the connection between the two that the hon. Member for Airdrie was speaking about in Bill 12. You know, Bill 12 significantly changes the reporting features back to the Alberta taxpayer. What we're looking at in Bill 11 is what the rules used to be. The government used to have to disclose this kind of information to the taxpayer, so the taxpayer did know what we were spending those funds on. Bill 13, on the other hand: no such accountability, no such transparency. The taxpayer really has no idea exactly what those dollars are being spent on, but they're being spent anyway.

Now, I know my colleagues over on this side of the aisle will do our best to try and get some of that information out of the government ministers on the other side there, but it would just be a whole lot better for the Alberta taxpayer if this information was given up front and not having to have it arm-twisted out of the government. You know, this information is something that the province of Alberta used to pride itself on giving out. I mean, we were the province that set ourselves apart from all other provinces when it came to financial transparency and the reporting of financial documents in this Legislature.

What happened? What happened to this province? I mean, under Klein this was unthought of; this was unheard of. But here we are today. We're looking at just strictly numbers, no real identification of what that money is going to be spent on, no real set of priorities, no real transparency back to the taxpayer so they can evaluate what the government is doing. We now just have clouded documents. Instead of one set of books we have three. Shameful.

Had I in my past position given such little information back to the shareholders of the company, to the president of the company, and to the board of directors, that would've been the end of my job right then. They'd have paid me my severance, and I'd have walked right out that door. They'd have hit me on the bum on the way out, too, probably.

I just can't understand how a government that's running a $40 billion company doesn't think that it needs to give that level of detail, that it doesn't have to explain exactly what it's spending those dollars on. Just a line item. Just a line item like in your appropriation Bill 13 here, that says: "Operational, capital & financial transactions, $7,827,000." That's it. No information behind it. Nothing to tell the taxpayer exactly what those dollars are being spent on, unlike Bill 11.

In Bill 11 we have a breakdown here. We know that the money is actually being broken out into different programs. You know, I guess I like the format in Bill 11. I like what's in Bill 11. I like how it's presented, though I don't always agree that we should have to be spending more money. I mean, we're already in a deficit position. Do we really need to be spending more, or should we have shown some fiscal restraint earlier in the year? Yes, I do believe the government should have shown some fiscal restraint earlier in the year. However, we're past that now. The money has been spent. We now have to look at paying the people that have done the work for us, so we have to look at passing Bill 11 now.

Now, Bill 11, the supplementary supply estimates, is money coming out of the general revenue fund. You know, it's funny that that's coming out of the general revenue fund. I mean, clearly, now we're borrowing money, so we're not exactly in a revenue position; we're now coming into a deficit position.

With Bill 13 we don't see any of the breakdowns that we saw under the supplementary supply estimates, just line items. So I guess we're going to have to ask a few more questions of our ministers or a lot more questions of our ministers when we sit down in the budget estimates so that we can clearly find out exactly what we are spending on in the budget because under the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013, we're not given any of that information. We're being asked to pass that bill prior to having all of the relevant data. You know, I just find it frustrating that there isn't the level of transparency in Bill 13 that there is in Bill 11.

I guess with that, I will stand here and say that, yes, I will support Bill 11 so that the government can get on with its business and pay the people that have done the work for the province in the last fiscal year.

I thank the chair for the opportunity to stand up today and make these remarks to the Legislature and to support Bill 11, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill 11, the appropriation act. I have just a few brief comments in regard to this act allocating quite a significant amount of money, $533,451,000, for the additional funds for 2012-13, breaking down into $401 million for operations, almost $55 million for capital investment, and $77 and a half million for additional disbursements. I know that the intention behind this debate is to talk about accountability and specifically the need for the Legislature to approve these additional funds that each department needs beyond its original investments.

I just wanted to bring to attention a couple of things. First of all, I guess, some frustration that our caucus had experienced in regard to getting the information on this Bill 11, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013, and debate particularly in Committee of Supply, which I was made to understand was rather frustrating and disappointing as well through a number of different areas in regard to accountability. I guess there was one minister scheduled, the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, to respond to all of the questions regarding the supplementary supply although we were looking for that to break down into each of the ministries and have individual conversations about each ministry and how they were spending this money of additional supply.

As Hansard did record that meeting, members from all opposition parties did ask specific questions about each program that is requiring the supplementary funding, and we could only get a reply that they would convey those questions to the appropriate ministers. Needless to say, accountability would have meant that the appropriate ministers were in the House and ready to speak on unforeseen costs incurred by each of their respective departments. I don't see this happening here, which is unfortunate. My colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview had asked a series of questions about these supplementary supply estimates, but we've yet to get any of the answers to any of those questions.

You know, I again would perhaps encourage the government to give this. It's almost as if this is a microcosm of the larger budget issue that we have in regard to following a process of rigour – right? – where we can talk to each of the ministers and have enough time and space to go through each line item to give the budget its due. That applies to the $40 billion which is our universal budget coming up but also to this $533,451,000 allocation coming through the appropriation act here in Bill 11.

Just for example, some of the things that I see on this supplementary request. We have Education asking for $12 million for unexpected student enrolment. Again, that's an interesting line item. It would be something that we could certainly pursue in some more detail to find out where and how many more students are coming to each of the school districts and, you know, perhaps how we can break that down to extrapolate that information to build an appropriate Education budget for next year to accommodate for what we know is a large increase in student population in most areas of the province.

This is an interesting line item from this supplementary request that I think tells us what we need to really do with our global 2013-2014 budget, which is to have sufficient funds available to meet the increased enrolment that our province is experiencing in terms of students. Not just the per student grant but to have the additional teachers and buildings and support staff and so forth to meet all aspects of that unexpected student enrolment growth.

The other line item in the Education portion of the supplementary request is in regard to school construction in Lloydminster, which is great. It's one of the very large growth areas in our province. That's all well and good, but again it just brings to mind the many more schools that we could use from Fort McMurray to Grande Prairie, you know, Edmonton, Red Deer, Calgary, all of these places that are experiencing this unprecedented growth, and how much of a gap there is between new school construction and how many kids we have requiring spaces here and now. I mean, that one line item here in the supplementary request, again, is like a little beacon that goes off to remind us of just how it's not appropriate to be having a cutting budget in this next fiscal year. It's just out of touch and out of scope with the growth in our economy and the growth in our population here in the province of Alberta.

The next line item that I thought was interesting in this supplementary request bill was $30.9 million for Enterprise and Advanced Education, which included $17.9 million for new completion grants, expanded part-time grants, increases in program delivery support within student assistance programs as well as $13 million for basic infrastructure upgrades at the University of Alberta, including the Devonian Botanic Garden, the new Islamic garden, which is being partially funded by the Aga Khan. There is a $76 million nonbudgetary disbursement in the advanced education budget for student loan disbursements and $1.4 million to cover an encumbrance from higher than anticipated student loan disbursements from two years ago, and so forth.

Again, you know, it's like a beacon telling us exactly how the growth rate in advanced education is quite phenomenal – we see increased enrolments in our universities and colleges across the province – and that there's a need for more support in those areas. So to see the significant cut to advanced education in next year's budget, which we'll be debating here next week, is completely out of step with both the needs and the desires of Albertans to obtain some sort of advanced education degree or supplemental courses.

I just think that, again, we could be using Bill 11 as a way by which to remind us of how the budget should go here in the province of Alberta for this next fiscal year. I know that the government has been trying to frame this idea of the necessity for cuts because of a problem with revenue, but it's a question of in what scope you're willing to look at our revenue here in the province of Alberta and make honest choices about how to increase our taxation base for extraordinarily wealthy individuals and for large corporations that are making extraordinary profits as well. Just by touching and addressing those two areas in an honest and reasonable way, we could come very close to balancing this budget, right here and right now, without having to make cuts to advanced education and to put a freeze on K to 12 education, which is basically a cut, and so forth.

Again, Madam Chair, this supplementary request should be, perhaps, a wake-up call for all of us to realize that we need to build a budget that reflects the increase in the GDP of this province, the gross domestic product, and the inflation that comes from that and the increase in population in the province of Alberta, too.

You know, it's interesting because there are more and more people from interesting quarters that are acknowledging this problem and this gap of our budget not reflecting the economic and fiscal realities in our province. I just hope that within these next few weeks reasonable and thoughtful individuals from all sides will come to a compromise so that we can not only come close to balancing the budget for this next fiscal year but start to build a framework by which we can ensure the security and safety of the population of Alberta, to know that we will balance our revenues and expenditures for the next number of years here in the province.

I see as well in this supplementary request that Environment and Sustainable Resource Development is requesting some monies. There's $17.4 million for the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan for oil sands monitoring, which is fully offset by revenue from the oil sands industry, which is fine, and $258.6 million of emergency spending for firefighting costs as a result of high wildfire hazard levels and higher fire activity in forest protection areas. Now, certainly, this is a fine thing to have in supplementary supply, Madam Chair, but I can't help but notice a pattern of wildly underbudgeting emergency service lines in the budget for this next fiscal year and then having to really put most or all of those monies into supplementary supply.

We know, being a large province with many different regions and different ecosystems and lots of industrial activity and high population growth, that we can expect emergency spending to come back the next year in some reasonable facsimile as it was the year before. For us to not budget for emergency spending in keeping with the patterns of previous years I think is not entirely responsible, really. We see this once again reflected in this supplementary supply request for $258.6 million for firefighting costs. I mean, I'm not suggesting by any means that this is not money well spent. It's absolutely necessary. I'm just saying that it might as well be reflected in the budget as part of a pattern of spending for emergency funds over the last five or six years. It would be easy to figure that out.

There's another one, $39.75 million for emergency expenditures around the mountain pine beetle infestation. Then there's $16.01 million requested for capital investment to convert an air tanker from piston to turbine engines. Again, you know, not unreasonable by any means, but on that emergency side I think there's a way by which we could approximate that in the real budget and not have to deal with it or worry about it in supplementary supply.

In regard to the Municipal Affairs line items in this Bill 11 I see about $59 million requested for disaster recovery. Again, I've already talked about that. Then there's $530,000 for the Whispering Pines lodge in Grande Cache. I'm not sure what that exactly is all about.

The Transportation supplementary amount includes a $38.9 million request. There is $99.9 million for the Anthony Henday and Stoney Trail ring roads and then $28.6 million for the northeast Alberta transportation corridor, which includes the twinning of highway 63.

Madam Chair, just in sum, then, I'm saying that we can learn a lot from the supplementary requests to help to perhaps put together a more sophisticated global budget for this next fiscal year. I'm talking specifically about emergency spending, something that I think we should be more honestly reflecting in the overall budget instead of in supplementary. As well, the obvious growth in education and advanced education that's reflected in this supplementary supply tells me in no uncertain terms that the idea of ostensible or actual cuts in either of these areas is neither prudent nor responsible nor reflects the needs of our province at this time in regard to both K to 12 and advanced education.

Those are some of the comments I had come up with, Madam Chair, and I am very happy to get my chops going on the budget analysis that is coming in the next few weeks. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to get up and speak on supplementary supply, Bill 11, as I have on previous occasions. I think this is really a discussion about not only spending money but how we deal with the public trust, how we manage the long-term public interest and ensure that we are prudent, responsible custodians of the public well-being and the public purse.

Just for the record I'll itemize some of the items that are requesting extra funding beyond the budget: Education, $24 million and change; Enterprise and Advanced Education, $30 million plus $77 million in nonbudgetary disbursements; Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, $286 million and another $16 million in capital investments and emergency funds; Municipal Affairs, $59 million; Transportation, $39 million roughly; for a total of $401 million.

It's obvious to me as a householder that it's impossible to plan for every contingency, and one has to acknowledge, especially in areas of disaster, that we have no particular ability to manage accurately what we're going to have to spend. But I was pleased to see that at least there were some budgeted elements here that reflected some sense that we were going to be spending on disasters, which we have every year. While it was underestimated, there was an attempt.

I said that we're here to talk about money, how much we have and how much we spend. We're also here to talk about public trust, how much government decisions reflect the long-term public interest, even these short-term budgetary extras that come into play from time to time. There are three levels at which I think people have become skeptical of government: how much they're acting in the public interest, how much they're acting in the private interest, and how much they're acting in self-interest.

I think it's been clear to me over the last seven or eight years that the level of public trust has dropped to an all-time low in relation to financial management. The question about extra needs without more detail makes it very difficult for the opposition to actually say yes or no to some of these extra demands that could or should have been anticipated. In politics, Madam Chair, trust is the only real currency, and I think Albertans present and future deserve to know that their resources, their people, their property are being managed better. Never have I heard such discouragement in the public about the way we are managing our resources, our future, and our fiscal house.

Government's role, in my view, is to meet the key values of Albertans. Consistent with the Alberta Liberal caucus let me outline about six key values. One, pay yourself first. Save, pay for essentials, invest in research and innovation to allow you to make the changes that inevitably come with living. Two, bring in an essential, sustainable revenue stream to meet our obligations to people and planet. Three, ensure we have a fair and sustainable tax structure. Four, acknowledge the reality that each of us succeeded because of our access to public services: education, health care, supports of various kinds, roads, benefits to being in Alberta in terms of access to justice, and various special-needs services. Five, responsible oversight of spending: making statements easily accessible, transparent, and accountable – that's what builds trust – with checks on spending and bonuses and waste that are acknowledged and easily recognized and applauded by the public. Six, opportunities for business to innovate and develop.

I would have to say that this government meets the mark on one or two of these but not on all, and this is what is so distressing, I think, to many of us as we look into our last few decades of life and look at our children's future. The management of our supplementary supply is a reflection, I think, of how we manage our finances. Looking at how this government manages its finances relative to a corporation has been a real eye-opener to me. I used to be part of a medical partnership of six physicians, and we had to do some level of financial management budgeting. I think all of us have some sense of what a household budget and management looks like. It's hard to accept the level of inconsistency and lack of long-term public interest that's reflected in our budgets here.

The government actually refuses to do its job, beginning at the top, making tough choices that will meet these six fundamental values. Despite the many accolades this government has given to great leaders like Peter Lougheed, they continue to ignore his example and live off the avails of our nonrenewable resource wealth; 25 years without savings. It's hard to understand how they are making these decisions, and the only way I can put it into context is that they are unable to put the public interest ahead of private interests and personal interests. That's a recipe for the end of a political dynasty, and I think that's what we're headed for, Madam Chair.

The government is ideologically stuck on the lowest taxes in the country, falsely believing that this attracts the oil industry, and continues its mean-spirited approach to the most vulnerable in society, the society that is actually grounded on the most valued resource, human beings. Hungry children, neglected seniors, the disabled, and the mentally ill not getting appropriate supports means that we are all paying much more heavily in this society for the end result of neglect.

Alberta could bring in another $68 billion in taxes and still be the lowest-taxing province in the country. Every year I've been in the Legislature for the last eight years I've seen the same requests come forward, roughly the same amount of supplementary supply, and I ask the same questions. When are we going to see the long-term public interest put ahead of private interests and personal self-interest?

So it's déjà vu all over again, Madam Chair. I don't know whether I will be supporting this bill at this time. I don't know how else to send a message to a government that's lost its way financially, that's lost its way in terms of the long-term public interest, but I am ever hopeful that the good people on the other side of the House will prevail in time and bring the financial picture back into balance, will budget responsibly, and will address the extra needs of Albertans ahead of their own and ahead of their private supporters.

Thank you, Madam Chair. With that, I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm ecstatic to be here tonight to speak to the Assembly about Bill 11, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013. I was supposed to be off tonight, but I had to take this opportunity to come and share the evening with you, so this is awesome.

Earlier this evening the hon. Government House Leader and I passed each other in the hallway, and he said: how are you enjoying this? So I had to tell him. I said: "This is very exciting, being a new member. The budgetary process is obviously very detailed and there's lots to learn, and it's very enlightening." At the same time, there are some processes and procedures that baffle me, to be honest, but I guess it is all part of the process that we go through as we learn.

In discussing this, I have to thank the members on the other side. The minister for municipalities was kind enough to explain a better part of what this is. It addresses some of the shortcomings from the prior budget, finding areas where spending wasn't budgeted accordingly or there were shortages for some reason; surprises came up. I appreciate that, but I think it's surprising that we're being asked to authorize well over half a billion dollars. We're coming into another budget here that is headed into the sixth consecutive deficit budget, which is concerning. You know, I would have thought that somebody would have seen this issue prior to this, well in advance, but obviously that's a little optimistic of me.

Again, it's all about government anticipating what their spending is going to be. It is probably a very tough job. It obviously takes a lot of time and energy of many different people to put this together, but they also come with 40 years of experience doing it. There are always going to be ups and downs. There are going to be misses, and there are going to be shortcomings, but some of the misses have been very dramatic. We're talking about billions of dollars in overspending, billions of dollars in underestimating revenue. That's an issue going back six years and even more so going forward even though we do have new promises and new commitments indicating otherwise.

This year's revenues are projected to be just shy of $38 billion if that holds to the fiscal year-end.

Mr. Wilson: What? I thought it dropped by six.

Mr. Pedersen: Well, it's down, you know. They were predicting 40-some or something like that.

It's still one of the best years on record, and still we're being asked to authorize another half a billion dollars at year-end. That's after we've taken money out of the sustainability fund to cover and offset some expenses that were unforeseen. Again, very concerning.

To break it down, Education is looking for an extra $24 million. About $12 million is used to offset student enrolment. That's a good thing. With Alberta being one of the provinces that is having challenges in keeping students interested in staying in school and going on to postsecondary, it's encouraging to see that the demand for Education dollars is there. So $12 million extra is not a bad thing.

What I have to question here and in a few other areas – and, hopefully, we'll get some eyebrows raised – is that we keep hearing about this infrastructure list. About $12 million is allocated to a school in Lloydminster. Again, you know, that's looking forward. That's building infrastructure. That's adding the bricks and mortar to allow the children of that community to go to school and get an education. But where was that on the infrastructure list? If it was on there, why are we looking for another $12 million? There's the other question that the government has gone to centralized planning and budgeting so that they get the best bang for their buck in allocating orders to build schools. Where is this $12 million? What's it for? If we have such a great process in place, a school should be built, a contract should be negotiated, and that should be it. Maybe I'm missing some major details there. I'm not sure. Again, if that was on the infrastructure priority list, we would know that. This wouldn't come up at the end of the year. It would be on the list. The cost would be there, and we wouldn't be having this discussion now.

It looks like Enterprise and Advanced Education is asking for $107 million. Again, we have $17 million being applied to completion grants and student assistance. This is a great, great indication that more and more students are coming out of high school and taking postsecondary as their avenue for their next step. It's a challenge in Alberta because, of course, students can come right out of high school – some don't even finish grade 12 – and they can go find employment within Alberta quite easily and make some very, very good money without having to educate themselves at a postsecondary level. The $17 million to be added to that is an indication that more and more students are looking to access postsecondary education. That's a good thing. That's a good thing for Alberta. Educating our youth is just going to be such a benefit going forward no matter what avenue of work they get into down the road.

From what we understand, $13 million dollars is allocated for basic infrastructure upgrades at the University of Alberta. Again, we're talking about infrastructure, and I'm going to hammer on this throughout. Why at the end of the year are we asking for $13 million if this should have been on the infrastructure list? You know, it should be there. I don't know, I guess we'll have to check the Internet to make sure: is it there or not there?

For student loans $77 million dollars is also allocated. Again, that's an indication that postsecondary education is becoming more and more important for our youth.

Environment and SRD is looking for $302 million. Probably my only comment there is: did we underbudget there? You know, should there have been a higher number to address pine beetle, to address forest fire suppression? It's likely that that's going to happen every year. It's always better to have a little bit extra there if you could and throw it back into the budget later on.

Municipal Affairs. Things look to be fairly much in order.

Transportation. They were showing that they found some savings in-house, which is great. That's how the system should work. Again, Transportation being part of Infrastructure, I'm just mystified as to how this comes up at year-end, asking for more money. You know, if it's on a list and it's already budgeted for and it's allocated and the contracts are let, why do these costs keep escalating? Why do people keep going back to government for more money?

You know, there are a lot of issues to be considered around how government negotiates contracts, what the terms and conditions are, and how we agree to those. If there are a lot of cost-plus arrangements or change clauses in there, we're just allowing contractors to bypass the negotiated deal, and that's not good for the taxpayer. That's bypassing the reason why we've actually negotiated the contract.

To finish up, Madam Chair, you know, what I find interesting is that when a dollar leaves the government nowadays, by the time it reaches the front line or the area of service that we're looking to deliver to, smaller and smaller bits of that dollar actually get to the front line. I think that's a concern. Until we drive out waste and inefficiency and bureaucracy, just throwing more money at it isn't the answer. It's not going to give us better results. Hopefully, the government will look at that and find some of these efficiencies.

Thank you.

9:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you for your question, hon. member.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The question has been called.

[The clauses of Bill 11 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Hancock: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report Bill 11.

[Motion carried]

Dr. Brown: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 11.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Hancock: Madam Speaker, I would just move that we adjourn till 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:53 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us pray. We give thanks for the abundant blessings that we have been given, blessings given to our great province and to ourselves and to all those who serve here. May we share in that abundance. May we be ever good stewards of it and be reminded frequently of the great and good fortune that we have. We ask for guidance in our deliberations to be the best stewards possible and to follow in the footsteps of those who came before. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that you already know these guests who are seated in your gallery, but I'd now like to introduce them to all members of the Assembly. They are all very dedicated volunteers who serve on the Alzheimer's Pro-Am hockey committee to raise much-needed funds towards treating the disease and towards finding a cure to eliminate it. I'll ask the individuals to please rise and remain standing as I call your names. They are Bill Gaudette, Alzheimer Society of Alberta and Northwest Territories; Mario Pailamilla, Face Off for Alzheimer's Pro-Am hockey committee; Javier Hernan Pailamilla, Face Off for Alzheimer's Pro-Am hockey committee; Alan Howat; Ryan Stempfle; Mark Asbell; Trish Dober; Greg Christenson; Dennis Fitzgerald; Terry Cavanagh, former mayor of Edmonton; and Bill Hobbins. I'd like to ask all members to give the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Acting Deputy Premier.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour as Minister of Municipal Affairs to introduce a second time but in a little more detail to you and through you to members of this Assembly one of the longest serving municipal councillors in the city of Edmonton's history. As you may recall, he was Edmonton's mayor in the '80s. Today, however, he's here to support fundraising efforts for the Alzheimer Society and, in particular, to support his good friend Gordie Howe, who is the patron for the Alzheimer's Pro-Am hockey tournament. It's interesting to know that he was also Gordie Howe's roommate during his hockey career a few decades ago. Please join me in welcoming to this Assembly Mr. Terry Cavanagh. Please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two grade 6 classes from Annunciation school in Edmonton-Meadowlark. These are amongst the hardest working, smartest students in the country, and they are our future, the future of our province. It's the hard work of their teachers that ensures that these young people have a bright future. I'd like to introduce their teachers, Maureen Ostrowerka and Chris Koper, as well as student teacher Cristina Milite. I would ask all the students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's fitting that a day after we recognize the contribution of our francophone population, I rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly some very special guests who are joining us from the Edmonton Garrison's official language centre. This centre provides the military community with second-language training in both English and French. Joining us from the centre today are members of the English course. I'd ask them to rise and remain standing while I introduce them: Sergeant Yannick Cimon, Master Corporal Tarik El Qasmi, Corporal Christopher Savard, Corporal Sylvie Paradis, Leading Seaman Erika Pruvost, Corporal Maxime Roussel, Private Maxime Proulx-Lepine, Private Guillaume Chouinard, Private Alexandre Thériault, and their teacher, Deborah Stasiuk. I had the opportunity to speak with them earlier. Of course, all of them are from the province of Quebec and are on their first posting here to Alberta, so we want to welcome them. I invite the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome they so richly deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege to have two introductions today. For my first introduction it's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Jaclyn Denman of Community Futures Lac La Biche. Now, Lac La Biche recently was honoured for its Winter Festival of Speed, which was chosen as a winter Alberta story and was also one of Canada's top 10 winter events to attend by Reader's Digest. Jaclyn actively works with Travel Alberta to leverage marketing campaigns in her northern region year-round by accessing co-operative funding through Travel Alberta. Without that funding, their marketing reach would be significantly decreased. I would ask Jaclyn to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of very bright, energetic, photogenic, and, I might point out, musical students from Lakeland Country school north of Dewberry, who are visiting us today. They are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Vicki Reimer and Ms Tasha Loewen, as well as a group of parents, many of whom were former clients of mine, so I know that they're not only dedicated parents but also excellent stock people: Mr. and Mrs. Jeff and Ardith Warkentin, Mr. Milf Unruh, Mr. and Mrs. Murray and Lucy James, Mrs. Andrea Toews, Mr. and Mrs. Darryl and Mel Reimer, Mr. and Mrs. Rob and Monica Unruh, and Mr. and Mrs. Doug and Sondra Loewen. I might point out that I had the privilege of visiting the Lakeland Country school about 10 days ago, where their opening exercises every day include beautiful four-part a cappella Mennonite singing, which 10 days ago was accompanied by a slightly tone-deaf Lutheran bass. I'd like to ask them to stand and enjoy the warm welcome of the members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege today for me to rise on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Health and the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 27 students from Steinhauer school in the constituency of Edmonton-

Rutherford. They're seated in the members' gallery. Accompanying these students is their teacher, Ms Angie Elsinga. I'm informed that they are bright, articulate, hard-working, and strong-questioning students. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an outstanding constituent of mine, Mr. Zora Singh Jhaggi. Mr. Jhaggi is very active in the community, a true volunteer. He gives his time to volunteering for his gurdwara and serving on the executive committee of the Millwoods Cultural Society of Retired and Semi Retired, a very unique organization within my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. He is also involved as an officiator for Track and Field Alberta. This outstanding volunteer has not gone unnoticed. He has been the recipient of the SAGE award, which recognizes outstanding achievements and contributions of seniors in our community, and he was also the recipient of the Queen's jubilee medal. This individual is an outstanding example of the vital role volunteers play and can play in making the city what it is today. At this time I ask Mr. Jhaggi to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very, very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this year's reigning court from the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose. Now, many of these members if not all are constituents of the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and they are very special people to me. They have accepted me without prejudice, and they tolerate my foibles. They're also special to Edmonton because so far this year – and they're halfway through – they have raised $15,000 for local charities. This year they have chosen the Pride Centre and Camp fYrefly, which is for youth. Please stand as I introduce you, and stay standing, please. First we have Mr. Gay Edmonton XXV Kewlio Twist; the treasurer of the board of directors, Michelle Pedersen; Imperial Grand Duke XXXVII Genuwine Velour; Imperial Grand Duchess XXXVII Tequila Mockingbird; Imperial Crown Prince Yeust Bobb; Imperial Crown Princess Kitty LeBehr; Emperor XXXVII of Edmonton and northern Alberta JJ Velour; and, of course, Her Most Imperial and Sovereign Majesty, heir apparent to the Empress of Canada, Empress XXXVII of Edmonton and northern Alberta, my favourite, Vanity Fair. Please welcome them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, my apologies. You had a second introduction. Please proceed.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For my second introduction I would also like to introduce two more volunteers from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, Mr. Nirmal Singh Grewal and Mr. Mohinder Singh Cumo. Both of these individuals are very active in the Society of Retired and Semi Retired and very, very active in the community of Edmonton-Ellerslie. At this time I ask both of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to introduce a shining example of the valuable work being done right here in Alberta to lower sodium in the food supply. Dr. Mirko Betti is an assistant professor in the department of agricultural, food, and nutritional science at the U of A, and he's the lead researcher conducting sensory and taste trials of a salt flavour enhancement product that his team has developed. Now, the potential for this product as a salt replacement is staggering since consumption of this product is not linked to the ill effects of sodium, including heart disease associated with the overconsumption of sodium, which is common in our diets. This is World Salt Awareness Week, so this is the perfect time to remind Albertans that high dietary salt contributes to high blood pressure, which is the leading risk factor for cardiovascular disease and death. Dr. Betti's research is funded by a grant from Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions and the Alberta livestock marketing association. He's on his way to the members' gallery, I understand, so I invite all members to offer him the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two. Firstly, Mr. John Craig, a partner from Bennett Jones, is with us today in the members' gallery. I'd like Mr. Craig to please stand up. Mr. Craig and I are working on a private bill that will come before the Assembly at some point in time in the future. If the Assembly could give Mr. Craig a warm welcome. Thank you.

The second one, Mr. Speaker: it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine who is also the executive director of Canada's foremost professional singing ensemble, Pro Coro Canada. I think all of us will remember the amazing rendition of O Canada that Pro Coro sang in this Assembly at the beginning of the fall 2012 session. Please join me in welcoming the executive director of Pro Coro, Mr. Russ Mann. [Mr. Dorward sang the name of the choir]

The Speaker: Some things you just don't have a comeback for.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier insists that the Official Opposition's positions on debt and borrowing are ideological and extreme. We don't think so. In fact, we share these positions with a number of Albertans, one of whom you might know quite well. I invite government members who like to call us names to listen carefully as I quote from a speech this individual made right here in this Chamber on October 24, 2011.

We have all heard of the crises in Europe. Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams. Many European countries are struggling with debt burdens that in some cases exceed a hundred per cent of GDP. Those unfortunate nations spent too much and took in too little. Now they are faced with hard choices: raise taxes and kill jobs, cut spending and devastate the social safety net, or both. Their citizens are paying the price.

Does anyone recognize those words yet and the speech from which they were taken? Well, let me continue.

Alberta has no net debt . . . We have the lowest overall taxes in Canada. We have disciplined spending priorities and no long-term debt . . . We are better off than many other places, and we have a future anyone else would envy . . .

But we can't take this for granted. Good fortune will not fall into our laps because we ask for it . . . This government will protect and strengthen our province . . . We will spend wisely and save intelligently, managing our finances . . .

Wait for it, guys.

. . . to protect future Albertans from debt.

These words come from the Premier's first-ever speech in that role.

Isn't it interesting that when she issues warnings about debt and promises to protect future generations of Albertans from it, the ideas are sensible and visionary. But when the Official Opposition issues the same warnings, they are extreme and ideological. It would be funny if it wasn't so sad.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must agree with the Leader of the Official Opposition. There really is not that much difference between the two.

Child Poverty

Ms Notley: On a long list of broken promises from this PC government one stands out as particularly egregious, the failure to dedicate any funding to eliminate child poverty in five years, which was the Premier's major promise during the last provincial election. How could the Conservatives make a major promise like this and then completely turn their backs on the 91,000 Alberta children and their families living in poverty?

Not only did the budget fail to dedicate any funding to eliminating child poverty; it also cut. Mr. Speaker, it cut $32.5 million from income support; 20 per cent from the Alberta child health benefit; $8 million from health benefits for Albertans receiving income support; 20 per cent from services related to addictions and mental health; 15 per cent from rent supplements; and a hundred per cent from affordable housing capital programs.

Ending child poverty requires in part ensuring household incomes are sufficient to cover basic costs, but for many Albertans that's not the case. A report from Public Interest Alberta showed that nearly 1 in 4 working Albertans make below $15 an hour. Sixty per cent of those are women; 78 per cent are workers in their prime earning years. The per hour wage gap between men and women in Alberta is the highest in the country, $6.05. Mr. Speaker, the national average is $3.57. In spite of the high cost of living Alberta has the lowest minimum wage of any province in the country.

At the recent social policy framework consultations Albertans told this PC government that eliminating child poverty was their number one priority. Not only did the PCs break their promise; they also proved once again that they don't even listen on those few occasions when they do consult with Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this kind of poverty is something that we should not be seeing here in Alberta. Because the Conservatives won't consider reversing their cuts to the wealthy, we see far too much of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Pro-Am for Alzheimer's Hockey Tournament

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, one of the most rapidly rising diseases facing our society today is Alzheimer's. Although it has been around for a long time, unfortunately very little is known about what may cause it, and even less is known about how to cure and eliminate it.

Fortunately, we have organizations like the Alzheimer Society of Alberta and the Northwest Territories, led by executive director Bill Gaudette, who are very dedicated toward their purpose of helping and supporting Alzheimer's sufferers. We also have a very dedicated volunteer committee chairman, Greg Christenson, who leads, sponsors, and organizes many of their related activities.

This debilitating disease, which is the most common form of dementia or memory loss, can affect anyone at any age but most commonly, Mr. Speaker, impacts those 65 and older. No treatment is yet known to stop, cure, and prevent this disease, but today we have with us a very dedicated, committed group of volunteer businesspeople who are helping raise awareness and money to facilitate more research into this disease.

Of course, I'm referring to the Pro-Am Face Off for Alzheimer's hockey committee, who is organizing a series of activities in Edmonton followed by several games in Leduc, my hometown, on April 27 and 28 to promote and raise funds for this cause. More than 20 community teams have already registered, and they're all raising funds to play alongside NHL all-time greats like Marty McSorley, Bryan Trottier, Curtis Joseph, Jeremy Roenick, Jim Peplinski, and many, many others.

Earlier today about 17 MLAs from all parties in this Assembly, including our Premier, were drafted to participate in this tournament as players, coaches, or cheerleaders, and we're very grateful for their support. We're also pleased to note that you, Mr. Speaker, will be refereeing the final game in Leduc on Sunday, April 28.

Hon. members, please join me in thanking these volunteers for all they do for Alzheimer's.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we hit the clock, a reminder that I'm expecting no preambles to your supplementals – obviously, a preamble is anticipated with your main question – unless you are an opposition leader, in which case I will give some leeway with the preambles for supplementals.

Let us begin.

Provincial Debt Repayment

Ms Smith: The Premier said this last fall: "Debt is the trap that has caught so many struggling governments. Debt has proven the death of countless dreams." Now, despite that warning this same Premier is prepared to destroy dreams with billions of dollars in new debt. During her mandate she will take Alberta all the way up to $17 billion in debt. Now, we might discover how she's going to deal with that huge debt obligation by looking at how she handles our current obligations. There are several bond issues that are coming due next year totalling around a billion dollars. Will that debt be paid off, or is it just going to be rolled over and refinanced?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, when the time comes, we're going to make the right financial decision at that point in time.

I find it ironic that the opposition is talking about that they can't find anything. What's the total revenue? What's the total expense? Mr. Speaker, if she would just go to page 127 of the fiscal plan, she will find our total revenue, she will find our total expense, and she will find what's in the contingency account; flip the page, and she'll find the rest of it. When I go to their document, their budget, and I go looking for what the total revenue is, it's not there. When I look for what the total expense is, it's not there. Quite a budget.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm prepared to help the Finance minister out because right here on page 141 in their budget document under refinancing of maturing debt it states that $905 million will be refinanced. Is this the extent of the government's debt repayment plan? Just keep on refinancing and refinancing and never pay it off?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, what I find incredible is that the hon. member has not actually figured out what we do in this government or in the financials, and it's easy to understand why. When I look at the document that they presented as a budget, it has absolutely no financial statements in it at all. It's got 13 pictures of their leader, but it has no financial documents in it at all. So it's easy to understand how the hon. member would miss the fact that we on-lend to Treasury Branches, to Ag Financial Services, to the municipalities, so sometimes we're going to refinance that as well.

Ms Smith: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister doesn't know how to read his own documents because this is for their own capital borrowing, not for ATB.

Let's take a look at their debt repayment plan for the coming fiscal year. Making it easy again, Finance minister, on page 141 is an allocation for $40 million in principal payments. This is about one half of 1 per cent of the total debt that we'll have next year. Now, credit card companies typically require minimum payments of about 3 per cent every single month. The government's plan is either nonexistent to repay debt, or it's built on wishful thinking. So which is it?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader has just proven that if they were running this government, they would be running it like they were running it on a credit card. We don't.

These are bond issues. [interjection] Listen and learn, hon. member. You're the Finance critic. You should know this.

These bond issues don't require principal payments until their maturity. So if their maturity isn't within the next three years, they don't come due. In fact, if you pay them early, you pay a penalty. The reason we get very, very good rates is because of the credit rating we have and the history of financial acumen that this government has.

Provincial Borrowing

Ms Smith: The Finance minister should know that to make those payments on $17 billion worth of debt, they would need to be putting aside $850 million per year. Instead, the Premier is driving Alberta back in debt, and their three-part approach to budgeting attempts to hide the fact. We know that they are planning to borrow at least $17 billion over the next three years, but it might be more than that, in fact a lot more. Now, the government allows itself under its new plan to borrow money as long as the debt-servicing costs don't exceed 3 per cent of the average of the last three years of total revenue. If interest costs are as cheap as the government claims, does that mean that they're actually really prepared to borrow $35 billion, $40 billion, maybe even $45 billion, maybe even more?

Mr. Horner: You know, again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member across the way should maybe take – I understand she's an economist, as I heard in her speech last night – some accounting courses. The reality is that while we are planning on, as projected right now, borrowing on the capital plan $12.6 billion over the next three years, we're also going to be adding $26.3 billion in assets that this province needs and Albertans have asked us to build because we're growing. I would take you to page 135, where you'll see the net worth of this province. You should do the math.

Ms Smith: Our net worth has fallen 50 per cent in the last five years, Mr. Speaker.

Speaking of debt-servicing costs, the Associate Minister of Finance ridiculed our claim that they were paying around 3.5 per cent as a ridiculous rate. Well, their last borrowing, $200 million for highway 63, was at 3.41 per cent, and they have another recent borrowing at 4 per cent. Does anyone over there actually know what's going on with our finances?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the last borrowing we did – hon. member, you should catch up – was 2.55 per cent. That was on $500 million worth of bonds that have a maturity out there of nine years, which means that we will be paying it back nine years from now as one of the amortizations.

Actually, at least we show Albertans how we're going to pay for our capital plan. Nowhere in this document does it say how they're going to pay for anything.

Ms Smith: Because we're going to pay as we go, Mr. Speaker, just like Albertans expect us to.

Mr. Speaker, no matter what the cost we know that this government loves to borrow. The Premier, her Finance minister, and other government members have been selling hard the whole idea that borrowing for capital is good. So if $17 billion by 2016 is good, does that mean that $35 billion or $40 billion is even better? Where does it stop? How much debt are we going to have?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I am incredibly appreciative that the financial experts in our department do not operate the way she suggests. I'm incredibly appreciative of the fact that they are financial experts in their field, that they are able to garner the best rates in North America for the capital allocations that we're doing.

This document that I keep referring to is the wild alliance budget that they proposed. [interjections] Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I know it's the Wildrose Alliance Party. [interjections] Well, it's the difference between opinion and name, that's all. This document doesn't tell Albertans how they're going to cut as they go.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, for your third main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So much for raising the bar.

Prosecutions for First and Second Offences

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious now that there is no place for a conservative in the government. Fiscal conservatives are not welcome. Just look at the debt deficit and cost of borrowing. Social conservatives wonder about the treatment this government provides to vulnerable seniors and the disabled. And today tough-on-crime conservatives are gone as well. The Premier has okayed a decision to ignore first and second offences for lawbreakers. The Crown won't even prosecute them. Doesn't the Premier realize that when you offer two freebie crimes, there's going to be a whole lot more crime?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the statements that the member has made are so patently incorrect. I'll endeavour to correct them. As we move forward, prosecutors, who operate independently of any political interference, have many tools for how they deal with crime. When we talk about individuals that deserve to be behind bars, I'm talking about murderers; I'm talking about people who purvey sexual assaults. On the lower end – guess what? – we can actually rehabilitate some of these people and at the same time save taxpayers' dollars. There's your conservative, Leader.

Ms Smith: I think Albertans would hope the Justice minister would care more about victims than criminals.

There is more evidence of this government embracing an extreme left-wing, soft-on-crime ideology with the decision to wind down the electronic monitoring of criminals. Why doesn't this government care about the potential danger to our communities of losing track of dangerous offenders, child molesters, and other criminals?

Ms Redford: The opposition is always so fond of reminding people that I'm actually a lawyer, and because of that, I will answer this question. It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that we did have to make tough choices with respect to the electronic ankle bracelets, but that does not mean for any reason the courts are going to be allowing people to walk free. It simply means actually the opposite, which is that if we don't have the ability to ensure that we can locate people, secure people, and the police can connect to them, then they're not going to be let out of jail. It's exactly the opposite.

Ms Smith: Somehow I don't think Albertans are going to be comforted by that answer, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the Premier and the minister say that they'd rather have police on the streets, but I would say that they're going to need a lot more police if they let criminals on probation have free rein to go wherever they want and if they offer two freebie crimes to everyone else. How does this save money and protect Albertans?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the budget that was tabled last week very proudly defended a tough-on-crime agenda, one that this government put in place under Safe Communities. Not one judge, not one prosecutor, not one police officer was cut in this budget, and these hypothetical allegations that scare people, as we see again from the opposition, are not appropriate. People have to understand that they can have confidence in their justice system, that they can ensure that victims are protected, that police are on the street doing their job, and that we will continue to support a justice system that protects Albertans.

For-profit Long-term and Continuing Care

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I listed a variety of ways in which the quality of for-profit long-term care is inferior to nonprofit long-term care, yet this Premier said: "There is absolutely no reason to believe that there are differences with respect to level of care." But the Parkland Institute research survey I tabled on March 15 of last year finds that "for-profit facilities are less likely to provide quality care than nonprofit or public facilities." To the Premier: were you unaware of this? Did you misspeak, or were you misleading the House?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only thing I asked the hon. member for was details of reports which was he relying on with respect to his comments. Thank you very much. I received them about five minutes ago. I haven't had time to read them yet. But I will say that there are reports in here from the Parkland Institute, from the Health Quality Council, from BMJ that, as I reviewed them just now and spoke to our minister about them last week, offer different perspectives with respect to care. I see already in these, because they've been so nicely annotated for me, some unfounded conclusions. There are certainly debates. This member has an opinion with respect to what these reports say. I don't happen to agree with him.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier doesn't trust academics on this issue, perhaps she may be more interested to hear from Albertans. I have the Health Quality Council of Alberta's November 2011 Long Term Care Family Experience Survey, which found that "publicly operated facilities obtained significantly higher overall care ratings compared to private and voluntary operated facilities." That's on page 5. To the Premier: were you unaware of this Health Quality Council of Alberta report as well? If so, why?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, when we take a look at the reports that are prepared by Alberta Health Services, by the Health Quality Council, by various institutions with respect to long-term care, we know that we're taking a look at systems that exist currently in this province, that are strong, that are providing health care for Alberta seniors and for people that are living with developmental disabilities. You know, what we see very often with these reports – and we've had this experience in the House before – is hon. members standing up and making wild allegations with respect to reports, then theoretically saying that they're based on, quote, academic reports. These are incredibly important issues. It is not fair to play politics with them, and we shouldn't do it.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I might not be a lawyer. You know, I'm just a simple doctor, and health care workers rely on facts and evidence, Madam Premier.

Given that this Premier has been brought up to speed on what the evidence actually says as well as how Albertans feel about the superiority of publicly delivered long-term care, my final question to the Premier is this. Premier, why does your bankrupt budget continue to prop up private companies instead of making smart, fact-based investments in public long-term care? Why, Premier? Stick to the facts.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is in touch with Albertans on this issue, and we know very clearly what Albertans care about. It is good access, timely access to continuing care across the province. What the hon. member conveniently ignores in the midst of all the reports and papers that he sends across the way is the fact that we have one set of standards in this province for continuing care, both for health and accommodation, and they apply equally to public, private, and not-for-profit providers.

The Speaker: We are going to proceed now with no preambles to supplemental questions, and we're going to see how that's demonstrated by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, in the last election the Premier promised Alberta's postsecondary students long-term, stable funding. Instead she is delivering long-term, unstable funding. Another promise made; another promise broken. Today we've learned that deans at the U of A have been asked to take an axe to their budgets to find 20 per cent in cuts over the next two years. To the Premier: will you admit that your short-sighted, broken-promise advanced ed budget is going to hurt students and faculty across the province?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that everyone in this House will have heard our Finance minister say last week in the budget was that we're going to work in collaboration with research institutions, provide mandate letters, and ensure that base operating grants to the tune of $2 billion are in place for postsecondary institutions. We know that there are tough choices in this budget. We're all having to deal with those. We had an opportunity to review some of the correspondence from the University of Alberta. I think their perspective is exactly right with respect to looking to collaborate, to find new opportunities, and to actually acknowledge that the investments that we've made as a government in postsecondary institutions in the last 10 years are allowing for better opportunities in the future.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that faculties are going to be asked to earn back 10 per cent of their future budgets and given that professors should be instructing classrooms, not planning bake sales or selling cupcakes in the hallways, will the Premier admit that deep cuts to advanced education do nothing to advance education and, frankly, neither does her minister?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, we have obligations to make sure that taxpayers' dollars are well spent, and we make sure that our postsecondary institutions are investing in research that leads to innovation that's going to allow for economic growth. The other thing that's fundamental is that we ensure that people, both in universities and in technical colleges, are acquiring the skills that they need to participate in the economy. Our minister has ensured that he's going to be able to work with postsecondary presidents across this province, all 26 of them, to ensure that those taxpayer dollars are being used to benefit and to grow the economy. That's what we're committed to.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the new minister told us his focus will be on building the quality of education and given that the current budget for his ministry decimates funding for Alberta's institutions, will the Premier explain to Alberta students and faculty how her minister can build playgrounds in Vietnam while destroying universities in Alberta?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, that was a really unfortunate comment. You know, I really recognize the fact that there are volunteers and people in our communities that work hard to help people not only in Alberta but around the world.

More importantly, if we get back to the matter at hand, our budget last year still committed base operating grants and capital infrastructure that is still amongst the highest in Canada. In the last 10 years our funding to postsecondary institutions has increased by more than 45 per cent, and in this budget, Mr. Speaker, we see nearly $500 million in capital infrastructure that will be spent at five institutions over the next three years. That's quality postsecondary education.

Traffic Court

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had a phone call that passed on some deeply troubling information, if true, regarding a recent meeting the Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice had with traffic prosecutors and all related positions, and I'm hoping that the Justice minister will clear this up for me. Now, I know this government's plan indicates Alberta should have a fair, accessible, and innovative justice system, but can he confirm if the government has a plan in place to reduce the number or eliminate all traffic prosecutors?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, to date there is no plan.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I also heard that the Justice department would be moving to close rural traffic courts under the justice system. Can the minister confirm this is also true?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated before, the member really may want to check her sources because to the best of my knowledge there's no such plan being considered at this juncture.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Actually, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to hear that.

Can the Justice minister confirm whether or not it is this government's intention to mandate all future traffic tickets to be paid with no option to plead not guilty?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of that either, but I have said publicly in the past that perhaps we may want to look at relocating traffic court outside of additional courthouses and making it more accessible to people, more economical to the public. But the three questions that I've got from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek: I'm not quite sure where she's going with this. Maybe she wants to check her sources.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Medevac Services

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the end of this week medevac services from the north will be moving from the City Centre Airport to Edmonton International. This is causing a great deal of concern for patients, doctors, and others in northern Alberta who say that this means it will take longer to get critical patients to the hospital, endangering their lives. To the Minister of Health: why did the government choose to locate the new medevac facility so far from hospitals?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I think most members know, the closure of the City Centre Airport was a decision of the council of the city of Edmonton. That decision was made some time ago, and at that time government began to look for a new location for medevac services. This morning I was very pleased to be part of the announcement of the opening of this new facility on Friday. We had many elected officials and stakeholders and media from across the province, including the north, who had an opportunity to see this first-class facility in action, and it is going to serve Alberta very, very well.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, my next question is also to the same minister. Did the government even consider forcing the city of Edmonton to keep a single runway open for this critical service?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we have the utmost respect for property rights of the individual and the municipality, and they did a lot of due diligence and consultation on what they wanted to do with the City Centre Airport. It didn't take very long for us to assess what the possible cost would be, which the city claims is close to $2 billion, which just made it unfeasible. Much better to pour investments into hospitals in the north and invest in exceptional medevac services at the International Airport.

Mr. Goudreau: Again to the Minister of Health: how can you ensure patient safety with this move?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're very assured of both quality and patient safety in the new location. As most members know, the Health Quality Council of Alberta reviewed the Edmonton International option. They made 18 recommendations. We've accepted all of them. We've implemented almost all of them at this stage. We're very confident that quality and patient safety are not going to be compromised.

Mr. Speaker, the other point that bears repetition is that when it comes to medevac, over 80 per cent of patients who use medevac services are coming for a scheduled service. They're coming for an MRI or a CT scan or perhaps to see a specialist. There are fewer than five patients per month on average that travel via medevac for a critical illness or injury.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It looks like the Justice minister's ideological approach to crime will start impacting small businesses and innocent victims across Alberta. Youth offenders can now get off scot-free for pulling off multiple crimes under this government's hug-a-thug approach. Now, I don't know if the Justice minister picked up on these soft-on-crime ideas during his time as a Liberal staffer in Saskatchewan, but telling youth that there are no consequences to their actions isn't justice for the victims or the youth. How can the Justice minister, then, possibly justify his hug-a-thug approach to crime that leaves businesses and communities ripe for the picking?

Mr. Denis: Surely, Mr. Speaker, with the many years that this member practised law, he understands that there are many, many options available to prosecutors when they're confronted with a crime. We have youth justice committees that go throughout the entire province. Again, we're adding another issue that the prosecutor can go and deal with only on very low-end offences. This matter deals with a conservative approach to justice. This member complains about people not being conservative. I suggest he look in the mirror.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister seems to not fully understand the cost to businesses of having their retail shoplifted or their property vandalized or how an increase in vandalism attracts more crime to our communities, why on earth is this government trying to bring the failed Liberal soft-on-crime policies here to Alberta?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, under our new plan prosecutors will continue to have full access to the courts, including the access to actually go and lay a charge under the old system, also under the new system. This member should know that, again, with the many years he spent practising law.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government's new plan is to scrap electronic monitoring of high-risk offenders serving their sentences in the community, including those waiting for trial – and get this – for sexual assaults, does this progressive Justice minister know that these are bad guys . . .

Mr. Denis: Point of order.

Mr. Saskiw: . . . that they are likely to reoffend if they are not appropriately monitored, and that this reckless decision is putting public safety and security at risk?

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, you have a point of order at 2:18. It's been noted. Now proceed with the answer to the question.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, again, as we move forward with our justice system, the most important thing this member needs to know is that we did not cut one cop. We did not cut one Crown prosecutor. In fact, we're adding two more judges. You would think that someone who claims to be a conservative would get behind this policy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Highway Construction

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here is a question about policy. There is no doubt that Alberta is growing rapidly and has become one of the fastest rising populations in our country, adding 95,000 people last year. As this trend continues, it is inevitable that our roadways will become busier, increasing the likelihood of car accidents. This is of concern to my constituents. To the Minister of Transportation: with the exception of twinning highway 63, what in particular is your ministry doing to help ease the demand on Alberta's highways and roads and to help improve traffic?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, Albertans depend on their transportation system to get them to work and back, to get their products to market, and to get products to them that they need. That's why this government is investing about $3 billion this year to do road projects, which includes the continuation of the ring road in Edmonton, the southeast ring road in Calgary, some bridges in Medicine Hat. We'd like to do a lot more, but I can assure you that whatever we're doing is 25 per cent more than the opposition would have done. We will continue to build Alberta within our means to open new markets. That's what we were elected to do, and we're doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear that the ring road has been mentioned, but on the Stoney Trail ring road my constituents are concerned about delays because of traffic construction there. My question is to the same minister. What is being done to ensure that this crucial ring road is being built in a timely and productive manner?

The Speaker: Hon. member, we had four great examples of no or extremely short preambles. Revisit your next supplemental before you deliver it, and we'll get an answer meanwhile.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, I think, has a legitimate complaint, but the fact is that when you're building a major project, I don't know of a way to do it without some disruption. We are working with it the best we can. We've got a website up for the SEST project that people can look at. We're constantly trying to do work in off-rush-hour times. The southeast part of the ring road in Calgary will be completed by the end of this year. The one in Edmonton and the northwest part of Stoney Trail should be done at the end of 2014.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question relates to Deerfoot Trail in Calgary. Many people call it the death trail because of the high rate of fatalities. My question to the minister is: what is your ministry prepared to do to address the safety concerns with this critical road?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the hon. member points to an important situation. The Deerfoot Trail is very important, taking in some areas over 150,000 cars a day. We won't be doing very much on it this year because, of course, it would be a bad time to take a lane out of service before there's relief provided by the southeast Stoney Trail, which will happen at the end of this year. At that point we will be looking at operational improvements to Deerfoot Trail. I'm certainly well aware; it runs right through the middle of my riding. As budgets allow and as we're able to build the transportation network, we will make those improvements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Municipal Charters

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The issue of an Edmonton charter and a Calgary charter isn't about better or worse; it's about different than. Now, currently Calgary is treated the same as High Level, same restrictions, yet they are vastly different populations, economies, and environments. The big cities, small cities, and towns in Alberta have all been supportive of each other's need for different tools under or outside of the MGA. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why is it that the minister is the one who doesn't support Calgary and Edmonton charters?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where this fantasy comes from for the hon. member. I've been very vocal that civic charters are going to be incredibly important for Edmonton and Calgary and other municipalities as we go along. We have an MGA right now that's the most progressive in Canada, which allows right of natural person powers to municipalities so they can control their own destinies. I've said it before in this House, and I'll say it again. We're a matter of weeks away from signing the civic charter, so I don't know where this fantasy world comes from for this member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister's resistance to the two large cities having a charter, not a civic thing but a charter that has them sit outside but parallel to the MGA, about the province losing power and control over Edmonton and Calgary if they are outside the MGA with their own charters?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, when the charter gets signed – and I don't care whether she calls it a civic charter or a city charter. My point is that there are 349 municipalities in this province, and I treat everyone equally. I will not separate them into different classes or categories, because some municipalities are not more equal than others; they're all equal. They all have under the MGA the ability and the autonomy to run their affairs the way they see best, and we're going to stay that way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. How can the minister say that he is working well ahead of schedule when a year after an election, an election in which the government ran on big-city charters and everybody knew what it meant at the time, they are now running away and pretending that it's something else they're going to do?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it's very public that we have a memorandum of understanding that was signed that we would complete the civic charter before the next municipal election, which the member knows is in October. The fact that we're mere weeks away means that we're months ahead of schedule. Again, the member is living in a fantasy world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent comments from the Education minister suggest that he's looking to impose a legislated settlement on Alberta's teachers. Teachers already offered last fall to accept zero per cent increases with a commitment from the government to address class sizes and workload. My question is to the Minister of Education. Can the minister please explain why he refuses to partner with teachers to address serious concerns about the quality of education in our schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member raises a very good question. I'm not sure if he was paying attention yesterday when the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake asked what we were doing about some of these exact same things: working with teachers, making their jobs better, and helping them focus on teaching and the students. So we had a great example of that yesterday. We've been reaching out to teachers in a number of ways, including through their organizations and through e-mails and through visiting the schools. I've been to most of the teachers' conventions. We're getting some great feedback, and we are taking steps on some of the things that can help make their job better and will help impact our kids in a very positive way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that teachers are already struggling with workload and inappropriate class sizes and given that the minister cut funding to the Alberta initiative for school improvements, perhaps the minister can tell Alberta teachers how the government's broken promises on the budget and his own poor bargaining are actually building anything at all.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, you know, I take offence to the attack on Alberta's education system and indirectly on Alberta's teachers because the great product we have out of the education system is because we have great teachers in the classroom, and they are doing great work. If he wants to talk about promises and broken promises in education, how about the promise to live within our means? How about the promise to fund $107 million, that the Premier put back into education. How about the promise to pass the Education Act, which we did? What about the promise to build 50 new schools and modernize 70 more, which we are moving ahead with?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta's teachers and students were promised stable, predictable funding but this budget flagrantly breaks this promise, how can the minister justify his cuts for school improvements and his public musings about imposing a settlement on teachers, who have already agreed to a wage freeze?

Mr. J. Johnson: If we had an agreement with the teachers, we wouldn't be having a discussion like this.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very a challenging budget; there is absolutely no question, and no one has tried to colour it in any other light. One thing I would have to ask the hon. member to look at, though, is how far the Premier has gone to protect Education. It's one of the very few budget line items, one of the very few ministries that was not cut. In the Education budget the operational budget has gone up by 0.6 per cent. It's one of the few that actually was not cut. That's presented some real challenges for school boards, absolutely, because of enrolment pressures, but we're trying to get every dollar that we can into the classroom.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Education Property Taxes

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My hometown of Chestermere is getting some very unwelcome news from this government, some changes in the way that education taxes are assessed and collected, resulting in a 53 per cent increase in property taxes. We're not alone: 96 per cent in Wood Buffalo, Blackfalds at 47 per cent, Coalhurst at 44 per cent. Airdrie, Beaumont, Banff, Cochrane are all looking at double-digit hikes. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can you explain to my neighbours and the rest of the communities in this province that this affects, how this fits into your government's plan to not raise taxes?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, across the province for the education property tax the government of Alberta has not raised the rate of property taxes on education, but assessments have grown in many municipalities, particularly the municipalities of Chestermere and Fort McMurray. That's why they've seen an increase in their assessments. There's been an increase in the property values, which is determined by markets, not by the province of Alberta.

Mr. McAllister: Again to the minister: given that you had the leaders of these communities on the phone, on a conference call, on Friday and you had the opportunity to inform them of this giant increase and given that you claim to be a very transparent minister in government, Minister, why didn't you warn them or consult with them about this?

Mr. Griffiths: The conference call was on Friday, and I gave municipal councillors a heads-up on how the budget was going to impact them. I informed them that the details of MSI and the education property tax would be available on Monday once the calculations were done on the information we received from municipalities. That's as transparent as I could be because that's as fast as I got the information. I got it right out to them, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McAllister: It's not going over very well, Minister.

Given that your government developed the mitigation program and put it in place to ease the rate of tax increases on growing communities like Chestermere and given that you have decided now to cancel it, do you not see that residents around this province only look at this one way, and that is that it is a giant tax increase?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the mitigation formula there were 11 municipalities around the province of Alberta that had a mitigation formula that operated for many, many, many years when we moved to a different tax structure. There were over 30 municipalities that paid more in education property taxes so that those 11 municipalities could have it mitigated. We have removed the mitigation formula. There will still be four, Chestermere being one, that will have a mitigation going forward for a few years until they're off the mitigation formula completely. But the question they might want to ask is why 38 other municipalities were paying more than their fair share so that those municipalities that had fast-growing equity properties could not pay their full share.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Red Meat Processing and Marketing

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government's proactive approach in sustaining Alberta's role as the driving economic force in Canada is something that we pride ourselves on. However, beef raised in northern Alberta is processed in southern areas of the province, creating a missed opportunity in northern Alberta. My question is to the hon. minister of agriculture. What is your department doing to create better economic opportunities for northern Albertans by processing red meat at home rather than in the south?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is true that three-quarters of Canadian beef is processed in western Canada, and most of that is in Alberta. We are always interested in seeing more processing – we certainly support that – but the idea of a large, new packing plant in northern Alberta would have to be a private-industry decision. It wouldn't be one that the government would be making, but we certainly would be prepared to support that kind of a decision in any way once industry would make it.

Mr. McDonald: To the same minister: given that much of our world-renowned beef is going to China at this present time by refrigerated cars, are there plans to ship more red meat to other foreign countries?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're very interested in developing new markets. In fact, we're very happy to see that in the last year we have had some expansion of beef into markets in Korea and Japan. This is something that we're working on constantly. I have a really good relationship with Minister Ritz. We talk often, and we're very interested in supporting those types of initiatives. Our Premier has been very clear that this is something she expects us to be doing. We take that mandate very seriously. Also, I would just point out that we're following the negotiations with the European Union, and we're expecting and hoping that that will bear fruit as well.

Mr. McDonald: Again to the minister: given that red meat is not limited to beef alone, are there any plans to process in our markets anything other than beef such as bison and elk?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, we don't see the role of government as creating those industries. We certainly support them if private industry wishes to do so. We have numerous resources that help with the development of those industries. We will help with doing the business analysis. We have various supports available. We also have financing supports through AFSC, so we will certainly act as a facilitator once investors have made the decision that they choose to go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Condominium Special Assessments

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Condo owners in Alberta are being gouged. The Condominium Property Act dictates that all condo boards must carry reserve funds to pay for ongoing maintenance. A recent court ruling dictates that townhouse-style condos cannot use the reserve funds to pay for maintenance of things like walls, exteriors, foundations, driveways, windows, and decks. The judge ruled that these repairs must be paid for by special assessment, resulting in massive and unexpected bills to condo owners. To the minister: are you aware of the difficult financial position that this legislation and ruling puts thousands of Albertans in?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I would like to start off by congratulating that member on asking that question. Why? Because I've been talking about this for – I don't know – a couple of months now. I've talked about it publicly, and yesterday in this very Chamber I went up to the member and said: "Hey, I'm looking to bring forth changes. Would you be supportive of that?" Today, instead of calling me back, he decides to issue a press release. Hon. member, congratulations on seeing the light, congratulations on coming around, and welcome to the conversation. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have the floor.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the minister for coming over and consulting with me. I've been working on this for a couple of months, too.

Will he commit to working with me and other interested members in this Assembly to fix this inequity in legislation, to make sure all Alberta condo owners are treated fairly and to spare them these often unaffordable bills?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, today is a great day. You see, the Vatican has just seen white smoke coming up, and I would say: let us send white smoke from this Chamber as well. Let this be a day where the opposition stands up and says that a new generation of honesty is coming forth. They're adopting our ideas. They're coming around to our ideals. We're looking to protect condo owners, and they're going to follow our lead.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I am not the Pope, but I thank the minister again for his commitment to work with the opposition for the betterment of Alberta condo owners.

Will he commit to a timeframe in dealing with this urgent issue because so many hard-working Albertans are being affected daily?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'd like to ask the member a few questions. Nearly 3,000 Albertans have responded to the consultation so far. I'd like to ask the member opposite if he has. I'd like to ask what he feels we should do with building assessment reports. Should they be mandatory when a condo conversion project is coming forth? What should developers face if they are not honest about what condo fees should be? Hon. member, bring forth actual ideas.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: You have the floor, hon. member. Proceed.

Marijuana Grow Ops

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 22 the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General announced that the government was going to take a closer look at marijuana grow ops in Alberta. While door-knocking, I spoke with members of the Killarney community, and they've been deeply affected by a notorious drug house in their area. Their children had to witness an investigation of a death and a stabbing, something that is difficult to explain to a young child. All of my questions are to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. What do you want to achieve now that the government has finally decided to launch consultations on marijuana grow ops?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to crack down on crime with our law and order agenda, that began many years ago and continues today. Marijuana grow ops are no exception. There actually have been 792 marijuana grow ops found in Alberta over the past five years. What are we doing about it? We're actually looking at consultations throughout the entire province involving police, involving home inspectors, involving health professionals, and involving everyday citizens on our website. After getting at this, we will look at developing new legislation to crack down on this insidious crime.

Ms Cusanelli: How does this minister expect to enact any initiatives that result from these consultations when in the 2013 budget safe communities and neighbourhoods funding has been slashed by $7 million?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud that this budget does not cut one cop. It does not cut one Crown prosecutor. It even increases our component of judges by two. I know this member was not implying, of course, that any one of these officers cannot handle this. [interjections] As I keep on listening to the yammering over here, we have capable law enforcement officers, and we're going to crack down on grow ops in our community. There are some everywhere, throughout each one of our constituencies. [interjections]

The Speaker: You know, we were doing reasonably well up to a few minutes ago. Let's see if we can restore ourselves.

Ms Cusanelli: Mr. Speaker, why has this government chosen to not include all Albertans in these consultations when clearly grow ops affect all Albertan communities?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. We actually have a website set up at justice.gov.ab.ca. If you didn't hear me the first time – I'm sorry; I have a hoarse throat today – justice.gov.ab.ca. We've received 695 consultations. You know, I'm hoping the Member for Edmonton-Centre talks about some of the words that oversee what she actually wants to deal with this particular issue. I'm looking forward to her comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Lethbridge-East.

South Saskatchewan Regional Plan

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The land-use plan passed under Bill 36 paved the way for the province to subject land- and leaseholders to a centralized government without full, fair, and timely compensation. Now this government is plowing ahead with the South Saskatchewan regional plan, where thousands of southern Albertans are deeply concerned that this government will dictate to them what they can and cannot do with their property. With the Property Rights Advocate role being hamstrung by an ineffective mandate, how can the SRD minister possibly guarantee that businesses, agricultural operations, and a way of life are not harmed by this regional plan?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to take that question on behalf of my colleague. Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, the South Saskatchewan regional plan is forward looking, constructive. This regional planning model has been identified as being important in the eyes of the government of the United States, in fact, in how they look at Alberta. This is critical to the future of this province. It ensures that we look after and preserve and protect the landscape of this province so that our children in 50 years or our grandchildren in a hundred years will be proud of what they have, the way we are today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Despite that, hundreds of southern Albertans are worried.

Given that the lower Athabasca regional plan cancelled 19 leases for oil and gas companies without consultation of landowners, what will be the formula this time for compensating ranchers, farmers, and businesses that might be subject to sterilizations in the South Saskatchewan regional plan?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, it's always possible to misinterpret reality and try and frighten people, and that is an irresponsible thing to do in this case. In fact, the lower Athabasca regional plan: in a nearly pristine part of the province those consultations were very deep and wide. Actually, those matters will be settled in a way that the interested owners are perfectly happy with. You cannot apply that suggestion, that model, to the South Saskatchewan regional plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this first round of consultations in the South Saskatchewan regional plan area is now completed, can the minister of SRD please let southern Albertans know when they will be able to see the first draft of the plan to see how this plan will actually impact their land?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I'll certainly take that question under advisement and ask my colleague to let the hon. member know. The answer, I believe, will be: in the very near future. But my colleague will answer with greater specificity.

However, Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that southern Albertans, as all Albertans, can be very pleased with the outcome and the work that's been done in the regional plans. This is important work for Alberta. It's important work to ensure that we make the most of the tremendous resources, including the landscapes, that we have in this province.

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today. I want to hand out some kudos, first of all, to Edmonton-Strathcona, Calgary-Fish Creek, Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, Edmonton-Centre, Grande Prairie-Smoky, and others for making a sincere effort to tighten up the preambles to the supplementals, which weren't really in the form of preambles at all, actually. Some of them were very, very cleverly worded. Edmonton-Strathcona, you started us off on a good path, and I'm grateful to you – and so is the House – because it resulted in 96 questions and answers being posed today. Ninety-six. We should be heading to over a hundred in the days to come. So thank you for that.

Secondly, by playing ball, so to speak, with this, it will allow the Speaker to interpret the rule that there should not be any preambles with some flexibility when it comes to your opposition leaders. That also worked well today, and I'd like to continue to allow the opposition leaders the opportunity to do preambles. That would be my interpretation, and I'd like to try that again tomorrow with your indulgence.

May we briefly revert to the introduction of some school groups who have just arrived? Is anyone opposed?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 58 students, staff, and parents from l'école Racette school in St. Paul who will be doing a tour of the Legislature later today. I really appreciate the students taking the time to visit us here today. I know that you all behave much better than the MLAs down here. I would like to introduce their teachers and supervisors and ask that they rise as I say their name: Paula Fejzullai, Simon Page, Melissa LePage, Martin Amyotte, Doris Stafiniak, Marilyn Turcotte, Mr. Darrell Henderson, Mr. Timothy Schweigert, Mrs. Eveline Luce, and their bus driver, Claude Labrie. I would now ask that all the students rise, and I'd ask the members to give them all the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I formally introduced my guest, who has since arrived in the Chamber, and now in person I'd like to introduce to you and through you Dr. Mirko Betti, assistant professor at the department of agricultural food and nutritional science at the U of A, the lead researcher, as you might recall, conducting sensory and taste trials of a salt flavour enhancement product that his team has developed.

I won't go into the details – I did before – other than to remind you, all members, and all Albertans that today, indeed, is the middle of World Salt Awareness Week, so it's the perfect time to remind Albertans that high dietary salt contributes to high blood pressure, which is the leading risk factor for cardiovascular disease and death. World-class work is being done in the area right here by this gentleman. I thank him for standing. Please give him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 20 seconds we will recommence Members' Statements, starting with Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Great Kids Awards

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the work of three outstanding young people who made a lasting difference to their community and my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. These individuals are the recipients of the Great Kids award. Each year 16 children across Alberta are acknowledged for their hard work and community spirit, and this year on March 3 three young people from my constituency were presented with this honour.

The Great Kids award was launched in 1999 as a celebration of children and youth who impact their communities in a positive way. Each year Albertans are encouraged to nominate young people between the ages of five and 18 for their determination, generosity, compassion, courage, and strong spirit.

Maeson Stabblar, Hemzy Elkadri, and Winston Gamache are outstanding examples of just this. Hemzy was the motivating force behind the atom and novice hockey tournament in Cold Lake, raising over $23,000 for the Stollery children's hospital foundation. Maeson raised over $16,000 to go towards the Curtis Hargrove run across Canada, and Winston is actively volunteering in local organizations such as Students Against Drinking & Driving and HOPE, or Helping Our Peers Everywhere.

Each of these amazing young people is building the future of our province and communities through their determination, spirit, and compassion. These are the traits I believe all Albertans share. I encourage all my colleagues to continue to recognize the amazing work of youth in their constituency. The Great Kids award is one great way of doing that.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Medevac Services

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today. As you know, I am a paramedic, and I'm proud to be that. I'm also proud to be the MLA for Calgary-South East. Over these last many months I've had the opportunity to talk about emergency medical services, and that includes air medevac. I've been a paramedic who's worked on the streets and continues to try to work on the streets to be relevant and to be genuine.

In that, there are things that are unpleasant with that job, and unfortunately I've been there. I've been there when things have gone wrong, but I've been there when things have gone great. But that emotion wells up, and it compels us to advocate for our patients. It causes us to do things that we normally wouldn't, and sometimes we have a hard time understanding. When we get to that point in emergency medicine, air medevac, or anything else, the only thing we have to rely on are the facts. I wanted to release some of the facts here in this House today.

Last year there were 3,071 flights, air medevac flights, air ambulance flights with paramedics, very skilled and highly trained people. They can't do their job without nurses and without physicians that also care and advocate for their patients and are emotional and have been on that scene, have been there and seen the carnage, but they've also seen the great opportunities and the great success stories.

Of those 3,071 flights there were 505 red patient flights flown into the province of Alberta, and out of those flights 282 were sent to the University of Alberta and 161 to the Royal Alexandra. When we talk about red patients, they're life threatening, absolutely, but there's a scale on that. What Alberta Health Services has done is that they've looked at that scale. They've calculated as the call came in, from the first part of that call, because the call coming in is very important from the beginning of that call until the very end. What they did is that they calculated the flight coming in, and they graded it.

Those 505 life-threatening calls coming into the city of Edmonton went to various hospitals, many of them ICU patients. They went to all of the various hospitals. At the end of the day they took a look at all that information. They calculated. They took the patient care reports at the end of that, and then they re-evaluated. That's where those numbers come up. It's medically based evidence that moves us forward. It's what makes this health care system the best in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Olds College Centennial

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to congratulate the Olds College women's basketball team, the Broncos, on winning the Alberta Colleges Athletic Conference championship. They entered the tournament in seventh place and won it. It takes a lot of hard work, teamwork, and dedication to be the best in the province. This week the team is in Nova Scotia for the national championships, and I know they will represent Alberta well.

Being provincial champions is a huge achievement, and it is especially fitting that Olds College women's basketball holds the honour this year, the college's centennial year. One hundred years ago the Olds School of Agriculture and Home Economics opened, offering courses in those two fields. The college has adapted, and course offerings have expanded, but its focus on hands-on training, applied research, and high-tech learning has remained constant throughout the century.

Throughout the year centennial events will be held to showcase the college's roots and look forward to its future. I'm looking forward to attending the Growing the Legacy centennial gala on March 22. In June the town of Olds will salute the college's anniversary with a community celebration. The Jack Anderson Charity Auto Auction will take place, made possible by Mr. Anderson's generous donation of his vintage car and truck collection to be auctioned off in support of the future of Olds College. In July Olds College will host the 60th World Plowing Championship, and October will bring the centennial rodeo.

Mr. Speaker, these and other events will indeed make the 100th year of Olds College an exciting one. To all students, staff, and alumni: happy anniversary, and go, Broncos, go.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services and Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of a motion.

Be it resolved that

- A. On Monday afternoons during the period that the 2013-14 main estimates stand referred to the legislative policy committees, the Assembly stands adjourned at 6 p.m.;
- B. Notwithstanding Standing Order 59.03(4)(b), following completion of consideration of the main estimates by legislative policy committees
  - (i) on April 22, 2013, or
  - (ii) on such other date of which the Government House Leader has provided written notice to House leaders and tabled in the Assembly, the Assembly shall reconvene in Committee of Supply at 9:30 p.m., at which time the committees shall report, and voting on the main estimates shall proceed.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, I have the requisite number of copies of an article from the Airdrie Echo that I referred to yesterday in an exchange with the hon. Member for Airdrie, in which there's a picture of him enthusiastically opening up a school or digging a hole for a school in his constituency that was funded by a P3 project, which essentially puts a liability on the government's balance sheet, unlike public debt.

I also have the requisite number of copies of a CBC article that I also referred to in which former Premier Klein essentially admitted that it was probably a bit of a mistake to pay down the debt so fast while ignoring the infrastructure demands in a boom economy, where he says: "They were right about [us] not having a plan. The plan is being developed, but no one could anticipate the phenomenal growth that was taking place." A mistake that this government does not plan to repeat.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. The first is the appropriate number of copies of e-mail submissions that Albertans made to our prebudget tour which visited seven cities in February. Karis, Dennis, Cody, and Lydia are some of the Albertans who have provided valuable input. For example, Dennis would like to see this PC government end subsidies to fossil fuel industries while returning to a system of progressive taxation. Submissions like this clearly show the priorities of Albertans.

The second set is the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail I received from Julie O'Bray, who is a concerned parent with children in the Fort McMurray public school district. Julie is dismayed by the fact that only one new school has been built in her district in the last 26 years. She writes, "It is disgusting to me that we do not have adequate funding to meet the educational needs of our children in this region."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a letter dated March 1, 2013, from the registrar of motor vehicle services to the presidents of the Alberta Medical Association and the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta. The letter outlines Alberta Transportation's use of assessment tools for medically at-risk drivers. Of particular interest is the following statement: "The Driver Medical Form currently [employed] by doctors is the key piece of information used by the Department to assess a driver's medical fitness to drive."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Ms. Blakeman: Thank you, very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table an e-mail that came to me from one of the pharmacists operating in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. This is from Arif Virji, and he notes in his letter that the proposed new Alberta Blue Cross agreement would "remove the three tiers of dispensing fees, streamline injectable and contraceptive fees [and] decrease all generic drug pricing to 18% . . . [It's a] travesty for the pharmacy industry." If this keeps going, all Albertans will have are Rexalls, Shoppers Drug Marts, and Superstores. There will be no local pharmacies.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings in response to the Premier's question to produce evidence about for-profit and not-for-profit long-term care facilities. First I'd like to table five copies of Hansard from yesterday, March 12, 2013.

Secondly, I'd like to table five copies of Residential Long-term Care for Canadian Seniors, by McGregor and Ronald. It states, "Research [finds] a link between for-profit ownership and inferior quality in residential long-term care for seniors."

I have five copies of a document from the Health Quality Council of Alberta, which states that "publicly operated facilities obtained significantly higher overall care ratings compared to private and voluntary . . . operated facilities." It's a report labelled Long Term Care Family Experience Survey.

Mr. Speaker, I have five copies of Quality of Care in For-profit and Not-for-profit Nursing Homes by Comondore et al. It states, "Not-for-profit nursing homes deliver higher quality care than do for-profit nursing homes."

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're beyond the 3 o'clock mark. Is this your last tabling?

Dr. Sherman: Just a couple more, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A couple more? I wonder if we could just interrupt and get the Government House Leader to ask for unanimous consent not to conclude the Routine at this point.

Mr. Hancock: If you insist, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I do not insist, but the hon. Government House Leader has asked for unanimous consent to allow us to go beyond 3 o'clock to conclude the Routine. Does anyone object to that?

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Unanimous consent was not given, so let's proceed. There's a point of order. The Minister of Justice.

Point of Order Inflammatory Language

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll endeavour to be brief given the time constraint here. I rise on a point of order relating to Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), and (l). Earlier you admonished the hon. Minister of Finance and President of the Treasury Board for referring to the Official Opposition as the wild alliance, which is not their correct name, and I accede to your ruling. Similarly, this has to apply, with respect, on all sides of the House. I would just ask the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to personally correct his reference to me to be the Progressive Conservative Justice minister.

The Speaker: Before we hear the argument, it should behoove us all to know that the Blues do not refer to you that way. They refer to a progressive Justice minister, undoubtedly a high compliment.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, with respect, that's the very inference in which I have raised the point of order.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, obviously, there's no point of order. As you aptly pointed out, progressive is an adjective, and you can clearly call somebody – you know, "This is a progressive policy." As you very clearly pointed out, there is no problem using that here. It's not an insult.

I would note, though, that using the term "wild alliance" is, of course, meant to be an insult and is a misstatement of our name and that we have been warned by the Speaker many times not to do.

Mr. Denis: For the six months you practised law, you know a lot about it.

Mr. Anderson: Six months. Okay.

If we were to call the other side regressive conservatives, then that would be a problem, so that's why we don't say things like that. But in this case, clearly, there's no point of order here.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you know, if you're going to continue with bantering across the aisle, there's no point in even having a Speaker up here. I'd be happy to vacate and just shut it down and let you all just chat amongst yourselves. You know, let's pay some respect to the fine tradition and, regardless of who's in the chair, to the chair as well.

I think this is a point of clarification. I know that sometimes, hon. members, we do get into the heated cut and thrust of debate, and sometimes as a result of the interjections and the howling and scowling and everything else that occasionally erupts in the Assembly, you don't quite hear things. I'm pretty sure that that's what prompted the Minister of Justice to stand. I'm surmising, but I would think that that's what got you going.

The other part is the tone in which these things are delivered. The tone. I've admonished many of you before – and I'm going to remind you again – to watch the tone. We had several examples yesterday and today where tone and choice of perhaps not the most appropriate words led to minor eruptions, which could have led to major ones, obviously, and I'd sure like to discourage that.

That having been said, points of clarification have been offered on both sides. Let us move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 13

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Dallas]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. No?

Are there other speakers?

Ms Blakeman: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I think I've got my ear plugged. I just didn't hear the number of the bill that we're debating.

The Speaker: Bill 13. It's the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013. Second reading.

Ms Blakeman: All right. Okay. I guess I'm happy to speak to it, then. Thanks for the opportunity. Sorry about the plugged ears.

Mr. Hancock: Or we could vote it and move on.

Ms Blakeman: You know, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Government House Leader is suggesting that I pass on my annual opportunity to beat him up. . .

Dr. Swann: Upbraid him.

Ms Blakeman: Upbraid him. Thank you. That's much better language. We have some classy people over here.

. . . to upbraid him and his colleagues for the almost annual introduction of the interim supply act.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For those of you that are following along at home with us here, there are three kinds of supply acts. One is the estimates, which is the big budget, what everybody would call the budget. The second one is supplementary supply, which is just what it says. It's more money. It's adding money in or moving money between departments. That's a supplementary supply, and again this government is astonishingly good at not getting their budget right the first time.

I'm struggling to think, but I'm pretty sure that between 1997 and 2013 they haven't missed a supplementary supply yet. You know, that's quite a record, deserving of applause. They're pretty bad at getting it right the first time. You know, they need a little help with those supplementary supply bills.

Mr. Speaker, some years they've managed not one but two supplementary supply bills, so they were really off the mark. Those were also the years, to be fair, in which they underbudgeted their expenses so badly that when the oil was pouring in, they ended up with gobsmacking surpluses, so they had a lot of money to give out. Did they have a plan about what they were going to do with a lot of surplus money? Did they think beforehand about the best way to use that? Hmm. No.

We had this kind of wild frenzy of asks from different places, and I cannot imagine what their caucus meetings were like as everybody competed to get a chunk of cash to build a part of a road or do whatever they wanted to do in their constituency.

That was a long explanation. Sorry about that.

So there's an estimates supply, there's a supplementary supply, and here today we have interim supply. Interim means in the meantime or a passage of time that bridges over, and that's exactly what this is. Because the government has chosen – and it's entirely their choice – not to complete their budget debate by the 31st of March, which is their year-end, they don't have permission to spend money come April 1. Nobody gets paid. They don't buy anything. Contractors don't get their contracts paid. Nothing happens. So they have to give themselves permission to spend money so that life continues, and thus you get an interim supply bill, a bridging amount of money in which the government can cut cheques as of the 1st of April and carry on business until they get the budget passed.

For anyone that really loves details and transparency and accountability, interim supply is not going to be your favourite thing because there is no detail, and there is no explanation, and there is no transparency. Anybody that's really looking forward to that, take a break. What you actually get in this bill is one line for each department. The way this government is now doing things is that they cut it into operational and capital, so you're going to get two lines in most departments. You get the name of the department, like Aboriginal Relations, and you get $3,069,000, which is the permission they're going to give themselves to spend that amount of money come April 1 until they run out.

When do they run out? Well, generally speaking – and I have not actually crunched the numbers on this one – it's about 40 per cent of the budget that they give themselves. The detail people that are out there: that's what you can do. You can divide these numbers into the total budget that they're looking at in the estimates in the general revenue fund that they distributed on budget day and see if this is coming out to 40 per cent because that's usually what they do.

They don't actually have an end date on this, so it's kind of a free-for-all. This is what I mean about a lack of detail and accountability. It's giving themselves approximately – let's take the 40 per cent number. But it doesn't tell you when it ends. It says that this is for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2014.

