forward the action. I would just like to bring the Speaker's attention to that as well.

The Speaker: Well, it's been an interesting 45 minutes on hearing the points for and against the subject at hand. Let me just remind everyone here that a point of privilege under Standing Order 15 is actually the most serious charge that one MLA from this Assembly may bring forward against another. If you're not familiar with it, I encourage you all to look at page 10 of our Standing Orders, where it talks about "a breach of the rights of the Assembly or of the parliamentary rights of any Member" and how that constitutes a point of privilege.

There are at least two major issues that need exploring here, the first of which is whether or not there was leakage of the actual bill and, if so, in what form. The second is the issue of the alleged advertisements that may or may not have occurred and what they might have concerned and, in that general context, what, if any, details that are directly out of the bill may or may not have surfaced and, if so, in what form.

Then we get into a lot of other issues with respect to comments that were made by various members who just spoke pertaining to whether a breach occurred regarding any of the above or what might subsequently follow. Was there any contempt in that regard? Several citation comments were made by a couple of the speakers, including some from Erskine May, including some from Maingot, and perhaps elsewhere, and I took about five pages of notes in that respect.

There was also a comment made about media briefings. I will review what we consider to be a media briefing and see if we have a definition that pertains to that, notwithstanding what was said about the previous Speaker's ruling and also what context that all occurred in.

Did some folks receive a technical briefing or not is another matter that I'm going to review in the Hansard, that is being recorded as we speak. I know that no one would like to take away the concept of briefings by ministers with and for members of the opposition, especially the official critics. That's a very important point, so there are some grey areas here that need attention if nothing else.

Others talked about the authorities of the House. I want to review those comments carefully.

Other members mentioned issues pertaining to billboards and other forms of advertising. I want to take a look at that as well.

There were comments made about three-column documents and in what forms they appeared, all be they not in final form, not even in draft form, but I want to review the comments that have been made in that respect as well. The idea of sharing concepts and sharing details and sharing briefings is a very serious matter when we're dealing with bills that are to come forward to this House.

I'll just wrap up by saying that the comments made by all of you warrant a further study. I was hoping that they wouldn't, frankly, so we could move on, but I do find myself in the unique position of having to spend a little bit of time, at least tonight, perhaps more time tomorrow, reviewing this because of the nature of it and because of previous precedents and the context within which they all arose. There were federal examples given, there were provincial examples given, and the list goes on.

With that in mind, I will review all of Hansard, including what other facts and details I can get my hands on, working with individuals under my employ directly to come back with a further update and a ruling on this as soon as I possibly can, and I would hope that would be tomorrow. We'll leave the matter there until that time.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 29

Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to move second reading of the Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013.

On June 19 the federal government announced that amendments to their Food and Drugs Act as well as the food and drug regulations would take effect on December 19. The amendments allow the federal Minister of Health to create an online prescription drug list, which will be easier to access and be updated more frequently. The prescription drug list will replace the current list found in schedule F of the federal legislation. Mr. Speaker, there is no policy change to our scheduling of drugs with these amendments, and there is also no cost to the government.

Mr. Speaker, those are my comments on second reading, and I would move that we adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 207

Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013

The Chair: Are there any questions or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill at this time? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is with great pleasure that I finally rise for discussion here in Committee of the Whole of Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013. Now, as many of you know, this bill started out its life as a private member's bill and was adopted as a government bill during the spring session. I have to praise thanks to the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley for allowing me to take over his private member's position in order for it to come up for debate.

I also would like to thank the overwhelming support of third-party stakeholders, many of whom are up in the members' gallery and the public gallery here today; the government members for supporting this wholeheartedly through the process; and also the opposition members as well for their overwhelming support of Bill 207.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 207 takes action to improve Alberta's organ and tissue donation rates. Now, the intent of the legislation is to establish a provincial organ and tissue donation agency and an online consent-to-donate registry as well as to increase public awareness and education about donation in Alberta. Consultation on the implementation of the bill occurred all of September and October. I led this committee as chair of the Alberta provincial advisory group for organ and tissue donation. It consisted of many transplant doctors in Alberta and critical care doctors. It included nurses, liver and kidney foundation representatives, and, of course, many community advocates as well.

Mr. Chairman, during second reading a number of colleagues around the room here stood up and spoke, and I would like to just address some of the comments that were made; in particular, the Member for Edmonton-Calder, who had some very good points that he came up with, that I took under serious consideration. One of them was that many Albertans don't have drivers' licences. Of course, drivers' licenses are part of the bill, where I hope to have registries ask people who are applying for their driver's licence or are renewing their driver's licence whether or not they intend to donate their organs and tissues. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder raised the issue that many Albertans do not drive, and there is a huge number of them that we have to also tap into, so I will be putting forward an amendment later on regarding this.

Also, some other points that he brought up. Does and can the family trump the consent wishes of a deceased? Currently, yes, they can, which is unfortunate, but I do hope that with this agency and this consent that we are asking Albertans for that they will go out and talk to their family members and express their deep wishes of wanting to donate their organs and tissues so that families don't trump the wishes of their deceased loved ones.

He also talked about performance measures and monitoring. Of course, that certainly will be a part of the bill and the agency once it comes into operation.

Then he brought up the issue of costs. What might this cost be? That is a very good question, hon. member. All I can say is that the Trillium Gift of Life Network that operates in Ontario right now, a wonderful, wonderful agency, has certainly increased their donations considerably since this agency has been in operation. The cost to run the Trillium Gift of Life in Ontario is budgeted at $21 million a year, but that $21 million includes 21 hospitals around the province ready on a moment's notice when the opportunity of potential organ procurement arises. The staff there are trained in all 21 hospitals, and they are basically ready to go on a moment's notice. Really, hon. member, this agency will save lives, so I don't particularly care what this will cost. It will save lives, so that is what is important.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View expressed some issues here as well. I appreciate you speaking in second reading, hon. member. You talked about opportunity costs and prevention programs, very good points. Absolutely, of course, it is important for the Alberta government to implement prevention programs so that individuals, you know, take precautions in order to limit injuries from sports. Those are the things that you talked about. I don't know how that really fits in with the organ and tissue donation agency, but perhaps you can comment on that later.

Also, hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, thank you for your comments during second reading. You talked a bit about cornea transplants and the long list of people in Alberta waiting for these cornea transplants. Of course, the hon. Minister of Health just made an announcement a couple of days ago regarding cornea transplants and how we are going to bring down that list considerably through bringing in corneas from elsewhere.

You talked a bit about your brother Ron as well, which was very moving, hon. member, and you talked about how he could not donate his organs and tissues at the time of his death. I know exactly how you feel. My dear wife, who passed away a few years ago, told me three days before she passed that she was very sad that she could not donate her organs because of the cancer that had been inflicted upon her body. I will never forget that. That has stuck with me today and is one of the main reasons why I am up here now pushing this bill. So I feel for you as well.

Also, hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, I appreciate your very good comments regarding presumed consent and the fact that other countries around the world, Spain in particular – and you mentioned many others, 25 to 26 other countries around the world – have presumed consent so that when an individual passes away, they are automatically presumed to be donors unless indicated otherwise. You had wished that at some point our government would take a bold step and move toward presumed consent, and I'm hoping perhaps someday we can go there. Of course, I'm more concerned right now about getting this agency up and running, getting it going, and perhaps down the road being able to talk in this room here again with regard to presumed consent. But note well taken, and I would say that I would agree with you as well on that matter. So thank you.

Of course, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall also stood up and talked about the education aspect of this bill and that we need to get out there and educate Albertans regarding organ donation. Absolutely, hon. member. I thank you for your contribution in second reading.

I especially would like to thank the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, who shared the story of his son Troy and how he shared his gift of life with many, many people in the province of Alberta and other provinces as well, I understand. Hon. member, my heartfelt thank you to you for sharing your wonderful gift with us.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Alberta provincial advisory group for organ and tissue donation that met this summer: we met with many stakeholders, both external and internal. We had sessions in Edmonton, Calgary, and within the government. There were numerous themes that were heard during the consultation process and a number of amendments that were suggested to us in this bill, and I will be sharing some amendments here. I'm hoping that we can discuss the amendments here in the near future, but right now I just would like to talk about the consultation process and this committee that met over the summer. Overall, there was strong support for the creation of a provincial structure and a single voice related to organ and tissue donation.

Now, regarding the creation of an agency to co-ordinate organ and tissue donation activities in Alberta, we heard that a single provincial structure will help to co-ordinate access to donated tissue and organs across Alberta and result in more effective and streamlined processes, that resource allocation would be improved with a separate designated sustainable funding stream, and that having the agency directly linked to the Minister of Health and accountable to government is key to the success of this agency. We also heard that building on what works and past consultation is very important and that key purposes for the agency are co-ordination, support, education, oversight, monitoring, measurement, and accountability. We also heard that the agency should support and research the best practices around the country and around the world.

Regarding the creation of an online consent-to-donate registry we heard a lot from this committee. We heard that sustained efforts in building and maintaining public awareness is key to success. We heard that the ease of registering is essential. We heard that the ease of consent retrieval is important to health care providers and that governance and management of processes and legalities are key considerations and that integration of Service Alberta's online portal was strongly recommended.

I do have to thank the hon. Minister of Service Alberta and his staff as well for participating in this and for the wonderful co-ordination and co-operation they gave to us during these consultation periods. Thank you sincerely.

We also heard that if Alberta Registries is the preferred option for collection of consent, fees for services will need to be addressed as well and that there are numerous resources and supports that can provide assistance in identifying lessons learned and implementing best practices in registry development.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of amendments that I would like to bring forth here, amendments that were talked about during our sessions this fall with the provincial advisory group, so I would ask that we issue the amendments. I hope that they're out there to be issued. Okay. I guess I will do that first.

The Chair: Sure. Hon. member, we'll just pause and have the pages distribute the amendment and catch a breather, and then we'll ask you to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Webber: Sure.

The Chair: Thank you.

For the record, hon. members, since this is the first amendment to this bill, we will call this amendment A1.

Hon. member, you make speak to the amendment.

Mr. Webber: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a point of clarification here. There are seven proposed amendments to this bill, and there are – I won't say that there are housekeeping changes, but there are changes. Do I include all amendments in one? Do I talk about them all right now?

The Chair: It is considered one amendment, hon. member, which would include all the changes that you are proposing unless you're telling me there are others. If these are all the changes that you are proposing contained in these two pages, then combined they are considered one amendment, A1, so you can proceed to speak to the entire list.

Thank you.

Mr. Webber: Thank you. Excellent, Mr. Chairman. I will try to do that in a way that you will understand because it is a little bit confusing here right now.

Anyway, currently in Bill 207, Mr. Chair, when an adult applies to a registry to obtain a driver's licence, they will be asked whether or not they want to consent to donate their tissue, organs to the health care system. Now, the proposed amendment in section 4.2(1) of the bill will include this question being asked for both operators' licences and identification cards for people without a licence. That was brought to my attention, of course, again, by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. This amendment is important because this bill right now focuses mainly on drivers, and as such it excludes over 180,000 identification card holders who may wish to donate their tissue and organs. The amendment to 4.2(1) is one change that we would like to make there.

Now, the proposed amendment to section 4.2(2)(a) will make a slight wording change to enable consent information provided at the registry office to be transmitted to the online consent-to-donate registry. Now, since there is no need to have the agency involved to transmit this information, the words "Alberta Organ and Tissue Donation Agency for inclusion in the" will be removed, if that makes any sense. So it will read that the information be transmitted “to the online registry.”

Okay. Current wording in section 4.2(2)(b) of Bill 207 suggests that we affix a sticker on the operator’s licence to indicate a person has provided consent to donate. Now, the amendment that I’d like to make here would allow for the printing of a code or symbol rather than a sticker on the licence so that printing would be attached to the driver’s licence or the ID card, indicating consent to donate. These changes are necessary because there are a range of problems with stickers, as we probably know, including that anything not laser engraved onto a card will eventually wear out or peel off or get damaged, so we are suggesting an amendment there to have it laser engraved onto the licence rather than a sticker.

Also, the current wording in section 12.1(2)(b) says that one of the purposes of the agency is to “educate the public and increase awareness about donation in Alberta.” The amendment being proposed is to replace the words with the following: “educate the public and health care community and increase their awareness respecting tissue, organ and body donation.” The goal with this change is to establish outreach programs and comprehensive communication campaigns to increase awareness about donation, not only to the public but to the health care community as well. That is another amendment.

One final amendment is to section 12.1(2)(c), the words “manage, deliver and encourage use of the online registry.” That will be substituted with wording like “support, encourage and oversee the use of the online registry.” Now, the intent of that amendment, Mr. Chair, is to be clear that while the oversight, support, and accountability of the registry rests with the agency, the management and delivery of the registry may be better served by utilizing existing resources within government such as Service Alberta or the Department of Health. [Mr. Webber’s speaking time expired]

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Well, actually, Mr. Chair, I’ve got one more amendment. Can I speak on that, or is my time up?

The Chair: Sure. Would you just go ahead and finish your point, then, hon. member?

Mr. Webber: Okay. Thank you.

One other amendment, section 4.2(1), that refers to an adult providing his or her written consent, will be removed to be consistent with terminology throughout the act. We only use the term “consent,” not “written consent.”

Also, section 4.1, changing the term “individuals” to “adults.” The term “individuals” is not used in the act, so this change will also ensure language consistency between the bill and the act.

Again, those are the seven amendments. I know that they’re rather confusing, but perhaps we can talk about that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you have a clarification you’re asking for?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. Of course, I don’t need to tell him about how much I support this bill.

The Chair: Hon. member, are you asking for a clarification, or are you speaking to the bill?

Mrs. Forsyth: I will get to that in just a second.

The Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: I guess what I’m asking this member – and I think it’s important – is about the fact that he’s asked to have these amendments done all at once. You’ve agreed, and it’s on one sheet of paper. I’m wondering if the member could be kind enough to start breaking these down into A1, A2, A3. The reason I say that is that we’re scrambling trying to figure this out. With one of the amendments that he’s proposing, we have a similar amendment, which then makes for some confusion. Is it a subamendment or something like that? If we could just start with, you know, where he’s talking about where section 3 is amended and vote on that, get down to the next one. He’s changed 4.2 considerably, and we’re trying to absorb all that.

Then we go to section (b), which is really – I’m trying to learn this very quickly – one of the places where we would like to propose an amendment if we can. Then it gets quite confusing because he’s included the health care community in that amendment, which I think is key to increasing awareness. Could we maybe ask the member if he’s prepared to do that and then start debating each amendment separately?

The Chair: Okay. Hon. member, you’ve heard the request.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, hon. member. I know this is quite confusing. I knew that it would be better if we were to break down each section and talk about that. Absolutely. Let’s do that. Let’s start with the first amendment.

The Chair: Hon. member, if you’re amenable to that, just so we can give other members a chance to speak to your proposals, my suggestion would be that the first portion would become A1A and then A1B. Then under section B – I’ll get to you in just a minute, hon. Government House Leader.

Just to be clear, then, a clarification for the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. If we broke this into section A as a subamendment and then section B as another subamendment, would that deal with your concerns? Then I’ll find out if that’s amendable to the member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chair, I’m going to have to get some advice, obviously, from my House leader and from the table officers because the amendment that we will be proposing is under section 6, which I think possibly. . .

The Chair: That’s referenced under B.

Mrs. Forsyth: We’re actually going to amend 12.1 by striking out – I really would like to get some clarification.

The Chair: Just to be clear, then, hon. member, it sounds to me that what you’re requesting – and again, I’ll clarify if this works with the sponsor – is that section A could be subamendment A1A, and then the portion that’s labelled B would be A1B. We would deal with them in two parts.

Hon. Government House Leader, did you want to chime in before I went back to the Member for Calgary-Foothills?

Mr. Hancock: Well, I think you’ve finally got to it, Mr. Chairman. There are really two amendments here or two pieces to it. It’s one amendment but two pieces: section A, which amends section 3, and section B, which amends section 6. You can split them into two. I know the House is quite keen to deal with this bill, and from what I hear from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, she's got a subamendment to B. You don't actually need to split it to do that. You just move the subamendment to section B. If you want to split them, it's A and B.

The Chair: It's just A and B. That's the proposal at this point.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: All right, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: To be clear, then, the proposal is that you would split this into A1A and A1B, to be voted in two pieces.

Mr. Webber: All right.

The Chair: You can live with that?

Mr. Webber: I can live with that, Mr. Chair, absolutely, whatever can bring clarification to the room here.

The Chair: Wonderful. Thank you.

I'll recognize the next speaker, then. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my honour to rise today and speak to Bill 207. As I said earlier, in the gallery today are two of my friends and constituents, Murray McRae and Melodie Helm. Years ago Murray was diagnosed with a rare degenerative eye condition called keratoconus. This condition causes changes to the structure and curvature of the cornea that often result in a substantial vision loss, streaking, and sensitivity to light. This condition can affect one or both of the eyes. If the condition afflicts both eyes, the deterioration in vision will eventually take away the patient's ability to do everyday things like read a book or drive a car. In 25 per cent of the cases a cornea transplant is eventually needed. Murray found himself among this 25 per cent. Murray needed a transplant in both eyes. Murray has since had cornea transplants in both eyes but does require a second transplant in his left eye. He is told that his turn is imminent, but to reach this point, Murray has had to wait five years.

He knows first-hand what the gift of an organ donation can mean. It is thought that at any point there are around 400 people on a waiting list for some kind of organ or tissue transplant here in the province. It is also known that a person who decides to donate their tissue and organs upon their death has enough usable tissue and organs to save up to 40 lives.

Bill 207 truly means the difference between life and death for many Albertans. For others Bill 207 means the difference between two vastly different qualities of life. As legislators we owe it to Albertans to create the highest quality of life possible for our constituents, and when facing a health crisis, Bill 207 goes a long to make sure that that dream of those constituents becomes a reality.

The barrier in Alberta has often been the absence of a registry system that potential donors can sign up for and make their intentions known while they're still in good health. Murray and Melodie have initiated a golf tournament in central Alberta called the Bionic Golf Tournament in support of human organ and tissue transplants. It began in 2011 and has grown each of the three years since its inception. All of the money raised goes directly to the HOPE program, which stands for human organ procurement and exchange, based out of the University of Alberta hospital.

Organ donation is an issue that doesn't land on many people's radar until it affects them or someone close to them. We need to take a cue from people who have been affected by organ donation and who have been loud and clear over the years like Murray and Melodie and support Bill 207, which aims to create a simple, easy, online registry for organ donation. The donor card system simply creates too much room for error. What if the donor has forgotten to sign his card? What if the donor is not carrying his card at the time of death? Personally, I carry my legion card, and I have signed the organ donation portion on the back, but what happens if this isn't on me when I pass away?

Bill 207 solves these issues and others, and it seems to me that anyone who desires to be an organ donor in death will be successful. This is a simple and doable task which will save and improve lives here in the province. Opportunities for organ donation are relatively rare, and the impact is life-saving. Given the opportunity I'm confident that an unprecedented number of Albertans will answer the noble call to be an organ donor. If 10 people can save 40 lives, imagine the impact of 20 donors, 100 donors, or a thousand donors. The possibilities are truly endless. That is why I'm here supporting Bill 207.

Mr. Chair, I'd like to finish by asking all members of this Assembly, my colleagues, to support this bill so that we can truly make a difference in the lives of Albertans. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to also rise to support Bill 207. First of all, I'd like to start by taking the opportunity to thank and commend the Member for Calgary-Foothills on his hard work and diligence in bringing this important piece of legislation forward. Every year thousands of Albertans and their loved ones wait anxiously on the list for just any kind of word of a possible transplant, and I believe this crucial piece of legislation will help increase organ and tissue donations and decrease preventable deaths. In addition to that, it's brought a lot more awareness to it. How many people do you talk to that, as soon as you bring it up, have not even signed the back of their driver's licence or given much consideration as to whether or not they would be a donor?

Section 7 is the most important part of the act as it makes it mandatory that the medical practitioner consider and document the medical suitability of the deceased person's tissue or organs for transplantation to waiting patients. This will create accountability and ensure full compliance with the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act of 2006. Over the last couple of years waitlists have increased. I've heard from my constituents that standards and guidelines for medical practitioners would greatly help in the decisions regarding suitability for donations.

Again, I thank the member for providing his leadership in introducing Bill 207. Mr. Chair, earlier we heard the Speaker mention that there seemed to be a lot of love in this room. I'm feeling a lot of love on this bill, and all members are very supportive of it. I urge everyone in the Assembly, government members and opposition members, to support this bill and for the government to move immediately to royal assent and proclamation.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others that wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I, too, commend the member for this important advance in medical care for people who have no other option. I will reiterate just a little bit of my comments from before. For the record, there are quite a number of, I guess, chronic illnesses associated with organ failure that are preventable: infectious diseases of the liver, for example; smoking and lung failure; some of the workplace diseases, particularly farmer's lung and coal miner's lung. Some of these that eventually require transplants for organ failure are preventable. Some of the injuries that can occur are associated with active sports. If proper instructions and prevention measures are in place, if education is in place, some of the injured organs can obviously be affected. Perhaps the most common one where lifestyle factors contribute is heart disease, an obvious one. We're seeing dietary and lifestyle choices affecting arterial and cardiac function.

We could be doing so much more than we are in this province, where only 3 per cent of our budget goes into prevention programs, including education. There's a tremendous opportunity here to not only reduce the ongoing health care costs but the need for transplant if we actually implemented some of what we could do in prevention programming from conception: mothers' immunizations, for example, mothers' nutrition, and then lifestyle choices affecting various of the offspring organs.

I want to put a pitch in again for leadership on prevention in this province, where we spend $17 billion patching people up after they break down. Most developed countries are investing much more than 3 per cent of their health budget into prevention programming. We can do more. We must do more. Our health care system will thank us, our population will thank us, and we'll have a quality of family life and community life that will be unparalleled.

Having said that, only one question hasn't been entirely clear to me or discussed, and that is revoking consent. It's not entirely clear to me how one changes one's mind about the decision at one point committed to, and I hope there's a fairly straightforward mechanism for addressing a change of mind, a change of heart, if people have given consent and then decide to revoke that consent. Apart from that I also applaud the work together with Service Alberta and the importance of making this as easy and painless as possible, but again there have to be some checks and balances in order to allow people to change their mind at some point if they decide that for whatever reason they are not comfortable or can't follow through on the commitment of organs that they previously made.

Having said that, I don't think anyone would vote against this important, systematic, evidence-based, and thoughtful approach to both registering and ensuring that the whole health care system is geared to the very complex IT registry issues, communications issues, rapid response issues that have to be involved in these critical life-and-death issues, that are matters of minutes at the time of an accident or injury or an unexpected death. Everything has to be in order or we just lose tremendous opportunities for this life-saving measure.

Again, this caucus will be supporting this bill, and I look forward to rapid proclamation of the bill as well so that things can move forward on an active basis within the health care system.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other comments on the amendment? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would also like to commend the member for putting forward this bill. I've heard a lot of great comments from him regarding this bill, and I realize the passion that he has with this bill, and I think it's great. From our conversations around the room, I don't see anybody who would be opposed to this.

I know that in my small town I had a young gentleman who had some really significant heart changes and waited for years to try to find a new heart. Actually, it came a little bit late. He ended up passing away, but if there would have been access to a heart across the province or across the country, a little bit more access, it hopefully would have helped the situation. I also know another gentleman – I believe he's from Medicine Hat – that had a double lung transplant. We hear some good stories, and we hear too many bad stories about not being able to have access to organs that could have been donated. I think it's, you know, great to see, and it's something that will help everybody in Alberta and, hopefully, across the country. I can speak for myself, and I'm in full support of this member's bill. Hopefully, we can get it passed and totally completed and get it out into the public so everybody can start benefiting from it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I actually have a few questions that I'm looking to be clarified by the hon. member. The first question that I have is: what is the process if a registry owner does not necessarily believe in this bill and chooses not to comply? I have that question.

With the Alberta health care card, for those of us who signed the back of our Alberta health care card as a donor, when we go to the hospital and present our Alberta health care card, is there the potential for those people who self-declare to be added to the registry at some point in time? Are you considering that, or is that further down the road?

A third question. A lot of us maybe don't carry our actual Alberta health care card, where you actually declare that you're a donor, but we do carry the plastic hospital card. I know that in my region we still have the plastic hospital card, so you don't actually have to carry your Alberta health care card. I'm just wondering: if the government decides to implement this bill, would there be the ability to self-declare somehow at the hospital and to be added to the registry or on the back of that card or something that would improve your chances of getting more people onto the registry?

I would like to speak to this bill, but I'm just wondering if you can answer those questions first.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: All right. Well, thank you, hon. member, for those questions. Again, I apologize for the amendments. I maybe was not that clear, but I think that if we do go through each and every amendment, we should be able to get through this without pain.

With regard to your questions, hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, for most of the details that will occur with the registry, those decisions will be made after this bill is passed, and the consultation period will then come and continue on.

This bill is the first step. Once the agency is implemented, then we're going to bring back the health care communities. The committee that I sat on over the summer: many of those members will come back, and we'll discuss the details that you're asking about with regard to registry owners. If they don't agree with wanting to participate: that's a very good question. That is something that will have to be talked about in the future, down the road.

Health care cards added to the registry: absolutely. It is difficult to determine who has signed the back of the cards until they show their cards. I personally think that signing the back of the health care card will sort of phase out and that individuals will go directly to the registry to indicate their intent and their consent to donate. That's what I would like to see because, basically, I think that signing the back of health care cards is prehistoric, and we need to move to a better system than that. Likewise with hospital cards. There are many venues that we can go to and tap into individuals to ask them whether or not they want to be organ and tissue donors. This is just the start, the identification cards and the drivers' licences. Perhaps down the road we can implement other ways of asking individuals whether they want to be donors or not.

This is an evolving agency. It's going to take time to evolve, to have it run smoothly. It's going to take time, and it's going to take steps. Right now I'm more concerned about passing this bill so that we can implement this agency, and then they can start to delve into the details.

Thank you for those questions.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak on this bill, including, I believe, amendment A1A. I need to get some clarification from the hon. member. I understand this because, like he, I'm anxious to get it passed. I, as he is well aware, brought forward a private member's bill. It went to the committee, and then another private member's bill came from, I believe, two or three other members from the government in regard to organ donation.

I truly, truly think we have wasted so much time, when this bill could have been proclaimed five years ago. I would love to think how many organs could have been donated while the government sits on this. Now, there have been – what? – four, to my knowledge, private members' bills that have been passed on this in particular that are stuck in limbo somewhere. For me and, I'm sure, for this member it's quite frustrating because I know how passionate he is.

The questions that we're asking and trying to get some clarification on are on the comments that you've been making since we've been debating this bill, for the last hour or so, questions that the online registry team or group, I guess, if you want to call it that, is going to be dealing with when these questions come to them. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake talked about: what if you have a registry that for religious reasons or whatever reasons refuses to do that? How are you going to deal with that? That is a very important question.

You talk about the Alberta health care card. I signed my health care card – I don't know – umpteen million years ago. I've been an organ donor probably longer than some of these people that are in the House, which is embarrassing for me to say. What about the FOIP legislation? Has anybody checked with the FOIP commissioner in regard to the privacy issue of the health care cards? Is she aware of the situation, and is she onside with it? There have been, quite frankly, many, many, Albertans that have signed their Alberta health care card and are assuming that that health card is going to be their permission to donate their organs and who may not even think about registering online.

One of the amendments that we're going to talk about later: you talk about if the person doesn't drive and that you've made an amendment with regard to the identification card. Fine. Some people get identification cards. What about talking to the family doctor and initiating the family doctor's having some sort of a discussion in regard to signing up on the online registry? The government has mentioned in this Legislature before about how they are educating the health care professionals in regard to immunization. Why can't we look at that?

Member, you know, we are going to be supporting your amendments. We're like you. If this bill goes through the House today and we get to Committee of the Whole this afternoon and you get into third reading tonight, then you're on your way to proclamation, which I think is great. I guess, for me, that when you talked about the cost and you said that you didn't care what it costs, I agree with you. I mean, $21 million in the budget that we're seeing that this government has is peanuts, quite frankly. The cost to the system, as up front as it may seem, is going to be down the road a lot less.

I mean, I had a cousin that waited for a double transplant, who ended up in the hospital for months and months and months waiting for a donation and, unfortunately, didn't get it. I'm dealing with a friend right now, a very, very, very close friend of mine, that has got a 1 per cent chance of survival. He's in the Foothills at this particular time. He knows it's his time. We've talked. But I don't know, as much as I love his family, if they've even considered the idea of approaching him in regard to organ donation. You get into that fine line of seeing your dad lying on a bed and looking pretty good. He's now given a 1 per cent chance of survival, and he's made the decision in his life that he wants to move into the palliative care program. Then again, whose responsibility is it to approach him to see if he's got some organs or, for that matter, some tissue?

There are so many things. My concern, quite frankly, to the Member for Calgary-Foothills, is: is this bill, once it's been proclaimed, going to spend all of its time where the other bills are that have been proclaimed that have never been passed into law? The government can do this huge news release and say: Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, has passed through the Legislature. And it sits and sits and sits because it's never gotten royal assent. I'm sure, knowing you as well as I do, of how diligent you will be in forcing your government to have the LG in and get it done and then follow through with your agency in getting all of the i's dotted and the t's crossed. So you can say by the end of the year, which would be virtually impossible, to my knowledge, because you've got lots to do, hopefully by the middle of next year, that this agency is up and running, that it's got its dollars, and that it's making progress. When we come back into session, you can sit back and tell us the progress of what has happened with all of the hard work that has been put into this bill for many years.

I'm going to suggest, if I may, that we start on amendment A1A and call the question, and as we get down to A1B, which the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has some questions on, we're going to be providing a subamendment – sorry; I have to sign the subamendment – to make your bill stronger, obviously, so that we can move forward on this and get on to some of the more contentious or more questionable pieces on A1B. Then we can get to section B, where we want to propose a subamendment so that we can get this through the House as quickly as possible.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you. First of all, I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this bill forward. Most of us spoke to this bill in second reading, and it was very passionate. I have to say that when I knew this bill was coming up today, I went back and read what I had said then, and while that all still stands today, I am still so incredibly moved by what the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti had to say.

Over the summer, when I was meeting with constituents, I shared parts of your story when people said that they weren't sure about why they would make this decision. I shared your whole story with my husband. As many of you know, I spoke in this House before about my husband being one of those people who are fearful of this bill. He was moved by your story. It was interesting. He said that one of the things that he hoped never to have to do is to be in the position that you were in. But he was also moved that you were so selfless to actually take that position and save so many other people.

While I'm sure he won't admit it, I'm pretty sure I've changed, and I think that even in those comments that day I said that I would win, and I did, so it was a good day. One of the things that he mentioned to me about that conversation on the discussion: at which point do you have it, and how do you alleviate fears that are legitimate fears? I've always been a donor, just like the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I've been a donor since the time I turned 18. From the minute I got an Alberta health care card, I signed it. I liked it at one point in time when I thought the drivers' licences would have that on there as well. I had said to my husband at that point in time that when and if that ever happens to me or to someone I know very closely, he's going to probably have to help me or make that decision himself, and I hoped that he would honour my wishes.

Before your story came to him, one of the things that he mentioned was the fear, the legitimate fear for some, that organ donation really means a quicker death. I think that most of us understand that that's not the case. My experience with health care professionals, physicians, and having been an employee of David Thompson health region for a long time is that our health care professionals are not trying to quicken death or hasten death in any way, shape, or form. What they're trying to do is take the best of a bad situation and ensure that those who are waiting on a very long list get the organs that they so desperately need so that no more have to die than is absolutely necessary. In every occasion, as I understand it, they go out of their way to ensure that the organ donation is at the absolute last point.

I think the story that you shared with us identified that in such a personal way. I also think that that experience you had and that you shared so eloquently with us and so personally with us also showed us that it's a very scary decision to have to make but that between yourself, your family, and health care professionals you at this point in time are comfortable with that decision and know that it was the best decision possible for yourself and your family. I appreciate your helping to educate us and helping to educate all Albertans on exactly what this process was like. Thank you for that.

About eight years ago a friend of ours went through a heart transplant, and I have to admit I didn't have a true appreciation for what that was like. He was mid-60s, he'd had heart disease for a long, long time, and stayed on a transplant list for a long, long time. You know, he went through periods of ups and downs, where he was told he could get a heart transplant, then he was told he didn't qualify. He'd get close to getting a transplant, and then he'd get sick and get pulled off the list. I remember him expressing supreme frustration with that process. There was no ability for him to push people to any registry. There was no ability to share with people what needed to be done. Eventually he did get his heart transplant in his mid-60s and, sadly, only lived six months, but I can tell you that those six months for him were life-saving because he'd spent a good five years at least with severe heart disease and was struggling quite a bit.

His family expressed many times that they had wished that there was somewhere they could go where each and every one of them could register, where each and every one of them could make their wishes known very clearly and very succinctly: I want to be a donor. I think that that's what this registry does. This registry allows everybody to self-declare. It allows you to walk up and actually say: I choose this. It allows you to open up a frank discussion with your family about why you're choosing to donate your organs and how you choose that process.

My constituency assistant also confided in me in the last couple of weeks that her grandfather is on the transplant list. Unfortunately, he's been told that he will not receive an organ at all because of his advanced age. And while he knows that, she is a strong advocate for organ donation. She walks every year in the hundred-kilometre walk, and she's been doing that for, you know, five or six years. I applaud her. I sat with her. It's a very emotional journey for anybody who's going through this process. She also expressed support for this bill and also hoped that I would support it and hopes that everybody in this House passes this bill.

I'd like to just take a moment to read a letter that I received today from a constituent about your bill. She has asked for me specifically to read it in the House and to let you know of her support. She says: "My husband and I are business owners and leaders in our community. We are heavily involved in volunteerism in our community and surrounding area. Among various groups we volunteer, and I have been with the victims services unit with our local RCMP detachment for the last four years. We understand our duty to serve, and we take this seriously as do all of our five adult children, who've spent countless hours keeping our community running. I am 51 years old, and I am currently in end-stage renal disease due to an autosomal dominant genetic disorder. I will start dialysis soon, but unfortunately my health care team has assured me that I will not live long enough to reach the top of the transplant list. I cannot believe this is happening to me. Please support Bill 207. Myself and my family need your help."

The time to act is now. Albertans need a Provincially coordinated Organ and Tissue Donation Agency that is well funded and accountable.

Bill 207 brings hope to thousands of families and friends touched by the need for organ and tissue donation. I urge the Government of Alberta to pass Bill 207 and put their full weight behind implementing an Organ and Tissue Donation Agency.

An organ and tissue donation agency will:

- Create a well-funded, accountable provincial agency to manage all aspects of the donation process across the province
- Establish ongoing provincial public awareness campaigns [and]
- Establish an electronic Consent to Donate registry.

In just this past year, 72 Albertans needlessly died for their gift of life. On average, 1 Albertan dies about every 5 days waiting for an organ to become available. Of the top 12 countries ranked for organ donation, Canada sits at 10th. While once the leader in organ donation in Canada, Alberta now has the lowest rate of organ donation in Canada.

In the world, I think she means.

We can do better.

Organ donation not only saves lives, it returns critically ill individuals to active and productive members of our communities.

We need action! Please put your full weight of support behind passing and implementing Bill 207.

I couldn't have said it better myself. Clearly, this is somebody who is absolutely in the stages and on the list. I don't know what I would do if my children or my husband were told: this is your outcome, and I can do nothing to help you.

The only other thing that I would add to what she has so eloquently said in this letter is that it's one thing to pass a bill, one thing to say that we all agree in this House today or tomorrow, whenever this happens, that this bill is right for Alberta. It's one thing for all of us to stand up and talk in support of this bill. It's a whole other thing to stand up and actually proclaim this bill. We sit so few days in this Legislature, and Bill 207, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, deserves the full weight of every single member in this House to see it proclaimed quickly. Even with all of the business on the table it would seem to me that Bill 207 should have no problem not only being accepted by this House, not only being supported by all of our members but also being proclaimed in a relatively short period of time.

We know the government has the power to move bills through. We've seen it before. We know the government has the power to absolutely do it in an amazing amount of time. Today the government has the support, I believe, of all the opposition parties for this bill. There is the ability today or tomorrow or fairly quickly to pass this bill, and then there's the absolute ability for the Premier of this province to stand up and do the right thing and proclaim it immediately after it is passed.

Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: The question has been called on amendment A1A.

[Motion on amendment A1A carried]

The Chair: We're now debating A1B. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: I believe we have a subamendment to that.

Mrs. Forsyth: No. That's on section B.

The Chair: We're now on B, hon. member. Would you like to speak to B? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on subamendment A1B.

Mrs. Forsyth: This is B on this side, too?

The Chair: That's correct.

Mrs. Forsyth: Oh, good. Okay. Sorry. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we would like to propose a subamendment if we can, please. You've seen us back and forth with the Member for Calgary-Foothills to make sure that we're all on the same page. I have the subamendment. I would like to have it passed around if I may.

The Chair: Okay. If you would send the original to me and have the others sent around, please. Thank you. We'll ask the pages to distribute them. Maybe just pause for a minute, hon. member, while we get those circulated so that others can see what we're talking about.

You can speak to the amendment, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to move subamendment – what are we? A3?

The Chair: A1B-SA1.

Mrs. Forsyth: I didn't hear that, but I'm pleased to move subamendment A1B. Under "Section 6 is amended in the proposed section 12.1(2)," the member originally had been striking out clauses (b) and (c) and substituting the following. The current amendment reads: "(b) educate the public and health care community and increase their awareness respecting tissue, organ and body donation." In the subamendment that we're proposing, first of all, we're going to strike out "and increase their awareness respecting tissue, organ and body donation," substituting "and work with health professionals and their respective organizations to increase awareness about human tissue and organ donation in Alberta."

I have spoken to the Member for Calgary-Foothills, and we're both passionate about it. I truly appreciate what he was talking about when I went over and talked to him about the health care community because he was looking at the agencies and the cancer boards and things like that that are out there. I was concerned about our health care professionals, which are doctors and nurses and all of the health care professionals that do such a good job on a daily basis. We've both come to an agreement, so I'm going to ask everybody in the Assembly to accept that subamendment.

The Chair: The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't have any issues with this amendment to the amendment, hon. member. I guess I originally was concerned with the fact that you are not including the health care community, which I had in my amendment here, but when I read this, it says "and work with health professionals and their respective organizations," and to me that basically is the health care community. I don't have any issues with your amendment to the amendment, and I would support that.

Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: I appreciate what the hon. member is saying. I think probably as a member of the government – and we've read it into Hansard that we've both made it very, very clear that we want the health care communities to be consulted as well as our health care professionals. I know full well that this member is probably – I would hope that the Premier appoints him to the advisory committee in some major role so that he can carry forward the issues that have been raised in this Legislature. I have no doubt that will help.

I'm not sure if anyone else wants to speak. If not, I'd like to call the question.

The Chair: The question, then, has been called, hon. members, on subamendment A1B-SA1 as proposed by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

[Motion on subamendment A1B-SA1 carried]

The Chair: Now we will vote on amendment A1B as amended.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1B carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader, please.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Given the time and the couple of pieces of work that still need to be done, I regretfully have to move that the committee rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 207. I wish to table copies of the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That is carried. So ordered.

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Evening Sitings

37. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the 2013 fall sitting unless on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
This motion is not debatable.

[Government Motion 37 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Committee Membership Changes

38. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that the following changes to
- (a) the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund be approved: that Mr. Amery replace Mr. Sandhu;
  - (b) the Standing Committee on Private Bills be approved: that Mr. Allen replace Mr. Webber;
  - (c) the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing be approved: that Mr. Goudreau replace hon. Ms Jansen, that Mrs. Fritz replace Mr. Sandhu;
  - (d) the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be approved: that Mr. Webber replace Mr. Allen, that Mr. Luan replace Mr. Goudreau;
  - (e) the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services be approved: that Mr. Young replace Mr.

Rogers, that Mr. Young replace Mr. Rogers as deputy chair, that Mrs. Fritz replace hon. Mr. Fraser.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a number of appointments to cabinet, et cetera, so there's some need to change some of the standing committees of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
Hon. members, this motion is not debatable.

[Government Motion 38 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Committee Membership Changes

39. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that the following changes to
- (a) the Standing Committee on Families and Communities be approved: that Mr. Allen replace hon. Mr. Fraser, that Mr. Khan replace Mr. Goudreau, that Ms Calahasen replace hon. Ms Jansen;
  - (b) the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship be approved: that Mr. Goudreau replace Mr. Allen;
  - (c) the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee be approved: that Mr. Luan replace Mr. Allen as chair, that Mr. Dorward replace Mr. Luan as deputy chair, that Ms Kubinec replace Mr. Allen.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move Government Motion 39 in the same vein, that some changes need to be made, in this case to the standing committees of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are amendments that are going to be proposed to that. They'll be moved by the deputy whip. They're at the table, so if the deputy whip has one in hand, he'll know it. There are just some late changes that were to be made, but otherwise I would ask that the House approve these changes to the special standing committees of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
This motion is debatable. I'll just have those circulated, and then we'll deal with the changes as proposed.

Mr. Dorward: Regarding Government Motion 39, I move Government Motion 39 be amended as follows, that, number one, clause (a) is struck out and the following is substituted:

- (a) the Standing Committee on Families and Communities be approved: that Mr. Khan replace hon. Mr. Fraser, Mr. Xiao replace hon. Ms Jansen.

And, two, clause (b) is struck out.

The Deputy Speaker: All right.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Government Motion 39. I'm really referring to subclause (c), which states that Luan would replace Allen – I'm reading from here; I don't think that violates our code or whatever – Dorward replaces Luan as deputy chair, and then Kubinec replaces Allen on the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee.

What I take exception to is the fact that – we have these all-party committees. Obviously, the government members dominate those committees. They're able to push forward every single piece of legislation or amendment to legislation they so choose. I'm on this particular committee where all the government MLAs are voting one way. It seems that there isn't much process in terms of having opposing viewpoints.

We've seen other committees such as the Public Accounts Committee, for example, which is chaired by an opposition member, the Member for Airdrie. That committee in particular has been working very well. You know, it allows a little bit of a balance. Of course, government members will still have the ultimate authority. They still have the majority of members on that particular committee, the Public Accounts Committee, but having an opposition presence, either in the chair or the deputy chair position on these committees, allows for a little bit of balancing. We see this in other jurisdictions, whether it be provincial Legislatures or parliament.

I'm going to suggest that this is a type of balance that's needed. We've seen a government, that's been in power for over 42 years, that likes to cut the corners in terms of having free debate and the opposition questioning their decisions. I think this is another example. Having a committee that deals with ethics but not having any type of opposition member either in the chair or the deputy chair position, I think, hinders the ability of this particular committee to go ahead and do its work. I question the reason – we're dealing with a subamendment right now, I believe – why this government won't simply alter its position on these committee positions, put an opposition member as a chair or deputy chair, and see how it works.

It's worked for the Public Accounts Committee. I think they get a lot of good work done. It's very thorough. There are various experts that come and present to the committee. The chair of that committee, I think, gets along quite well with the deputy chair, who is in fact a member of government. It's a good to-and-fro discussion in that particular committee. Why can't we have that same type of robust discussion and debate in the ethics legislation?

This specific committee, the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, is dealing with ethics. We've seen again and again various ethics violations. The Ethics Commissioner has found violations in his most recent ruling. We see that the Premier herself is under a direct investigation by the Ethics Commissioner. In those circumstances one would suggest that there should be at least some level of neutrality there, and I think that neutrality would be done by having a member of the opposition be either the chair or deputy chair of that particular committee.

When you look at the amendments, for example, that were put forward on that particular committee – I believe there were several or perhaps dozens of amendments that were recommended to be made to the legislation, that were put forward by the opposition – virtually every single one was voted down. Obviously, the government members have the majority on that, so that's their prerogative to do that. They do as they please on that committee.

What's the big deal of having either the chair or deputy chair, which is primarily just a function of creating agendas, ensuring that individuals have the ability to participate in the committee meetings, those types of what I would call rudimentary aspects of committee work – I think that this government's ignoring of precedents in other jurisdictions, that actually have opposition members as chairs of particular committees, is quite telling. I think it's telling of a government that's been in power for 42 years, a government that's arrogant about the role and responsibility of the Official Opposition and other members, and I think that by the continuation of not instituting a particular precedent, that's done in other jurisdictions, it's really demeaning the role of opposition MLAs.

I see that there are, obviously, other amendments that have been put forward on different committees, but I would like to focus primarily on clause (c). The reason I'm focusing on that particular clause is because it's dealing with ethics legislation, and the role of that committee is actually to put forward recommendations for the act. I used a very interesting term of what that act is in its current state.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hancock: Yes. On several occasions I understand the hon. member to indicate that he wants to speak to clause (c), but we're actually speaking to a subamendment that deals with clauses (a) and (b). It does not deal with clause (c), so that would perhaps be better reserved for another portion of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

Hon. member, if you'd keep your comments to the clauses that we're debating on this amendment. You can come back to (c) later.

Debate Continued

Mr. Saskiw: Sure. Just with respect to the particular amendment that was put forward – I guess it's signed by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview – obviously, we just received this amendment tonight here and have had limited time to review it. Of course, we'd like to see these type of amendments come forward in advance. This isn't government legislation. Why aren't amendments given to the opposition in advance? We saw this, actually, even with the previous bill, Bill 207. It would have been nice just to see them in advance so we can analyze the particular amendment, make sure that it's in accordance with what we believe in, but instead we get these types of amendments at the last minute. This government has known, perhaps, what it was going to do on this particular amendment for some time now, but instead we get this last-second amendment on a government motion, and these motions are very important.

I think, you know, the Standing Committee on Families and Communities, which is outlined in this subamendment that was put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and actually, I believe, moved by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, this particular committee, is very important. Obviously, they do a lot of good work. My understanding is that they've met on regular occasions throughout the summer. I was part of this committee for a short period of time. We'd like to know what the reason and rationale for these particular changes is. We'd have liked to see this in advance to know how these particular individuals are going to benefit that committee because, of course, these committees benefit all Albertans.

When you look at the Standing Committee on Families and Communities, this particular amendment replaces two hon. members. We'd like to see this in advance so we could weigh the costs and benefits of these types of replacements to see what backgrounds and knowledge bases those individuals have in terms of applying their skills to a particular committee.

In addition, it looks like they've decided to strike out clause (b). Clause (b), in the original government motion, states that Goudreau is replacing Allen on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. Actually, in this instance I'd have to agree with clause (b) being struck out. I think the member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, you know, is obviously from Fort McMurray, has a particular skill set in resources, and has a knowledge base in those areas. On that particular subamendment subsection (2) states that clause (b) is to be struck out. I agree with that subamendment to the main amendment because I think that particular member, being from the north, being from the oil sands region, would have that knowledge base on resource stewardship.

I understand that there may have been a reason. It would be nice to know what the rationale for the change was. The original motion had Goudreau replacing Allen, so it would be nice to know what the rationale was for maintaining the status quo. What was the reason for replacing him to begin with? If he was doing his job on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, what was the impetus for the government to put this replacement forward? What was the impetus for reversing it? But, you know, overall I do agree that clause (b) should be struck out.

Going back to clause (a), on the Standing Committee on Families and Communities, it would be interesting to see what the rationale from the Government House Leader is in terms of why these particular individuals are more suited to perform the role on the Standing Committee on Families and Communities. It looks like, just from the names on this replacement, perhaps it's because the two individuals who are being replaced are now in cabinet or are assistant ministers. You know, we have a minister for everything in this government. I think 48 per cent of the PC MLAs are in cabinet. It's kind of a unique situation in Canada when you have so many cabinet ministers and so many titles.

It seems that because of all of these different, new titles that are coming up, these individuals that are being replaced were elevated there, and now members of government who are not in cabinet are in fact replacing those individuals. I'm guessing that's the reason these changes are being made. It would be interesting to know why the government felt these two particular individuals had the requisite skill set to deal with the Standing Committee on Families and Communities. What are their backgrounds? What's the rationale for these changes?

These committees are important. They do a lot of good work. You know, unlike the Legislature, where individuals don't come to provide their expertise, these types of committees can call in experts from all across the country to look at best practices, to ensure that we here in Alberta are adhering to those best practices. So we think these committees are vitally important, and we think the composition of these committees is important as well.

Mr. Speaker, while I do support subsection (2), which has clause (b) being struck out, I'm a little uncertain about clause (a) being struck out and substituted for something else. I don't necessarily know the skill set of these individuals, and I'd like to know more from the Government House Leader about why these particular individuals would be best suited for this committee.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: And we'll ask the Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to the subamendment. Obviously, after a great deal of thinking about it, the hon. member realized that members of cabinet are not usually appointed to committees, although they sometimes are, and there's no reason why they can't be. Obviously, the reason those two members are being replaced is because they have been appointed to cabinet.

I find it interesting that the hon. member would make such comments about their appointments given that the people that he's talking about were appointed as associate ministers for flood recovery, a very, very important aspect of what's happened in Alberta over the last four months, and that he would be critical of the idea that there be cabinet ministers appointed specifically to deal with southwestern Alberta and southeastern Alberta and the High River area to actually focus on the issues and be on the ground there. I find that very surprising.

When he's talking about the number of cabinet ministers and the reason why these particular members have been appointed to cabinet – or one of them. The other one was appointed to cabinet to be an associate minister in the Human Services department to focus specifically on the issues of sexual violence against children and the trafficking of human beings, an appointment that the Premier made which I think was quite remarkable actually, the only one in Canada, to really show that focus and put that focus on the full spectrum of violence, particularly against children, the full spectrum from bullying right to sexual violence. That's a remarkable thing.

But all of that I say just in response to what the hon. member raised about not understanding why we're replacing them. It isn't actually that normal for us to debate the membership of committees in this House. Normally we pass them because our time-honoured tradition is that we ask the opposition to nominate the people that they want to nominate for committees, and we put them in the motion, and we put the people from the government caucus that we want to have on the committees, and the committees are in proportional representation to the membership.

Having said all of that, I understand that there may be a technical issue with the amendment. Therefore, it would be prudent to move that we adjourn debate at this particular moment and move on to Bill 31 so that we can accommodate the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who would like to speak to that before we adjourn at 6 o'clock.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you're moving that we adjourn debate on this motion?

Mr. Hancock: Yes.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Essentially, Mr. Speaker, Bill 31 establishes the Alberta environmental monitoring, evaluation and reporting agency, more commonly called AEMERA. This will be the voice of authority when it comes to monitoring and reporting on the conditions of Alberta's environment.

In Alberta's true pioneering fashion, this arm's-length organization will be the first of its kind in Canada. Bill 31 lays the foundation for how this agency will operate: its powers, duties, and functions. It will be governed by a board of directors and led by a CEO. There will also be a science advisory panel within the agency. Their purpose is to ensure AEMERA's programs, practices, and procedures are credible and scientifically sound.

As most members in this House know, there is always increasing demand for development of our energy resources, and its effect on the environment is very real. This has resulted in increased international scrutiny on natural resource development in the province, especially in the oil sands region. To help boost confidence in the provincial monitoring system and to reassure all of our consumers here and abroad, Alberta remains committed to sustainable resource management.

Mr. Speaker, a lot of hard work has gone into the creation of this agency. This all began in 2011 with the report entitled A World Class Environmental Monitoring Evaluation and Reporting System for Alberta: the Report of the Alberta Environmental Monitoring Panel. We took quick action to work on the recommendations from the report, and over the last year government has made several announcements regarding the move to an integrated resource management system and enhanced environmental monitoring.

In February of 2012 the governments of Canada and Alberta moved forward on the joint Canada-Alberta implementation plan for oil sands monitoring.

In March of 2012 a group of experts was asked to provide government detailed advice on establishing a province-wide comprehensive environmental monitoring system. The group submitted its report to government in June of 2012, and the primary recommendation was to create an arm's-length agency to oversee environmental monitoring across the province, beginning in the oil sands region.

In October 2012 our government accepted all of the recommendations of the report. An independent board was created to immediately begin work to set up the new system and agency. The team of scientific, academic, and business experts has done an excellent job in giving us recommendations to create an organization that will oversee an improved monitoring system, a system that includes looking at analyzing and reporting on air, water, land, and biodiversity; hence, Bill 31 and the creation of AEMERA.

This agency will be a significant part of Alberta's integrated resource management framework. Initially the agency will begin its work in the oil sands region and will assume responsibility on behalf of the government for the joint Alberta-Canada monitoring program. While it will initially begin its work with a focus on the oil sands, eventually this agency will look at the entire province. With science at its core the information AEMERA will provide will be credible, relevant, and focused.

To be clear, AEMERA has no regulatory or enforcement role. As the very name suggests, their mandate is to monitor, to evaluate, and to report. They are a data-producing agency, data that is vital to the official decision-making process when it comes to natural resource development projects. This very same information will be provided to the public. Open and easy access to information allows people to form their own opinions and to ask questions. Alberta has nothing to hide and much to gain from informed discussions on these issues. In fact, we encourage debate so people can better understand resource development, including oil sands industry performance and oversight.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to realize that the work of AEMERA will not replace any required monitoring and reporting by companies. Industry will still be required to do this under Alberta's stringent regulations. AEMERA's work on cumulative effects monitoring will complement the required work of the companies.

Mr. Speaker, establishing the agency is another step by this government to assure future generations from here and around the world that Alberta will continue to enjoy its natural resources for work, for development, and for enjoyment. This is yet another step that this government has taken and our Premier has taken to demonstrate to Albertans and the world that we are committed to environmental stewardship and responsible resource development.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I am pleased to be able to rise to begin debate on Bill 31. You know, there's no question that the objective of the bill, as stated by the minister, is something that probably most of us in this Assembly can agree on. My concern, having reviewed the bill in some detail, is that the agency which the minister is proposing to set up, at least as one can contemplate it under the legislation that we have before us, is not, unfortunately, the vehicle through which we're going to be able to achieve these objectives.

I think probably the best way to go about this is to go back a few years and review some of the history. It was interesting that the minister chose to start the history from the spring of 2011. I choose to go back a little bit further. I was first elected in 2008. I won't go past that. I could actually go back 25 years. There was a time, in fact, when I remember my father in this House raising concerns about air quality and water quality in the oil sands in the early '70s and being assured in a very sort of patronizing way that everything was just okely-dokely.

Fast-forward to 2008, 2009, and the early part of 2010. I, too, would occasionally get up in this House and ask this government and representatives of this government and typically the minister of environment about concerns that were being raised repeatedly by members of the community in and around the lower Athabasca region about the safety of the industrial activity there and its impact on the air, land, and water upon which they all relied.

Repeatedly I was again reassured with the greatest of confidence and the occasional bit of a patronizing tone that everything was just fine up there and that if I just was a little bit smarter and knew my portfolio a little bit more, I would understand that, you know, tar and toxins that were found in the water were naturally occurring, and it's just because I didn't understand oil and gas enough to know that, in fact, it was all safe and it was all natural and everything was unfolding exactly the way it should be. I remember being assured of that repeatedly. You know, if you get condescendingly told that you don't know what you're talking about enough times, you notice that that's being said. You might not think I hear that, but I do hear it.

That being said, though, thank goodness that people far more credible than me finally weighed in on the debate, and I refer in particular, of course, to that eminent personality, Dr. David Schindler, someone to whom all Albertans owe a tremendous debt. In August of 2010 he released his long-awaited report, a report, interestingly, that was not terribly funded by local funders, into the state of industrial impact on the air, land, and water in and around the lower Athabasca region. Because he was such a pre-eminent person, everyone had to listen. His report concluded, of course, that, no, it was not all naturally occurring and that, in fact, significant and notable damage to the air, land, and water, to a level that was a risk for both plants and animals and people, was in fact occurring in the lower Athabasca region.

Now, as a result of that, everyone started scurrying to take some more looks at that, and a couple of months later the royal conservatory of scientists, I believe, a Canadian consortium of leading scientists on the matter, put out a report which mostly focused on how the monitoring process that had been in place at that point, one that we all referred to as RAMP, had failed abysmally to provide any real guidance or information that was of value to scientists on whether or not industrial activity in the lower Athabasca region was negatively impacting the air, land, and water in that area.

So that report came out, and then at that point the government had to scurry some more, and they actually, probably for the first and perhaps the only time in this process, went directly to some scientists and set up a committee. It was a water monitoring committee. They reviewed the findings of the royal conservatory and also Dr. Schindler's findings, and they concluded that, yeah, indeed, there was, in fact, a fair amount of damage. There was evidence of non-naturally occurring toxins in the air, land, and water in and around the lower Athabasca region. I believe it was that report, not the royal conservatory's, but I might be getting the two confused.

The other thing that I found profoundly important to this discussion in particular was that they said: you know, we just don't really know how government could ever have assured Albertans that there was no negative impact by industry on the lower Athabasca region's air, land, and water, because, quite honestly, there is no data on it, and no one ever actually asked the right questions. It made me think: jeez, I go back to two years ago, and I didn't apparently know anything about anything when I asked those questions, but the ministers knew everything about everything, and they could completely assure us that nothing bad was happening. Then, lo and behold, we find out that the very scientists and the very staff in whom all of us have been putting our public trust hadn't even asked the darn question.

I think it's really important for us to understand that this is the history that then led to the government's need to create this agency. It is, unfortunately, a history of a broken trust, a broken trust with the people who live in and around that community, a broken trust with the rest of Albertans, who are concerned about preserving the integrity of our environment, and, quite frankly, a broken trust with industry as well. That was one of a number of things that continue to contribute to the undermining of our industry's credibility on the international stage. Let me just say very clearly here that our industry's credibility on the international stage, our so-called social licence – I know that's the new term that everyone wants to talk about – is not something you earn by putting out press releases and going through the motions. That's something you earn by doing what you say you will do and actually providing the details for how that will happen.

That's where I come to a little bit of a problem with this legislation. I'm afraid this legislation really looks more like we're going through the motions. It looks a little bit more like a public-relations exercise, and there are guarantees that are absent from this legislation.

[Mr. Casey in the chair]

Now, I will say, with no disrespect to the current minister – it's not by any means a personal thing – that based on the history of this government on this file as well as on any other file, when it comes to balancing the public interest around ensuring and preserving the integrity and the safety of our air, land, and water, around ensuring and preserving the opportunity for our indigenous communities and all other community members to participate in a fulsome way, where their voice is equal to that of industry, when it comes to ensuring that and balancing that against the right of industry to develop as fast as humanly possible, the fact of the matter is that this government has never achieved a proper balance. They have yet to achieve a proper balance.

For the government to then come into this Assembly and bring to us a piece of legislation that essentially can be wrapped up with two words, trust us – trust us; here are the most skeletal, bare bones of a piece of legislation; we're not going to tell you who's going to be appointed, we're not going to tell you the criteria for who will be appointed, we're not going to specify scientific standards, and we are going to make sure that almost every critical element of this agent's functioning remains under the thumb of the minister; trust us – that, Mr. Speaker, cannot work given the deplorable record of this government on this file.

When all of this stuff first came out, everybody came together and said: we need independent scientific review. Key people said to me: scientific review. But this agency doesn't give us scientific review. It gives us a whole schwaack of people who aren't criminals. I'm happy to hear that. I believe the absence of a criminal offence is criteria in this legislation. That's pleasing, but I could have seen a little more detail, Mr. Speaker.

We've got a bunch of folks who very likely, based on past behaviours, will be friends and insiders of this Tory government and/or industry, and those people will then appoint a scientific panel. As far as we know, we don't have any idea what a scientific panel means. Who is qualified to be a scientist? Whether they're a scientist of physics but are now working in their retirement as a consultant for CAPP – well, I guess that could be a scientific panel member. You know, you think I'm being facetious, but if you look at the history of this government and who they appoint to these things, if anything, that's not a facetious statement; that's a prediction. That's what many people would put money on.

You know, we look at some of the things that have happened just most recently. Even in the process of trying to establish an independent group of people to oversee the establishment of this monitoring agency, this government went off and appointed a fellow, Bruce Carson, who had a blatant conflict of interest in his position and, of course, was very much attached to the oil and gas industry. Of course, he had to ultimately resign. Even on this very one, their go-to place was to appoint somebody who really had no credibility on the environmental file but did have a lot to gain personally for his industry and had a long relationship with the oil and gas industry.

More broadly, we have the spectre of the Alberta Energy Regulator. Even though it comes under the Ministry of Energy, we know that essentially that is the go-to environmental protection agency for all that has to do with oil and gas and energy production in this province. Who is the chair of that? Well, honestly, I would have a year and a half ago thought it was facetious to say: hey, they're going to appoint the past chair of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers to chair this environmental regulatory agency. Not facetious anymore, Mr. Speaker. Uh-uh. In fact, that's the record.

Then: well, don't worry too much about the fact that that's who the chair is because our CEO is a former deputy minister. Great. Well, here's what a recent judge had to say about the record of that former deputy minister.

It is difficult to envision a more direct apprehension of bias unless it is the Premier of Quebec telling the Quebec Liquor Commission to revoke a restaurateur's liquor licence because the proprietor of the restaurant is a Jehovah's Witness as happened in Roncarelli v Duplessis, which, as most lawyers in this building – and there are a few of us – know, is a textbook law school case for bad governance and bias. That's what a judge recently used to compare the actions of the ministry of environment with respect to meeting its commitments to ensure fair and open and impartial hearing processes on development appeals under the ministry of environment under the leadership of the current CEO of the Alberta Energy Regulator, appointed by this ministry.

Once again, I think that members of the opposition and members of the public can be forgiven for being a little nervous around the legislation referred to as: trust me; I'll appoint good people. Quite frankly, the record just isn't there. Quite to the contrary, the record is there for a very, very different way for this to go.

Now, there are other difficulties within this legislation that we will get into in more detail. I think we're up to about 10 or 11 amendments in our office that we propose to make in order to try and bring it into the realm of an agency which Albertans and others can trust and rely on. As things stand now, we're concerned as well about the delay which has occurred up to now and the fact that we have really no explanation from the minister for how this will be funded for any work outside of the lower Athabasca region.

I can only think back again to – you know, it's a darn good thing that I only got elected in 2008. You know, I'm getting to that age where I like to go: well, back in the day. At this point I can only go back to 2008, but I believe that was when the land-use framework was introduced to much applause and all that stuff. You know what? I think we've got – what? – one full framework with a whole bunch of extra things to be filled in and one draft framework and, I believe, six others that remain undone. Why? Because there is no funding for it. So I'm a little worried.

The minister is shaking her head, but I actually remember her predecessor saying to me: well, we're just going to have to accept that it's going to take longer to get these land-use frameworks done because I don't have the money to do the work. So it's not done yet. It was introduced in 2008, and, just to be clear, it's not done yet five years later. I'm a little worried that the same fate awaits this monitoring agency and that, in fact, this agency will be set up and will ride the coattails of the federal agency. It will not have the independence that most stakeholders need to see in order to believe that there is some credibility to it and that with all the work that is desperately needed to be done outside of the lower Athabasca region, we'll still be here talking about it five years from now, wondering when it's going to get started.

There are other points, and I won't get into them now. The one other thing I must say in second reading is that at this point there is no provision in this act for inclusion of the indigenous community at any level in terms of being a representative, as being acknowledged as needing to be part of this. More than any other group, they have been subjected to the government's refusal to apply open and transparent science to what they've been experiencing for decades. They deserve to be recognized in this legislation and have a role recognized in this legislation. So do others, but I think I'm about to run out of time, so I want to make sure that that is referenced.

I look forward to having greater debate, and I hope that the minister will seriously consider our 10-plus amendments, which are coming her way. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, it's 6 o'clock. The House stands adjourned until 7:30 tonight.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, October 29, 2013

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Bill 27

Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to move second reading of Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act.

This act includes four amendments to the Municipal Government Act as well as three amendments to the Emergency Management Act. These amendments will help us build a safer Alberta by enshrining policy decisions made during the government's response to the 2013 floods. They're practical, forward-looking measures that will support the largest recovery effort in Alberta's history, and they will help Alberta better respond to emergencies in the future.

The amendments to the MGA will help improve public safety in a number of ways. The first will permanently enact a provision created under the regulation earlier this year to temporarily exempt municipalities from the requirements of the MGA when they are facing an emergency. We used this tool, Mr. Speaker, during the June floods so community leaders could focus on public safety instead of administrative encumbrances. It was an effective and practical way to support our partners.

The other three amendments to the MGA focus on floodway development in particular. Allowing development of floodways, areas where flooding has deeper, faster, and more destructive water flows, cannot be permitted anymore, Mr. Speaker. Floodway development is a threat to the public, to property, and at the same time is an unacceptable liability for taxpayers. This is why the government is proposing to restrict new development in floodways to limit damage and risks to public safety posed by future floods.

While it is imperative that we restrict new development on floodways, we must also ensure this policy is fair and reasonable. To this end, we are proposing an amendment that will honour the investment and choices made by current owners of floodway properties. This amendment will permit owners of existing floodway properties to replace existing buildings with new buildings intended for the same use.

Finally, we need to account for the special circumstances of those municipalities with significant development already in a floodway such as Fort McMurray or Drumheller. For these municipalities it would be impractical – frankly, impossible – and unnecessary to restrict floodway development. This proposed amendment gives this legislation a reasonable amount of flexibility for municipalities in these unique and particular situations.

This brings me now to the three amendments to the Emergency Management Act. The Emergency Management Act is the blueprint which guided the municipal and provincial emergency response to the flood. It is the document which gave this government the authority to provide financial assistance to thousands of Albertans devastated by this disaster this summer. It is the law by which emergency officials in communities across southern Alberta were able to make life-and-limb decisions with confidence to protect life, property, and environment as floodwaters rose.

The value of the Emergency Management Act cannot be overstated, and today we have three amendments that will make it even more effective. The first proposed amendment will give the government the authority to provide flood mitigation funding. As we undertake the largest recovery effort this country has ever seen, Mr. Speaker, finding innovative and cost-effective ways to mitigate flood damage is more important than ever before. This amendment will help us do just that. It will allow the government to fully implement the province's policy to provide communities and individuals with mitigation funding today and tomorrow. Albertans will be able to rest assured that this valuable source of assistance to families and communities with flood damage will be available for future disaster recovery programs related to floods. This amendment also reflects our responsibility to taxpayers and will help the government leverage federal cost-sharing opportunities.

Just over four months ago we saw the dangers of living in flood hazard areas and the devastation left by the flood. This second amendment to the Emergency Management Act will help all Albertans understand the risks of living in flood hazard areas. It will protect potential buyers of properties in flood hazard areas by giving the government the authority to place caveats on land titles that indicate whether the property is eligible for disaster assistance in the event of another flood. These caveats will give potential buyers of a home in a flood fringe or floodway the information they need before purchasing a flood-affected home as well as current owners so they can best decide how to rebuild after the floods. Only properties in a floodway or flood fringe that are rebuilt or repaired using disaster recovery program assistance will have a caveat put on their land titles.

I've already spoken about flood mitigation and how this government is helping individuals and communities build smarter with an eye to reducing damage from future floods. We are giving owners of flood fringe properties the ability to have their caveat removed by putting the minimum flood mitigation measures in place. This means that any current or future owner of a flood fringe property that has been mitigated can rest assured that they will be eligible for future disaster recovery program assistance in the future. The caveats placed on floodway properties, however, are permanent, but the province has given owners of these properties the option to relocate out of the floodway, Mr. Speaker.

The third and final amendment to the Emergency Management Act will extend the duration of a provincial state of emergency from 14 days up to 28 days, when it will expire or, if necessary, be renewed. Currently a provincial state of emergency can only be renewed by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly. This is neither practical nor sensible to do when a disaster is in progress, and government leaders from both levels of government are engaged in supporting the emergency response. Extending the duration of a provincial state of emergency will allow the government to focus on public safety during those rare, rare circumstances when the province uses this tool or when a disaster occurs when the Legislature is not sitting. This amendment does not, however, change the fact that a resolution of the Legislative Assembly will be required to renew a provincial state of emergency beyond the 28 days.

This change gives our province stronger protection against future floods and future disasters and will help ensure our families and communities are well protected. We can't stop a future flood, Mr. Speaker, no matter what some people say, but we can make sure we're as prepared as possible because there is no such thing as flood-proofing, but there is being prepared for the next flood. It's all part of our government's efforts to build Alberta to ensure a strong quality of life for us all. I look forward to further debate of this important legislation that will enhance and ensure the safety and security of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I move to adjourn debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 28

Modernizing Regional Governance Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again and particularly pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 28, the Modernizing Regional Governance Act, which amends the Municipal Government Act. The act provides the framework for the local governments in Alberta to operate.

Now let me outline, please, briefly the proposed amendments. First, the Capital Region Board was established in 2008 by a regulation under the Municipal Government Act. This legislation would elevate the creation of growth management plans such as the Capital Region Board into the act. It would also confirm the purpose, structure, and membership of the Capital Region Board and validate all actions and decisions made by the Capital Region Board.

As well, Bill 28 would validate 15 other regulations made under the section 603 regulation provision within the MGA. These amendments to the MGA follow through on our commitments to regional collaboration and strong regional governance, and their time has come, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I move to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013

[Adjourned debate October 29: Mr. Horne]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour here tonight to rise on Bill 29, the Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013. This appears to be more of an administrative bill that's necessary to comply with changes to the Food and Drugs Act in Ottawa. As Ottawa regulates prescription drugs, changes to this law necessitate a corresponding change to Alberta's Pharmacy and Drug Act.

But I think we need to step back a little bit and review the devastation that was inflicted upon Albertans by the Minister of Health's what we called Fred-icare plan. What we saw was a big revolt by pharmacists across Alberta, particularly in rural Alberta, where individuals in the pharmacy industry were very concerned with the drastic changes that were made. They signed a petition. Thousands of Albertans signed those petitions complaining about the unilateral decision made by the Health minister to inflict damage upon our pharmacy industry.

One of the main aspects of their concerns was the lack of consultation. I'm hoping that with Bill 29 the Minister of Health has in fact learned some lessons from his time dealing with the changes that he made to the pharmacy industry. Some of the biggest issues that were pertinent as a result of his changes were, of course, higher prices to those individuals that required prescription drugs. A lot of those individuals, of course, were seniors who are on fixed incomes and were devastated by a lot of the changes that were made.

The second big change was a shortage or a lack of drugs available due to the changes that were made. Again and again here in question period we'd ask questions to the Minister of Health about why these drugs were triple or quadruple the price prior to the changes he implemented. We asked why some drugs that were previously available were no longer available, and he still did not have any answers.

The other aspect that was an issue at least in my area was the fact that due to the changes made by the Minister of Health, a lot of the rural pharmacists in my area didn't know whether or not they could provide services to my constituents. Obviously, pharmacists are an integral component of our health care system, and the fact that they expressed concern – who would have thought pharmacists would be marching on the Legislature? Only this government could rile up those types of individuals.

We've seen subsequent to these changes not only the potential for rural pharmacists to close down their shops, but also just at a minimum we've seen reductions in services. So, of course, previously where the pharmacists would provide specific services to seniors in my constituency, now, due to these changes implemented by the Minister of Health, in many cases they no longer have the capacity to provide those services to our seniors. That was a very, very important issue in my area. It was detrimental to the health care that was provided to Albertans.

Of course, going back to Bill 29, there were changes that were made federally as part of the Jobs, Growth and Long-term Prosperity Act, 2012, which was Bill C-38, which received royal assent on June 29, 2012. The government had amended the Food and Drugs Act to give the Minister of Health certain powers, which included the power to establish a list that set out prescription drugs. In summary, I believe that this bill is intended to comply with the changes that were made federally and get in line with the federal legislation. In short, Ottawa changed its laws, so now, as a result of those changes, we have to, too.

So we believe that, you know, it's possible for the Health minister to modify the approved drug list without a specific legislative amendment. Oftentimes ministers give themselves extraordinary powers in a regulation-making capacity, but in this case the minister apparently felt that it was necessary to modify this approved drug list with a legislative amendment.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, we very much oppose the backhanded, lack-of-consultation approach that the Minister of Health took with respect to the overall impact on pharmacy and prescription drugs here in Alberta. This act itself is primarily an administrative bill. It deals with the changes that were made in Ottawa and ensures that our legislation adequately corresponds to the changes that the federal Minister of Health put forward in the Jobs, Growth and Long-term Prosperity Act, which is Bill C-38, which received royal assent mid-last year. You know, it was very, very frustrating to deal with the Minister of Health about his changes to the prescription drugs. In this case it seems like the intent of this bill is just to correspond with the Ottawa legislation. That seems to be an overall good intent, and we look forward to the Committee of the Whole to potentially put forward subsequent amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill 29, Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013. You know, when I saw this on the Order Paper and heard about the intention of this government to have pharmacy and drug on the table, I initially was getting quite excited and feeling optimistic. There are so many problems with the pharmacy situation here in the province of Alberta right now in regard to seniors' pharmacy, in regard to affordability of drugs and the dispensation of drugs. As the Health critic for the Alberta New Democrats I have dealt quite a lot with the unstable landscape that pharmacy exists under here in Alberta at this time.

I thought cautiously optimistically that the Health minister was bringing in something to resolve some of these issues, but in fact the scope of this bill is quite narrow. It's certainly necessary. It helps to harmonize the provincial statutes with a new change in regard to the drug regulations federally here in Canada. I guess that's pretty much all it does. Certainly, I see no reason to stand in the way of it, but also I just do want to remind all of us here in the Legislature of the responsibility that we have to continue to reform our overall pharmacy position here in the province of Alberta.

We have a public health system here in the province, but we don't have a harmonized public pharmacy system in place. You can see it's almost a textbook case, Mr. Speaker, where we can learn about the inefficiencies and problems associated with mixing private and public delivery and dispensation of health care in the way that we see our pharmacy system here in the province right now. We can certainly not only improve health outcomes through better coverage and more affordable coverage and fewer incidences of people not taking the drugs that they require as prescribed by their doctors, but we could save considerable money if we did have an integrated pharmacare plan for all residents of Alberta.

I would venture to say as well that the third part of any comprehensive public health initiative is that it provides that much more safety and security for the residents of Alberta by knowing that they can have access to top-quality pharmaceutical prescription medicine that their doctors prescribe when they need it for themselves and for their family.

So I challenge, certainly, the Health minister to especially start in the place where the most uncertainty and anxiety does exist here, Mr. Speaker, in regard to pharmacy, and that's in regard to seniors' pharmacy. I know that there have been at least two attempts to have more of a user-pay private-style pharmacy system for seniors here in this province, and both times the government has backed down on that.

I just learned, actually, today, because I was away in southern Alberta, that again the seniors' pharmaceutical strategy has been postponed here in the province of Alberta, hopefully indefinitely. While we have to fight and defend what public pharmacy system we do have for seniors in this province, I think our energies could be better served by actually strengthening the public dispensation of prescription drugs to seniors and ensuring that it always stays universal and affordable and employing best practices through bulk purchasing and so forth.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, in regard to specifically Bill 29, we know that this update is sort of harmonizing with the federal government's listing of prescription drugs, and this act will now refer to a prescription drug list rather than the old schedule F that was used previously. This bill brings the Alberta Pharmacy and Drug Act into compliance with federal changes, which is good. The federal changes mean that a list of prescription drugs may now be changed by the federal Minister of Health rather than requiring a full regulatory procedure.

I would venture to say as well, Mr. Speaker, that this is a signal that we're seeing federally that the other jurisdictions, provinces and territories as well as the federal government across Canada, are interested in a more comprehensive pharmacare plan for this country. I think it's well advised for us to put in place more features such as this and be braver about the features we put in place to ensure that we can take full advantage of a comprehensive publicly delivered pharmacare plan here in this province as well. Of course, a national pharmacare plan would be ideal because you are employing the benefits of bulk purchasing and so forth, which can really save a lot of money.

I think that as we move forward – I don't see the minister, the sponsor, here today, but I would like to ask him some questions, so I will leave it at that for now. I'm happy to see that at least the word "pharmacy" is appearing on our Order Paper and that we carry on with the good work to ensure that we have a public pharmacare program in place here in the province of Alberta in short order.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Hon. member, just a reminder that we don't refer to the presence or absence of any member. I'm sure that was an oversight.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just rereading Hansard to grab the comments that were made by the Minister of Health when he introduced this bill. It appears to be clear from his four sentences of introduction to the bill – I guess we should congratulate him on his brevity, but it didn't give a lot of additional information – that this is just lining up the provincial legislation with the federal legislation and that there is no policy change to Alberta's scheduling of drugs and no cost to the government. Fair enough. You know, there are always pluses and minuses with this. My understanding of this – sorry; I don't have a medical background, so I hope I'm not misunderstanding this. Let me back up a bit.

The Canada Health Act sets out what is covered for public health care in Canada, and the delivery of that health care is done by the provinces. When that original Tommy Douglas act was brought to fruition, there were a couple of things that didn't make it into the bill. The Canada Health Act is several evolutions later. Nonetheless, a couple of things didn't make it into the bill. The big ones were pharmaceuticals, drug coverage, dentistry, and there's one other. It might be new technology, which is why we always kind of struggle with those MRIs, and there's now one that starts with a C, and all the new technology that we get. Of course, those are also the fastest rising cost points in the health care system – what a surprise – I think largely because they aren't being delivered through the public system with as tight control as when we're having to pay for it through insurance.

Pharmaceuticals are outside of the Canada Health Act, and as a result each province can decide how they're going to handle that, which drugs they're going to pay for. So we can end up with this, to outsiders, very convoluted process, where the feds will okay a drug, but really what they're doing is saying: we believe it passes the scrutiny of the food and drug administration act, so we'll put it on our list saying that it's gone through X number of tests and supposedly won't harm anyone. I put "supposedly" in there just as, you know, a cautionary tale. Then each province can decide whether they're going to cover the cost of that drug or not.

Now, I know that when the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was Health minister and I was his critic, he had explained that the government's policy on this was that they would cover new drugs that were transformative. That may still be the policy. I'm not sure. It was under him.

We often receive letters from constituents saying: "Please, my friend or my spouse or my child will get better with this drug or will have their life prolonged or it will lead them to a recovery. Why is the province not covering the cost of the drug?" The answer is: because it's either not gone through that blue-ribbon expert panel to say, "Yes, this provincial government will cover the cost of it under the pharmaceutical scheme that they have here in Alberta," or it's possible that it's gone through that committee, and the committee said, "No, we're not going to cover it." That's hard for people to understand from the outside, the process. It is an expert committee, and I think they did that so that politicians couldn't get in there and push it around so that, you know, I could get the drug that I wanted for my constituent and be a hero to all, or perhaps someone else could stop my people from getting drugs. I don't know.

Then we have the whole situation about how we have people in Alberta pay for drugs. A lot of this comes to the feet of this government. When I look at the legislation and the brief comments that were made, it appears that the federal government is giving us a plus and a minus. This government's fondness for putting in what was having to pass through the House of Commons and in this case the Legislative Assembly can now be done not even through regulations but through the ministerial yes or no, which makes me very uncomfortable.

We've got the federal government saying that, well, the minister can now put a drug list online and may change it whenever he wants. Well, okay. That should give some of us hope that the minister could add drugs that we would like to see added or maybe faster. But it also means that they could take drugs off as they choose. The provincial government has now lined itself up with and recognized that online list of drugs, so we're now paddling in the same direction. We're recognizing that that list is the list that has the drugs that are allowed for sale in Canada.

As you can tell, I'm very cautious about having a minister being able to add or take away from a list by not using a regulation, which, although it doesn't have scrutiny, at least is running through some kind of a process, one would hope. We are now going to follow that and accept whatever turns up or doesn't turn up on that list. I think there's cause for caution there. I understand, you know, the brotherly relationship, sisterly relationship, sibling relationship – let me try that – between this government and the federal government, coming from the same family, if I may say, and reacting to things often in the same manner. It is giving me some caution.

However, like many of the bills that we are dealing with in this session, this is a very brief bill. It's actually two pages long, and that's stretching it because they put the clauses on different pages just to spread it out, I guess.

My concern around anything to do with drugs on and off lists and the scope of what the pharmacies are doing for us in distributing those drugs is the sale of health practices or the encouragement of the purchasing of health commingled with a genuine wellness function.

We have done some very good things with pharmacies, I believe, in that we allowed them to refill prescriptions without necessarily having the doctor's renewal permission – and this is given a close working relationship between a pharmacy and somebody coming in – and it's expected that the pharmacy then relates back to the doctor in fairly good time. We also have allowed them to give injections, for example, which, given some of the massive health disasters, if we could call it that, like SARS, seems like a pretty good idea. All of a sudden you don't just have doctors and nurses that can give injections for vaccinations, for example; you've got every pharmacist in Alberta. Those are very good access points. I think that was a good idea.

Where I have a bit of problem is where those wellness initiatives commingle with sales. It just gets a little too close for me. For example, pharmacists have lists of people they could directly mail if they wanted to and say: we notice – what's your constituency?

Mr. Donovan: Little Bow.

Ms Blakeman: Little Bow. If the Member for Little Bow got a note from his pharmacist saying, "You know, we noticed that you've been taking some blood pressure medication" – by the way, I've no idea if the Member for Little Bow is taking any kind of medication at all. I'm just picking on him. But they say: you know, we noticed that you're taking blood pressure medication, so why don't you come on in, and we'll give you a free blood pressure test, and we'll give you advice. Of course, the advice is, "Well, you should maybe consider buying a home blood pressure kit," which of course isn't covered under health care. It'd be out of pocket. But he's a little nervous. He's serving his constituents of Little Bow. He doesn't want to end up in the hospital or something, so: well, yeah; okay. He doesn't really want to spend the money, but he talks himself into it, that he should buy this extra thing, this extra blood pressure monitor. Good.

See, there's a commingling of a good wellness practice – taking your blood pressure, checking it – and the sale of something. With the pharmacy's ability to know who needs what health benefit or who needs what sort of wellness advice, this is where we don't cover anything. This kind of practice can easily take place and can certainly influence people, who all want to be healthy and certainly want to feel good. Thank you very much, Member for Little Bow, for using you as an example. If we needed to do something about pharmacies and drug prescriptions, there's a place we could do something about it.

The second place we could do something positive about drug purchase and distribution and what's on what list the Member for Edmonton-Calder has already talked about. That is a federal or interprovincial or national – honestly, I really don't care what you call it – pharmacare program, where we would be able to participate in larger bulk buying, where we could have agreements, a seamless system, for approving the drugs for safety and approving the drugs for payment in that federal-provincial exchange.

I think there's much that we could do there, and I don't know what the holdup is here. I don't know why we can't get this. It sure makes sense to a lot of Albertans. Sometimes I think it's just the health ministers that get in a little twist there and just don't want to co-operate – I don't know – or they're all trying to pick on the federal government and get more. I don't know and – you know what? – I don't care. I just really want them to work on this. So there's another thing the government could do around pharmaceuticals if they really wanted to do something.

The last thing is the seniors' drug insurance plan, that has now come up once two Health ministers ago, which was, if I may say, a flaming disaster. I took that plan, that seniors would have to buy into an insurance plan that was income tested on a monthly premium basis to be able to have a prescription drug plan, and I talked to a lot of seniors over the summer of whatever that was, 2007 or something, 2006. Oh, no, that can't be right. Oh, they're all kind of blurring together. Anyway, they had lots of very simple questions, and I wrote those questions to the Minister of Health and said, "Okay; answer these questions if you're going to put this plan into play," and he couldn't. They couldn't. I reminded them and added new questions a couple of months later from other seniors' groups I'd met with. They still couldn't answer it. Eventually they admitted that it had been, one of those euphemistic words, put on the back burner or postponed or something or something, which, you know, is good. Admit that that was a flaming disaster and walk away from it.

Now, we heard that it was coming back. They were going to try it again. So I just wonder how many rounds we have to go. I'm reminded of a boxing match, and the government gets up there and kind of keeps punching these seniors with a kidney blow, and seniors kind of stagger around and then manage to stand back up again, and then you all go back to corners, and then they come at it again. So, you know, please, please, don't do that plan. I really don't think it's a very good one.

But please try and do some positive things around health care for seniors, and it would help if you weren't quite so hysterical about the effect that the baby boom generation is going to have on health care spending in the future. That does seem to be driving a lot of choices this government is making about health care and seniors at this point, I think, to try to stem the flow of the baby boomer bulge, which is coming.

So there are three very positive things that the government could do with pharmaceuticals if they chose to do something positive with pharmaceuticals. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Oh, well, thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In some of your comments you mentioned an extraordinary power to amend lists. We've seen this current Minister of Health fumble a lot of different files. Is there anything in here that you are concerned about in terms of the Alberta Minister of Health's power, or do you believe that the change to this legislation is more in line with giving the federal minister more power and us just copying what the federal minister has done? I'm not sure if I got that right or not. But if you could explain your concerns with the lists a little bit more, I'd appreciate it.