I'm trying to think of an analogy here. You go to your parents and say: "I'd like an advance on my allowance. I'd like 40 per cent of what I'm going to get in the next year." But you don't agree over what period of time you're going to spend that 40 per cent. If you go back after, you know, a month or two and you've spent the 40 per cent, is there going to be a little bit of a household argument there that you spent it too fast or that you might need more by the end of the year – "What the heck did you do with it, anyway?" – because you didn't lay out a business plan beforehand? That's kind of an analogy to what's going on here.

Now, what is a little bit different is that the interim supply request came in at the same time as the main estimates, the main budget, so we didn't actually need to have or it wasn't required to have a separate Committee of Supply debate on this, where we could go through and question each of the ministers in each of the departments. I can tell that my colleague the Government House Leader is heaving a huge sigh of relief that that did not have to happen this year.

But it is an interesting time because I always like to go through and ask the different ministers that were here – we actually have ministers here with us today. Isn't that delightful? Thank you so much for being with us.

An Hon. Member: I was here.

Ms Blakeman: I mentioned that, actually. Thank you for being here with us today.

I ask them if they have filled the requirements that the Auditor General had pointed out. You know, why were they asking for this additional money? What were they going to do with 40 per cent of their budget – that's almost half of their budget – and without a time period under which we understand it's going to be spent and accounted for?

Now, because we got the estimates at the same time, you actually could go back and forth. You could sit here with the interim supply budget and go: "Okay. Well, if I look at the plan from the government for this whole year and I take 40 per cent of it, I've got some idea of where they're going to go in spending this money." That actually is an improvement over past years, Mr. Speaker, in which we got the interim supply before we got the budgets, so we had no idea what they were going to spend the money on.

Just to go back again, the government has complete control of the agenda here. They can decide when we're going to come into session, when we're going to rise from session. They have a majority, so they can change the standing orders. They can move the dates around even if we've agreed to them in the standing orders, which they regularly do.

I'm just going to stop here and go on a tiny little tangent. You need to be able to have the government get the business of the day done. Fair enough. I understand that, but I would argue that this government gives itself far too many ways to hustle the business, to hustle it through.

For example, we have agreed, more or less, that there would be about 70 to 75 hours of debate on the budget. Most people would think: "Okay. Well, you know, doing one or two a day, maybe one in the afternoon and one at night, it would take us X number of days to get through the budget." Not these clever people. They want to be out by April 25, so they have guillotined everything. It has to be done by then. We now have squished all of these hours of debate into that little box that the Government House Leader wants us to fit into. It is a guillotine on the date. [interjection] He's not happy, because he's starting to heckle me from the other side, but that's okay. He can get up and talk about this if he wants to.

But that is what's happened. The government is totally in control of the whole agenda. They choose year after year after year with one recent exception. I think it was in 2010 that they actually got the budget passed before the year-end, and I celebrated with them for actually having managed that. Otherwise, we've had both supplementary supply and interim supply bills in order to backstop the government's decision about its timelines. This is where I have a problem with what's going on.

You would think that with the number of resources this government has, the staff in every minister's office, associate minister's office, wonderful people, many of whom live in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, working in government departments with a lot of brains and heart and passion behind them about, you know, how they want to work certain programs through – there's a lot of expertise the government can draw on, yet consistently they're late with the budget. Why? Why are they consistently late with the budget? It's just commonplace now. I mean, when you think about it, in 16 or 17 years they've hit the budget date once, so you've got to go, "Okay; this is a deliberate choice." They can't have – I'm looking for a better word than what came to my head. You can't have mistakenly done this that many times. It must be on purpose.

I really question that. I think that with all of the opportunity and all of the money that we have in Alberta, we should be able to get our budget done before the year-end actually starts, so I always question why we're in this position with interim supply, that we're actually having to go through it. We don't get any information. You can't really debate anything. I mean, I could make everybody crazy by getting up and, you know, asking a whole bunch of questions about how the $3,069,000 is being spent in Aboriginal Relations. I'm probably not going to get an answer, and they don't have to stick to the answer that they give me.

I just want to put this on the record so people understand that every time they hear a member of this government – and for the sake of the Minister of Justice I won't call them a Progressive Conservative government because his hair catches on fire. I won't say that. I know he gets upset with the word “progressive” because he doesn't want to be that. [interjections] Okay, you guys. You shouldn't let me get off on a tangent because I forget the point of what I was saying.

They hear a nonprogressive conservative – sorry, Minister – talk about what wonderful fiscal managers they are and how brilliantly they've managed all of the finances of Alberta. Ask them why they can't manage to get a budget done before the year-end. I'd love to hear what the answer is. I've heard some, so here's a couple. What's it called when you've got different answers on a test?

Some Hon. Members: Multiple choice.

Ms Blakeman: A multiple-choice test.

I've heard them say: well, we had to wait for the federal budget so we knew what to do. Okay. I thought we were independent Alberta. I thought we were get-out-there-by-ourselves Alberta. I thought we were leaders in Alberta, and we don't have to wait for no federal budget. But that's been used as an excuse for why they were late.

This year I only have pity for the members of the government and for the staff because I suspect there were probably about four budgets. It's why everybody's looking just the tiniest bit strained over there. I have the feeling there were a lot of budgets that they did before they finally sent one to the printers and said, “Okay; don't talk about it anymore because now they've printed it.” I don't know. We'll talk about that during the supply debate, Mr. Speaker.

It's one of the things that I don't get about this government. I don't understand, with all the resources they've got, why they can't deliver a budget before the beginning of the next fiscal year. If any of the not-for-profits or, indeed, any of the business sector that they work with, that they love, that they talk with about the way the world should be, you know, if any of those people didn't get their budget passed before or they hadn't done any kind of business plan, they'd be in public stocks. They'd be mocked. They'd lose their contract. But they themselves are allowed to do it, and we have been as late as late April, I think, in actually getting that budget passed in the past. Is this a good way to manage money?

Five seconds or five minutes?

The Deputy Speaker: Seconds.

Ms Blakeman: Seconds. Oh, that's too bad. Well, I look forward to another opportunity.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone would like to ask a question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: I'm just wondering if the hon. member had anything more to say.

The Deputy Speaker: It's not intended to carry on debate, hon. member, but I'll give the hon. member a few minutes.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Blakeman: You don't want me to carry on the debate?

The Deputy Speaker: Well, hon. member, with all due respect, the intent of 29(2)(a) is to be questions or comments. It's not a way to continue the debate from before, and you can read that in the standing orders.

Ms Blakeman: Actually, it doesn't determine that, Mr. Speaker, if I may be so bold.

The Deputy Speaker: Please answer the member, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Standing Order 29(2)(a) does allow you to make a statement. It does say that. Not that I would ever argue with the Speaker, of course, you know, but I just thought that since I had my glasses on, I'd refer to it while I was standing here. It does indeed allow for a statement: “to be made available . . . to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.” So question, comment, statement: they're all kind of in there. Anyway, thank you for the opportunity to review that out loud. I really appreciate it.

In the few minutes that I have left, what's the real concern here? The real concern is that I can't reconcile this government saying that they're open, transparent, and accountable. I know it's become a mantra. It's become rhetoric that you hear all the time. I'm nothing special, just somebody, you know, that ended up luckily in this place, but I don't understand that. I'm not a stupid person. I've got my university degree and all of that. But this doesn't make sense to me. How are you accountable and transparent if you can't pass your budget by the date that everybody knows you're supposed to pass the budget by? Since you can't, then you have to have an interim supply bill.

For the folks at home, the bills are actually called appropriation bills, which is, like, the taking of money. So it's the taking of money – and I can't remember if it's from the Crown or to the Crown – for the purposes of an interim supply. So that's what all the highfalutin language actually means.

But I've heard a lot of rumours, which I'm assured are not true. Are you allowed to repeat things that you are not sure are true? [interjections] Oh, okay. I'm being egged on.

Mr. Donovan: It's budget. Don't worry about it.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, it's budget. It may fit into the same category of fairy tale. Who knows?

One of the things that a lot of people were talking about was that the government was essentially going to scarper. [interjections] I know. Does that seem wild? I know. As soon as they got the interim supply money so that they could continue to do business on April 1, they would scarper. They would shut down the Assembly and, whoosh, they'd be gone, a little pitter-pattering of feet out that far door. They would suspend the session, and off they'd go. They wouldn't have to have – God forbid – another question period. They wouldn't have to be accountable or transparent or whatever the other word is.

The Deputy Speaker: You're still speaking to the bill, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm sorry. Yes. That's the point. If they pass this, they could go by tomorrow. They could. They could get up and go because they now have permission to spend money on April 1. I hope they don't do that because I so enjoy spending time with all of you, all your happy, smiling faces looking back at me.

Mr. Campbell: Right back at you.

Ms Blakeman: Right back at me. You know, there's a perfect example.

So please, please, with all of your expertise, please try not to bring forward an interim supply appropriation act again. You really are capable of better. I know you're capable of better. I know you're capable of fulfilling your rhetoric. Please don't bring another one forward next year because I don't want to have to do this speech again. You don't want to have to listen to it again.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the bill.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me say that this is my eighth year, going into the ninth year in this Legislature. I can confirm what the hon. member from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre is saying about always coming forward. It's very consistent with late budgets and therefore the need for interim supply. My particular responsibilities around health care, human services, agriculture, and First Nations have certainly led me to those areas where I see the tremendous needs and a government that says that it wants to commit to supporting these important areas of work yet consistently misses the timelines and misses the target.

The interim supply is going to bridge funding between now and April. I guess, like my colleagues here, the question is: where has the planning been in this province for the last decade? It's clear that we have not planned on the very recurring ups and downs of the oil industry and have placed so much emphasis in our budgets on fragile income, shall I say, that we're constantly faced with very great challenges in some of the most fundamental of human services and supports for people in a province that is so well off that I guess many people, both in this province and beyond the province, are asking how it is, why it is that we are struggling for budgets and fail to make the foundational changes in our budgeting process and in our long-term commitment to stable funding. While there are different points of view on it, certainly it has to be seen as a consistent pattern in this province, where in one term we are struggling to find enough cash to keep teachers and nurses and other professionals in place – we're letting them go – and in another year we are hiring them back again and looking around the world for some of these.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that we have tremendous growth in this province. That's been a consistent pattern. It's no excuse to say that we've had a hundred thousand people come into the province in the past year when that has been the case for a number of years, and we still don't see any longer term plan to provide some stability in funding of our most basic services.

The fact that each year we come back and need to boost and provide the interim supply, I guess, raises questions about what we're learning year to year and whether we're ever going to get to the place where we can provide a stable, dependable source of funding through our tax base, through our fees, through our land sales, through our various royalty programs so that we can avoid some of this discomfort and, frankly, real suffering for people who are on the edge already in our communities.

I think for many of us in this province there is a strong commitment to longer term thinking, longer term planning. Indeed, I was gratified that some of the members from the opposite side have said that they want to get together in an all-party fashion and talk about some of the longer term planning issues, strategic governance kinds of questions that get beyond some of the partisan issues and help us to think about what it would look like to address in a long-term way some of our carbon issues, some of our need for stable funding, some of our water issues in the province that are going to be so critical for all of the development that has to go on here and ensure that at a base level we do take care of our primary responsibilities as government, which are to protect people and to protect the planet, the earth and animals that we have taken responsibility for.

While this may seem a bit of a departure from the issues of interim supply, it all has to do, as I indicated before, Mr. Speaker, with whether we are gaining or losing public trust, whether we are gaining or losing a sense of people in this province having a part to play in a sustainable, healthy, innovative economy. This is an indication, I guess, that we're not serious yet in this province about providing stable funding and ensuring that people understand why we need a base of funding that would guarantee, not only for some of the human services but for municipalities, the kinds of planning and opportunities that all of us deserve.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to take my seat. If there are questions, I will respond to them. It's my honour to speak to this in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, are there additional speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called. Would the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board like to close the debate?

Mr. Horner: Question, please.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 11 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 11, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013.

As I do this, Mr. Speaker, I did have the opportunity to listen to some of the comments by the opposition and also to go through and just have a look at some of the questions in Hansard. I did pull out two or three that I wanted to respond to the hon. members on.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition from Highwood had asked why we do not spend more time talking about the increases in our other revenue sources, that we spend too much time on bitumen issues. Really, apart from the fact that, yes, other sources are up, bitumen is taking the biggest bite. Our forecasts for other revenue sources were either bang on or slightly lower than the actual show. We had a lot of accusations of padding those forecasts, but in actual fact we were quite close.

The second question was why transfers from the government of Canada are lower than budgeted, that they would have thought they would have been constant. We got that one out of Hansard. The answer is that the federal transfers are lower due to prior year claims under the ag stability program being lower than the revenue and expense recorded in prior years, so this year's revenue expenses are reduced. The Ecotrust spending reprofiled to the future means that the federal government funding also had to be reprofiled. Their money coming to us got reprofiled out, so we had to reprofile it to match them in out-years. There are also a couple of less significant dollars being reprofiled in some of their other infrastructure programs when dollars are coming to us that are to be matched.

The hon. Member for Airdrie had asked why there is a large amount of in-year savings and we're voting for additional spending. I think we kind of clarified that in the House the other day. It really is all about that we voted for lines of expenditure here in the House, and if we're changing those lines, it has to come back to the Assembly to talk about that.

In addition, there were some comments or questions around Enterprise and Advanced Education having statutory expense in-year savings that could not be applied to that expense vote, so you've got to balance that out.

Environment and Sustainable Resource Development's request is mostly for disaster and emergency assistance. The hon. member from the Liberal opposition was kind of wondering if we could budget for that. Well, it's tough to do that. And that is net of their in-year savings.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, the '12-13 request for supplementary of $533 million is the smallest for a fiscal year since 2001-2002, and the majority of this request is actually for disaster and emergency assistance.

With that, I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Are there other speakers?

Ms Blakeman: I thought we were adjourning and coming back to it. I would be delighted to adjourn supplementary supply Bill 11.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 12

Fiscal Management Act

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to rise to speak to the Fiscal Management Act, Bill 12. I'm not going to speak in favour of it because I think the bill is misnamed. I think it should actually be called the fiscal mismanagement act. I think part of the reason why I call it that is that we have to ask the question: why does the government need this act?

Let me say just for context that I noticed that the researcher for – oh, nobody is here from the ND opposition. I noticed that the researcher from the NDs on Twitter said that I was sounding a little bit wonky. I do kind of get a little bit wonky when I am talking about budget issues because I have been breaking down the province's budget every year since 1999, so this is my 15th year looking at their budget. I've been watching the rise and fall of how they manage their budget for a pretty long period of time, which explains why it sometimes seems like I know parts of the budget better than the Finance minister. It's because I actually know where to look for some of this information.

The reason why the government needs this act is because the budget that they introduced into the Legislature on March 7 is actually illegal under the current legislation. They couldn't actually pass this budget under the existing legislation, under the Government Accountability Act as well as the Fiscal Responsibility Act. There are provisions in there that they would be prohibited from doing with the budget bill that they brought in on March 7. So the reason why they need to throw overboard the Government Accountability Act as well as the Fiscal Responsibility Act is so that they can make legal certain things that allow them to pass their budget.

That should give you some idea of why I oppose the Fiscal Management Act and won't be voting in favour of it. We're going to try our best to improve it with a number of amendments, and I hope the government will be open-minded and at least accept a few of them because a few of them are paralleled by what we see in some of the commentary in the media, among a number of advocacy groups and economic think tanks, including the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, which I was delighted to speak at earlier today about some of the recommendations that they have about how the government should be managing its finances.

But let's talk about what exactly is the problem with this bill and why I say it is not legal under the current legislation for them to pass their budget, which is why they need to change it. The Premier has said to at least one columnist that there is no deficit, and she is right about that because there are actually three deficits. There's an operating deficit, a savings deficit, and a capital deficit. I think that's why this bill falls short in all three regards.

First of all, on the issue of an operating deficit. To be able to get to the number that the government is talking about in this year's budget of $451 million, they've had to go through a pretzel logic redefinition of what revenues are and what deficits are and what their sustainability fund is for in order to be able to arrive at that conclusion. This is the reason why there are at least five to 10, maybe even more – there seem to be new ones every day; they're popping up like mushrooms – new estimates every single day about what the actual cash shortfall of the government is for this year and for subsequent years.

Part of the reason it's problematic is because they've redefined what an expense is so that it's taken out all of the expenses for capital. They're no longer going to be budgeting for capital at all in their year-to-year expenses – that's one part of the problem – even though they covered half of it before and the other half was considered a transfer. But in any case, they've redefined what it means to have an expense with this legislation.

They've also redefined what it means to have revenue. Normally, a budget would include your total sources of revenue minus your total expenses, and you'd come up with a surplus or deficit figure. This one makes a number of very complicated changes to that to again confuse the issue and make it so difficult to figure out what our deficit actually is.

On page 2 of the act, under section 1(1)(b), there are five different things that get reduced, five different types of revenue that get reduced off the revenue number to determine what the operational revenue is. This, I think, goes a long way to explaining why we can't actually get a straight answer or a real number about what the final deficit is for the current budget year in the budget that was proposed.

In addition, the change to the contingency fund. I'm glad to see that the sustainability fund, renamed the contingency fund, still exists in the legislation. But I would like the government to return to what the original purpose of the sustainability fund was because in this legislation I think they go a long way from what the original intention of that account was supposed to be.

When the sustainability fund account came in, the idea was that it was going to have a certain balance in it so that if there was a given year where resource revenues didn't pan out, an unusual year where resource revenues did not pan out the way they were expected to, the government would be able to go into that fund to be able to sustain them over a couple of terms.

Unfortunately, we haven't seen that. What we ended up seeing is that the sustainability fund was grown to $17 billion, and the government has been living off it year after year after year after year, even though revenues have been high, they've been low, they've been stable. They've been at relatively high levels compared to historical averages, yet they have continued to draw down on the sustainability fund.

Unfortunately, the new definition for contingency fund allows them to continue with that practice, drawing on the contingency fund in any given year if it so happens that they spend more than they take in under these new definitions of what operational revenue is. I think that that is one issue that needs to be corrected in the bill. There has to be some limitation on the kinds of things you can dip into the contingency fund to be able to cover if we're going to see any kind of discipline restored to government spending.

The second area where the bill falls short is on the area of savings. Now, the first problem that we have – and I shouldn't say that I'm opposed to the notion of savings. There are actually some good measures, at least in part, taken in this legislation, if only the government would actually live up to what is in the legislation. Unfortunately, the government doesn't have a very good history in this regard.

Forty-two years in government, three major resource booms, and they've blown every single one of them. So they now start talking: "Trust us next time. After the next election we're going to start saving." If you look at the provisions that they've got in the legislation, they don't start retaining any of the interest in the heritage savings trust fund until 2015-16, which means that with the fixed window for elections, we won't actually know whether or not they live up to that commitment until the consolidated statements are delivered in June of that year. You know, I guess we can always cross our fingers and hope. After all, they certainly wouldn't campaign on one thing and do something else and then change the legislation, would they? No one would imagine that they could do something like that.

In any case, after that, in 2016-17, is when they talk about it being 50 per cent of revenues retained, and then in 2017-18 and beyond they talk about having a hundred per cent of revenue retained. As I say, I'm not opposed to this part of the legislation. I think that this is not a bad provision. I just think there's a credibility gap. I just don't actually think the government is going to make good on this because otherwise they would start now.

They would start now, even if it was with a smaller amount, to demonstrate that they actually are going to walk the talk, which is, I think, unfortunately, now where Albertans are at. They don't trust the government to do what they say they're going to do. They actually want to see the government doing it before they believe. That's a credibility issue that this Premier and her government now have to live with in the way that they've governed in the last year.

The other part of the legislation which I think is far more problematic – and there does need again to be a loophole closed to be able to prevent what they've structured this to do. They talk about having a certain percentage of resource revenues set aside to go into one of four different accounts: the heritage fund, the science and engineering fund, the medical research fund, and the heritage scholarship fund. They want 5 per cent of the first $10 billion, 25 per cent of the amount between $10 billion and $15 billion, and then 50 per cent of the amount over $15 billion.

We haven't had very many years where we have had revenues in the $10 billion to $15 billion range. I don't even know that we've had one year where we've actually seen revenues in the $15 billion plus range. I think we have to focus in on the smaller end of the range, zero to $10 billion, because that's where you're actually going to see the government have to comply with the terms of the legislation.

The problem is, going back to the issue of there not being any limitation on what you need to do to be able to dip into the contingency fund, that the way this works is that the contingency fund has to get topped up to $5 billion, and that's the first cull of any of our resource revenue. You can see how this works. If you don't have any spending limitation, the government can overspend, draw from the contingency fund, and then any resource revenues at the first cull would be going back into the contingency fund. Then you end up with this cycle where you don't actually ever end up seeing any dollars go into the heritage fund, the science and engineering fund, the medical research fund, and the heritage scholarship fund. Looking back on the pattern of behaviour that we've seen of the government over the last 42 years, looking at the way they structured the legislation to allow them that loophole, I have no reason to believe that we would see any difference.

What we need to be able to close that loophole is a spending limit law. It's something we have proposed, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation has proposed, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has proposed, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, the OECD even, in talking about jurisdictions that have fluctuating resource revenues. The only way that you can actually get spending under control is to have a spending limit law.

Now, of course, on this side we propose an absolute maximum of spending increases to be in line with inflation and population growth. It has to be below that. But I notice in this legislation there isn't any spending limit law. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce proposes a combination of inflation, population growth, GDP growth. The point is that there isn't any limitation. And this government needs it because what we've seen, especially over the last decade, is that if you look at inflation and population growth, the government has consistently outspent it, in most cases by more than double. This is the reason that if this plan is to have any credibility on the savings side, it has to be coupled with some kind of spending limitation so that you can actually ensure that those dollars are going to flow through to one of the long-term savings accounts.

The third area, the capital plan. I've got two different points that I want to make on this, one about the debt-servicing limit and one about the debt repayment plan. In the first case, the debt-servicing limit, the government is talking about there being a limit on debt that would ensure that they do not pay more than 3 per cent of overall revenues averaged over the last few years in direct finance charges. Looking at that number – and you can look at the budget documents, page 141; it's got a wealth of information in that part of the fiscal plan – what that means is that by 2016, when the government has taken out $17 billion worth of debt, they will be paying $583 million worth of interest payments, and under this 3 per cent debt charge limitation, they would be able to still borrow double the amount that we have in 2016 before they bump up against that limit. They could borrow as much as $35 billion to $40 billion, depending on what interest rates they're able to get.

Now, we weren't able to get any answers today from the Premier or the Finance minister about what that upper limit should actually be, but I can tell you that looking through what others are recommending on this route – we, of course, recommend that we don't have debt at all. But if you're going to look at what even the Chambers of Commerce has suggested, they say that the debt limit should be 1 per cent, that you shouldn't be paying finance charges on more than 1 per cent of your revenue.

Now, what would that mean? If the chambers' rule was applied, the government would not have more than $400 million worth of finance charges in any given year. That would imply a real debt limit. That would imply that they could not borrow more than about $12 billion, which we think is pretty high, but at least that's an amount that you can envision paying off over a period of time. The idea that we are with this legislation writing the government a blank cheque to go up as high as $35 billion or $40 billion without any restraint other than, "Trust us; we know what we're doing," I think is asking for members on this side to put a level of faith in the government that they simply haven't earned.

The second part of what the Chambers of Commerce has suggested is – you're not going to believe this – a priority list, that the only way you can actually determine how many projects you should be allowed to borrow for and take out bonds for in long-term borrowing is that you have to relate it back to the kinds of projects like schools and hospitals and roads. You have to have a public priority list. You have to be open and transparent about how high you're going to go with your borrowing. Otherwise, once again it's one of those cycles that you can get on where it's never-ending.

This is the main problem that we have with governments taking out debt. Once they start down this path, you end up seeing all kinds of silly things get recategorized as long-term capital expenses. In British Columbia, for instance, they started saying that computers and desks and software upgrades were legitimate long-term capital projects. That is not, I don't think, in keeping with the kind of commitment and the kind of thing that the government keeps on talking about, but that is the kind of thing that you allow to happen if, number one, you don't have a real spending limit like 1 per cent, which is a real spending limit, and you don't have a priority list. You give carte blanche to the government to spend money, recategorize it into capital, whether it deserves to be there or not.

The bigger part of the problem with this legislation – and this is, I think, the main reason why they are throwing the two other bills overboard and bringing through this new piece of legislation in order to be able to pass their budget – is that there isn't any serious effort or thought given to how any of this debt is going to be repaid.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked on Twitter

why it is that we didn't acknowledge or raise a fuss about the $2 billion or $3 billion that has been on the books for the last few years, and I think it's quite easy to explain. It's because in the prior act there was a requirement that if you had debt, you also had to have an equivalent amount in your debt repayment fund so that as those bonds came due, you had money on hand to be able to pay it off. I mean, I could accept that argument. That was the argument that Premier Klein made when he announced that the province was debt free. We re-created those two graphs so you could show: "Here's the amount that we still have outstanding. Here's the amount that we have in the debt repayment fund. Technically we're debt free, and as the debt comes due, we're going to pay it off."

What this legislation does and what this budget does is throw that out the window. We will not ever see an equivalent amount of money in the debt repayment fund as we see the government take out in new debt, and you need look no further than 2016 to see just how dramatic this difference is. In 2016 the government will have taken out $17 billion worth of debt, and how much will they have put aside to pay it off? Well, they're planning on putting aside only $40 million in 2013, $112 million in 2014, $205 million in 2015, for a total of $357 million. There's an imbalance: $17 billion dollars worth of debt, $357 million in a debt repayment fund to offset it.

Now, I do find it interesting that one of the things the Premier and the Finance minister have been arguing as we've been pressing them on this for the past number of months is that why they're doing this is that they say that we can borrow at 3.2 per cent and invest at 8.5 per cent and that if you can do that, you're ahead of the game.

This is where the argument falls down for them. Number one, we're not able to get all of our debt at 3.2 per cent. I talked to the Finance minister about this today, and I should give a little bit more detail because he didn't seem to know what I was talking about. But they did issue a bond on March 1, 2013 – so I guess we're talking some, you know, 12 days ago – and it was for $196,110,000. The rate on that was 3.41 per cent. This is the rate they went to the market with for a 20-year bond, and it was 3.4 per cent. Already we're paying a higher amount than the government had initially intended for us to be paying, a level that the associate Finance minister called ridiculous to be paying, 3 and a half per cent on March 1. That's kind of the ridiculous area that we've entered into now with the borrowing for the provincial government.

That being said, will they be able to year after year invest and earn an 8 and a half per cent return? Year after year. I mean, I think it takes a leap of faith to think that they're going to be that successful in the long term since we know that this debt they're taking out is for 20 years. I'm not sure how many financial experts have a long-term record year after year of getting 8 and a half per cent, especially with the volatility we've seen recently. But even if you acknowledge that that's what the government wants to do, I've got to tell you that with $17 billion worth of debt, you have to pay $583 million worth of interest on that. If you only have $357 million offsetting it to invest, even if you're earning 8 and a half per cent, that's only $30 million that you're earning to be able to offset that debt. The argument that they're making is that if you're borrowing money and then you're investing the balance, you're going to be net ahead. You're absolutely not. These numbers show that we're behind, massively behind, by over half a billion dollars.

Beyond that – and I've mentioned this before, of course – is that the government does not have a credible plan to actually pay it back. If they were going to seriously, as the Finance minister tried to argue – if they've structured this debt similar to an interest-only mortgage, with a 100 per cent balloon payment at the end of 20 years, to be able to have that balloon payment on hand in their debt repayment account, they would need to be setting aside, on $17 billion worth of debt, $850 million year in and year out, every year, so that when the debt comes due, it can be retired. But that's not what they're doing, and this is why I asked him the question.

It seems pretty clear that the government's strategy is to do one of two things, cross their fingers and hope that the pipelines get built in time so they can have a gusher of new revenues so that they can pay off the debt when it comes due, which is the strategy that, unfortunately, the government has followed for the last 40 years: just cross your fingers and hope that oil and gas prices bail you out. This is, again, what I'm witnessing with their strategy. Or the other part of the strategy is that they don't intend to pay it back at all. They intend to lock Alberta taxpayers into paying at least $600 million a year every year, year in and year out, and when this payment comes due in 20 years, they'll just roll it over. We're already going to see evidence of this next year. Government members can look at their own budget documents because that's the plan. When the $905 million comes due next year on this debt that's already outstanding, it's going to be simply rolled over; it's not going to be paid off. They've already demonstrated early on that that is going to be the practice. So why would we believe, since they're not putting aside enough money to repay, that it's going to be any different five years, 10 years, or 20 years from now?

What does that mean? They're trying to argue that they're going to be able to build more schools and roads and hospitals by doing this. I will argue that they're going to actually be able to build fewer schools and roads and hospitals because if we have $600 million worth of interest payments that we have to pay year in, year out for 20 years, that's $17 billion worth of interest payments. If they roll it over and we have to continue paying it for another 20 years, it's $34 billion worth of interest that we'll end up paying on $17 billion worth of borrowing.

This is the debt trap. This is why governments should never go into debt because they have a very difficult time making the decisions and having the discipline to actually pay it back. Taxpayers are much better off having a pay-as-you-go approach, budgeting for infrastructure as core government spending, and making sure that they live within their means. That's the kind of thing that we're proposing in our Wildrose fiscal recovery plan.

The last area that I would like to touch on is the issue of the reporting that is in this document. The reporting used to be, in the other two acts that I mentioned, quite a bit different than what is being proposed here. In this bill we will now only see the consolidated financial statements from all three of these different budgets once, and that will be at year-end, before June 30, as essentially their fourth-quarter update. That's not the way the system was originally designed when Premier Klein changed the system to make sure that we had a single consolidated set of books. When Premier Klein brought in a different approach, to have a single consolidated set of books, he wanted to have a single number for revenue, a single number for spending, and then a single number to determine whether we were in surplus or deficit.

The other thing he had in his legislation was that every quarterly update had to give an updated representation of the status of that fiscal plan, meaning the full-year fiscal plan. What this bill does is that it actually makes legal the process that the Finance minister has been using for his last couple of updates, which was offside with the legislation. The legislation was supposed to project out for a full year and give a full-year update. This new legislation now entrenches in law the bad practice that he's had in place for his last couple of fiscal updates, where they will only give the actuals on a quarterly basis. The first quarter will only be the first three months, the second quarter will only be the six months up to that point, and the third quarter will only be nine months. We only get to see the consolidated financial statements once a year.

Once again, I don't think that that is in keeping with the commitment that the Progressive Conservatives made to the province when they changed the way they did their reporting back in the 1990s. The reason why they did that was because they had lost credibility after the Getty years, which drove up the total amount of debt to $23 billion and made it impossible to determine what the true nature of the actual deficits was. It's astonishing to me that the government would not want to hold on to that legacy, hold on to that history because I think that is what the expectations of Albertans are.

The other thing I'm still waiting to see – and I did ask for the Finance minister to provide us with this; I'm still hoping that he will – is a historical fiscal summary. Now that they have finagled with the numbers and moved things from one consolidated budget into three, you actually have to restate all of the previous years so that you can figure out what our true status is, so that you can do an apples-to-apples comparison. I still haven't seen that. We'll continue asking for it, and hopefully it will one day be delivered.

As you can see, we've got significant issues with this legislation. The whole premise of it is flawed. They're taking Alberta in a direction that I think is a betrayal of the past, a betrayal of the legacy of Premier Ralph Klein, certainly a betrayal of the campaign commitments that the Premier made when she was running for the Progressive Conservative leadership, certainly a betrayal of the campaign promises that she made when she was running in the last election, and I think that it's not in keeping with what Albertans want to see. We'll certainly have an opportunity to see that in the next election. We believe that the proposals that we are putting forward are in keeping with what Albertans want to see.

I'd said, when I started off my speech, that I don't call this the Fiscal Management Act; I call it the Fiscal Mismanagement Act. But it could have a subtitle. It could be the Buy Now, Let our Children and Grandchildren Pay Later Act, and I think that that is, unfortunately, the true lasting legacy that this Premier will be remembered for, a once-in-a-generation budget. Well, unfortunately for future generations, that's exactly what this piece of legislation delivers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

Are there other speakers? I'll recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's always an honour to stand in this Legislature and have the opportunity to speak on behalf of my constituents even though I am somewhat saddened by having to speak to such a piece of legislation as this. But on behalf of my constituents I'm going to speak on it.

You know, everyone has different reasons why they get into politics. Almost every time it's a good reason. There's a cause or a theme or something that has driven them there. For me, I'd just finished my articles, I was just coming to the end of my first year as an associate, and the opportunity to run provincially came up. I hadn't really thought about running for politics, and I decided that I would run for politics at that time because my wife, Anita, and I had just started having children. We were starting our family, and I realized that the direction our province had been heading in over the last three to four years at that point was starting to get a little bit off course from where I hoped that we would be going. I wanted to make sure that my children had the same opportunities and, in fact, more opportunities than I had.

I wanted to see our province become just an absolute beacon of financial stability, a place where my kids would always be able to not only find a job but would have opportunities long after oil and gas was not as valuable as it was then. That's why I got into politics. I wanted to keep the Alberta that I knew and loved and grew up in. I wanted to keep those principles that we had strong for my children so that they would stay. I joined what I thought was a conservative party at that time and that was kind of drifting slightly. Unfortunately, I was entirely unable to stop that drift. Essentially, somebody put an anchor through the hull, and it's sinking down, down, down into the depths. But it should be interesting, I guess. [interjection] Listing. We shall say listing. It's listing to the left and the right, back to the left.

Anyway, I'll speak to this act, the Fiscal Management Act. This bill, maybe more than any other piece of legislation put forward under this Premier, epitomizes the culmination of this government's track record of incompetence and fiscal mismanagement. Appropriately and regrettably, this bill repeals and replaces two cornerstone Alberta laws, the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act. The startling fact that the legislation we are debating today eliminates the two laws that explicitly call for government accountability and fiscal responsibility is not lost on me and shouldn't be lost on anyone else. This Premier has sure talked a lot about change. Well, vapourizing government accountability and fiscal responsibility to accompany this government's six consecutive deficits into one complicated, opaque, and evasive law is sure some kind of change.

Of course, this government has a track record of doublespeak and broken promises when it comes to the province's finances. Albertans first saw it coming in the last third-quarter update, when the Finance minister broke with tradition and, as the Premier said at the time, changed the way they present the information by producing a document many commentators called useless, deceiving, and many other terms and that only summarized spending and revenue in broad categories.

Unfortunately, it is not surprising that this government is moving to formalize its third-quarter attempt to present only a consolidated fiscal summary rather than an actual consolidated fiscal plan. The accountability act had mandated that Alberta's quarterly updates include comparisons to show the accuracy of projections, detailed borrowing requirements, the net financial position, and breakdown of liabilities in quarterly updates, all of which, we recall, were missing from the third-quarter update. But now we understand. That transparency is just too inconvenient for a government that makes promises it can't keep, says absolutely anything it can to get elected, and has created a financial mess so bad that it wants to keep it shrouded from Albertans in meaningless quarterly updates and budgets with no bottom lines.

Now here we are, debating this act. No one knew until just a few days ago that we were running an operating deficit for the last year. Did you notice they were just kind of: "Oh, we maybe had to run an operating deficit last year" and maybe this, that, and the other thing? Third quarter: still nobody knew. Just recently we came to the knowledge: oh, we ran a $1.5 billion operating deficit last year, and we're going to have a half-a-billion-dollar operating deficit this year. Wow. That wasn't in your third-quarter update. How did that get missed? Everyone is just in the dark, and that's what this government wants to do, keep Albertans in the dark as to the fiscal health of their province.

Make no mistake. This bill symbolizes a very unsettling change. It tosses out an established 20-year format for budgets and quarterly updates in this province, and it eliminates strict rules around debt in order to make this new budgeting process legal.

This government likes to talk a lot about how it is more sophisticated than all the Albertans who want to see government live within its means, just like Alberta families and businesses have to do every day. This government likes to say that those who want government to balance its budget, spend responsibly, and stay out of debt are backward and ideological and extremists. This government wants to pretend it is moving forward, but let's be honest. This government is regressive. They are moving backwards as we speak. In fact, moving backwards is exactly what this bill is all about, moving backwards to the self-perpetuating cycle of spiralling government deficits and debt, corporate welfare, and doomed economic intervention, back to shrouding the books so that Albertans can't tell what the government is doing with the hard-earned tax dollars with which they are entrusted.

Indeed, during the disastrous Getty-Johnston years convoluted and confusing budgets were deliberately designed to mislead Albertans and to cover up the scale of their government's deficits. These important financial reforms, among them the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act, had been implemented to clean up government, to force them to accurately report to Albertans the provincial government's projections, spending, revenue, and shortfalls and to regularly demonstrate how the government's fiscal situation measured up to its comprehensive and transparent fiscal plans. But this government wants to undo those reforms that pulled Alberta out of its past and ensured the government would be open and prudent. This government wants to go backwards, not forwards, and this most recent budget revealed why.

4:10

Because of their incompetence and their irresponsibility, not just of the current administration but especially over the last four years, they have squandered Alberta's wealth, vapourized our savings, created a structural deficit, and now have plunged the province back into long-term structural debt. Why would they want to be honest about that?

Now, they want to pass a law to endorse what they tried to pull off in the budget, defying logic and common sense or perhaps only those of us who believe in balanced budgets and are just too – what's the word? – parochial to get the government's budget gymnastics. This government is trying to convince Albertans that debt shouldn't be included in a deficit and that capital shouldn't be included in spending. This government wants to break up the budget documents to hide the truth from Albertans. They want to take billions of dollars in spending out of the budget and pretend that debt is revenue. Definitely not accountable, definitely not responsible.

The main shift is to move all capital spending off the books into a separate account and to present only a deficit surplus number based on operations. The proposal to take capital out of the bottom line removes accountability entirely. Under capital spending about two-thirds used to be classified as capital grants, and these grants were included in operational expenses. In Bill 12 it will be treated as an investment and largely funded through borrowing. It is clearly not a sustainable approach to encourage the provincial government to cover capital spending, which is a major portion of every budget, almost entirely out of debt.

Worst of all, Bill 12 does not require the government to report a debt repayment schedule, leaving the government forced to pay billions in debt repayment fees every year. We know this government is well on its way. A billion-dollar payment is due next year. The debt ceiling laid out in Bill 12 is sky-high, opening the door for this government to borrow up to $40 billion, mortgaging our children's future and putting the long-term sustainability of public, core social programs at risk.

Against this backdrop of compounding borrowing and debt is this bill's savings plan. After more than three decades of the heritage trust fund being allowed to lag and the sustainability fund being almost entirely obliterated within the last five years, it is about time this government realized that actual parameters need to be set to keep current and future governments from using taxpayers' dollars as politicians' vote-buying personal piggy banks. We've got to end that practice.

Although I'm happy to see the call for the interest from the heritage fund to remain in the fund, phased in over four years, mind you, and for an escalating percentage of royalty revenues to be put in the fund, even this section of the bill puts an extra nail in the coffin of accountability. The update to the heritage fund act removes the requirement that the heritage fund standing committee review and approve the annual business plan for the heritage fund. The fund doesn't even have to have an annual business plan anymore. It also removes references to ministerial titles and removes expired provisions for a transition and endowment portfolio. The last thing the heritage fund needs is less disciplined management and oversight than it has in the years since it was established by Premier Lougheed, seeing that it is now worth less than in the year he first established it.

We in the Wildrose know we must do, of course, more than just oppose. We must demonstrate how we would do things differently and make proposals for change that would actually move the provincial government forward on accountability and fiscal responsibility. We've done that in previous balanced budget alternatives, in this year's Wildrose financial recovery plan, in our 10-year debt-free capital plan, and already in our responses to the budget over the last week, and we will continue to do so. We will bring forward a number of amendments to Bill 12 to show how to balance the budget, increase savings, and to be honest with Albertans about how government is managing their money. I very much look forward to the debate.

I want to end by briefly discussing debt. This Finance minister and the Premier continue to talk about comparing the debt that we're taking on to a home mortgage. I want to help folks understand why that comparison is shockingly inadequate. The first reason is that we don't take out mortgages on our homes every year. If I was to go home to my sweet companion and say, "Darling, we're going to take a mortgage on a house every year going forward" – we, of course, would not do that – she would say, "Have you been drinking?" and I would say, "No, I haven't been drinking." Of course I would say that. Clearly, that's not a good course of action and not something normal people go on and do.

The second piece is that when you take a mortgage on a house, you are gaining, generally speaking, an appreciating asset – if it's a business loan, an appreciating asset or an income-generating asset in the case of a business – that you can sell in the future. When you build bridges, roads, schools, and so forth, these are immediately depreciating assets that cost incredible amounts of money to maintain, and you cannot sell them on the open market. Finally, unlike an individual taking out a mortgage, government is not responsible for the debt that it takes out. It's taxpayers that are responsible for it. When it's a mortgage, it's the individual that's responsible. That's why this comparison is, frankly, juvenile and completely ill considered.

The last point is the idea that government should be borrowing vast quantities of money and then reinvesting it in the stock market because the interest rate they borrow at is going to be, hopefully, lower than the interest rate that they invested at. We just learned in western Europe and in the United States about the term "too big to fail." We saw that when massive companies, and banks in particular, go out of business, they can take the economy down with them.

There's something even bigger than banks. They're called governments. They are too big to fail, and that's why we cannot risk – we cannot risk – borrowing billions of dollars in money in order to put it into a bank account so we can save it down the road or invest it down the road. That's what this plan is contemplating. We're talking about borrowing money and saving at the same time because we think we can get a higher return. I mean, it's lunacy, Mr. Speaker. All governments, certainly the provincial government, are too big to fail.

We need to stop going down this road of fiscal insanity, do the right thing and not pass this act, and get back to the principles that made this province great.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Finance and President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to both of the previous speakers, and I did just want to comment on a couple of things and ask the hon. member something at the end. The first one that I wanted to comment on was that the hon. member mentioned that businesses have assets that they borrow for that they can sell. The hon. member said that we can't sell these assets. Well, I wonder if the hon. member is aware of a number of jurisdictions that have sold infrastructure, including our federal government, because they didn't want to have it on their books anymore, because they wanted to raise some money. I mean, currently they're looking at selling their coal transfer station. They've sold a number of buildings that they owned and then leased them back because financial experts have told them that that was the way to go.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. member that when he dug the opening for the three new schools in his jurisdiction that were built under the P3 model, which is debt, he was pretty happy about that and that those schools have a great deal of value in his constituency. In fact, we've sold some properties in this province that used to be schools, and we got pretty good value out of them because the land that they sit on actually had appreciated.

I'm curious, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member is suggesting that, well, we should not do any more P3s, obviously, because that would be debt, that we shouldn't actually allow municipalities to borrow because, well, we're on the hook for that, too, that perhaps we should rein in those municipalities, that they shouldn't be borrowing money on the taxpayers' dime, would the hon. member, then, advocate that we abolish the Alberta Capital Finance Authority and get rid of the debt that all these municipalities have built and that Alberta taxpayers are one hundred per cent liable for?

Mr. Anderson: Good questions. Glad to be able to answer them. There's this funny comment that keeps coming up. The Member for Calgary-Klein tabled earlier the picture of the sod-turning for one of the three schools being built in Airdrie as if that was some kind of smoking gun. As the minister well knows, we have a $50 billion 10-year capital plan. We would build the schools that we need for this province. We would build them with money in the bank. We would build not what we need politically but what Albertans need to educate their children.

That's one big thing. Am I happy that they're building schools? Yeah. Am I happy that they're building schools using debt? No. That, I think, is an interesting argument they keep bringing up, as if it means anything. Obviously, we want to build the things that Albertans need, the infrastructure they need, but we want to do so in a sustainable way, debt free.

How much time do I have? Two minutes?

Mr. Horner: I'd like to ask another question.

Mr. Anderson: You asked a lot of questions. You know, I've got to go through them.

The second piece that you talked about was regarding selling infrastructure. Well, granted, obviously, on the books as a province we own tens of billions of dollars in provincial assets and infrastructure. Clearly, there are going to be some provincial assets that one can sell. There's no doubt about that. But as a total of the entire amount of assets, it's probably somewhere in the area of, like, 2 per cent that we will ever sell for the value that we've spent on them. Maybe. In rare circumstances. So I would like to know – and I'll return the question. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie has the floor, please.

Mr. Anderson: Correct me if I'm wrong. I would like to know: what list of schools are you planning to sell off? What list of bridges are you planning to sell off? How many roads or seniors' care centres or hospitals are you planning to sell off? Tell us that, and then at least we can know all these great assets that we're going to sell off one day.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Horner: I appreciate the opportunity to stand and talk about the fact that these are assets on our books, and because they have value and they could be sold off, that's the premise on which the hon. member was saying: we shouldn't be valuating them as an asset that we can't sell. We can sell. That was my point.

Mr. Speaker, they talk about a $50 billion capital plan that they're going to pay cash for, but they don't tell us in this document how they're going to pay cash for it because they don't tell us whether or not they're going to use it as part of their operating expense. There are no financial documents in here. With all of the speeches that they gave, which were very passionate, about us changing the way we presented, this doesn't present any financial documents.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others to speak to the bill? The hon. Associate Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand up today and speak to Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. This is something that has been a passion of mine probably since I was elected back in 2008 to represent what was then called the riding of Calgary-North Hill but now Calgary-Klein.

It's been a journey, Mr. Speaker. It's been an interesting one, one where I've learned a lot but one where I feel I've been able to contribute to the public debate and contribute to what we have before this Legislature today.

I know that the Member for Airdrie mentioned how passionate he was about these issues. In fact, I remember just a few years ago, when he and a few other members of the government caucus decided to make the long-term fiscal sustainability of this province a broader issue. I could tell you, Mr. Speaker, that what motivated me in doing so was just my concern that as a province we were moving from budget to budget without any long-term vision, any long-term plan about how we're prudently going to manage our finances not just for today but for future generations.

That's our challenge as government. What we're really talking about here is: how do we meet the needs of today's society? And there are needs; there's no doubt. Every single one of us goes out to our constituents and engages them in discussions about what would make their community better, what would make things easier for their family. There are all sorts of needs. As their elected representatives we bring those to the table, and we're asked to make some very tough decisions.

What's important, though, is that we meet those needs and that we do so in a way that doesn't put any burden onto future generations, whether that future burden means substantial cuts in public services because we just can no longer pay for them moving forward or whether it means increasing taxes.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that when I come to the Legislature every single day, it's my goal to make sure that every single advantage that Albertans enjoy today, whether it be the quality of life that they receive through the economic opportunities that they have, that rival anywhere else in this world, or whether it be the quality of life in their communities that they have through investment in public services and infrastructure or whether it be the quality of life that they have through being able to keep more of their hard-earned taxpayer dollars in their own bank accounts and in their own pockets for them to decide what to do with – that's what I come here to this Assembly every day to talk about.

I was ecstatic when the Premier asked me after the recent election to serve as Associate Minister of Finance. In her mandate letter to me she asked me to go out and talk to Albertans about the purpose and the use of and how we can build up the Alberta heritage savings trust fund as well as look at different ways to explore options to finance public infrastructure projects in this province. I and the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board developed a plan to go out and talk to Albertans, to allow Albertans to come and talk to us at public town hall meetings, to allow them to go online and fill out a survey. We went and reached out to some of the financial experts in this province – people that run businesses, multibillion-dollar corporations, academics that study public economics and other economic fields – to give us advice on what they think is the direction that we should go.

Let's be honest. As the Minister of Finance explained in his budget speech, you know, we are at a watershed moment. It seems that every 20 years we make changes to our fiscal framework, to the way that we're managing our finances to ensure that we have these principles of intergenerational equity when it comes to public services and taxes, Mr. Speaker.

We went out and did that consultation. I just wanted to talk about these two particular areas, the savings part and the capital financing part, that are part of my mandate letter, Mr. Speaker.

One of the things that struck me as we went out and talked to Albertans is that Albertans have tremendous pride about the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. There might not be the greatest understanding about what the fund is used for or what it should be used for, but I can tell you that Albertans have pride that we have it, and they want the government to continue to invest into it. That's what we're going to do with this legislation. The reason is – and this was unanimous – that they want to make sure that, again, the benefits we enjoy today as a province we can pass on to future generations. The intergenerational transfer of benefits is very, very important. Again, it has to do with the public services, the fairness around that, and how we can pass on the high-quality public services and infrastructure that we enjoy today, the tax advantage that we enjoy today, and the economic opportunities that we enjoy today.

The other thing that they talked about when we asked them about our savings is that they were very grateful about the sustainability fund. They were grateful that it was put in place. It definitely saved us from the economic downturn in 2008-09 and having to drastically cut public services as a result. What we did hear back, though, Mr. Speaker, was that there was some confusion about what exactly the purpose of the sustainability fund was. It seemed like the majority of it, to be honest, actually went into capital projects. That's not a bad thing, but they weren't sure whether it was a capital account or a fiscal stabilization account. In fact, its origins actually started off as both those separate things.

A lot of the experts that we engaged with in this process suggested it's important to have a fiscal stabilization fund to get you through some of those ups and downs of being a nonrenewable resource economy but that, you know, probably you should manage your capital in a different way. That's what we've done. What we've done is that we've repurposed the sustainability fund to be more like a contingency reserve. This was something that was championed by the Calgary Chamber of Commerce.

What we've done is that we've come up with a policy that will allow us to take right off the top of our nonrenewable resource revenue a percentage on a sliding scale. It's 5 per cent on the first $10 billion, 25 per cent on the next $5 billion, and 50 per cent on any money coming in after the $15 billion.

Mr. Speaker, this does two things. This is going to allow us to grow our Alberta heritage savings trust fund in real terms, something that hasn't happened in a while. You know, I will admit that this is something that I don't think is a proud record for the government. I think that we could have been doing a better job in this area in past years. But I can tell you that when this Premier became leader of this party, this was one of her passions, that we continue to put in place, where we establish a policy that will allow us to grow that fund in real terms, like Peter Lougheed envisioned when he brought it in originally.

The other thing that I think is very, very important is that we can talk about spending controls and legislated spending controls, but when you take money off the top of nonrenewable resource revenue, that essentially acts as a spending control. Okay? It's more flexible, yes, than legislating inflation plus population growth, but let's consider this for a second, the whole concept of inflation plus population growth and legislating that.

It's well known that that's a pretty simplistic way of determining how government or public expenditures should grow. I could tell you two examples of where it doesn't make sense. When you have an aging demographic, Mr. Speaker, that adds additional costs that are beyond the growth of inflation and the growth of your population. You just can't account for those types of things with such a simplistic formula. We do know that we do have an aging population in this province, and the pressures that are going to be on public services as a result of that need to be accommodated. The government needs to have the ability to be able to accommodate those pressures.

Again, Mr. Speaker, another example is around economic growth. Quite honestly, economic growth is not proportionately correlated to the growth of inflation plus population, yet it puts tremendous pressure on public infrastructure here in the province. So let's have some intellectual honesty and be honest with ourselves that this whole notion of inflation plus population growth is a great guideline. It is a great guideline, and if you ignore that guideline for long periods of time, you might run into a problem. But is it something that should be legislated year over year over year over year? No. That doesn't make sense. It doesn't allow the government to provide effective public services that are needed in the communities. So what we've done in bringing forward this savings policy is that we've allowed a policy that limits the government's ability to spend all of the revenue that it brings in every year and to control spending, but it allows flexibility on a year-over-year basis to meet the needs of the population.

Now, the second piece is around debt financing for capital. You know, I will admit that back seven, eight years ago, I was probably one of the ones standing up right beside Ralph Klein when he said that he put out the debt in full. I can tell you that when that happened, I had been elected to the public school board in Calgary, and one of the biggest issues that I faced on my term as a school board trustee was the fact that there were a number of communities that didn't have schools. That was a consequence of that policy decision. I could stand here today like Ralph Klein did back in 2007 when he said that that probably was a mistake.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of ways to finance capital projects, and not one of them is right, and not one of them is wrong. In fact, there are three major ways. You could do the pay-as-you-go, where you pay cash; you can do a P3 project; or you can debt finance it through some sort of public debt instrument. Okay? We should allow the government to be open to all three of those where they make financial sense. This isn't an ideological argument as to: you take a bunch of those off the table. You utilize those tools when they financially make sense based on sound financial analysis, not based on some ideology.

When we went out and talked to experts, economists, academia, it was almost unanimous that they said this, Mr. Speaker. I could go back to the conversations we had in the town hall in Medicine Hat. I know the Member for Medicine Hat is not here right now. [interjections] Oh, sorry, Mr. Speaker. He's here. He would be able to verify that when we asked the question in the town hall whether or not government should debt finance, it was unanimous. The over 25 people that decided to come out to that town hall decided to say . . . [interjections] The point is that there was no one that showed up, when the minister and I went out to ask, to tell us that we should not be doing this.

The point is that – guess what? – there might be years in the future when we decide not to debt finance capital projects because it financially does not make sense to do it. You have to do the analysis. The fact is that when you say that you're going to pay as you go on debt financing capital projects, you need to consider one of the things that we haven't done in this province in a long, long time, and that's the opportunity cost of what you could do with that cash asset that you would be paying for. We've never done that analysis on this, and any economist – and I know that the Leader of the Official Opposition has an economics background – would do that analysis before you make that decision.

Mr. Speaker, all we're doing with changing this legislation is allowing the government the flexibility to make sound financial management decisions that will allow us to manage our cash and physical assets to the best financial ability of the government.

Not only that; there are all sorts of risks associated. The traditional pay-as-you-go, where you pay cash and you go out to public tender, has risk associated with it. Typically, cost overruns are passed on to a government. This is where P3s have their advantage because the government shares those risks with the other partners in that project. This is all part and parcel of the complexity of doing this work, that cannot be fit nicely into some ideological box that government should or should not have debt. The fact is that all governments have debt. Debt is part of cash management. It's part of asset management. What's important is that the government is transparent and puts that information out there and that we do so in a way that has limitations. That's what we go to.

There are a number of lessons that I think we need to learn throughout the world, whether it's right here in our backyard or across the ocean. I think the lesson from the Klein era, in the document that I tabled earlier, that even Ralph Klein recognized himself, is that we cannot be so ideological that we would not have the government have any debt. I mean, at the time, when we were going through the boom, we didn't have any debt, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Little Bow under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your input. I don't agree with all of it, but I appreciate it. I just wanted to touch on a couple of things you said about when you get up in the morning and you come to this job and about the quality of life for Albertans and how to make sure that they're not hindered any more than they were when they got up the day before. Ironically, last week when I got up on the Wednesday, I could buy my farm fuel with a 6-cent discount. The Thursday by 3:15 that was 6 cents more. I guess I'd like to ask you: what do I tell my constituents that woke up with 6 cents more a litre, a tax, than they had the day before? I feel that's a tax.

The second part to my question. You look to be maybe a bit of a movie guy. If you want to watch Inside Job, it's a movie on economists and how the whole crisis down in the States happened in 2008. There are three parts to it: how they got there, the bubble, which ironically ties in with the bitumen bubble a little bit; the crisis, where everybody figured what they were doing was wrong; and then the accountability. This all goes back to what's going on in this government, the accountability.

I'd like to hear your input on how you stopped, or maybe even voted for, the 6 cents a litre for the farm fuel, because that's inhibited the life of a lot of farmers in Alberta. [interjection] Well, that's a 12-step recovery program for your economy. Don't worry about that one.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question. I just wanted to go back to this movie that the hon. member is talking about. You know, I have seen that movie. What's important, as I was just getting to, is that we put the proper limitations in place. This isn't a conversation on whether debt is right or wrong. It's a conversation about what the appropriate use of debt and the limitations of debt are when it comes to public spending.

It was quite clear from the financial experts that we engaged. They said it made sense. In fact, I've got a quote here from Jack Mintz, who said: "My argument is simple. Some debt for infrastructure is appropriate, since capital providing long-term benefits should not fall entirely on the existing population." With any of these financial experts that we engaged, that argument was unanimous. What they said, though, was: we want to make sure that you're putting in the proper limitations. That's what we've done with this 3 per cent rule.

Remember the goal in mind. You know, the Finance minister could talk about this. He's gone and talked to the rating agencies out in New York and Toronto. They were quite clear that even at 5 per cent we would not even come close to putting in jeopardy our triple-A credit rating. We've engaged these people in this conversation. We've moved it down to 3 per cent. Remember that most of the municipalities, particularly the two major ones, are around 10 per cent here in this province. I think what's important is that we make sure that we have those limitations in place and we engage in a conversation about those limitations.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I just want to finish off. I think what this really does is that it puts principles in place to allow us to make the decisions that the hon. member was talking about. It provides the government flexibility to make decisions of the day that, yes, sometimes are tough decisions but are appropriate decisions. It puts in place that flexibility. It allows the government to find that balance between meeting today's needs and meeting future needs. It's a pragmatic bill that is going to move Alberta forward, that finds that balance, and it delivers on the vision.

That's what budgets do. That's what financial documents do. They're a tool to deliver on the vision that the government and the Premier have for this province. That's what this does. They're not an end in itself; they're a means to an end, Mr. Speaker. That's what we've done. We've put the proper mechanisms in place through this bill to allow this government to continue to build Alberta like this Premier promised in the last election.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member wants to ask a question that has no relationship to the bill, and that's fine. The 6 cents a litre is something that we did have to cut, unfortunately.

I know that the hon. member went to a number of the round-table discussions, but he also had some individual discussions on the savings piece in terms of some small working groups. I wonder if he could let the House know the relationship of what he heard in those meetings to the bill that we have before us in this House.

The Deputy Speaker: You have eight seconds, hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think what people said was: be pragmatic. We're not going to save all of our nonrenewable resource revenue today.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government revels in telling Albertans that they can manage the budget and be open and transparent. However, we've seen time and time again that that's not the case. A good example of this is the supplementary supply bill, where the government has overspent from the budget they presented last year and is now coming to the House to ask for more money. Sadly, when you troll through that bill for specifics, there are none, only line items that ask for bulk dollars. We also see this with the appropriation interim bill, where they need to get the permission of the House to extend the spending of dollars past March 31. This is interesting because the first one could have been solved by living within their means, and the second could have been solved by actually coming to the Legislature on the scheduled date in February to start budget debate. Unfortunately, this government is not able to set the budget and stick to its commitments.

Additionally, if this government wasn't so busy revamping the legislation, creating Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, to ensure their budget was legal, then we could have been here in plenty of time and would not have required an extension past March 31. This government is failing to keep their promises to run a balanced budget and to raise the bar on transparency. Bill 12 is indicative of that. This bill tosses out an established 20-year format for budgets and quarterly updates as well as strict rules around debt in order to make the Premier's and the Finance minister's new approach to the budgeting process legal.

This is the same 20-year format that was implemented in Premier Getty's reign, when serious concerns were raised regarding the reporting of financial information by the government. Premier Klein's government created the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act to ensure that Albertans knew the truth about where the government was spending their hard-earned dollars. Yet this Premier is returning to an approach that hides information, makes the budget harder to read and understand, and separates dollars into three different deficits. This Premier is lowering the bar on transparency just so their new approach to budgeting can be legal. This is not leadership.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the Finance minister tried to change the way PC governments presented the province's fiscal situation from how they had in the past, the national director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, Scott Hennig, wrote an article. He called it Why I Think Alberta Finance Minister . . . Is Breaking the Law. After articulating how he felt the Finance minister's 2012-2013 fiscal update and economic statement was breaking the law, he concluded by saying this:

The Alberta government used to be heralded by me and others for the details, transparency and easy to understand budgets and quarterly updates. No more. When governments start to try and hide information from the public, look out.

This is the legacy the Premier has brought and the legacy that Bill 12 helps to solidify. It is a legacy of broken promises and a government that tries to hide their fiscal management from the public. This government wants to hide how big their deficits are, but Albertans will not be fooled. Albertans know that this was the sixth straight deficit budget, and Albertans know that this budget contained a $5.5 billion deficit even if the government tries to hide those facts.

The government would also have Albertans believe that they are not hiding anything, yet they now have three different deficits. They have an operating deficit at about a half a billion dollars, a capital deficit at around $5 billion, and a savings deficit. This is an interesting new way to look at accounting for this province, so interesting that they produced this budget before passing the legislation of Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. If this new reporting is so open and transparent, why not bring in the legislation in the fall session? You could have explained it to Albertans, and you didn't have to push it through for your own agenda.

This new outlook on budgets and deficits is a new look for Albertans as well: by 2016 a $17 billion debt for Alberta. We are now poised to regress backwards to a very negative time for Albertans, a time when Albertans made it clear that debt was not acceptable and they would make the sacrifices required to ensure their children and grandchildren would not have to make the same sacrifices they did. I remember those days. I remember when $8 a barrel oil was there, and I remember the sacrifices my parents made and their friends made in order to make sure we don't have those days today. They also had a Premier that campaigned on the truth. Premier Klein campaigned on paying the debt, tough times, and difficult choices, and Albertans gave Mr. Klein that mandate.

Albertans have been fooled this time. In April the economy was strong and still is. The Premier gave no indication that she would beg, borrow, and steal from future generations and still not keep her promises from that campaign. Interestingly, this debt, like household debt and business debt, requires a debt repayment plan that is robust and surgical to ensure that $17 billion is actually paid off in 20 years, as this government promises.

However, if you look at this government's repayment plan, you will see they plan to pay back $40 million in 2013, $112 million next year, and $225 million the year after that. Interesting that most will realize that to pay off $17 billion in debt, you would need much more than $377 million. In fact, you would need about $850 million per year in a debt repayment account to pay it off. It begs the question: does this government actually intend to pay this off, or does it really intend to roll the debt over in 20 years?

The Premier has called this budget a once-in-a-generation budget. Sadly, that's true. However, with this type of repayment it will be many more generations than one. This is a deficit that future generations of Albertans will have to pay, and if the government continues to pay as little towards the principal as they did this year, it could take many, many, many generations to pay it off.

This would be comical if it were not so sad that in the same budget, the same bill they talk about savings. This is the government that over the last five years, despite revenues and taxes that other provinces would beg for, has drained a $17 billion sustainability fund with billion dollar deficit after billion dollar deficit and has allowed the heritage fund to be worth less per capita today than it was under Mr. Lougheed. How this government believes they have the right to talk about savings precludes all logic.

The Leader of the Wildrose Official Opposition and Member for Highwood spoke earlier about how much better we could be doing with the heritage fund if we had made a couple of serious commitments. We would already be on the sustainable path and collecting $7 billion to $8 billion annually in interest from that fund. We have a plan to build the heritage fund, and it is a lot more realistic than the one the government has proposed. It involves, first and foremost, getting our spending back in order and getting back to surplus budgets. It involves putting 50 per cent of every surplus into the heritage fund and all accumulating interest back into the fund. This will ensure that it is affordable, and it ensures that a good proportion of boom time revenues will get put away.

Mr. Speaker, the government's savings plan only offers more borrowing and no real value to Albertans. This is the same government that has said year after year that they will balance the budget next year. Now, they continue to say that, but they also say that they will start to add to the savings next year. Why should Albertans trust this? This Premier misled Albertans in the campaign and is clearly showing that she's not able to keep her promises.

While Bill 12 may change the law to make the Premier's and Finance minister's approach to budgeting legal, it certainly doesn't make it ethical. We all know the story of Enron. At the end of 2001 it was revealed that its reported financial condition was sustained substantially by an institutionalized, systemic, and creatively planned accounting fraud, known since as the Enron scandal. Enron has since become a well-known example of wilful corporate fraud and corruption. The scandal also brought into question the accounting practices and activities of many corporations in the United States. Surely, we would not want the province of Alberta to suffer any such fate.

Fiscal responsibility is the cornerstone to good governance and is achievable. Most Albertans regularly practice fiscal responsibility. There's nothing new to hard-working Albertans who use sound economic practices each and every day. Albertans know that you don't spend more than you make, you don't get a mortgage every year, and that borrowing from an RRSP to pay the credit card is not good judgment.

More importantly, Albertans expect legislators to achieve a higher standard. They expect us to be stewards of their dollars on loan to us. No one enjoys paying years of interest on depreciating assets, yet this is what this government is proposing. They will tell you that they're investing in Alberta's future. They will also tell you that these assets appreciate, which is simply not true. It is important to invest in infrastructure, and this absolutely should be at the top of the list. However, you don't have to do it all in one shot, and you don't have to borrow to ensure Albertans have what they need.

That is why the Wildrose Official Opposition put forward the 10-year capital debt plan. This allows for over $48 billion in spending on infrastructure in 10 years. This will also provide Albertans with a prioritized list of what projects are being built and their priority and make it public. Most Albertans understand you can't have everything at once, but they would like to know where they are in the plan, and a Wildrose government would give them that. We would cut spending by ending corporate handouts and shrinking the public bureaucracy, and we should do that now. While doing that, we would not hide facts from Albertans. We would be open and transparent and not pass bills such as the Fiscal Management Act, that hide these facts from Albertans.

The Premier promised to govern differently. We're certainly seeing that. She does govern differently. This is a government that spends at an alarming rate, offers no real plan for savings, and continues to make promises that they cannot keep. The Premier promised to raise the bar on accountability and transparency. Clearly, Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, shows that this government is more concerned with hiding the facts than being open. This bill cannot be supported as presented. Legislation that hides information from the public is never good. That being said, I'm looking forward to the opportunity to work with the government and bring forward amendments that could benefit all Albertans and that will allow for all Albertans to benefit from a more open and transparent financial outlook.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very interesting to listen to the comments from the hon. member. I have just two or three questions. They're not really difficult or anything. I find her comments around supplementary supply interesting because that's how we were able to pay for the disasters that actually occurred during the period of 2012-13. I'm sure she's not advocating that we wouldn't have paid for those disasters, so I'll leave that one alone.

I did want to ask the hon. member: given that she believes that this new format hides information, is harder to read, and is illegal, does she believe that municipalities' presentation of their financial documents and budgets are hiding information, illegal, hard to read, and crossing the boundaries of accountability? That's the first question.

The second question I have, Mr. Speaker, is that she mentioned the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, which, you know, obviously agrees with the Wildrose Alliance in their assessment that our assets have no value. That's the only way that they can come up with a $5.2 billion number. They've come up with different numbers, Mr. Speaker, but they actually came up with this number based on what Mr. Fildebrandt – I mean, they agree with them on a lot of issues. The CTF wants to get rid of the Human Rights Commission. The CTF wants to get rid of the Francophone Secretariat. I'm assuming they agree with that, too.

But, Mr. Speaker, if she believes that the assets that we hold have no value, would she suggest, then, since they have no value, that we shouldn't be expensing a billion dollars of depreciation of these valueless assets every year in our operating expense and where we go with that? Perhaps that's how they intend to pay for the stuff that they have on their list, which has no financial statements in it.

Mr. Saskiw: It's not called the budget.

Mr. Horner: Well, no. It's been called a budget several times by your leader, actually.

Mr. Saskiw: It's a recovery plan.

Mr. Horner: I would ask, then, if she believes that the municipalities are breaking the law, hiding information, and are presenting confusing statements.

I'd also just bring one other thing, whether she believes that the chair of Suncor actually understands accounting and how we do business, you know, in terms of being able to operate. I'm curious whether she would believe the chairman of Suncor's comment that said, and I quote: I think it's very positive that they're separating the operating and the capital budgets. They're two different things. I think it creates more accountability, and I think overall it will be the right thing to do.

So those things, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you like to respond?

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments from the hon. member. I absolutely agree that we should fund disaster relief. I just guess I have to wonder why this government continues to fund disaster relief in supplementary supply bills. It seems that we should have an emergency relief fund that is budgeted for regularly every single year. Emergencies: we know they happen. Slave Lake fire, absolutely. Now, we may not be able to cover all of the costs in the fund, but we should be building that fund to absolutely do that. Actually, if you started building up the heritage trust fund, just like you promised to do and like the Wildrose would do, you may be able to actually establish a fund that is dedicated to emergency relief coming straight off the interest.

So, yes, I agree we should fund disaster relief, but it should be a regular occurrence in the regular budget that is proposed every year rather than coming here for supplementary funding for the whole amount. Right now it's not built into the budget at all until we come to supplementary.

Secondly, as for the municipalities, the municipalities are not proposing an act before this House to change the way we provincially administer our budget and report our budget. The province is doing that. The government of the province of Alberta is doing that, and the province is the one who is changing the format that's been in place for 20 years, the same format that actually eliminated what we saw with Premier Getty's reign, where financial reporting was questionable and it was able to hide parts of the government spending habits from Albertans. This was an acceptable practice for 20 years.

Like I said, if you want to bring forward the Fiscal Management Act and if it is so good for this province, all the more power to you. You could have done this in the fall legislation. You could have brought it forward as a government bill in the fall. You could have taken it to Albertans, and you could have explained to Albertans what the next budget was going to look like rather than presenting a budget to Albertans that, right now, does not fall within legislation and actually having to push through the legislation before the budget is passed so that it's actually legal. That's the reality that we're facing.

So it's not about what municipalities are doing; it's about what the government does.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People often ask me why I went into politics after 28 years in the private sector. [interjections] It's exactly for this reason that I did that, and this is a very serious comment. I was delighted that the Premier asked me to sit on Treasury Board, and I am delighted to be able to participate in putting together legislation that commits our government and all Albertans to fiscal discipline.

I grew up in a family where my parents were both born during the depression, were a farm family, and fiscal discipline meant everything. They were very compassionate people, but no matter how much money we had or didn't have, fiscal discipline was everything. A lot of the constituents in my area grew up in the same time. I have a lot of seniors, and when they come to my office, they say exactly the same thing. No matter how much money we have as Albertans or we have in our home, fiscal discipline is a responsibility. I see the same from businesspeople, and that's where I grew up. That's where I've worked. I see the same at my dinner table every night. My husband is a CA, a CFA. Our oldest son is a CA. Our middle son is a finance grad.

This is a conversation that I care deeply about. This is exactly why I went into politics. These are real commitments. They're commitments to savings. Right off the top we have to save a defined portion of nonrenewable resource revenues. I've worked in 35 countries in the world where nonrenewable resource income is their primary source of income. This is amazing. What we're doing here in Alberta is remarkable. We can listen to the banter around this Legislature, but the truth is that this is exceptional. To put it into law is unbelievable: 5 per cent of the first $10 billion must be saved, 25 per cent of the next $5 billion must be saved, and 50 per cent of all nonrenewable resource revenues in excess of $15 billion must be saved. That is fiscal discipline.

We've also committed to building a contingency fund, up to $5 billion, to act as a fiscal shock absorber on the operational side and, clearly, to deal with operational deficits. That is fiscal discipline. We're committed to growing our endowments once our contingency account reads $5 billion. Additional nonrenewable resource revenue is contributed to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and other provincial endowments, which we are very clear about. In 2015-16 we're committed to retaining 30 per cent of the heritage trust fund's net income, and by '17-18 we've legislated – we've not just said it; we've legislated it – to retain a hundred per cent of that fund's net income. That's fiscal discipline.

The act requires that the operating budget be balanced and retain a 1 per cent limit on in-year operating expense increases. That's fiscal discipline. This act prescribes how we will service our debt. Notwithstanding what we're hearing in this House, annual debt-servicing costs are limited, and we're absolutely, expressly saying how we're committed to set aside and repay capital and interest. That's what we talked about in Treasury Board. We're making that commitment into a law, Mr. Speaker. That's fiscal discipline.

If that's not enough, alongside these commitments we also have a results-based budgeting plan. I'm chairing one of the committees. I know what we're doing. We're looking at how every dollar is spent in economic development right now, and I have colleagues doing the same. That is fiscal discipline.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to support this act. It honours and respects exactly the kind of fiscal discipline that I grew up with, that my constituents talk to me about, and that all Albertans care about. I'm very proud of this act.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that the hon. member was talking about the experience that she's had in the commercial sectors in various other countries and, obviously, has a very strong financial background and a business background. I would ask the hon. member to comment just a little bit about the framework of how we're presenting these financial statements and these projections as it relates to what she saw in industry previously and whether or not there's any correlation.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be delighted to. When I was evaluating projects on behalf of energy companies, companies who were British, American, Canadian, we would often look at how host governments were managing their nonrenewable resource income. It was very, very, very rare – it was an exception to the norm – to see this kind of transparency and this kind of clarity between operating and capital costs.

This fall I had the good fortune to participate in conversations hosted by the Commonwealth for jurisdictions like ours, where we are dependent on nonrenewable resource income. Canada and Alberta in particular are miles ahead in terms of clarity and commitment. To commit to this in legislation is something that is very, very, very rare.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member was commenting on how debt servicing was going to be in this act and that it is in the act, and we're adding a rhetorical argument that isn't factual. I'm wondering if you could add some facts as to how you plan to repay the debt that you are now so proudly advocating for.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we were talking in Treasury Board about capital programs and limits on how much we borrow and how we pay that money back, the conversation was very clear that we wanted to make sure that Albertans knew how we were going to pay back the interest and how we were going to pay back the loans. That's something we're committed to doing and we will be doing.

Mr. Wilson: To follow up, I'm wondering if you have any specifics that you could add.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Until we have the loans in place, I don't think I can share specifics with this particular member, but clearly the conversation is one that intends to expressly state the capital repayments and the debt repayments. I can't be much more explicit than that.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess, you know, when one takes out a significant amount of debt – and the government likes to compare this to a mortgage. Generally there's a plan for how to repay that mortgage over time. One would assume that you can create a particular interest rate, and then you would create the amortization period there. I find it really odd that the government right now is admitting that they have no plan to repay this debt.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: I find the statement by this member quite astounding. I don't think there's anyone in this House who has said this, and it's certainly not what's represented by this legislation or by the statements by members in this House. It's a very clear commitment that if we're going to borrow capital, we're going to have a plan for how we repay the capital and the interest. We're responsible about that.

The Deputy Speaker: I probably should recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following that answer – and thank you for the answer – I see in the bill:

- 9 A fiscal plan must include, in respect of the revenue and expense of the Government and prescribed Provincial agencies,
  - (a) an operational plan,
  - (b) a savings plan,
  - (c) a capital plan . . .

And (d). But my focus is on the operational plan, savings plan, and capital plan. Now, as I've gone through the bill, I don't see anywhere on here whether we pay our operational bills within six days, nine days, 14 days, 26 days, or any other number of days or indeed months. Would you comment on the fact that this bill, as you've reviewed it, seems to be laying out the groundwork for the work that's done thereafter and that the very wording of a plan – the party opposite doesn't seem to understand exactly what a plan is – is that the plan will contain the wording that says when these kinds of things will be able to be paid. Is that your take on the bill?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, briefly.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I've talked about this bill with my children. My middle son is 23, so he's a very new finance grad and just cutting his teeth in industry. I've talked about this bill with students who are at the university, and I asked them if they understand it based on their reading of this bill exactly as the member across the aisle has described. Can they see, can they envision what we're talking about? Without exception they understand what's envisioned here.

5:10

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to speak against Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act, which forces government into debt to save money. This act serves one political purpose, to obscure the true state of Alberta's finances. But what's worse: it opens the door to running deficit levels that will last generations and generations. The Fiscal Management Act is a smokescreen. It forces into law the kind of drastic fiscal management that has tragically plummeted this province back into debt. I hope this government realizes that touting a savings account built on borrowing dollars is wrong and that it's a crime against future generations. This isn't a plan. This is Getty era finance at its best.

Bill 12 takes capital spending out of the bottom-line finances entirely. Bill 12 allows government to use debt to cover its capital costs now and into the future. Bill 12 lets the government take capital spending off the books entirely. This is not good governance. This is the kind of short-sighted budgeting that has no place in Alberta.

The Alberta debt is projected to grow by about $4 billion per year. By 2016 we're looking at a deficit of about $17 billion. Still, they would have us believe they're doing Albertans a service now and into the future. Seventeen billion dollars of debt by 2016. Something tells me that our kids won't be happy with the gift we're leaving them.

Bill 12 tosses out an established 20-year format for budgets and quarterly updates in order to make the new budgeting process legal. This new, convoluted system serves only one purpose, to sweep the fiscal mess we're in under the rug. Using debt to save money is wrong. Using legislation to hide the real deficit numbers is even worse.

There is a kind of silver lining here, though. Bill 12 forces the government to do something it seemed incapable of doing before, saving. The government will finally come to its senses and keep interest in the heritage fund and allow it to grow and compound. Sadly, however, this realization has come too late. If this government had always done that, the heritage fund would be over $130 billion today, nearly 10 times what the fund is worth.

The Premier promised during her leadership campaign to allocate every dollar between $6 billion and $9 billion of resource revenue to the heritage fund. Consider that another broken promise. Bill 12 takes only 5 per cent of the first $10 billion. This is insufficient.

The problem is that government doesn't know how to govern anymore. They sit back and plan for windfall resource revenues each and every year. It's boom or bust each and every year. Bill 12 will toss out the kind of debt rules that would stifle a spend-happy government. It reminds me of the kind of budget documents Finance Minister Dick Johnston put forward under Premier Getty, which hid the fiscal mess the province was in at the time. Bill 12 hearkens back to darker times in Alberta.

The debt limit of 3 per cent of revenues means that this government can borrow almost $40 billion before having to amend the law and raise the debt ceiling. It drops the reporting requirement for nonoperational numbers. The worst part, however, of Bill 12 is that there's absolutely no plan in place to pay back this debt that they're taking out. There's debt, there's savings, but there's no payback plan. Individuals and businesses don't take debt without a plan to pay it back, so why does this government? Individuals and businesses certainly don't think of a way to misrepresent debt to themselves, so why does the government?

This government would do well to look at the Wildrose capital plan. The Wildrose capital plan has been dismantled by the government as extreme. There's no doubt in my mind that a pay-as-you-go attitude is a foreign concept to this government, so let me enlighten them. Spending prudently in line with revenues is not extreme; it's sound fiscal management.

There's also no shared understanding between government, economists, and policy-makers on what Bill 12 means in terms of how the numbers will be reported. It's been dismissed as nothing but cheap strategy.

What we're seeing now is a trend. The government has trended far away from its fiscal conservative roots, six deficit budgets in a row and counting. I'm wondering what my friends across the aisle stand for. Bill 12 isn't about building for the future; it's about protecting the government through a smokescreen. Let's be honest about where we stand, and let's practise the same kinds of lessons we teach our children: when you borrow something, give it back.

I'd like to finish with a couple of quotes from friends of mine that are quite a bit older than I am and have seen different times come and go and booms and busts. One of the gentlemen said: using tax increases to get the government out of debt is like standing in a bucket and trying to lift the bucket up by its handles; it just doesn't work. Another friend of mine suggested: we are tired of supporting this government on the inheritance from our grandfathers and the wages of our wives.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are deficits around here, but they're knowledge deficits. I'm still reeling from the comparison between Enron and the government of Alberta, which I think I heard although I wasn't able to get up and give a direct reaction. That boggles my mind. I also heard comments such as three different deficits because of three different plans. I don't know how you have a deficit in a savings plan. I just can't get that concept. Quite frankly, you can't really have a deficit in a capital plan, but I'll speak about that later.

I do have a couple of comments with respect to this good member. I heard that it is a crime to save money, and I dare say that the government coming up with a savings plan is a brilliant, wonderful thing. In fact, a simple question for the member is this. Does he know anybody that saves any money when they have a mortgage? Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what's happening here, and this is the example that the government of Alberta is going to lead the nation in, in putting away firstly, before they can spend money on anything, some money, like a person would do, to save for a rainy day. It's a smart thing to do, and I don't understand why the people on the opposite end of the spectrum here, that spectrum that they get mad if we mention, can't understand that or support that concept. That's the first question. Is it really a crime to save money, and does he know anybody who saves money when they have a mortgage?

The second question is this. I do want to allow him some time to answer these questions. The bill allows us, the government, I guess, to take the debt off our books. I would just like to know the section reference for that in the act, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks to respond.

Mr. Hale: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll tell you something my grandfather told me many, many years ago. It was a long time ago, and times do change. When I was growing up and spending a lot of time with him, he told me: "You know what? If you don't have the money, you don't spend it."

Mr. Horner: He never borrowed any money?

Mr. Hale: He never borrowed a dime. He said: I never bought a single car that I couldn't pay cash for. He bought his land with cash. He bought everything with cash. The bank came to his neighbours because they financed and financed and kept rolling over and rolling over, and they couldn't pay for it. Interest rates went up. Taxes went up. They couldn't pay for it. His land and his stuff were all paid off. They couldn't pay for it.

An Hon. Member: What if interest rates go up?

Mr. Hale: Interest rates went up. They got tough times, more debt, more debt, couldn't pay it off. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please, through the chair.

Mr. Hale: You know, back in the '80s, when the interest rates were 17 per cent, there were many landowners that had to sell their land. The banks came and took their land because they mortgaged and financed and didn't have anything saved up, spent all their money. The interest rates were too high. They couldn't make it. The bank came and took it away.

Our Wildrose financial recovery plan has been referenced many times. I'll just give you a few examples of where we would make some savings so that we wouldn't have to take out all the debt and try to come up with ways to hide it in here so we can justify it. The first one would be – and I'm not sure if many of the members have read this or not. They pack it around.

Mr. Saskiw: They looked at the pictures.

Mr. Hale: The pictures? There are some very nice pictures in here, I will say.

Revoke the 8 per cent MLA pay raise, return to the MLA salary that was in place after the 2012 election, and reduce cabinet salary by 30 per cent: $1.5 million. Eliminate ministers without portfolio, and cut ministries to 16: $5 million. Let's reduce the Public Affairs Bureau: $10 million. Eliminate political patronage posts: at least $2 million. Postpone federal building add-ons: $4 million. End grants to for-profit companies: $230 million. Reduce salaries, benefits, bonuses, severances for non front-line workers and government bureaucracy by 20 per cent over four years: savings of $428 million in 2013, $343 million in . . .