Ms Blakeman: Well, my understanding of the list – being in a smaller opposition party, each person is carrying a number of portfolios, as actually, I think, all of us are in opposition are right now, and you've got to divide the workload. So I was not in the briefing for Bill 29, and I did start by asking forgiveness from the Assembly if I somehow was misreading this bill, having just read the comments from the minister in introducing it and in reading the bill itself, because I don't have any briefing notes on this.

In the reading of those two things it appears that what the federal minister is going to be doing is moving from a list that was under regulation – I'm always assured by my hon. colleagues opposite that there is a process that goes along with making the regulations that support a bill. I sure hope that's happening, but that's what they tell me. So I felt that there was a bit more comfort there in how drugs got on and off the list, and off the list, particularly, is what people are concerned about. They're receiving some kind of a drug, and the government says: we're not going to give it to you anymore; we're taking it off the list. You can imagine how that's going to affect your health.

Now, as I understand it, the federal government's list is about the safety of the drug, essentially. The provincial list is about whether we're going to pay for it or not. So on and off the provincial list is whether we're going to pay; federally it's whether or not it's safe. Hey, we've made mistakes, especially when we look at secondary uses of drugs, which comes up fairly frequently. The testing is not as vigorous in the testing of secondary uses of drugs. Vioxx is one of the ones I can remember, that originally started to do one thing and then was used a lot for a secondary use – anybody remember? – and it turned out to kill people when you used it for the secondary use. So, oops, they took it off the list at that point. I would have said that they should have done more vigorous testing on the secondary use of the same drug.

My caution here is that it's not going through a regulation process. It appears to be an online registry of drugs, and the minister can through their own motion move drugs on and off that list. I'm sure that there are advisers in the department and yada, yada, blah, blah, blah, but it still is the minister on his own motion moving drugs on and off a list rather than going through a regulatory process, so that was why I raised that concern.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering, member, as you were describing the bill here: on an economic level you made this comparison to the hypothetical pharmacare federally, and you talked about the possibility of saving on a bulk buying program. I'm curious. As we're dealing with this prescription drug program, we've had a number of issues over the past several months. Would there be other benefits to expanding this to a much larger system? Or are the benefits better other than just the economics, access to different pharmaceuticals, and particularly dealing with our seniors and those with low income?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Well, there's lots of literature out there about the benefits of a universal or national or federal or interprovincial pharmacare program beyond the economic, you know, purchasing of drugs in bulk and therefore getting a lesser price. Let's face it. The feds were able to buy Cipro, or Ontario maybe was able to buy Cipro for less money.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and all the members, for allowing my introduction. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my constituency manager, Ms Felicia Dewar. She has been working for my constituency for six months. She's very intelligent, hard working, and community oriented. She lives in my riding, Edmonton-Manning. She raised about a hundred thousand dollars for the Brintnell park playground society. Felicia is seated in the public gallery. I ask Felicia to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce all members of the Assembly to the 831 Black Knights air cadet squadron from Leduc, your hometown. They are seated in the public gallery. Would you rise, and we will recognize you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, might I remind you that it is forbidden to take pictures in the Assembly during the proceedings. Pictures are only taken in the Assembly by permission of the Speaker, and members are usually given a courtesy notice.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The next speaker, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be here, of course, representing the people of Cardston-Taber-Warner and to work on their behalf and to speak for them at this time on Bill 29, Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013. I realize, of course, that this act is an attempt to align our laws and the circumstances, rules, and regulations surrounding medications with the federal changes that have just been made.

I want to thank the Minister of Health for his heavy-handed and unilateral changes to the compensation available to the pharmacists of Alberta. It's had the unintended consequence, I'm sure, of galvanizing them in their united support for the Official Opposition, so we thank you for that, and we want to let you know that we're doing our best to take advantage of that and represent them well.

A petition of over 25,000 names was presented to the minister, I believe, indicating the concern and displeasure at this unilateral action and some of the fears that some have for the viability of their business, for their jobs if they're employed by pharmacists, and by the patients, of course, particularly in rural areas, for the viability of the pharmacy and their ability to go there and receive that personalized care and attention. It's our fear and theirs that if this current government continues with this trend, which we know will only be for another two or two and a half years, it could have the impact of putting some heretofore very viable businesses into bankruptcy or forcing them to close. That would be sad, sad for them and, of course, sad for their patients.

I was one of those who participated in the rally and listened to the pharmacists who marched here. I don't think pharmacists are normally identified as the kind of people that participate in these kinds of protest rallies and marches – it's the antithesis of their nature, I would suspect – but I've never seen so many people upset. In fact, of all of the things that have come across my desk or onto my computer through e-mail or phone calls that I've received or requests to meet with me, only the situation with rural ambulances rivals the anger and frustration and disappointment, quite frankly, that has been experienced and expressed by our pharmacists.

I think it's shabby treatment, and I think the government ought to be ashamed of itself. We know, of course, that whenever we fix the cost or adjust unilaterally the cost of something, we eventually ration the supply or reduce the availability and create shortages, and with medication this can result in health risks, complications, and even death.

I hope the minister will consider the pharmacists' concerns that were expressed in the petition and the many calls, I'm sure, that he received and also, I'm sure, that you yourselves on the government side of the House have received, too. I realize that you're not allowed to speak about that in public, but I certainly hope that in caucus you've been very vocal in sharing the concerns that have been brought to you, as I'm sure they have been. We know certainly that they have been brought to us.

I would wonder how the Health minister would feel if he were to be treated by a doctor who didn't bother to analyze, didn't listen to him as he explained his pains or complaints or the problems that he was having, who just didn't bother to even ask him, didn't order tests, didn't bother investigating thoroughly before diagnosing that his heart needed to be removed. That's how the pharmacists feel. Nobody asked them how they felt about this, how they'd feel about a 75 per cent reduction in the amount of money they could mark up the generic medication that they'd been prescribing. That 75 per cent reduction happened without much consultation and happened over a period of five years, actually four years. That's pretty shocking. I don't know very many businesses that could suffer that kind of a change without it having a serious impact on their ability to serve their customers.

Of course, this government continues to demonstrate that it's out of touch with the realities of economics and business when it decides that cuts should be made on the front lines, where the services are being delivered and administered, where the patients, or the customers if you will, are being cared for. No business would survive if it let its overhead get bloated in the way that the Health department's has and cut into its ability to serve its customers. Patients suffer. Those front-line caregivers suffer. They're frustrated, and they're overworked, and I think the system only works as well as it does because of their commitment, the way they care. But we care, too, as a party, and we hope that this minister will re-evaluate the changes that he unilaterally forced upon the pharmacists and their patients, their clients, and reconsider the drastic cuts that he made.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and speak at second reading of Bill 29, the Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013.

Again, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, this is a fairly thin bill, but I do agree that its intent and purposes are quite valuable as far as harmonizing federal legislation with provincial legislation, which I do think is a positive step.

I would like to briefly speak about what's not included in this bill when we're talking about health care or pharmacare, the possibilities that we have before us in this province, and, if anything, to recommend to the hon. members on the opposite side of the House to seriously contemplate Alberta being a trendsetter and being at the forefront of introducing a pharmacare plan that would be comprehensive and ensure that all Albertans have the coverage that they need and to do it in a way that is very cost-effective.

I think that when we talk about a pharmacare plan, first of all it's going to improve access for Albertans. There are many Albertans who don't have a plan or coverage, and when somebody gets sick or an illness comes up, it can be very, very damaging not only to a person's health but also to their bank account to get them the appropriate pharmaceuticals that they need. Improving access ensures that all Albertans have access to medication when they need it.

As well, it provides a sense of security for folks. I mean, this isn't a plan that's necessarily tied to a job or tied to a particular employment. Therefore, for either entrepreneurs or business owners or folks that are going out there taking risks by maybe leaving a more secure job to pursue a business, it would give them the security and confidence to know that they still have access to a pharmaceutical plan that will ensure that should they need medication, they can get it.

As well, as my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Calder pointed out, I think that when we look at a pharmaceutical plan, maybe on a larger scale, especially looking nationally, dollars can be saved through bulk purchases. I think that even within the province of Alberta there would be great savings that could be passed on to consumers, to Albertans, especially our most vulnerable, our seniors who are living on fixed incomes. You take those savings and stretch them out across the country, and that number is magnified significantly.

I think, again, looking at that as an economy of scale, that would be a benefit or an incentive, one would think, for the health care ministers across the country to get together and put their heads together as far as coming up with a plan that could save Canadians many, many dollars and, again, improve their access to care and their quality of care.

The other thing that a pharmaceutical plan could do and would do because it would be regulated is that it would ensure the safety of Albertans out there, protecting Albertans from the possibility of being overprescribed medication. It would provide another safety net or oversight on that.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that there are lots of positive reasons why we should look at and why I encourage the members on the opposite side of the House to look at introducing a pharmacare strategy that would benefit all Albertans regardless of income or age or ability or disability and encourage the minister to work with his counterparts across the country to expand this to more of a federal plan, which I think would have significant benefits for all Albertans.

You know, just to touch on this as well, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there are quite a few seniors in my constituency and, I would imagine, throughout the province who are concerned about what may happen in the future as far as costs of medication and drugs going up. Again, these are folks living on fixed incomes.

As well, a concern that I've been hearing very loudly lately is the concern for more and more services or medications being delisted, that were once covered that will no longer be covered. I think that's a real valid concern to have, Mr. Speaker. I mean, we can go through, you know, the timeline of five years ago, 10 years ago, and there are a number of different drugs that are no longer covered, and for some families that has left them in a bit of a situation. I want to take the time to share those concerns because it would have fit quite nicely with this bill, again looking at expanding the bill to a larger strategy.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to get on the record a couple of questions that I have surrounding this bill that there will be an opportunity in Committee of the Whole to have a bit of a dialogue on with the minister. I'm curious to know what the impact will be on Albertans' prescription drug coverage and if there will be an impact. From the outset or at least from my view in looking at Bill 29 at the moment, it doesn't seem to be, but I would love to get the minister on record as far as if there will be an impact for Albertans and as well if there are going to be any costs imposed on the government or on Albertans, on either of the two groups. Those are a couple of questions that I'll definitely put to the minister.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I do support and will support this bill moving forward. Again, I wish that it was a little more comprehensive. At least, I hope that through the discussions on Bill 29 we will have a bit of a dialogue in this House about a provincial or an interprovincial health care pharmaceutical strategy.

With that, I will take my seat. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that in the Legislature a lot of us debated the impacts that the Minister of Health's decision had on rural pharmacies. We saw, obviously, that a lot of pharmacists came to the Legislature, rallied. Many of the pharmacists there were from small towns or municipalities and knew that because of the changes they had limited opportunity to recoup revenue. They're not like a big store in the city where they can recoup revenue through other streams of revenue. I'm wondering whether or not the member can provide us with some insight into whether or not the same issues or concerns were brought forward to him in his capacity as a member in the Edmonton area. Did pharmacists in either your area or the Edmonton area approach you and put forward any concerns?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for his question. My answer is yes. Thank you for raising that point, the difference between the smaller pharmacies in rural Alberta and the larger ones in the metropolitan areas. I agree – and concerns did come forward – that there is a discrepancy in revenue streams, in what the smaller pharmacies in rural areas can do versus those in the larger cities.

I think that the point is that this bill could have addressed some of those discrepancies. I know that there are many small pharmacies throughout the province that have been affected and will continue to be affected. This would have provided an opportunity to address those discrepancies and to level the playing field for pharmacies throughout the province. We have gotten feedback from pharmacies within my constituency, in Beverly-Clareview. I have spoken with a small pharmacy owner, and I know that the Alberta NDP has been contacted by pharmacies throughout the province.

I want to thank the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for his question. I think, again, that something else to think about for all members of this House, especially the government, when we go into Committee of the Whole and debate this is looking at all the different aspects or angles or issues that could have been addressed in a more comprehensive bill. This would have been the time and place to do it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the member could answer pretty much the same question I had asked the other member, coming from an urban representation, on the whole idea of this harmonization between the provincial and the federal, which I think is a good idea. If the program was expanded, what are the benefits beyond just the economics as far as providing service and quality of care, in particular for seniors on a fixed income in an urban area?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the hon. member for his question. Again, I'm going to try to come up with answers or reasons on the spot here. I think that there are a few. I mean, in addition to the economic benefits of it, you've also got benefits of oversight. You've got benefits of the delivery or the dispensation of pharmaceuticals throughout the province to ensure that, again, whether you're living in Small Town, Alberta, rural Alberta, or you're living in one of the larger cities, you have the same timely access to those drugs and medications as everyone. Again, you're leveling the playing field for Albertans throughout the province.

I think I will come back to the hon. member with a more complete answer when I put a little more thought into this.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to just raise a few points as well about Bill 29. Essentially, as we all understand, it's mostly an administrative bill, and it's being done to line up the changes that have been brought on by the changes in the federal government bill, C-38. Previously you needed a regulatory amendment to give a drug prescription status change, and this is going to simplify that in the process, which is, in a way, a good thing as long as the power is used well. I think we can all agree that that'll be beneficial.

In short, though, again, it's really aligning ourselves with the changes on the federal side. So we had to make a change. That raises a question for me. If Bill C-38 had not been passed, would we even be talking or debating this bill in this House? I think there's an opportunity here that has been lost, that we could have used this bill here in this House to actually make some positive changes to the Pharmacy and Drug Act.

You know, dispensing fees haven't increased for pharmacists and pharmacies for many, many years. I know that there have been some preliminary discussions about doing some increases, but the amount that's being proposed, Mr. Speaker, is nowhere near what pharmacists think they should receive for the work that they do. Especially when you take into consideration, again, the number of years that it's been since an increase and you factor in inflation, it just doesn't make a whole lot of sense. What happens is that because pharmacists are reliant on the dispensing fees and the markup on the products they sell, that has a direct impact on their profitability.

Most of the pharmacies that are being directly impacted to the biggest extent are the small pharmacies. Typically those are small businesses. You may have a one-store operation. You may have an ownership that is inclusive of two stores, three stores, maybe a few more, but again you're usually dealing in a lot of cases with small business. Unfortunately, not dealing with the pressures of small business having their fees controlled by government regulations, we are, again, hindering the ability for small business to actually prosper out there, possibly grow, to increase their ability to improve on their services and better perform to meet the needs of the patients, which is the overall requirement and desire of pharmacists.

The services that have been added to the pharmacy service structure have not even come close to recovering the difference between what their revenue was and what they've lost. Unfortunately, as much as some people think, you know, of going to their pharmacist to get their shot, to have their blood pressure checked, to have their medication reviewed, pharmacists are doing a lot of that for no charge. Or they were. Now they're being told that maybe they should charge. I'm not sure how that's going to be dealt with by Alberta Health Services as well as how the general public will feel going into a place for information that they used to get for free and now they're going to be faced with talking to somebody, maybe not even their pharmacist, and having to sign paperwork, go through forms, and find out all of a sudden that that free service is no longer free, that there is a charge. You know, it could have a negative impact on that as well.

Pharmacists are the gatekeepers to me and to a lot of doctors and a lot of patients. They are that intermediary person who does the medication review to make sure that if that individual is maybe seeing more than one doctor – possibly they have a family doctor, maybe they see different doctors at walk-ins, or maybe they don't have a doctor and have to go to emergency. When they go to their pharmacist, there's an opportunity for the pharmacist to actually review their medication history, and it's their job to make sure that there is no contraindication between medications.

You know, a lot of times individuals will go in to see their doctor, and if they don't disclose all the medications they're on or don't remember all the medications they're on, a prescription could be issued and there could be some huge, huge negative effects by the drugs that they take if they do not work well together. Pharmacists are, like I said, the gatekeeper there. They are that line of defence between the patient and the doctor to make sure that what the doctor is prescribing for them actually is going to benefit them and not put their health in jeopardy.

Mr. Speaker, pharmacists are working longer and harder, and that's no different than any other front-line service in the health industry. They're caring workers, and they're doing this because, number one, this is what they want to do. This is what they got into the business for. They feel that they have something really positive to offer the patients, and I think that's critical. You need to be there for the right reasons. You don't want them to be there just to build a very viable business and something that they're going to basically get rich off. At the same time, they are a business, and they do have to be profitable. If they're not, they will not be there. In some cases pharmacists have had to let staff go. They've had to reduce the hours of staff. They've had to cut benefits. They've had to cut hours. They've had to work longer themselves.

As a small-business person myself in the past I know that as the owner, when things do get tough, you have to take on more of that role yourself. They're doing that. At the same time, this is going backwards. In a time when pharmacists are urgently needed in the health care system, you certainly do not want to put more pressure on this group of individuals to put more hours in, add stress to their lives, and basically, you know, have a negative impact on their lives as well.

You know, I think the worst outcome that could happen is that if there aren't positive changes made, the pharmacies will close. That would be a sad thing. You would actually lose a service to your patient. Where that patient would go to get that service from that point on is unknown. That's, again, something that could have been dealt with in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the government had proposed to save $90 million by reducing the generic drug price from 35 per cent to 18 per cent. Unfortunately, that price for generics has decreased from 75 per cent to 18 per cent since 2009, and that does have a direct impact on pharmacies, who make a small markup on what the cost is. Again, that is also an issue. As a small-business owner you're actually dictated to as to what your markup can be and the requirement you have as a pharmacy owner as to the drugs you need to carry. Some drugs are not very expensive. Some drugs are very expensive, and to have a small markup on these drugs is a detriment to their ability to perform their service.

I had one pharmacist send me a letter. Basically, his concern was to the Minister of Health, and he was saying:

Due to the government's announcement in Budget 2013, and the effects it will have [on] the pharmacy profession, I regret to advise you that we will be forced to close one of our locations in Medicine Hat. The staff at our Medical Arts location has tried their best to replace the severe funding cuts imposed by the government with services offered in the Pharmacy New Practice Framework, but there is no way they can come close to replacing the current revenue reductions and with the next cuts their fate is sealed.

On April 11 all their locations joined other pharmacists in Alberta by closing for two hours so that they could answer questions that customers had about the changes to the pharmacy plan and the negative impacts that the government's actions would have.

They will be informed of how the government's actions have caused one of our locations to close and how availability, accessibility, and service may be affected at all pharmacies in the province. We will also have a petition available for them to sign, that will be presented to the Legislature."

That was from Joe Hansen, a pharmacist actually in Medicine Hat.

We did, actually, out of Medicine Hat have about a hundred and fifty of those letters presented to us at our office, and I was able to table them in the Legislature.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, really because it is a housekeeping bill – and that's the disappointing part – there's not much here to oppose or support, which, again, is a lost opportunity, in my mind. Supporting empty legislation is easy although not beneficial overall.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of the comments that the hon. member talked about and I found quite interesting are about the fact that we could have used this piece of legislation to actually make things better rather than have it as a relatively purely administrative amendment to the existing legislation. You know, some of the things that the Wildrose had suggested after the Health minister plowed through with major decisions that were to impact our health care system and the price for generic drugs, some of the solutions we came up with, included the ability to extend the washout period to 90 days to allow for the full recovery of costs on inventory, to identify what drug shortages could occur with the changes and modify the pricing structure to ensure all patients could continue to receive the drugs they needed without interruption, to extend the prescription transition allowance for at least two years to allow an adequate period of time to move to the new funding model for pharmacy, and to negotiate in good faith with pharmacists to reach a long-term solution that would ensure the viability of local pharmacists, that puts patients first. The last solution, the idea of negotiating in good faith with our pharmacists, I thought, of course, would go without saying.

It's unfortunate that this bill does not in fact deal with the underlying problems that were created by the Health minister last year. All it's doing is corresponding with a change to some federal legislation and applying it here provincially. The hon. member talked about how we could potentially come up with solutions in this legislation. Why not, Mr. Speaker, have a bill, a substantive bill, to fix the problems, not some bill that's, you know, two pages long with two sections? Why not have a substantive bill that would actually fix some of the problems that were created by the Health minister last year? Some of those problems, of course, included the effect on local pharmacists. It was estimated that the average pharmacy would lose thousands and thousands of dollars if the time period for selling off existing inventory was not extended.

We know from talking to pharmacists that they were not consulted in good faith, that the Health minister refused to discuss his changes with them. That kind of unilateral decision-making process never works. There should be a consultation process. Weigh all sides. Talk to different interested parties to ensure that we come up with the best solutions. You know, the hon. member talked about having this bill be more substantive and actually effect change in this province. Instead, what we end up with is a two-page bill with four sections, and one of them is a coming-into-force section, which says that this bill is going to come into force December 19 of this year. That's what this bill is. Rather than having a detailed, substantive change to our legislation so that we could actually fix the problems that were created by the Health minister himself, instead he's just coming forward with a rather minor bill that's not going to actually fix things.

Mr. Speaker, my question to the hon. member. You know, the Wildrose came up with a four-point plan to fix the changes that the Health minister put forward. I guess my question is whether or not he believes that when legislation comes forward, it should actually be substantive and actually fix major problems in this province rather than be just a minor amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

8:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the member.

Pharmacy is a highly regulated industry, and I think that's one of the things that could have been addressed in this bill. As was mentioned, we suggested a 90-day washout period. Because there is so low a margin in the inventory that pharmacists carry, the idea was to stretch that out so that they had the ability to take existing inventory, that it's up to them to stock and pay for – they own that inventory – and to give them 90 days to sell that out the door.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The time has expired.

I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundry.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a long road to get to this point with this bill. It is disappointing that it's just a housekeeping bill that harmonizes our federal rules and regulations with the provincial, because it could have done so much more, as you've heard from some of the other speakers.

I had to kind of chuckle when one of the members brought the example of the Minister of Health having his heart removed. I think it's a good thing to note tonight that hopefully, if the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act passes, we'll have something there that can help the minister out and have that transplant done on time. That would be good. The problem is getting him the proper medication and getting it in a timely fashion and making sure that it is the right medication.

I will tell you this. The road here was extremely disappointing. The rural pharmacists, unlike ever before, united and then had to not just lobby this government but had to protest to be heard. That's extremely unusual. They're not that class of people that is generally considered activist by any stretch of the imagination. As a matter of fact, in many ways it's the first time I've ever seen pharmacists actually political. They're usually taking care of business in health care, and in my communities – and I say communities because when I look at my riding that I represent, if I count not just the incorporated communities but those hamlets and summer villages, I have 37 of those.

People who live even in the hamlets consider that their town, their community. All these communities, all these smaller ones, come to the incorporated towns like Rimbey, Rocky Mountain House, Sundry, Eckville. This is where they come to get their pharmaceutical drugs. The pharmacist isn't just the pharmacist. They are a vital part of the community that keeps the community not just operating, but it is also a social part of the community. It's where a lot of our seniors do meet. A lot of the townspeople do meet in these pharmacies, and a lot of information is passed back and forth. There's a lot going on, and the need for our seniors to have these pharmacies is not just essential in our community, but it's life affecting.

So I was somewhat puzzled when this first came to rise. I say "rise" because the questions came initially to my office. I started to look at what the minister was proposing, and the next thing you know, I had pharmacists knocking on the door, and I had meetings with pharmacists. We became friends, and we got to know each other by first name. As they laid out all the inconsistencies, what I discovered is that the minister said he consulted, which is usually the case – I understand that – but clearly there was something missing because all of the pharmacists were saying that they weren't being consulted.

There was, as we would describe in this Chamber, a different interpretation of the facts. The reality is that when you have one party in a discussion saying that they're not being consulted, I think there's an incredible weight that has to go to that party, the weight of what they're saying, that something is missing here. So even if the minister thought he was consulting, certainly when hundreds and then thousands of pharmacists spoke up, it had to have been a clue that something was desperately wrong with the consultation process. Desperately. That's what we heard all across the spectrum.

It became emotional because many of these pharmacists really saw where they were going to be closing their doors, and what they couldn't find was that venue to be heard. They saw the disruption that was going to happen in these communities if they had to close their doors. That's significant. There are certain pieces of infrastructure in every community that make that community alive and active.

Everybody knows we need schools. I might even ask for one in this speech. Everybody needs schools because that's where the young families come. That's where they locate to. You need medical facilities, either the hospital or the doctors' clinics, because that's where the seniors need to go. That helps your community grow. It used to be that you had to have a post office. That was absolutely essential although Internet now has interfered, but our post office is still quite active.

There are certain infrastructure components to every community that help the community grow. One of those is the pharmacy, without a doubt. That's part of our medical care system and plays a very important role, and the pharmacists themselves play a very important role in our community as trusted servants of our health care system in many ways. Certainly, I would put our pharmacists on the same level as our doctors in dispensing medical advice or consultation dealing with their specialty, which is prescription drugs, and the seniors and other residents in our communities have come to value that tremendously. To have them under this pressure of thinking that they were going to end up closing their doors or relocating elsewhere, which would leave our community without a pharmacy, was extremely distressful, to say the least.

It took every effort, not just from opposition parties but from various communities. We had the pharmacists that did sign the petition, but we had mayors that came forward and said: "Hey, wait a minute. Our pharmacists have spoken to us. We need this settled. We need someone to pay attention to the problem." We couldn't get that. We couldn't get that for the longest time. That's not just unfortunate; that's unreasonable. That shouldn't happen.

Fast-forward to today. We have a harmonizing bill for prescription drugs that sort of aligns us with the federal legislation. But what more does it do? That's something that I think is an opportunity that's missed, but the nice part is that this government is the master of its own destiny. It can change this. It can submit another bill. It certainly has the power to correct it. It also has the power to improve it. I would argue that what we need to do with this bill is improve it, and we can improve it in a number of different ways.

Yes, we can come forward with amendments to improve it, or we can actually come forward with another bill and look to make some changes. I for one wouldn't even necessarily say that we have to rush to do that. I would like to see the consultation process actually listen to the pharmacists, find out what is important in each and every community for how best to dispense these services, what drugs are really needed and required, how to save money. I don't know anyone that can tell you better how to save money than those front-line workers. Certainly that's what these pharmacists are. They are front-line workers.

From where I sat, where I am in this House today, when I heard the pharmacists' issues, their problems coming to this point, one of the things that I noticed is all the people who stepped up, stepped up under the mantra of: "We care. We care enough about our seniors that we will go to bat for you. We care enough about our communities that we're going to fight to keep our pharmacists." It is that caring that, I think, provided the energy to continue. You may remember that during question period it got quite passionate sometimes. It certainly did when some of the pharmacists showed up, and to have people in the medical frocks up in the gallery is a very unusual sight for this Assembly. It shouldn't happen when we get right down to it, but it did.

What we can do is improve. I would suggest to this government that they undertake that exercise and look at the programs dealing with our pharmacies, look at not just the drugs that are on the list but at what we can do better to improve.

I would argue that there are numerous opportunities not just to improve the services but to save costs. I would like to think – and

I say this with some confidence – that all the members on the government side would love to save costs, too. That's the reasonable thing to do. If we can look at a program and come up with a better program that provides a better service at a lower cost, why wouldn't we support it? The opportunity is there.

That is one of the side benefits of the disruption that happened this last spring. When these pharmacists did come forward, there were a number of different suggestions on how to make the whole system better. I'm not sure anyone heard that. It's certainly something that this government can continue to move down the road on and say: hey, wait a minute; let's pull this back a little bit. I'm not saying we don't pass this bill – I'm going to be voting for this bill – but we can do better. We can actually make this better. All we have to do is get those stakeholders who are really in the know and start looking pragmatically at those suggestions and see what we can do better, see how we can save costs, and see how we can increase these services to these communities.

I will tell you that there may be differences between the urban communities and the rural communities, particularly when you deal with the number of issues, but it seems to me that there are a lot of similarities with this issue. There are a tremendous amount of similarities. We ought to be able to find mechanisms and programs that we can apply to both the major urban centres, the smaller cities, and, of course, those smaller towns. There's nothing wrong with being flexible, making whatever necessary changes you have to make to make each more efficient. That's how we make a system that works, where we can have a discussion or at least the pride that we care about what we're giving to our communities, we care about what we're doing for our seniors, we care about each other, and we care about the health services that we provide all of our citizens.

This bill falls short, but it's the right step in the right direction. No one should be satisfied with just this bill. We should be satisfied going further and taking this to a different level, a better level of providing services to our communities, to our seniors, to the people of low income, and making this a viable health care service to all of our communities.

With that, I will thank the Health minister for finally coming around, and I wish him well in consulting more in the future. I would hope he would do a lot more consulting. I would hope Alberta Health Services would consult to a greater degree so we can better provide our services for health care at a lower cost. As some of the other members have stated earlier, the opportunity is there. There are a number of different ways that we can do this. It's just having the courage to move forward and having the open mind to listen and be willing to act on those suggestions. These pharmacists have the ability to actually provide those suggestions. It is more of a collaborative effort, but it starts by listening.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Just a reminder that it allows for brief comments or questions to the member.

Mr. Saskiw: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question relates to the process. Here in Alberta we sit the fewest number of days in the Legislature. Bills are introduced, and then immediately we go into evening sittings, you know, one day after a bill is introduced. You have opposition parties who have to do extensive research on many, many bills. My question to the hon. member is: would it not be better to extend the number of days we sit in the Legislature, make sure that there's sufficient time and resources to thoroughly go through the bills rather than going immediately into evening sittings?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, to answer the question, it is most definitely, yes. Let me explain. It makes sense, and here is a perfect example in this bill. We received the bill. The problem I have is that I can't get a hold of my pharmacist right away. For me to travel from the north end of my riding to the south end takes me just about one hour and 45 minutes, and that's doing 110 K. For me to get to the various pharmacies and speak to the pharmacists – I can call, but you can imagine that they're very busy people, too. So trying to get their input in the short amount of time that a bill is introduced before it ends up in second reading and Committee of the Whole, I don't even have enough opportunity to allow them – they're not lawmakers, but the fact is that they want to have some input. So as they read the bill, they have a learning curve to go through. Reading legislation is not what they do. They want to know how it actually applies to the services they provide.

My ability to consult with my own constituents, these professionals who are highly educated, is somewhat limited because of the schedule we keep in this House. It does not allow for proper research. It varies from bill to bill. Some bills allow us a little bit of time. Some bills – and I think we discussed one earlier – don't allow any time for any type of research or consultation. That was earlier today. On something like this, when you're dealing with a health care service, you're dealing with the pharmacists, who are an important component in the daily lives, particularly, of – and I'll relate to my own experience with the seniors of my communities. This is significant, and there's no time to actually get their input to find out how it's going to affect these seniors, how it's going to affect the care and the services that these pharmacists provide to these seniors.

What we end up doing is hoping we get it right. We look for language that will maybe jump out at us on some of this legislation, but if it doesn't necessarily just sort of jump off the pages at us, it's easy to miss something. A professional who is actually a front-line provider could make suggestions like: wait a minute; this is something you need to dig deeper in.

We look at this, and we say that it aligns or harmonizes the prescription drug program with the federal changes, and we take that in good faith, but I did get a hold of one of the pharmacists by phone, and he just didn't have time to take a look at it. He needed time to call the pharmacy association because that's where they get their information from. Again, the pharmacists like to talk amongst themselves. We do know that we have a large organization in this province that represents the pharmaceutical industry. But also in my local area we have a number of pharmacists who unite together in little enclaves, I'll call them, where they deal with the local issues, they share information, as professionals do, and they help keep the information flowing.

Again, here we are. We have a bill. We're into evening sittings, and this is a very short session in many ways, as the schedule indicates. We need time to consult. It's interesting that we have to take the minister's word that he consulted. We don't know that. We just have to take his word because we can't even hear from the other side that have met with the minister or the minister's staff to actually have some input.

It does make it difficult, but that difficulty does not have to exist. We sit the shortest, I think, of most every government in Canada. I'm not sure if there's anyone that sits shorter than us. This legislation is no less important. I will tell you that this government takes great pride in talking about how fast we're growing, how well we're doing in comparison to other areas, but on a governance level the speed at which we move legislation through is a recipe for mistakes. I think we've seen that in a number of pieces of legislation, and that's why we end up with a lot of amended bills, because we don't take time to discuss it, and then once they become law, we end up having to hear from people who need changes.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers to second reading?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

Bill 31 Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

[Debate adjourned October 29]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: I think I'll go after.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and my thanks to the critic for the Official Opposition for letting me jump in front here. Bill 31: so much anticipation, so little product. Let's just review here what we're trying to do in Alberta and those important words around what we're doing with our industry and our environment, climate change. We're supposed to be producing and having the government put incentives and disincentives where needed in place so that we have less CO<sub>2</sub> being produced. Every time the government trumpets that they're going to be doing something wonderful, I have hopes. I am the eternal optimist. I have hopes that we are going to see a great leap forward in how the government deals with increasing amounts of CO<sub>2</sub> and corresponding toxins that go into our air, earth, and water.

Just a few general comments to start in second reading debate for Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. One, where's the less pollution stuff? Where is the "We're going to try and hit a reduction to 2005 pollution levels by 2020"? Hello? We seem to have forgotten that that's what we were all trying to do.

Another general point is conservation of the use of water. There's nothing here that would deal with that in particular.

All of this is to say that, yes, this bill is setting up an agency. But there are so many other things that the government needs to have done at the same time or in advance of this. It's very frustrating to watch the government repeat a pattern over and over again. We saw it in health, we've seen it in children's services, and now we're seeing it in the environment. That is that pattern of tinkering with the administration of the delivery of a service but not actually improving the delivery of a service.

What was the problem we were having in Alberta? The problem was that we couldn't tell how much were polluting. We couldn't tell how much CO<sub>2</sub> was being released into the air or what kind of toxins were going onto the land or into the water. Why? Well, because our monitoring was a little shaky. Every time we raised this, the government duly got up – God bless them – and trotted out the same story about how bitumen occurs naturally in the Athabasca River. Well, that's true. It does, but it had nothing to do with the province's lack of strength in monitoring anything in this province. Eventually the government did admit that, well, no, they actually didn't have a world-class monitoring system, but they were going to get one. I suppose this agency is part of that promise.

But, you know, it's not. It's tinkering with the administration of this, but I don't see where it's actually strengthening the monitoring program that we have to be able to tell what the cumulative effects are, which is the other area that this government has just totally tanked on.

I remember back in the old days, before the 2012 election and the 2008 election. You know, I was questioning the then minister, who was the Member for Medicine Hat, who's plowing along trying to justify what the government was doing. They were terrible at monitoring, and they just kept trotting out the same bad stories, and we got no better delivery of service. For any of the agencies that we were funding or that we did have set up – there were those WAP, water advisory panels – the funding on them was getting to be less and less every year. So we weren't doing a better job; we were doing a worse job every year.

The other pattern I see this government involved in – and now we see it specifically in this – is that they really don't want to talk to too many people. They like to be able to have one group that they can talk to, give a direction to, and walk away. The idea that they have to go out and talk to a whole bunch of little groups or a whole bunch of not-for-profits or a whole bunch of agencies: they really don't like that. If we could just get everybody in a box and talk to one person or one agency, that would be terrific. I'm seeing some of that pattern coming through in Bill 31.

The last general statement is around devolving government responsibility and then a question about authority to other agencies. Boy. I saw it in the first term I was here, with the delegated administrative organizations. I'm now going back and looking at those organizations with a very critical eye, and frankly, they're coming up short, and the government that's responsible for them is coming up short. There are a number of other agencies which we've just examined through the Conflicts of Interest Act review, and they've come up short.

Overall the government tends to set up agencies it devolves responsibilities to and then step back. And when you ask a question in question period and say – and for years they did this. You'd say: well, you know, Minister, tell us why Capital health made this decision. The minister would put up his hands in horror and say: "I have no idea. That was done by Capital health. Go ask them." Well, come on. Of course the government is ultimately responsible. They're funding the health system. They are constitutionally required to do so. So don't hold your hands up in mock horror and tell me to go and ask somebody else. Ultimately, the Minister of Health was responsible or the Minister of Children's Services, in this case the Minister of Environment. So we have once more devolved a responsibility that the government wasn't doing very well.

Maybe this is their attempt to do it better. I don't know. Devolve it out to another agency. And, boy, the first time the minister stands up and says, "Don't ask me that question; go and ask" – wait a minute; let me get it right – "the Alberta environment monitoring evaluation and reporting agency because they make the decisions on that," I will leap to my feet and scream in horror in this House. I really will. The Speaker is looking alarmed that I might actually do that. But, you know, honestly, how many times are we going to put up with that before we call the government on it? I'm calling you on it now. Please don't do that.

Now, let me talk specifics about this bill. By the way, I had the strangest briefing. This government's concept of briefing is sliding toward oblivion, if I might put it that way, Mr. Speaker. I mean, I had a letter from the Minister of Municipal Affairs that seemed to stand for a briefing, and I thought: well, that's nice, but I could've just read the bill. For this one, where I got a briefing for Bill 31, they sent a bureaucrat who really knew what he was talking about and two young men. There was no three-column document. There was no paper at all. I said: "Why is this so difficult? Give me the paper, at least something to write on, for God's sake." Oh. Well, no, no. No, that wasn't available. Hey? You don't have three-column documents anymore? When did that start? I'm pretty sure they did.

You know, there have been a number of other dissolutions, the slow eroding of the concept of these briefings to the opposition members, and, well, I wouldn't forecast anything dire, but you never know what will happen when government defaults on its agreement.

Let me talk specifically about the problems and omissions and strange things that I find in this bill. One, there are no timelines. There's no reference to a timeline. So when they say that they're going to report, it doesn't say when they're going to report. What? You know, they and the minister are supposed to decide on when the reporting is going to happen. Well, later on it does talk about an annual report, but are we to take it that everything they do comes out in an annual report and that's it? Is there no immediate reporting? Is there no quarterly reporting? They're supposed to be monitoring. They're telling us this information is going to be readily available. Well, I asked. It's not open data, so it's not that readily available, and there's no timeline. Big omission.

Secondly – and I'm just running through in order here – there is no criteria for the board appointments. As I asked the briefing staff, do you not require people to have something to do with the monitoring of toxins or pollution or whatever we want to call it in Alberta on this agency? Well, no. I said: so you could have seven ballerinas and an engineer appointed to this board? They said: well, yes. Really? You know, we probably need to fix that, and I will bring an amendment forward on that one when we get to Committee of the Whole. So no criteria for who gets appointed to this board.

Now, the government may stand up and say: oh, yes, but that's under what we used to call agencies, boards, and commissions. There's now another acronym called APAGA, I think, which does say that you're supposed to appoint people to the board that are qualified to sit on it. But reading this legislation, what do they expect? Who are they saying is qualified? Nothing is laid out here, so there's no criteria for that. Big omission.

There are all kinds of powers that are being granted, but then they can put limits on it. It says – let me just double-check that – in section 7 that they can grant powers to the CEO and the chair, but that will be done later, and we don't know what they are. Later it says that, well, they can put limitations on things. That's a push me, pull me. We'll give you powers later. We won't tell you right now. But we can also put limits on things. I expect that is meant to be that they can put limits at any point in time, but you know, it's not incredibly clear.

Okay. Some strange things in here. They empower this agency to borrow money. Why? Why would this agency, that's doing monitoring, that is guaranteed to get $50 million a year from the industry – why on earth are they empowering this agency to borrow money? For what purpose? That I would really like to know because very few other agencies get to borrow money. Municipalities do, but they've got a limit on it. This doesn't even say there's a limit on the amount they can borrow. So that's very curious.

Then in the next section it says that we can decide to provide departmental assistance to the agency, which is quite common with these devolved agencies. They'll be assigned a department that will process their cheques and help with their human resources and that kind of thing. They act as an administrative arm for them. That's very common. But, gee, you can borrow money, but we'll also give you money to help run your organization, and you get the $50 million guaranteed for the oil sands, by the way, or that area only, and you can borrow money. What?

They can also acquire real property. Now, why is an agency being empowered to acquire real property? I'd like the answer to that one, too. They can borrow, they can also get assistance from the government, and they can acquire real property. Why? Why would an agency like this need to be able to acquire real property? That is not a standard clause in the typical, you know, agency, board, or commission language.

The criteria for the scientific advisory panel. Again, it says nowhere in here that they have to be scientists or they have to be recognized by their professional group or they have to be peer published or anything that designates that a science advisory council actually has to have scientists on it. I have chem 31. I could be on this committee. That's insane. I mean, not the thought of me being on the committee or the thought of me passing chem 31, which I did. But, truly, where's the criteria for this? I expected very high standards given the hullabaloo we've had about this agency, and we get exactly no criteria for who is to be appointed to a scientific panel. What are you thinking?

They're also indemnified in a way that I don't recall seeing in other legislation. If it's there, please show it to me. Generally there's a clause that says that if the staff is doing what they're supposed to be doing, you can't sue them for doing their regular job. But this is going way past that. You know, it's an entire section. They can indemnify a present or former director. Why former? So somebody can't sue them after the fact? Well, they should be covered under the original indemnification. Why are you indemnifying former directors or agencies? They're indemnifying people who act at the request of the agency, employees or former employees, heirs, and legal representatives of these people. What? And this is for everything.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I didn't even get through my list.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last weekend the Wildrose Party met down in Red Deer, and we passed a couple of policy suggestions. One was that we would reduce greenhouse gases by advancing, implementing, and co-operating on technology, research, conservation, and alternative renewable energy sources. The other was to ensure that Alberta's goals and objectives were on par with the national and international greenhouse gas and air pollution protocols and standards. Now, we did that because we listened to Albertans.

Here we are today dealing with a bill called the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, but it doesn't do that. It doesn't add any more protections whatsoever to the environmental laws that we have today. It's actually a misnomer to call it a protection act because there's nothing about the bill that protects. What it does is that it creates an agency, again, an independent agency, something akin to Alberta Health Services. And how'd that work out? Well, it didn't work out too good, and we're constantly having a problem, where we're trying to fix our health care as a result.

We have a unique situation in this province. We are an oil and gas province. Some people say we are a carbon extraction province. There's no question that we are a resource extraction province, and we're amazingly wealthy in our resources. Nobody denies that. What we want to do is deal with that issue of resource extraction, our nonrenewable resource, but we want to do it in the most responsible environmental way that we possibly can.

Now, that's not just common sense. I mean, it is common sense, but it's more than that. It's good for our industry when we do it responsibly. I know all the members here have had a chance to consult with some of the industry members. They have to do certain things to show their customers that they're responsible because that's what their customers want. So here we are trying to build pipelines, trying to get our resources to market, and what we're hearing is that our customers on the other end want to see some steps taken to protect and improve the environment, and that's really important.

Over and over our government tells us what a wonderful job they've been doing, but here we are now with another massive change. When I had an opportunity to call some of my industry contacts, one of the first things that had jumped off the page at me – and I'll leave the name anonymous for fear of any retribution for the individual. [interjections] Oh, please, please, don't heckle and say that there's never been retribution in this province. The reality is that people need to protect their jobs and not be critical of the government or the company they work for. There is a little bit of logic to that.

What is absolutely important is: why don't we have a program where we get some sort of 100 per cent goal as our target that we would be transparent and we would be forthright in the programs that we undertake to improve our monitoring of the environment, to improve the protection of the environment? I mean, let's take a look at some of the problems that have existed. The minister is quick to say how wonderful things are, but just dealing with the issue of greenhouse gases, I don't think there's a member in this House that doesn't think we need to reduce this. I know industry is absolutely on board a hundred per cent. They know we need to reduce greenhouse gases. They want to. They want to for our customers.

We had an absolutely great opportunity that presents itself to our economy, where a company decides to turn off two coal generators. They issue the notice of termination, and the government intervenes and forces them to invest nearly a hundred million dollars to turn them back on, and they will only stay on for a couple of years. We don't even require them to adhere to newer technologies because what we're asking them to do is just turn on what they've turned off. That doesn't make sense. It doesn't make sense because what that does is that it keeps sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and fine particulate matter, mercury, never mind the greenhouse gases. We had an opportunity to get ahead of the curve, and the government reversed what industry was trying to do. I don't understand that. It didn't make sense, but it is.

In the meantime, what we have is Alberta saying that we want to reduce greenhouse gases, but our actual greenhouse gases have increased 46 per cent since 1990. We haven't done a good job of it.

There are other issues surrounding the environment where we've done a very poor job, and I don't get why. Nothing in this bill shows us that we're going to do anything about it. One of them is groundwater mapping. We haven't done any groundwater mapping, and for years we've been asking about groundwater mapping. The interesting thing about groundwater mapping is that our industry has done it for us. Every time they drill, they're mapping the groundwater. They collect the data, but it's all proprietary, so the government doesn't get that data. I don't understand the philosophy behind that because it's readily available. We could do that easily by regulation and protect the proprietary interests of the various companies. What the government needs to know is what's happening to those aquifers. There's nothing in this bill that says that this is going to be protected.

The enforcement action of Alberta environment in reality has been nonexistent. The Bilozer family in the minister's own riding is a perfect example. She knows who I'm talking about. The Bilozer family had their property, their quarter section, basically polluted by Imperial Oil. Now, that's not in question. There have been four environmental enforcement orders issued over the last 20 years against Imperial Oil. Imperial Oil doesn't debate this. They admit it. They've admitted it before. The problem is that there has been no enforcement. Nobody has actually tried to make Imperial Oil clean it up, and no one understands why.

I had a chance to talk to our new single Energy Regulator, a nice man, very competent. When I brought up this one example of where it's not a disputable item – we know the pollution took place, we know the company has admitted it has taken place, we know there have been four enforcements orders, yet nothing has ever happened – the new Energy Regulator, the new CEO, said that he was quite familiar with the case and that's one of the problems of Alberta environment, that there's very little in the form of enforcement. We could have put something in this bill where we could help people like this, but we didn't.

There's nothing in this legislation that deals with the issue of disturbed lands when it comes to reclamation. By the minister's own calculations there are roughly 51,000 hectares in this province of disturbed lands that will require reclamation at some point in time. According to the mine financial security program guide the ministry says that it will cost about $75,000 per hectare to reclaim this land. Now, that's just an estimate out of the ministry, but if you do the math, with the amount of money that the ministry has collected as security, we are about $56,000 short per hectare, or roughly $400 million short, of what we need to reclaim this land. And there's nothing in the legislation that actually addresses this issue.

One of our major pipeline companies was just found the other day – of 125 pumping stations in this province, 117 of them are in noncompliance with the National Energy Board and our current environmental regulations. That's unacceptable. That's absolutely unacceptable. So what's being done to bring them into compliance? How they got that many out of compliance is another question.

CNRL has been ordered – I'm sorry. Up in the Cold Lake region their Primrose oil sands project: it's burping out of the ground – it's a great way to describe it – and everyone is caught trying to figure out what happened. Well, actually, when you talk to some of the geologists who want to talk off record, they say that they've known since 2009 that this could be a problem because the caprock, the layer that is supposed to be above where you frack, was not, I'm going to say, consistent. So it is on the same venue as the BP issue down in the Gulf. There were people prior to that disaster down there that had warned that it was not going right out on that oil rig. One of the drill rig operators basically told his wife that he thought he might die on this rig the way they were operating, and sure enough he did. We have that same situation dealing with CNRL. There are geologists up there to whom this is not a surprise that this has happened.

The thing is that when you protect the environment – what our industry wants, what the public wants are clear, concise environmental laws that are enforceable and consistent, that everyone understands and everyone can go by. We don't have that, and this was an opportunity to have that.

What we're creating is this separate agency, an arm's-length agency. But we know this government doesn't do that with arm's-length agencies. They haven't demonstrated that yet. I'll try to keep an open mind that this government will demonstrate it with this one, but I'm not expecting it. I watched what happened with Alberta Health Services. There's no arm's length there. I watched what happened with the old EUB and with the AUC when Bill 50 was brought forward. There was no arm's length. The government intervened.

Now all of a sudden we're talking about being transparent, we're talking about making the data public. Yet we have Justice Marceau calling what this government did a direct apprehension of bias, when they disallowed participants, intervenors, the opportunity to participate in a hearing. Now, if that was the first one, maybe we could understand it, but it's not. It's a continuation of a number of rulings, EUB versus Lavesta being another one in 2009, where the government was found guilty of the apprehension of bias.

We have a track record of cover-up and bias in the whole process, and there's nothing in the bill that says that we're going to address that issue. If we're going to prove to the international market that we're responsible, that we're going to do what's right, I don't think we can any longer say that words are good enough. We have to show it by action. There has to be something, not just the legislation, but the legislation has to be able to have some teeth to it, where it's enforceable and it's fair and it's just. This doesn't say that. What is says is that we will create this independent board. We know we're going to finance it up to a certain point, but we have no idea what's going to happen in the future because there's no financing mechanism for it.

The crazy part is that there are no qualifications or criteria, as was pointed out, on who can be on this board. That doesn't make sense. That doesn't make sense at all. If you appoint political friends, they're still going to have to hire experts to understand what the heck is going on. So we'll balloon the agency, and we'll add more money, and we'll hire more people, but is it going to do anything that we can't do now? There's nothing in this bill that says that we're going to do anything different. That's what's missing.

It's interesting. We're constantly hit with this news. It gives us a black eye environmentally, particularly in the international markets. Now we know about the mercury levels in the birds' eggs near Lake Athabasca, and this is by the joint oil sands monitoring agency, which, by the way, goes away when we pass this bill. There's going to be something taking its place. That's significant when that mercury level rises. We need to understand. I'm not saying that that's coming from any particular place, but what I am saying is that that is telling us something is wrong, and we need to discover why that is happening. So where in this bill does it say anything about how we're going to change to investigate and to come to the solutions for protecting our environment?

These are the indicators, and I just listed a few here. There are quite a few that just continue all the time in Alberta. In my view, some of it is avoidable. One of the things in maritime law is that it says that there are no such things as accidents. They're not accidents because they're preventable. What they do in maritime law is try to find out how to prevent . . .

Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Ms Blakeman: One of the concerns that I have with this bill is the section that allows this new agency to write its own conflict of interest laws, which does seem like a tiny conflict of interest, by the way, to write its own conflict of interest laws or regulations to abide by. Again, having sat on the recent Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, what's become apparent is that there's a complete hodgepodge of conflict of interest rules that govern these agencies. In a number of cases they are allowed to go by their own rules or by the rules that appear under APEGGA or under the government employee standards rules, and none of them are as strong as what appears in the Conflicts of Interest Act. And I have criticized that act for not being strong enough.

Does the member have anything to comment on around the conflict of interest regulations, given that this agency will be, you know, moving in a circle that can very much engender all kinds of conflict of interest in the oil and gas sector? They're handling potentially a lot of money, and what they do is going to apply to a very wide area and have a wide influence or application. Could the member comment on that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for asking. I think that's problematic, and I'll tell you why. The industry absolutely needs a level of confidence that the agency is independent and that it's credible. Perception of credibility is not what we believe or may want to believe. It's what their customers absolutely expect. What I worry about in that one section is that it will allow certain industry members who may have a conflict to be on these boards. I will tell you that they may be good and just and kind people, but that conflict is enough to upset the whole apple cart if the perception is that there's bias that's been placed into the system.

I think that's sometimes where we hurt ourselves, either intentionally or unintentionally, when we allow these things to happen. We have the ability to correct that during the amendments. I hope the government will listen to that because this isn't just about, you know, one section of our economy. This is about all of Alberta.

There's another piece in there that I thought was kind of strange. Many boards, many government agencies indemnify the members, the employees from a number of different actions and protections but never for criminal. If you commit a crime and you are a criminal, then usually that's where you get cut loose, and you suffer the criminal justice system. That's what you do. I notice that in this act there is an indemnification clause for also criminal action. I don't know why they put that in, and hopefully the minister can explain that. I don't see where we need to protect somebody from criminal action. In other words, if they commit a criminal action and it's proven to be such, then let them suffer the criminal justice system. That's why we have it. With everything else the indemnification seems to make sense to me, but that one just jumped off the page, and I'm not sure why.

With those two provisions, the whole conflict of interest and then the "If you commit a crime, we can indemnify you," I'm not sure how that actually works, to be perfectly honest. I scratched my head on that. We have a Justice minister, who may want to comment on how that would happen. How do you indemnify somebody from criminal activity? I don't think it overrules the criminal justice codes, but someone more qualified than me can answer that question. But I don't think we even want to attempt that. That's what's not logical to me. There are many parts of this bill that I think we could clean up – and those are two areas that are significant – to give some integrity and credibility to the whole process.

Again, I would like to support the bill. I won't call it junk. That's not appropriate, and I don't plan on it. But I will tell you this. It's hollow. It doesn't do anything that we can't do now. It doesn't add any protection. I don't see where it brings any more confidence to the system at all. It's interesting that industry . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise to speak in favour of Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. Bill 31 will establish the Alberta environmental monitoring, evaluation, and reporting agency, the first of its kind in Canada. This legislation is a vital component in this government's commitment to environmental stewardship. It is one of many initiatives and programs our government has put in place to show the world that we are balancing our economic interests with responsible resource development and ensuring that our environment is front and centre.

Last year the government implemented the lower Athabasca regional plan, the first regional plan in Alberta, a regional plan, by the way, which has caught the attention of many countries around the world. They are interested in what we're doing and are actively seeking more information about the regional planning process.

Through regional planning Alberta is moving to a more efficient and effective management system, a system that considers the cumulative effects of all activities. Our government is committed to managing the cumulative effects of development on air, water, land, and biodiversity. This allows us to understand the effects of multiple development pressures, assess risk, and work in a collaborative manner to improve the integration of economic, environmental, and social considerations.

Regional plans adopt the cumulative effects approach, managing the impacts of existing and new activities. It is based on our understating of environmental risks and socioeconomic values and provides valuable insight in setting environmental objectives and then managing those objectives. The new monitoring agency is a cornerstone of those considerations.

Bill 31 is enabling legislation that sets out AEMERA's purpose, identifies key activities it will undertake, and describes its powers. It establishes AEMERA as a provincial corporation governed by a board of directors, operated by a CEO, and accountable to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. As an arm's-length agency, AEMERA brings its independence into being by determining the scientific basis for monitoring and reporting the results of the monitoring. It is the science and reporting that is independent. A science advisory panel, comprised of internationally recognized environmental scientists, will ensure AEMERA's work is based on scientifically sound practices. This group of experts will make recommendations to government on how to best design independent, effective, and scientific oversight of the enhanced monitoring program.

report from 2011. Alberta has always stood behind this recommendation with one hundred per cent commitment. By seeking advice from some of the world's best and brightest, we will find workable and achievable options to build an independent oversight process that is designed to succeed and built to last. We will use the findings as a springboard for further progress on cutting-edge environmental monitoring across the province.

The work of this agency will begin in the oil sands region and eventually will spread to become a province-wide monitoring agency. Once created, the agency will assume duties for the joint Canada-Alberta monitoring program. It will work closely with officials from Environment and Sustainable Resource Development and our partners at the federal level to ensure the success of the joint monitoring program.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 31 is a major piece of environmental legislation. It shows that Alberta and Canada are taking the environmental responsibilities seriously. Establishment of a world-class, independent, science-based monitoring agency demonstrates that commitment. As we continue to build Alberta, initiatives such as this are vital to securing market access to our products and showing the world that we are leading the way. As we move into debate on this bill, I encourage its support. This is important legislation for all Albertans and demonstrates our hard work toward meeting our goals.

Thank you for this opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Minister. I'm sure your colleague is grateful for your support. I have a couple of questions for you. You referenced cumulative effects a number of times. Has the department been able to settle on a definition of cumulative effects that can be used to measure what you're actually looking for?

A second question. It appears that the government is trying to set up a business model for this agency, especially when it's endowing it with borrowing powers, ability to buy real property, and it starts out with a CEO. I just would like confirmation that this actually will be a public, not-for-profit agency and not some sort of private company.

Finally, if he could explain why there are noneligibility clauses in who is eligible for appointment. Why, in particular, are people that have had the status of bankruptcy ineligible for the board as well as anyone who has been convicted of an indictable offence? Those aren't common clauses in set-ups for NGOs or government agencies, and I'm particularly interested in why you are excluding anyone who's had a bankruptcy proceeding.

Thank you.

Mr. Scott: Thank you for the questions, and we will address those questions during Committee of the Whole.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suspect that answer may be a long time coming.

To the hon. minister, thank you for getting up, particularly since the responsibility is for transparency and accountability. Since the government's decision to exclude a think tank from the processes dealing with the oil sands is what Justice Marceau called "direct apprehension of bias" – and he used some fairly scathing language in his decision – where in the bill, hon. minister, is there any section or words that will prevent that from happening or assure industry or our customers internationally that we will be open and transparent?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, we'll address those issues during Committee of the Whole.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a great deal of interest to make some opening comments on Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. You know, looking at the intention of this bill as described by the minister – to establish a new agency, to make this evaluation and reporting available to the public in an open manner, with scientific data and so forth – really there is very little to criticize in those intentions. Certainly, these are intentions that have been very clearly laid out by individual citizens, by the energy industry here in Alberta and internationally, by interest groups, by opposition parties for many, many years. Those words certainly are something that we all aspire to.

However, Mr. Speaker, as well there are certain undermining elements to this act in the way in which this agency would be set up that make it less than ideal and that, I would suggest, in fact undermine those very principles that are described in the summary and as were described by the minister when she introduced this bill.

It's always very difficult to just ascribe certain objectives and ideals if you do not support those ideals with a framework that will allow this new agency to actually monitor the environment and to report independently and to have that capacity and that independence enshrined in legislation. That, I think, is the short version of the heart of the problem with this bill.

Certainly, it's not unsalvageable. I've already heard from a number of speakers here this evening that they're looking to make amendments that would perhaps satisfy the independence of this monitoring agency. I would suggest that we will be working on a similar amendment, too. If I could just describe in very broad terms what's missing here and what I think becomes obvious to people that will listen to this debate – and many, many thousands and millions of people have some vested interest in this debate and the proper construction of this legislation – what is missing and essential to making an independent environmental agency work is independence, that very word “independence,” and not having it reporting through the ministry as a regular body but reporting as an independent body.

That independence, if we can reach back to the essence of how our judicial system works, is the same sort of thing. You wouldn't think of interfering in a court and its proceedings and its dispensing of law, so I think we could use that same model to create an environmental monitoring agency here in the province of Alberta. We would reach that similar standard of integrity that our judicial system enjoys with its independence here, both in the province of Alberta and in Canada in general, and in other countries around the world.

I guess that that, as a short version, is what I would see as being the solution to Bill 31. As it stands, as it is functioning through the ministry, there is just a basic problem of credibility that will undermine the effectiveness of this agency. We need scientifically sound, independent data about our environment to make correct decisions as we balance resource production with our long-term health and the long-term sustainability of our energy industry. We need that credibility to export our energy products throughout North America and throughout the world.

We create some constructions that might be able to convince us here in Alberta about the environmental soundness of our energy policy, but if that doesn't wash and if it's not credible or it's not believed internationally, then we're really undermining the very industry, the golden goose, so to speak, that drives our economy. We're not fooling anybody, really, but ourselves in the end. The integrity of this environmental agency is absolutely paramount to make it function, and I think we have the potential to do that by amending and strengthening the independence of this agency in this bill.

We do take major issue with this government's suggestion that the way to do it is as it stands on the page, right? As we've seen with this government's recent handling, say as a parallel situation, with Alberta Health Services, if we're not forced to absolutely maintain independence, we have a tendency to end up with the wrong people at the job, and things just turn out worse than we originally had intended.

This bill, as I say, provides all the authority to the minister to appoint board members, and none of the guidelines are necessary to make sure that these people reflect the interests of all Albertans but rather how the ministry wants to make those choices.

[Ms Calahasen in the chair]

And so, Mr. – Madam Speaker. Nice to see you there, very nice.

There are so many examples that I can give through the history. I only have to go back as far as the PC appointment of Bruce Carson – right? – made to review this very topic, and then he had to resign for lobbying which was going against the position that he was appointed to.

I mean, this is just one example, right? It's not just simply that government-appointed boards get to run the show, but they also get to appoint the people that would review these boards, too. So, I mean, this just creates a miasma of confusion, I think. Just imagine trying to . . .

Ms Blakeman: That's nice: miasma. That's very nice.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Thank you.

Imagine getting to pick the person that does your evaluation. That's the correlation that I see, right? So, of course, the result is predetermined, somewhat like the Azerbaijani elections. Inadvertently the results were leaked the day before the actual election took place. Similarly, these evaluations that we would do with this board can be prewritten and predetermined very easily through this flawed process.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Let's maybe give the benefit of the doubt, that you do pick people, that they do have the right board picked with the right people at this time.

I would like to put forward other questions here, Mr. Speaker. For example, where is the commitment to properly fund this agency? As an independent board you need to use public money to ensure that the results and the choices are not tainted by funding from anywhere but the public interest.

Also, Mr. Speaker, there's an ability for industry contribution in the lower Athabasca region in terms of the monitoring, but I'm confused and need to have clarification on what happens when we go beyond that area.

Also, Mr. Speaker, if this board goes to the minister and says that we need more money to do our job, what would their response be? What provisions do we have specifically in place to ensure that the funding is adequate and that they have the capacity to do the job that they are responsible for?

Also, why are we not entering into a debate on this legislation, then, with a clear picture of what the funding model will be? It undermines any good words and thoughts that we might put forward here in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, if we are debating something that is not going to have the teeth and the capacity to actually carry out a very expensive and sometimes complex job. If we are just painting a lovely picture with words but actually not giving it substance and teeth, then that is not helpful.

The legislation talks about cost recovery, as far as I can see, here in this bill. I'm just wondering how they might be going about that, if this government is considering a tax of some sort, a carbon tax, as reports leading up to this bill have recommended, if there are other ways by which we can have cost recovery. I'm just curious to know where this is going.

I think these are answers that should be in place a long time before this bill actually makes it to this stage, where we are debating it in the House. Otherwise, it's very thin on the ground and, I would suggest, not entirely well crafted.

Even then, I think the minister seems to want to have control of how often this agency gets to report to the public, so when they talk about raw data and public access, there's no guarantee it comes out that way in the wash. Again, this whole idea of the ministry controlling the data: even if it's not being changed and/or edited or limited, then you still have the public perception that it could have been or might be in the future, and that undermines the credibility of this agency.

I think, Mr. Speaker, we have the opportunity here to be real leaders in environmental monitoring. But I think what appears to be happening here – and, please, I would love to be proven wrong on this. I really do expect and know that this is the time and place where if we put in a proper environmental agency and give it true independence, we will take a giant leap forward in being able to create a sustainable and reasonable agency to give credibility to our energy industry. But if it's just another political ploy, if it doesn't have the substance that I've just discussed here in a framework, then certainly I'm not prepared to support any version of this, with amendments or not.

I guess we've learned already from what we've heard from the briefing of the bill that the intention of this bill is to end quibbling and debate about data. This is certainly how this agency will be used in the future. They approve a board who then appoints and reviews scientists. Any arm's-length or independent argument has to be attacked at this point. It's clearly an attempt to have control, then, of what the data and the endgame will actually be regarding the environment. We've seen problems with this already. We've seen a very cavalier approach to who gets to even present at environmental hearings recently. You know, that doesn't bode well for how this agency might be structured and/or controlled in the future.

Overwhelming concerns in looking at this bill should be, I think, Mr. Speaker, whether the independence is anything close to that and how selective the release of data will actually be. People will be watching this very closely, and I certainly will expect that not just Albertans but Canadians and internationally will, I think, judge us not on the words of this bill but the actions that will accompany it, as they should. Certainly, no one knows better than all of us here in this Legislature what is at stake in regard to the integrity and the ability for us to market our energy products around the world. We travel the world to advocate for selling our energy products. I think we need to get the most value from those energy products. I think we certainly need to be processing them through various secondary industries. But we will be hampered at every stage along the way, from investment to marketing to that final sale, if we're not providing an honest and sincere environmental framework with an independent environmental monitoring agency that can give the real data and the truth about the state of our environment here in Alberta and the state of our various emissions.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move to adjourn debate on this.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder has moved to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

10:10 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

Bill 207 Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 207 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That is carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I must say that I appreciate the alacrity with which the House dealt with that matter, and I move that the committee now rise and report Bill 207.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 207. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the House concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading Bill 207 Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to stand today in support of Bill 207, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013, presented by the Member for Calgary-Foothills. Unfortunately, there are few positive numbers and statistics to work with, only that Alberta has the dubious distinction of being the lowest rated participant in Canada for donating organs. Past governments have failed organ donors and organ recipients by not placing a higher importance on this issue as a whole, and those are losses that can never be recovered, no matter the money or efforts thrown at it now.

This registration process needs to make registering to donate your organs as simple as possible should something detrimental happen to an individual. The last thing anyone needs in a time of crisis, of family loss, or in a time where quick decision-making is required is a process that is cumbersome and prolonged and that adds more anguish to an already difficult situation. The will of the organ donor needs to be easily identified and respected so that should there be an opportunity to save a life or multiple lives through the loss of another person's life, this wish is followed through.

Out of all the bills presented and tabled to date since this session began, this is a bill that has no political agenda, so I encourage all members from all parties to support this bill and make sure that it is passed and enacted so that it actually does benefit people in need as soon as possible. Just think about how many people might have been given an extra lease on life had this bill been enacted at any point in the past. The numbers would be staggering, I'm sure. Imagine how many people might still be here today, maybe even somebody sitting in this Legislature who was fortunate to receive a donated organ to allow them to continue living.

A constituent of mine, JoAnn Olson, lost her son, Wade Strong. Wade passed away on July 28 while waiting for a liver transplant. She would really appreciate it if everyone could support Bill 207. Even more poignant is that today would have been Wade's 40th birthday.

When the regulations are being developed for Bill 207, I do hope that those doing this will also review how people are screened for organs and that the requirements put on them are not onerous. For the individual above there was an unnecessary requirement to attend a course, and I ask for your approval to share with you an excerpt from the letter that he shared with our office. I can't confirm any of the information provided, but when a person is facing a life-or-death situation, I'm sure they have probably exhausted any and all options available to them and simply want a chance at life without needless rules and regulations that make the opportunity much more difficult.

Unfortunately, I never did have the chance to meet Wade Strong. He sent this e-mail to our office on July 24, 2013, and as mentioned, he passed away July 28, 2013, four days later.

Hello, All,

I live on a farm . . . in the county of Rocky View . . . I am desperate for any help that can be given, as I have only seen a specialist 2 times for a total of 30 mins in 8 mths since they told me I have 2 years to live. I am getting sicker and have paid all my own expenses to try and get myself the best possible shot. I have passed all other health testing and I did finish 1 AADAC course and during the second one I was half finished and was hospitalized and almost died from a stomach infection. I am willing to do anything to finish whatever course is needed but I have to be in the Foothills [hospital] every Thursday to drain excess fluids. They didn't even give me credit for the first half of the course. Today I was told and not in a nice way . . ."

The Deputy Speaker: If I may, my apologies, but procedurally we didn't have the sponsor of the bill move third reading. We should have that done, and then I'll allow you to continue immediately after. If you'll just rest for a moment, I'll recognize the member for Calgary-Foothills to move third reading of Bill 207.

Mr. Webber: All right. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to stand here today in third reading of Bill 207, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Amendment Act, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, we are all now very well aware that Alberta does lag behind other provinces in donation rates for organs and tissues. Bill 207 will take action to improve Alberta's rates. It's not just about organs and tissues. It's about creating hope, hope for Albertans. The actions in the bill will give hope to families, especially those on waiting lists. Bill 207 takes aggressive action to increase donation rates in Alberta. It will mean that more people will receive the life-changing transplant that they need, and it will improve many other Albertans' healthy way of life. But ultimately it's about saving lives.

I thank the hundreds of Albertans who have expressed their support for this bill, who have written to me, called me, e-mailed me, and I thank all those in the transplant community who have helped me with this initiative, the many that are so passionate about improving our organ and donation system here in Alberta. I especially want to thank each and every one of you in this Assembly who have supported me on this front and who have supported this unanimously. I will stop there and just say thank you, all, and God bless you all.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: And move third reading, hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Oh. Okay. I'd like to move third reading.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that we have a couple of other people that would like to speak on this, though.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Medicine Hat to finish from where he left off.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sorry for jumping the gun there. If you would indulge me I'd like to start back on the letter, if that's all right.

Unfortunately, I never had the chance to meet Wade Strong. He sent this e-mail to our office on July 24, 2013, and as mentioned, he passed away on July 28, 2013.

Hello, All,

I live on a farm . . . in the county of Rocky View . . . I am desperate for any help that can be given, as I have only seen a specialist 2 times for a total of 30 mins in 8 mths since they told me I have 2 years to live. I am getting sicker and have paid all my own expenses to try and get myself the best possible shot. I have passed all other health testing and I did finish 1 AADAC course and during the second one I was half finished and was hospitalized and almost died from a stomach infection. I am willing to do anything to finish whatever course is needed but I have to be in the Foothills [hospital] every Thursday to drain excess fluids. They didn't even give me credit for the first half of the course. Today I was told and not in a nice way from [a government bureaucrat] to take the full course or die. And on top of this they hadn't even booked me into Edmonton to get on the list which I now find out is 4 more mths of waiting. I am shocked with AHS. The care and mistakes that have been made make Sudan look like a better place to have this happen.

Anyway look forward to moving forward as myself and my family would like to see me turn 40. A liver transplant in a foreign country is about [$100,000 to $300,000] in the States and I figure AHS has spent 1 Million [dollars] on me, and we have accomplished nothing while I have gotten sicker.

Thank you.

Wade Strong.

I hope everyone listened closely to this plea for help, this plea for compassion and understanding, this plea to simply be given a chance at life. Let's all make sure the intent of Bill 207 is followed through when the regulations are developed. What we all don't need is another bill that had great intentions that was changed, watered down, or regulated into ineffective or inefficient legislation. Let's make sure the process is effective and efficient and that energy resources being expended get concentrated on the service and not the service provider.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, if there is anything we can do today to give people like Wade a second chance at life, then we must do it.

God bless you, Wade Strong. God bless you, JoAnn Olson, in the loss of your son.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I can't imagine who wouldn't be supportive of this bill, and I'm going to give credit for repeated tries. I think there have been three attempts to create a successful and positive organ donation program in Alberta. There are times when I am greatly annoyed by government's persistence in trying to do stupid legislation, but I have to commend them for their perseverance in bringing this forward repeatedly and trying to get people on board with it.

I do support the legislation. I know that my whole caucus did. The educational piece always seems like a bit of an add-on, but I was listening to the radio the other day, and a doctor was describing how he was working with the family and the time had come to say, "You need to think about organ donation," and the family said, "Yes, yes." The doctor reiterated that the person had a living will and had indicated that it was on their card. They'd indicated it. Then when they came back with the forms for the family to sign, they went: "Oh, no, no. We can't sign that." So it is always a matter of both as much incentive and encouragement and rules that we can put in place to try and get people to think about this and to take a positive step, but it is also the follow-up with the families because it does all go off the rails if in the very end they won't give permission on the spot.

So my commendation to the government for pursuing this and to the member, in particular, for pursuing it. This is a very positive step, and I'm very pleased to see the government taking it.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, sorry. My apologies. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available after that last speech.

Seeing none, then I will recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to congratulate and thank the hon. member. I've heard a lot about the history of this, and quite honestly I've learned a lot about organ transplant. I was quite impressed with the number of letters that I got on this bill and the amount of concern that I think citizens had right across all of Alberta. It is always a pleasure when we can be part of something where we actually do good, where we actually can see how we affect the quality of life and can improve it for others.

I'm proud to be part of this moment, and I want to congratulate you for allowing me to be part of that. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: That motion is carried unanimously. [applause]

I'll recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good day to be alive. I think on that very positive note it would be a very good time for us to go home and reflect on the work that's happened today and come back tomorrow to do more good work for the people of Alberta. So I'd move that we adjourn until tomorrow at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:27 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, October 30, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all our deliberations, in all our judgments, and in all the decisions that we are pledged to make on behalf of the constituents we are privileged to serve and represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: I see we have some visitors. The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly our esteemed guests: Mr. Quang Dung Tran, who is the consul general of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam in Vancouver; and Ms Phuong Anh Pham, who is the consul. Alberta's relationship with Vietnam is rich and multi-faceted with annual exports to Vietnam averaging $35.7 million between 2008 and 2012; 25,000 Albertans of Vietnamese descent contributing to our cultural heritage, shared values, and vibrant economy; and agreements in place to advance co-operation and vocational training, labour mobility, trade, and agriculture-related training and research. This year marks the 40th anniversary of diplomatic relations between Canada and Vietnam, a milestone in our friendship. Our esteemed guests are sitting in the Speaker's gallery, and I'd now ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

Statement by the Speaker

Brevity

The Speaker: Hon. members, further to my comments in the House yesterday regarding introductions and tabling returns and reports, I want to ask members to be particularly observant, if you would, please, of the following guidelines as we continue with the fall sitting.

With respect to introductions please be reminded that members who are introducing visitors or guests should limit themselves to briefly stating the names and the relevant facts about the individuals being introduced. Keep in mind that this should normally not take more than 30 seconds. We do tend to allow a little bit longer time for visitors who are official visitors to the province, and these introductions, of course, should be as nonpartisan as you can possibly make them. In fact, there are other Legislatures such as in Ontario where they only allow five minutes total for any introductions of anyone. You can imagine where that would put us if we were to try to stick to a rule like that. Frequently our introductions stretch into 15 minutes.

With respect to the tabling of returns and reports if we look at how Ottawa and other places like that apply this function, there are very rigid conventions that govern this aspect as to what may be tabled and also by whom things might be tabled. We in Alberta are very generous in our tablings with respect to the leniency we offer to all of you, but I wouldn't want us to get too carried away.

The same would pertain to petitions. This is not a time to make political statements as such. Be short, be brief, to the point, and we will obviously have good success in that respect.

Let us move on.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The first group is school groups. Let's start with the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of grade 6 students from the Greystone Centennial middle school in the Finance minister's constituency of Spruce Grove-St. Albert. They are accompanied by Mrs. Trish Spink, Mr. Bruce Colody, Mrs. Kayla Doering, Mr. Dale Johnston, Miss Richardson, Mrs. Lindsay Thornhill, Mrs. Shauna Sak, Mrs. Gale Sulier, Mrs. Shelley Quenneville, Mrs. Marnie Hebert, Ms Ceone Fournier, and Ms Leanne Tobert. They are seated in both the public and members' galleries this afternoon, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, I'm immensely proud of my fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and one of the reasons is that we've got a number of educational opportunities and programs. We have some guests from one of those programs with us in the public gallery today. The program is called Careers in Transition. I believe there are four participants in the program here today, and they're led by their teacher/group leader, Mr. Allan Carlson. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let us move on to the Deputy Premier for your introduction, please.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the spirit of collaboration I will keep it down to five minutes. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a fantastic postsecondary institution leader. Three years ago Dr. Elizabeth Cannon was appointed the eighth president and vice-chancellor of the University of Calgary. Dr. Cannon is a passionate voice for higher education in our province, someone whose advice I definitely value a great deal, and a phenomenal role model for women in engineering, being an engineer herself. Accompanying Dr. Cannon today is John Alho, associate vice-president for government and community engagement. Again, a very valuable member of the U of C team. I'm happy to welcome them here to the Legislature today. I had a brief meeting with them earlier, and I hope that they will enjoy the proceedings of question period. I would ask them to rise and receive your welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure and an honour today to rise in the House and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very, very special people. I will be joined later by my colleague the associate minister with another introduction. Today we're introducing Bill 30, the Building Families and Communities Act, and in doing so, we want to say thank you to the chairs of the CFSAs, the child and family services authorities, and the chairs of the PDD Boards.

I would like to introduce some of the chairs, not all of the chairs but most of the chairs, of the CFSA boards across the province who are here with us today and ask the House to say thank you in a very special way for the service they have provided. They are dedicated to serving their communities by working tirelessly to address issues and needs that affect the lives of vulnerable children and families. I'd ask them to rise as I mention their names. From the southwestern Alberta CFSA we have Sharon Holtman and Tom Wickersham. Kathy Cooper joins us from the southeast region. John Phillips is here from the Calgary and area region and Christine Moore from the central Alberta region. East-central is represented by Shelly Pewapsonias – I promised her I'd say it right – and Iris Larson. Louise Charach joins us from the Edmonton and area region, and Audrey Franklin is here from the north-central Alberta CFSA. From the northwest region we have Karen Egge and Wendy Goulet. Tracy Czuy McKinnon joins us from the northeast region.

Also with us, Mr. Speaker, from the Department of Human Services are two representatives of the many people in Human Services that have been involved in this process, Harriet Switzer and Tracy Wyrstiuk. They're in the public gallery.

I'd ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and thank you of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four representatives from our persons with developmental disabilities boards. We have six PDD regions in the province, which you would be well aware of, all served by dedicated boards who are committed to helping Albertans with developmental disabilities live rewarding lives in their community. Today Jill Bushrod is joining us from the central region, Blair Lundy from the Edmonton region, the northeast region is represented by Glenn Hennig, and Jane Manning is here from northwest PDD. To them and through them to all of the board members and staff back in the regions I offer my sincerest thanks, and I'd ask that the House join me in offering the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through to all members of the Assembly six participants in the 2013 Shanghai scholarship council exchange program with the University of Alberta. Nineteen of the brightest professors from 19 different universities in Shanghai were selected to participate in this program, representing a range of fields such as engineering, music, and political science. They have spent three months with various faculties at the U of A, learning Canadian teaching styles as well as exchanging ideas on how to best facilitate research flows between these education institutions. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would like to ask that they please rise as I call their names: Ms Liyuan Xing, Ms Ping Miao, Ms Zhonghong Yan, Ms Hong Zhang, Ms Yan Wang, Ms Dongjie Niu. I ask all members to please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests from the Coalition for Action on Post-Secondary Education. They are here today to voice their opposition to this PC government's harmful cuts to postsecondary education in Alberta, and they bring with them over a thousand letters from Albertans concerned about cuts to postsecondary. The letters, students, staff, and faculty at the U of A speak about the detailed impacts the cuts have on the university, and they are calling on the government to restore funding so that all Albertans may reap the benefits of postsecondary education and academic research in the province. I would now ask that my guests rise as I call their names: William Anselmi, Brent Bellamy, Micah Cooper, Derriett Mason, and Carolyn Sale. I ask that the Assembly join me in giving them their traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Red Deer-North.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a resident of Calgary-Glenmore, Daryl Leinweber. Daryl was born and raised in Calgary, where he is currently the executive director of the Calgary Minor Soccer Association. Daryl is a passionate advocate of volunteerism and has also shared his time and energy with Scouts Canada and various hockey schools involving NHL coaches and players on the Tsuu T'ina reserve. Daryl has received numerous national and provincial volunteer awards, including the gold-level Duke of Edinburgh award, the Alberta centennial medal for community engagement, and the Alberta Soccer Association special recognition award, to name a few. I would now ask Daryl to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, today I have the distinct privilege of introducing to you and through you to the members of this House a very good friend and a great citizen. Christine Moore is here today as the co-chair for the central Alberta CFSA. She is the past chairperson for the Red Deer Catholic school board and has just been elected to her first term as municipal councillor for the county of Red Deer. Christine is the producer and director for the annual Celebrity Dance-Off, which is Red Deer's very successful version of Dancing with the Stars. Having emigrated to Canada from England with her husband, David, over 20 years ago, they have three wonderful children and feel very fortunate to live in Canada and especially in Alberta. I would say that we are even more fortunate to have her among us. Christine is in the members' gallery, and I would ask her to rise and accept the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you two individuals. The first one is Mr. Drew Brown. Drew is an executive director of Saint Jude's Health Management Institute, a small volunteer-driven registered charity helping people in Calgary and area reach their potential by connecting them to resources. He and his volunteer group provide case management, system navigation, community collaboration, and advocacy for Saint Jude's clients. He's also the chair of the family sector of the action committee on housing and homelessness, and he's been a very good friend for a long time of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

The second individual I want to introduce to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the rest of the Assembly is a gentleman who is a fourth-year political science student at the University of Calgary, who is doing a co-op term in my office as a ministerial intern. He came on as I was posted as associate minister of recovery and reconstruction, so he's been travelling around between two communities in the southwest portion of the province, even giving me the occasional break behind the wheel, Mr. Speaker.

I know that you said that this is supposed to be nonpartisan, so I will say that these individuals were instrumental in my political endeavours and in allowing me to be in this House as well. So if I could get both of them to stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Local Decision-making

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we know this PC government just doesn't care about local autonomy. The evidence is overwhelming. We've seen it in land-use bills that extinguish landowner rights, we've seen it with the elimination of local health authorities, concentrating power in a giant bureaucracy, and we've seen it in the countless examples of government ministers and staff bullying and intimidating locally elected representatives. Their brazen contempt and disregard for local decision-makers is, quite frankly, astonishing.

But in this session they are taking it to a new low. Bill 28, the Modernizing Regional Governance Act, might be the most heavy-handed, draconian, and regressive piece of municipal legislation ever conceived in this Assembly. As it is currently written, it will strip away whatever semblance of local autonomy we have left. Essentially, it gives provincially appointed planning boards complete and total control over the planning activities of municipalities. Municipalities won't be able to make a bylaw, pass a resolution, enter into an agreement, or undertake a public work improvement, structure, or other thing if it disagrees with the decisions of these planning boards. Participation and co-operation with these overlord boards is mandatory. Municipalities that don't submit to them will face stiff fines; their senior managers will face jail time. Plans approved by the overlord boards will be in full compliance with another draconian piece of legislation, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and will override any municipal planning strategies currently in place.

On top of it all, Mr. Speaker, they're rolling it out without consultation at a time when newly elected municipal officials are just being sworn into office. Before some new mayors, reeves, and councillors have even set up their offices, this government is fundamentally and unilaterally changing how they will do the jobs they were elected to do.

It's sneaky, it's offensive, and it's just plain wrong. Mr. Speaker, if this government was looking to pick a fight, they've picked one. The Wildrose Official Opposition will fight tooth and nail against this legislation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Speaker was struggling to hear parts of that member's statement, so please let's be respectful of each other while these members' statements are being delivered.

Government Accountability

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, Albertans and other Canadians are increasingly dismayed and disgusted by a federal government and a Prime Minister that trample not only on our democratic traditions but also on principles of transparency, openness, and honesty. Secrecy has replaced openness. Spin has replaced truth. Cynicism has replaced integrity.

While the Senate expense scandal has brought these sordid practices into sharp focus, Canadians were already too familiar with the antidemocratic doctrine of Harperism. But Harperism is not limited to the federal Conservative government in Ottawa. It is alive and well right here in Alberta. Under this Premier Harperism has taken root in our province. Secrecy, disregard for the law, contempt for the people's elected representatives, and the sacrifice of anyone who has become a political liability are hallmarks not only of Stephen Harper but also of this Premier.

When the Privacy Commissioner ruled that the PCs had to release information about severance packages paid to the Premier's office staff, the Premier simply said that she would not comply. Then when a judge ruled that the government's secret policy of barring environmental groups from hearings on oil sands projects violated the law, the Premier's government announced that they would simply disregard the ruling.

Instead of outlining her government's plans before the elected representatives of the people of Alberta in a throne speech, this Premier chose to do it at an $85-a-plate lunch at the Chamber of Commerce. The symbolism could not be more clear. This Premier chooses to be accountable to the business community, not to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we don't have to go to Ottawa to see Harperism at work. This Premier and her office are master practitioners in ignoring judges and privacy commissioners alike, keeping major government policy secret, and throwing former friends and allies under the bus when it suits her. This Premier presides over the most secretive government in Canada, and Albertans deserve much, much better.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to begin with the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition. However, we had a computer malfunction in my office, and I don't have a list of other questioners today. Hopefully, that'll be rectified soon, and I will get a copy of that delivered to me at the dais as quickly as possible. Meanwhile, let us begin.

Regional Governance

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this government seems to be completely in love with top-down processes, centralization, and one-way, you-listen-to-me consultations. This week we have learned that they wish to completely overhaul regional governance and create unelected municipal overlords that will strip away local autonomy and independence from our municipalities. Now, my question is not about the bill. It's about the consultation process. To the Premier: which municipalities told her that they wanted PC government appointees controlling their affairs?

Ms Redford: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, no one did, because that's not what this legislation does. We work very hard, as you know, with mayors of communities across this province, evidenced by the work that we do with AUMA, AAMD and C, certainly the work that this incredible Minister of Municipal Affairs has done in the past six months. We look to the Capital Region Board, the Calgary Regional Partnership, and communities to ensure that we are working in partnership. In fact, the Leader of the Opposition is absolutely right. This will change the relationship between municipalities and the provincial government for the better because we have modern communities with strong leaders that want to build Alberta, just like us.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the mayors we're talking to have gone ballistic.

This government seems determined to enshrine these municipal overlords in record time. As near as we can tell, the AUMA, the AAMD and C, and no municipalities were consulted on these boards, and the government wants them established and enshrined into legislation by next week. Why is the Premier in such a hurry to place PC government appointees in charge over locally elected officials?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I've had to contact a lot of mayors, too, just to undo the myths and rumours and, actually, quite frankly, frightening language that this member uses. In 2007 the Working Together group put together the regulations for the Capital Region Board. This legislation that we're introducing, which is what they're talking about, is a mirror image of that. Nothing has changed. We're simply putting in legislation what we were already doing in regulation to support the Capital Region Board in doing the good work it's doing for the region.

Ms Smith: The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation doesn't just apply to the capital region. In fact, these new municipal overlords will have incredible powers over locally elected officials. Mayors and reeves who don't kowtow to the province's overlord appointees could face jail time and five-figure personal fines. When the Premier was consulting on this idea, can she tell us which mayors and reeves suggested that they be jailed or fined for not going along with the government's edicts?

Mr. Griffiths: Here we go, Mr. Speaker. They're specifically referring to the legislation that's coming forward. I can once again say that the Doug Radke-led report that formed the Capital Region Board to begin with created this regulation. What we're talking about now is an exact mirror image. Our own regulations under 603 say that it can only be regulation for a few years and then it has to move into legislation. That's what we're doing. These members not only work to make sure that municipal councillors are terrified and afraid, but I have countless examples of where they bully and intimidate and attack publicly for building libraries, for making decisions about airports. We will not take decisions or information from them about how to work with municipalities.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister's phone is going to be ringing off the hook.

Severance Payments to Premier's Office Staff

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a direct question of the Premier regarding severance for her former chief of staff, specifically, if the $130,000 payment was the only payment he received from her office upon his departure. Instead of answering a direct question, the Premier stayed true to form and avoided providing any useful information whatsoever. So to the Premier once again: was $130,000 as a payment to her ex-chief of staff the only payment he received when he left her office?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in fact, that is not what the Leader of the Opposition did yesterday. She made wild allegations that were unfounded. We are absolutely committed to full transparency for all of our senior staff. We're putting that policy in place. It will be very clear, it will be comprehensive, and it will be something that Albertans can trust. That will be our answer when we release all of that information.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, because the Premier refuses to confirm that the $130,000 was the only payment, Albertans are left with the strong suspicion that the total number was, in fact, a lot higher. We see a pattern with this government: a revolving door for its staff, particularly at the highest levels, followed by millions of dollars in severance payouts. Will the Premier commit today to releasing full and detailed severance information for all of the political staff that have fled her office since she became Premier?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we made that commitment two weeks ago. We're putting that system in place. I'm sorry if the hon. member has concerns, but I know that we're confident in the work that we will do. If there is any reason that Albertans have those questions, it's because this leader stands up day after day producing stunts, does not contribute to a discussion that builds this province or gives anyone confidence in that future, and that's what we should be talking about in this House.

Ms Smith: The reason I ask every day, Mr. Speaker, is because the Premier refuses to answer the question every single day.

The whole affair is hard to swallow for everyday Alberta families, who work hard and pay their taxes. They want to see their tax dollars spent on programs to help those who need it most, not gold-plated severance packages for political staffers. Does the Premier recognize how her actions have damaged the people's trust in her and her government, and will she commit to finally ending the practice of solid gold severances?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in fact, as we said, we're going to provide all of the information in terms of a comprehensive package with respect to existing contracts, previous contracts, and contracts for the future. That is what Albertans want, and that's what we're going to give them.

But I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, this is a government that is committed to building Alberta, to investing in families and communities as opposed to the opposition, who would take $5 billion out of the operating budget this year. So it's rather ironic for the Leader of the Opposition to stand up and talk about wanting more money invested in programs for Albertans when she wants to cut $5 billion out of the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Flood-related School Construction

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, parents are getting tired of this government playing politics with our kids. Today we learn that the government is going to spend $1.1 million on a new temporary gym in the Premier's riding when an underused gym is right next door. Now, that brings the price tag of this temporary school project to more than $5 million when simply busing these kids to a school 12 minutes away would make much more sense. Taxpayers are again scratching their heads. To the Premier. This decision pits kids, communities, and parents against each other, and you know that. Why did your government do this?

Ms Redford: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the only person I've heard today doing that is the hon. member. We faced a tragedy on the 20th of June, and individuals across this province were affected. We made a commitment to work with communities in partnership to identify their needs and to make sure that we were supporting them so that as families and communities we could rebuild and get back to normal as soon as possible. It shouldn't be a news flash to this member that building schools and communities is exactly what we need to do. We have ministers who've been working closely with community leaders in High River and Calgary, doing the work that needs to be done, and I'm very proud of how they're rebuilding Alberta.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, given that we have a desperate need for schools, modulars, and modernizations from one end of this great province to the other, we need this Premier to explain to all these people on the list that are waiting for these projects: how can you spend more than $5 million on an unnecessary temporary school gym and school while leaving so many others scrambling for your mercy and spare change?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it would be very interesting to hear what the parents in Calgary would like to say to that response, when he tells them that their facilities are unnecessary after this flood. The reality is that when this flood hit, our Premier acted immediately. We went out to school boards and said: "What do you need? What do you need for your students? We don't care who their MLA is. We don't care how wealthy they are. We don't care what colour they are. What do they need to be ready for school in September?" Those school boards and those communities came back to us and told us what they needed, and we're delivering it.

Mr. McAllister: I think we can dispute that.

Given that students in High River have to take gym classes in banquet halls and in school fields outside of the schools as they wait for portables, after broken promises and missed deadlines yet again from this government, Premier, is it right to direct more than $5 million to this project in your own riding, when a much better and smarter alternative exists, while flood-affected families in High River are quite literally left out in the cold? It sure looks like you're playing favourites.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that's great drama, but it's just short on facts. The one I've got to correct is with respect to his claims about High River. You know, I would recommend that the member actually talk to some of the school boards. This flood is four months old, and they wait until today to bring it up? Let me give you the quote that went from Christ the Redeemer school board to the Herald yesterday in response to that claim about gym space. "Our PE situation improves dramatically as we have access to the Notre Dame gym which was phased for early completion and available now. We didn't need a temporary structure as the gym is available and far superior." Well, unfortunately, the Herald chose not to report that.

Health Care Wait Times

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose refer to the Fraser Institute report on health wait times while the Health minister takes comfort in the CIHI report. Well, I like to look at AHS reports. Unfortunately, however, AHS's latest quarterly performance report due at the end of September has yet to be released. To the Premier: what is the expected wait time for the wait times report?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister has said in this House in the last week, we're absolutely committed to building a public health care system that improves the quality of life of Albertans. [interjections] Over the past year and a half the work that we've been able to do to shorten wait times has been very important, and I'm very proud of the work that the front-line workers have done in Alberta Health Services to ensure that that happens. As our minister says, we will always strive to do better – we have seen constant improvement – and that is what we will continue to do.

I will just take a moment to say: can we please keep some of this in perspective? Let's keep in perspective the fact that if we're really honest with ourselves, Albertans tell us that they get care when they need it and they have confidence in the health care system. [interjections] So let's keep it in perspective, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Let's also keep in perspective some of the rules. There are just too many interjections going on.

Let's go. Your first supplemental, hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier needs to exercise the art of listening. The question was: where's the report?

Well, Mr. Speaker, results in five major wait time categories were rather consistent in the previous four AHS reports. For example: hip surgery, failed; knee surgery, failed; cardiac surgery, failed; seniors in hospitals waiting for long-term care, failed; emergency wait times – you guessed it – failed. To the Premier: I imagine you wouldn't want to be embarrassed heading into your leadership review. [interjections] Is that why this report is being delayed?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's evident what the facts may bring. [interjections] I'll read out some of the recent facts on wait times in Alberta, including a 9 per cent reduction in hip surgery wait times, a 15 per cent reduction in knee replacements, a 22 per cent reduction in cataract surgeries, 10 per cent for bypass surgeries, and being set to reduce cornea replacement wait times from three years to 14 weeks. Facts.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we are spending $5 billion more today compared to five years ago – the population has only gone up 11 per cent – and we're failing.

Speaking of wait times, according to the most recent EMS performance measures 50 per cent of the time in Edmonton when Albertans call 911, ambulances arrive late in life-threatening emergency cases. This is in Edmonton. Can you imagine how bad it is in Grande Prairie or Fort Mac? To the Premier: why should the odds of an ambulance arriving on time when your life is in danger be about the same as winning a coin toss, 50-50?

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Speaker, it's been very clear ever since I've been an MLA that we've invested more in health care than any other province across this country, and ever since that point we've grown in our population and demands have increased. [interjections] I'm very, very proud in rural Alberta – I live in rural Alberta – of the care that we get from our professionals in health services. [interjections] And we continue to increase those investments in health care as we speak.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you continue with these interjections, I'm going to stand and allow whomever is asking the question or giving the answer additional time, which means two or three or four people will drop off the list. I know you don't want that. So, please, let's tighten things up.

The leader of the New Democratic opposition.

Medical Laboratory Services

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier responded to my question about the privatization of medical lab services by saying, and I quote: it isn't happening. But it is. This Alberta Health Services document, which I will table, proves it. To the Premier. Her answer yesterday is contradicted by the facts. Will she now confirm that AHS is indeed going ahead with a $3 billion contract to a single corporation to privatize lab services in Edmonton?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I will absolutely confirm that we are going to consider everything we can to make health care more effective, and there is not a chance that we are going to exclude any option. I find it incredible that this member is so concerned about sole sourcing contracts or one-person monopolies when the only thing that their party believes in is nothing but fully funded public health care that is only delivered in some of the ways that are most connected to the traditional, old-fashioned public health care system. We can look to new models, we can ensure public safety, and we can make sure that we continue to build a health care system that Albertans have confidence in regardless of what this member says.

The Speaker: The hon. New Democratic leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, if you know how the Premier puts things, that answer I'm going to take as a definite yes. And it's certainly true that the NDP is in support of public health care, unlike this government.

AHS employees have been told that three corporations have been prequalified to bid for this contract. One of those corporations, LabCorp of the United States, had to repay $187 million for billing U.S. Medicare for unnecessary blood tests and another 49 and a half million dollars to the state of California because of false claims to the state's medicaid program. Are these the people you want running our health system?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think that if those companies, that I know nothing about, did something wrong, they should pay back the money.

Mr. Mason: Oh, and so should Mike Duffy.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier is too clever by half because the question is: is this government prepared to award a $3 billion contract to a corporation with this kind of track record?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the fact that this hon. member is suggesting that this government would do that is ridiculous. We know that we want to make sure that we provide and contract and support the best possible services for patient safety regardless of what they are. We are committed to public health care. We promised Albertans that we would continue to improve health care, that we would fund health care publicly, that people could have confidence in it, and that is what they can trust.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Let's keep the preambles hereafter out of the supplementaries.

I'm sorry. You had one more question?

Mr. Mason: I do. Actually, I have several, but I probably can only have one.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier claims . . .

The Speaker: Oh, no. Hang on. My counting was correct. We have you down as one main and two sups. Okay. Apology accepted. Thank you.

Let's move on, then, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Highwood.

School Construction Priorities

Mr. Sandhu: Mr. Speaker, my first question is to the Minister of Education. We won this last election with the promise to build and modernize schools for our children. I'm so thankful to see the momentum and progress being made to build 50 new schools and upgrade 70 schools in our beautiful province. These promises have helped put the people's trust in me and this government. Right now northeast Edmonton is one of the fastest growing communities within our capital city. Therefore, my question is this: when can Edmonton-Manning expect to see new schools being built?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. It's a question many communities around the province are asking. I commend the member for being a strong advocate for his community. I would encourage him to work with his local school board because one of the most important things is to make sure that the schools that are important to his constituents are on the capital list of the local school boards which they submit to us. They redid those over the last year, and they sent those in to us in about the June, July timeframe. Our capital planning group has been working on what the priorities across the province are. We're a little bit behind because there have been a lot of demands over the summer, as you can well imagine, on that capital planning group.

Mr. Sandhu: My second question is also to the same minister. Given that Dr. Donald Massey school was full as soon as it opened in 2010 and only two of the four requested modulars were received last year, when can we expect to receive the other two modulars? They are so badly needed for my riding.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we've got real demands for modulars all over the province. We have a budget to deliver about 40 a year. We got requests last year for about 400, so we upped the budgets. We were able to deliver about a hundred. To give you a sense, these things take between six and eight months to put together and build and deliver. Many of the modulars that were ordered back in April are still not delivered yet to schools around the province.

Now, those hundred don't include the 54 that we ordered very quickly for the floods. I can say that all of those 54 are on-site, and we already have 400 kids in those 54. We're well on our way to accommodating the flood victims, but we need to do more work for the rest of the province.

Mr. Sandhu: To the same minister. We have old schools like Father Leo Green that need to be updated. When can we expect to see this happen for my riding?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'd say, "Stay tuned," and I'd remind the member to make sure that he's working with his local school board to make sure that that's a priority for them and that that's on their capital list as well.

We did announce 28 new schools and two modernizations in the spring. We anticipate announcing a long list of modernizations here by the end of the calendar year and then another list of new schools in the new year. We're working on those lists right now.

I'm very grateful that we've got a Premier who's building the province by investing in families and communities. Those 50 new schools and 70 modernizations are going to go a long way towards that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by Calgary-East.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health minister just keeps on digging himself a bigger hole on health care wait times. Yesterday after a miserable attempt at spinning his government's dismal record on wait times, the minister trotted out the excuses. He argued that every province in Canada is having trouble with wait times, so it should come as no surprise that Alberta is, too. Now, again, I cannot fathom that the Health minister wouldn't know the real facts. The question I have is: is he going to stick to his excuses, or does he again need to be told the facts?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not apologize for the improvements that we've made in wait times. The facts are: 9 per cent reduction in hip surgeries, 15 per cent reduction in knee replacements, 22 per cent reduction in cataract surgeries, 10 per cent reduction in bypass surgeries, and set to reduce cornea replacement wait times from three years to 14 weeks.

Ms Smith: More excuses, Mr. Speaker. Why am I not surprised? Here again are the real facts. Hip replacement waits: Ontario, 192 days; B.C., 216 days; Alberta, 245 days. Cataract surgery: Ontario, 128 days; B.C., 148 days; Alberta, 209 days. Bypass surgery: Saskatchewan, 19 days; Alberta, 84 days. That is the worst in the country. To the minister: what's his excuse?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that 24 months ago Albertans decided whose facts to take to the Legislature, and I'll stand by that.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, with example after example of ridiculous wait times, I am sure the minister is starting to see why we need the Wildrose patient wait time guarantee. It's pretty simple. If you're on a wait-list past what is medically recommended, you get treated using Alberta's out-of-province fund. Will the minister agree today to stop the pain and suffering caused by his government's excessive wait times and implement our wait time guarantee?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, what I will commit to is further streamlining our system so we improve access to wait times and improve health care for all Albertans. Four million Albertans expect the best out of this system, and so does this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we found out that the government had an agreement with the Tsuu T'ina Nation that would allow for the building of the southwest portion of Calgary's ring road. Media reports have suggested that there are still some potential hurdles to overcome. Could the Minister of Transportation please inform this House what these hurdles are and when all of this is to be completed?

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently we're in a seven-day appeal period. Following that, we hope to get a date, and we hope by the end of November to sign the agreement. After that, we will continue to work with the Tsuu T'ina Nation and the federal government to complete the processes necessary under the government of Canada for the land transfer so that we can move forward. Once all the processes are complete, of course, we'll begin construction, but we'll try not to waste that time. In the meantime planning, engineering, design work will be undertaken because we know this is a piece of infrastructure that's important to the Tsuu T'ina, the city of Calgary, and all of Alberta, and it's part of this Premier's mandate to build Alberta.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Tsuu T'ina had the opportunity to review the entire agreement before voting. When do Albertans get to see the agreement and have their say on it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for that. To the hon. member: Albertans had their say last year at the election. They had one of their says, but they're not finished having their say. The agreements and the maps are posted on the Alberta Transportation website, and they were posted there last Friday, which was the first day that we could actually say that we had an agreement because that's the day the chief announced that the members of the band had voted in favour. At that point and only at that point did we have an agreement. We'll continue to share information with Albertans. I have to say that the southwest ring road is a big priority, and we intend to get to . . .

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell this House what is going to happen to the Weaselhead natural area as a result of this road being built through it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We are currently completing an agreement with the city of Calgary to obtain a corner of the Weaselhead park in order to facilitate the building of the southwest part of the ring road. Additionally, we'll be relocating a utility high-pressure gas line and overhead electrical lines. In other words, we're taking those out of the Weaselhead area, which we think will make it better and benefit that area.

The ring road is a good investment. We're building Alberta, and under the Premier's leadership we will make transportation better for the Tsuu T'ina, Calgarians, and all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

PDD Supports Intensity Scale Assessments

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the spring of 2013 this government was under fire for its cuts to the PDD system. The associate minister of PDD toured the province and heard first-hand about the fear, the mistrust that this government created by poorly communicating its plan to transform the delivery of services to vulnerable Albertans. Barely a week went by without a protest here at the Legislature or in front of the Premier's office. One of the major problems was the rolling out and administration of the supports intensity scale, or SIS. Can the minister tell the House today how many SIS assessments have been completed?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, as of about a little over a week ago we were at 75 per cent. I would think that we're at about 80 per cent right at the moment.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I would never suggest that this minister intentionally misled the House, but given that on May 7 of this year, in a response to a very similar question that I asked him, he said, "Over 80 per cent of the PDD clients in Alberta have had an assessment already," how could this minister be so out of touch with the numbers in his own portfolio?

Mr. Oberle: Let's make sure we're talking about the same numbers, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member would know because he attended some of the sessions, we committed to do a number of reassessments, and that's what we're doing. That's why we're at the current number, and that's the correct number today.

Mr. Wilson: Facts are facts, Mr. Speaker. Given that six months ago the number was over 80 per cent and according to a report that this minister just referred to, that was issued just days ago, which notes that it's only 77 per cent, how is it possible that after months of hard work and additional hires in the PDD system to complete this assessment, the actual completion rate went down?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I think I just shared the numbers as they stand today, as I understand them today. I guess they're getting their numbers from the same place that they got their health care waiting list numbers. He can take it from me what the numbers are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Environmental Protection

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is in trouble. More and more people in and out of Alberta are rejecting the Premier's sunny op-eds about reducing greenhouse gases as having little relation to the truth and, instead, are pointing to the snaillike approach to achieving environmental protection. In the Cold Lake area CNRL's Primrose in situ site is weeping bitumen out of the ground. It took weeks to detect the leak, weeks more to even fess up, and they can't staunch it. To the minister of the environment: does the minister now acknowledge that thorough and accelerated groundwater mapping would have allowed us to know now faster that Primrose had contaminated our water?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to say that when the incident happened at Primrose, not only was the Alberta Energy Regulator on the scene right away but also the Minister of Energy and myself to make sure that we were on the scene to see what was happening. We continue to do the groundwater mapping in this province. That's important for us. We've been doing that. This incident is under control. We have been on the scene to make sure that CNRL is responsible and are moving forward to the cleanup of this issue.

Ms Blakeman: It took three weeks to even put out a media release.

Does the government or industry have any idea or, better yet, any science on how many other times this leakage or this type of leakage has occurred, especially given the extreme remoteness of exploration and steam-injection sites?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We take the regulatory process in this province through the Alberta Energy Regulator and through ESRD extremely seriously, and that's why we were on-site right away to make sure, the regulator, the Energy minister, and the environment minister.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we made sure that an environmental protection order was put in place so that we could take care of the habitat, take care of the water that was there. We have been on this file from day one, and we will continue to be on this file to make sure that the cleanup happens and that the environment is protected.

Ms Blakeman: Would the minister care to comment on the science from the federal emissions trends report which indicates that Alberta won't meet its climate change targets and is actually set to steadily increase greenhouse gas emissions at the same that we have a Premier writing op-eds saying that we have reduced them and that our environmental record is better than it is? Where's the science on that?

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be very happy to answer this question. We have reduced greenhouse gas emissions. About 40 million tonnes of greenhouse gases have been reduced since 2007 levels. We have reduced per barrel greenhouse gases by 26 per cent. You show me anywhere else that has reduced emissions per barrel like Alberta has done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Little Bow.

Seniors' Drug Coverage

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A universal seniors' pharmacare plan would improve public health, save public money, and provide peace of mind for all. The Alberta New Democrat caucus knows this to be true. Alberta seniors know this, too, and together we are prepared to fight for what's right. Twice now this PC government has tried to attack these goals, and twice we have fought back and delayed a deeply flawed PC seniors' pharmacy scheme. To the Associate Minister of Seniors: when will your government stop threatening Alberta seniors with private insurance, extra-billing, and means testing and start building a universal pharmacare program?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for the question. Nobody knows, other than the seniors in this province, that there are programs like no other across this country for seniors in Alberta. Whether it's the seniors' benefit program, the special-needs program, the optical program, the dental program, there are no other programs across Canada that are even close to what we offer in Alberta. We'll continue to make those investments when it's the right time with the right approach.

Mr. Eggen: Well, that's very interesting, Mr. Speaker.

Given that this government said that they would take $180 million out of seniors' pharmacy and given that the only way you could make that money up is by taking that money out of seniors' pockets, will this minister now tell Albertans that this government will go back to the drawing board so that they will not gouge seniors with extra-billing, expensive insurance, and hidden costs?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, all of the time all of the programs that we have in this province are geared to low-income and vulnerable Albertans. We'll continue to make sure that all vulnerable citizens regardless of age are protected under any plan going forward. There's no concrete pharmaceutical plan in place as of yet. That discussion will happen with the Health minister when it's the right time.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that all of this uncertainty is making it very difficult for people to plan for retirement and given that private, for-profit drug lobbyists such as Hal Danchilla have been circling around this place like sharks ever since government planned to make seniors pay more for their prescriptions through means testing, will this minister please let us know when this government will park their private ideology at the door and start building a universal pharmacare program that we all can count on?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister has made it very clear that about 20 per cent of Albertans have no health coverage at all for pharmaceuticals. The intention of all of our programs is to make sure that the vulnerable, low-income Albertans are always covered.

Mr. Eggen: Everyone should be covered.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I said that all Albertans that are vulnerable and low income will always be covered with the programs that we offer.

Thank you.

Crop Insurance for Flood Damage

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, the horrific June floods brought out the best in Albertans. First responders, community members, and friends and families banded together to help one another during these most trying times. The aftermath of this tragedy has been far reaching, but I've spoken to many Albertans who feel this government has ignored some of their concerns. One of these individuals is Jeff Callahan. Jeff is a hard-working farmer whose land was used to pump flood water out of High River. While he understands that this was a necessary measure to save homes, he has now been denied crop insurance coverage. To the minister of agriculture: what is being done to ensure that farmers are being fairly compensated for flood damages?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. There's no doubt that rural Albertans and people in the agricultural industry were greatly affected by this. Having said that, we were also lucky because it was a great crop year in many ways. I know that when I have flown down over southern Alberta, it's been pointed out to me that when you look at the irrigation area, you can't tell the difference between the area where the pivot is and the corner areas because of the great moisture we've had. Really, it's been a good year for crops.

This is a question about insurance coverage. AFSC has been very active and aggressive in addressing concerns by people such as . . .

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've seen pictures of his combine stuck in the overwet areas, which I understand are needed. Why has this government been unwilling to help this farmer with his problems on this? Could we not do a spot claim? It could be a hail or fire claim.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised this issue with me before, and I have spoken to AFSC about it. My understanding is that he does have insurance coverage, and I think that's one of the principles of what we're talking about. When we're rebuilding in the aftermath of this flood, the first place you look to is insurance. He does have insurance coverage, maybe not the kind of coverage he would have preferred, but he had bought coverage, and AFSC is perfectly willing to support him with the coverage that he has.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Speaker, I'm a farmer, and I understand how the coverage works. The problem with that is that it's taking out his whole average. His average has been built up. He loses 20 per cent of his farm, and he gets no money because he had such a great crop on the rest. How are you going to help these farmers and other farmers in the area that need the help from the flood damage?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess that's where we get to a discussion about disaster recovery. The disaster recovery program is meant to step in where there is no insurance. We've been very aggressive in addressing issues where people don't have any insurance coverage at all. Where people do have insurance coverage, that's the first place that we rely on. The hon. member, as I said, has raised this issue with me before, and I'm perfectly happy to continue the discussion with him.

2:30 Flood-related School Construction (continued)

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, I'm not done with the Sprung structure issue. This morning the Calgary Herald reported that the Minister of Education made the decision to build the Sprung gymnasium structure for students from the Premier's riding who were displaced by the floods. To the Minister of Education: was this decision made because the students of the school are located in a richer area with strong political ties, and were you playing favourites with provincial money?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, we don't play politics with our students. We've put students first through this whole ordeal, and it's unfortunate that some would pit neighbour against neighbour during this. I'm proud to say that we've got a Premier that has been along the lines of Alberta's culture, which is that we take care of our neighbours.

Now, in this situation, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important for folks to know that the local school boards and the local communities are making these decisions on what the proposals are for solutions, and they're bringing those to us. We're responding to those. We've told them through this flood: whatever you need, we'll be there; we want those kids in school in September, and we're there to support those kids.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, to the associate minister for recovery and reconstruction of High River. I thought of the High River students as they were mentioned in the previous question. They were maybe led to believe that they were the priority. Why aren't those kids provided with the same opportunity and access to this Sprung structure?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we saw in June was an unprecedented disaster. Through this family-focused leadership of our Premier we've seen unprecedented leadership. Right now in High River we have 400 kids in 26 modulars, with 16 more on the way. We've seen a hundred thousand people evacuated from this disaster, and we have 90 per cent of those people back in their homes.

Speaking of Sprung structures, in the town of High River we have approximately $3.6 million worth of those structures aiding the town in a library, a town structure, including a downtown business core, bringing businesses back online. This Premier has led by example with purpose for people.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, the referenced article talked about $1.1 million being an insane amount of taxpayer money. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation said that. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why are we spending so much money on one structure when that money could be used to do a lot of school work in the province?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been committed to rebuild these communities and these schools, and we've done that. Our capital plan still stands. These flood rebuilding projects are coming out of the DRP, and our original capital plans to build schools across this province still stand. It didn't affect the schools anywhere else in this province. We're committed to building 50 new schools and modernizing 70, and that's just what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Disaster Recovery Program

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the June flooding that devastated parts of southern Alberta, the disaster relief this PC government promised to all impacted Albertans has fallen short. Charles Hazzard, for instance, a constituent of mine, watched his house being torn down with no DRP document in hand on the same day the Minister of Municipal Affairs was in Medicine Hat for a photo op. To the minister: why does he care more about photo ops than fulfilling the Premier's promise to provide disaster relief to every Albertan that needs it?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I don't go anywhere for photo ops, but it so happens that where I go, cameras show up and take pictures and the media wants interviews. That's just the way it works.

Quite frankly, there are 30 communities that have been devastated. There are over 9,000 people that made applications for the disaster recovery program. This is not just an unprecedented disaster in Alberta. This is the largest disaster the nation of Canada has ever seen, and our response has been recognized as second to none globally. We'll continue to work to serve every single person, including the Hazzards, to make sure their families are rebuilt.

Mr. Pedersen: Mr. Speaker, given that there are many Albertans in similar dire circumstances as Charles Hazzard waiting patiently on the province for their disaster relief to arrive, how can the minister expect Alberta flood victims to move forward with their lives, not knowing how or when the aid his government promised will come?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we have, I think, 10 times more people on the ground working with these folks who have had some tremendous devastating losses. We're incredibly sympathetic to the losses they have. I would highly recommend that instead of this member parading people's names and their experiences and their challenges, he actually refer them forward. I can't give him an update on the Hazzards, but I know that their file is being resolved as we speak.

Mr. Pedersen: Mr. Speaker, given that this PC government promised relief to all Albertans affected by this summer's flood, will this minister demonstrate that he cares enough about these victims by committing today to give written assurances to all Albertans affected by this disaster stating when and how their DRP relief will come in so that they can move on with their lives and plan their futures?

Mr. Griffiths: Here's the rub, Mr. Speaker. Instead of actually helping with resolving the cases, this member is going to parade individual cases through here. What he's asking is for us to take the several hundred people that are working on individual files and have them all stop the DRP process and write letters to everyone saying that we'll resolve it. Our folks, our hard-working, dedicated civil servants, are working around the clock to resolve every single one of these issues, and that's our commitment right here in the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Country of Origin Labelling

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, there have been some very real and ongoing concerns being raised regarding mandatory country of origin labelling, or MCOOL for short. The U.S. has enacted legislation that unfairly discriminates against Canadian producers and is impeding their ability to compete, costing Canadians, Albertans, and a lot of my constituents hundreds of millions of dollars. Beef being shipped to the U.S. must be labelled as such, but beef shipped out of the U.S. is not required to be. All of my questions are to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. What is the status of the talks regarding resolving the issue?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member for the question. As the biggest producer of beef in Canada and, I think, the third- or fourth-biggest pork producer this is a matter of great frustration for our producers, probably costing us over a billion, $1.2 billion per year in lost revenue. We've been working on this with our other provincial colleagues and with the federal government. Of course, the federal government has the lead on this because it is a trade issue, but we have at least six resolutions being passed by state legislators in support of our position on this.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the World Trade Organization has confirmed that these rules discriminate against Canadian producers, what timelines do we have for a resolution to this matter?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a question that we're all asking, and again it speaks to our frustration. The World Trade Organization at least twice over the last couple of years has ruled in our favour, saying that the U.S. is offside in terms of their NAFTA obligations. We have and Minister Ritz has with our support and the support of other provinces given the Americans a list of how we would intend to retaliate in terms of the commodities that we would be focusing on, and I have actually personally handed the list to some state agriculture secretaries. We don't know how long it will take, though.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are other actions that this government is taking to ensure that all Canadian and American jurisdictions are aware of these issues and to help producers work towards a more equitable solution?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has been very decisive on this and has certainly mandated me and my department to be aggressive in putting our position forward. We've actually taken the lead. For example, this weekend I'm going to be heading to Chicago with Minister Ritz and with the ministers from Saskatchewan and Manitoba to meet with a group of American packers. These are people who are very sympathetic to our position because they're being hurt by these same rules, and we're trying to drum up support there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Environmental Regulatory Process

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Environment adopted a secret policy that denied aboriginal environmental groups the right to participate in our regulatory hearing processes. Ironically, an internal memo warned that this secret policy could open the door for more extremist groups to participate and cause unnecessary legal actions. Why would this government adopt a secret policy that would deny legitimate groups and encourage more extremist groups to participate in our regulatory hearing processes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has a very open process. The policies are very open on who has access with regard to standing at hearings with regard to the regulatory process, and those are followed. Quite frankly, since I've become the minister of environment, I have opened all the doors to make sure that all voices are heard in this province and that we have the opportunity to have everybody heard.

Mr. Anglin: Contrary to a court decision.

Given that Justice Marceau lambasted this government's secret policy and ruled it a violation of natural justice, how can this government say that it cares about Alberta's reputation when they can't even comply with their own laws?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the hon. member across the way, who wants to live in the past from a 2009 report, this government is moving forward. We have created a process under the new Alberta Energy Regulator so that for those that do not have standing and do not have the ability on specific cases, they have a policy management office so that their voices can be heard on all areas. We are improving that regulatory process, and we are proud of that.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a 2013 court decision.

Now, given that this is the second time in four years that this government has been found guilty of delaying and tainting a hearing process with bias, why should industry or our international customers, the ones we're so desperately trying to impress, trust this government?

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you Mr. Speaker. Not only can industry and Albertans trust this government, but this province of Alberta and Albertans elected us because they do trust this government. We have a solid regulatory process that has policies and procedures in place so that our directors can make decisions about the regulatory process, and we've created a new Alberta Energy Regulator, that is transparent and open, so that everyone's voice can be heard.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I deeply regret that I am not able to award any specific kudos today for no preambles to supplementals. However, I will give the given-this, given-that award to Edmonton-Calder. We'll give him that.

In 30 seconds from now we will continue with private members' statements.

Members' Statements

PDD Community Boards

Ms Kubinec: Mr. Speaker, as we heard earlier, the Human Services minister and the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities have invited some special guests from our child and family services authorities and the persons with developmental disabilities boards. I want to acknowledge the very important work of these boards and what they have accomplished over the years.

These board members have dedicated themselves to their respective organizations, fulfilling their roles with passion and commitment. The board members from the 10 regional child and family services authorities come from all walks of life and have focused their work on supporting some of the most vulnerable and youngest members of our society. The board members from the six PDD regions are to be recognized for their enduring leadership and support of adult Albertans with developmental disabilities, helping them to be part of their communities and live as independently as they can. I had the privilege of working with one of our board chairs in the northeast region PDD board.

With their experience and community networks these boards recognized that with the establishment of the ministry, more could be done to strengthen relationships and connect with communities. From collaborative discussions and workshops to involvement with stakeholder engagement, the board members have provided guidance and momentum to support change that's consistent with the direction outlined in Alberta's social policy framework. Designed by and for Albertans, the framework served as a road map for communities, governments, businesses, nonprofits, and families to work together to address social issues. More than 31,000 Albertans participated in developing this framework, and many of the CFSA and PDD board members facilitated community conversations in their regions. All of these collective efforts helped lay the groundwork for our new family and community engagement councils that the Human Services minister is proposing.

On behalf of my colleagues in government I wish to extend a thank you to these board members for their commitment to their communities, to Albertans, and most importantly to those they supported and served.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, are you ready?

Peerless Lake Centenarian

Ms Calahasen: I am ready, Mr. Speaker. There are places in the world that have been identified as a place to come from because most of these people have become close to being centenarians or are centenarians. People who come from these areas are healthy, active, and lucid individuals even in their later years. I'm so lucky to have some communities in northern Alberta whose citizens have reached centenary status. It is time to enshrine these communities in the same vein as others around the world.

Today, specifically, I would like to speak about one individual who recently turned 106 years old. According to official records Mr. George Noskiye was born in Chipewyan Lake on August 20, 1907, and lived most of his life in Peerless Lake. In fact, as of today Mr. Noskiye is the only centenarian elder in the area who has reached 106. He has lived a lifestyle many of us can only imagine, always providing for and supporting his large family as a trapper, a fisherman, and a hunter until three years ago, when at the age of 103 Mr. Noskiye moved into Manoir du Lac seniors' facility in McLennan after living alone and making sure that he was able to still provide for his family.

This is no indication that he has in any way slowed down. I attended his birthday party with his large family, where he was still talking about the things he has seen and continues to see. His fascination with modern-day life is intriguing. Although needing help to walk and move about, he is very lucid and, in fact, still joking about life.

He can look back on his life's journey with pride and accomplishment, which can also serve as an inspiration for future generations of Albertans, especially in communities like Peerless Lake. I wish Mr. Noskiye continued good health, to live longer, and to enjoy the pampering he's getting because he deserves it. I would like to say this in Cree to him: Kahmiyo pimatsin. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Calgary Christian School

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in commemoration of the Calgary Christian School, which is celebrating its 50th anniversary. Since 1963 the Calgary Christian School has offered a well-rounded curriculum that incorporates the teachings of the Bible in every facet of study in order to nurture and strengthen students' spirituality. Currently the school has more than 825 students and offers classes for kids from preschool to grade 12. There are over 100 denominations represented at the school, enabling students to express their spirituality in an inclusively diverse learning environment.

Over the years Calgary Christian School has also been involved in countless philanthropic activities that help teach its students the importance of aiding those less fortunate than themselves. For instance, in June of this year its grade 6 class spearheaded the blessings bags project, with the goal of collecting, in order to provide for the homeless, a bag filled with everyday essentials such as socks, toothbrushes, granola bars, and a number of other useful items. A total of $947 was raised by these incredibly remarkable children, and 72 bags were donated to 72 very grateful citizens.

Next year from March 24 to April 2 students will embark on a much-anticipated trip to Belize that will place a strong emphasis on faith-based service work. This trip will give students the chance to spread their goodwill and collaborate with other spiritually faithful students from another country.

Again, I would like to congratulate the Calgary Christian School for its 50th year and thank its students and families for being amazing spiritual leaders.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

2:50 Unmanned Aerial Systems Industry in Southern Alberta

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are two things that I truly appreciate about Cypress-Medicine Hat and Forty Mile county, the scenery of the big, blue prairie sky and the entrepreneurial spirit of our people. There's something in the works in the community of Foremost that has managed to blend a bit of both.

The Canadian Centre for Unmanned Vehicle Systems is helping to propose the establishment of airspace in the county for piloting and testing unmanned aerial systems. The opportunity of such a project speaks for itself. The unmanned aerial systems industry is rapidly evolving, and in terms of the potential for growth and investment the sky, quite literally, is the limit. The amount of business and organizations who either could use or already do use unmanned aerial vehicles is substantial and growing. We're talking of supporting police operations or eliminating risk to human life in search and rescue operations. We're talking of monitoring of pipelines or using unmanned aircraft to fight forest fires.

Other jurisdictions across the globe have already recognized the investment opportunities of unmanned vehicle systems and have acted on it. The Foremost UAS range for systems training has many of the existing requirements in place to see it become truly a global leader. The plan is to establish a thousand nautical miles of airspace so that investors and organizations from across the world can take to the southern Alberta skies.

Cypress-Medicine Hat has unfortunately been facing some struggles that most other areas in our province do not. A lot of it routes back to the questionable interference of this provincial government in 2008. Cypress-Medicine Hat's population was once growing; now it's not. Much of the blame can be placed on the natural gas royalty review, where a lot of the companies warned that they would have to stop setting up shop there if the changes went through. So there is one word of advice I could give the government here today regarding the UAS industry in southern Alberta: don't get in the way. Let's support this growing, entrepreneurial people.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, the first petition that I'm presenting is signed by my constituents and requests that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to increase funding for care for the elderly.

The second petition that I am presenting from my constituents requests that the government reassess how funding is provided for seniors in long-term care so that enough qualified staff can be hired.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Bill 30 Building Families and Communities Act

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it gives me great pleasure to rise to beg leave to introduce Bill 30, the Building Families and Communities Act. Bill 30 is an act which will accomplish a number of things. The Premier put together the Ministry of Human Services almost exactly two years ago to bring together all of the organizations in government that work with the human condition. We have 10 child and family services authorities boards, six PDD boards as well as six regions for Alberta Works, and we're bringing them all together. This act will create child and community engagement councils across the province, which will provide board governance and bring governance structures and engagement under the social policy framework to the Human Services area and provide assurance.

In doing so, we will disestablish the child and family services authorities and PDD boards, which have served us so well over the years. I want to take again the opportunity to thank the chairs of the CFSA and PDD boards who are with us today and through them the members of their boards both present and past because we have had very, very good service. We're actually growing off their shoulders in terms of the work that's being done, so we really appreciate that work. The efforts of the boards were actually engaged to make these changes. I want to particularly thank Louise Charach and Jeff Nish, co-chairs of a CFSA board and a PDD board together, who brought in a governance report on which this bill is based.

It's an excellent bill, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask the House to support it in first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

Mr. Hancock: I'm reminded, Mr. Speaker, that I should have mentioned that it's a money bill, and His Honour the Lieutenant Governor has provided his approval.

The Speaker: Thank you for that addendum.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have several here. Let's begin with Red Deer-North, followed by Edmonton-Calder and Calgary-Buffalo.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling five copies each of documents signed by 114 constituents requesting that the government of Alberta increase funding for care for the elderly.

The second set of tablings: I am presenting also five copies each of documents signed by 71 constituents asking the government to reassess how funding is provided for seniors in long-term care so that enough qualified staff can be hired.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. You have two, I understand.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I have three. I will be very brief. The first tabling I have is signatures from an online petition calling on the government to reverse their harmful cuts to postsecondary education. The petition reads, "The PCs promised better funding for post-secondary education. But instead, they delivered a 7% cut to . . . universities and colleges."

The second tabling that I have, Mr. Speaker, is in regard to lab privatization, and I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of an op-ed piece published in this morning's Edmonton Journal entitled For-profit Hospital Labs Simply Don't Work. The author specializes in health policy at Carleton University and points to several times in the past where we've gone down this same road and all of the problems that have been caused.

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, I have this afternoon is in regard to the lab privatization. Yesterday, when the leader of the New Democrat opposition questioned the Premier about her government's privatization of lab testing in Edmonton, the Premier said:

Those concerns which those professionals may have are exactly the same concerns that this minister will have and that this government will have when a decision is taken about whether or not to do what this member [is suggesting] is already happening. It isn't.

My goodness.

I would like to table a document from Alberta Health Services entitled The Future of Laboratory Services Delivery. Clearly, this government has made a decision to privatize lab services in Edmonton, and the rest of it's all just a moot, window-dressing point.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Centre and Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you're aware, we lost a great man in Mr. Rick Miller, former MLA in this House, last weekend. I'm just bringing a notice that was posted in the Herald today of some of Rick's lifelong passions and journey as well as that a service will be held at Hosanna Lutheran church on Friday, November 1, at 1 o'clock p.m., and a public celebration of Rick's life will be held on November 15 at the Delta Edmonton South between 1:30 and 5 o'clock p.m.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I understand you have four.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, I think so. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a report that my office has developed, that is giving the body of a letter that we've received from a number of individuals regarding public service pensions. We received letters from it looks like maybe 20 different people. I've listed their names as part of the report, and they are asking the government not to change the pension arrangements that currently exist.

The second tabling is from constituents Frank and Donna Horvath, the appropriate number of copies. They are very concerned about home care. They note that "by shifting patients to their homes from hospitals and then privatizing Home Care, government is diminishing the benefits of the Canada Health Act, [and it] can be watered down at any time.”

An e-mail from Kaitlyn Dziwenka regarding education budget concerns, very concerned that this fine system is being compromised and asking for ongoing and stable funding.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the Government House Leader has caught my attention regarding the clock, and we're not quite finished our Routine.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre mid-flow, but I would ask for unanimous consent so that she can continue.

The Speaker: Unanimous consent has been requested in order to complete our Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hearing no objections, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, please continue.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. An additional letter on education from Dan Scratch notes the importance of investing in children's education and, again, asks to please “provide stable, predictable and adequate funding.”

Finally, Mr. Speaker, from the University of Alberta Press, a letter from Linda D. Cameron, who is very concerned about “the consequences of rapid and wholesale shifting to eFormats for school textbooks.” She notes that “nothing in the world of technology is a sure bet, [but] ink on paper which is permanent” and that the costs of getting readers can be a barrier.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the Minister of Education from Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with the five requisite copies of the Court of Queen's Bench decision, dated October 2013, wherein the Alberta government was found guilty of the apprehension of bias.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail which I quoted from here earlier, which is a question from the Calgary Herald to Christ the Redeemer school division asking if they were offered Sprung structure for temporary gym space. The response from the superintendent from Christ the Redeemer school division to the Herald was that they don't need a temporary structure as they have gym space available and “far superior.” These are the quotes I talked about in question period and the quotes that the Herald chose not to print.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today in response to the minister's request for where I received my information for my question. The first is the requisite number of copies of Hansard from May 7, where the minister for PDD clearly states: “Over 80 per cent of the PDD clients in Alberta have had an assessment already. We will be through most of them before July 1 and the rest of them very shortly thereafter.”

A second tabling is the requisite number of copies of an Alberta Human Services document titled Transforming the PDD Program, where on page 8 the third bullet reads: “As of October 1, 2013 approximately 77% of individuals have been assessed using the Supports Intensity Scale.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, Mr. Clerk, allow me to make a brief tabling myself. Hon members, I'm very, very pleased to table with you five copies of a brochure produced by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta entitled Page Biographies, Legislative Assembly of Alberta: 28th Legislature, Fourth Sitting of the First Session, Fall 2013. It will show you that we have seven new pages who are working with us and have joined us for the first time just this past Monday. Of those seven, whom you will meet in due course, three are on duty today. I want to specifically begin by recognizing them. Devyn Godziuk. Where is Devyn? Oh, here you are. Devyn is a St. Albert student in grade 11 at Bellerose high school; Joely Bragg, a Paul Kane school grade 10 student from St. Albert; and Kylie Kwok, a Paul Kane grade 10 student, also from St. Albert.

In addition, we will also meet in the next days to come Laura Bryan, who is a grade 12 student at St. Peter the Apostle high school in St. Albert; Jenna Geldart, who is a grade 12 student at Archbishop MacDonald high school in Edmonton-McClung; Tianna Groeneveld, who is a grade 11 student at the Vermilion outreach school in the Vermilion-Lloydminster constituency; and Christina Luo, who is from Edmonton-Whitemud and at Lillian Osborne, where she is in grade 11.

Hon. members, I know it goes without saying, but your indulgence in the patience that sometimes is required to indoctrinate these new members will be greatly appreciated not only by them but also by me.

Thank you and welcome to our new pages. Good luck and Godspeed, as they say.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Campbell, Minister of Aboriginal Relations, pursuant to the Northern Alberta Development Council Act the Northern Alberta Development Council 2012-2103 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Johnson, Minister of Education, responses to questions raised by Mr. McAllister, hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View; Mrs. Forsyth, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek; Mr. Pedersen, hon. Member for Medicine Hat, on March 19 and 20, 2013, the Department of Education main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horne, Minister of Health, response to Written Question 23, asked for by Dr. Swann on March 11, 2013:

What is the percentage of new graduates from registered nursing programs in Alberta post-secondary institutions who gained employment with Alberta Health Services in each of the fiscal years 2008/2009 to 2011/2012?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, that's two days in a row that we have managed to escape any points of order. Congratulations. Well done. [interjection]

Hon. Member for Airdrie, you almost had me there.

I'm not yet prepared to rule on the point of privilege that was brought forward yesterday. I will do my best to try and have that ruling ready for you tomorrow. Meanwhile let us proceed with Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 32

Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 32, the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act.

It amends two acts, the Traffic Safety Act and the Highways Development and Protection Act. The amendments brought forward in the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act include granting municipalities the authority to set the times when reduced speed limits in playground zones are in effect, granting the minister the authority to designate lane usage on all provincial highways, and administrative and housekeeping amendments to the Traffic Safety Act and the Highways Development and Protection Act to align with the Criminal Code of Canada and to strengthen and clarify Alberta's legislation pertaining to traffic safety in highway administration.

To provide members with some background, the Traffic Safety Act received royal assent on May 19, 1999. It was proclaimed in force in May 2003; however, most sections of the act were drafted years earlier.

As part of an ongoing process to ensure that legislation is up to date and reflects the priorities of government, we continually reviewed legislation and, combined with input from stakeholders and Albertans, formed the basis of the legislation we are discussing today.

Bill 32, the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act, strengthens both the Traffic Safety Act and the Highways Development and Protection Act, making our highways safer by managing traffic flow and ensuring our children are safe near schools and playgrounds. The Traffic Safety Act amendments are also connected to two strategic priorities of the government of Alberta, building Alberta and expanding markets.

I'd like now to provide members with more detail about the two major amendments I've just spoken of, including their rationale and their connection to the government's strategic priorities. The first item I'd like to speak about is playground zones. All members can agree that we want our children to be safe at school and in playgrounds. As you know, these areas are busy places, with the real possibility that children could dart out onto roadways or be unaware of traffic. Under the Traffic Safety Act municipalities have the ability to increase or decrease the school zone time periods that are laid out in the use of highway and rules of the road regulation provided that they post the new times. However, the TSA does not grant municipalities the ability to alter the time period for playground zones. The speed limit for playground zones in Alberta is 30 kilometres per hour beginning at 8:30 a.m. and ending one hour after sunset every day of the week.

The amendment to the TSA, section 107, would grant municipalities the authority to adjust these playground zone time periods to meet the unique needs of their communities and to better address safety concerns. For example, municipalities could choose to harmonize the time periods for playground zones and school zones, ensuring consistency and clarity for drivers.

This legislation also addresses safety concerns arising from the fact that many children are on grounds adjacent to roads designated as playground zones before 8:30 a.m., when the playground's own speed limit reduction starts. Since municipalities are in the best position to understand the unique needs of those communities, it makes sense to extend their authority to allow them to adjust playground zone time periods.

Municipalities have indicated through their regular interaction with Alberta Transportation and, more recently, at the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties convention that they strongly support being granted the ability to modify playground zone times.

We've also heard from parents and Albertans that enhancements are required to make these zones safer based on the needs of the community. This legislation would still require municipalities to post the new times the playground zone is in effect, and Albertans would still know these times. If passed, this change would go into effect on August 1, 2014, giving municipalities the necessary time to consider changes to playground zone time periods as part of their traffic safety planning.

These proposed amendments show that our government has faith in the decision-making authority of municipalities and that this legislation will help them to address safety needs in their communities. I encourage members to support this amendment.

I'd also like to speak about the amendment related to designating highway lane usage. Alberta's 31,000 kilometres of provincial highway are more than asphalt, bridges, and interchanges. They are an interconnected network that help Albertans get to and from work or school and move products to and from market. Ensuring that provincial highways operate safely and efficiently is a priority for this government, and we're always looking to do better by continuously improving the management of our highways and by being open to ideas and suggestions from Albertans, municipalities, and stakeholders.

One of the key components of an efficient highway network is dealing with traffic flow. As members know, a variety of vehicles use provincial highways, including passenger vehicles, commercial vehicles, buses, and slow-moving vehicles. To accommodate the variety of vehicles and ensure that traffic moves safely and efficiently, we are looking at how we can improve traffic flow.

Under the Traffic Safety Act Alberta municipalities have the authority to designate the use of lanes on municipal roads. This is an important advantage because it allows municipalities to accommodate their unique transportation needs. The Alberta government, however, does not have the same ability for provincial highways. Currently any restriction on a provincial highway applies to all traffic across the whole width of the highway. To improve traffic flow and safety, changes could be proposed that would allow designations on single lanes or that only apply to one type of vehicle. Other jurisdictions, including Ontario, the U.S., and Australia, have designated lane usage to improve the flow of traffic, enhance safety, and reduce driver frustration which comes from slower moving vehicles using the left traffic lane.

This amendment will ensure that the Minister of Transportation has the ability to designate use of lanes on provincial highways. Under this legislation Alberta Transportation could designate traffic lanes or shoulder lanes on provincial highways as priority lanes for buses and high-occupancy vehicles. Traffic lanes could also be designated for truck routes. This could help improve safety on highways such as 63 or 43, where large items are being moved to the oil sands or other resource-related projects in northern Alberta.

Where there are specific requests for lane designations, these will be reviewed on a case-by-case basis. Alberta Transportation will work with municipalities to deal with their unique traffic flow projects and maximize the use of existing highway infrastructure. The ability to designate lanes on provincial highways could result in improved traffic flow, decreased collisions, and reduced driver frustration.

Mr. Speaker, all Albertans benefit from a safe and efficient transportation system that enables market access, supports a strong economy, and serves a growing population. This amendment helps to ensure our provincial highways are functioning at their best so Albertans can count on them when they need them.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act will make administrative and housekeeping amendments to sections 1 through 4 and to section 8 of the Traffic Safety Act and to sections 1, 38, and 51 of the Highways Development and Protection Act.

I'd like to speak about the administrative and housekeeping amendments to the Traffic Safety Act. In 2008 new offences were added to Canada's Criminal Code, including causing bodily harm or death while operating a motor vehicle with a blood-alcohol content higher than .08 and causing bodily harm or death to another person while operating a motor vehicle while having refused to provide a breath or blood sample.

It's important to note that Alberta had already enhanced its impaired driving laws in 2012, when the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, came into force. This law enhanced Alberta's impaired driving sanctions by substituting a set of escalating penalties for the previous 24-hour suspension, lengthening other periods of suspension and seizure, and mandating education and monitoring. By amending the TSA to align with the Criminal Code, Alberta is ensuring its traffic safety legislation is strong, clear, and free of technical loopholes.

Amendments to the Highways Development and Protection Act will clarify wording pertaining to the closure of provincial highways, with a road plan and liability concerning the obstruction of or damage to a highway. These amendments will help to strengthen and clarify the legislation that keeps our provincial highway network operating safely and efficiently.

I'd like to conclude my remarks by saying that the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act is more than just changes to legislation. It will have a real impact on the everyday lives of Albertans. It will make school and playground zones clearer for drivers and safer for children, and it will maximize the efficiency of our vast provincial highway network so that people and goods can move smoothly throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere hope that all members will join me in supporting this important piece of legislation. At this time I would now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 27

Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act

[Adjourned debate October 29: Mr. Griffiths]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you're the only one I see at the moment, so carry on.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to get this opportunity to speak in second reading to the proposed Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. Now, clearly, this bill has a bit of history behind it because many of the things that are in this act were in fact put into place by the government during the floods in southern Alberta this spring and summer. This is a little bit after the fact, but at least they've brought it before the House, which I always appreciate.

But I am uneasy about the amount of additional power, the extended scope of the power that the government is granting to itself. I don't believe it's an exaggeration to make this analogy, but it is, to me, akin to giving itself the War Measures Act to deal with something that really doesn't require that. I mean, this is a very wide scope of power that the government is taking. There is no appeal that is allowed for any of the decisions that are made, no sassing back from those municipalities, not to this government. The language that's used is very aggressive, maybe, or almost hostile.

I have a couple of observations and then a few questions. I'm wondering what the criteria is that the government is using when it sets out things like section 615. I don't want to be too specific here, but when we look at, you know, if there's a disaster or an emergency in a particular municipal authority, then the minister can go ahead and modify provisions of the Municipal Government Act, which covers every municipality in the province. It's the law; it's God. It's what they all are created under. All they need is a disaster, and they can change one or more of the provisions in the Municipal Government Act as it applies to that authority. They can exempt the authority from other requirements or provide them with specific authority in addition to what they already have.

Now, I know that there's some history behind those particular clauses, and maybe I can get the minister or one of his designates to explain that a little more carefully. I do want to know what the criteria are for making those decisions. What is taken into account by the minister in order to implement those powers? There's absolutely nothing in this bill, which is – wait for it – four pages long. But, seriously, with the weight of the powers that are being granted in this bill, it's about four tonnes. I'd like to know what the criteria are. What is their checklist that they are going to use for deciding this allocation of powers and changing of regs under the act?

I look at page 3, that whole definition of floodways. I think what this is is the discussion that municipalities should not be allowed to build things in flood plains – that is the language that I've heard; this is using "floodway" – that the provincial government has got to clamp down and stop municipalities from doing that. Okay. I've certainly read that kind of commentary in the media around what happened this summer.

It does indicate under the relevant section in the bill that the Lieutenant Governor in Council "may" make these regulations. In other sections it's "must" make the regulations. This is "may." But I do note, everybody, that this is cabinet. This is not the Legislature. Nobody has to come back and talk to anyone. There's no consultation required under this. Cabinet can just go ahead and start doing this.

This would be regulations controlling, regulating or prohibiting any use or development of land that is located in a floodway within a municipal authority, including,

And I love this.

without limitation,

Yowza. That's a lot of power: without limitation.

regulations specifying the types of developments that are authorized in a floodway.

Wow. Without limitation. Just imagine. You know, that's like an all-you-can-eat buffet forever, without limitations.

It goes on. You can exempt a municipal authority from the application of the act or anything. You can modify or suspend it. You can define the meaning of floodway. Given that so much rides on this whole concept of floodway, how can you pass an act that depends so much on the meaning of floodway, which you don't have in the act? I guess they're going to develop it later under a regulation. So we're being asked in this House to pass a bill that depends a lot on the definition of floodway, but we don't have a definition of floodway. They're going to make it up later.

Are you sensing the gap in logic here? There's a bit of a jump. Somebody had a little bit of a stumble and jumped onto the next page maybe? I would say that that's a fairly gaping hole. I was quite interested in the principle of this bill. I'm still open to supporting it. But, honestly, you want me to pass something in which you guys are going to figure out the definition of it later? You're giving yourself a whole bunch of powers without limitation to do stuff, to change sections of the Municipal Government Act, and you'll decide what that means and the definition of it later. You know, I don't think I trust this government enough to just give you that blank cheque. No.

I would like to know how you're going to facilitate this process of defining the floodway definition after we've already passed the act. How does that affect communities that already have existing and thriving residences or venues in what I guess could be defined as a floodway? How do you know? How do you have any certainty about whether you should build a garage, whether you should expand your store? You have no idea. When you look in the Municipal Government Act, you go: "Okay. I may or may not be in a floodway. I don't know what the definition of that is because the government is going to make it up later. I would like to do some improvements, but I don't know if can do that because I don't know what the criteria of it are and if I'm actually defined as being in a floodway."

You guys make it really hard to support you sometimes, like, unnecessarily difficult. You went through this whole thing this summer. You did a fairly good job. Lots of people have said that. But, honestly, you really make it hard to support this when I look at a bill that gives you power without limitations, the ability to change the Municipal Government Act – modifying provisions, exempting, adding in without limitation – and no definition of who this applies to. You've got a bit of 'splainin' to do, if I can put it that way. I want that definition, definitely. I really want to underline the kind of uncertainty that you're creating here.

You've done this before, just to remind you. I am not a pompom-waving fan of property rights – I'm not; that's no surprise – but this is very akin to the bill that the government passed which would allow them to indicate to a landowner that they were going to expropriate or use their land at some point in the future and that therefore they were allowed to make no modifications to the buildings or to the land site. Somebody in the Wildrose is going to tell me the number of the bill that was. [interjections] It's bills 19, 24, 36. Okay. It's a whole group of them.

That's exactly what you did then. You essentially created huge uncertainty for people by saying: "You're in a right-of-way. We're likely going to build – whatever – a highway, transmission towers, a high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary or something." You gave yourself the power to indicate to people: "We're going to take that land eventually. We don't know when that is, but you can't change anything because we don't want to pay you for any improvements you make to your land."

If my rural colleague from Strathmore-Brooks wanted to – I'm trying to remember what kind of farming he does. Dairy?

Mr. Hale: Cow-calf.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry. Cow-calf. Oh, that's right.

If he wants to build another barn or, you know, put up a pivot, great. He was in a total morass of undefined territory because he didn't know that he was probably not going to be allowed to do it, and not only for his generation but for his two sons. We have no idea when the government was actually going to do something with this man's land. So you see how much uncertainty it creates for people in the future to say: "Well, at some point we're going to do something with this, so hang on. You can't do any improvements to it."

When I say to you that there are already a number of municipalities that have communities that I would think would fall under – it would make sense to me that it would fall under it – a definition of floodway except that you didn't define it, you create uncertainty for them because they can't tell what's going to happen by way of future development.

There's also very little timing of the integration of this except – oh, I've read too many bills lately. I'm sorry; I might be making a mistake. I'm pretty sure this bill did not have any timing for when these regs would be put in. You know, that's a bit of a problem, too, Mr. Speaker. The government sort of failed to take into consideration a number of reports that were created for them both by members of the Assembly but also by private agencies that were hired to give them advice on flood mitigation and they didn't take it. Given the timing, I'd like a bit more certainty from the government on that.

So we've got wide powers, in some cases with no limitations. It's binding. We have cabinet making these decisions – sorry for the cliché – behind closed doors. We have uncertainty around definitions. We have no criteria. We have no appeal. Gee whiz, this is looking a lot like a centralization of provincial power over local power. Now, I can be wrong. Not often, but I can be. I'm pretty sure this government has a whole bunch of press releases about how they want to restore more local decision-making power and that they prefer that local decisions are made. I'm sure I've heard the Premier up here talking vigorously about how local bodies should be making those decisions. But how, when this is clearly centralizing power in the hands of the government?

I think this bill was designed for a good reason, and I think it was designed based on experiences that they had over the summer in trying to deal with the disasters and how they were stymied in some cases from doing good, effective, timely work because of the way the act was written. Fair enough, you know. Then you should have a piece of legislation in front of this Assembly.

But I really want to hear from you why you need such an expansion of your scope of powers, why you're not giving us any criteria, and why you're not giving us any appeal mechanism. What do they have to do? Take you to court? Well, come on, you guys. I mean, this is becoming a bit of a habit with you, where you force smaller bodies, smaller local authorities, to take you to court. And you know what? The courts increasingly are siding with the other people, not with you. That's another bill we'll talk about soon, I'm sure.

Thank you for the opportunity to put some of those questions out and to give some initial feedback. I would really like to support this bill, but I need some very clear information about the choices the government has made in this bill, and I would like some backup documentation that's going to show me how you're not going to abuse the power – immense power – that you've given yourself. You know, there has to be a balance there. The constitution recognizes that balance. They give a great deal of power, and then they put limitations on it. I'm not seeing this bill put limitations on the powers that this provincial government is giving itself. So that's what I want to hear from you.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills caught my attention and then Edmonton-Calder, but since we didn't have the Official Opposition reply first – we're straight into the Member for Edmonton-Centre – 29(2)(a) is not available yet, until the third speaker. Some people had sent a question up in that regard, so I'm just clarifying it. Thank you.

Let's go on to Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, is mostly about flood recovery, mitigation, and reconstruction, but it also contains a power grab by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the cabinet, which may or may not be warranted. Many of the powers granted are reasonable in principle, such as determining what mitigation measures should be done and how they will be reimbursed, filing caveats on floodway properties that have received DRP and conditional caveats on flood fringe, determining what is in a floodway and what development can be allowed, and exempting certain municipalities from floodway regulations.

Given, however, that they are basing it on faulty maps or not taking future mitigation into account, communities and individuals might be treated very unfairly if regulations are adopted before sorting these things out.

Section 2 of the bill is particularly troubling. It proposes giving this sweeping power to the minister to trump the MGA entirely if there appears to be an emergency: (a) municipalities can have parts of the MGA modified, (b) communities can be exempted from parts of the MGA, and (c) communities can be given powers beyond the MGA. After looking at this, I find it very hard to come to the conclusion that these types of powers are necessary. I'll need some explanation on those before I can put my full support behind this bill.

Also, there is a proposal to extend provincial control of local state of emergency from 14 to 28 days. Twenty-eight days would still not have made much of a difference in High River. Probably, closer to 49 or 50 days would have been much better. Just a suggestion: why not let the local authority decide if it wants to extend the period every seven days or every 14 days on a continuing basis until the municipality felt that the emergency was over?

Bill 27 adds powers to the cabinet and the minister with respect to defining those floodways, controlling regulation and prohibiting development in floodways, exempting municipalities from the definition, and forcing municipalities to amend those bylaws with no compensation for costs in that whole process. Bill 27 also lengthens the state of that emergency period and provides that framework for a funding reimbursement, so that may be looked after.

I can support this bill, but I'm going to demand explanations for section 2 and will be proposing an amendment to that 14- to 28-day period. Emergency powers are needed by municipalities and the minister to handle a disaster effectively. It also gives a chance for more clarity on the funding and the reimbursement for mitigation measures.

Floodway development has been going on for far too long. We know the 2005 flood brought out a report that was mostly dealing with flood maps and so on. That sat on a shelf for the last eight years. Caveats can assure that taxpayers won't be unnecessarily on the hook again for rebuilding in floodways. The floodway situations can vary by a sizable amount across the province in different areas, so one size shouldn't fit all. These powers are being given to a government using old maps and not taking those future mitigations into account.

As I mentioned, 28 days is not long enough in a case like High River, so we need to let municipalities be a part of this process. As I said, extending that every 14 days might be a better approach.

Allowing the cabinet to designate what is and isn't a floodway and to which town's floodway the rules apply allows this PC government potentially to benefit PC government friends and family by allowing developments on lands that should be floodways or to punish others. The minister has unrestricted powers in a perceived emergency to entirely suspend or even create powers beyond the Municipal Government Act for a municipality, intrusion and work creation without compensation in municipal planning departments. Properties with caveats will be devalued, and the process must be managed fairly.

In closing, I just want to say that I really want to support this bill. I think it's a valuable tool for municipalities to use in the future. But we've got to be careful with this. It has to be done right. If we can have these issues addressed, I can give my full support to this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, let us move on, then, to Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly interested in making a few introductory comments in regard to Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. This is, I think, a very important piece of legislation. Its time has come to be addressed here in the Legislature. It's unfortunate that we had to have such a major disaster to help focus our energy to work on floodway measures – for example, not building in floodways – and to have adequate emergency and restitution provisions built into legislation in the event of this sort of disaster.

Certainly, we've heard already lots of speeches and information as to the scale and the unprecedented scope of the floods in June, and I certainly had a personal experience by travelling both to Calgary a few short days after the flood and to High River later in the summer. Working from High River backwards, I was absolutely shocked to see the scale and the scope of the damage in the town of High River. The whole downtown was severely damaged and will be difficult to, I think, rehabilitate to its former state. I think a majority of all the buildings in the town of High River suffered some or extensive damage as well. So I think it's first and foremost a tribute to the people of High River, that had the resilience and the sense of community to bind together and to work to rebuild their community.

I had a tour with one of the town councillors, and he gave me lots of time and valuable information about just how well the community was responding. Alberta first responders, including the police, construction and town workers, the military: it was just all manner of remarkable integration of so many resources. I was overwhelmed to see just how effective it really was in those first few days.

In Calgary, again, the same sort of thing: it was almost like it was hard to recognize it as the same city in those immediate areas where people just mobilized and put aside all other things to help neighbourhoods such as Elbow Park and Rideau – those are the areas I was at – Sunnyside as well, downtown close to Chinatown. It was quite remarkable. We had a team of very ambitious volunteers working with me to help muck out basements and to just do whatever work was necessary.

It's a time for us all, I think, to reflect on the value of the things that we own together and the true value of community when we do suffer this kind of material damage. The material items that we have sometimes are really not worth much of anything once they get wet. Lord knows, I re-evaluated my own basement and realized just how much junk we really do accumulate here in our society with stuff, and once it gets wet it's not worth anything at all. The true value, we learned, clearly was in the value of people and community and family that pulled together and still are doing so today.

So we know and I think all Albertans affected by the flood know that we will try hard to ensure that we both seek restitution for people who have suffered flood damage and try to improve the situation so we can mitigate this sort of thing happening again. I guess all of us probably have that intention in our hearts here in this Legislature. How we decide to do that in the best, most effective way possible, I think, is our responsibility here now, to have an open debate on this, including entertaining the possibility of amendments to the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. I think there are lots of good areas in this bill, but I think there are other things that we could improve on, certainly.

My understanding from reading this over the last day or so is that municipalities will no longer be allowed to approve new developments in floodways, which is a good thing. Additional funding will be available to homeowners for flood mitigation measures, which, again, is very helpful. Provincial states of emergency will be extended, and notices will be placed on land titles of properties in flood areas. Property owners in the so-called flood fringe areas will be having to have a notice removed from their land title by putting minimum flood mitigation measures into place. Properties in a floodway will then have a permanent notice placed on their properties. These are quite wide-ranging amendments and provisions, but built within them, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, are some problems that I would like to suggest we could sort out through some amendments to this particular bill.

As the previous speaker pointed out, you know, we all want to support something like this, but we have to ensure that we're doing it right and we're not adding new, onerous powers or too much power to this Legislature when, of course, we have another very important on-the-ground level of government, which are the municipalities and municipal districts, which do know their areas and have intelligent contributions to make in the event of a disaster such as this.

As well, just before I talk about the bill more specifically here, we can expect that this sort of thing can happen again. It's important for us to not use this once-in-a-lifetime language, because these sorts of extreme weather events are happening more often, not just here in Alberta but around North America and across the world as well, due to climate change. We know that it just creates more variations in how we expect the weather to behave, so we do need to expect that this sort of flooding can and might and will in fact happen again sooner rather than later.

For example, I was just speaking with some other hon. members yesterday from southern Alberta, a very interesting conversation, talking about that very large storm which sort of hung over Canmore and into the Banff area. If it happened to swing another 130 kilometres more towards the Bow summit area and that whole catchment area around Lake Louise, we would have had that much more rain all captured into that drainage area and funnelled down – there's only one way for the water to go – in through the Bow valley. For example, the city of Canmore would have been affected exponentially more than it had and downstream as well. So we were fortunate. It's hard to imagine, considering the scope of the damage. I'm just bringing up this point to illustrate how unstable these whole situations can be and how things can go from bad to worse.

I think one of the biggest problems that I have in regard to the floodways is that this legislation seems to be – and correct me if I'm wrong – relying still on the same outdated flood maps, which really did not help prevent the catastrophic losses in June 2013. We still don't have any concrete information on how they will update these problematic flood maps. We've had the mayor of Calgary and other municipalities complaining about how they were not particularly consulted on these flood maps either.

Again, going backwards to forwards here is useful because we don't want to repeat the same mistakes twice. But we did have fairly comprehensive reports that would suggest that we should have restricted floodway building many years ago and thus could have saved millions of dollars on this flood of June 2013 if we had not continued to build on floodways. I know that this is a difficult decision to make, but the reason that this Legislature was built in the first place was to make these kinds of difficult decisions and to recognize that we are responsible if we sign off, let's say, Crown land to an area that's prone to flooding and then, in fact, that whole area or part of it gets damaged. Then, you know, we've not done due diligence here at this level to protect property and to protect human life and assets as such.

A number of experts, Mr. Speaker, and studies show that the damage that was sustained in 2013 could have been greatly reduced if we did in fact implement the recommendations from several earlier reports and kept more and better updated maps. There have been engineering reports done as far back as 1973 by a Montreal engineering company, in 1983 by Alberta Environment, and then in 2006, which we all know about, with Mr. Groeneveld's report that have been used by experts since to argue that a flood of this magnitude was very predictable and not really that rare.

We can look back to earlier history of what was the town of Calgary from the 1880s and then the turn of the last century, when similar floods had taken place. In fact, the big growth period of the city of Calgary seemed to be an interlude in what otherwise were quite regular substantial floods from the Bow and Elbow rivers into the Calgary area. Also, there was a 2010 flood report that Calgary would suffer more frequent and severe floods. That was quite a substantial report by Golder Associates and consultants to provide emergency response and flood mapping.

So it's not as though we didn't know. I mean, I guess that is becoming obvious in this session. You know, we're not just relying on the past, but that's the only way by which we can learn to mitigate problems in the future, isn't it?

We heard from John Pomeroy, the Canadian research chair in water resources and climate change and professor at the University of Saskatchewan. He also said that the integrated weather and water prediction models needed to give better warning but also to assist in planning for future flood plains, safer reservoir management, and better forest and agricultural management for long-term flood and drought mitigation.

Mr. Speaker, we can look at the watershed not just from the immediate area around a place like High River or Medicine Hat or Drumheller or Calgary but right from the top of the watershed, from the mountains, right? The importance of protecting watersheds and forested areas right up to the Continental Divide is just as important as the berms and byways that we can perhaps provide to pass water around our cities.

For example, the Castle region, which we have been debating for a number of years, is an obvious place where rivers are starting – right? – on the Continental Divide. The ability and the capacity of the forest and the watershed in the mountain and foothill regions act as a delay and a mitigating factor to flooding of downstream areas from the Castle region. That's just one example, but it's a very good one. We have the South Saskatchewan planning thing before us now, which we could use to protect the Castle in a comprehensive way, not just the rocks and the ice at the very tops of the mountains, and mitigate future flood damage by creating a wildland provincial park in the Castle, for example.

I see this bill as being quite sweeping, and it certainly has some capacity to do some good. The amendment to the Emergency Management Act: I think I need more clarification on that. I know that we put more power into hands when emergencies are declared, but I think that we need to define that more clearly in this bill. This bill is going to be looked at by a lot of people, literally millions of people who were affected by the floods in the spring, and we need to ensure that people can feel confident moving forward.

Another area that I would seek clarification on, which I will in the due course of time, is around these provisions that are going to go onto land titles. I'm just not sure how people can be compensated for that. Of course, when you're looking for someone to purchase a piece of property that might be in a flood fringe zone or in an actual flood area and there's some sort of caveat or written letter on that land title, I'm really not sure whether or not lending agencies like banks or credit unions would actually give someone a mortgage to buy a property like that, that has such an onerous provision on it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is now available.

Seeing no one, let us move on, then, to Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As always, it's a pleasure to comment on the issues of the day, and I see that opportunity before me in discussing Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. There is no doubt that what has transpired over the course of the last six months has exposed some weaknesses that we have had not only in legislation in dealing with our proposed flood mitigation strategy but also in the tools that we had in our toolbox to deal with the appropriate measures of rebuilding communities. It looks like the minister is going to attempt to do something on that front. I applaud the minister for taking this action.

I do have concerns that they do appear to be rather broad and sweeping and vast in their scope, the powers that he is seeking, and there are very few parameters in which they will be used or by which they can be limited in their use. For instance, just to point it out – and I will come back to it – the entire act, which is four pages long, appears to introduce a new terminology into the way we understand flooding. We appear to base everything in this act on the definition of a floodway. Right now, by my reading of the act, there is no working definition of floodway. If you look at what we have done, our provincial mapping systems and civic mapping systems are based so far on a terminology, that I can see, of flood fringe and floodway.

When I see the introduction of a brand new term that the minister is going to be relying on – and he's going to derive a great deal of power from this term, and there's no working definition of that term – which is “floodway,” in the legislation, it causes me a great deal of concern that we do not have that definition here. It makes it very difficult to evaluate the scope and the breadth and the depth of what the minister is seeking. How much land will this impact? How many communities will this impact? What is the impact on local decision-makers and their ability to respond to the needs of their citizens? I believe that was covered pretty extensively by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, but I'll come back to discuss that as well.

If we look at what transpired in southern Alberta with the flood, there is no doubt that it was an event of epic proportions. The minister is correct when he points out that this was probably the largest disaster that has struck not only this province but this country in a great many years. You see that not only by the destruction of lives but personal property. The ongoing efforts to try to, I guess, not only assuage people's concerns today but assuage them going forward are evident in that bill. I think that on that front this government needs to work on how it's going to mitigate damages in the future.

I will applaud them on some of those discussions that are going on. There was a conference down in Calgary that suggested to me that the government is taking upscale mitigation seriously. There are proposals before the government. They've said that they are going to explore all options on how to mitigate damage. That means reducing to the greatest extent possible the amount of damage that is going to occur to our cities in southern Alberta and, hopefully, to other jurisdictions in this province as a result of a flood or a disaster situation.

Not to bring up old wounds, but why not? We often do it in the Legislature. Why not do that now? We didn't do as good a job as we could have in mitigating damages, and that was fairly evident when some of the revelations came about that we did not implement what has become known as the 2006 Groeneveld report and that we continued to build on flood zones, I think they were called at that point in time, when there was a clear recommendation for communities and a clear direction for the minister to act in this regard. It appears that that action is going to be taken now, but there is some question as to whether we didn't implement that to its greatest extent. I don't believe we did act on it to its greatest extent, and that's what it behooves us to do.

I'm encouraged that the government will look at all plans available to mitigate damage. There are some suggestions out there that with an investment of – it might sound like a lot – close to a billion dollars much of this damage can be averted in the future from Calgary and outlying areas. If that can be done with that price tag, although steep, I would seriously urge the government to implement such a policy.

If you look at the damage this has caused not only to families and communities but to the public purse as a result, the costs are astronomical. Some estimates are about $6 billion. If we look at investing that money under the guise that it's going to prevent this future damage, the money spent is going to be well suited in the future. I'm glad to hear that that is going on, and I would suggest that the government needs to look at all options to protect families and communities in that regard.

You know, if we look at the historical rain patterns or flooding events that occurred here in Alberta, it should have been predicted as a certainty that this flood was going to attend. If you look at rainfall patterns that occurred in the 1929 flood, with a flood of that magnitude the entire downtown Calgary would have suffered significantly more damage than what has transpired. So in some instances, looking at historical flood information that was available, we can consider ourselves lucky, if you can believe that, Mr. Speaker, with what transpired this time.

With that information, I think we've also got to recognize that despite whatever flood mitigation the government decides to go with – like I said, I would encourage them to go bold in this regard – I'm of the belief that future flooding is going to occur, whether it be Calgary, southern Alberta, or other outlying jurisdictions. In my view, we need to protect against that eventuality, and it's not going to be able to all be solved in mitigation strategies.

What has to be done to protect both families and communities as well as the public purse is to develop a comprehensive disaster/flood insurance program. If you look at other jurisdictions around the world, primarily Europe following the 2003 floods, which devastated families and communities as well as the public purse, they implemented such a strategy. What this does is that it allows for mandatory coverage to allow people to rebuild their lives, but it also protects the government purse from the eventual run that will happen there. People pay a risk-adjusted premium according to the area they live in and contribute to the eventuality of the need for insurance.

Now, of course, you're going to get some people saying that they will never need that insurance, but I think never is a long time. Look, no one saw Slave Lake burning to the ground years ago. No one could foresee Mrs. O'Leary's cow kicking over the lantern in Chicago years ago to burn that city down or some eventual disaster that could happen in Fort McMurray. Should it be necessary to rebuild that city, hopefully we will have the wherewithal to be able to afford such an endeavour, and flood insurance is the way to do it.

I will look at this bill more closely as, like I said, it gives the minister a wide swath of power. We need to understand what a floodway is and how much power and what scope this new definition being introduced into the lexicon is going to bring. That does concern me, and it does concern our future ability to, I guess, limit the decision-making power of government, should we wish to, in this avenue. Once this power is given with no real definition of floodway in place, in my view, it could serve as a recipe for failure.

In any event, those are my initial comments, Mr. Speaker. I will look at the bill even more closely than I have. I think it has potential to do a lot of good and potential to smooth out the way our provincial government deals with disasters in the future and allow for us to develop the tools and capacity to effectively deal with situations like these, that are going to occur again.

On that note, I'll leave that as food for thought for the minister and future thought on how to mitigate damages, both on the upstream side of things as well as on flood insurance, and hopefully we'll hear some comments in this regard going forward in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available for anyone who wishes. Cardston-Taber-Warner under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our study of human nature throughout history, of course, teaches us that there's a fine line between granting power and ensuring acceptable use of it. In a real emergency our first concern, naturally, is for the safety of people, then their pets, property, and public infrastructure. Heroic efforts are required, and heroes always seem to be found who will rise to the occasion, setting their own self-interest aside and serving the real, immediate needs of neighbours and friends and sometimes perfect strangers. Some are volunteers. Some are public employees as first responders. Naturally, we're grateful to all of them. But sometimes absolute power may convey a sense of self-righteous overzealousness. How would you, hon. member, recommend that this act could avoid that?

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'm not the critic for this area. Nevertheless, I think we do need a working definition of floodway. That, to me, seems to be a starting position. To be fair, I don't have a working definition of floodway. I do also understand, though, that the government had to act before legislation was in place to implement a full response to this flood. Much of the stuff that they did during this flood was not found in our enabling legislation, and this goes some way to rectifying that, and at least we're having that discussion now.

If you look at ways to eliminate that power, you've got to look at what a floodway is. You have to develop comprehensive maps as to what a floodway is and where it is and where it will apply, both in southern Alberta and northern Alberta and the like. I don't sense this as being ready to make that call; hence, the minister wants to leave that for a date to be named later. The trouble is whether we get to that date. That is the trouble. Does this all go to regulation and that's the last we see of it?

- (a) controlling, regulating or prohibiting any use or development of land that is located in a floodway within a municipal authority, including, without limitation, regulations specifying the types of developments that are authorized in a floodway.

The term "without limitation" tends to give me a great deal of concern, and that is primarily because I don't have a working definition of floodway. I don't have a lot of the background tools, and I don't know if they've been developed yet. Whether we can get to that working definition – I hope we can, and maybe the minister is going to insert one or flesh that out for us. That would be a beginning point.

I'm sure our critic in this area will have many more amendments to follow to try and limit some of the concerns that you've brought up in your question to me as well as what other speakers have brought up both before and, I'm sure, after.

The Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no one, let us move on to Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I rise to discuss Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, but before I go there, I just want to talk about some of the positives of what I think this act is actually trying to achieve. We all know that the floods were extremely devastating in the southern part of our province. We know Calgary and High River, and we know the many stories that came from there but also from Medicine Hat, Bragg Creek, Cochrane, and even from my own riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. If I'm missing any of them, I apologize.

We know that a lot of front-line people, volunteers, community workers, people who owned homes, people who didn't own homes, and everybody available in Alberta put their hearts and minds behind everybody affected by the flood and set out to do a lot of hard work. I know that a lot of people came out to Calgary, High River, and all the surrounding areas to help people clean out their homes, remove their belongings, remove all the debris, the mud and the muck and everything else that came along with it, to ensure that everybody could try and get back to some sort of sense of normal as soon as possible.

I remember the day that our team went there as well. We walked into homes that had water all the way up to the floor joists and further, and everything in their basements was ruined, and many, many people were so saddened by the loss of all their memories. It was a difficult time for me to go there as someone who wasn't necessarily personally affected by the flood. To watch so many people in such devastation, when we were driving down the roads, it almost seemed like the world had stopped. Everything had just stopped for a moment in time. The roads were clear, the cars were buried, and the debris was everywhere. We know that so many communities were actually fully blocked off.

I appreciate all of the hard work that everybody put in to make sure that we got back to normal as soon as possible, and some are still doing that, especially in communities like High River. We certainly saw, you know, the Alberta spirit come out in all of the efforts that they made with the Calgary Stampede. Who honestly would have thought at the time the Calgary Stampede was affected that we really could still put on the greatest show on Earth in such a little period of time? I have to admit that when we went to one evening of the Stampede, I stood in awe as I watched life go on there for a moment and everybody being able to take just one day and celebrate exactly the Alberta spirit.

I do have some concerns with this bill, but before I go there, I want to acknowledge all of the hard work that has been done on the bill.

An Hon. Member: Thank you.

Mrs. Towle: We always acknowledge all of the hard work that's done on many of these bills. Keep in mind that the Wildrose supported 70 per cent of your bills in the last session. But it is our job to offer any opportunity for amendment to make any bill better, just the same as it's every MLA's job in this House to offer any amendment to make any bill better.

Bill 27 is mostly about flood recovery and the flood mitigation system and how that is developed, how that's appropriated, and how we define and deal with what flood mitigation is, what a floodway is, what the reconstruction plan is. My concern with it – I'll go into that a little bit later – is around the powers that the bill gives. It is very important that every municipality has the ability in an emergency to be able to do exactly what they need to do to make sure people are kept safe, and there's no question that in events where the municipality is overwhelmed or not able to do that, the provincial powers need to be able to step in and need to be able to do their part.

We also know that on many, many occasions there are not enough resources within the municipality to maybe do the right things, make the right decisions, or enough expertise to be able to do that, so for that reason, they may call on the provincial resources to ensure that they're able to keep their residents safe. Of course, that's very, very important.

There are a few things here that are very positive. I mean, one of things that they talk about is that Bill 27 lengthens the state of emergency period, and certainly there seems to be a lot of arguments for why that might be needed, and that is not necessarily a negative. There's a lot of conversation about flood zones and floodways and how we put caveats on titles and how we make sure that people are properly compensated for exactly what they need to do.

So with all of that in mind and all of the hard work that has gone into this bill, I think there's an opportunity for us to help it be a better bill that serves all Albertans. One of the things that I think we could start with is – obviously, we have the Groeneveld report from 2006. What's interesting about the Groeneveld report from 2006 is that it actually mirrors very closely a report from 2002. So it seems to me that the first question I have is: in creating this Bill 27, what was the consultation process between the report from 2002 going into the report of 2007 from Mr. Groeneveld? Who at that time was the MLA for High River and had experienced substantial flooding in the past? And 2013 was certainly unprecedented flooding.

In Mr. Groeneveld's report he makes several recommendations, but many of them are very similar to what is being recommended in here. However, this bill, unfortunately, doesn't go far enough. Mr. Groeneveld's report is several pages long, yet this bill is really only three pages long. It seems to me that we can do a little bit better on defining what we need to have done and how far it needs to go.

One of the things that Mr. Groeneveld's report identified right away was that you need to co-ordinate the completion of the flood maps. The maps need to be accurate, and they need to be updated. Now, we've heard time and time again a lot of criticism over the current flood maps. Many people say that some of them are from 1993. Some of them are from 1995. Some of them are newer, and that's fantastic. The question is: what is the process for updating those flood maps when it's needed?

One of the things that I know even in my own riding we experienced is that on the west side of my riding we have the Red Deer River, and over the last 10 years the Red Deer River has changed the way it flows dramatically and in a lot of cases has eroded a lot of the banks and actually has shifted quite a bit further to either the north or the west from where it was originally on the flood map. I sat with the Red Deer county EMO, and she walked me through the changes. Then I went and spent two days, actually, with councillors, and they drove me through so I could actually see exactly what had happened to where we are now.