5:20

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and speak to what appears to be the government's flagship bill this session, one that provides not a small amount of amusement and indeed provided not a small amount of amusement when I first heard that this was what the government was going to hang its hat on. I thought: "Wow. That's really leading with your chin. But all right. If that's what you want to do."

Yes, this is the bill. The debate up to now has been a lot of sort of back and forth on appropriate accounting practices, all of which, of course, is certainly relevant to ensuring that Albertans get a good sense of what it is that's being passed in this House.

I want to take a step back to sort of give maybe a little bit more context, at least from my perspective, around what this bill represents. I have to say, ironically, that even though the political drivers which are at the foundation of this bill being introduced are very different than those which drove the government initiative about which I'm about to speak, nonetheless this government is responding in exactly the same way.

Let me explain that. Back in 2006, 2007 – I don't know when it was – before the world-wide recession, when the economy was percolating along, there really was, and for good reason, a great deal of concern in the public consciousness about the issue of climate change. It was a huge issue, and it was in fact becoming a bit of a vote-getter. There was a lot of discussion. That, of course, changed pretty significantly after the recession. Nonetheless, that certainly was a huge topic of conversation.

This government, being the sort of politically skilled folks that they are, decided to hitch their wagon to that particular star, and they came up with a grand declaration and a grand plan about how they were going to sell the credibility of the oil and gas industry in Alberta and do so by coming up with a grand plan for being the leaders in climate change initiatives in the country.

They came up with a plan that, interestingly, didn't actually ask for any kind of results for two or three years. The hope was, of course, that by the time anyone started checking on those results, people would have long since moved on, and this issue would have lost their attention. No one would notice that, in fact, their grand plan really wasn't worth the paper it was written on and, frankly, never really was intended to be. Indeed, that is in large part what happened. In particular, unfortunately, with the recession people really lost attention, more than I wish would have been the case, on this extremely important issue. Just in the last few weeks and months we've had repeated acknowledgements by independent observers that this government is on track to absolutely fail miserably with respect to every target it ever identified for itself on climate change.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill is kind of a replication of that same model all over again. It's a different topic, it's a different issue of the day, but it's still the same kind of dynamic. It's mapping out this great fiscal plan, this great savings plan. "We're going to wean ourselves off reliance on nonrenewable resource revenue. We're going to start saving," yada, yada, yada, and that all starts three years from now.

You know, I've seen this movie before, Mr. Speaker. These guys are really good at mapping out plans, and they've become extremely cynical in the way they use this Legislature to give substance to the plans that really are born in some office where a bunch of communications folks are sitting around the table desperately trying to figure out how to come up with the most recent answer to the current credibility gap.

They come up with grand stuff, and they decide: "You know what? Let's try and make this real. Let's run this baby up the flagpole in the Legislature and see if we can get people to spend a lot of time talking about it and getting lost in the details, and maybe they'll think we're serious about it." The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that there are so many examples of where this government articulates these grand plans and it all goes by the wayside. Quite frankly, getting really enmeshed in the details of this one makes me think that we would become a little bit the victims of a bait-and-switch tactic here because, really, it's not about their theoretical plan to start saving money four years down the road or three years down the road.

What is really going on here, Mr. Speaker, is that 11 months ago this Premier ran an election campaign to Albertans, and in that election campaign she made a unicorn's basket full of promises. You know, Disney could not have written a platform as full of sparkly twitters and singing birds as the platform that this government introduced to the people of Alberta last spring. They promised full-day kindergarten. They promised stable and predictable funding from K to 12. They promised stable and predictable funding for our advanced education system. They promised 140 family community care centres although the rumour out there is that somebody misplaced the decimal point. They promised they would end child poverty. They promised they would end all poverty. I mean, I don't even know that Gandhi tried to promise that, but the Premier certainly did. You know, there was just no end to the joy she was going to bring to this province.

Of course, once they managed to inch their way through the election through a number of interesting strategies, including those which I just outlined, they were then in a position where they could make one of two choices. The first choice was to fix the chronic revenue problem that exists in this province and which is as predictable as the sun rising in the east notwithstanding the Premier's regular attempts to convince people that it does in fact rise in the west. It is highly predictable with Conservative governments that they get themselves locked into this decision to capitulate to their friends and insiders and to cut taxes to their wealthy friends and to corporations to a point where we end up in a position of tremendous financial uncertainty and insecurity.

You see that this is exactly what happened in the U.S. This is what is happening federally. The deficit numbers are growing federally because this is what Conservatives do. They cut and cut and cut taxes, and then suddenly they find themselves being held politically accountable for the suffering and the problems that that kind of cutting creates. Then they create a fiscal imbalance or a fiscal problem.

Here in Alberta that particular trend has been ameliorated or masked somewhat by the fact that we've been able to rely on these, you know, repeated windfalls of nonrenewable resource revenue. Now that's starting to have to be addressed. Quite frankly, they knew it was going to have to be addressed long before the election. You know, the whole bitumen balloon thing is, again, another creation at the same table, probably, that generated this bill. Nonetheless, it doesn't deny the fact that we have a fiscal problem in this province. You can either choose to fix the revenue problem, or you can choose to make a lot of cuts to the most vulnerable Albertans. There's no question that this government made the latter choice in direct contradiction to the promises they made in the election and certainly in direct contradiction to the narrative and the image that they put a lot of money into projecting for their leader.

That being said, the ironic thing about all of this is that even though they've chosen to go the cuts route, Mr. Speaker, they still have a problem. They still can't wean us off relying on nonrenewable resources. They still can't start saving. They still can't even do that. You know what? They are so far down the hole in terms of their tax cuts and their corporate tax cuts and the flat tax and the fact that we've got the lowest royalty regime for the oil and gas sector in the world except, apparently, Angola, which somebody proudly pointed out at the Calgary fiscal conference that occurred about a month ago. Someone very defensively said: no, no; Angola charges less than we do. Well, yeah, that's true, but you have to take an army into Angola to extract resources, so I don't know that that's really where we should be setting the bar.

Nonetheless, we've done that, so now we have a problem. Now we have a bill that's designed to make us look like we are managing and planning, and indeed it does look like we're managing and planning, but again it all starts a long time down the road. One of the previous speakers was very proudly saying: when we get more than $15 billion or $20 billion of nonrenewable resource revenue, we're going to put 50 per cent of that into savings. Well, Mr. Speaker, this government's own projections are that we're not going to get past that 5 per cent stage for the foreseeable future. In the next four years, until the next election, we're never going to get past the point where we're putting anything more than 5 per cent of our nonrenewable resource revenue into savings. I'm sorry. That's not saving. That's not shifting away from being reliant on nonrenewable resources. That's being very reliant on nonrenewable resources.

On top of that, it's refusing to actually change the rate at which we collect those nonrenewable resource revenues. There's nothing in the budget in terms of collecting all that uncollected nonrenewable resource revenue that we're currently entitled to, which could actually help our situation quite a bit. Nonetheless, we've got this situation where we've got this bill that maps out grand plans that the government's own projections don't really see coming to fruition before the next election. Really, that's clear because this government is as arrogant as a group that's been in power for 41 years can be, and certainly, you know, you've got to give them some credit. If I'd been in power for 41 years, I too would think that that was the way of the world, and it would never change.

Nonetheless, we cannot look at any piece of legislation for longer than the term of the government, so when you look at this piece of legislation, it is good until 2016 unless, of course, another shiny object comes along and these folks have to change gears. But we can assume it's good till at least 2016. Well, their own projections do not see these grand 50 per cent diversions of money into savings occurring until well after the next election. I mean, really, I just don't know how real any of it is.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, what's not happening is that we are not looking at dealing with the fact that while wealthy Albertans pay the lowest taxes in the country, the rest of us pay more than at least two or three other provinces. So it's not fair. It's the rest of us, the middle- and low-income Albertans, who are feeling the effects of not having full-day kindergarten, who are feeling the effects of – and, of course, I have to go back to my office and do a little bit of research every day after I finish here, but by my count thus far I've found about $260 million that's been taken away from seniors in this budget. So those people certainly don't get the benefit of the lowest tax rate in the country for wealthy Albertans. As I say, neither, of course, do the low-income Albertans, who've had their income clawed back to the tune of about $120 million. Neither do the people that rely on affordable housing and the rental supplements. They don't get the benefit of the lowest tax rate in the country for wealthy Albertans. They don't get that benefit at all.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, they do. They don't pay any sales taxes.

Ms Notley: It has nothing to do with sales tax. It has to do with income tax. Wealthy Albertans pay the lowest taxes in the country, and low-income and middle-income Albertans pay more than many in the country, not the most but more than many. There's a choice that's been made, and that choice is to stand up for the wealthy and to stand up for certain corporations and, in particular, the oil and gas industry.

This bill doesn't change that. This bill is not fixing the fiscal problem that we have in this province. If the projections that the government has put forward, which I've already heard are, once again, somewhat optimistic in terms of economic growth, in terms of employment growth, do not come to fruition, then we're going to be continuing a debt situation.

Of course, you know, I'm sure people in this House are tired of me reminding them of the report of the federal Parliamentary Budget Officer, who identified that, in fact, over the last 25 years the governments that have been the most successful at balancing budgets in the country are not Liberals, not Conservatives, but New Democrats. One of the ways you do that is you sit down and you look at whether you've got enough revenue that you can count on and can predict.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to give the member an opportunity to talk about which aspects of the bill – are there any aspects of it that you like?

Ms Notley: Well, I'm looking forward to the opportunity to go through the bill in more detail in committee and third reading. In terms of things that I like in the bill, I will say that one thing that did jump out at me that I was a bit disappointed – I believe it was members from both the Official Opposition as well as the Liberal caucus who raised the issue of requiring reporting that goes back a couple of years in order to maintain an enhanced accountability for Albertans who were looking at the budgeting activities of the government.

I believe it's section 8 that talks about creating fiscal plans that look two years ahead and all that kind of stuff, but it would have been very nice to have seen them say that where there are changes to the reporting mechanisms, they must also go back at least two or three years in order to ensure consistency and an ease of oversight, my understanding being that that's a point that's been made by both other opposition parties, and they've characterized that as being good accounting practice. It's unfortunate that while we have what is effectively here an accounting bill geared to distract attention from all the things that this government is not doing in this session, they didn't even introduce what I'm told is a best-practices accounting measure.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the member, too, regarding section 6. It talks about that the debt servicing costs "must not exceed 3%." I was wondering if she's looked into that and what her opinion is on that section.

Ms Notley: Well, it's a very good question. In fact, just today I sent a note to our researcher saying: "How does this relate to what happens in other provinces? Is this average? Is this high? Is this low? Should we be worried about it?" My answer is that I don't have an answer yet, but it's a very good question because it's one that I just asked. I still don't have an answer, so I'm not giving comment on it quite yet.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others under 29(2)(a)?

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Dorward: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I have 10 minutes, is it?

The Deputy Speaker: That's correct, hon. member.

Mr. Dorward: Let me start my timer.

The Deputy Speaker: Oh. Fifteen, rather, hon. member.

Mr. Dorward: That's great. I don't know where to begin. I seriously don't. Maybe I do. Maybe I'd like to start talking about the growth in population plus inflation as being a measure of the expenditures of government. In managerial accounting you always want to make sure that the measurement tool actually reflects reality. It's a very important concept. There is no reality, in my opinion, between the growth in population and the inflation. The reason for that is simple. That would stick you in something in the past. Now, there are people opposite who seem stuck in the past, so this is a concept that they want and they absorb into their policies, but it isn't real.

For example, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the social responsibility that we have in the province of Alberta has changed tremendously in the past while. Some of this is economies of scale or negative economies of scale, perhaps. As you have a bigger population, approaching 4 million people and upwards from that, the number of people that are on the social rolls increases exponentially. It doesn't just increase a small amount. As well, when you talk about the environment, our environmental stewardship and the need to look after environmental issues have a reflection on budget costs. Those environmental costs are increasing exponentially. They're not just increasing by the amount of inflation and the number of people that move into the province.

Those are just two quick examples of reasons why that doesn't make any sense. It keeps getting brought up. Over time people's needs in the arts and leisure world and our stressful world change. To be able to run things on a computer versus the way they used to be, on paper, is an increase in cost. It just doesn't make any sense. There's no correlation.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk a little bit about this concept of what a deficit is. An actual deficit is an excess of expenditure or liability over income or asset. I'm going to slow down because, clearly, people do not understand this. It's an excess of expenditure or liability over income or asset. Now, I've not heard a lot of discussion in this Assembly regarding the income side, so I assume people think that there's an expenditure issue relative to putting us into a deficit, if you will.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill, as I read it, helps people to understand this. The party opposite is saying that this confuses and hides things. This is actually not the case. It's quite the opposite. It pulls out three very distinct pieces of any person's, any business's, or any government's actual interaction with financial numbers. That is, it pulls capital away from operational expenditure, which means that you can clearly see whether there's more money being spent on operations than is being brought in from the income of a province; operations, you could say. Therefore, if there is a deficit there in that area, it will be clearly shown.

I dare say that if I walked down the streets of Gold Bar and asked people, when capital is a part of the expenditures of the province, if people understood exactly what the deficit was, they'd probably say, "No, I don't really understand," because capital is included in that and mixed up in that. [interjections] This is proof when the other side doesn't exactly understand what the deficit is and didn't understand, for example, that P3s are debt and P3 debt is on the financial statements of the government of Alberta. It has been for eight years. They don't understand that. They didn't understand that. They have to be taught that. This bill will actually extract that out of the operational numbers and clearly show people how much money is being paid on P3s, for example.

Ms L. Johnson: I have a timer going for you.

Mr. Dorward: That's fantastic. I've got eight minutes and 33 seconds left. I'm going to keep on going here. I know I won't finish, but I hope I get a question because that will give me five minutes. Heck, in that five minutes, quite frankly, I don't even need to answer the question because I've had so many pure examples of not answering questions that get asked.

Let's move on to the deficit that might be possible in a savings area. You know, when you have a savings plan – I'm just going to stop and contemplate here for a second; please don't shut off the microphone because I'm going to pause – how on earth could you have a deficit? I mean, when you save money, Mr. Speaker, you take some of your revenue, and you tuck it away for the future. That's a simple concept. There can be no deficit.

In fact, I would say that a capital plan cannot have a deficit. It can be fully funded, but if you don't have any money to pay for the capital, Mr. Speaker, well, then you don't have any capital. So by definition it has to be funded somehow. This bill makes it so that the government has to come forward with an operational plan, a savings plan, and that capital plan, which will clearly show in future years, as it's brought before this Assembly here, exactly what's going to happen with the capital. I don't think the details of this need to be in the bill right now. I mean, we're setting the framework. That's why we clearly called it a plan.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've got to tell you that when I decided to run as an MLA and get out of the business world and devote a hundred per cent of my attention to being an MLA and to serving the 42,000 people in Edmonton-Gold Bar, on the legislative side of things I had some ideas of what would be great about myself as a professional accountant serving the Legislative Assembly. I've got to tell you that this bill is probably three or four years of what I hoped would be accomplished in this Assembly by myself reviewing legislation. This is something that's outstanding.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that – I'm going to section 4(4) of this bill – when it says, "For the 2017-18 fiscal year and subsequent fiscal years, 100% of the net income of the Heritage Fund must be retained in the Heritage Fund," I'm proud of the government and the Finance minister for bringing forward this kind of proactive legislation. In fact, I've heard from the other side in committee and in other places that this is something that should be done. Now I hear catcalls. Why do I hear catcalls? I think that the people on the other side want to talk more about politics and power than they do about good legislation.

I'm happy as well that in this bill, section 5, the contingency account is still there. Although there are caps on the contingency account, there are rules regarding the periods of time when money needs to go into the contingency account or can come out. It was formerly the sustainability account, for those who haven't had a chance to read the bill, which I know there are some. There's a debt-servicing limit on here of 3 per cent of the average of actual operational revenue. This is laid out for us in this act.

Mr. Speaker, when you go to the nonrenewable resource revenue section of the act, section 3, I'm very proud of the fact that now Albertans can understand that the government must take a portion of the nonrenewable resource revenue in a fiscal year and put it directly into the future of our province. That's a wonderful thing. It's in this bill here. I look for full acceptance of that. [interjections] Thank you. I trust there are no amendments in that area.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the disclosure – you know, I've created annual reports. I've looked at annual reports. I've looked at annual and quarterly reports for listed companies. I don't know what the concern is over the numbers. I just think it's that situation where people aren't used to them or haven't read enough of them to be able to digest the information that is there. This strengthens the ability for the government – it clarifies the things that they must report to the people of Alberta.

I've got to tell you as a chartered accountant and as a certified management accountant that this bill, the Fiscal Management Act, is something that I'm very happy with. It will set the tone and the guiding that's needed by the province of Alberta to actually lead the nation in terms of its reporting and structure in the fiscal area. I'd maybe predict – I don't know if that's the right word. I would encourage the other provinces across our nation to take a look at what our Minister of Finance has done under the leadership of our Premier. I've sat at the table in Treasury Board and listened to her and to him speak to these issues that are contained in here in the last eight months as these kinds of concepts have been developed. I hope that those other provinces take a close look at the kinds of things we're doing here and consider adopting them into their own provincial bills and statutes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I truly appreciate the opportunity. In my hand I have a copy of the Budget 2012 speech, and I thought I would use this and another document that came along with it to ask the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar a couple of questions.

First off, he commented on how using the measure of population growth and inflation doesn't make sense and that it's inconsequential. However, in the speech delivered last year it suggests that "the increase in expenses is due almost entirely to increased spending in Albertans' priority areas . . . Mr. Speaker, this increase is less than population growth plus inflation." It's interesting that "is less" is even underlined, so there's actually extra emphasis on that. I can't understand why a Finance minister from that government would emphasize something so inconsequential.

The second thing I would like to ask. I've never been to Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I'm sure that there are some very, very bright people there. What I've got here is Budget 2012 fiscal summary. It takes up less than half a page. I know you're all fond of pictures, so perhaps you could reflect on that. Right here line 13 says: surplus/deficit, line 1 minus line 12. Well, that's pretty simple to figure out. I wonder. If you dropped this on someone in Edmonton-Gold Bar and said, "Hey, what's the deficit," if they wouldn't have a clue.

Please, if you could, sir.

Mr. Dorward: I'm pleased to be able to answer those questions, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the first one, there's a floor and ceiling concept here. I just stood here and said that inflation and population increase needs to be considered in the realm of other social needs and things like that. In other words, I don't think that that's a measure that should be entrenched anywhere, and I hear that the folks opposite want to entrench those kinds of things. That is why it shouldn't be in there. Making a statement as to exactly what the deficit or increase in expenditure is relative to those measures is perfectly acceptable. There's absolutely nothing wrong with that.

With respect to the throwing down of the reports, I apologize; I don't know which report you had in your hands. But I dare say, Mr. Speaker, that if I did sit down with anybody in Edmonton-Gold Bar, I would be able to explain those things, and I will be able to explain the future reports of the Minister of Finance in a very, very clear way so that they can understand as citizens of this province exactly what's going on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, not having the benefit of the professional designation that the hon. member has, perhaps we could ask him to explain the relevant feasibility of using a capital plan and using the capital markets to build assets that have value for future Albertans as it relates to the cost in future of deferring, perhaps, those capital assets relative to the financial decisions we have to make.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many facets to this. The first one is that there is a workforce out there. I had the pleasure of meeting with several of the unions that work in this province and how they're working in harmony with the corporations that provide jobs for Albertans right now and provide jobs for those union workers and the things that they're working together on. We need to keep those labour forces busy and active. You just can't stop building things in this province. We've already had examples today of the deficit that was caused when government didn't spend.

The private sector takes their cues from government in the sense of: what is government doing? We feel the confidence that then gets into the economy, and they continue to spend, and those workforces are kept busy and active. The capital markets look very closely, Mr. Speaker, at us in Alberta. When they do, they look at the whole picture. They don't just look at one tiny little segment, one tiny little word. Yes, the MLAs got an 8 per cent increase in their RRSP after they took a 25 per cent reduction in their pay. You can't look at one little segment. You have to look at the entire picture.

So when people look at the province of Alberta, they know that there are better roads, better hospitals, better schools because this government has continued to spend on this and under this fiscal plan will continue to spend like that.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Drumheller-Stettler as the next speaker.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's kind of an interesting honour for me to rise and speak on this because with all the gesturing and the banter that goes about in the Chamber, sometimes the seriousness is kind of lost. I'd like to go forward.

I'd like to speak to this Fiscal Management Act as a lifelong resident of the special areas, and I know that the Minister of Finance has family members also out in the special areas. There's somewhat of a difference in the municipal accounting that goes on in the special areas as to what's going on in this budget. The management of the special areas and the advisory council, which is made up of members of that constituency, has actually the equivalent of one year's budget in surplus rather than $50 million in debt. Fifty million dollars is approximately the annual operating budget of the special areas. They have approximately a $50 million surplus.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know that recently you travelled to my constituency location of Stettler. On January 23 you and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and three others were out there. I'd encourage you to come out also to Hanna at some point in time and meet with the special areas advisory council because they have a completely different modus operandi for how they manage. I just heard the member opposite say that maybe they're holding themselves back by not going forward in this vision involved in this bill on fiscal management by saving for the future. They understand in the special areas – and the Minister of Finance knows wholeheartedly that it's mandated under an act and operated under the auspices of the Minister of Municipal Affairs – that it is a special area and it is adverse and it is harsh, not unlike, possibly, some of the financial times that we are and could be going through in this province. So I have somewhat of a different view on how we're coming forward with this management here.

We talked about it earlier, saying something to the effect that the plan of this act may not be unethical, but in some cases I believe the constituents of Drumheller-Stettler might believe it to be immoral, going forward with this sort of management. [interjection] It may be a stretch, but the minister is hearing what I'm saying. I'm pleased to hear that, even though he doesn't look over to this side of the House very often. It seems that on many occasions he's had a chance to count the lights, so we've all got an understanding of how many there are.

I want to speak again to the seriousness, Mr. Speaker, of this bill. It repeals the accountability act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act, and it amends the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act. Now, going forward, I believe that the members previous to us that passed this legislation must have done it with some sincerity. So for this government to in one fell swoop make sweeping changes to three acts is to me quite significant.

I've had a chance to say my small piece on that, and if anybody would like to speak under 29(2)(a), I'd appreciate the discussion.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, just so the hon. member knows, I am looking over there on a fairly regular basis, actually, just to make you feel a little bit better.

I would ask the hon. member: given his concern that we are repealing two acts and creating one new act, what out of the other two acts that we are not putting into this act is he concerned we're leaving on the table?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt, but it is 6 o'clock. The House will stand adjourned until 7:30. Perhaps the member will have a chance thereafter to respond.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 12 Fiscal Management Act

[Debate adjourned March 13]

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to add my comments to the debate over Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. Like many of my colleagues here, I want to take a minute just to explain how I've arrived here. I have 35 years of business experience. I'm not an accountant, I'm not a lawyer, but I have 35 years of successful business experience.

Ms Calahasen: That's a long time.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you.

I know how to read a financial statement, but I have to say that this budget is the most confusing document I've ever tried to absorb. Like my colleagues, I'm going to explain why I'm here. In addition to 35 years of business experience I have 11 years of municipal politics experience: 11 years on council, eight of those years as mayor. We did budgets each and every one of those years. I had no trouble understanding them. But I do have some serious concerns about this piece of legislation, as do many of my constituents and as do many, many Albertans all across the province.

Last week the government released its back-in-debt budget. Now here we are debating a piece of legislation that will make the government's new, questionable accounting system the law. Bill 12 would repeal the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act, and I find that rather odd. This government brought in a brand new ministry this year, accountability and transparency. I find it odd that now we're doing away with accountability and fiscal responsibility. Let me repeat that. It will repeal the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act. In effect, the government is removing accountability and responsibility with this legislation.

What would repealing these pieces of legislation mean? It would remove the strict rules around debt that we have in Alberta. We need to remember that these are some of the same rules that made it possible to become a debt-free province in 2004. Now the government wants to remove these rules in order to move ahead with their borrowing plans that will see the province accumulate nearly $17 billion worth of debt by the 2016 election.

This legislation would also allow the government to limit the interest payments on the debt to 3 per cent of the average revenue for the fiscal year and the previous two fiscal years. In other words, the government has no real plan to get out of debt. We estimate that because of the actions this government is taking, it could be 2097 before Alberta is once again debt free. When I read that and I put this together, I'm thinking: my wife and I took a trip to Phoenix and to Dallas to visit with our grandkids over Christmas holidays.

Mr. Dorward: Right on.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you.

About the middle of January I got my Visa bill, and it was pretty substantial. I happened to notice that just underneath the balance it said that if you make the minimum payment on this Visa card, it will take you 43 years to pay that off. That's what we have here. So I said to my wife: "Why would we bother paying it off? We're going to be dead in 43 years." Makes sense to me. I told you I wasn't an accountant.

Bill 12 also makes changes to the heritage fund act, and we would remove the requirement that the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund review and approve the annual business plan for the heritage fund. In fact, if Bill 12 passes, the heritage fund won't even be required to have an annual business plan. Does removing the ability of a committee of the Legislature made up of members from all parties to review the plans for a heritage fund sound like the actions of a transparent and accountable government? Albertans sure don't think so, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 12 will remove capital spending from the government's bottom line. Again, that is not a measure that will allow Albertans to hold the government to account because it will make it much tougher for Albertans to see what the government's real bottom line is. Along the same lines, Bill 12 will drop the reporting requirement for nonoperating numbers that are important to a budget, the total revenue and borrowing details.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2013 and, by extension, Bill 12 are committing Alberta to a $17 billion debt load by 2016 and reducing our savings fund to almost nothing. The current budget is a result of this PC government doubling the size of the entire provincial budget in the last 10 years because of their chronic overspending year after year. Bill 12 is a clear indication that the government has learned nothing and are still unable to budget responsibly. Instead, they plan to change the rules of budget reporting and what constitutes a deficit in order to continue on with their wasteful spending habits but at the same time try to make their numbers look better than they actually are.

That is why my colleagues and I in the Wildrose Official Opposition put forward the financial recovery plan. Our plan would restore the Alberta advantage and eliminate the provincial deficit in two years. We would prevent any new tax or tax increase from being introduced without a provincial referendum, period. We have always been up front about this with Albertans unlike the Premier, who still refuses to make a commitment on no tax hikes before the next election. No tax hikes this year, but no guarantee that they won't come before the next election.

Our plan would implement 25 cost-saving recommendations focused on cutting wasteful spending, targeting government bureaucracy and AHS waste while at the same time protecting front-line services. I won't go into further detail because the members opposite can read all the details of our plan for themselves. To be honest, I spent so much time trying to figure out your budget that I haven't had time to absorb ours.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to reiterate that Albertans did not ask for a return to debt. They asked for bold leadership with the moral fortitude to pay our bills, stay out of debt, and provide the high-quality services that Albertans deserve. We in the Wildrose will continue to stand up for Albertans, and I ask that the government finally start to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to stand. I don't think I can take a whole lot of time, but I know I have five minutes. I'm aghast. As a professional accountant who has reviewed budgets my whole life, I grant that. I understand that. I understand that 35 years of business experience wherein a person has reviewed budgets the whole time, as he stated, is not the same thing as being a professional accountant. I'm still amazed that there hasn't been research by individuals or people. I don't know how a person can stand up and make comments on a budget and then on legislation which is fairly complex. It's not simple legislation. Person after person says: "We don't understand it. We don't get it." Now they comment that even their own detailed financial recovery plan is not something the good member understands.

A simple question: should Alberta stay stuck in the past, or should it move into a more organized, simpler way of telling the citizens of Alberta what their debt situation is by having an operational plan and a capital plan and a savings plan? Should Albertans be stuck in the past?

Mr. Rowe: Thank you for that. I don't have a problem with a capital plan, an operational plan, and a savings plan. I just wish there was somewhere in that budget that I could put it all together and find out just what our real situation is. If you want to know what we would do about it, it's right on our website. You can print it off, and it's all right there.

If I've learned anything in this House since I came here, it's how not to answer questions, and I learned that from over there.

7:40

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly a privilege to add my comments about the new fiscal framework for this province, the Fiscal Management Act, Bill 12. The bill repeals both the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act and replaces them with a single statute that changes the way government administers and reports the province's finances.

I guess one of the key features of the new legislation is that the government will now be required to have a distinct operational plan, a distinct savings plan – I'll get to that more later – and a distinct capital plan as part of its overall annual fiscal plan. In creating this new fiscal management structure, the government is reversing the Klein-era restrictions on debt and deficits, relaxing financial reporting requirements, and ultimately demanding, in my view, less accounting and transparency from the Minister of Finance.

I guess this is a slightly positive note on the legislation. It does commit the government to saving a portion of the nonrenewable resource revenue annually by 2017-18 and to retaining 100 per cent of the heritage savings fund's net income in the fund, I think also at a later date, but those are minor accomplishments when it comes to the magnitude of fossil fuel resources that we are actually bringing in as a province.

I must go back into history as to why the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act actually were brought in. They were brought in after we saw budgets brought in in 1987 to 1993 that were notoriously wrong. They were inherently inaccurate. They were made with unbelievable assumptions and really did not require the real, true bottom line as to what the government's actual finances were. I rarely speak positively of Mr. Klein's record, but here it is. He brought in the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act to actually allow for that to happen. It was a way to move away from the fudge-it budgets of the Dick Johnston and Don Getty era.

In fact, if you talk to people at that time who were involved in coming in in 1993, they say that there was a mess in the accounts. It took a while for them to balance. They couldn't reconcile the figures, and thus they said: we have to get rid of this voodoo accounting and present things in a reasonable, rational fashion if we're going to be able to have any credibility with the Alberta people after what has just happened over these six years. So that was the birth of the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act, and I will give Mr. Klein credit for that as well as some members of his administration who did that. It really, actually allowed us to see things in a true bottom-line fashion. Whether we liked that bottom line or not, you got a clear picture.

Also, I see this as a political document more so than an accounting document. Clearly, the ways of the past, how we were outlining debts and deficits and the like, which was also a political document, by the way, have gone by the wayside. The government no longer sees that as being in their best interests or in this province's best interests. I'm becoming increasingly cynical about which one they actually see as being more important. This allows them to hopefully get us out of this fiscal pickle that we currently find ourselves in. To me this is more of a political document than actually a way of changing business. There was no reason why we couldn't have accomplished a lot of these things under the old act. Nevertheless, since we want to go back into borrowing, something that given the state of our finances I tend to agree with, I think it's a good move given the situation we find ourselves in that we change that rule to be able to borrow.

Back to the politics. I remember in '08, when I was running against my competitor in Calgary-Buffalo, that was his calling card: we will never go into debt again. I guess that just shows how quickly things change. I guess that's probably why I would consider that we get a handle on our savings plan so that maybe one time we or future governments can actually make that claim.

In any event, one of the troubles I see is that there is less accounting in this act than there was in the last act. Conspicuously absent from the new legislation are those sections of the Government Accountability Act that required some measure of accountability from the Minister of Finance. Section 11 obligated the minister to include statements of responsibility with the consolidated fiscal plan and consolidated annual report. Section 12 required the minister to make a public or written statement explaining any omitted information or any noncompliance with the act in producing those two documents. I see the minister here, and he's shaking his head, so maybe he'll correct me on what I'm saying, but in my reading of the act – and maybe it's included elsewhere – those responsibilities are gone.

Also gone is section 6, which required the inclusion of major economic assumptions that the Minister of Finance made in preparing the province's consolidated fiscal plan and anticipated economic condition of the fiscal years which the plan relates to. I know we do have a forecast of oil and gas revenues based on a multitude of private-sector opinions out there. Nevertheless, by my reading and in comparison to the two acts this appears to be somewhat stripped down. I guess it's a new way of accounting.

One thing that I would have liked to have seen – you know, frankly, I don't really mind too much if there's an operational, a savings, or a capital plan. Those are fine. I did find it difficult, especially in lock-up and maybe at other times, where we have three political parties – the other side of the House may disagree with this, but actually we're probably reasonably intelligent people for the most part. I saw that smirk, Minister. I did. But in the main we are reasonably intelligent people, and despite being there for a couple of hours, it was very difficult to come up with an actual deficit and debt number as to where we were. That, to me, is troubling. I think this act would be much better, much more clear, much more open and transparent if on the final page of said document we implemented something like we did in the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act.

Like I said, say what you want about Ralph. This was generally a reasonable way and painted things in a pretty clear picture. I don't see that as necessarily being as clear, open, or transparent. Nevertheless, that would be my suggestion for the government to be able to try and rectify, and maybe they would like to do so at this time or include it in future plans. I don't know if anything stops them from doing that, but I would like to see that included in the plan.

Now, returning not only to this act but to what the future actually entails for Alberta, I am very disappointed in the savings plan of this document. Despite the fact that over the last 25 years we've taken in and spent all of the $150 billion in nonrenewable resource revenue – in fact, in our 42 some-odd year history of this government we have only managed to save roughly $16 billion of the $350 billion in nonrenewable resource revenue we've brought in. This has been a shame. Like I've said before – and I'll probably continue on this rant for quite some time, so I apologize to members out there who are getting frustrated by it already – it's amounted to, essentially, intergenerational theft. If we are truly interested in leaving this province with something more, something tangible to hang on to from these vast riches that we have been blessed with, I think a savings plan has to be given a real kick-start.

We as a population, in fact, all political parties, have to develop a plan with rugged fiscal structures in place to save a large portion of these fossil fuel resources. Loughheed targeted 30 per cent. I might suggest that 50 per cent would be more reasonable. Simply put, it's fairly easily done. You know, it's a political problem, not necessarily one of reality. I pointed out many times that if we adopted Saskatchewan's tax code, the second-lowest taxed jurisdiction by a country mile, we would bring in $12 billion more in revenue.

Talking about being able to do what the government wants to do, allegedly build Alberta – something I support, by the way, and something that I see the need for debt for possibly at the time. Nevertheless, we have to develop a process whereby we take a more conservative approach to accounting. By conservative I mean pay for what we use. It seems to be a fair comment, that if we use the services, if we want the services – public health care, public education, decent environmental standards, good roads, and the like – we have an obligation to pay for them as a society. We've had the luxury of simply saying: "Well, we'll spend all this oil wealth in one generation. Why ask the citizens to pay for it today when we can just use this nonrenewable revenue for our benefit?"

I can tell you what. It's great politics. You know, you don't ask anyone to pay for anything and you provide all these services. Well, it's pretty successful. We can see that. I don't deny that. Nevertheless, is it right? That is another thing. No. If you look at the overarching last 42 years and you look at that record of fiscal stewardship of our nonrenewable resource revenue, I believe even the government will admit they have failed. They have failed dramatically, and unless we change something as to what is going on – in my view it's the tax structure to do that – we will not get ahead of this curve. We'll not get ahead of us saving some of this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity we've had.

The easy days of doing this may actually be gone, Mr. Speaker. You know, in the days when we had the barrels of oil that were more easily obtained from the ground, not the oil sands, maybe that was a time that we could have done a little better. You know, in the days when we were getting upwards of – I believe one year $16 natural gas was our high, and that was with a 62-cent dollar, you know, which is like getting $24 natural gas, when you have a 62-cent dollar. Maybe we should have done a lot better then. I guess we can always say: "That was then; this is now. We're hitting reset on this plan. We really got a handle on it." But I think we're kidding ourselves if we believe that. I think we're really denying ourselves what virtually every economist has said out there. I will say that the minister was right yesterday when he said to me in question period that not every economist has said this, but I'll stick with the thing virtually.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I'll recognize the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Having listened attentively to the hon. member across the way, I have three questions I'd like him to address if he may. The first is that he talked about how we're changing the accounting rules and we're going to voodoo accounting or something to that effect. I'm curious because, you know, we're following generally accepted accounting principles and the international standards for public-sector reporting. I'm curious whether he would consider that the municipalities in the province of Alberta today are doing voodoo accounting and voodoo presentations. That's the first question.

Mrs. Forsyth: You already asked that question.

Mr. Horner: But I never got an answer, hon. member, from your party. I'm hopeful I'll get one from them.

The second one is that the content of the new act includes in the annual report a fiscal plan analysis that includes a statement of the actual operating revenue and actual operating expense, the debt-servicing costs to the government, the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue not allocated to or from the contingency account, the prescribed savings, comparison of actual performance results to the desired results included in the business plan, the consolidated financial statements of the province, the Auditor General's report. I'm curious. What information did he say that we're no longer going to be providing that we used to provide? The second thing is on the content of the quarterly reports, where we're actually going to be providing Albertans with the actual results to the budget that we presented in this House so that they can see how well we've been doing to it, not to some projection that we think might happen because something has changed in the last three months.

The third question. He was saying that while he was in lock-up, he couldn't figure out what the old number was. Well, hon. member, the old number was simply stated as a change in our net financial assets, or our net worth. If you want to know what that is: page 135, the line net assets for fiscal policy purposes. The difference between the 2013 forecast and the 2014 estimate is the change in our net worth, which was $1.975 billion. If you go back and look, that's what we used to report as the change. It's still there, Mr. Speaker. It's still a representative number of all of the changes, but it's not a representative number of the operating capability of the province.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'll try and do my level best to answer those, and I'm glad the minister didn't want to debate me on the fiscal record in terms of trying to save some of this vast oil wealth over the last 25 years. That would've been a more interesting debate and a more able one. I'd like him to get up and defend the government's record over the 25 years of that policy. That would be something interesting and something that would actually move this forward as to how we're going to change that from happening again, change that intergenerational theft from occurring again, because right now this plan doesn't quite do that for me. I will try.

I think the minister might have come in a little bit late. I was referring to many people suggesting that the Dick Johnston and Don Getty years of financial accounting were in fact voodoo accounting. The budget's estimates were notoriously wrong and not easy to rectify. It's my understanding from people who came into power shortly after that, frankly, the numbers didn't add up. You may or may not have seen that.

What I would like there, hon. President of the Treasury Board, is something that actually shows – I guess you point to that $1.97 billion. You read the papers, sir. You read what Graham Thomson has said about the numbers. You read what Don Braid said about the numbers. I'm not the only one to suggest that this is not the easiest thing to understand, so please don't consider me a partisan hack on this. Other people are having the same struggle that I am. Clearly, other people, probably with greater acumen in this area than myself, have concerns with this. I think what we would like is something like the entire consolidated statement. I know you say that it's on page 135, that it says $1.97 billion, but the true number of our deficit debt position is allegedly somewhere between $5.5 billion and $6.3 billion.

Mr. Horner: No.

Mr. Hehr: Well, see, no. That's what you say. Everyone else who seems to do this math comes out to $6.3 billion.

8:00

The Deputy Speaker: It's not a debate, hon. member, please.

Mr. Hehr: I'll take everything with a grain of salt.

That was reflected in the final consolidated debt statement of the Klein . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the next speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Calder. [interjections] The Member for Edmonton-Calder has the floor, hon. members.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate you keeping order over some of these people, you know, talking out of turn, throwing me off my strategy here.

I'm very happy to speak this evening, Mr. Speaker, to Bill 12, the Fiscal Management Act. I have a number of comments and perhaps some questions as well in regard to this bill. My understanding of it is that this act would repeal the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act. This bill seems to have provisions to save a certain percentage of resource revenues and heritage fund contributions, increasing that percentage over time, starting in 2015. It's also outlining the rules around financial reporting and giving us the sense that we cannot have an operating budget in the province. It limits the amount of debt financing as a percentage of the province's operating budget that we take on altogether.

It's interesting to choose to restructure the reporting and accounting of finances in this way. I have, I guess, not entirely criticism in that regard although I see a fundamental underlying problem, and that's the fact that this bill does very little to change the structural revenue problem that we have here in the province, Mr. Speaker. We need to reverse the Klein cuts that allowed an unreasonably low corporate tax rate for very wealthy corporations and the extraordinary wealth tax as well for individual taxation.

Another problem that I see is that the savings portion of this bill doesn't kick in until 2015. Now, of course, if you don't have money to save, then you can't save it, but I guess that in relation to that, without reforming the revenue side of our finances in this province, then this whole thing about savings is a moot point. Really, it's, as I see it, unlikely that we'll save any significant money until after the next election, so the savings part of this bill I think is less than meaningful without a revenue reform analysis.

You know, I was just looking at the targets of where we could be if we had our royalty rates, for example, at a level that would approximate during the Lougheed regime. We would have saved billions more dollars than we have. In fact, really, since we changed those royalty structures, we haven't really saved anything at all. We've just maintained the heritage fund at a certain level but at the cost of letting billions of dollars in royalties slip away. I mean, that's globally my main concern, and I think it's the concern of most Albertans.

We know that our population is growing quite dramatically, and we know that our economy is doing well, too, in almost all regions in the province, so the budget and this supporting bill to the budget seem out of step to the other fiscal realities that are happening around the province. You know, when you apply economic measurements to any given economy around the world, Mr. Speaker, you'll see that the population is growing in a reasonable sort of way, not explosively, and that the economy, the GDP, is growing commensurate with that population growth or exceeding that growth. You would consider that to be a healthy economy, so for us to be looking at a deficit and a cutting budget during this point in time in our history is out of step with the reality that surrounds us.

I just have a couple of other things I wanted to look at here. The Fiscal Responsibility Act, which this act is replacing, actually made it illegal for actual expenses to exceed the actual revenue plus what was contained in the sustainability fund. In the Fiscal Responsibility Act, for example, “actual expense” means, with respect to a fiscal year, actual expense of the Crown for all purposes as reported in the consolidated annual report for that year but does not include increases or decreases in liabilities respecting pensions.

Due to this government's version of accounting it no longer has to include capital spending and grants under these operating expenses.

The idea of actual expenses or actual revenue has more or less been removed and replaced with such terms as “operational expense.” This makes this promise to not have an operational deficit ring somewhat hollow or at least less than entirely clear when you can simply take money out of the capital plan to make up the difference, if you see what I mean.

You know, my question is then: at what point are we just going to be moving these goal posts again if the government doesn't find that it has enough revenue to pay for the levels of service that Albertans require from this government? Indeed, without revenue reform, that seems entirely possible or even likely.

The other question is: when will this government recognize that this revenue problem is, in fact, the underlying issue that needs to be resolved?

Mr. Speaker, there are lots of interesting changes here, and I certainly like the idea of having a savings plan built into the structure of our budgeting, but certainly we need to have the money there to actually be able to save.

Further, I find that it's refreshing to see that the government is recognizing the need to borrow at favourable rates, at the best rate possible, for certain capital projects. We know that you do have to build those things over time. I remember for years listening to how this was, defying all logic or reason, just vehemently rejected by a very similar government to what I see across from me right now. Something happened. Someone was struck on the road to Damascus and realized that you can in fact borrow at favourable rates as a government and build the capital projects that you need.

Further to that, I guess I question this government's reliance on P3 projects to make those capital investments. I don't think that a P3 contract is always actually giving you the best value for that public money just because of the requirement of the P3 contractor to make that profit, that extra money. Perhaps part of a further reform with Bill 12 is that we can use a comparative chart or a very clear, transparent system to show how we might be able to build any given project publicly or as a P3 and make the best, most prudent decision based on the facts around savings and what the best value for money is, whether it's a public project or a P3 project.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to leave it there. I'm going to speak at each opportunity in regard to Bill 12. I welcome any answers to my questions that the government might be able to offer.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, other speakers? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

8:10

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to request the unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 64(2) in order to proceed with Committee of the Whole on Bill 13, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 13 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2013

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Shall the committee rise and report the bill? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 13.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: That's carried. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 11 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate March 13: Ms Blakeman]

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called. The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance has moved third reading of Bill 11.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing that we've made such great progress tonight, I would suggest that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 8:13 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 14, 2013

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members and guests, let us pray. May the lessons we learn today help guide and shape our thoughts tomorrow, and may we transfer those learned benefits into actions that will truly help the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, I am honoured indeed to be able to introduce Mr. Murray Dorin, who was an MP for Edmonton-Northwest; Mr. Ken Epp, who was an MP for Edmonton-Sherwood Park; and it's my great honour to introduce to the Assembly today Senator Betty Unger, representing Alberta. Everybody in the Assembly may know that Senator Unger was recently appointed by the Prime Minister. However, she was the first Senator to be duly elected in the country of Canada, indeed by legislation passed in this Assembly. Please stand – you are standing – and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: A sincere welcome to our special visitors. Thank you for joining us.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the grade 12 students from Consort school. They came here over a great distance, and I'm pleased and proud to introduce them. Also, they are being guided by Randy Smith and their teacher Kara Strobel, who taught my kids when they were in school. I encourage them to rise and receive the warm welcome from this Assembly.

I also would like to introduce concerned citizens from Consort who have made this trip today to protest the government's neglect of acute care in rural communities. Many in this Assembly may have seen them braving the cold on the front steps of this Assembly in the hope that it would draw some attention to this matter. With that, I'd like to ask them to rise to receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Let me recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of the most talented and gifted young Albertans in this province, I would have you know, 75 students from George McDougall high school in Airdrie. As a former Mustang myself I am very, very pleased to have them here in the Assembly today. I'd ask them all to rise. We're going to just introduce their teachers and their parent helpers, which include Mr. Sean Horne, Mrs. Tammy Hodgson, and Mrs. Fatima Sarhan. Those are the teachers. Then we have some parents: Mr. Randy Meredith, Mr. Yazdi Bulsara – I'm sorry if I got the name wrong; I did my best there – and Mrs. Amanda Nolan. If we could all give them a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Wellness.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today to introduce four representatives of the northern Alberta and Territories branch of the Kidney Foundation of Canada. Today is World Kidney Day, and the focus is on acute kidney injury and prevention, which is achieved in part, as you know, by maintaining normal blood pressure, consuming less sodium, and taking medications only as prescribed. The statistics are alarming. In northern Alberta alone over 200 Albertans are listed for kidney transplants, and almost 400 are in the workup process. Well over 2 and a half million Canadians have kidney disease, and well over 2,000 Albertans are on dialysis, which is a life-sustaining therapy but not a cure. Doing great work in this realm nonetheless are Tammy Fifield, Sharon Marcus, Ashley Owens, and Flavia Robles. I will ask them now to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of introductions today. First, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Jacqueline Schaffter, QC, president and CEO of Legal Aid Alberta; second, Toko Zaza, communications officer for Legal Aid Alberta; third, Lyle Toop, divisional director of human resources and communications with Legal Aid Alberta; and fourth, Donavon Young, ADM, justice service division, who, as you know, is also a native of Regina. These individuals are instrumental in operating effective management of Legal Aid Alberta, ensuring low-income Albertans have continued access to legal services. I'd ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you Ms Andrea Burkhart. Ms Burkhart is the executive director of ACT Alberta, the coalition on human trafficking, and an extremely hard-working and dedicated worker. The goal of ACT Alberta is to prevent human trafficking and protect victims through partnership. ACT Alberta works with community agencies, law enforcement, and government to provide assistance to victims, to support the prosecution of traffickers, and to create knowledge and awareness of this issue. At this time I ask my guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly a special day for me here today because I have three young ladies to introduce who grew up in the riding of Little Bow on a farm in Nobleford, Alberta, of all places. All three grew up to be educators, worked very hard in their community, and were dedicated to giving people more opportunities for success in their lives. All three are related to me. Two are my aunts. My aunt Karen Vos from Victoria; my aunt Joan Stagg, now from Victoria; and my mother, Judy Hehr: all three of them have loved me more than I deserve and have given me much guidance in my life. Would you please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, you have a second intro?

Mr. Denis: Yes, I have a second introduction. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a practicum student within my ministry who is seated in the members' gallery today. Her name is Ana Serban, and she's been working in my ministry since January. She's in the final stretch of her criminology degree at the U of A, and she graduates in June. Ana's area of interest is in human rights and human trafficking, and her future plans include entering the esteemed legal profession. My staff have enjoyed having her with them, and her positive spirit and willingness to jump on any project have been greatly appreciated. I think she's got a bright future ahead of her. Please stand and be introduced.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly my guests from the Alberta Teachers' Association, local 38, Stephani Clements and Heide Doppmeier. Local 38, Calgary public teachers' largest local in western Canada, represents close to 7,000 full- and part-time teachers in the Calgary area and 17 per cent of all of Alberta's teachers. Stephani is the chair of the Political Action Committee and a special-needs teacher, and Heide is one of the two vice-presidents of the local and a high school ESL teacher. I would ask them now to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly northern Albertans who are deeply concerned with the premature closure of the life-saving medevac services at the municipal airport. I'd like to introduce them. Please stand as I say your name. Ross Daniels; Roberta Daniels; Randy Bercier; Ruth Isley; Corita Vachon, whose son was saved by air medevac to the downtown airport; and Sean McRae. I'd ask the members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With us today is Brady Whittaker from the Alberta Forest Products Association, which represents so many industries and is such a great industry in northern Alberta and throughout the province. That's lifeblood to our communities. Brady, please stand up and be recognized by the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Michael Androsoff. Mr. Androsoff is a CA who has been working very tirelessly to try to navigate the shoals of ground ambulance service in Lloydminster and in dealing with two provincial governments and two provincial health systems. Trust me; he needs all of his accounting skills to be able to do that. I welcome him here today, and I ask him to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to this Assembly some very bright, young postsecondary students from the U of A. Bashir Mohamed, Andrew Traynor, Juliana Ho, and Michael Vecchio are undergraduate students who have serious concerns about the impacts that this government's budget cuts will have on the quality and accessibility of postsecondary education in the province. I'd also like to recognize that Bashir Mohamed, a dedicated activist who has worked tirelessly to champion social justice in our community and abroad, has recently won the Queen's Diamond Jubilee medal for his humanitarian work in Haiti. I would now ask Bashir, Andrew, Juliana, and Michael to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two good friends of mine, both individuals who have helped to build our capital region in this great province of Alberta in the business sector: firstly, Mr. Jim Spalding and, secondly, Mr. Wynn Payne, both mentors and good friends. Please welcome them, everybody.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Education, I believe your guests are here now.

Mr. J. Johnson: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you a couple of very good friends of mine, councillors from Smoky Lake county, Randy Orichowski and Rick Cherniwchan. They're very involved in the seniors' housing foundation out there as well. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Music for Hope Fundraiser

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to relate a good-news story that is happening in my community but that happens all over this wonderful province of Alberta. On Saturday, March 16, the Alberta Cancer Foundation will benefit from the second annual Music for Hope fundraiser, that will be held in Fort Saskatchewan.

I'd like to spend a few minutes talking about the benefit of not only that particular event but also the hard-working people who actually spend the time and the energy to make such an event happen. Those people in this case would be Jenn and Isaac McNeill of Fort Saskatchewan. Now, Isaac, of course, is the instigator of all of these wonderful events, and Jenn, his wife, certainly has no choice but to be volun-told. They are typical of many Albertans from across this province who see a need in their community and find a way to meet that need. The fact that this event is sold out indicates the generosity and the compassion of Albertans. The event itself is the second annual event, and each year Isaac will be choosing a new recipient for the fundraising benefits of this particular event.

I along with my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview are looking forward to attending Music for Hope and supporting the Alberta Cancer Foundation in the vital work that they do for cancer patients, survivors, and their families. Each and every year we lose friends, family, and neighbours to cancer. Fortunately for our constituents, Alberta is home to several state-of-the-art cancer treatment facilities staffed with world-class oncologists, doctors, and specialists.

This year we actually have as a guest to this event Bobby Wills, who is the Alberta country music awards male music artist of the year. Being a groupie for wonderful country music, I am looking forward to attending that event but celebrating it with my community.

Intergenerational Theft

Mr. Hehr: Well, I've said this before, Mr. Speaker, but I believe it bears repeating. Future generations, future children, and grandchildren of this province: call the cops; you have been robbed. You see, I myself and, in fact, all citizens of this province have stolen your inheritance. Now, it's true that we've had an accomplice in this matter, the Progressive Conservative government of this province.

Here's the sad thing, sir. It looks like this intergenerational theft is just getting started. Over the course of the last 25 years this province has taken in and spent all of the $150 billion in resource revenue we've brought in. This is a windfall of epic proportion that we have chosen to spend on this generation's prosperity, and we have lived well.

However, I come from the school of thought that it is not our God-given right to spend all of this oil wealth as soon as it comes out of the ground. A prudent society and a wise political leadership would convert that resource revenue into another revenue generator. That's what the heritage trust fund was supposed to be.

It became clear to everyone with the release of this budget that this is not what we have done. We are broke, and we have nothing that's been saved. In my view, when charged by future generations with intergenerational theft, we should go before the judge, admit our crime, and say that we are guilty as charged.

The Premier once said, and I'll quote: we need to ensure that our actions are fiscally responsible and fair not only to this generation but to those that follow. This means doing what's right for the long term and not what's in their best interests for the next election cycle.

Simply put, Mr. Speaker, this budget does little to address this intergenerational theft that is going on. It is my greatest hope that the political leadership in that party – in fact, in all parties in this Legislature – understand that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Violence against Women and Girls

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I attended the 57th session of the UN Commission on the Status of Women with my colleague from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. Our Canadian delegation was very capably led by federal Minister Rona Ambrose. The goal of this session was to identify ways to eliminate and prevent violence against women and girls.

As a mother of three sons it was particularly reassuring to me that the vast majority of the participants at this UN session recognized the need to engage men and boys in preventing violence against women and girls. In fact, this strategic imperative was concretely advanced by the Canadian delegation.

It's heartening to me to know that this approach is already being applied here in Alberta. What does it look like? Well, the Calgary YWCA hosts the Walk a Mile in Her Shoes campaign, inviting men to walk in high heels to raise awareness of men's roles in combating violence against women. The Alberta Council of Women's Shelters hosts Breakfast with the Guys events to bring male leaders together to inform and inspire action to help end domestic violence.

I'm particularly excited about an initiative launched by the B.C. Lions football team, and I'm hoping this will be adopted by the Calgary Stampeders and the Edmonton Eskimos. Football meets feminism when high-profile athletes stand alongside women as allies. Wally Buono, former coach of the Calgary Stampeders and coach of the B.C. Lions, even steps up to share his own story of growing up in a home with domestic violence.

These initiatives have the potential to be gamechangers. Too often we see gender equality as a women's movement, dependent on male support and encouragement, yet it isn't enough for my father, my husband, and now my sons to stand along the sidelines and root for me. They need to get in this game and participate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will continue with Edmonton-Ellerslie, Drumheller-Stettler, and Lesser Slave Slake after question period.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a brief reminder, please, to try and continue the practice of either curtailing or not using any preambles whatsoever to your supplementals so that we can allow the first five spots that privilege as leaders or people designated by their leaders to take their spot.

Let us begin, then, with the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Criminal Justice System

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government's steady abandonment of its former conservative principles is now complete with its embracing of an extreme soft-on-crime, left-wing, lovey-dovey approach to lawbreakers. We know Alberta will be offering two freebie crimes now. One radio commentator today even called this the Alberta criminal advantage. The Premier claims they didn't cut any police or prosecutors in this back-in-debt budget. That's fine, but what about the effect that two free crimes is going to have on Alberta's communities?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, nothing that this member has stated is true in her last exchange, but it's rather shocking that in a statement proposing a tough-on-crime party – I really remembered that her party has talked about less enforcement on highway 63. She called for sheriffs to stop enforcing distracted driving laws, she voted against harsher penalties for impaired drivers, and this leader herself has called upon city council to set up a red-light district. Which way is up?

Ms Smith: I kind of expect distortions and lies from that member. [interjections]

There is also the soft-on-crime . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I could stand here and freeze everything for a while. I'd rather not. Let us remember decorum. Let us remember civility. Let us remember proprieties. Let us be very careful about any motives we might be avowing in either way.

Hon. leader, please proceed.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's also the soft-on-crime approach to ankle monitoring. The Premier said yesterday that "if we don't have the ability to ensure that we can locate people, secure people, and the police can connect to them, then they're not going to be let out of jail." Well, how is she planning to find out if we have that ability? Will she be experimenting in our communities by not monitoring criminals to see if that is as effective as monitoring criminals?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, these are ridiculous comments. We have a justice system that ensures that people stay in jail if they're supposed to. We also have a set of laws that allow judges in certain circumstances, if people can be tracked, to allow them not to be in jail. If we can't track them, I'm pretty sure the judges aren't going to let them out of jail.

Ms Smith: Here's the problem, Mr. Speaker. We've got a Justice minister that says that law enforcement can monitor the criminals even without ankle bracelets, and the Premier says that they'll figure it out somehow, and if it doesn't work, then they'll leave them in jail. But they're out of jail now and they're being monitored electronically, so somebody over there doesn't really understand what is going on. Which is it?

Ms Redford: These are ridiculous suggestions. There is an ankle bracelet monitoring program that's been in place, and as long as that's in place, we have the ability to track people. If that program is not in place and it is not possible to track people, then they will not be out of jail. To suggest that there are people right now that are on the streets that shouldn't be on the streets is an insult to the justice system. It's an insult to judges, to the police, to prosecutors, and it's ridiculous, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice, you rose on a point of order? Okay. Thank you.

Hon. leader. Second main set of questions.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We can easily see why Albertans don't trust this Premier and her government. The Premier said in a year-end interview in 2011 – and I will quote – that Albertans' real fear is that we are going to incur debt. Well, that fear is real. We are going to incur debt, lots of it. Budget 2013, the back-in-debt budget, shows $17 billion in debt by 2013. So everyone who voted in the last election gets $13,123.55 worth of debt for their troubles by the time of the next election. Doesn't the Premier realize that she's doing exactly what Albertans feared?

Ms Redford: In fact, Mr. Speaker, by the end of this fiscal year what Albertans will be getting are new schools, new hospitals, and new roads. To invest in infrastructure, which this party has said that they will not do although they have a list of what they'd like to build but no way to pay for it, we have to look to alternative models. I'd like to use an example of a wonderful announcement today with respect to the southeast LRT in Edmonton supported by P3 Canada. I wondered if the Leader of the Opposition was going to send a firmly worded letter to the Prime Minister saying that she doesn't agree with his approach either.

Ms Smith: We'd build it without debt.

The Premier recites her talking points about building Alberta and helping communities, but it is a position that is built on debt and borrowing. It is not built on financial management and prudent planning. Doesn't the Premier care that Alberta's per person deficit is higher than the deficit that is being run by the big-government tax-and-spend Liberals in Ontario?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been struggling to understand why the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition doesn't understand the financial statements that we've prepared. I presented to this House the fact that, well, they don't prepare financial statements. Then I read her speech the other day where her financial advisers are Graham Thomson, Don Braid: all journalists. Our advisers are people like Scotiabank: "with the weight of new legislation, the Fiscal Management Act, the government is putting in place a revised set of fiscal rules to limit the negative consequences." The Bank of Montreal: "the Province will remain in a positive net financial" situation.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I was merely pointing out how their budget had been universally panned by virtually everyone.

Here's the picture, Mr. Speaker. The per person deficit in Alberta is $1,700. The per person deficit in Ontario is $1,280. This Premier's management of Alberta's finances is a disaster. Is that what she meant when said she wanted to change the character of Alberta?

Ms Redford: The wonderful thing about being the opposition is that they can stand up, make bland statements, and pick and choose. There is no doubt that the budget plan we've set forward, with an operating plan, a capital plan, and a savings plan to put money into the heritage fund, shows Albertans what the fiscal picture is. One of the things that the hon. leader regrets or forgets to say – no motivation intended, Mr. Speaker – is that the reason we're able to deal with the fact that there are challenges to the operational side is that we have a sustainability fund, and it is not a deficit or a debt incurred for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader, for your third main question.

Ms Smith: Page 141, $17 billion worth of debt by 2016.

Provincial Budget

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister avoids answering questions about his budget. He'd rather criticize our Wildrose recovery plan. He'd rather criticize our 10-year debt-free capital plan than defend his own plan. Yesterday the minister avoided my question on paying back the debt with a patronizing explanation of how the principal isn't due until the term of the loan expires. That's exactly the point. There will soon be $17 billion worth of debt, but it will take more than 80 years to save enough to pay it off when it comes due at the rate that they're planning on. How can anyone believe it will ever . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: I am so glad that the hon. leader took the time to show Albertans their 10-year debt-free capital plan. [interjections] Absolutely. Because, Mr. Speaker, the reason it is a debt-free capital plan is that they're not going to build anything. We have set out a plan to invest in families and communities. We've been honest with Albertans about how we're going to pay for it and how we're going pay it back. That's something a Progressive Conservative government is very proud of.

2:00

Ms Smith: I don't know where the Premier shops, but $50 billion is a lot of money.

At the next election the total debt will be $17 billion, but the total amount set aside will only be $357 million. The plan for the remaining $16.6 billion consists of lofty projections, fervent hopes, wishful thinking, and talking-point dreams. We just don't believe any of it. Why should we?

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is not an opportunity to shout or try to outshout others. Please, I know Thursday is spelled differently than Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, but some decorum has to be maintained here. It's my job to do that, and you're not helping me, some of you. So, please, this is not a question of showing by shouting how much you love your leader. We understand everybody loves their leaders. Let's leave it at that, and let's carry on.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Provincial Budget (continued)

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] Obviously, they didn't hear you.

The Speaker: I've recognized the Minister of Finance for his answer. Surely we're going to allow him the courtesy to give it, please.

All right. Hon. minister, please proceed in silence. Others are just waiting with bated breath to hear your words.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the courtesy. She asked why they should believe that this budget is true, that it has financial relevance, I would say. Well, I don't actually use journalists as my financial advisers. I use people who actually understand how to read a financial statement like the Scotiabank, who believes that what we're doing is on the right track; like the Bank of Montreal Capital Markets, who believe we're on the right track; like the National Bank of Canada, who actually said in their material: "The advantage of the new fiscal framework is that it allows a more valid comparison of the fiscal situation."

The Speaker: I believe you have one final sup, hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm asking about paying back the $17 billion worth of debt. This is kind of like the guy who's spending thousands of dollars on his line of credit every day who puts his pocket change into a jar every night and expects that in a few years there's going to be enough money there to pay back the line of credit. Their plan is fiction. Why won't the Finance minister admit it?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the very reason why they were able to, well, mislead Albertans about what the $17 billion is all about is because they didn't tell Albertans that while we're working on the $17 billion capital market plan, we're also building $26 billion worth of assets for Albertans. That's something they neglect to mention. The other thing they neglect to mention is that what we're doing on the capital markets is not a mortgage like you would get from a bank for your house. These are capital markets, where you purchase bonds on outgoing maturities. We've planned out those maturities. This bond issue is planned. The plan will be reported on every quarter. They should actually learn how to do finances.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Student enrolment across this province is expected to increase by 11,000 next year, but our school boards will be receiving $48 million less. In southwest Edmonton two public schools recently informed Catholic students who are currently enrolled that they cannot return next year. To the Minister of Education: is this the state of our education system, where our public schools have to reject students due to a lack of space?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, one thing I would correct is that the Education operational budget is actually going up by $41 million next year. But there's no question that with the enrolment and with great increases, that creates an incredible amount of pressure on our school boards to keep up. We absolutely have communities like the one he's referring to in southwest Edmonton where we don't have enough space for the children that need to go to the schools in those communities. That's one of the reasons that I'm very confident to be on this side of the House. We've elected the right Premier. We're going to invest in communities and we're going to invest in families and we're going to build Alberta so that those kids will have a school desk in the coming year.

Mr. Hehr: Well, it's a nice answer but complete fiction, Mr. Speaker.

Given that there are 450 fewer teachers from three years ago and given that we'll be losing another 400 on April 1 due to the elimination of AISI, by my math that's 850 fewer teachers. Does this sound like a sustainable education system for our children, or does the minister believe that school buildings, not teachers, educate our youth?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes a great point, and that's why with this difficult budget we took every possible step we could to make sure that the limited resources we have are going into the classroom. Teachers on the ground told us: if you can invest anywhere, invest in small class size initiatives. We increased the funding for that. They said: if you're going to invest in anything, invest in inclusion, resources for those special-needs kids. We increased the funding for that. We made sure that every new kid coming into the system is going to be funded next year, but that means that there are going to be pressures on other pieces like maintenance, like AISI, other things that we had to scale back, unfortunately.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, that doesn't meet the smell test. I'd ask the minister: are you really saying that ESL students in Calgary public are going to be supported like they were in the last budget?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, every new ESL student coming into the system next year will be funded. Absolutely.

Education Property Tax Assistance for Seniors

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this budget is an attack on Alberta's seniors. During the election the Premier promised to support seniors and improve their quality of life. Little did they know her empty words would empty their bank accounts. By eliminating property tax assistance in 2014, this Premier effectively hikes property tax for Alberta's seniors or they can pass debt along to their children with a conveniently provided deferral program. My question is to the Premier. Is the property tax assistance program to keep seniors in their own homes just another crutch that the Premier wants to get rid of?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's true that the education property tax program will end in the next year and that for high-income seniors, over $63,700, that program will no longer exist. I think it was about an average of $160 that was the grant given back to all senior homeowners. The opportunity that we have in front of us with this budget is the opportunity to defer part or all of your property taxes, and up to $2,000 would be the average, $2,000 versus a grant of $160.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. It'll be picked up by the kids, Mr. Speaker.

Higher property taxes mean more seniors will be forced out of their homes sooner. Not only is this hard on seniors and their families, but it can't help but increase long-run costs to the government as well for housing and health care. Will the Premier explain how she can think that the solution to this province's revenue problem lies with taxing fixed-income Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again a simplistic suggestion from the opposition. There is no doubt, as our Associate Minister of Seniors has said, that this was a tough choice to make – and I'll tell you that it certainly does impact people in my constituency as well – but there's no doubt that as we move ahead, the decision that we have made is going to ensure that more seniors have more money in their pocket to be able to continue to live in their homes and to continue to live their lives with dignity.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the flat tax supported by the Progressive Conservatives and the Wildrose is causing much of the problem with Alberta's services, causing them to flatline, and given that the Premier's record of broken promises now includes cutting seniors' benefits, slashing their drug coverage, and hiking taxes on the very people who've already paid their share to build this province, will the Premier admit that forcing seniors to pay more taxes is both unnecessary and unfair?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, our minister responsible for seniors has been an advocate for seniors for many years. He's worked very hard on the seniors' property tax deferral program, and we were very proud to be able to include that in 2013 because that is going to affect seniors across this province who've asked us for the flexibility to be able to make choices with respect to their lives, and that's exactly what we've delivered.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit (continued)

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I think I know why the Justice minister and former Liberal staffer doesn't want to prosecute first- and second-time offenders anymore. I was just reading the Fiscal Responsibility Act where it states: "Actual expense for a fiscal year shall not exceed actual revenue for that year plus any amounts allocated from the Alberta Sustainability Fund." That's got to make the Finance minister a little uncomfortable because his back-in-debt budget does not comply with this law and will borrow 3 and a half billion dollars this year to make up the difference. To the Finance minister: how can Albertans trust a government that breaks the law?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong and once again misleading Albertans with statements like that. The hon. member takes a document like this and tells us that he's going to build $4 billion worth of construction assets and then says: where's your list? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure has produced a list of $5 billion worth of assets we're going to build. What is it you're not going to build? What school are you not going to build? What hospital are you not going to build? What road are you not going to build? We did not break any laws with this budget. In fact, we complied with all the laws, including some accounting standards that you might want to pick up on.

Mr. Anderson: It's www.wildrose.ca for those of you at home.

Mr. Speaker, given that just a few months ago I asked the Finance minister in question period if he was going to run a deficit in that year and given that the Finance minister stood up and answered, "It is against the law for the government of Alberta to run an operating deficit," and given the operating deficit for last year turned out to be $1.4 billion and that for next year it's going to be $450 million, Finance Minister, are you willing to admit that last year's and this year's operating budget deficits were in fact, to use your own words, against the law?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the definition of the operating deficit plus the sustainability fund is the same that's in the current act in front of this House. It would be the operating revenue less the operating expense plus whatever is in the balance of either the sustainability account, now the contingency account. The hon. member, I was told, was trained as a lawyer. I'm not sure he ever practised, but I was told he was trained as one. Perhaps he could reach back into his memory and actually read what is in the law and figure it out for himself. The Auditor General has already ruled on this.

Mr. Anderson: Such vast accounting experience on that side of the room there.

Given that your government has broken the current law twice in two years on this issue and given that you are now attempting to replace the current law with a new law, Bill 12, so you can take what is now illegal and turn it into something that is legal, Minister, how can Albertans trust you to follow your new law when you just finished breaking and discarding the old one as soon as it interfered with your big spending and borrowing plans? Aren't you just going to change the law again next time?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the legislation with respect to fiscal management is consistent in this province, and it has been. It is entirely inappropriate for the – and I use the word lightly – hon. member to make such allegations against an individual who has stood up and been honest with Albertans about our fiscal framework, our fiscal circumstances, and the good, solid, although tough, decisions that we've had to make to ensure that we have a zero increase in spending in this budget, that we're investing in the heritage fund, and that we're living within our means.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Legal Aid

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that the decision of this government to prioritize funding to ensure fiscal restraint in Budget 2013 was in line with the needs of a very demanding justice system. It's crucial that everyday Albertans have access and representation in the legal system when they need it. My questions are to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. Given the difficult choices made in Budget 2013 please tell us why funding to Legal Aid is a priority for the government.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A healthy justice system includes many different aspects, all of which must be supported by a government, and it includes Legal Aid. This year in our department we had a $7 million surplus – we’re doing more with less – and that $7 million, I’m pleased to say, will be going to the Legal Aid operating fund to increase access to justice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: how does providing funding to Legal Aid fit with our government’s tough-on-crime agenda? [interjections]

Mr. Denis: The other thing they have to look at is to stop charging people with things that aren’t dangerous, that clog our system: well, Mr. Speaker, that actually is not my quote; that’s a quote from the Member for Airdrie. [interjections] Despite what this member would want us to do, we are going to continue prosecuting offenders despite what this member’s advice was.

Thank you.

Speaker’s Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Come on, now, hon. members: Edmonton-Centre, Edmonton-Strathcona, Calgary-Fish Creek. [interjections] Chatting across the bow in the middle of someone asking a question or, for that matter, while I’m speaking is not in keeping with the tradition of the House, when we’re trying to maintain some decorum. I understand that it’s Thursday afternoon and everybody is anxious to go back to work in their constituencies. I understand that, but let’s not get too overly anxious about it, please.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, let’s try and hear your next question, again with no preamble, which I want to congratulate you on for the first one.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I will try. My final question to the same minister: how will increased funding to legal aid increase access to the justice system?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I could probably give a university lecture to that effect. Increasing funding to legal aid helps in many different ways. It helps people who can least afford the system. Everyone is entitled to a defence regardless of whether or not they can afford a lawyer. We have actually increased the funding for legal aid since 2005 by 90 per cent, and I hope that the federal government will follow our lead in this respect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St Paul-Two Hills, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Criminal Justice System (continued)

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government’s soft-on-crime agenda continues to come to light. The Justice minister, a former Liberal staffer, is now willing to give offenders not just one but two free passes to commit crimes against hard-working Alberta families and businesses. The Wildrose believes in prosecuting criminals and not letting them get off scot-free. The Justice minister’s new hug-a-thug policy is worse than a revolving door. They won’t even be behind bars in the first place. To the Justice minister: why haven’t you already reversed course on this progressive crime agenda that will allow criminals to escape the law?

Mr. Denis: That’s a very easy question to answer, Mr. Speaker. You can’t reverse a course when you didn’t start on that course in the first place, and this member knows it very well. This member, however, wants to go on another course. He’s called for less enforcement on highway 63, fewer sheriffs to enforce drunk-driving laws. He voted against harsher penalties and campaigned against our crackdown on drunk drivers. Which way is up to this member?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the freebie crime policy isn’t the only new progressive justice policy the minister is now pursuing and that the government is also going to stop electronic monitoring of some of this society’s most vile criminals, why is the Justice minister abdicating his responsibility to punish and keep track of criminals and put victims of crime first?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, this government continues to put victims of crime first. It was our own legislation that started a civil forfeiture office, which takes money out of the hands of organized crime and puts it to good use. I would suggest further that this member really needs to look carefully, use his good legal mind that I know he had as a criminal defence lawyer, and look towards where the facts are because they’re certainly not in his answers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Justice minister, a former Liberal staffer: I’d just like to know what kind of message you think you are sending to the families and businesses in this province by giving vandals and thieves free passes and allowing violent criminals to roam the streets with no way of tracking them.

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, this member knows or should know that the tracking program never has been for serious or dangerous offenders. We want those people to go to jail. I have no idea why this member wants vandals and thieves on the streets with this monitoring. Ridiculous.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Farm Fuel Distribution Allowance

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the main concerns with Budget 2013 for farmers in my constituency is the recently eliminated farm fuel distribution allowance, which provided a benefit of 6 cents per litre on diesel fuel. My question to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: why was the farm fuel distribution allowance eliminated?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, thank you, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. It is true that we did have to make a change in terms of the allowance, but I want to stress that what is left after removal of the allowance is still the best program in the country, the best exemption in the country, a 9-cent exemption.

We were the only province that actually had a rebate over and above the exemption, so I feel very comfortable with this change.

Also, I'd just point out that it is an eligible expense in the ag stability program, so the loss of it can be somewhat mitigated by that.

Ms Kubinec: My second question is to the same minister. I'm thankful that you brought up the ag stability program. In order to participate in the federal-provincial ag stability program, many farmers, including myself, are spending about $2,300 per year on dues. I would like to know the benefit that we would see by spending upfront money when crop insurance may likely preclude us from ever collecting through this program.

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, ag stability and crop insurance are not the same thing. In fact, ag stability is broader. It covers more risks, more perils, things like input expenses, loss in storage, market disturbances, that type of thing. So it's prudent to protect oneself and to mitigate one's risk by subscribing to the ag stability program, which is a voluntary program. We also are developing additional insurance options as well, so people can protect themselves that way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: given your explanation, shouldn't all producers who want to participate in ag stability carry insurance as a matter of course?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a topic of some considerable discussion, and right now the ag stability program is a voluntary program. We do have mechanisms in place, though, to prevent people being paid twice. For example, the ag recovery program and the ag stability program have mechanisms within the assessment parts of those programs to prevent that. We think that people should be protecting themselves by buying insurance, so a deeming provision is really quite reasonable, I think, so that there isn't that kind of a double payment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Carbon Tax

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. More than anything an increase in the carbon levy would convince outsiders of Alberta's commitment to cut carbon emissions. Now, prominent conventional oil and oil sands companies have been factoring a carbon levy into their business planning, so they are ready. My question is to the Minister of Finance. How long will the government continue to hide behind the ruse that a levy based on increased intensity of emissions convinces anyone that we are serious about climate change?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the member meant the minister of environment, not Finance, so I'll take the question. We in Alberta were the first, as this hon. member knows, to put a price on carbon, at $15 per tonne. To date we have collected over $300 million. We are reducing emissions. We know as well that we are growing this economy and supplying oil to the world, so it's important, that emission intensity, but it's also important for us to make sure that we're reducing the emissions that we are. We're committed to that, and we're committed to looking at our climate change policy as well.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Well, if you prefer, the next question is to the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board. Given that Alberta's $15 levy on increased intensity brought in $90 million last year, B.C.'s $15 levy on actual emissions brings in $1.7 billion, and the Alberta Liberal plan would have brought in $1.8 billion, does this government have the courage to raise the carbon levy to $30 per tonne of actual emissions or $40 per tonne? When do we get to put a price on pollution?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government, as I said, was the first jurisdiction in North America to actually put a price on carbon and legislate that price to reduce emissions intensity by 12 per cent. This government has been a leader in this and will continue to lead in this. What we want to do is to make sure that we're reducing emissions. Alberta is reducing emissions. We are using our climate fund for green technology, for green jobs, and making sure that we are creating opportunities so that we move off fossil fuels and move to greener technology.

Ms Blakeman: Does this government not understand that the world is moving in the direction of higher carbon levies?

The Premier can take a thousand trips to the U.S. to convince them to buy our oil, but if the powers that be believe that Alberta is part of the problem, we're sunk. Answer that.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta and our government are committed to reaching our targets for greenhouse gas emission reduction. We have said that. I've said that as minister. The Premier has said that. Our government has said that. I've asked my department to renew our climate change strategy to ensure that we will meet not only our 2020 targets but our 2050 targets. This Premier, myself as minister, our government are committed to doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Summer Temporary Employment Program

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For decades the STEP program has supported important services by community groups like the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues and Bethel Community Church, who were here today. At the same time STEP has provided opportunities for young people to gain valuable work experience in their fields. The elimination of the STEP program will affect families, single mothers, community groups, faith groups, and NGOs and impact all Albertans. Will the Premier apologize for calling the STEP program a crutch?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and I have had many discussions about the STEP program, and she and I both know how valuably it has served Albertans over the 40 years, just about, that it's been in place. But any 40-year-old program needs to be reviewed. [interjections] As this government has done, renewed and reinvented itself and been progressively better every year. As we go through the results-based budgeting process, we're looking at the effectiveness of programs and how we continue to make sure that programs reach the outcomes that we desire and need for Albertans.

Mr. Bilous: I believe the hon. minister means a 40-year government.

Given that many parents, families, and communities depend on the sports, arts, and literacy programs that will disappear along with STEP and given that the Premier believes that STEP is outdated even though the youth unemployment rate in this province is 8.8 per cent, will the Premier admit that she has made a bad decision?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I have to take full credit for that decision. That's in my department. These are all difficult decisions, but you have to look at the outcomes that you're trying to achieve. Are you achieving them in the most effective way? Our youth unemployment rate is actually one of the lowest in the country. There are many opportunities, and there are other job programs for youth both provincially and federally. Our Alberta Works office will be working with youth, as it does with other Albertans, to help find those jobs that are available and going begging in this province at the moment. But on the other side of the equation, we will be working with the not-for-profit organizations to make sure that they have the opportunity in other ways to attract the students they need to learn about careers in the not-for-profit sector.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Short-sighted, hon. minister.

Given that the STEP program employs more than 3,000 young people and given that this program works with more than 2,400 organizations province-wide, will the minister do the right thing and reinstate the STEP program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will do is acknowledge that there are lots of organizations across this province who have been hiring young people and giving them an opportunity to learn about jobs in the not-for-profit sector and in the service sector. What I will say is that we will continue to work through our Alberta Works office and with the other programs available to help make sure that young people have an opportunity to find good jobs during the summer, when they're off school, so that they continue both their schooling and their learning profile in the not-for-profit sector. We will continue to work with the not-for-profit sector to make sure that the important learning opportunity to introduce people to their sector will continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Leduc-Beaumont.

Education Property Tax

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The disappointment that I spoke of yesterday from numerous Alberta communities has been replaced with outrage today over provincial changes to the way the education taxes are collected. In Chestermere a single mother told our mayor at the school drop-off today: I don't know where I'm going to find 400 extra dollars. In Wood Buffalo administration told me today that this tax will mean an additional $16 million in one year coming from their community. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why are you downloading responsibility for your own fiscal mismanagement to municipalities?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure for me to explain the way the education property tax system works in this province. The province lays out and collects 32 per cent of the education property tax from taxpayers, property owners. We collect that amount from the province of Alberta regardless of how you divvy it out. But 11 municipalities were heavily mitigated by 51 others which paid more taxes than they should have. We sought equity so that everyone pays their fair share. We're still going to mitigate the transition out of the mitigation formula, but this is about a similarly valued house in a similar class paying similar taxes, equity for Albertans.

Mr. McAllister: I assure you, Minister, that that's not how Albertans are seeing it. Given that you campaigned on a promise not to raise taxes and given that I've heard you yourself say several times that you won't balance the books on the backs of municipalities, can you explain to Albertans and all of us in here, including members that represent communities affected by this, how government reaching into the pockets of families is not a tax increase?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to explain again that it was unjust for 11 municipalities to have their education property tax collection heavily subsidized by 51 other municipalities that made up the difference, homeowners that had to make up the difference and pay more education taxes than they should have. We still collect the same amount of taxes. The changes that some people see are because the value of their home has gone up. That's a good-news story. Albertans' net worth is increasing because this is the best economy in the world to be in right now.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, a tax is a tax is a tax.

I'm going to try something different, though. I believe the minister to be a responsible man. Minister, will you please revisit this issue, or at the very least will you meet and consult with community leaders and find a way to slow down this giant tax increase on those municipalities and phase it in, at least give them some time with it?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I think I've said it twice already now. We are mitigating the loss of the mitigation formula for those municipalities that are having heavy impacts so that it is a slower transition over the next few years as they get rid of it. I'd also like to emphasize that the province of Alberta has not raised the rate of education property taxes. It's all due to assessment. In fact, in this province year after year after year we either hold the line on the rate of taxation or we lower it. It's the equity that causes some places to increase.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Wellness Initiatives

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent report from Stats Canada indicates that Canada has a significant issue with the number of Canadians that are overweight or obese. In Alberta more than half of our adults are considered overweight or obese. To the Associate Minister of Wellness. Compared to the other provinces, I understand that Alberta does not stack up well. How can we possibly turn this around? What is in your quiver, Mr. Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member not only for his question here today but for his past, present, and, I'm going to say, future political support for wellness initiatives. He's truly been a champion for wellness. He is correct. Alberta ranks only in the middle amongst the provinces with Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario.

According to this study 52 per cent of Albertans are overweight, and experts agree it is a complex issue. It requires a comprehensive approach. It requires various levels of government, private industry, communities, schools, families, and individuals to all come together. That's exactly what we're addressing through partnerships at each of these levels, Mr. Speaker. We intend on being a leader in wellness so Albertans live longer and enjoy a better quality of life than they do today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Connected to this issue is the achievement of a healthy weight. Why is the province not doing more to assist children in this respect?

Mr. Rodney: Thank you again to the member. We've seen great results, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, from the healthy school community wellness fund. You know, it supports healthy school community projects in 47 of 59 school districts. We've also developed many programs to support the healthy development of children, as the member asked. Ever Active Schools, Healthy U food checker, and the REAL Kids initiatives are just three. On top of that, the healthy school community awards recognize individuals and schools and communities who come together as champions for positive outcomes for youth.

Mr. Speaker, our focus on wellness is about creating healthy habits from the start so that kids have what they need for the rest of their lives and can pass it on to their children.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Mr. Minister, because many jobs require sitting for ridiculously long hours, causing a myriad of health problems, what are you doing to encourage Albertans to get up and get moving?

Mr. Rodney: Well, it sounds like this member knows of this quite well, and so do all the other members here. So many people across Alberta are working really hard, and they are spending a fair bit of time trying to balance both an active lifestyle and time at work, especially sitting down. We've recognized eight employers very recently. They've made great strides in this regard with health and well-being. It's about the Premier's awards for healthy workplaces.

I encourage all members and all Albertans, as a matter of fact, to visit the Healthy U website: healthyalberta.com. It really is a fabulous one-stop shop on healthy eating and active living. There's a whole lot more: Eat Smart Meet Smart. We want everyone in this province to be a health champion, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Medical Services in Consort

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2011 Alberta Health Services temporarily shut down acute-care beds in the town of Consort due to a lack of physician services. It's 2013, and the people of Consort have been stonewalled for two years when they've come to Alberta Health Services for updates on this issue. To the Minister of Health: on behalf of the good people of Consort here in the gallery why have you still not supplied them and their neighbours with the medical services they need?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minister thank you for the question. To the folks that are here visiting: we know this is a difficult time for the community and that the loss of those five acute-care beds in Consort is very important to Small Town, Alberta. I can tell you that the commitment to keep the 15 long-term care beds in that facility remains, and I can also tell you that the commitment from Alberta Health Services remains. They will work with the community to ensure that the great services of Alberta Health Services continue in that community.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, again to the minister. Given that the lack of physician services was the reason listed for the closures in the first place and given that the people of Consort went out and found new doctors, built them homes, and brought them to Consort, I ask the minister: the physicians are in Consort; where are the acute-care beds?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, like I said previously, the issue is that there's a temporary closure. The citizens and the MLA know that very, very well. I understand that there's a recent hiring of a second physician there. I'm hoping that's going help out the situation, but I can't guarantee you that right now. That's the work of Alberta Health Services.

Mr. Strankman: It's beyond me.

To the minister again: since it's been two years since the people of Consort were told that their acute-care beds were being temporarily shut down, will you give the people of Consort a clear timeline of when this government will keep its promise and give them back their beds?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to mislead anybody. I can't give you a clear timeline of when that decision will be made, but I can guarantee you that Alberta Health Services will work with that community to make sure that the reopening of that facility, when that comes about, will be well advertised, and the people will know that. I do not want to promise anybody something that I cannot deliver.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

School Overcrowding

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Overcrowding in schools continues to be a pervasive issue in my constituency of Edmonton-South West. One case I want to bring to your attention: Johnny Bright school. We have our grade 8 and grade 9 students having to take the bus and leave the only junior high they've ever known, pack up and go to a school some 45 minutes away when just earlier this same year they had to request portables in order to deal with rampant overcrowding. I'm sure that all hon. members would agree that the increased class sizes that result from overcrowding present a severe obstacle to student learning. Could the Minister of Education please indicate why schools that were built just two years ago continue to have insufficient student capacity in southwest Edmonton?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question on the mind of many of this MLA's constituents. I know he's been a great advocate, and he's had me call his parent council from Johnny Bright just this last week. I want to say that we do the planning for schools like Johnny Bright in conjunction with the local school boards based on projected need. Unfortunately, in this situation the population growth has just outpaced what was expected. The good news is that in Budget 2013 we've recommitted to the 120 projects that the Premier committed to during the election. I would say that we've elected the right Premier because we are going to continue building those schools.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that this drastically impacts the lives of families and given that a number of sisters and brothers are now going to be attending different schools in September, will you be providing any more modular units, portables, or any other options in the short term to address these existing space needs within our schools so that we can minimize the impact on these families in Edmonton-South West?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, in consultation with the Minister of Education and in consultation with all the school boards in Alberta we are working on a plan to put modulars out into the province. The school boards are getting letters as we speak, and the minister has been sharing his plans with the school boards. The letters should be out soon.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again back to the same minister. Given that southwest Edmonton needs new schools desperately and given that we are continuing to increase in population size at an overwhelming pace, why are we continuing to build schools through a P3 model instead of the traditional method of simply giving school boards the money and they can build the schools with their own unique designs?

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, we only use P3s when they make sense. Since we started using P3 schools, all projects have been delivered on time and under budget. Using P3s allows us to build a lot more schools in a short period of time, getting a better bang for the taxpayer's dollar. We have saved Alberta taxpayers more than $245 million since we started building schools with P3s. We also get a 30-year maintenance guarantee with P3s. Flexibility in school design is also addressed using P3s. It's there.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements, starting with Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Human Trafficking

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a pervasive issue that impacts families here in Alberta, across Canada, and throughout the world. This issue is human trafficking. Human trafficking is the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring, or the receipt of persons by means of threat or use of force. Individuals who are exploited through human trafficking are often first subjected to extreme poverty, unemployment, lack of education, inadequate social programs, gender-based inequality, corruption, war and conflict situations, and political unrest in countries of origin. The United Nations has estimated that this illegal activity generates approximately $32 billion annually for its perpetrators.

Alberta and Ontario have the highest incidence of human trafficking for forced labour right here in Canada. Contrary to popular perception, over 90 per cent of these cases involve domestic rather than international human trafficking. It has been noted that aboriginal women and girls are at particular risk.

In Alberta there are organizations that are currently working to support those who have been affected by human trafficking activities. The Chrysalis Anti-Human Trafficking Network offers free counseling and emergency support services for survivors. Additionally, the Alberta Action Coalition on Human Trafficking also undertakes a variety of activities, including education, advocacy, agency collaboration, and victim assistance, including managing an emergency victims' fund. Organizations such as these are especially vital to addressing this illegal activity.

As well, our government plays an important role in addressing this type of crime and in providing support for victims of human trafficking. The Alberta law enforcement response team and its training unit, the Alberta specialized law enforcement training, provide specific support for victims of human trafficking.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Medical Services in Consort

Mr. Strankman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Constituents of Drumheller-Stettler are in the gallery today as this out-of-touch PC government prefers to support corporate welfare, high salaries, and political insiders with pay raises for themselves instead of supporting acute care in our rural communities. These constituents have come together out of frustration with this government.

Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 2011, the Consort Hospital and Care Centre was notified that their acute-care beds would no longer be available for use. This was caused by a lack of physicians within the community. The community understands this and, with their concern, has worked towards a positive solution. Since then the Consort community has dedicated their efforts, resources, and abilities to securing and employing physicians for the Hospital and Care Centre. The community has worked together with their residents, the hospital staff, and the municipality to ensure that they meet the requirements for Alberta Health Services. The community was told that once they secured physicians, their acute-care beds would be reinstated, and they are looking to this government to keep their promise.

This government says that they care about communities and they want to keep them vibrant, yet when the community comes together to meet all requirements, they leave the town of Consort hanging. How do these communities encourage physicians to come to them when Alberta Health Services and this government continually block all positive efforts? As the MLA for Drumheller-Stettler I implore this government to keep their promise that they made to the citizens of Consort and immediately reinstate these acute-care beds.

Métis Settlements Long-term Agreement

Ms Calahasen: Twenty-three years ago I stood here on this very same spot, honoured to sponsor two of four pieces of legislation that changed the lives of Métis people in Alberta, the only province to recognize Métis as its citizens. It was a promise made by another Premier to work with settlements to become self-sustaining. It brings me to another promise made and a promise kept, and it's by our Premier Redford. That promise was to negotiate a long-term agreement with Métis settlements so they can continue to become self-sustaining communities like municipalities are. This was done on March 12.

That commitment means that we will work with Métis settlements to close the social and economic gaps that exist between settlement members and other Albertans, create strong and accountable governing bodies, and develop community services that are on par with other Alberta communities. All of these actions are key building blocks to create communities that are self-sufficient. Like all Albertans, people living on Métis settlements want a good education for their children, good employment opportunities, a chance to contribute to and benefit from our strong economy, and safe, healthy communities. The actions laid out in the long-term arrangement will bring these aspirations to reality. Over the next 10 years Métis settlements will move toward a governing model that will closely resemble other local governments, a model that will make it possible for settlements to raise their own revenues to ensure a good quality of life for their members.

Congratulations to Métis elders, communities, the Métis leaders, and a special thanks to the Premier for keeping this promise and to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations for his perseverance and leadership on this file. The long-term arrangements signify a new day for the Métis settlements and a brighter and stronger future to come in a strong and prosperous Alberta.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you have a notice of motion?

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I'd like to move that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the suspension of medevac flights to Edmonton City Centre Airport on March 15, 2013, and the serious concern that this closure could result in the needless death and disability of Albertans who require emergency medical treatment.

I provided the requisite copies of the notice to the Clerk and ask that it be distributed to the members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: I didn't quite catch the eye of Drumheller-Stettler on a petition that you had. I'll allow you to present it now, assuming it's in order.

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The petition that I have here: 944 names, 77 letters of support from taxpayers, and 113 letters of support from businesses. I wish to table this petition, and I have the required copies for the assistants.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. member, just as a reminder, we do have a rule that says that petitions that are to be presented must have Parliamentary Counsel approval. That's all I was asking. Assuming you sought that, fine. If not, as a new member I would just ask you to explain that you will in the future.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, sir. I was with the understanding that my assistant had achieved that.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you very much.

2:50

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would have tabled this yesterday at your request, but we got cut off early from being able to finish all of the tablings. This is the list of documents that I referenced in my speech in response to the budget a couple of days ago. These are the names of the journalists that the Finance minister thinks are too thick to understand his budget, columns by Rick Bell, Don Braid . . .

Mr. Horner: Point of order.

Ms Smith: . . . Mark Milke, Calgary Herald editorial board, Graham Thomson, Lorne Gunter, Bev Dahlby, and Licia Corbella. Five requisite copies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Did I hear the hon. Minister of Finance rising on a point of order during the tabling?

Mr. Horner: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Noted.

Are there other tablings? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a few tablings. The first is an article from the Bonnyville Nouvelle dated March 12, 2013, entitled Why the Rush to Reroute Medevac Planes? It explains a conversation with a spokesman with STARS, who said that he's unsure if they currently have the capacity at the International Airport.

The next tabling I have is an e-mail dated March 13 from a Lindsay Webb, who's pleading with the government not to close down the air medevac services. The requisite copies.

The next is an e-mail dated March 10 from a Gladys Boisvert, who's the president of the St. Paul health care auxiliary and trustee with the St. Paul & District Hospital Foundation, urging, again, that the government not close down the emergency medevac services at the municipal airport.

The next is a letter, with requisite copies, from a Natasha Downes, who's urging the province not to close down the medevac services at the downtown airport.

Next I have a letter dated March 10, 2013, from a Raymond Germain, who indicates a story where his brother had a very serious traumatic incident and used the air medevac services, and he's urging the province not to close it down.

An e-mail dated March 13, 2013, from a Robert Pionteck from Cold Lake urging the government not to close down the medevac services.

Finally, an e-mail dated March 13 from a Thomas Yaksich from Cold Lake urging the province to not close down the medevac services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I have the hon. Minister of Human Services, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar, and then four more, so let's tighten them up. The time is moving.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege of tabling pursuant to standing orders an estimate schedule for the scheduling of the main estimates following the delivery of the budget. In tabling it, I would just like to say that last year we had nine days to review estimates in committees; this year we have 10 days in committees. Last year we had nine days where committees sat at the same time; this year we have four days where that happens. Last year we started five days after the budget reviewing the estimates; this year we're starting 11 days after the budget to review the estimates. Last year all ministries had three hours; this year seven ministries will be reviewed for six hours and one for five hours. Last year the review of the estimates happened over a period of 28 days; this year over a period of 49 days. Taking the estimates seriously this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of one of the many e-mails I received about this PC government's cancellation of the STEP program. Bethel Community Church is one of the countless organizations devastated by this cancellation of this program. Wendy Werkman, the church's administrator, writes that they've been hiring two students every year since 2005 and that many of these students have gone on to become teachers or social workers. The cancellation of the STEP program, which the Premier called a crutch, is yet another example of this government's broken promises to the people of Alberta.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of e-mail submissions that Albertans made to our prebudget tour, which visited seven cities in February. Robert, Chris, Brock, and Jack are some of the Albertans who provided valuable input. For example, Brock Robertson writes, "I'm so old I can remember Peter Lougheed defeating the Socreds on a platform of diversification – why then are the Tories so eager to continue exporting raw non-renewable natural resources rather than refined products?"

Submissions like this clearly show the priorities of Albertans and how out of touch this PC government actually is with its broken-promises budget.

The Speaker: Hon. members, no editorializing, please. Let's just get the tablings done. We're running against the clock, okay? In the future I will cut you off if you do that.

All right. Let's move on here, please. President of Treasury Board, you will follow Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling, five copies, from Sarah Hoffman, the president of the Cloverdale Community League executive, stating that the executive is disappointed that the STEP grant has been cut and proud of the programs that they used to be able to use that program for and urging the provincial government to reinstate the grant.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. You have a tabling?

Mr. Horner: Sure, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies each of the financial analysis that was done by noted financial analysts from Scotiabank, Bank of Montreal, and the National Bank Financial Group, who all gave our budget a positive response and also looked at the format and recognized that it is the proper format for financial documents to be done in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. An e-mail from a constituent, Emily Yu, concerned about the reduction of the price of generic drugs and the collapsing of the three tiers into one for dispensing drugs. She believes that the result will be greater cost to the government and taxpayers and higher hospitalization and emergency room admittances, which pharmacists could have prevented if they'd been allowed to give the care.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of Dr. Sherman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, a report dated April 2009 entitled An Uncertain Future for Seniors prepared by the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives; a report dated July 2004 entitled There are Not Enough Hands: Conditions in Ontario's Long-term Care Facilities prepared by the Canadian Union of Public Employees; a document dated September 2004 entitled Nursing Home Profit Status and Quality of Care: Is There Any Evidence of an Association; and a report dated December 1994 entitled Do For-Profit and Not-For-Profit Nursing Homes Behave Differently.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hughes, Minister of Energy, response to Written Question 10, asked for by Mr. Hale on March 11, 2013: for the fiscal year 2012-13, how many oil sands producers paying reduced royalties will reach their payout stage, and what effect will that have on nonrenewable resource revenue; in response to Written Question 20, asked for by Mr. Hehr on March 11, 2013: which companies have been granted royalty credits by the Department of Energy through the incremental ethane extraction program since its inception to December 31, 2011, and what is the value of the credits.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we have at least two points of order that I'm aware of.

And I think, hon. Minister of Justice, if I have my timing right, you were first.

Mr. Denis: Yes. I'll be very brief, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The citation. Proceed.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: I just rise with reference to rule 23(h), (i), (j), and (l) but also referring to some articles from Beauchesne's. The hon. Leader of the Opposition made reference to the word "lie" during one of her questions. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure you know – I refer you to Beauchesne's 489, "Since 1958, it has been ruled unparliamentary to use the following expressions." On page 146 there are citations there from 1959 up until 1973 on how the word "lie" is not to be used. I also look to Beauchesne's 492, on page 150 "lies" is also mentioned. I would humbly ask that the hon. member personally just apologize for using that term in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, obviously, some things were said by the hon. Justice minister with regard to, for example, this leader voting on an impaired driving bill, which she wasn't even in the House to vote on, of course, because she wasn't elected at that time, and calling for lower enforcement on highway 63. She has never called for lower enforcement on highway 63. So he was saying things that were very inaccurate. That said, as with all new members, we all have to, you know, review the rules, and "lie" certainly is not a word that should be used, and neither should the Justice minister say things that he knows are not true, so I certainly on her behalf withdraw that remark.

The Speaker: Thank you. That saves us some time. It's been withdrawn, so that will conclude that matter.

The second point of order. The hon. President of Treasury Board.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order with the citation 23(i), imputing "false or unavowed motives to another Member." When the hon. Member for Airdrie made a false accusation of me breaking the law, I didn't stand up on a point of order even though I probably could have because he was making an allegation that I did something which I did not, directly to the integrity that I have spent my lifetime building.

Mr. Anderson: Well, call a point of order next time.

Mr. Horner: Well, I will next time and possibly even more.

Mr. Speaker, when she was doing her tablings, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition made a comment that I made some comment that somehow suggested the journalists and she were thick. She was tabling what she used in her speech as references of the opinion that she agreed with in terms of the financial statements and presentation. That's entirely false. It's not something that I have imputed at all. What I did say was that we used financial experts to create the budget. We used financial experts in terms of the drafting of the format. The advisers that we used, in terms of how we were going to go about planning out the debt repayments and everything else, are all from the financial community, not from the journalistic community, which the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition seems to be using. So it's not at all that I was inferring that the journalists were thick. Far from it. There are others over there that I might impute that to.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader for the opposition.

Mr. Anderson: Obviously, we can't call points of order on points of order, but the hon. member clearly was just imputing that folks on the other side of the House are thick, in his words, which, you know, I wouldn't call parliamentary language. I would also note that one could say that you just uttered a threat against me, hon. member, when you said that you were willing to do more than a point of order. I'd be pretty careful about uttering such threats.

Now, with regard to what was said, this hon. member has in this House on multiple occasions, including in his answers when he was referring to those journalists, Mr. Speaker, clearly stated multiple times inferring that those speakers or those journalists as well as this member here clearly did not get it, that we were being ignorant. He's used the word "ignorant" several times. He says that we haven't read the document. There are many different adjectives that he's used to describe us in this regard.

Obviously, our interpretation is that when he continues to use those words and continues to say that we just don't get it, that if we would just read the documents and if the journalists would just read the documents, maybe they would get it, by imputing in this way, he's clearly saying that we're obviously too silly and dumb to understand it. I don't know how else to take that, but I'm glad that he's clarifying that he didn't call the journalists thick and that he was only calling us thick. I guess that's good. It's unparliamentary, but fair enough.

The Speaker: Are there others who wish to join into this? I hope not. Thank you.

You know, I guess nothing should really cease to amaze any of us in this House on occasion because it is where emotion can sometimes reach a very high level. Emotions sometimes give rise to words that we frequently regret having said. I think we had a couple of examples of that today. Just moments ago on a previous point of order we had a comment made about the use of the words "lie" or "lies," we had a retraction and a withdrawal – thank you for that – and now we're talking about motives being avowed one way or the other, threats and words of that nature being used.

I just want to remind you of a couple of things. I say this for the benefit of all, not just the new members but the seasoned members, who know this. On page 444 of Erskine May – it's one of several good sources of information for how one ought to conduct oneself – it reads under Personal Allusions and Unparliamentary Expressions:

Allegations against Members

Good temper and moderation are the characteristics of parliamentary language. Parliamentary language is never more desirable than when a Member is canvassing the opinions and conduct of his opponents in debate.

It goes on on page 445 to talk about unparliamentary language, and it says:

Expressions which are unparliamentary and call for prompt interference include:

- (1) the imputation of false or unavowed motives;
- (2) the misrepresentation of the language of another and the accusation of misrepresentation;
- (3) charges of uttering a deliberate falsehood;
- (4) abusive and insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder. The Speaker has said in this connection that whether a word should be regarded as unparliamentary depends on the context in which it is used.

Expressions are still unparliamentary even when based on a quotation from elsewhere.

There's more on that front as well.

Finally, you will remember perhaps that on February 21, 2012, nearly a year ago, the Speaker of the day quoted on parliamentary language the following:

Another authoritative statement is found in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, 2nd edition, at page 618.

And he quotes:

The proceedings of the House are based on a long-standing tradition of respect for the integrity of all Members. Thus, the use of offensive, provocative or threatening language in the House is strictly forbidden. Personal attacks, insults and obscenities are not in order. A direct charge or accusation against a Member may be made only by way of substantive motion for which notice is required.

Now, today being Thursday, we saw ample examples of violations or near violations of that. I would again tell you and ask you to please – please – refrain from the personal attacks. This is supposed to be a place where we meet honourably to discuss, to disagree, to voice our expression, to advocate for our constituents, and so on, but it is not a place to stand and take personal shots at each other. That is the lowest form of discussion and debate, not only in this House but out in the community and elsewhere. You wouldn't be doing that when discussing things with your friends and rivals outside of here. I'm sure you wouldn't. Why would you do it here?

Let us move on. We have no more points of order, then? That clarifies that matter and concludes it.

Emergency Debate

The Speaker: I think we have an SO 30 to deal with. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Medevac Services

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to propose the following motion under Standing Order 30. As required by Standing Order 30(1), written notice was provided to the Speaker two hours prior to the sitting of the Assembly. A letter has been sent, signed by 104 doctors expressing their concern that ending medevac services to the Edmonton City Centre Airport tomorrow, Friday, will endanger lives. The doctors are deeply concerned and are working to have this closure postponed until their concerns are fully addressed. The doctors are, to quote from their letter, urging the government to delay the March relocation of medevac flights away from the City Centre Airport until a proper plan is developed and implemented that will not result in unavoidable loss of life, increased suffering, and reduced health outcomes.

The motion is as follows:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the suspension of medevac flights to Edmonton City Centre Airport on March 15, 2013, and the serious concern that this closure could result in the needless death and disability of Albertans who require emergency medical treatment.

The issue meets the conditions laid out in Standing Order 30(7); namely, that this is the first motion proposed for today. This motion refers to a single matter, in this case the province ending medevac services to the Edmonton City Centre Airport. This motion does not revive any discussion held during session. There is no bill or motion relating to this concern, nor is there one likely to be tabled. This motion is not based on a question of privilege, and the discussion does not raise a question that according to the standing orders could be only debated on a motion on notice.

I'd like to address the question of whether there is a genuine emergency requiring immediate and urgent consideration. I think that it is self-evident that this issue meets the requirements. As allowed in the standing orders, I will provide a brief summary of the facts.

The government has announced that they will suspend medevac services to the Edmonton City Centre Airport on March 15, 2013. The relocation of medevac services to the International Airport will double the time it takes to move critically ill patients to the hospitals in Edmonton, making the total transit time from landing the aircraft to getting treatment in hospital 40 to 50 minutes longer in optimal weather conditions. Of course, it would be much, much longer on a day like today.

One hundred and four doctors have signed a letter asking that the province delay this closure so that the issue can be better understood and their concerns can be addressed. According to the doctors, who represent the concerns of thousands of patients in northern Alberta, this additional time to the hospital may be the difference between life and death. One hundred and four medical doctors, as of today and counting, have stated that the relocation plan on March 15 is flawed and state that the move is "unnecessary, costly, and will have fatal consequences" and that for the critically ill patients from northern Alberta it "will result in needless deaths and disability."

A STARS spokesman has stated in a newspaper that it's too early to know if STARS can fulfill the new role envisioned by AHS and that there is no helicopter or flight crew dedicated to transporting patients between the Edmonton International Airport and hospitals. According to these statements made publicly, STARS will make an average of two flights from its base in Edmonton every day; therefore, STARS would not be available to deliver medevac patients to hospitals during these times.

The government has yet to implement all the recommendations of the Health Quality Council report on medevac or indicate that they will be implemented soon. They have not built the overpass on highway 2, they have yet to dedicate an ambulance lane on the QE II highway, they have not synchronized the traffic lights in Edmonton, and they have not standardized the IV and monitoring equipment between fixed-wing STARS and ground ambulances.

Another recent Health Quality Council report indicated severe problems occurring when the government halted consolidation of EMS dispatch. It would be prudent to make sure every possible step is taken to ensure the same thing doesn't happen here.

The plan to add a new holding area to the Edmonton International Airport does nothing to improve patient care since patients will have already been diagnosed by sending doctors. They will not be aided by this facility.

The Edmonton City Centre Airport will continue to operate past the March 15 deadline. It is completely reasonable to propose a suspension of the relocation of medevac as the airport is capable and willing to continue accepting medevac flights while it continues to operate.

Given these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that this matter is, according to section 389 of Beauchesne's, "so pressing that the public interest will suffer it is not given immediate attention." The closure is scheduled for tomorrow, so it cannot be said that there will be another opportunity for us to address it. There will not be. This matter is not being considered by a court of law. There is no other recourse or avenue of appeal for the people of northern Alberta who are now concerned that their access to emergency services is being compromised other than the appeal to this Legislature. Furthermore, delivering emergency medical services is one of the most important things this provincial government does.

Given the facts presented here today, I believe it is in the interests of all of Alberta for this Legislature to permit a respectful debate on the postponing of the relocation of medevac services. When over 104 Alberta doctors are saying that lives are on the line, opening this topic for discussion is the least we can do. This is an imminent decision, and postponing this closure is literally a matter of life and death.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully ask that you rule in favour of this motion so that all members have a chance to speak on this significant issue, to listen to the arguments being presented, and to consider the consequences of the closure on the province and the people of northern Alberta before it is too late. Let me put it to you this way. If you or one of your family members or any member of this Assembly had family members in the north and needed timely emergency care where minutes mattered, would adding 40 or 50 minutes bother you? If a tragedy happened, would you not hope and wish that you had at least provided this Legislature the opportunity to fully debate the issue to ensure every precaution was taken? Let's not wait until a tragedy happens to change course. Let's not regret not having this important debate.

Thank you for your consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Standing Order 30 Motions

The Speaker: Hon. members, SO 30s are perhaps one of the most misunderstood and sometimes misinterpreted aspects of our long-standing parliamentary traditions. The word that is most often not understood is the word "urgency" as it applies to this first part. Just be reminded that this is not at this stage a question of defining the urgency of the particular issue. That's not what this stage is about.

Now, you did refer a couple of times to the urgency of why it has to be raised now. That's really what urgency means in this part of the procedure. Everybody recognizes it's an important issue. I know there are urgencies on both sides. Just for purposes of clarity I let you finish off your comments, but you were well into the debate that you are anticipating, and I think you recognize that. Nonetheless, I let it go.

Let's be warned, though, that in the future when we're arguing for or against urgency, it's only to do with whether or not it has to be done now and whether we should adjourn all other business of the Assembly in order to deal with this matter now because there is no other opportunity or because there is no other vehicle and so on. I think veteran members know that, so let me hear now what the timbre of the House is.

Edmonton-Centre on behalf of the Liberal opposition.

Debate Continued

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. You know how much I love a good Standing Order 30 debate. I have to say that I wish that I could support my opposition colleagues in calling for this debate, but this particular issue has been alive for some 20 years. While tomorrow is the date that medevac flights into the Edmonton City Centre Airport are to cease and be transferred elsewhere, we've had 20 years to get to this point. As a result, I'm struggling to define this as an urgent debate for today.

Just let me review a few things. Really, as the Speaker said, we're looking for three things: a specific issue, something that is urgent and important, and something that has no other opportunity to get a public airing. I looked through both Marleau and Montpetit – actually, the newer version of it is now House of Commons Procedure and Practice – and Beauchesne. M and M is 585, and Beauchesne is 387 and 389. Actually, you can go all the way to 398 on emergency debates. One of the things that it says is "no chronic or continuing concern." A 20-year history of something is fairly chronic and continuing.

I note that in Beauchesne 387 – I believe that it's urgent only in that the changeover is tomorrow, as I've said, but the issue has been alive since the 1980s. The province has known for 20 years that the medevac and other services would need to move at some point, once the plebiscite had been held by the citizens of Edmonton. I think it is critical and it is a failure of government that they have not addressed this until this date, but a reason for urgent debate it is not. I think that the issue of health care in northern Alberta is not well served by government. I think that is an incredibly important critical issue, but it is not one that would meet the criteria for urgency at this time.

One of the other cautions we're given is that it shouldn't be a highly partisan issue. What I see now is a fight between two different parties about who can score the most love from northern Alberta. But, as I said, I think the real failure is the government's failure to provide outstanding health care services to the people of northern Alberta.

Certainly, under Beauchesne 389 the requirement is that the issue be "so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention." I would argue, certainly, that the number of recommendations of the 18 that were put forward by the Health Quality Council: the government not implementing those is an absolute failure. But it is not an urgency of public interest. The government has had 20 years to deal with this issue, and they have failed to do so. They will, I'm sure, comment that they have done so in their own way. But 20 years does not make today the most urgent day of those 20 years.

So I regret that I can't support my opposition colleagues because, as I say, I do love an SO 30 debate. But based on what I'm looking at and based on the parliamentary criteria that is before us, this particular Standing Order 30 motion does not meet the criteria of urgency.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very interesting Standing Order 30. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has brought it forward and has argued its urgency on the basis of a changeover from the City Centre Airport, where medevac flights have been coming in for quite a number of years, to the Edmonton International Airport starting officially tomorrow.

I am going to agree with the hon. member that there is some urgency to this debate but not for the reasons that he's raised. This isn't an urgent debate because of the changeover. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has quite rightly said, this changeover has been coming since 1992 when the city of Edmonton held a plebiscite, a plebiscite which was again renewed, I think, in 1995. In July 2008 the city of Edmonton passed a bylaw saying that they were going to close the airport, and in October 2010 they closed the first runway.

The province was impelled at that point in time to plan for an orderly transition, and it did. It got a report from the Health Quality Council to talk about what was needed, and it went ahead to say that we cannot actually wait until the city of Edmonton closes that lane to make plans for the transition. We have to make those plans, and we have to do it in an orderly basis. That's, in fact, what the government has done.

The urgency is not the fact that the transition has happened. The urgency is not the fact that the planes are going to be flying into and out of the International Airport as of tomorrow. That has been a long-term plan, and quite frankly the hon. member opposite or any of the doctors or anybody else who didn't think that that was an appropriate process could have raised those issues at any time. The fact that they've chosen to whip up a motion around this issue at the last minute is actually quite tragic.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the urgency. The urgency is really around having a debate in this House to let the public of Alberta, particularly of northern Alberta, know exactly what the facts are relative to the transition and the planning and exactly what the facts are relative to the fact that their health is actually going to be handled, with respect to the medevac process, in a leading-edge way; that their lives are not being sacrificed; that, in fact, their lives are being respected and the fact that they live in northern Alberta is being respected; and the fact that because the City Centre Airport is being closed, there needs to be a prudent planning process and a prudent transition process, and that has been carried out. It is urgent that the public of Alberta know and understand that they can have confidence in their health care system notwithstanding the hysteria that the members opposite have been trying to raise and notwithstanding the misinformation that's been going out there.

Mr. Speaker, I would normally not be one to easily suggest that we should postpone the business of the House. In fact, there's some very important business. Appropriations is one of the most important pieces of business we can have. But on this occasion, notwithstanding the timeliness of the debate, which is five years too late, at least – you know, this is a debate which if it was a real question of urgency, should have come up, at a minimum, in October 2010 when the other runway was closed and put us at risk of this runway being closed on a time frame that was not of our choosing or making, one that we had to plan for rather than wait for. That would have been disrespectful, and that would have been a problem for northern Albertans for sure.

So I am hoping that we will have a debate this afternoon, an urgent debate, because it's urgent that the people of northern Alberta understand that as of tomorrow their health care will be just as important and just as well cared for, if not better cared for, than it has been as of today. That's the urgency of the debate. It's not a question of a number of people who have decided to take the last 10 days or 15 days or 20 days to go around and get people concerned about their health, when this process of transition has been happening over a long period of time, that it's been well known by all involved, certainly well known by the doctors that have been referred to, that doctors and others have been consulted in the process, that experts in this area have been consulted in the process. It's important, indeed urgent, that northern Albertans know that good work has been done on this issue and good work will continue to be done on this issue and that their health is not at risk.

It's also important, and I think even urgent, to take some of the emotion out of this debate and have a reasoned debate. We need to take the emotion out of the debate because the reality is, Mr. Speaker, that people do die. The fact that an ambulance is called in any particular circumstance is a situation which is a clear indicator that somebody is at risk – and I'm sure we'll hear about that – but I don't want to be hearing from this opposition or from anyone else that just because somebody died, the plan was flawed. That's not the issue. So I want to put that on the table right now. [interjections] If these individuals want to make every death in this province a failure of the health system, I'm telling you that that is not a reality. [interjections] That is not a reality.

So it is urgent that we put the facts on the table, that we reassure Albertans that this transition has been well handled, that we have leading-edge health care in this province, including medevac services, and that the citizens of northern Alberta who have to medevac to Edmonton will be well treated in this new system, perhaps even better than they were in the old system.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you consider whether we could proceed with an urgent debate this afternoon.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you know, I just explained that I allowed Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to go on without interjection. There were no interventions. Surely we can afford the same courtesy to others, even if we disagree with them. Surely we can at least do that.

Now, the custom and tradition is to allow one speaker at this stage from each of the four parties. I'm going to recognize one more, and then I'm going to make a decision.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, please.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on behalf of the New Democrat caucus. I will keep my comments short. I'm standing to argue in favour of a SO 30, that it meets the three criteria outlined: first, this is the first opportunity to raise this issue; there was and is no other place to discuss it in the agenda; and that it is a matter of urgent public importance.

First of all, starting tomorrow all medical flights from northern Alberta will land at a new hangar at the Edmonton International Airport. These patients would have otherwise been landing at the municipal airport. This represents a significant change in the way in which northern patients coming to Edmonton for care are going to be treated. Therefore, this is the first opportunity to raise this issue because it begins tomorrow. There is no other place in the agenda for this to be discussed. Question period simply is not debate, as you know very well, Mr. Speaker.

I just wanted to comment briefly that this is of urgent public importance because there is a large concern among Albertans that this move will compromise the quality of care available to northern Albertans. Government chose the International Airport based on the recommendations made by the Health Quality Council of Alberta report. However – and this is the part that I think the hon. minister is failing to recognize – the government has not followed all of the recommendations that are contained in the report, which means that the decision to move the patients to this location may be compromised when considering the quality of care that was expected when the Health Quality Council reported that they were satisfied with the move to the Edmonton International Airport.

The Edmonton municipal airport is not yet closed. Therefore, there may be an opportunity to continue using the Edmonton municipal airport until better arrangements can be made at the International Airport or another northern hospital receives the upgrades necessary to accept northern patients. If the government is going to consider an alternative, then it cannot proceed with its plan to divert all government aircraft to the International Airport tomorrow.

3:30

I think, Mr. Speaker, the matter of urgent concern is that we in this House are trying to prevent future deaths or accidents. I mean, the hon. minister mentioned that deaths happen. Yes, people do die, but if there is a way for this House to prevent future unnecessary deaths from occurring, then I think it is our responsibility to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I have listened very carefully and very attentively to this issue and to the discussion for urgency for the debate to proceed or not. I've listened to one speaker from each of the four parties now as I am bound to do by tradition more than anything else. The issue before us is to adjourn the debate of other matters in the House in order for this discussion to proceed. I am prepared now to make a ruling on this.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has in fact met the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office by providing the required notice at 10:08 this morning. The motion he provided reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the suspension of medevac flights to Edmonton City Centre Airport on March 15, 2013, and the serious concern that this closure could result in the needless death and disability of Albertans who require emergency medical treatment.

Members will recall that there are several relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject. Let me cite a couple of them for you very briefly. In Beauchesne under citation 387, where it talks about motions to adjourn the House, it reads:

The Standing Order is clear that the question be specific and must require urgent consideration. It must deal with a matter within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate . . .

But most decisions based on these conditions are bound to be subjective and few clear cut decisions can be made. In making his ruling, the Speaker may, on occasion, take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate.

As we have just heard, three of four parties have expressed a wish, which I will come to in a moment.

There's also an interesting citation, or paragraph at least, on page 689 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, which reads:

A Member may request leave from the Speaker "to make a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration". Furthermore, the matter "must relate to a genuine emergency" and, if the request is granted by the Speaker, the House is permitted to debate the topic at an early opportunity, foregoing the usual 48 hours' notice period.

That having been said, I did make some notes of all the people who spoke, and I am of the view, then, that this matter does meet the requirement for such a debate to occur.

Therefore, in announcing that, I'm taking into account that the move of the medevac services to the Edmonton International Airport is occurring tomorrow, I believe, March 15, as was phrased inside the motion. Therefore, I find that there will be no other opportunity for this Assembly to debate this issue, which is of importance to many Albertans, not only those living in the north but many others who are in their family support network or friend support network. As a result, I find it entirely within the realm to advise you that I find it very much in order for this debate to proceed.

Therefore, I shall now put the question forward to you, and I ask you to listen carefully because I'm going to ask you a question about the debate. If even one member objects, then we'll have to have a standing recording of it. That being said, here is your question – because it's really now in your hands; I've made my decision – shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed? Those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those opposed, please say no.

Having heard no opposition to the motion, we will now proceed with the debate. Basically, every member will be allowed up to 10 minutes to speak. There is no 29(2)(a) available. We'll go in the same rotation we just had.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, I'll recognize you first. We are now into the debate. We're finished with urgency. You can talk about the urgent issue if you wish. Please proceed, followed by the Liberal opposition, followed by the Government House Leader or a designate, followed by the ND opposition.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. As the Government House Leader said, I think it's very important that we put the facts on the table, and I think today is a perfect example to do that. We all saw the snow flying out here today, the miserable road conditions, and there are people here from Bonnyville right now. Now, what if on March 16 someone has a heart attack and they need emergency medical care? If it happened today, they could fly directly on a fixed-wing plane to the downtown airport, and then they're 1,300 metres away from the Royal Alex. That's probably 40 to 45 minutes, and then they're right at the downtown Royal Alex.

Now after today, if on March 16 they had a heart attack and needed timely emergency care, they would have to fly all the way to the International Airport. Because of the weather today, STARS helicopters cannot fly when it's snowing like this. It's not like the movies, where helicopters fly in rain and snow. They would have to take ground transportation from the International Airport to the downtown hospital. Think of how much time that would add. An hour, probably. So how is the hon. House leader even indicating that somehow the services are going to be equivalent? It's an impossibility.

In fact, no doctor that I know of has said that the services are going to be better or even equivalent. What has been done is that the Alberta Health Quality Council report has come up with some recommendations to try and reduce the negative impacts of this government's decision, yet they haven't even implemented those recommendations.

Life-saving medical services, Mr. Speaker, connect rural northern Alberta with world-class acute and emergency care in Edmonton, and now it's going to be rerouted from the downtown airport to the far away International Airport. In a timely fashion the government has failed to consult adequately, has steamrolled opposition, and has ignored the advice of doctors, now at 104 doctors and counting, in planning and executing this move.

The Government House Leader was mentioning deaths. This is what the doctors have said. The closure on March 15 "will result in needless deaths and disability." Needless deaths and disability. Yes, deaths happen all the time, but by taking the actions right now, there will be needless deaths. And, yes, Government House Leader, we will have that debate if that occurs.

Mr. Speaker, in optimal weather conditions by closing the downtown airport, we are going to be adding 40 to 50 minutes. That's on an optimal, pristine day where someone can fly to the International Airport and then take a STARS helicopter, provided it's available – because the STARS spokesperson said that they're not sure if they can actually provide the services within the current plan – to a hospital downtown.

Now, the Premier in her robocalls and recorded videos attempted to say that somehow the government has followed all of the recommendations in the Alberta Health Quality Council report. That is not true. It is not true. There are 18 recommendations. They have not built an overpass on highway 2, they have not synchronized the traffic lights in Edmonton, they have not standardized the IV and monitoring equipment between fixed-wing, STARS, and ground ambulances, and they don't have a dedicated lane on the QE II for ambulances. They tout this brand new triage unit at the International Airport as if this is some type of solution for this. It's not going to reduce wait times. It's not going to reduce wait times. You don't have tertiary care at the International Airport.

That's what the doctors are saying, doctors who know about this. And this isn't one or two doctors. This is 104 doctors – 20 from Grande Prairie, four from Fort McMurray, from Lac La Biche, Provost, Wainwright – all across this province that are trying to tell you guys this. They have no political agenda. Why would a doctor come out and do this? We know what can happen to them. They're standing up for their patients. It's not easy for them to do this. [interjections] Keep laughing, guys, about this topic. Really funny.

The plan to redevelop the lands . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: I think this is the fifth time I've stood up today to ask you to please not interrupt others. We might not like what they're saying, we may not agree with what they're saying, but they have a right to say it in this Assembly in accordance with the rules, provided they follow parliamentary procedure and everything else. Please. We've already decided and determined, by unanimous consent of the people earlier, that this is a matter that shall proceed. Let us allow it to proceed with the dignity that it deserves.

Hon. member, please continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to go through some of the myths. One of the myths that has been provided is that this is a city of Edmonton decision. Right now the plans for redevelopment are for 25 years. Two-thirds of the land can still be developed with LRT and those very important initiatives that the city wants to run, but the medevac lanes can remain open. The airport is not being functionally closed tomorrow. Planes are actually still in fact flying here. You know, there are private planes. Northern B.C. and Northwest Territories are still going to be landing. So why would we not delay the closure until the very last possible minute?

With respect to the city of Edmonton I am very confident – absolutely confident – that the citizens of Edmonton and the Edmonton city council care deeply about the safety and well-being of their northern neighbours. After all, Edmonton is proud of their collaborative position as the gateway to the north. I'm certain that if the provincial government explained the dangers these 104 doctors are saying that this immediate closure will cause, Edmonton would be willing to delay until the province does its job and establishes an actual alternative that will work. There's simply no rush to move this.

People trust their doctors, the men and women who care for them and their families and who live in their communities. The doctors have overwhelmingly opposed the move and have repeatedly pleaded with the government to reconsider. Now there are over 104 doctors, northern doctors, and counting who have stated that the PC government's decision to relocate medevac is flawed and that the move is "unnecessary, costly, and will have fatal consequences" and for the critically ill patients of northern Alberta "will result in needless deaths and disability." This government has ignored their advice.

This isn't an urban versus rural, a city versus province issue. It's about right versus wrong. I implore the MLAs here, especially the ones from northern Alberta who have their families, their loved ones, their community members there, to stand up and speak out on this issue. It doesn't have to be closed on Friday. It doesn't have to be closed on Friday. Let's not rush this. Let's make sure that all of the recommendations on the Health Quality Council report are implemented. That's the least that we can do for our constituents. A dedicated ambulance lane, an overpass: let's get those things done at a minimum. Let's not close it tomorrow. Let's delay the closure.

A couple of other myths, Mr. Speaker. STARS cannot fly in winter weather conditions like this. I know they're building a helicopter that may have the capacity, but right now there are only two STARS helicopters. That would be the third one. What if those helicopters are being used at another accident?

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that we all talk about the growth of the northern area, highways 63 and 881. The chief medical doctor who treats patients in those accidents, Dr. Richard Birkill – if you get into an accident, you're going to wake up looking at the lights in his operating room – said that the closure tomorrow will result in needless death and disability.

There are other myths here. The government has come out saying that there are only five critical patients a month that use these services. That's not right. The chief doctor in Lac La Biche alone said that there are 120 a year. I heard today in Bonnyville that there are a hundred a year. These aren't routine checkups. These are emergencies. If a woman is having complications with her pregnancy or if there is a closed head injury, these are the types of patients that they're sending. If it's not an emergency, they wouldn't be using the fixed-wing plane. They'd be using ground transportation.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I implore the hon. members across to stand up, do what's right, and try and delay this closure past Friday. Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're going to proceed in this order: a Wildrose member, followed by a Liberal member, followed by a government member, followed by NDP.

My next spot now is for a Liberal member if anyone wishes to take it up.

If they don't, then we're going to go over to the government side, and we're going to recognize the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to talk about this debate and the apparent urgency of the situation. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, this is a debate that's been going on for 20 years. I know that for the last three it's been an incredibly vigorous and impassioned debate all across the north and here in Edmonton, and I know that city councillors in the city of Edmonton have debated this very vigorously for the last three years.

It's unfortunate that suddenly some people think that this is critically urgent, as though it's never been discussed before, and implore that it should be stopped, Mr. Speaker. This government does not react on a moment's notice to something like that, which is why we have taken a long time, a couple of years, to prepare to move the medevac services, in anticipation that this was going to be inevitable, from the municipal airport to the Edmonton International.

Now, when it began, I do believe it was probably looking at how we could move the medevac services from the Edmonton City Centre Airport to the Edmonton International Airport and get some comparable service, Mr. Speaker. But, you know, some people look at the changes that are made and see it only as a challenge. They say that it can't be done, that it's impossible. There are people on the other side of this House that have said that. There are people all over the province that have concerns because of what some of them have said. But when there are challenges, we on this side of the House view it as an opportunity to find new ways of doing things, which is why we're going to be providing at least as good a service, and in many cases at the Edmonton International Airport the medevac services will be even better.

I know that people who have been opposed to the move sometimes characterize the service that was provided at the Edmonton City Centre Airport as exemplary, second to none, the perfect type of service. But that's incorrect. There have been incredible challenges at the Edmonton City Centre Airport. It's inappropriate to say that when a plane landed with a patient – 1,500 metres, Mr. Speaker, is a kilometre and a half. It is a fair distance when you are driving through the downtown core. To suggest that it's perfect all the time and you will always get in a matter of minutes to any one of the hospitals is inappropriate. Right now, today, I have some of my colleagues who drove in, and it took over an hour and a half to get through the downtown to get to work because of some weather. You combine the high-volume traffic times in the morning or in the evening with inclement weather, and you wind up with hours and hours of delays. So it's not necessarily an ideal situation.

They've neglected the fact, Mr. Speaker, that traditionally when the plane landed, because there was no other hangar available, patients were moved from the plane to the ambulance in the cold. For some health conditions that cold can have a tremendous impact. It's important to have better quality service than that.

There's also the issue, which we saw yesterday if anyone came and did the tour, that at Edmonton City Centre the equipment wasn't always perfect for moving quickly from one vehicle to another, from the plane to the ambulance, Mr. Speaker. You had to move out bits and pieces of equipment all the time, which made the transfer longer. Not an ideal situation.

We also heard from the paramedics themselves yesterday at the International Airport, Mr. Speaker, that the way it operated at the Edmonton City Centre Airport meant that even though there were two paramedics in any of the vehicles, there was only one available for the patient on the plane and in the ambulance to get to the airport. With the new system there'll be three available for every single patient, which is better care.

You know, we've heard stories about situations where there have been incredible technical glitches at the downtown City Centre Airport. We've had circumstances, Mr. Speaker, where the lights have gone out. It has not been the best, most secure system for medevac service for people in the north.

At the new station, the new solution that we have created out of this adversity, Mr. Speaker, the new opportunities we've found, you would have seen on the tour yesterday that when the plane lands at the Edmonton International Airport and pulls into the hangar, it's right beside STARS, something that we didn't have available at the municipal airport. The equipment is quickly and easily transposed. They did an example, if anybody from the other side of the House had cared to come, that showed moving the patient into the plane, out of the plane, and over into the new chopper that they've got. It was quick. It was seamless. It was incredible to watch, and the paramedics were very proud of having that technology.

We also saw the new helicopter that can fly in inclement weather, Mr. Speaker, which means that when a patient lands, it is only 10 to 12 minutes to get from the International Airport, despite the weather, despite the traffic, regardless of the traffic or the weather, to any one of the hospitals in Edmonton, something that can't be done from the municipal with inclement weather or heavy traffic, which means that the care and service provided to those who are coming in in emergency situations is better than it's ever been.

Now, you know, there are some people who have asserted that we should take over the Edmonton City Centre Airport or keep it open, Mr. Speaker. I've heard them throw around numbers, that it only costs $30 million. I asked the mayor yesterday, and he laughed very heartily at that. Again, I asked him, "What do you think it would cost?" He said, "Well, our numbers say about $2 billion."

I've asked my own department, and they've said that if you don't factor in the cost of lost tax revenue, which could double or triple that number, Mr. Speaker, it's billions of dollars on service that hasn't been the best it could be, service that is even better at the International Airport. People who even ask for us to keep delivering a service at the municipal airport instead of the international are now asking us to spend money on two different sites and keep the one open that's providing less adequate medevac service to people in the north.

When we talk about how much the airport would cost, we have to be very responsible with every single tax dollar that we spend in this province, Mr. Speaker, which is why we're continuing to invest and not presume that everyone in the north has to come in by plane for medevac service to get service in Edmonton. We want to invest in providing those services to people in the north so they don't need medevac. Eighty per cent of the flights that they come in on are regular, routine things. If those services were provided in places like Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, High Prairie, and Whitecourt, then those people wouldn't need to fly in.

The people in the north don't deserve to have billions of taxpayer dollars invested in the City Centre Airport on the premise that it will provide them better care for medevac service, Mr. Speaker, when it obviously doesn't. They deserve the best medevac service and investment in the facilities in their communities so they can stay home and get the good health care that they need. That's the plan that this province has. That's the vision we have going forward, and we will continue to do better, provide them better medevac service, and continue to provide them better health care service in their own communities in the north.

This is the right move. This is fantastic news for rural Alberta, Mr. Speaker. This is the plan we have for investing in the north and making sure that those people, who help contribute significantly to this economy, are treated like Albertans who get the services they need. That's why I'm proud to be part of this government and this team.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to support this motion as brought forward here this afternoon. I have a couple of different arguments that I would like to bring forward in regard to this situation. Also, on a personal level I would like to say that I've been following this situation with the airport for quite a number of years. I live right by the airport myself and was part of the citizens advisory council body when the municipality was considering this change. You know, I can say from my neighbourhood community and from that council that we had some serious reservations about how this whole process was brought forward over time. We were just hoping that we could seek some resolution for the good of our community and for the good of Albertans in general and find something that we can all work with.

I guess our main concern and the reason that Alberta New Democrats are supporting this emergency debate this afternoon is that there are a number of recommendations that the Health Quality Council put forward that have not been met up till this time, till the day before the services are meant to be closed off from the municipal airport and over to the International Airport.

Some of these things that the HQCA put forward that have not been met so far include the following, that traffic patterns be studied and an optimal ambulance route established from the Edmonton International Airport to tertiary care facilities.

That's to all hospitals that we have here in the Edmonton area. We know that the vagaries of traffic and weather conditions can obstruct the smooth flow of traffic from the airport, and certainly we need to look at this more closely before we move the service from one airport to another.

Another one is that an evaluation be conducted on the impact of traffic lights on transport times and changes implemented to minimize this impact. Changes could include installing an Optacom device/system to allow ambulances to change . . . lights to green or [perhaps] synchronizing traffic lights on the main routes from the Edmonton International Airport to tertiary care facilities.

Again, we all have experienced the traffic jams that can happen at certain times of the day from the Edmonton International Airport, and I think that we should resolve those issues before moving forward.

Number three:

all ambulances be equipped with a Global Positioning System so alternate routes can be determined when traffic is problematic.

You know, sometimes you have a circumstance, Mr. Speaker, where perhaps an emergency debate or a major change like this can actually benefit all Albertans. Who's to say that the best practice that we come forward with for equipping ambulances shouldn't be a standard that we could execute throughout the province, this GPS recommendation, in particular, I think?

Number four:

additional road infrastructure, such as an on/off ramp from the new facility [at the International Airport] that [could] provide faster access to north-bound Queen Elizabeth II or a dedicated emergency lane . . . be built.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we've all experienced, I'm sure, the bottleneck that occurs at the overpass that feeds the QE II both north and south. I think that this is again an opportunity to address the specific problem but perhaps fix a larger issue that has plagued that airport intersection for many, many years.

As well, Mr. Speaker, my second point that I want to bring forward – and I think this is very important – is that Alberta New Democrats first and foremost support the value of independence and the decision-making bodies of municipal governments. Municipal governments should receive the utmost level of respect for their work as any other level of government in our province. Please be sure to note that I am not rising here today, then, to discuss the decision made by the city of Edmonton to close the City Centre Airport. We have to respect these decisions. It was within the jurisdiction of the city of Edmonton to make this decision, and therefore we must accept that the airport will in fact close sometime in the future, as the city of Edmonton's government so desires.

However, the New Democrats certainly understand and empathize with those Albertans who are frustrated with the way in which the government of Alberta has addressed this issue. As I say, the failure to address the Health Quality Council's standards in a reasonable way is the reason that we certainly believe that we should take a sober second look at what the timing is for the closing and the changeover of this facility. The airplanes will still be landing and taking off at the municipal airport after March 15. I will attest to that since I live right by it. I watch them go up and down every day, and they will keep on doing so after the 15th. Until we meet the standards that have been put forward by the government and a body that is responsible for health quality in this province, I think it is irresponsible and incorrect to meet this artificial deadline that we would see taking place tomorrow.

I thank you for the opportunity to be speaking on this, and thanks to the member who brought it forward here this afternoon.

4:00

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I'm going to announce the speaking list right away, but please know that I have well over 20-some members who wish to speak. We have 30 minutes left, so if you would keep your comments down to something brief, that would be appreciated. It would allow the maximum number of people a chance to speak this afternoon.

I have Calgary-South East, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Thank you. Please proceed.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, I have various experiences in emergency medical services. I want to speak a little bit about those experiences because I think that when we all look at what we want for our families, certainly when I'm training paramedics or when I've been part of the emergency services system, what we want is the best quality. We never want to see anybody die. The reality is that people do die, and they will continue to die. I will not stand here and promise anybody that nobody will die.

I've been in that elevator when we thought everything was going okay, in an apartment building where the elevator barely fits the stretcher, two paramedics, and a patient, talking to the patient one minute and having them crash on you in the next. You know what? The elevator doesn't move any quicker when you're 27 floors up. You can't do effective chest compressions. You can't get your medications in that you want on time. It's a situation that's unfortunate, but I won't stand there and blame the elevator company for the way they designed the elevator or the building. It is what it is, and I'll accept responsibility for that.

The tough thing is having to talk to the other people that couldn't get in the elevator at the bottom of the elevator, who just said goodbye to their family member, and now we're working on them: "I'm sorry. You can't even ride in the front because we've got to go." When they get to the hospital, unfortunately, I've had to give that information to those loved ones that that patient passed away. So the severity of what we're talking about here is not light, and it is not something where politics should be played. It's not something where you hire a group and run them around to scare the hell out of Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, when I made a commitment to do no harm, part of that doing no harm is making sure people have accurate information to make informed decisions, to be sure that we're instilling confidence in the systems that we have today, to make sure that we build on our strengths, and not try to rip them down every time there is change.

Now, let's talk about that change for one minute. There is a person who sat in this Legislature in the very front chairs whom I respect immensely – and most Albertans did; we've heard about it over and over again since the budget has been delivered – and that's Mr. Ralph Klein. In the late '90s what the Klein government decided to do was shut down not just one major hospital in downtown Calgary but two. That's where people received emergency care, and he shut those down simply because there was better economic value in building hospitals in other areas, one being named after our most beloved Premier, and that's the Peter Lougheed that we know today.

What I will tell you is this. When those changes came, there were almost a million people that were terrified for fear of what physicians were saying, particularly those in downtown Calgary worried about access to care, not just care from an emergency perspective in terms of ambulance, but we were also looking at the ability for nurses to provide in-and-out care and specialty care and so on for those who lived in downtown Calgary. But, as we all know, that transition took place. We are providing better care at the Peter Lougheed Centre, the Rockyview. We have just built a state-of-the-art hospital. It's not just mentioned in Calgary but around the world. It's mentioned around the world as being state of the art. That's what we have here, so let's talk about the facts, Mr. Speaker.

What we have here and what we've heard is that the Health Quality Council has come out with a bunch of numbers, and you know what? The time has doubled. Well, has anybody on this side ever done the research in terms of where those times were determined?

As a paramedic I know there's a difference between emergency care and emergency driving and regular traffic for those regular patients. All those times were calculated with people going through regular traffic. But Alberta Health Services, again, went one step further to make sure for those regular-traffic patients. You cannot evaluate the emergency traffic because you can't fire up an ambulance and drive it through downtown Edmonton or anywhere else without a patient in the back. It's against the law. But they ran those times early in the morning, between 7 and 9, in rush hour. They ran them at noon. Then they ran them between 5 and 6, during probably the worst time that a highway ever receives traffic, and those are the times that they came up with.

I was talking to an air medevac flight pilot who's done it for 11 years, and he says that any time we've come into the International Airport – and let's be sure – there were 63 flights, seven of them being red, with no problems at all, Mr. Speaker. The flight pilot calls in. He says: I need priority. He gets the priority that he needs. This is from an experienced person. He has no gain in it. Nothing. In fact, he doesn't even do that anymore. When we taxied on our plane yesterday, it was slightly different. It was three minutes. He said: worst-case scenario, weather being terrible, crosswinds being terrible, it's 10 minutes. That's from somebody who knows.

Now, let me tell you something that I know because I've done it in Calgary for over a decade, picking up medevac patients, equal to or more than the amount of people that are being flown into Edmonton. I've driven to the Foothills in Calgary, which is not a direct line. It is through traffic, and it is almost exactly the same set-up that we have now with this new state-of-the-art facility, with ambulances that have the ability to take the stretcher from the plane right onto the ambulance. In Calgary we don't have that yet. We have to blanket drag them. We do it outside. It's cold for the patients. There's wind. There are planes firing up all over the place. But you know what? There's no incident there because the physicians that start the care in the beginning and the nurses all care. The paramedics and the pilots all care, and they know when it's serious.

Mr. Speaker, what we're being told here in terms of the facts is that we need a lane. A lane would be great. But I can tell you that when I turn the lights on on that ambulance, I've got every lane. We look at some of the stats. I sat in the St. Paul meeting for Save Our Medevac. When I saw those stats for the St. Paul medevac – and you should be aware of this – they put up a picture of an ambulance stuck in traffic without its lights on. How dare they say that there's a patient in the back of that ambulance dying? That is false. Otherwise, the lights would be on. It would be going right down the right-of-way, the shoulder, that we all saw in there. That's what I know, and you know it.

Mr. Speaker, what we're being told and what these poor northern Albertans are being sold: snake oil. It is not the truth. You know what? I respect the physicians because I talked to those physicians. In fact, 50 physicians were consulted in this process over a year ago. They are highly decorated physicians from emergency rooms, from ICU, from specialized care all over northern Alberta. They all received the letter, but here we are in an emergency debate one day before we're going to move to a state-of-the-art medevac service ability.

What I hear on this other side is: "Rick, you don't know. You're not a doctor." Well, you know what, Mr. Speaker? Here's what I can tell you. I'm an advanced-care paramedic. I've been out there in the ditch. I've had to make the decision, the hard decision based on the resources that I've had, to walk away from children that are taking their last breath to deal with the person who has drunk too much and decided to get in their car. You tell me that I don't know? I tell you that if it wasn't for the hard-working paramedics that are on the street and in your community saving lives to get them to these physicians, those patients don't get there.

I'll tell you what. If we're going to evaluate it, let's evaluate the whole thing because not every instance in medical care is black and white. It's often very grey based on the decisions. I look back over my career, and I tell you that there were times when I looked and thought: "Maybe I made a mistake. Maybe I waited too long. Maybe I didn't call in the additional resources." You know what? I can tell you that the caring, adequate, awesome physicians that we have in northern Alberta have the same questions. When we evaluate a call, we evaluate it from the time it comes in to the very minute it ends. That call just doesn't end when we get them to the hospital. It doesn't end in the trauma room there. It doesn't end on the ward. It may end 24 hours, 48 hours later, and we all own the responsibility of the care that we provided.

In fact, the Minister of Municipal Affairs had the meeting with Mayor Mandel yesterday. They are eager to move forward on the development of that airport. What this government has done is that we've gotten out in front of it. We have decided to make a decision, albeit not easy. I can tell you: if I could put an airstrip right next to every single hospital, wouldn't that be great? But is it economically feasible, and do the stats tell you that?

Let me reiterate the stats for you one more time. Ninety-two per cent of the people that were flown into Edmonton were actually regular traffic. They were nonemergent. They might have been ICU, but they were stable. There is a difference. Mr. Speaker. Here's what we know. In fact, the statistics at the end of the day, those time-critical patients, based on the dispatch information that actually came in – you know where the dispatch information comes from? The very doctors that send the patients. They're the ones talking to other doctors on the other line, the rapid scene, that say: "Hey, I've got this patient. Okay. Let's fire up the bird, and let's get him going." That's where the dispatch information comes from. They send them out. In fact, what Alberta Health Services and the Health Quality Council have done when they have come up with these numbers that give you five time-sensitive patients per month is that they've gone back and re-evaluated because their care has been awesome in flight, but their condition has deteriorated.

Mr. Speaker, I speak with passion, I speak with truth, I always want to be approachable, I always want to be believable, I want to be credible, and I'll continue to do that because I believe that this is the best possible solution for Albertans. In fact, I think it's going to enhance care. In talking to paramedics that I actually worked with and that I respect from all over this province, that do such a wonderful job, they have not objected.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, followed by Peace River.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the previous speaker as well. I understand, having been on the front line, that he's probably seen some pretty harsh incidents, and I understand the passion with which he speaks.

I think there is a solution to this issue. It doesn't need to be black versus white or rural versus urban or Edmonton versus everyone else. The reason we came into this issue – and we're not new to this issue, as it seems to be implied by the hon. Municipal Affairs minister. We took a position on this years ago even though it certainly wasn't very popular with the mayor of Edmonton – he certainly let us know it wasn't popular with him – because we thought it was the right thing to do.

We were very concerned about the issue of service to the north. At the time it was a broader issue, but as we started going forward on this issue, we became increasingly concerned about the issue of providing appropriate medical facilities to those who are in the north and medical care to those who are in the north. We weren't alone in this. I think that the members opposite should remember that it was their former leader, Premier Stelmach, who ordered the Health Quality Council report to look into what needed to be done to be able to ensure that there was seamless access to care for members of the north when the facility and the access to the municipal airport closed down.

That, I think, is the crux of what we're talking about today, whether or not the government, having accepted the recommendations of that Health Quality Council report, accepted that there was some work that needed to be done to ensure seamless care and whether they have completed the work in time for this to close tomorrow. What is the rush in moving towards taking services out of the Edmonton City Centre Airport when there doesn't seem to be an urgent need from the point of view of the city?

Let me talk about a couple of things. Part of the reason why the government, though they don't like us to tell them so, lost credibility when they said, "Trust us; we will fix this, and there will be seamless service" is because we have seen incidents very recently where it hasn't worked. The amalgamation of the AHS superboard has not worked particularly well. We hear all kinds of problems with front-line service delivery – we just got another Health Quality Council report indicating the numerous problems in the amalgamation of EMS – the closure of Carmangay without proper notice, the closure now of Michener without proper notification. The problem is that we have seen again and again and again the government taking decisions and then saying: don't worry; we'll figure it out after the fact. Maybe on certain things you can figure it out after the fact, but on issues of life and death, of critical care, you can't figure it out after the fact. Otherwise, you will have needless death, you will have needless suffering, and that's what we're trying to avoid here.

The issue of the rationale. I appreciate the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Calder saying that planes are going to continue to take off and land after March 15. It seems to us that the very last plane that should take off or land at that airport should be a medevac plane, providing critical care and critical transportation to critically injured patients from northern Alberta. If there are planes still being used in that facility, if there is still an operational municipal airport, there absolutely is no rush in ending our medevac flights to and from.

I want to address as well – the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright was throwing around some figures about cost, the cost of the airport and how much it would cost for the province to take it on. Now, of course, I had at one point in the past suggested that that might be a solution to this, but one of the things that the doctors are suggesting is to allow the city of Edmonton to continue developing two-thirds of the land and just leave one runway open for as long as possible to be able to continue to allow the flights to go in and out. It seems to me that that is the kind of solution that we're looking for, one that doesn't get in the way of the city of Edmonton's ability to develop the lands but also ensures that we're able to have seamless service for our northern communities until such time as all of the promises the government has made on increasing care in other facilities is met. Because right now, it's not been met.

This may be a 25-year time horizon before the city of Edmonton fully develops these lands. It may be 10 to 15 years before they would need to take this particular runway out of use. So let's make sure that we do this right. Let's continue using this runway, ask the Edmonton mayor to work around his plans for development so that we can continue to provide service to northern Alberta.

At some point maybe in the future the province might be interested in looking at buying that last runway. The numbers that we've been hearing are that it would cost $114 million to $166 million. Those numbers are quite a bit different than what the hon. Municipal Affairs minister suggested. It also happens to be kind of in the order of what the Edmonton mayor is looking for for his arena funding project, so there might be a way for them to be able to do a bit of a swap: get the mayor what he wants as well as be able to ensure that we've got seamless access for our northern medevac patients. Just putting it out there.

In the meantime I think we have to be advised and we have to listen to what our professionals are saying, what our doctors are saying. In the report that Premier Stelmach had commissioned, it went through 18 recommendations about what needed to be done to make sure that services to our northern communities were not impacted. It's already been referenced – it's already been talked about by a couple of previous members – the ways in which those recommendations have not been fully implemented. If the government intends to fully implement them, great. Then let's take the time, continue the service at the Edmonton City Centre Airport, and get that interchange fixed, get the additional lane put in on the highway, synchronize the lights, do those things first before you end up interfering with the service. There is no rush to end things tomorrow.

I think the other issue that we have to be mindful of – I think that the members opposite maybe are misreading the statistics, but the statistics that I have seen suggest that this is a very, very serious issue for critically injured patients. It may well be that there are some patients who are transferred into the Edmonton City Centre Airport who are coming down for specialist treatment and appointments and are not of a critical or urgent nature. That may well be the case, and I think it certainly is. But the statistics that we have seen are that we've got 3,059 patients coming in from northern Alberta and then there are an additional 805 patients that are coming in from other northern jurisdictions, other provinces, and 58 per cent of them have been identified by doctors as being code yellow or code red, so they are patients with a high level of acuteness who need immediate care.

The question of whether or not any other air ambulance service would be able to take on these patients: it's simply not the case. STARS has indicated already that they cannot step in and take on these patients because, first of all, they fly at half the speed that a fixed-wing aircraft does. That's one problem. Second of all, the patient load is just too high. In some cases they're looking at bringing in as many as five patients a day. The total amount that STARS would have to be able to assume is an additional 1,779 critical patients to be able to get them into the hospitals in Edmonton. They simply can't do that.

The other issue is the issue of the triage at the Edmonton International Airport, that northern journalists were flown in to at a cost of $17,000 to get a tour around. These patients don't need triage. The reason why they are flying into Edmonton is that they have already been triaged. It has already been indicated that they need some serious care that is only available at the Royal Alex or the University of Alberta hospital. That, I think, is the crux of the matter here. The services that are going to be available at the Leduc hospital, the regional hospitals are the same as many of the regional hospitals that these patients are being flown out of.

Let me just go through this because this is really all about patients and it's all about the kind of care that they are going to receive and it is in keeping, I think, with the government's priorities of trying to ensure that we've got specialty services in our large centres. [interjection] One minute? Oh, darn it. Let me go through it quickly, then.

These are the kinds of things that patients are being flown in for, and they can only get this care from the Royal Alexandra hospital and the University of Alberta hospital. They need to have clot-busting drugs for heart attack patients, and they need to have them within 90 minutes of presenting chest pain. For strokes they need a CT scan and a clot-busting drug and maybe even a neurosurgeon, only available at the Royal Alex or U of A. For major trauma, vehicle collisions, moderate to severe closed head injuries, trauma involving the brain or spinal cord, and hemorrhages that require critical care, interventional radiologists, trauma surgeons, intensive care, again, are only available at the Royal Alex and the U of A. For premature labour and premature birth, issues of neonatal ICU, pediatricians, obstetrics are only available at the Royal Alex and at the University of Alberta hospital.

Let me just close, then, with one quote from Dr. Ruben Hansen. There are a whole range of comments – and I will table this document, Mr. Speaker – but let me just close with Dr. Ruben Hansen, site chief, emergency medicine, Royal Alex hospital.

The closure of the City Centre Airport will significantly increase patient transport times to our... facility. This will, without question, negatively impact our ability to provide prompt, necessary medical care to these critical patients. Delays in the provision of life and limb saving interventions in this patient population will have a detrimental effect on long-term outcomes including survival rate and quality of life.

I ask the government to reconsider the closure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River and Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Government House Leader said when he rose in the initial debate, there's lots of misinformation flying around. We have to be careful to focus our debate on facts. I agree with that. Of course, the first fact here is that the City Centre Airport is going to close. That's a decision of the city, not the province. It's a decision that was theirs to make, and as far as I'm concerned, it's theirs to live with.

As a northern Albertan obviously my preference would be to have that airport open, not just for medevac but for business. For some reason it seems to concern the city not a whit that, for example, the city of Grande Prairie flies more passengers to Calgary now than they do to the city of Edmonton because it's easier to do business with them. Mr. Speaker, I'm frustrated to the extreme by that decision. But it is a decision of the city of Edmonton, and the airport is going to close. There's no question about it.

It's going to close. The date of that is uncertain. We heard from the Minister of Municipal Affairs as late as yesterday that the mayor himself couldn't talk about a definitive date. He said that it might take a year. He would prefer that it take a month. We need better certainty than that, and we need to plan. So the City Centre Airport is closing, and we have to examine the best available alternatives. It's just as simple as that. We have to do something else because the airport is closing.

Now, yesterday there was a tour of the new medevac facility at the airport, and it's a fabulous place. You know, it's going to have dedicated ambulances, and you can transfer patients inside. There are staging beds inside, not a triage centre, as the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills indicated. It's a transfer centre which allows the facility to hold noncritical patients so that critical patients can get primary access to the transportation vehicles. It's all better and state of the art. In fact, there actually isn't any facility at the City Centre Airport. They transfer you out on the tarmac even if it's 40 below.

So what's the issue? The facilities are great. The people are great. The issue, of course, is timing. The distance from the Edmonton International Airport to the Royal Alex is a lot longer. Nobody's questioning that. We get that. Even though the Royal Alex receives less than a third of the critical transfers that come to Edmonton – less than a third; that's from the Health Quality Council report – it's longer. We get that.

It is longer, although not as bad, from the Edmonton International to the University hospital, which receives more of our patients. It receives about two-thirds. It's longer than it is from the City Centre Airport to the University hospital. Though, let's stick to facts. The member said that it adds 40 to 50 minutes. I drove there after the conclusion of the ceremony yesterday, doing the speed limit all the way, and went through one albeit small construction zone, also observing the speed limit, Mr. Speaker, and made it in 25 minutes to the University hospital. I was downtown in the underground garage getting out of my car in 30 minutes. So let's stick to facts.

The other thing that the hon. member said was that anybody that's on a plane is an emergency; that's why they're on the plane. Nobody gets medevaced from my constituency to Edmonton in a ground ambulance, Mr. Speaker. They're on a plane. That's what a medevac is. A ground ambulance is an interhospital transfer, a completely different beast. We get medevaced down for MRIs and whatever else.

Yes, some of us are critical. Some of us have broken femurs, for example, which is a time-sensitive condition. You'll get loaded onto an ambulance, and they won't even turn the lights on because you're not going to die in five minutes. If you don't get treatment within 12 hours, you might. That's time-sensitive. But that doesn't mean you have to save five minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the question of time is indeed critical, and we have to determine how critical it is. If it is critical, what can you do to mitigate? We don't have the option of using the City Centre Airport. What's the best available option? We think we've chosen that.

Everybody talks about the importance of time, Mr. Speaker, at the front end of this. It's true. We have the golden hour. In my constituency you won't even make your home hospital in the golden hour, which is why we have CAT scan machines in High Level, in Peace River, in Grande Prairie, in Fort McMurray to mitigate that time. That's when you meet the golden hour, not when you load and get to Edmonton.

You won't get to Edmonton within hours of your injury because a doctor back there has to decide you're going to be medevaced. He has to find a bed. They arrange the plane. You have to get taken by ambulance to the airport there. You fly here. You get transferred to the hospital here. You're in the system for hours, and when you get here, everybody in the system – the dispatchers, the air medevac, the ground ambulance, and the receiving hospital – knows you're coming. Mr. Speaker, they can juggle the time and make sure it works.

The question is: if helicopters are part of the system and they can't fly, Mr. Speaker, what do we do? Well, sometimes the fixed wings can't fly. You pick the next best alternative. Our alternative airport is Calgary. Their alternative airport is Edmonton. What happens if you can't fly and the helicopter can't fly? You might get transferred to Calgary, which is interesting. The time from the Calgary airport to the hospital is the same as the time from the Edmonton airport to the University hospital. Do they have a higher death rate on their medevacs? No. In fact, what do you think happens when you get medevaced to downtown Vancouver and you need to access the critical burn unit at the Vancouver General hospital? It's probably twice the distance.

Mr. Speaker, all you can do is pick the best available alternative and put plans in place to mitigate. We've got a state-of-the-art facility out there. We transfer patients by helicopter when we can. If the helicopter can't fly, then we've got to figure out what the alternative is, and we work that in, the same as the case is today with the City Centre Airport when the fixed wings can't fly.

Mr. Speaker, you've got to pick the best available alternative. This is not a political discussion any more than debating in here what scalpel a physician should use when they're doing heart surgery. That's none of our business. We should leave that to experts, which is what we've done. What a great, great political discussion would be: should we keep the City Centre Airport open? Unfortunately – although, as a northern Albertan that would be my preference – we're standing in the wrong Chamber to have that debate, but it would be a great debate to have.

Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned about the level of political debate in this House and the role of the opposition. Their role is not to oppose; it's to improve. But we seem to conduct opposition lately by identifying a bogeyman and, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre described, flash up the Chicken Little tour, as she worded it – she's a seasoned practitioner herself – and find a busy intersection to stand in. That's not adding to the value of political debate in our province. It's dishonest. It misinforms people.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we have to find the best available alternative. We think we've done it. If anybody has got a better one, table it. But the City Centre Airport is going to close, and it is not amongst the options we can choose from.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've reached 4:30, and as you know, our Standing Order 4(2) requires us to adjourn. But before we do, I want to thank the members for their input this afternoon and then also express my regret that we didn't get to the entire list. So let your constituents know that you were on the list to speak. In particular, I have Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Bonnyville-Cold Lake, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Lesser Slave Lake, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, Grande Prairie-Smoky, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, Calgary-Fish Creek, and several others who had wanted to speak, including the Minister of Education and a few others that are from the north in particular. Please let the record show that you were on the list, but we did run out of time, hon. members from all four parties.

With that having been said, I now declare the Assembly adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday pursuant to section 4(2) of our standing orders.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 1st Session (2012-2013)

Activity to March 14, 2013

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 18, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. Hon. members, as we begin another week of the people's business, let us be mindful of the trust that has been placed in us and the privilege with which we serve. Let us now ask for the guidance of the Creator, that all our deliberations will be indeed honourable. Amen.

Please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem, led by M. Paul Lorieau. Please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the ambassador of the Kingdom of Norway, Her Excellency Mona Brother. This is the ambassador's official visit to Alberta, and we're very pleased to welcome her here. She's accompanied by her spouse, Mr. Asmund Baklien, and Mr. Roar Tungland, the honorary consul for the Kingdom of Norway here in Edmonton, as well as by my wife, Mardell, and Tim Marriott from the protocol office.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and Norway have much in common – northern climates, global leaders in energy – and we both have high expectations for environmentally sustainable energy development. I had the great pleasure of hosting the ambassador at lunch today, and we discussed a number of shared interests that our countries have.

These folks are all seated in your gallery, and I'd ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be making two introductions today. It is with great pleasure and honour that I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Madam Liu Yongfeng, the consul general of the People's Republic of China in Calgary, and Vice-consul Jia Xiaopan, who are both seated in your gallery today. Since Madam Liu took office, she's been a great friend to Alberta, focusing on increasing co-operation and understanding between China and Alberta. In fact, in the very first week of her assignment some two and a half years ago Consul General Liu welcomed the first group of Chinese visitors to our province after Canada received approved-destination status in China. There's been a 20 per cent annual increase of visitors from China since then. It is now possible to see Rocky Mountains advertisements in subways in China's major cities.

Other key developments since 2010 include nearly 50 per cent growth in Alberta's exports to China; two-thirds of China's some $30 billion of investments in Canada came to Alberta; dozens of new co-operation projects in advanced technology have been kick-started, notably between the University of Alberta and the Tsinghua University; and now nearly 10,000 Chinese university and college students are studying in our province.

Madam Liu Yongfeng is from the area of Beijing, where our Member for Calgary-Hawkwood is originally from. I'm sure that he's delighted to see her here today.

With the continued assistance of both Consul General Liu and Vice-consul Jia I'm confident that these numbers will continue to rise and would benefit both of our peoples. I would ask the members of the House to join me in giving our visitors the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: A second introduction, hon. minister?

Ms Woo-Paw: Yeah. Thank you. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House Mr. Tom Walter. Tom is a retired lawyer and business owner with extensive experience in various parts of Asia, including China and Thailand. He generously serves on the Asia Advisory Council as vice-chair. As chair of the council it's always a pleasure to work with Tom. I would ask the members of the House to join me in giving Mr. Walter the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you today a group of young students from H.A. Kostash school in Smoky Lake. As you know, Smoky Lake is the Pumpkin Capital of Alberta, home of the Smoky Lake Pumpkin Festival, and one of my favourite spots in my constituency. I had the pleasure of visiting with these 35 students on the steps here this morning. They're here for the School at the Leg. this week. The group is seated in the members' gallery. The students are accompanied by their teacher Ms Chelsea Evans and parent helpers Mrs. Arlana Phillips, Mr. Chad Mahon, and Mr. Michael Kozakewich. I'd ask the group to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 39 students and their teachers, Ms Janet Hurley and Mr. Roger Bouthillier, from Sir Alexander Mackenzie school.

SAM, as the school is fondly nicknamed, is a very special school in my constituency. SAM school was founded in 1958, making it the first school in the St. Albert public school system. It originally housed kindergarten through grade 12 but now, as St. Albert has grown, is strictly an elementary school. SAM holds a special place in my heart as it was the first school I attended as a young boy when my family first moved to St. Albert. The staff and students continue to make learning fun.

I have been privileged as MLA for St. Albert to visit the school a number of times, a remarkable school, I assure you, Mr. Speaker. I would now ask that these students and their teachers rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations. It's my pleasure today to rise before you and introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly individuals from the Suzuki Charter School, a wonderful school found in Edmonton-Gold Bar. The best and brightest grade 6 students in my constituency are here. I'm pleased that they're able to take part in activities that will help them learn more about democracy. We have two classes of grade 6 – I hope that they'll stand behind me here and give a wave – and also their teachers, Mrs. Eva Kapy and Miss Shannon Eremenko, helped by parents Bonnie Gilroy, Mindy Dammer, and Anna Carlsen. If they could please stand and receive a warm welcome from this Assembly.

1:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Alberta international group. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask you to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you one of my constituents and a staff member at the University of Alberta, Mr. Sulz, who I had the pleasure of meeting with today at lunch. He's seated in the members' gallery.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Nathan Stephan and his daughter Laurel from Red Deer. Nathan was a fellow candidate in the last provincial election and is a good friend of mine. Laurel is in grade 6 and is a top student in her social studies class, where she is learning about the role of government. I would ask Nathan and Laurel to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three constituents of mine from Calgary-Shaw. Two of these young students are here because their class is coming up later this week, and they were unable to go with them, so one of their mums decided to drive them up so they could come experience this with us today. I'd like to ask, please, Isabelle Wiebe, Jordan Betsworth, and Isabelle's mother, Patty, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to all members of the Assembly Mrs. Lorna Daniel, your sister, and I'm sure she's very proud of you today. Lorna is a retired paralegal who taught at Grant MacEwan College for 20 years, and she's also a resident of the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Lorna is seated in the public gallery. I would like to ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests from the constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky. Council members from the county of Grande Prairie No. 1 are visiting the Legislature today and attending the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties conference held this week. These have been peers and advisers of mine for many, many years, and I'll ask them to stand as I read their names. I'm proud to introduce to you Reeve Leanne Beaupre, Deputy Reeve Ross Sutherland, councillors Harold Bulford, Mary Ann Eckstrom, Pat Jacobs, Lois Dueck, and Brock Smith. I ask my guests to stand to accept the warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly my guests Noelle Jaipaul, Evan Hammer, and Cala Jorgensen from Next Up Canada. Next Up is a social and environmental justice leadership program focusing on educating young adults about various issues that face our society today and providing them with the tools to become more actively engaged and involved in our community. I would like to ask them to now please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Karan Nikhanj, who recently received the Queen's jubilee medal for his continued role in establishing and building the strong community of Twin Brooks within my constituency of Edmonton-South West. Karan has spent countless hours volunteering and establishing several activities, including the annual Family Day and winter carnival. This past month the community of Twin Brooks was able to celebrate the opening of our new outdoor rink, that was made a reality through the work and vision of Karan's continued dedication. With Karan today is his wonderful wife, Dr. Pam Chowdhury. I ask that Karan and Pam, seated in the members' gallery today, please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

High School Flexibility Program in Slave Lake

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Addressing the needs of students in education is one of our government's priorities. Today I want to applaud Slave Lake's St. Francis of Assisi Catholic Academy's proactive efforts in making the needs of students its number one priority.

The overarching goal of the high school flexibility program is to carefully examine ways in which the best possible experience can be delivered to each individual student. The decision of St. Francis of Assisi to embrace the flex program reflects an evolution in culture and philosophy within the school environment. Assessment practices, curricula delivery, institutional administration, and interdisciplinary study are closely scrutinized to ensure the best education possible for students with diverse and unique needs.

One of the goals is to strike a balance in the classroom that allows for a wide array of backgrounds and skill sets for students to work to their full potential. St. Francis of Assisi's student population is composed of many young people from disadvantaged backgrounds, and it is inspiring to see the staff take responsibility for the services and aid they are striving to provide for their students.