They actually have overlays for every year from aerials. They started with 1995, I believe. I could be wrong on the date, and I apologize if I am, but it was in the 1993-95 zone. They started with that flood map, and in that flood map, yes, everything looks relatively proper. It looks like the river flows in a fairly decent, logical way. Then every year after that they have an overlay of normal erosion.

But what happened in 2005 in my riding was pretty significant. We had a massive flood. After 2005 and through that flood the flood maps actually changed dramatically. They actually changed course, and they moved several hundred feet from where the original stream of the river used to go to where it appears to be today. It's interesting because when we went on the drive out there, you could see where the river used to flow through, which is now all full of rock and silt and debris. Now the river has changed course and actually has come and eroded the banks and in many, many places is actually eroding the banks to the point that the county is very, very concerned about significant road damage and whether or not the actual roads will be able to hold the load of what is travelling on them.

That same area is designated just DRP. It's not a floodway. It's not a flood zone. It's not anything, yet every single year since 2005 the residences in that area flood. Now, no one expects everybody to be able to update everything every single year, but a lot of our municipalities are doing good work. They're investing in their communities, and they're investing in their residents. They're watching this, and they have the expertise to offer to the government to say: "We've done a lot of this historical data. We have it all in place, and we can tell you exactly which communities and which person is consistently going to DRP funding because they get significantly flooded every single year."

When we look at the overlays from 2005 onwards to 2010, the significant damage that was done to county roads, to Crown land, and to personal residences has got to be costing us just a horrendous amount of money. Now, in 2013 the flood that affected several residents in my riding actually took out many of the roads they identified within the last five to eight years that structurally could be considered at risk. At least eight different county roads in my area were either completely wiped out or so significantly damaged that they could not actually be driven on.

The other part of that is that the roads that were wiped out or significantly damaged – it was almost like you could see year after year after year and could pinpoint exactly which road that would be and, in turn, which residents would be affected, which residents might get completely flooded, and which person may or may not lose their home.

Had we had accurate maps, in my area anyway – and I know this is what we're hearing across the province – many of these people might be redesignated for whatever type of funding that is coming from the relief funding that we have right now. What we have right now are people who possibly should be in a floodway or a flood zone but aren't and those who possibly were but because the river shifted so dramatically shouldn't be in a floodway or flood zone and are no longer dedicated for flood rebuilding, DRP funding, however you want to do it.

The importance of having accurate maps cannot be stated enough. There is no question that if we start at a point of inaccuracy, everything we do as we go forward will cause more and more problems. I'll give you a prime example. We have a stretch of area around a county road where those people, when they bought the property, were not designated in a floodway, not designated in a flood zone, never ever flooded in their lives. When they went to build a shop on their property, they did everything right. They went and sat with the county because they wanted to be aware of the river, which was fairly close to them, and the county identified to them: "You know, you could be at risk of flooding. I know you don't know that, but you could be at risk of flooding just because of the way the river now flows."

The county worked with them to create flood mitigation issues so that they didn't get flooded. That was a fantastic opportunity for the county to do that and offer that expertise to the landowner. However, not everybody does that. Many people will be buying property or selling property in areas where they have no idea – no idea – if they're in a floodway or a flood zone or in a DRP area. That needs to be fixed before we can really go forward.

We have to talk about accuracy. We have to talk about doing it right the first time and then making sure that we take that information and then take the value of the reports and the significant work that has been done in 2002 and 2005 and by the experts who saw the flooding in 2013 and make sure everybody is at the table to offer their advice.

The other part of that is that when we take a look at the section in the Emergency Management Act, under (2) it says "Section 6 is amended by adding the following after clause (c)," and (c.2) says:

Respecting the filing and removal of caveats against titles to land in a flood fringe or floodway, as those terms are defined in the regulations, for which funding has been provided pursuant to a disaster recovery program administered under the regulations.

As a real estate broker and as a landowner and a homeowner I would have great concern with this part of it. The reason I have concern is that if I'm wrongly designated in a floodway or a flood zone, am I going to be able to sell my property? If I'm not wrongly designated in a floodway or flood zone and I get flooded, will I be sued by anybody who buys the property after me, especially if my municipality can identify specifically that this actually should have been in a flood zone or floodway or designated differently and has evidence of that? Could the new homeowner come back and sue me personally because I didn't declare? Even further, I wonder if we're putting real estate agents all over the place at risk.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We now have 29(2)(a) if anybody would like to comment. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question does concern the whole issue dealing with caveats on land titles and property titles and the implications that they would cause or may cause if they were both properly and improperly applied to the title. To the member: I just would like your comments, based on your background dealing in real estate, on what that could possibly do not just to the homeowner but to the landowner or to the potential buyer.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. As a real estate broker, I mean, it is getting harder and harder and harder to sell or buy property. We know the rules around lending are much more strict than they've ever been. If you want to sell a farmer an acreage anymore, you have to do an environmental impact statement, those kinds of things, and on that statement you actually declare and you actually state that you know that this property is as you say it is and that the environmental impacts have all been looked at. This legislation here does not say that we actually are starting at a point of accuracy.

So as a landowner I state that I'm not aware of any fuel tanks being stored on the property, that I'm not aware of any massive disposal of manure, those kinds of things. I have to state that. I have no doubt that if I sold my property and the person buying it had the ability to prove that I could have known or should have known that my property gets flooded regularly even though I may be outside of a floodway or a flood zone, all because the mapping is not correct – I would be concerned about the ability for me to sell my house and how long after they could sue me.

I would alternatively be very concerned that we're putting professionals at risk by not giving them a clear place to start. Real estate agents already put their whole profession on the line every time they walk a client through the contract. They're expected to know every item of the contract. They're expected to advise their client how to properly sell, how to properly disclose. If you're saying to real estate agents, "You don't have to disclose because this is not in a floodway or in a flood zone," yet the very next year they are able to provide evidence from the local municipality that says, "Well, actually, it should have been, but we didn't update our maps," I would be highly suspicious of whether or not a judge would consider that. I'm not saying they would or they wouldn't.

I guess what I'm asking is: why would we put anybody in the position where they have the potential to reverse all of the hard work we do in here in creating legislation only because we didn't start at a point of accuracy? I'm not condemning this bill. I just think it is so, so, so important that we start with proper flood maps that are actually accurate and not input some of these measures right now until we have that point. Some of the clauses in here certainly could go forward, but some of them need to protect homeowners, some of them need to protect the person who is selling, and we also need to protect the profession that's helping everyday Albertans go through that process. Then we need to protect the actual viability of these kinds of legislation so that they're not challenged in courts of law and putting all Albertans at risk.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: We have a minute and 23 seconds left. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. We've all seen a Fram filter, those of us who are old enough to remember: $10, pay me now; or overhauling an engine, pay me later 3,000 bucks or something. This bill doesn't appear to make any reference to prevention and the great return that we would have seen and realized if preventative measures had been taken, as the Groeneveld report recommended. Do you have any feelings about that? Should this bill be addressing that? Should this be included now or under a separate act?

Mrs. Towle: Thank you. I absolutely do. I think the Groeneveld report, when you read it, is very in-depth, and it's a very good report. I don't think we need to rush through and talk about caveats on title until we actually get the accuracy of the maps. Mr. Groeneveld put in a lot of work, with a lot of consultation with municipalities, with stakeholders, with the government, and with experts that identified that the accuracy of the maps is key. He talked about that you need to have urban flood risk areas, that you need to have rural flood risk areas, and that you need to make sure that a map maintenance program is implemented. This is somebody who has done the hard work for you. Let's take a look at that and see how we make it better, and let's make sure that 2013 is better.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. [interjection] Yes, it is God's country, hon. member.

Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak to this bill this afternoon. It's one that's dear to my heart. I thought I'd just give some of the members a little background on myself in this regard before we start. I've spent a lot of time dealing with this matter over my life.

The fact is that I've lived along the Bow River and the Pine Creek all my life. We moved down there on the south side of the city in the late '50s. I've seen flooding almost yearly along the Bow River and the Pine Creek. It's been something that happens almost every year to some degree or another. Sometimes it's more drastic than what it has been in the past year, or it may be something that is absolutely horrendous the following year. You can never know what's going to happen. I've witnessed virtually all forms of incidents. I've even had to rescue people, including my own grandparents once from our farmyard, when we had to go and get a boat and drive right across the front of the yard to get them out of the building. That was back in the '60s, when we didn't have a lot of the new technologies we have today. Certainly, that was quite a horrendous situation, to say the least.

Later on, during my experience as a councillor from '04 to '07, I went and endured the '05 flood throughout the MD of Foothills. We had an awful lot of creeks and rivers and stream beds go crazy there. It flooded through the town of Okotoks, flooded through behind our office in High River, and it made a horrendous mess out of so many properties across so many landscapes. It was unbelievable. If you've been through the MD of Foothills at all, around Turner Valley, Black Diamond, Millarville, that is definitely God's country, and there certainly are an awful lot of watercourses, streams, natural drainage areas that come along and inflict their wrath upon landowners all the time there. It's certainly not an unusual situation when you're on council to receive calls at all times of the morning in the month of June regarding flooding. I can assure you.

I'm somewhat familiar, therefore, with some of things that are available to municipalities in terms of their emergency measures and the emergency orders they get and some of the procedures they have to follow. I remember driving around and around in some of the public works vehicles we had, looking at all of the different emergency situations we had: washed-out bridges, washed-out roads. You name it; we had it. Certainly, these things are occurring across Alberta in the spring. Now that I'm a provincial MLA, I have an even broader perspective on how fast the Good One up above can come along and cause us troubles when we have flooding issues.

I've also participated in some of those years in several hearings regarding flood mitigation, and I can recall on several occasions receiving many reports in the MD office in High River and looking over some of these kinds of measures they hoped to take and looking at all the different solutions in those days that they came up with that were never enacted. You know, it was at that time that I was serving on the board for the hon. Member for Highwood, Mr. Groeneveld, who put together the report that has been mentioned earlier here today, and I can tell you that I cannot describe enough how frustrated that fellow was when his report, that they spent so many days and weeks and hours on, had to be shelved due to the decision of the government of the day. It was unbelievable. We had a community that was at risk then. It was at risk for many years, but it continued to be at risk because of that action, in my opinion.

This summer for me – I had an awful lot of involvement in the flood. As a matter of fact, of all things, on the night of the flood, on July 19, I was in a meeting in Lundbreck, and it had been pouring for several hours. I drove across highway 3 to get to Lethbridge, of all places, because the next morning, out of pure coincidence, I was attending the Old Man River basin council's meeting about watersheds, their annual meeting. I went across highway 3 in one of the worst rainstorms I've ever been in. I got to the hotel in Lethbridge at about 3 in the morning. As a matter of fact, the next morning I saw the member there who is responsible for transparency. He drove through those floods, too, I believe, that night.

Anyway, to make it short, I was at the meeting for only a brief period of time, and my cellphone started ringing like mad early in the morning of July 20. I was summoned back to Black Diamond-Turner Valley because we'd had a pipeline rupture up there due to the flooding. While I'd known that there was flooding, I did not know the extent of the problem until I arrived up around Turner Valley-Black Diamond about 11 o'clock in the morning. We had the biggest ripping river event I've seen in my experience in Turner Valley-Black Diamond, and I've seen quite a few, but I have never seen logs and trees ripping down the sides of that gorge and just flattening everything that it engulfed. The trash is still there today, in fact. If you go over to Turner Valley-Black Diamond and you look along the riverbank, you'll see crap laying everywhere. It is absolutely shocking, just shocking.

Later on, after that, I worked actually that evening for the MD of Foothills emergency operations centre for many hours, helping out with phone calls and so on there. We had people that day that we had to fly out of the Millarville area by helicopter because the Threepoint Creek had changed its course and gone flying across the middle of someone's field and isolated some people. They actually had to stand on the cab of their tractor, which was in the middle of the stream bed suddenly now. That was the highest point that they could find to get winched out. There were some unbelievable events this summer to deal with. We also had flooding in Livingstone-Macleod and a number of other areas, including Fort Macleod, down into Blairmore and at the Crowsnest Pass and many of the tributaries all the way along the eastern slopes. It was quite something to see.

In the meantime I had the occasion to work with some of the members on the other side, the ministers and so on. I had the occasion to work with some of their people and staff in ESRD, and I have to say that those are amazing people. They lent a hand when it needed to be lent. I have to say that they are wonderful. I've gotten to know those people more, and I have more appreciation for them as I get a chance to speak to them. I also had chances to interact with Minister McQueen, Minister Griffiths, Minister Hughes, and Minister Fawcett.

Mr. Stier: Oh, I'm sorry. My apologies. Anyway, I apologize for my error, Madam Speaker.

To go further, all of these things were what we did to help the people of Alberta, and I think it was great to get all of this accomplished as fast as we could and try to get this done.

However, the new bill we have today seems a little thin. I was looking at it, and I can remember one of these meetings last year when one of our members went through the bill, and it didn't seem to have a lot of pages. Again, I see the same thing. It seems to me that we have a fairly dramatic event and a fairly complicated set of situations that we're discussing here, yet we don't seem to have a lot of detail. Recognizing that this is a process that we have to follow through and recognizing that there will be regulations, I suspect, to do with this, it just seems to me that it's a little thin.

You know, I recognize that it brings into play some of the things that we've been talking about all this summer, during the many meetings I attended on the DRP programs and so on, but these are enormous changes that will have enormous impact on peoples' lives, how they will be affected with their land values, all kinds of different things. Throughout the summer we have been talking, as some of the other members have tonight, about how we're going to actually proceed with these. The data that we're using: is it actually the data that we need to make to make these decisions?

Is it not correct that we need to be very careful here and not go down the wrong path? I know, from a little bit of an engineering background that I sometimes think I have, that we know we can't go ahead and proceed in a roughshod fashion. We have to ensure that this is the right set of measures to take. You know, it seems a little bit scary to me to go along with some of these ideas that we have, including what's here about the Emergency Management Act, without having some of this other information.

I had expressed earlier, by the way, too, in a similar vein with the cut-off for people to actually have their applications in – I was worried, in a similar light, about that because we're cutting off at the end of this month coming for people to be able to put in their applications, and it's an enormous decision for people. They need as much time as possible. I wonder why we have to have that cut-off. We have sometimes up to two years for some flood recovery programs to be phased out. Why are we cutting it off just a few short months afterwards? I don't understand it.

I think that the changes here in this bill are a little vague. I'm really hoping that we could consider receiving some more information with regard to potential regulations that might be coming up. Much as I'd like to, I'd rather see a detailed plan. That's me. I like details. I'm one of those details guys. I can't support this as it is, but I'm very interested to participate in the debate as it proceeds.

With that, I'll end my comments. Madam Speaker, thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for your very touching, moving comments in the tribute that you paid and the acknowledgement you gave to those who worked so hard to help so many and for your own efforts in that regard. As always, you're a gentleman and someone who I look up to and admire. I really appreciate your thoughts. We didn't have enough time with the previous speaker, your thoughts on the priorities with regard to preventive measures that ought to be taken. Could you respond to that?

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, hon. member. Right from the start, when I have been involved with flooding, we have seen in my lifetime so many different rivers and stream beds change. In that experience I have seen where different municipalities have taken measures several times to do flood mitigation, whether it be dredging or armouring or replacing different pathways and so on like in urban areas and so forth.

Yet I guess it was this year that it was brought to light that we were probably doing that without looking at the real basic data that we need to base our decisions upon, and that would be the new elevations that happen every time that a flood occurs, the new changes of the watercourses, the deposits of gravel that are enormous. I wish I could show you all of the slides from behind my house of how that river has looked in the past versus what I see now. It's absolutely incredible. I've never seen a river look like that before.

My main theory is to go back to basic data, hon. member, start with that, work it up from there, and then look at not just one remedy. We have to look in most cases at several remedies for each location. I know that there's not just one answer to these things. Sometimes it could be a retention pond. Sometimes it could be an accumulation pond. It could be dredging. Sometimes it could be a spillway or a diversion like we're seeing might be proposed in High River. But my ideas would be based upon getting the data first, looking at all the possibilities, and then having stakeholder meetings and ensuring we're going about it in a very logical, linear fashion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any others?

The hon. Minister of Human Services and Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This has been a wonderful afternoon of discussion, but I am conscious of the fact that the Member for Edmonton-Centre would like to speak on Bill 28 before the afternoon is over, so I would move that we adjourn debate on this bill at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 28 Modernizing Regional Governance Act

[Adjourned debate October 29: Mr. Griffiths]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: No. Go ahead.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Thank you very much to the Government House Leader and to my colleagues in the Wildrose. Gee, I'm feeling kind of special. I do appreciate the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act. Okay. This is definitely something that a number of regions in the province have been asking for and waiting for, and in my opinion the idea of a growth management organization or board or agency is an excellent way of dealing with this. It signals an optimism in Alberta. It gives us a working model from which to make arrangements about growth and to develop some dispute resolution mechanisms.

Just for people that aren't aware of what's happening here, you know, we end up with a city or a town that ends up with a number of others that sort of start to cluster around the edge of it. In the case of Edmonton we have places like Sherwood Park and Fort Saskatchewan but also the municipal districts and the counties that are out there like Strathcona county and Parkland county. We've got the town of Devon. We have St. Albert. So how do we develop a mechanism by which Edmonton can talk to those different groups about what kind of growth is going to happen and, even more interestingly, talk about shared services like bus connections or, you know, buses that are going to bring people from those centres into Edmonton and back out again?

There's lots of opportunity there for co-operation, for growth, for great planning, but you can also see where the disputes happen. You know, we're talking a lot in Edmonton and particularly through the last municipal election about how important it is for us to stop urban sprawl, to quit building new developments further and further out both because it's using valuable arable land out there – and why would we keep doing that if we've got great soil that we should use for planting, growing things? – but also because it's much more expensive in the infrastructure for cities to support constantly building new places on the edges of their cities. We need to have more people living in the cities that we've already built, increased density, multifamily units, townhouses, those kinds of things.

Well, that's great, but what do you do if you've decided that as a city or as a town, for example, and then the group next to you decides: well, hey, ho, let's have a bunch of acreages, have a little development on the edge of your border. Well, that's exactly what you didn't want, yet the people next door are now doing it, and you have no say about how they're going to manage that.

I've got to love it when you get people that want to live in the country – I'm going to get in trouble here – because of the peace and quiet and they love the country lifestyle and then the first thing they do is start complaining when the farmer is harvesting, because they don't like the noise of the combine and the dust from taking the crop off. You think: what did you think was going to happen when you were next to farmland?

So you can again see how the conflict starts to happen because those acreage owners are contacting their representatives who are going: okay; let me talk to the people that are in the municipal district or the county about if there's a rule about how late you can run combines. You know, in the cities we have noise bylaws. You can't do anything after 10 o'clock or before 7 in the morning. I kind of doubt those apply when you get into these outer reaches. There are lots of possibilities there. Great idea.

We actually used to have a similar body until the then member for Lloydminster, who was minister of many things but was certainly Dr. Destruction, as he was fondly called, disbanded them all. We've gone for quite a period of time without any kind of formal communication and planning venue. So lots of good reasons to have this bill.

Now, why are people so unhappy with this? If I could just take a quick stab at this, Madam Speaker, I think what has gone wrong here and certainly where I am very, very unhappy is in section 4, which is this validation of regulations. Now, we came to this place in time, having the bill in front of us now compared to last session or two sessions from now, I suspect because the government is in court being sued by one of the surrounding counties, Parkland, and there's a second one that I can't remember. Maybe it's already been resolved through the court process. What they were doing was saying that the regulation really didn't have effect; therefore, any decisions made by the regional board were null and void, so nothing should happen to Parkland.

Now we get a bill that says: "despite any decision of a court to the contrary made before or after the coming into force of this section," and then it goes through and basically says that whatever we've done under the regulation or under this act "is validated and declared for all purposes to have been validly made as of the date on which the regulation was made." Not only is it that we don't care what the court says – we're going to put it into legislation, and then it's going to be what we want in the legislation – but we're also going to backdate it to when the regulation was in place. Yowza. Talk about the powers of God. Like, holy mackerel. They can turn back time and all kinds of things. It's really amazing, Madam Speaker.

I thought: hmm, all right; maybe I'm just not getting the word "valid." So I looked it up, and it says: "executed in compliance with the law . . . legally or officially acceptable." Hmm. So really what this is is a notwithstanding clause. Oh, it went very quiet in here when I said that. My goodness.

Mr. Donovan: You can hear the crickets.

Ms Blakeman: Yep. Essentially that is what it is. It's saying that notwithstanding that this matter is before the courts and is being decided, we are going to decide and backdate it. What was in Harry Potter, where the gal had a time thing that went backwards? Time changer? Time machine? Something. Obviously not Harry Potter fans in here. Okay. But the time went backwards, and she was able to do stuff in the past – it's a perfect example, actually – that ran parallel to what's happening in the future. It's an excellent example of what the government is trying to do here.

I know the government thinks that it's all-powerful, but honestly you cannot turn back time. You just can't, and you really, really, must not give yourself notwithstanding clauses. You really must not do that. I would have been very keen to support this legislation, but I will not support something that is putting in a notwithstanding clause without a fair shake for other people. You know, I'm just not going to support it because it's putting itself above and beyond the law. It's saying: it doesn't matter what the court says; we say that it's going to be this, and that's what it's going to be. No, no, no. There's a reason why we have a separation of the judicial branch, the Executive Council, and the legislative arm. There's a reason why, and we're supposed to respect each one of those and work with them in a respectful partnership. This is not doing that. This is stomping on a court decision and saying: it doesn't matter what it says; we're going to go backwards in time and make it all like it's the way we want it.

You know, I've talked about hubris a couple of times in this Assembly, which was a Greek term for humans that put themselves above the Gods, that thought they were so special and wonderful that they were equivalent to or even better than the Gods. You know, every time I use this example on you guys, I'm right, because the Gods come down and . . . [interjections] Oh, yeah. Hmm. That is a bit of personal hubris, isn't it? Every time I say this – and I say it carefully. I don't use it often. I don't abuse it. The Gods would come down and smite. They would smite the humans, right? This government, you're going to get smote, I tell ya, because you cannot play around with this stuff. You've probably had legal advisors who've told you what you wanted to hear, and you've gone ahead with it, but this is not right by any stretch of the imagination. That's the first little problem that I have with this.

It continues to go on and give itself all kinds of additional powers here, that they can go backwards and validate things. They can say that anything in a regulation that's referred to is validated and declared for all purposes to have been validly done. Wow. Even though you broke a law back here, we're now going to go back and say that you didn't break a law. It was okay what you did. Yikes. It also allows that the minister's approval of the capital regional growth plan is validated and declared for all purposes to have been validly approved. My goodness, they're fond of that word. I wonder if it's important to them. Yes, I think it is. It continues to be valid as if it had been approved under a certain section, and it goes on about how transitional regional evaluation frameworks are also validated, et cetera, et cetera. I think that's a major problem that you have here.

I know that the minister was bewildered at the scrum on the way into the Assembly today. What was the problem? Opposition members always want things not in regulation. They want it in the legislation, and now they're going to put it in the legislation, so why is everybody upset? Well, gosh, guys. I mean, look at some of the stuff you've done in here. You're trying to turn back time. You're making things valid because you say so, not because of the way the courts rule.

Then you get into some things a little further on that I'm sure other people are going to raise. You actually make it so that if some poor county employee or municipal employee doesn't do something – and there are no limits placed on that – literally, anything that is required in writing by the growth management board of the chief elected official of a municipality, they must provide that information that the growth management board requires. The only limitation that's placed on that is that it can't be subject to any type of legal privilege. Any information – any information – that that management board asks for that is not already protected under a solicitor-client privilege must be provided. Whoa. There are no other limitations on this.

Once again, we see a government that rather than devolving, as they say – I'm just at the point now where if the government says "transparent," I can feel this huge black cloud of obfuscation descending, because when they say it, it means exactly the opposite. It means that they're going to do totally the opposite thing. When they say accountable, it means no accountability. When they say transparent, darkness.

Here we now have this, where they're talking about throwing people in jail for not providing this information. I mean, truly? I know that the minister said: "What are you upset about? That was in the other version of the act, and we're just repeating it here. What's the big deal?" Well, I would say: what on earth did you have it in the other act for, that you would require an employee to provide any information to a municipal growth board without limitation except on solicitor-client privilege, and if they don't do it and are found guilty, then they're liable for a personal fine of $10,000 or to be thrown in jail for a year? Really? I mean, come on. That just seems a bit – I don't know – over the top. What's that phrase? Jumping the shark. I think we might have a little jumping-the-shark moment here in this bill.

Mr. Donovan: Never heard that one.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, come on, you guys. Do you not watch Happy Days? The Fonz? They did a program where they went to the beach, and the Fonz surfboarded over a shark. It was just way too much. It was just not believable. So everything now is referred to as jumping the shark. Gee, you guys.

This bill jumps the shark in that: you're going to do that to an employee? So people are using words like "draconian" and "medieval" and "feudal" and all of those kinds of things. And you know what? They're right. Because that is what this is. This was supposed to be a co-operation bill. This was supposed to be something we were all looking forward to for regional planning purposes. How this government manages to take that good idea and turn it into something that is . . .

Mr. Bilous: Evil.

Ms Blakeman: Oh. Evil. I'm hearing "evil" from behind me.

But you do start thinking: man, are they going to put them on one of those wheels where they turn them around and stretch them? I mean, for heaven's sake, give the guy or the woman a break. Information must be provided, section 708.17(1). Good Lord. I think you've got a problem with this bill.

You know, I really feel for the Government House Leader, who thought that this was going to be clear sailing. Although he did warn us all that we may be sitting here for longer than we thought, so maybe he did see this one coming. But this bill can't go like this. It just can't, not when we have a government that is knowingly refusing to abide by the decision of a court and is putting itself ahead of that, where we have clauses that insist that people hand over any information without context, without limitation to that short of client-solicitor privilege.

Then we get into the growth management boards, which, as I said, I think should be a good idea. But you need to look carefully at language and at section headings when you look at bills. In division 1, the establishment and operation of growth management boards, the first section is must-dos, and then there is a whole "may" section, so they may do this. The must-dos are the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Once again it's cabinet. It's not the Assembly. It's not an all-party committee. It's not the backbenchers. I mean, goodness, can you not give your backbenchers some credit here, please? It's:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council, . . . which is cabinet

. . . on the recommendation of the Minister, may establish a growth management board by regulation.

You know, why can't the local authorities decide they want to do this and ask the Lieutenant Governor in Council or the minister to do it? But no. The minister is going to say this, and it's going to happen. The regulation establishing this board must

- (a) specify the name of the . . . board,
- (b) designate the municipalities that are members . . .

God forbid if you're in that region and you don't want to be part of this. Tough bananas. The minister and the cabinet are going to decide that you're in, whether you like it or not. And they must

- (c) designate all or part of the land lying within the boundaries of the participating municipalities . . .

So that's the stuff that must happen. I think there are all kinds of reasons about, you know, why this seems just a bit over the top, why there's not more consultation with the municipalities that you're supposed to be dealing with.

Then we get into the "may" section, and that's actually a very long one because it talks about how they may appoint people to represent the participating municipalities. Well, how nice. Seeing as they're now all part of this growth management board, it would be really nice if they did have representatives on the board, but that's not necessary because the government "may" deal with it. They may appoint the chair and an interim chair. They may establish voting rights of participating municipalities. How lovely that they might do that.

Mr. Anderson: Make it voluntary. Make it voluntary.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, that's fine. He's exercised about it. That's fine, Madam Speaker.

So we're talking about: may establish voting rights, may do the mandate. You know, this is stuff that they should have been doing. This is what the municipalities and the MDs and counties need to be negotiating betwixt themselves, not having it overlaid by some sort of feudal overlord who is going to say: this is what you're going to have to deal with.

I know that these municipalities don't always get along. We have in this Assembly an expert in making the city of Edmonton really cranky, and she did it for a long time. You know, there can be disputes on these things, and sometimes the government gets pulled in to sort of try and settle the dispute between the feuding municipalities. But, Madam Chairperson, that is more about a dispute resolution mechanism than it is about the cabinet coming in and saying: you're going to do it the way we tell you to. This is showing once again that this government doesn't respect municipalities. It still sees them as the children of the province, and that is so wrong.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'm sorry. There is no 29(2)(a) with the hon. member's presentation. It will be after the next speaker. So, hon. Member for Airdrie, you are next in line.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Chair. When I first saw this bill, I knew I'd be speaking to it, being the Municipal Affairs critic, and it is mind-numbingly dumb. I know I'm not supposed to say that about bills. We got admonished in the House the other day for referring to another type of bill. Anyway, I'll try and be nice about this.

Bill 28, the Modernizing Regional Governance Act, is a very, very seriously flawed piece of legislation. It tramples local autonomy totally, it pits municipalities against municipalities, and it concentrates even more power with the provincial government. I am thoroughly disappointed that this government has introduced something so heavy handed and, yes, even draconian. This is not a walk softly and carry a big stick type of legislation. This is legislation that wears big boots and carries a baseball bat.

I'd like to go back to autonomy for just a few minutes. I was 11 years a municipal politician and 11 years on the AUMA board of directors, and I've never seen anything like this. As a municipal politician I was used to being looked upon by the provincial government as a lower form of governance. We were children that needed to be guided and steered and controlled but never anything like this. As an AUMA board member many years ago I was co-chair of an urban-rural cost-sharing task force, and we dealt with these kinds of issues and municipalities learning to share cost control and a number of things. We worked on that report for two and a half years, and we made some really good recommendations out of that. We consulted with other municipalities. Today that report, as far as I know, is sitting on a shelf somewhere with about eight or nine years of dust on it. I'm suggesting that that may have helped with this bill in some form, but it probably wasn't even looked at.

The act was put through without any consultation whatsoever, and it establishes the province's authority to force municipalities to enter into regional planning boards and imposes strict controls on such bodies. My question to the minister would be: why on earth did you not consult with municipalities before doing this? And I mean true consultation, not a dog-and-pony information session like we had with the land bills: 50, 36, 24, and 19. I attended some of those, and that's just what they were. They were telling you what they were doing. There wasn't true consultation, and that's what's needed here before this goes any further.

The penalties for municipalities that don't co-operate with the imposed planning boards are severe, including, believe it or not, stiff fines and jail time. Jail time in today's day and age for senior officials: I thought I woke up and we had lost six or seven decades of time and we were back in the Second World War and had lost the war. I mean, come on. Jail time for municipal officials for not supplying information. Good grief.

I don't think that forcing municipalities into centralized models of governance is the best way to make any friends, and it sure as heck isn't throwing them in jail. This seems to be just the latest chapter in a long line of laws and policies that concentrate power in the hands of the province at the expense of locally elected governments.

How on earth do we expect the public at large to view this or expect existing municipal politicians to run for office again? Why would you bother? Why on earth would you bother trying to assume responsibility for your community? It's beyond me.

Mr. Wilson: A week after the election.

Mr. Rowe: A week after the election. A very good point. And a month or six weeks away from both conventions. I'll give you a warning right now, members of the government. When you go to those conventions, you're going to be held accountable for this piece of legislation.

Having been a mayor of an Alberta municipality, I'll tell you that if I was still the mayor – I don't know – I would be hopping mad if I saw this trying to be rammed down our throats. I'm already hopping mad, and I'm just an MLA. But I sure don't want to be part of a government that does this to municipalities or to the people of Alberta.

Bill 28 might be the most heavy-handed piece of municipal legislation that has ever been conceived in this Assembly. I would challenge anybody to question that. My colleagues and I agree that if it passes as it is, it will essentially strip away what local autonomy municipal governments have left. Under the act regional planning boards would have to align their objectives with the province's regional plans. Municipalities could not undertake planning initiatives, public works, or pass bylaws that don't comply with the provincially adopted boards, who will report to the minister.

I think it's appropriate at this time in my comments that I refer to the bill itself, especially section 708.02, where the government will have the power to designate the municipalities that are the members of the growth management board. Whether you want to be or not, you're it, you're in, and no opt-out clause is allowed. Then to top that off, they have the power to appoint the persons to represent the participating municipalities. Take careful note. It does not say that those people shall be the elected officials from those municipalities. It could be PC friends that they owe a favour to. It could be anybody. How on earth can you represent a municipality that you're not an elected official in? It makes no sense. Then to top that off, they get to appoint the chair of that board. Again, it doesn't have to be an elected municipal official of that area.

Then this one is really – they get to determine the voting rights of the participating municipalities. Does that mean that municipality A gets 10 votes or 100 votes on a board, and a little small community or a county only gets one? Where's the democracy in that?

I don't know any municipalities that are speaking out in favour of this legislation, not that there have been any consultations, not that many of them didn't find out about this until yesterday or even knew about it.

With regard to the government's relationship with municipalities this is blatantly opaque and goes against any sort of transparent relationship that the government might be preaching. They're all about accountability. They're all about transparency. Not here.

As a closing thought, I just want to know what municipalities are saying about this first, before the government pushes this bill through. Unless I'm missing something, this looks like it'll have serious consequences for decision-makers at the local level. I strongly urge that we slow down on this one and talk about some of the negative things that could come out of it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

We now have 29(2)(a) if anybody would like to respond. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: I'd like the hon. member, who was mayor of Beiseker and at one time a member of the CRP, the Calgary Regional Partnership, if I'm not mistaken – hon. member, I believe your town withdrew from the CRP or wasn't a part of it for whatever reason, because it didn't fit their needs. I'd like you to kind of expound on this voluntary aspect. Why on earth would this government give a power for a minister to be able to force a municipality to join a regional planning board without their permission, without their buy-in? Why would they do that, and how can that possibly be effective?

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, hon. member. Just for clarification's sake, we were not a member of the Calgary regional plan. We investigated joining it. We were asked to get involved in it, as the community just south of us had, the town of Irricana. We looked at it, and to be perfectly frank, we didn't see any value in it. We didn't see what that board could offer us that we couldn't already do ourselves. We already had our own planning group. We already made our own decisions regarding development and business and so on. So we just didn't see any value in it.

I'm all for regional collaboration, voluntary regional collaboration. Many of us in the province and many municipalities are doing it now. When I did my northern tour and talked to municipalities – the town of Valleyview has a great relationship with the county. That county gives each community in the county $2 million a year: it's yours to do with as you like. That's true collaboration and true co-operation between municipalities. But when you force someone into an agreement, it just doesn't work. This is a democracy. It has to be voluntary.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would just ask the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills if he would not concede that in view of the sprawling developments that are happening around the major cities in Alberta, there needs to be some changes made in terms of planning, regional planning. He talks about collaboration, but when collaboration turns into a competition for tax revenues and intense developments are happening around those cities, it seems like there is a desperate need for some sort of an overall regional planning document.

We used to have that, as the member would probably remember. We threw the baby out with the bathwater, though, at some point in time and did away with the regional planning authorities. Would he not concede that given the way that Alberta is growing and the growth around our major cities, we do need some sort of an integration of planning to plan for the future for things like transportation and utility corridors? The intense development that's happening around there may be completely inconsistent with what we want to do in the future.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you for the question. It is a good one. I fully agree that regional co-operation has to happen, but there's a limit to just where the authority should be able to take that. If you get people around a table and you just talk out issues, generally they'll work themselves out. The minute you dictate something, that "you shall," people's backs get up. They're elected officials. They have the right to represent their municipality and their constituents or people the way they see fit, not the way someone else sees fit. You can't say to one community: "You can develop, but you can't. You can bring industry into your municipality; you can't." How do you think that's right? You have to be co-operative. You have to share things.

That's where you get back to the voting issue. When one community has a veto power over another, it's never going to work. It's just never going to work. You've got to bring reasonable people to a table and come to a reasonable agreement on development, on industry, on business. You're right. It has to happen, but it can't happen like this. It can't happen under the thumb of a government that pushes this kind of legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance

Act. At the outset I just want to share with members of the House that this government is continuing to set new precedents or ignore parliamentary courtesies, shall we say. My staff members repeatedly tried to set up a meeting with the Minister of Municipal Affairs' office, phoned and e-mailed numerous times, and received no response whatsoever regarding this bill other than a two-page letter that was sent at 2:44 p.m. the day that the minister introduced this bill. There is a history of courtesy that is extended to the opposition parties to give them a little bit of notice before a bill is introduced, and clearly this just shows the level of respect that the minister has for the opposition.

I'll continue on that path, really, because in a few short hours I've spoken with a few different mayors and representatives from around the province of Alberta about this bill, and I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that first and foremost, the major issue and concern is that again this government is, I guess, being consistent with their lack of consultation, as they often do when they bring forward pieces of legislation that involve our aboriginal communities. Here in this piece of legislation, to my knowledge, neither the AUMA or AAMD and C, including municipalities within the province of Alberta, were consulted on this bill. This bill has caught many Albertans flat footed and off guard, which is one of the main concerns that has been shared with me.

Madam Speaker, there are numerous issues that I have with this bill, but I want to make my position clear. First of all, the concept of a regional growth plan is absolutely necessary. I do think that, you know, in our province there are many municipalities, and in order to move forward, to develop in a sustainable, smart method or path, we need municipalities to work together. Doing some regional planning absolutely makes sense, and I'll talk a little bit about what that should entail.

But I can tell you at the outset that this bill does not do that whatsoever. You know, railroading a bill through and imposing how municipalities govern and their ability to govern, first of all, is not just disgracing democracy; what it shows is this government's true attitude towards municipalities and municipal governments. As opposed to treating them as an order of government and partners at a table, this government continues to bring forward legislation that treats municipalities like little kids and treats them in a very, very paternalistic method.

The regional growth plan: a great idea, especially when we're looking at sharing resources, when we're looking at transportation, transportation corridors, when we're looking at how we bring utilities to different parts of the province as well as growing and expanding in the best way possible. I am in favour of a regional growth plan, but it needs to be based on a spirit of co-operation, of equal partnership.

My view – and this comes from my teaching background – is that you get a much better response if you treat people with respect and try to use positive reinforcements to get, maybe, the behaviour you're looking for as opposed to running around with a big wooden stick and, you know, intimidating and threatening students. So this is very similar. As opposed to working with municipalities and providing incentives for regions to work together more collaboratively, this government has chosen the route of the heavy-handed approach, and literally if they don't like what municipalities are saying, then they're going to just force them to do whatever they will.

I'm going to go through Bill 28. There's much to go through here, and there are many, many problems with it. I mean, you know, to summarize this bill in a sentence, it's giving sweeping powers to the minister and cabinet, which are going to actually not just take away from the authority of municipalities, but it will actually inhibit elected officials from doing their job. I'll go through and explain how and where.

The concept of the growth management board is a board that's going to be established. Now, this board, one may ask: "How is it chosen? How is it selected?" It's not municipalities that voluntarily choose to participate. It is imposed. They are told that they must participate, and they have no choice in that matter. So I find it really ironic in the bill when it talks about participating municipalities to give the impression that, hey, they volunteered. No. They were more volun-told or ordered to participate.

You know, once the municipalities are selected to participate – the cabinet has sweeping powers to designate the municipalities that are participating but also whom the municipalities would like to represent them. A reminder to most members: yes, there are other regional growth boards that exist, or there is a Capital Region Board, but one of the major differences is that the municipalities in that board choose whom they're going to send as their representative. They're not being told who will represent them, which, again, gives the minister the opportunity to cherry-pick and decide: "Hey, you know what? If there's an outspoken counsellor or mayor that has a different vision from my own and what I want to see in this province, how it grows, then they're not going to have a voice at the table, and I'll choose someone who has a more friendly view to my own."

Again, I mean, the appointment of persons to represent the participating municipalities: the minister has sweeping powers to determine the voting rights. Again, depending on how they want to weigh a certain vote or decision, that's at the minister's discretion or at the cabinet's discretion.

In addition, the minister and the cabinet have the ability to outline the power, duties, and functions of this regional growth board. I mean, really, this board is going to be a hand-picked group of municipalities that has no say in it whatsoever. They're told who will represent them, who'll be at the table.

They've also taken away the powers of autonomy in the sense that this board will be hand-picked, told what to do. They're given a growth plan to write, which is really just a rubber-stamp exercise because in this growth plan they'll be given their objectives, the contents, timeline, form, effect, process. All of that will be told to them. Really, they'll write up a document that is already pre-written, rubber-stamp it, and give it back. Madam Speaker, it's unbelievable how this bill has completely ignored and will ignore the autonomy of local municipalities and their ability to govern and to make laws that obviously affect the citizens in their municipalities.

Moving on to, well, the annual report. I mean, that's another issue. When they do produce an annual report, is it made public? By now anyone who's spent any amount of time in this Chamber knows that rarely do reports go public. They always get reported to the minister. This one, again, is reported to the minister, not given out to the public at all.

Another flaw with this current bill, Madam Speaker, is that any municipalities that are participating in one of these regional boards will not be able to undertake any public work, improvement, or structure; make a bylaw or pass a resolution; enter into a municipal agreement; or adopt a statutory plan. So most of the powers that municipal governments have will be taken away from them if they are participating in this regional board. Again, the irony here is that they have no choice as to whether or not they can participate in this board. They are being forced to by the minister and by this government.

Madam Speaker, this bill is, as others have mentioned – I mean, draconian is a great word – heavy-handed. It's a bill that this government often takes the same approach on in that there is no consultation, there is no input given from municipalities or the major organizations representing municipalities – AAMD and C and AUMA – as far as their input on this.

Now, you know, the minister I'm sure in due time will get up and speak to the need for regional growth plans and municipalities working together in co-operation and in consultation with each other. I mean, that first part, yes, I agree a hundred per cent. But the method to encourage municipalities to work together is not through forced legislation where you strip them of their authority and power and, basically, put a bunch of puppets into these boards to make decisions on behalf of municipalities. I encourage the other side of the House to read the act. I'm not even sure if the minister understands the scope and power that this bill will give him and this government and, again, strip from municipalities.

Just flipping through my notes here, Madam Speaker, again, it's frustrating to see the approach that this government is taking on Bill 28. I can tell you that, like I said, there are lots of alarm bells that are going off around the province about this bill. Different organizations, municipalities are scrambling to go through it to try to interpret and understand the broad, sweeping powers that this bill has. You know, in some conversations I've had, some elected officials think that maybe the government is trying to address very specific issues in certain regions and is taking a very broad-stroke approach to trying to solve that problem.

My concerns are that we're really taking away the autonomy and powers of municipal governments by this government deciding who participates, how they participate, who represents them, what they can and cannot do, the authority that they have, and in all of this, those decisions can be trumped by the minister. The minister can step in at any point in time and force municipalities to partake in this.

As the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills brought up, a very valid concern is the clause that deals with – let me just find it here, Madam Speaker. It talks about the consequences, if I may, as far as information that must be provided. If a member contravenes this subsection, they can be hauled off to jail for a year and fined personally up to $10,000. I can tell you that there are many Albertans that are clearly shocked that this clause exists, that this government is bringing in something like this through legislation in a bill.

Again, I mean, in the face of the fact that we just had municipal elections throughout the province, there have been elected officials that I've spoken with who have said: you know, had I been told this was going to come through two weeks after I was elected, I might have thought twice about running for election now that I can be hauled off to jail.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have 29(2)(a). Are there any members who would like to comment using the five minutes?

The hon. Member for Little Bow, not on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Donovan: I'll pass it on.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Where do you start with a bill like this, you know? This is one of those bills that you just get up – I thought we were going to have a nice, friendly fall session. A little bit of housekeeping. We're going to get the Premier through her leadership, which we all want. And then this gets pulled.

An Hon. Member: You're not so convinced.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. We're not as convinced.

You know, I just don't understand this bill. It's one thing to empower. If this bill was an empowerment bill, if it was a bill that empowered local municipalities to voluntarily come together and work together on some regional co-operation issues – mass transit, transportation issues, affordable housing issues, shared recreational facilities, all kinds of possible co-operative issues – that empowered local communities to come together and co-operate, then it would be a good bill. It would be a good bill. But that's not what this bill does. This bill is a piece of junk. [interjection] That's right. It's not the law yet, so it's a piece of junk. This bill is an embarrassment. That's what this bill is. It's an embarrassment to any party that claims at all that they are committed to protecting the local autonomy of municipalities in this province. It's an embarrassment.

I don't understand, for example, if you're going to bring a bill like this in, why would you have a clause in the bill that makes it nonvoluntary? Why would you specifically point out that the minister can choose whatever municipality he wants to be included in one of these regional board areas? There's no say by the regional municipality. It doesn't say "may." It's not voluntary. He may choose, and that municipality is then bound. Why would you do that? Why not make it optional for these municipalities so that there could be co-operation, so that people don't feel like they have a gun to their head, metaphorically speaking, when they're making decisions about their own autonomy?

Mr. Griffiths: Which sections says that?

Mr. Anderson: Which section says it? It's good to know that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has not read his bill. That's great to know.

It says specifically in 708.02(2)(b):

(2) The regulation establishing a growth management board must . . .

(b) designate the municipalities that are members of the growth management board.

That's your decision, sir. You will make that decision. That's what it says. Read your bill. I know you have no training in this area of reading bills, but now you can do it. That's where it is.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: It's unbelievable. It's not voluntary. No matter what he says. He can say that he's going to consult, that he's going to ask his municipalities if they want to be involved in it or not. He can say that, but that's not what the bill says. It's not voluntary. He gets to choose. He will decide. The minister and the Executive Council, by extension the Premier. That's what it says. I don't understand why this minister would open up this can of worms like this. There's no reason for it. It's so disrespectful to what municipalities that are trying to co-operate are doing.

Now, I'm not going to sit here and speak about the Capital Region Board, because that's not my area. I've heard lots of things, some good and some not so good, so I'm going to leave that to other folks to speak about. But I am going to talk about this bill as it affects my area in Airdrie.

Mr. Hancock: Which it doesn't.

Mr. Anderson: Which it doesn't. According to the Minister of Human Services this doesn't affect anybody.

Why even have the bill, then, if it doesn't affect anybody? Why have the bill? If you've already done it in regulations and you're worried about getting sued by Parkland county, why would you pass a bill in order to take care of a legal dispute with one county? It's insane. That's not what this bill does. It's much broader than that. That's not what good governments do. They don't respond to a lawsuit by Parkland county with a piece of legislation that changes fundamentally the way that municipalities are governed in this province. It makes no sense.

The other issue, the one that I want to talk more about, is the issue of consultation. How can you pass a piece of legislation this massive knowing the problems, knowing the challenges that occurred with the Capital Region Board, knowing that there are some concerns there at the very least, and then take it and say: now we're going to enable the minister to, on a whim, unilaterally create these boards all across wherever he wants, include whoever he wants in them, and we're just going to create this mechanism for that to happen? Why do that?

If you feel the need to force regionalization on people, at least have the guts to say which area you're going to regionalize in this Legislature. At least come here with a bill that says you're going to do it. Don't pass a piece of enabling legislation that enables you to do it whenever you want without having to come back to this House. Just one day we wake up, and: "Oh, look. Regionalization has been legislated in the Calgary region. That's awesome. Too bad we don't have any say on it." They can do that once this bill is passed. They will have total power to do whatever they want when it comes to deciding the regional governance in this province without having to be accountable for it once this is done.

There was absolutely no consultation on this. None. We know that. We phoned the Calgary mayor's office. We phoned the Edmonton mayor's office. I would note that the Edmonton mayor today has said that he's okay with it, and that leads to another problem. I guarantee you that this legislation will pit communities, particularly our two biggest cities, against their neighbours, and that is bad government. That should never be the case. There should be voluntary co-operation because we want to co-operate, not forced co-operation. And that is what's going to go on here. It's wrong.

Now, I'm going to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill will severely undermine local autonomy and that further input is necessary from the public, municipal officials, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

I'd like to send this out. You need the original, don't you?

The Acting Speaker: I think that you're all aware that we're pausing just for a moment while we get a copy of the motion to each member in the House.

Hon. member, if you would like to continue, you have six minutes.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. The copies that you have in front of you will show what the amendment says again. One of the most offensive parts of this entire bill is the fact that no consultation has been done. This bill clearly has impact on the city of Edmonton and its surrounding communities. We know for a fact that they were not consulted about this bill. This bill has the opportunity to greatly affect, has the possibility of fundamentally affecting in a very personal way the city of Calgary and, obviously, the city of Airdrie, the town of Chestermere, the town of Cochrane, Okotoks, High River, you name it, in the Calgary region. None of them – none of them – were consulted about this. Some of the biggest advocates of the CRP, including my own mayor, Mayor Peter Brown, were completely blindsided by this. So it's not that they're against regional planning, and they're not against regional co-operation. They're okay with that. They were completely blindsided by this bill.

Of course, you just have to wonder about the timing as well. Why wait till one week after the municipal elections, which happen once every four years now, to all of a sudden throw this out there? Why wasn't this released prior? Why wasn't there a consultation process prior so that this could have been debated in our communities over the last year or couple of months to see what the mayors' and councillors' positions are on these things? But no. One week after the election, bang, here it is. It makes no sense to people. Why would you do this without any consultation?

I don't know – obviously, I can't speak for the Assembly on the speed of this – how fast this is going to go through, but if we do pass it within the next couple of weeks, if that's forced through closure or any other parliamentary technique on the other side, it will be passed before the AUMA and the AAMD and C have the opportunity to debate it at their conferences. It'll be law by the time it gets to those conferences. They barely have any time to even prepare to debate something of this magnitude, but they won't even have the chance because it'll be the law.

Why would you do this, minister? Why? Why not let the people know what you're going to do so that you can get the bill right? Why just dump it in everyone's lap?

I heard on the radio today the minister say: "Oh, well, nothing's changed. This was just in the regulations." Well, we went and looked at the regulations. Lots of changes, lots of fundamental changes from the regulations. It is not just putting the regulations into law. It's much broader than that. We'll get to that in Committee of the Whole, one by one. It'll be a slow and painful process, but we need to go through that. It is very different from the regulations. It affects not just the capital region, as I said, but all regions. Once it's passed, the minister will be able to do whatever he wants with regard to regional governance in this province without any check or balance from this House.

And if you're going to fundamentally change – I mean, take a look at this. It's amazing.

708.12(1) Despite any other enactment, no participating municipality shall take any of the following actions that conflict or are inconsistent with a growth plan:

- (a) undertake a public work, improvement, structure or other thing;
- (b) adopt a statutory plan;
- (c) make a bylaw or pass a resolution;
- (d) enter into a municipal agreement.

In other words, the municipality can't wipe their nose – they cannot wipe their nose, frankly – without its complying with the growth plan. The growth plan will be determined – we all hope in consultation, but she sure doesn't have to consult – by the cabinet and the government and this minister. If you're going to change something that fundamental, you would think that you might want to ask our thousands of elected municipal officials around the province about it and get their opinion on it, ask them: "Is this going too far? Is this really necessary?"

You would think that by making it nonvoluntary, by giving, as I read earlier, the minister the power to, if you look at 2(b) under 708.02,

- (b) designate the municipalities that are members of the growth management board, and
- (c) designate all or part of the land lying within the boundaries of the participating municipalities as the growth region for the growth management board, it would be run by the AAMD and C – obviously, its members would be affected greatly – as well as the AUMA. You would think that Calgary would be consulted and Airdrie and Cochrane and Okotoks and High River and Chestermere. You'd think that Parkland county would be consulted and Sherwood Park and Leduc.

Of course, does this just affect Calgary region and Edmonton region? The answer is no. It affects Fort McMurray. They're a growing, bustling city. They're going to have all kinds of regional growth issues in the years going forward. It affects the Lethbridge region and Medicine Hat region.

An Hon. Member: Red Deer.

Mr. Anderson: Obviously, the Red Deer region. Grande Prairie, possibly.

This has huge effects long term. Why would we not consult with the municipalities on something this large? It's not right.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie has introduced a reasoned amendment. Are there any other members who would like to speak to the amendment?

Before we have another speaker, we do have 29(2)(a) if there is anybody who would like to comment or ask the Member for Airdrie on this amendment. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You've been talking about consultation. When an effect like this is going to come on municipalities – we just saw the elections coming forward, and many of the councillors have changed, and many of the mayors have changed. Would that not have been a good opportunity for outgoing mayors, incoming mayors to have this sort of a discussion with their communities during that election process? You know, they should have the time before to prepare for their elections. This is something that's going to be greatly effected across the whole province. I'd like to hear your comments on some more of that consultation and what it meant for the elections and possibly before and after.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you for that, hon. member. You know, it's so true. We have a new mayor in Edmonton, who seems like a very bright individual.

An Hon. Member: He supports this.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, he supports this. That's absolutely right. You're hitting again on one of the problems, which is that many of the outlying communities are not going to support it, and the two big cities' mayors may support it. I don't know. I can't speak for Mayor Nenshi, obviously. He hasn't commented on it yet. It's going to pit communities against each other. That's one of the biggest problems with this whole thing, and it's so unnecessary to do it that way, so divisive. It always has to be divisive. My way or the highway. That's not the way to do it.

Anyway, we have a new mayor in Edmonton, obviously. He seems like a very bright individual. He's going to obviously be putting together his staff and all that sort of thing, and a week later he has to deal with this piece of legislation. Obviously, we have several new councillors in Calgary, several new councillors in the city of Edmonton, and we know that the mayor doesn't speak for those councillors. They all have their independent views on what should happen.

Then you get outside of Edmonton and Calgary, and there's been even more turnover. There's a new mayor in Red Deer. I haven't gone over . . . [interjection] Pardon me? [interjection] Oh, that's right. She hasn't even had a chance to look at this.

You can go right through. We have several new councillors on our local Airdrie city council as well as in Rocky View. They're just getting their feet wet on this stuff. They have not seen this before. We've got to make sure that they have an opportunity to look at it. Not just look at it. I mean, we've been phoning some of the councillors from our ridings, and they're saying the same thing. I'll read a letter in Committee of the Whole about what one said about it. They're saying: "Look. I can't even understand. This is the first bill I've ever read." They need time to be able to analyze this. That means getting the right staff and making sure they get time for a report. All those things have to happen.

Folks, wake up over there. Wake up. You don't just shove stuff like this through. It's undemocratic. Consult with these communities first. Get their input, and then you can come with a piece of legislation that empowers communities, after you've consulted with them. There are examples of times when ministers across the way have done the proper consultation and have gotten it pretty close to right, if not a hundred per cent right. Then we have other times, whether it's land-use bills or this bill, where you don't do any consultation, and you have an unmitigated disaster on your hands. I'm trying to warn you here. You're going to get plastered on this. It's going to be very divisive, and it doesn't need to be.

Do the consultation. One of the things I guarantee they'll tell you is: please make it voluntary. Don't force it on us.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but it is now 6 o'clock, and we will be adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, October 30, 2013

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Bill 28 Modernizing Regional Governance Act

Mr. Anderson moved that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill will severely undermine local autonomy and that further input is necessary from the public, municipal officials, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

[Debate adjourned October 30]

The Acting Speaker: We were speaking to RA1, and RA stands for reasoned amendment. It doesn't stand for the name of the sponsor of the amendment.

Hon. Member for Airdrie, your time was up.

Mr. Anderson: It was up? The whole thing? I had so much to say.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much.
The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I got it right the first time. Let's hope I do it right all the way through. I have, just to be correct, 10 minutes?

The Acting Speaker: Fifteen.

Mr. Griffiths: Fifteen. Okay. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm still going to be as concise as I can be.

I think the biggest challenge for genuine – and I mean genuine – leadership, people who are really trying to do the best in politics, was best summarized by a quote from Winston Churchill. That quote says, “A lie gets halfway around the world before the truth [gets] its pants on.” I always thought that was very telling. It's not just a lie but misinformation as well that can travel faster than getting out the facts. I am pleased to be able to stand up today and talk about some of the facts.

To start, I want to talk about section 603 of the MGA because that, Madam Speaker, is the regulation that has, I guess, generated this piece of legislation. That legislation specifically authorizes the minister to pass any regulation that's not within the rest of the act to deal with a situation that needs to be dealt with. But it specifically says in that section that that regulation can only exist for two years, and then it is supposed to expire or be moved to legislation.

Now, the Capital Region Board was one of those 18 regulations made under section 603, but it existed for more than two years. In fact, it existed for six years, and the reason that it existed for six years is because the Capital Region Board itself is an incredible enterprise: all those municipalities coming together, working on a growth plan, working on their management to make sure that they have the proper land-use strategy in place so that when people move here, they feel like they live in an environment that's going to be successful, not haphazard. We wanted to make sure we got it right. We wanted to make sure that we had six years to let it evolve, and now we have the Capital Region Board, which is an exceptional example of success to other municipalities of regional collaboration and co-operation.

We realized that it was time to start to move that regulation over to legislation. We began the work very early, but we had a scenario that evolved that made us have to speed up the process. Now, I'll come back to that in a moment. First, I would like to run through some of the misinformation that seems to have gotten halfway around the world ahead of the facts.

First, the Member for Airdrie had talked about on page 5 of the bill the section that reads 708.02. He read it. It says:

- (1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister, may establish a growth management board by regulation.
- (2) The regulation establishing a growth management board must
  - (a) specify the name of the growth management board,
  - (b) designate the municipalities that are members of the growth management board, which he had pointed out was horrible and awful,

- (c) designate all or part of the land lying within the boundaries of the participating municipalities.

And this was such horrible legislation. Such horrible legislation. Interestingly enough – and it cites it in the legislation – these growth management boards are intended to operate like commissions.

We've had service commissions in this province, Madam Speaker, for 17 years, since the MGA was created, and I'd just like to compare. Section 602.02 says:

- (1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister, may establish regional services commissions by regulation.

Now, this member, the Member for Airdrie, had suggested that I had this arbitrary authority to create them wherever I wanted.

It also says:

- (2) The regulation establishing a commission must
  - (a) specify the commission's name;

Exactly like we have in the legislation.

- (b) identify the municipal authorities that are the members of this commission.

This is on commissions, on water commissions and waste commissions. This has been existing for 17 years, and it's identical, Madam Speaker. It's identical. How is this draconian, yet for 17 years this has worked incredibly well for municipalities that are working on water commissions and now waste commissions, partnering their municipalities together?

The second piece of misinformation the member pointed out was about fines, on page 11 of the current bill. The member had pointed out how horrible – horrible – the fines were that we were going to levy arbitrarily – I anticipate that that is what his assertion was – against municipalities. It says at 708.17:

- (2) A person who contravenes subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of $10 000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or to both a fine and imprisonment.

Such draconian measures, Madam Speaker. Yet the regulation that has existed for six years for the Capital Region Board says in section 24:

- (2) A person who contravenes subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of $10 000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or to both a fine and imprisonment.

But it's not done, Madam Speaker. [interjections] It's not done.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Griffiths: Madam Speaker, that's not even done.

In the MGA, the Municipal Government Act, which has existed for 17 years, it says under 566(1) that a person who is found guilty of an offence under this Act is liable to a fine of not more than $10 000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or to both a fine and imprisonment.

So draconian.

Madam Speaker, the whole point of this is to make sure that you prepare for the worst, but we have never levied a fine or a jail sentence for anybody. You have to have a punishment for the worst possible event. Thankfully, our municipal councillors all work very well together. We've never had to levy a punishment.

The third point. The member went through the legislation and said that on page 5 it reads – and it's so draconian, Madam Speaker – under 708.02:

(3) The regulation establishing a growth management board may deal with one or more of the following matters:

And this is horrible.

(a) the appointment of persons to represent the participating municipalities.

It's horrible. Unfortunately, it's two paragraphs away, so he probably didn't notice it.

Under 708.04 it says:

Each participating municipality must, in accordance with the regulation establishing the growth management board of which the participating municipality is a member, appoint a person to represent the participating municipality on the growth management board.

The municipality appoints the person, not me. But the member has managed to spread incredible misinformation about that, or maybe he just didn't read two paragraphs ahead, where the facts are.

Finally, Madam Speaker, the challenge that we had was that there was a court case, that came up very quickly, that challenged the section 603 regulations because some of them existed longer than two years, as they were intended to. It was deliberately done to make sure that we got them right before we embedded them in legislation. That court case put at risk the Capital Region Board and all of the great work it did because it could have disappeared like that overnight.

But it's not just that, Madam Speaker. It put all 18 of the section 603 regulations at risk for the Alberta Central East Water Corporation, which could have disappeared overnight; the Chestermere Utilities corporation, which would have disappeared overnight; the Peace Regional Waste Management Company – I've been to Peace River, and I know how proud they are of that system, that corporation, and it would have been terrible if it disappeared or was put at risk because of that – the New Water Ltd. company; the Capital Region Board, that I mentioned; Aqueduct Utilities Corporation; the Newell Regional Services Corporation; Aquatera Utilities, all put at risk because of that court case.

That's why, through all this, we evaluated what we were going to do and realized that we were taking the regulations and making them legislation, just as we'd always intended, without changing it any way significantly that would have impacted municipalities. It gives us, me, no new powers. Frankly, Madam Speaker, I could have under the section 603 regulations created anything that I wanted to anyway. This puts it in legislation so that everyone is aware of what's going on, and it has to come before this House if there are changes.

It had to be done to protect these municipalities. Once every single municipality in this province understands the reason and rationale for doing this and is aware that there is nothing to be afraid of but that it is a tool, if a bunch of municipalities, just like a water commission, just like a waste commission, decide they want to come together and have a large regional planning board so that they can plan for growth – quite frankly, we're looking at a million people moving here in the next 10 years still – if they want to get together and plan it so it's done smartly, Madam Speaker, they can come to me and ask for it. We'll work through this, just like we do with water commissions, just like we do with waste commissions. They will realize, when they see all of this, that the fearmongering and misinformation that's gone on has wasted a lot of time, and they'll get back to work.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: We have 29(2)(a) for five minutes available at this time.

Mr. Anderson: Madam Speaker, it's always great to hear the intellectual powerhouse that is the Member for Battle River-Wainwright. He never ceases to amaze all of us. Let's give him a hand. Clearly, we should not question this individual for any of the public statements that's he's made in his life.

You specifically pointed to the regulation and said that this is the regulation that establishes commissions in this province, water commissions and so forth. I would ask: do you not see a difference between a water commission and a regional planning board that has the ability to set the rules with regard to whether a community can develop, how they can develop, what resolutions they can pass, what bylaws they can pass? I'm sorry. I'm not understanding your point here. You're saying that because there are regulations in this province that allow you to establish water commissions and commissions like that, somehow you have always been able under that regulation to establish governance boards that oversee regional areas. Well, let's go through it.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: I'm just saying: you were always able to approve an area or a board that can decide the voting rights of participating municipalities, mandate the growth of the management board, that they can determine the contents of a growth plan, the timelines for completing a growth plan, the form of a growth plan, the effect of a growth plan, that they can overrule bylaws, that they can overrule resolutions, that they can go to Queen's Bench if there's any municipality that passes a bylaw that doesn't conform with the growth plan, that they can go get an order to stop that? You're actually telling us that you already had that power because you can form a commission, a water commission or something to that effect? Honestly?

Well, why do you need the legislation, then? You're saying: oh, because it expires in two years. Why wouldn't you just apply it to the Capital Region Board if that's all that you were worried about? Why are you passing a regulation that applies to every region in this province and every municipality in this province? Why, sir, did you not do any consultation with any municipality, with the AAMD and C or the AUMA? You did none of these things. [interjection] But he's not changing anything. Then why are we passing the bill, genius? Genius Minister of Transportation, stick to building roads.

Addressing the Chair

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I have to make a statement. [interjection] Hon. member, when the Speaker stands, you sit.

When I say, "Through the Speaker," it means you have to speak to whomever you're directing your . . .

Mr. Anderson: They're yapping over there.

The Acting Speaker: I'm talking about the minister. You're talking to me, so you need to use the third person, not: you, you, you.

Mr. Anderson: Fair enough.

The Acting Speaker: Please remember that.

Hon. minister, there's a minute and 40 seconds left.

Debate Continued

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Let's see. I'm actually reading from the regulation, not from this legislation that existed previously.

(19)(1) The council of a participating municipality shall amend every statutory plan and bylaw as necessary to conform with the Capital Region Growth Plan . . .

(2) If the council of a participating municipality fails to amend a statutory plan or bylaw in accordance with subsection (1), the statutory . . . bylaw is deemed to be invalid.

Everything in here is in the legislation, and everything in the legislation is in here. Nothing has changed. I already explained that the reason why we needed to do this was because this eminent court case that appeared this summer was putting everything at risk in a matter of two weeks tops, when a judgment came down that could have made all of it, not just the capital region board but everything else, invalid.

Our notion when we crafted this was that if there were another group of municipalities that wanted to come forward and have a regional growth management board, why would we deny them the option? It would be as though we put in Aquatera Utilities as having the only water commission in the province. We created the ability to have waste commissions, water commissions, and now regional growth planning boards so the municipalities could decide if they want to come together, either voluntarily like they've done in Calgary, which will remain that way as long as they want it to, or in Edmonton, which has worked very well for six years. They're going to get to decide their option, Madam Speaker. That's the way it's going to work.

Nothing in here, as I've proven, gives me the authority to do anything I didn't have the authority to do before. It makes sure that it's in legislation so that the 18 groups that have done exceptional work over the years can continue to do so.

The Acting Speaker: We are on RA1. Are there other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Contrary to my colleagues here in the Official Opposition, I actually want to thank the minister for bringing this forward because I'm running on this in the next election. It will get me elected – thank you very much – and I'm very happy for it. You can giggle and you can mock, but I am going to win this debate out in the rural halls, and any one of you who wants to challenge me in a debate in a rural hall, I'm happy to have that. [interjections] Well, let's talk about that. Let's talk about stealing of land because the member wants to bring it up. It's quite interesting. Despite any decision of a court, regardless of the court's decision to the contrary or made before or after this comes into force – to heck with the court. We're overriding the court.

What happened to due process of law? We have seen this in bill after bill recently from this government. It's why we have 17 members, and it's why we're going to be the next government. It's because of these things that they're passing. They don't understand it, but they will understand it in the future. They're not listening. They're angry, but they're not listening to what's going on out in the public. It's a denial of what's happening, and that's why this amendment should pass. We need to consult. We need to have this debate at the AUMA with municipal councillors. We need to have this debate at the AAMD and C so these county councils, these municipal councils can actually hear and see and decide for themselves.

It is absolutely amazing to me. There are various sections in here. One in particular talks about the Expropriations Act. I can quote it, but I'll have to look it up. Somebody can look it up for me. It says that the Expropriations Act, in effect, does not apply. We went down this road once before. We did it with the Land Assembly Project Area Act, also known as Bill 19. This government denied it was in there. They said that the Expropriations Act will apply if we take your land. It was right in there, and I remember it because I knew that bill so well. It was section 19 of that bill.

Now, what this government did eventually was that it removed that. It removed that because of all the noise out in the public. They denied it was in there, but they eventually amended the act. But it took all that noise before this government would react. There's going to be noise on this bill. I do not expect this government to act, but they should at least try to hear it. Hopefully they would listen, but they haven't done that. What's a real tragedy is the bill. The tragedy is that nobody is against planning, and nobody is against these regional plans, but as the member had said earlier, you have to do it by collaboration. [interjections] You have to do it by co-operation. It is extremely important. [interjections] I will address you as long as I can see you. That's important.

When it's thrown at people, that "if you do not do this, there are penalties. We will make the decision and, oh, by the way, now you have to act on our decision. You have to change," that is denigrating the democratic process. That is not democratic in any way, shape, or form if you believe in the democratic process. That's what's really extremely important here. It's not the premise of having regional commissions, and it's not the premise of planning. I don't think anyone here is opposed to planning, but when it's my plan and you have no input, that's not planning. That's dictating.

If you have a board that's been appointed, an unelected board, dictating to an elected official, there are issues there that I would hope the members on the other side would at least recognize, that that's not going to fly. These councillors, these newly elected mayors in all of these rural communities that are going to be directly affected and those that see the potential to be affected are not going to like this. They can call it disinformation. They can call it lies. They can call it whatever negative name they want. But if it's in writing, it's in writing, and that's what it is.

When you look at the fine and the jail term that they bring up, this bill says that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act supersedes it. What does that bill say? It says right in there that a minister can issue an enforcement order as if it's a judgment of the Queen's Bench. And now you have penalty associated with that. So how does that work? Some of the lawyers would have to get up and scratch their heads and figure out how that would actually come to be should a minister issue an enforcement order where it actually has a penalty or a jail term as if it were the judgment of the Queen's Bench. That was also in Bill 19, that this government did not believe – but only after a lot of noise from outside did they remove it. They removed it from Bill 19, but they left it in the Land Stewardship Act, and here we are now with an associated – when we take these regulations and we bring them into legislation, that act reigns supreme. This penalty now is there, a $10,000 fine with the jail term.

The question is: can the minister, then, bring these two together and actually make that enforcement order? It looks like he can. Is that legal? Well, according to the laws, if passed, it would be. Now, that's a real question that people need to ask themselves: is that what the intent was? I don't believe that's what the intent of this government was. I would like to think that this government wanted to keep due process of law, but you don't even have to get to all the provisions the minister said or even talked about. You only have to go to the very first page, page 2, where it starts, and it says that contrary to "any decision of a court" before or after this bill comes into force and the courts no longer matter. That's wrong. That's wrong. That needs to be changed. And that's not found in any other regulation in the MGA. I challenge the minister to find that, where a court has no say in the matter.

We have separation of powers. That's important. We like to think that legislation gets passed without any mistakes, but we know it happens. That's why we have amending bills. Or situations change. Courts rule on these bills, but when we start not allowing the courts to actually rule for our constitutional rights, that's a deadly trail, a deadly path to head down that nobody wants to go down. We cannot be passing laws that say: this law supersedes whatever a court will determine. That's wrong.

I will not say that even if the law was perfect, if another law contradicted, then the court needs to rule. Good. Then we come back to the Legislature and we make whatever changes need to be made so these laws work in conjunction with each other. But the fact that we would just say that there could be mistakes between legislations and that a court's ruling doesn't matter: that's wrong. That's not what this society was founded on. We haven't even gotten to the rest of the bill. There are a lot of offences in here, but that offence jumps right off the page.

I tell you, there are municipal councillors in this room. There are former municipal councillors, and their independence, to me, is paramount. They need a certain amount of authority to have jurisdiction that is democratic over their own area. That is where democracy, I think, works the best, at the local level. We seem to lose touch with it as we go up to the provincial and then to federal. But it's at the local level, where the local mayor, who walks down the street and hears it every day about the sidewalks and the sewers, if they don't take care of the job, gets voted out. That's where democracy works the best, and that's where it responds quite well.

There's a good phrase, and I think I heard this from Mayor Nenshi, but I'm not going to quote him because I don't know if he took it from someone else: if your federal government were to just disappear today, how long would it take us to notice it? If the provincial government just disappeared today, how long would it take to notice it? It's subjective, but the reality, Madam Speaker, is that if your local government disappeared, you'd miss it within a day as the sewers backed up, as the water stopped working, and as the snow removal didn't occur. You would notice that right away.

We know how important the local government is, and what this bill has done is taken away much of their jurisdiction, much of their authority. And that's wrong. That's wrong. That democratic process has to be respected, and it should be maintained. It should reign, in my view, supreme on certain matters, those matters being all the municipal bylaws, the municipal planning. If you want to create a regional plan, you create a regional plan that has the co-operation of those municipalities, that has the buy-in of those municipalities. The fact is that if it's a very bad regional plan, then they're not going to buy into it. But if it's a good regional plan, then as a provincial government creating a planning board, you'll be able to sell it to these municipalities. That's the democratic process, and that's why this motion should pass.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have 29(2)(a) for anyone who would like to comment or question the member.

Seeing none, we'll move to the next person on the list, Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to this, and I hope that the minister is listening because, in fact, as much as I appreciated him sailing in here on his white horse named Indignation and then sort of going into a full rant, it would have been helpful to have been able to have a more reasoned and perhaps calmer exchange of ideas and questions because while he raises some interesting points, the fact of the matter is that there are still some very serious concerns that exist around this legislation, notwithstanding the impassioned and indignant rant that we were subjected to. Don't get me wrong. I have a lot of respect for the occasional impassioned and indignant rant, I think it's fair to say. It would be a bit hypocritical for me to go after that. That being said, there are actually some reasonable questions that need to be asked here.

Now, first of all, the minister has all day long been saying that this piece of legislation is "a mirror" of the regulation that enables the Capital Region Board. It is not "a mirror image" of the regulation that enables the Capital Region Board. That needs to be pointed out. There are critical areas in which it is not a mirror image. Those people out there who think that they're supporting Bill 28 because they think that the Capital Region Board regulation is a good thing – you know, I think the Capital Region Board regulation has many good things in it, too. I'm not opposed to the Capital Region Board regulation. What I am opposed to is this piece of legislation, which has some significant changes to it. It looks to me, just listening to the very rushed and impassioned defence of this legislation, that perhaps what we're dealing with here is a piece of legislation that was drafted perhaps a little bit quickly and a little bit reactively and without enough consultation because we have a piece of legislation that has some distinct differences in it from the Capital Region Board regulation.

The first thing, of course, is that the regulation itself that continuously is compared to this piece of legislation is itself the product of negotiation between municipalities whereas this piece of legislation is not. That becomes clear when you look at certain provisions of this legislation. So let's go over them, with a little bit less anger than the minister did, on a point-by-point basis.

Let's talk, first of all, about the process through which the members of the Capital Region Board get to be on that board versus the way they would find themselves on the management growth board under this piece of legislation. Now, the minister suggests: well, you know, yeah, 708.02 says that the minister has the authority to do many things, including making regulations about the appointment of members to the growth board. But then he sort of dismissively says, "Oh, well, we didn't look at 708.04," because that says that, in fact, the municipality has to appoint their members to the growth board. In fact, what it says is that it has to appoint them to the growth board in accordance with the regulation that the government has just made about the appointment to the growth board. So there's no limit on the criteria for who is appointed to that growth board that is included in the regulation that the government has the authority to make under 708.02.

The fact of the matter is that the government can significantly limit the discretion and the ability and the authority of the municipality in terms of who they would appoint pursuant to 708.04, and that's a reasonable interpretation of those two sections read together. Now, perhaps in his anger the minister didn't have a chance to sort of consider that possibility in looking at those two sections together, but the fact of the matter is that that's the way many people would read those.

The next thing is that the Capital Region Board regulation section 4(1), I believe, also states that the representatives who are on that Capital Region Board themselves select the chair of the Capital Region Board, yet in 708.02(3)(b) of the new legislation what we actually see is that the minister may appoint the chair. Now, maybe they'll do that in consultation. We don't know. The government is simply giving itself authority to do it. That is a significant difference, difference 3.

Difference 4. The Capital Region Board regulation lays out some very laudable objectives that the Capital Region Board must work to achieve. Let me just say that I support those objectives, and I applaud the municipalities who participated in that negotiating process to come up with those objectives. They include the issues of environmental planning and regional land use and regional transit and mapping strategies and ensuring collaboration on social and affordable housing. These are all things that, you know, as a New Democrat I'm all thumbs-up about. But, you see, that's in the regulation; that's not in the act. In the act it's just the minister who may choose the objectives that, you know, depending on what kind of mood he's in – you know, let's face it; his moods change from day to day. I think we've seen that. Depending on what kind of mood he's in, the objectives may also change.

Again, what you need to do is actually have a piece of legislation that has been through some really substantive consultation with not just the Capital Region Board but with others so that we can maybe set some criteria and some limits on the types of objectives that the minister might impose. That is difference 4.

Difference 5. The Capital Region Board regulation says: thou shalt have a complaint resolution process. The act says: if the minister wants to, there may be a complaint resolution process; we don't really know what it's going to look like. Again, a significant difference.

Finally, today I was informed that – you know, the minister said: no, no, no, none of this stuff will come into play unless the municipalities request it. You know what? I went through this legislation, and maybe I missed it. If the minister were willing to answer me on that issue, I'd be happy to hear the answer, but I can't find anything in this legislation that says that this growth board is triggered by the request of the participating municipalities. Quite the opposite. What I see is that the minister may just do it whenever. I think the most defining criteria there for when it would happen is: whenever.

I think it is misleading to Albertans to suggest that this is merely a mirror image of the Capital Region Board regulation because it is not. It enables the Capital Region Board regulation. Absolutely. That is true. But it also enables a whole bunch of other stuff, and it doesn't enable those other things because they are the product of genuine and effective negotiations between the affected municipalities. It doesn't even suggest that there needs to be a consultation with the affected municipalities. Rather, it enables whatever the minister wants it to enable, and that is the problem with this legislation. If you want this legislation to go through, you need to put some limits on what the minister's authorities are.

Quite frankly, if you get to the point where what you really are asking for here is the authority to deal with some regions of the province where the municipalities are just not working well together and in certain cases you are going to exercise the authority to bang some heads together to get some resolutions, fine. Be honest about that. Say that that's what you're going for, and let's have that debate here in this Legislature. But don't suggest that this is simply pro forma, evergreening legislation to replicate the Capital Region Board regulation, because it's not. It came through a different process, and it does not include critical components of it, and it expands greatly the authority of the minister to do a whole bunch of other things.

That's where this legislation gets into trouble, and that's where in a calmer exchange I think there could be value to cleaning up the legislation, putting in criteria and standards that get the government to where it wants to go, but at the same time does not making the minister king of the world for a week. That's kind of what you're doing here. You're asking municipalities across the province to put their faith in the minister without there being any provision in here for negotiation with the municipalities or having them sign off or even, you know, that horrible, waffly consultation language. None of that's in here right now.

As I say, I think the Capital Region Board regulation was for the most part a success although perhaps they could use some more authority. There might be strong arguments on that side of the argument, quite frankly. But the fact of the matter is that that's not what this legislation gets us. This legislation gets us that plus 25 other things that we cannot predict, and that's the problem with it.

I don't think it helps the argument at all to talk about, you know, lies travelling around the world while people are changing their pants. I think that, quite frankly, it's a lot more helpful to actually look at the legislation, look at what it says, look at what you're comparing it to, look at whether your legislation is achieving the objective that you're telling Albertans you want it to, and if it doesn't do that, then you sit down, and you have a reasonable conversation about how to get it to where you want it to be. I would suggest that that is why this motion should be successful, because that latter action, that reasonable conversation, figuring out how to get this legislation to where you want it to be, has not yet happened. Until it does, this motion needs to succeed.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

We have 29(2)(a). The Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: A question to the hon. member: if we wanted to put in statute the Capital Region Board regulation, if we wanted to turn that into a statute and legislate it, which, apparently, most of the players on that board, although not all, would like, why wouldn't we just call this the Capital Region Board act and put it into statute? Why do you think the government would, instead of just doing that because of this little running out of regulation time issue that they're having, expand it to take the entire province, so now they no longer have to come here in the future and do this? They can just regulate a board now. They can establish a board by just saying, "It is so," and they'll never have to come back here to do that. Do you have any comments on that? Isn't it kind of weird that they wouldn't just put the Capital Region Board act in place, that just affected that? Why the expansion all across this great province of ours?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you for that question. You know, if you were in a province where the government appreciated the opportunity to come into the Assembly and democratically debate critical policy changes with people that have been elected by all Albertans as opposed to just a minority of Albertans, then you would think it was weird. In this province you don't really think it's weird because, in fact, this is the way this government has been going for years and years. I mean, I'm just waiting for the act that comes in and says: the minister may make regulations about anything at all, ever. Then that will be the act, and we will debate it probably about 4 o'clock in the morning, and then they'll bring closure, and then we'll be done. And it'll be another three years before we . . .

Mr. Anderson: But it was always like that.

Ms Notley: Exactly. This is that kind of thing. Somebody is scurrying around, writing up that act as we speak. [interjections] Tomorrow, I'm told. We could see it tomorrow.

In any event, the member makes a good point. Well, I think the minister talked a little bit about some implications for some other bodies, but it would have been possible to bring in this legislation to deal with the specific bodies that they want to by identifying those bodies. Conversely, if they want to expand the opportunity across the province for replication of the Capital Region Board process, then that's fine, too, but then you put in place provisions for that to happen that include fundamental protections. The municipalities want in. The municipalities are definitely choosing who participates. The municipalities have sign-off. Negotiation has to occur. These are the kinds of things that would be components of that legislation.

If you think at the end of the day that you need to be concerned about, "Well, municipalities may never agree," you might actually even give yourself the authority to push them a little bit. But presumably you would start with: they need to sit down, they need to agree, they need to work amongst themselves, yada, yada, yada. What we've got instead is: the minister may do whatever the heck he wants on this issue. That is where we run into problems with this legislation.

I think we are dealing with some new issues, new ones that are coming up every day. In Alberta we never thought that we'd run into towns running into each other. You know, we're a rural province, and we think of ourselves that way. But the fact of the matter is that we are coming up with density and population growth issues that we're unused to. So when we deal with those, we should talk about it here because we're the ones who have the authority for dealing with that, and it should be discussed in this Assembly. It should not be discussed in the minister's office if he's having a good day and not in a bad mood.

Thirty-five seconds left under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Anderson: So what you're saying is that under this act it actually wouldn't be voluntary. If the minister decided that, say, Airdrie or Chestermere had to be in that plan, in this regional board plan, they wouldn't have a choice under this regulation. Is that what this act says?

Ms Notley: Well, indeed, the minister suggests that this would only apply if they wanted it to, but, you see, there's nothing in the act that says that. You know, one would expect the act would say something along the lines of "upon request," but it's not there.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

We have the hon. Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta, followed by Little Bow.

An Hon. Member: Say that three times real fast.

Mr. Fawcett: It's a tough one.

Madam Speaker, I just want to stand up and voice my opposition to this particular amendment. I'll get to it, but I do want to chat briefly about the reality that we face today here in Alberta. The metropolitan area of Edmonton is 1.15 million people. The metropolitan area of Calgary is 1.2 million people. That's a considerable number of people, and that doesn't include the surrounding communities, all of which use and utilize the services and the public infrastructure that are part of these metropolitan areas. We expect that growth to increase substantially over the next decade.

The thing that is a bit frustrating, listening to this debate, and a bit frustrating with this motion is that I could understand if this was a debate about the particular policy of putting in growth management boards. But, as we've quite clearly heard from the minister, this is actually to deal with a legal technicality to keep the capital region growth management board intact and to keep them doing the good work that they're doing in dealing with those growth challenges for the region here, Madam Speaker.

I can't let it go without saying. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre talked about going out and campaigning on this particular issue, and what I would say is: go for it. In the next election this government is going to be talking about the Alberta that we have today, dealing with the growth pressures that we have today because we have people coming here that want to come here for the quality of life and the prosperity and the economic freedom that we enjoy. If they want to go out and have a debate about what we need to do to deal with the Alberta that we're facing today and the realities of our challenges and opportunities and they want to go out and talk about Alberta circa 1970, then go ahead. I know who's going to win that election. So let's go have that debate around growth management boards and regional planning at election time. Bring it on. I know that in the two large cities, if that's what the election came down to, my seat would be very, very safe, Madam Speaker.

But that's neither here nor there because that's not what this bill really deals with. This bill deals with a technical legality where we're required to put this under a different regulation rather than in section 603 in the Municipal Government Act so it can legally stand as the government's policy, which we've had in place for close to six years, Madam Speaker. That's what this bill is really about, and that's why I just simply cannot support this motion.

Finally, Madam Speaker, and then I'll sit down, the opposition constantly, constantly begs us to put stuff in the legislation rather than regulation. That's what we're doing right here. We're taking it out of the regulation, putting it in the legislation, and I would think – I would think – that we could get the whole support of the Legislature for that reason alone, considering that that regulation has existed for six years. Let's go have the policy debate in the next election.

Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks. I'm going to be brief. I'd just like to ask the minister in his discussions with the mayor of Edmonton and, being from Calgary, his discussions with the mayor of Calgary what exactly he's told them about the legislation. I'd be interested to know that.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, hon. member. Certainly, I've had very casual conversations with the mayor of Calgary. I've not yet talked to the new mayor of Edmonton, and I don't know when I'll get the chance. I'm sure he's a busy guy getting caught up on his new duties. But I do know that I have had casual conversations with the mayor and many of the aldermen in the city of Calgary who are very, very supportive of regional collaboration and growth management boards.

Now, is Calgary different than Edmonton? Certainly. Is this regulation going to apply to Calgary? Not that I'm aware of at this point. We want Calgary to come up with their own particular solution with their neighbouring communities.