Quality education is a cornerstone of what makes Alberta so successful. That is why it is crucial that we attend to the needs of all students regardless of economic or social background or other factors that may impede a positive learning experience. I am delighted with the quality of education St. Francis of Assisi has in promoting dynamic learning and for motivating its students to be successful. We could do well to learn from this example.

Congratulations to the board of Living Waters for great leadership and to the superintendent, the principal, and, of course, the teachers, who work toward educational innovation and success in this province and especially at St. Francis of Assisi. Thank you to all of you.

Wildrose Caucus Charitable Foundation

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I stand in this House today and it was with great pride that I stood earlier today with my 16 Wildrose colleagues to announce the creation of the Wildrose Caucus Foundation. You see, last year the PC government voted itself an 8 per cent pay raise. They sure didn't campaign on it. When I was elected, my salary was $145,000. After the election it was $156,000. [interjections] Now, you can throw out all the rhetoric that you want from the other side. It is what it is. One hundred and fifty-six thousand is greater than 145,000, and you shouldn't need a calculator to figure that out.

Here on this side in the Wildrose caucus we strongly disagree with that decision, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it's unfathomable to me that in an era when we're asking public-sector employees to freeze their salaries and take rollbacks, this government would even consider giving itself a raise. [interjections] Now, we tried to stop them. We voted against it in committee. We tried to appeal to common sense. We tried to explain how the public was perceiving this. But at the end of the day I guess they believe they are entitled to their entitlements. Well, we don't. So we have put our money where our mouth is. We are not going to take this money for ourselves.

Shortly before Christmas, Mr. Speaker, we set up a Wildrose Caucus Foundation, all 17 Wildrose MLAs giving back that PC pay hike, and we are putting it to good use. The 17 of us stand here proudly in unison on this issue. We will give that money to various charity groups in this province. We are going to do our best to help those that make a difference make even more of a difference. I see the heckling has died down.

We are not taking the raise. I would encourage all members of the Assembly to follow our lead and show some leadership. Taxpayer money should be respected. Taxpayers should be respected. We understand that, Mr. Speaker, and are showing some leadership. I think government would be wise to do the same.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this is day 3 in the rotation, and it is my intention to continue the Speaker's direction of last week with no preambles to supplementals after the leaders have spoken.

I'll recognize the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

MLA Remuneration

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, you may recall the public outrage when the government forced through an 8 per cent pay raise for MLAs. Now, we warned that it would be difficult to convince the public-sector employees that zero per cent was fair when MLAs were getting 8 per cent. Of course, the government insisted that the jump from $145,000 to $156,000 was a cut, but Albertans can count, and now, it seems, so can the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. On Thursday he admitted it was a pay raise. So let's ask the Premier: has the rest of government learned to count, too, and will you admit it was a pay raise?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While this government is focusing on building Alberta, while we're opening up pathways for Alberta products to reach markets offshore, while we're making decisions relevant to this budget, the best this opposition can do, as they have shown over and over again, is gimmicks: printing coupons, printing posters, and now trying to score political points on something that all of us are doing, donating to charity.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Helping Albertans isn't a gimmick. In fact, it's just as important as building playgrounds in Vietnam.

The Wildrose Official Opposition members are contributing their raises to a caucus foundation to make donations to important charities that do crucial front-line work in health care and education and social services. Will the government members follow our lead and do the same?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I am proud of government members, and all of our government members, probably without any exceptions, are making charitable donations quietly to charities of their choice. They don't need to stand up in the House and announce it to the whole world, because that's what they do out of the goodness of their hearts.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we can understand PC MLAs' reluctance to work with the opposition to make this a better province, but perhaps they'll set up their own foundation and return their 8 per cent pay raises to the people of Alberta. When can we expect that announcement?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, one of the fundamental differences between our caucuses is that every member in our caucus makes their own donations to a charity of their own choice. They obviously need to orchestrate a media campaign to show that they make donations. The fact is that we have issues to deal with in this province. We're focusing on building Alberta. These guys will continue playing gimmicks. Let them do so. But looking at the efficacy of the Official Opposition, I suggest they should be donating more of their salary back to taxpayers.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for your second set of questions.

Ms Smith: I think Albertans would prefer to see them give the money back.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government is taking Alberta back into debt, big debt, $17 billion by the time of the next election. Now, in the run-up to the budget the Finance minister liked to paint a picture that government borrowing was just like a responsible family using debt to buy a house and then paying off the mortgage over time. It was a folksy little story, but it was just as phony as the three-part budget that he brought down a couple of weeks ago. He finally admitted it last week, when he said that it's not a . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. The hon. member ended there with asking why we're trying to confuse Albertans. It's exactly the opposite. Albertans have been looking to their municipalities for years at their financial statements, which separate operating from capital. They've been doing that because they wanted to know what they spend on operating, and they wanted to know what they were spending on capital. This is very, very much a common practice not only in Alberta but across the country. It's unfortunate that the hon. members don't believe in the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. They don't believe in the Calgary Chamber of Commerce. They don't believe in the Scotiabank financial analysts. They don't believe in any of those financial experts.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we understand how it works. The $17 billion in principal for all that debt isn't due until the end of the term, yet the paltry savings plan they lay out would take three or four generations to have enough money in the account to pay it all back. Why isn't there a realistic plan to pay back the $17 billion in debt?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, on page 75 of the financial plan that we've presented is the debt repayment plan. The hon. member doesn't seem to understand that as we go out and borrow for these projects that have not yet been built, we're going to be getting different amortization terms. We're going to be getting different interest rates. We're going to have a very diverse and, frankly, financially sound plan to build the assets that Albertans need. Twenty-six billion dollars' worth of assets is what the $17 billion represents. Those are the schools, the roads, and the hospitals that Albertans need today and . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: The minister should know it'll take $850 million a year set aside to be able to have enough money to pay it back. They're saying that they're building schools for all the kids that will be in Alberta in the future and that that's why they have to borrow, but those kids are going to face a $17 billion debt repayment when they enter the workforce because there isn't enough money being set aside to pay back the debt. Why does the minister want to saddle future generations with all that debt?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, we have said this consistently in the House. The debt repayment plan is going to be set out as the debt comes onto the books because then we'll know. The Wildrose Alliance Party has kind of become the party of anger, fear, and bitterness. Albertans elected a government of hope, opportunity, and faith: hope for vulnerable Albertans to lift their station in this province; opportunity for young Albertans to create their dreams and fulfill their futures; faith in not only our Creator, as we pray in this House every day, but also faith in our people and this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. leader, your third set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we would build twice as many schools, and we would do it debt free.

Provincial Budget

Ms Smith: As Albertans try to understand the size and scope of the debt, they wonder about the government's lack of openness and transparency. Now, I feel the Finance minister demeans professional, hard-working journalists who try to explain government spending and debt in an understandable way as he quotes eastern investment bankers as evidence of support. Well, of course the bankers like it. They're going to be getting a slice of $600 million in annual interest.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, they keep waving around this plan, this capital plan, but they have yet to tell Albertans how they would pay for it. They have yet to tell Albertans where they would cut the additional $3 billion in front-line services that they would have to do to actually do what she's talking about. That's why there are no financial numbers in their plan. They don't want to admit it to Albertans. If they don't want to listen to the financial analysts who most Calgary businesses and Edmonton businesses would listen to, how about the Consulting Engineers of Alberta? We know from previous experience that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. leader. First supplemental.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's all in here for the Finance minister to read. That's how we would do it.

Now, the minister doesn't believe his critics know what they're talking about, yet his back-in-debt budget, of course, hides, obscures, fudges, and manipulates the numbers to avoid direct comparisons with other budgets. When is he going to comply with accounting standards and issue us a complete historical comparison like we've seen in other budgets?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, this budget does comply with all of the PSAC and the generally accepted accounting principles. It's unfortunate that the hon. members opposite don't, because in their purported budget they don't present any financial numbers. They don't show us where they're going to cut $3 billion out of their operating budget: doctors, nurses, teachers, all of them. All they show is a list of somewhat bogus savings plans that they have that won't achieve what they're talking about.

Ms Smith: The minister should know that he is supposed to restate the previous year's budgets with the new accounting standards that they're using, and he hasn't done that yet.

The back-in-debt budget has killed this Premier's promise that we will not incur debt – that's her quote – and not just this year but for decades to come, with huge borrowing and, as I've already mentioned, a paltry payback plan. Did the Premier just say one thing and plan to do another, or did she not think it was important to keep that promise?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, there is an opposition that, you know, knows the price of everything, but they don't know the value of anything either. This government is focusing on building schools for kids today. They don't want schools 30 years from now. We are building seniors' homes for seniors today, not 30 years from now, and we are building, twinning, and paving roads today, not 30 years from now. If they want to do it in 30 years, tell Albertans that that's how they will do it. We will be building Alberta today not only for today but also . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.
The leader of the Liberal opposition.

Health Services Performance Measures

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The AHS third quarterly report came out last Friday, and it is as abysmal as every other AHS report. Heart bypass surgery wait times: fail. Hip and knee replacement wait times: fail. Physician and staff engagement: fail. Patients admitted from emergency within eight hours: fail. All of these measures have been consistent failures for years. To the Premier: can you please explain to Albertans why your government is consistently incompetent when it comes to managing the health care system?

2:00

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's interesting how the hon. member has appointed himself judge and jury with respect to the efforts of a hundred thousand people in Alberta Health Services, a hundred thousand people who are supporting an influx of a hundred thousand new Albertans every year in a health system that is arguably the best in the country today and certainly the most well funded. We can talk in subsequent questions about many of the strategies that Alberta Health Services has implemented. I think they are to be congratulated for holding a very high standard of service despite . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'm simply referring to all the red dots, which mean failure, on the AHS report.

Given that this government has spent well over a hundred million dollars on for-profit continuing care beds that most seniors can't afford, resulting in them being warehoused in hospitals instead, the root cause of AHS's health care access failures, to the Premier: how much longer will you continue to fail Albertans before you follow the Alberta Liberal plan to double home care and invest in nonprofit long-term care so that we can free up acute-care beds and finally improve the . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member is very good at talking about red dots, and he's probably seeing quite a few of them lately, and that was well reflected in the budget proposals that they presented to this House.

What I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that this government has continually expanded continuing care capacity across this province. We're doing it in partnership with Alberta Health Services, also with not-for-profit providers and providers in the private sector. We're adding a thousand additional new spaces per year. We're delivering them in accordance with standards . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is obviously great at creating red dots on the health system.

Given that AHS continues to fail significantly in reaching its very low target of 54 per cent for medical staff overall engagement, scoring a meagre 38 per cent, to the Premier: will you finally admit that this Health minister's combative and antagonistic approach to medical staff is an abject failure?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the award for understatement of the year has to go to the hon. member with that last remark. I think the definition of disengagement in public health care would be the hon. member leading the organization and saying some of the things he said to the hundred thousand people that work so hard to deliver the top health care in Canada to the citizens of this province. We can talk about many, many new initiatives that Alberta Health Services has launched in the last quarter, in the last four quarters. They're focused on Albertans' priorities, primary health . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Bitumen Upgrading

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This PC government has betrayed Albertans by exporting their jobs to the United States. The Keystone pipeline will cost Alberta tens of thousands of jobs and billions of dollars in investment. This PC government is so deep in the pockets of the oil industry that it's sold out the very people who elected it. Will the Energy minister tell Albertans why his government has refused to require bitumen to be upgraded here in Alberta before it is shipped down the pipeline?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, while this Premier right now is opening up an office in Ottawa to address issues of access of our products to markets and works in Washington diligently, we have two other parties in this House – let me tell you what they do – one so ideologically bound that they cannot even admit that there is a climate change, which in itself would block most of our products from most markets in the world, and the other one, with the federal leader of the NDP and now the provincial leader of the NDP actively sabotaging our oil and gas industry, making sure that our products don't make it . . .

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's this government that should be ashamed.

We just can't trust this PC government to get value for Alberta's resources. The Premier has blamed the bitumen bubble, more accurately called the bitumen bungle, for the massive deficit budget, yet the same government is putting even more eggs in the bitumen basket by supporting the Keystone pipeline, a real job killer. To the Energy minister: why is this government undermining its own finances by supporting the export of even more low-value, unprocessed bitumen?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be careful talking about low-value contributions to the debate in this country and this continent. I can tell you that the strategy of this government is to ensure that we have as much upgrading and value added to our products in this province as we possibly can and, secondly, that exports are allowed to go forward to other corners of the world where it makes economic sense. We are pursuing all of these options. We're pursuing them responsibly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has been to Ottawa four times selling Alberta jobs down the pipeline. This government just spent $30,000 on a misleading greenwash ad in the New York Times. In that ad this Tory government brags about adding 138,000 full-time, permanent jobs that this pipeline will create in the United States. Most of those jobs are at Albertans' expense. Why is the PC government betraying Alberta workers by exporting their jobs down the pipeline?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that we have to print ads in newspapers. The reason we have to print ads in newspapers is because the leader of the federal and the provincial NDP parties would have this industry lie flat on its back, an industry that pays for services not only in Alberta but throughout Canada.

Also, I should remind the leaders of both NDP parties that it is the building trades of Alberta and Canadian affiliates that are very much supportive of the pipeline that we are so much advocating both in Washington and Ottawa, so not only are they betraying Albertans and Canadians but also their unions.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Program

Mr. Saskiw: This Justice minister's soft-on-crime agenda just keeps on rolling. First he stopped GPS tracking of sex offenders and other violent criminals. Next he gave vandals and thieves two free passes. Now he's cutting enforcement against drug dens and prostitution houses. The safer communities and neighbourhoods program was doing a great job targeting and cracking down on crime; that is, until this former Liberal staffer Justice minister and his progressive crime agenda began to take shape. To the minister: doesn't he realize that his new hug-a-thug approach is just putting our neighbourhoods at risk?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again, just as we had last week, very little of this member's statement is true. But since the member talks about being a Liberal, I suggest that maybe he look to the woman in a red jacket, their leader, who called on city council to set up a red-light district, or to his own party, which called for less enforcement on highway 63, or to his own party again, which opposed cracking down on drunk drivers. That's the Liberal agenda there.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order at 2:08.

The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Justice minister: given that the safer communities program was achieving results and making our streets safer and given that these criminals aren't just going to go away because the minister isn't doing his job, precisely what are you doing to protect our families from drugs and prostitution now that you've axed this important program?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you right now what we're doing. We're keeping cops on the street, we're keeping prosecutors in the courtroom, and we're adding two new judges. You'd think that a lawyer of so many years' experience like the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills would get behind this anti-crime initiative instead of spewing rhetoric in this Chamber.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Justice minister: given that under your watch you have cut monitoring and enforcement against sex offenders, vandals, thieves, and now drug dealers and pimps, how can Albertans trust you to do your job, protect our streets, and put victims of crime first?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, we have done no such thing. All of these items are still strictly prosecuted. There are consequences in this province to crime, and I want to promote also that it was this Premier who started the civil forfeiture office, which takes money out of the hands of organized crime and into community-based groups, where it belongs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to cool it down a little bit.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers

Mr. Xiao: Mr. Speaker, last week the Alberta Teachers' Association accepted the government's offer on a province-wide deal and will recommend it to teachers. This is, no doubt, good news for Alberta families, but I understand that it is not a done deal yet. To the Minister of Education: what happens now that the ATA is accepting the deal and they're recommending it?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the agreement with Alberta's 40,000 teachers and this government is great news for Alberta families and, more importantly, for Alberta students. I'm very pleased we could work together to ensure the stability of the education system and to live within our means. What happens now, after about two and a half years' worth of work and efforts have gone into this agreement: the opportunity will be given to local teachers to vote, and I'm optimistic and hopeful that they will support it. Of course, it's only broad brush strokes on a provincial framework. There are still many local issues that need to be discussed with the local school boards, so that has to happen as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

2:10

Mr. Xiao: To the same minister. I'm hearing that the school boards are concerned they were not involved. Why did you leave them out?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the school boards through the body of the ASBA have been at the table for much of the last two and a half years. Much of what we agreed to with the teachers last week was based on a February offer which was presented to boards and boards overall and reluctantly supported back in February. What changed in the agreement was an assurance that the government compromised on that we wouldn't proclaim legislation that might affect working conditions of teachers during the term of the agreement. That's not something school boards can offer. That's something only this chair can deliver, and we did for the sake of our kids.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Xiao: My last supplemental question to the same minister: can you assure the parents that limiting instructional time of the teachers won't impact the class time for Alberta students?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what the agreement does is frame some expectations on the workload of teachers around the amount of minutes they can spend in the classroom and the amount of minutes they can instruct, not the amount of minutes that a student would spend in the classroom. There's no difference, going forward, to any instructional time that students will receive. You know, I recognize this is a potential change moving forward that won't really change the practice in Edmonton and Calgary because these expectations are already there, but it may have implications on rural Alberta, and we're going to watch those very closely. We've got some mechanisms in place to help the rural boards.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Physician Recruitment

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, we know that this government defends things like their own 8 per cent MLA pay hikes by saying that we need to attract quality candidates, but when it comes to the need to recruit quality physicians to our province, this government has no problem using doctors as a punching bag, breaking promise after promise. Dr. Michael Giuffre has even called Alberta the most antidoctor province in the country. How does the Health minister expect to have any credibility talking about the need to recruit physicians while demanding they take a . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, a very interesting question from an hon. member that comes from a party that is promoting that we shouldn't be spending as much on public services as we have committed to in this budget. A very interesting question indeed. The fact of the matter is that Alberta physicians are the best compensated in Canada, 14 per cent above the national average. We have a budget of $3.4 billion to compensate just under 8,000 physicians. With the co-operation of the Alberta Medical Association we believe there are better ways to invest that money more efficiently.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has broken its promise to call an inquiry into physician intimidation in our province and given that this government has broken its promise to physicians to have an agreement in principle after the election, how will this government assure Albertans that this prolonged dispute won't drive physicians out of the province?

Mr. Horne: Just to finish my response to the earlier question, Mr. Speaker, there's half a billion dollars in increased funding for health care this year. I'd invite the hon. member to explain to this House how she would allocate that money. Would she allocate it to increases in physician compensation? Would she choose homecare, which she's spoken about in this House on several occasions? Would she include increases for continuing care or mental health? This is a question of using good judgment to make some difficult decisions in challenging times. When our starting point is 14 per cent above the national . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to answer that question. I'd allocate it to the front lines and not his bloated bureaucracy.

Given that there are warnings that the squeeze on physicians will cause problems with patient care, including increased wait times and reduced access to quality care, does the minister have any concerns about what damage the fee dispute will do to the patients in this province?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that there are many issues with respect to how we compensate physicians that have a positive impact, when properly resolved, on the patient care experience. Family practitioners are an excellent example. We live in an age where patient complexity is greater than it's ever been. Many Albertans are living with multiple chronic diseases. Family doctors want to spend more time with those patients directly and also support them by working in teams with other professionals. There are opportunities within this $3.4 billion to make those sorts of opportunities a reality.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Stony Plain, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Market Access for Oil

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have all heard about the bitumen bubble. My constituents are concerned about what this means to our economy. To the Minister of Energy: rather than using buzzwords, what steps are you taking to actually fix our market access problems?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, this government is exceedingly active right across the board, seeking ways to get oil out of this province in all forms, whether refined and upgraded or in raw form, to the west coast, to the south to the Gulf coast, to the east coast, and maybe even to the north coast. This government is very active. I would say that it's very interesting to observe that the Official Opposition, by virtue of their position on climate change, is inactively campaigning against Alberta interests whereas the NDP is actively campaigning.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's response.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The member has the floor, hon. members. Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since the government has been talking about belt-tightening, why did you decide to pay thousands of dollars to place an ad in the New York Times this weekend?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there's a very active debate going on in America, and it is in Alberta's interest and Canada's interest that we're there and part of that debate. You may not have noticed that last week there was a very positive piece in Time magazine. There have been positive pieces. There have been pieces like the New York Times editorial. We're in the battle here to defend Alberta's interest. The Official Opposition is undermining us, the NDP is undermining us, and the Liberals, thank goodness, are missing in action.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. We all understand Premier Redford is opening a new Alberta office in Ottawa today.

The Deputy Speaker: No preamble, hon. member.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why do we need a new office in Ottawa?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, since the CPR was built across Canada and the last spike was driven at Craigellachie, this country has been built by great national efforts, and this once again is one of those great nation-building opportunities that Alberta is leading the nation on, working with our cousins in Saskatchewan and other provinces. To build this country, we need all the allies and friends we can get. We need to have people well informed, and that is part of what we're doing in the Ottawa office.

The Deputy Speaker: Just a reminder, hon. members, that we cannot use the names of members of the Assembly, please.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Physician Services Agreement

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been two years since the contract with Alberta doctors expired, and we are again at an impasse. This minister has tried to impose a contract, a 20 per cent cut to office practices over the next four years, and he has failed to put in place a fair process for resolving the conflict. Physicians are talking of early retirement and moving elsewhere, and we already have a doctor shortage. To the minister: what is plan B?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is alluding to a very public offer that the government made to the Alberta Medical Association last fall to add $463 million in additional funds to physician compensation, he would be correct, but he is incorrect in his characterization of these negotiations. This government has bargained in very good faith with the AMA for the last two years. The AMA has worked in good faith with us as well. There are many challenges in providing physician compensation. There are also many opportunities, and we'll continue to explore them.

The Deputy Speaker: I'm sure you will.
The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: To the same minister: is your plan to do without family doctors and run family care clinics with nurse practitioners?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we seem to be entering the realm of conspiracy theory. The only goal this government has is to maintain our consistent position over the last decade as the jurisdiction that compensates physicians the best in Canada. That is currently at 14 per cent. The hon. member should also know – he heard a budget delivered recently that said that we would be holding the line on public-sector compensation across the board. This includes physician compensation. Everybody has to do their part. I'm confident that the doctors of Alberta want to do their part.

Dr. Swann: To the minister: are you refusing arbitration because you know the arbiter will rule in favour of the doctors or because you think you can just outwait them?

Mr. Horne: Well, I'm not going to get into the details of the negotiations in the House. One thing is clear, Mr. Speaker. We know the total amount of money that is available to allocate for physician compensation in the next year. It is the same amount that we have in place this year. The question before us is how we pay physicians and for what we pay them and whether or not we use that budget in a way that truly acts to meet the needs of Albertans: the need for more family doctors, the need for better access to mental health services, the need for access to geriatric and other services that benefit seniors.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to welcome the minister for advanced education and to bring him up to speed on his portfolio. On Friday hundreds of Albertans arrived at the Legislature to demand that this government stop breaking its promises. Unfortunately, while they stood together in the snow, the minister was building sandcastles on a beach. To the minister: why do you think it's okay to break your promises to Alberta students and their families?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I was doing some of that quiet charitable work that the Official Opposition would publicize in the House, actually doing some great infrastructure work in a country ravaged by the NDP ideology back home. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. leader of the NDP, you're rising on a point of order? So noted.

Mr. Lukaszuk: They don't like it when the similarities are being pointed out.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that I have been very clear that there will be no tuition increases as a result of this budget. We have increased financial support to students for those from low-income families who will require it, and we are now working with chairs and presidents of all universities and colleges and technical schools in making sure that they receive a mandate letter with which they can work and that they will contribute . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that on Friday staff at the U of A were asked to give up five days of pay next year to help with budget shortfalls and given that universities are already considering expensive market modifiers and mandatory fees to top up tuition, will the minister admit that this government's fiscal incompetence is being downloaded onto staff and students and families throughout Alberta who are involved with universities?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we have been very clear that we will continue working with our schools, all 26 schools within Campus Alberta, to make sure that they continue delivering the great education that they have been for years in this province. Yes, there will be budgetary challenges. That's no secret. However, I know that we will find administrative efficiencies not only in each individual school but in the entire sector of 26 schools, and our students will continue receiving the best education in, let's be reminded, still the best-funded postsecondary education system in Canada.

Ms Notley: Given that we also have the highest tuition and instructional fees in Canada and given that this government promised a 2 per cent funding increase to our institutions and given that the budget actually delivers a decimating 7 per cent decrease to those institutions, why couldn't the minister be bothered to pack his bags, come home, and defend his broken-promises budget in person?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, there will be a time and place in this House when I will be defending my budget line by line, and I hope that member shows up and states her concerns. In the meantime I will continue working with all presidents and chairs, and I will continue working with student organizations. One thing I can tell you is that the student body will be more involved in the decision-making process than they perhaps have been in the past.

While they want to spell out doom and gloom, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta will continue to have one of the most innovative and relevant education systems in the world.

Education Property Tax Assistance for Seniors

Mrs. Towle: Last week's back-in-debt budget is hitting hard-working Albertans right in the pocketbook. All across Alberta families are being gouged with massive education hikes, and sadly seniors are also under attack. This government is changing and ultimately ending an assistance program that helps seniors with rising property taxes. I have been flooded with calls from seniors who say that they may have to leave their homes if these planned changes by the government continue. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: why does this government continue to reach into the pockets of vulnerable Albertans to find dollars for their own fiscal mismanagement?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, and thank you for the question. There's no doubt that there's a grant program that's in place right now that will end and a new, better program that will begin. In this budget we talk about the seniors' property tax deferral program that will be laid out, not where you get a $162 average grant per senior, but you'll get an average of $2,000, the ability to spend $2,000 the way you want, not to the municipality to defer your education and your property taxes in part or in whole. That's what is in the budget, $2,000 versus $162. Pretty good math to me.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will this government be honest and tell Albertans how many seniors you are kicking off the property tax assistance program currently by lowering the income thresholds to qualify?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I can make it very clear that any senior couple that owns a home and whose annual income is over $63,700 will be cut off.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Mrs. Towle: So how many seniors is that?

For the property tax deferral program will the minister tell seniors what the interest rate will be on that program and if the interest rate will be daily, fixed, term, or variable?

Mr. VanderBurg: First of all, to qualify for the seniors' property tax you have to be a senior, you have to have 25 per cent equity in your home, and you'll be paying prime rate or lower on that deferral program. As we announced, as the budget process goes through, all of this will be rolled out into a program that seniors can qualify for this taxation year, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Little Bow.

Education Concerns in Calgary-Glenmore

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I held a town hall meeting in Calgary-Glenmore with over 100 residents attending to present their concerns. The top two topics were education and transportation. My questions today are for the Minister of Education. My constituency has over 20 schools, many of which are close to 40 years old. Can the minister advise my constituents whether funding will be available to renovate or retrofit these aging schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I can't advise the hon. member on those specific schools, but I can tell you that Budget 2013 does reaffirm this government's and our Premier's commitment to building Alberta, investing in our communities, investing in our families. We will be building new schools. We will be modernizing schools. There are going to be 70 school modernizations announced in the coming months. I'd say: stay tuned with the budget. We hope to have some announcements this spring and others to follow in the fall.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another challenge facing some of the Calgary-Glenmore schools is increasing enrolment. Bishop Grandin high school will be close to capacity again.

The Deputy Speaker: No preamble, hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: How can the minister's department support the use of modulars at my constituency's schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a great demand for modulars. We have a budget that allows us to traditionally deliver about 45 per year. We've got requests for about 400 and for another about 90 moves. What I can tell you is that we've done some creative things this year, and we're going to be able to roll out about 105 new modulars and move about 90, which is significantly more than we have done in the past. Once again, we're going to help every community we can. It's a testament to this Premier and what she wants to invest in families and communities.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In regard to literacy and numeracy skills what budget measures will expand and support the mastery of essential skills by our student population?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's a great question that we can discuss more during the budget over the next day or two. But I can tell you that Albertans have told us loud and clear through Inspiring Education that literacy and numeracy need to be central in the core of our curriculum. As we look to change the way the education system is operating, focusing less on memorizing facts and teaching kids more what to do with knowledge and how to apply it, that's exactly what we're doing with our curriculum. We're going to unpack that curriculum to make it less prescriptive and much more innovative and creative so that our teachers work to their full scope.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Farm Fuel Distribution Allowance

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, this government has put us back into debt, and now it seems to be a race to the bottom. They're asking Alberta's farmers to pay for it. I'm a proud Alberta farmer, and when I talk to other Alberta farmers, they're angry. They're furious at this government's decision to cut the Alberta farm fuel distribution allowance. It's a tax hike. Farmers want to know. Is this tax hike about belt-tightening or axe grinding?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, surely this hon. member is being a little mischievous when he describes the removal of a rebate as a tax hike, especially from a party that talks a lot about removal of subsidies for people.

No, it is not a tax hike. It is a reasonable move in times of fiscal restraint. This is a move that still leaves us with the most competitive support for farm fuel use in Canada.

Mr. Donovan: On March 6 when I bought farm diesel, it was 6 cents cheaper than it was on March 7. You call it not a tax hike? Whatever.

My point: is this progressive government planning to build Alberta, or are we going to cut out Alberta agriculture?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, for a couple of years now jurisdictions across the country, including the federal government, have been working on taking innovative approaches to supporting agriculture. That includes market development, research, and innovation. It is true that there is a move away from ad hoc funding of programs. We're not alone in that. There is a consensus across the country that in order for our producers to be competitive in the world and to have a sustainable industry, that's what we have to do, and that's what we are doing.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, it was never ad hoc, this 6 cents.

Would this minister please respect Alberta's hard-working farmers, reconsider this tax hike, and rescind it?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'll just repeat that without the 6-cent rebate – and I'll just remind the hon. member that we were the only province in the country that had a rebate over and above an exemption – we still have an exemption which is better than neighbouring provinces. Other provinces, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, have a partial exemption. Ontario has an exemption for off road only. We support our producers, and we're going to continue doing that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Support for Child Care

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the strategic directions of our government is to invest in families and communities. However, I continue to hear each week from families who live in Edmonton-Decore about issues related to the quality, affordability, and accessibility of child care. My questions are for the Minister of Human Services. Given that our province has a rapidly growing population and limitations on financial resources as a government, are we likely to fall further behind in terms of the accessibility, affordability, and quality of our child care and early learning system?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're not falling behind at all. In fact, ensuring that Albertans have access to quality and affordable child care continues to be a key priority. Edmonton and area, for example, has 34,000 child care spaces, and 79 per cent of those spaces are occupied. Obviously, there are still spaces available. At the end of 2012 Alberta had 96,000 child care spaces, and 80 per cent of those were occupied. So 20 per cent is still available. Now, there are problems in some suburb areas where the spaces are not where the children are, and that work still needs to be done. We've had a lot of . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the not-for-profits have had a lot of success in our communities, to what extent are there government plans to provide more support for not-for-profit child care given our province's current circumstances?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it bears repeating that we have the online child care lookup tool, which makes it possible for parents to search for all licensed and approved child care programs.

Now, the hon. member will know that we don't differentiate between for-profit and not-for-profit child care in terms of the programs that we have. We actually support individuals who need support, and we will continue to do that. In fact, we raised the income threshold levels to $50,000 last year. A hundred per cent of the subsidy is available for any family that's under the $50,000, and if they have more than one child, that income level goes even higher.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: given that child care in Canada has been criticized by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and others for the lack of a comprehensive developmental approach to early learning, can the minister tell the Assembly what the government's plans are to move to a more developmentally based, comprehensive child care system?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the fact that the Premier has tasked Human Services to lead a project with Education and Health and other ministries in the government on early childhood development. We're very cognizant of the fact that investing in young children, doing early testing and early screening with young children and helping young children get a good start, is one of the best investments we can make as a society, and we're working very hard in that direction.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Sale of Public Land for Commercial Use

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not long ago this government embarrassed itself when it twice tried to run through a backdoor deal to sell Crown grazing lands north of Bow Island to a potato farm. The government was forced to back down because of widespread public opposition. To the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development: did the government pay any compensation for their breach and, if so, how much?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to remind this Assembly that our Premier was the one to cancel those leases when we came into leadership here under her leadership and was commended by different groups. This government took action on that. We took action right away, and we are committed to that action.

Mr. Barnes: It's not the cancellation of the leases; it's the cancellation of what might have been a signed contract.

Will the minister tell Albertans how they can trust this government when a special deal was initially done without any public input or without a competitive bid process?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell this Assembly and all Albertans is that with the leadership of this Premier and this government they will be assured that any process of Crown lands that go through will be as we have them in our process. It will be through a public process. The Premier has committed to that. I will commit to that. We've been commended by different groups because of the process of cancelling those leases.

Mr. Barnes: Compensation was the first question.

Given that the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill asked about this in the House and no clear answer was given, I will ask again: is the Brewin ranch purchase near Purple Springs part of the payoff for allowing the government to cancel the Bow Island grazing reserve contract?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was asked last week by one of our hon. members with regard to Purple Springs: is there a contract or a request within the government? We have received no request with regard to that in our ministry. When we do, we will use the proper process through ESRD, that is in our legislation, to deal with that piece of property.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Foothills.

Traffic Court

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I accidentally got a speeding ticket on the QE II, coming up to Edmonton. [interjections] Shame, I know. There's a bit of shame there.

Also last week, to my concern, we heard a lot about the traffic courts here in the Assembly and plans to eliminate all traffic prosecutors and to close rural traffic courts and mandate that all future traffic tickets be paid, with no option to plead not guilty. My question is to the former Liberal staffer here, the Minister of Justice. While you have confirmed that none of these falsehoods are true, what is being done to make our traffic courts more efficient?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy I'm not wearing any red today, with that question.

Throughout this entire province there are a lot of traffic offences, and I'm happy to confirm to you that I've not had one speeding ticket on highway 2 in five years of being an MLA. All things considered, there are more than 1.9 million traffic tickets issued and about 218,000 criminal charges, so this can clog up a courtroom. One of the things that I'm looking at right now is actually moving traffic court outside of our court centres, particularly in Calgary and in Edmonton.

Mr. Webber: Well, if the traffic courts are going to be taken out of the courtroom, Mr. Minister, then won't it have an impact on access to our justice system?

Mr. Denis: I actually think it would have a positive impact. If you go to the Calgary Courts Centre or the Edmonton court downtown, a few blocks from here, typically you go through airport-style security. On top of that, you're also dealing with places downtown that may not be accessible to the average person. I've been downtown and checked out traffic court. There's a long, long lineup. Maybe we should start looking at locating it elsewhere.

Mr. Webber: To the same minister: how much money can we save as taxpayers if we make traffic courts more accessible by moving them out of the courthouses?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question because every budget I've had as a minister has indeed gone down. Taxpayers' dollars are very important to me. I can tell you that we don't have a specific number to look at yet. We're just in the very early days. We will table a report at a later date when we actually have further information about how much money this can save.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, we got through 17 sets of questions and answers today. Thank you for your co-operation.

In 30 seconds I'll call for the balance of the members' statements.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Phil Meagher

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to have this opportunity to recognize a previous colleague and a good friend of mine, Phil Meagher. Phil is currently the longest-serving member of municipal council with the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and just successfully completed a cross-country ski fundraiser in support of the plan to end homelessness. Phil completed a 280-kilometre trek called the Ski for Hope on March 10 after battling freezing temperatures and a bout of pneumonia to reach his goal.

The campaign, which would take him from Fort Chipewyan back to Fort McMurray, was to raise funds for the Fort McMurray Centre of Hope homeless shelter and donate skiing equipment to Keyano College's Fort Chipewyan campus. He set off on February 23, hoping to take about 40 hours to finish, but he ran into trouble in the final 50-kilometre stretch. Freezing temperatures, poor conditions, a wrong turn, and exhaustion put him out of the trip temporarily. Phil had to be transported to hospital, where he was diagnosed with pneumonia. Despite this setback, he vowed to finish his trek. On March 10 after nearly 10 hours Phil passed the finish line and raised more than $12,500 for the Centre of Hope.

I'd like to congratulate Phil for this amazing feat. It takes a lot of courage to make this trek, and I applaud him for his dedication to end homelessness in Fort McMurray.

You know, Mr. Speaker, for many of us working and living in the north, we sometimes take for granted life's basic needs and forget that there are those among us who have to fight to survive in our resource-rich community. Because of the high cost of living in Fort McMurray it presents unique challenges, and it's more of a struggle for us than perhaps other communities in Alberta when one is forced onto the streets. That's why I'm proud that our government has made a commitment to end homelessness in our province with its 10-year plan, which began in 2007. Since then we've made great strides by partnering with communities and their local agencies like our Fort McMurray Centre of Hope and McMan Youth, Family and Community Services Association.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
I recognize the Member for Sherwood Park.

Earth Hour 2013

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My community of Sherwood Park, like many others across the globe, will be participating in Earth Hour 2013. Earth Hour is a world-wide initiative to show how we can all work together to build a sustainable future and combat climate change. Earth Hour asks governments, businesses, and individuals to show leadership and take personal responsibility for their climate impact. To symbolize their commitment, participants are asked to turn their lights off for one hour between 8:30 and 9:30 on March 23. Mr. Speaker, I know our Legislature will be dark as well.

The first Earth Hour was held in Sydney, Australia, in 2007 and involved 2.2 million homes and businesses. The next year participation grew to 50 million in 35 countries. In 2012 over 7,000 cities in 152 countries turned off their lights for the sixth annual Earth Hour. Global landmarks such as San Francisco's Golden Gate bridge, the CN Tower in Toronto, and the Coliseum in Rome all went dark.

It is estimated that shutting off nonessential lights in Canada for one hour could save 15 per cent on an average Saturday night's power consumption. By turning off their lights, participants show that they care about energy efficiency and climate change. I urge all of my colleagues in the Legislature to join in. You can find out more or register your participation by googling Earth Hour Canada 2013. While one hour a year may not make much difference in overall energy consumption, it raises awareness of these important issues. It also demonstrates the power of an idea and global concern about climate change. Together we can make a difference.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Prostate Cancer Awareness and Screening Initiative

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Friday saw another tremendous example of community and business coming together with the announcement of the combines for cures initiative to bring prostate cancer awareness and screening to rural Alberta.

This program was the idea of Tony Overwater and was coordinated by the Prostate Cancer Centre, situated at the Rockyview hospital in Calgary-Glenmore. The founding sponsor is Agrium, who is joined by Monsanto, Bayer CropScience, Penn West, and Brett Wilson and the Birthday Boys. Each of these organizations has committed $300,000 over the next three years to support the project.

The statistics around prostate cancer are frightening, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta prostate cancer is the most frequently diagnosed cancer, with 1 in 7 men being diagnosed, and unfortunately 4 per cent of these men will die of the disease. Prostate cancer is treatable if detected early enough, and that is the focus of the combines for cures program. By having a simple blood test after the age of 40, a baseline reading of the PSA chemical can be recorded and monitored later. Early detection leads to early treatment and in the majority of cases a cancer-free life afterwards.

The next step for the combines for cures program is to purchase a Man Van so that the simple blood test can be taken locally. Rural farmers can also support the initiative by donating grain to their local CPS retail outlet. The money raised from the sale of this grain will also go towards the purchase of the new Man Van.

My colleagues the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development and the Associate Minister of Wellness applaud the vision of these organizations to support a healthier future for rural Alberta. I encourage all of my male colleagues to get tested and that we each encourage our constituents to do so as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Support for Education

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to contrast this government's deeply flawed vision for education with the Alberta Liberal plan. The PC's intellectually and morally bankrupt budget proves they see education as a cost to be cut. This is why the Premier is cutting per-student funding in our public schools and why postsecondary institutions are being walloped with a whopping 7 per cent cut at a time of growth. This is no way to prepare for the future.

The Alberta Liberals have a different approach. We see education as an investment which pays huge returns for our kids, our families, and our taxpayers. One reason we would bring in fair taxation on the wealthiest Albertans and large corporations is so that we would have the money to invest. We would increase investments in education so that we can eliminate school fees, reduce class sizes, bring in full-day kindergarten, invest in early childhood education, and make schools community hubs.

Alberta Liberals would also increase funding for postsecondary institutions so that they do not have to nickel and dime students and burden them with the highest tuition and mandatory noninstructional fees in the country and needless debt.

Education at all levels must be affordable and accessible, and students must receive opportunities to develop their skills. For this reason, we would restore the summer temporary employment program so that students can earn money for tuition and develop communication and organizational leadership skills and get that ever-important first job. The Premier calls STEP a crutch, but students and Alberta Liberals know it's a great investment. We call on the government to listen and step back from STEP funding cuts.

Mr. Speaker, an affordable and accessible education system is good for our kids and their families, but it's actually good for our economy. With cuts to an underresourced education system, it's no wonder Alberta has the lowest high school completion and postsecondary participation rates in the country and industry actually has a shortage of skilled workers.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for the regressive conservatives . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much. I have three tablings today. The first is a series of letters, 400 in fact, from the Michener Centre, individuals who have been affected by the closure of the Michener Centre, and their families – 400, Mr. Speaker – and the appropriate copies.

The second is a report from the Parkland Institute called Delivery Matters, in which it shows the high cost of for-profit health services in Alberta compared to nonprofit.

The final is a blog post by Susan Wright from Calgary, who writes on the site Susan on the Soapbox. She calls it Redford's Keystone Ad in the New York Times: The St Patrick's Day Blunder and refers to communicating the right message to the right audience in a half-baked message to the wrong audience.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling 700 letters from my constituency office, letters that are referring to the cutbacks that are happening at the Michener Centre and the closure of the Michener Centre. So I have five copies of 700 letters.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood or someone on his behalf. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of one of the many e-mails we've received about this PC government's cancellation of the STEP program. In this e-mail Kasey Murphy of Lethbridge tells the story of how the STEP program completely changed her life. She writes: "I am disheartened by the losses that will be suffered by the organizations that utilized STEP and devastated for all the lost opportunities for fellow and future students. I would not be where I am today without this program." The cancellation of the STEP program, which the Premier referred to as a crutch, is yet another example of this government's broken promises to the people of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling a letter from Mr. Neil Evans of Edmonton, who writes a very thoughtful letter regarding our fiscal structure. He calls it "a failed and dysfunctional tax system" that is, in his words, "intentionally designed to maximize the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few." It's a very good letter. I would urge all members of this House to read it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. I just have two quick tablings, Mr. Speaker. The first one is an article from the Calgary Herald from the Leader of the Opposition that talks about: "Calgary might as well establish a red-light district."

The second is five copies of an article from the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills dated August 30, 2012, in which he calls for eight permanent law enforcement officers on highway 63, falling short of the 16 that we offered.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one is the appropriate number of copies of e-mail submissions that Albertans made to the NDP caucus for our budget tour, which visited seven cities in February. Nic, Venessa, Jane, and Emilea are some of the Albertans who have provided valuable input. For example, Nic David from Cochrane would like to see a real investment in long-term care facilities for the elderly so that hospitals can be freed up and used for their intended purpose. Submissions like this clearly show the priorities of Albertans.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of the government's advertisement placed recently in the New York Times which identifies that there will be 42,100 direct and spinoff jobs for Americans during construction and an average of 138,000 spinoff jobs per year.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, could you just table the document? It's not a member's statement.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The ad clearly indicates the tremendous economic benefit the Keystone pipeline brings to the United States economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Insurance Act the Automobile Insurance Rate Board 2012 annual report for the year ended December 31, 2012.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have two points of order. The Member for Airdrie rose at 2:08, and we have a second point of order at 2:21 from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Citation, please, Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Inflammatory Language

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker I rise under Standing Order 23, particularly (h) and (j); subsection (i) as well, but (h) and (j) are the main ones. It is, of course:

23. A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .

(h) makes allegations against another Member;

- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

The reference here is to the Minister of Justice when he stood up and said a few things.

The first will relate to 23(h) “makes allegations against another Member,” or (i) “imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member.” He started out by saying that this party over here wants to put less enforcement on highway 63, and he refers to the tabling that he just made where the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills specifically asked for eight officers to be enforcing traffic on highway 63. At that time the government had not made an announcement as to increased enforcement on highway 63, so what he was advocating for at that point was an increase of enforcement. Since that time the minister responded to this Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and has in fact put more folks on the road than eight, and that’s something that I know this member supports and our party supports. So that is just completely a false accusation. He should withdraw that because he knows that’s false and he’s doing it on purpose.

The second is regarding the issue of this red-light district. Let’s be clear, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose Party has been exceptionally clear at all times that we do not in any way, shape, or form support legalizing prostitution in this province. We’ve been very clear on that. There is no doubt that there is an article that has been specifically tabled from the Calgary Herald, I believe, a document wherein the Member for Highwood has entertained the idea of red-light districts. She has been very open about that, and her views have changed on that over time. The point is that to somehow impute that as the member’s position today is false. It’s not correct, and I would ask him to withdraw that. That covers subsection (h), Mr. Speaker.

Subsection 23(j) is “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.” Mr. Speaker, words are very important in this Legislature. I think we’d agree that there are lots of incendiary things sometimes said in this Legislature, and we talk about that. But when a question is asked about prostitution in this House by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and the minister on that question about prostitution refers to the woman in the red dress to the left, that is unacceptable. That is absolutely unacceptable. This minister should know better than to use words that I believe were intentionally meant to demean the Leader of the Official Opposition and draw the comparison between the question on prostitution to the woman in the red dress. Just saying woman in the red dress, frankly, is shameful and disrespectful and wrong.

If we had said that same thing about this Premier, if we had even insinuated something like that, I guarantee that that side of the House would erupt – and rightfully so – because it would be completely disrespectful to do that, disrespectful and wrong to call somebody a woman in the red dress. On top of that, Mr. Speaker, we’re talking about a question on prostitution, which was the last thing that this member had asked about, and this minister gets up and refers to the leader of our party as that woman in the red dress. That is awful, and he should absolutely withdraw those remarks and apologize to this leader for demeaning and insulting comments, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I’ll recognize the hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I once handled a case where I was representing someone in a case involving defamation, and it comes back over and over again that the truth is an absolute defence. You can say that you had damages, slander, libel, but the truth is an absolute defence.

Mr. Speaker, I just tabled to you, on the first item that the Member for Airdrie indicated, an August 30, 2012, document where the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills calls for at least eight more permanent law enforcement officers on highway 63. We offered 16. My comment was that he wanted fewer officers on the road than our government did and than we later offered.

Secondly, I’ve already quoted over and over again the Leader of the Opposition’s reference to where she wants legalized prostitution. “Calgary might as well establish a red-light district . . . City council should establish a red-light district and begin to clean up the neighbourhoods – and the profession,” referring to prostitution. Again, for me to say in this Assembly that she did say that and she did support that even though her views may have changed – she hasn’t indicated anything to the contrary. But for me to say that she did say that at one point, again, Mr. Speaker, is true.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my reference to the Leader of the Opposition was to someone in a red jacket. I did not say a red dress. The red jacket, to me, refers more to her liberal policies on crime. You note that later in the final exchange that I had with the Member for Calgary-Foothills I referred to my tie. I referred to that I wasn’t wearing any red. I was making a simple reference to the colour of her policies. We all have colours in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, and it is completely disingenuous for anyone to suggest unavowed motives. I would suggest that if you could have a point of order on a point of order, you could do that.

I’m going to tell you one more thing, Mr. Speaker. This member should apologize to every member of this House.

Thank you.

3:00

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. [interjections] The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the floor. Hon. members, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise and speak to the point of order raised by Airdrie. I want to speak in support of it, not in the sense that any of the words of the Leader of the Official Opposition, whether after she was elected or before she was elected, have been used against her by the Justice minister, but specifically on the point of connecting her apparel to the question dealing with prostitution. I think that the hon. Justice minister is not being as straightforward about his motives as he should be. It is, in my view, a reprehensible and sexist remark. The minister should stand and apologize for the implication that he has made because I think it is not befitting someone who holds a high government office such as himself.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I might draw your attention. It seems to me that we’re continuing a narrative that was started last week, essentially around appropriate language. I draw your attention to page 1598 of Hansard from last week. In that exchange it just reminded us that expressions which are unparliamentary, of course, call for prompt interference. It includes

- (1) the imputation of false or unavowed motives;
- (2) the misrepresentation of the language of another.

I think we’ve heard some varieties of what may or may not have been said and what was intended. I think it’s always difficult when we start going down that road.

Language really is subject to a lot of interpretation, and 23(h) and (i) do remind us that language that imputes allegations is not in order in the House, nor any abusive language.

It goes on at the bottom of the page. The Speaker spoke.

Another authoritative statement is found in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, 2nd edition, at page 618.

The proceedings of the House are based on a long-standing tradition of respect . . .

And I emphasize respect, hon. members.

. . . for the integrity of all Members. Thus, [any] offensive, provocative or threatening language . . .

I'm not suggesting that there was any threatening language heard or repeated by anyone, but it does have the opportunity, hon. members, to cause disorder.

Again, I would just caution all members to remember that respect goes above all else in this House. I believe that we can all do better. I don't agree that there's a point of order here, and I would just encourage all members on both sides of the House: we can and we must do better.

The second point of order was raised by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Hon. member.

Point of Order Inflammatory Language

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to cite section 23 of the standing orders.

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

I rose on that point of order after listening to the response of the hon. minister of advanced education to my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona's questions about cuts to postsecondary education and, in particular, about the minister's prolonged absence from this House at a time when the estimates were being debated. He's in the House today.

Mr. Speaker, the minister's response in part – and I don't have the Blues – was to the effect that he was bringing infrastructure to a country that has been devastated by, ravaged by the NDP's ideology. Previous Speakers have made a number of rulings in the past with respect to similar matters. This hon. minister has a habit of engaging in red-baiting when it suits his purposes, but there have been rulings respecting that type of comment on May 25, 1990; March 26, 1990; August 19, 1986; November 28, 1990; and November 29, 2007.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was raising legitimate questions in this House about the serious cuts to postsecondary educational institutions contained in this budget. They are, in fact, the hardest hit of any institutions in the entire budget. The budget of the minister of advanced education has sustained some of the largest cuts, and these are causing a great deal of inconvenience and problems for the postsecondary institutions: for the faculty, for the students, and so on.

The member was quite rightly calling him to account for having a lengthy vacation at the time when his budget was first announced. His response was, of course, that he was there helping a country who had been ravaged by ideology similar to our party's. I want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and to the ministers and all members of the House some significant differences between the positions of our party and those of the government of Vietnam.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if I may. Just a reminder, hon. member, that a point of order is not an opportunity to prolong the debate. You've cited a citation. I'm hoping you'll keep your arguments to that offence, so to speak. I'd really appreciate it.

And just as a reminder, hon. member, we don't refer to absences in the Chamber as a matter of practice.

Please continue.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want though to be able to show why the minister's statement was false and insulting. Our party is very proud of its defence of human rights, something that goes way back in the history of our party. Many of our outstanding leaders, including Stanley Knowles and others, have been at the forefront of protecting human rights in this country and in this province.

Our party has "democratic" in the name, and we believe in free and fair elections, freedom of speech, and so on, many of the things that may not exist in the Republic of Vietnam, that the minister was just vacationing in. We have quite different economic views as well. So there is no legitimate comparison in any way between the views of our party on economic, political, or ideological issues and the government of Vietnam, and I believe the minister knows that to be true.

Mr. Speaker, what it was was a cheap shot from a minister who has no other recourse because he's been caught very much in the neglect of his duties by my hon. colleague and was being held to account for that.

Our party believes in the full right of all parties in this House to stand up free from intimidation from other members and to state their views and to question the government and to hold it to account without being intimidated by the kinds of statements that came from the mouth of the minister of advanced education.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that he withdraw those comments and apologize to the House. Thank you.

3:10

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to respond to the comments of the leader of the NDP fourth party. The member is very selective in his memory of what occurred in the House. He fails to acknowledge the fact that his colleague was in no uncertain terms making provocative comments relative to my charitable trip to that particular country and preferred to depict it as some kind of two-week vacation of, I believe she said, lying on the beach, which is quite unfortunate.

I guess they have very thin skin. They can dish it out, but can't take it when it's coming back. I'm not sure whom to apologize to, whether to the country or to this member, but I have a feeling that since he is quoting the standing orders of this Assembly, he wants me to apologize to him and to this particular House.

I won't be splitting hairs on the similarities and differences between the ideology of that country and his party. I think we could spend a full day debating the similarities and maybe a few minutes the differences. Nonetheless, if it's causing this member so much hardship being compared to another jurisdiction with similar ideologies, I do offer him that apology.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Anderson: I wish that that was an apology that one could get behind, but anyway, Mr. Speaker, I want to support the point of order. Clearly, there is a point of order here. Clearly, what was said was very incendiary. To compare the NDP and our hon. members in that NDP caucus with an ideology that has been responsible for some of the worst human rights violations in the world is shameful. We have lots of differences on policy in here, but I'll tell you one thing. The New Democratic caucus clearly support human rights and many other principles in our democracy that make us strong. I think that it's key that this member watch his tone as we go forward.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I think the points raised in this particular point of order bear a lot of similarity to the one that we dealt with earlier. We talked about language. Language is everything. Language can inform, but it can also sting. I think it would behoove us and be helpful from both sides if we kept our questions and answers to government policy.

With that, the hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education has offered an apology. I would like to accept that apology on behalf of the House because he has made one, and I consider this matter closed.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Provision of Continuing Care Beds

Q14. Dr. Swann asked that the following question be accepted.

As of June 1, 2012, what proportion of continuing care beds were provided by Alberta Health Services, not-for-profit agencies, and for-profit agencies respectively?

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government always announces that they are creating beds in the province for seniors. In years past they gave to the affordable supportive living initiative grants to build seniors' living facilities, and these were broken up between P3s and lodges. These dollars are awarded to the RFP applicants from both not-for-profit and for-profit organizations. We would like to know the percentage in each year that goes to for-profit versus not-for-profit.

It's an issue that surrounds, as we've mentioned in the House, a lot of concern respecting both the cost and the quality of care these recipients receive. Typically, the developers that are building or have already built housing that is to be used for low-income seniors raise the issue that they may not receive the same quality of care as those in the not-for-profit sector.

Some for-profit providers recognize that the filling of the accommodation is only one component of the profit base. The added component would of course be the supportive living side. These for-profit providers typically make their profits on the care side. So that basically reflects our interest in trying to better understand some of this.

Long-term care fees were raised in January 2013. The maximum accommodation charge that operators can now apply in long-term facilities increased by 5 per cent, or a maximum daily increase of $2.80, effective January 1, 2013. Although these raises seem realistic when looking at the rate of inflation, this does become an increase in corporate welfare in some instances of private establishments. We on this side of the House, the Liberal opposition, believe that all facilities, for seniors in particular, are part of the health care system and should be not-for-profit. There is never any real accountability in regard to buildings that are for profit.

We have a difficult time determining what the numbers are and what they may mean, so we're asking for some comparative data there, which truly is in many cases a subsidization of the corporate interests because, in fact, they may or may not pay their staff the same as government institutions and, obviously, would pocket the difference.

So I stand to await the response. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I have relatively few comments moving forward here. We've indicated that we don't believe this matter should proceed for a number of reasons. I think we had this discussion largely on another matter last Monday. I don't have any further comments. I'm not going to belabour the House. I don't like to continue things where we're simply belabouring the horse that's being flogged in the middle of the House here, so I'm going to take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again we see that this government is not prepared for these questions. These questions go in months and months and months in advance. This has nothing to do with the question that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek brought up last week with regard to nursing ratios, LPN ratios, and health care aide ratios. A strict staffing-to-client ratio was what they were looking for. It had nothing to do with how the beds are allocated, whether they are supported by not-for-profit agencies or for-profit agencies.

Once again what we see from this government is no openness and transparency with regard to how tax dollars are being spent, especially in the areas of health and continuing care and long-term care. We know for a fact that this government actually does know how many nonprofit beds there are and how many for-profit beds there are and how many Alberta Health Services beds there are. Why they're reluctant to let all of the rest of Alberta know exactly how many beds there are available is, quite honestly, beyond me.

The Premier mentioned during her campaign and has said for the last 10 months since we've been elected that she'd like to raise the bar on openness and transparency. This government budgets and allocates dollars accordingly. They send out their money and tell clients that they know they have enough continuing care spaces. They talk all the time about how we need more long-term care beds. They talk all the time about how they're increasing beds by 1,000 continuing care beds, yet every time they're given the opportunity to sit in this House and actually define where those beds are, how they're allocated, how they're funded, how they're staffed, they can never seem to be able to show up and actually do their job.

It seems baffling to me that this government repeatedly shows up to this House and is never able to answer a fundamental question about the beds that they have for continuing care, the beds available for long-term care, which are housed in for-profit agencies, which are housed in not-for-profit agencies, and which are even housed in the Alberta health system. It's interesting that this government talks about the extensive budget for long-term care, the extensive budget for continuing care but can't say where this money is going. That's absolutely atrocious and clearly incompetent.

The other part of that is: how can Albertans believe and trust this government when they say that they know what's best for seniors as they age in care? How can they possibly know measurable outcomes if they can't even identify where the beds even are and what facilities are housing what types of beds? We have no idea if the for-profit sector is doing a better job than the nonprofit sector. Or is the nonprofit sector doing a better job than the for-profit sector? Or are both sectors doing a better job than Alberta Health Services? We have no idea because every time this government is asked this question, they're never here to answer. They're never able to find any information with regard to this, yet they're spending $16 billion worth of money on health care.

It seems atrocious that they're not able to answer to Albertans. How can they possibly tell Albertans across this province that they know what's best, that they have measurable outcomes, and that benchmarks are being met if they don't even know where the dollars are going?

How embarrassing this must be for this government to be so ill prepared for written questions that have been on the Order Paper for months and months and months. The reason they're on the Order Paper and the reason they're in writing is specifically to give this government the opportunity to do the research that is required to provide Albertans with an educated answer and to be open and transparent about where tax dollars are sent. It absolutely is astonishing that this government still comes to these written questions ill prepared, and it almost speaks of incompetence.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member protests way too much.

I have the privilege of moving on behalf of the Minister of Health an amendment to this written question, moving that Written Question 14 be amended by striking out "as of June 1, 2012," and substituting "as of March 31, 2012." The amended written question would then read as follows:

As of March 31, 2012, what proportion of continuing care beds were provided by Alberta Health Services, not-for-profit agencies, and for-profit agencies respectively?

The hon. Minister of Health will be able to answer that question and has no problem accepting the question if it is amended in that fashion. As the hon. member who proposed the question will know, there are a constantly changing number of things, and you have to pick a point. It's easiest if we agree to pick a point where the numbers are actually available rather than trying to extrapolate to another date. I understand that there may have been discussions between the Minister of Health and the hon. member with respect to the amendment. I hope there have been and that the change of date will be acceptable to him.

Dr. Swann: I would speak in favour of the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Wonderful.

Mr. Mason: The concern I have – and it may be a concern with the original question as much as with the amendment – is that it talks about a proportion. That means the numbers we'll get back are percentages or fractions. I would ask the Minister of Human Services if it would be the government's intention to provide actual absolute numbers of beds in each category.

The Deputy Speaker: He can only speak once.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment as circulated.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 14 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Community Treatment Orders

Q15. Dr. Swann asked that the following question be accepted.

How many community treatment orders were issued under section 9.1 of the Mental Health Act between April 1, 2010, and April 1, 2012?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These are orders for people to be treated in the community as opposed to in a facility. The impact of cutting beds to the extent that the government has in regard to mental health has led to higher numbers of individuals treated in the community. While this is seen as an important tool for mental health treatment, the question is: are we getting to the point where it's being used to compensate for the lack of institutional beds where needed?

There's a high possibility of harm to patients themselves if they receive substandard care in relation to their needs and also a risk that they may harm others. There's a possibility that they might be incarcerated in the wrong type of facility due to the wrong understanding or ability to regulate their behaviour in certain institutions into which they are forced because of lack of appropriate space. Statistics are not released in the regular course of affairs that will provide information needed to assess the impact of these policy decisions such as bed closures on these individuals affected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health. I'm proposing on his behalf an amendment to this written question and allowing the opportunity for the pages to circulate copies of this.

May I continue?

The Deputy Speaker: Please read it into the record, hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. I wasn't sure if you were rising for something, sir.

The amendment proposes changing the range of dates in which the numbers could be provided. The question would read:

How many community treatment orders were issued under section 9.1 of the Mental Health Act between January 1, 2010, and March 31, 2012?

Mr. Speaker, the change in the range of dates between April 1, 2010, and the same date in 2012 – interesting day – to between January 1, 2010, and March 31, 2012, reflects the period where these numbers are available. My response to the amended written question will be the cumulative summary of the community treatment orders, or CTOs, as reported by AHS for the day on which the CTOs were effective on January 1, 2010. I'd ask all members to support the amendment to the written question.

I will take my seat with that. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Speaking to the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'm interested in the amendment, Mr. Speaker, from the point of view that I would like to be able to compare year over year. If the numbers are presented in a fashion where we can actually make that comparison even though, I guess, it would be 15 months one year and 12 months the next – as long as we can compare numbers and rates, that would be helpful.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening intently, and the hon. member has moved an amendment. "How many community treatment orders were issued under section 9.1 of the Mental Health Act between January 1, 2010, and March 31, 2012?" That is what the member has put forward in the amendment whereas in the original one the member asked the government the following question: "How many community treatment orders were issued under section 9.1 of the Mental Health Act between April 1, 2010, and April 1, 2012?" I can see that what we're only talking about is one month if I'm correct.

I think it's important to get what information we can, quite frankly, because I was in debate when we brought this particular order through, and the community treatment orders are something for which I would like to see how many people are being released into the community. For me, it's not as much the beds, but with these people that are moving into the community, how many of the orders have been made under the community treatment orders? We will accept that amendment, but I will go with the hon. member who brought the written question forward.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others?

I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 15 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

New Special-needs Child Care Spaces

Q16. Dr. Swann asked that the following question be accepted.

How many new special-needs child care spaces were created in Alberta between January 1, 2008, and January 1, 2012?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most families that work need child care space, and typically with a higher income people have a higher number of options. With lower and middle income there is greater dependency on the availability of affordable child care spaces. The availability of special-needs spaces is particularly short. With fewer options middle- and low-income families are held by the parameters of availability to public options.

3:30

This is an important quality-of-life and income issue. We need to ensure that government is providing for these children as per their requirements. If a single mother, in particular, who has a special-needs child cannot find an appropriate space, her availability to enter into constructive alternate work and better her and her child's future is greatly impacted. We're trying to determine how many special-needs child spaces have been created and ensure that this meets the population needs of the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to this particular question. Unfortunately, I'll have to indicate that the question should be rejected on the basis that the question is founded on an incorrect premise, that a portion of funding from the making spaces initiative was allocated specifically for the purpose of creating special-needs child care. That, in fact, is not the circumstance.

Mr. Speaker, the making spaces initiative inspired the creation of approximately 20,000 spaces in total between 2008 and 2011 across the province. While a portion of the funding was certainly used to create child care spaces that support children with special needs and their families, decisions for what types of spaces were created were made at local levels by child care programs based on local needs and therefore were not tracked by our program.

The Ministry of Human Services works with children with special needs and disabilities and their families in a number of different ways and provides support through a number of different avenues. When it comes specifically to child care, the ministry provides child care subsidy support to assist eligible low- and moderate-income families with the cost of child care. As of September 2012 more than 16,700 families were receiving child care subsidy supports. Of these, 78 per cent received the full subsidy, and 22 per cent were helped with partial subsidy supports. More than 500 of these families receiving subsidies for child care services have children with special needs. Keep in mind that this is in addition to a variety of other initiatives our ministry has available to serve these families, including family supports for children with disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, it would be my suggestion that the situation with respect to a family where there is a child with special needs would not be supported through the funding of a program to create new child care spaces specifically for children with special needs because we don't know where those might be needed at any given time. Rather, it would be to work with a family through FSCD to determine what their child care needs are and how we can support them to get those child care needs through FSCD.

So while I appreciate the member's question and the concern in this area, a concern that I share, I have to reject the question because I actually don't have that kind of information with respect to specifically creating spaces for special-needs children. We don't actually do that. We did fund through that process the creation of spaces. Some of those spaces would have been created for children with special needs. But where we actually identify and support the need for child care for children with special needs is through the FSCD program. That would be one of things that would be considered in terms of the support the family might get through that particular program.

Regrettably, because I think it's an important topic and certainly an important concern for Albertans, it's not something that I can respond to with an answer with respect to the written question in that way.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Are there others?

Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, you can close debate on the question.

Dr. Swann: Well, I would like to close debate. I'm puzzled because the minister just said that he understands that 500 children with special needs are being cared for in the system, and then he says that he can't provide the numbers, so there's an inherent contradiction in what he's saying. Are you monitoring them or not? If you are, why not give us the 500, then, as a statement if that's the correct number? Surely, we need to monitor this to identify whether there's an unmet need for children with special needs.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Written Question 16 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Student Loan Amounts for Medical School Graduates

Q17. Dr. Swann asked on behalf of Mr. Hehr that the following question be accepted.

What is the average amount owed in student loans by a student graduating in 2011 with a medical degree from an Alberta university?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This speaks to affordability and accessibility of postsecondary education but medicine in particular. It directly impacts the Alberta economy and the availability of workforce and may speak to doctor recruitment and retention.

After graduation the jurisdiction that a student may wish to practise in will most definitely be influenced by their outstanding debt upon graduation and possibility of high pay scales. Young doctors carrying a high debt may be less likely to move into a smaller community, where they will be receiving less pay, and their cost of living in the city is generally less than living in a rural area. I take that back, Mr. Speaker. That sentence doesn't make sense.

Lifestyle and cultural accessibility are less present in rural areas, and with a high debt load they may wish to stay in a larger centre in order to seek opportunities for advancement, particularly through specialization. Young students, when looking at cost of education, may choose to seek their education elsewhere, and the result of this is often practising elsewhere, where there are more flexible alternatives to their current practice.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand there has been discussion between the ministry and the member under whose name this question stands on the Order Paper. He is aware that I will be moving on behalf of the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education that Written Question 17 be amended as follows: (a) by striking out "amount owed in student loans by a student graduating in 2011 with a medical degree from" and substituting "amount of total federal and provincial loans provided to a medical student enrolled at" and (b) by adding "who entered repayment in 2009-10" after "Alberta university."

The written question as amended would then read as follows:

What is the average amount of total federal and provincial loans provided to a medical student enrolled at an Alberta university who entered repayment in 2009-10?

Again, Mr. Speaker, the reason for the amendment is really one of timing and being able to provide information that is available. I'm given to understand that the numbers with respect to 2011, which were in the question, wouldn't be available as yet but that the 2009-10 numbers would be available, so the minister would be pleased to provide the information with respect to the numbers we do have with respect to that particular context.

Also, changing the wording from "amount owed in student loans" to the wording "total federal and provincial loans": I'm guessing here, but I would believe that the reason for changing that was that we wouldn't necessarily know what students owed with respect to any other student loans they might have from private institutions or elsewhere, but we do know the loans that they got through the Alberta student loan process, which manages the federal loan program and the provincial loan program.

As I say, as I understand it, this has been shared with the mover of the motion. I can't tell you that he's agreed to it or not because I don't have that information here, but I do know that it's been shared with him. The purpose of the amendment really is to streamline the question so that it refers to available information now. Certainly, as the information for the next year comes available, I would encourage the hon. member to approach the minister for that information.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, I would speak against the amendment at least in the sense that it's written. There are two options within the amendment. There are two amendments. I think we need to sever them and decide on each of them separately. For example, I can agree with the 2009-10 period, part (b), but I can't agree with striking out the "amount owed in student loans" because that's precisely what we want to know. How much debt do young physicians incur in medical school?

It may be one thing to talk about loans, but it's actually quite another thing to ask – and we could compare them to other provinces – how much debt they have, and that's part of the problem. We have among the highest tuition in the country, and that's part of the reason why we want to know how much debt is being incurred, how much discouragement there is to getting a medical degree and to going into family medicine because of high debt load that they've been incurring and giving incentives to go into specialty practice, where they can pay off high loans quicker. Part (a) doesn't address the real question, so I'd like to sever these two and vote on them separately, part (a) separately and the (b) amendment separately.

Thank you.

3:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. associate minister responsible for SPD.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member doesn't appear to be aware that there are private student loan instruments such as a student line of credit offered through any chartered bank in our country. Of course, there are other private loans, even family loans, for example. Surely, he can't expect that the government would have access to such information; therefore, we can't report it. If that remains the content of the question, then we'll be rejecting the question because we simply can't meet the terms of the question.

I think it's an entirely reasonable amendment, and I think it should be passed as is.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's an interesting time, and it's an interesting question that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has asked. He's talked about the fact that he'd like to know: "What is the average amount owed in student loans by a student graduating in 2011 with a medical degree from an Alberta university?” Then the government comes back, and they don’t say anything about the privacy issue or anything. They talk about an amount owed in student loans by a student graduating in 2011 with a medical degree and substituting “amount of total federal and provincial loans provided to a medical student enrolled at an Alberta university.”

The hon. member talks about the privacy of the loans. What the government is proposing is that they want to talk about the breaking up of the amount of total federal and provincial loans provided and adding that after “an Alberta university.”

I think this is a good question, actually. With the things that are going on right now with the AMA, all of the contracts and negotiations that are going on right now in this province in regard to what I am going to say are negotiations in regard to pay, I think it’s important that if someone is looking at going for a degree and going into a medical profession, they know how much debt they’re going to face when they graduate.

You know, you would think that the government would like to know what debt students are incurring when they go to university. It’s not that we’re asking for every student. Just tell us exactly: if you’re going into the medical profession or, for that matter, engineering or the teaching profession, what is the student going to incur as debt? It’s interesting to me why the government would not want to have this information as they plan for the future like they say. They’re always criticizing the opposition about: we’re stuck in the past, and we don’t talk about the future.

You know, I guess I’m wondering why there’s so much controversy over this particular question.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I’ll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Now back to the question as amended. Are there others?

[Written Question 17 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Workers’ Compensation Board Complaints

Q18. Dr. Swann asked that the following question be accepted.

How many written and telephone complaints has the ministry of employment and immigration received related to the Workers’ Compensation Board in each of the fiscal years from 2002-2003 to 2011-2012?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The numbers of complaints to the ministry about WCB reflect dissatisfaction with the board and, obviously, relate to conflicts over denial of claims, proper medical care. It’s clear to me as an MLA for eight years that there are significant problems still unresolved with the WCB system that relate to the appeal period, which is only a year. In many instances this is very difficult for people to meet given their illness or their injury, their rehabilitation, the financial implications for them and their families, some of the emotional turmoil that some of them are going through. So that appeal process is a real problem for some.

There is inconsistency in providing claims in some instances. As I’ve heard, there is in some cases confusion between who is supposed to be paying the injured worker, the employer or WCB, and some conflicting documents that go back and forth. There are independent medical exams that conflict with the medical exams within WCB, and there is a sense in many instances that there is an incentive for WCB to force people back to work prematurely, resulting in earlier problems and conflicts. There is an unwillingness in some cases to deal with the psychological impacts of the injury and the financial impacts of the injury on the family and the failure to address some of the extra needs of some individuals, not all but particularly some, who develop mental health problems or have addiction problems or whatever their illnesses are.

These are the kinds of issues that I think would be reflected in the numbers of complaints and how they’ve changed over the years and how well the appeal process is working in WCB and how well we’re getting people back to full health and function and therefore able to work and support themselves and their families.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. associate minister of PDD.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise and address Written Question 18. I’ll do so first by expressing a little outrage at the preamble and the discussion of that hon. member, who pointed to – I just was writing as fast as I could – confusion about who pays, whether it’s the WCB or the employer. There’s absolutely no confusion. It’s an absolutely ridiculous statement. Conflicts, inciting the workers to return to work prematurely, ignoring addiction problems or mental health concerns: those are outrageous allegations, none of which, I might add, are actually asked for in Written Question 18. It’s just a drive-by shooting of a whole bunch of people that work very hard in the WCB.

I can tell you, getting back to Written Question 18, which only deals with the number of complaints that the WCB receives – and somehow we should use workers’ complaints as measures of the full litany that will be recorded in Hansard there. I think the member might want to apologize to the workers at WCB, particularly when he understands the information that I’m about to talk about.

Mr. Speaker, I’m sure the member can appreciate that over the last 10 years they dealt with a great number of workers in greatly trying situations, and they received a great number of inquiries. They do indeed record the number of inquiries that they get, whether that be by phone or written or in person. In the period from 2002 to 2011, which is the last full year that we have, the inquiries have fallen by more than 50 per cent, thereby refuting another of the member’s allegations. Furthermore, recognizing that the number of inquiries might not be a great measure of the number of people that they actually deal with because a particular complainant might phone several times or a person seeking information might phone several times, they actually also record the pure number of claimants who phone. I can report that that’s fallen by well over 50 per cent.

I am prepared that tomorrow at the regular time I will be tabling the results of those. However, those are not actual complaints, and I cannot tell the member the breakdown of complaints: just straightforward inquiries, inquiries as to the status of a file – did they receive the information? – those sorts of things. I cannot actually answer the member’s question about the number of complaints that were received. Mr. Speaker, we’ve been around to the table officers, and there is no way to amend this question in such a way that meets the legal requirements of the question that he’s asked. So despite being able to provide the information that I will table tomorrow, the information I just referenced, I’m moving that we reject Written Question 18. I still will be tabling the information nonetheless.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. associate minister.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I may, having been in industry for a number of years and paid into workers' compensation on behalf of the employees that worked with me, I'm interested in this, too. I think it does need to be taken in context, as has been suggested. I think the number of complaints compared to the total number of issues satisfactorily resolved would be an important figure to understand. I think it would be helpful to the Workers' Compensation Board itself to want to know how many complaints they received about their service or about their attempts to resolve these issues as a way to monitor their own effectiveness. I'm pleased to hear that the number seems to be dropping, but at the same time I think the hon. minister implied that they aren't tracking how many complaints there really are, and I think that they ought to.

While the question doesn't specifically address that, I think it's an inadequacy in and of itself, and that should be tracked. It will be useful both to the board in its own internal self-regulation as well as to the industry and our employees, who look to the board for assistance and for relief and for help. If there's a perception that they aren't being treated fairly – I can tell you that in our office workers' compensation issues are, in fact, among the most popular concerns that we receive calls about, so there is something there. If there's been improvement, then I feel sorry for my predecessor because he must have had to put up with an awful lot more than I have.

I think it's important that people know that the government, through the Workers' Compensation Board, really does care and that they can actually sufficiently help to really provide genuine and substantial relief. I think it's a good question in the sense of what's implied along with it, and I would hope that whether the question itself meets the criteria that the government thinks is important, they would at least sense the intent of the question. I don't think the intent is to embarrass. I think that the intent is to monitor and to get some feedback. The board itself should be looking for feedback because you can't course-correct if you aren't measuring, and if you aren't measuring, then you won't notice where deficiencies really are.

That's what I'm interested in, and I think most of us are as well on both sides of the House because we're here to represent people, some of whom have been injured while on the job. We need to be able to reassure them that the board is serious about trying to care for them or that we can act on their behalf if they do have problems that do need I won't say intervention but the assistance, perhaps, of our various offices.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is an interesting discussion. I want to rise and mention on behalf of the associate minister that we agree that that's good information to be tracked, and we'll endeavour to track that information going forward. It's interesting because for a period of time up until the April 23 election and a few days thereafter, when the Premier was good enough to appoint an associate minister, I had that responsibility for the WCB in my area. One of the things that I was quite excited about was the fact that for the first probably 10 years of my serving as an MLA, in my constituency office workers' compensation was one of the key issues. Workers' compensation and maintenance enforcement were the two big issues that came into the office.

Over the last five years that has actually reduced considerably, and that's because of the changes that were made and because of the efforts that were put in to ensure that the Workers' Compensation Board understands its mandate about helping injured workers get back to work and supporting them when they're not in a position to do so. In the first few months when I had responsibility in my office for WCB, I was very surprised at the fact that we got very few complaint calls either from members of the public or, quite frankly, from other MLA offices, which was quite interesting to me.

But the hon. member has a good point. We should be tracking that. It's not definitive because, of course, as you pointed out, people go to various places when they have concerns. One of the places they tend to go – and I think they should – is to MLA offices. Sometimes they come directly to our offices, sometimes they come to the department, and most often they maintain their dialogue with the WCB or perhaps the Appeals Commission.

Just tracking that number in and of itself is not definitive, but I think it's fair to say that the numbers have gone down considerably over the last number of years and certainly in the period of time in which they were in my office and now in the associate minister's office. It would be useful, I think, on each call that comes in to track to see whether it's just a call for further information and action or whether there's actually a complaint being registered about the way the files have been handled or about the policies that are in place.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there are others?

Seeing none, I'll call the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much. Well, thanks to the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. I think he's really offered a friendly amendment, that we would like to know not only how many complaints but how well they were resolved. I think that's a reasonable suggestion to improve the efficacy of the question. I'm sorry the government is not able to honour the question and give the information, but I appreciate the minister tabling it tomorrow.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Written Question 18 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Inmate Population at Correction Institutions

Q19. Dr. Swann asked on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

What are the government's estimated projections for the increase in prisoners expected in provincial correction institutions as a result of the recent changes to the Criminal Code, Canada, including but not limited to mandatory minimum sentences, reductions in two-for-one credit for time served in remand centres, toughening drug and alcohol laws, et cetera, per year for the fiscal years 2012-2013 and 2013-2014?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The increasing number of federal inmates combined with the rising per capita cost of incarceration have made it increasingly expensive to operate and maintain the prison system. The per capita cost of incarceration for all inmates increased by almost 37 per cent from 2000 to 2011.

The prison system is increasingly overcrowded. At issue is whether overcrowding might lead to more inmate misconduct and recidivism. The results of research on this topic have been mixed. One study found that overcrowding does not affect inmate misconduct or recidivism. Other research suggests that there is a significant positive relationship.

The inmate-to-staff ratio has also increased. The growing prison population is taking a toll on the infrastructure of the prison system. The departments have a backlog of modernizations and repair projects. Past appropriations left the prisons in a position where they could expand bed space to manage overcrowding but not reduce it. However, reductions in funding mean that the ministry will lack the funding to begin new prison construction in the near future. At the same time, it has become more expensive to expand Alberta's prison capacity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his submission, but it is with regret that I'm recommending rejection of Question 19, posed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, as set out in the Order Paper on November 1 of last year.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of problems with the written question. First of all, the term "prisoners" refers to only sentenced inmates. I know the member was trying to help us, but we don't cover that. Statistics maintained by my department only capture inmates, which refers to remand and sentenced inmates.

There are also some issues with the changes to the Criminal Code referred to in the question. Mr. Speaker, bills C-10 and C-25 are the federal government's recent primary amendments to the Criminal Code that may impact correctional operations. For the most part they are supported by this government. All provisions within Bill C-10, the Safe Streets and Communities Act, have been in force since November 2012.

Parts 2 and 4 of Bill C-10 are anticipated to have the most significant impact on correctional services as they relate to restricting the use of conditional sentences, increasing some mandatory minimum sentence provisions, and amending the provisions in the Youth Criminal Justice Act. Unfortunately, they don't deal with mandatory minimums for drunk drivers causing death, but that's another issue. The full impact of the legislation won't be realized until the end of fiscal 2013-14 or even later, I would suggest.

With respect to Bill C-25, the Truth in Sentencing Act, this actually came into force in February of 2010. This legislative amendment restricted the amount of credit available for time spent in pretrial custody. Previously you would have received two for one if you had served time in custody prior to your sentencing.

This information the hon. member has asked for is not captured in a way that generates statistical information or projections as data related to the enhanced credit received by Alberta inmates was not sufficiently available to conduct this type of analysis.

This notwithstanding, Mr. Speaker, my department can provide information on the growth of the adult custody population after this bill came into force in February 2010, as I had referenced. Therefore, I've asked my department to provide this information to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in a timely manner.

While I am recommending rejection of this question as proposed by the hon. member, I always welcome her suggestions as well as those of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View on how to keep Albertans safe and secure in our communities.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this written question. I think the numbers here should be readily attainable. It's important that we have the projections for the increase in prisoners so that we can of course build the appropriate facilities to ensure that they're maintained and to ensure that we put as many bad guys behind bars as possible.

What I am concerned about with the refusal to answer this question is that perhaps there's an incongruence with the new federal Conservative tough-on-crime approach with what we're seeing to be a continuation of a progressive soft-on-crime approach with the current Justice minister. It's unfortunate that he would not be in communication with his federal counterparts to ensure that their legislation is going to be appropriately dealt with with respect to the provincial jurisdiction when it comes to prisoners.

I don't know if this dramatic change that this progressive Justice minister is implementing here in Alberta – of course, we've seen it with the fact that he doesn't believe that individuals for first and second offences should be duly prosecuted under the law. We've seen that he has cut funding for electronic monitoring of some of the criminals who have committed some serious crimes. We've also seen the fact that he's cut the safer communities fund, which was quite preventative in terms of getting to the source of the issues before they fester to come into the justice system.

I have a feeling that the minister's rejection of this policy is somehow a further indication that this progressive Justice minister with his background is now rejecting the federal tough-on-crime approach. We're seeing it here with his policies in Alberta. You know, we saw a progressive justice policy put forward by Pierre Trudeau. I think Albertans soundly rejected them, and I'd hope that the Justice minister in his new progressive approach isn't bringing those types of principles and policies here to Alberta because I can tell you that Albertans do want a tough-on-crime agenda. They do want to put bad guys in jail.

The fact that he cannot answer what I'd suggest is a relatively simple question – we're not asking for actual numbers. It's stating "estimated projections." The fact that under his leadership his department hasn't actually done the analysis to determine what these projections are is just another indication that I think, you know, this fundamental shifting in justice policy here to a more progressive approach isn't going to work here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. I'd hoped that the Justice minister would simply provide the estimated projections so that we know here in Alberta that we will be able to ensure that we have appropriate resources to deal with those increased projections.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Written Question 19 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Staffing Details for CFSAs

Q24. Dr. Swann asked that the following question be accepted.