Those are the conversations. I can tell you that the aldermen in my particular area and the mayor of the city of Calgary are very supportive of us looking at different collaboration models to allow their neighbours and them to work together for the betterment of their citizens, for the betterment of taxpayers, for the betterment of communities.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Do you have a short comment, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. You know what, Madam Speaker? I appreciate what the hon. member is saying. I honestly do. As a Calgary MLA I appreciate the fact that he's had a short conversation with the mayor of Calgary, and I appreciate the fact that he's had conversations with the aldermen. I guess what's concerning me is that the people I've talked to have said that they haven't seen the legislation, they haven't had an opportunity to even read the legislation, and they haven't had an opportunity to even be consulted on the legislation. I just look forward to further conversation with him.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The truth is that, actually, this piece of legislation has nothing to do with Calgary. The minister, again, has explained why the need of this legislation has come up. It's definitely in response to a court issue, and this is going to allow what has currently existed in the capital region moving forward. If the city of Calgary eventually wants to become part of this legislation and they have some concerns about it, then we can address that back in the Legislature at that point. Remember, hon. member, members of the opposition are always complaining that once we create regulation, we can't bring it back into the Legislature, and the minister can just keep doing what we're doing. If the city of Calgary, when they get to this point, if they want this, decide that they want to do it but they require some changes, certainly the minister is going to engage them in that conversation and be very much open to that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. Well, the minister of a name that I can't remember has said that the opposition is always trying to get the government to take things out of regulation and put it into the act. But as I look at the act, it's a piece of legislation for the creation of regulations so quite contrary to what the minister has said. For example, under the growth management board section in division 1, "The Lieutenant Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister, may establish a growth management board by regulation," then the regulation must do this, then the regulation that, then the regulation that. I just can't understand how the minister would allege that this was a way of getting rid of regulations when, in fact, it's just designed to create more.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. You know, that's a very interesting question, Madam Speaker. What I would say is that there are, I guess, various levels of what goes into regulation, what level of detail goes into legislation, what level of detail goes in regulation. Certainly, what we've done here is take what is wholly in a regulation right now under section 603 and put it into legislation.

Of course, in any legislation there is regulation-making authority that will drill down into some of those policies. But in the overall aspect of what we're doing with this particular policy area, there is more in regulation because of this particular bill than there was previously under the regulation in section 603. While you might not like the complete, I guess, picture of that or the complete package of that, it's certainly a lot better than having that whole thing existing completely in regulation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

On RA1, the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I guess I'm speaking in favour of motion RA1 just because of a couple of things. With my colleague that was just speaking there we had some conversation earlier that it's been in the books for six years and we're just making it law and all that. Just because something has been in something for six years doesn't mean it's right. It doesn't mean that because that's the way it was laid out for the Capital Region Board, that's the best thing we should do with it, and that's how we should roll along with it, because people change. I'm pretty grassroots on letting the local people have their decisions on what they do.

Unfortunately, what this bill does – and this is why I'm in favour of the motion that's before us for the amendment to it – is that it's basically going to make your MDs and counties land banks for your larger areas. Now, I understand growth, and I understand what we're doing with growth. I understand my previous colleague just went on a slight rant about how it has nothing to do with Calgary, yet it does because with the Calgary Regional Partnership there were people that were involved in that that really didn't find it worked that good, people that went in with good intentions when it started.

I remember going to Calgary when the previous MLA from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills was the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and that was back when our previous Calgary mayor Mr. Bronconnier was in at the time. Some definite decisions on how MSI funding was going to be done caused a lot of stress around the table. As that all got along, everybody was allowed their little pieces of what they were going to be able to do to make MSI funding work. At the time, though, everybody wanted to be in on the Calgary Regional Partnership because it looked like it was going to be a great idea on how to grow and how to work with everybody. The problem is that you get veto votes and things like that where things weren't working out well. So great intentions when it started, but then everything goes a little sideways. Then you sit there, and you get: as long as it works for one party, it doesn't work for another.

The MD of Foothills and the town of Okotoks have also run into these issues of planning. Now, this goes back to where if you put everybody in a room and you tell them they have to do something, it doesn't go over as well as when you ask them to do something. It's just a good rule of thumb that if you ask somebody to do something, it goes much smoother; if you tell them to do it, you get everybody's arms up a little bit.

I mean, the minister was very passionate in his speech, which is good. That's a good sign to have. One of the qualities in him that I kind of like is that he does get his gears in, and he wants to let you know what he's thinking about it. It's not a bad thing. I get that it was in policy, section 708.17(1), about telling the officials in a municipality that they have to be part of something, and if they don't, there's a fine. This is usually where things go awry. When you put in legislation that says that we're going fine you or you could go to jail for not more than a year, which is nice – you don't want to miss two Christmases – those are the things that scare people. It's a natural reaction people have. When they see that they're going to have legislation like that put in, you're going to have people panic a little bit. I guess that with all these questions this is why I think the motion has some merit to it.

The addition to it is if you put yourself in the other set of shoes. For instance, say the federal government came along and told us: well, we've kind of been doing this for a little while, but we want you and B.C. to work together to do a pipeline out to the coast. I think it's got some great merit yet a downside if they put the rules in of B.C. getting a veto vote. Kind of hard to negotiate with somebody when you're not sure how you're going to be able to work with them because not everybody is on the same playing field. That's where, I think, the questions come in with this. This goes back to consultation, and I understand, in laying out a bill and stuff like that, where the problems can come in of trying to get the communication out there.

I appreciate the Associate Minister of Finance, and now he's got recovery, the three Rs in the southwest. Good work on it. You're doing a good job of it. But you sit there and you talk with everybody on it, and the problem is that when you do these things and you lay it out, you get everybody in a fight. So then it's the whole question of how you get the conversation back around the table. You're going to have your larger urban centres that have more pull than some of the rural ones that are around them, and the planning to go forward on that can be quite a challenge because you just make the centres around the urban areas land banks. You're just telling them: you have to do this. Maybe in the Edmonton regional plan, the Capital Region Board – I remember its first inception when I was on council. It wasn't the smoothest thing rolling at the time, but it worked along, and it got things going and progressed.

What worries me is that it's like everything. It starts off with a good idea. We're kind of fixing a problem that's obviously shown up there. But once you do that, you put a Band-Aid solution on the problem, and you end up having to do a lot of other ones. I guess one of the ones that worries me is when you sit there and you look at how something started six years ago, and it might have had a great idea to it, and we're trying to solve that. I wouldn't want to be in the minister's shoes when you've got municipalities fighting and wanting to fight over planning. I've seen it myself where everybody wants to have the growth in their area, but they don't want somebody else to have it, and some places want to have less growth.

When you put everybody in a room and you tell them that they have to be on a regional management board – this is, I guess, where I'd want some clarification on the original bill. But on the motion itself I think it plays it out as just to scrap the process. It scares people when they don't have the opportunity to debate the process of it. So I guess that's something I'd like to see come forward, whether it be some time on it to go out and talk to the AAMD and C and AUMA and get their input on how to do things because in best intentions of putting this into a bill and making it law, which has been working for six years for one capital region, it does panic people a little bit when it has to be thrown in. Why does it have to be done?

I guess the questions I raise and wonder about is if that's a positive thing to have done. That's where the amendment to this motion, I guess, lays it out as: do we need to do it right away? Is this something that could be shelved for a little while to get some input from new councillors? I don't know what the full rollover was, but it was probably 35 per cent, 30 per cent new councillors municipally on the AAMD and C side that need to get this stuff figured out.

I think collaboration does work well. I think we've seen it. But forced collaboration never does work well. I've seen it in quite a few of the municipalities in my riding alone, where five, 10 years ago they wouldn't talk to each other over stuff. Now they're doing regional waterlines together such as the minister talked about. But it's the process of how you get them into that room together rather than forcing them in. Have a decent conversation on how we work together on it and come up with some actual solutions rather than making it law. You tie your hands to some things when you make a bill; you have to do it this way instead of letting people try to figure out how they could do it.

I'll leave it at that on the amendment. That's why I'd be supporting it. I think that until it gets rolled out and actually talked about with other people, it needs to be shelved for a while.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We have 29(2)(a). Anyone wishing to speak to this hon. member?

Seeing none, I would ask: are there any other members who would like to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the chance to rise and talk in favour of the motion. The hon. Member for Airdrie has moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill will severely undermine local autonomy and that further input is necessary from the public, municipal officials, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

I'm in favour of the amendment, a good amendment. Consultation is important any time. I actually think the Premier ran for the PC leadership on increasing the level of consultation – consultation from all Albertans, consultation from our municipality reps, involvement from the opposition – and ran on some other ideas, too, for making this House more effective, with more time for bills, more time for amendments from the opposition, more time to take a long, hard look at these things. Life is full of unintended consequences, full of broader implications, and I think that nothing is more true of that than legislation – of course, I'm very, very pleased to hear that there are 4 million Albertans right now – an implication that could not only affect all 4 million of us but future generations for years and years to come.

I'm a bit surprised by the notes that our excellent research team has prepared. What I'm understanding is that we're back to the top-down, government knows best: we're going to impose these regulations because we're in a hurry or because we need to get it a certain way or our way. Our researchers have pointed out that if we look back 19 years, to a time when major changes were last made to the Municipal Government Act, the intent at the time was to emphasize the jurisdictional autonomy of municipalities, totally the opposite of what it appears that we're doing now, and to increase their freedom to operate. This created a legislative framework where elected local officials actually had the power to make decisions in the best interests of residents and in turn be accountable for those decisions to those residents.

As the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre pointed out, many, many hard-working municipal officials, hard-working municipal employees are responsible for so many of the basic daily things that make it so our lives can function, make it so we can get our kids to school, make it so our businesses can prosper and provide wealth and jobs and all those things, things that we need for daily life to make Alberta strong, to make Alberta better. The Associate Minister of Finance mentioned that: oh, it's not like 1970 because we're 4 million people now, and it's growing. Well, like the pants around the world story, I don't think people have changed. I think people, in 1970 or now, want to be involved, want to have local autonomy, want to have their local reps have their opportunity. They don't want top-down government.

It's interesting. Medicine Hat: 61,000 people, brand new mayor, a very, very capable man with two terms on council. Redcliff: seven, eight miles away from us, brand new mayor, a very capable man. I wonder what they think of this legislation. I wonder if they've seen it. I wonder if they've had the chance to consult. I wonder if they've had the chance to put their feedback into it. Both jurisdictions have several new council people, and I wonder if a day, day and a half is enough for them. I would say that the same is true for Bow Island and Foremost and Forty Mile county and Cypress county. The hon. Member for Little Bow I think said 35 per cent turnover.

Mr. Donovan: Ballpark.

Mr. Barnes: Ballpark?

Mr. Donovan: The minister would know, but yes.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Well, Little Bow, I think that's very accurate for the six or seven municipalities in my district. It's approximately 35 per cent turnover. In Cypress county we have a brand new 25-year-old. He looks like a very sharp young man. I wonder what his thoughts will be on this.

The consultation thing is interesting. Why it's so important to go back and give a sober second thought to the hon. Member for Airdrie's amendment: to get these people involved. The Premier, when she wanted to be Premier, when she wanted to be the PC leader, said that she was going to do this. Is part of the reasoning behind this to align the regions with the land stewardship plans, this proposed draconian bill and the measures it takes with the $10,000 fine or imprisonment for a year for refusing? My goodness. If it was just a mirror change, why in the world wouldn't we take that out? I understand several municipalities have hired lobbyists to help with other issues, and here we are in a situation where if we are aligning regions with the land stewardship plan, here we go again.

I want to talk a little bit about the difference in consultation. Keith Wilson and other independent people went very much around the south prior to the last election, and I'm going to guess that his crowds were somewhere in the vicinity of 250. If we compare that to the consultation that I've seen when the Progressive Conservative government arrives in Cypress-Medicine Hat – I think you guys know how big your crowds were. I think we can just say that there's no comparison in the level of consultation, in the difference in the numbers that independent people who, again, as the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre pointed out, put parts of the law on the wall and clearly say what it says, the difference in the number of people it got out, the difference in the impact it had on the crowd.

I guess as maybe a last thought, during the last election and at a lot of these town hall meetings – I had several myself in the nomination process for the Wildrose and during the campaign – many, many rural people would come to me, and they would say things like: "Drew, with these property rights, this ranch, this is my sixth generation. How are we going to help the people in the cities understand how important property rights are to us? How are we going to help people in the city understand the importance of property rights? How are they going to understand that this will affect them, too?" Guys, I'm thinking that's Bill 28.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Before we go to 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development has requested unanimous consent to revert to introductions.

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and to the Assembly as well. Tonight it's a real pleasure. Joining us in the members' gallery, we have a number of members representing the Potato Growers of Alberta. We had the opportunity to meet with some of the folks from Chops and Crops earlier this evening. I want to thank you for joining us in the Assembly. We have with us John Bareman, Jeremy Carter, Rob Van Roessel, Jake Schutter, Louis Ypma, Wayne Groot, and Albert Ypma. If you'd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 28

Modernizing Regional Governance Act

The Acting Speaker: Now we'll revert to 29(2)(a) with the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Is there someone who would like to comment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. To the member. Consulting with every community out there can be difficult, Madam Speaker, obviously. So two of the organizations that we have in place in this province, of course, that have the research capacity and the contacts and so forth to kind of suss out these bills and take a look at them and pick them apart and so forth to make sure that they're good for their membership are the AAMD and C and AUMA. Do you think it would have been a good idea for this minister to perhaps have consulted those groups on this bill to see if there was anything that they found alarming – I don't know – say, prior to introducing it?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you for the question, hon. Member for Airdrie. Absolutely, it would have been a fantastic idea, and I understand there are conventions coming up. I understand that the hon. minister wouldn't have had to wait more than 17 or 18 days, and he could have talked to all of them or most of them, again, especially these newer individuals. It's so nice, Madam Speaker, to see a lot of these new people get involved in the process and put their names forward to be councillors or mayors or whatever. It's rewarding to see that a lot of them were successful, and I trust that a lot of them enjoyed the process, but part of the process is being involved in what's going on, being part of Alberta, having control over your destiny, having control over your economy, having control over your property rights.

Thank you for the question.

Mr. Anderson: So I don't get it. Do you think that if you had the conferences, the conventions, coming right up in the next couple of weeks and we still have the sitting left after those conventions, wouldn't it have made more sense just to – I don't know – talk to the AAMD and C and AUMA prior to that and then let them have the bill in draft form, a draft of it, or the main . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Continue. The Member for Airdrie has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: You're a good example to us all, deputy whip. You are.

Wouldn't it be a good idea to allow them to have the information of what they were considering beforehand and then, during the conference, talk to the AUMA and the AAMD and C about the bill? Wouldn't that make a little more sense? Then they could have given feedback, and then they could have come back to the Leg. with a bill that had feedback and consultation with, at the very least, those two large and well-respected organizations in Alberta. Do you think that might have been a good idea?

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. That sounds like a great idea. Or perhaps a great big sign right at the front door when they come in saying, "Brought to you by the Premier of Alberta," with all these rules, would have been a better way to do it. Of course, we could have maybe paid a teacher or something for that instead. I don't know.

You know, I'm back to my very, very first point. When the Premier wanted to be Premier, she said that she was going to do it differently: she was going to consult, she was going to listen to the opposition, she was going to have more time on these laws. I mean, I don't see that happening.

You know, I guess it's one thing to leave us out. We have researchers; we're all working hard at it. But a lot of these councillors end up being involved in this part of the process as future MLAs. A lot of these guys have great backgrounds, and we're leaving a lot of their brainpower on the table without using it. I don't know. This is a very expensive process not to make it as best as we can, in my opinion. I'm thinking that in the two conferences, was there 347 municipalities? Most of them would be there. It would be a great way, a great chance to talk to them all. You know, from reeves to mayors to councilmen maybe there's one more good idea out there.

Mr. Anderson: Are you saying that there's something other than the brainpower of this minister in the province? Seriously? Hon. member, that's just unacceptable.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wasn't going to speak to this because, of course, we're approaching midnight. Anyway, sorry, but I can't help myself. I've got a little bit of background in all of this, too, having spent most of the last 15 years of my life in municipal politics and certainly 10 of it with the Calgary Regional Partnership. So I understand some of this, what's going on.

There are a couple of things I do not understand at all. That's the shock that people seem to have that the province has authority over municipalities. There seems to be some righteous indignation that the province actually has authority over municipalities, but the truth is that that's the case. That's the way it has always been. There's nothing new here. I spent a great deal of my time during those years in municipal politics buried in the Municipal Government Act because in our municipality we had particular challenges, and we had to push the Municipal Government Act and, in fact, find places that we could allow the things we needed to do within the latitude that was given to us by that act. So I fully understand and everyone in this room should fully understand that as a municipality you work within the act.

That said, commissions are there. They have been there. This is just a commission of a different name, and that's the end of the story. Nobody went randomly across the province and said, "By the way, you have to have a waste management commission," but we formed a waste management commission collectively with our neighbours. Nobody said that we had to get together as municipalities and form a regional transportation commission, which was the first one developed in the province. Thank God we didn't have to consult with every other municipality in the province to find out if it was okay to do something the first time. We did it, and it's working great. So commissions are there. They've always been there.

The ability of the minister to do everything that he's suggesting or that everyone seems to be shocked that they have the right to do within this act is already there. No one's going to force a county somewhere to join into this. That's not what this is about. But if the county wants to get together with their neighbours and with their urban neighbours and form a growth management commission because they have specific issues that they need to deal with on their own terms, this gives them the latitude to do it. This is good news.

This is not something that we've had the ability to do before, apart from going individually to the minister and begging him to create regulations that allow us to do something. This is an enabling piece of legislation that allows municipalities from one side of this province to the other to get together and plan their futures and deal with their own particular issues on their own particular ground. If that's taking away somebody's rights, then I'm missing the picture in this, and I must have missed the last decade or so of my life. This is good news. There's nothing in this but good news.

I'm not saying that the structure of the Capital Region Board is perfect. I don't know because I don't know enough detail about their circumstance. I can tell you with all honesty that the Calgary Regional Partnership's plan is as good as they can get it collaboratively. Is it perfect? No. Are they still working with their neighbours to try to bring them into a collaborative process? Absolutely. So no one is forcing this on Calgary. Nobody is forcing this on a municipality.

This is a piece of legislation that allows you to plan your future. I understand that the opposition is paranoid about planning. I understand that. I understand they're paranoid about regional planning because, God knows, we wouldn't want to know what our future looked like. Why would we want to do that? Let's just leave it random like it's been. You know, 1950 was a good year. Actually, it was '51. Sorry; I digressed.

To the point, Madam Speaker, this is a piece of good-news legislation. It has every opportunity to allow us to move forward as a province, as municipalities. As far as going out and running this by every municipality in the country, well, they're already familiar. Anybody that is in the municipal world is familiar with commissions, knows what this is about. There's nothing to consult on here.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Hon. member, you said that no one would ever use this to force people to remain or stay in or bring them into a regional plan. I'm just reading an article out of the St. Albert Gazette of July 12, 2013, which is reporting, of course, as you probably well know, that the town of Redwater has asked the province to leave the Capital Region Board, and then the Capital Region Board got together and voted to not allow Redwater to leave the board. Now, I'm understanding that that's still in your office, that you're still considering that or you've ruled on that. I'm not sure. Maybe you could update us. Would that be an example of a municipality being able to voluntarily leave these regional boards? That seems like they don't really have the choice unless the minister says yes or no to that.

Mr. Casey: To be honest, I don't know the details of the Capital Region Board. Like I said earlier, I don't know the details around that, but what this legislation allows you to do is to build structure around that. So if you decide that you can't leave, well, then that's the structure you've decided as a party when you set it up. It's no different than a waste management commission. We set up a commission; you're in. You don't get to just walk out the door because you'd commit. That's the structure. Each one in the case of a commission is set up by bylaw. You set up your bylaws, you set up your regulations around it, and you live within it. If that's what the Capital Region Board's bylaws or regulations say, well, live with it. You signed in. You're part of it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the member's background in municipal politics. I've also spent a couple of years on that side of the floor. The intermunicipal development plans, which a lot of places have – when I was on county council in Vulcan for 16 years, we had one with other adjoining municipalities, whether it be the town, the villages, or other MDs beside us. I guess I'd ask your thoughts. Do you think those don't work? I got confused there.

Mr. Casey: I think that intermunicipal plans are a great part of any planning exercise. They can form an early foundation for something. If you want to form a regional growth management board, intermunicipal development plans are the foundational building block for that.

The one problem we have in the province is that you have two neighbours over here that have an intermunicipal development plan, and then you've got other neighbours over here that don't because there's no legislation that requires you to have intermunicipal development plans. It says that you may develop. If I had a magic wand and I could wave it, I would say that if you actually required intermunicipal development plans, that would help us overall in the province to plan our province better. It doesn't negate the fact that by having a series of municipalities that have intermunicipal development plans, they can't come together. They've already got the foundational building blocks on which to build a regional plan that suits their particular circumstance, that deals with their issues, whether it's water or housing or industry. Whatever it is, it allows them to collectively do what they can't likely do individually. Good news.

Mr. Anderson: So there were municipalities prior to the formation of the Capital Region Board, of course, that couldn't get along and didn't want to be part of what was being proposed, so they were forced to come together. Now at least one member can't get out without the approval of the minister. How is that okay in that sense, but then how does that jibe with your saying that the municipalities in and around Calgary, if this was forced on them, would have the ability to leave of their own volition?

It seems to me that with the Capital Region Board plan that's not what's going on. It seems to me that member municipalities can't just leave. It just seems to me that we're just kind of setting this up. We've done it in Edmonton. If they can't get along in the Calgary region, if they can't agree to a voting structure or whatever or density requirements, et cetera, we're just going to force them to work together, and then they're going to have to get the minister's permission to leave. Are you saying that that won't happen in this case? I'd feel good if you did. Is that what you're saying? Maybe the minister can answer that when he has a chance.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to RA1? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to take a little slash at this if I could. First of all, I'd like to say that I'm glad that the Member for Airdrie was so adamantly opposed to this and was going to bring this amendment through to not allow the second reading of this. It's based upon a great argument, where he believes it will severely undermine local autonomy, and we need further input from public officials, AUMA, and AAMD and C. It seems like an automatic idea that should have been done in the first place, and obviously from what we're hearing today, it has not.

I'd just like to take a few minutes to go back in time if I could. There's been a lot of great information shared here today, and I'm going to share a little bit of mine with you again if I could. If we look back to the planning system of the '80s and '90s, we had regional planning. We had a Calgary regional planning board. I'll focus on Calgary because that's the area that I'm most familiar with. We had an awful lot of conflict in those days. We had areas in the transitional zones outside of Calgary that had an awful lot of development, and we had a lot of businesses wishing to move there. We wanted to have growth. We tried to work with our neighbours to the north in the city, and we established a greenbelt around the area of Calgary that stretched out for many miles. In that greenbelt area we had the opportunity to have discussions with our neighbours. But unfortunately with the regional plan, they had the Calgary regional planning board; it was weighted such that they had the largest amount of power. Obviously, therefore, we had an awful lot of difficulties in getting any of our developments pushed through because as often as not the city wanted to control the land outside their boundaries. They essentially wanted to freeze all the lands for their future needs and, therefore, perhaps drive a wedge into negotiations for annexation. This did not work.

In the early '90s the Municipal Government Act was revised, and regional planning and the Calgary regional planning board were thrown out and for a valid reason, because it was a stumbling block for individual municipalities to have local autonomy, to be able to make their own decisions. Since 1997 and up until just recently municipalities have had that autonomy. They've been able to make their own decisions, other than the capital region, which I can't speak to as well, and it has worked fairly well. There have been intermunicipal committees that have been set up between most municipalities, and they have been able to grow and work together, design roads, talk about regional water systems, et cetera, with absolutely, most of all, a great understanding of what each other needs. It's done quite well.

Could it have been tweaked a little bit? Sure, as everything can be tweaked a little bit more and improved as we go along. That's what legislation is all about, and that's what an amendment is about, like we're dealing with right now. But we also have an appeal process and a Municipal Government Board that works with that and an arbitration process, and if it still falls down, we have the Court of Queen's Bench. This system has worked reasonably well, as I've said, and it is something that has always included a lot of consultation, and it's included a lot of collaboration and some very good development, if you ask me, around the two major cities, from what I can see.

During that time, too, we had the cities try to understand how they could grow out – they were massively being accused of urban sprawl – and they decided that this was something they couldn't negotiate between each other. They thought that perhaps they needed a heavier hand. When they started complaining to the provincial government – and this is my experience – at the same time there were a lot of environmental issues going on in the province. So the Calgary Regional Partnership was formed, and in the Calgary area 17 members decided that it would be good to talk about how we could all co-operate better.

But there was opposition to this because part of the Calgary Regional Partnership's policies included an awful lot of problems where the major city was going to be trying to impose areas that could not be developed unless they were developed at a very high density. It also included an awful lot of information pertaining to how the governance rules would be set up, and that veto vote was included in that whole system. Obviously, there was a lot of opposition by certain municipalities to that. Most specifically, the rural municipalities were very concerned because, of course, the city wanted to use the rural municipalities as a land bank. They wanted to impose huge areas called blue blobs, and I had a large number of people, including the current Minister of Infrastructure, arguing with me on a municipal committee about that very topic.

Anyway, to go further, there were a lot of open houses, and there were a lot of public meetings about that. Municipalities put out warnings to the residents that this was going to be a problem. Hundreds of people attended many of these open houses, and there was a real roar over these land sterilizations and the governance model. But they did not include at that time nor did they ever mention that they were going to be creating a board that was going to be controlling everyone and forcing everyone. It was a voluntary thing. In that regard, because of all of these situations, four rural municipalities bowed out because they immediately saw problems, including, by the way – isn't it interesting? – the MD of Bighorn, where Banff-Cochrane happens to be located. They didn't want to be part of that. They were a little worried.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Stier: Yes. It was interesting. It also included the MD of Foothills, the MD of Rocky View, and the MD of Wheatland, but the MD of Bighorn bowed out almost immediately. They were really worried about returning to regional planning.

Anyway, after that, of course, we had the land-use framework, and the previous Member for Foothills-Rockyview was a big proponent of that. He was going to divide the area into seven regions and go to regional plans, basing them on watersheds, and he talked about how – and they eventually implemented the changes to the Municipal Government Act so that the compliance would be there under section 570. These compliance rules more or less said that municipalities, once the regional plan was in effect, would have to comply. So those rules are already there, and we have them in the MGA today.

Most recently we have the draft for the South Saskatchewan plan now upon us in the area. Again, in none of these documents, whether it be the land-use framework or the South Saskatchewan regional plan or the regional advisory council's recommendations to the government for the South Saskatchewan regional plan, was there any mention of a new growth management board. It was never there. It wasn't put in there. So no one was ever aware of it.

It seems that the introduction of this bill is totally inconsistent, therefore, with the whole system that has been put in place over the past five or six years. Why is this going on?

Think, too, though, that at the same time we have the Calgary Regional Partnership and an awful lot of arguing between the three remaining rural municipalities that don't want to agree with the regional planning concept that the Calgary Regional Partnership has been presented in the Calgary metropolitan plan. Think, too, how it's been said by some that the city of Calgary has wished and hoped that the current government would impose their participation in this plan and require them to join this plan. Perhaps, therefore, one can understand why this bill comes up, Bill 28, to give someone the authority should the Calgary Regional Partnership become one of these boards to then impose their wishes on these folks that don't want to be in this plan. It seems to me that this is a logical way, if this is put together, that the minister could do that because it has been passed as legislation.

I think that because these various municipalities involved in this ongoing dispute over the past few years want to settle this once and for all, he's found himself, perhaps, a tool that he can use, and he wants us to join in and impose this on those people through this legislation. I don't think it's right. They have not been consulted. The AAMD and C has not been consulted. In fact, they wrote a report two years ago. I believe it was in 2011. Regional collaboration. Forced regional collaboration, in fact. They're dead against it, and here we are looking at it now.

Madam Speaker, I'm wanting to support this motion. I think that this has to be done in this fashion. We have to suspend reading this for a second time, and then we have to take the time to go out there and get the consultations done with these other people like the municipal parties that I've mentioned, whether they be the local councils, rural, the towns, the cities, the villages, the councils from there. We need to get the input from the AUMA, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association as well.

So I support this. I'm very much in favour of this motion. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to ask the member. I think some people think that if somebody is not in favour of this bill that they're somehow against voluntary regional co-operation as opposed to forced regional government. I was wondering if he could explain the difference between voluntary regional co-operation and forced regional government. Is there any difference between the two, and which one do you support?

Mr. Stier: Thank you, hon. member, for the question. It's a good one. Over the years I've participated throughout southern Alberta in various co-operative meetings and associations, including the Foothills-Little Bow association, which I've seen many members here attend as well. There has been a history in southern Alberta for many, many years of regional co-operation, regional collaboration, even with the city of Calgary, and it has worked, I think, in a very good way. Certainly, I have said that it could be tweaked, but I think we've all thought of regional planning over the years. We've all thought about how we could do things better, but certainly it has always been from a voluntary situation that's been well addressed in our intermunicipal meetings and our regional meetings that we've already had. If there's one thing to say, it's that I'm always proud to see some of the developments we see as we drive along our major highways and how nice they look.

These transition areas out of large urban centres are just that. They are transition areas. It's normal for every city. Whether you go through the States or out to eastern Canada, you see this kind of thing happening all of the time. Density does start to happen. The population does grow. It's a normal set of circumstances, and I think we've done it fairly well for now. I think we can continue on that same basis. We can tweak the system that we've got without trying to impose this kind of legislation.

Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: I seem to recall back in – you know, it's funny. That side accuses this side of sometimes going back to decades ago or something like that. I know you would never do that.

Ms Calahasen: Nineteen fifty.

Mr. Anderson: The 1950s. That's right. I wasn't born in the 1950s. Many of you were, but I wasn't there, so I can't speak to that.

But what I would like to ask is that back in the 1970s there were municipal regional planning commissions. Why do you think we're going back to that model when, clearly, it didn't work out too well? That forced regional co-operation as opposed to voluntary regional co-operation: any thoughts on that?

Mr. Stier: Thank you for the question, member. I think that what we've seen in this government over the years is a cyclic type of symptom that they seem to have of going back in time and looking again at things that they used to do and thinking: "Well, this isn't working. Maybe we'll go back and try it again. It didn't work back in the '80s and '90s, but we're going to try that again because we need to try to find an answer to these wars we're currently having. Perhaps we'll fire that thing up again and let everybody try it again and see if that's going to work."

Maybe they're going to look at other parts of our legislative process that haven't worked before. Maybe they're going to start changing, perhaps like they are in the example of education, where they got rid of the school boards, and now they're looking that maybe they're going to have to get some better types of control there. We're always talking about returning to local control and local autonomy. Maybe they're going to go back to that, hopefully.

Maybe they're going to be looking at the health system, for goodness sake. Maybe they're going to figure out some answers to the rural ambulance situation that, by the way, a few years ago, '04-05, used to work pretty good. We had good rural ambulance systems then. We didn't have a lot of problems with whole areas being without coverage because some ambulance was going somewhere else on a minor transfer problem.

Now they're going back to all of these mistakes of the past. I think this could be a symptom of the government, and I think we need to get that fixed.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak? I would like to call the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to get up and speak to this motion. I'd like to begin by talking a little bit about the claim of the minister that this is simply "a mirror image" of the capital regional plan and that it is, in fact, based on the Radke report, that was used to form the Capital Region Board. He said, "I can once again say that the Doug Radke-led report that formed the Capital Region Board to begin with created this regulation. What we're talking about now is an exact mirror image." But it's not an exact mirror image, and there are a number of different things.

Now, in the Radke report I would submit that he rejects the approach that has been established by this piece of legislation. Specifically it says – and I'll quote at some length here – in a section called Top Down Planning:

A second governance model is one proposed by the City of Edmonton which would have the Province do the detailed planning for all the major facets of land use control and other matters affecting the region. The Province would simply hand the completed plan over to a board to "implement", leaving member municipalities with little or no influence over what is contained in the plan. This proposal suggests a straight "double majority" form of voting to make decisions, although it is again unclear why a voting structure would be required [at all] when all meaningful decision making would be the responsibility of the Province.

It goes on to say:

This approach goes too far in removing the ability of member municipalities to influence and affect their own destiny. While the preservation of complete local authority and autonomy at all costs is inappropriate for the good of the entire region, local circumstances deserve recognition in the decision-making process. The transfer of most planning and decision-making responsibility to the Province, including decisions that will affect the City of Edmonton, implies that the City does not believe that working with its regional partners, in the absence of provincial direction, will lead to effective decisions. It also assumes the Province is better equipped to make local decisions than locally elected officials, which seems unsupportable in the light of the philosophy of the Municipal Government Act.

Now, Madam Speaker, I will make a suggestion that this approach of top-down planning that I've just read from the Radke report itself is in fact encompassed in Bill 28, and at the very least there's a very strong potential for this approach to be incorporated into the existing Bill 28.

Going a little further, I think there are some significant differences between the regional plan regulation and what's contained in this proposed piece of legislation. For example, currently under the Capital Region Board the municipalities will choose their own representatives from amongst elected councillors. In the legislation with a growth management board the cabinet may deal with the appointment of persons to represent the participating municipalities. Not only that, but cabinet may also appoint nonvoting members to represent the public or other interests in the growth region.

With the Capital Region Board, the board elects its own chair. In this legislation the cabinet may appoint the chair.

In the Capital Region Board regulation they can advise and make recommendations to the minister regarding the capital region growth plan. In the legislation the cabinet may determine the objectives, contents, timelines, forms, and effect of a growth plan, and cabinet may also address or do "any other matter or thing."

Under the Capital Region Board regulation the annual report is submitted to the minister and must be tabled in the Assembly. Under this act there is an annual report to the minister but no requirement to table it in the Assembly.

The Capital Region Board regulation outlines four components that must be included in any capital region growth plan: one, a regional land-use plan, including environmental policies and density of development; two, a regional intermunicipal transit network plan, including provision of services for persons with disabilities; three, co-ordination of mapping information; and four, a plan for social and affordable housing. In the act the cabinet may determine the objectives, contents, timelines, form, and effect of any growth plan, with no specifics as to what that has to include.

Finally, the Capital Region Board regulation contains a complaints resolution process. The act gives the minister the power. He may make a complaints resolution process by regulation.

Madam Speaker, there are significant differences. It is not a mirror image unless it's one of those kinds of funny mirrors that you get at the fair – right? – where you stand and you're short or you're wide. That's the kind of mirror image that this piece of legislation actually is.

Now, what's the problem? Obviously, there are growth pressures and conflicts between municipalities that have abutted each other in, particularly, the Edmonton region but also in a growing way in the Calgary region, and there may be some other ones. Those need to be addressed. But you would think that they need to be addressed more directly than by a piece of legislation that doesn't identify the specific issues or areas that need some resolution but, rather, gives broad powers to the minister to establish growth boards and to constrain the exercise of municipal autonomy.

Now, one of the hon. members that was speaking – and I'm sorry. I forget his constituency.

The Acting Speaker: Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Mason: Banff-Cochrane was speaking, and he said that people get offended that provinces have authority over municipalities. I want to digress a little bit about that, Madam Speaker, because I've just met with the directors of the AAMD and C and will be attending the AUMA conference. I certainly as a municipal councillor in Edmonton participated in the AUMA and served for a number of years on the board of directors of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, including chairing a committee, a task force, on the role of municipal governments.

Now, it's true under the Constitution that municipalities fall under provincial jurisdiction, but there is a strong move on the part of municipalities across the country for greater autonomy and recognition of municipalities as an order of government and that they not be treated as children of the province, that they actually be treated with respect and as much as possible as equals.

It's this sort of spirit that is driving, I think, the demand for the big cities to have charters that will give them that autonomy and will insulate them from arbitrary actions of the provincial government. That's something that I've supported since I've been a municipal politician, a municipal councillor for four terms, and something that I continue to support today. We need to give more autonomy and independence to our municipal governments, not less.

Now, this particular piece of legislation provides ample opportunity for any government to take that away, to interfere in it to a lesser degree or to an enormous degree, and the assurances that we get from the minister and from the government of, "Oh, that's not our intention" are cold comfort, quite frankly. They trust themselves a lot more than we trust them, and I think they trust themselves a lot more than many municipal governments do. It's not power that I am comfortable handing over to the government. Why? Well, Madam Speaker, I've seen in my time here that the government, when it runs up against obstacles, including the exercise of democratic governance, against its plans for the province and its plans for growth can be quite heavy handed in overriding those sorts of decisions.

I'm speaking now about the power line debacle with the Energy Resources Conservation Board. Well, they were spying on people, and it resulted in their whole decision-making process being overturned by the courts. The response of the province was to bring in Bill 19, Bill 36, and Bill 50, that gave the cabinet the power to override the regulatory decisions and override the rights of individual landowners and other affected individuals as well as environmental groups from having serious input into whether or not the power lines in this case were necessary, whether they were the right size and the right cost, whether they were in the right place, and what purposes they might be used for. The government tabled that legislation in order to push through, over the objections of a regulatory process that was already existing in law, their plans.

I think that people that are concerned about what use this government may make of Bill 28 are very, very correctly concerned. They should be very concerned that the government will actually use some of this power despite the assurances this evening by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. It's very possible that this government may override municipalities in order to push forward its growth agenda. In other words, if a municipality doesn't want to participate in the government's plan to build Alberta the way the government wants to build Alberta, then they may find that their authority has been neutralized by the government through the use of regulation that is enabled under this act. I think that we should be very cautious in handing more power to this government to overrule elected officials.

I know that there are difficulties, and I know that the major cities of Edmonton and Calgary need to have some issues resolved with some of the surrounding municipalities, but this is in many ways using a piledriver to kill a flea. It is not restricted to resolving those particular sets of issues in those particular municipal regions of our province. Instead, it's very extensive, open ended, and gives broad power that can be exercised without restraint in almost any way within the municipal sphere, and that, I think, is why this legislation goes too far.

It brings me to my last point. We've been in contact with municipal organizations just today in the province, and there is a clear indication that, with the possible exception of Edmonton and Calgary, other municipalities and municipal organizations have not been consulted about this. This is an old story. It's getting kind of tired, I think, Madam Speaker, that the government brings in significant and often draconian legislation without any consultation with its partners. Then it turns around and uses the same old rhetoric about consultation, openness, transparency, and all of that, but in practice it's quite the opposite. This is another example of the government bringing in a significant piece of legislation without consulting municipalities.

I really do think that we should support this amendment because this particular piece of legislation is, at best, premature and most likely goes way too far, and there is not enough constraint on the power of the minister and the government contained in this legislation.

Finally, Madam Speaker, there is no preamble, there's no statement in the legislation which would define the intention of the use of this power. If it is in order to co-ordinate between municipalities and to make sure that they are all represented in the decision-making and that their autonomy and their internal democracy are respected, then the act should say so. It should say for what purpose this power exists so that we can then evaluate whether or not it's being used for the intent that it is allegedly being created for.

Those are the reasons why I don't like this piece of legislation as it now stands and why I think we should support the amendment. Frankly, Madam Speaker, this is more of the same from this government, more top-down, opaque, and closed approaches to decision-making based on just raw power.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: I'd like to ask the hon. member about the effect of this legislation on the relationship between our big municipalities, Edmonton and Calgary, which, of course, we support, and the surrounding communities, and I mean that from this perspective. It is a tricky relationship because there are sometimes different competing interests, of course. Do you think a piece of legislation like this could be interpreted by some surrounding communities, especially in the Calgary framework, as essentially a bit of, shall we say, a gun to the head in that if they don't play ball, if they don't comply with the wishes of one partner, they could be penalized, that the government is going to swoop in and impose this board on them?

Even if that's not the case at all and the city, the city of Calgary in that example, has any interest in doing that, don't you think that having this out there is only going to create divisiveness as opposed to if you left it voluntary and they came together and good things are happening on a voluntary basis? Wouldn't that be a better way to encourage them to work together rather than holding this thing over their head and kind of causing those surrounding municipalities, whether it's rational or irrational or founded or unfounded, to fear their larger neighbours?

Mr. Mason: Well, I don't take exactly that perspective, hon. member. I think that with respect to growth where a major city is surrounded by other urban municipalities, there needs to be some resolution, and it may in fact require the government to play a role in pushing the municipalities towards some sort of agreement. My problem is that it's not limited to that. There's no defined reason for this legislation that's actually in the legislation, just what the minister says, and it can be used anywhere.

My fear is that it will be hijacked. It's being brought in and being sold as being a way to try and resolve some of the metropolitan, urban development issues that are taking place in the two largest cities, but it can be used to support the government's growth agenda, to stop municipalities from interfering with industrial development, with power lines, with nuclear plants, with, you know, whatever it is. I see it as very much a companion piece to bills 19, 36, and 50. It's the same sort of approach, and it's that open-ended power that I think is of concern.

I don't take the same view, perhaps, that you do, hon. member, about just giving complete autonomy to smaller surrounding municipalities so that they can resist any kind of change that they don't like. I think the government does have a role in supporting all municipalities to come to an agreement that supports the orderly growth of the large cities, so that might be a difference. But it's the other uses to which this could be put that – you know the old saying: power tends to corrupt; absolute power corrupts absolutely.

There's one minute left in 29(2)(a).

Seeing no others, I would recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have listened intently to much of the debate that has gone on here tonight and really have felt it quite useful, hearing from many members who have served on city councils and municipal councils and hearing their perspective on planning and how relationships work with regional planning boards as well as with the province to come to, I guess, an understanding of what is going on in this bill, and I've been appreciative of everyone's comments to this point.

I've come to accept the members of the fourth party's characterization, when they went through the legislation and compared what the old regulation was trying to do and the powers it limited the government to as well as the new powers that are being subscribed in this bill. To me, the arguments presented made sense. That this is a far-reaching, for lack of a better term, power grab that the province can use to influence a whole bunch of situations going on throughout the province, whether that be in Calgary, whether that be in Edmonton, whether that be otherwise, to influence the planning process and the relationships as they currently exist is to me quite clear.

It is being brought in under the guise of dealing with a certain incident coming out of the Capital Region Board and the like, but it has far-reaching effects on many of our land-use framework agreements, on our regional partnership agreements, on actual civic planning departments throughout this province. That rings true to me, and I believe we should be highly concerned about what this bill is trying to do.

There is no doubt – it's common knowledge – that there is a great deal of frustration by members of the Capital Region Board and, in fact, members of the Calgary Regional Partnership and that negotiations have stalled in many cases in this respect. I don't think it's a secret either that many people would like to see these issues resolved and would like to see a consensus emerge one way or another as to what those regions are going to go forward with, what plans they're going to make, and there may be disparate groups on these boards who may be holding back plans. I am not a member of those boards, but at least I hear enough rumours and innuendo and talk from people to understand that that is happening. I believe that the minister probably, if you asked him point-blank, without reporters around and the like, would admit that it's become quite frustrating to him and that it's probably holding back the process of what needs to be done.

I, too, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, believe that the province may have a role to play in assisting the parties to come to a consensus of what their regional planning boards must do, and given that, this current bill is attempting to achieve just that without saying what it's doing, okay? In my view this bill, if passed in its current form, will allow the minister to take part in building a consensus, something that I do not necessarily disagree with. I believe it has to happen. I believe that negotiations have stalled in many places. It is imperative for the government, probably, to play a role in this process.

With that being said, it should be laid out clearly in the legislation that that is the purpose of this bill, that that is what we are trying to do here. That, to me, is not evident by the powers the minister is asking for, the way we're going about asking for it, and the like. In my view, if there was a suggestion of having a preamble for it, a suggestion around moving our regional planning boards to be somewhat different than they are now, somewhat more reflective of the population needs of the entire jurisdiction, or some set formula, I believe that would be more open and transparent.

I believe we're going down this path that's going to allow us to do top-down planning in virtually any circumstance where the government, the cabinet feels free to do so instead of outlining clearly what you're going to do in your legislation or putting fences around it, i.e. putting fences around how you're going to bring about consensus on these regional planning boards. I think that would be more fair, more honest, and probably accomplish the task, at least with a clearer understanding of what the goals of the legislation are.

That to me has rung down as what this legislation is trying to do. The minister would like to see the in-fighting at the boards stop, some regional consensus or ability to form regional consensus be at his disposal, and he should be doing it in a more transparent fashion than what is dressed up in this bill if that is his goal. I started by saying: I think that is his goal.

That's the conclusion I'm at, so I will support this amendment given that it is time to sort of have an open, honest debate of what we're trying to achieve in this legislation. The minister is not going to get consensus on this. People are going to scream bloody murder in certain jurisdictions, that this is the worst thing in the world, okay? But at the same point in time if he believes that this is truly a better direction for planning in this province and that he's going to get buy-in from enough jurisdictions that it makes sense in the long run, we should try to go down that path first. I'll be voting for the amendment.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. My question is simply this. I mean, you know, we both have ridings in large cities. I can be quite easily convinced of the value that some of the planning disasters that have been occurring over the course of the last couple of decades at least, but certainly the last 10 years, arise in part from the inability of municipalities to come together, that that issue does need to be addressed. There are a lot of unfortunate decisions that are emanating from the inability of those conflicts to be properly addressed. So I agree with that.

But I guess my concern is, you know, that we have a government that has been observed on occasion to assert its power in ways that are less functional. We actually have that history as it relates to this government's relationship with municipal politicians and municipalities across the province, particularly leading up to the last election. We had quite a bit of new information pop out around this government's relationship with municipalities. Say, for instance, a particular municipality or particular municipal leaders chose to speak out publicly against a public policy or policy direction of the provincial government that related to, say, industry or maybe nuclear development or, you know, a whole bunch of different possibilities.

Mr. Mason: Social policy.

Ms Notley: Social policy even, you know. Maybe they spoke out against the closure of their postsecondary institution or the significant limitation or attack on their postsecondary institution, for instance. Is there anything in this legislation that would restrict the minister from using the broad power that exists in it right now, as far as you can tell, from saying: "You know what? I think we might need to impose a growth board in your area if we don't get some more co-operation from you guys on a regular basis." Do you see any limit on that capacity in the legislation as it's currently written?

Mr. Hehr: The member poses a question that leads me down a garden path. The thing is that I don't see any limits prescribed to what the minister can use this power for or the various scenarios or things that could be utilized by this power that we're placing in his hands and in the hands of cabinet. When that happens, we all know that although that may not be – and I doubt it is – the current intention of the government to use this particular piece of legislation in that fashion; nevertheless, it's on the books for a few years. A certain situation comes up: "Hey, don't we have the ability to do this? Of course, there it is."

That's why I think some of the suggestions about taking this in a more open and transparent fashion to what the true aims are, trying to have the province play a role in the consensus building to move regions along when they're at an impasse would be better. We could set out a framework in the preamble and certain various consultation processes, when they need to appoint ministers or people to the board in all these certain instances that were outlined in the hon. member's speech, a whole layer of transparency to it and process to it that will ensure the regions had every opportunity to contribute prior to the province laying the hammer down.

That, to me, would be the wise move and best in the long run for how this system is going to evolve. I think it would probably be the fair way to do it because as it's written right now, it can lead to a whole host of circumstances and events that this legislation can be used for that may not even be contemplated at this time.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: How much time?

The Acting Speaker: Eighteen seconds.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Well, I'll be quick. We've seen this government use its power to bully people that have disagreed with it publicly. We've seen, for example, the former Education minister Lyle Oberg send in the auditors when the public school board in Edmonton objected to the cuts. We've seen the minister . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak to RA1? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak in favour of this amendment. Before I make some comments on that, though – I wish the Member for Banff-Cochrane was still here because I didn't get a chance to ask him a couple of questions that I think would have been pertinent under 29(2)(a). He was, rightly so, proud of his waste commission, that was formed. I wanted to ask the member: how many municipalities were initially interested in that, and how many eventually signed on to it? If there was a difference, I wonder why that difference was. But I think it's important to note that that was strictly voluntary participation amongst municipalities. That, I would strongly suspect, is the reason for its success. I just wanted to make that point.

To go back to the amendment itself, I think what comes to mind is an old saying: when you're riding a dead horse, it's best just to get off it and walk for a bit. I think we need to take a step back and walk into this and not ride what could be a dead horse into it.

I go back to when the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill questioned me on my earlier statements. We talked about getting people to the table for negotiations in a collaborative manner. You can drag someone to a negotiation table or a bargaining table. You can drag them there kicking and screaming, you can make them sit there, but your chances of walking out of that room with any consensus at all are about zero to zero. I doubt that you could even agree on what soup to order for dinner. Voluntary participation in these regional governance models, to me that's key. I applaud the government for trying to put a bill together to make these kinds of things happen, but you can't force it. You have to let it happen naturally.

Giving proper consultation to both of the municipal organizations I think is key here to getting buy-in, however the bill ends up being shaped, especially with our two municipal associations, who are very well respected across the province. Not giving them any say in this or any chance to consult in a proper way is just wrong.

This government has done this before with, as was mentioned before, all our property rights bills, all our land-use bills, and it came back to bite them. When I speak of consultation, I mean true consultation, sitting down at the table with them and discussing it and listening to what they're hearing. That's key. With other bills that I just mentioned, there was no proper consultation. It was information sessions. I went to them. All that happened was that your suggestions were written on a board. There was no feedback from anybody. The one that I was at, there were no fewer than three ministers and two MLAs. They never said a word the whole evening. That's not consultation. We need to sit at a table and talk this out and find a solution to this problem with this hammer type of legislation.

With that, thank you for the opportunity to speak again, and I strongly urge that we accept this amendment.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. I just wanted to finish my thought, Madam Speaker. That is: is there any risk that the government will use the broad powers in this legislation for purposes that they say that they don't intend?

I think we can look at some of the history. I was talking about the Education minister Lyle Oberg, who, when the public school board in Edmonton refused to go along with his direction and his budget, sent in the auditors in an attempt to intimidate them. Of course, they didn't find anything. More recently the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education tried the same sort of trick with the University of Alberta. Of course, let's not forget the existing Minister of Municipal Affairs, who, when the AUMA president contradicted and criticized the government, organized a boycott of their MLA breakfast by the Tory government and was only forced at the last minute to reverse that. It was a clear attempt by this current minister to intimidate a legitimate municipal official discharging her duty as her organization's policy directed.

This government has shown repeatedly that it is perfectly capable of misusing its power in order to try to force people and organizations and municipalities and school boards and universities and so on into line with what the government wants. It's not something, in my view, that we should trust this government with.

9:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others on 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. There are three minutes left.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much. I know the hon. member has some extensive municipal experience, so I just wanted to run a scenario by and get the opinion of that member. There's a group of municipalities that come together, and they want to work on a project together. It's a commission. They're working on water, waste management. They want to work on something around regional development because the population of this province is growing so fast, and they want to make sure that they're not doing industrial development by an environmentally sensitive area or beside a school or putting recreation in the wrong place. They want to work on a co-ordinated regional plan.

What venue, what tool, would they have in place to do it to make sure that once they all come together – say there's 20 of them – and want to come up with a co-ordinated plan, every single week somebody doesn't say, "Well, now I'm mad. I'm leaving. Oh, I want back in. Now I'm mad. I'm leaving," so that there's some authority there? You know, their bylaws can't impact and make other municipalities do anything. If they come together and want some sort of authority that holds them together in a partnership so that they don't get pulled back and forth by the whims of whoever is in charge that week, whoever had a bad day and decides they want to pull out, what tool would there be to help make sure that they can work on focusing on building a strong region together in partnership and not just focusing on where some municipal boundaries have been drawn? They actually deliberately want a partnership and they want some authority behind it. Where else would they go?

Mr. Rowe: I understand what the minister is saying, and it all sounds wonderful except that democratic agreement is the best policy in a democratic society. In order for it to be a true democratic process, there must be voluntary participation, not mandated decisions. That's the key. That's the key to getting reasonable people to the table. That's my answer.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there any others? [interjection]

Mr. Rowe: Excuse me. It does happen. This waste commission of the Member for Banff-Cochrane is a perfect example of it working.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there any others who wish to speak on 29(2)(a)? There are 40 seconds left.

Mr. Anglin: Forty seconds. I was going to ask the member if he would give an example of the compromise.

Mr. Rowe: Well, I just did, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.
Hon. member, we see that you're flashing the Boston Red Sox sweater. That must mean they won the championship.

Mr. Anglin: Six to one.

The Acting Speaker: Six to one. Thank you. Everybody can rest in peace.
Are there any other members who wish to speak on RA1?
Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment to second reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:54 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 28 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We're back to debate on the bill in second reading, Bill 28. Are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We'll get things sorted out here. Three-plus hours of the debate on an excellent amendment that unfortunately didn't pass by a score of 9 to 35. The Cardinals didn't win the World Series either; they lost 6 to 1. But some interesting words I heard to describe it: top-down, heavy-handed, draconian, not a mirror image, dead horse – I think that was my favourite – no limits, mandated, no trust. I heard the word "trust" used a lot.

It makes me wonder why again the government wants to look at a centralization policy. We saw the reaction to Bill 36. Jeez. We've seen the reaction to the centralization of health care, whether it's 89 VPs or 75 or 10. I read somewhere that Ford Motor Company only has 37 in the whole world, so it surprises me that AHS had 89. Centralization obviously has failed there. We look at huge, huge severance payouts. Was it $2.1 million for the five that were just let go? So it's surprising again that this government wants to go down such a path.

I spoke earlier about the amendment, and I spoke earlier about why I thought it was a good amendment and why it was a good idea to talk with some of these new council people, talk to some of the new mayors, talk to some of the established people. As some of the people have shown around the room on both sides, there's a lot of good experience right in this room that pertains to their civic experience and their municipal experience, and a lot of that could be put to use.

Then I was looking at some of the cons on this Bill 28, and perhaps it explains why we don't want to consult. I understand the AAMDC published a paper against forced regionalization. They are already unhappy with the current partnerships, and this puts power completely in the partnerships and the Minister of Municipal Affairs, so consultation may have only reinforced that. Obviously, it may have found a solution to some of these problems and found a solution to getting more and more people involved in the democratic process and building Alberta, making Alberta.

There's independence also taken away from the municipalities and put into the hands of provincial government. This bill seems to create another level of government, like we need more red tape and bureaucracy, like we need more of those situations, especially the top-down, heavy-handed, and mandated ones as opposed to the ideas we heard from people involved, grassroots, a leader leading from the bottom up instead of from the top down.

I understand there's also already an alternative dispute mechanism that exists under the MGA, so a law that has more seems to make no sense to me. A growth management board is just seen by many as another level of bureaucracy. I understand the AAMDC president, Bob Barss, said: "Municipalities have a justifiable concern when elected councils no longer have the power to govern as granted by the Municipal Government Act." Everything I've read and heard from many of my colleagues is that Bill 28 seems to do that.

The AAMDC went so far as to outline 10 principles for co-operative regionalization. Voluntary participation is number one. Number two, partners define the region. The participating municipalities determine which municipalities will be part of the regional partnership. Political autonomy: municipalities remain independent in their ability to make decisions in the best interest of their municipality. That should remain intact according to many, many of our local representatives. Nonhierarchical governance: the regional structure does not create another level of government. Voting equity is number five. Each municipality has one equal vote, I guess, regardless of the size or the population.

Consensus decision-making: major decisions that require a vote are approached on the basis of reaching a consensus. Consensus-building, again, the opposite of the words that I heard so often, no limits, draconian, heavy-handed, top-down, dead horse. User-pay cost sharing. Regional transparency: the operation and governance of the regional entity is easily observable and understood. Accountability of individual municipalities: when a municipality chooses to become a member of a regional service partnership, the individual municipality is accountable to its community for the value of that service. Opting out of the programs: we heard a lot about opting out, not opting out. It should be grassroots. One of the AAMDC board principles, their last principle, is that when a municipality is a member of a regional service partnership and the partnership addresses more than one service, each partner has the ability to opt out of one or more of the service delivery programs.

I spoke earlier about the last amendment and how I was concerned about the unintended consequences. I've heard that Bill 28 is just supposed to apply to the Capital Region, but people on both sides of the floor talked about a lot, lot broader implications than that. I felt it was important that we did consult with stakeholders, municipalities and those people, but obviously we lost that motion, so I, too, Madam Speaker, would like to propose an amendment.

The Acting Speaker: We'll pause for a moment while we distribute the paper on the amendment.

Hon. members, this will be known as a referral amendment. I think that we can go ahead and proceed.

We need you to read the amendment for us, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be amended by striking out all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

The Acting Speaker: You have another six minutes and 36 seconds if you'd like to discuss the amendment.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you again, Madam Speaker. I'm back to what I said the very, very first time, about 8 o'clock or so, and that was that when the Premier wanted to be Premier, she said that she was going to listen to the opposition, that she was going to take more time with legislation, that she was going to engage stakeholders, that it was going to be a consultative government. Well, unfortunately, based on that, we shouldn't have lost the first amendment, but we did.

Maybe this is a step that the government and the PC MLAs can accept. Of course, PC MLAs hold the majority on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, so ultimately they will have the final say. But sort of like in the federal arena, where there are continual standing committees and bills always going to them, we all have the opportunity to make the laws better for all 4 million Albertans for future generations. This would be a great chance for us to take a long, hard look at this. This would be a great opportunity for us to, you know, look at some of these bills that, again, a lot of my colleagues described with tremendously strong words: draconian and heavy handed. I presume we could even have some experts in, and we could have some of these councillors in that were unfortunately missed or bypassed and have an opportunity to hear from some of them and what some of their stakeholders have to say.

The Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship is . . .

An Hon. Member: A great standing committee.

Mr. Barnes: A great standing committee. We're in the middle of looking at the natural gas industry and what the implications are for it in the province long term. Of course, look at the unforeseen things there, and look at the amazing way that that has changed. Possibly the committee could have a chance to reflect on this bill and to make it better.

Again, you know, we took a look at so many of these things that just don't seem to be consistent in a way that engages everyday Albertans – people that raise their families here, people that live their lives here, people that pay their taxes here – in a way that makes them feel that they're part of the day-to-day operations of the province and have real input into making this better.

You know, I'm back to how this compares to and how this collides or intersects with ALSA, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. It seems to be part and parcel of how those regional plans are done and how that is all going to come. I'm back to a meeting of 160 people in the Cypress Centre in Cypress-Medicine Hat, where at the end of the day the person from Stantec, that was a moderator that day, walked to the mike and, as she had promised, said, "I'm going to listen, and I'm going to at the end of the day relate exactly what I heard." She walked to the mike, and she said: "I heard you loud and clear. Repeal Bill 36."

I mention that, again, because we spent a lot of time going around the province. We spent a lot of time talking about that. We spent a lot of time hearing how we were wrong on it. More than just the 17 of us or all the other opposition members, many, many thousands of Albertans didn't like that law. As they discovered more and more about it, they didn't like the process, the regional planning, the top-down planning. You know, there are still meetings going on today as the South Saskatchewan regional plan comes out. Between that and health care, they are easily the two top things that people call me with and say that they are very, very concerned with the government about.

I don't know. I just think I'll speak on behalf of the amendment again. Let's try to make this law as good as we can. This is a committee where the PCs have the majority. At the end of the day, you'll have final say, but it will give us the chance to sit across from each other, engage each other in a way that will make this the best for Alberta that we can.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have 29(2)(a). Are there any members who would like to comment or question, not have a speech of their own but to comment or question?

Seeing none, we'll ask if there are any members who would like to address this amendment that we have at this time. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. We think that given the concerns that we've already outlined with respect to this bill, this motion would be a good idea and that we should refer it to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2 to allow more conversations and to allow more input.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Yes, please. If I could ask the hon. member, please, who he thinks we maybe should invite to come and have an opportunity to talk to the Resource Stewardship Committee. I'd like to hear what kind of input we may expect to hear, especially from some of the smaller municipalities that are close to some of the bigger ones and maybe from some of our new councillors, who have just been elected.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: I believe the hon. member answered his own question, Madam Speaker. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Any other members under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members who would speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think this is a very worthwhile amendment to have presented here this evening. As we've talked about this tonight, I think most of us have heard from almost everyone about this, and it seems that there's an awful lot of consensus in the room, especially from the opposition side here, of course, with respect to the amount of consultation that may or may not have taken place in this process. I must say that it's surprising to me that we are dealing with something of such a vast nature, that is so important, that was just given to us yesterday. It has provided us very little time for serious study. I mean, it has vast implications.

The Municipal Government Act, as I've looked over it over the years, has got an awful lot of sections to it, and while we're not looking at all the sections in the act, the planning process in Alberta is immense, and it is detailed. It is very important to have a thorough, thorough review of these things before decisions are made, especially on some kind of legislation like this.

Earlier on this evening I mentioned a lot of history to do with the different ways we've gone about planning over the years, and it seems surprising to me that we're reverting back to some of the things that we found were just not working before. I need to drag you back through there just for a few moments if I could because this is not the first time we've tried to experience the pitfalls of regional planning.

Regional planning was something we had to drag ourselves through in the '70s, '80s, and '90s, as I've said before, and they threw it out with the new Municipal Government Act in '97. Why did we do that? Obviously, there must have been a reason, and I'm sure it had a lot to do with the failure of the Calgary regional planning board in being successful as an independent board to try to make decisions on these matters.

By sending this to the committee which was mentioned, the Resource Stewardship Committee – by the way, that's one that I serve on, and I've had the pleasure to experience how thorough we can reflect on many matters by inviting various groups and stakeholders in to provide us with the details that we certainly do need, I think, in this consideration. As we move forward with this type of a process, it also occurs to me that we have to keep in mind what's going on here. We have the Calgary Regional Partnership under question. They've been fighting for the past few years with respect to their memberships. We've had two or three municipalities, including Bighorn, who backed out earlier, as I had mentioned, and never want to be considered again, from what I can understand. I don't hear anything about them in this regard. Certainly, these things are contentious issues, and a review of this sort of thing seems well in order.

The types of boards that might come up in the future are another issue, but I'm certainly worried mostly about the Calgary partnership because they're already established. With this type of document here, this could give the minister power to impose this plan upon some of the members that may not wish to be there. That's one thing I'm really worried about.

Madam Speaker, with that, I'll conclude my remarks. I would like to say that I'm very much in favour of having this be given a very good review, and I think this idea to put it to the Resource Stewardship Committee is a good one.

Thank you very much.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no members who wish to speak, are there any other members who wish to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll be brief. I, too, will be in favour of referring this to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship for many of the reasons given thus far in debate on both the last amendment and this one.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, will try and be brief on this. I'm disappointed, obviously, that the previous motion wasn't carried. I think this is a good meeting place for the two sides. It's a very good option. It gives all parties representation on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, and it gives that committee the chance to, as the introducing member mentioned, bring people to the committee and do presentations from various groups: AUMA, AAMD and C, and so on. Let's hear their side of the story. Let's hear what their concerns are. Maybe we can use that information to address what I still think is a bill that needs a lot of work. We've heard all of the arguments in the lead-in to this, so, as I said, I won't belabour it. I won't delay this. I really strongly believe that this is a halfway point. That's what democracy is all about: getting together, coming to a consensus, and moving forward. This is a chance to do that, so I urge you to support this.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members who wish to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Speaking to the motion, the referral amendment, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in support of this amendment. I do so because with the debate that's taken place here tonight, it is clear that there is what I suppose this House would refer to as a different interpretation of facts. The reality is that there are a lot of contentious points that we disagree on.

Regardless of what is used to describe it from either side of the House, there needs to be more debate on this bill. We need to look at the various provisions and look for what we call the greatest strength of a democracy, the compromise, to find the language that these municipalities can live with.

As was stated earlier, the idea of planning commissions, regional boards is not something I've heard anyone say they wouldn't support, but to force this on municipalities in a very heavy-handed way creates a scenario that is just not acceptable to many of these communities that are directly affected and those that see where they could be affected by this. That's where it's offensive. That's where these various communities are looking at this, and they don't like the heavy-handed application of what they see can happen from the passing of this bill.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills talked about it. It is the strength of our democratic system, where we may not always get what we want, but we move forward, and if you move in a collaborative fashion, if you move democratically to get things done, it may be slow, but it works. The proof of how it works is where we are today in Canada, in a free society, a democratic society. We cannot turn the clock back to where we get two parties together or four parties together but one party or three parties actually have no leverage of negotiation. In order to have that ability to negotiate, there has to be equality. There has to be the ability to say no in order to make the process work.

The flip side of that is that when you force somebody into this, when you actually force this regional board together, this committee together and you don't have co-operation, somebody is going to work to undercut this. Somebody is going to work to make sure it doesn't work. I don't see the value in that.

It's not a perfect world, but it is certainly a system that has shown some tremendous value. Some of the committees and the boards that the members across the aisle have spoken about all worked under a system where it was voluntary, where it was democratic. There were disagreements that had to be resolved. There were some boards that worked extremely well. Others did not because either personalities or differences, whatever, interfered with that board working. But there are processes to go through to resolve that, and those processes work. I would say that they work better than the heavy hand of legislation that says: "You will do it this way, and, oh, by the way, if there is a mistake, if somebody can point to the legislation and say that they want to take this to court, it doesn't matter what the court ruling is. This will stand. If there was a regulation previously or if it's made after this comes into force, it doesn't matter what the court says. This stands." That's not right.

One of the greatest strengths of our democracy is the processes that we design so we can figure out how to come to these compromises to make these systems work. The question is: what's the rush? As the member said, it all falls apart if we don't pass this today, but that contradicts the other members who say that there's nothing new in this. You can't have it both ways. So if it's all the same regulations that existed before except that you're putting them into legislation, it doesn't make sense, then, why we have to rush to pass this. There's not logic there.

If we take this and we bring this to committee and we have the ability to debate this and bring people in to give testimony, to provide input, and maybe point out some parts of this bill that we're not looking at yet, maybe they will support the government. If they came in and had an opportunity to be informed, a reasonable opportunity to be informed, that's the key.

One of the members of cabinet across the way mentioned something about speaking to Calgary, but what he didn't say was: did he really talk to the mayor about this bill? We know that that didn't happen because we gave the mayor's office a call to find out if they knew about it, and they actually told us: we haven't had time.

There was a section in legislation in the ERCB act quite a while ago that's been repealed, but it said that people were allowed a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts. I submit that that's a logical and a very pragmatic way of looking at legislation. What we have here is a way to do that, which is a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts, to bring in municipalities, to bring in representatives of the AUMA, of the AAMD and C, and allow them to have some input after they had a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts. Now we'll have something to discuss. But that's missing. That hasn't happened.

All too often these bills come forward without that reasonable opportunity. What that actually becomes is an opportunity for a mistake. It becomes an opportunity sometimes for misinterpretation, as some would allege, but it becomes an opportunity to get something wrong. I would submit that this is too important to get wrong. Yes, we can come back in the legislation and amend it, but that's another whole process. Why would we do it when we can get it right now? Put the effort in now, spend the time now. Get it right so that it is a valuable tool, so we could have regional boards, so we can have an opportunity to make these things function well. That, I say, is the value that we can bring to this piece of legislation if we put this into committee and make the committee do its job, to get that input, to have that debate before we bring it back to this Assembly.

No one here has really presented what I would say is a legitimate argument of the need to rush this through. It's just not there, not on the arguments that we're giving today. If the minister wants to point to the section of the original regulations where the whole system is going to fail if we don't pass this legislation, I'd like to hear that. I'd like to see that. Where is that? What is it that is so important that we just couldn't amend regulation to make sure that didn't happen, and we can take the time to pass this bill. We can amend regulation quite easily, so I'm not sure what it is in regulation that's interfering. By bringing this in front of a committee, we can look at how those regulations have been working and how that is going to be different when this legislation gets passed.

As the members have stated earlier, there's nothing new in this bill. I find that difficult to believe, not with what I'm reading. But if it's true, then there's no rush here. There's no critical need, no urgent need to run this thing through tonight and get this passed within a matter of time before any of these new councils – and we've got all sorts of new councils. Lots of them. Lots of new councillors. They have no idea this is coming, have not been informed. They have not been consulted. It would be a great opportunity to bring them to the committee room to let them have input, let them hear the evidence, let them evaluate it because they are the ones that are most directly affected.

It would give the large-city mayors an opportunity to present. If it is true that they are in support of this, let them say so. But they haven't read it yet. They haven't even had the time. It's so critical that all parties involved on these regional boards feel that they have equal weight to participate, that they have an equal part in not just the makeup of the board but in the jurisdiction of the board. That component, that import into this legislation, right now is missing. There's a presumption in many ways that certain mayors are going to support this, but I wonder if they have any idea what they're supporting. I wonder if they've even had the opportunity to read it, or do they just get a phone call from someone who says, "Hey, this is good; you should support it"? Well, that would be just as misleading as some of the allegations that have been flying around this room.

It takes time, particularly for any new mayor, to educate himself or herself to not only their duties but to the implications of legislation that in some cases is significantly going to affect their jurisdictional responsibilities. I wonder if they know that. I wonder if they have any idea of what's coming their way once this passes.

Some may find that initially it looks like a good idea, but that wouldn't be the first time with any piece of legislation or with any scenario where something looked pretty good, but as you got into it, you realized that it wasn't as good as it was proposed. There are a lot of things in there that nobody thought about before they enacted the law. That is not something that is foreign to any Parliament or any Legislature. It has happened consistently, and it happens more often when legislation is rushed through the process versus when legislation that is well vetted and the various stakeholders have an opportunity to look at it.

So I would like at least one of the members in government to explain why these communities and why the stakeholders can't have some sort of process or some sort of input before we pass this, before we railroad this bill through at such speed that people have no knowledge of what's going on or how it's going to directly affect them or how it's going to impose upon their jurisdictional authorities as what they see now. And that's important because the appointees are not elected. The bill specifically states that elected officials will have to concede to whatever decisions are made. Our parliamentary system of governance is not conditioned to have elected people subjected to the dictates of the appointed. That's not the way our democracy works.

So there is lots of room for changes, lots of room for reviews, and we have the ability and the opportunity before us right now to do that, provided we refer this to committee and set an opportunity to actually do some serious debate and some serious review and see what comes of it. That's what our whole democratic system is based on. So I don't know why we're not doing it that way. I don't know why we're not taking the opportunity.

It's interesting. I haven't heard anyone say, "Here's who we consulted," and come out with a list of who had input into this bill. We're just told that it's good, but when we read it, we don't see good in it. We see problems, and we see problems that could be significant in various scenarios. So it's really important that we resolve those problems or at least vet those problems so we have an understanding of what the mindset was of the ministry when it developed this writing, what they were thinking, and hear input from various parties that see some negative impacts as a direct result, something that we have not talked about here tonight.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We now have five minutes under Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I just want to understand what the member feels is the point of our all-party committees. I just find that we never really send substantive legislation to the policy committees. It's very rare, anyway, that we ever send legislation to these policy committees. They're set up for this type of thing. They're set up to examine these bills that could be quite controversial if they're not handled properly and give an opportunity for outside folks to come in and give feedback, affected stakeholders and so forth, so that a bill can be presented that is a piece of legislative art rather than a piece of junk. I would really like to hear the member's views on what he thinks the point of these all-party committees is if we're not going to use them to examine and improve bills exactly like this one, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's interesting because one of the policy committees I'm on has probably one of the best chairwomen in this House. As you can probably see, I'm looking for some support to get this in front of committee. I don't know if that's going to work, but I'll give it a try anyways. We're getting desperate.

I will tell you this. It is important, though. The committees are effective in many ways. They suffer the criticism of being told they're not effective, but the fact is that we do have situations in the committee where we don't necessarily follow party lines. I would say to the hon. member that I am supporting her on a particular bill. It will probably fail. It's just the two of us, and that's it. No one else is joining us, but maybe someone will jump in.

But it shows you that the committees can work in a bipartisan fashion, and when that happens, that's democracy at work. That's how it's supposed to work, and that's the argument for why this should go in front of committee. That makes sense. It gives time for input. It gives time for expertise. It gives time to look at it through a different lens and make sure that we get it right, and I think that's important. I would hope that's important to this government, that you always want to get it right. Why waste time coming back to correct a flaw that presents itself that is critical?

There is something else that was said, and maybe it needs to be explored. If there was a court case coming forward that was going to kill everything – I think that's how it was described – do we change the law in anticipation of what a court ruling will be? That's an odd scenario for me. That's hard for me to fathom in many ways. I know there are enough lawyers in here that know that you can't predict the court's outcome. You just can't. However a judge or a jury rules, that's how they rule. Strong cases have lost, and weak cases have won. Nobody knows. So do we always jump in front of a court to change legislation? That doesn't make sense. We would have to respond to a court's decision and maybe act upon it, but I don't think we should be anticipating it.

What we should be doing is being pragmatic and logical and allowing the time that is required, which is a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts. If the hon. minister wants the public to support this bill, I think the only way that that can actually be achieved is by allowing the public a reasonable opportunity to learn the facts. That's how it's done. By putting this to committee, we can make that happen. That just seems to make sense. This seems to be a very good motion and a very logical way to advance this bill. If the bill is so good, then it will withstand the committee without any changes. It will withstand the committee without any recommendations.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. All right. Well, I'd like to speak in favour of this motion, which reads that "Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2." I think this is a very good motion, and I'm going to support it. I think it's very good. It's a good piece of work.

Again, this goes back to what we talked about earlier. We just heard a very eloquent, passionate speech from the Minister of Municipal Affairs earlier in the evening saying how this is a mirror image. Now, of course, we've had several speeches since then. Our friends in the NDP did a very effective job, in particular, of laying out how this is not a mirror image of the regulation whatsoever. It's very different in many different areas and certainly is broader in scope with who it covers. But if there's nothing to fear, as the minister says, then why are we blasting through this tonight and staying here till now, 11 o'clock? We've been here since 3 this afternoon, essentially, most of it on this bill.

An Hon. Member: One o'clock.

We've been here for – I don't know – a little less than seven hours, six and a half hours, and they feel the need to continue to blast this thing through tonight and not consult and not refer it to a committee. When governments act this way, when they're trying to blast something through like this, that means they know that they've got a problem. That's why they do this. If they didn't think it was a problem, they wouldn't be acting like this. Clearly, they know. The letters are starting to come, and I'm getting CCs from the mayors of places not just like Airdrie but places like St. Albert, places like Chestermere, like, obviously, Rocky View. These places are starting to get the legislation, they're starting to analyze it, and they're not liking what they're seeing.

If we're not going to just kibosh this, as we obviously voted down a reasoned amendment recently that I put in there, why would we not refer this to the committee now so that they could do their work, call in these individuals, and the minister could use this opportunity to educate us wanderers? You know, he could take this opportunity to help us understand why we're wrong and help the municipalities out there and the AUMA and the AAMD and C and whoever else to understand why they need not fear. Then there can be this thing that's called feedback, where the AAMD and C and AUMA and municipal councillors give input verbally in advance of something being passed. It's a remarkable concept, one that works very well in most cases.

Why are we sitting here at 11 o'clock at night still debating this bill when we know full well, Madam Speaker, that we have not heard from the AUMA on it, we have not heard from the AAMD and C? We've heard from one mayor, none of the councillors. None of the councils have even had a chance to meet to talk about this yet. Got lots of feedback from multiple mayors, multiple councillors that they don't like what they're seeing. We've got one mayor in favour so far and, like, 30 really worried.

So why are we insisting on blasting this through right now? Won't that harm the other side? I don't understand why they don't see the political problem with this.

Mr. Mason: They're just trying to do you a favour politically.

Mr. Anderson: That's what it must be. It is a favour. We do this every time. They wonder why we won 17 seats. How can this group of – I mean, look over here.

Mr. Mason: I do wonder that.

Mr. Anderson: Exactly.

How can this group over here sit with 17 seats? You know, they're accused of being the most extreme, crazy people, and somehow they've got 17 seats in here. Did you ever think that it had to do with your handling of bills like Bill 50 and Bill 36 and Bill 19, to name a few? It's because you keep doing these legislative things that are offensive to people, that people just want to have feedback on. You push them through, and people get mad because they weren't asked and it affects their lives. Then they wonder: "Why on earth are they mad at us? How did this party go from zero four years ago to 17 here? How does that happen?"

It's because you're not doing this. You're not referring these bills, these ideas to these committees, to the people that matter, to the stakeholders. It's one thing to get in a room with nine people, 10 people and talk about a budget that's coming up. Okay. Fine. Great. Do that. That's not a real consultation process when we're talking about something like this. A consultation would say: "Look. This is what we're thinking of doing. Okay. We haven't put it in legislation yet, but these are the points we're thinking of doing in this act that we're bringing up. Now, give us input on it: good, bad, or indifferent. What do you think?"

Then they come back, and the stakeholders give you the input. Some of it's going to be malarkey, and you don't need to listen to it because some of it's just probably not relevant, but a lot of it will be relevant. A lot of it will be well thought out and studied, the feedback. Then you get to incorporate that, and then those people feel: "Man. The government listened to me. They actually incorporated or listened to my view. If they didn't incorporate it, they listened, and they gave me a reasonable reason why it couldn't be in there."

That's why we do this. It is so much in the government's best interest to do it that way, yet they do it the other way, and I don't get it. Really, I should just be, like, cheerleading this and saying: this is awesome because this is going to be electorally wonderful for the party that I'm with. But, of course, we've all taken an oath in here, and it's our responsibility to do what's right for the people of Alberta. In our case, we feel that what's right is to fight for local autonomy, to fight for the people who sent us here, who said: "You know what? These guys are getting too powerful, too arrogant. They're passing stuff without asking, that we don't want. They're consolidating power in smaller and smaller groups." They want us to fight on this issue, so we're going to do so.

Let's play this out. What if we refer this, and the AUMA and the AAMD and C come back and they say: "This is great. This is what we always wanted, this bill. We were waiting for this bill. Thank goodness it's come." Then the government can say: "Look. It's validation. Let's go forward with it." Then they don't have to worry. They can say: "Oh, the Wildrose. They're saying that they're sticking up for municipalities, but all the municipalities are saying that they love this bill." Why not do that? Why not wait until the councils out there have had a chance to meet, the AAMD and C in two weeks' time here has a chance to meet and discuss and comment on this, the AUMA gets a chance to meet in two and a half, three weeks and discuss and comment on this?

Why are we pushing this through right now, in the middle of the night, 11 o'clock? Probably, we'll be here till late tonight, the morning possibly. What's the point of this? We have debated this a lot, and there's no doubt that we're trying to find a way to give some time to these councils and the AUMA and the AAMD and C to get together and digest this because they haven't had time. This amendment would allow them that time. It would give them an opportunity to come before the committee, to study the bill in advance, to have all their thoughts fleshed out on it, come to the committee, comment on the committee. All of you former municipal councillors out there: how can you not like that? Minister of environment: how can you not like that, right? You were mayor before, weren't you? Mayor of Drayton Valley, right? Yeah. Wouldn't you like them to come and talk to you about it or just give you a little bit of a heads-up?

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. Wouldn't she like that, Madam Speaker. I think she'd love it. I think she would find that really polite and thoughtful. Come to her as mayor of Drayton Valley, and say: "This is what we're thinking of doing. What do you think there, Mayor?" "Well, this is what I think." You know, that is what the democratic process is supposed to include, and that's the step that keeps getting missed. As long as you keep missing that step, you're just helping us electorally and damaging yourselves, and there's no reason for it. It's bad strategy, and it's also bad legislation. If you just switch it up a little bit, you could be the heroes, walk away happy. Then everyone is happy because it's good legislation, and it does what people want it to do.

The other reason it needs to be referred to committee is because of the actual flaws in the bill, not just because of the lack of consultation but the actual flaws that are in the bill, and there are a lot of them. As has been pointed out, this makes it very clear that the government has the power, and the minister made it very clear in his comments just a few moments ago that a group that's already in one of these boards and so forth like the Edmonton one shouldn't be able to leave by themselves voluntarily, that they shouldn't be able to go, that if they've agreed to go in, they shouldn't be able to get out.

Well, see, that's the problem. What if it doesn't work for that community anymore? What if they got in under some pretenses, but all of a sudden it got changed? If we use that same language, you know, if you switch it up a little bit, it's kind of like democracy, right? "Once they vote in a PC government, why should they ever be able to vote them out? You know, what's the point? We voted for them once. We voted for them 10 times. Why should we ever have to vote them out?" You still hold the elections. You still ask the people if it's okay. It's called self-determination and democracy and all those wonderful things.

So why is it not okay to let the duly elected representatives of Redwater and Parkland county and Airdrie and High River, if they change their minds and say, "You know what? This isn't working for us anymore. We'd love to be a part of this, but our people are telling us that they don't want to be a part of this anymore" then back out? Why is that so horrible? Why is that so wrong? If we treated democracy like that, well, I guess that would be a dictatorship.

The problem is that the attitude should be that we should make sure in the legislation that this is entirely voluntary, that it's made very clear that a municipality has the right, may join this. The minister said: does that make sense? Say: yeah, you may join. That's okay. I like that. But they cannot prohibit, and they cannot say that you must join and that once you're in, you can't come out. That's not democratic. It's offensive, it's wrong, and it doesn't make sense with democratic principles.

You can't force people to get along. They need to get along because they want to get along. Most communities will choose to get along. They don't want to fight. The CRP regional planning and so forth: that's great, fantastic; make it voluntary. Why are we forcing people to co-operate? That's not co-operation. That's forced compliance. There's a big difference between voluntary co-operation and forced compliance, and that's what this bill enables the minister to do. He may say: oh, I'd never do that. Well, great. What about the next one? What about another group that comes in? You're still giving yourself the power to do something, and that's what's not right here.

I would urge very strongly our friends across the way to think about that and to refer this to committee. It is a good committee. I used to sit on it. I don't anymore, unfortunately, but it's a very good committee. The chair is very capable. The chair is solid, and I think she'd do a real good job making sure that we got this right, getting the right people in front of her. I hope that you can consider that, and I hope that we can slow this process down, at the very least, going forward and give the stakeholders at least a week or two to give their input. That would be the best way to go forward.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. member how long he thinks the committee would need, if we're so granted, to have a chance to review this and if, in addition to the amendment, there are any legislative changes that he especially would like to see us concentrate on.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, man, these puffball questions are awesome. We're not used to them over on this side. It's pretty fun. [interjections] I never asked a puffball. You can go back and check the record. Never a puffball.

How much time? I don't know. I don't think it would take that long. I mean, you're not talking about necessarily having every municipality come forward. You obviously give every municipality a chance to give a written submission, and then that should go to the members of the board, and they should be able to read those submissions as they come forward. I'm sure most municipalities will probably want to submit something. That's probably 300, 350 letters. Who knows?

You go through those, and then you have, obviously, the big cities come in, the mid-size cities, the areas, the cities and towns around the large cities who are probably going to be the most impacted by this – you're talking about 20 or 30 municipalities there – then, obviously, the AAMD and C and the AUMA. You get them to come up. You probably want to talk to a few other folks, talk to probably some folks in other jurisdictions that have gone through this process of regional governance models and what the best models are and so forth.

It would take some time, for sure, but you could definitely roll it out by next year. I don't see any reason why you couldn't introduce this legislation again next spring, put it directly into committee, have recommendations ready to go for the fall, and out you go.

One of the things that I think would be interesting is if we did this on a more regular basis. I know that our party would love to, if we're lucky enough in 2016 to form the government, practise that type of thing on major bills that might be controversial and say: "You know what? Instead of just forcing this through, let's put this in the committee through spring and summer, arrive at a good solution, and reform the bill to make sure that it's coming out perfect or close to perfect." It's never going to be perfect but closer to perfect. Then pass the rest of it in the fall.

That's what we would suggest that we do. I remember having that discussion with the House leader right after the last election, and the Premier was talking about how all these policy committees were going to be doing great work on bills and blah, blah, blah. Of course, it never happened. It's been the total opposite in a lot of ways. One of the things that he mentioned was: "Yeah, that's the process that we should start looking more towards. I know the Premier wants to do that." Well, here's another opportunity. There have been a lot of opportunities on a lot of pieces of legislation, and here is yet another one.

There are maybe one or two other bills that might be substantive enough to qualify for this, but really I think that for this session this is probably the biggest one. It would probably be just one or two a session that would have to be referred to committees. You're not talking about referring every bill, just bills like this one, that are controversial and that are complicated and that affect large groups of people. Then it gives them a chance, of course, to see the legislation because it will have gone through first and second reading. In the committee they'll have a chance to see the actual legislation and go forward from there.

Again it's a great tool in the toolbox if we would just use it. It's very democratic, and it's going to lead to much, much, much better legislation. I hope that we would think about using it.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers on the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. One of the points on this. Talking about how committees work and whatnot and what we do with committees – and it's nice with all party because we can actually get quite a bit out of it – I was fortunate enough back in June to go to Ottawa for the 10th Canadian parliamentarians' seminar. It was quite interesting because I think there were about 18 or 19 different countries at it, with different processes of what they do all over. Some committees actually have the minister sit on the committee, which seems a little unique in places.

An Hon. Member: It's called a junket.

Mr. Donovan: No. Actually, I paid for it myself, but thank you for that. If you want to go through, by all means check out my records. I paid for mine and my wife's flight there and back because I'm a little bit of a fiscal conservative. We can get into that another day, any time. I'm more than happy to play.