How many supervisory and front-line staff positions were in each of the child and family services authorities for the period from January 1, 2009, to December 31, 2011, and what was the funding allocated for salary and wages for supervisory positions compared to front-line staff?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the intent of the question is clear. It's important to understand how trends have changed over the last few years in terms of front-line, on-the-ground care individuals versus administrative and management positions.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to move an amendment to the question and would then be prepared to accept it with the amendment. The amendment is: be it resolved that Written Question 24 be amended as follows: (a) by striking out "for the period from January 1, 2009, to December 31, 2011" and substituting "as of September 30 for each year from 2009 to 2012" and (b) by striking out "was the funding allocated for salary and wages" and substituting "were the salary and wage ranges." The amended question would then read:

How many supervisory and front-line staff positions were in each of the child and family services authorities as of September 30 for each year from 2009 to 2012, and what were the salary and wage ranges for supervisory positions compared to front-line staff?

The reason, of course, for the amendment is that the number of positions is fluid in terms of what positions have been hired to at any particular time and any particular place. I think the hon. member wants to be able to, as he said, measure trends year over year as things happen. I think the way we've rephrased the question will allow us to take a point in time in each year.

If the hon. member wants more information, I can certainly endeavour to do that at more than one point in time, but in the amended motion I'm offering a point in time in each year to discern how many people were employed in each of the child and family services authorities and then what the salary and wage ranges were with respect to the front-line staff. I anticipate being able to provide that information very quickly, but as I say, if that's not responsive to his question in terms of what he needs, I'd be more than happy to have that discussion with him to see whether further information could be provided or provided in a different way. I'm certainly prepared to answer it in this way and then have that discussion about broader information. I would encourage members to accept the amendments.

It would be very difficult to do it on a day-by-day basis through the course of the years, which is what the question as it's currently worded would require us to do. That would take a lot of time and effort, which I'm sure the hon. member hadn't intended. As the question is currently written – I won't go into the detail – it doesn't sort of look for a point in time. It looks for a range, so you'd have to go through day by day to properly answer the question and do that. We've picked a date and said we'd do it once per year on that date, and that gives you the trend lines.

My commitment to the member is that if he wants more, I'm happy to discuss it with him, and we can figure out how to do it in a way that doesn't utilize very important resources inefficiently but gets him the information that he wants.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: To the amendment.

Mr. Wilson: Yes, of course, sir.

I'm actually quite surprised. This seems very reasonable from the government benches. You know, it kind of makes me reflect on a number of other written questions where a similar type of information has been asked for, that have been about date ranges, and they've been rejected by the government because they couldn't provide date ranges. I don't know why a logical, reasonable amendment like this could not have been proposed for a number of those other ones, whether it be the ratios or the number of beds.

That being said, I'm not going to belabour the point. I think that we've made that point quite clear on this side, how we feel about some of those. I think that this written question's amendment is going to provide information that is critical. I hope that the government uses this as a bit of a template for future written questions that are asking for numbers and dates as opposed to just flat out rejecting it, whether it's because you don't want the information to be public or not. I think that this is going to provide information that will be helpful for all of us and for Albertans in general to understand.

I actually want to thank the Minister of Human Services for agreeing to this amendment. Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Having listened to the minister, I think it's eminently reasonable to accept the amendment, and I'll discuss with him further some of the finer points, which, I guess, have to do with the disbursement of resources to one or the other sector. I'm still interested in the total amount that is being paid by September to management and the total amount that is being paid to front-line staff even if it's at that point in time, in September.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others?

I'll call the question, then.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 24 as amended carried]

Reported Abuse of Children in Provincial Care

Q25. Dr. Swann:

How many children who have been under the care of the province have been part of a reported situation of abuse, and how many of the reported cases have been substantiated for the fiscal years 2006-2007 through 2011-2012?

Dr. Swann: I do move Written Question 25. I think that's part and parcel of our responsibility as government to assess how our programs are managing, both identifying and getting into proper care, abuse situations, especially if they're under the care of the province. The question is self-evident.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

4:10

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I recognize the hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I would welcome the hon. member's question and his concern for the safety and well-being of children under care. I think everyone in this House, in fact all Albertans, should really put a high priority and emphasis on the well-being of children. Unfortunately, there are situations where intentional or nonintentional actions lead to a child in care being harmed, and we have to work as hard as we can to minimize both of those, actually.

In 2008-2009 the ministry and the office of the Child and Youth Advocate began tracking and publicly reporting on children who experience abuse while in care. This tracking is now being done with consistency across the system. Pre-2008 data is not considered reliable as there was inconsistent usage in interpretation of definitions of abuse and the manner in which data was collected. These issues were resolved when the new system was introduced in 2008.

Begging the hon. member's indulgence, I would like to move that Written Question 25 be amended by striking out "2006-2007" and substituting "2008-2009." The written question as amended would then be:

How many children who have been under the care of the province have been part of a reported situation of abuse, and how many of the reported cases have been substantiated for the fiscal years 2008-2009 through 2011-2012?

Important information, I think, for us to have and to look at, but as I indicated, we don't believe that pre-2008 data is reliable; therefore, a system was put in place to appropriately track this carrying on from that year. The question as amended would provide the information that I think the hon. member would want to have to be able to focus on this issue and to delve further into it. Again, I'd be more than happy to have discussions with him as we go further with this. I think we share a common concern that we need to put our children first. We need to make sure that children are appropriately cared for and, when they are in the care of the province, that there are systems in place which ensure that harm, whether intentional or unintentional, does not befall a child where it can be avoided.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I want to thank the Minister of Human Services for understanding how important this information is for us and for Albertans to get an understanding of what's happening in the child and family services area. I don't have a lot to say other than that we'll certainly be supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just with respect to the amended question I guess I'd like to know the opinion of the mover in terms of what the effect of the amendment will be in the sense that it looks like two years are going to be omitted from the government's response. The rationale is, I think, that the definition of abuse was different back in those years. If the mover would like to answer that, I'd appreciate it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. We can get that answer, but this will close debate on the amendment.

Hon. Minister of Human Services, if you care to respond.

Mr. Hancock: I don't think there's an opportunity to close debate on the amendment. In any event, he was asking the question of the mover.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, this is your amendment, hon. minister.

Mr. Saskiw: The question is to Calgary-Mountain View.

The Deputy Speaker: Oh. Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, your question is to Calgary-Mountain View.

Please proceed.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm disappointed that we haven't had a consistent definition of abuse for more than four years in this province. I must say: it is what it is. If this government doesn't have reliable statistics before 2008, then so be it. There's no point in trying to dig through data to identify whether the old definition and the new definition are sufficiently similar that we can still make significant conclusions about the trends in abuse in care.

I guess I would accept the amendment at this time with great reluctance.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I think it's safe to call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Back to the motion as amended.

[Written Question 25 as amended carried]

Cost for Residents in Continuing Care Facilities

Q26. Dr. Swann asked that the following question be accepted.

For each of the fiscal years 2002-2003 to 2011-2012, what was the average annual cost for a resident in long-term, enhanced living, and designated assisted living facilities both in private and not-for-profit facilities respectively?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I'm rising on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health. I'm proposing on his behalf that there be an amendment to this written question. I'd allow for copies of the amendment to be circulated while I continue speaking if I may. Thank you. The question would read:

For each of the fiscal years 2009-2010 to 2011-2012, what was the average health care funding per resident per day for long-term care, and what was the average health care funding per resident per day for designated supportive living for 2011-2012?

Information such as the operating costs and the total cost to residents in these settings is not available. Funding information is not available prior to the consolidation of former health regions because the information was not collected in a consistent manner, yet another advantage of going to one region from seven. Work is under way to collect data on actual expenditures going forward. As such, the hon. Minister of Health is able to provide information on health care funding in long-term care and in designated supportive living. Furthermore, the information on the maximum accommodation charges to residents in long-term care settings is available publicly.

I'd ask all members to support this amendment to the written question, and I will take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

To the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm somewhat taken aback by the comments from the Justice minister on the amendments to the written question from the fact that this government is responsible for regulating all long-term care, private care, enhanced living, and designated assisted living facilities in this province. It's somewhat striking to me that they wouldn't have the information prior to the amalgamation or to Alberta Health Services coming under one umbrella. They are the regulators of these facilities, and you would think that they would be able to explain to the minister, even if it was under the regional health authorities, what the facilities were charging residents at the time. I think the question is very simple. It's the average annual cost for a resident in long-term, enhanced living, and designated assisted living facilities both for private and for nonprofit facilities respectively.

We've had this conversation before, when, quite frankly, we were trying to get any information out of the government in regard to the question that was asked last week on the staffing ratios. I know we've got several FOIP requests out right now, trying to just get some information. It's amazing to me that this somehow seems to be information that the government isn't willing to provide or willing to share. I know my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View has probably done the same amount of FOIP requests and had the same questions. I know we as the Wildrose have had written questions like this on the Order Paper over the last couple of years. It just strikes me that the government would not know when they're talking and continually bragging about the fact that there are a thousand continuing care beds that they have every year and about the plans that they have for the seniors in this province. It not only concerns seniors that are in these particular residences, but it could be, you know, folks a lot younger that can't live in a normal setting.

It strikes me, again, that the government does not want to provide this information and is now hiding behind the fact that when we had the regional health authorities, it was different then. Now we're under one umbrella, under Alberta Health Services. As I've said previously, the government is responsible for regulating these facilities, whether they're private or nonprofit.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on the amendment?

Dr. Swann: Well, I have to agree with my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek that this really skirts the whole question and the whole purpose of the question. It's one thing to ask about the average annual cost for long-term care in each of those facilities. It's quite another for the government to say: we'll give you the average health funding per person. We would really like to know how the costs have changed and particularly a comparison between private and not-for-profit. That's the whole purpose of the question, and it's entirely sidestepped by the statement that they would give average health care funding per resident for long-term care and for designated assisted living.

I don't understand what the problem is. Even if it is for six years fewer in which they have the data, it's not going to give us answers to the question even in these last two years, which they're offering to give. It's not going to tell us what we actually want to know, which is a comparison of the average cost of long-term, enhanced, and designated assisted living between private and not-for-profit centres. It's a total ignoring of the question, I would have to say, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would tend to agree with my colleagues from Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Fish Creek that part of the original intent of this question was to get an understanding of the difference between private and not-for-profit care and what's being spent there. Again, we go back to a discussion that is very similar to one we had last week. I think that the government's reluctance to be forthcoming with this information is suggesting that there's something to hide here.

You know, I'm happy to see that they're willing to at least amend the question as opposed to just flat out rejecting it, which has been some of the pattern we'd seen previous to today, but that being said, I think that there is some validity to getting a good understanding of what's happening in the private sector versus what's happened in the not-for-profit. If one is competing with or doing a better job than the other, I think that, again, we should have an understanding of that. If the funding model is different, if the government is providing the exact same, well, great.

It just seems to me a little bit odd that, again, they're withholding information. It's an unfortunate reality, but it's the one that we live in, so I guess we have to take what we're given.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Now back to the motion as amended. Other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Written Question 26 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Hospital Occupancy Rates

Q27. Dr. Swann asked that the following question be accepted.

As of January 1, 2010, January 1, 2011, and January 1, 2012, what were the total number of acute-care hospital beds in Alberta that were unoccupied due to limited availability of operational funding?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In other words, over a 12-month period how many beds were available but unstaffed and therefore unavailable for occupancy, leaving some hospitals and some wards overwhelmed largely due to the lack of operational funding?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health, and again I'll try not to beat the dead horse. This is rather simplistic, what we're proposing.

I'm proposing this amendment to the written question, and the pages will circulate them now. May I continue, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: Please do.

Mr. Denis: Thank you.

The amendment proposes changing the range of dates for which the numbers would be provided, and the question, if the amendment is accepted, Mr. Speaker, would read:

As of March 31, 2010, March 31, 2011, and March 31, 2012, what were the total number of acute-care hospital beds in Alberta that were unoccupied due to limited availability of operational funding?

Changing the date to March 31 reflects the date at which the number of acute beds are reported. I'd ask all members to support this amendment to this written question, and I will take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'm pleased with the amendment, Mr. Speaker. I didn't anticipate that we'd have as much willingness on the part of the government to go back further, so this is a positive amendment. Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Wildrose I also want to thank the government for providing an amendment that we can also accept. It's unfortunate that we couldn't get the same sort of agreement on some of the long-term care and continuing care beds, but by all means this is a very positive step.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Now to the motion as amended. Other speakers?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the motion as amended.

[Written Question 27 as amended carried]

Motions for Returns

[The Clerk read the following motions for returns, which had been accepted]

Nuclear Power

- M1. Mr. Hehr:
A return showing copies of all correspondence between Bruce Power and the government regarding proposals for nuclear power in Alberta for the period between January 1, 2006, and February 20, 2011.

Public-private Partnership School Designs

- M4. Mr. Hehr:
A return showing copies of all communications between Alberta school boards and the Ministry of Infrastructure regarding complaints concerning P3 school design.

Government Aircraft Records

- M2. Dr. Swann moved on behalf of Dr. Sherman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all detailed information, including flight records, final destinations, duration of stay, unscheduled stops, and a list of occupants on each flight, however recorded or archived, by electronic means or otherwise, that relates to the operation and usage of any provincially leased or owned aircraft from December 16, 2010, to April 23, 2012.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are rejecting this motion because all of this information is currently available on the website. It would seem to be somewhat of a redundant exercise.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to speak in favour of this motion. Of course, we have to ensure in this Assembly that every single tax dollar is spent wisely. This information is about the use of provincially owned or leased aircraft. I know that this information is likely available through FOIP applications, and I'm sure that the leader of the Liberal Party will be processing the appropriate FOIP requests, but if the information is readily available, I think that one should err on the side of full disclosure. We have a Premier that's talked about being open and transparent. If this information is, as the hon. Finance minister says, available on a website, then clearly this information could easily be provided. I'm under the assumption that this motion is actually asking for very detailed information that may not be on the website, including things like unscheduled stops and so forth. In this circumstance I would err on the side of fuller disclosure.

Why this information is, of course, relevant is that there are instances – I know that in my own constituency an MLA flew to my constituency for the opening of a school. It wasn't the Education minister or the Minister of Infrastructure; it was simply an MLA from another constituency. That forced me to of course FOIP the expenditures on that particular flight to garner the amount of wasted taxpayer dollars in that circumstance. Potentially, it could be zero if the plane was already, of course, scheduled and so forth, but it's interesting information to see what kind of taxpayer dollars are being expended on what, I would suggest, would be in that circumstance an unnecessary trip.

So I think that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is simply trying to garner as much information as possible to ascertain whether or not taxpayer dollars are being spent wisely.

Again, if this information is available, I don't see why the government would just simply reject this motion out of turn. It seems that there's almost the implication that this information should be hidden or something. So I speak in favour of this motion.

Of course, the other important information here, I think, is that we've had a debate on medevac. It'd be interesting to see how much the municipal airport is being used by government planes, planes that are owned by the government, of course, or planes that are leased by the government. I think that information would be relevant and pertinent to the medevac debate. You know, there's been an ongoing debate on how much the municipal airport was used. Of course, during this time period my understanding is that the cabinet ministers – that the provincially owned planes would be almost used exclusively at the downtown airport, so it'd be interesting to see what the numbers are there.

The reason I think the list of occupants on each flight is included in the motion for a return is so that the opposition can ensure that taxpayer dollars are being closely scrutinized so that if there's a particular flight with a particular occupant and that doesn't use taxpayer dollars wisely, we can then put that to the government to ensure that in the future flights are only used for critical core services that the government provides, not as an airplane to use freely just for the sake of using it and it being more convenient. We need to ensure that every single tax dollar is spent wisely. If this information is regularly available during this time period, I would suggest that the government provide it rather than trying to stop the opposition from knowing this information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I found that last speech rather astounding from a party and a member who constantly talks about taxpayers' dollars and respecting taxpayers' dollars, that he would want a motion for a return to have somebody tasked to go through and compile all of this information and put it in written form so that it can be tabled in the House, so that it can be stored in perpetuity in the archives, so that it's available for them, when they can go to the website. On the website it has:

The manifests include the following information:

- When the flights took place;
- Which government aircraft was used;
- Where the flights began and ended;
- The purpose of the trip; and
- Who was aboard.

This is for the years 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013. The information that was requested is on the website. Everything that they've asked for is on the website. The information is publicly available.

For that hon. member to get up and make the speech he did about hiding information, about all that sort of stuff: absolute balderdash. For that hon. member on a day-to-day basis to talk about wasting taxpayers' money and then get up and say, "I'm going to submit FOIP requests," so that some FOIP co-ordinator can spend a lot of time doing his homework for him by going to the website and getting all the information down and copying the pages so that we can bring it in and table it here so that he can have it handy to look at: absolutely absurd, hon. member. You should be ashamed of yourself. This question should be rejected.

You know, written questions and motions for returns are great tools to frame a question, to ask for specific information that may or may not be available, but to put one on that asks for information that's readily available, and they're just too lazy to do the work: that's absolutely absurd.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that the minister of agriculture is returning to the Assembly because I'd like to relate . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: We don't refer to the absence or departure or otherwise of a member. Carry on with your point on the amendment, hon. member, please.

Mr. Strankman: On the 14th of February, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to use a government Dash 8. Through our party I was able to fly down to Calgary on a 37-passenger Dash 8 that flies out of the municipal airport almost on a daily basis. On this day the aircraft flew with 19 bodies out of whatever. At the Western Barley Growers convention I met with other significant members of the opposition who also had taken a government aircraft that day. There are hon. members across – and I think he knows who I'm speaking of – who were also there and attended that same facility. They took a separate aircraft.

The pilots on my aircraft told me when I returned to the hangar at Calgary that those gentlemen had returned. Their aircraft had already left for Edmonton. I had made a personal request to the member opposite to fly on that aircraft. I was denied. Now, maybe the member opposite was going to a different location. I don't specifically know that. But to the gentlemen . . .

Mr. Hancock: Go to the website and find out.

Mr. Strankman: It's not available, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Speaker, the utility of the Dash 8 is not available on the website. You can find out the passenger manifest. The long-term utility of an aircraft flying at 50 per cent capacity or less is not in the best interests of the taxpayers of Alberta. Certainly, I've talked to the pilots of that aircraft that I flew with. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please. The Member for Drumheller-Stettler has the floor. Thank you.

On the question, hon. member, please.

Mr. Strankman: It's my understanding that these aircrafts are not being used to the utility that they're required for the taxpayers' dollars, and the method to find out this information is not available to taxpayers. That's the reason I'm in favour of this motion. I've had personal experience with the use of these aircraft, recent experience. That's what I wish to tell you about, Mr. Speaker, that it's not available.

When the medevac flights go to the International, there's going to be the movement of the same transport department. I don't know if those expenses are going to be allowed to be rolled into the file required to find out information. Under the Results-based Budgeting Act I don't know that there's been a review posted either for the use of these taxpayers' dollars in this function.

So I would like to vote in favour of this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to stand up and debate this motion because I've been on that side, and I know the frequency of the government plane both as a cabinet minister and a private member and now as a member of the opposition. I understand what the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is saying in regard to the manifest and what's available online. What isn't available online is the room that's available.

I would like to talk, from a personal view, about when the members for Calgary-Mountain View and Edmonton-Meadowlark – the Member for Calgary-Mountain View may recall this – and I had been asked to attend a health debate back sometime that was being televised both in Edmonton and Calgary. The members for Edmonton-Meadowlark, Calgary-Mountain View, and I tried to get on the government plane, and we were told it was full. We were attending the same debate as the Minister of Health at that particular time. We're off scrambling, trying to get onto a regular flight, which, quite frankly, is quite costly to the taxpayers. The same thing when we tried to go back: the flight was full.

We've had this discussion in our caucus. For some of us that come from southern Alberta, quite frankly, the roads can be a little treacherous at times. And the flight is always full. For us it's important to find out exactly what flights are available. I know when I was a government member flying up sometimes on Sunday nights or Monday mornings on the government plane and also flying back Thursdays at – I forget – I think it was 6 o'clock, there are times that they make space available on whatever plane they're going to use depending on how many members are on that particular government flight. There is always – I would suggest 90 per cent of the time – room available.

So while some of that is what the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has said, that it's available on the website, I think that probably if you read the motion to its fullest, it says:

. . . a copy of all detailed information, including flight records, final destinations, duration of stay, unscheduled stops, and a list of occupants on each flight, however recorded or archived, by electronic means or otherwise, that relates to the operation and usage of any provincially leased or owned aircraft from December 16, 2010, to April 23, 2012.

Well, it's all well and good to brag about what is available on those flights. I remember that the previous member for Rocky Mountain House, who was actually the Minister of Transportation at that time, was quite agreeable in regard to posting some of this information.

So I think that if you look at the motion in whole, it will be quite revealing on how many times planes have come back deadheaded. You might have a plane where you're only travelling with two or three people. I think the government has to remember that this is a plane owned by the taxpayers of this province. They would like to see some accountability for some of this. I think if they want to brag about what they do post on the website, the rest of the information can also be posted.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as I sat back listening to the hon. Government House Leader in his little tirade there, I just flipped open the unparliamentary language section of Beauchesne's, and I found probably at least four or five different indications where unparliamentary language was clearly used. I think if you were to go back and read the Blues, you would see that as well.

I'm not going to stand up and talk to the motion. I just simply want to put forward that, you know, it was a rather unfortunate use of language that the hon. Government House Leader chose. I think that it's an unfortunate piece of that debate. [interjections] I'm sorry. What was that?

An Hon. Member: Raise a point of order, then.

Mr. Wilson: Well, I appreciate the option to do that. You know, I couldn't find them quite quick enough to raise the point of order, but thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on the motion?
Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion for a Return 2 lost]

Swan Hills In Situ Coal Gasification Project

M3. Dr. Swann moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all reports, studies, financial forecasts, and any other materials prepared for Alberta Energy on the Swan Hills in situ coal gasification power project and the associated carbon capture and storage project.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The motion for a return, as the hon. member has indicated, asks for documentation on the Swan Hills in situ gasification power project. In fact, I have consulted with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre – we had a very pleasant chat – and the information specific to carbon capture and storage particular to coal gasification will be directly provided to the member in the very near future.

It's also really my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the member was looking for information to confirm or to better understand that CCS is indeed an appropriate use of taxpayers' dollars. Of course, we're all interested in that topic. I'm sure this will help people understand that circumstance. So because of the importance of this, I will also be making the same information public and available electronically.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, my door is always open to members of all sides of the House to provide information as requested.

I move at this point as a technicality to reject the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak in favour of this motion for a return. There are many questions that I feel need to be answered. There was a news release that the Alberta government put out saying that at this time it didn't meet the scope of the government's funding requirements. I would actually like to know what those funding requirements are for CCS.

You know, $285 million has now been postponed, and it has not been reallocated, what they're going to do with that $285 million. Just throwing it out there that maybe that could be put in the minister of agriculture's fund. That would take care of that 6 cents a litre for about eight years for the Alberta farmers that produce the food for our great province if they are looking for somewhere to go with that money. There is nothing that says what that money is going to be used for now.

The gasification of this coal underground to produce this synthetic gas: it's been mentioned that they would like to see gas at $5 a gigajoule. Currently it's quite a bit below that. So what is the funding? You know, is $5 a trigger? If it is, then what are their projections for how long it will take to get into that range of $5? We've heard it could be many, many years before it's $5 again.

There's quite a bit of information that could be presented. I'm happy to hear the hon. Energy minister say that his door is always open. Again, he's been very forthcoming with myself, you know, meeting and answering some questions, and I like to hear that. But I think that it could be made a little bit more public, some of this information.

What is the total cost of the carbon capture and storage for this project? If the government is putting in $285 million, what's the total cost of that? How much money is the company going to be putting in? What is the trigger that actually makes it worth while? Is it $5 just to cover that $285 million, or is it $5 a gigajoule to cover the total expense, and how much profit is going to be made after all their expenses? That's something I would like to find the answers to.

So, you know, I would like to stand in favour of this return. Obviously, from the Energy minister's statements, he will not be tabling this return, so I guess he can look forward to a visit from myself in the near future.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there others?

Would the mover like to close? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I guess I was a little confused by the minister's response. At first I thought he was planning to provide the information, and then he indicated that he wasn't prepared to honour the motion for a return and, instead, will be tabling it at some future date. I guess that's the same as responding to the motion for a return.

It's clearly something that is on the minds and, obviously, in the budgets of our government. We need to know all that we can, and I guess we'll come back afterwards, then, with further questions depending on what information we receive.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member
I'll call the question.

[Motion for a Return 3 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on behalf of the Member for Calgary Buffalo.

School Fees Details

M5. Dr. Swann moved on behalf of Mr. Hehr that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of the fees charged to parents by each of Alberta's 62 school boards for each of the school years from September 2009 to June 2012.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure again to rise. This is obviously trying to get at some of the increased costs for families associated with fees that are meant to make up the difference between what school boards are receiving from government and what they're forced to garner from parents. It's a recurring question that, I guess, many of us have about when the government is going to adequately fund our public education system and ensure that we're not nickel and diming or indeed severely compromising some individuals, especially those of few means, in our school system. So I look forward to hearing the minister's response.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:50

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are a number of things in the question that would beg for comment with respect to whether you can actually tell what the hon. member was asking from the information. Just because school boards are charging fees does not necessarily mean that the system is underfunded. In fact, we have one of the best if not the best funded education system in the country and, I might say, the best results in the country if not in the English-speaking world, as some, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, would believe. However, the question of school fees has become an issue in the last few years. Now, school fees are within the purview of the school boards, and we should be very clear on that. There's a range of areas in which they can set fees and collect fees.

We are prepared to provide information where we have it. I would ask that this motion be amended so it can be answered by the Minister of Education, and I would propose the amendment read: be it resolved that Motion for a Return 5 be amended by striking out "for each of the school years from September 2009 to June 2012" and substituting "for the 2011-2012 school year as collected by the department." The amended motion for a return would then read as follows:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of the fees charged to parents by each of Alberta's 62 school boards for the 2011-2012 school year as collected by the department.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, school fees are the purview of the school boards. This return as moved requests school fee data from September '09 to '12, so for essentially three school years. The department only has detailed information on school fees charged by the boards for the 2011-12 year simply because we never collected that data from school boards previously. That was entirely within their purview and their authority to do. We did collect it in 2011, however, in response to a specific request by the previous Minister of Education, so that information is in hand and available. If the members would like to have information with respect to the other school years, they can do exactly what we would have to do, and that is contact the school boards and get the information.

I would ask that the amendment be passed so that we can provide the information that we have and so that we do not have to, again using taxpayers' dollars, go out and collect other information, which is available to them, from those other jurisdictions. If it's that important and relevant to them, that's a process they could undertake. It's not one that I would suggest we should have Department of Education officials use their time to do. They have the information. They're working on a go-forward basis on the whole issue of school fees. The issue of school fees is important to people.

Certainly, on a provincial basis we now have the 2011-2012 data available. It wouldn't, I would suggest, be in anybody's best interest to set up a make-work project to go back and collect the historical data which we don't have.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

On the amendment? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak against the amendment. Of course, the elimination of school fees was one of the main components of our campaign. At the doors we received lots of favouritism for this, a lot of parents feeling that there were a lot of extra costs. There were some hard times with affordability for some of the parents. There was a lot of discussion that in a system such as ours it was an unnecessary burden on a lot of lower income families.

With the question specifically, though, I like how the hon. member had it worded, how it was going to show the difference between each of Alberta's 62 school boards for what they were collecting, rather than the way the government has proposed in the amendment, as collected by the department. From what I've been hearing in Cypress-Medicine Hat, it almost seems like no two schools, no two school boards are the same. They all charge different amounts. Some force them to collection agencies; some don't. Some tie up tons and tons of administrators' time in phoning parents for the fees, chasing bounced cheques, explaining why these work.

Surely to goodness it would be beneficial to the 87 of us in here to see how this information relates to all 62 school boards, to see how the enforcement works, and maybe to see how it's tied to the results of each of these schools. Again, because of the situation where all the different school boards have the ability – and there are certainly a lot of strengths in that – to charge different amounts, let's see where it's working.

I'll tell you an interesting story on almost a personal basis. I have a grade 7 son who plays basketball, three baskets last game. There's a school in my constituency where a lot of Mennonite people have moved into the school, and the teachers and the people involved have been doing tremendous work getting these kids involved. The kids are playing on the basketball team, getting more and more involved in the school as time goes by, and large parts of this are working. But one of the interesting things that was discussed was that when the issue of fees were charged to some of these kids, it became a real roadblock, a real difference in culture, a real difference of opinion, a real difference in the value of school and in some cases the value of athletics.

Again, in my opinion, in this day and age of shared technology, in this day and age of shared information, this would be very, very valuable information for all the 62 school boards to share and for the 87 of us in here to have access to to debate these motions. For that reason, I speak against the government's amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Now back to the motion as amended. Are there other speakers?

[Motion for a Return 5 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Public Funding for Private Schools

M6. Dr. Swann moved on behalf of Mr. Hehr that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all government studies on the impact of reducing public funding to private schools.

Dr. Swann: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. For the final push I think the intent is evident that we on this side believe that there's an inordinate amount of money going to private schools that should be invested in the public system to ensure that they have maintenance issues dealt with and that children's education is in a suitable environment.

I'll take my seat and allow debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Education I would urge the House to reject this question. Alberta is recognized for providing one of the best education systems in the world. It's a system that's built on a range of educational choices, including public, separate, charter, francophone, and private schools. Students consistently perform among the best in Canada and around the world, and accredited private schools have officially been part of that and have officially been recognized in Alberta since 1946 and have received some form of public funding since 1967.

Accredited private schools are funded at either 60 per cent or 70 per cent of the base instructional operational funding for public and separate schools, and they do not receive capital funding or a number of differential grants such as transportation, class size, small schools by necessity, to name a few. To qualify for government funding, private schools must be accredited by the Ministry of Education and must meet a specific set of expectations. Accredited funded private schools must follow the Alberta programs of study and must employ Alberta-certificated teachers. Additionally, the schools are required to prepare and regularly update three-year education plans and annual education results reports.

Private schools are providing Alberta kids and their parents with educational options, and for this reason we believe that they are an important part of the choice that should be celebrated, not condemned. The Alberta government has not done a study on the impact of reducing public funding to private schools and is not considering doing one. Therefore, again, I would encourage the rejection of the motion.

I might say, though, that it doesn't take much analysis to understand that if you stop funding private schools, and therefore the attendance numbers at private schools goes down and the attendance numbers at public schools goes up, there would be more public money required to fund that because we fund on a per-student basis and we fund a hundred per cent of the public schools and we fund transportation grants, etc. . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. Government House Leader, but the time for the consideration of this matter has expired.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Fiscal Policy Legislation

506. Mr. Anderson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation which would do the following: limit spending increases to no more than population growth plus inflation, prohibit the introduction of a budget that proposes a cash deficit, allocate half of all cash surpluses to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, and amend the appropriate legislation to suspend the practice of spending the interest generated by the fund until it reaches an amount of at least $200 billion.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to introduce private member's Motion 506 at a time in our province's history when an assessment about the government's record of fiscal management could not be more important. Two weeks ago Premier Redford . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we don't refer to members by name.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, sorry. My bad.

Two weeks ago the Premier introduced her 2013 back-in-debt budget. It was our province's sixth deficit in a row and a damning indictment of this PC government's recent fiscal mismanagement. Budget 2013 was where all the irresponsible PC election promises collided with reality, leaving a trail of broken promises and affirming the warnings of so many who said that the projections in last year's budget were borderline hallucinogenic. But the dire situation revealed in Budget 2013 did not just start last year. It is the culmination of a long-standing lack of concerted and consistent fiscal discipline.

Although left-wing politicians, including most of the PC MLAs opposite, claim that the problem stems from a lack of provincial revenue, the opposite is, in fact, true. The Alberta government has a spending problem. Unlike some human beings, numbers don't lie. The majority of the last two decades have brought annual record revenues flowing into the provincial treasury. Because of the fiscal restraint shown by Albertans during the '90s, our province was able to eliminate a $23 billion debt albatross taken on by former Premier Getty while posting 13 consecutive provincial surpluses of more than a billion dollars a year.

Then came the years of excess. In the last 10 years preceding this budget, the Alberta government increased spending by 100 per cent. That's double the rate of inflation plus population growth. The Premier's first budget increased operating expenses at a staggering rate of 6.9 per cent, or $2.4 billion. Economists, policy analysts, advocates, and commentators have long warned of the peril in the government's robust increases in year-over-year spending since 2005. The provincial government has been repeatedly advised that continuing to ramp up spending at the rate of the past several years was unsustainable and would quickly deplete all of our savings, and they were right. In 2008 our province had almost no debt and a $17 billion rainy-day fund. By election 2016 we'll have a $17 billion debt and no rainy-day fund.

This sorry state of affairs is bound to happen when one party has been in power for more than four decades and has failed to implement or maintain rules to ensure fiscal discipline and responsible management. Balanced budgets and refraining from debt are not ends in and of themselves, but they are critical to ensuring the long-term sustainability of core social programs that are important to Albertans. Balanced budgets and responsible surplus management ensure that we fulfill our responsibility to future generations, ensuring that the opportunities for prosperity are even greater for them than what we enjoy today. It is up to us to take the torch, to grow the Alberta advantage to new heights, and then pass that torch to others after a job well done. Sadly, we are not fulfilling that duty. It is time to start, and we can do so by passing and implementing Motion 506 today.

The first part of Motion 506 limits annual government spending increases to no more than the rate of population growth plus inflation. Every day Alberta families make responsible spending decisions to make ends meet and save money for their future. By limiting spending increases in this manner, the government will be able to sustain core social programs and preserve funding for infrastructure, municipalities, and front-line workers such as nurses, teachers, and social workers, all the while balancing the books and having money left over to save for the future.

Some of those over on the other side may recall that I advocated for this spending restraint role while still a PC MLA. I remember the former Treasury Board president being irate with me because I dared to challenge him in question period as a government backbencher on the issue. I followed that up with a private member's bill calling for this legislated spending cap, which was soundly defeated by the PC majority. I was told I was being too inflexible, that everything would work out. Well, guess what? Everything did not work out. I'm not happy about being able to say that I told you so, but here it is. If this government had held spending increases to inflation plus population growth since just 2005, Mr. Speaker, the last six deficit budgets would have all been surpluses. Instead, our $17 billion rainy-day fund is gone, and we are staring at $17 billion in debt by election 2016. Those who allowed this to happen should be absolutely ashamed.

People often ask: what spending would you have forgone since 2008, for example? Easy. We would have cut all corporate welfare grants, and that would have saved us billions of dollars. We would have shrunk the size of what we spend on AHS and government bureaucracy by 20 per cent, saving billions more. We would have held the line on front-line wages to cost-of-living increases. We would have shrunk the number of government managers to workers from 4 to 1 down to 10 to 1. We would have cut cabinet and MLA pay, forgone Olympic-size junkets, mothballed a $300 million new MLA Taj Mahal, and ended the long line of patronage appointments to friends of the government family. In short, we would have spent the money where Albertans needed it instead of where the PCs wanted it.

Motion 506 also asks the government to "prohibit the introduction of a budget that proposes a cash deficit," starting in Budget 2014. Although the Wildrose has offered a balanced budget alternative since 2010, the fiscal mess the PCs have us in today will necessitate now a two-year plan to get us back into balance without the need to cut front-line services, positions, and salaries, as we promised during the 2012 election. Unlike the governing party, this party keeps its promises. This government has thrown out Ralph Klein's no-deficit and no-debt law. A Wildrose government would bring it back.

Then there's the issue of savings. This government has proved itself to be the most incompetent fiscal regime in our province's and potentially our nation's history. We know that in 2008 our province had almost no debt and a $17 billion rainy-day fund. By 2016 we will have a $17 billion debt and no rainy-day fund. The recent treatment of the heritage fund, established by Premier Lougheed, that was meant to save enough of our resource wealth so that future generations wouldn't have to rely on oil and gas forever – this visionary plan has been the most neglected of all. What has transpired instead has been nothing short of intergenerational theft. The heritage fund, when adjusted for inflation, is worth less today than in 1976, when Lougheed created it. Think about how disgusting that is. It would be worth roughly $137 billion today had the annual interest, just the interest, earned since 1986 been left in the fund to grow without the need of investing even one more cent of resource revenue. Instead, it was spent, all of it squandered, wasted. The fund is worth only $16.4 billion today. What a waste.

I'm glad to see that the importance of growing the heritage fund finally seems to be on the government's radar, but the government's plan to borrow billions each year just to save a few million in the heritage fund is entirely counterproductive to becoming financially independent. Wildrose will not allow the heritage fund to continue to be squandered. Motion 506 says that upon the budget being balanced, we would legislate a rule to allocate half of all cash surpluses to the heritage fund. We would then also "amend the appropriate legislation to suspend the practice of spending the [annual] interest generated by the fund until it reaches an amount of at least $200 billion." There is no time to lose. I am not willing to look my children and grandchildren in the eye 20 years from now and try to explain how this generation was too incompetent, too selfish, too morally bankrupt to even save a small fraction of our nonrenewable wealth so they can keep the core services and job-friendly environment we enjoy long after the day of massive oil wealth has passed.

As the Official Opposition the Wildrose understands that we must propose solutions and demonstrate how we would do things differently. We have put forward robust policy proposals during the past three years in our 100-plus page caucus policy green book, in our annual alternative balanced budgets, in this year's Wildrose financial recovery plan, in the 10-year debt-free capital plan, and in a series of pledges to Albertans during the last election. I would suggest that no opposition party in our province's history has offered more concrete, proactive solutions than we have, and we are very proud of that. Most of all, Wildrose will be guided by our number one motivation, Albertans. We will continue to work hard every day to make this province a better place for our neighbours, our children, and our grandchildren for decades to come.

I ask that my fellow members pass this motion immediately and get to work implementing it in legislation for all Albertans now and tomorrow. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, there's a lot of political hyperbole and, I would say, some fairly insulting language in a lot of what was said there. Let me get to the basics of this. I appreciate that the hon. member has come up with some constructive ideas, many of which actually have been considered or suggested in past reviews of Alberta's fiscal framework. In fact, the results of the government's most recent review of the framework are actually contained in Bill 12, the new Fiscal Management Act, which is currently before the House. With that proposed legislation and Budget 2013 the points that have been raised in this motion are actually no longer needed.

The motion proposes that spending increases be limited by law to no more than population growth plus inflation. Mr. Speaker, the budget that we currently have before us in this House holds the line on spending. The rate of growth in operating expenses is zero per cent in 2013-14, well below the estimated 4.3 per cent rate of population growth plus inflation. While population plus inflation can be considered as an important consideration, we don't believe that it's a measure that should be mandatory.

Limiting spending increases based on these factors is far too simplistic and inflexible, especially in a province like ours, Mr. Speaker, where growth is inevitable. We are growing at a tremendous rate. Population plus inflation doesn't take into account the demographics or other pertinent factors. For example, the demand for social programs and growth in the number of seniors accessing health care and seniors' programs isn't equal to population growth. Enrolment growth in early childhood to grade 12 or postsecondary education is unlikely to be the same either.

While we do consider population growth and general inflation as we develop budget targets, legislating this would be problematic. I do recall the hon. member having discussions in our caucus about whether or not we should legislate a cap on spending, but we have growth in our province, Mr. Speaker. We have people coming here because we have jobs. That's not to say that the government shouldn't rein in spending, and as shown by this current budget, we currently are doing that. We're doing this by putting our house in order first and taking a very careful look at our spending because it's the right thing to do. We have had to make some tough but thoughtful decisions with Budget 2013. We're also continuing to look at the efficiency and effectiveness of our programs and services through results-based budgeting.

We're freezing MLA and management pay and reducing the number of public-sector managers by 10 per cent. The hon. members across the way talk a lot about: they're going to cut 20 per cent of the management in government. You could get rid of all of the managers in the GOA, Mr. Speaker, and it would save you half a billion dollars this year. But what do you do next year? No managers. No growth.

We successfully negotiated a deal with the teachers that sees three years of zero increases, Mr. Speaker. We're holding the line, and we're living within our means because it's the right thing to do, not because it's been legislated. We were elected to make those decisions by the people of Alberta.

Another proposal from the motion is the prohibition of the introduction of a budget that proposes a cash deficit. Mr. Speaker, the proposed Fiscal Management Act legislates that the operational budget can only be in deficit if there are sufficient funds in the contingency account to offset it. I take a bit of an issue when the hon. member said – and his leader said this, too – that the rainy-day fund is going to be gone in three years, that it's going to be – poof – gone, disappeared. I guess they're not really looking at the column which shows that the balance at the end of the year in 2016 is more than 4 and a half billion dollars. The balance of total savings for the province of Alberta is more than $24 billion. Hardly poof, but I guess they're having difficulty reading financial statements.

Mr. Speaker, we're also in that projecting an operational deficit of $451 million. That's true, and it's a great concern to us. We're withdrawing the funds from the contingency account to deal with that, and that's exactly what the contingency account was set up to do. It was to provide short-term fiscal stabilization.

I'd also like to remind members that Alberta is in a net asset position, the only province in Canada to be in that position, Mr. Speaker. In fact, our net asset position will grow over the next three years to $44 billion. The legislation that was previously before the House, which had the definitions in section 2, that the hon. member was waving at me yesterday, was all about the change in net assets for the province. That's the definition that was used previously. Now, we're going to use that, and we're going to use the operational deficit or surplus to show Albertans exactly what's happening in their operating and their capital and their savings.

Lastly, the motion suggests allocating half of all cash surpluses to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Interesting concept, Mr. Speaker. It would also require the fund to retain all interest earned by the fund until it reaches at least $200 billion. Two hundred billion. What happens if there are no cash surpluses? What do they do then?

Bill 12, on the other hand, will take an annual portion of nonrenewable resource revenue right off the top – right off the top – before it's even considered for use in expenditures and place those funds into savings, Mr. Speaker, because that's what Albertans told us they wanted us to do, save in the good times and in the challenging times, and Bill 12 does that. So our savings will be driven by our revenue intake and aren't dependent on running surpluses. That means we're going to save both in the good times and in the challenging times, as I said, and it's going to reduce our reliance on nonrenewable resources, just as Albertans told us that they want us to do.

Bill 12 also retains an increasing portion of the heritage savings trust fund's net income, and on that we agree. That's why we put it in there. That's why it's in this budget, Mr. Speaker. By 2017-18 a hundred per cent – a hundred per cent – of the fund's net income will be retained for our future generations, which I'm sure the hon. member will agree is a good thing.

The act also doesn't prevent us from adding additional amounts into those savings, Mr. Speaker. The government knows how important savings are, and we will add more money when we are able to do so, money beyond what's legislated in the act.

Mr. Speaker, I would argue that the changes being made to the fiscal framework in Bill 12 provide more flexibility to deal with actual spending pressures that arise. We've seen some of those in the past years. You know what? This government continued to maintain its capital spending through some very, very difficult times, that kept 80,000 Albertans at work, that built the infrastructure that Albertans need, including the schools that this hon. member talks about. That's what Albertans wanted us to do.

I don't know if you know this, Mr. Speaker, but I'm a grandfather. I'm actually a proud grandfather of three grandsons, and probably about 10 years from now they're going to need some schools to go to, in less than 10 years, actually. I want them to be able to go to school, and in the future their parents will pay for schools, too. Their parents will pay for roads and hospitals and all those other things that we're building today. That's why Bill 12 is important. It sets the fiscal framework so that my grandkids are going to have schools to get into in the next few years, not wait for when we have some sort of cash accounting voodoo that they're doing over there, that they can build it in cash.

Mr. Speaker, this new act that we've introduced into the House, Bill 12, limits the ability to have operational deficits and takes money off the top to cover our debt-servicing costs and our savings. It implements a strict savings plan that in some ways goes beyond the steps that are proposed in this motion. So I cannot support this motion because Bill 12 is better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes, please. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise and speak to Motion 506, put forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie. I just want to indicate that I'll be saving my comments on Bill 12 for the actual Bill 12 debate and avoid getting into, you know, a comparison between a bad plan and a worse one, but I do want to put on record some of the views of the NDP with respect to the motion that has been put forward by the Wildrose opposition.

Mr. Speaker, the first thing I want to say is that this particular motion unduly restricts the tools available to government to manage economic growth and budgets of the province of Alberta and in doing so, I think, will create far more problems than it solves.

For example, the limitation on spending increases to no more than population growth plus inflation makes sense as a good policy to be followed most of the time, but by placing it into legislation, as the Wildrose would like, it locks the government in, and there may be times, particularly when you're anticipating rapid growth in the future, when you need to spend in order to be prepared for that growth in terms of infrastructure or the training of people in universities and technical institutions and so on. There are lots of reasons why you may want to ramp up your spending in a certain year or a certain period in order to prepare for circumstances that you may see developing in the future. So that's, I think, a significant problem.

I guess the second thing that I have to say about this is that the Wildrose financial plan that was released the other day doesn't meet the criteria that are set out in this motion. I think that's a difficulty, Mr. Speaker, that needs to be dealt with. The Wildrose financial recovery plan would not be legal if legislation as proposed by the Wildrose was in fact passed. For example, the Wildrose budget contained cash deficits in 2013 of $2.75 billion and $2 billion in 2012. If the Wildrose had taken into account the interest generated by the heritage fund, which is expected to contribute over $1.07 billion to the general revenue of the province, then their cash deficit for 2013 would be $3.82 billion. So there's a pretty big mistake in the budget.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You're calling a point of order?

Mr. Anderson: Point of order. Absolutely.

The Deputy Speaker: Citation, hon. member.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). Clearly, we're not supposed to impute false motives or say things that should be disparaging about other people in this House, Mr. Speaker. I would have the hon. member know . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please, so we can hear the member.

Mr. Anderson: I know you're excited over there. You're so cute when you get excited.

I want that member to very clearly know that we have to have our motions in several months previous to the budget coming down, to today. [interjections] Well, you're imputing a false motive. You can't call a point of order, genius, on a point of order.

In other words, we had to have our motion in before we saw the budget. Therefore, we could not change the motion. We tried, but we were not allowed to change the motion to reflect what was in our alternative budget, which came, of course, just last week. Just for a point of clarification on that.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

I'll have the hon. member respond to the point of order called.

Mr. Mason: Yes. In my experience in this House, Mr. Speaker – and I've been the recipient of points of order, and I've dished them out as well, even won a few – nowhere in 23(h), (i), and (j) does it refer to simple arithmetic as impugning motives.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has covered it. There is no point of order. It shouldn't have even been risen as a point of order given the fact that the hon. member admitted that all he was doing was standing to try to correct what is obviously a mistake in their math. Whether it came in before or not is irrelevant. The fact of the matter is that their planned document that they purport to be a budget does have about a $3 billion hole in it, and they haven't really figured that out yet. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is right.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, we're discussing a motion here, and this motion is dealing with a subject that, depending on interpretation, may or may not refer to other matters that are before the House: the budget, a certain act, and timing. Certainly, any suggestion that one could anticipate or will anticipate what this House might do in terms of how we deal with the budget, for that matter, or the piece of legislation that refers to some of the matters referred in the motion – really, I think we should allow members the opportunity to debate this motion. I can't find where you're stretching for a point of order, hon. member. I'm sorry. I hope we can carry on and get some good debate on your motion.

With your indulgence, I'll ask the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to continue, please.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that very much. Now, the Wildrose plan states that a hundred per cent of the interest generated by the heritage savings trust fund must be put back into the fund. In 2013 the government of Alberta estimates that interest from the fund will contribute $1.07 billion. That means that if it was taken to a consideration, the 2013 Wildrose alternative budget has a consolidated cash deficit of $3.82 billion.

Mr. Speaker, this comes to my point, which I made earlier during question period last week, that we have the Progressive Conservatives, on the one hand, with a $5.2 billion deficit, the Wildrose now with something approaching $4 billion if you do the math, and we have between them the deficit twins. Now, why is that? What else do they have in common? They also have in common a defence of the Ralph Klein tax cuts that were made when royalties were very high for natural gas, for example, $8 billion a year. Of course, the corporate tax rate has been cut from 16 to 10 per cent, with an objective of eventually getting to 8, and the flat tax, of course, also cost billions of dollars in revenue by handing tax breaks to the wealthiest Albertans. At the same time middle class families are paying more in taxes than they do in some other provinces as a result.

Since both parties refuse to force the wealthy or the corporate sector to pay their fair share, we are overly dependent on royalty revenue. That's the problem, and this motion doesn't get at it any more than the government's bill does or the government's budget. Because both parties are parties that are beholden to very, very powerful and wealthy corporate interests in this province, they refuse to deal with the underlying cause of the problem, which is that we are far too dependent on volatile royalty resource revenue.

This was something that was pointed out by the Emerson report, which was established by former Premier Stelmach, and made its report in 2011. I was present at the Alberta Research Park release of the report. I listened very carefully, and I read the report carefully. They warned the government that this could happen, that this was a risk, and others have said the same thing. Peter Lougheed certainly has talked about this as well. We have a situation where the government doesn't take in enough reliable tax revenue because of these inconsistencies and imbalances in the overall tax rates in the province, so we're too dependent on royalty revenues that are very, very volatile. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we're in the position where every time the price of oil drops in this province, we're laying off teachers and nurses. Frankly, we can do a lot better than that, but this government has stubbornly refused to deal with the situation.

Lougheed also talked about saving. Now, the government and the Wildrose both have some savings plans, but here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. When we use royalty revenue from a nonrenewable resource to pay for our current program expenditures, we are robbing our children and our grandchildren of their birthright. We need to move to a position where all of the expenditures for program expenditures in this province are financed strictly from tax revenue and not from royalty revenue. Unless the Wildrose and the PC parties are prepared to deal with that, they will remain the parties of cuts and deficits.

The difference between them, Mr. Speaker, is that one wants more debt and the other wants more cuts, but they both are offering up plenty of both. That is not where the NDP wants to go. The NDP wants to make sure that everyone pays their fair share so that we can fund reliable and steady public services that the people of this province want and deserve and that we can put aside the royalty revenues that we're getting, which are much too low, in our view, into a plan that will actually ensure that in the future we have plentiful wealth in this province to enjoy the kind of standard of living and quality of life that we would like.

This plan was originally proposed by Peter Lougheed when he was the Premier. He was a Progressive Conservative but very different from the ones we see today and certainly different from the Wildrose as well. He proposed that we should be saving for the future in a very systematic way. Interestingly, the only country in the world that paid attention to what Peter Lougheed said and to the six principles that he established was the country of Norway, and we had the ambassador of Norway visit us today. Norway has successfully invested their proceeds from North Sea oil in a fund that now exceeds $600 billion, and they invest it very carefully. They don't invest it in their own country because they don't want to fuel inflation and overheat the economy. They invest it in other parts of the world.

Norway has seen a tremendous increase in its standard of living and in its quality of life, Mr. Speaker. That's the direction that we believe we should go, but unless we get full value on our royalties, unless oil companies and wealthy Albertans pay their fair share, we'll never get there.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to join the discussion, and I would like to support the motion as proposed, especially its three parts: limiting spending increases, the prohibition of a cash deficit, and a more thought-out plan on saving money for our heritage trust fund, something that we all know hasn't happened since 1976, when Peter Lougheed originally put the $15 billion or $16 billion away, a plan that includes saving and not borrowing to save. Many, many Albertans that I've talked to find it incomprehensible that the idea of borrowing to save is somehow going to make sense for us in the long run.

Like the grandfather across the floor, I too want to leave the province in better shape for my kids and my grandkids, and that does not mean huge tax increases. That does not mean huge inefficiencies. That means us doing our best job to be good stewards of the taxpayers' money.

I kind of wanted to take a look at where we're at now. In the last 10 years the PC government has doubled – doubled – spending, double what population increase and inflation have been. This has Alberta, a supposedly Conservative province, on a per capita basis outspending Liberal Ontario, outspending socialist Manitoba and Nova Scotia, and even outspending on a per capita basis separatist Quebec.

Does it matter? Well, the authors of the Macdonald-Laurier report six months ago said that it matters, when, incredibly, they said that Alberta because of our inefficient spending, because of our overreliance on oil and gas royalties, and because of our demographics was the most likely province to default on our debt someday. Absolutely incredible: defaulting on debt that at that point we didn't have.

There's also a strong belief, in my mind and in businesspeople's minds, that the type of jurisdiction that investors, people that provide labour, and hard-working small-business people look for is a jurisdiction where they can confidently put their assets, their time, and their money to work without the fear of unfair increased taxation, without the possibility of huge waste. In today's news is a very interesting story about what people will do when they feel the threat of taxation and the possibility of a 6.75 to a 10 per cent tax on bank accounts in Cyprus. That has created a huge run that may bring the entire European Union down, if you can imagine.

I mentioned that our government spends more per capita than Liberal Ontario. I mentioned that one of the parts I really like about our Member for Airdrie's motion is to limit the spending increases. Why does it matter? It matters because Ontario has not limited their spending increases and has not limited their debt. Ontario at this point in time has no strict limits on debt, and the debt has shot up while their economy since 1990-1991 has grown 133 per cent. Over the same time period of approximately 13 or 14 years, when the economy grew 133 per cent, debt grew an amazing 571 per cent. Imagine. Imagine the loss in services, the loss in programs, what this is costing the Ontario citizen, the Ontario taxpayer, and the Ontario economy.

As a matter of fact, Ontario right now is spending $10 billion a year on interest. They only – only – spend $9.7 billion on postsecondary and training, less than their interest on their debt. Three years from now, when Alberta is estimated to be $17 billion in the hole, we'll be spending some side of $600 million in debt. How many schools can we build for that? How many hospitals can we build for that? How many roads can we build for that?

Sitting here listening to the whole issue about what the Wildrose wants to do for building and our 10-year debt-free capital plan, I sat back and found it very, very amazing that our plan includes almost $50 billion over 10 years, has a start this year spending $4.2 billion and rising by inflation and population growth. When I look at the government's capital plan, I see as well that they are reducing from $5.2 billion to $4.8 billion to $4.6 billion, spending almost identical, Mr. Speaker, to what the Wildrose will be spending three years from now. I find that part of the argument quite humorous.

Interestingly enough, in some of the reading that I was doing to get prepared for the Member for Airdrie's motion today, it talked about the comparison between California and Ontario. California is maybe not considered one of the most fiscally shining examples out there, but amazingly the Fraser report from this January says that Ontario's total debt for 2010-2011 was $237 billion compared to California's, with a several times bigger economy, at only $143 billion, almost half of what Ontario's is. Why did that happen? California differs from Ontario because it has strict limits on how much debt the state can accumulate. My goodness, very, very similar to what our Member for Airdrie is saying.

In the few minutes I have left, I want to talk about the third part of the member's motion, and that's accumulating some side of $200 billion in the fund, where we will have, we being our kids and our grandkids and future Albertans, approximately $10 billion a year for programs, for services that we all cherish and we all want to support. I'm told it's some side of $200 billion or $300 billion that the PC government has collected in royalties and interest off the heritage trust fund and spent it all.

Well, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood pointed out, Norway has been a great steward of its resource, saving over $600 billion, investing outside of Norway so that they don't cause inflation. I greatly remember the government spending during the boom periods and the inflation that caused. I also remember reading a report about how if Alberta were to save some money properly, not from borrowing, that would stabilize our loonie from rising and making other parts of our economy noncompetitive.

The hon. Minister of Finance has mentioned how Albertans wanted to borrow to save for the heritage trust fund. Respectfully, I disagree.

5:40

Mr. Horner: That's not what I said, Drew.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please, through the chair.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Well, respectfully, I disagree. Many, many people in Cypress-Medicine Hat have told me it makes absolutely no sense to borrow to save. Let's return to a surplus position first. We didn't get ourselves into this overspending and six deficits in a row easily, so that part of the hon. Member for Airdrie's plan makes huge sense. It'll cause less hardship. You know, there will be some changes in the economy.

The whole listening process. I mentioned briefly about how we're going to be spending the same as the government in approximately three years in capital even though we hear differently. I also want to mention the listening concept. I was at a Bill 2 hearing in Medicine Hat a short time ago, where the government people were going around again . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually never thought I would hear an opposition member speak so glowingly about Norway and its 70 per cent tax rate on resource revenues, nor would I get such a picturesque walk through Ontario and California and extolling the virtues of Ontario and California relative to Alberta. Quite amazing.

Budgeting, Mr. Speaker, based on a legislated population plus inflation growth factor or any other artificial formula, quite frankly, moves the budget process away from the careful weighting of competing priorities and consideration of the value of new initiatives towards a process defined by sterile limits that require the shrinking of government services in most years. That is a fact with respect to the experience that's been meted out in the world relative to the notion of inflation plus population spending limits.

Populations, Mr. Speaker, don't grow evenly. Segments of the population requiring the most government services such as senior citizens and children often expand more rapidly than the population as a whole. So while the entire population may grow at one rate, the population needing increased services often grows at an exponentially higher rate. Alberta's future only shows dependency ratios climbing in both the younger and the older generations.

Measures used also to determine inflation gauge the prices of individual consumer goods, Mr. Speaker, not government goods. That basket of goods is a basket of goods and services that normally aren't acquired by government. It is widely recognized that the cost of services and goods provided by government, mostly, I must say, services such as health and education, increase at a much higher rate than the cost of consumer goods.

This sort of legislation is indeed, Mr. Speaker, bad for business. In order to attract investment, the business climate needs to understand that they are welcome to come to a vibrant, business-activity type of province, where the province supports the business activity, where it helps to stimulate the creation of jobs and maintain the economic growth that we have had in our province for such a long time. We need solid infrastructure, a first-class education system, and we need quality health care.

Short-term deferrals can become long-term problems, Mr. Speaker. Any time that a government needs to cut spending, if it does it as a result of a legislated thing such as this, then it looks to cut items that will be deleted without a short-term impact on the provision of services. For example, government may defer routine maintenance items, capital improvement, staff training, or other investments in infrastructure or workforce. Such changes may help out in the short term; they have devastating effects in the long term. Such formulistic implications can sound reasonable but are actually a recipe for sharply reduced public services and, in fact, an impaired ability to respond effectively to public need, federal mandate, and changed circumstance.

I point at things, for example, like highway 63. Mr. Speaker, if this was enacted and you had a situation where the public desired to have 63 twinning brought to the fore faster than it had been planned, you would have had to sacrifice something else in the government in order to take care of that. Also, disaster relief comes to mind. Alberta is not a province where it's uncommon that we have disasters or we have bugs and things that cause problems in our forestry area. If we had these kinds of limits, we would have difficulty in that regard.

Tax and spending limits based on population changes and inflation, Mr. Speaker, will hinder significantly the ability of the government to cope with unanticipated changes, initiate policy changes, accommodate voter and court mandates, or even maintain current service levels. Jurisdictions which have adopted such legislation have either suspended or repealed it later, as I mentioned, due to the unsustainability, low quality of life and business environment that it fosters.

I would like to spend a minute on the example of Colorado in this regard. Colorado's average teacher salary compared to average pay in other occupations declined from 30th in the nation in 1992 – and that's how long these kinds of ideas have floated around, Mr. Speaker; it's an old idea that nobody uses – to a low of 50th in 2001 and edging up only slightly to 49th in the United States as of 2007. How can you attract and keep good teachers when they're getting paid the lowest in the country and having to deal with the largest classroom sizes in the country?

Tuitions rose in Colorado as a result. In just three years system-wide resident tuition increased by anywhere between 21 and 39 per cent. How do you expect to create an educated workforce and attract world-class research with tuition rates so far above the national average? These are just some examples, Mr. Speaker, of things that were caused by bringing in legislation that didn't work and was repealed.

In Colorado they fell near to the bottom of national rankings in providing children with full, on-time vaccinations, in fact. The share of low-income children in the state who lacked health insurance doubled, making Colorado the worst in the nation by this measure. At one point, from April 2001 to October 2002, funding got so low that the state suspended its requirement that schoolchildren be fully vaccinated. Unlike any other state, the state of Colorado could not afford to buy the vaccine.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to just spend a minute on what it takes in order to look after, I think, the area that the member opposite has been so patient in bringing forth to this Assembly and putting before his colleagues. The first thing is that the individuals that elect a government, a representative government as we have, a representative democracy as we indeed have – it's important that those folks elect good government. I'm proud to stand on this side of the House amongst individuals who are good government and will be for a long time.

Secondly, we need to have an effective budget analysis, Mr. Speaker. I'm worried about an effective budget analysis with what I heard last Wednesday in this Assembly, where member after member opposite stood up and said that they didn't understand the budget. I certainly hope that that's been remedied and that we can have an effective discussion regarding the budget.

Thirdly, we need to have a strong Public Accounts process. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to be able to work with the Finance critic opposite, the good Member for Airdrie, in the Public Accounts area and do the work that we do together on that committee, that all-party committee, to ferret out the questions and things that need to be brought before the people. That is a part of holding the ministries accountable for the money that they spend on behalf of Albertans.

Fourthly, Mr. Speaker, it's good to have an independent, functional Auditor General, and we certainly have that. We have an independent individual who is working in our province to take a look at areas that he wants to have brought forward to the people of Alberta. This is much more effective than having some kind of a tight legislative rule of law that's there that will only inhibit our ability to be able to serve Albertans.

Fifth, we need to have openness and transparency, particularly with respect to annual returns and such. The annual returns that are produced by the ministry should be explanatory as to the dollars that are spent in our province on behalf of the people of Alberta so that those individuals in Alberta will be able to see how the dollars are spent. This will help tremendously.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a summation of why I just don't think that particular part of this motion makes any sense at all, and I certainly won't be supporting it. I've supplied some of the things that we need to instead look at, which will help ensure that this province goes forward with another 42 years in the future, and I'm looking forward to assisting in that process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A point of clarification: how much time have I got, sir?

The Deputy Speaker: Approximately four minutes.

Mr. Wilson: Great. Thank you. I'll keep it quick.

It's been entertaining sitting here and watching the other side cackle and snicker and look at themselves as though they are the strong financial stewards of this province and pat themselves on the back. Here we have a so-called Conservative government that's run now six straight deficit budgets. You've taken what was once a $17 billion savings account, that was started in 2003 – although your Premier seems to think that there wasn't a savings account started for the last 25 years. I think that's some pretty failed logic on basic math. You know, the idea that we can't legislate around spending more than population growth and inflation – I certainly respect the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's concerns and even Edmonton-Gold Bar's about what we would do in special circumstances. I can understand the logic behind that.

Contrary to that, I would also like members to consider that some of the only praise you have received for the budget that was delivered in this House was for some of the cuts that have been forced out of it. AHS, for example, is now streamlining some processes. They are becoming more efficient. I think that that's a natural progression of what happens when spending is restricted. That's exactly what you had given them the mandate to do, to restrict spending. Efficiencies happen, and I think that's a positive thing. Your whole process on results-based budgeting should be able to flesh some of those things out as well.

The idea of living within our means is something that you often hear in this House. The reality is that not many of you really fully understand what that means, clearly, because when you run $17 billion in debt in the next three years, that's not really living within one's means. When we were on the campaign trail, myself specifically, this was one of the key platforms that people truly connected with. I think that you are going down a road at your own peril if you insist on thinking that Albertans are just going to accept this debt and that they're just going to take it. Good luck campaigning on that. Again, you can only say one thing and do something different so many times before people just finally go: "You know what? Enough is enough."

I think that Peter Lougheed had it right with the savings plan. Having some sort of sustainable revenue source outside of just resource revenue is absolutely visionary, and it's absolutely the direction that we need to go. We may disagree on exactly how to get there. Seeing some sort of savings plan is a positive step in Bill 12. When we get to that and debate that – it's interesting. It is a positive, but I don't think it goes quite far enough because, you know, just not taking a hundred per cent of the interest every year shouldn't really qualify as savings. That's just kind of intelligent.

The constant talk is about how our financial recovery plan is, you know, a faulty document. I mean, what we did is that we looked at the $38 billion that you said you were going to spend and then we found: how can we make cuts off the top? The fact that it's not a bottom-up budget doesn't hold weight. We found areas where money could be saved, and I think that that speaks a lot to the passion here for . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but Standing Order 8(3) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate.

I would invite the hon. Member for Airdrie to close debate on Motion 506.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the House for participating in this debate. Obviously, we don't have agreement here, but it's good to hash out these issues and debate them. I would like to correct a few things for the record because there's a lot of very shallow analysis that I've listened to.

The first was that this wasn't a credible idea. To be clear, one of the most credible organizations on economic issues in the world, the OECD, recently put out a report, in 2010, urging the Alberta government to legislate a spending cap just like this. Their conclusion was:

A legislated spending growth rule, rather than the current in-year spending rule, would help anchor fiscal policy and, if respected, would avoid another acceleration of spending when the budget is finally balanced [again].

This is the OECD, one of the most credible organizations on fiscal matters on the planet, specifically having a report out there for Alberta on this issue saying that we should do that.

Further, there were many other studies. I'll just cite one because it's a Canadian study, Tax and Expenditure Limitations: The Next Step in Fiscal Discipline, by Jason Clemens, Todd Fox, and Amela Karabegović. I'm not going to pretend to pronounce that name properly. In any event, they studied all of these different laws in North America, actually, Canada and the United States, and their conclusion was:

Laws enforcing tax and expenditure limitations have generally proven effective in the United States, at both the state and local level, in constraining the growth of government spending and taxation . . . [and any] variance in performance among states with [these laws] can be explained by the design of the [laws] themselves.

So there were some that had better luck than others. If there were problems, it was mostly because of a flaw in design. I would ask that if we ever did this in the future, we talk through it well and make sure that we design the best possible spending restraint rule, and we would.

With regard to being competitive for salaries one of the things that they pointed out earlier was the Colorado example. You can design the law – and I did this, actually, in my private member's bill that I brought in 2011 on this exact spending restraint rule – so that when expenses get to the average of the other Canadian provinces or 5 per cent above the average of the rest of the Canadian provinces, then it can go up with that average instead of just limiting it to inflation plus population growth. The inflation plus population growth gets you down to where you need to be over time, and then from there it can kind of go back up with the Canadian average but not where we are now, which is far, far, far above the Canadian average, and it's really, really hurting us. So there are ways to design the law competently.

The Minister of Finance this year holds the line on expenses. That's good. It's good to hold the line on expenses. But he should know and I think we all know in this House, any of us who have tried to lose weight in the past, that if you need to lose 40 pounds, Mr. Speaker, losing zero is just not enough. You really do have to cut more than zero if you want to lose a few pounds. We have a fat, bloated government, and we do need to thin out especially the bureaucracy. There's no doubt about it.

Then flexibility. Politicians never want to have their hands tied. Let's face it. They never want their hands tied. But the fact is that spending has gone up over the last 10 years 100 per cent, double the rate of inflation plus population growth. That's what happens when politicians don't have their hands tied. They cannot control themselves. They just can't. Debt and spending is like a heroin addiction for a junky when you're talking about governments. They can't stop themselves unless they have some restraint in good years. Otherwise, in good years they just run it right up. So we do need that kind of restraint.

Also, this idea of borrowing to save: it really doesn't make a lot of sense. People don't understand why we'd want to, say, borrow $13 billion over the next three years to save a few hundred million. It really is baffling to people. It shouldn't be done.

I would also say that with regard to kids needing schools – I've got four boys. Obviously, I care a great deal about schools, as I'm sure everyone in this room does, but let's make sure we understand what we're getting ourselves into. That same argument can be used for the next hundred years. That is what's been used in Ontario, Quebec, Greece, England, France, Spain, Italy. Every single country that is now facing a debt crisis uses that exact same left-wing tripe to justify their actions. That's the problem. It will never be enough. It'll never be enough, Minister. At some point . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 506 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 6 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 19, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good afternoon. Just before we pray, I would ask all members to remain standing after the prayer so that we may pay tribute to a former colleague who has passed away.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength, O Great Creator. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Dr. Walter Buck

December 16, 1930, to March 14, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Dr. Walter Buck, former Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, the 431st MLA sworn in, passed away on Thursday, March 14, 2013, at the age of 82 years.

Dr. Buck was first elected in the election held May 23, 1967, and served until March 20, 1989. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Clover Bar for the Social Credit Party, as an independent, and for the Representative Party of Alberta.

During his terms of office Dr. Buck served on the Select Standing Committee on Municipal Law and Law Amendments, 1968 to 1969; Select Standing Committee on Public Affairs, Agriculture and Education, 1968 to 1973; Select Standing Committee on Private Bills, Standing Orders and Printing, 1968 to 1972; Special Committee to Review the Election Act, 1968; Special Legislative Committee on Automobile Insurance, Safe Highway Design, Driver Licensing, Education and Control and Related Matters, 1968; Special Legislative Committee on Automobile Insurance, 1969; Select Standing Committee on Law, Law Amendments and Regulations, 1970 to 1972; Special Committee to Make a Recommendation to the Assembly for the Position of Ombudsman, 1973; Select Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, 1974 to 1988; Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, 1975 to 1976; Select Standing Committee on Public Affairs, 1975 to 1988; Select Committee Reviewing Intra-Provincial Trucking Regulations, 1975 to 1976; Select Committee on Private Bills, 1976, 1979 to 1981, and 1983 to 1985; Special Committee to Appoint a Chief Electoral Officer, 1977; Special Committee to Consider the Appointment or Reappointment of the Chief Electoral Officer, 1979; Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, 1979 to 1981; Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing, 1977 to 1985; Select Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act, 1979 to 1980; Select Special Committee on the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Health and Safety Act, 1983; Select Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, 1983 to 1988; and Special Select Standing Committee on Members' Services, 1983 to 1984.

For a number of years Dr. Buck provided commentary for channels ACCESS and CTV Two of the opening of each Legislature session of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Walter was one of the founding members of the former members' association, an active association that works to maintain the values, ethics, and camaraderie of members who have served this institution.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members and their families who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them. In a moment of silent prayer I ask that all members remember the hon. member Dr. Walter Buck as you may have known him.

Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'm honoured today to introduce to you all family members of our former colleague Dr. Walter Buck, who passed away on March 14. The family members are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I would ask as I introduce each family member that they stand, and I would ask that you honour them with the warm welcome of the Assembly after all family members been introduced: Mrs. Laura-Marie Buck, spouse; Moira Buck, daughter; David Buck, son; Bob Buck, son; Margaret Buck, daughter-in-law; Liam Buck, grandson; Emily Buck, granddaughter; Lisa Underhill, daughter; Brian Underhill, son-in-law; Ben Underhill, grandson; and Karen Frey, sister-in-law. Hon. members, please join me in welcoming the family of Dr. Walter Buck. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 50 grade 6 students and their teachers, Mr. Peter Fenton, Ms Lina Rosato, and Mrs. Erin Adams, from Sir Alexander Mackenzie. Yesterday, as you may recall, I had the privilege of introducing two ambitious grade 6 classes from SAM, and the students in attendance today represent the remaining grade 6 classes at the school. I am always so pleased visiting with the students from grade 6 learning about the Legislature, and I've found that some of the very best questions come from these future leaders. They are thoughtful, inquisitive, and their questions are awfully insightful. I believe this is a testament to their teachers, who engage, challenge, and encourage their pupils to think about their communities and our province. I would now ask these students and their teachers to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am so delighted today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fantastic group of students from John A. McDougall school, which, of course, is in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Now, these students are particularly good at debating, so I've challenged them. I'm going to go to their school once their pictures are developed, and we're going to have a really good debate about bicycle helmets. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 13 staff members from Alberta Energy. They're from the electricity, alternative energy, and carbon capture and storage division. They do great work on behalf of the citizens of Alberta. I'm pleased to welcome them to the Legislature Building today as they participate in a public service orientation tour. With that, I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the usual welcome of the House. Thank you for your work.

1:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Linda Roussel, a constituent of Edmonton-Riverview and founder and director of Kids on Track, an organization with a 17-year track record of outstanding ministry to urban kids in Edmonton. A community health nurse for over 25 years with specialization in multicultural health services, Linda has extensive experience in connecting with parents of at-risk children and a passion for helping children and youth. Linda is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that she stand and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of very informed and intelligent high school students. My guests are part of a grassroots coalition of high school students from across the province called EdStake. Formed in response to this PC government's cuts to education, the EdStake coalition is looking for a voice in future education decision-making. They are asking for greater government accountability, particularly on issues that affect the lives of high school students. Their online campaign is growing very well and has gained media attention around the province. I would now like to ask Kuba Ilcenko, Keenan Walker, Sam Mackie, Cody Anderson, Emma Wiley-Suter, Gloria Osei, Natalia Hennady, and Connor Stephens to please stand and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Terry James. Terry braved the snowy roads and drove in from Vegreville today to watch question period. Terry is a close follower of politics and is involved in the federal Conservative Party association for the riding of Vegreville-Wainwright. This year Terry has taken over the reins as president of the association, and he's leading an active and involved board. I know all members of this Assembly owe a lot to people like Terry who get involved in their community and tirelessly volunteer their time to fight for the principles they believe in. I'd like to thank Terry and all those like him for everything that they do. I would now ask Terry to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent and entrepreneur and all-around incredible woman, Dr. Emily Roback. Dr. Roback is a chiropractor by trade and founded her own practice in Calgary, Iron Mountain Chiropractic. She is also a talented athlete, speaker, and coauthor of a book, A Silent Cheer. She teaches hip hop classes in our school system as well as healthy living to both youth and adult alike. In fact, this month she is Global television's woman of vision. Additionally, Dr. Roback has accomplished all these feats despite being diagnosed as a child with a sensory neural hearing impairment. It is individuals like Dr. Roback that are inspirational figures who are pillars of our community. I would ask all members to give Dr. Roback the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Please rise.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce two of my constituents, who happen to be parents of our hardest working page, Danielle Seymour. I'm privileged to introduce them to you and through you, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: Michael and Gabrielle Seymour.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Kids on Track

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud today to rise and speak about an incredible community organization that is playing a very important role for Edmonton's young people. For 20 years now Kids on Track has been offering recreational and educational opportunities for children whose socioeconomic situation may prevent them from accessing these types of activities. They deliver school clubs, family nights, parents' cafe, youth leadership training, courses to deal with loss, kids' summer camp, family celebrations like Thanksgiving, and an amazing Christmas black-light musical puppet show that my family and I thoroughly enjoyed this past season. They have a Mother's Day tea and a family picnic. Over the years this organization has helped thousands of young people cultivate enriching relationships with positive role models and learn skills and strategies that will serve them for the rest of their lives.

Mr. Speaker, Kids on Track has been a funding recipient of the STEP program, which was discontinued in the 2013 budget. Our government has had to make thoughtful decisions. With a youth unemployment rate that is nearly half the national average, we're confident that the economy will continue to provide Albertans with strong job prospects. I recently had the opportunity to speak with members of the Kids on Track board about how this change will affect their organization. Initial thoughts were to consider cutting programs in response to this change. However, the organization has resolved to find new ways of continuing to deliver programs that they offer to Alberta's young people.

Mr. Speaker, the response of this dedicated team to Alberta's changing circumstances has been encouraging, to say the least. Our province was founded on an unwavering spirit of entrepreneurialism and a belief that we can do anything if we put our minds to it. Albertans see challenges as obstacles, not barriers. Kids on Track exemplifies this spirit in every way, and I'm so pleased to highlight their accomplishments and their commitment to Alberta youth here today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

National Carbon Tax

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Albertans got the clearest indication yet of where this Premier wants to take her much-hyped but seldom-defined Canadian energy strategy. The Premier floated the idea of a carbon tax, and I'm not talking about the $15 per tonne charge the government currently collects here in Alberta. This would be a federal carbon tax.

Now, Albertans are reasonable, Mr. Speaker. Albertans want to reduce toxic emissions and greenhouse gases. So do I and my Wildrose colleagues. We know the viability of our oil sands rests on our ability to show the world that we will develop them responsibly, but a federal carbon tax just isn't the way to do it. Yet it appears that the Premier may want this to be a central plank of her grand national energy plan. She wants it to be a federally mandated carbon tax, the same kind of wealth transfer that was pushed by Stéphane Dion and Thomas Mulcair, that would see Alberta's vast resource wealth sucked out of this province and pumped into Ontario and Quebec. That's the message she took with her to Ottawa yesterday. At a time when she was supposed to be advocating for Alberta's economic interests, she proposed the most disastrous of all economic policies, a job-killing tax that would punish Canada's most productive industry and raise the price of just about everything for hard-working Alberta families.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have been fighting this eastern Canadian socialist redistribution agenda for decades. They should have a Premier who is fighting with them, not cozying up to easterners who have been angling for a greater cut of our resource wealth for a generation. Albertans expect strong leadership from their Premier. If this is her Canadian energy strategy, she can forget it. While eastern Premiers will be lining up around the block to sign on, Albertans certainly won't be. That much is guaranteed. Albertans want real reductions in emissions. Adding a new tax that will reduce our provincial wealth but do virtually nothing to reduce . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Prosecutions for First and Second Offences

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I listened with horror and sadness to the story of a homeless man stomped to death in a jail cell. His reason for incarceration: jaywalking. I've heard so many sad stories like this one for so many years both as a journalist and with a mother who worked in a probation office and a brother who worked with young offenders, so many stories of people in our justice system who live without the strong moral framework and support of a caring family or who struggle with substance abuse or mental illness. Maybe that's why I viewed the glib and thoughtless thug narrative of the opposition last week with such dismay.

Was that homeless man a thug? What about my young constituent whose abusive boyfriend has her prostituting herself in downtown Calgary for heroin? Is she a thug? In an effort to discredit anything and everything this government does to help those people in desperate situations avoid a lifetime in the justice system, they reduce the issue to a joke, a coupon to get out of jail, thus boiling a complex societal issue down to something facile and dismissive.

I find it unbelievably disturbing that, much like a house of cards, the opposition is building its social policy on a house of wanted posters and joke coupons, sending out a message to the very people we are trying to help that they should be feared, locked up: the jaywalkers, the shoplifters, the mentally ill, the drug- or alcohol-addicted. Lock them up instead of looking for ways to keep the jails free for more serious crimes, instead of offering help.

Well, in my world and in my government those people are still Albertans. Because we are as strong as our weakest citizens, we should be looking . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

National Carbon Tax

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, our Premier was once again in eastern Canada musing about her national energy plan, and this time she added a new element to it. She floated the idea of a federal carbon tax. She said: "The goal is not to do something as a PR stunt; it's to actually do something that is going to make a difference to outcomes. It can be a price on carbon." Doesn't the Premier understand that a federal carbon tax would kill Alberta jobs, transfer even more money out of Alberta to the rest of Canada, and is exactly what sensible Albertans have been fighting against for a generation?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not at all surprised by the question. I think the suggestion is absurd, firstly, because in Alberta since 2007 we've had a price on carbon. We've used it to invest in a tech fund that has been effective with respect to the reduction of emissions. That is exactly what we talked about yesterday in Ottawa, and Albertans should be proud of that.

I'll tell you what a Canadian energy strategy does. It gives us joint co-operation with Brad Wall in Washington to open markets. It gets us an eastern pipeline built to open markets, and it makes sure that we can be critical . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Ms Smith: The Premier was talking about a national carbon tax. That is something former federal Liberal governments have proposed, but voters tossed them out before they could destroy the economy with higher prices on fuels, food, transportation, home heating, business, farm inputs – heck, call it a tax on everything – while achieving next to nothing in greenhouse gas reductions. Why does the Premier think that killing Alberta jobs and shifting more Alberta revenues out of this province is a good idea?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that that's what the conversation was about yesterday is absolutely absurd, but I don't expect anything more from the opposition. This is another example of fearmongering, of scaring Canadians, scaring Albertans. What we were talking about was what Alberta has done. We can be proud of what we've done in Alberta to ensure that we're building markets overseas. If there are other jurisdictions that want to look at what we've done, I think they should. It's a record to be proud of, and that's what we stand by.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll table the article so that everyone can read the Premier's comments.

It looks like a job-killing federal carbon tax might actually be a central plank of the Premier's national energy strategy. It's another of her naive ideas that would cause huge problems in the real world. Why doesn't she do something to actually reduce greenhouse gases rather than promoting another damaging tax?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is a refreshing question from a party that doesn't actually believe the science is settled. We have done something. This government introduced a price on carbon that's allowing for us to invest to impact emissions. There is only one party in this Legislature that wants to take jobs out of Alberta, and that's the NDP.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie, I note that you rose on a point of order at 1:55.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition for your second set of questions.

Provincial Borrowing

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are looking for answers, trying to get a true picture of the state of Alberta's finances, but when we ask questions about debt repayment schedules, the real size of the deficit, the mammoth scope of the debt, do we get numbers or rates or amounts or totals? No. We get the Minister of Finance complaining about a Wildrose document. Now, I'm going to try again. If we assume the $17 billion worth of debt is obtained through a 3 and a half per cent bond, it will cost $600 million a year. That's $12 billion to in effect rent that money for 20 years. That is $29 billion in total. Explain again, please: how is that a good deal for taxpayers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, they're making a lot of assumptions there that are incorrect, something like their document. It's obvious from the opposition's plan that they don't support business and they don't support proper financial accounting procedures when they make outlandish statements such as that the government gave a $1.8 million grant to Telus, a very strong corporate philanthropist in our province. That's simply not true. It's not true, but it's listed in this document as being true.

Mr. Anderson: It's in your blue book.

Mr. Horner: Hon. member, you should check your facts. You should make sure of your facts before you do that.

Ms Smith: Like I said, Mr. Speaker, he just keeps answering with our document rather than defending his own.