It was kind of interesting to hear the different processes in different countries in the Commonwealth, how they go about coming up with laws, changing laws, and bringing up things through the process. It was quite interesting because they talked about being a parliamentarian and how to get things done and how to work collaboratively with everybody in a room and stuff like that and how things were done through committee, which I found quite interesting. I think that we have a great system here, especially in our Legislature, of being able to put things to committee. I think this is probably one of the key ones where it could go forward in that and be discussed at a committee level, where everybody could at least have some input on it. Now, I understand, you know, why we would be putting it to committee. On Bill 28 some of the challenges are on jurisdiction and stuff.

When I was on county council in Vulcan, we had a skydiving group going through that were diehard skydivers, dialed into it – great – until they started doing it out at a location where they hadn't gone through any process to get a development permit from the county to do their business. Again, thinking that we knew more than everyone else, we went through the process of trying to fight them because of their development permit. Now, the catch was that they were using a registered runway for their planes to load up and take off and throw people out of it – hopefully, the parachutes open – and let them go. That was fine.

Of course, the neighbours were getting pleasantly unhappy with the process because planes were taking off at early hours in the morning, and there were quite a few people out there. So our planning process thought: "Well, this isn't good. They don't have a development permit." But as we went through the process and went to the point of getting legal counsel and everything else to shut them down, we found out that it doesn't fall under our jurisdiction. It was federal jurisdiction because it was aviation. They trump the provincial process on it. So we were sitting there, and there wasn't a whole lot we could do about it.

Now, you spin it forward a couple more years. I think we're sitting in a situation in Parkland county, the same situation. They put up an airport, and Parkland county gets excited, and rightfully so, because a development permit wasn't taken through the process of the Municipal Government Act. That's how a process is done. Again, they're sitting there and lost a court case to it also.

You sit here and wonder, you know, about the process. It's fine when it works, but then all of a sudden when there's somebody higher up the food chain that tells you that your process doesn't really matter, everybody gets their nose out of joint pretty good. You think that locally you'd have the best jurisdiction and the best planning process to go through it to come up with what's right for everybody.

Now, this motion to forward it to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship I think has some merit to it. It gives some time where people can actually go out and do their homework on what we're trying to accomplish with this bill. Now, I appreciate that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has a mandate, trying to get some things to go through. It's back to the rushed process. I'm not sure why we feel that it needs to be rushed through or why there's a certain deadline on it. As we've said, it's been working for six years with the capital region plan.

You know, with the process of that, you sit there and wonder: what's the rush on it? I'd rather make good legislation and have good bills go through than sit and try to rush it through. I'm not saying that any of the bills are bad that go through this government. I think that quite a few of them have good merit to them. The point is: do you want to rush legislation through just to get so many pieces through without having the consultation with the people it affects?

Now, as I say, there are lots of former elected municipal councillors, whether it be in villages or towns or MDs or counties, in this House, which I think brings some background. Lots of people have sat around lots of municipal planning commission meetings and decided the fate of what should be done and what goes on in different planning levels if you have a regional plan or if you have a municipal plan with another jurisdiction around you. The point is that it's collaboration. When you do those things, you always have an open house. You always sit there, and you lay it out. There's actually the process through the MGA of how many days you have to advertise it ahead of time so that people can actually go out, advertise it in their local papers, talk to the people it affects, and actually sit there and have the time to work with people so they can actually get their input.

Now, again, this is one of the things I think on this bill – we have two municipal conventions coming up, the AAMD and C and the AUMA. I think these are great places to be a trade fair for this, so instead of telling them what they're going to get, ask them. Sit there and show it to them and say: these are the reasons, which the minister was very passionate about, why it needs to be done ASAP. I think you take out the emotional side of it and just say: what are we actually gaining out of this, and why is there the drop-dead deadline to it?

You know, I understand we need to pass legislation in this House, and there are bills that need to be passed. But the timelines on them now: if they're deemed an emergency such as a flood, which we've dealt with, those ones are understandable. But this one, honestly, is a paper trail. We're catching up on a couple of things that, obviously, the province got caught on that they found when they did their regional plan and capital regional plan and stuff like that.

I know there are those in here that were part of the capital regional planning process. It's like everything. There are some highs and lows to them. I mean, you're not always going to sit around the table and sing Kumbaya with each other on how things are, but at the end of the day I think you can sit down and figure out what needs to be accomplished and why it needs to be accomplished. It's generally for the best for everyone. You're always going to have some ego and power that gets dialed into it, but that's part of the game, I guess.

I think that at the end of the day, though, we've come a long way from 1950 or '51, whenever the Member for Banff-Cochrane was born, from what was going on in that era of things being done. I think we've become a lot more collaborative, in all honesty, between all the municipalities. I know that in my years on it it went a huge step from when I first got elected, when I was 19, in 1995, to now. I mean, it's huge circles of – I think people look a lot more globally and can identify the things that need to be done in order to make a better Alberta.

Again, to push people into a room in a short time and tell them that this is what's going to happen instead of asking them I think goes back to why, you know, sending it to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship would be a positive move. I mean, I think the chair and the deputy chair on that committee are both very capable people. The people on the committee are obviously good. They've been appointed by their different parties. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is another keen soul there. [interjection] I said you as the deputy, didn't I? I covered that.

You know, I think it's a process, and it goes back to, again, when I went on my trip to Ottawa – which I paid for myself, so it's not to be considered as a junket. The point is that we learned quite a bit on that about different ways that go on in different parts of the world that still fall under the Commonwealth process of how government is done, which was quite interesting. I mean, I came out of that and was quite appreciative of how we do things here. I think it was in Bangladesh where they said that the ministers get to sit in on the committee meetings, and they're actually committee members on it, which is quite convoluted, I guess. That would be the understatement. If you're asking a minister questions and they get to be on the committee that decides what the questions are, it's kind of a foregone conclusion how the answers could turn out on that.

I think that in democracy we have a good system here. In doing that, we don't want to rush the system and lose the point of the process. I know it's not always the most fun thing to do, and it's definitely not the most splashy or liveliest, you know: the best part of this job is sitting around going through the process and having the debate. But I think it's what we need to do. To jam something in and ram it through just because we think we need to get the process rolling isn't being good parliamentarians.

At the end of the day what I think most of our elected people, our constituents, expect from us is making good decisions with the information that we have in front of us. I'm a fan of doing it myself as long as the information is given to us so that we can actually go out and have consultation with our constituents and with the affected people. To me, that ties into our municipalities, whether they be our urban friends or our rural friends. We need to be able to have the conversation with them and show them the information that's coming out in some of these bills, because at the end of the day that's who it is affecting.

We talked earlier about some of the subsections, 708.17(1), (2), (3). I asked the Minister of Municipal Affairs about that, you know: do we really need that in there? He said: well, it's been in there for 17 years. We've never used it. It's in the capital regional plan also for six years. Again, it's never been used. So just to calm the fears of people, maybe remove it. It drops the guard down for people. I understand that you're going to have people that push the process otherwise, so you have to have, I guess, a reason or a rationale to have some kind of a penalty at the end. It just seems to me that a year in jail might not be the most fun trip, and $10,000 most of us would probably stop to pick up. If you're fined that, you'd probably take it as quite a hit overall in life. Or both. I mean, there's the two-for-one deal there, which I don't think most people would be overly happy with.

It's those kinds of things where I think we sit down and talk with our municipal friends and say: "Here's our end goal. We need to get to point B, and we're here. Are there any means or ways where we could actually probably work together and come up with a common solution, come up with some good ideas?" You know, put good people in rooms together, and then you're going to have some good ideas come together. Again, it's a process, and the one thing I struggle with is to put something through without proper and due process.

The minister talked earlier of people jumping in and out of some of these plans and some other collaborative works, and the Member for Banff-Cochrane brought up the Calgary Regional Partnership and how well it worked. There are different people that obviously didn't feel the same way about it. During that time in 2008, when I was a reeve in the county of Vulcan, one of the things we did bring up was to join the Calgary Regional Partnership. Looking back, thank goodness they didn't take us. But at the time it looked like it was a good idea to collaboratively work together. You know, when the MD of Bighorn pulled out of the CRP, their rationale was that they thought it was more of an urban planning process. So for the rural people it was kind of hard to sit there and say: we want to be part of a plan that really doesn't affect us.

The central planning ideas. I guess the process on some of these, I think, really needs to be looked at. One of the things that makes me wonder about it is when we bring our First Nations friends into it because they fall under a different jurisdiction, which was one of the things in the Calgary Regional Partnership that didn't bode well for the MD of Bighorn, for instance. If you want to put a regional water line or rail line or sewer line or power line through the First Nations, it falls under a different jurisdiction. So in order to put some of these plans together, we have to make sure that we all work together. And that ties back to my aviation story and the county of Vulcan. You have federal jurisdiction and provincial.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: I was just getting to the good stuff.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member referred to the good stuff. I'd like to know what that good stuff is.

Mr. Donovan: Well, where to start? The question is that it's fine when you're on top of who gets to decide what the rules are, but there's always that level of government a little higher. You know, on a municipal council you have your MDs, counties, your councillors there. Then you go provincially. Then you have your federal ones. The federal government tells the province what rules they shall be running by and what jurisdiction shall go from there. Then you have the UN, who comes up with some different ideas, but it affects all of us, I guess, because, for instance, as a farmer there's a new European Union agreement for agriculture, which Canada signed, which I think is good overall for Alberta agriculture and as an Alberta agricultural producer.

Now, if I was dairy producer in this province, I might not think exactly the same because they didn't maybe – it's a challenge trying to balance it all out with everybody. That's a perfect one we could sit down to as the good stuff, as my friend from Airdrie had asked about as there is a collaborative program. Say that you were the agricultural producers in this province and you were some of the ones that, you know, had the feedlots or you were a cow-calf operator or if you're in the dairy industry: supply and demand. They've put a lot of money and invested a lot of time into that, but then you go out and make an agreement with Europe and you say: "Okay. For the general masses this does work, but there are going to be a select few that it doesn't work for. How are they going to be compensated or dealt with?"

So you take that back down into a provincial process, where you have towns, MDs, and counties trying to collaborate together and come up with some good ideas for how to make the province better, how to plan better. But if you push them into a room and you tell them something is going to happen, most people don't do well with it. If you ask people, you usually get a way better process and get better feedback from people, but to tell people how to do stuff just generally doesn't work well. I could ask for help on that side on how to tell people to do stuff – cue the crickets, and there we go – but it just doesn't go over well. It's the collaboration. It's trying to work together to ask people how to do stuff instead of telling them.

I think it's going out to the people that this affects the most, and that's our municipalities, whether they be urban or rural, and letting them have a chance to look at this. Most of them haven't even been sworn in. Some of them are being sworn in this week. You know, it's awfully unfair to ask some municipalities that have over 50 per cent turnover what their thoughts are on this and they don't get sworn in until tomorrow, for instance, or next week for some of them. The question is: how do you fairly tell somebody that? It would be like us having over 50 per cent new people elected in this last election and then coming in on the first day and saying, "Here are some bills that are going to affect you for the next four years or whatever your mandate is," and you didn't really have a whole lot of time to figure it out or learn it.

To me, it's not democracy, and it goes back to: are we politicians or parliamentarians? I think we should be parliamentarians. I think we should be here to make good laws and good bills and pass it forward so that we can make the province a better place to be rather than politicizing whether it's going to work or not work or if we have a one-off in Parkland county that's caused a flag to go up or a different situation in different parts of the province.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

There are 40 seconds left under 29(2)(a). Would anyone else like to comment or question?

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak on the referral amendment from the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment to second reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:29 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 28 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are back to debating Bill 28 in second reading.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We're back to debating the bill once again. I'm going to take a few minutes to go over some important points that I was hoping to get more clear in my earlier presentations. Now I've got another moment to take a second shot at it.

Madam Speaker, this set of motions that we . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Livingstone-Macleod has the floor.

Mr. Stier: Madam Speaker, at this moment in time it's a little bit noisy, but I'm going to try to speak over it. We've spent some time talking about some great motions that the House chose not to support, and I thought those were worthwhile things to suggest. Going to the Resource Stewardship Committee, I thought, was really a great idea. We could have really studied it in detail. I guess we have to look at where we've been before on this sort of stuff and where we can see some faults with what we've got presented before us.

Back before we were faced with this situation, we were working with a different type of planning system, as I'd mentioned earlier, and many times tonight we've heard about how things were done back in the '50s. Well, I'm going to take us to the '70s and '80s and '90s, when we had regional planning before. I had the occasion in my background to work with the Calgary regional planning board in those days, as I've said earlier. This was a system that caused a lot of dispute between municipalities and, quite frankly, was problematic.

Eventually, as we worked with that system and they put a greenbelt around the outside of the city to try to look at how they could develop land in the transition areas, they ran into more and more types of conflict. As these things would arise, it was proven that the type of system that they had designed was faulty. Eventually they created a new Municipal Government Act because of that set of conflicts, and they went ahead and started putting together some new land-use policies called the Alberta land-use policies back in those days. They ensured that during that process those land-use policies were reflected in the creation of local municipal development plans. The local municipal development plans were therefore a reflection of government policy.

As the system became something that was worked with on a more detailed basis, they found that it was important to have more negotiations between municipalities, and they created inter-municipal committee systems. These, I think, work quite well, and we've been working with those for the past number of years. As I said earlier, there have been times when that system probably could have been tweaked, but it certainly was something that I thought was a great way for municipalities to collaborate with each other and resolve their differences and proceed along with good development in regions. It was easy to do regional planning with these intermunicipal systems, and it still is relatively easy as long as the people will get together and have these meetings on a regular basis and have good agendas that plan forward for the future.

As most of the members here will know, there's also the appeal process when some of these negotiations don't always go as smoothly as they could and an arbitration process that can be utilized as well as, of course, if a last resort has to be looked at, the Queen's Bench.

As I said earlier, too, again, the times were changing and during the later portions of that year we saw annexation difficulties. Whether it was in Grande Prairie or Red Deer and Red Deer county or some of the other areas south around Calgary with the MDs of Foothills and Rocky View, there were an awful lot of days and weeks and months spent in tough negotiations to try to get annexation proposals resolved.

As I might have mentioned earlier, too, as well, environmental issues were being pressed upon us in those days, back in the late '90s. Around I think it was '98 or '99 – I'm not sure which; someone might be able to correct me – the Calgary Regional Partnership was an idea that was floated amongst municipalities, and members were invited to attend. I myself actually attended several of the Calgary Regional Partnership meetings, and I saw a few people that are in here tonight at some of those. It was a good idea, I think, to be able to try to organize a bunch of volunteer municipalities to decide how, perhaps, we could more easily collaborate with each other on how we could go forward. I think it was an extension of the intermunicipal committee process.

Yet as they went along, it was evident that there was also an agenda there that was being presented by the major component, which would have been the city of Calgary, to try to influence how development would go forward in the future in the transition areas around the city boundaries. In fact, they tried to impose some new ideas that were not well received by rural landowners nor by their rural council.

I can remember many, many times when we went to public open houses and we went to a lot of various stakeholder meetings, and there was a lot of fury in the room, with 150 to 200 people at it complaining about the intentions of the city at the time to try to control land outside and propose agreements that they wanted to push, where various tracts of land to the south, particularly, and to the north of the city would be agreed to be frozen in time. We liked to say, actually, sterilized. They would do that by demanding that if there were to be developments out in those areas, they would have to be developed at least 10 to 12 units per hectare.

It was a stark reality that was put upon the landowners that they were not prepared to accept, so those areas became noted by most, because they were blue on the map, as blue blobs of concern.

With that being the case, there was so much concern, there was so much notoriety that two or three of the municipalities decided to back out of the regional partnership because they could not fairly see that these types of ideas were something that were in the greater interest of their residents.

Later on, as this became an issue, the previous minister for SRD, I believe, and also the member for Foothills-Rocky View decided that it was time to put together a new type of endeavour, and it was called eventually the land-use framework. In that endeavour it was suggested at the time that we return to regional planning, that was faulty before. I'd like to point out, as I did earlier, that the regional planning was sufficiently faulty that the government of the day, in the '90s, which was of the same political affiliation as today, decided to throw out central planning as a bad idea.

An Hon. Member: It was a big mistake.

At that time back then, when they threw it out, they gave back autonomy to the local municipalities, and they gave them tools upon which they could develop and be creative and explore their own ways for growth and economic development. These are important things that are the very foundation of every municipality today, and I think that was a great decision.

So why are we now looking at returning to even a tougher – tougher – regional planning concept? It makes no sense to me when your government decided to throw that system out many years ago. Of course, we know all the other things that were related to the land-use framework that were proposed by the members of the day: the Bill 36 controversies and worries about property rights and compensation for changes in land use that were caused by government takings and the loss of local autonomy. We know how all that worked out. A lot of us are here today because of that very sequence of events.

We wound up, therefore, at the end of the day, as all things do pass along, with seven regions based on watersheds and regional planning here again, and regional advisory councils have been put into place to put these plans together. The MGA was amended in many ways to accommodate this whole new system. The draft South Saskatchewan plan is now upon us in the south. What we're working with is going to be supposedly used to guide our way in the future.

Throughout all of these documents, whether it was the land-use framework or whether it was the regional advisory council report or whether it was the MGA itself where it was amended or the draft plan that we're now working with, this new regional planning board was not mentioned. This new idea that we're dealing with today was not in the cards. It makes me wonder how we can be embarking upon the draft South Saskatchewan plan right now and all the consultations that we're going about. The thing was only released a couple of weeks ago, and this new idea wasn't even mentioned. It wasn't even referred to in any regard. How can we be doing this, therefore, in a proper way? It doesn't make sense to me.

If we've looked at all of that, it doesn't seem to be that it's consistent with the balance of the documents that I've just mentioned, so you have to wonder why someone would do this. It seems to me evident from the past news reports we've had and the past indications throughout the last local election that there was a lot of controversy having to do with the Calgary Regional Partnership and the Calgary metropolitan plan and the withdrawal of many municipalities, including Bighorn, the MD of Foothills, Rocky View, and Wheatland, to the degree that there was a lot of worry that it would not go forward. On the Calgary Regional Partnership people even came up to Edmonton to speak to the opposition to get their view on things, and that was a lively meeting, I can assure you.

Nonetheless, we're at a point now where we're trying to introduce a whole new level of decision-making into the system here. It almost looks to me as if this has been created to take the Calgary Regional Partnership, which is a volunteer board, which has had some members drop out of it, and make it into a stronger authority that could with this set of rules cause this very organization to be compelled to make all of these members comply no matter whether they want to be there or not. That's what this seems to look like to me.

With this being the case and with the facts coming up where the larger associations for municipalities have obviously not been consulted, I cannot support this whole system. This does not make good sense. It does not follow through step by step and make a good long-range system to go with.

Madam Speaker, I would like to therefore conclude that this type of forced regionalization is not what we need in Alberta. It is not something that our municipal councils want. It is not what our residents expect of us. They expect to be consulted. They expect to have participation. So then I would like just to say that I cannot support this, and I hope that others will see the light and act likewise.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a), five minutes for comments or questions on the preceding presentation.

Seeing no members, are there any other members that wish to speak on Bill 28 in second reading? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I know my last stand-up part was riveting for most because I've heard back on some of the comment containers back so far.

I'm getting up to speak, I guess, not necessarily against the bill. It's the way the process has happened on it. Again, something I've stumbled over since I've been here, whether we're parliamentarians or politicians and what mandate we're pushing, one of the things with this bill is that it goes back to being able to let the people have the proper input on it. That's one of my questions. Are the affected people going to be able to have the proper input to it? As soon as you start making any changes to the regulations with the Municipal Government Act – and I understand there's got to be some closure to it and whatnot. So I get the process of the means and why things are done, but it's the process of how it's being done.

You know, the Minister of Municipal Affairs brought up a very good point when he was talking earlier about people jumping in and out, whether something works, whether it be a regional water line or the CRP or whatever, and how they jump back and forth, understanding that it can be harder to plan that way. But I think people should always have the right to change their mind on what they're doing. If there's a process that's been involved and it wasn't working right, you should always have the right to step back and say: jeez, that's not working for us. We usually see that municipally in a change of council. We've seen quite a few different times where I think constituents feel that their elected representatives, whether it be a councillor or a mayor or an MLA, aren't doing their job to represent what their constituents' needs are. They voluntarily take them out in the election process, which involves whether or not they're going to have their job again.

Now, in saying that, I think it's pretty fair to say that people should have the right to do it. The Member for Banff-Cochrane had brought up the CRP before, you know. I guess I'd like to know his views on why it was okay for the MD of Bighorn to step out of that partnership. The question is: I think everybody should have the right to do what you want. I mean, we have members like the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who has quite a background in everything. I think he believes in democracy, and he believes that people would be able to talk mindlessly while somebody else is trying to give a presentation and disrupt the House a little bit. But that's okay. That's all fair. I think that's how the process works. It's, you know, the process of how to let people have their input on something.

Now, the Minister of Finance brought up a very interesting conversation while we were on break there, waiting for the bells, about schools and schooling – and this goes back to school boards and stuff like that – and I know that he's just riveted on the end of his chair by some more of my thoughts on how the process works. This goes back to Bill 28, how the process works.

I guess this was back when counties and MDs – well, actually, counties had the school boards in them because that's what made them a county. A municipal district only dealt with municipal issues, and the school boards were separate. That's why we had counties and then the MD of Foothills, for instance, versus the county of Vulcan. The county of Vulcan took care of the education as well as the municipal issues, and the MD of Foothills, for instance, only took care of municipal issues. They had a separate school board.

Now, in saying that, if you didn't agree with, for instance, Vulcan county, where you're going to school, how they were closing some of the smaller schools and centralizing, so to speak, at the time, you didn't have a lot of choices. Now, from my farm in Mossleigh, where I'm still at – and I've had the same land location and phone number for 37 great years, wouldn't change it; a great place to live – you had to go to Vulcan, which was 45 K away, which wasn't in our trading circle, so to speak. My parents went to High River way more often. So in order to go to Blackie school, you got the school boards fighting.

Now, we talk about how people work together and how to come to different arrangements to make something work and have a solution. We came to a dead end on that, where the school boards – Foothills wanted to be paid for the busing, and Vulcan county said: no, we're not doing that. In the process of doing that – being Catholic, we got to have the option of having a separate school board – they started up four-by-fours. Anybody that happened to be in the old school board days knew that that was a way that you could come up, and if you had enough people sign a petition, through democracy you could do that. My dad ended up being the chairman of the separate school board there, the Catholic school board, so we could fund the kids to be able to take the bus and let our tax money follow where the children went.

Now, to me, that goes back to democracy. If there's a process and a means and a way, you should be able to implement it. It doesn't mean you have to agree totally with how the system was being worked, but you have your option if you take the time, and the way to do it is to go through it and to make the situation work for you and find the solution. Our solution when I was going to school – I know the Minister of Finance will be excited to know that that's how we ended up being able to take the kids from our area and go to Blackie and then go to High River, for instance, for high school. That's how we funded it because we set up the separate school district.

Now, most people probably wouldn't have gone through the process of doing it, but my dad was probably even more stubborn than me, which is hard to fathom.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Donovan: I know. I know it would be very hard for somebody who's climbed the heights that you have from Calgary-Lougheed, but it is possible. There are people more stubborn out there, you know, and I appreciate that.

But the process is there, and if you take away the process for people to have the right to do something, that's where we've lost. You should always have the right to be part of a board or not. I leave that with the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

I can understand some of the challenges he would have on some of these pipelines and different associations and committees, how things are done, where people go in and out, but it's still the process, that you should be allowed to do because if you don't – I would have tortured my teachers in Vulcan for numerous years, where they didn't need that, through high school. Instead, I got to go through the process of Blackie and High River, where I was a much more fun-filled student, that was willing to learn through the process there, because we had the choice. It wasn't an easy choice. It was a process that took quite a bit of time to get through, but it still gives you the option. When you take that option away from people, it's a challenge.

Again, back to Bill 28. When you don't give it to the people that it affects so that they can understand what the situation is, I think you're truly cutting democracy short on it. This goes back to: are we parliamentarians, or are we politicians? If we're politicians, we're kissing the babies, and we're trying to make whatever work so we can all get elected the next time, but if we're parliamentarians, we're actually here to make good law and good legislation. I'm not saying that this total bill would have challenges.

Mr. Donovan: Well, I'm learning from some of the best across the floor. I do truly appreciate how things can be done. It's been good. I do appreciate the history that's obviously on that side of the floor.

The process is on Bill 28. If we don't let the people that it affects, which I feel are the municipal councils, have some input into it, I think we're shorting them. You know, I think that when the associate minister that used to be – I don't know if he still has finance under the title of recovery. No? You got that yanked on you? That's a tough one. So you're just recovery of southern Alberta and something else. I mean, the Minister of Finance is doing a great job. I don't know why he needed a winger. You know, that's some great work, you guys, to trim down your ministries. Oh, wait a second. You didn't trim down your ministries; you added some more. But that's okay.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. Donovan: Well, we could get into relevance in the back there, but we won't do that.

The process here is that we're not letting the people that this affects have the opportunity to talk to it. So we need to sit here, give them the opportunity to do it, and let them go with it. When we cut them short, it's the process. It goes down to process. I guess I'll probably be one of the bitter people on the front line one day complaining at 5 or 10 after 12 on a lovely morning, hanging out with colleagues, about how process should work.

I mean, there's a great person right there from Edmonton-Gold Bar talking about process. You know, when people want you elected, they elect you. Now, when you ran as mayor, they didn't elect you. That's process. They didn't think it was the right guy. So you moved through it, but you appreciate it because you put your name forward to be an MLA, and you've won that because the people of your area of Edmonton-Gold Bar think you're the right person for it. That's process. There's nothing wrong with that. That's how the process works. If you don't succeed the first time, try again. Perseverance worked for that gentleman. It's an honour to have him as a colleague in here, because he does add quite a few things. I mean, the Minister of Transportation is another guy, too, a person that has tried and hasn't maybe won the first time, but they try again. There's nothing wrong with that. That's what we are in this province, people that sometimes get knocked down. You pick yourself back up, and you try again. But if you didn't have the process there, you wouldn't be able to do it again.

Mr. Hancock: Some people are just trying.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. You know, there's always that angle, too. We could go into a whole process of what trying could or couldn't be. I don't think that, you know, the thousands of people that are watching this online right now would be up for that right now. They'd way rather read it in Hansard.

An Hon. Member: The thousands.

Mr. Donovan: Yeah. The thousands upon thousands.

One of the things that I see in here is process. Again, I think we've cut ourselves short on process. Honestly, if there's a timeline here to have this passed, if the minister says that it has been done by November 30, 2013 – and I know there are some relative reasons why it needs to be expedited so fast. We went six years with the process with Edmonton capital area planning. We've been 16 years in the MGA or 19 years since it was done last. If there's a drop-dead date on it, then that's understandable, but otherwise to push something in and not get the actual proper input from people I think is a challenge. We're cutting our ratepayers short, our constituents short, and, I think, the process short.

I mean, to me, I think that would be something that would be an amenable process for everybody, something that would be a situation that we could all look at and think is a good, solid solution to take back to our MDs and counties and our urban friends also and let them look at it and see if there's anything they could add to it and have a consultation process, which the ministers do on all kinds of different levels when we're providing other bills. We go out. The South Saskatchewan regional plan: I mean, there's no drop-dead date on it. A great job was done by our Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development of going out and having the process with people.

Mr. Donovan: The process you did a great job on, Minister, the process. But you've gone out and done it. You went out there, you've given people the opportunity to add their input, have focus groups, do those kinds of things, and that's what we need to do.

That's my biggest gripe against this government right now, the pushing of some stuff without letting people have the proper due process. If you don't have the process, you have nothing, and then we just become pork-barrel politicians that wander around aimlessly to things instead of being parliamentarians, where you're supposed to make good legislation, prove what needs to be done for the province, and do it in a form and a way that people appreciate because they feel they're part of it, that they actually have some input into it.

Those are my thoughts on the bill, and I think I'd be willing to look at it down the road if we could have an actual consultation process with the people it affects rather than trying to tick it done by next week before everybody heads out.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have five minutes for 29(2)(a) if there's anybody who would have a comment or question on the preceding speech.

Seeing no members, are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading on Bill 28? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It was interesting to actually hear the Member for Little Bow talk about the perseverance of some of the members across the aisle. I'm wearing my Red Sox shirt underneath my suit jacket; 95 years in waiting is perseverance. So I commend the members across the way.

The minister commented on the bill in a number of different ways. He talked on different levels. What was interesting – and I've seen this before with legislation in this Assembly – was that they will take wording from previous legislation, bring it in, and then say: "There have been no changes here. This is the same wording from previous legislation, or it is the wording right out of regulation." So I was trying to figure out why the bill was coming forward and why now.

In listening to the hon. minister talk about the world crashing down because of a pending court case, what I realized is that it all comes around process. I had to dig out some data here to really kind of figure out what was happening, but basically what we had was one participant, the Capital Region Board, that didn't think it was being treated fairly. They thought what was happening was a violation of democratic principles, and they were upset. What they wanted was quite interesting. They had hoped that the Minister of Municipal Affairs would actually step in and make some changes. Little did they know that the changes that were going to be made were: whatever a court says is obsolete. That's what will happen when this is passed.

It's interesting. That's not what the complainants want. What they wanted was a process to appeal. That's what was missing. They didn't like what was happening on the Capital Region Board, they didn't like the way they were being bullied, and what they wanted was a process to appeal. Rather than having the section of the law that says, "Despite any decision of a court to the contrary made before or after the coming into force of this [legislation]," had the ministry only provided some sort of appeal process that satisfied the plaintiff, we could have avoided a court case.

Now, I don't know what that would have been, but we're here today because of that very situation. I would venture to say – I haven't researched all of the regulations. Again, we don't get to see this until they – we might be lucky to get briefed, but then the bill is tabled. Once the bill is tabled, we get to read it. Here we are tonight, having had just barely 24, 36 hours, whatever it is, from when this bill was tabled. Then we listen to the hon. member tell us why this is coming forward, and hearing that, what we realize is that the bill wasn't actually necessary. There are other mechanisms available to the hon. minister to resolve this issue.

Now, clearly, the problem was, coming to this point, the lack of democratic process. Where is that corrected in the bill? It's not. So the problem still exists. We haven't corrected the problem. We're still faced with a situation where I think everybody agrees that we want these regional boards, we want regional planning, but if we haven't corrected the democratic process, we still have the same problem, that we're carrying forward. I don't know how that will ever play out even with this legislation. I'm sure there were lawyers that said that what we're about to pass is constitutional, but in the end that will be decided by the Supreme Court and not, certainly, this legal advice. It can still be tested, I suppose, at the Supreme Court level, whether or not the legislation is constitutional. I would hope it was checked for that, but I don't know what the rights of municipalities are. I've always concerned myself with the rights of individuals, but corporations are people, and municipalities have the status of a person under many legal jargons, so I assume that it's somewhat equal. It'll be interesting to see how it all plays out.

It's interesting. The problem that was first exposed was the lack of democracy, the lack of democratic process, and the remedy that was sought was to go to the ministry and ask for some sort of appeal process when one of the participants on the board felt that they were either being bullied or being treated unfairly, whatever the complaint was, that there would be some sort of appeal process where they could seek a remedy. Nowhere in this bill do we address that problem or that issue. I have to tell you that I think that complicates matters more, when you then draft a bill that says that the way we're going to do this is that your complaint has no validity whatsoever. I don't think the problem goes away with that, so we didn't fix a thing. We should. That's the key. We should fix it.

We recognize where the problem is, and when I look at what was said from the elected officials who brought this problem out into the public, they even offered some guidelines as to what would satisfy them. Yet we didn't respond as a Legislature that way. The government didn't respond, at least nothing out in the public that I can research and find, to constructively resolve this issue.

Understanding the comments that these various participants made, there was a mechanism here. We could have solved some problems under the existing legislation, under the existing act. All they were looking for was the democratic process. All they were looking for was to be treated fairly and to have some sort of appeal process where they could have been heard, where their concerns could have been heard. I don't think anybody wants anything less than that.

We don't have it in the legislation, and that's a shame. Where does it go from here? What happens from this point? Does this go to the Supreme Court, and then we're back here talking about this again? It is a possibility. It's very much a possibility. I won't venture what the legal argument will be other than the fact that they would somehow look at this legislation and say: "The problem still exists. This is unconstitutional. We deserve the right to a democratic process." It'd be interesting to see what goes on and whether they want to go down that track. I don't understand why we can't just address the problem even in this legislation, why we can't fix this bill to make it so the communities had some sort of democratic process.

With that, what I'd like to do, Madam Speaker, is give notice of an amendment and move that the motion for second reading of Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence." I have the requisite copies here. That's the original.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. We'll pause for a moment while we distribute the amendment.

Hon. member, would you please carry on?

Mr. Anglin: I'm ready to go. I'm always ready to go.

The Acting Speaker: You have five minutes left.

Mr. Anglin: Doesn't the clock start over again on the motion?

Mr. Anderson: Good try.

Saying that, it's interesting that – well, actually, it's not interesting. It's a shame. It's a shame that the litigants had what I think is a valid argument, and they offered up the possibility of solutions without having to go to court. I think they laid it out pretty good for the ministry to step in and say: "Okay. How are we going to resolve this? How are we going to create a system where the stakeholders feel that the process is fair? How can we fix this?"

Now, I don't know if the minister is willing to respond to this. But did they do this? Did they actually consult out there, looking at this particular problem, to avoid bringing legislation forward and say: how can we fix the existing process without having to go to court so that these stakeholders, these participants on these boards feel that they were part of a democratic process and could have their concerns heard in a fair and just manner? I think the comments that the litigants gave publicly clearly show that both sides were acting in good faith. They weren't looking to go to court.

I would argue that it appears that the government dropped the ball. It appears that where there was an opportunity for leadership, the government didn't show up. What it did is come here with a piece of legislation without even consulting with those affected. The problem is that the legislation now affects the entire province, not just where this problem first surfaced. That is tragic, in a way, because this problem isn't going away. It's just a matter of where it's going to pop up again.

These participants on these boards have to have a venue where they have an opportunity to bring an appeal forward, whether it's through the ministry, whether it's through a separate process, where they can bring their concerns and feel that they've gone through a just process, whether they agree with the decision or not. What normally happens with people or organizations that go in front of either a court or a board that is independent and objective is that if they feel that their arguments have been heard and the decision was made in a fair process, it is a little bit easier to live with the outcome. Where people get frustrated and organizations get frustrated is when the rules are rigged, that you don't even get a fair process. That's what's happening here.

With the regional boards, that we would like, and for regional planning that I think most people would agree with – planning is good, but dictating is bad. Dictating is not planning. Not having input in the outcome of something that's going to directly affect you is extremely frustrating to these members that find themselves in this situation.

So what are we going to do? Well, I think the best thing to do is to approve this motion and get out into the public and consult. What we can actually do, if we put a lot of work into it, is maybe not even have the need for passing this legislation. There are other ways to fix this under the existing act, under the existing regulations. We do not have to mandate it or dictate it to the various regional boards.

I'm not sure where it's going to end up because as the Speaker knows, in the city of Red Deer, particularly out by Gasoline Alley, the tension sometimes can rise pretty high, but they need to be able to resolve that democratically. When the government steps in or any board steps in and forces the issue, I think that makes it more difficult. I think the animosity grows, and I don't think it goes away. I don't think that's good for our democracy.

Again, we don't always get what we want. We don't always get the outcome that we first set out to get, but if we have a democratic process and we allow what I say is and what is commonly referred to as the greatest strength of a democracy, the ability to compromise, those compromise solutions generally are far more acceptable than one side winning all and the other side being the loser.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. I'd just like to ask the hon. member: when it comes to this hoist amendment, is this the best way to go about this? Would he have been happier if, instead of a hoist amendment, we were able to possibly refer this to a committee? Perhaps, instead of referring it to a committee, we could just drop the bill for now and go back and have some public consultation on it. Would that have been a wiser decision? Particularly the referral motion: I think that might have been a really good idea. I just wanted to hear what his thoughts are on it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Actually, that's a great question. The committee would have been a very good process, and it might have led to a good outcome. But what I discovered when doing my research, as I was scrambling when the minister explained the reasons why, was that there was opportunity for solutions right from the beginning. Now, I don't know what steps or what measures the ministry took to explore any of those solutions.

Clearly, after reading some of the comments made by the litigants, the court was the last thing they were hoping for, and I can tell you right now that this legislation was not something that certainly one of the litigants was even thinking about. There was absolutely no compromise there whatsoever.

I would say that, probably, referring it to a committee was a better way to go, but of all the processes here, the one that jumps out at me is what the litigants were looking for. They were looking for a solution that was nonlegislative, and it appears that there was a solution available that was nonlegislative. We might have needed to amend the Municipal Government Act; maybe we didn't need to. What they were looking for was a process, that they could bring their concerns through an appeal process once the regional board had made a decision. Under most circumstances when dealing with most boards and commissions, there are appeal processes and checks and balances in many ways. We don't generally allow that final arbiter to be, you know, a nonelected official. I know we do this in our zoning and our development boards with the municipalities and even with our local taxes. If you don't like the way they assessed you, there is an appeal process to go through where we double-check and make sure that we're equitable and we're fair. Now, people may not like the outcome, but we have the process there that makes it work.

That question just brings to mind all the possibilities that I do not think have been explored. Certainly, the possibility of going to the committee was rejected, and I don't understand that. I think that if we brought in the Capital Region Board and brought in Parkland county and heard their concerns and found out that what they were really looking to do was to make a process that was more democratic and more fair, we probably could have found that using the regulatory method with an order in council and just made a few changes that were acceptable to both sides. Maybe that would have worked for every place around the province as they created regional boards.

What's happened is that rather than doing something logical or pragmatic to actually address the problem, we've come out with a bill that has brought over much of the regulation, but it's very heavy handed in the sense that it just nullifies any type of court involvement. Again, I still wonder about the constitutionality of that. Even a murderer has a right to appeal. Why shouldn't a community who's law abiding, who just doesn't like what the regional board is doing, have a right to appeal so that we have a second look at whatever decision is being made.

It's a matter of all citizens being treated equally, and due process of law should not discriminate with a law-abiding community or a law-abiding citizen. We have due process of law in the Criminal Code.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak on the notice of amendment by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre? The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. I'd like to speak just for a few moments if I could on this motion to allow for this to not be read a second time but that it be read a second time six months from now. I think that that fits very nicely with the ideas that I had earlier, when I talked about some of things that have happened in the past with this process of planning.

I can recall many, many times having gone through the planning process and sat in hearings and public meetings over various matters where there have been all kinds of people who normally would not get involved in some of these situations but would come out when the gravity of the matter was to such an extent that it finally piqued their interest, and they realized what might be a very important issue that might affect them greatly.

As an example, when we used to see some of these hearings regarding the Calgary Regional Partnership – I mentioned that earlier on – there were a lot of people who finally realized that this was a very dramatic situation, and it had to be reviewed. It had to be brought to the public's eye in a very, very public way so that they could have a chance to talk to their representatives and the various facilitators and ensure that those people knew exactly what they felt about some of these dramatic changes that they were facing.

In a similar vein, if we were to look at this situation here, as has been suggested by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, this would give us sufficient time. Just like with the South Saskatchewan regional plan and the regional advisory councils' plans, this sort of thing could be taken out to the public.

Open houses could be arranged, and various speakers could be brought in to proceed with a proper diagnosis and analysis of this and go from area to area throughout Alberta and ensure that people were entirely enlightened as to what they were being faced with. It's obvious from our circulations in the past few days – and I shouldn't say the past few days – in the past few hours that key municipalities have had changes in their councils. Some of the people there have no idea what these changes to their municipal development plans could be. People don't have the background sometimes in planning to know what kinds of situations would befall them.

I really would like to encourage all the members to give this idea a shot, just like with the South Saskatchewan regional plan. I mean, when it comes down to it, right now we're looking at in southern Alberta a major set of open houses and public meetings for that document anyway, but that document, as I said earlier, doesn't contain any of these ideas that are presented here. It's totally missing this. So what are we going to do? Are we going to have all these meetings on the South Saskatchewan plan and then drop the bombshell later on: "Oh, by the way, we're going to have this new thing called this regional planning board put into the equation. We forgot to tell you about that, but I guess we'll just go ahead and have that come out anyway, and we'll deal with it then." Well, that doesn't really make sense, and it doesn't follow the process that I've seen in the past.

Madam Speaker, I think that the time is now. We have the opportunity here to take another whack at this and do a proper consultation. There are going to be two major meetings coming up here in the next three to four weeks with the major associations that involve our municipalities, the AUMA and the AAMD and C. This would fit in with the timelines that we're talking about, and I think this is a great idea.

With that, I'll conclude my remarks and let someone else have a go at this motion we have. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We still have Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing no members wishing to speak under that, are there any other speakers to the hoist amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We're obviously disappointed in the last two amendments that didn't go through, but we'll give this one a try. Earlier the minister asked me for examples of boards and commissions and so on that work without this umbrella around it, without the necessity of this bill. I gave one example that the Member for Banff-Cochrane was so proud of and rightly so.

I also had the privilege of sitting on the Kneehill water commission, which, apart from the funding of that commission, is working very well. There are seven different municipalities on it, both urban and rural, that got together in 1999 or 2000 and formed a commission to supply water to seven different municipalities. There were none of these – and I'll use the word – draconian measures to force agreement and force that regional system. It was just that seven municipalities came together and realized a need, and we got it done. It's still operating today. We've probably got the highest water rates in Alberta, but we have water.

Another example of a board that I think works extremely well – and I had the privilege of sitting on that board for 11 years – is the AUMA board. I remember in 2001, when I first went on that board as a brand new municipal politician. Obviously, a very steep learning curve. In fact, the learning curve was much like this. It was a vertical ladder. After two or three meetings I was really amazed at the different demographics, the different people that were on that board. They came from all walks of life. They came from all sizes of municipalities, from summer villages to the cities of Calgary and Edmonton. It was just amazing how well that worked, and I think that's because we all wanted to be there. We all had a deep interest in making that board function properly, and we went from just an urban municipality association to a corporation where we offered services like insurance and so on to municipalities. That same board grew that business into an over $200 million corporation in about five or six years, and it's still operating.

Those are some co-operative regional examples that we can learn from and that are, again, voluntary. I can't stress that word enough. I really think that this amendment can give us that second chance to take a look at this. We can step back, allow the AUMA board and the AAMD and C board to evaluate this and get back with some true consultation.

I've been over all the other points many, many times this evening, it seems. Many times. I won't belabour the point much longer. It's just that this is key. This is key to the future of Alberta. It's key to the way that Alberta is governed over the next however long, so I would urge you to support this. Let's take a step back, let's take another look at this, and let's get it done right.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Madam Speaker, I had a couple of questions for the member. He addressed the issue about water commissions and being part of the Kneehill water commission, but I think he was inaccurate. It was formed voluntarily – it was – at the request of the minister. It was the minister before me who passed an order so that that Kneehill commission could exist.

But I think he may have given the wrong impression. I'm sure he knows the fact that all the members of that Kneehill commission can't just vote as an individual one to say: I'm leaving. He knows the consequences of that would be that the water rates for every single member of the commission would go up, and that's why, when they asked the minister to create the commission, which is under rules that look exactly like the regional growth boards, there is a clause in there that says that they can't just walk out. It would be tantamount, actually, to all the provinces signing on to Confederation and then deciding after four years, when you have an election: I don't want to be in anymore. Then after the next four years another party comes in: I want to be in. You don't get an organization like that.

I'm wondering if the member would like to address that and talk about the Kneehill water commission and how the fact that they're all in it together, that there has to be a partnership, that they've signed up and now are obliged to be together unless they all agree to disband is part of what makes it a strong structure. That's exactly what would make the regional growth boards a strong structure, by making sure that once they decide – they decide – they want in, they collectively are the only ones that can decide they're going to disband. If any individual could leave alone, without consultation with the rest of the group, it wouldn't be a group, and it would fall apart. I wonder if he'd like to address that.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you for the question. The minister is partially right. We are a group now. We are under contract with the provincial government. We are under contract with ACFA, the Alberta

Capital Finance Authority. There's a contract to pay a bill, and we're aware of that. But I will again remind the minister that we all went into that system voluntarily. We all sat around a table, and we signed that agreement initially to get it started and run it. But there is an out, and I was very, very tempted to take that out two years ago. That out is that we are committed to making those payments on the debenture. That's a contract.

We were not obligated to buy the water. Two years ago, when the village ran a $400,000 water deficit in one year – and we operate on about a $2.2 million budget for the year; a $400,000 deficit is not easy to swallow – we couldn't see an end to it. We were going to restart our wells and make our debenture payment, and we would have been a lot better off as a village. That was an option open to us. That wouldn't be an option open in this system. The difference was that we went into it voluntarily again. We weren't forced into that system. Those are the differences.

Mr. Griffiths: I wonder, since we ran through this already, that the guidelines for setting up a commission are the same as the guidelines for setting up a regional growth board, where he thinks the involuntary nature of this comes from since it's the same process for setting up and the same obligation to each other.

Mr. Rowe: Correct me if I'm wrong, Minister, but in the bill – and I'm sorry; I put it away now – the minister or the authority delegates who will be on that board. There's no opt-out clause even at the beginning. You're told that you're going to be a part of this regional board. Period. That's the difference.

Mr. Griffiths: I'll ask him again, and I'll read the section. The regulation states that he'll "identify the municipal authorities that are members of the commission." Sorry. That's the stuff under commissions, that says the exact same thing as the regional boards. The wording is the same. The language is the same. The intent, Madam Speaker, is the same. Show me where it says something different, that it's mandatory.

Mr. Rowe: Under 708.02:

- (2) The regulation establishing a growth management board must . . .
  - (b) designate the municipalities that are members of the growth management board.

That tells me that they must designate. Must.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Little Bow on the hoist amendment for Bill 28.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm actually not going to speak in favour of the hoist just for a couple of reasons. I think six months is too long. I honestly think this is something that literally a month would give quite a bit of time for people to actually go out, have an open consultation on the process, which I talked about a little bit earlier, to have that process to be able to talk with the municipalities that it affects, the AAMD and C, and the AUMA. We have two conventions coming up where we can pretty well hit all of those parties, do some consultations, you know, some round-table discussions with them. So that's why I'm not going to speak in favour of the hoist. I think six months is too long. I think that's past the point of getting something done.

In all honesty, I think that within a month – again, I don't know the timeline in your ministry for why it needs to have a drop-dead date to it because I haven't gotten all the true information out of it or what the background is to it. I'm assuming you didn't just wake up here a couple of weeks ago and decide that this would be something fun to bring up and that we could hang out until 1 in the morning one night together just for good times. But that's the process now.

Madam Speaker, are we in committee, or are we supposed to be in our chairs? I don't know.

The Acting Speaker: We are not in committee.

Mr. Donovan: I was just wondering. The deputy whip is wandering aimlessly.

The Acting Speaker: I think he's just going to his chair right now.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Deputy whip, you are returning to your chair?

Mr. Donovan: Sorry. I just wanted to know how the process worked.

This goes back to the process, how things should be done or shouldn't be done, and this goes back to why I honestly think a month is more than adequate. I guess I'd ask the minister if that's something that's plausible or doable from his side. I think six months drags out the process and, honestly, defeats the use of trying to get something done. I think this goes back to what I started before supertime in conversation about what goes on.

Bueller? Anyone? [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: We're listening. Go ahead.

Mr. Donovan: Well, it's hard to hear over conversations.

An Hon. Member: It's that process thing.

Mr. Donovan: It is. Well, I just wondered how it works. People are wandering aimlessly.

The point is that if we could have a month where we could have people be able to take it out to their constituents, to their municipal people, and get some feedback on it, I'd be fine with that. That's why I cannot vote in favour of the hoist, because I think that's dragging the process out too long. I think just a month would be adequate, say, by the end of – I think the AUMA convention wraps up on November 21 or something. That gives us the next week afterwards. We could talk about it after we've heard from some of the delegates, again, that are new. Then it's back to process to be able to go out and have some round-table discussions.

I know the minister isn't trying to hide anything or jam anything through here. It's just the process of showing people what's out there, and it's back to the people it affects, which goes back to the people that we represent. That's my thought on that. That's why I guess I'll be voting against the hoist amendment. It's too long. I think a month would be adequate, but again that would be a process that the minister would have to be in agreement with and go along with or explain why it needs to be pushed through at a fast rate. Then we can try to figure out how to explain that to our constituents and to our municipal people, that we're working with all the time.

Those are just my thoughts. I'll leave it at that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Would anyone would like to comment?

Seeing none, are there any other members that would like to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you once again, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the chance to rise and talk for a few more minutes about Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act. Unlike the Member for Little Bow, I'm going to speak in favour of the hoist motion.

Mr. Anglin to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Governance Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Well, obviously, there are a few reasons for supporting the hoist motion. Six months might be too long; it might be too short. But the other idea was putting it to a standing committee that would have given us a chance for a second thought, a chance for some meaningful interaction, a chance for inviting several stakeholders and several people that could have improved this bill. We all know that half an hour ago that didn't work.

Our first motion was:

Bill 28, Modernizing Regional Government Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill will severely undermine local autonomy and that further input is necessary from the public, municipal officials, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

That was the first one that didn't pass and, obviously, the basis or the reason behind the next two, to try to get some time or a mechanism to be able to get some of these key stakeholders, some of these key people involved. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre thought six months was good. That will certainly give us ample time.

Another side benefit of having it back in here in six months is I think that it's only something like 39 or 40 days a year that we're actually sitting here. This would give us an opportunity to get together and do some things, Madam Speaker, like to potentially have some other bills go to some of these committees, to potentially go a bit slower on some of the legislation, to potentially have a chance to talk about some economic development ideas, some further participatory democracy ideas. It's an interesting thought. Maybe these things, with some time period for people to review them and to give them a second thought, may work.

My constituency has been running through my mind as this goes through. I represent the south about 22 or 24 per cent of Medicine Hat, far, far from the majority. The biggest municipality peoplewise in my constituency is Redcliff. Redcliff is a great community of almost 6,000 people, lots of long-term residents, a great greenhouse industry, a great small-business industry. It also has a lot of development going on in the last little while, that they've been able to attract and make grow.

I remember, though, about 20 years ago a vote in Redcliff as to whether or not they wanted to join Medicine Hat. Part of the reason it lost was because the Redcliff people liked their identity, liked their small-town feeling, and felt that as the smaller community in that partnership they would lose a lot of their identity, a lot of their autonomy, a lot of their opportunity to set the direction that they wanted to set.

Then about 20 or 25 miles west we have Bow Island. I'm going to bet you right now that this year Bow Island is the only community of the three where the population is actually increasing. Bow Island is a nice little town of about 2,300 people and is maybe just far enough away, you know, at 30, 35 miles, to be outside the focus of how this growth management board would work.

But I wonder about the interaction between Medicine Hat and Redcliff as some of my colleagues have mentioned the ability for the Minister of Municipal Affairs to make things happen, the lack of what appears to be a clear voluntary procedure and how that would impact 6,000 people who a short time ago voted, clearly, for their independence. What has to be and is important for all of Alberta – for example, when the flood hit, Medicine Hat was severely hit again. The people of Redcliff were a short time after. Both communities greatly helped each other, so certainly a strong, strong willingness to work together.

One of the things that's running through my mind about both of these last two motions, the hoist and the one about putting it to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, is that obviously, you know, in the hour and a half that I've been reading this, there's been a lot of uncertainty. Wouldn't a hoist period, a committee period enable us to get it out clearer, to get it out better, to get it to where everyone understands it better, where all 87 of us have a better chance to make it right? It's not like we don't make mistakes.

I talked about the royalty review in my member's statement today. Yeah, I know the price of natural gas has changed. But in 2008 the oil and gas companies in Medicine Hat, especially service companies, clearly told the PC government: change the royalty review or we will move; we will do business elsewhere. It was the start of the exodus of oil and gas companies, service companies from our area to Estevan, to northern B.C. in Fort St. John, and to the Bakken field in North Dakota. A royalty review. Then if I remember the information right, I believe the PC government backed up on it 11 or 13 times. It was certainly a mistake that perhaps with a recommendation to a committee or a hoist or consulting with more stakeholders might have avoided.

Bill 50 and then this Bill 8 that we did a year ago showed again that the first way that was done wasn't the best way, although it accomplished what somebody wanted to accomplish. The final Bill 8 showed: we're not going to do it that way again, so we must've made a mistake. Perhaps if we'd had a hoist, perhaps if we'd had a recommendation to a committee, it may not have happened. History will prove the fate of that to all Alberta ratepayers and Alberta taxpayers. We'll see where our electricity industry ends up, if it ends up truly serving us as it should or if it ends up costing us all quality of life.

I think Bill 36 was the same. Wasn't it Bill 10 that changed it a bit, changed some of the ideas? It didn't come out perfect that time either, guys. Perhaps a hoist or perhaps a committee referral would have solved that problem although, of course, my opposition to that one is the top-down central planning, which brings us back to Bill 28.

You know, I had numerous town halls in the year before the election and talked to many, many property owners and many, many, many farmers, and the quote I said earlier tonight was that many of them would come to me and say: how are we going to get the people in the cities to understand how important property rights are, how big an effect this could have on us? As I said earlier, it looks like that will be Bill 28.

The last two concerns I have. Again, it clearly states in here the overreaching of ALSA. On page 7, section 708.06, compliance with ALSA regional plans:

In carrying out its functions and in exercising its jurisdiction under this Part and other enactments, a growth management board must act in accordance with any applicable ALSA regional plans.

Again, it ties in real tight with what your government has done with central planning, with planning that has been opposed by so many, and, as so many people on this side have alluded to tonight, may have been the large part of 440,000 votes for Alberta's opposition party.

The other part, that $10,000 fine and the year in prison. As the hon. Member for Little Bow said, at least it's not two Christmases somebody would miss. But I wonder how a CEO of a municipality with that hanging over his head – it seems extraordinary to me. It seems amazing. I think I heard earlier that it was in the old act, but it's never been implemented. Why the heck don't we take it out? Maybe that's an amendment that over the 30 days of the hoist we could certainly analyze, amongst some other good ones.

Again, the top-down, the words that I mentioned before from, you know, the mandate, the no limits, draconian, heavy-handed: they seem to be very, very similar words to what I heard in many, many town halls about Bill 36, Bill 19, and Bill 24, and it looks like we are going down that road again. Without a hoist period, it will be interesting to see what the voters in this province decide to do.

Madam Speaker, thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a), anyone?

Are there any more members who wish to speak on the hoist amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to stand and support this motion that Bill 28 be not read a second time but, instead, be read a second time this day six months hence. I think that's a great idea. It will give us a lot of time. I think it might take more than a month. I mean, maybe if you came every day for a month, then we might be able to get through it, but I do think that it might take a little longer than that anyway.

I'm a little surprised at what I heard from the minister just a few minutes ago. I'll go back and look at the Hansard, but he seemed to compare the idea of regional planning boards, once they're formed and the membership in regional planning boards and the importance of unity within these regional planning boards, to that of Confederation, saying that it is just as important. Just like you can't leave Confederation on a whim, you shouldn't be able as a community to leave a regional planning board on a whim. I guess some people might say: gee, I don't think we quite would compare our country and the unity of our country to a regional planning board. Some people might say that that's kind of weird. So I just wanted to ask the minister if he could please clarify that weirdness for us.

The other piece is this whole idea of this act using the same language, the mirror language that he talks about. That's not true. There are many differences between the two, and we've gone through some of them. We haven't gone through all of them. One of the main ones, of course, is that this act applies right across Alberta. It's an enabling piece of legislation. It enables the minister and the Premier of council to set up these regional boards anywhere they want across the province and mandate who's going to be a part of them.

The regulations that the minister refers to actually only deal with the Capital Region Board. That's all they deal with. So if he wanted to fix that because he's run out of time – there's a two-year clause where he's got to turn the regulations into law or else they expire or whatever – then just pass a bill that has to do with the Capital Region Board. If that board wants to stay together – it sounds like there are a couple of municipalities that don't – pass legislation that just deals with that. There's no reason to spread this out into something else, to say that we're not going to enable this to happen all over the place.

He's been saying that if people want to come to him and ask, "Oh, please; we'd like to form a board; can you please put this together for us?" he can use the MGA right now to do that like we did with the capital board. Okay. Fine. So why are we passing a piece of legislation, enabling legislation, that allows him to form permanent regional planning boards without having to come here anymore, without any kind of say from the people in that area? He can form them. It's very clear. He can put whoever he wants on the board with regard to membership of the municipalities. He can choose the municipality. He can choose what area it's going to encompass. He doesn't need to ask. So it is not voluntary at all.

I just do not understand why. If he wanted to fix this problem he's having with Parkland county, which, by the way, is a good example of why having this mandatory, confining, forced regional governance doesn't work – Parkland county wants to do something else. They say: "Look, we like this, but we really do need this park. We need it. This is important to us. That's what we're going to do." So the capital board says: "No. We can't do that." For whatever reason it doesn't comply with their plan. Parkland county says, "Well, that doesn't work for us," and they lose. Too bad. The board wins, and they have to comply with whatever the board has said. That's exactly what we're trying to guard against here.

We're saying that municipalities should be autonomous, that they can co-operate and should co-operate. We can dangle carrots in front of them to co-operate, but by forcing them to co-operate, I think that's fundamentally undemocratic, unjust, dictatorial, heavy-handed, and many other adjectives in the English language that are not synonymous with democracy.

So I would suggest to the minister: again, don't get too in love with this idea. I find it amazing, being from a rural area, as he is, with rural constituents and small towns, medium-sized towns, larger towns that are in his area – you know, it probably doesn't affect towns in his area just yet, but it may one day. Who knows? I mean, Edmonton is a bustling, growing city. It might start spreading. Who knows how far it'll go out there? Take a look at some of those huge cities in the United States. Who knows? Maybe we'll be that size one day. The point is that this stuff might not come home to roost now. It's easy for that member to say: "Oh, well, this doesn't really affect my constituents, so what the heck." But this is very personal to a lot of people in this Legislature that are trying to represent their constituents.

I wasn't consulted on this. None of my colleagues were consulted on this. Shouldn't we as elected representatives be consulted on something like this, that would affect our constituents in this manner? I just think it's disappointing that we're here at this hour debating the same bill when we still haven't heard from the AUMA, still haven't heard from the AAMD and C, still haven't heard any official word from any of the councils. They haven't even had a chance to meet yet. They're scrambling around. I'm getting texts, sending them copies of the bill all over the place. And here we are making an informed decision about whether we should let this bill pass second reading; in other words, approve the intention of the bill although we don't even know what the intention of the bill is because there's no preamble as to its intention. So we don't even really know what that is.

So that's where we're at. This is legislative sausage-making at its absolute worst. This is why people are cynical about governments and politicians in general. They come in and act like they know everything. They make decisions from their little ivory tower that affect people, real people down there among the towns and cities. They don't think about: "You know what? Maybe I should take some time and actually listen first before I pass something like this because it might affect people." It might affect people, and it might affect people not in a good way.

We want regional planning. We really do. It's a good idea. But let's use carrots. Let's not use sticks. Let's not use force and intimidation and hold this over their head and say, "Co-operate or else," because what happens in that scenario is that the little guy or the medium-sized guy gets quashed in that situation, and their rights are taken, and their autonomy is taken. That's what this will do if it is passed because eventually this will be used. There's no doubt it will be used again, and it'll be used to probably force people to, quote, unquote, co-operate instead of letting them voluntarily come together to create a better region for themselves. I think that's tragic, and it's wrong and very frustrating to see. If it does pass – I think I speak for all of us on this side – we look forward to one day making sure that that is repealed.

I would also challenge the minister to confirm right now – I mean, he's right there. He's going to have the chance in 29(2)(a) to say it if he would like. He can speak to it, too, I think. Confirm for this House and possibly put in writing, I would hope, but certainly confirm – it'll be in Hansard – that you do not plan in any way, shape, or form to use this act, once it's passed, to force the members of the CRP or members around the Calgary region to enter into this forced arrangement under one of these planning boards. Say it right there. Then, you know, at least for the next two years we can take some solace in that in the area of the world that I come from. Hopefully, he can say that, and then we can have that promise on paper, and hopefully that'll stick, at least for a little while. I think he would alleviate a lot of people's fears or at least some people's fears if he said that.

Now, of course, one day he won't be the minister of that portfolio, so even if he says it, that could change down the road. But I would like to know that any membership in this type of arrangement is going to be entirely voluntary both on the way in and, if the municipality wants it, on the way out. I think that's a fair request to make, especially given the very short timeframe, the lack of consultation, and the fact that we are having to pass this within probably a week. People would like to know. I certainly know that my council, definitely my mayor, have been on Twitter and Facebook all night on this stuff. They would like to know, and they would like to know from this minister.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing no members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I appreciate that, Madam Speaker. I just have a few remarks I'd like to add. I think that up front I've been very, very clear. In fact, I've been very clear in every speech I've ever made discussing the subject matter that I never have any intention of forcing municipalities together. I'm not going to stand around and let them not work together, but I'm not going to force them together. I'm going to find some way to make them realize that working together makes us all stronger and better in the long run. That's what this is about.

There are three things I wanted to clarify. First, the comment from the member, my critic, about forcing municipalities in. This is what every single member who is opposed to this has been citing every single time in justification for claiming that I'm going to force municipalities together. It's in the act, section 708.02(1). "The Lieutenant Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister, may establish a growth management board by regulation." I just want to point out once again that in the MGA, which is 17 years old, under Establishing Commissions, 602.02(1) says the exact same words: "The Lieutenant Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister, may establish regional services commissions by regulation."

Then they cite in the act section 708.02(2): "The regulation establishing a growth management board must." In the MGA, 17 years old, under section 602.02(2) it says, "The regulation establishing a commission must." It has the same criteria, specifying the name, specifying the members. There's absolutely nothing in this that says that I will compel them, any more than it does in the commission, which is completely voluntary. The idea is that it has to be done in regulation, and that's all the regulation says.

The second point I wanted to clarify because it was a new piece of information that I thought was very unfortunately presented by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre saying that the issue with one of the municipalities in the Capital Region Board was that they had no avenue for appeal. Actually, Madam Speaker, there is no avenue for appeal because it's not a court of law. But they do have an avenue when there are disputes. It's right there in section 25(1) of the old regulation, which is now put in the legislation, and it clarifies very specifically the process for complaints, disagreements.

- (2) On receipt of a complaint . . . [the Board] shall attempt to resolve the complaint informally with the . . . municipality.

Second step:

- (3) If a complaint cannot be resolved . . . [it shall] refer the matter to mediation.

Mediation. Now, just imagine, Madam Speaker, that you've got, say, an MLA and a municipality, a town, that can't get along. Do you appeal it to the courts, or do you bring in a mediator? They know you bring in a mediator. They have experience with that with one of their own members. It's meant to be a relationship between equals. You don't appeal it to the courts because there's been no law broken. It's a disagreement. After the mediation they can refer it under the Arbitration Act to be arbitrated. So it's disingenuous to claim that there is no avenue for appeal for anyone on the Capital Region Board.

The third one, Madam Speaker, is the consultation. Now, I'm not quite sure how I gave the wrong impression, and if it was me, I apologize. We don't have two years to consult. We don't even have six months. The court process started late this summer. It was already going through the process. A hearing was made, and a decision was coming in a matter of days. This had to be resolved very quickly, or we had 18 different organizations – water commissions, waste commissions, and the Capital Region Board – that could cease to exist on the spot in a matter of days. We don't have time for consultation. The Member for Airdrie said that our actions affect people. I know. But inaction was going to affect a lot of municipalities, too, in this case and render some very good work completely gone.

Sometimes, Madam Speaker, leadership isn't just about consulting. It's knowing that when something has to be done, it gets done. That's what leadership is about, making decisions. I have full intention, as I've always said – I've always said – that if we manage to make some mistake, then we'll fix it.

Frankly, I will not have 18 great organizations put at risk because of accusations that are completely inaccurate and misinterpretations of the bill. I've clarified every single one, and I'll do it through Committee of the Whole, and I'll do it through third reading. I will answer every phone call from every municipality, and I will explain to every single one of them how this is no different than the regulation we had before, how this is an empowering document to allow them to work together, just like 17 years ago, when commissions were created so that they could have water commissions and waste commissions. It allows them the opportunity to form formal relationships so that they make sure they can get the job done to serve their constituency.

Madam Speaker, I am fully confident in this bill. I look forward to carrying on the discussion with municipalities and finding other ways that they can formalize relationships and continue to work together so that we can all, whether at the municipal level or the provincial level, ensure that we serve Albertans today and for the tremendous growth that we're going to have going into the future.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Minister, you say that nothing in the document compels these municipalities to join this board, and you cite the MGA and the fact that it talks about service commissions and that it's the exact same language and so forth.

Minister, a service commission is not the same as a growth board. They're different. If they were the same, then you wouldn't need to pass legislation. This is different. It's a growth board that has extreme powers to do virtually – well, we can go through it again – a lot of different things that a service commission can't do. If a service commission could do it, you wouldn't call them regional growth management boards. It's not the same entity that you're talking about here. These are not service commissions. That's got to be clarified, or else you just leave it at service commissions and use that part of the act to do what you want to do with it.

The other piece. Why on earth would you wait if you were going to lose 18 public commissions of some kind if we don't pass this in the next week? Fair enough. How on earth did your ministry drop the ball that badly that you were at the point where we have one week to pass a bill or you're going to lose 18 different public commissions? How is that not rife with incompetence? That's what it's come to? We've got to pass this, or else we lose 18 commissions? Good grief. That's the way to do it. Talk about putting a gun to our head to pass a piece of legislation. Unreal. It's either that or the whole thing on the capital board falls apart because all of these commissions expire.

That should never happen. If there was that problem coming up, that should have been detected a lot longer than one week before it occurs. So we have to do that. [interjection] If that's good process, Member, then you and I obviously have a very different idea of what competence is because that's not competence, and that's not process. That's stupidity by the department. That should have been found out, and I'm sure we'll want to look at that further tomorrow in question period and in other places. That's an unacceptable answer, that we have to pass legislation in the short time frame that we have or all hell breaks loose and we lose all these commissions and everything else. That's ridiculous.

It does explain, thankfully, finally at 1:30, why we are here at 1:30 and why the government felt the need that this had to be passed and has to be passed in the next seven days or something. That's not an acceptable excuse. I look forward to hearing from this member today, tonight, and tomorrow on why he would allow it to go this late without it being taken care of.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much. Madam Speaker, very easy to explain. As I suggested already, this summer the court filing was made. We wanted to see what happened through the court process. The arguments were made, the case was being made so we could make sure that we could address it appropriately. The case only got resolved two weeks ago, so we explored what sort of options were available. The decision is supposed to come down within the next couple of weeks, and that's where the timeline was. We didn't want to rush out and come up with a solution until we'd heard all of the arguments and the reasons why that municipality had some challenges and what they thought were the solutions. This is what we came up with. So that's how we wound up in this process. It's not, as he suggested, stupidity, which, I think, quite frankly, is an unparliamentary word. It's simply trying to work within the process and the letter of the law to make sure that we got it done right and still heard as many people as possible.

The issue about the commissions and the growth management board. He's absolutely right. Actually, he's absolutely right. They are not the same thing. Commissions have worked incredibly well for water, for waste water, for transportation. They're set up all over the province. There are ways for municipalities to come together for a partnership, but some of them are looking for stronger partnerships to cover more areas, realizing that their municipal boundaries are just an artificial boundary that was created.

They want to find ways because they know that the growth challenges that we're going to have – the populations that are going to move here, the industry, the commercial activity, the competition for recreation, making sure that we protect the environment – are competing at a greater and greater rate, all of it combined, and they wanted to make sure. They've asked if, instead of simply a commission, they could come together with a stronger tool that would allow them to capture more while still holding the principles of what a commission operates on, that they come together willingly, they form a partnership, and they have a bond together.

That's what we've done, Madam Speaker, and I'm proud to stand behind it.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any more members who wish to speak on the hoist amendment?

Seeing none, we will go to the vote.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 28 lost]

The Acting Speaker: All right. Hon. members, we're going to move on. For those who may not have faced a hoist amendment before, once a hoist amendment is brought to the floor of the House and is defeated, you move directly to the vote for second reading. So there is no more debate in second reading. We move directly to the vote for second reading.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 1:28 a.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, October 31, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O gracious God, as we begin our proceedings for another day, let us be reminded of the efforts put forward by those who came before us, and let us be ever mindful that the decisions we make today will bear impact on those who come tomorrow. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin with school groups and the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 80 students from Father Lacombe high school, located in the beautiful constituency of Calgary-East. Father Lacombe high school is the most diverse school in the Calgary Catholic system. Father Lacombe high school houses students from 32 different countries and is home to about 37 different languages. You can call it the headquarters of the United Nations. The students are accompanied by Dr. Adriana Bejko, Mr. Matt Bouwmeester, Mrs. Joanne Smith, Catherine Taylor, and Ms Liesel Borisenko. They are seated in both galleries. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let us proceed with the introduction of guests. Please be reminded to be as brief as we can because we have a number to do today. The Hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly a group of staff from the Alberta government Public Affairs Bureau. These particular PAB members will be touring our Legislature Building today. These are dedicated public servants who are contributing greatly to the building Alberta plan. I'm thrilled to welcome these individuals into the Legislature today. I'd ask them to rise as I call out their name: Mr. Alex Serafico, Ms Rhonda Lothammer, Mrs. Allison Hansen, Ms Holly Gray, Ms Jayn Villetard, Ms Mary-Lea Crawford, Ms Jennifer Dagsvik, Ms Jamie White, Ms Mindy Jacobs, Ms Sabra Mahmood Saleh. Welcome to you all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the rest of the House two wonderful community organizers of the Blueberry bluegrass festival: Norm Sliter, president of the Blueberry bluegrass festival; and Bill Donlevy, director of fundraising for the festival. It is truly a pleasure to have the festival in my constituency, as you know, and I urge all members to come out to the festival next summer. They are currently seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise now and receive the customary warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of International and Governmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. George Dong. Mr. Dong has had a long and vibrant career in reporting and broadcasting with the CBC, BBC, and Omni TV. Through his coverage of Alberta for Radio Canada International's Chinese section, broadcast in Mandarin to China for over 10 years, he has helped share and promote Alberta's story abroad. He is also the co-author of the recently published novel about Morris Cohen, General Two-Gun Ma Kun: Dr. Sun Yat-sen's Jewish Body Guard. Cohen was an Edmontonian, and Dr. Sun Yat-sen is regarded as the father of modern China. George's book is adding a colourful chapter to the Alberta story. He is seated in the members' gallery today, and I would ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, it's my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Dr. Charles Boulet from Lethbridge, Alberta. Dr. Boulet is an optometrist with a specialty practice in visual rehabilitation and development for children falling through the educational cracks due to visual impediments. Dr. Boulet supports the premise of Bill 204 and believes that we need to start paying attention to children's vision needs. He has defined a standard for comprehensive vision exams for children and believes, along with his research partners, that these exams should be mandatory as untreated visual impediments in children are costing millions each year to Education, Justice, Health, and social services. Dr. Boulet is in the members' gallery, and I would ask him to stand to receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the leader for the Liberal opposition.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you nine guests here in recognition of St. Michael's Health Group Millennium Pavilion's 25th anniversary. My guests represent the dedicated and caring management and staff as well as residents from Millennium Pavilion. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they please rise as I mention their name. We have with us this afternoon Ms Michelle Rose, manager, Millennium Pavilion; Mrs. Charlotte Tria, supervisor, Millennium Pavilion; Mrs. Janet Nichiporik, recreation activity convener; Mrs. Helen Guglich, resident; Mr. Con Popescul, resident; Mr. Roy Bruce, resident; Mrs. Lena Pukalo, resident; and Mrs. Caroline Onyskiw, resident. They had to have the handiwork of their driver, Ms Catherine Gallinger. Also, there were three that could not make it this afternoon to join us: Mrs. Mary Chrapko, Mr. James Rudnitski, and Mr. Andrew Archibald. I would now ask that the Assembly please join me in honouring them with a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Laurie Thiesen. Laurie is a lab technologist who I met the other day when we discussed the risks of privatizing laboratory testing. The experience of privatization of Alberta labs in the mid-90s compromised openness, accountability, and efficiency of lab testing and at times put patients' lives at risk, not to mention costing Alberta millions of dollars. I'd like to thank Laurie for her service to Albertans and her courage in coming here to the Legislature to ask the Premier and cabinet not to make this decision. I'd ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, this is a big day in the life of Marjorie Thompson. It's indeed a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Miss Thompson, from my constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, who has been selected as the winner of the individual leadership award, which was announced at the PDD provincial community leadership awards ceremony on October 16. Marjorie is a member of the Self Advocacy Federation and Albertans Advocating for Change Together. She works for the Gateway Association as a surveyor for the My Life Personal Outcomes Index and is a valued, committed, and adaptable employee who fosters great teamwork. Marjorie is joined here in the gallery by her fiancé, Kenneth. Kenneth and Marjorie, please stand and receive the welcome of the House.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a very special visitor to introduce to you and through you today. My uncle Régis Deschênes is sitting in the members' gallery and is visiting from Ottawa to help me in arranging my mother's palliative care. I would like to thank him from the bottom of my heart for his assistance in helping to ensure that my mom remains comfortably at home. Please join me in offering him the customary warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by St. Albert.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you my guests Marie Renaud and Raymond Nkorerimana. They are both part of the Lo-Se-Ca Foundation, a nonprofit organization that provides award-winning residential and day supports to adults with developmental disabilities. Their programs are in place for some of the most vulnerable citizens of our province, and they give them the support they need to live happy, healthy, and successful lives. Lo-Se-Ca was recently awarded the Prime Minister's award for the prairie region in the category of social innovation for their work. I'm very pleased to have them here as my guests.

I can say, Mr. Speaker, on a personal note that in the last year that I've come to know Marie Renaud, I have observed a strength of will and a courage of convictions which is rare and admirable. I can say that I've learned a great deal from her, and I believe that many in this House can, too.

I would ask them now to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions if I may. I, too, would like to welcome some incredibly special guests. I'm so pleased to introduce to you and through you Marie Renaud, François Busque, Raymond Nkorerimana, and Ron Bourret, who are all from the Lo-Se-Ca Foundation, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona so articulately introduced. They are such a worthy organization that I wanted to just build on that remarkable introduction. The Lo-Se-Ca Foundation, under the leadership of Executive Director Marie Renaud, is an amazing organization from my constituency of St. Albert. As a group they work tirelessly to improve the lives of individuals with developmental disabilities, connecting them to the community while promoting involvement and independence. As a not-for-profit organization they help foster a thriving and inclusive and such an important part of our community in St. Albert. Lo-Se-Ca stands for love, service, and care. I've had the pleasure of spending a lot of time with Marie and her team, and I want to assure you that I've witnessed first-hand how they take this motto so very seriously.

Mr. Speaker, I think Marie and Raymond are in the members' gallery, and François and Ron must be behind me. I'd like them to rise now and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Do you have a second introduction, hon. member?

Mr. Khan: Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased today to rise and introduce to you and through you to my colleagues in the House two very special and remarkable ladies who it would be safe to say that I would be lost without. The first is Eileen Hofmann. Eileen is the constituency manager in my office in St. Albert. I'm only half joking when I say that over the past year and a half Eileen has been helping to train me to be a good MLA. Eileen is an exceptional resource for our entire community in St. Albert, and I'm grateful for her work and so very pleased to call her a colleague.

The next person, Mr. Speaker, is my other boss, the real boss, my wife, RaeLynn. She is the mother of my two children, the love of my life, and my best friend. The single greatest accomplishment of my life was convincing RaeLynn that she should marry me 21 years ago.

I'd ask both of my bosses now to rise and receive the warm welcome of my colleagues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that I can follow that, but I do want to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly someone who will be very familiar to all members, I believe, Mr. Don Newman, CM, award-winning journalist and broadcaster, joined by his wife, Shannon Day, visiting us from Ottawa. Ms. Day some may remember. The Minister of Culture may have actually been here with her when she was a correspondence writer in Premier Lougheed's office. I'm pleased to welcome both Mr. Newman and Ms. Day to the Assembly today as they visit Alberta to promote Mr. Newman's memoir, Welcome to the Broadcast. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

St. Michael's Health Group Millennium Pavilion

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to rise today to help commemorate St. Michael's Health Group Millennium Pavilion on their 25 years of providing compassionate, supportive long-term care in Edmonton.

St. Michael's Health Group has a proud, agile, and visionary history, which began in 1976. It is coupled with strong stewardship, which encompasses people, programs, services, and facilities that continue to be valued as partners in our province's health care system.

Twenty-five years ago, Mr. Speaker, this organization responded to the ongoing realities of our aging population and with the support of the government opened Millennium Pavilion Seniors' Lodge, which offered independent apartment-style supportive housing for the elderly.

Over the years Millennium Pavilion has established a widely acknowledged culture of success, which is a determinant of an effective organization. Truly, they have a reputation for creating an environment of acceptance for all residents and their families, which honours their life history, supports their personal strengths and challenges, and maintains their dignity in a comfortable, safe, and homelike environment.

Features of their blueprint for success include taking the perspective of the residents by developing individualized and responsive health care plans and the provision of recreation programs that value independence and choice in an environment that promotes social involvement.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my heartfelt congratulations and sincere appreciation to all those from the past, present, and into the future who will and have contributed to the unparalleled success of St. Michael's Millennium Pavilion's 25 years of dedicated, loving care and exemplary service to their residents. Heartfelt thanks for adding immeasurably to our city, province, and country and very special best wishes in the years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Minister of Municipal Affairs

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another day, another ghastly performance by this Premier's Municipal Affairs minister. Just yesterday he was telling Albertans that the opposition was fear-mongering for raising the very valid concerns of municipalities across the province over Bill 28, concerns that it would strip away their autonomy and put them firmly under his thumb, under penalty of incarceration. He said that the language we used was frightening and that he needed to do work to undo the myths and rumours.

Well, it's beginning to look like the only frightening thing the Premier and her minister had to deal with last night was the furious backlash from mayors and reeves over this legislation. This morning the Premier announced that she will indeed consult with all municipalities and that local autonomy will be protected. Mr. Speaker, this is a victory for democracy, for local autonomy, and for all Albertans.

We can't help but notice, however, that this particular minister hasn't exactly endeared himself to his counterparts. He has all but torpedoed the province's relationship with Mayor Nenshi, and if the Premier hadn't stepped in this morning, he would have done the same with nearly everybody else. Here's a bit of free advice for the Premier: keep him away from Mayor Iveson. You want to preserve that relationship.

Mr. Speaker, this minister's erratic performance aside, I'd like to commend the Premier for coming around and doing the right thing. It is not often that common sense triumphs on the government benches, and we're all about credit where it's due. To the Premier: we are humbled and honoured that she has come around to our way of thinking. It's a welcome change, and I hope we see more of it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I realize there has been a bit of a private joke that just occurred. Good for you. Let's hope that the rest of the day stays just as friendly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Let us begin question period. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Your first main set.

Regional Governance

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, at 1:30 in the morning today the Minister of Municipal Affairs arrogantly told us that we had to rush through Bill 28 or every good thing about regional co-operation would come to an untimely end. A few hours ago the Premier's caucus caused her to come to her senses and slow down this train wreck of a bill that destroys municipal autonomy. Now, after two days of trying to convince Albertans that the three opposition parties were wrong and that the mayors all loved this bill, the truth has won out. To the Premier: how is it that this train got so far off its track?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the only reason that this could be characterized that way, of course, is because of the comments made yesterday by the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

I want to talk about a couple of real successes in this province, Mr. Speaker, things like the Shirley McClellan Regional Water Services Commission, the Mountain View Regional Water Services Commission, the Bow Valley Waste Management Commission. These are all examples of municipal leaders that have come together in partnership to ensure the viability of rural Alberta. I had the opportunity this summer throughout the province, in places like Vauxhall and Edson, to see other examples of this.

This legislation is an evolution with respect to how to ensure that we do better, Mr. Speaker. We're looking forward to working with the AUMA and the AAMD and C to continue to do just that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Please, no more interjections. I hate to interrupt.

Hon. leader, your first sup.

Ms Smith: That's precisely the problem, Mr. Speaker. This legislation fails to meet any of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties' seven principles on regional governance. It isn't voluntary, it doesn't allow the partners to define the region, it kills autonomy, it's hierarchical, it doesn't have voting equity, it doesn't use consensus, and it is not a user-pay approach to problems. Will the Premier assure this Assembly that this new bill will incorporate all of these principles?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the situation that I explained last night was why the bill was introduced without prior consultation about what the specifics of the bill were. Now that the bill has been introduced, we have the opportunity to consult with the AAMD and C and the AUMA and the other municipalities in order to ensure that they see line by line what the intention of the bill is. They will discover that their assertions that it doesn't meet the seven criteria are completely invalid and wrong. We'll make sure that everyone is onside when we pass this bill.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this legislation also fails to accommodate the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association's three principles of regional governance. It is not open, responsive, or accountable. It does not respect that the roles and responsibilities of municipal and provincial governments are different, and it does not envision a system where regional governance partners achieve a consensus of how things get paid for. To the Premier: will she assure this Assembly that the revised bill will accommodate these principles into the act?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, we had a great debate about this last night. I actually went through and I read the legislation that covers how it's created and how it's accountable, and I compared it to the service commissions that currently exist in the MGA and demonstrated that it's the exact same wording. When we're done going through this consultation, it will represent everything that the AAMD and C, the AUMA, and this government stand for on planning, collaboration, and organization to make sure that we all, regardless of the level of government, serve Albertans to the best of our ability.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Second main set of questions.

Severance Payments to Premier's Office Staff

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's silence on details about the severance package paid to her former chief of staff is deafening. He claims that after just six months on the job, he received $130,000 in severance pay. We've asked the Premier to confirm this number. She won't, which is bizarre because if it's true, you'd kind of think that she would. I'd like to give her another chance. To the Premier: does the $130,000 payment to her former chief of staff represent the total sum of compensation that he received upon leaving her office? Yes or no?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, we've made a commitment to put in place a policy for full transparency with respect to severance going past, currently, and in the future. I was very pleased today to see the Canadian Taxpayers Federation endorse that approach. We're going to keep our commitment.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's fitting that it's Halloween because the mystery continues. I will let Albertans come to their own conclusion based on that non answer.

But switching gears a little bit, to what extent was the Premier herself involved in negotiating the mysterious severance package that she keeps on hiding the details of?

Ms Redford: I wasn't.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Final sup.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, she keeps saying that she's going to release the information. Albertans want to know when. Why not now? Why not come clean, end the confusion, answer the questions, and release the severance details today? I think we all know why: November 22. To the Premier: will she release the details of her former chief of staff's total severance package before her members render their verdict on her leadership on November 22?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is all really amusing, coming from the party whose idea of transparency is Extreme Makeover, Wildrose edition. Lock them up in a room for a weekend, and they will make themselves over, put on a new set of makeup, and call themselves accountable, transparent, and equitable. That's not the way things work on this side of the House. We are developing Canadian leading strategies and policies to be the most transparent in all of our proceedings.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're going to keep on asking until we get the answer.

Breast Cancer Diagnosis

Ms Smith: In May of this year I asked the Health minister about a medical test that helps determine if chemotherapy is the appropriate course of treatment for a breast cancer patient. It's called Oncotype DX. It has been reviewed and recommended by the Alberta breast cancer group and approved for funding in Ontario, Quebec, Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, and Nova Scotia but not in Alberta. I asked the minister why it wasn't available here. Now, the minister has had almost six months to review this file. Why has he not approved Oncotype DX for use in Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said in response when this question was asked before, we are going through the health technologies assessment process with respect to this test. As the hon. member should know if she doesn't know already, the simple existence of a new technology does not mean it is automatically appropriate for all patients. Unlike the opposition, we rely on the evidence and we rely on the advice of clinical experts to determine not only if we offer a specific test in our province but to whom and under what conditions it will be provided. That's a responsible way to operate a health care system, and that's the way we do it on this side of the House.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about what the medical experts say. Up to 30 per cent of breast cancer patients get needless, expensive, and potentially damaging chemotherapy. This test could prevent that. In May I quoted a professor of medicine at the University of Calgary who stated: "We are beginning to despair at the inordinate time [it takes to make] decisions regarding the well-being of our patients." Well, it's six months later. Why can't this minister make a decision?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can quote all of the advocates she wants for this particular type of test. I'm sure any one of us in the House could think of other technologies and other drugs and services that are available. We have a formal health technology assessment process in this province. We co-operate with other provinces in reviewing the evidence. We are very close to completing the evaluation for this particular test, and we will make it available on the conditions that are appropriate for Albertans.

Ms Smith: It has already been recommended by the Alberta breast cancer group. I'll remind the minister that Ontario agreed to cover the cost of Oncotype DX for breast cancer patients more than three years ago, and they've reported a success rate of 97 per cent. Patients who have received the terrifying diagnosis of breast cancer need to know what is the best course of treatment. Doesn't the minister care that his foot-dragging is causing needless stress and suffering?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess we're into an area here of revisiting questions that have been asked and answered in the past. As the hon. member will know, there are rules and there are procedures around the assessment of new tests, of new drugs, of other things that we offer in a publicly funded health care system. I think what people would like to know is: if this test is approved and if other technologies are approved in the future, how would they expect an opposition-led policy that would purport to remove $5 billion from the budget of this province to pay for the very things they're advocating for for their own constituents?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Municipal Charters

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs says that he's disappointed with others who reference a big-city charter. Well, the Liberals have been talking about it since '08. The Premier clearly understands what a big-city charter is and why it's needed. The mayors of Edmonton and Calgary clearly understand what big-city charters are and why they're needed. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why is it that everyone but the Minister of Municipal Affairs is clear about big-city charters' intent and necessity?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, round and round we go. I have travelled all over this province, and I can tell you that everybody is interested in making sure that the province and the municipalities have the perfect relationship for the folks that we mean to govern. I just got off the phone, actually, and I can say that I talked to a mid-sized town mayor who expressed a lot of interest in what the charter would do and whether or not they could participate. Here we're focused on what the charter is and how it can govern the relationship between the municipalities and the province to serve our clients. They are strictly worried about the name, which is sorry for everybody else.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. To the same minister. Can the minister explain why he keeps blaming the summer floods for putting him behind on big-city charters, but the timelines on the memorandum of understanding says that the enacting legislation was to have been presented to the Legislature by spring of 2013, well before the floods?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I have said many, many times before in this House – it's funny how they've asked six questions and four of them are about the name of the charter and not about anything with any content. The charter is a relationship between the municipalities and the province. It's funny how they want a charter but they want the province to dictate what it's going to be. This is a discussion between the municipalities, and I can't force it to come faster. It's going to be a good discussion. Then, of course, it didn't happen in the timelines we anticipated, and we did fall a few months behind, but we're close to being done, I anticipate. Even the mayor of Edmonton has asked for just a little more time to review what we've done so far so that we can carry on.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that Mayor Nenshi of Calgary says that the minister hasn't really been part of the conversation on big-city charters, can the minister tell us: did he get moved off the file? Yes or no?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a lot of files, and I know that we have quite a few people in the department who are policy experts. My understanding is that there were policy experts from that city and policy experts from this city and policy experts from my department who worked on a lot of the details. I didn't work on it every day because I have a lot of files, including housing and the libraries and emergency management and all the rest of the municipalities, so I wasn't there every day. I doubt the other two mayors were either. We have experts that work on that and work on the day-to-day negotiations, and that's the simple fact.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the New Democrat Opposition.

Private Health Services Delivery

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday, when I asked about a plan to privatize lab services in Alberta, the Premier said this: "18 months ago this government, this Progressive Conservative government, said that... we believed in a public health care system... We do not change our minds from Monday to Friday." Yesterday the Premier mocked the NDP for our commitment to public health care, saying that her government would, "not... exclude any option," meaning, of course, privatization. To the Premier: why did you change your mind from Tuesday to Wednesday?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is a government that is committed to building Alberta, supporting families and communities, and supporting public health care. We are very proud of the fact that we had candidates in every constituency in the last election that were consistent with respect to that perspective. We are going to provide the best options possible in a public health care system for people to ensure patient safety. This is wordsmithing. It's word-spinning. It's not even worthy of the discussion that we need to have about how to create a better health care system for Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Well, I'm just quoting the words. They've already been smithed, Mr. Speaker.

This Premier claims to have been elected to protect public health care, but her government is doing the opposite. They're going ahead with an unprecedented privatization of home care, and they're planning to give $3 billion of public money to a private lab services company. When the Premier says public, she means private. Black is white. It's also Harpersesque. Why won't this Premier give Albertans a straight answer on her plans to privatize medical lab services in this province?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. There is only one plan, and that plan is to strengthen and broaden the scope of services that we offer Albertans as part of our publicly funded health care system. The hon. member is wordsmithing. If his argument is to hold any merit, he should be holding forth about physicians in this province. They are, in fact, private businesses. He should be talking to us about the 30 per cent of health care that's delivered in this country that is delivered through the private sector. This is about where the money comes from. It is not about the mechanism for the delivery of care.

Mr. Mason: Talk about wordsmithing, Mr. Speaker.

On Tuesday the Premier said that privatization of lab services isn't happening. On Wednesday she more or less admitted that it was. On Tuesday the Premier said that she was elected to protect public health care. On Wednesday she criticized the NDP for our commitment to fully funded public health care. Mr. Speaker, it's now Thursday. Will the real Alison Redford please stand up? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, as we all know, anyone from the front bench is eligible to rise and answer the question.

Give it your best shot, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is, after all, Halloween.

Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted to answer the question once again. Let's face facts. The hon. member's use of the term "privatization" apparently, in his world, means the use of any private provider to deliver any publicly funded health care service. The fact is that 30 per cent of health care services in this country are delivered with the assistance of private providers. We have many successful examples, and much capacity in our health care system, including surgery, is provided by private partners. Quality standards are the same for all.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, the first five spots reserved for leaders' questions have expired, and I would now appreciate little or no preamble to supplementary questions here on in.

Let's begin with Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Highway 63

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway and bridge construction through Fort McMurray is ongoing. One of the biggest irritants for my constituents in Wood Buffalo is the seemingly random timing by contractors. In the past month there have been repeated instances where contractors failed to provide proper notice to the public on lane closures, failed to provide adequate signage, and failed to meet deadlines. This is especially difficult during extended rush hours in the morning and evening and on shift-change days, Thursday and Sunday. The issue came to a head earlier this month when a maintenance crew closed one lane of highway 63 until 7 p.m. To the Minister of Transportation: have the contractors been penalized for these infractions? What is he doing to stop these massive delays?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right to talk about the frustrations of some residents of Wood Buffalo. Alberta Transportation has more than $700 million in construction projects under way there. This means that there will be construction delays. We've clearly defined restrictions for our contractors in the area for when lane closures are not permitted, and the incident that the member refers to was a violation of these restrictions. We have and will continue to issue penalties to contractors who violate their contractual obligations. The short-term pains we hope will lead to long-term gains, but in the meantime I appreciate the hon. member bringing up those shortfalls.

The Speaker: Hon. member, first sup.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister: what is the minister doing about the constant traffic nightmares on and around Confederation Way and Thickwood Boulevard and the interchanges as residents of my constituency are stuck in traffic for an hour or more waiting for these interchanges to be fully functional?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We have made considerable progress in the hon. member's area, but I can tell you that a second lane on the eastbound and southbound ramps at both Thickwood and Confederation have opened. Just this morning we opened a third northbound lane on 63, between Morrison Street and Thickwood Boulevard. I've already heard that this is helping. There are more lane openings planned in the upcoming weeks, and we've expanded the restricted hours for our contractors to stay away from those rush hours because that seems to be one of the biggest problems. So we'll keep listening, and we'll keep making improvements, and I appreciate the hon. member drawing these legitimate concerns to our attention.

Mr. Allen: To the same minister. As this is close to my heart, I'm curious to know how the Alberta government is progressing with the implementation of my report recommendations and its commitment to have the twinning of Highway 63 completed by 2016.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that we're on track to finish highway 63 by the end of 2016, something that certainly the Official Opposition would never have funded. You know what? In June 2012 we had issued seven contracts covering 136 kilometres of work worth more than $400 million. Construction will include safety rest areas, pullouts, passing and climbing lanes, and we've also taken many steps to make the road safer. This is a long journey. There's a lot of work to be done in the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo area, but we understand it's needed. When people ask for it, it's legitimate, and this government will continue to build Alberta and get these and other projects completed.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, at 2 a.m. our Wildrose caucus was tired but united. We knew we had to do all we could to delay Bill 28 until our elected municipal officials were given the opportunity to provide feedback on a very poorly drafted piece of legislation. Today, despite this Municipal Affairs minister yesterday calling us fearmongers and liars and all kinds of names, the Premier made an abrupt U-turn and has embarked on a process that I hope results in a much better piece of legislation. To the minister: can you please employ a more collaborative approach in the future when passing legislation affecting our municipalities.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate the puffball question. For the two years that I've been Minister of Municipal Affairs, I've been to every AUMA and every AAMD and C meeting, I've been to regional and zone meetings all around this province, I have gone from one end of the province to the other meeting with individual municipalities, and my door is always open. Our consultations don't just go on for a period before we introduce legislation; they go on before, they go on during, they go on after, they go on every single day so we can make sure it's always done right.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it wasn't this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, given that at roughly 1:30 this morning this minister claimed that the Assembly had to push forward and pass this legislation within days in order to avoid losing the Capital Region Board and 18 related organizations and given that this is now relevant because the Premier has announced that passage of this bill will be delayed, will the minister immediately table the court order or other documentation that he relied upon when he said that we must pass this legislation within days, or these dire, awful consequences would result? We have a right as members to understand why you made that claim and if it was true or not.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I suggested that the discussion was about whether or not there was consultation that preceded the introduction of the bill, which there wasn't because there was a court case going on, which is why it was introduced without consultation. We still await a court decision that could be a couple of weeks away and that could have some very serious consequences. But we're going to continue to proceed with consultation so that every single municipality gets their input and makes sure that they know that most of the stuff that they said is completely unfounded and inaccurate. Then they'll know that this is the right legislation with perhaps a few tweaks that they might suggest.

To the minister. Given that Airdrie's elected municipal officials have made it clear, as have most other communities, that they want any participation in a regional planning board to be entirely voluntary, both on the way in and, if it doesn't work for them anymore, on the way out, will you commit today that when you bring back your revised, or tweaked, bill, it will protect local autonomy by making membership in regional boards absolutely voluntary? Yes or no?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I said several times last night that I have always said that I will work with municipalities to try and come up with a solution. I would not force them into something, but letting them not work together is not going to help make sure that we build strong regions to accomplish all of the growth and accommodate all of the growth that's coming into this province.

I find it very ironic, Mr. Speaker, that earlier in the week they criticized the Minister of Transportation for talking about legislation they had at the time. Now they criticize us because we didn't talk about it, and we're going to consult after. It must be awful to be the opposition and constantly be so depressed and critical of everything that you never get to see the light of day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Vision Assessments for Schoolchildren

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, recently the University of Lethbridge detailed the impacts that visual impediments to learning have on a child's education. Dr. Boulet, here in the gallery today, points out in his report that less than 15 per cent of students have their vision tested comprehensively despite the fact that 80 per cent of learning is dependent on vision. Overlooked vision problems are often misdiagnosed as learning disabilities or behavioural problems. My first question is to the Minister of Education. What measures are currently in place within our school system to ensure that comprehensive visual testing is available for our children?

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I'd like to say is that I want to commend this member about how passionate she's been on this particular subject and how she's raised the profile of the Irlen situation even though her bill may not have turned out exactly with the support she'd have liked.

I want to say that identifying students that have special needs with respect to education as early as possible is obviously very important. In our province the school boards have the responsibility and the flexibility to determine the most appropriate ways to provide students those supports. They come in a number of different ways. One of them is in the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, which kindergarten students can access.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the hon. Minister of Health. Minister, given the low rate of student comprehensive vision testing, should the Eye See . . . Eye Learn initiative, just mentioned by our Minister of Education, be re-evaluated to ensure that testing is mandatory for children of school age?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, like my colleague the hon. Minister of Education, I also want to congratulate the Member for Red Deer-North for her advocacy in this area.

Mr. Speaker, those decisions, again, would be made on the basis of evidence. I think that in our government, under the leadership of our Premier, we have an excellent record of standing up for the importance of early screening, whether we're talking about hearing or vision or any other sensory function that is absolutely critical to learning. We always need to be looking for opportunities to expand our ability to identify children who are at risk and who are in need of support and to provide that as early as possible.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My third question, again to the hon. Minister of Health: do you see a need for a more comprehensive screening protocol to detect a wider range of vision problems, helping to manage vision, academic, and health outcomes and ultimately improving long-term costs in our health and education systems?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is a resounding yes. As I was just mentioning in response to the last question, things like the maternal child health initiative as part of our early childhood development strategy and other work under way in my ministry are aimed at exactly the objective that the hon. member is talking about. The way that a health care system helps support learning and other developmental opportunities for children and youth is through screening, is by identifying those issues early and then by tailoring programs and services to provide the necessary intervention to help that child.

I thank the hon. member for the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Women's Shelters

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government ran on an agenda of strengthening families and communities. They even introduced a bill this week called the Building Families and Communities Act. It all sounds so nice. The reality is that we have a social system that fails thousands of women each year who are routinely turned away from emergency shelters. The Premier's response is to paper over the cracks and appoint a new minister. There is a shortage of beds for women fleeing violence, prostitution, sexual exploitation, and human trafficking. To the Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety: what is your ministry doing about it?

Ms. Jansen: I would like to thank the member, Mr. Speaker, for that question, my first in the House as Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety. I think the very fact that I'm standing here as Associate Minister of Family and Community Safety shows our Premier's dedication to these important issues. I ask you to join with me. Any time you have suggestions or thoughts on how to improve the lives of our most vulnerable citizens in this province, pass them along to me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wilson: Actions are louder than words, Mr. Speaker.

Considering that the WIN III shelter is merely days away from closing its doors permanently, services a unique demographic of women in a culturally sensitive fashion, is the only one of its kind in Alberta, and has a very high success rate, to the same minister: what further criteria would this shelter possibly need to meet in order to receive funding from your ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the budget aspect actually is in Human Services because we all work together in that area. But I want to assure this hon. member and members of the House that when the federal grant for the WIN III shelter was cut in June, they approached us, and we've been working with them ever since. We lined them up with Homeward Trust to make an application for ongoing funding, and they received approval from Homeward Trust for that ongoing funding. They're working together now on the conditions of that funding. Why they determined that they should make a public announcement of closing their doors in the midst of that process is beyond me.

Mr. Wilson: Well, perhaps this minister can enlighten the House as to why the province only funds a limited number of beds at emergency shelters despite the fact that many shelters have the additional space and resources to assist women in need. Yet these brave women are turned away by the thousands every single year. Do you just not care?

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member knows that under the leadership of this Premier this government has provided a great deal of care and understanding, compassion, and resources for sexual violence issues, for protection of women escaping sexual violence, for the announcement of the family violence death review committee process. All of those things are in place so that we can reduce family violence, prevent family violence, and assist those people who are victims of family violence.

The hon. member will also know, because his party wants to cut $5 billion from the budget, that the allocation of scarce resources is always the most difficult job in government. We try to do that to make sure that we make the most effective use of the public resources.

Disaster Recovery and Mitigation

Mr. Hehr: The recent flood is said to be the most costly natural disaster in Canadian history. Unfortunately, the government has provided no pragmatic solutions for funding future disaster events. Other jurisdictions the world over have moved on to solutions to not only minimize damage from future flooding but also protect the public purse at the same time. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs, I have heard many troubling stories from my constituents in navigating the DRP and the subsequent appeal process. Will the minister commit to making the appeal process transparent and accessible to all Albertans?

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly proud of the DRP program that the province of Alberta has offered to those in need. It's one of the most progressive, one of the most streamlined that the entire country has ever seen. In fact, I've heard other jurisdictions say that they would like to model theirs after ours.

Mr. Speaker, our appeal process is also very transparent. It's right on the website now. It allows those who feel like they have not got what is due them ample opportunity to file a very simple appeal and to have it evaluated through a quasi-judicial, independent third party like the Municipal Government Board so that we can make sure that everyone is getting exactly what is owed to them.

Mr. Hehr: To the Deputy Premier, I understand the government is currently compiling engineering reports and studies to prevent future flood damage. Once a consensus emerges as the best way forward, how does this government plan on funding upstream mitigation to protect Calgary and other jurisdictions from future flooding? Are you just going to add another billion to the debt column?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I have met with the federal government several times along with my other provincial counterparts, and we have constantly pushed the point that our disaster recovery programs are shared with the federal government when it becomes a large disaster. They could be eligible for up to 90 per cent of the cost as long as we make sure that we turn in all of our numbers appropriately. We've indicated to them that it's their and our responsibility along with municipalities to try to prevent these disasters. It's much more feasible to invest in prevention than it is to pick up after the disaster. They've indicated that they're working on a program. We're going to continue to put pressure on them across the country to make sure that we're working on mitigation together.

Mr. Hehr: Given the cost to the public purse for the flood recovery, estimates as high as $6 billion, and given that Stephen Harper's Conservatives have no interest in national programs, will this government commit to what has emerged as international best practices and implement a provincial disaster insurance program to protect families and communities and the public purse at the same time as a result that there's going to be inevitable flooding and natural disasters occurring in the future?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, all of these questions are very good and very legitimate. I want to thank the member for them. We've discussed that same issue with our provincial counterparts and with the federal government. Every other jurisdiction out of the G-7 or the G-8 that has done that has done it at a national level. Frankly, most people who would be optional to buy flood insurance is a small group, which makes the cost astronomical. We have continued to talk to the federal government and encourage them to sit down at the table with us as partners to talk about what we could do for a national flood insurance program, and we await those continued discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

Pension Plans

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Consumer debt levels in Alberta are rising, and the majority of workers do not have income security after retirement. However, this PC government continues to oppose attempts to expand the Canada pension plan even when it's obvious that a stable pension plan for all Albertans is long overdue. To the Associate Minister of Finance: why is this government resisting the security, value, and good old-fashioned common sense that an expanded Canada pension plan would afford, or is it still burdened by firewall sentiments that still lurk back somewhere in the PC government?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government is committed to increasing retirement savings for all Albertans. That's why we passed the legislation this year that allowed for pooled registered pension plans as a way to help Albertans working in the private sector to access pension plans. There is dialogue happening in other provinces across this country that we're engaged in, and we'll continue to engage in those discussions regarding CPP.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, given that this government should lead by example by administering public service pensions so that other employers can follow, does the minister actually think that it's fair to change the rules in the middle of the game, making workers pay more, receive less pension, and work more years to access the retirement money which is actually theirs to begin with?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, I know what Albertans expect, and what they expect is for us to participate in and administer a program that's sustainable for the long term. The generation of workers that will be coming to retirement have a right to expect that they will be able to receive a sustainable pension going into the future. Prudent action today means a sustainable future for Albertans, and that's the way we wrote it.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that private pension schemes and RSPs have been paying diminishing returns for more than a decade now and that public pensions are now weakened by this government – not the supergenerous severance packages for senior bureaucrats, mind you – when will this government sober up, let down their firewall, and start living up to the pension responsibilities that they have as a government?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, this government has met those responsibilities, will continue to meet those responsibilities, and continues to look towards the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Whistle-blower Protection for Health Professionals

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Doctors are seeking protection against a broken health care system. This time last year the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation said that the new whistle-blower legislation will cover health care professionals and set a gold standard. Justice Vertes disagrees and has recommended expanding whistle-blower protection to include physicians. Will the minister explain when this government will bring forward legislation to protect doctors and front-line professionals from bullying and intimidation?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the whistle-blower legislation we brought forward. It does protect many classes of people. One of the difficulties I have when I listen to the questions from the opposition is that they do not read the legislation before they ask questions. I would encourage them to do that. They will find the answers in the legislation.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'm speechless that this minister doesn't even know his own legislation. Totally speechless.

Given that this is just another good example of a government that doesn't listen, as this minister knew from the start that doctors were not protected under his own gold standard whistle-blower legislation, can he please explain to Albertans why doctors, who are trying to protect our patients, were kept off the list?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, one of the difficulties whenever we're asked questions is that I don't think they've done their proper research. They need to start doing the research before they ask questions. There are medical professionals that are covered under the whistle-blower legislation. Our whistle-blower legislation permits any report to be made to the Public Interest Commissioner. I would encourage them not to present false accusations in this House, not to fearmonger but to do their research, look at the legislation, and then they're going to find their answers.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, this is embarrassing.

Given that Justice Vertes said in his report that advocating within the health care system for . . . patients is a basic function of a physician [and that] physicians also have a responsibility to "consider the well-being of society in matters affecting health," will the minister please commit today to bringing in further legislation in this fall session that protects doctors?

Mr. Scott: Just to assist the member, I'm going to read a couple of the sections of the act under schedule 2.

- (c) "Medical staff" means a physician appointed by a public entity designated under section 2 of Schedule 1, to admit, attend or treat, or who utilizes the resources of the public entity in respect of, patients;
- (d) "Professional staff" means a health practitioner, other than a physician, who is regulated under a health profession statute.

So they are covered. [interjections] They are covered. You need to start doing your research. Do your research before you ask questions in the House. [interjections]

The Speaker: Shall I just stand here for the remaining eight minutes? I could barely hear what that last answer really was and how it concluded, and while I'm inclined to give the associate minister the floor again to start over, I will move on today.

Let's go to Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat. And, please, keep your interjections absolutely down.

School Class Sizes

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie has seen significant growth in the last year, with an average of four children per family. With this exponential growth we are seeing even larger school class sizes, where in some instances we have over 70 students and three teachers in one classroom. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Given that Alberta's population will continue to grow, what measures are in place to mitigate the foreseeable growth and address ballooning class sizes?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, thanks to this Premier we're investing in communities and families in a number of different ways, and it's nice to hear this example from the member. I know we have infrastructure challenges, but it's great to see the innovative and collaborative approach that the teachers are taking, with three teachers team teaching in a class of 70.

Some of the things that we're doing, obviously, in the capital plan: the commitment to 50 new and 70 modernizations and the investment in modular classrooms that we've got. We've got a hundred of those rolling out, up from our typical 40 a year. Of the 54 additional ones that we're putting in the flood-affected zones, that we'll be able to use in subsequent years, we've got 400 students in those classrooms already.

The other thing that we've done is that we've listened to parents and Albertans and teachers who've told us: take as much money out of the system and the administrative and the corporate side as you can, and get it in the classroom. So we've actually increased the funding for inclusion and small class size initiatives and things like that.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that we're seeing such large class sizes, what can your ministry do to ensure that quality of education is not compromised right across the province?

Mr. J. Johnson: It's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, he noted one example. We have large class sizes across the province for different reasons, some because of the class or the way it's taught, some because of infrastructure, and some because we have a lot of students and pressures on enrolment that way. But it's really important to note that when we're looking at quality of education and the success of the student, the size of the class is not the most important thing to track or to try to affect. Obviously, the engagement of the parent is the most important, but second to that is the quality of teaching. We've got a task force out talking to teachers and Albertans about what we can do to make sure teachers have the supports they need and that we have the assurances that we need to have great teachers in the classroom.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the fiscal realities we're currently facing, what can your ministry do to ease the heavy loads of teachers who feel very stressed out right now?

Mr. J. Johnson: Another good question, Mr. Speaker, and I know that as a former teacher it's close to this member's heart. That's one of the reasons why we wanted to make sure he was on the task force for teaching excellence. This is one of the things that we're asking them to talk to teachers about: are they getting the proper training and resources and supports they need?

Also, we're doing formal things. We've got some things in the teachers' agreement that are having us do actual formal studies with the ATA and school boards across the province. In addition to that, we're doing informal work with teachers, trying to find out with school boards what we can strip out of the tasks that they have today to make sure they're focused in the classroom on making our kids have the best learning experience possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Flood Mitigation

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've seen first-hand two Alberta floods in the last three years. I don't think any of us can truly empathize with a mom and dad who just lost the home they raised their kids in or the rooms where bedtime stories were read. The saddest pages in this real-life story are those that tell us that this tragedy was made so much worse by the lack of preparation of this government. The government has a crucial mandate to keep Alberta families safe, and they botched it continually, ignoring a flood mitigation report. What does this government say to people who've lost their homes, knowing that billions of dollars of devastation could have been prevented with just a little foresight?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, you know what? We know that flood mitigation is the responsibility of municipalities, the province, and the federal government because it costs us all. It costs families the most, so we constantly work on that. The report the member refers to: every recommendation was done or in process except for two, and this legislation that we've introduced in the House this week is going to address those last two issues. It's very important that we keep in mind that we all do our best to try and prevent disasters, but we also have to expend resources when disasters occur. You can't prevent them all, but we continue to work invariably. I can tell you one thing: the $5 billion they would cut out of the budget would mean no mitigation whatsoever for anybody.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in 2010 the PC MLA who chaired the flood mitigation committee and report said, quote, unfortunately, when the next one happens, which it will eventually, people are going to say, "What about the flood report? Why didn't we do anything?" how can the Minister of Municipal Affairs still continue to brush off taking responsibility for his lack of action?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I take full responsibility for every bit of action we've done, including the $82 million that we've invested in the last few years in flood mitigation, which several communities have said saved them. Now, we haven't spent the $300 million that was recommended in the report, but we constantly have challenges between people who say that we need to spend money in health care, people who say that kids need schools. It's a constant challenge on where you're going to put resources, and we do our best.

But I'll guarantee you that the cuts that they suggest will do nothing to help build education or health care or do anything to protect people, to mitigate against the next flood. We will, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that constituents in southern Alberta are still waiting on flood claims from both 2013 and as far back as 2010 and their families are still facing financial hardships, what is this government going to do to ensure that the 2013 flood victims get their claims so they can stop relying on our local food banks?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, from the 2010 claim, the member knows full well because he asked me in a written question, there were 2,433 claims from that flood. There are five outstanding residential claims. That means we're doing an exceptional job. Perhaps the member would want to consider that maybe there are exceptional circumstances. Our job is also to make sure that we do not have abuse of taxpayers' dollars, that people are paid the fair amount, not more and not less but the proper amount to help them rebuild. There are only five outstanding cases in over 2,400. To me, that speaks of excellence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

After School Programs

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Suburban constituencies built on the fringes of Calgary may envision new schools, hospitals, and state-of-the-art recreational facilities for young families. On the other hand, Calgary-Currie is an inner-city constituency whose neighbourhoods are mature and well-established. I have spent my time working hands on in Calgary-Currie, and I have learned a great deal about the area that I've been blessed to serve. My constituents are asking for assistance in building community hubs, complete with after school programs for their children. My question is to our Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. What is our province's position on the development of after school programs?

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. I'd like to acknowledge this hon. member's tireless advocacy on behalf of her constituents on this issue. We know that high-quality after school programs that are recreation based can have a positive impact on society, that they will build communities, and that they can actually help us to deal with a lot of our societal challenges, things like childhood obesity and the tendency for young people to get involved with high-risk activities like gangs and criminals. Our government is very much committed to developing and exploring a province-wide after school strategy for recreation.

Ms Cusanelli: Mr. Speaker, will the minister please inform the House exactly where we are currently in terms of responding to this commitment?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, after school recreation is part of our overall investing in families and communities strategy, and it fits very well with the social policy framework as well as the Active Alberta policy, which was placed forward by my portfolio. Tourism, Parks and Recreation is continuing to work with stakeholder groups across the province. In fact, just this past weekend I met with stakeholders at a meeting of the Alberta Recreation and Parks Association, and this coming weekend I'm going to be in Red Deer at the Alberta sport plan consultation, in which we will be working with community groups that deliver these programs in order to provide the kinds of benefits that we need in our society during the after school period.

Ms Cusanelli: Mr. Speaker, my last question to the same minister: in what way is your ministry demonstrating its commitment to program development and funding for after school programs to offer our children a positive outlet in their communities during those critical hours after school?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again, certainly, the after school programs that exist right now are excellent ones, and we want those to be expanded. We are continuing to work with the municipalities, with the community groups, with the provincial sport organizations that deliver these programs, and we acknowledge their benefit to the young people. We're continuing with our consultations as we move forward towards the development of a province-wide after school recreation strategy.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, that concludes question period. Your point of order, Member for Airdrie, at 2:37 p.m. has been noted. There were numerous attempts to not use preambles to supplementaries today, including Calgary-Currie who did a good job as well. I'll just say thank you to all of you for allowing at least 15 times six, 90 questions and answers to be raised today.

In 30 seconds from now I will resume with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Official Opposition and Government Policies

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tonight children across our country and many other countries of the world will dress up in costumes, mask their true identities, and parade from door to door promising tricks unless they get their treats. Opposition chose to get into the Halloween spirit early, constructing a new disguise this past weekend to hide their true identity in hopes of scoring more support from Albertans.

This week my colleagues and I have proven our commitment to building Alberta through the introduction of several key pieces of legislation, protecting Albertan ideals that the opposition do not support despite their new mild-rose appearance. That legislation includes Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. This is important, Mr. Speaker, because we know and have known for years now that climate change and protecting our environment for future generations is a priority that all Albertans share. We accepted the facts of climate change years ago and have made significant progress in ensuring that our greenhouse gasses are reduced. Finally this weekend the opposition declared that they, too, now believe in climate change, Mr. Speaker.

Unfortunately, even children at Halloween know that under the mask they wear today, they are still the same party they were yesterday. Every day we are working to keep our commitments to Albertans and lead a results-based government. Meanwhile the opposition is spending their time trying to fool Albertans by disguising themselves as Progressive Conservatives. Maybe next year they'll choose to dress up as Liberals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Stony-Plain.

Natural Gas Production Review

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Until quite recently natural gas was the financial backbone of Alberta. It's a recent phenomenon that oil yields more income than gas for Albertans. Technical improvements and the acceleration of drilling activity in the United States and Canada have led to an oversupply of natural gas across the North American market. In 2012-13 natural gas and by-product revenue was $954 million, or approximately 2.5 per cent, of government revenues here in Alberta.

To address these challenges, the all-party Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, a quite wonderful committee, I might add, has undertaken a review of natural gas in Alberta specifically to ask the following questions. What is a sensible, feasible way to encourage the operation of personal and commercial vehicles on natural gas? How can we encourage value-add of natural gas liquids in the province of Alberta? How can we encourage the use of natural gas for industrial use in Alberta, for cogen in the oil sands, to displace diesel in remote communities? What are the best strategies for Alberta's natural gas producers to access tidewater and the global LNG market?

Thus far we've explored the economic feasibility of enhancing Alberta's natural gas competitiveness with energy think tanks, engineers, and economists. We've learned about the real-world experience of Bison Transport and their partners Shell and Westport Innovations in implementing the first LNG green trucking corridor in Canada between Calgary and Edmonton. We've also heard from TransCanada Pipelines and Petronas, partners in one of the largest LNG projects here in western Canada. This week we heard from EnCana and MEG Energy.

We plan to hear many points of view over the next few months and to return to this Legislature with ideas about stewardship of one of Albertans' resources, natural gas.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Blueberry Bluegrass Festival

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the outstanding Blueberry bluegrass festival, one of the largest in Canada, which takes place every August in my constituency of Stony Plain. Since 1985 well-known bluegrass artists and enthusiasts have been gathering in Stony Plain to experience the best bluegrass from around the world. Although the music is what draws fans back to Stony Plain exhibition grounds every August, it is the local artisans, the on-site Myhre's Music store, and the availability of the musicians that make the festival truly unique. This year artists like Ricky Skaggs, the Whites, the Boxcars, and Junior Sisk & Ramblers Choice took the stage for the three-day festival.

I read a review that simply sums up, I think, what the bluegrass festival intends, and this I've taken from one of their postings.

This is the first time attending and I'm so glad that I did. I purchased tickets for my parents to attend as well, as they enjoyed the weekend as much as I did.

This event is not only relaxing and enjoyable but the entertainers . . . were outstanding. There was not one act that was disappointing at all. The best part was that everyone attending was friendly and there was no alcohol on site which meant that you did not have to put up with a bunch of rowdy drunks – everyone was there for the music.

I will definitely be attending again, and highly recommend others to attend as you won't be disappointed.

Mr. Speaker, it is the dedicated volunteers of all ages that make this bluegrass festival one of the largest in Canada, and I am thankful for their hard work year after year. It's truly the music and the volunteers that make this even better.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

War of 1812

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two hundred years ago an event of great significance was firmly embedded in the fabric of Canada's history. It came to be known as the War of 1812, and it lasted for three years, from 1812 to 1815. The Napoleonic Wars were raging in Europe, and Britain was forced to implement restrictive trade measures, including the imposition of quarantines on ships which traded with the French. Additionally, the impressment of British subjects on American ships by British naval forces was resented by the U.S.

On June 18, 1812, U.S. President James Madison signed a declaration of war against Britain, and the conflict began, bringing the automatic involvement of British colonies, including Canada. The United States made plans to invade and conquer Canada, and President Madison was quoted as saying that the conquest of Canada would be a mere matter of marching. Little did he know. The War of 1812 showed the bravery, tenacity, and unwavering spirit of British and Canadian troops, anglophone and francophone, and First Nations allies, who, often outnumbered in battle, succeeded in staving off American invasion.

This Remembrance Day, November 11, 2013, marks the 200th anniversary of the Battle of Crysler's Farm, the decisive land battle of that war, where Anglo-Canadian troops and Mohawk warriors successfully thwarted an American attack which would have led to the capture of Montreal and likely the loss of Canada.

As a result of defeating the American invasion, our nation evolved into the proud, independent, and democratic nation-state of Canada, inheriting the unequaled model of British parliamentary government. Two hundred years on we Canadians continue to remember and to be inspired by the bravery and untiring dedication of those who came together to repel the invaders and who stood firmly in defence of the Crown and of Canada.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go to Tabling Returns and Reports, I've received a few notes here, again regarding the latitudes and liberties we seem to allow each other and/or take when we're doing private members' statements. Now, I didn't hear some of the private members' statements as clearly as I would have liked to. I was engulfed with a flurry of notes. I will review the Hansard, however, very shortly. I'm going to remind all of you again to please use your private members' statements much more cautiously perhaps than has been the case in some that we've heard recently, including one today.

I do apologize to the members that I didn't hear closely enough what the issue was today, but I assure you I will review Hansard, and then we will definitely have to do something about it because it's a special privilege given, where we do not interrupt, and we do not allow points of order to be raised. So the only opportunity is for the Speaker to rise and make comment, and I am doing that now. I'm begging your indulgence to please proceed at a higher level of decorum with both your words, your gestures, your thoughts, and your actions during private members' statements, and that will elevate the overall debate and discussion in this House.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Let me go on to a tabling from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table more copies of a petition calling on this PC government to reverse their plans for cuts to the community access programs for persons with developmental disabilities and to properly support some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens. Today I'm tabling 615 more signatures from the communities of Fort McMurray, Lethbridge, Lacombe, Camrose, Sherwood Park, Red Deer, Edmonton, and Calgary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter that was written by the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, asking 12 questions about their income-based seniors' pharmacare plan. We know that this government's plan to eliminate universal seniors' drug coverage is opposed by Alberta seniors and the NDP, so I'm hoping that these questions in the letter are answered in due course.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today from Chris Ford, who actually addresses the Premier first and is writing of his disappointment about the relationship between the government and their unionized workers. He references the prison guards' situation from last summer. He makes the point that "the actions of all levels of government involved . . . dramatically undermine the security and safety of all workers in Alberta" and that they should be demonstrating, although they're not, that workers "have the right, responsibility, and legal requirement to refuse unsafe work."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a constituent and a student of government, Miles Pavka, who has come up with what he thinks is a better way to designate voting areas. He asked me to share his suggestions with the government. I have the requisite copies of that.

In addition, I have Mr. Burnell Bennett, a farmer who farms in the MD of Taber. He owns the land of his farm, which is in the MD, but he lives in town. He feels that he should be able to vote in the MD where his farmland is, that he owns, and where he pays property taxes. I have copies of that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

If not, hon. members, allow me to please make a tabling, with the requisite number of copies, of a letter from the Member for Calgary-Currie requesting early consideration of Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012, at Committee of the Whole on Monday, November 4, 2013.

Hon. members, I have one point of order that was raised by the hon. Member for Airdrie. Would you like to proceed with your point of order or withdraw it? You're motioning to withdraw it? Go ahead.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Anderson: I will. Sure. Why not? It's 23(h), (i), and (j) that I refer to, Mr. Speaker. The member across specifically said that we would cut $5 billion out of their budget. Of course, this is not the case. Our capital budget, that we released, clearly says that the amount is $4 billion that we would spend on infrastructure. The government is spending a little over $5 billion. That is a difference of about a billion dollars. I know they just keep on saying these things, but it's just not accurate. I think it gives rise to – well, clearly, it casts aspersions and says that we have false motives, and it makes accusations that are not true. Obviously, I understand that the other side will probably say that that's just a disagreement – fair enough – but I think it's important to get that on the record.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Does someone wish to rise from the government side?

Mr. Fawcett: I just want to make a comment that it's kind of hard to tell over on this side as to how much money exactly they would cut out of the budget. I think they should clarify it because they've quite honestly said that had they been in government, they would limit spending to inflation plus population growth. If you look at that over the years and what that would be and where the budget would be, it would actually be way more than $5 billion less in government spending today than it would be afterwards.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, this is clearly a dispute as to some facts and positions by the various caucuses. Both are now on record for I don't know how many times this now marks, at least half a dozen, I should think, if we look back at Hansard. Hopefully, we can get over and past this and move on.

As such, that concludes this point of order with no point of order.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: While I have the floor, hon. members, I wish to comment on the point of privilege that was raised two days ago. I've given this matter considerable review, and I'm prepared to now rule on the purported question of privilege raised by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills two days ago in this Assembly.

The purported question of privilege concerns information that was released about Bill 32, the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act, prior to its introduction in this Assembly and the advertising that occurred with respect to that same bill. In fact, the bill was on notice and was printed in the early Order Paper that was published last Friday. That notice, is what I'm saying, was printed. It was subsequently introduced in this Assembly during the afternoon session of October 29.

At the outset I wish to note that the parliamentary requirements found in Standing Order 15(2) for bringing this purported question of privilege were met since notice was received in my office at 11:24 a.m. on October 29, 2013. In short, this matter was raised at the earliest opportunity, and I was advised at least two hours prior to the commencement of that day's sitting.

Several points were outlined by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills when he spoke on October 29 in this Assembly. Those points are in our recorded Hansard proceedings on page 2528, wherein he said, amongst many other things, the following:

We had seen a sign, obviously in the orange and blue colours, displayed publicly outlining Bill 32. We've seen press releases and public statements outlining the details of Bill 32. We know, of course, that Bill 32 was on the Order Paper yesterday, Mr. Speaker, and it was not yet introduced until earlier today.

During the item called Tabling Returns and Reports in our daily Routine, that same member tabled three documents related to his purported question of privilege, and they are listed as sessional papers 1001/2012-13, 1002/2012-13, and 1003/2012-13. The first document is an article from the October 29, 2013, Sherwood Park News entitled Bill for Playground Zones Announced. The second document is a picture of a coloured sign on what appears to be a wire fence which contains the words Building Alberta: Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads (Bill 32). The third document, entitled School and Playground Zones Could Soon Be Harmonized, appears to be an article of some sort, but no publication name and no source is immediately evident on the tabling. I have reviewed all of those documents very carefully.

In his notice of his purported question of privilege, which he read into the record two days ago in this Assembly and which is recorded at page 2528 of our Alberta Hansard, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills alleged that “the government deliberately prevented the Members of the Legislative Assembly from fulfilling their duty and, as such, breached the rights of the Members of the Legislative Assembly and thereby committed a contempt.” The chair interprets this statement to suggest that this member’s ability to perform his duties was violated by the government’s actions with respect to what occurred surrounding Bill 32 prior to its introduction in this House.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona both indicated that this matter could be characterized as a form of contempt. In a ruling that I made on May 29, 2012, about which I’ll say more shortly, I cited the definition of contempt as found on page 82 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition. That definition, just to remind you all, reads as follows:

It is important to distinguish between a “breach of privilege” and “contempt of Parliament”. Any disregard of or attack on the rights, powers and immunities of the House and its Members, either by an outside person or body, or by a Member of the House, is referred to as a “breach of privilege” and is punishable by the House. There are, however, other affronts against the dignity and authority of Parliament which may not fall within one of the specifically defined privileges. Thus, the House also claims the right to punish, as a contempt, any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions; obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties; or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House, such as disobedience of its legitimate commands or libels upon itself, its Members, or its officers.

Of course, much of the discussion two days ago focused on former Speaker Kowalski’s finding of March 5, 2003, wherein he did find a prima facie case of privilege when the government held a technical briefing on a bill that was on the Order Paper but had not yet been introduced. That ruling is found on pages 303, 304, and 305 of Alberta Hansard for that day. It was a ruling, I should add, that followed closely the ruling of Speaker Milliken in the Canadian House of Commons on March 19, 2001, concerning a detailed briefing on a bill which was on notice but had not yet been introduced in Parliament in Ottawa. Speaker Milliken found that there was a prima facie question of privilege in that case. Both of these aforementioned rulings were raised and commented on extensively by members in this Assembly two days ago. For everybody’s reference, Speaker Milliken’s ruling is discussed on page 85 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition.

Of course, as part of my review since Tuesday I also noted that no one mentioned a later ruling, made only 17 months ago in this Assembly, concerning the same subject. In fact, it was my first ruling on a question of privilege, and it was delivered here on May 29, 2012. It can be found on pages 58 and 59 of Alberta Hansard for that day. In that case the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona raised a similar purported question of privilege concerning Bill 1. She alleged that information about that bill was provided to the media prior to the bill’s introduction in this Assembly, thereby constituting, in her opinion, a contempt of the Assembly. An added element in that application was that opposition staff were denied entry to the press conference at which the information was provided.

At that time and after a very thorough review of the facts and evidence available I concluded that there was not a prima facie question of privilege. However, I also stressed “the importance of ensuring that members are the first to see proposed legislation in its final form before a bill is disclosed to outside parties.” That quote appears on page 58 of Alberta Hansard from May 29, 2012, and the key point there is “in its final form.” At that time and as also with the case before us today there was no factual basis to actually conclude that explicit and verbatim details or provisions of the bill were disclosed. Accordingly, it was held that the member’s ability to perform her functions in that instance had not been impeded.

I would like to point out that not every statement about a bill that is on notice will automatically lead to and qualify for a prima facie case of privilege. In fact, Speaker Milliken came to this same conclusion in a November 5, 2009, ruling concerning comments made by a federal minister at a press conference. In that particular case, it was held and noted that the minister had not disclosed details of a bill yet to be introduced since he had only discussed in broad terms the policy initiative proposed in the bill. Similarly, Speaker Milliken found that there was no impact on a member’s ability to perform his or her duty in a parliamentary ruling that he made on March 22, 2011, which can be found at page 9113 of House of Commons Debates for that day.

Turning to the case before us today, there is no allegation and, indeed, there is no proof that the actual bill, Bill 32, in its final form was provided to the media or to any outside entity prior to its introduction in this Assembly two days ago, and neither was any evidence found in that respect.

Now, with respect to the advertising aspect of this situation it is difficult to conclude on the basis of a picture of one sign that the government had disregarded the Assembly’s role in passing legislation. The fact that the sign refers to Bill 32 rather than the specific name of the act could be taken as a further indication that the minister was not treating the proposals as a fait accompli. The Minister of Transportation did note that the news release issued by the government was prefaced with the words “if passed.” However, that news release was not tabled.

Accordingly, the chair does not find that there is a sufficient factual basis to find that the actions of the minister constitute a contempt of this Assembly. In other words, the physical letter of the law has not been broken, but, I submit, the spirit of the law has been negatively affected. In the chair’s view, this matter should not have even arisen in the first place. The rulings of previous Speakers as well as my own ruling regarding similar matters clearly stand for the proposition that the Assembly is entitled to be the first to know the detailed contents of a bill in its final form after it has been placed on notice.

Although the activities of the government in this case did not amount to a prima facie question of privilege, I want to caution all members to remember this. If there are future briefings when a bill is on notice in this Assembly, it will likely not be long before a different result and a different ruling ensues. Furthermore, in my view, any prior advertising about the nature of a bill must be undertaken very, very cautiously, if it is undertaken at all, so as to not create any impression that the contents of the bill are already law when the Assembly has not even seen the bill yet, much less debated it and passed it. In this respect, members may wish to examine the decision of the Ontario Speaker in 1997 when the government of the day advertised a certain bill as if it had already been passed. In this respect, please visit Ontario Hansard of January 22, 1997, at pages 6441 through 6443.

Finally, I would ask that ministers, in particular, review the commitments made in previous years, notably in 2003 and last year on May 28, about not disclosing the final-form contents of bills on notice, about embargoed briefings, and about ensuring that opposition caucuses are briefed.

The chair does not want to create an impression that the restriction on providing information about bills on notice has been reduced. I merely wish to note that, whether by design or accident, the information provided by the member raising the question of privilege did not meet the standard necessary for a finding of a prima facie question of privilege in the case before us today.

Your Speaker and this entire Assembly would no doubt be highly comforted if the Government House Leader or someone on the government side was able to provide even greater assurance that the role and authorities of this Assembly will continue to be strictly respected and that the priority of members to be the first to learn of the final contents of any bills when they are placed on notice will also be respected.

By following this expectation, members will not be put in the awkward position of feeling that they were being denied information that has been provided to others. If one is wondering about which principles apply to a situation like this in the future, one can look to former Speaker Kowalski's March 5, 2003, ruling at page 304 of Alberta Hansard, where he quotes Speaker Milliken's 2001 ruling in relation to the federal context, which should not be too hard to translate into the Alberta context.

The convention of the confidentiality of bills on notice is necessary, not only so that members themselves may be well informed, but also because of the pre-eminent role which the House plays and must play in the legislative affairs of the nation.

The chair sincerely hopes that we will not have to visit or revisit this issue again in the near future. This case is now closed.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 31

Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

[Adjourned debate October 29: Mr. Eggen]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I presume, then, that I still have some time left to speak. I think that my adjournment and the time sort of corresponded to each other. I think I timed it so well.

The Speaker: Hon. member, forgive me. I've just been given notice by the table that your time has actually expired for this bill. My apologies for not having noted that.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak to this bill? Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, you have the floor, sir.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Coming from rural Alberta, just 80 minutes from the beautiful Waterton park, I have to tell you how much I love nature and love the environment that we live in. We live in a beautiful province, a beautiful part of the world, and we're very blessed. Of course, with blessings comes noblesse oblige, an obligation to be good stewards, to use what we have in an appropriate way and to take care of it not just for ourselves to enjoy but also to make sure that it's there for future generations.

When I read the title of this bill, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, I was excited. I want to protect the environment, and I want to do all that I can on behalf of my constituents to see that they and their families and children and children's children will be able to enjoy it, too. As I read the bill, I became concerned. I'm not sure that it's going to do what the title gives us hope might happen. A few points, not in any specific order, I don't suppose. I want to know how the bill is arm's length if the government and the cabinet are doing the appointing of the various members, the chair, the science advisory board. I don't see any mention in there about what the qualifications or the requirements will be for people who might be considered to serve on there.

Being somewhat cynical after all these years of living, I wonder if one of the qualifications might be: is he or she a card-carrying PC party member? Have they met the donation threshold? Are they members of the PC family? Are they failed incumbents? Are they retired MLAs or persons with other embarrassing photos or recordings of people in positions to make decisions? Tongue in cheek there. What about screening? Will they be screened with regard to voting records, bank balances, donation history, party campaign workers? I don't know; it doesn't say.

But you can understand, given past performance, why I might tend to be a little suspicious. When it comes to recruiting staff to man, to person, I suppose – to be PC – this new agency, will current department employees be given the opportunity to apply? What will be the cost of transferring those benefits? Will they be transferred? Will these employees be exposed to any sort of loss, a loss of security, a loss of benefits? That's been raised to me, so I share it here today. Will the agency charge for its services, and how will those charges be determined? Will they be mandated or given the requirement to raise revenue to sustain themselves? Where will the money come from to pay for this agency? How will its performance be measured?

All people in business and dealing with others realize how important it is to have clear expectations when it comes to hiring somebody or when it comes to creating a new agency like this. Will there be mutually agreed upon desired results? When I say mutually agreed upon desired results, I mean the government will have expectations, the citizens will have expectations of what this new agency might be able to do to protect the environment. Certainly, our trading partners have expectations. I believe that it's the very existence and the higher profile that these expectations have now taken over the last year or two that is prompting the development of the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act.

I think by name we would expect and we would probably hope that our trading partners, the citizens would expect that it's going to do just that, protect the environment. But we need to have clear targets. We need to understand what our trading partners expect of us in clear terms and what we're going to then be able to do to meet those expectations, because we need the pipelines. We're landlocked. We're dependent upon an ability to get our resources and our goods to market, and those who are purchasing them or contemplating purchasing them want to know that these resources are being developed and being commercialized in an environmentally friendly way.

What targets will there be? Will the stakeholders have some say in the development of these targets? What bonuses will be paid to these new employees in this new bureaucracy for reaching 40 per cent of their targets? Will it be 95,000 bucks? What will the consequences be for failure to meet targets? A raise? How will this new agency improve current behaviour by each stakeholder group?

The citizens: we each have an obligation to be good stewards in that little area that we can impact. Businesses and industry, those that are often accused of being the biggest polluters or rapers of the environment or whatever you want to call it: what standards will they be expected to achieve? We have standards now, and it seems part of the problem may be that those standards aren't being enforced when violations are identified.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think the reality is that we know that we have to demonstrate actual reductions in genuine, real, man-made causes of climate change. Our customers and our nation and customer nations demand it. We can't afford another costly example of industry-subsidized spin like Shell Oil, for example, a company with more money than God, receiving over $700 million of taxpayer money to use unproven technology in an attempt to give the appearance that we are doing something about greenhouse gases. Seven hundred million is over twice what it would have cost to do all the Groeneveld recommendations, an act, had those things been done, that would have saved lives and several billion taxpayer dollars for remediation. In fact, if you're wondering where we might come up with the $5 billion that we would cut, well, there's $4.7 million right there. We would have spent $300 million and saved perhaps $5 billion. Seems like a pretty good return on investment.

We must be good stewards of our government. We owe it to ourselves. We owe it to future generations and to meet existing and prospective customers' expectations, as I've said. We can do it. I just don't see how this agency will actually help.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to ask the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner – he's indicating that he didn't think the use of funds was entirely appropriate for the carbon capture and storage. I wonder if he could make a comment regarding the efficacy, as he sees it, on the program which the Alberta government undertakes with respect to agricultural producers. I understand the hon. member has some experience in that field, and I wondered about the, you know, zero-till and the min-till rebates that we're giving for carbon reduction. Can you comment on whether or not you think that is a good approach to reducing carbon dioxide emissions?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. Thank you for the question. I'm not sure that I'm fully capable to answer it, but that's never stopped the other side, so I'll give it a shot, too. I know from some research that we have done within our caucus that some of the sale of carbon whatever-it's-called hasn't actually taken place, that some of those companies that have sold those credits haven't actually been able to deliver on them, so that's certainly money that's been wasted. There hasn't been a reciprocating or a matching benefit for the money that was spent, so I don't think that's been a good use, but certainly things that encourage more efficient use of the resources and the consuming of fewer hydrocarbons, for example, would be beneficial.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: I'd like to direct my questions also to the hon. member here. It talks in here about the agency being governed by a board of directors consisting of five to 10 appointed by cabinet. With your life experiences, hon. member, I'd like to see if you have concerns in that regard.

Also, it talks about the creation of a science advisory panel but no credentials that may be accrued to those appointees. I was wondering if you could just expound on your feelings in that regard.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you for that question, too. Of course, anything that increases the size of bureaucracy is a cause for concern. In terms of the credentialing that might be required of those that would sit on the science advisory board, we would hope that they would have some sort of scientific background or experience. I would certainly hope that we're not going to appoint and pay for 10 advisory board members who are then going to have to commission a study done by scientists. I think that would be dysfunctional. That's a concern. Maybe that will evolve if we have the faith to pass this, but at this point it would have to be an act of faith, and I'm not prepared to grant that.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. In the hon. member's remarks he suggested – he said, “tongue in cheek.” Nonetheless, he suggested that some people that get appointed to provincial committees might have done so through having pictures suggesting extortion or blackmail, and I'm wondering whether the hon. member would like to apologize to those Albertans that might feel besmirched by those remarks.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie has raised a point of order. Citation, hon. member?

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Anderson: The citation is 23 (h), (i), and (j): “imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member.” This member never said what this minister has suggested. He gave a little tongue in cheek on the issue, but he never made the accusation that that member's talking about. The member needs to maybe take himself a little less seriously. I think that would probably be a good start. I know he's terrified of losing his seat in the next election, but he should just tone it down a little bit.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you seem to be looking for clarification. Maybe the Minister of Transportation might offer one.

Mr. McIver: Well, no. Actually, Mr. Speaker, I stand by what I said. I was asking a question. I don't have the Blues in front of me because it's too soon. He did actually make remarks about people being appointed to provincial committees, and he did actually say that one of the reasons might be something to effect of – I'm sure I don't have the exact words – that they might have a picture of someone. I will let those words stand by themselves, and I ask the hon. member whether he feels like he maybe owes an apology to some of those people that have been appointed to committees after suggesting that that might be the reason they got appointed.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on the point of order? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Certainly. I certainly didn't use the words that you ascribed to me, nor did I intend to. To any of those who haven't been appointed because of photos and recordings, I apologize.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I think I've heard an apology based on a clarification from the minister. I think we've dealt with this matter enough, and I would just ask you to be careful with your language. It is Thursday afternoon. I know we're anxious to get home, but certainly in the heat of this debate I would ask you to be careful with your language.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: With that, under 29(2)(a) we still have some time left. Is there anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Hon. minister, did you get an answer to your question regardless of the points that were raised earlier?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I did. I think, as you said, it was an apology, and if the hon. member . . .

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You have another point of order?

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Anderson: I'm sorry, but he already asked his question, which was answered, so it therefore goes to another member who has a question under 29(2)(a). Those are the rules of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, hon. member, you raised a point of order in the middle of his question. The member responded to that, and I didn't hear the full amount of his question. I wondered if he had a complete answer to his question. If he has, he would say so. If he hasn't, I'm expecting that he's going to indicate that. Do you have a citation for your point of order?

Mr. Anderson: Standing Order 13(2), point of clarification. You've clarified. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. minister, you were trying to get an answer to another point.

Mr. McIver: No. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I heard the further remarks that the member made, and if that's what qualifies as an apology after the previous remarks and the hon. member wants to leave it on the permanent record in Hansard, then I think that speaks for itself, and it speaks for the hon. member all by itself.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others under 29(2)(a)? We still have some time left. The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: I'd like to ask the member: what are some of the things that he would think would be more successful methods for reducing greenhouse gases in our province, ways that would possibly help our population to be more energy efficient, to save more money personally, and also have the corollary effect of reducing greenhouse gases other than this carbon capture and storage scheme that the government has put forward?

3:30

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. An excellent question worth answering.

An Hon. Member: Take your time.

Mr. Bikman: I will indeed. In fact, I'll speak slowly and loudly.

There is a management principle that says that you don't inspect in quality; you design it in. You don't measure a system until you've got a system in place.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you for that response, hon. member.

Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, did I catch your eye that you wanted to speak?

Mr. Bilous: I'm happy to speak after this hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: You hope to speak after this member. Then I will recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will watch my tongue. I rise today to speak to Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. I have not yet made up my mind if I will oppose or support this bill. I do have some questions that I would like clarified as we go through this process. I guess the biggest one is about the name of the bill, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. When I look through the bill, you know, it says that the purposes of the agency are to obtain credible and relevant scientific data and other information and, in carrying out these purposes, to co-ordinate and conduct environmental monitoring, to collect, store, analyze, and evaluate environmental monitoring data, to report, and to make the data and related evaluations publicly available. It goes on and on, explaining not so much about protection but just about data relevant to our environment.

I don't think there's anybody in this House that will say that the environment isn't important. Personally, around my house and our ranch we do everything we possibly can to protect the environment. You know, we recycle all of our papers and plastics and bottles. We have our diesel tanks and our gas tanks, and we make sure that we're very careful not to spill anything. I have irrigation. When we're putting out cattle oilers, we make sure that they're not too close to the drainage canal so that nothing will get in the water. I have lots of friends who are actually fencing off dugouts so that their cattle don't go in the dugout and contaminate the water with their excretions. Everybody, from urban people to rural people, is very concerned about the environment.

We look at the automobile industry – you know, they're going to greener vehicles – and everything that industry is doing also.

You know, when I was a drilling consultant, we would take 10 days from spud to release to drill a well at the start of this project. Three to four years later we were doing spud to release in four days. That has a huge impact on the environment. We're burning less fuel. We're emitting less fumes out of our stacks. We're drilling more efficiently. We're completing wells more efficiently. We're working with other service companies to make sure that they're more efficient.

In the Resource Stewardship Committee we met with EnCana, who has natural gas vehicles, and they're talking about moving their whole fleet to natural gas as much as they can. Different trucking companies are moving their whole fleets. It's costing them a lot of money right now to change their big diesel engines in their semis over to natural gas burning engines. You know, that's a commitment that they're doing to try to help the environment.

With the bill there's not a lot of talk about protection. You know, who's going to enforce the laws on the environment? We need to know who's going to call the shots. Who's going to ensure that when this data comes out, it's going to be enforced? Now I guess it'll be the Energy Regulator for anything to do with the energy industry.

I'm not just a drilling consultant and a rancher and an MLA. I'm actually a scientist myself. I went to SAIT and got a diploma in chemical technology and worked at MagChem in the chemistry lab there also. We took some heat from Alberta Environment. You know, the process that we were doing . . .

Mr. Anderson: There's more to you than meets the eye.

Mr. Hale: There is more to me than meets the eye.

You know, we had the big reactors. We were taking magnesite, and that was mined. They'd bring it in, and the whole process would turn it to magnesium, which was supposed to be better for the environment. Anywhere aluminum was used, they were going to use magnesium. Engine blocks, pop can lids: those were all going to be magnesium. But in the process we had some huge environmental concerns. We had these reactors with smoke stacks that were coming out. Every day they would bring us bags of the emissions, and we would test them in the morning, and we would test them at night to make sure that they were within those regulations. So there was monitoring going on. Alberta Environment at that time did the enforcing. We had to make sure we were within those limits. Any of the byproducts that were produced they'd bring into our lab, and we'd test them. We did find some stuff that was a little bit scary that we were producing. There have been checks and balances all along that have made sure that everybody puts the concerns of the environment first.

With the creation of this new board, I just have some concerns about who's going to be monitoring the board. Who's going to ensure that all this data that comes out is going to be looked at and enforced?

Another concern is the payment. Right now we know that, you know, there is, I believe, $50 million that's getting paid through the oil sands project. When that runs out in 2015, then who pays for it? Does it go to all of the industry? Does it come out of the taxpayers? What's going to be added on to us as Albertans to cover the cost of this?

When talking about the cost, it talks about the powers of the agency. "If a Chief Executive Officer is appointed, the board shall determine the compensation to be paid to the Chief Executive Officer." Well, who's going to be the watchdog on what this board is paying out to the CEOs? What are they going to get for pensions and severances, and who's going to govern what they're getting paid?

It talks about the powers of the agency.

The Agency may, if authorized by a resolution of the board, borrow money

(a) by credit card, overdraft or unsecured line of credit.

Again, who regulates the amount that they can spend? You know, are they going to get total free rein: if you think you need it, go ahead and buy it? That's a huge concern to me. Now, the Auditor General, I'm sure, would be one of the watchdogs, but his reports come out after the fact. It takes a while till he does his audits, and we need someone to hold this group accountable.

Employees. Will the environment minister's office now and all the employees at Alberta Environment be transitioned over to this? Will they be sent to work for this new board, that can hire employees as its needs to? Will they get paid to go to the board and then not get paid through Alberta Environment, or is Alberta Environment paying, and then any expense that they incur for working for this board they would be reimbursed for also? Are they going to be getting paid from two different directions?

I guess it just comes down a lot to accountability. Will Alberta Environment be holding them to account? Will the new regulator be holding them to account? How are they going to split those duties of what they're monitoring? Are they going to be monitoring the watersheds? Are they going to be monitoring the cities, with their environmental impacts? They're going to be monitoring the oilfields – we know that for sure – the oil sands, all the natural gas facilities.

There's not a lot of clarification there about who's going to be looking after what and who's going to be enforcing what. That's something that I would really have liked to have seen in this legislation. I know we heard it. When we were debating Bill 2, the Energy minister assured me. He said: trust me that that will be put in the regulations. Well, I guess we're waiting for the regulations to come out to see how everything is going to be split up and what the duties and the tasks are for each division. We think the catchphrase now in the energy industry, as we try to access new markets and ship our products outside of Alberta, is social licence. My concern is that this is just a way of fulfilling that social licence without any meaning. Knowing the hon. environment minister, I'm sure that she does have a plan. I hope she has a plan.

Is this just all about catering to acquire our social licence, to get our products to new markets, to get these pipelines built? If we had more substantial information in this bill, it would allow us to draw our conclusions and see, you know, what exactly we are doing. Who's going to be regulating this? Who's going to be protecting it, not just monitoring and providing data? We need significant answers.

I'll reiterate that everybody is, you know, worried about the environment. We see in our small town of Bassano, where I'm from, that they've gone to the recycled garbage containers that people pull out to their front yards now. We see collaboration between two of those small towns. Instead of each little town having its own garbage truck burning lots of fuel, they go together, and they can buy one more fuel-efficient truck and service both communities. So there is co-operation.

I know the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has mentioned the regional co-operation. I do know that he knows my area, Strathmore-Brooks, and that they co-operate fully. There's some good co-operation going on down there.

Getting back to the environmental part, you know, there are just some questions I would like answered, as we carry this on, so I can fully understand the mandate of this bill and who's going to be doing the enforcement and keeping tabs on the people that are hired here. I look forward to having further discussions with the hon. minister of the environment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How interesting: a mad scientist from Strathmore-Brooks. When you were talking about that, when you were working as a scientist, were you self-monitoring, or was that something that you were doing under regulation of the government, or was that something that the company did on its own, something that the company thought was important?

Mr. Hale: Actually, they mentioned self-medicating. I can tell you and I was going to say that we did make our own alcohol. It was the purest form that you could make. It was a lab procedure. We had to do it.

Mr. Anderson: You had no choice.

Mr. Hale: We had no choice. It was something we had to do.

Mr. Anderson: I didn't say that you had to drink it, though.

Mr. Hale: No. We just had to make it.

Getting back to the hon. member's question, we were regulated by Alberta Environment. We had to send in our data of what we found all the time. Specifically with the air monitoring, we would take our samples from the stacks out of our six big reactors, and we would test it. I, as someone that was testing it, would run it through our machines, and if it came back with levels that were too high – there was a lot of chlorine. We did use chlorine in the process. When we would take the magnesite, they would heat it up, and they would mix it with chlorine. They would kind of melt it, and then the magnesium would float, you know, separate, from the unwanted materials. So there was a lot of exhaust coming out of it.

Our job was to ensure that the exhaust that came out of it wasn't over these limits. We would report our findings to Alberta Environment. I wasn't part of that reporting procedure. I would just give the gentlemen or the ladies the data, and then they would take that data and do with it what they would. But I do know that we did get shut down a couple of times by Alberta Environment because our emissions weren't what they were supposed to be, so we would have to shut down, and then we'd go through the process and make sure that we were putting in the right amount of chlorine and that the whole reaction was taking place in the most environmentally responsible way.

When I talked about some of the discharge that we got out of our system that they would bring to us that they weren't quite sure about, that too was something that we had to report. Anything out of the norm: report to Alberta Environment. We had storage water sites that were onsite there. Any of our coolant water would go into these storage ponds. All that had to be retested before we could pump it down the disposal wells.

The interesting fact – and I did ask my boss this question one day. I said: "Well, if we're mining this magnesite out" – I believe it was in the Banff-Canmore area, somewhere out there – "and then trucking it in, why are we trucking it to the facility? Why didn't we build the facility closer to the product?" The answer is that our disposal wells, where we would pump the water down after it was tested and met all of Alberta Environment's requirements – we pumped it down into a saline water source way down in the ground like a disposal well. That's where the water that was coming out of this whole process best fit, to that water source in the ground. Instead of trucking all the water that was going to be disposed of, the brackish water that went into that same water, it was easier to truck the raw material to the facility. Then we would make sure that all of our tests were completed.

It was a process that started over in England, actually. They started with one small reactor and had the process working great, and then they brought it over to Alberta, and we set it up and went from one small reactor to six big reactors. If you walked into that facility, there were pipes. It was an engineer's nightmare. I mean, there were pipes all over. It was quite the process, I'll tell you. It was quite the process, but we learned a lot. We learned that maybe going from one small reactor to six huge ones wasn't the best step to take, and it was a government-funded project. There were some partners in it, and it was looking real good for industry.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Bilous: That was 29(2)(a), I believe.

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, 29(2)(a) is over, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to the second reading of Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. You know, this is a very interesting bill. I think that at the outset I'd like to say that Alberta's NDP has been calling for legislated monitoring to occur, so I'm pleased to see to an extent that the environment minister and this government are finally coming to their senses and listening to the Alberta NDP in this regard. But I'll temper my congratulations a little bit because of some questions that I have and how I'm a little cautious of the bill as it's written now.

To start, Mr. Speaker, Alberta definitely needs scientifically sound, independent data about our environment to make the right decisions to balance the resource production with the long-term health and sustainability of this province. On that point, I think we're in sync with the government there, and again we're glad they finally caught up with us.

We have a few suggestions for this bill, and there are a couple of concerns that I have, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we've been calling for an independent body, a body that's arm's length from the government, to be able to make decisions that are completely free from political interference or any kind of interference. The challenge with this bill at the moment, with the way it's written, is that it's not going to be an independent, arm's-length body making these decisions. We're relying on the minister to appoint people to this process or to this agency who will then select the scientists to participate. The secondary challenge with that is: based on which credentials are these scientists going to be selected? How can Albertans be certain that they are independent, free thinking, and not influenced whatsoever by the very board that selected them?

This speaks to the problem of appointments, to begin with, in any capacity. When you don't have an independent arm's length, a distance between government and a body that they're selecting, questions arise, questions about judgment. Again, if we're trying to put forward legislation that will in fact monitor and protect our environment, then we need some distance. There are some examples I'll give.

Look at the government's recent handling of Alberta Health Services. If this government isn't forced to colour between the lines, then they appoint the wrong people for the job. The caution here is that the bill provides authority to the minister to appoint board members, and we want to make sure that the people that are on this board represent all Albertans and not simply PC interests or friends or friends of friends.

Again, we have an example here. Back in 2011, when a PC appointment was made to review this very topic, he had to resign in disgrace for unethical lobbying. This government has a track record of making some judgment errors. If we want to put the environment at the top of the list as a priority, then we need to put safeguards in place. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, if you had the opportunity to pick the person that gives your workplace evaluation. Is that completely free from bias? I'm not so sure.

A few questions. Let's say, for example, that the government did hypothetically appoint the right people. Where's the commitment from this government to properly fund this agency? If this board goes to the minister and says, "We need more money to do our job," what will the response be? Will they be given the dollars? Why are we entering into a debate on this legislation without a clear picture of what the funding model will be for this agency? The truth is that the devil is always in the details, and this is the place where it should be debated, in front of all Albertans, with all 87 members so that we have the opportunity to truly represent our constituents and reflect their interests, concerns, and ideas.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation mentions cost recovery. Is this government considering a carbon tax on Albertans, as reports leading up to the bill recommend? These are answers that need to be in place before we move forward with legislation.

The other cause for concern is that the minister will be controlling and wants to control how often the agency gets to report to the public. Again, you know, they talk about raw data and public access and transparency. I mean, there's no guarantee that that's going to happen and that we're going to get the answers.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we have a chance here to be real leaders in environmental monitoring and to be first class and put Alberta at the forefront, so I really hope that the minister will be open to amendments that not only our party but the opposition parties are going to put forward to improve this bill to ensure that there is accountability, that we are making the best decisions on behalf of Albertans, that disclosure comes to Albertans in the public before it's filtered through the ministry, and I look forward to the dialogue that we're going to have in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I'd like to table a reasonable amendment to this bill.

Mr. Eggen: Reasoned. Both reasoned and reasonable.

Mr. Bilous: Well, it is. It is reasonable and reasoned.

I'm moving this on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 31 . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, would you please send the original to the table if you haven't already done so?

Mr. Bilous: The original is with . . .

The Deputy Speaker: So it's coming?

Mr. Bilous: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Wonderful. Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Shall I continue?

The Deputy Speaker: No. Just pause, and let that be distributed.
Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm moving this on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be not now read a second time because the Legislative Assembly believes that the bill fails to provide for unbiased, effective, and accountable independent monitoring in a comprehensive manner, which includes consultation with the full range of affected groups.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Speaking to the motion, is there a response from the government side? No? Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Great. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We reflected on Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, and you've heard our critic and myself and now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview make some comments on this. We thought long and hard about this bill, and certainly, as I said from the outset, the intention of the bill as described by the minister of environment when she introduced this is certainly honourable and looking down the same path that we might aspire to as well.

But there are just a couple of issues around, I think, independence and effectiveness of this potential act. We think we should take it back and just sort out a couple of things and then bring it back forward with these changes.

The first issue that I question is the effectiveness of the environmental monitoring as a whole and the new agency in particular without plans for adequate or stable funding. How can this agency conduct its operations, Mr. Speaker, and its plan for the future without that provision for public money to continue on?

It is not an inexpensive endeavour to start this agency, nor do we expect it to be, but we certainly don't want it to become some sort of corporate adjunct to the energy industry. The essence of and not just the actual independence of this agency is key, but also the perception of that independence I think is really important, too. If it's not there, like I said the other night, then we lose not just the effectiveness of the agency but that perception that we want to cultivate, both in North America and around the world, that we are dealing with our environmental issues here in Alberta in an effective and just sort of manner. Right? That's very important. I think that if we pulled back a bit and fixed that, that would be a good idea.

Second of all, we know that industry really wants this agency. We've heard from industry and we've heard from the government as well on this issue. This idea of partly funding it through the corporations: how could that be really independent, right? I think that, yes, they can indirectly fund it. They can indirectly fund it by paying the corporate taxes and the individual taxes for those highest earners, that are long overdue through our revenue system, just like everybody else pays their dues. Yes, I'm paying a little bit, too. The hon. members for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and Edmonton-Centre will pay a bit, too. We'll all chip in through our taxes to pay for an independent agency that doesn't have those corporate ties. Sounds like a good idea to me. That's how we run lots of other things. For example, our justice system runs like that. That's pretty basic. If we could parallel this agency with our justice system, I think we'd be all the better for it.

Further to this independence and transparency of the agency, the agency being seemingly still dependent on ESRD and government for allocating funding based on some unknown plan or formula: really, again, how could they, Mr. Speaker, be seen as moving forward? As well, no legislative requirements for how or when this data will be released to the public: I have a big problem with that. I mean, they could pump out all the good data in the world, but if it's filtered through the minister's office, as judicious and, you know, impartial as she might be, then still there is that perception. Folks, part of the currency we're dealing with here with this agency is the perception of independence. It's very important.

This legislation as well contains no qualifications for appointment to the board or the science advisory panel and does not even contain any guarantees of representation from certain groups such as First Nations and scientific experts, you know, or the nature of what or who the scientific experts on this board will be. We've heard this many times already before. I won't elaborate on that, but it's patently obvious, Mr. Speaker, that if you're not getting the best and representative people from affected areas, then you're undermining your credibility. How representative or comprehensive can this panel be when there are no requirements for appointment?

This PC government has a pattern of biased decision-making, Mr. Speaker, and murky reporting, I think, and without proper standards, qualifications, and safeguards very specifically registered in this legislation, this agency will just go down in confusion, as we have seen from a long history in the past. We've talked about the Marceau decision. That was embarrassing; it really was. It didn't seem as though the government even blinked on their decision to ignore that judicial decision in regard to excluding the Pembina Institute. I just really found that to be quite beyond the pale.

Another issue that I would just like to bring forward, then, please, is that I think it's really important for the scope of this agency to be commensurate with resources that are allocated to it. So, once again, commit to providing that stable funding. I think that above all else, this successful monitoring agency cannot subvert its purpose within the IRMS in pursuit of its function. Basically, it's saying that this is a public relations exercise, I think, more than anything. I don't know. I don't want it to be, nor do I want to believe that it would be so, but if this new agency is amenable in its place within IRMS rather than actually serving the function and gathering the reporting of the environmental data, then, Mr. Speaker, I have to wonder: what level of effectiveness are we really looking at here?

Another noted purpose, according to what I've heard here, is that this new agency is to manage the perception that the government's role as owner, manager, regulator, and developer and as the main beneficiary leads to conflicts of interest; in other words, public relations rather than actually monitoring.

You know, we are the owners of this resource, and we are the regulator, too. It's incumbent upon us to provide this agency, certainly – I've said that from the outset – but if it's not providing that independent function, then we're only shortchanging ourselves. It's like you're an enabler for bad behaviour – right? – or for potentially questionable results coming out monitoring the very land, air, water, and energy resource and the humans that live in that area and then shortchanging that monitoring process. You can fool some of the people some of the time, but when you're trying to fool yourself – right? – or set up a process by which you can fool yourself, then that's just, you know, aberrant. It's unacceptable behaviour.

I think another concern that we had from our briefing on this bill that is fairly important is the independence of this agency. The report is also talking about: support from other agencies and industry will depend on the agency publishing more good news than bad. Again, what's the function here? Public relations overfunction and PCs appointing PCs and regulating PC activity and so forth and on and on?

I think a reasoned amendment is perfectly acceptable at this point. I'm glad that we decided to do this. It's not as though we're taking down the very sort of essence or the larger purpose in having an independent environmental agency through some sort of bill, but with this particular one here, I think, there are just too many bumpy problems along the way to read it further here at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this motion, and I would hope the hon. members across the way would at least give it consideration. As I stated earlier, I think the intent of this bill was good, but the bill itself is hollow. It doesn't even live up to the title. It doesn't protect the environment or add any more protection to the environment. Even the announcement. The Premier was very proud of making the announcement: we are going to upload data on reporting. Well, that sounds all well and good, but that's what the oil sands monitoring group was supposed to do when we made that announcement just a couple of years ago. How far along has that happened? It hasn't happened at all.

What we're missing in this bill is substance. It's just not there. It does create this agency, but beyond that, we know very little in the sense of: what are the various aspects? That needs to be determined to have good legislation. How is this going to work? How is it going to be funded? The problem with the bill is that it says: environmental protection. What I was hoping for was that there would be not just monitoring but some sort of teeth to our environmental protection so that we can actually say that we're doing something.

I want to just highlight some examples of what we're not doing or that what we're doing doesn't follow what we're saying. This government claims to have reduced greenhouse gases, but that does not correlate to or even support what independent findings have found, that our greenhouse gases have actually increased significantly.

Now, I know where the ministry gets its figures from when it says that it's reduced, but that's playing with the numbers. If you look at the totality of what we've done as a province, it is not something to be proud of. It is something that says that we need a lot of work. When employees of Alberta Environment say, "We have good environmental laws," there's substance to that. If you have a good speed limit, but nobody is enforcing it, how good are these speed limits? The enforcement part of our environmental laws is lacking, and it's lacking significantly. I'll make some examples of that.

The Biloyer family, who is located in the minister's own riding, is a classic example of lack of enforcement. We have a situation where Imperial Oil actually polluted their land. It's not being questioned. Imperial Oil basically admits it. There have been either three or four enforcement orders over the last 20 years issued to tell Imperial Oil to clean it up, to settle this issue, and that has not been done. That's a case of just lack of justice, in many ways, on an environmental scale.

What we were hoping for in bringing this forward is that, yes, we're going to do some monitoring, but we still haven't seen the substance of the monitoring in the bill as far as how these regulations will be. It's full of promises, but beyond the promises there are no real technical details connecting the dots on how we're going to get the job done. Even with the reporting, there's no time frame for how the reporting is going to be done. I commend the minister for the passion for monitoring and collecting the data – that is important – but what good is the data if we don't act upon that, or what good is the data if we manipulate the data to show something that is sort of contrary to what the raw data is proving? There needs to be not just independence, but there needs to be credibility to this system that we're going to create.

I want to draw your attention to something called the carbon credits or the carbon offset system because that's a classic example of where we've gone wrong with our legislation. You start off with a program that looks good, that sounds good, that you take out to the international market and say, "Hey, lookit, we are doing this," but when you get into the substance of it, you find out that we're not doing it. When you look at the auditing of the system, it's not transparent, and the lack of transparency equates to lack of credibility. We have the whole system of bioplants for biofuel, and we find out from even the Auditor General that it appears that it's increasing greenhouse gases, not reducing greenhouse gases. Well, that's $160 million going in the wrong direction.

Now, on the other side, the agricultural carbon offset system: we can't get credible evidence to find out if it's working. What we can find out is that on Alberta Agriculture's website it says: farmers, please don't do business with this company. But on Alberta Environment's website it says that they're doing business as usual. Here we have a contradiction in government, and that was still there the last time I looked. That hasn't been removed. We get the same businesspeople starting up these carbon credit offset companies, going out to sort of offset what we believe are greenhouse gases, but what we find out is that we can't measure it because that information is not available. Here we have a government that says that it wants to make the information available, but its actions are the complete contradiction of what it's proposing or claiming to say that it does. Time and time again we find these contradictions.

The hon. minister talks about groundwater mapping. Wow. That's long overdue. That is long overdue. We've been crying for groundwater mapping for a long, long time, and it has yet to happen. We hear that it is happening, but we don't see the data, and that's really important. It is extremely important that we understand whether our aquifers are regenerating the way they're supposed to. Are they not regenerating? You know, what is the status? What is the baseline data? Even though we can map, if we map without baseline data, we don't know what we're doing or where we're going. It's the baseline data that serves as the compass, and we don't have that.

Again, we have the contradiction with what's now ESRD in that it proclaims to have good rules and regulations – and for the most part I could agree with many of the employees that it does – but if we don't enforce these rules or make these regulations live in the sense that we're actually going to bring those to force, then what good is it? That's the problem.

I'll give you a couple of examples where we've really gone wrong. We have the Guide to the Mine Financial Security Program, where what we estimate is that it's going to cost about $75,000 per hectare to reclaim land. We know, because this is readily available from the provincial records, that the ministry claims there's about 50,000 hectares of land in this province that are subject to reclamation at some point in time. Now, companies are supposed to put security aside to make sure that we can do that. You know as well as I do and all the members over here know as well as I do that if a company goes out of business and we don't take that security, we don't have that security. We're not likely to get that money if they're gone.

So what do we have? Well, if it's going to cost about $75,000 per hectare, what we look at is what the government is currently holding, which is about $18,000 per hectare. That's $56,000 per hectare short of what we need. And given the fact that it's 51,000 hectares that we're talking about, we're looking at basically, you know, a little under half a billion dollars short to do our reclamation. That's what we should probably have in security. We don't have that.

The security of that is akin to what we're dealing with with carbon credits. We're claiming that we're incorporating practices that actually help us reduce greenhouse gases. What we find is that we have audits, but we're not allowed, even as an opposition member, to see what these reverification audits are. I have been asking for that information for over six months, and I've still not gotten that information. And I don't understand why.

We don't want to know any proprietary information. We want to know who's done what as far as the protocols and what the audits have told us. Everything is audited, so we want to know if these protocols, these deals actually did what they said they were going to do. That's all we want to know. There's a lot of grey area in there and a whole lot of questions, but what we don't have is any transparency, and what we don't have is any credibility to the system, so much so that internationally, the California market being one, they do not want to even explore the opportunities for carbon credits in the province of Alberta. That is a huge statement.

One of the big things about this monitoring program that is supposed to be the highlight of this bill is to improve our international credibility. That's the key. That is the key. If we don't improve that, we're not going to be able to convince these markets that we're doing what we say we're going to do. It doesn't matter what the members over there say. The fact is that you have to convince the markets. Those are the people. The markets are the ones that tell us whether or not we're credible. They're holding up our pipelines. They're holding up other projects as a result of our reputation. We're getting a black eye, left and right. What we're saying is that we're doing great things, but meanwhile up at Primrose we still have bitumen bubbling out of the ground, burping out of the ground. Geologists have basically come forward and said: this is not something we didn't expect.

Now, they don't come out publicly. They can't. They have jobs that they are afraid to lose if they come out publicly. But we have reports from as far back as 2009 that said that that was a highly risky project, and it's a shame for Alberta Environment to move along on that knowing that. We should have looked at this a little bit further on the caprock to make sure that if they did these types of projects, we wouldn't have these types of accidents. Those are the preventative measures that Alberta Environment can bring to the table, and there's nothing in this bill that says that we're going to be able to do this.

So if we have the monitoring of our environment, as this proclaims to have, what I see here is that we're going to have a board with no criteria or qualifications for who can be on it, even on the scientific board. It doesn't lay out any criteria on how to create this scientific board, some sort of checks and balances. It creates an arm's-length agency that's not going to be arm's length, because the minister will have the control at various points within the legislation to make sure that the minister can do what the minister needs to do politically.

Now, I don't say that as a criticism. I say that as: that's exactly how the bill is reading. It is not arm's length; it's going to give the appearance. And I'm sure the minister or the government will state that it will be arm's length, but as you read the bill, the minister will have the power to interject at any point in time. It is, in effect, an AHS of environment. The AHS has not worked out well for Alberta Health either, so I'm not sure that this is going to work out very well for Alberta Environment. So calling it arm's length is a little bit deceptive.

There are things in here – and I was hoping the Justice minister might comment on it. I had asked if the hon. member would, and maybe he will at some point in time because it is significant. We have an indemnification clause where there's a notwithstanding clause, and that is very common for all boards, that when they act in good faith, they are protected. That's something that we put in legislation. That's something that we put in many different nonprofit organizations. It's always there.

But in this act it brings forth an indemnification against criminal activity. That doesn't make sense to me. It talks about it in good faith. Someone needs to explain to me a criminal activity that has been committed in good faith because I don't know of one that's been committed in good faith. You know, I'm sorry. But if you need money for health care, you're not allowed to rob a bank, although that might be considered good faith. You can't commit a crime because of ignorance. The law just doesn't allow for that. So how the heck do we have an indemnification clause for a criminal activity? I don't get that. I'm happy to have someone explain that, but it just doesn't make sense to me.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity for six minutes. Thank you very much to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for bringing forward the reasoned amendment. It's worthwhile at this point in the debate on this bill to pause and see the context that this bill is in and if we really want to pursue it. According to the amendment the bill "fails to provide for unbiased, effective, and accountable independent monitoring in a comprehensive manner, which includes consultation with the full range of affected groups."

What I see happening is that we have a gap, a big question mark around this legislation for three things: credibility of this government on environmental issues; action that's been taken on environmental issues; and trust, which is essentially credibility going forward. Do we actually believe that in the future the government is going to follow through on something? I think this is where this government is in serious trouble.

We know that we have a bad reputation outside of the province and even, increasingly, inside of the province and particularly overseas. Having been fortunate enough to be able to travel to Europe almost annually now in the last half-dozen years, I guess six or seven years, boy, it's a different world over there. Totally different attitude towards things. They just don't buy it. They don't buy the lovely language that this government has learned to use and the spin. They don't buy it. They have serious questions. In Germany, in particular, their population is committed to reducing, conserving. You know, a whole different way of doing things.

When I look at credibility issues here, I think there are a number of places where there's a lack of credibility. One is around monitoring, period. I had the minister of the environment stand in this House repeatedly – not the current one; the previous one – and tell me that oh, yes, we had the best monitoring in the world, and blah, blah, blah. This went on for years, and then eventually government said, when it was proven enough times that they were not monitoring adequately, that, yes, although bitumen did appear – it came seeping out into the Athabasca River – that was not the cause of the pollution in northern Alberta; it was, in fact, what was being produced as a result of production in the oil sands.

It created a lack of credibility there, and the government did have to admit that, yes, they weren't very good at monitoring. Then what we got was: "We're going to be better. We promise you we're going to come out with some good stuff." So this is the good stuff. Well, is it good enough? Is this what we really want as Albertans as the big step forward from this government on environmental protection issues?

Well, you know, we had RAMP. That got completely discredited mostly because the industrial participants, who were mostly paid workers, overwhelmed the volunteer-based First Nations and aboriginal representation and NGO representation on the committee, so it was discredited. We've had a lot of self-monitoring in this province, which again ends up being discredited, although I think in some cases that's not, in fact, fair to the industry, who was trying to do a good job. We also have a lot of voluntary measures that are in place. Well, yeah. If it was voluntary, sure, we could have 50 per cent representation in this House for women. Well, that's not happening. You know, sometimes you have to have mandatory requirements, and I think we're way past that in Alberta.