The minister and his front-bench pals brag about $28 billion in capital assets that that money is going to build by 2016. Let's see what they're building. Capitals assets today are $22 billion. In 2016 they will be $28 billion. So we get an extra $6 billion in assets. We'll borrow $17 billion to be able to do that and pay $12 billion in interest for a total of $29 billion. How's that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it just proves that they're not really reading the numbers correctly. The $17 billion is the accumulated debt in 2016, which includes debt that was accrued before this time period for things like – oh, I don't know – the Anthony Henday, that was a pretty good value for Edmontonians; for things like the Stoney Trail, that was a good value; for things like the schools that the hon. Member for Airdrie's children are attending. It's also the value of the assets that the municipalities have put on their books. It doesn't all show up on our books. It shows up in the consolidated financials at the end of the year, which the . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: The Finance minister is talking about paying twice, once to borrow and once for interest payments. We can do it debt free. Then there's the payback schedule or the lack of one, should I say. We understand the minister can't be precise on the terms and the interest because he hasn't actually borrowed all of that money yet, but by 2016 he will have borrowed $17 billion, and the payback plan that he has offered doesn't even come close to paying it off in 20 years. Why not?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the payback period is not included in the plan because we don't know what it is just yet because we haven't borrowed those funds. I'm not going to put in there the term of a mortgage when I have no idea whether the term is going to be five, 10, 15, or 20 years because we haven't done that yet. Strong financial management means you make good financial decisions. You don't simply make a list of the things that you're not going to do and call that a budget.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Opposition, your third set of questions.

Generic Drug Price Reduction

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this Health minister has sure made a mess of things. He's got big trust issues with doctors right now, that we've all heard about, and he's about to take on another critical component of front-line health care delivery and wreck that, too. Earlier changes to the way pharmacies are paid for dispensing medications have already threatened many small, independent pharmacies, but the new changes threaten the big-chain drugstores, too. Will the minister commit today to halt his destructive plans and actually listen to what the pharmacists are telling him?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the pharmacists of Alberta are telling us is that they very much like the idea of being treated as full partners and paid as professionals in our health care system. This government last year implemented a pharmacy services framework that pays pharmacists to provide services to Albertans like renewing prescriptions, like developing care plans as part of a primary health care team, and like managing complex medication issues for patients. The way forward for pharmacists – and we're working with them – is to treat them as full partners in the team, much more than they could expect under the Official Opposition.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this Health minister just is not listening to what pharmacists are saying. Drugstores regardless of size have significant inventories of medications on hand.

The minister's ill-conceived plan announced in the budget will force pharmacies to sell medications at a fraction of what they paid for them, meaning that they will have to absorb hundreds of thousands of dollars, even millions of dollars worth of losses. Why is the minister intent on wrecking this important component of front-line health care service delivery?

2:00

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we welcome the question because, quite frankly, we've been waiting for the opposition to stand up and make an argument as to why Albertans – the government programs that we provide, employers that employ Albertans and provide benefit plans, and people out of their own pocket – should pay more than the best price we can get for generic drugs in this province, and now she's made that argument. The fact of the matter is that this government has poured over $95 million into transitional funding over the last four years to support pharmacists moving to a new professional services framework. We have an implementation advisory committee that we're working with now on the latest generic price reduction.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: Let me make this clear for the minister, Mr. Speaker. The effect on customers, patients, and care providers of this draconian proposal is going to be devastating. Pharmacies will close. Drug shortages will increase. Prescription service for seniors and long-term care patients will suffer. It is a pretty grim legacy because the minister won't listen to the pharmacists. How many more mistakes, blunders, foul-ups will we have to endure from this minister?

Mr. Horne: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, the rather startling rhetoric from the Leader of the Opposition belies her lack of understanding of the basic economics that underlie the situation. The evidence in Ontario, for example, where generic drug prices have been reduced, is that the number of pharmacies has actually increased. The evidence is that when we pay pharmacists to provide the services they are trained to provide and they are regulated to provide by their own college, patient safety, patient quality, and team-based care delivery prosper. Those are the economics.

The Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Environmental Policy

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is hopelessly confused when it comes to environmental policy, and it's hurting Alberta's reputation and, in turn, our economy. In today's Edmonton Journal the Premier called for the federal government to impose a levy on major carbon emitters. Just hours later her office claims that she said no such thing. The government doesn't know if it's coming or going. To the Premier: instead of wasting taxpayers' money on ads in the New York Times trying to spin your government's environmental failures, why don't you get your act together, follow the Alberta Liberal lead, and bring in credible environmental policy?

Ms Redford: Oh, Mr. Speaker, where to begin? An investment in an ad in the New York Times for $30,000 that told the facts about our environmental record, the fact that we're having a positive impact and that we can be proud of our record with respect to environmental sustainability – there is no doubt that we need to make an investment. We are committed to ensuring that we are communicating the facts. Frankly, one of the reasons we have to do that is because we have the leader of the NDP in Washington spreading mistruths with respect to our environmental record. We will keep investing for Albertans, we will keep informing Americans, and we will . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier confuses spin with facts.

Given that one of the main reasons for the so-called bitumen bubble is this government's reliance on a feeble and ineffective intensity-based carbon levy, which brings in a minuscule $80 million while helping opponents of the oil sands – those on the far left win PR battles against pipelines to the south and west coast – to the Premier: when will you put a carbon tax on actual emissions so that we can raise significantly more revenue, $1.8 billion for large emitters, incent a . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Oh, my goodness, I really hope that some of the leaders of the opposition actually have a chance to travel outside the borders of this province, Mr. Speaker, and see what the real conversation that's going on is. We are committed to building Alberta, and we made a commitment to Albertans to do that by building markets, a Canadian energy strategy where we can partner with Quebec, with New Brunswick, with Nova Scotia to make sure that we're building pipelines, to make sure that we're partnering with Brad Wall to talk about the good story that we're doing in Canada while we're in Washington, and to ensure that we're allowing every opportunity for markets to be open and product to be exported. That's a Canadian energy strategy, and it's time that people . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the Premier has been flying too high in first class.

Given that another important aspect of this government's poor environmental reputation is the fact that we have industry monitoring industry and we're just supposed to take their word for it, to the Premier: when will you demonstrate to our friends in America and British Columbia that we are serious about the environment by moving away from the completely ineffective and laughable system of industry self-monitoring and introduce credible independent monitoring, strict enforcement of the rules, and implement the strongest pipeline safety and risk management plan in the country?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wasn't actually sure where the leader of the Liberal Party was until today, but now it's pretty clear. We have someone who has joined the NDP in standing up and saying that our environmental record in Alberta isn't good enough. That's not good for Alberta, and it's not good for Canada. We're going to keep telling the story of what our success has been, that we have productive results in respect of the decisions that we put in place because that's what opens up markets, and that's what people want to know, the facts.

The Deputy Speaker: The leader of the ND opposition.

Bitumen Upgrading

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this Premier makes regular pilgrimages to Washington to convince the United States to take our jobs by approving the Keystone pipeline. She also tries to convince them that Alberta has a good environmental record in the oil sands. Good luck with that. Yet when anyone tries to stand up for Alberta jobs and responsible resource development, she calls them un-Canadian. To the Premier: does she really believe that everyone who disagrees with her on Keystone is un-Canadian?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the Keystone pipeline is going to be fundamental to Alberta's and Canada's economic growth; 1 in 6 Albertans is directly or indirectly employed by the energy industry. Last week I went to a reception with the building trades, and half of the conversation we had in the speeches from trade unions was about the importance of getting Keystone built. It impacts our economy. We understand it, and the hon. leader does not.

Mr. Mason: Here's a quote for the Premier: I prefer that we process the bitumen from the oil sands in Alberta and that we would create a lot of jobs and job activity; that would be a better thing to do than merely send the raw bitumen down the pipeline and refine it in Texas, and that means thousands of new jobs in Texas. Does the Premier think that Peter Lougheed was un-Canadian for saying that?

Ms Redford: In fact, Mr. Speaker, I was surprised that Premier Lougheed said it because it sounds exactly like what I would have said. We have a diverse economy in this province. We refine, we upgrade, and we export. People have to understand, as Premier Lougheed did and as this side of the House does, that you have to actually develop products that people want to buy in an environmentally sustainable way to open markets. That's what we're doing. That's responsible, and that's what builds jobs in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's difficult to ask questions to a Premier that doesn't know the difference between fact and fiction. There's one large difference between Mr. Lougheed and this Premier. Peter Lougheed was not in the pockets of the oil industry. He stood up to them in Alberta's interests time and time again. Will the Premier follow his example and insist that bitumen be upgraded here in Alberta, and if not, why not?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we are proud of our government's record in investing with our own resources, with Alberta's resources in the North West upgrader, which is doing exactly that. I'll tell you that the best way to build an economy is to work in partnership with everyone – with industry, with stakeholders, with environmental NGOs, with public policy makers, with our customers overseas – not to have a divisive approach, not to do what this leader of the NDP is doing in Alberta, and not to do what the leader of the NDP is doing in Washington, purportedly in the best interests of Canada when it's not.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Calgary-North West.

Generic Drug Price Reduction (continued)

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In many communities across Alberta pharmacists are the front door to health care, yet this government is reducing generic drug fees by 18 per cent to pharmacists, which is already having a negative impact. Pharmacists in Alberta work hard to provide medications to seniors in continuing care centres and lodges. Pharmacists are warning that these changes will prevent them from being able to provide medications to these facilities, leaving the delivery of important drugs to vulnerable seniors at risk. Does the Minister of Health recognize that your plan may result in seniors in care not receiving their medications?

2:10

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are very closely in touch with pharmacists across the province, ever since I can remember, and certainly very close since we last lowered the price of generic drugs in Alberta. We are the only government in Canada who has provided transition funding for pharmacists, including $15 million for rural and remote pharmacists, to support exactly the pharmacists that the hon. member is talking about. It is possible for Albertans to enjoy lower generic drug prices and for us to provide a competitive and prosperous environment for pharmacists across this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the Health minister's plan to provide medications to seniors in care once the pharmacists are forced out of business by this government's ill-informed actions?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the hon. member ignores the facts. I've gone through the facts a couple of times today alone. We provided financial support for pharmacists to transition to the new professional services framework. In fact, since we last reduced generic prices, from 45 to 35 per cent of brand name, the number of pharmacists in Alberta has gone up, from 1,003 to 1,024. How is this not supporting pharmacists?

Mrs. Towle: Pharmacies all over this province will close. When will this government trust our dedicated and compassionate front-line pharmacists and get back to the negotiating table to ensure that those in care have safe and stable medication delivery?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this is a little bit beyond the pale. To suggest that somehow seniors across this province are at risk today as a result of changes that have been made in reduced generic drug prices, that the hon. members opposite should be standing up and applauding because it delivers better value for taxpayers, is a complete mythology that, I'm sure, will only be perpetuated. The fact of the matter is that we're continuing to work with pharmacists. They derive revenue from sources other than dispensing fees. They have the advantage of the new professional services framework. There are other options, and we'll continue to work with pharmacists to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Market Access for Oil

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Premier. The leaders of the provincial and federal NDP have been on the warpath, spreading fear about the Keystone XL pipeline. Is this pipeline, as they claim, an environmental disaster and a harbinger of massive job loss, or is this what Alberta needs for much-needed economic growth?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it is rather unfortunate what leaders of the NDP both federally and provincially have been espousing both in Washington and here in the House. Let's not forget the recent past because NDP both provincially and federally have been against the building of refineries and upgraders in this province. It wasn't so long ago that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's constituency office manager was rappelling from rafters, during a Premier's dinner, against big oil. You can't have it on both sides. You can't oppose pipelines and oppose upgrading yet say that you are for creating jobs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Deputy Premier. The leader of the NDP is pretty insistent that the impact of Keystone XL on jobs north of the border is going to be massive. What do you do to make sure we increase jobs in the oil sector here in Alberta?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, you know, we have many ways to sell our products in this province. We can upgrade them here. We can refine them here. We can ensure that we sell them from here as relatively raw resources. We do all of that. In fact, in a community where we have between 4 and 5 per cent unemployment, surely we're doing a good job. This is a great place to invest. I would point to companies like Williams, that in the last couple of days has just taken another step on improving the upgrading and the value-added that's going on right here in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Energy minister: what's your strategy for coalition building knowing that we have the support of industry, of unions, and of other provinces?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has worked hard to work with everybody, the coalition of the willing if I can call them that. We're prepared to work together to export our products, to make sure that we're aligned. We're working with First Nations leadership. We're working with union leadership. We're working with political leadership right across this country to look after Canadians.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Bathing Protocols for Persons in Care

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we learned of yet another bath scalding incident in a government-operated care home. This brings the total number of scalding incidents to three in just under 16 months, a statistic that is simply deplorable. Following the incident the associate minister said, quote: we've got to get to the bottom of this. Quite frankly, I agree with him. To the hon. associate minister: what exactly is your ministry doing to get to the bottom of this?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question, and I agree with him. It is an unacceptable situation. If the hon. member knows of the incident, he obviously knows what the press release said about exactly what we are doing. There is an investigation going on right now under the Protection for Persons in Care Act. While that's going on, we're again reviewing procedures. Bathing protocols: are they posted? Are all the valves working? We're going over it with all of our care providers again.

Mr. Wilson: Given the seriousness of this issue what consequences will there be if during your investigation it's discovered that error or neglect was in place?

Mr. Oberle: It would be speculation right at the moment, Mr. Speaker, to say that there are consequences. I don't know what the results of the investigation are going to be, and I don't know that any fault is going to be found, so I'll wait for the results of that investigation.

Mr. Wilson: Given that your government implemented a list of recommendations after previous scalding incidents and that those are clearly not having the desired effect, what is your ministry doing to protect vulnerable Albertans in care to ensure that these incidents do not happen again?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I thank the member for acknowledging that we did in fact implement the recommendations, Mr. Speaker. We continue to install and check mixing valves. We're now doing random inspections. We have done training. We've spent millions of dollars on that program. We're ensuring that bathing protocols are posted at every facility. It now takes two people to provide the bath. We're working on the issue, we believe we're doing everything we can, and we will solve this issue.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-East, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Seniors' Benefits Program

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the budget was released on March 7, I have received numerous phone calls and e-mails from my constituents concerned with the changes to seniors' benefits. I need to be able to reassure my constituents that we will continue to provide for their needs. Given that over 9,000 seniors will be affected by changes to the seniors' benefits, can the Associate Minister of Seniors explain what these changes are?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the member for being such a strong advocate for seniors in his constituency. Let's remember that the intention of the seniors' benefits program has been to supplement the GIS and old-age security programs that the feds have. What we did in Budget 2013 was harmonize the eligibility of our program with theirs, so you have to be a 10-year resident of Canada to apply. The income exemptions that no longer will be exempted: worker's compensation benefits, alimony payments, and CPP disability payments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same associate minister: can you explain how these changes will affect low-income seniors in the province since they are the most affected by this change?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to explain to the member very, very clearly that it's the cash benefit of the seniors' benefits program that residents that have not lived in Canada for 10 years will not be eligible for. The benefit programs like the Alberta Blue Cross coverage, the dental and optical, the special-needs assistance program for one-time extraordinary costs will still be there for those citizens. Thirty-five hundred seniors currently receiving the benefit that no longer will meet the residency equivalent is a payment of about an average of $95.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. associate minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same associate minister: given that the federal government has given Canadians 10 years' notice of their intent to change seniors' benefits, are we providing the same notice, and if not, why not?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you again for that question. In fact, what the federal government is doing is saying to 55-year-olds today: get ready; in 2023 you'll have to be 67 years old to apply for the old-age security benefit program. Provinces across the nation will have to have their own discussions about this, and all of us – all of us – in our constituencies have to get the point across to our younger people. Fifty-five years and younger: get ready; plan for retirement. At 67 years old you'll qualify for benefits, not 65 years old.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

2:20 English Language Learner Programs

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, to give credit where credit is due, I'd like to congratulate the hon. Minister of Education on reaching a tentative deal with Alberta teachers. Although I question some of his negotiating tactics, who am I to argue with the results?

In any event, between 2006 and 2011 Alberta was the only province in Canada where reading skills for English language learners decreased. Can the minister give reasons for this dramatic drop in performance?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that the education system in Alberta is one of the best in the world and one of the best in the English-speaking world, which we repeatedly see and repeatedly hear about. I think we're all very proud of the education system in Alberta, very proud of the teachers, and we're very proud of the results. Obviously, literacy is a very important aspect of that, and one that we'll be focusing on on a daily basis going forward.

Mr. Hehr: Nevertheless, though, I'd like to try that question again. Alberta learners in grade 4 have seen significant dropping in their reading comprehension over the course of the last five years. Can you tell me why?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd prefer to talk about the great things that are happening in our education system. There's no question that literacy rates are important and reading and writing and numeracy and literacy are foundational, and they're going to be core pieces of our curriculum going forward. I think sometimes we put too much weight on some of the testing that comes at us all the time, international testing and some of the local testing. Talk to the teachers about the PATs and the concerns they have with those. I think one of the big things we have to focus on is the students in those core competencies that we're moving the system towards.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that the testing was primarily looking at English language learners in Alberta schools, why are we decreasing the support to English second-language students from seven years to five years when the results of their test scores are clearly going down?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, yes, it's true; we've got a lot more new Albertans and new Canadians coming to the province. Those have impacts on these test scores, absolutely, and we need to as a province continue to invest in that and put resources in those areas. Let's not get too skewed by some of the test results coming at us. We will continue to invest in those areas. This member knows that the budget debate and the estimates for the Education ministry are up in about an hour here. We can talk about this at great length, and we can tell him what we're doing with the ESL and how we are continuing to invest in that going forward.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

School Class Sizes

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, you just can't trust this government to stand up for students in this province. Last year the PCs talked about the importance of stable, predictable funding for schools, but now the Premier has broken her promises to Alberta students and their families. Even the Education minister admits that budget cuts to public schools mean that class sizes will increase. Will the Education minister please explain how we can defend these budget cuts while admitting that they're not in the best interests of Alberta students and will increase class size?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, what is in the best interests of Alberta students is to have a strong, sustainable education system going forward. It's great to see the hon. member introducing the students here today and the active involvement they're taking in their education. I hope that they might join us for some of the budget estimates coming up in the next hour.

This is a difficult budget, but let's not characterize these as direct cuts to Education. The Premier has clearly protected the Education file in this budget. It's one of the few ministries that actually isn't getting a hard cut.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this PC government is cutting funding to school boards and hoping that they can cope with 11,000 new students and given that at least half of Edmonton's high school classes have already 30 or more students, sometimes many more, as I learned this afternoon from our guests, will the minister please explain why he rejects the Commission on Learning's recommended class-size limits, and tell us, in his opinion, just how crowded is too crowded?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear that not every board is seeing cuts. Some boards are seeing increases of up to 5 per cent. There's no question, again, that this is a challenging budget. We're trying to make sure that every dollar we have gets into the classroom. The two areas – oddly enough, the member brings them up – where we maintained our commitment, where we increased funding were on the class-size initiative and on inclusion. Those are two areas that parents, students, and teachers in particular told us to protect. We are investing in class size. We do believe in that, and it's a great investment, but we need to keep in mind also that it's the makeup of that class.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that every time this PC government cuts staff in schools, they end up hurting Alberta students and increasing class sizes and given that the amount of money that he's putting into the class size initiative is way dwarfed by the huge size of the cuts in the first place, will the minister admit that he and the Premier are forcing Alberta students to pay the price for this government's poor budgeting practices?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's nice to see the member admit that we are increasing funding for class sizes. I appreciate that. I agree that that is a good investment. One of the challenges we were faced with in this budget is that when you have limited dollars and you have increased enrolment, how are you going to make sure that every dollar that you have ends up in a classroom and ends up going towards instruction? So we have thrown out some strong challenges to school boards. We have cut and eliminated some of the funding envelopes that we have that are not directly impacting instruction in the classrooms so that we can make sure the impacts on those classrooms . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Nursing Workforce

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, as a result of this government's back-in-debt budget, the internationally educated nurses' assessment program at Mount Royal University has been dropped. This program helped address nursing shortages by transitioning nurses trained abroad to work in Canada. In November the chair of AHS said that there will be a nursing job for absolutely every qualified nurse who wants to work with Alberta Health Services because we need everyone. Is the Minister of Health now saying four months later that we don't need more nurses?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the program to which the hon. member refers did not discontinue as a result of a funding cut. Mount Royal University made a decision to discontinue the nursing assessment program. This initiative began in 2006, when today's Minister of Human Services, the then Minister of Health, recognized the growing nursing shortage – international nursing shortage, as a matter of fact – and took steps to provide assessment services for foreign-trained nurses who wished to come to Alberta. This continues to be a priority for government. We're working with the College and Association of Registered Nurses.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that just a couple of months ago the Minister of Health said that he didn't know of any health minister in Canada that wasn't struggling with the issue of how to hire and retain more nurses and given that this program adds 240 nurses to the front lines every year, how does this minister not see the devastation this will cause to the front lines?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, a responsible approach to ensuring adequate nursing supply for our health workforce certainly involves looking at opportunities to provide assistance to foreign-trained nurses who wish to practise in Alberta. It also involves a very careful consideration of factors that allow us to employ more of the nurses that are trained in Alberta and more on a full-time basis. As the hon. member should know, it currently takes 2.88 nurses in the province of Alberta to fill one full-time position. So it's a more complex problem than the hon. member presents, and we'll continue to attack it on all fronts.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Given that thousands of Alberta nurses are nearing retirement age, can the advanced education minister – maestro, as he puts it – explain why his plan to dictate to universities what programs they can provide means fewer nurses now and continued pressure on our health care system?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if you were paying attention over the last few days to the line of questions coming from the Wildrose, but while they are criticizing this government for apparently going into debt and not cutting deeply enough into the programs offered by the government of Alberta, every single member on that side has been rising to ask for more programs, not cutting programs and not eliminating programs. I have no idea what school they went to and what mathematics courses they took, but if they really want us to cut much deeper, as they would do if they ever had an opportunity, they can't be rising and asking for more programs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been speaking with pharmacists in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, and we've all been hearing in the media that this new budget will negatively impact pharmacies everywhere, in particular those operating in rural communities. At the same time Alberta strives to be small-business friendly. My questions are to the Minister of Health. Can the minister tell us what the immediate and cumulative impact of this budget will be on Alberta pharmacies, both rural and urban?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. In terms of the impact of the generic drug price reduction on pharmacists that will vary according to the pharmacy and their particular arrangements with suppliers to purchase drugs. But the future lies not in relying on generic prices in order to adequately compensate pharmacists; the future relies on exactly what we've been doing for the past four years, paying pharmacists for the services that they are trained to provide and that they legally can provide and fairly compensating them for those services.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the transitional funding promised by the government be sufficient to mitigate both the short-term and long-term consequences of this budget for the pharmacies?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are the only government in Canada to provide transitional funding for pharmacists in connection with generic price reductions. While we are later than most provinces in reducing these prices, we were the first in Canada to provide a transition fund of over $95 million to support pharmacists; $15 million of that is devoted to rural and remote pharmacists across the province, and $10 million of the $15 million has yet to be allocated. We're meeting with the Pharmacists Association today to talk about how we can best use that $10 million along with other initiatives, all related to professional . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. What other initiatives are being taken, if any, to help small businesses thrive in Alberta?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think everyone in this House realizes that small businesses continue to be the largest employers of Albertans, and they are pivotal to the backbone of our economy. There are a number of services offered such as Business Link through the government of Alberta, or there are organizations like Startup Edmonton that help small businesses to develop and grow into larger enterprises. Recently we created a new website for small businesses that helps them to deal with the regulatory regime and cut the regulatory burden on businesses as well. So we're working with small businesses, realizing the importance of them not only as contributors to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Health and Safety Questions from Airdrie Constituents

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, today I have three health and safety questions on behalf of constituents. On January 15 the Airdrie urgent care centre received a letter from AHS stating that all nurse practitioners in Airdrie were being let go. This was a shock for our growing community of 45,000 people. Fortunately, local health professionals and community leaders were able to convince AHS of their mistake, and the decision was put on hold to be reviewed. To the Health minister: can you please commit to the people of Airdrie and region that their nurse practitioners will not be yanked out of our already overcrowded urgent care centre?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his concern about his constituents and their access to the health care that they need. The hon. member answered his own question when he indicated that AHS has stated that they will take another look at the situation. There are many services that nurse practitioners provide, that they are trained to provide, and that they can provide very well in environments where they practise with doctors and also without. The goal is to make best use of the Health human resources, those dedicated professionals that we have, to match patient need in given communities. I'm sure, as AHS takes a look at this, that is what they will keep as top of mind.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Anderson: Leave our nurses alone, Minister.

My supplemental is for the Transportation minister. Given that I have several constituents who regularly travel north to Fort McMurray for work and given that they are telling me that the portion of highway 63 north of Fort McMurray running to the actual oil sands projects themselves is not being properly salted, sanded, and is essentially lawless, resulting in several recent fatalities, will the minister commit to doing a better job of maintaining this road for winter driving conditions and ensuring adequate safety enforcement on this road moving forward?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. We, of course, have contracts across the province with independent contractors to do the maintenance on the roads. When we get complaints, we pass that on and have steps to take to make sure that happens. I'll consider whether this is one of those complaints, so I will take that under advisement. I can assure the hon. member that we have procedures in place, that the people we contract with are required to keep the roads in a safe and passable condition. Of course, as always, unfortunately, we depend upon Albertans to drive in a defensive way.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, just a reminder that supplementals ought to follow the same line of questioning, so I hope you'll be able to do that. Your second supplemental.

Mr. Anderson: You want me to be meaner, Mr. Speaker? I can be meaner. Okay.

The final supplemental is for the Health minister. Given that I have a constituent that suffers from multiple sclerosis who needs to fill thousands of dollars in prescriptions every month, which she does at Safeway because they give her Air Miles for filling them there, which she then uses to travel to climates that help her cope with her condition, and given that her husband tells me that there is a movement under way to prohibit Safeway from offering incentives like Air Miles for filling prescriptions there and given that this seems very anticompetitive, unwarranted, and will hurt regular folks, Minister, can you assure my constituents that you will not permit this to happen?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, based on my understanding as to what I think I heard from the question, the hon. member is asking about loyalty programs and inducements and the extent to which, if at all, they are permitted in the practice of pharmacy in the province. As the hon. member knows, that is an issue that has been raised by the College of Pharmacists in Alberta. They have asked government to consider the issue. I know that the hon. member's constituent may have the opportunity to benefit from lower generic drug prices in the near future, and that's certainly one of the thoughts behind that initiative. As to the loyalty programs, we're in discussions.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Smart Grid Electricity Technology

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, last summer an explosion in Calgary caused power outages as much as 18 and a half kilometres away from the point of the accident. With smart grid technologies the outage could have been contained to a localized area. Technologies could also create efficiencies in power distribution and reduce peak power usage. Last year an APEC committee recommended that smart grid interoperability standards should be pursued as a core objective in economy-wide programs. My questions are for the Minister of Energy. When will his department implement a smart grid road map to guide the development and deployment of smart grid technologies in this province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the question from the member. You know, smart grid is actually a term that describes many different kinds of technologies, all of which take us in a certain direction of a more responsive electricity grid. In 2011 the Alberta Utilities Commission delivered a report which indicated that Alberta's grid is actually already deploying many of these many technologies. There are others out there that haven't been yet. I would note in passing, though, that the government of Alberta does not have plans to introduce smart . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Brown: When will that minister employ his department to mandate Alberta utility companies to work together by implementing some sort of interconnectivity and interoperability in the system?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, clearly, all utility companies in this province have an obligation to work together and to ensure that they have the best performing system that we can possibly have in this province. Representatives from both the Alberta Utilities Commission and the AESO, the system operator, have contributed to building these North America-wide standards. So we're very much in the game, we're very much part of the leadership of this, but of course it always has to be an economic proposition as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, finally, will the minister consider promoting the use of household-based instrumentation, which can divert the peak energy usage and lower the cost to consumers? [interjections]

Mr. Hughes: I appreciate the question and the enthusiasm from the back row over there.

Mr. Speaker, this government, obviously, earlier this year took strong actions to protect consumers. Just recently, in January, we took steps to ensure that there is greater cost scrutiny of the transmission systems. We've increased market competition, and we've increased price stability. This will lead to more stable, lower prices for Albertans over time and a very stable supply.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Food Safety Regulations

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Churches, legions, and community halls are where small towns come together. The men and women who volunteer in these facilities have been preparing food for their friends and neighbours for generations. Now our community volunteers are under attack, and I keep getting letters about this. They can't cook without a time-consuming food prep course. They can't serve without a costly serving course certificate. To the Minister of Health: why does the government think our local volunteers and senior citizens are incapable of preparing food without AHS looking over their shoulders?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government applauds the efforts of volunteers across the province in the large cities and in smaller communities, and we recognize the contribution that they make. That said, there is a requirement for public health regulations and inspection and enforcement across the province in order to ensure that food consumed is safe, and that involves safe preparation. If the hon. member has a particular concern about an incident in his own constituency, I invite him to send me the details. I'd be glad to investigate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Bikman: Given that people in small communities often bring food to events after they've cooked them at home and given that AHS managers are used to dining out on expensive meals, is the Minister of Health prepared to eliminate rules that prevent volunteers from preparing food at home and then serving it at community-sponsored events?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that the hon. member would agree that he would not want the Minister of Health nor any other elected member of this House to make very critical decisions about the safe preparation and serving of food in our province. So if there's a particular question about a particular aspect of the Public Health Act or the regulations that the member wants us to investigate, I'd be very pleased to receive that information.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member. Final supplemental, without preamble.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I will do that. Given that local volunteers are reaching out and telling the minister that these bureaucratic rules and regulations are harmful to smaller communities, is the government prepared today to commit to cutting this kind of unnecessary government red tape?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I absolutely empathize with the spirit of the hon. member's question, but I'm sure he would agree that the responsibility of government to the citizens of this province is to ensure quality and safety in the preparation and the serving of food regardless of the size of the function or the community in which the event takes place. This is an issue that I think many of us have encountered. I'm very happy to continue to work with AHS and to look at specific aspects of the regulation that may be concerning to the hon. member. But I as a layperson am not going to make that decision.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, today we got through 16 sets of questions. I thank you for your co-operation. In 30 seconds I'll recognize the next set of members' statements.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Senator Joyce Fairbairn

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Senator Joyce Fairbairn has retired from the Senate of Canada having served her country, her province, and her constituents on Parliament Hill for over half a century.

Joyce was born in Lethbridge, Alberta. She is a graduate of the universities of Alberta and Carleton as a journalist and became known as the first female newsman in the parliamentary news gallery and also was with the bureau of United Press International. She served with Prime Minister Trudeau as legislative assistant and communications director. She served in the Senate for 25 years with passion, dedication, and energy.

She has also been at the forefront of fighting for those whose voices are often marginalized, ignored, or disregarded. Literacy for all Canadians was where she left a remarkable legacy, and she was respected from coast to coast for the programs she helped establish.

She represented Canada at the Nagano Paralympics, and it became a defining moment as she continued to work tirelessly for the Paralympic athletes.

She represented an extension of the Famous Five women's accomplishments. She, too, was a pioneer, blazed trails for women to follow but also to create their own trails. Always with Joyce it was about the job and not about her, and unfortunately, consequently, there are no personal journals or diaries of this remarkable woman, to whom all Canadian women owe so much.

My words have only scratched the surface. In Lethbridge she is Senator Joyce, deeply loved and respected as the lady in red and a woman of great distinction.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Jean (John) Raymond Spenard

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about the spirit of the people of Alberta, that I was privileged this weekend to witness. My weekend was no different than that of any other member here, a calendar of community events to attend and constituents to meet, but I was given reason to reflect on the people behind these events. You see, a long-time member of the Bowness community had passed.

Jean Raymond Spenard spent decades feeding people, first at the old Bowness Hotel, then at the Bowness Seniors Centre, where he volunteered running the kitchen. I last saw Jean just a few weeks ago. He was hooked up to oxygen and using a walker, but arms folded, eyes following each of the volunteers serving his food, he made sure that everything was done to his exacting standards. Well, Mr. Speaker, on Saturday well over 250 people attended a celebration to recognize Jean's life well spent.

This caused me to reflect on the numerous people throughout Alberta who give up their time and energy to make their communities a better place, people like Christine Webster and the parents and teachers who organized and ran the Bowness big band dance on Friday night, raising funds for the music program at the high school; people like the members of Foothills United church that organized, cooked, and served a delicious beef stew for the community at their St. Patrick's Day dinner; or people like Andrew Shorter and the other hard-working members of the Crestmont Community Association board, who gathered for their annual general meeting on Sunday afternoon despite the snow blowing down around Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, we are grateful for these constituents. All of my colleagues here at the Legislature witness the contributions and sacrifices that Albertans make every day. As MLAs we're privileged to see just what it is that makes this province great.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Blackfalds Concerns

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and read a letter written to this government by the mayor of Blackfalds, Melodie Stol. Mayor Stol isn't interested in scoring political points. Her concerns are real and honest. This government likes to pass budgets without considering the people they affect, and I hope they recognize hearing this letter as the privilege that it is. She writes:

Over the past week our Council and administrative staff have been reviewing the proposed 2013 budget and [its] ramifications on our community. It is my duty and responsibility on behalf of the Council of Blackfalds to highlight to you the consequences that the change of education property tax requisition has on our community.

The $600,000 increase translates into a 39.5% residential tax increase on our residents. In real dollars, we will have families facing tax increases of $400 to $500. How can our government profess to have a budget of no tax increases that will result in families paying so much more every year? Further, Blackfalds has been waiting for the Province to provide new schools locally and we have not had our needs met. Our schools are bursting at the seams. Our elementary school has been on the capital plan for modernization for over 10 years! Yet we are being asked to pay 39.5% more for inadequate local school infrastructure.

The province has seen fit to offer transitional mitigation measures to 4 communities to help transition over the next two and three years. Blackfalds has been left out . . . Certainly this huge burden of a tax increase is not what you envisioned for the blue collar workers and families that make up Blackfalds' population.

Mr. Speaker, Mayor Stol is fearful for her community. Blackfalds feels ignored, dismissed, and disrespected. Shame on this government for downloading their deficit onto the backs of honest, hard-working communities like Blackfalds.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a Calgary Herald article dated September 14, 2011, which covers former Premier Lougheed's opposition to the Keystone XL pipeline on grounds that it will ship jobs to the U.S. and also includes a quote from the now Minister of Municipal Affairs and MLA for Battle River-Wainwright wherein when asked about the U.S. rejecting the Keystone project, he said: "I wouldn't be upset. I'd smile and say, 'Great, we'll upgrade it here, and we'll ship it to somewhere that does want it'." Apparently he, too, is un-Canadian.

The second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of submissions received from Albertans made to our prebudget tour, which visited seven cities in February. For example, Polly writes:

As a teacher I am extremely concerned about cuts to education. I feel as though promises . . . to teachers were never taken seriously . . . How am I supposed to ensure my students have a stand up education when I have to teach 32 10 year olds?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, did you have another tabling for the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood?

Ms Notley: That was one of them.

The Deputy Speaker: That was it? Okay. Wonderful. Thank you.
I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the report I mentioned in question period. It's the Canadian Results from the Progress in International Reading Literacy Study, which clearly shows that the results of our grade 4s in terms of reading comprehension are on the decline from where they were five years ago.

The second tabling I have is an article from Richard Cuthbertson of the Calgary Herald which discusses this report and has a quote in it from Jim Dueck, a former assistant deputy minister, who retired a couple of years ago. He said, "I'm embarrassed by (the results), as a province."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter from the president of the Alberta Medical Association to members calling for clarity around the negotiating process and a willingness of the government to come back to the table and present a clear approach to solving this two-year-old conflict.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of one of many e-mails we received about this PC government's cancellation of the STEP program. Justin McDonald is a university student from Edmonton who was able to gain invaluable experience through the STEP program by working with the Writers Guild of Alberta for a summer. He writes, "The small investment STEP makes in students gives them enormous support in realizing their potential and finding success in a position that matters to them."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter written by one of my constituents, a very bright and well-spoken 20-year-old, Calvin Timmerman, on behalf of the Association for Reformed Political Action. The letter highlights their concerns with comments made by a member of the Assembly regarding the characterization of children helping around the farm as child labour. I believe it's regarding the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I could give a speech, but I know you don't want one.

The Deputy Speaker: I appreciate that, hon. member. Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings today. The first is from a constituent, Todd Hartley, an avid outdoorsman and hunter who feels there needs to be a change in legislation regarding leases on Crown land to allow more foot access year-round so that he and other hunters can use it appropriately. I have the letter and would ask the Minister of Environment and SRD to carefully consider it. I know she will. That's the first one.

The second tabling I have is a very lengthy letter from Sherri Case, also a constituent of mine. She wants to see major reforms in the maintenance enforcement program to better protect the interests of children, and she's outlined several very thoughtful and specific proposals on how to do so. I would ask the Minister of Human Services and the Justice minister to have a thorough read of it. I think it's a very good read – great ideas from Sherri here – and I have the needed copies.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the letter I just read from in my member's statement, a letter dated March 14 to the Hon. Alison Redford, Premier of Alberta, and the hon. Alberta cabinet ministers.

The Deputy Speaker: Please, hon. member, we don't use proper names.

The hon. associate minister responsible for PDD.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] In follow-up to yesterday's discussion about the Workers' Compensation Board in this Chamber I'm pleased to table some statistics on the number of inquiries that they've had in the last 10 years for the consideration of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and other members there, who, obviously, aren't interested in the tabling.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. associate minister.

Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie rose on a point of order at 1:55. Hon. Member for Airdrie, if you'd like to speak to your point of order and the citation, please.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is referring to our Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. There is a section in here, Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) – it's not used often, but we will attempt to here – on making allegations against a member, in particular, imputing false or unavowed motives to another member. Very, very on point in this case. I think that the government would agree that we do not want, obviously, a lot of commotion in this House. We wouldn't want that, especially when we have points that we do agree on. We need to, of course, respect the differences that we have and celebrate those things that we are similar on and not try to razz each other for no reason.

Let me make very clear on behalf of our leader something that she has never wavered from. There's absolutely a complete commitment on her part and on the Wildrose side to decrease carbon emissions that we give off here as a province. There is no doubt about that. We've been very clear about that throughout.

There's no doubt also that there have been instances of miscommunication where there's been a view put forth that the science is somehow unsettled. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that when you put more CO<sub>2</sub> into the atmosphere, the atmosphere warms up. That science is absolutely settled. So we are completely committed to that and reducing carbon dioxide, our carbon footprint, and want to make sure that on a go-forward that is very clear. Of course, where the science is not settled is how fast it is happening and what best to do to deal with that. That's where researchers are spending millions and millions and millions of dollars in that regard.

That is an explanation of it. We will be very, very, very clear going forward that we want to decrease carbon emissions in this province because it's the right thing to do, and we're going to do it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do believe that there's a place that has frozen over today, and I'm hesitant to go out tonight in case the moon is blue. However, I think it's important for Alberta that the hon. member stood up today and clarified that they do understand that in order for us to sell Alberta products to the world, we have to embrace what the world wants and we have to understand what the market conditions are. I'm pleased that they actually are coming into this modern era and understanding that. There was confusion over that, and there probably will remain confusion because of the way that he equivocated in his remarks.

I'll just go back to the comments that his leader did make on April 16, 2012, in the leaders' debate, quote: we have always said that the science isn't settled, and we need to continue to monitor the debate. On April 19, quote: there is still a debate in the scientific community, and we're going to continue to watch the debate in the scientific community.

So it's an important move forward today. I think an important piece of business was done today when the hon. member dragged his party and his leader kicking and screaming into 2013 to join the rest of us.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

I'm going to make a ruling at this point. I think what we had here, the reference to a comment I believe from the government side – I believe it was to the Deputy Premier – begged for some clarification. It's obvious that the Member for Airdrie got up and, I would say, very eloquently clarified. I would suggest that the House now has no doubt but to accept this position on behalf of himself and his party. So I would say that there's no point or order. Let's move on.

Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and this evening for consideration of the main estimates. Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Education in committee room A in the afternoon, and Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Treasury Board and Finance in committee room A this evening.

The House now stands adjourned.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:01 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 20, 2013

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: I knew this was going to be a bad hair day. [laughter]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

Hon. members, it is with great pleasure that I share with you this information. Today is the 24th election anniversary of one of our colleagues, the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake. [applause]

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise today on behalf of the Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, to introduce 56 of the brightest students from Velma E. Baker elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. Joining them today are their teachers, Ms Lynn Peacock and Ms Marilyn Manning, and also four parent volunteers, Mrs. Rosalea Petruk, Mrs. Verna Milligan, Mrs. Kelly Nicolson, and Mr. Gary Biddell. At this time I'd ask all of the students and guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is truly a pleasure to stand today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of individuals joining us today from the Trinity Christian school in my riding of Calgary-Shaw. We have 39 grade 6 students along with 23 parents here today, including their teachers, Dawnyshia Dykshoorn and Cheryl Barnard. The principal of the school, Mr. Stan Hielema, is also here. I would ask all of them to please rise and I'd ask fellow members to provide them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Today it's my great pleasure to introduce through you but not to you a member of the Red Deer-North constituency and a good friend of mine, Bob Jablonski. Bob has been a volunteer pilot and trainer with the Civil Air Search and Rescue. He's been a volunteer fireman with the Nordegg fire rescue as well as one of our area's finest entrepreneurs. Bob has owned a number of family businesses, the latest being The Coverall Shop. Bob resides in Red Deer, where he is a loving father, a grandfather to four granddaughters and one grandson, and for the past 41 years partner to the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. Bob is seated in the Speaker's gallery today, and I'd ask him to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the careers in transition program. With us today – and I believe they're all sitting in the public gallery – we have Tanis Harder, who is the instructor. Now, the rest of them are all students that are very hard working, looking for their GED. We have Mike Lee, Justine Jensen, Chris Gallinger, Tami Reid, Chris Boyle, Tania Lewis, Renee White, Margaret Gordon, and Patricia Willis. They're all standing, so if you would please join me in welcoming them to the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 13 members of the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations, ACAUR. Over 10 years ago the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, our current Speaker, started ACAUR, to which I was appointed way back then. I would like to thank the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations for his continued support of this council.

Madam Speaker, I'd ask the council members to rise and stay standing as I list their names. Daria Luciwi is past president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council. Kathryn Kozak Wiebe, former mayor of Bonnyville, is active in the rural Ukrainian community. Michael Sulyma is the head of Sulyma Productions, an arts touring and production company. Vitaliy Milentyev is a member of the Canada-Ukraine Chamber of Commerce and president of Global Wealth Builders. Yarema Shulakewych works at the Canadian International Development Agency projects in Ukraine and has represented the Ukrainian Canadian Congress in Kiev. Emil Yereniuk is president of the Ukrainian Self-Reliance Association and vice-president of the Ukrainian Self-Reliance League of Canada. Marilyn Mucha is a member emeritus of the Ukrainian Shumka Dancers Advisory Foundation. Jaroslaw Szewczuk has experience advocating for political rights and freedoms for Ukraine and promoting Canadian values to Ukrainians. He is also president of the League of Ukrainian Canadians in Edmonton.

Bill Lebedovich is a chartered psychologist and teacher at the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta business faculties who has worked in the oil and gas industry. Natalia Toroshenko is a third-term town councillor for the town of Vegreville. Bill Shostak is president of Ukrainian Canadian Social Services, Edmonton branch. Michael Hantzsch is vice-president of the oil sands and heavy oil business unit of the Pembina Pipeline Corporation and is involved in the Ukrainian Canadian Professional and Business Association of Calgary. Bohdan Romaniuk, lawyer, economist, business executive, is involved in the Ukrainian Canadian Professional & Business Association of Calgary. Barbara Hlus is our newly elected president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council. Also with her is Stefanie Jones from IIR, assigned to the Europe file. Thanks to Stefanie for her help and guidance over the many years. IIR is blessed to have you onboard.

I would ask everyone to give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise today and introduce someone that's an important part of our community here in Alberta. As you know, the home-building industry is extremely important to our community and to all of us. Today I'm very pleased to have the CHBA Alberta president, Dave Hooze, here. He's in the Legislature with his son and their class from Calgary. Dave is the president and general manager of Stepper Custom Homes. I'd like to tell you that he was also a very strong advocate for the new-home warranty program and for mandatory home warranty for all of the homes in Alberta. I'd like to ask Dave to rise so we can give him the warm reception of our House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Daylin Breen, who recently received the Queen's jubilee medal for his work building a strong, active community environment while establishing an active and effective school parent council at Johnny Bright school. Through his initiative with his parent council Daylin has spearheaded an annual walk-to-school day and implemented a school travel plan, both of which the Edmonton public school board is now looking at as models for other schools. Daylin continues to create a strong community within Edmonton-South West while still working full-time and raising two remarkable kids, Rowan and Maya. I'd ask that Mr. Daylin Breen please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Dorward: Madam Speaker, on July 10, 1971, I met a young woman at a movie theatre who would greatly improve and bless my life. She is here today, my wife, Janice Dorward. Accompanying Janice is our daughter from Salmon Arm, Jennifer Henrie, and five of our 13 grandchildren: Ryan, Nadya, Christian, Bethany, and Joshua. I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Youth Akali Dal Mansa party president, Mr. Gurpreet Singh Banawali from Punjab, India. He has been visiting this great province of Alberta for the past week and has expressed to me how much he has enjoyed his visit so far. Today during the visit various issues were discussed, the biggest one being: will India have access to Alberta oil? I have assured him that the Alberta government is working to improve market access. He has been travelling with many friends, visiting both Edmonton and Calgary, and today they are here to watch a live question period.

They are all seated in the members' gallery. Joining Mr. Banawali are many of his friends and mine. I'd ask them to please rise when I mention their names: Gurpreet Banawali, Manpreet Sidhu, Amandeep Dhanju, Rajesh Choudhary, Prab Gill from Calgary, Inderjit Mullanpur of the Desh Videsh Times, Parminder Grewal, Balraj Brar, Raj Wander, Navtej Singh, and, of course, my good friend Vattandeep Grewal from the Ajit newspaper. I'd ask the members to please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today is a very special occasion as it is the first time in the Assembly that we've had a woman in the Speaker's chair, and it's wonderful. My friend, I want you to know how special it is, too, that Bob has joined you for this very defining moment in your career. We're just going to give you one more real round of applause. [applause]

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for that. I would just add that 41 years is not enough. [laughter]

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. A tough act to follow.

It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my friend Ross Ford, reeve of the county of Warner, former mayor of Coutts, and successful farmer. Ross is a vocal, articulate advocate for our area, especially most recently about the importance of volunteer ambulance service. Ross, please rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly, which I hope will be enthusiastic enough to persuade you to run again this October.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure today to rise and introduce a dear friend, Prab Gill, who's here from Calgary. The Member for Edmonton-Manning already mentioned his name because he likes to take credit for all great things that we know especially come from Calgary. Prab is a dear friend, a great community volunteer, and somebody whose relationship and friendship I cherish very much. I'd ask all members to give him the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my extreme pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a gentleman named Chris Nielsen. Chris is not only a hard worker with United Food and Commercial Workers 401 but was a very integral part of my campaign team in the last election. Chris volunteered and did everything from helping going door to door to delivering flyers to putting up signs. What's interesting is that Chris is now in the process of seeking the nomination for the Alberta NDP in the riding of Edmonton-Decore. I would now ask Chris to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Edmonton Remand Centre

Mr. Saskiw: Yesterday, with great fanfare, the PC government opened up a brand new facility. It's being billed as state of the art, the most technically advanced of its kind in the entire country. It meets high environmental standards, allows for the efficient use of natural light, and is landscaped meticulously to match its agricultural style. But that's not all, Madam Speaker. Its residents will have access to an exercise room, a fresh, clean-air area as well as educational and recreational programs. They'll have regular bathing privileges, warm meals every day, and appropriate mental and physical health care right on-site.

Wouldn't it be wonderful, Madam Speaker, if I was talking about a long-term care centre or seniors' lodge? The men and women who built this province surely deserve no less. But I'm not. The place I'm talking about is the Edmonton Remand Centre, a jail. The residents I'm talking about are inmates. While seniors in long-term care are bathed twice a week if they're lucky and get served disgusting mush for supper, Alberta taxpayers are footing the $580 million bill for top-notch care for those behind bars.

I suppose we should expect no less from this Justice minister, a former Saskatchewan Liberal staffer. He's already stopped monitoring sex offenders, stopped prosecuting vandals, and stopped cracking down on drug dens. Why would anyone be surprised that he's rolling out the red carpet for inmates?

Madam Speaker, this isn't justice. Justice would be for vulnerable seniors receiving, at the very least, the same level of comfort and care that this minister offers inmates. [interjections] The fact is that there is no justice under this Justice minister. While a so-called progressive, soft-on-crime agenda continues to give criminals the edge, hard-working Albertans, the victims of these very criminals, are left wondering: what on earth is this Justice minister doing? [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the noise level is getting a little loud even for a grandmother.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and congratulations for being in the chair today. I'm glad that I'm here to participate on the day that we have the first woman Speaker in the chair.

Bitumen Upgrading

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker – I had to change that, Madam Speaker – as we all know, since the time of Peter Lougheed the Alberta government has promised Albertans that it would develop the oil industry in the interest of all Albertans, but today Albertans know that our government is firmly in the pockets of the oil industry, and they can't be trusted to do what's best for Albertans. I say this because I know, just as Peter Lougheed did, that there's a difference between the best interest of oil companies and the best interest of Albertans.

When it comes to the oil sands, nothing displays this fact more resoundingly than the proposed Keystone XL pipeline. For years this PC government has promised Albertans they would do their best to promote upgrading of our great promise. That means thousands of well-paying jobs, increased government revenues, and spinoff industries that would help diversify and strengthen the economy.

The economics are clear, Madam Speaker. According to the government's own internal documents the Alberta economy retains 35 per cent of the value of bitumen when it is exported unprocessed, it retains 70 per cent of the value when it is upgraded to synthetic crude, and it retains almost one hundred per cent if it is refined to a higher grade product like gasoline, diesel, or jet fuel.

The last time the government made a firm promise on bitumen upgrading, Premier Stelmach promised to upgrade 70 per cent. If we followed that commitment, Madam Speaker, we would need four new upgraders, which would mean $40 billion in capital investment and 60,000 years of employment during construction. Eleven thousand of these jobs would be highly skilled positions, including engineering jobs, and these four upgraders would create 6,000 good, permanent jobs for Albertans.

But, Madam Speaker, we're headed in the wrong direction. Today we upgrade only 58 per cent, and the ERCB projects that by 2017 that figure will drop to 47 per cent. Many of the oil companies working in Alberta already own refineries which can process the bitumen. In Texas, obviously, it's in their best interest to support a pipeline instead of a refinery here, but it's not in the best interest of Albertans today or in the future.

Madam Speaker, building the Keystone XL pipeline and shipping raw bitumen to the Gulf Coast will . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

National Carbon Tax

Ms Smith: There is still a problem that we need to clear up. Let's review. The Premier goes to Ottawa and muses in an interview that Alberta's carbon tax is such a great idea that the federal government should have its own carbon tax. She's pressed about it, and her office issues a clarification that actually clears up nothing. Then in question period I asked about this national carbon tax strategy, and the Premier deflected and said that it was absurd to raise this. But I'll tell you what's absurd, Madam Speaker. It's the Premier saying one thing in Ontario and then saying another thing when she's back here. Why does she do this?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Madam Speaker, saying an absurd thing twice doesn't make it any less absurd. Let me explain that to the Leader of the Official Opposition. The only parties in this House that are talking about new taxes or additional taxes are the three parties across the aisle. However, I can tell you that we are very proud of the carbon program that we have, the made-in-Alberta program, that has proven itself to be very beneficial and could actually be an example for other provinces and other jurisdictions throughout the world.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Let's be clear. The Wildrose has promised no new taxes.

Let's also be clear, though, that we in the Official Opposition agree that there should be action to reduce pollutants and greenhouse gases, but we also insist that a national carbon tax is not the way to go. Even Alberta's $15-a-tonne levy has done nothing measurable to improve things. So when, Madam Speaker, are we actually going to have a workable, effective plan to reduce overall emissions?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and congratulations on your being in the chair.

You know, Madam Speaker, it's really funny for that party to be asking about climate change and when we would have something measurable when those are actually climate change deniers. But I want to tell you about what we have measurable. Thirty-two million tonnes of greenhouse gases have been reduced under our climate change strategy. Over $300 million in green technology and green energy projects have been funded for 49 projects.

Madam Speaker, other people look at our climate change policy, the Premier shares that policy, and if other jurisdictions want to look at ours . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I would like to note that there is a point of order by the hon. Member for Airdrie.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think the environment minister knows that emissions in the oil sands have actually gone up and not down, contrary to what she said. The proof that Alberta's environment record is unconvincing are the recent reports of hesitation by a large German science group to proceed with a five-year study of oil sands upgrading processes. How can the Premier expect to open new overseas markets for Alberta bitumen if she has trouble convincing scientists to help us study the matter?

Mrs. McQueen: I want to let this hon. member know and the House know that 26 per cent to 29 per cent of intensity emissions have been reduced by the oil sands operators. That's something we should be very proud of, the new technology that industry has put in. I find it amusing that that party over there and that particular leader doesn't support the changes that industry is making.

With regard to Helmholtz and the funding that we provide the University of Alberta, $25 million over five years, 80 per cent of that funding will continue to Helmholtz, and projects will continue with Helmholtz, and they will continue to use those.

The Acting Speaker: Second main question. The Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We have always supported reducing pollutants and greenhouse gases, contrary to what the environment minister has said.

Donations to Political Parties

Ms Smith: There are so many clouds over this government due to ethical lapses: health expenses, illegal donations, queue-jumping. It's bad. Yet this government seems oblivious to its problems. For example, yesterday we learned that the Finance minister reappointed the owner of the Edmonton Oilers to the board of AIMCo, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation. All the while the Chief Electoral Officer has an ongoing, judge-led probe of his donations to the PC Party. Doesn't the Finance minister think an appointment like this should wait until after the investigation is over?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

Mr. Horner: Mr. — Madam Speaker, my apologies. Because you are the first, old habits die hard.

Madam Speaker, Mr. Katz is a natural choice for reappointment to the board. This is not a new appointment to the board; this is a reappointment along with a number of other directors. AIMCo is a Crown corporation that makes its day-to-day investment decisions independent of government, and that's a good thing because last year it achieved a 7.9 per cent gross rate of return on the $7 billion it manages for Albertans.

Ms Smith: I think most people would have preferred for the Finance minister to wait until the air was cleared.

Speaking of the Chief Electoral Officer, his term expires shortly, and he's not going to seek reappointment. We wonder if his successor will be appointed soon so that the investigations into illegal donations to the PC Party won't be interrupted. Or will this office be left vacant for a while to just slow things down?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Madam Speaker, we were cutting the Leader of the Opposition slack for a while because she was a rookie, but by now she should know that this Legislature appoints a legislative committee which will have participation from all the parties, and that committee will be picking a new Chief Electoral Officer in due course.

Ms Smith: Madam Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer notified the Official Opposition that I would be interviewed to provide additional information into the probe about potentially illegal donations, but I have yet to be contacted. I am just curious. Who will be handling this matter in the interim until a new Chief Electoral Officer is appointed?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, another lesson for a member who should know this by now: the operations of the Chief Electoral Officer are independent of government. The Chief Electoral Officer only reports to this Assembly as a whole. I imagine there is a progression from one electoral officer to a new one, and I'm sure she will get her phone call in due course either from the existing one or the future one.

Ms Smith: That's right, Madam Speaker, because the Premier has never intervened to tell a committee what to do.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Ms Smith: Today, on the first day of spring, perhaps we can look forward to a new attitude from this Premier and her back-in-debt government. We've been asking her Finance minister to give us some realistic numbers on debt repayment, yet he says that he doesn't really need to give us a detailed savings plan to cover off that $17 billion in debt. "We're building Alberta." That is what they say, but what about the people they're supposedly building for, like students? Teens in a recent survey were asked about government finances and expressed concerns . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I assume it's the Minister of Finance that that was directed to.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, the hon. member has been chatting about and asking in estimates about the debt and the debt repayment, and I appreciate that. There is concern around the debt repayment schedules and those sorts of things. As I've said, in due course as we actually take out those loans, we will put the amortization schedules and the interest rates on there, just as the town of Okotoks in the hon. member's riding does in their financial statements. Frankly, they actually separate it out into operating and their capital, and they have a considerable amount of debt on their books. I'm sure she's not advocating that they should pay . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Smith: As I've told the Finance minister, he'd be needing to put aside $850 million a year to pay off that debt. He's not doing that.

The survey of more than 4,400 high school students conducted by the youth organization Civix found that 58 per cent of Alberta students had major concerns about government debt, yet here in Alberta $17 billion in debt is coming in the next three years, and nothing realistic is being set aside to pay it back. Why not?

Mr. Horner: Well, Madam Speaker, we're not borrowing $17 billion all in one day and then amortizing it out over 85 years. The hon. member has tried to convince Albertans that that's what we're doing, which is absolutely hogwash. The actual reality is that the $17 billion she speaks of is the culmination of this year's three-year business plan plus borrowings from before, when we actually put $26 billion worth of capital into the provincial asset base that we call home. That's schools. That's roads. That's hospitals. That's all the things that Albertans need. Those are assets that are on our books just like they are in the municipalities. She should take a lesson.

The Acting Speaker: Your final supplemental, hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Eight billion by the end of this year, $12 billion by the end of next year, $17 billion by the end of the year after that; regardless, we are still waiting for a realistic debt repayment plan, and we don't have it. The government's approach is a bit like taking out a $30,000 car loan for a car that's worth $6,000 and telling the dealer: "Just trust me. I'll put a little money aside later if things improve, and I'm pretty sure I'll have the money available when it comes time to pay it back someday." Doesn't the Finance minister think it's wrong to saddle future generations with all this debt?

Mr. Horner: You know, Madam Speaker, when my grandson drives around Edmonton on the Anthony Henday and realizes that every year he's making a payment on that Anthony Henday, I think he's going to be pretty pleased that this government had the vision to build that infrastructure today and not saddle him with an even higher cost tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Helmholtz Centre for Environmental Research

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. So, Madam Speaker, more confirmation that the Redford government's poor record of action on environmental protection is hurting the economy. It's all over the news now that the Helmholtz Centre for Environmental Research has pulled out because of German citizens' mistrust in Alberta's action on climate change and their rejection of involvement with dirty oil. To the Minister of Environment: is it really cheaper to pay for Washington trips, ad campaigns, ministerial rhetoric and number spinning, and strategy committee stipends than to just implement the actions which reduce . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I would remind hon. members that it's inappropriate to use proper names of members in the House.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's important for our government and our Premier and our ministers to go and talk about the important work that Alberta is doing, and the main reason we have to do that is that we've got federal leaders of the NDP going out and talking anti the work that we're doing here. Our job is to promote the oil sands in our area here, to have market access, and to do what Albertans want, for us to get the markets open. That's exactly what this government is doing.

Ms Blakeman: The strategy is to blame the NDP?

Well, given that the Helmholtz partners with the U of A on all sorts of other scientific research but it is Alberta's environmental record that has caused them to pull out, does the minister not see that the Alberta record can't be all that great if citizens in Germany, a very environmentally conscious country, won't allow their scientists to continue with this project?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I said in a previous question, the Helmholtz funding that we give: $25 million over five years to the University of Alberta to work with Helmholtz. We're proud of the work with Helmholtz. Eighty per cent of the work they will continue to do.

We have many groups that we partner with. Helmholtz is one of them. There are studies like the Jacobs study and the Penspen report for the U.K., independent studies that say in their studies independently that there are no differences with regard to oil sands oil in a basket of crudes such that they should be unfairly discriminated against.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. Back to the Minister of Environment. Does this government really believe in muzzling citizens or in calling them un-Albertan if they challenge the government's poor environmental record? It's a bit thin-skinned, don't you think?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very proud to stand up here today under the leadership of our Premier, and I as Environment minister and our colleagues have opened the door to all voices to come and talk to us, whether it be about environment or SRD issues. I invite NGOs. I invite First Nations. We invite everybody. All Albertans have a voice in this government. This Premier has made sure, and we have as a ministry, that everybody's voice counts in this province.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's clear this government doesn't believe in free speech if it involves criticizing them.

Bitumen Upgrading

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, given the huge benefit that Keystone will bring to the United States, I'd be surprised if it were not approved by President Obama. As Peter Lougheed pointed out, it will create thousands of jobs and billions of dollars of investment in Texas. To the Energy minister: if Keystone is approved by the U.S. president, what steps will the Alberta government take to increase the amount of bitumen upgraded here in Alberta?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Madam Speaker, the government of Alberta has already taken great steps to actually ensure that bitumen is upgraded in this province, including the North West upgrader, which will be coming on stream within about three or four years. We had to take special steps to ensure that that happened. It was a deliberate act of political will by the government of Alberta to make that happen.

Mr. Mason: Every single project currently under consideration for oil sands development is for the export of bitumen, not to be upgraded in Alberta. The percentage of bitumen that is upgraded in this province is continuously going to decline because of this government's inaction.

Nancy Pelosi, in the Democratic Party in the United States, has said that by upgrading Alberta bitumen in Texas, it will not be used for domestic U.S. consumption but will be re-exported by the United States. Can the Energy minister explain why this government is allowing the Americans to upgrade our bitumen, then resell it and make all . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Hughes: Madam Speaker, we have many ways to get our product to market, and that includes working hard to get access to the west coast, east coast, south through the United States of America, and perhaps north. We will seek all possible ways to get our product to market, including through adding value to it right here in Alberta. I would say that adding value anywhere in Canada is also good for Alberta and also good for Canada.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Mason: Excuse me. Three.

The Acting Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. Carry on.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I know it feels like 12, but it's only two.

Madam Speaker, a U.S. State Department and Energy Department report to President Obama clearly states that investment and job creation will shift to Alberta if Keystone is not approved, but Alberta does need pipelines if it is to export upgraded and refined products. To the Minister of Energy: if Keystone is indeed built, will the government take steps to ensure that it carries upgraded synthetic crude oil and not unupgraded bitumen?

Mr. Hughes: Madam Speaker, you know, you can pretend that somehow you don't need to get access to markets in this province, but actually we do. We need to get to all the markets we possibly can. We will continue to monitor the situation and ensure that as much as makes reasonable sense – in an economy where we've got less than 5 per cent unemployment already in this province, it's not like we're struggling for employment in this province. We have tons of opportunity in this province. People continue to move here to work with us, and there's tremendous opportunity for all Albertans.

Alberta Health Services Executive Expenses

Mrs. Forsyth: Madam Speaker, the Health minister continues to mismanage our health care system. The PC government broke their promise with physicians after the election by tearing up their agreement in principle and now are on the warpath against doctors, asking for a $275 million cut. When a typical family physician takes in $175,000 after their overhead fees, senior vice-presidents like the VP of people and partners make up to $155,000. Will the Health minister show some leadership and be asking AHS managers like the VP of linens to show an example?

Mr. Horne: Well, Madam Speaker, I believe that question was answered last week by Alberta Health Services when the board announced a $35 million initiative to reduce executive expenditures and salaries across Alberta Health Services. This is exactly the kind of leadership that we're looking for, it's exactly the kind of leadership that agencies, boards, and commissions that work under this government are delivering, and it's exactly the kind of advice the hon. member should listen to.

Mrs. Forsyth: Patients before bureaucracy.

Given that the Deputy Minister of Health makes $364,000 and given that the junior vice-presidents make up to $220,000, does the Health minister believe that these bureaucrats have a higher value to patients on the operating table than our doctors do?

Mr. Horne: Well, Madam Speaker, I don't know what figures the hon. member is quoting from. The deputy minister figure certainly doesn't sound correct to us.

Putting that aside, this province spends more on health care on an age-adjusted basis than any other jurisdiction in the country. This province provides physician compensation that is 14 per cent above the national average. It is absolutely true that there are ranges and disparities within physician compensation depending upon which specialty we're talking about, and that's exactly one of the issues we're working on with the AMA.

Mrs. Forsyth: Executive salaries and bonuses, Madam Speaker.

Given that this government recently gave themselves an 8 per cent pay raise and gave their own deputy minister a pay hike in June, will the Health minister commit to cutting these salaries before asking our front-line health care workers to take a hit?

Mr. Horne: Madam Speaker, this government supports a health system that is second to none across the country. The compensation that we provide both to physicians and other providers of services is comparable to any other of the best paying jurisdictions in the country. I don't know what the hon. member is trying to do here in terms of an analogy or a comparison. It doesn't add up to me, it's not an apples-to-apples comparison, and it contributes nothing of value to a discussion about how to improve health care in this province.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Regional Collaboration Program

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Across the front page of my weekly newspaper and at the AAMD and C spring conference this week the Minister of Municipal Affairs talked about the government eliminating MSI operating funds and moving the money into regional collaboration grants. Some municipalities rely on this funding to run their libraries and other initiatives. To the minister: can you explain the reason for this decision?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I can confirm that we had discussed moving the MSI operating funding, which was $50 million, over to the regional collaboration program, Mr. — Madam Speaker. Congratulations, by the way.

During this budget every minister and indeed all of our colleagues were challenged in trying to find transformative ways to do things, find ways to encourage people to think differently, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]. Madam Speaker. You're right; it is a hard habit to break.

Moving funding over there will help ensure that municipalities find creative ways to ensure their long-term prosperity.

Ms Fenske: Madam Speaker, to the same minister: can you confirm, then, that this funding, which was previously ongoing under the MSI program, will now be one-time project funding?

Some Hon. Members: Madam.

Mr. Griffiths: Madam Speaker, our regional collaboration program was focused on one-time initiatives that municipalities would approach to bring them together to work on something. We know that that might not necessarily apply when we're trying to get transformative things done now. We are working very hard. We're going to consider transforming the program itself to make sure that municipalities always have the opportunity to find as creative ideas as they can to ensure their long-term prosperity going forward, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] Madam Speaker. That's what this change in initiative is about. I almost got it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the minister: that's good news, actually. With this and other changes to grant funding how much less money will municipalities receive from the government next year?

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Mr. Griffiths: Madam Speaker, an exceptional question. I know that some people have considered that perhaps there is a lot less funding going to municipalities. Everyone from every walk of life who is affected by the budget feels like they're being affected, but I can assure all members of this House and all municipalities that MSI funding stays the same at $896 million. We've added extra money to the regional collaboration program, which is going to be transformative. Of course, last year the funding to municipalities was just over $2 billion, and now it's just slightly under. It's a very small change. Municipalities are continuing to be supported by this government.

South Saskatchewan Regional Plan

Mr. Anderson: Madam Speaker, there is a lot of concern about the South Saskatchewan regional plan, especially how a legislated Calgary metropolitan plan as part of the regional plan will rob communities like Airdrie and Rocky View of their autonomy to grow in the way they feel is best for their citizens, turning them into cookie-cutter, stack 'em and pack 'em growth nodes, as the CRP calls them. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will you commit that you will not legislatively compel any community to join the CRP nor force them to build to the CRP's minimum density requirement of eight units per acre?

Mr. Griffiths: Madam Speaker, we've undertaken mediation right now to get all the partners at the table to start to discuss a solution. I've said many times at the AAMD and C and the AUMA and publicly that forcing people to work together does not get good relationships, but allowing them to not talk to each other does not get good relationships either. It's imperative for the success of this province going forward that these municipalities work together to make sure we have smart building so that we don't have environmental conflicts and agricultural conflicts and industrial conflicts. For the sake of my kids and the next generation it has to be done smartly.

Mr. Anderson: Agreed. Agreed. Just don't force them into it, please.

Given that many southern Alberta communities feel that blocking access to water for new residents and businesses is being used as a tool to pressure rural communities into entering the CRP against their wishes and given that every community in Alberta should have an unequivocal right to access the water they need without essentially having a gun to their head, will the minister of environment commit to providing access-to-water licences for these communities without forcing them to join the CRP?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very glad for the question. Right now we've just completed consultation with regard to the RAC's advice on the SSRP. We're in the midst of consultation on water discussions, and I invite the hon. members of the whole House. I thank my hon. members on this side of the floor for attending many of the water discussions. We've had many good conversations about that. We're hearing from everybody with regard to the need to share water, water management, waste water, healthy lakes, hydraulic fracturing, water use. It's an important discussion, and we encourage all Albertans to come out and have a good conversation before we make any policy changes.

Mr. Anderson: Remember, water is a right, Minister, not a bargaining chip.

Given that under the land-use framework landowners are theoretically going to be compensated for loss of property value if their land is devalued by the South Saskatchewan regional plan and given that the massive scope of such a plan will obviously impact the land values of thousands of southern Albertans, will the Finance minister table to this House an estimate of how much the South Saskatchewan regional plan will cost taxpayers to implement before that plan actually goes into effect?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As the hon. member knows and as Albertans know, the process for land-use planning is that, first, a regional advisory council gives advice. That regional advisory council's draft plan goes out into consultation. We've just taken that back. We're looking for feedback from Albertans with regard to that. Then, once we get that feedback, we will this fall take a draft plan out to Albertans on what we've heard from them. There will be more consultation on that. We'll get that feedback before any regional plan on the South Saskatchewan is approved. Lots of time for consultation. Lots of time for input. This government wants good consultation and input from all Albertans on this plan.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and congratulations. We know that the University of Lethbridge is highly regarded for its world-class research. However, I do know first-hand that in spite of this their facilities could use some upgrading. All of my questions are to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. Can you explain how the current level of funding to postsecondary institutions around the province will ensure that universities can still make the same remarkable strides in research and concurrently make the necessary upgrades that they require?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Madam Speaker. First of all, let me be clear. Without any doubt the budgetary constraints that have been placed on universities will require a great deal of hard work and co-operation and collaboration between all schools and the government of Alberta. We will be engaging in a dialogue and making sure that any and all cost-saving decisions that will be made will always be made with students in mind and to minimize the impact on students.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Speaking of students, we know that students are becoming increasingly more interested in the decisions that impact their academic experience. What are the plans for student involvement in decision-making going forward with universities?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Madam Speaker, I am glad that students are – and I would argue they always have been – now becoming even more interested in decisions relevant to postsecondary education. As a matter of fact, I have made it public already that I will be engaging elected student bodies, students' unions in the decision-making process both at the university and school levels and also within the ministry of advanced education. I look at students as not only beneficiaries of the programs but also cofunders of the programs, and they should have every right to be intrinsic to the decision-making process.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you. What is our plan to ensure that post-secondary students continue to receive the high level of education that Alberta is known for and our citizens deserve?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Madam Speaker, first of all, we should thank all of the 26 schools in Alberta for the quality of programming that they deliver. In many cases they're second to none in the world in comparative analysis. However, we will be looking at all the schools from the perspective of Campus Alberta. I know there is plenty of room for improvement relative to collaboration, relative to credit transfers, relative to mobility of programs from one school to another. So I think there's a lot of room for innovation, and we will not be leaving any stones unturned.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It looks like my congratulations to the minister in reaching a deal with the teachers may have been premature. Yesterday Edmonton public and Holy Spirit in Lethbridge rejected the agreement. Reading between the lines, some boards don't have a disagreement with the contract; what they have a disagreement with is this government's budget. To the minister of education. Edmonton public stated that this board will face a $5 million to $18 million shortfall, this despite a growing ELL cohort and bursting classrooms. Will the minister agree that the school boards, by rejecting the agreement, are simply throwing up their hands, saying that they cannot operate under the current funding levels?

Mr. J. Johnson: Madam Speaker, this is a great debate for the budget estimates that are coming up in an hour. We had a whole three hours to talk about this last night, so I'm sure we'll get into it in great detail.

I am excited about where we are with the ATA negotiations, however. We did get ratification from our first ATA local, Palliser, a couple of nights ago, so that was great news, and as of this morning we learned that there were three school divisions that have also ratified, or accepted, the deal. So we'll pay close attention as the rest of the ATA locals and the rest of the school boards have a close look at this.

Mr. Hehr: Given that Alberta schools are already short some 650 teachers from three years ago and they'll be losing an additional 400 from the cutting of the AISI project, can the minister explain how this can be happening in a province that in the same period had an increase of 5 per cent in student enrolment?

Mr. J. Johnson: Madam Speaker, we've had a lot of discussion about the Education budget and what we're trying to do with it. Obviously, there are some pressures there, and they're going to impact teachers. They're going to impact support staff. They're going to impact all aspects of the business. What we've been focused on is trying to make sure that it doesn't impact teachers in the classrooms. The AISI teachers, other things that we've had to trim back, other things that we've had to cut: we're looking at this with a lens of trying to put kids first, the classroom first, and protect the classroom and mitigate any impacts to the classroom. So that's where the money is staying.

Mr. Hehr: Given that I understand the minister's desire to reach an agreement with the teachers and the difficulty of the tripartite process, can the minister comment on Holy Spirit school board's rationale for rejecting the contract? In their view, they were left out of the process.

Mr. J. Johnson: Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I can't comment on that. I haven't spoken with Holy Spirit, and I'm not sure what their rationale is or what their concerns are. I'm sure we'll get those in due course.

Needless to say, as we've been working for the last two and a half years with the ASBA, not each of the 62 school boards has been at these meetings or in those negotiations. It's just logistically impossible. So the ASBA has been representing those entities over the last two and a half years, and everyone knows what's happened in the last two weeks.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This PC government's tax cuts to corporations and wealthy Albertans mean that students, teachers, and school boards are forced to pick up the tab. The minister proposed an education deal, now in jeopardy, that includes no wage increases for three years and no regard for cost of living. He thinks that teachers can take a significant wage cut and school boards now can absorb increased costs even though their budgets have also been cut. Maybe he should think again. Why does this government expect boards and teachers to accept this no-win deal?

Mr. J. Johnson: Madam Speaker, this is a win deal. It's a win deal for kids. It brings stability. There's no question there are pressures on the school boards. We've never denied that. As a matter of fact, one thing I would point out is that it's one of the very few ministries that actually had their budget increased. Obviously, there are some pressures coming along with that, but we've been able to mitigate those with a great tentative agreement with the ATA. I give the ATA a lot of credit for taking a three-year freeze, recognizing the situation that we're in, so that we can protect the classroom and do the right thing for kids.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Madam Speaker, considering this government promised teachers and local boards that they would support schools with predictable funding increases for three years and given that this minister cut school boards out of the process and ignored their warning that said very explicitly that this would not allow school boards to sustain the services that they currently offer to students, then can the minister please explain why teachers and boards are asked to pay for a deal that will not even protect class sizes and the quality of education in the province?

Mr. J. Johnson: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is overlooking the areas of the budget that were actually increased. Those are the class size initiatives, that's the inclusion piece, and those are pieces the school boards and teachers and parents on the ground asked us to invest in so that we could protect the classroom and the size of classes as best we could through this challenging time.

Madam Speaker, it's Albertans that pay for this deal. This deal is good for kids. It is good for education. The ATA has recognized that. I applaud them for the work that they're doing. The ASBA has been great to work with. But we've got to get this out to the locals and get this thing across the finish line.

The Acting Speaker: Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that school boards, parents, students, and teachers have been disappointed by broken promise heaped upon broken promise from this PC government, is it really such a big surprise that school boards are not trusting your latest offer?

Mr. J. Johnson: Madam Speaker, it's actually a very good question because there are some fuzzy areas, some grey areas within the agreement that we need to flesh out. We need to make sure that there's some certainty. We've given the ATA a comfort letter – and the ASBA may be asking for one as well – and that may be around certainty on the funding in year 4, to make sure that we're going to deliver on that. I've told them that this government is quite prepared to give them those assurances if that's what it takes to get a deal across the finish line.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mount Royal University Nurse Assessment Centre

Mr. McAllister: Madam Speaker, thank you. This back-in-debt, broken-promise budget has given us yet another reason why we can't trust the current government. Mount Royal University has been forced to cancel a program and close two centres that trained foreign nurses and expedited the process of getting these desperately needed health care workers to the front lines. The president of the university is already on record as saying that they had to do it because the government wouldn't commit to the program. To the minister of advanced education: is reducing the amount of nurses in Alberta what you had in mind when you said that you were interested in streamlining postsecondary?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Madam Speaker, your first day in the chair, so you may not have noticed a trend although I know you were listening carefully in your seat. The first three questions from the Leader of the Opposition: why did you not balance the budget, why didn't you cut any deeper, and why are you going in debt? All remaining questions from every single member of the wild alliance are: "Why did you cut this program? Keep spending more. Do more. Spend more money."

Madam Speaker, tough decisions had to be made. Government made tough decisions. Schools will be co-operating and collaborating. You can't suck and blow at the same time.

2:30

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie. A point of order called.

Hon. Member for Little Bow, did you have a point of order as well?

Mr. Donovan: No. I was just helping my colleague from Airdrie.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Madam Speaker, thank you very much. I should have known better. Maybe we'll try somebody else.

Given that the Health Professions Act requires the college of registered nurses to provide a process to assess foreign training and credentials and given that the Minister of Health has said right here in this Chamber that he doesn't know of any Health minister that isn't struggling with the issue of how to hire and train nurses, I ask the Minister of Health: why would you kibosh a legislatively required program that serves Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Well, Madam Speaker, first of all, the program is not required under legislation. The program is part of a broader initiative to assist foreign-trained nurses to achieve the required credentials to practise in Alberta. The hon. member is correct in that Mount Royal University at present is not continuing to offer this particular program, but it is solely because we were between budget years and we have yet to confirm the final details of the budget for this program going forward. We're certainly interested in Mount Royal University continuing to offer the program, and we'll work with them in that regard.

Mr. McAllister: Madam Speaker, that is potentially good news, and I do appreciate you answering the question. What a novel concept. The Deputy Premier might learn from you.

Given that this previous budget decided to cut the number of nursing positions in this province and has placed the health care workers in a bind and given that more than a quarter of Alberta's nurses are over the age of 55, to the Minister of Health again. I know you say that you'll work with the president of Mount Royal University. Would you pick up the phone and commit to working with him to commit to this program so that we can get more nurses . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Well, Madam Speaker, as we discussed yesterday in answer to a similar question, the strategy around ensuring an adequate nursing workforce for Alberta includes credentialing foreign-trained nurses. It also includes a very deliberate and focused attempt to employ as many Alberta nursing graduates as we possibly can, to employ them, wherever possible, in full-time positions. We continue to work on both fronts. That's what responsible governments do, and that's what the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education and I are working on together.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Trucking Regulations

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Recently I met with Loblaw Companies Limited, what we know as Superstore in Alberta, and they're facing some transportation challenges. To the minister of advanced education. Truckers in Alberta are class 1 P and D tradesmen in comparison to being skilled workers in Saskatchewan. This allows trucking firms to bring truckers to Saskatchewan under temporary foreign worker policy. Does Alberta plan a similar program to address a lack of qualified truckers in Alberta?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Madam Speaker, we'd like to do that if we could. Let me perhaps share with you some of the barriers. Currently we have a cap that is imposed on the province by the federal government relative to the provincial nominee program, and the limited cap that we have, we have distributed among all industries. Nurses, waitresses, line cooks, and truck drivers fall within that cap. If we were to allow more truckers, that means other professions would be suffering by that equal amount.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the Minister of Transportation: given that Loblaw's main distribution centre is in Regina, some freights moving between the two provinces witness the lack of consistency regarding weight restrictions. What is the minister doing to develop standardized regulations in order to ensure efficient movement between Alberta and Saskatchewan?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Madam Speaker, welcome.

I would like the hon. member to know that I also met with the good folks at Loblaw's and that weight limits are in place to protect the roadway and the roadbeds. We worked through the New West Partnership to agreement. We're harmonizing transportation regulations across western Canada. Frankly, the other provinces look to Alberta as a leader here, and we're pleased to work with them because they're great partners. Areas of harmonization include weight and dimension enforcement consistency and safety initiatives.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again to the Minister of Transportation. Now, Saskatchewan is the only province in the country that allows the use of triple trucks, a pilot program to increase efficiency when transporting goods. Are there any plans to adopt this practice in Alberta?

Mr. McIver: Well, Madam Speaker, I understand the need of industry to maximize their profits and to be efficient, but we have other responsibilities. We need to protect the infrastructure that Albertans have paid for over the years. Now, we heard in the House a few days ago the opposition saying that the infrastructure has no value whatsoever, but Albertans don't believe that. They believe that the infrastructure that they depend on is very important, and we're working very hard to protect it. While I know that industry wants to put heavier and heavier loads on, we're striking the balance between supporting industry and protecting that very valuable infrastructure.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Education Property Taxes

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Albertans just don't trust this government, and I think it's with good reason. This government said that it wouldn't raise taxes. Let's add that to the list of broken promises. There have been over a hundred communities facing property tax increases in 2013, and these Alberta communities are facing an increase from 1 to 89 per cent. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will you just admit you're raising taxes and downloading the cost of this back-in-debt budget to rural communities?

Mr. Griffiths: Madam Speaker, we have not changed the rate whatsoever on the education portion of property taxes. We've eliminated the mitigation formula because some municipalities paid less than what they were required to while other municipalities made up the difference. It was just patently unfair, and we wanted to make sure that there was fairness from one end of the province to the other. We know that some people's property taxes have gone up, but primarily it's been caused from one end of the province to the other because their property values have gone up, which is good news because we're increasing the value of those homes and the equity that Albertans have. That's why they continue to move here. It's our prosperity that brings them.

Mr. Donovan: Madam Speaker, given that this government has already issued one blow to the community of Carmangay by closing Little Bow continuing care centre, does this government care to explain how this village is supposed to deal with job losses and an increase of 33 per cent to their education tax rate?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Madam Speaker, given the fact that there are 349 municipalities in the province of Alberta and that I wasn't aware that this particular question about this particular community was coming up, I can't answer exactly to what the circumstances are there. But as I've said before, we've eliminated the mitigation formula to make sure every municipality pays fair taxes, and property values have gone up. People continue to move to this province because of our prosperity. That's what brings them – it's the wealth of this province – and Albertans know that it's valuable to be here.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Carmangay wasn't exactly blowing off brand new houses in the last year.

I'm wondering if this minister would give himself an A plus rating for increasing education taxes 89 per cent in the village of Nobleford, ultimately breaking their promise of not raising taxes to my constituents.

Mr. Griffiths: Madam Speaker, the community that the member refers to has had their education portion of property taxes subsidized by other municipalities and other homeowners for a long time. We eliminated the mitigation formula to make sure that regardless of the value of the home, where it was located, and its assessed value, it was fair and equitable to all Albertans. That's a principle we can be proud of.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Obstetric Services in Mineral Springs Hospital

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On March 25 obstetric services will cease at the Banff Mineral Springs hospital. The decision to end this long-standing community service was made by AHS following discussions with Covenant Health, Banff Mineral Springs hospital, and Canmore general hospital. A Banff physician who has an obstetrical practice in Banff was not invited to participate in the decision-making process, nor were concerned citizens of Banff. A lack of support for this decision is evidenced by a letter of opposition signed by 1,300. Can the Minister of Health explain what steps . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Health, please.

2:40

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I beg to differ with the hon. member. Doctors in the community were in fact invited to participate, and they provided input into the decision. There was an engagement session in 2011 for health planning in the Bow Valley. Subsequent to that, more than 80 members of the public, health professionals as well as large numbers of physicians participated in the engagement exercise. The decision to consolidate services at Canmore was based on extensive community discussion on how best to deliver services in that area.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. If it is true, as we have been told, that cost is not a factor and if it can be determined that safety is not a concern going forward, shouldn't the government support obstetrical services remaining in Banff?

Mr. Horne: Well, Madam Speaker, the hon. member is correct in that this is, in fact, about safety. It's not about cutting costs. Obstetrics is a specialty at Canmore general hospital. Last year more than five times as many babies were born in Canmore as in Banff. Consolidating services there will build on that centre's strengths while delivering babies safely into the future. It's the right choice for both mothers and infants. Moving obstetrics to Canmore gives medical staff more opportunities to maintain that high level of quality.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Has the government considered whether health costs might in fact increase if the current 90 per cent bed occupancy rates at Canmore force obstetrical patients to be transported by ambulance to Calgary hospitals?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. An excellent question. AHS advises that Canmore is capable of managing increased obstetrical capacity, with three dedicated labour and delivery spaces there in the hospital. They also have contingencies to accommodate additional patients in active labour if required. The planning for surge capacity will allow area residents to have their child in Canmore safely. There will be more room for obstetrical patients in Canmore when the plastic and vascular surgery program there moves to Banff.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

In 30 seconds I will call the next of our members' statements.

Members' Statements

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Consideration of Main Estimates

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. For the last week and a half we've listened to the opposition complain about this year's estimates schedule. In somewhat typical fashion the opposition says that the sky is falling, cries wolf, that democracy as we know it is dead, et cetera, et cetera. They act as though they're somehow victims of the estimates schedule and that the government has limited their ability to participate. The facts, of course, are different and speak for themselves.

Budget 2013 represents our commitment to being prudent and responsible in building for the future and not pursuing an extreme ideological agenda stuck in the past. Budget 2013 will continue to be our focus this session. I'm proud to tell Albertans that this spring session provides more opportunity, not less, to examine the fiscal plan to ensure that Albertans get value for their tax dollars. This year we have 10 days and 70 hours dedicated to review estimates for 18 ministries. This is significantly more than last year, when we spent nine days and 63 hours on estimates for 21 departments. Last year's estimates consideration started five days after the budget. This year there were 11 full days to prepare before the estimates commenced.

In previous years opposition also complained that all ministries, large or small, were in committee for only three hours. This year we'll spend six hours on seven of the larger ministries. Last year estimates occurred over a period of 28 days. This year estimates will be reviewed over a longer period, 49 days. [interjections]

In past years opposition has complained about time to prepare, to understand the estimates, and that their resources were stretched. [interjections] Well, Madam Speaker, we've cleared the deck so that members have only the fiscal agenda to deal with . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this is a member's statement.

Mr. Quest: . . . no other committee work, no unrelated legislation to review. Total focus and attention on the budget.

Madam Speaker, Albertans expect our government to focus on Budget 2013, to build Alberta, to live within our means, to open new markets for Alberta's resources, and we're doing just that. Albertans can be assured that democracy lives and that Albertans are well served by their government.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I would remind hon. members that we have a long-standing tradition to honour each member as they give their member's statement.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

International Day of Happiness

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to take this moment to recognize today, March 20, 2013, as the International Day of Happiness as declared by the United Nations last year. This day was founded on the principles of "the relevance of happiness and well-being as universal goals and aspirations in the lives of human beings around the world."

Living in our marvellous, awe-inspiring province, we have many things to be happy about and much that contributes to our well-being. Madam Speaker, we have some of the most majestic lakes and rivers in the world. We have striking mountains, that millions of people from around the world flock to visit. Our province is known as a land of opportunity and prosperity, and our citizens continue to build a modern and inclusive Alberta. The nurturing communities that make up our province allow Albertans from all walks of life to reach their full potential.

Madam Speaker, in Chinese two particular characters together will form a ligature which signifies double happiness, in Mandarin shuāngxǐ. I want to wish everyone in our great province double happiness. I want to wish everyone happiness and prosperity in their families, marriages, careers, and, ultimately, in their lives as Albertans. I urge Albertans to take this day to heart and to go out of their way to make a positive impact on the people around them, not only today but in the future as well. Even the smallest gesture of kindness can make a world of difference in someone's life.

Madam Speaker, I would like to end my statement by wishing all of my colleagues in this House as well as the people of Alberta a very happy day.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

2014 Alberta Winter Games

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Between February 6 and 9, 2014, the towns of Banff and Canmore will be hosting the Alberta Winter Games. This is a great example of communities working together to achieve common goals. The 2014 Alberta Winter Games are about community integration. They bring together the communities of Banff and Canmore in a celebration of and for young athletes and artists of our province. Over 2,500 volunteers will support the games and encourage each participant to Reach Your Peak in Banff and Canmore while at the same time providing a legacy of community pride and development.

Madam Speaker, 2,400 athletes from all over the province, representing eight regions, will be participating in the games. As well as enjoying the friendly competition, the athletes and their families will encounter the arts in the Bow Valley as part of their daily experience at the games through our cultural programs. Twenty-two sports will be held in both towns at several venues. While the valley is known for its beautiful mountain setting, these athletes and their families will discover some of the best sporting facilities in our province.

Madam Speaker, the 2014 Alberta Winter Games will also be good for local business. The games will have a positive economic impact on the Bow Valley leading up to and during the games, which translates to approximately $2.5 million being spent at the hotels, shops, and restaurants in our two communities. Most of the 2,400 athletes will have family members that will want to come to the Bow Valley to watch their children and spend time in the valley. This will result in an estimated 10,000 spectators to the games.

The 2014 Alberta Winter Games are a perfect opportunity to welcome the athletes and their families to one of the most beautiful places in Alberta. I would encourage everyone to mark these dates in your calendar and plan on attending.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

South Saskatchewan Regional Plan

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Wildrose Official Opposition believes in responsible environmental stewardship, local decision-making, and protecting the property rights of landowners. In contrast, this government is rolling on with forced regionalization with the South Saskatchewan regional plan. Southern residents are worried about what this plan will look like, and they still don't know exactly when they will see the draft plan or how it will differ from the advice offered by the advisory council.

Like its sibling the lower Athabasca regional plan, the plan for the south will negatively impact landowners, recreationists as well as municipal councils, who will see their decision-making powers undermined by cabinet. One key difference between the lower Athabasca plan and the South Saskatchewan plan is that the south has far more ranching and farmland. This southern-central plan will affect far more hard-working farming and ranching families than its northern cousin.

Let me assure this House that southern Albertans are waiting on pins and needles to see what the proposed damage will mean for them in the forthcoming draft. In 2011 the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties released a report on the impacts of forced regionalization which stated that this "has a history of creating as many problems as it solves." The AAMD and C report defines forced regionalization as "any form of regionalization that is not voluntary" and where "explicit or implicit threat of imposed regionalization exists." This government's regional plans are certainly not voluntary and are being imposed on municipalities and their residents. The AAMD and C document further states that municipalities have a right to be concerned when the powers granted under the Municipal Government Act are undermined.

In contrast, the AAMD and C recommends co-operative regionalization defined as voluntary participation of municipalities. Co-operative regionalization recognizes a political autonomy of municipalities and their right to remain independent. Madam Speaker, the South Saskatchewan regional plan does the exact opposite.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings from constituents today.

Some Hon. Members: Madam.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry, Madam Speaker. Boy, we need to have you up there some more so that we get more used to it.

The first two letters, one from Ali Damani and the second from Al Hodgins, are identical, and they are asking the Minister of Health to consult with pharmacy experts and consider alternative policy options that are available to achieve cost savings for the government.

The second set of letters, one from Thomas Nguyen and the other from Michael Li, are again identical letters making the point that this pharmacy plan would increase deductibles for seniors and let big business off the hook by reducing the portion they pay for patient services.

I have two more letters, from Donald Schopflocher and Alexis Lockwood, both with concerns about postsecondary cuts. The letters are identical, and they ask that the funding reduction decision be overturned and that the mandate letters not be sent.

Finally, a letter from Lyndon Hodgins, who is also a constituent, making many of the same points as the pharmacy industry and asking for our help, that there should have been more consultation with people and that it's very expensive to become a pharmacist and also would be very hard to recoup the money now.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased. This is the first time I get to get up to speak to congratulate you on your time in that chair, and I commit to you to refer to future Speakers as Madam Speaker frequently.

I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Ms Jacquie Hansen, president of the Alberta School Boards Association, to the Education minister dated March 3, 2013, in which she outlines the concerns that the ASBA had with the minister's February offer, wherein they state that the offer did not include funding to allow school boards to sustain the services that are currently offered to Alberta students.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The other thing to note today was that we had a Premier, an opposition leader, and a Speaker who were all females, which was excellent to see.

I'm tabling five copies of the list I talked about earlier in my question, the list right from Municipal Affairs, of the over 100 communities where their taxes have gone up. I just want to table the copies for that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and it is good to see you in the chair.

I've been making a lot of comments in question period with regard to some quotes that I've been using. I'll be tabling them as time goes on. The first one is from the Consulting Engineers of Alberta. They have provided us with a letter which reads, in part:

We have reviewed the budget and have concluded that borrowing money to fund needed infrastructure is a positive decision. Infrastructure is just too important and vital to our economic well-being to let it suffer.

They go on in the letter to talk about the cost of deferring infrastructure. Madam Speaker, it's a good read.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to table some information that I've also shared with the Minister of Transportation and the Health minister. One is regarding pharmacies from Matthew Bennett, a pharmacy manager and pharmacist in Cardston-Taber-Warner, expressing concern about the Alberta government's plan with regard to pharmacy being "an irresponsible path to savings."

Then from a farmer who farms west of Cardston in the Glenwood-Hill Spring area who is concerned about a road that is banned and the effect it's having on him being able to deliver his grain and also being able to proceed in an appropriate way with spring seeding. He said that his neighbours and he were promised a long time ago that this road would never be banned and that this year it was supposed to be a year-round road. He's got some concerns about that, especially in light of the extra 6 cents he's paying for fuel.

I have the requisite number of copies, and I would like to table them.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hughes, the Minister of Energy, response to Written Question 21, asked for by Mr. Hehr on March 11, 2013: "As of June 1, 2012, what was the value of unpaid oil and gas royalties that were in dispute?"

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

I believe it's time for us to go to our points of order. I understand that there were three points of order, all from the hon. Member for Airdrie. Can we deal with the first one, hon. member?

Mr. Anderson: We'll deal with the first one. We'll deal with them all separately, one at a time, because they're clear in some ways.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: The standing order reference is 23(h), (i), and (j). The first one, Madam Speaker, is obvious because the precedent was set yesterday by the Speaker who was there in the chair. The hon. Minister of Environment and SRD called this party over here and members of this party climate change deniers. This is, of course, categorically false. As we discussed yesterday very clearly, this party, this leader accept that man-made climate change is very real and something that needs to be addressed, and we join with the government and other opposition parties in stating very clearly and unequivocally that we need to address it very quickly. Obviously, we all look forward to all the different research and so forth that's being done on how best to address it and how best to analyze it and how fast it's happening and so forth, but we are with the government on that issue.

It really creates disruption in this House, as the Speaker, I thought, clearly made mention of the last time we were here, when something is said to the contrary of that. He specifically said that this matter was settled last time and that the members opposite were not, in my view, to use that sort of language. I know there are a lot of members here today that perhaps did not hear that – let's put it that way – yesterday, but now they have. I would ask that in the future they do not reference us in that way because it casts aspersions and it casts motives that aren't there. That is not in line with our standing orders, and it has been ruled on by the Speaker previously.

3:00

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The member opposite is a little sensitive today, rising on three points of order.

I think that, you know, the truth is an absolute defence. I appreciate the comments from the member, but on April 16, 2012, in a CBC news article the Leader of the Opposition said, "We have always said the science isn't settled." It's nice for the member to get up and say that we all believe in climate change now, but the fact of the matter is that there have been comments to the contrary.

As far as looking at Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), I don't see that any of the requirements have been reached in any of those subtitles under section 23. Again, I think they're a little sensitive on the other side. I don't see any point of order to be called at this point.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie was correct when he said that we had dealt with a similar point of order just recently – I think with the same member yesterday – and that can be found in Hansard, pages 1661-62, from March 19, 2013. The member clarified his party's position yesterday, as he has just done here today, and it would be parliamentary for members and ministers to take into account statements and explanations made in this Assembly. This may be a situation where there are two different interpretations of an event. I would refer members to paragraph 494 of Beauchesne, sixth edition.

I find that there is no point of order. Thank you.

The second point of order. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Point of Order

Inflammatory Language

Mr. Anderson: All right. The second point of order is under the same citation, Madam Speaker. If it happens again in this House, I think that we will need to bring a motion for a contempt of parliament. It continues to happen. The Speaker has repeatedly – repeatedly – over and over and over again, asked for that side to quit doing it, and they keep doing it. That is a contempt of parliament. That is, of course, in this case the Deputy Premier's mispronouncing our name, calling us, I believe – what was it this time? – the wild-eyed alliance or the wild alliance. It differs. We are the Wildrose caucus. This government should know that because in three years we'll likely be the government. What this government should do is start learning to pronounce that name properly.

Now, I will say, though, that if we were to do this, if we were to call the other side – whatever – the regressive Conservatives or something like that, we would be held out of order and rightly so. That is not the name of their caucus.

The Speaker has repeatedly, over and over and over again – I think this is probably the fifth time – told them to refrain from doing that, and they are, frankly, flouting what the Speaker's rulings have been. They're just completely ignoring them and pretending that the Speaker's rulings don't exist.

Madam Speaker, I think that clearly there is a point of order here. It's very cut and dried because of past rulings. I do think that it's bordering on contempt of parliament, and it's time to get that straightened out and have respect and decorum in this House.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak? The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Madam Speaker, again, a little sensitivity over there, but I appreciate that. We will withdraw the remarks from the Deputy Premier.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: All right. Third and final. Again, the same citation, particularly:

23(h) makes allegations against another Member;

(i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member.

I'm referring to the Minister of Transportation. At no time ever in this House has any party, certainly not this party, this leader, or any member over here, said that infrastructure has no value. Find the quote. Where's the quote where we said that infrastructure has no value? It's a ridiculous assertion. Again, you're putting words that we've never said in the mouth of our party. They're just randomly putting things out there.

Again, if we're going to have debate, we can absolutely, you know, have different opinions about what different words mean and so forth. But when you say that a leader was in this House stating that infrastructure has no value, that's laughable. I mean, we all know that that's not the case.

Madam Speaker, I just hope that when we're quoting each other, we can actually quote the record. We can have questions and interpretations about what is quoted, but to completely misquote – not misquote; just make up a quote – at some point you've got to say that that's not right, and it should not be proper practice in this Legislative Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to just comment on the hon. member from the Wildrose Alliance Party. [interjections] That's the way it is on the electoral website. You guys should check it out.

The comments I think are reflective of the discussion that we've had in this House over and over and over again about the fact that the members opposite don't think that we should be putting that valuation of those assets on our balance sheet to net assets. That would indicate that they don't believe there's any value in those assets. I don't think that that is saying that they said that Albertans don't value them intrinsically, just that they just don't put a value on them. A little bit of a different thing. I recognize that the hon. member is a bit sensitive today. Late night last night. I know. I was there with you.

I don't see a point of order because we're not imputing any motives, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I think it was clarified why that statement was made. It was a different interpretation, however, a point of clarification. I think that we ought to close this matter. Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would suggest that we adjourn for the purpose of estimates.

The Acting Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and this evening for consideration of the main estimates. Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Education in committee room A in the afternoon, and Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Transportation in committee room A in the evening.

The House stands adjourned.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:07 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 21, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. As we conclude this week's work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue the work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests sitting in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon. My first guest really needs no introduction to anybody in this building, and that is Mr. Peter Elzinga. Peter spent many years as the MLA for Sherwood Park and served under numerous portfolios as a provincial cabinet minister and as Deputy Premier. He later served as chief of staff to the hon. Premier Ralph Klein. Prior to his long, distinguished career here at the Alberta Legislature Peter served for 12 years as the Member of Parliament for Pembina.

In addition to his many political, business, and community achievements, Peter willingly and without hesitation chose to help his friend and brother Tom Shields by donating a healthy kidney to him in 2004. Tom enjoyed life to its fullest despite various health concerns, and he was daily grateful to his friend Peter Elzinga for the gift of a kidney, that extended his life for several years. Peter is here today to support my private member's bill, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, which is up for introduction later today, Mr. Speaker. I ask that Peter please stand – I think he's standing; I can't see him – and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Speaker, accompanying Mr. Elzinga is Ms Karen Korchinski. Karen is a friend of mine and a friend of many and is faced with the possibility of someday needing a liver transplant. It is through her experience that I learned about the challenges facing our organ donor system. I thank her for enlightening me and inspiring me to do what I can to improve Alberta's organ donation system. She is here today to support Bill 207, and I ask her to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 24 students and four adults accompanying them from the Guthrie school in Lancaster Park. These students attend the school at Edmonton Garrison, and most have parents who serve in Canada's military. I've had the pleasure of visiting the school on many occasions, most recently in February with their Reading Rampage. I read to grade 2 and grade 6, and this grade 6 class is here today. It was a lot of fun. I hope to see them again soon. They are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Colleen Tremblay and Ms

Carol Moores and by parent helpers Cheryl Hamel and Melissa Colson. They tell me they love the Premier, and when I asked them, "Why do you like the Premier so much?" they said: "What's not to like? She's the Premier." I agree. They also said that they love it when we pound on the desks, so let's give them a warm welcome to the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to rise to introduce 46 bright students, the future of our province. They are accompanied by their teacher, Keri Clifford, by assistant Catherine Manigo, and by parents Rachel Ross and Bradley Dundas. Before we started the session today, I had a brief conversation with them. They asked big questions. They asked about the budget, you know, about the Education budget, and also about negotiations with the doctors. Now I ask them to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you some special people in this province that actually define this province. The work that they do through medical innovation and trying to increase the quality of care for Albertans through medically based evidence is what makes Alberta and what makes Alberta proud, and I'm certainly proud of the work they do.

First, I'd like to introduce Ian McEwan. He is a friend and a paramedic that's been on calls with me in the city of Calgary. He's also an accomplished flight paramedic with Alberta Health Services, and now he is again leading in his profession through some of this work that he's doing.

Second, I'd like to introduce Nancy Clayden, who is a researcher and paramedic, and Greg Hallihan, also a research associate. They are from the Ward of the 21st Century at the University of Calgary, and again they are leading the way with medical innovation to improve the quality of care that we give our patients. You can read more about this research. They made the front page of the Edmonton Journal. Thank you for joining me in this House today, and if the House could give them a warm welcome, I'd appreciate it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this House the Girl Guides of Canada Alberta Council, here to participate in the 42nd session of the Alberta Girls' Parliament right here in Edmonton. This unique program is modelled on the Alberta Legislature, with decorum, of course, and the delegates come from all over Alberta, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia. There are eight staff members here accompanying the girls: Shannen Hoffman, Laurie Robertson, Veronica Hoffman, Shannon Robertson, Heather Robertson, Claire Dubreuil, Emilie Brien, and Anja Clyke. I'm looking forward to having dinner with these girls and learning much from them. I'd ask you to please stand and receive our welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very amazing women. Glori Meldrum and Randi Tyler represent the Little Warriors, a charity organization committed to awareness, prevention, and treatment of child sexual abuse. The work that Little Warriors carries out is something every Albertan supports. Today the Wildrose Caucus Foundation showed its support for Glori and Randi's work by donating the 8 per cent MLA pay raise to Little Warriors. I personally offer my thanks and gratitude for their dedication to help find healing for the most vulnerable members of our society, child victims of sexual abuse. I ask Glori and Randi to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a good friend and constituent from Edmonton-Whitemud, Barb Esdale. Barb is the co-chair of Alberta Donates Life Coalition. Alberta Donates Life Coalition is a group of several health organizations and individual advocates from around the province who have come together to encourage the government of Alberta to co-ordinate organ donation, create an organ donor public awareness campaign, and create an intent-to-donate registry for the citizens of Alberta. Barb's husband, David, who leads the music mission at Riverbend United church, was fortunate to receive the gift of a double-lung transplant from a generous donor family. Barb is here today in support of and to observe the introduction of private member's Bill 207 later this afternoon. Barb is seated in the members' gallery. I might also add, though, that she served the public of Alberta for many years in the Department of Education in, I think, the curriculum branch if I'm not incorrect. If Barb would rise and get the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What an honour it is for me to rise today and introduce a great Albertan and a friend, Mr. Charles Rees, who is seated in the gallery. In addition to a varied business career in the Edmonton region, Mr. Rees is a really important figure in the arts and culture scene in Edmonton. He's personally purchased and renovated two homes that are designated as provincial historic sites, he's an associate member of Alberta Music, he's a strong supporter of Festival Place, he's produced and promoted music concerts in Alberta, he's supported Broadway Across Canada for seven years, and he's a big supporter of the visual arts. He's also a member of the Canadian Diabetes golf committee and yearly organizes a successful tournament. In what little spare time he has left, he also takes an interest in organ transplant awareness and is here today to witness the first reading of Bill 207. I submit that Mr. Rees is working hard to enrich our community and to make Alberta a better place. Please give him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture for two introductions.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you Tammy Fifield. Tammy is a kidney transplant recipient and is here to represent the Kidney Foundation of Canada, northern Alberta chapter. I'd ask Tammy to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

I did have another guest to introduce, Rachelle Sandy, representing the Canadian Liver Foundation, the Edmonton chapter, but she was unable to make the trip due to the beautiful Alberta spring weather we're having today. Both of these groups are part of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition and support private member's Bill 207, which will be introduced later this afternoon by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two transplant surgeons who are here to support the introduction of private member's Bill 207, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. Our guests are Dr. Atul Humar, director of the Alberta transplant institute, member of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition, and Dr. Lori West, pediatric transplant cardiologist at the Stollery children's hospital, professor of pediatrics and director of research at the Alberta transplant institute, and also a member of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition. I ask that both physicians rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and appreciation of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two guests sitting in the members' gallery this afternoon. The first is Mr. Al Arntson, a 35-year resident of Leduc, Alberta, and a double-lung transplant recipient. This past summer in Calgary Mr. Arntson competed in the Canadian transplant summer games in cycling and is now a motivational speaker speaking on the importance of organ donation awareness. He drove in today from Leduc to support Bill 207.

Also, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Dave Smith, from Edmonton. Dave is the past president of the Canadian Transplant Association and is the current executive director of the Alberta transplant association. He is a living kidney transplant recipient of 16 years. He also competed in the Canadian Transplant Games and is also here today to support Bill 207. I ask these gentlemen to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly Sharon Marcus, the co-chair of Alberta Donates Life Coalition and mother of a kidney transplant recipient.

I also have Silvio Dobri. Silvio is a heart transplant recipient and one of the founders of the GoodHearts mentoring foundation. You can read more about them at goodhearts.ca. This organization is a support for all organ recipients. As mentioned by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, Alberta Donates Life Coalition is a group of several health organizations and individual advocates from around the province who have come together to encourage the government of Alberta to co-ordinate organ donation, create an organ donor public awareness campaign, and create an intent-to-donate registry for citizens of Alberta.

The Alberta Donates Life Coalition supports the MLA for Calgary-Foothills' private member's Bill 207. I personally would like to encourage all Albertans to sit down with their family members and have that conversation about giving the gift of life. Sharon and Silvio are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they rise and that we give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Tony White, a liver transplant recipient since the spring of 2009. Tony is a passionate organ donor advocate and is a member of the Alberta Donates Life Coalition. He is here in support of Bill 207, which will be introduced by my friend the Member for Calgary-Foothills. I'd ask that Tony, seated in the members' gallery today, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

It's also a real honour today to introduce a woman who's had a big impact on me. I recently made a member's statement this past session on Little Warriors, and I'd just like to take the opportunity to introduce Mrs. Glori Meldrum and her friend Randi here today.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my constituent Dwight Kroening, who's been living in Strathcona county for the last 17 years. Dwight will be 27 years post heart transplant this August and has been the subject of numerous research projects at the University of Alberta hospital. As a result of that research along with his many athletic endeavours he's become well known not just within the transplant community but also amongst the media and the general public. Dwight is a member of the Canadian Transplant Association and GoodHearts. In 2008 Dwight became the first and only heart transplant to date to complete an Ironman triathlon, and on April 15 of this year he will be the first heart transplant to run the Boston Marathon, all in an effort to raise organ donor awareness. Dwight is seated in the members' gallery with other supporters of Bill 207, which is being introduced today by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, and I ask that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two front-line pharmacists from my constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka. Max Beirsto is a pharmacist at the Blackfalds IDA. Jennifer Fookes is a pharmacist and owner of the Blackfalds IDA. Max and Jennifer are strong advocates of their community and anticipate finally being consulted on the pharmacy issues here in Alberta. I ask Max and Jennifer to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to this Assembly a friend of mine and an important figure in the Edmonton media landscape. Arnim Joop is the founder and editor of two major news publications, the Albertaner and the Mill Woods Mosaic. Through these two newspapers Arnim has been instrumental in giving voice to multicultural communities in Edmonton and has been a strong champion of multiculturalism and social justice. His work as a journalist has garnered him numerous awards, including the Canadian ethnic journalists' and writers' award, the Alberta centennial medal, and the Queen's golden jubilee medal. I would now ask Arnim to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

I have a second one, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you a constituent of mine,

Kathryn Westlund. For over four years Kathryn has been facing numerous obstacles with her workers' compensation claim and the subsequent appeals process. Kathryn is frustrated by the current legislation that, in her view, allows the WCB to question physicians' reports and discourages physicians from engaging with the WCB on behalf of the patient. Kathryn is facing foreclosure on her home due to lengthy delays and practices of the Workers' Compensation Board. I would like Kathryn to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this day, when people world-wide acknowledge that March 21 is the UN-designated International Day for the Elimination of Racism, it is my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you my guest, who is himself international. Reed Bennett is visiting us from the United States, where he is a political science student at Clemson University in Clemson, South Carolina. He is part of Killam, an undergraduate exchange program between Canada and the U.S. He is exchanging with a student from the University of Alberta. I would now like to ask Reed to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Mr. Jean Johnson, newly appointed executive director of the city of Edmonton French Quarter revitalization zone, located in the constituencies of Edmonton-Gold Bar and Edmonton-Strathcona. Please, Mr. Johnson, stand and receive the welcome of the House.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Little Warriors Program Funding

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the government's priorities are all wrong. They're racking up $17 billion in debt, they're running a cash deficit as well, yet they refuse to make meaningful cuts to the number of managers or to trim bloated expenses. They focus their cutting on the front lines and on our most vulnerable citizens. They don't seem to have any trouble making life easier for criminals but are reluctant to help victims. The work done by Little Warriors helping child victims of sexual abuse is critical. Doesn't the Premier agree?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's fundamental to the work that we have to do as a community and government. Ensuring that we're supporting victims of child sexual assault has been a commitment that we've certainly kept in this government. We have partnerships with community agencies like the Zebra foundation here in Edmonton, the Child Advocacy Centre in Calgary, working with many of the sexual assault centres across this province. In fact, we have funded in the last year $18 million with respect to these programs. We think these are important programs. We want to make sure that we get good results for people that have been victims, and we're always prepared to do that work.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: We appreciate that work, Mr. Speaker, but there is money available to help the Little Warriors establish its Be Brave Ranch. They're only seeking $650,000. The money is available in the victims of crime fund, which, we understand, has $50 million worth of net assets. What better use could there be for the money in that fund than helping to heal and nurture victims of child sexual abuse?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more that the victims of crime fund money should be used to help victims of crime. There's no worse situation than a child who's been sexually exploited.

In this particular case, I met with Little Warriors on October 18, 2012, to talk about the Be Brave Ranch program and asked specifically for a business case and for a treatment plan so that we could know that any investment in that project would yield results. I'm awaiting that information, and when that comes, I'm more than happy to deal with that particular issue. It's more than $650,000 as a capital grant. It's operating money as well. That's Albertans' money, that they want to be used well, and we . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. leader.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're not asking for new spending, just spending on the right kinds of things.

Why is the money just sitting there in that fund? Why not make a commitment today to support a charitable group, Little Warriors, that helps the victims of child sexual abuse? Just make the commitment today.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would think that this hon. member more than anyone, given what they've espoused over the years about the effective use of public funds, would know that you have to have a process for any project. There's no shortage of really wonderful projects that are brought in the door. Our job is to make very difficult decisions. We ask for data, we ask for information to make sure that the investment is going to achieve a result for Albertans. That's what we've asked for. That's what we're waiting for. When that comes, we'll be more than happy to take a look at that particular project to say: is this the best use of funds to achieve the outcomes for Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Hon. leader, your second set of questions.

Ms Smith: I'm glad the representative of Little Warriors is here to hear that answer, and we'll be following up.

Compensation for Pharmacy Services

Ms Smith: We've been warning the government about the problems they're causing with pharmacies. It's another example of cutting spending in the wrong place, and it's another blow to front-line services. Repeated cuts to compensation levels for pharmacies is putting the entire industry at risk. The level of concern is evidenced by the protest that we witnessed earlier today in the Legislature. Doesn't the Premier realize that putting pharmacies out of business is not the way to save money in health care in Alberta?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, if that was actually going to happen, then we wouldn't have made the decisions that we did. We believe pharmacies are fundamental to primary health care in this province. In fact, that's one of the reasons that in the past two years we've actually changed the fee structure for pharmacists, who have asked us for a wider scope of practice, that is paid for by Alberta taxpayers, in order to support people in communities. In fact, I was just in Vermilion last week working with a pharmacist who was saying that he is very pleased with the decisions that have been made. Of course, as we transition through this, we've made some commitments that we're prepared to keep to support rural . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister made a mistake. The surprise changes that were announced in the budget without consultation will have a drastic effect on compensation for pharmacies. Inventory costs can't be recovered, revenue streams are being restricted, and additional services are not being priced fairly. The Health minister doesn't get that. Will the Premier step in to clean up the Health minister's most recent mess?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, no one should ever suggest that our Minister of Health doesn't understand exactly what needs to be done. In fact, I am truly proud of the work that our Minister of Health has done in the last two weeks and well before that in working with pharmacists to ensure that this transition goes smoothly. In fact, pharmacists have said that they're pleased with these changes. There is always work to be done. We will always make commitments to improve the system. Our Minister of Health has said that, and I have a lot of confidence in him.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I don't think 300 pharmacists are rallying because they support the government's changes.

The entire Health portfolio is a mess. Doctors, nurses, and now pharmacists are threatened, seniors and long-term care are ignored, but managers, VPs, and executives of AHS are looked after handsomely. Their expenses are obscene. The executive is well taken care of. When is this Premier going to start taking care of the front lines?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member actually paid attention to the communications that we have with Alberta Health Services, she would know that one of the things we have said very clearly to Alberta Health Services is that while they are getting a 3.5 per cent increase and while we're holding the line at zero spending, which is 4.5 per cent less than this opposition would have done, they are not to impact front-line workers. They will not impact front-line workers because at the end of the day that's fundamental to the access to health care that Albertans need.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Labour Negotiations with Teachers

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents and teachers breathed a sigh of relief last week when it was discussed that the ATA and the province had reached a labour deal. True to form, the government nearly threw out its shoulder patting itself on the back. Well, that was then and this is now, as the Premier likes to say. The deal appears to be falling apart. School boards are saying that the government is not putting boards first. To the Premier: did you really expect a ringing endorsement from boards when you didn't involve them in the process?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, it was really wonderful last week on Friday to be able to make the announcement standing next to the president of the ATA and to actually have the Education critic for the opposition at the meeting saying very constructive things with respect to the deal. I don't think it was just us patting ourselves on the back. It was many people. The reason is that this is a good deal for kids. We have school boards, 15 across this province, that have already said that they like this deal. It allows us to hold spending in line, to respect teachers, and to take care of families and kids. That's what we promised Albertans.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, given that we should all be putting our kids first in line here and given that the boards who are elected to represent these kids are concerned and are telling us that this deal does not put children first, again to the Premier: are you listening to the concerns of the boards, or will you impose your government-knows-best imposition on them, too?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we're absolutely listening to the boards. That's why our field people are out talking to the boards, and that's why I'm very happy to report that I think by the end of the day we're going to have in the neighbourhood of 20 boards supporting this deal and only one or two against it. This deal is good for kids. The last five years in this province have been fantastic in the classroom because we've had labour peace. We're going to have labour peace for the next four or five years again.

Mr. McAllister: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given that you can't swoop in with $107 million this time and given that you used local autonomy as a crutch to do nothing about that silly no-zero policy, why is it that this time you seem to have no problem disregarding the autonomy of locally elected officials?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what we're actually seeing from locally elected officials is a lot of consideration about a deal that makes sense for kids and families. That's one of the reasons that we have school boards across this province, including the Edmonton Catholic board, the Calgary Catholic board, Medicine Hat, and I believe Grasslands, saying that this is a good deal for parents, for kids, for teachers, and for their taxpayers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another day, another major bungle from this government through its intellectually and morally bankrupt budget. It's great that the government has got labour peace with the teachers – that's a good thing – but it seems that this government forgot that any teachers' deal would need to be approved by all school boards in the province. Two of the biggest, Edmonton and Calgary, are saying that it's a deal they can't afford through the government's severe underfunding of the K to 12 system. To the Premier: since you knew you would be offering this deal to the teachers, why did you not properly fund the school boards so they could pay for it?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, you know, the wonderful thing about bringing people together in common cause is that it gives you the opportunity to exchange ideas. One of the things that's been tremendously important in this negotiation and in this deal is that we've been able to ensure that we can keep our commitment to Albertans to keep spending at zero but at the same time support the teachers, who are so valuable in our classrooms. In fact, there were increases to the Education budget this year. We made commitments with respect to classroom size, and we made commitments with respect to inclusion that actually increased spending with respect to those. That's what matters to Alberta families.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this Premier is great at cutting deals, but I'll tell you that 25 per cent of our kids aren't finishing school.

Given that our schools are already short 650 teachers compared to three years ago despite the fact that enrolments are up 5 per cent over the same period and are projected to increase every year for the next 10 years and that the cancellation of the AISI program means the loss of 400 more teachers, to the Premier: if you end up imposing this deal, how many more teachers do you estimate school boards will need to lay off so they can meet payroll?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, one of the great things this deal does is that it keeps teachers in the classroom. One of the things we've focused on with the budget is strategically looking at every area of the Ministry of Education that we could trim, that we could cut, that does not affect the classroom, where we could put the resources in the classroom. AISI was one of those programs. It's a great program.

I don't know how you can argue that you can't afford a deal with three zeros. The only concern I have if you say that you can't afford a deal with three zeros is that you want to have discussions about rollbacks. We don't want discussions about rollbacks. We want teachers focused on teaching our kids and doing the things that they do best.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I can't believe that the Premier and the minister honestly believe that laying off more teachers is good for our kids.

Given that today there are two rallies in Edmonton alone to protest the devastating effects this bankrupt budget will have on K to 12 and postsecondary education, which means we now have students, parents, school boards, university faculty and staff giving your budget an F when it comes to education, to the Premier: what plan do you have to deal with the chaos your budget is creating at every level of education from K to PhD? Your budget is a failure, Premier. What are you going to do about it?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago we very clearly set out a budget that ensured we could provide services to Alberta families and build communities. We made a commitment to invest in infrastructure. We made a commitment to save. We just had the AAMD and C, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, here talking about building communities, and what we heard from them is that they understood we had some tough choices to make but that we made the right choices. We're increasing funding to education, to health care. We're investing in communities, we're investing in savings, and we're doing it in a way that meets the priorities of Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Government Communications

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has taken the politicization of government communications to a new low. One political scientist warns that it really causes Albertans to question the value of everything the government is telling us. Adding a partisan spin to government communications is something we've grown used to seeing from the Harper Conservatives, who are well known for their disdain for openness and democracy. My question is to the Premier. Why does she feel that it's okay to use the resources of the government to distribute PC propaganda?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that this member, the leader of the fourth party, has to read a newspaper that quotes a political scientist to tell him what Albertans really think. Well, I can tell him that Albertans want to hear what the facts are, and the reason why the Harper Conservatives and this government have to send clear information to Albertans is because Mr. Mulcair and this leader of the NDP Party won't do that. [interjections]

Mr. Mason: Oh, goody for him.

Well, I happen to have a government information bulletin about 511, which is travel information, road information, and it contains this statement: "Our government was elected to keep building Alberta, to live within its means and to fight to open new markets." [interjections] Well might they thump, but why don't they tell the real reason this government was elected? They scared people to death about the Wildrose. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, did you rise on a point of order?

Mr. Anderson: I want her to answer the question, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. So no point of order.

The hon. Deputy Premier, please.

Mr. Lukaszuk: May I answer this question by way of posing a question? Is it possible for me to give this member my 30 seconds so he can continue reading that press release? It is refreshing to hear him speak the truth.

Mr. Mason: And, indeed, out of the mouths of babes: the Deputy Premier has put his finger on it. The government has transformed the Public Affairs Bureau into the Ministry of Truth.

Given that partisan politicking is not the responsible change that Alberta voted for and given the Premier has always claimed she wants government to be more open and transparent, can the Premier explain whether openness and transparency, in her mind, is forcing public servants to regurgitate meaningless PC propaganda?

Mr. Lukaszuk: It is unfortunate that reading Orwell hasn't changed that member's mind and that he hasn't changed his political views. Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that the government of Alberta issues information that is factual to Albertans. Unfortunately, when we have an Official Opposition that resorts to printing coupons and posters and we have leaders of the provincial opposition and federal opposition that insist on misspeaking on matters of truth, the only party that can possibly do it is the government of Alberta. We will continue telling Albertans the truth.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

Senior Public-sector Compensation

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, this government continues to show how out of touch they are with the priorities of Albertans. I've received a number of phone calls indicating that AHS is in the midst of pushing through executive bonuses now to beat the freeze that will come into effect April 1. When the government is asking physicians to take a $275 million pay cut, this is troubling, to say the least. Can the Minister of Health confirm or deny that pay-at-risk bonuses will be processed before the end of the fiscal year, and will he take the necessary steps to ensure this does not happen?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what information the hon. member has or thinks she has, once again. But what I can tell her is that the chair of the AHS board has been very clear about the intentions of that board with respect to both management salaries, including pay at risk, and expenses. The chair has outlined a clear plan to reduce both within the next budget cycle. I find no inconsistency between that position and the position of that chair and that board right now.

2:10

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Speaker. Minister, prove I'm wrong. Pick up the phone and call him.

Given that U of C officials have committed to a wage freeze but not until July 1, meaning plenty of time for raises and bonuses before then, will the advanced education minister commit there will be no special bonuses for university executives, boards, and commissions either today, tomorrow, or any point this fiscal year or the next fiscal year?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it is still acceptable that the Leader of the Official Opposition makes these very simple mistakes because she's still a rookie, but for this member there's no excuse. She knows that all 26 schools within Campus Alberta are governed by boards of governors who manage the salaries, not this government. However, some schools should be commended. For example, the University of Calgary has recently put out a directive on freezing wages for their management and executive staff, and I hope that other schools are watching it carefully and will follow the trend.

Mrs. Forsyth: With the freeze on senior government bureaucrats being lifted in June of 2012, will the Minister of Finance please tell Albertans whether all deputy ministers, chiefs of staff, senior officials, opted-out and excluded staff will receive any pay hikes or bonus packages in the next 10 days or the next fiscal year?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think we were pretty clear back in the third-quarter update when we said that all management and opted-out salary grids will be frozen for the next three years. There will be no bonuses. The opposition knows this. This is not news. I don't know what else I would answer.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Transportation Strategic Services Budget

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night the opposition proposed cutting the department that provides Alberta's important transportation infrastructure. One of these proposals was to cut strategic services by $1.7 million. To the Minister of Transportation: will this cut-and-slash approach of the opposition influence the government's commitments to keep transportation infrastructure safe for Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Strategic services provides information technology and database services. I was shocked, frankly, that the opposition would propose to impair our ability to monitor and repair bridges and roads, threatening the safety of Albertans while they travel around Alberta. This clearly shows the Wildrose opposition's lack of regard for the safety of Albertans, and frankly the member in the party that made the amendment should be embarrassed for the lack of concern for Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member. [interjections] The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Hon. members, please. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has the floor.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the opposition's proposal would also have cut funding to traffic safety services by $1.4 million, can the minister please inform the House if the safety of motorists on our highways will become a lower priority?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate that the opposition is so ill informed about the important work that we do on behalf of Albertans and they continue to hack and slash. Traffic safety services makes sure the vehicles on the roads are safe. They ensure compliance of dangerous goods and make sure that we look after drivers' licences and other important functions. What's clear to me and ought to be to all Albertans is that the opposition is prepared to sacrifice the safety of Albertans with an ideologically driven agenda rather than deal with what's important. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjections]

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you rose on a point of order at 2:15. Thank you.

Hon. members, please. I know it's Thursday, and we're all anxious to get home in the snow and the springtime weather. But, please, could we allow those asking the questions to be heard and, even more importantly, that we might hear the answers? Please.

I'll recognize the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for your final supplemental.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Transportation: given that the opposition also wanted to cut the Alberta Transportation Safety Board by $121,000 and given that the Wildrose Party has been asking for due process for those caught violating the .05 legislation, is he still committed to that process?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose has actually complained and been soft on our impaired driving legislation. They ask for due process, and then they try to cut the very budget that provides the due process that they claim is important. Alberta's Transportation Safety Board not only does this, but they also provide that important channel of appeals for seniors and other medically at-risk Albertans that are in danger of losing their licence. They say they care, and then they go to cut off the appeal process. What else is the opposition not telling Albertans about what they do? They're on both sides of . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Notley: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order, Edmonton-Strathcona, at 2:16.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Compensation for Pharmacy Services

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's meddling in the generic drugs market has threatened the viability of pharmacies across Alberta. Unlike sectors that are simply facing a freeze, front-line local pharmacies are suffering drastic cuts. Last July this government hit rural pharmacies with harsh cuts, but this government's fiscal mismanagement just keeps on going. Now front lines are being targeted again. To the Minister of Health: when will this government stop meddling in the industry, forcing local pharmacies out of business and leaving rural Alberta without care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this government has followed a path that we've seen across Canada in the last few years whereby generic drug prices have been reduced. While this benefits very much the prices we pay as government for government-sponsored programs, it also benefits employers who provide jobs to Albertans along with benefit packages that they value very much. It also benefits Albertans who pay out of pocket. We are the only jurisdiction in the country to provide over $90 million in transition funding to support pharmacists in the pursuit of the new model they designed to pay for their . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it is estimated that the net loss is $100,000 per pharmacist and $400,000 per pharmacy, instead of pronouncing sentence on rural pharmacies, doesn't the minister think this issue should have been dealt with head-on and in consultation with the front-line pharmacists?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the new pharmacy services framework and the transition funds that we have been providing have been the result of discussions with Alberta pharmacists over the last three years. The hon. member makes a dangerous generalization in the figures that he quoted. The impact of generic price reduction varies widely among pharmacists depending upon the size of the store they practise in and their affiliation and their involvement in other retail activities. What is important here is that we are supporting Alberta pharmacists in the transition to a new professional services model that recognizes them to provide the services they are trained to provide to Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is dangerous is losing our rural pharmacies.

Given that this government has failed to address the outdated reimbursement model, will this government at least commit to meet with me and front-line pharmacists in Lacombe-Ponoka to work on a funding model that lets pharmacies operate as viable businesses and ensures my constituents and all Albertans still have access to the care they need?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the hon. member is aware that we have a $15.6 million transition fund directly designed to support rural and independent pharmacies across the province.

In addition to that, we have an implementation advisory committee, which is meeting this week, consulting with pharmacists about transitional issues as the generic drug prices continue to lower in Alberta and across the country. Mr. Speaker, Alberta pharmacists are directly involved in analyzing the impact of this decision and in developing the solutions to address it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

CCSVI Treatment

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of my constituents in St. Albert, as is all too common in our province, suffer from multiple sclerosis. This terrible condition robs people of their mobility in the prime of their life. Many in the MS community perceive an innovation developed by Dr. Zamboni as ground-breaking treatment. My question is to the Minister of Health. Under the Alberta multiple sclerosis initiative has the province observed any efficacy of Dr. Zamboni's treatment for chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency, also known as CCSVI?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. Multiple sclerosis is an important issue, particularly in western Canada in the more northern climates. As he has said, we have an observational study in progress now, known as TAMS, that began in 2011. It is designed to gather information and to improve understanding of the treatment for CCSVI. There are still many unanswered questions regarding the potential linkages between CCSVI and MS. There have been some preliminary results released. At this point they primarily describe the socio-demographic characteristics of the participants.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that other provinces have partnered in large international studies as part of their fight against multiple sclerosis, has Alberta entered into any partnerships involving population-wide studies of this condition, including Dr. Zamboni's CCSVI treatment?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the multiple sclerosis clinic at the Foothills hospital in Calgary is involved with the Canadian multiple sclerosis monitoring system, which is a national registry for patients with MS. Our role in Alberta has been, as I said, to design and implement the TAMS study, an observational study. We have made our data available to other clinical researchers around Canada and around the world. I think we're making a very significant contribution to the investigation of the effectiveness of CCSVI.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, your final supplemental.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to learn of this initiative that the province is involved with, but given that this province is funding a monitoring study of the efficacy of CCSVI, will the province consider funding standardized treatment to a limited group of Albertans to ensure a universal standard of care and to increase the quality of the data gathered?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as I think the hon. member knows, there are a number of clinical trials that are being sponsored in Canada and internationally on this procedure. What I can commit to the hon. member is that we'll continue to monitor the results of our own observational study and continue to look at the evidence from research studies around the world. Based on that evidence, we would make a decision about the potential for sponsoring future clinical trials.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Urogynecology Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Jane Schulz is an Edmonton surgeon and medical teacher at the University of Alberta. She has expressed growing outrage with delays in women's urinary and gynecologic surgery for five years. Her patients have their womb or bladder or rectum hanging from their vagina, they lose urinary or bowel control, and they're in constant pain. They wait two to three years to see Dr. Schulz and six to 12 months for surgery. Three women this year died of preventable infectious urinary disease due to delays in treatment. To the minister: what have you done to solve this problem over the past year?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. He and I have discussed the issue in the past. I've also met Dr. Schulz and one of her colleagues myself. These wait times are too long. I think it's the result of a number of issues, including the difficulty in recruiting physicians in this very specialized area. Part of the good news is that two additional urogynecologists have been recruited in Calgary, and that will bring the number there to five. AHS is continuing to try to recruit a similar specialist in Edmonton. It is very much needed.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given what Dr. Schulz calls, quote, a toxic climate for doctors in Alberta, end quote, and assuming you find more resources from somewhere, how will you attract specialists to Edmonton and Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is where the hon. member and I part ways. It is completely inaccurate and inappropriate to suggest that the climate in this province is anything but conducive to and supportive of attracting the best and brightest physicians in the world. Not only is compensation 14 per cent above the national average in this province and not only do we have some of the best hospitals that will be found anywhere in North America, including the new south Calgary health campus, we have some of the finest research facilities in the world. It is that climate, which is the product of decades of investment in this province, that has attracted the best.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this is one of many areas in women's health care that's being neglected in this province. When will this government put women's health care foremost in our health care system?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I believe that we already do have a very strong commitment to women's health. One needs to look no further than the Lois Hole hospital for women at the site of the Royal Alexandra to see that evidence. The hon. member is a physician, and he certainly is correct that more does need to be done in the area of women's health. Recruitment in very specialized areas such as urogynecology continues to be a priority. We will continue to stand up for women who need access to these services and do our utmost to reduce the waiting times.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Summer Temporary Employment Program

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has broken yet another promise by axing the community spirit grants, which were funded entirely by lottery revenues. Rather than supporting nonprofits, she's cut funding to 2,100 groups, including food banks, community leagues, and women's shelters. The list of groups affected is 420 pages long. Will the Minister of Culture explain how community organizations can survive a $15 million blow at the same time as this PC government throws $200 million into new VLTs?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the community spirit donation program: as the minister that was a really tough decision to make, as all ministers did. At the end of the day for me, we know that there are other programs available in my department, the community facility enhancement program and the community initiatives program to name a couple, which are constantly oversubscribed. I guess that for me it's working with nonprofits to enable them to have people work in their sector on a longer term basis rather than a short-term basis. We are working with the nonprofit sector.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I started an online petition two days ago, and given that over 500 people have already signed it, calling for the minister to reinstate the STEP program, and given that letters continue to pour into my office, providing tangible proof of how successful this program has been and continues to be, to the Minister of Human Services: will you admit that you've made a mistake by cutting a program that has touched so many lives and restore funding immediately?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that virtually every dollar that's spent in government, taxpayers' dollars, touches people's lives. If you're going to balance the budget and if you're going to make the best use of the public resources, you have to make tough decisions. The STEP program was one of those tough decisions. When we look at a program like that, we have to look and say: is it achieving the outcomes that we need to achieve? The reality is that there are other programs for students who need to get jobs in the summer. There is a good job market for students now, so the purpose for which that program was set up is no longer there. However, there is a need on the not-for-profit side, and we've committed to working with the not-for-profit organizations to make sure that those organizations . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Penny-wise, pound-foolish. Given that not a single community group has been consulted by any minister about a replacement for STEP and given that organizations like iHuman and the Boys & Girls Clubs are grappling with mean-spirited cuts to both the STEP program and the community spirit grants, how can the Minister of Culture possibly defend this devastating double blow to Alberta's community organizations?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are among the most generous in all of Canada. We know that the current taxable credit portion that we have is one of the most generous in Canada. That will continue to be available. I guess that for me ensuring that all dollars are focused on addressing the greatest need is what I'm going to be looking for. I look at the student SCIP program, the serving communities internship program. That program was undersubscribed when we began it; now it's oversubscribed. So I look forward to working on that program and getting more students employed.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Water Supply in Southern Alberta

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as we prepare to head back to our constituencies, I need to get some answers for the residents of Highwood, and I hope that the environment minister can help me out. As with many things in southern Alberta, it's related to water. In Okotoks we're facing a water crisis. The town is being forced to buy a water licence, at a cost of about a million dollars, from an oil company or an irrigation district to obtain rights to water for their growing needs. As I understand it, it's the only community in the province being forced to pay private industry to get water for their residents. Can the environment minister explain why?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to answer this question. I've had the opportunity to meet with the council of Airdrie and the manager of Airdrie on numerous occasions. In fact, in Okotoks we've had good conversations about this. We're looking at a water conversation . . . [interjection] Quite frankly, I was there. I don't remember seeing the hon. member there.

We've had lots of discussion about this. We are working with Okotoks and all communities in southern Alberta with regard to important issues on water, and that's one of the important things that will come out of the discussions.

2:30

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, not only is the town of Okotoks facing a huge bill for water; it is also one of the communities hard hit by education tax increases, around 17 per cent for this community, which is $1.6 million. Since the province is taking $1.6 million more out of Okotoks and they need a million dollars for the licence, can't we just call it square and have the province assume the cost of the water licence for the town?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I just said, we are having the discussion across the province in 20 communities about water, the importance of water, sharing water for communities, particularly in the south, where we have a basin that is closed. That will be continuing until the end of the month. Albertans have a chance to give us input. We have talked with Okotoks. We have talked with other communities. You will see that with regard to water, as we committed to Albertans in these discussions, we are gathering input first, hearing what Albertans have to say in their communities, listening to Albertans first before we make any policy decisions.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Hon. member, your final supplemental.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there are different water issues in High River. Former MLA George Groeneveld's flood mitigation report called for a plan to help 66 communities that are at risk for flooding. When will the government provide a detailed, comprehensive priority list of flood mitigation plans so that I can tell High River where it is that they stand on the list?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Municipal Affairs this falls under my department. We've been working very hard with the federal government. They wind up covering a significant portion. The larger the disaster is, the more needs to be relieved to the communities. They cover a larger and larger portion, and they had announced quite a while ago that they want to work with the provinces on disaster mitigation because they realize an investment up front will save money down the road for repairs. So we're going to continue to work with our provincial partners and the federal government to work on the mitigation of flooding.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-North West, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

New School Construction Priorities

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 300 people in my constituency came together at a freezing cold rally on Family Day to raise awareness about the dire need for a new middle school in Calgary-North West. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Since our school board is changing its method for school ranking, calling it dated, will the minister take into account that a dated ranking system booted us out of the number 2 spot for a middle school?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, when we get the priority list from the school boards, we consider three things on our end. One is health and safety – we've got schools with mould in the walls or the roof is falling off or a flood has come through – we look at the enrolment pressures, and we make sure that school boards have exhausted all possible partnerships with other local groups: postsecondary, health, municipalities. Those are the things we do to weigh the projects against each other across the province. We rely on the school boards to take the data that they've got to give us their priority lists, and as they change those, of course, we take that into consideration.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Jansen: My next question to the same minister: when school boards move a school from priority 1 or 2 down to a lower priority on the list like Calgary-North West, which moved from number 2 to number 7, will the minister consider this when making funding decisions for new schools?

Mr. J. Johnson: Of course, Mr. Speaker, we will. We put a lot of weight into what the local school boards put forward in terms of their priority list. It's not the only thing we look at, but certainly they need the ability to change their capital list from year to year because communities evolve and grow and demographics change, and that's why they submit annual capital lists. They do change from year to year, and then we respond to those changes.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Hon. member, your final supplemental.

Ms Jansen: My final question to the same minister. When can my constituents, who have already waited 14 years for a middle school, expect a new school announcement for Calgary-North West?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the hon. member because she's been a strong advocate for her community as well as others, the Member for Calgary-South East, particularly in the Calgary area, where we have some growth pressures. I understand that a lot of these communities and parents are anxious to learn about their school projects right across the province, and I'm looking forward to being able to announce these projects once we get through the budget. They are contingent on the budget, so I call on all members of this House to support us in getting this budget passed so we can get these schools built.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Riverview.

Transition of Michener Centre Residents

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard the minister defend his decision to slam the doors of the Michener Centre shut, even saying that it was, and I quote, an unacceptable situation. Well, on that we can agree. It's unacceptable that this minister is kicking people out of their homes, and it's unacceptable that this minister feels helpless to do anything about it. The Michener Centre is also a support system for many patients that require stabilization before returning to community living, and losing this service will be a detriment to the social fabric of our province. Why is this government again targeting the front lines for cuts instead of the bloated bureaucracy?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. associate minister for disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member had been paying attention to the budget discussion – and if he attends the estimates, he'll learn a little bit more – we actually have made administrative cuts across the board.

The closure of the Michener Centre is about care for the vulnerable people that are in there, and it's going to improve. We've got a significant body of evidence that's been gathered across North America. We have our own evidence right here in Alberta, and we're making the right move for putting the patients first.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Wilson: Given that the hard-working staff at the Michener Centre not only provide a home to these vulnerable Albertans but also provide a transitional facility for many individuals that have been stabilized, how can this government justify shutting down this essential front-line service while continuing to support managers managing managers managing managers at all levels of government?

Mr. Oberle: An easy thing to say, Mr. Speaker, that across the board we've got so many managers and all this administrative overhead. The fact that it's not true doesn't seem to matter to that hon. member.

If the member knew anything about transition, then he would understand how inadequate this facility is for the transition of patients. That is one of the reasons we're moving to a better model.

Mr. Wilson: Given that the Albertans who have been cared for at the Michener Centre are still going to require the care and support of the community and given that the Michener Centre was a safe place for these Albertans and not a homeless shelter or a psych ward, are there going to be supports available for these individuals once they have been kicked out of their homes, or is this minister just going to make them fend for themselves?

Mr. Oberle: You know, Mr. Speaker, that is so ridiculous that it almost doesn't deserve an answer. The opposition there would have Albertans believe that we're just going to turn people out onto the street and put them on a waiting list for new homes. The facility doesn't even close until every single resident in there has got a care plan prepared and is moved into an appropriate setting. They're going to get all the supports they need and more.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Support for Postsecondary Education

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. William Butler Yeats said, "Education is not the filling of a pail, but the lighting of a fire." Given that the universities have significant cuts to their operating budgets instead of the modest increases they were expecting and now have been told that they are being given a mandate letter, to the Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education: how are these mandate letters going to account for cuts and preserve the fire of learning and research in Alberta's postsecondary institutions?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No one is in any way proclaiming that having a 7 per cent decrease in funding is not going to be challenging, but what I am telling all presidents and chairs – and we tend to agree on this – is that we will tackle this challenge together not only as individual schools but as Campus Alberta, and we will be finding efficiencies, duplications, and any other efficiencies that can be found within the entire system. The mandate letters, on the other hand, are being written in collaboration with each school and with student bodies.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Young: Given that there will be no tuition increase for students, can the Deputy Premier educate me on how these cuts will not result in cuts to student programs or increases in noninstructional fees charged to students?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we will discuss this in more detail when we go over the estimates for this particular ministry. However, I will tell you this. I made a commitment, the Premier has made a commitment that we will not be increasing tuitions as a result of this budget. The reason is this: we have also been very clear that we will not be balancing the budget on the backs of students. We will be finding efficiencies in administration, we will be finding efficiencies in relationships between all 26 schools, and we will be encouraging all schools to follow the lead of the government of Alberta on salary increases.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member. Final supplemental.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we expect our universities and colleges to serve as cornerstones of Alberta's knowledge economy and the drivers of innovation, how can we expect to attract and retain the brightest minds with these cuts? Will these budget cuts result in a brain drain?

2:40

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, in this case the Beatles were right. It's not always that money can buy you love. As a matter of fact, the way to attract the best researchers, the way to develop clusters of innovation, the way to develop research and then commercialize it is to develop a climate for that research to occur in the first place. We will be fostering a climate of research and innovation and commercialization by identifying our areas of strength, by having our institutions collaborate with each other, and as a matter of fact, reaching nationally and internationally. Both Alberta and Canada can do much, much better on that front.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Transportation Project Priorities

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans just don't trust this government. The Minister of Transportation claims that a prioritized list of transportation projects is available online. We went online, and the list he's talking about isn't prioritized and is just tentative. So we FOIPed it and found out a priority list does exist, but it will not be made public. In estimates the minister went back on his claims, saying that, quote, I don't have a top five, and there is no definitive list. To the Minister of Transportation. It's time to be honest with Albertans. Where is the prioritized list, or do you just not have a plan?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question, particularly because he doesn't seem to get the answer though he's been given it before. The list is on the website. He was told at estimates last night that projects are either funded or unfunded. He has the answer. Albertans that want the answer seem to get it. It seems the hon. member is the only Albertan that doesn't know where the list is.

Mr. Barnes: To the minister: given that you have already deferred many important projects like highway 881 and given that your government is known for making political announcements, will you explain to Albertans the criteria you use to prioritize projects, if you use any at all?

Mr. McIver: Again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member already knows we use a variety of criteria: safety, development, traffic, what's there. You know what? Whatever we're building is 25 per cent more than the opposition would be by their own plans. We're doing our best. We don't like deferring any projects, but the fact is that this government is building Alberta. We're delivering. That's why they chose us in April. We're actually moving the province forward with the infrastructure that Albertans are going to depend upon.

Mr. Barnes: The list is just by highway number.

To the minister again: given that like failed Liberal leader Stéphane Dion, you find it hard to make priorities, can you at least explain to Albertans why you refuse to release a prioritized list, or are you just going to respond by saying that it's just not easy to make priorities?

Mr. McIver: I hope the hon. member gives his regards to his good friend Stéphane.

Mr. Speaker, again, the list is on the website. It seems the opposition are the only ones that don't know where it is. All other Albertans can find it on the Alberta Transportation website. [interjections]

We're building Alberta. We're moving it into the future. [interjections] People would have to wait a lot longer for their infrastructure if they had made the other choice in April. We're proud of this Premier and this government, that are building . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjections]

Wow. It must be Thursday afternoon.

Hon. members, I want to thank you for your co-operation. We got through 16 sets of questions and answers.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to the introduction of guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly 14 students, at least, and two professors from King's University College, Dr. John Hiemstra, a professor of political science, and Dr. Michael De Moor, professor of social philosophy. They lead a new course at King's in the politics, history, and economics program. These 14 students are engaged in various aspects of public life through multiple field trips this semester, including a recent visit to my constituency office. Today they observed question period and now will witness House proceedings in order to gain a deeper understanding of how our actions shape public life. The guests are seated in the gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three of my constituents from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Maria Richard, Cameron Needham, and Graham Anderson came to Edmonton today to protest this government's handling of the pharmacy issues in Alberta. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't really know whether my guests are still here. They were the grade 9 class from the Stirling school, home of the 1A girls provincial champions and the 1A boys bronze winners. This is a school where 12 of my 13 children were well launched on their roads to success as citizens, spouses, parents, professionals, and entrepreneurs.

Are they in fact here? They were here, anyway, with their teachers Mike Fletcher, Morgan Schaufele, Ingeborg Pot, and parents Ryan and Ty Stef. In absentia, I guess, just please give them the warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

French Quarter and Area Business Revitalization Zone

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton-Gold Bar is blessed with a significant francophone community, one that I have been privileged to live in and around for 50 of the last 60 years. Recently the city of Edmonton approved the French Quarter revitalization zone, located in the Bonnie Doon area. The first executive director is Mr. Jean Johnson. La Cité, located on 91st Street, is a thriving, active cultural and community centre. Businesses, cultural organizations, health organizations, a theatre, a library, a restaurant, and food service: it's all there, over 30 organizations.

Across the street from La Cité is the University of Alberta's Campus Saint-Jean, which sports a new cafeteria, Mr. Speaker, and I would encourage you to stop by. Campus Saint-Jean issues the only French-language degrees west of Winnipeg. They offer seven undergraduate degree programs and two master's programs.

Mr. Speaker, the number of Albertans that speak French in all of our communities is growing along with our population. Some of these folks are from African countries, but new Albertans are coming from the whole world and other parts of Canada.

I can't help but mention the great work done in my constituency by the Greater North central school board, Conseil scolaire Centre-Nord. They operate three great schools in my constituency.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to represent the good folks of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I'm very thankful for the French culture that is in my home constituency.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

World Water Day

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. When I was growing up, there was lots of water to fish in, swim, canoe, drink, water gardens, wash your car, heat houses, sprinkle lawns, cool turbines, irrigate crops. With the exception of southern Alberta the idea of us running out of water was laughable. Now we need to have a World Water Day to urge us to think about water, and that day is tomorrow, March 22.

Here are some of my thoughts on water. I'd like to see water defined as a common good or a public good. In that way, we would provide leadership on future policy about who gets it and how water gets used. This would make privatization and sale of water licences or FITFIR obsolete ideas. It would require that headwaters, lakes, and river runs would have their unique ecology protected. I'd like to see the government stop approaching ground-water and surface water as though the two are not connected. I'd like to see the government get ahead of the problems and test the water, fingerprint it in areas where development may affect or change it.

I'd like to see grey water usage made common, have grey water used to water lawns, golf courses, gardens, used in car washes. I'd like to be able to use grey water produced in my household and to have the rainwater be integrated into the system. I'd like to see strict polluter-pay legislation in place in Alberta, especially as it affects water, ice, and snow. I'd like to see conventional oil and gas and oil sands man up – if it was women, it would be done – and significantly reduce their water usage. Water used for deep well injection or for in situ extraction and SAGD is permanently removed from the hydrologic cycle. I'd like to see us choose to grow trees, plants, and food that need less water to survive.

That's what I'd like to see on Water Day. My name is Laurie Blakeman, and I'm an Alberta Liberal.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Calgary-Hawkwood.

Child Sexual Assault Services

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government understands the commitment to supporting victims of sexual abuse and their families. As has been said already today, everyone in this House wants to provide the best supports for Albertans who have survived sexual abuse. That is our shared goal. It's our shared compassion for the vulnerable. Alberta's programs and delivery partners achieve results in the prevention and treatment of child sexual abuse. The government of Alberta provides over $18 million in funding for these areas.

Centres like the Zebra Child Protection Centre in Edmonton and the brand new Child Advocacy Centre in Calgary offer a community of professionals and provide front-line support for children who have been abused. These centres represent major partners coming together to provide compassion through services that will ensure these tragic cases of abuse receive the best quality treatment possible. Police services, child and family services authorities, Alberta Health Services, and the Crown prosecutors' office collaborate to put our children first. These are child-centred environments that nurture the abused child and use all the wisdom of partnerships to heal our most vulnerable and commit to justice being done.

I want Albertans to know that this government has committed $1.8 million annually to nine sexual assault centres to support victims of sexual violence. We have established over $6 million for supports of the child sexual exploitation program, including counselling, in-home supports, and outreach for children who have been sexually exploited through prostitution. Approximately $10 million per year is spent regionally on counselling services and placement for victims of sexual abuse and their families.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, Albertans chose a government that makes vulnerable Albertans a priority. We do not give . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Poverty Reduction Strategy

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former social worker I understand that poverty is a complex social issue that affects everyone, and so do the members of this government caucus. That is why we are committed to developing a provincial strategy to reduce poverty in Alberta, particularly to eliminate child poverty. The new Alberta social policy framework guided us to work in such a way that we will strive to reduce inequality, protect the vulnerable, and promote dignity and inclusion. Under the same framework it calls for us to work in partnership with communities to develop local solutions and also apply research and best practices from other jurisdictions to guide our work in Alberta.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, oppositions have risen in this House and painted a rather gloomy picture about Alberta's poverty reduction strategy in Budget 2013. To set the record straight, I would like to share some numbers and facts to help Albertans know the real picture. Budget 2013 includes a 4.4 per cent increase in funding for AISH, $5.5 million more in funding for persons with developmental disabilities, $16 million more in funding for child protection, a $7 million increase for foster care to keep our children safe, 6,300 new affordable housing units over the next two years, and $6.7 million more in funding for child care subsidies.

Mr. Speaker, every Albertan deserves the opportunity to live in dignity, reach their potential, and give back to the community. What Budget 2013 has delivered is a tough but responsible change that protects the most vulnerable Albertans while making some very difficult decisions to keep our spending within our means. It is a budget with a balanced and responsible approach to move Alberta forward. I believe that is what Albertans elected this government for.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Compensation for Pharmacy Services

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pharmacists are here in Edmonton today to draw attention to this government's mismanagement of drug pricing and the negative effect upcoming changes will have on the viability of local pharmacies. My office in Strathmore-Brooks has received many e-mails and questions about this matter, and I would like to share some of what I have learned with the Assembly.

In a letter from the president of the Alberta Pharmacists' Association I was informed of the devastating consequences mandatory changes to drug prices will have on local pharmacies. He wrote:

The Alberta Pharmacists' Association has heard from many pharmacists that are deeply concerned for their patients and for their profession. This cut is so severe and quick, it will be impossible for many community pharmacies to ensure the sustainability of their practice.

Traditionally, the revenue earned through generic drugs has benefited government as they have been able to chronically underfund pharmacy services . . . When cost of living increases are factored in, pharmacists are actually paid less for drug dispensing than they were in 1991. This change coupled with an underfunded model means pharmacists will not be able to provide the level of care that Albertans have become accustomed to and the health system will suffer as patient needs are off-loaded to other care providers or go unmet.

Pharmacists have expressed their commitment to keep prices low to benefit the consumer, but they also want government to reinvest their savings into pharmacies that have been underfunded for some time.

Mr. Speaker, pharmacists are sounding the alarm, and the government isn't listening. Patient care will be impacted. This government needs to get its priorities straight and do whatever it takes to keep pharmacies viable so they can deliver the care patients need. This was echoed loud and clear today by the nearly 300 pharmacists that gathered on our steps to ask this province to do the thing it refuses to do, listen.

Let's not turn this into another attack on Alberta's front-line workers. The government should reverse course on these changes before it's too late.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I notice that the clock is upon us. I'm wondering if the Government House Leader would like to rise.

Mr. Hancock: I would be delighted, Mr. Speaker, to rise and ask for unanimous consent of the House to waive the provisions of Standing Order 7(7) and allow the Routine to proceed past 3 p.m.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the for next member's statement the Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary Francophone History

Mr. Cao: Merci, M. le Président. Last week I attended and spoke at the launch of a francophone television program called Hello-Bonjour Calgary. This privilege highlighted for me the rich history of French culture in the city of Calgary. The facts of history can be hidden by what we have become accustomed to in our current society and Calgary's modern landscape.

The long history of French-speaking people in Calgary began with the pioneers who contributed to the early development of the land we call home today. There is a neighbourhood in Calgary's inner city that originated as Notre-Dame-de-la-Paix, a Catholic mission, and it was for a time the incorporated village of Rouleauville. Starting in 1872, Father Scollen and Father Lacombe obtained two quarter sections of land for a mission district to ensure a strong French-speaking Catholic community would thrive. After obtaining the rest of the land that's now called the Mission community, the area was incorporated in 1899 as the village of Rouleauville after Charles Rouleau.

Despite Father Lacombe's desire to preserve the French language and culture, Rouleauville slowly came to become more and more English in character. In 1907 the village was annexed to the city of Calgary. As a result, all the French names of the streets were replaced by the Calgary street-numbering system that we have today.

Francophones still continue to flock to Calgary from many parts of the world to begin their lives as Canadians and Albertans. Mr. Speaker, indeed, from these humble historical roots I heard in the news today that Calgary is now ranked the top livable city in Canada, and out of the top 10 livable cities in Canada, Alberta has six.

Merci beaucoup, M. le Président.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

3:00

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Bill 207

Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 207 would establish a corporation in Alberta to be known as the Alberta organ and tissue donation agency. The agency's objective would be to plan, promote, co-ordinate, and support activities relating to the donation of human organs and tissues for transplant and activities relating to the education and research in connection with the donation of organs and tissues.

In addition, the agency would educate the public regarding matters related to organ and tissue donation, would facilitate the provision of such education by others, and advise the Minister of Health on matters relating to the donation of organs and tissues. The Alberta organ and tissue donation agency would co-ordinate and support the work of designated facilities in connection with donation and transplant and also manage the procurement, distribution, and delivery of organs and tissues. It would be responsible for establishing and managing waiting lists for the transplant of organs and tissues and would establish and manage a system to fairly allocate organs and tissues that are available.

In addition, the Alberta organ and tissue donation agency would be responsible for establishing and managing the Alberta organ and tissue donation registry. This registry would establish information-sharing agreements with relevant agencies consistent with the freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 would advance the government's commitment to building Alberta by creating an innovative tissue and organ donation agency, and it will have a positive impact on organ and tissue donor rates. It will save the lives of many.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 207 read a first time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Seniors.

Bill 14

RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the RCMP Health Coverage Statutes Amendment Act, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, the act proposes amendments to two acts, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act and the Alberta Health Insurance Premiums Act. It should also address changes in the 2012 federal budget to provincial health coverage by the federal government to the RCMP members. It will now fall on the respective provinces and territories to provide health coverage to RCMP members for basic health services, sir. This bill makes the adjustments necessary to provide health coverage to RCMP members under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act.

I look forward to the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of an e-mail my constituency office received from a constituent, Ms Tracey Bert. Ms Bert works at the Mount Royal University and is disheartened to learn about the proposed $147 million in budget cuts coming to postsecondary education. Ms Bert feels that the government has made a decision that is not in the best interests of Albertans when we need to be investing in, not cutting, postsecondary education funding.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Is there someone on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood? The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table four post-card submissions that Albertans made during our broken-promises budget tour. To give you an example of what Albertans are saying, Muriel Stanley Venne from Edmonton believes that taxes should be raised for corporations and the wealthiest Albertans.

Similarly, John Johansen believes that replacing the flat tax with a progressive tax structure should be a priority for this government. Submissions like these are proof that the PC government is completely out of touch with the true priorities of everyday Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of one of many e-mails we received about this PC government's cancellation of the STEP program. Sara Coumantarakis writes about how STEP helped make the green shack program a reality and hurt the McCauley neighbourhood in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. She asks, "Is scrapping this program a money saver or are we just deferring a cost which will show up later when kids who do not have enough constructive activities and good role models in the summer end up needing much more costly interventions?"

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, one from the CEO of Value Invest, which is a pharmacy, and the other is from the CEO of Value Drug Mart. These are letters that, hopefully, the Minister of Health will take the time to read and listen to the concerns on what's happened with the pharmacies out in the rural area.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have quite a few tablings. The first is an e-mail dated March 20 from a Sandi Bow from Lac La Biche. She's very concerned about the government of Alberta's irresponsible plan with respect to medevac. I have the requisite copies.

The second is an e-mail dated March 19 from Roxanne Suvak from St. Paul, who as well is concerned about the government's irresponsible plan with respect to pharmacy.

The third is an e-mail dated March 20 from Jeff Pedersen from Elk Point. Again, he's concerned about the reckless plan with respect to pharmacy funding.

The fourth is an e-mail dated March 21 from Natara Cardinal from Kikino. She is also concerned about the proposed cuts to pharmacy funding.

The next is a fax dated March 12 from Lillian Palmer from Vilna, who is also concerned about the cuts to her pharmacy because she knows that's going to affect services in that area.

The next is an e-mail dated March 15 from a pharmacist in Vilna illustrating to the government the impacts that their cuts will have on her pharmacy.

The next is an e-mail dated March 18 from Lesley Rebryna from the St. Paul & District Co-op Pharmacy. She's again outlining the problems with the government's proposed cuts to pharmacy.

Finally, an e-mail dated March 12 from Hope Ainsworth from St. Paul, who also is concerned about the pharmacy cuts.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. One is from Zak Murakami, a pharmacist from Barnwell, Alberta, expressing concern for the province's nursing homes as a result of the recent and future cuts to pharmacy revenues.

An e-mail from Magrath pharmacist Arlen Bennett, who's been forced to lay off staff and says that fees for services are not remunerative.

A letter about pharmacy from Kathy Schow of Cardston expressing her concerns.

And a letter from Lance Miller dated today to the hon. Minister of Service Alberta, copied to me, with regard to Alberta registries. We've talked about that, perhaps examining the possibility of a two-tiered pay system for rural versus urban registries.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I might remind you that the requisite numbers are required with all tablings.

The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter hand-delivered to me today by Ms Jennifer Fookes on the issues within the pharmacies in Alberta. I have the required number of copies here.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I have since had the documents provided to me that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood wished to have me table on his behalf. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a memo from the acting manager/director of the Public Affairs Bureau to bureau staff directing them to use overtly political messaging in all the supposedly nonpartisan government communications that they produce. Accompanying the memo is an example of a government of Alberta press release where this language was used. There are many more examples that exist. This memo represents the cynical attempt by this PC government to use public money in an effort to improve their chances at re-election.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We had two points of order raised. We had a point of order at 2:12 by the Member for Airdrie, and I believe the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona rose at 2:17. At this time we'll deal with the point of order from Airdrie.

The Official Opposition Deputy House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j):

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder

What I'm referring to specifically is the Minister of Transportation's comments that somehow the Wildrose opposition would want to sacrifice the safety of Albertans. I think every single Member of this Legislative Assembly would agree that not one of us would ever want to sacrifice the safety of Albertans.

Of course, our party has taken very clear stances. In the last election we campaigned on five provincial checkstop teams to ensure that drunk drivers were kept off the road. We had a policy in the Balanced Budget and Savings Act to put more front-line police officers on our roads to increase enforcement. We proposed electronic monitoring of sex offenders and other criminals. We of course deplored the cancelling of the safer communities fund, and we do believe that vandals and other individuals should be convicted on their first and second offences. I think all of us, regardless of political stripe, would agree that not one of us wants to intentionally sacrifice the safety of Albertans. We are all here, every single one of us, to ensure that the public safety and security of Albertans is maintained.

Of course, not only is that statement by the hon. Minister of Transportation not true, but it also is unparliamentary language according to the standing orders, and I'd request that he simply correct his statement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Deputy Government House Leader and Minister of Transportation in response.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the hon. member needs to understand is that the reference that I made was to an amendment made by the Wildrose Party last night requesting that the government cut funding in areas where we actually provide safety for Albertans. The motive expected, frankly, is a logical extension of the actions of the Wildrose Party in their attempts, through wanting the budget to be amended, to reduce the funding to provide safety for Albertans. It's actually a logical conclusion to what the opposition party put in writing and delivered and put on the record last night when we were doing estimates. Under the category that the truth is an absolute defence, they actually made amendments last evening. I was just drawing what is, frankly, a fairly logical conclusion to an end result of what the opposition party was doing.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Edmonton-Centre, did you wish to participate?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hadn't intended to, but I have to say that the words given by the Minister of Transportation compelled me to my feet. I really am quite interested in how the minister could – I mean, I know he did make the argument. I just am seeking the logic in it. When he says that 23(h), (i), and (j), particularly (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," is not in play here and when he then goes on to describe that, in his opinion, what a member of the Official Opposition put in an amendment, which I'm presuming failed, to an estimates debate last night is a logical extension of their attitude towards the safety of Albertans – I mean, Mr. Speaker, please. You've got to come up to speed if you're going to argue this stuff. Of course that's the exact definition of it, saying, "makes allegations against another Member." That's exactly what happened.

Allegations that some member or all members of the Official Opposition – and I note that the new game the government is playing now is to just say "the opposition," as though all parties were somehow involved in this and not specifying whether they're talking about the Official Opposition or the Liberal opposition. No. It's just all opposition. Of course he meant to, and that's exactly what he did, which was to impute a false or unavowed motive and to make allegations against the member and, further, against the whole caucus. Now, it only counts if you do it against the member, and it's specific to the member.

Honestly, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what was going on, and that was the purpose of it. All I heard all day today in question period was the government members getting up and slugging the people that were asking the questions. There's no other way to put it. You know, it was slugging all opposition members without being specific, and it seemed to particularly focus on the intellectual capacity of the people that are in this House.

Now, you know, Mr. Speaker, this is a hard job. I believe everybody works hard in here, and I also believe you don't get here if you're truly missing or a little shy on intellectual capacity. I'm sick of it. I mean, honest to goodness, you guys have got all kinds of help. You've got assistants, you're the government, you can make stuff happen, and you have to get up in this House and be that thin skinned? Get a life.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I caution you. Just a reminder that a point of order is not really an opportunity to continue debate, and we seem to have some of that.

I'm going to recognize one more speaker. I had intended to cut it off here, but I'm going to recognize one more speaker for a short point, and then I'm going to make a ruling.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I raised a point of order last night at the very committee meeting this hon. minister is speaking of. That point of order was upheld for the same type of language.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. members. I certainly appreciate the clarifications. I want to emphasize clarifications because I think the deputy House leader from the opposition did a very credible job of outlining what seems to be the position of his caucus in relation to this matter. It's certainly expected that there will be on an ongoing basis differences of opinion between where people come from on different points. The exchange started from a response, and I want to be clear. The point of order was raised by the Official Opposition in response to an answer from the minister to a question from the Official Opposition.

I'm of the opinion that the exchange that we just had has provided us a glorious opportunity to clarify the positions of the various caucuses, and as such I think we have no point of order on this.

I'd like to move on to the next one, which was raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Would you please proceed, hon. member.

Point of Order

Offending the Practices of the Assembly

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I rise under 23(b), (h), (i), (j), and (l) of the standing orders, and I rise in reference to the exchange that has just been the subject of the previous discussion. In so doing, I rise to talk about the whole exchange between not only the minister but also the government member who asked the question. The reason I do that is because what appeared to happen, to me, was that there was questioning and answering that was going on that essentially the foundation or the heart of which was about actions taken by the opposition. What happened was that they were asking each other for questions and answers about issues that essentially revolved around actions taken by the opposition.

Now, the citations that I want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker. First of all, under 23 is simply that a member will be called to order if the member

- (b) speaks to matters other than
- (i) the question under discussion . . .

and also

- (l) introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly, and then the typical (h), (i), and (j), which is where you're essentially insulting and imputing bad motives and creating discord.

What I want to start by bringing to your attention, Mr. Speaker, is on page 4 of Beauchesne's. It talks about the purpose of question period. I quote when I say:

Similarly, the whole concept of the parliamentary Question Period depends on the tradition that the Cabinet . . .

The cabinet.

. . . is willing to submit its conduct of public affairs to the scrutiny of the Opposition on a regular basis.

The next thing that I'd like to read from, Mr. Speaker, is on page 121, paragraph 410.

In 1986 the Speaker put forth further views in light of more recent conditions and precedents. It was observed that . . .

Then I jump to section (5).