We need baselines. This government still has not accelerated baseline groundwater mapping. You know, we've got a long way to go on credibility. The metrics that the government uses often measure the wrong thing in the wrong place at the wrong time, and then turn around and say to people in Turner Valley who are looking at the Sheep River: "Nope. Sorry. No problem here." Well, the Turner Valley gas plant was so polluted that they had to tell women who were pregnant not to step off the sidewalks because they couldn't walk on the soil. Yet somehow this is not getting into the river that is right next to it. Come on. I mean, that's a lack of credibility.

We've got things like board appointments where – I mean, just the Alberta regulator. Hmm. Yes. Okay. But he came from CAPP. How are we supposed to believe he's independent.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I know you're waxing eloquently, but it is 4:30, and the House does stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 28th Legislature - 1st Session (2012-2013)

Activity to October 31, 2013

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 199 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 4, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, everyone.

Let us pray. Dear Lord and Great Creator, we ask that You provide us with strength and determination but also with compassion and understanding as we carry out our duties to serve all Albertans and those who visit us in this great province that we so proudly call our home. Amen.

Hon. members, please remain standing for the singing of O Canada in our Assembly, led today, as it was last week, by one of our LAO staff, Colleen Vogel. Thank you so much.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, Colleen.

Thank you, hon. members. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and leader of the Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Rick Miller's family: his wife, Lois Jonsson-Miller; his two children Chris and Kim Miller; his daughter-in-law Jordyn Miller; and his grandson, Gracin Miller.

Rick was an important member of our Liberal family, serving as party president, our caucus chief of staff, and MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Rick was well known as a generous Rotarian, a friend to many, and an avid lover of Alberta's outdoors as he soared with the eagles in his hang-glider. Rick was much more than that to his family. He was a devoted son, husband, loving father, brother, uncle, and caring grandfather to Gracin.

Almost a year ago I introduced Rick in this Assembly as he openly championed the fight against prostate cancer. On the past Friday Rick joined his daughter Nicole in heaven.

A public celebration of Rick's life will be held on November 15 at the Delta Edmonton South, and his family would like all of us to attend.

On behalf of the Alberta Liberal family and the Alberta Legislature family I would like to thank his family for sharing Rick with us. He was a gift to us all. I would ask his family to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Hon. members, allow me to also extend a sincere welcome to Lois and her family. Thank you so much for coming today so that we could pay a second and additional tribute to a wonderful human being who graced this Assembly and worked hard for Albertans just a few short years ago. Please know that this is an additional tribute to the official one, that we did last Monday, when we held a moment of silence in his honour and the flags on our building were lowered to half-mast in his honour. May God be with you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, your first introduction.

Ms Fenske: Thank you Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Gary Stead, who is seated in your gallery. He is a councillor for the village of Chipman, a position he has held now for 28 and a half years. He has just been re-elected to that position. If you would please join with me – I'll ask Gary to rise – and give him the traditional warm greeting of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Let us proceed with school groups, beginning with your second introduction, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you members of the Fort Saskatchewan Homeschool Group, who are seated in the members' general gallery. They have been with us here today to tour the Legislature, and I would ask that the Assembly give them the warm greeting of this Assembly, please.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, a mere four blocks from my childhood home is St. James Catholic elementary school, and they're here today to join with us and receive greetings of the Assembly. Mrs. Kristie Falk, their teacher, is a notable teacher, and they're accompanied by Ms Evans and Mrs. Said. Please, if we could acknowledge St. James today and give them the warm reception of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Then let us proceed with other guests, beginning with the Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Lindsay Bowthorpe and Michael Arget, future physicians and medical leaders in our province. Lindsay and Michael both chair the political advocacy committee for their respective medical school associations at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary.

For the past five years U of A and U of C medical students have come to the Legislature to meet with MLAs to discuss issues of importance to them and to their future. This year's topic of discussion, chosen by the students, is the prevention of youth smoking and the use of flavoured tobacco. Mr. Speaker, I met with all 50 of these medical students this morning. I can report to the House that our health care system is in very good hands with their leadership in the future.

I now ask that Ms Bowthorpe and Mr. Arget and their colleagues as well rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of inspiring women whom we are honoured to have hosted in a working session this morning on the establishment of a First Nations women's council on economic security. Some of these outstanding women were not able to stay today, but to those that are here, please rise when I say your name so you can be recognized: Angela Grier, councillor of Piikani Nation; Barb Wendt, councillor of Beaver Nation; Koren Lightning-Earle, councillor of the Samson Cree Nation; Andrea Pritchard Kennedy with Mount Royal College; Anna Wowchuk, Women Building Futures; Brenda Joly, director of the Confederacy of Treaty Six First Nations; Effie Anderson with Kapawe'no First Nation; Grace Auger with Eagle Law; Margo Pariseau with the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women; and Nicole Bouchier, a consultant with the Bouchier Group. Joining them is Tracy Balash, who works in my office as an ADM and is the aboriginal women's initiative and research lead on this.

I'd also like to acknowledge the Member for Calgary-Varsity, who has taken a lead in establishing this council and who is working with Aboriginal Relations and these women on this very important issue. I'd ask that they please receive the customary warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly eight representatives from the Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter, here today in celebration of the 75th anniversary of the establishment of Canada's first place of Muslim prayer, the Al-Rashid mosque. This historic building is now located in Fort Edmonton Park and continues to play a vital role in the prayer and community life of Edmonton's Muslim community.

Mr. Speaker, my guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names. We have this afternoon Ms Soraya Zaki Hafez, president, Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter; Dr. Zohra Husaini, project director, Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter; Mrs. Maria Syed, treasurer, Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter; Ms Sahar Deeb, project director, Canadian Islamic Centre, and member of the Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter; Mrs. Nasim Kherani, member, Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter; Ms Sara Javed, member, Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter; Ms Fatiyeh Hazimeh Muwais, member, Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter; and Ms Yasmeen Nizam, member, Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter. I would now ask that the Assembly provide them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Calgary-Hawthwood.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, my other guest is not here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawthwood, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of hard-working, committed people representing the Arbour Lake Community Association and the Arbour Lake Residents Association.

Later, in my member's statement, you will hear me talking about the Arbour Lake community being recognized as the best neighbourhood in Calgary through Avenue magazine. Mr. Speaker, I want to attribute a large part of that achievement to the leadership and the dedication of service from those people that made it happen.

Before I introduce my guests, I would ask that when I mention their name, they please stand to be recognized. They are sitting in the public gallery: Mrs. Marianne Hollingsworth, president of the community association; Mr. Ken Jones, board member of the residents' association; Cassandra Lehti and Carlo Villarreal, who are staff members of the residents' association; and Mr. Craig Somers. Let me share a few lines about Craig. During my campaign trail I heard so many stories about this guy named Craig and how he transformed the community as a volunteer board member and the GM. The first time I met with him, for sure that passion showed through. Thank you. The last one is my fabulous assistant, Maria Somers. I would like to ask my colleagues here to give them the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you the director of district 4, the northern region of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, Mr. Tom Burton. Elected to the MD of Greenview council in 2001, Tom has served on a variety of boards and committees. Tom is also a registered emergency medical responder and is a very active volunteer in his community. I'd ask that Tom rise and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, I understand your guests are not here yet, so let us proceed.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Al-Rashid Mosque

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and privilege to rise today to help commemorate the 75th anniversary of Canada's first mosque, the Al-Rashid mosque.

Since the beginning of the 20th century the first Muslim pioneers who migrated to the Canadian prairies and to Edmonton came from Syria and Lebanon. As they became contributing citizens to life in Alberta and Edmonton as fur traders, ranchers, and shopkeepers, they began to think about a place for congregational prayer, and the idea of building a permanent mosque came into focus. While the founding pioneers list both men and women, it was Muslim women who catalyzed the fundraising effort to build the Al-Rashid mosque.

Through the leadership of Hilwi Hamdon, the prairie Muslim women of Edmonton met with Mayor John W. Fry with the hope of securing land in the city's north area to build the mosque. The scale of their ambition and of all the founding families was immense. Their efforts resulted in the official opening of the Al-Rashid mosque on December 12, 1938, at 102nd Street and 108th Avenue in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, I am mindful of the hardships borne by these courageous women and others as this endeavour was embarked upon during a time known as the Great Depression. We are very fortunate that in 1992 the Al-Rashid mosque became an historical site and was relocated to Fort Edmonton Park.

On September 19, 2013, the Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter, and yours truly along with many others celebrated the steadfast efforts and persevering spirit of the founding pioneers and the long-standing success of the Al-Rashid mosque.

Congratulations to the enormous leadership of all those involved in the Muslim community and, in particular, the Canadian Council of Muslim Women, Edmonton chapter. The Al-Rashid mosque's place in the history of our city, province, and great country is immeasurable.

Praise to God as the Al-Rashid mosque is remembered for shaping the future of Muslim cultural importance, sacred traditions, and spiritual meaning.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Betty Anne Gagnon

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, today I would like the Assembly to reflect on the life of Betty Anne Gagnon. Many of you will be familiar with Betty Anne's story as her caregivers were sentenced to 20 months in jail on Friday for failing to provide the necessities of life.

This tragic tale begins in 2005, when PDD placement in a group home ended and a new placement had to be found for her. Authorities decided to place Betty Anne under the care of her sister and her husband. The caregivers hoped they could get some support from PDD, but their applications for programming and transportation for Betty Anne were denied in 2007, so they received nothing other than her monthly AISH benefit. The caregivers looked for help again in 2009, around the same time that their lives became entangled with employment, mental health, and drug problems. Her sister indicated in February of that year she could no longer cope and requested a new placement. PDD advised her she would have to wait for up to a year.

A placement was found in July 2009, but due to a bureaucratic error the caregivers never received the notice. It seems the unfortunate events that followed could have been prevented had PDD done its due diligence and ensured the caregivers were made aware of the placement opportunity. Instead, they closed her file.

As the situation deteriorated, the caregivers put Betty Anne in a makeshift jail cell in the garage, which had nails pointing inward and upward to discourage her from getting out, a toilet with Kitty Litter, and a tether cuff strap that was affixed to the wall. She was often placed in a fenced dog run or locked in the basement. In November of that year Betty Anne was locked in an unheated bus with no running water or toilet 24/7. Betty Anne died on November 20, 2009, at the age of 48. She was five foot two and weighed a mere 65 pounds at the time of her death.

The tragic story of Betty Anne is a wake-up call for the provincial government and all Albertans. Betty Anne's mistreatment and abuse could have been prevented by responding to the repeated pleas for help. I implore this government to take concrete steps to ensure that Betty Anne's horrendous torture and death mean something. Fix this system in her name, and ensure a tragedy of this magnitude never happens again.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, followed by Calgary-Hawwood.

Chipman Centennial

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The village of Chipman is located in the geographical centre of the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, the constituency I am proud to represent. This year Chipman celebrated its 100th anniversary. Settlers came to the area in 1892. In 1905 the Canadian Northern Railway arrived, and a townsite was surveyed. Then in 1913 Chipman became the best little village in Alberta, named after Clarence Campbell Chipman, secretary to Sir Charles Tupper, commissioner of the railway.

Chipman's history is marked with several significant and tragic events. In World War I a local reserve unit, the 19th Alberta Dragoons, saw five local boys die in action. In 1931 a disastrous fire destroyed an entire commercial block on Main Street. In 1960 17 young people from Chipman lost their lives on their way to school in the Lamont school bus-train tragedy.

Despite these tragic events the existence of Chipman today is what it is. We had a celebration this summer, and it's a testament to the community and its leaders. The centennial committee, led by Mayor Jim Palmer, Toni Nygren, and Pat Tomkow, brought over 1,500 people to this small village. A car show featuring a vehicle from every year for almost the past 100 years, a tent covering the entire block of Main Street, the Chipman Players, the agricultural society, the Lions Club, the historical society, and even the Emeralds, local men who originally came from Chipman, all ensured we had a weekend to remember. The MLA for Edmonton-Decore and I were pleased and felt very privileged to be included in a celebration of a community that honoured the past and lives the present. If you haven't yet been to Coyote Country, it's time to go.

It's celebrations like these that make me proud as an Albertan. Happy 100th birthday, Chipman.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First main set of questions.

Minister of Municipal Affairs

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, on October 9 the Minister of Municipal Affairs was at a speaking engagement in Prince Edward Island. He said something there that we find pretty astonishing. He told his audience that Alberta's energy sector, quote, sucks the life out of every other aspect of Alberta, unquote. Now, as the Premier knows, we've always supported her initiatives to promote Alberta's energy sector, but it appears that one of her ministers doesn't. Does the Premier think it is acceptable for this minister to leave the province and be out there trashing our most important industry?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the fact that this government for 41 years has done everything it can to support energy in this province and that it continues to do that. We work very hard to ensure that that happens, and I'll ensure that as we move forward, we continue to do that because, of course, we are our best ambassadors. I'm just going to speculate that there might perhaps be another side to this story, which may very well be something that the Leader of the Official Opposition might want to take into account, ensuring she has all of the information before she asks the question. I'm sure that the minister will provide us with that perspective.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're making the video available so that everyone can see the context. We think it is simply appalling that one of the Premier's most trusted ministers would so openly attack our energy sector by saying that it sucks the life out of every other aspect of Alberta when he thought the cameras weren't rolling. Given the Premier's attempts to sell her national energy strategy, does she feel that the minister's comments help or hinder her efforts?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I was fully aware that the cameras were rolling. That's why I made the comments that I did. The discussion was about what you do in a hot economy, not just what you do when your economy is faltering. I was very cautionary in saying that having success has challenges, too, because it can draw energy out of other sectors of the economy and other parts of the province. When there is success, it could have its challenges just as well as if there isn't. It is on live video. I challenge anyone to go watch it and identify what the actual comments are, not what the misquotes are.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, while on the east coast the minister could have used the opportunity to promote the Energy East pipeline, a vital project for Alberta's economy. Instead, he took the opportunity to attack the very sector that he should have been standing up for on his trip. To the Premier: why was the minister out there saying that the energy sector sucks the life out of every other aspect of Alberta instead of promoting the very many national benefits of the Energy East pipeline?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know perfectly well that on this side of the House we understand the importance of a Canadian energy strategy, we understand the importance of our industry, and we also understand that it's important for us to put in place frank, honest discussions about how we build communities across this province to ensure that energy and communities can survive in partnership. That is what this minister does. In fact, that is one of the reasons that we now have the opportunity to work with municipalities on Bill 28, to make sure that continues to happen.

The Speaker: The hon. leader for her second main question.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, still on that subject, the Minister of Municipal Affairs told the audience that the energy industry sucks the life out of every aspect of Alberta while standing in front of a huge blow-up picture of his book. Indeed, the reason he was in P.E.I. was to promote his book. Not only was the minister trashing us to an eastern Canadian audience; he was also doing so in an attempt to increase his book sales. Can the Premier assure Albertans that no taxpayer dollars were spent on getting this minister to and from his promotional speaking gig?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, there isn't a day that goes by where they don't try and smear somebody's reputation. The fact is that I was invited by the Georgetown Conference because of the book that I'd written. It was entirely paid for by them or by myself, the expenses. Nothing was incurred by this province. It was entirely done to talk to and promote the idea about regional collaboration and rural communities and how to fire them up. I will never as long as it's my own personal time pass up an opportunity to help ensure other communities are successful across this country.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, last week this minister told the Assembly: everywhere I go, cameras show up. Well, he certainly got that right. As this minister surely knows, it is against the rules for any MLA to use his position to further his own private interests. This government may not recognize the term, but it's called a conflict of interest. Is the Premier comfortable that one of her ministers is out there moonlighting on the private speaking circuit with the likes of Justin Trudeau?

Mr. Griffiths: Another day, another smear, Mr. Speaker. I had discussed this issue with the Ethics Commissioner. I received absolutely no personal profit from this whatsoever. Simply, the expenses were paid by the Georgetown Conference so that I could come and talk about the book. In fact, I insisted that there be no mention of any politics involved whatsoever. It was simply my perspective on rural development and community building, which is what I was there to speak about.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the minister's behaviour over the last few weeks has been, well, to shorten one of his more colourful phrases, embarrassing. Not only is he burning bridges with municipalities; he's now burning bridges on the Premier's file. With his insulting attacks on our most important industry, this minister is undermining all of her work at expanding markets for our energy products. To the Premier: will she do us all a favour and just let this minister focus full-time on selling his book rather than selling out Albertans?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my first comments, I'm not going to stand in this House and listen to that Leader of the Opposition characterize this hon. minister, who is doing work to build community not only in Alberta but across the country, and I'm not going to take this hon. member's word for her characterization or quote as to what the minister did or did not say. As I understood the minister's response, he said that he was quite proud of the fact that the video is there, that if anything was actually looked at in context, it would tell a very different story. I would suggest that the hon. leader consider that before she carries on with this.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition. Your third and final main set of questions.

Whistle-blower Protection for Health Professionals

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier should also have been embarrassed by the performance of her Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation last Thursday. He was asked a very simple question about including doctors under our whistle-blower act. Now, I'm not a lawyer, but the Premier is, and so is Justice Vertes. Come to think of it, so is this minister. Justice Vertes stated quite clearly in his report that we need to change the law to protect doctors. The minister seems oblivious to that. Will the Premier instruct her minister to bring in the changes that Justice Vertes recommended and actually protect doctors in Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows or should know, the current legislation, that was passed under the leadership of my colleague, does protect doctors who are in a contract relationship with Alberta Health Services. Justice Vertes in his report commented on the group of doctors who have no contractual relationship to provide services to Alberta Health Services and are in private practice. In response we said that we would welcome the opportunity to study that and accepted that recommendation in principle. That's what we're doing now.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, on Thursday the minister said that there are medical professionals that are covered under the whistle-blower legislation except that he must have known that the medical professionals are only protected if they are employees of the government and that most doctors, as the Minister of Health has just reminded us, are not employees of the government and, therefore, are not protected. To the Premier: does the minister not understand his own legislation, or is he trying to mislead Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what is misleading is this hon. member's contention that somehow health care workers in Alberta are not comprehensively protected by this legislation. This legislation protects workers who work for agencies that contract to Alberta Health Services, organizations like Covenant Health. It protects the vast majority of physicians in this province who do work under a privileging arrangement with a hospital or with another program operated by Alberta Health Services. There is some considerable work to be done in figuring out how to apply this legislation to physicians who have no such formal relationship with the public health system, and that's the work that we're engaged in.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this legislation protects the government, not health professionals.

In October of last year the minister gave an interview where he clearly acknowledged that doctors would not be protected from reprisals if they brought forward a complaint against the government. Justice Vertes made fixing this his second recommendation. The government has said that it accepts all of Justice Vertes' recommendations. When will the government introduce legislation to include all health care professionals, including physicians, under the whistle-blower protection act?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'm not really surprised that we're only into day 5 of this session and we're already seeing the hon. member stand up and make these false connections that just don't make sense to Albertans. Every single person who works in the health care system in Alberta that has any connection to government or receives any money from the public purse is protected under this legislation. [interjections] Now, that's actually plain language, and that's plain because it applies to doctors, to nurses, and to health care workers. The only people, Mr. Speaker, that are not included are private physicians. The minister has said that we are reviewing this. These are complicated issues, and they will be dealt with.

The Speaker: Please, let's keep the interjections down, or today I will ask whoever is speaking to continue on with their answers if necessary.

Let's go to the leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Government Spending

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my hand I'm holding a FOIP which goes into great detail about fancy new furniture for the office of the minister of advanced education at a cost of more than $10,000 to taxpayers while this government was inflicting the worst cuts to postsecondary education in decades. I guess that when the minister talks about tough times, he's only talking about tough times for students, families, faculty, and staff, not for himself. To the minister of advanced education: how do you justify pleading poverty to our colleges and universities when there's clearly no lack of funds to refurbish your office?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we have the honour and pleasure of serving in a building that is now over 100 years old, and as this member knows, furniture in offices gets replaced routinely. I'm sure his constituency offices and others have received new furniture. The fact is that we have staff. The furniture was for staff that work in our office. They work long hours, and they need to have furniture that is safe and appropriate, much like any constituency office, that many of them have benefited from.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, seriously, probably one of the most troubling e-mails contained in the FOIP said that the minister of advanced education was "having far too much fun" rearranging all his new furniture. This is at the same time that faculty and staff were losing their jobs and students were being told that their programs were being cancelled. To the minister of advanced education: are you not concerned in the least that refurbishing your office with luxury furniture at the same time that you're threatening to audit universities' expenses may be a bit hypocritical?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I'm glad, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition is keeping their eye on the ball and that they're addressing important Alberta issues. Whoever wrote that obviously has never seen me having fun because rearranging furniture wouldn't be part of that. If he finds that furniture from IKEA is extravagant for government employees in a building that is 100 years old and with furniture that has not been ergonomic, not sufficient for staff to work in, let him say so.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the minister here had to have a cabinet restained to match the other piece of furniture.

Mr. Speaker, during last year's election the Premier told post-secondary students that she had walked in their shoes. Next thing you know she's giving her bitumen sham speech and making the most brutal cutbacks in decades, completely unnecessary given the fact that this government reported a $722 million surplus in the last fiscal quarterly update. To the Premier: since you say that you've walked in the shoes of our students, how do you think they feel now that you have betrayed them?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, here's the reason that we're the government and they're where they are. Six billion dollars is not a sham. It's the entire education budget for the province of Alberta. It was a serious issue that we had to deal with. It was not the choice that we wanted to make, but we had to make decisions to ensure that we could live within our means and continue to keep systems working. That's exactly what we did. We've had incredible co-operation from postsecondary institutions, and we will consider taking every step we can to ensure that students get excellent access to education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Medical Laboratory Services

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government is running in circles on health care. While the Premier wants to implement her Harper-style conservative agenda, the NDP and health professionals are fighting back. We stood up against the PCs with this half-baked scheme to privatize lab services. This weekend they pulled it off the table. Now, apparently, it's back on as of this afternoon. To the Health minister: why won't you admit that your plan to give $3 billion to private lab companies with rotten records of defrauding the public purse was a bad idea from the start?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I think the hon. member vastly overestimates his own influence. The fact of the matter is that on this side of the House we are committed to providing state-of-the-art lab services for the residents of Edmonton and northern Alberta for the long term. The comments that were made by the acting chief executive officer of AHS on Friday reflect a commitment to consultation, as it should be, not in terms of what we are doing but how we are going to do it. We will deliver on the best possible lab services for residents of the northern part of the province. We have a plan to do that. Nothing has changed.

Mr. Eggen: Well, that's interesting, Mr. Speaker, given that this government only bothers to consult after public outrage and given that this same minister just said outside these walls right now that he would go full steam ahead on this privatization scheme and consult at the same time.

Health professionals know that this is a bad idea. Albertans who value public health care know that this is a dangerous idea. What could possibly happen between then and now that could make this corporate giveaway actually resemble a good idea?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans know is that making important decisions about the health care system based on political ideology is not what they want. What they want is for the government to plan for the long term, to plan for the future, to recognize things like the fact that in 2015 existing lab space that is available to us in Edmonton will no longer be available, to recognize the fact that demand is growing by 6 per cent a year, and to put a solid, responsible plan in place with partners as appropriate to deliver the best quality lab services we can. That's what's happening now. That's what will continue to happen.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, you can't have it both ways. Either you're going to listen to what front-line professionals think or you're going to steamroll straight on through and listen to no one at all. You can't do both. So why won't this minister stand down and listen to the people who actually deliver lab services and know that your private lab scheme is bound to fail, cost Albertans more money, and hurt patients?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I know is that the vast majority of pathologists in this province, in fact, support the move to a state-of-the-art facility to serve Edmonton and northern Alberta for the future. There are over 90 pathologists that work with Alberta Health Services. Because of the consultation that AHS has done with them, with other employees, and with other partners, we know that there is an orderly approach to the implementation of this initiative. What that member should be concerned with is whether his constituents have access to all of the lab services that should be available to them on a timely basis. That's what we're planning for. He's welcome to get onboard at any time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that completes the first five spots which are allocated for opposition leaders' questions including preambles to supplementary questions, so please curtail your preambles here on forward.

Let's go with Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Betty Anne Gagnon

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to again reflect on the tragic death of Betty Anne Gagnon. Betty Anne died due to the negligence of her caregivers, who were convicted of failing to provide the necessities of life. The sentencing judge characterized the treatment of Betty Anne as callous and cruel and noted that the convicted pair engaged in atrocious activities. The convicted caregivers sought and were repeatedly denied help from this province. To the Minister of Human Services: what is the ministry doing about it?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to agree with that hon. member that the death of Betty Anne Gagnon was indeed tragic, a horrific event. I am not going to comment on the facts of the matter or any reaction to them right now. The court case is still open. You'll know that the appeal period has not expired yet. Following that, there will be a fatality inquiry. I will agree again with the member and say that we will have to respond to make sure that this can never happen again.

2:10

The Speaker: Could we clarify? Is this matter still sub judice, then? Can anybody here? So let's be very careful.

The hon. member.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the convicted caregivers looked to the province for help on several occasions and their being turned away repeatedly contributed to the horrendous treatment she received, including being tethered inside a cage, can the minister advise the Assembly if the caseworker who managed this file is still an employee of the government of Alberta?

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be careful with your question and the answer on a file that may be sub judice.

I don't know if the Minister of Justice wishes to clarify this matter before we proceed any further. Could you take the floor, hon. minister, for a moment?

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to advise this House that the judgment did come down last week, but the appeal period has not yet lapsed, and I'm not aware of whether or not the Crown intends to appeal.

The Speaker: All right. The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, to that I would add that as these are matters, of course, before a court, I cannot comment on them and won't.

Mr. Wilson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the caregivers, again, repeatedly asked for help and when a few phone calls and a letter went unanswered, the case was closed, how is it possible that no one in the PDD system followed up on this file, allowing the tragedy of Betty Anne's death to occur?

The Speaker: You drew a fine line here.

Perhaps the Minister of Human Services can clarify things for us.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the most important thing to say to the House today is that the only thing that would be more tragic than the death of Betty Anne Gagnon is to not learn from it, to not examine deeply what happened, why it happened, and what could have been done about it. I can assure the public of Alberta that that's exactly what has been done and what will be done. There will be a fatality inquiry in which all of that can become part of the public discussion. That can't happen until the appeal period has expired and the fatality inquiry is in place. I can assure the public that we are going to learn and have learned from this tragic situation. The Alberta public can know that we will make sure that every Albertan has the opportunity to be protected and that these sorts of circumstances should not be happening. Every Albertan should be alert to it, and we will be alert to it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Calgary-Fish Creek.

School Construction

Mr. Jeneroux: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've said it before, but despite this spring's earlier announcements of more schools, my constituency continues to experience unprecedented growth. I stood here last fall asking the Minister of Education, the Minister of Infrastructure, and the President of the Treasury Board, and I'll keep asking till we get our schools. Some quick stats: Johnny Bright public school had to move grades 8 and 9 out last year due to growth; Monsignor Fee Ottersson school, which doesn't have a playground yet, is experiencing increasing kindergarten pressures like we've never seen; and Bessie Nichols' enrolment shot through the roof this year and desperately needs portables. To the Minister of Education: when will we as parents start to see the measures in the form of bricks and mortar in the communities where our schools need to be?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I know this member has been a great advocate. He's been quite persistent on this file. Some might say he's so persistent that he'd give a woodpecker a headache. But I welcome that, and I welcome his advocacy for his community. I know that he was pleased when we announced the new K to 6 school in the spring and when we cut the ribbon on the Bessie Nichols school last year. All I can say is that in the next three years we're going to create about 23,000 new spaces for students by investing about $2 billion in schools. Thanks to this Premier the government is going to keep building Alberta, and these schools will be a part of that.

Mr. Jeneroux: Well, expect a chronic headache, Mr. Minister.

I want to start with a thank you for the new school in the Southbrook community. Unfortunately, it's only one of at least three more needed in Edmonton-South West. To the Minister of Infrastructure: when can we find the resources to add more elementary schools, more junior high schools, and more high schools in Edmonton to keep up with this unprecedented rate of growth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to thank this member for his unwavering commitment to his community. As you know, Alberta is the fastest growing of all provinces in Canada, and this rapid growth causes a number of challenges, not the least of which is the increased demand for school spaces. I can tell you that this government knows how important new schools are to Alberta families and communities. Budget 2013 provides $503 million over the next three years for 50 new schools.

The Speaker: You had one more supplemental? Proceed with your last one.

Mr. Jeneroux: Right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Minister of Education: given that we don't need to be rocket scientists to know that our K to 9 kids will be off to high school in a few years and given that we don't expect this growth to slow down any time soon, when our children become teenagers, what high school do you expect them to go to?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely right. These enrolment pressures that they have in southwest Edmonton we've got all over the province. We do have a big bubble coming in in the primary grades, which is going to move on through to high schools, obviously. We are investing in the bricks and mortar, but the other thing we've got to do is make sure we use our assets properly. There are in the neighbourhood of 50,000 empty seats in the Edmonton region right now. So these are challenges. We need to work with the community and the school boards. But I can tell you that we're also changing the way that we deliver high school. In the future, when those kids get to high school, there are going to be things like delinking time from the time they sit in the class to when they get their credits. There's dual crediting going on. There'll be digital diploma exams so kids can learn at any pace, at any place, at any time. All these things are going to factor in to what high school looks like.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Calgary-Glenmore

Medical Laboratory Services (continued)

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are tired of watching this government mismanage our health care system. First, there was the centralization of home-care services, that saw our seniors suffer as the government shook the system upside down. Now the government has been caught dead in its tracks trying to centralize lab services despite pathologists warning that it will result in patients waiting longer for care. Considering this government's record on long wait times for patients, can the Health minister explain why this government bulldozed ahead with this plan before listening to the experts?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I was very pleased to state in answer to an earlier question, I consulted with Alberta Health Services today, and I was reassured to know that the overwhelming majority of the 90 pathologists who work in that organization do support state-of-the-art lab services for their constituents. I can only wonder why this hon. member apparently does not.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since CEO Duncan Campbell took the time to tweet that they will now be holding consultation with physicians and staff after public backlash, can the Health minister tell us why you didn't listen or consult with the pathologists first?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has her information wrong again. Consultations on this initiative have been going on for quite some time, and that is perhaps part of the reason that the opposition raised this matter first when the House reconvened last week. We have absolutely no problem talking about the importance of this initiative, about the fact that it's a plan to ensure that we can keep up with the 6 per cent per year growth in lab tests, about the fact that it's a plan that will make sure that all of the newest and most sophisticated lab tests will be available to residents of the northern part of the province. This is what responsible governments do, and this is how we move forward to a high-performing health care system.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've heard that story before. There has been no consultation on home care. There has been no consultation on EMS dispatch, no consultation on pharmacy, no consultation on front-line care workers, and it goes on and on. Minister, if you've consulted with pathologists, please table it and tell us who you consulted with.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member loves to talk about consultation until the point that the majority of people disagree with her and with her party. The fact of the matter is that I spent the better part of two years as Minister of Health consulting with Albertans about initiatives in all these areas, initiatives that have led to significant improvements in our health care system, that have resulted in some changes to decisions that have kept home-care providers intact for residents of congregate living facilities, in initiatives that will result in state-of-the-art ground ambulance dispatch for every region of this province. There are many examples of this government working in partnership with Albertans and providers to improve health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Calgary-Buffalo.

Calgary Seniors

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Calgary-Glenmore is home to many seniors. In fact, about 20 per cent of my constituents are seniors, those individuals that have built Alberta and are deserving of our continued care and support. At my town hall a few weeks ago constituents asked for assurances that health care supports that allow seniors to stay in their homes will be available to them. My question is for the Minister of Health. Can the minister provide details specific to Calgary on the plan to assist seniors to stay in their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. I must congratulate her. Over 20 per cent of people in her constituency are seniors, and she's certainly a champion in our caucus for seniors' issues. In the hon. member's constituency the biggest program is home care, which helped nearly 109,000 seniors, people with disabilities, and others stay in their homes last year, including 32,000 people in the Calgary region. There are many other supports like the seniors' property tax deferral program, the seniors' benefit, special needs assistance program, and others that are assisting to keep seniors at home as long as possible.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you, Minister. Given that many of these same seniors will move to long-term care, what assurances can I give my constituents that sufficient beds will be available close to their homes, their friends, and their support networks?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can give great assurance to her constituents. Under the leadership of the hon. Associate Minister of Seniors, I'm happy to tell the House that there are over 6,300 continuing care spaces in Calgary, representing nearly 30 per cent of the provincial total, including 557 in the hon. member's constituency. At the moment we have in process 692 new supportive living spaces in Calgary through the affordable supportive living initiative, which we announced during Seniors' Week in June. There are many other improvements and supports for seniors to assist them to live independently that are in play across the province, particularly in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms L. Johnson: Thank you. Again, to the same minister: because my office regularly receives calls about the challenges families face as seniors are moved from home to hospital to seniors' care and to palliative care, can the minister provide details on how his department is working to make the processes for those transitions easier for families?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and I have talked about this issue, and it is something that requires our attention as the number of people who are going to be transitioning between different levels of care increases. There are a number of initiatives in place like the destination home program, which provides support for enhanced home care for seniors who are able to move home from hospital to move sooner with the appropriate support. We are working with all the operators in the continuing care system to identify areas in the transition between levels of care that could be made smoother. Obviously, the role of case management, the role of home care, and the informal role that families play in providing these supports are key to doing better in this area.

Public-sector Pension Plans

Mr. Hehr: Continuing this government's assault on the middle class, the Minister of Finance made good on the threat he made in Budget 2013 to propose sweeping changes to four of the province's public-sector pension plans. I'm not sure if the minister knows this. Increasingly Albertans are finding it difficult to retire, and changing these public-sector plans will just ensure more seniors living in strife in this province. To the minister: why are you so eager to irreparably harm the retirement security of tens of thousands of hard-working middle-income Albertans?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's any huge secret to recognize that the demographics of our province, our country are changing. We have a lot more people living a lot longer than they ever were when these plans were put together. What we have today is a situation where we have a seven and a half billion dollar unfunded liability amongst these four plans. We have subsidized early retirement benefits that are no longer relevant to the type of workforce that we're trying to maintain and to keep. Incenting people to retire early is not exactly ensuring that we're going to have long-term pension plans for everyone in the system. What we're doing is ensuring that that plan is there for them when they are going to retire.

Mr. Hehr: Given that these public-sector plans have plans in place to deal with the unfunded liability and put these modest public pension plans back on solid footing, why is the minister being disingenuous in saying that these changes are necessary when the decision being made is simply a policy choice dedicated to further dismantling the middle class?

Mr. Horner: You know, Mr. Speaker, what we're talking about are the public-sector pension plans. We're not talking about all Albertans here. We're talking about public-sector plans. The idea that he refers to, that they gave us recommendations, was: "Wait. Let's see if interest rates rise. Let's see if our investments return better. Let's hope that it gets better in the future." That's not a plan. What we have put forward are some reasonable amendments to the plans, some reasonable changes to the benefits. As well, we've changed the governance so that in the future if the plans do as well as the hon. member thinks they will, they could put these benefits back in if the plans could afford it.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that a large number of Albertans have faithfully and dutifully served their province with the expectation of receiving a modest pension in retirement, where's the fairness in changing the rules mid-game?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the fairness is that I want them to actually get the promise that was set out in the first place. If we continue along this path, contribution rates by those very individuals that the hon. member is talking about would rise so high that they would have a lot less going in their pockets today even though it wouldn't ensure that the pension benefits they're hoping for in the future would be there. Mr. Speaker, these are reasonable amendments to ensure that the promises made to all of our public sector are going to be kept and the pension that they need and want is going to be there in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Livingstone-MacLeod.

Athabasca River Containment Pond Spill

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Five days ago one billion litres of coal waste water spilled into the Athabasca River. This PC government responded by assuring Albertans that the water is made up of "clay and organic matter." In the interests of cutting through PC spin, let's review the actual contents of the one billion litres of coal waste flowing down the Athabasca River today: arsenic, ammonium nitrate based explosives, mercury, and a dog's breakfast of other known carcinogens. This crisis threatens the health of Albertans along the Athabasca. To the minister of environment: why won't you be honest with them about that?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, we are being honest with Albertans, and how we responded was that we were quickly on the scene with many different ministries, opening up a provincial operations centre as well, taking this situation very seriously, making sure that the water was sampled right away. Right now the early indications are that there are no health risks to humans, but we are asking municipalities not to draw water until we have further analysis done. We are taking this very, very seriously.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that when B.C. experienced a coal containment pond leak near the Similkameen, the government issued clear instructions for the public not to come into contact with the water at all, and given that the B.C. contamination was 65,000 litres compared to our spill of one billion litres, to the same minister: why has your government been negligently silent so that most Albertans had to wait five days for a press release that finally warned of the risk to the public from this spill?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we reacted right away. On our website right away we put up a notification to ensure that people were aware of the situation. We made sure that all the municipalities in the area were aware. Myself and my deputy minister visited the site with the local MLA and the mayor and reeve of Whitecourt to make sure that people were aware. All notification was given. I don't know where this member gets her information from because every day we made sure that there was an update. We were on this file right from the start and continue to be.

Ms Notley: Well, given that I, like most Albertans, can only read the press releases – and they didn't say what you said they did – and given that the PC government's weekend response to the media was actually, "Don't worry; almost nobody drinks the water from the Athabasca River anyway," is this the new normal for environmental monitoring from this PC government, "Cool your jets. It's all good. It's only a billion litres of waste water containing arsenic, mercury, and lead"?

Mrs. McQueen: Mr. Speaker, we made sure that all of the municipalities were notified. Those municipalities are not drawing water off there, but we wanted to make sure that they had the information so that Albertans were made aware. We did make sure the information was there because we want to be overcautious, and so far there's no fish or wildlife mortality. The water is not affecting human health, and we have been on top of this from day one. Human health is our first priority and first concern, and that's what we took care of from day one on this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After years of tinkering, this Health minister has all but broken our rural ambulance system. Interfacility transfers are leaving entire corridors of our province vulnerable and underserved while scarce EMS resources are juggled from region to region for nonemergency calls. This means long wait times, stress and confusion for front-line workers, who are forced to do more with less, and undue suffering for patients. This is a disgrace. To the Minister of Health: how are you going to fix the system you broke?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was a question similar to this one last week, and the answer is what we have already done. This answer is the consolidation of ground ambulance dispatch services across this province. That system will ensure that ambulances that are called across their home border in order to assist with an emergency or an interfacility transfer can be easily identified and repatriated to their home community. We need the small number of remaining municipalities to work with us to complete the consolidation process so this sort of situation doesn't occur.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the rural ambulance system seemed to work better before this minister and his bureaucrats got their hands on it, does this minister not realize that flexing scarce ambulance resources from region to region on nonemergency calls and leaving vast areas of our province without immediate service has caused major problems for rural Alberta, or does he just not care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have met with many elected officials from rural communities across the province, as have many of my own colleagues who are from rural constituencies themselves, to discuss these issues. What the municipalities are telling us is not to turn the clock back to 1950 or 1960 or 1970 but to work with them to ensure that the latest in technology and that the most current resources are available to their communities as they are in cities and larger centres. This initiative is about one thing, and that is making EMS part of health care.

Mr. Stier: Well, I don't think that's quite true, again, Mr. Speaker.

Given that last week this Health minister said that the current ambulance system was "completely in line with what Albertans expect" and that wait times in some regions of the province are averaging as high as 45 minutes or longer, will the minister finally own up to his mistake and admit his failed flex dispatch vision is putting patients at risk, or should Albertans just expect more of the same from this tone-deaf PC government?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this government initiated a review of ground ambulance services by the Health Quality Council, an evidence-based review which looked at the elements that would create a system that would provide the best possible quality of services to all Albertans regardless of whether they live in a rural or an urban community. We make decisions based on that evidence. We work collaboratively with partners to implement decisions. We have a few municipalities still working with us to complete the changes, but in the areas where they have taken effect, they are working. I invite the hon. member to consider that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Medicine Hat.

Natural Gas Industry

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's natural gas business is undergoing phenomenal change. It's been turned upside down by increased production of shale gas at a remarkable pace. Many gas producers in Alberta struggle to reorient in a world of persistently low natural gas prices. To the Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Ed: what is your ministry doing to address this competitiveness challenge for gas producers in the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very important question for our industry. We know that the price of the commodity has been at a record low for quite some time right now, but we also know that through proper policy changes and the encouragement and attraction of investment we could turn our gas industry into a value-added gas industry that is not as dependent on the basic price of the commodity but actually on the price of the value-added product. So one of the things that we are doing now is working with industry to develop a value-added industry.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: To the same minister: in that policy how are you recommending we leverage the natural gas experience and resources of Albertans, the facilities, the existing infrastructure, and the know-how?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we definitely in the province have the talent – there's no doubt about it – within the industry and our postsecondary institutions. We definitely have the infrastructure that is needed. What we need is more trans-Canadian infrastructure to get product to markets. But we already have some examples of success. Recently I was at a Methanex plant, where they're looking at upgrading gas into significantly higher value, producing fertilizer and other products. That is what we can be great at, and that is what we're working on.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Again to the Deputy Premier: what is your ministry doing in conjunction with the natural gas industry to ensure that the industry gets through this period of challenge?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're working on attracting venture capital because it takes a great deal of money to convert current plants into value-added plants. Our Premier and our Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations are working on making sure that we have the markets abroad for selling those value-added products. Most importantly, we have to have the pipelines, and we have to have the means of transportation to deliver those value-added products to other parts of the world. That is what all of us are working on as a team.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the June floods in Medicine Hat I witnessed extraordinary Albertans who were more selfless and courageous than I could ever imagine possible. It was truly inspiring as they spent their days sandbagging, helping neighbours, and opening their homes to strangers. The flood damage cannot be rectified quickly, but the government has an obligation to make sure DRP funding reaches Albertans who qualify in a timely manner. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why has some assistance taken so long to get to victims like those in Medicine Hat?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I've mentioned this before. Talking about the 2010 floods, we had thousands of people who made DRP claims, and all but five residential claims have been resolved. In those five claims there are some extenuating circumstances. I won't get into them, but I can assure the member that our job is to ensure that the dollars we spend are spent wisely and people get the fair amount but not more than what they request.

Mr. Pedersen: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier promised to look after the flood victims and given that after four months of waiting many Albertans with legitimate claims tell me that funding through DRP is wrapped up in too much red tape, will the minister commit to streamlining the process for the victims of Medicine Hat and those around the province?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we make the commitment every day to streamline the process as much as possible. In all 30 communities that experienced significant floods this June, I can already say that just last week we found another step in the process that we could mitigate against, and we did so in conjunction with the federal government, which also has very strict criteria to make sure we account for every single taxpayer dollar.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the biggest complaint with DRP funding is that the full claim cannot be paid until the insurance portion has been settled, will the minister agree today to review outstanding cases and request DRP take the lead to work collaboratively with the victims and their insurance companies to resolve these claims? Why can't they work together, Minister?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we have some incredible, hard-working staff at Municipal Affairs working on the DRP program, and I'm proud of the work that they've done. In fact, the Minister of Finance and I just had a great conversation with all of the insurance companies that operate and are involved in this flood to indicate to them that our process has been streamlined and that we encourage them to streamline their process. We came up with some very new and very vigorous ideas on how we could continue to make sure we work together because we all serve the same client, and that's those who were affected by this flood and deserve justice. We will continue to advocate for them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, followed by Airdrie.

Highway 2 Cardiff Road Interchange

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the biggest concerns in my constituency is the safety issue at the Cardiff intersection just south of Morinville. An overpass was slated to be built. The land was acquired, and some of the preliminary work was completed. When the necessary 2013 budget was passed, the Cardiff overpass had to be taken off the three-year Alberta Transportation construction program. I fully support the need to live within our means, so that's not the issue. The issue is the safety concern. My constituents continue to be very concerned about safety at this corner. To the Minister of Transportation. The degree of collision problems is approximately eight crashes per year, 50 per cent being injury-type . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair is here. Who wishes to respond to this? The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member. I know that this issue is something she's been very diligent in addressing with my office. She's right to be impatient. We have been looking at a number of options. I think quite soon we'll be able to take some of those options to the good people near the Cardiff corner to look at what there is. In the meantime I would be remiss if I didn't say that safety is a two-way street. The government has our role, and we need to do it, but we also need to remind drivers to obey the rules of the road to make sure that safety does take place.

The Speaker: The hon. member. First supplemental.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the mayors of Sturgeon and the town of Morinville, both of them being brand new – congratulations to them – look forward to a meeting with you and your department staff as soon as possible to deal with this very important issue?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, of course they can. As the hon. member knows, we routinely meet with municipalities from across Alberta, and it is very valuable for us because then we get our best advice on what the priorities of Albertans are at the local level. That helps us with the advice from the hon. member to gauge what part of building Alberta under the Premier's direction would be of the most benefit to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. I'm just wondering if you could give us some sense of time. Would it be possible to do any work in the winter?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't answer that in detail, but I can say to the hon. member that when we meet with the municipal leaders in the area and when we decide on what the right solution is, we won't waste time. We will get busy at our first opportunity in making a difference because, as the hon. member rightly points out, this is a safety issue and one that needs to be addressed. I can assure her that she can count on my co-operation and Alberta Transportation's.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the time for question period has expired. In 25 seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements, beginning with Calgary-Hawkwood, then Edmonton-McClung, then Calgary-Mountain View.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Arbour Lake Community

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Calgary-Hawkwood I am proud to share that this summer the Calgary edition of Avenue magazine named a community in my constituency, Arbour Lake, as the best community in the city. Avenue magazine's ranking included such things as an eight-month-long online poll that asked Calgarians to complete a survey about qualities they most value in a neighbourhood. Additional information such as housing prices and the number of restaurants and retail outlets for each neighbourhood is also added to the data.

Anyone who has had the opportunity to visit Arbour Lake probably knows why Arbour Lake is deserving of the best community title. The lake itself is the focal point of the community and brings people together for a wide variety of activities, including stand-up paddleboard and fishing derbies. Arbour Lake is also home to excellent medical facilities, including family medicine, dentistry, chiropractic, and diagnostic imaging clinics.

Aside from the excellent physical setting I cannot emphasize enough that the most outstanding quality of Arbour Lake is its highly engaged community of citizens. Residents of Arbour Lake enjoy a sense of pride, a sense of belonging, and a sense of ownership. This is in part due to the great work that is done by the staff and volunteers of the Arbour Lake Community Association and the residents' association.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, some of the leaders are here today sitting in the gallery. I would like to take this opportunity to thank them for their dedication and service to the people of Arbour Lake. I would also like to take the opportunity to thank residents and the businesses of Arbour Lake for making your community one of the best in the city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Country of Origin Labelling

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share with you Alberta's ongoing advocacy efforts opposing the United States' country of origin labelling rules, also known as COOL. The rules require that meat derived from animals born, reared, or slaughtered outside the United States must be labelled to indicate the country or countries involved.

COOL has resulted in extra tracking and segregation costs for Canadian hogs and cattle exported to the U.S. Alberta's position and Canada's position, which is backed by the World Trade Organization, is that COOL is an unfair trade measure that does not protect consumers. It hurts the livestock industry on both sides of the border by imposing hundreds of millions of dollars in unnecessary costs.

We have been working closely with the federal government to pursue a fair resolution to this trade issue as part of our efforts to build Alberta by enhancing market access to our agriculture resources. Alberta's agriculture minister and I were in Kansas City in September and met with U.S. state legislators to rally support to change COOL. Mr. Speaker, we were pleased that the group passed a resolution acknowledging COOL's negative economic impact and calling on the U.S. Congress to reconsider. To date eight such resolutions have been passed in various forums of U.S. decision-makers.

This week our agriculture minister is in Chicago with Canadian officials and other provincial agriculture ministers to meet with the U.S. meat-packing industry to build additional support and momentum for change.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta continues to stand up for its livestock industry, and Alberta will continue to push hard until this issue is resolved.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Private Delivery of Health Care Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two-tiered health care is here. This government's ideology supporting private, two-tier funding and delivery of health care continues against the will of Albertans and despite their fiasco with the Health Resource Centre three years ago in Calgary. Small wonder there's a high level of distrust associated with both this PC government agenda and their mismanagement. Many sick and suffering Albertans are understandably looking to an ever-increasing number of private options. The overriding concern here must be preserving universal access to publicly delivered care.

Alberta Health Services has failed to achieve even their low benchmarks for wait times in testing, EMS response times, emergency room access, surgery, and access to long-term care. Delay translates into higher costs of health care, with complications every day.

Rather than focusing on stabilizing the system and strengthening prevention, primary care, home care, and long-term care – real solutions – the PCs have turned to increasing the depth and breadth of privatization à la Bill 11, the third way, and the rebranded 2010 Alberta Health Act, that is still not proclaimed. Two-tiered health care is already a fact in Alberta. Individuals with separate insurance or sufficient funds can avail themselves of services provided by a range of private diagnostic, wellness, and surgical clinics.

Obviously, the situation raises ethical concerns. How do we stop the loss of physicians into the more attractive private-care options? What are the mechanisms to prevent physicians billing both patients and Alberta Health, worsening our wait times? The draft guidelines from the College of Physicians & Surgeons are welcome, and they would make it illegal to reject patients in boutique clinics on the basis of their inability to pay a fee. The college is also looking at restricting faster access to public wait-lists based on private imaging. Private wait-list insurance is now available for a monthly premium. Who knew that queue-jumping is perfectly legal in another province, just not in your own?

As this government lurches from crisis to crisis in health care, few Albertans have confidence that this government can manage these issues to benefit all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm presenting two petitions. In the first petition there are 1,645 signatures of Albertans who request that the Legislature urge the government to take steps to "ensure the preservation and enhancement of the Pheasant Release Program." When adding these signatures to the other petitions that I presented in the spring, there are about 3,500 Albertans requesting support for the pheasant release program.

The second petition, signed by 188 Albertans, requests that the Legislature urge the government to "introduce a Bill to preserve Albertans' 65-year investment in the Pheasant rearing, release and hunting" program through a number of relevant departments and by providing "a fair share of province-wide lottery profits."

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 35

Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce Bill 35, the Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 35 makes several minor amendments to the Financial Administration Act, which ensures the sound financial management of government. The key amendment proposed under Bill 35 is needed for government to effectively manage appropriations for capital projects that span fiscal years. Other proposed changes are primarily technical and administrative in nature and will help the government manage its day-to-day business. Alberta is one of the most fiscally responsible jurisdictions, and Bill 35 will not change that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bill 40

Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 40, the Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act.

This legislation will implement the convention on the settlement of investment disputes between states and nationals of other states, commonly known as the ICSID convention. In today's competitive global economy it is increasingly important for Alberta to offer a special market that interests international investors and supporters. The convention promotes international investment by offering an effective regime for mutual resolution of investment disputes.

To date about 150 countries have ratified the convention. The federal government announced on November 1 that it has formally ratified the convention to ensure the implementation of the convention in all of Canada, and the federal government is encouraging all the provinces and territories to integrate their own implementation legislation.

Moving forward with the implementation of the ICSID convention is a positive step to create certainty for investments both in Alberta and abroad, sustaining success and prosperity for all Albertans now and in the generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a first time]

The Speaker: Are there any others?

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that that last bill be added to Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 19(5) of the Auditor General Act I would like to table five copies of the report titled Report of the Auditor General of Alberta October 2013. Copies of this report will be distributed momentarily.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of four newspaper articles heralding last week's achievement of Fort McMurray being designated by the Canada Border Services Agency as a port of entry. This is a great boost for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. YMM has now been notified that the status has been established effective October 7, 2013. This announcement means that long-term planning for more international and U.S. transporter, passenger, and air cargo services can continue.

I proudly table these articles on behalf of my constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Meadowlark and Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. First, I'll do a tabling on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition.

An Hon. Member: The Leader of the Official Opposition?

Ms Blakeman: Oh. I'm sorry. Too many years. Sorry. The leader of the third-party opposition.

This is the FOIP that he referred to in his question regarding new furniture purchase, design consultation, and many, many e-mails back and forth about the finishes and where it was all going to go for the Deputy Premier and minister of advanced education.

The second tabling is from my office, the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. We have a report of letters that we received from concerned citizens who wrote to us with regard to changes in the land titles office. That's Sharon Murphy, Trevor Zimmerman, Robert Lavoie, Donna Sheplawy, Chantelle Kossakowski, and Rosellina Giardino. I've given the text of the typical letter.

Thank you very much.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Griffiths, Minister of Municipal Affairs, responses to questions raised by Mr. Rowe, hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills; Mr. Donovan, hon. Member for Little Bow; and Ms Blakeman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, on April 17, 2013, Department of Municipal Affairs main estimates debate.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm just going to revert to a tabling from Cardston-Taber-Warner, whose request I overlooked inadvertently.

Cardston-Taber-Warner, please proceed with your three tablings.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't take that personally. I know how busy you are.

I wish to table a document that was e-mailed to me from a very concerned constituent, Sharon, and her husband, Darrel Unger. They've got property that AltaLink transmission lines are potentially proposed to go across. They're trying to sell their home and are unable to because of the uncertainty of where the lines will be. Prospective purchasers have withdrawn offers. That will be number one.

Number two is a letter from John Leahy, a constituent from the Taber area, who advises:

At present, if there is an oil and gas facility . . . on your property, the MD or County assesses and bills the oil company . . .

The property taxes on their facilities are paid by the oil company.

However, if there is a wind turbine or substation on your property, the MD or County adds the value of the facilities to the landowners assessment and [then] bills the landowner for his taxes.

He thinks this is an inequity that needs to be addressed.

The third is from a registry office in rural Alberta in a small town, Milk River. Gail Matlock operates Matlock Registries, where very important services are provided to rural Alberta. She's concerned about the changes that are being proposed, details of which they don't have now, but she thinks the changes being proposed may threaten the survivability of their business.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 7(7) the daily Routine is now concluded, and we can move on.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Motion to Concur in the Report from the Standing Committee on Families and Communities

Bill 204

Irlen Syndrome Testing Act

[Debate adjourned October 28: Mrs. Jablonski speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I stand to speak to the concurrence motion regarding the referral of Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act, to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities. Respectfully, I would like to speak against concurrence in the report on Bill 204.

In many ways I'm grateful that Bill 204 underwent this very important part of the legislative process. I've discovered, as demonstrated in new research from the University of Lethbridge by Dr. Noëlla Piquette and Dr. Charles Boulet, that if not caught early, children's vision problems may be mistaken for learning disabilities. Mr. Speaker, did you know that fewer than 15 per cent of children have their vision tested before they start school? Testing vision is a critical component of helping children achieve success in school because you need to read to succeed.

As detailed in the final report, the Standing Committee on Families and Communities received 75 written submissions from interested citizens, concerned medical professionals, and experts: 50 in support and 25 not in support. I also received dozens of e-mails and letters of support that were not submitted to the committee, and I know that a number of my colleagues also support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the report from the committee recommends that the bill not proceed to second reading in the House. Although I very much respect this decision and the concerns of my colleagues in this Legislature, I believe that we owe it to the children of our province to do everything we can to ensure their success in the classroom. Irlen syndrome is a perceptual problem associated with the brain's ability to process images. In many cases individuals with Irlen's see a printed page differently although they don't realize that they do. Such distortions include words or letters which appear to move, swirl, and shimmer. This can prevent many people and children from reading effectively, efficiently, or even at all. What is most detrimental about Irlen syndrome is that academic and work performance, behaviour, attention span, and the ability to concentrate are negatively affected by this condition.

Scientific research is finally catching up to the hundreds of thousands of people around the world who know that this condition is very real and that it causes unnecessary suffering, stress, and academic difficulties for many Albertans.

The huge impact of this condition was evident in the number of citizens who submitted written submissions to the standing committee. As detailed in the final report on Bill 204, six invited parties made oral presentations before the committee, and approximately 50 observers from rural and urban centres in Alberta were present to show their support for the proposed legislation. We also conducted a video conference in committee with Dr. Sandra Tosta from California to detail the latest studies and findings about visual stress, or Irlen's.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Visual perception plays a crucial role in school success and is very much an area of ongoing study. In fact, just last week Dr. Charles Boulet, a developmental optometrist researching at the University of Lethbridge, along with Dr. Noëlla Piquette released an important paper regarding the impact of visual impediments on childhood learning. Dr. Boulet also submitted a written response as part of the committee review process. Recently published in the journal Optometry & Visual Performance, this paper asserted that visual impediments to learning, or VIL, which includes visual stress, or Irlen's, are often missed or overlooked in common sight screenings. As a result, this leads to difficulties with reading, memory, emotional awareness, and impulse control in children.

Mr. Speaker, fewer than 15 per cent of children have their vision tested comprehensively despite the fact that 80 per cent of learning is dependent on vision. Dr. Piquette even goes as far as asserting that this lack of appropriate VIL detection and management combined with compulsory participation in a visually taxing education model for 12 years or more may well constitute an implicit neglect of children's health and basic human rights.

Current models of visual screening allow many significant problems to pass through as false negatives. Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 204 is a start to addressing possible gaps in the system when it comes to visual screening. I very much believe that we need a protocol in place that detects a wider range of learning-related vision problems. We already have processes in place like the Eye See . . . Eye Learn program, which offers complimentary examinations and free glasses to kindergarten children, and the government of Alberta pays for eye exams until age 18. It has been shown that if vision is adequately managed from an early age, academic and health problems are greatly improved. Ultimately, this could lead to a reduced long-term cost in education and in health.

If Bill 204 were referred back to the House for second reading debate, it would be debated in its current form. That means that the suggested amendments that I brought before the committee, which I believe would have improved the bill by addressing the stakeholder concerns raised in the written submissions and public hearings, would not be considered until Committee of the Whole debate. One of these concerns raised during the committee process was that many professionals perceive the use of the name "Irlen" as a proprietary name. In response to this, I propose changing the title of the bill to the Visual Stress Testing Act and removing "Irlen" from the contents of the legislation altogether. This way many other visual impediments to learning would be encompassed under the broader umbrella of visual stress in which Irlen's is included.

Some medical professionals, including representatives from the AMA and the Alberta College of Optometrists, were concerned that Bill 204 was too prescriptive and that much of the research surrounding Irlen syndrome was inconclusive. They're behind in the research.

Over the extent of this process I have been able to bring needed awareness to an issue within our communities, an issue which is not only important to me but to the many Albertans who have been aided by coloured, filtered Irlen lenses. Many children who were once unjustifiably labelled by their peers as stupid, as classroom disruptors, and as lazy simply because they have difficulty focusing on class assignments as they cannot read have been aided thanks to the Irlen Institute.

Mr. Speaker, I brought this bill before the Assembly to raise awareness about Irlen syndrome as well as visual stress. I've heard over and over again from teachers, students, and parents: "Why wasn't I told about this sooner? Why didn't my doctor tell me about this? What can be done to change this for other families?" The most critical and heart-wrenching question of all is: where would my child be today if I had been made aware of this earlier?

By speaking against concurrence in the report on Bill 204, I hope to once again raise the profile and awareness surrounding visual impediments to learning. Allowing Bill 204 to continue in second reading debate and later in Committee of the Whole would enable appropriate amendments to be made, ensuring that this bill is properly crafted, including many of the valuable comments and insights that my colleagues have provided over this review process. Mr. Speaker, I'm only asking that Bill 204 be allowed to be debated in second reading so that everyone can see its benefits and so that it can be amended and implemented.

I'd like to thank all of my colleagues from the Standing Committee on Families and Communities for their time, their patience, and their understanding in reviewing Bill 204. Mr.

Speaker, I think one of the best things we can do for our children in this province is to make sure that their vision is tested adequately and that we provide the tools for success, because you need to read to succeed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of concurring with the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in the matter of Bill 204. At the outset I would like to say that I know how much time and dedication my friend and colleague the hon. Member for Red Deer-North has invested. She's done an excellent job of creating awareness about eyesight issues, and I would like to commend her for her dedication and her hard work.

As much as I would like to support the hon. member in her endeavours, however, as someone with a science background I've got to listen carefully to the objections and evidence presented to the committee by the scientists and the professionals in the field, whom we in Alberta have entrusted with safeguarding the interests of their professions and those of the public, and that would include the Alberta College of Optometrists, the Alberta Medical Association, the College of Physicians & Surgeons.

Mr. Speaker, we as legislators cannot always say that we know better than the experts, especially when it comes to issues of treatment of medical issues. We have an obligation to listen to the experts whom we recognize in their fields of expertise. Accordingly, I support the committee's decision that Bill 204 not proceed. The College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta had two issues with the proposed legislation: first, the propriety of screening for any type of condition in this setting; and secondly, the scientific validity of screening, testing, and treating what is known as Irlen syndrome.

The Alberta College of Optometrists gave several reasons for not recommending that Irlen syndrome screening or testing proceed, including the fact that the screening would take place "by a screener that is 'certified' by the Irlen Corporation," which is "not regulated by any provincial or Federal legislation."

Secondly, the college states that validated and independent investigations do not support the claims made by the Irlen Corporation or its sponsored researchers.

Thirdly, the college states that the cost of an Irlen screening is about five times the cost of more complete eye exams by an optometrist or ophthalmologist.

The submission of the Alberta Medical Association, which consulted with physicians in its sections of pediatrics and ophthalmology, strongly opposes the content of Bill 204 and also disputes the claims that Irlen Syndrome is a legitimate vision disorder. It also cited reputable professional organizations in the United States, including the American Academy of Pediatrics, the American association of pediatric ophthalmology, the American Academy of Ophthalmology, the American Association of Certified Orthoptists. In a joint statement all of these organizations said: "Diagnostic and treatment approaches [for dyslexia] that lack scientific evidence of efficacy, including eye exercises, behavioral vision therapy, or special [colored] filters or lenses, are not endorsed . . . [or] recommended.

Accordingly, the Alberta Medical Association "urges the government to withdraw this bill." Dr. Ian MacDonald from the AMA section of ophthalmology presented compelling reasons as to why recognizing the legitimacy of Irlen syndrome would be problematic. Dr. MacDonald stated that the validity of published materials supporting the prescription of tinted lenses to counteract reading impairment had shown "serious flaws in their methods," also citing inconsistencies in their results.

AMA's senior medical adviser, Dr. Mittelsteadt, also reiterated their position stating that "based on the scientific evidence . . . we cannot support Bill 204," citing several reasons. Dr. Mittelsteadt claimed that enshrining Irlen syndrome within legislation when there is not enough evidence to either recognize that it is a definitive diagnosis or recognize that the treatment for this syndrome is efficacious would not be advisable and may put undue pressure on school boards.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for her passionate efforts in regard to improving the lives of children across Alberta. While the intent behind Bill 204 is admirable; namely, to assess and help children with reading difficulties, I have to rely on the best evidence of those whom we in Alberta recognize as the leaders in and the spokespersons for their professions. For these reasons, I speak in favour of concurrence of the final report of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities on Bill 204, which recommended that Bill 204 not proceed, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me to rise today in this Assembly to speak against concurrence in the report on Bill 204, the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act, brought forth by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. To begin, I would like to acknowledge the hon. member for bringing this issue to our attention. Her passion for literacy and her attempt to enhance the education of our youth is to be commended. I'm glad this issue has garnered attention in this House. As educators I hope that by raising awareness of Irlen syndrome, we can indirectly assist those who may suffer from it and other learning impairments.

Irlen syndrome is also known as scotopic sensitivity syndrome, or visual stress, and is a condition which adversely affects the literacy skills of children and adults. In many cases it causes the distortion of words and numbers, inhibiting reading ability and math skills. In my view, when you can improve the lives of children and people so that they can live a better life, that is an important mission.

Mr. Speaker, our education system in this province is its greatest institution. It equips our students with the skills they need in order to be successful in postsecondary schooling and, of course, in their chosen career. Our province is fortunate to have one of the greatest education systems in the world, with some of the best teachers and the brightest minds. Together this bodes well for our future labour force and the economic prosperity of our province.

Bill 204 attempts to supplement our education system in a rather unique way, by establishing a screening process for students who display symptoms of Irlen syndrome. School systems would be required to have certified screeners available and to provide testing upon parental consent and after it is suggested by an educator. The screener would be able to determine the severity of the condition and in some cases provide coloured overlays, which could alleviate the symptoms. In more severe cases the screener may recommend further testing by an Irlen diagnostician who, in turn, could prescribe coloured lenses for glasses. This treatment method for many appears to be successful and helps to minimize the symptoms of Irlen syndrome.

Bill 204 represents an opportunity to maximize the learning potential of our youth who struggle with Irlen syndrome. It is very unfortunate and sad that some people have spent their entire lives with this problem and were not aware of it until later on in adult years. As we have heard from the Member for Red Deer-North, the Standing Committee on Families and Communities received written submissions from approximately 50 individuals who had experienced this first-hand. Mr. Speaker, by identifying this condition at an early age, we could enhance the lifestyle of many Albertans, making their educational and professional experiences more fulfilling.

I certainly agree with the underlying premise of this legislation, but in saying this, we should consider expanding this bill's scope to include other learning impairments and also consider carrying out additional research regarding Irlen syndrome. This is something that the hon. member proposed as a possible recommendation to the committee. Through this legislative process my colleague wished to expand Bill 204 to encompass visual stress, which includes Irlen syndrome.

Currently there are many learning impairments which exist and adversely affect one's educational experience, and of course these impairments include auditory processing disorder, visual processing disorder, dyscalculia, dyslexia, and dysgraphia, to name a few. It is important that we assist those who suffer from these learning impairments. Mr. Speaker, most students with such learning disabilities are just as smart as everyone else, and they should be afforded the same opportunities as fellow students.

In order to achieve this, however, they need the necessary resources and specific teaching methods which are tailored to their learning styles. It is important that we do everything that we can to provide children with the supports to have a successful education and develop the foundations necessary to continue that education. Literacy plays a crucial role in that, and that is why I'm speaking today against concurrence with the report on Bill 204, which recommended that the bill not proceed in this Legislature.

Many children who do not get proper support may develop a negative self-image and fall into destructive habits, which are a disservice to themselves and in some cases the community as a whole. To expand upon my last point, it has been noted that 60 per cent of America's prison inmates are illiterate and that 85 per cent of juvenile offenders have reading problems. Given that there appears to be a relationship between illiteracy and deviant behaviour, it is important that we do all we can to assist those who struggle with learning complications.

To this end, Bill 204 helps achieve this, but in further discussion of this legislation I believe some important points should also be addressed. For one, given that this condition was discussed in the '80s, conducting more research concerning this issue may be beneficial in many respects. It may give us answers to crucial questions such as why the condition exists, how it originates, and who it is most likely to affect. A fulsome approach to testing will help enhance the quality of life for many Albertans and assist them with their learning difficulties.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for proposing the legislation. I know she is going to get a lot of questions and concerns raised about dollars and cents, but sometimes we have to look at humanity and not necessarily always at all the costs. I believe she is skimming the surface of a potentially large problem that is preventing our youth from achieving all they can accomplish academically.

I am speaking against concurrence for Bill 204 as I believe it is crucial that we assist our most vulnerable children by helping them attain their dreams and achieve their greatest potential through education without barriers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? I'll recognize the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today in this Assembly to speak against concurrence with the report on Bill 204, Irlen Syndrome Testing Act, brought forth by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Firstly, I'd like to thank the hon. member for generating awareness about this condition and being the voice for literacy in our province. I know I can speak on behalf of all my colleagues when I say that the welfare of our children and youth is a top priority for all of us, and a proposal which could enhance their quality of life always deserves attention in this House.

Mr. Speaker, our children represent our future and are very valuable components of our society. In time they will be bestowed with the responsibility of carrying the great legacy of our province forward, helping to improve upon the work of the past generations, who have made Alberta one of the greatest places to work, live, and raise a family. As such, a piece of legislation which could affect their well-being is always of interest to me.

Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of being a member of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities as it reviewed the proposed legislation. We've heard from many concerned stakeholders, medical professionals as well as individuals who suffer from Irlen syndrome. After these hearings the committee recommended in its report on Bill 204 that the proposed legislation not proceed.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, in today's society literacy is the key to success. As is the case, and as a former teacher myself I'm glad this condition has been brought to my attention. In saying this, I am pleased to speak to the Irlen Syndrome Testing Act. This syndrome allegedly has many side effects, but most importantly it appears to inhibit one's ability to read properly. This occurs because of word distortion as people who have visual stress or even Irlen syndrome appear to view written text differently. In effect, this causes sufferers a level of discomfort and personal embarrassment as it appears as though they are incapable of reading and learning at the same pace as their peers. In addition to this, sufferers may exhibit a short attention span, and as a result they're often misdiagnosed with having ADHD and other attention-related disorders. Sometimes it can lead to an unwarranted use of prescription drugs such as Ritalin.

Mr. Speaker, Helen Irlen, a psychologist and Cornell University graduate, has developed a method which helps individuals suffering from Irlen syndrome. The procedure involves prescribing customized coloured lenses and overlays to individuals suffering from its effects. This is done by certified Irlen screeners and diagnosticians. Some of these screeners also presented before the committee as part of the public hearing.

Mr. Speaker, some scientific studies have shown this method to be quite effective as reading comprehension has improved drastically among children. On the other hand, some associations such as the American Optometric Association believe that more research should be done to investigate the effect that lenses have on reading performance. Associations here in Alberta like the Alberta College of Optometrists, who presented before the committee, also strongly oppose this testing on similar grounds.

Nevertheless, whatever the position of various organizations may be, if the potential to help a child exists, I believe the means by which it is achieved should be examined.

Mr. Speaker, although the committee recommended that the bill not proceed, I believe that Bill 204 has the potential of assisting children suffering from visual stress. It attempts to achieve this in two ways. Firstly, it seeks to ensure that educators are aware of symptoms of visual stress, which includes Irlen syndrome. This will enable teachers to identify sufferers and to communicate to parents what potential problems could be.

Secondly, Bill 204 seeks to set up a screening process within the education system to test children who teachers believe are suffering from this condition. Thereafter, sufferers could be prescribed coloured lenses to help improve reading ability, which in turn also likely increases overall school success.

Mr. Speaker, literacy is the key to providing our children with a promising future. We all benefit from a well-educated society, and this bill could help supplement the outstanding education system which we have established in this province already. It could act as a proactive piece of legislation which would be unparalleled in its uniqueness across this great country.

This being said, regardless of the outcome of this bill, regardless of findings of the report on Bill 204 I believe that by discussing this matter today, we are doing something proactive and beneficial for many children. We are generating an awareness of this issue. I also believe that by bringing this bill before the Standing Committee on Families and Communities, even more awareness has been generated. For this, I am very grateful. I would be willing to bet that few members in this House, if any, had ever heard of Irlen syndrome before this. By continuing to educate ourselves today and having a proactive conversation, we are expanding our knowledge base, whereby we can make a difference. I'm sure many of us have nephews, nieces, and family members who have difficulty with reading and writing, which adversely affects their schooling.

Mr. Speaker, in my estimation, it would certainly not hurt to discuss Irlen syndrome with them, and it's quite possible that they haven't even heard of it. In doing so, we could positively affect the life of a child or an adult, helping him or her to succeed in school, work, and literacy. Such action does not require a bill or a motion. It requires self-awareness and good intention, and this is something I believe we can all do to assist those who may be struggling with school. It is a small yet considerable action that can change the life of a person. In generating awareness, a ripple effect can be created, providing a possible solution to the educational struggle of many children and occupational difficulties of adults.

Mr. Speaker, as detailed in the report, I recommend: do further research into "the nature of visual conditions that require testing." In doing so, we will have a better idea of the fundamental questions which may exist relating to the nature of visual stress.

Mr. Speaker, I do not discount the potential effects of this syndrome or question its existence or how many children could be affected by it. I think that in referring Bill 204 to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities, my colleagues have realized gaps in the proposed legislation. She's eager to address them. However, if this bill does not make it to second reading, she will not have the opportunity to do that. For this reason, I'm speaking against concurrence with the final report on Bill 204.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing this condition not only to my attention but for being an advocate for children across our province. For that she should be commended. This bill has already achieved a lot in terms of generating awareness. I believe it has provided us knowledge to make a difference in the community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope all of you support it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, if I could just ask you to keep the side conversations down while another member has the floor, please, it would be appreciated.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to say a few words. This bill was referred to a committee, and the reason, I believe, that it was referred to a committee was so that we could have a really in-depth look at the issue, which is what we did. We did spend many, many hours on this – reading the materials, attending the meetings – so in respect to this process I do believe we should all support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to recognize and thank the Member for Red Deer-North for all the work that she's done in raising awareness and educating us all about Irlen syndrome. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 was referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in the spring. As the Member for Calgary-Bow has just said, we went through a lengthy process and discussion. There were 75 written submissions and six oral presentations. We heard from the Canadian Association of Irlen Professionals, Dr. Sharon Vaselenak, and the Irlen Institute, who supported it. We also heard from the Alberta College of Optometrists. The Alberta Medical Association, as the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill has pointed out, had some serious questions about the science. We also heard from the Alberta School Boards Association, who along with the departments of Health and Education in our recommendations want to do more for these kids and are recognizing Irlen syndrome and what it means to these children and their families and their progress.

I think the Alberta School Boards Association said it best, that we don't need a law for this to happen. I think everybody understands that we need to work towards doing better for these kids and that we will work towards doing better for these kids.

In light of that, the committee did spend many hours on this, with lengthy consultation, lengthy discussion, lengthy deliberation over this. We did come to the conclusion to report back to this Legislature with those recommendations, including that the bill, Bill 204, not proceed. So as chair of the committee I would urge all hon. members to concur in the report of the committee, and I would like to move to close debate.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities has requested concurrence in the report on Bill 204. Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Some Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: That is carried.

Motion to Concur in the Report from the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship

Bill 205
Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2012

[Debate adjourned October 28: Ms Calahasen speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise today to speak against the concurrence motion for Bill 205 as proposed by the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship. I'd like to thank all colleagues on the committee who supported Bill 205 and also to bring attention to my commercial fishermen's plight. I want to say a special thank you. With respect, I do oppose the motion, of course, for Bill 205 to not proceed because I truly believe that Bill 205, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, would provide a formal mechanism by which concerned stakeholders could contribute to the determination of commercial fishing quotas each year as well as have the decisions posted so all can see and better understand the rationale for the decisions made. It was this bill that came about for my commercial fishermen to get resolution to concerns they have had with processes within ESRD's fisheries department.

Mr. Speaker, residents of northern Alberta, particularly in Lesser Slave Lake, also have a vested interest in the prosperity of this industry, and because these communities and their residents are directly affected, I felt that this topic deserved important consideration. This bill would give the industry an additional tool in continuing development of a viable commercial fishing industry, thereby contributing more to the provincial economy. With the requirement of published departmental reports online outlining consultations, this bill will strengthen governmental transparency and access to information in Alberta, a goal of our government.

This would contribute consistency and transparency across the province with a range of decisions made about fishing quotas and the processes that lead to their implementation. The rubric proposed by Bill 205 would require that the Department of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development involve commercial fishermen in any change to the fishing quotas for the upcoming fishing season like any other industry. Bill 205 proposes that by submitting a request, fishermen will also be able to initiate the consultation process themselves as they see fit. Consultations with Albertans are of great importance to this government, and this bill would provide the opportunity to demonstrate that meaningful consultation with stakeholders would occur.

This is one of the reasons why I have a difficult time supporting that recommendation by the Resource Stewardship Committee to not proceed with the bill. The consultation process proposed by this bill is intended to ensure that stakeholder concerns are seriously considered and addressed. I know that Alberta fisheries regulations give authority to the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development to manage three-quarters of the province, and as such, the director of the fisheries management branch has the authority to determine and alter quotas, closing times for lakes, and any other limits placed on fisheries.

Mr. Speaker, section 13.1 of the regulation requires that the director give notice to all persons affected by any changes made to closing times, fishing quotas, or limits on size and weight of fish. While it is a requirement that commercial fishermen be made aware of changes to the industry that impact their livelihoods, there is currently no legislative requirement that government consult with commercial fishermen when determining quotas, nor is there a requirement to post these decisions or to explain why this is done. Concurring in the recommendations made by this committee report would continue this flawed process.

This bill would expand and formalize the existing consultation process and law under the Fisheries (Alberta) Act, and over the past year the government has held numerous consultations on issues that are important to Albertans. The feedback that we have received for many topics has been invaluable in helping us to make the informed decisions about changes Albertans want us to make. Bill 205 seeks not only to bring this type of dialogue to the fishing industry but to enshrine it in legislation. As a supporter of meaningful consultations I believe that stakeholders in the fishing industry should be consulted on quota decisions and that this information should be made transparent to all Albertans.

Through sponsoring this legislation, I believe that informal mechanisms are insufficient and that commercial fisheries and stakeholders would be better served by a legislative, formalized consultation process. Therefore, it is imperative that the legislative option be thoroughly scrutinized. What is certain is that we owe it to the Albertans who make their living in the commercial fishing industry to ensure that they're able to sustain themselves in the fairest and most efficient way possible.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I understand and appreciate the process being recommended by the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship on Bill 205, and I know that this minister will move mountains to see good things happen for my constituents. But, as we all know, ministers change, and that's the other reason. If it's legislated, I know it's a little harder to change. I believe my commercial fishermen need to be heard throughout the whole process, and I ask that this Legislature consider moving this forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other speakers? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to oppose this motion from the committee. It's quite interesting. In the committee, which I was part of, we heard the reasons presented, particularly by ESRD, on why they didn't want this bill to go forward, why they didn't agree with making consultation mandatory, and I have to tell you quite honestly that there was no logic to their argument, in my view. What was very clear – and the minutes of the meeting actually support this – was that where the government consulted, the process worked. Where they didn't consult, it didn't work. In effect, where they were not consulting was in dealing with Métis and aboriginal peoples, and that was disconcerting to me.

I will tell you this. The consequence – and I am not making any allegation here whatsoever – of the failure to have consistent consultation is, in effect, racist if it affects just one certain race or certain aboriginal people. That's not intentional on their part – I want to make that absolutely clear – but that's the outcome.

When the bill was brought forward, what it said was that we're just going to make consultation mandatory all across the spectrum. The ministry agrees that when they consult, it works. When they don't consult, the process fails, and what is absolutely clear from the evidence provided is that they are failing to consult, particularly when dealing with Métis and First Nations people. That's a problem, and it needs to be corrected. By making it a legislative mandate, we clean up our problem. The ESRD does exactly what it needs to do and what it says that it wants to do, which is consult.

Now, the thing that gets me on this thing is that I understand why the committee made its recommendation. I heard the arguments. But for this Assembly not to allow the member to bring that bill forward so it at least could be debated in this Assembly and let it suffer whatever outcome it will go through – at least allow the process. Allow it to be heard. That's why I stand and join this member in opposing this motion.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak against this concurrence motion for the report on Bill 205. Like the sponsor of this bill, the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, I reject concurring in the recommendation from the committee report on Bill 205 put forward by the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, which recommends to the Assembly that the bill not proceed. I commend the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for bringing this issue to the attention of this House. Bill 205 would provide a formal mechanism for fishermen to contribute to the determination of commercial fishing quotas each year. It would give them the opportunity to be involved in an open, transparent decision-making process that affects their industry.

Mr. Speaker, this could be a positive step in the right direction because commercial fishing is an important component in the ecological management of Alberta's water resources. Commercial fisheries in fresh waters and oceans are important parts of Canadian lifestyle and the economy. Each year the industry employs over 50,000 people, and it supports many families and communities. Because Alberta has fewer lakes and rivers than other provinces, sustainable management of our freshwater resource is vital.

Mr. Speaker, fishing can have a considerable influence on the environment. In order to manage our resources responsibly and create a healthy and viable ecosystem for Albertans, we need to examine the roles of commercial fisheries. Bill 205 would mandate a consultation process whereby commercial fishermen would have an opportunity to be involved in decisions that affect their industry.

Mr. Speaker, residents in northern Alberta, particularly in Lesser Slave Lake, have a vested interest in the prosperity of this industry, and because these communities and their residents are directly affected, they need to be assured of a transparent and accountable process, a gold standard. This bill would give the industry an additional tool in continuing development of a viable commercial fishing industry, thereby contributing more to the provincial economy. This would contribute to consistency and transparency across the range of fishing quotas and the processes that led to their implementation.

The criteria proposed by Bill 205 would require that the Department of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development inform commercial fishermen of changes to the fishing quotas for the upcoming fishing season. Concurring with the recommendation from the committee report on Bill 205 would mean that the Department of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development would continue to operate under the nonobligatory procedures that are currently in place. This is in line with existing regulations.

In order to understand the significance of this bill, the importance of the commercial fishing industry in northern Alberta needs to be examined. Alberta's commercial fishermen harvest fish from a limited number of lakes throughout the province. Fish that are commercially caught in the province are sold to markets in Alberta and North America via a tightly controlled and well-regulated process. Fish populations are regulated through controlled harvesting as well as seasonal and area closures. Species such as lake whitefish are targeted in order to minimize the catch of nontarget fish such as walleye and lake trout. In addition, commercial fishermen require a licence to operate in the province. At present no new commercial fishing licences are available. As a result, commercial fishermen purchase licences from fishermen who are retiring. Commercial fishing in Alberta primarily revolves around gillnet fishing, which involves stringing out vertical panels of netting in the water, thus entrapping fish that swim into its path.

Approximately 2 million kilograms of fish contributed slightly over $3 million to local economies from 1999 and 2000 statistics. Compared to other provinces, however, Alberta has a relatively low number of fish-bearing lakes, with an approximate total of 1,100. Saskatchewan has an estimated 94,000 fish-bearing lakes, Manitoba has 110,000, while Ontario has 250,000. Compare that to Alberta's 1,100.

Mr. Speaker, since a high proportion of Alberta's population lives in central and southern Alberta, fish resources in the surrounding areas are depleted more rapidly than in the northern parts, which have much less of the human population but much more of Alberta's fish-bearing waters. Since Bill 205 focuses on the development of a transparent and accountable process for fishermen in the commercial fishing industry in northern Alberta, it may give the industry a much-needed push by highlighting opportunities that exist there. Unfortunately, concurring in the committee's report's recommendation on Bill 205 will rob fishermen of an accountability mechanism.

Northern Alberta's boreal forest contains the vast majority of lakes in the province. These lakes include game fish such as yellow perch, northern pike, walleye, lake whitefish, Arctic grayling, and lake trout. Given that the majority of Alberta's fish-bearing lakes are located in the northern part of the province, it may be reasonable to promote commercial fishing efforts there. Northern Alberta contains 60 per cent of Alberta's landmass and approximately 9.5 per cent of our province's total population. This poses several challenges to the area as there is an ongoing need to diversify the region's economic portfolio.

Estimates suggest that the northern regional economy of our province has contributed to approximately 17 per cent of our GDP, or $41 billion. About 56 per cent of this comes from the mining, oil, and gas sectors. Other contributors include construction, agriculture, transportation, and warehousing. Because there is an extremely strong focus on resource extraction, the economy is more open to market volatility than economies with a more varied economic profile.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 falls in line with this agenda by promoting an open, transparent, and accountable process that helps fishermen contribute to a sustainable economic initiative for northern Alberta. Alberta's northern region is home to world-class natural landscapes that boast majestic forests and lakes. This is why in 2004 an estimated 1.5 million people visited the region, contributing around $350 million to local economies. Given that most of Alberta's fish-bearing lakes are located in the northern part of our province and given that there is a need to create increased economic opportunities in that area, it may be beneficial to promote commercial fishing as a viable industry. A more robust commercial fishing industry could enable local fishermen to find suitable markets for their fare while infusing the local economy.

Bill 205 helps to ensure that fishermen are given an opportunity to take part in an open, transparent, and accountable process to help that local economy prosper. However, Mr. Speaker, ensuring fishermen are given the opportunity to take part in a transparent process involves rejecting, concurring in the recommendations from the committee report on Bill 205 put forward by the Legislative Policy Committee on Resource Stewardship, which recommends to the Assembly that the bill not proceed. I'm encouraging all members to rethink that process and to support that the bill do proceed.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for bringing this bill before the House for debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others before I ask the committee chair to close debate? Seeing none, I'll invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship I am very happy to speak to this bill. The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake has shown exemplary concern for the people in her constituency and, I think, for commercial fishermen in general. She's raised awareness of this issue for several years, culminating – I'm sure not finally culminating – in the review that was conducted by this standing committee.

We spent a long time in the committee reviewing the legislation that exists and the enforcement mechanisms and the practices. We asked the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development to come before our committee and explain their practices across the province and in particular in the community that was affected in Lesser Slave Lake. We also asked for written submissions on practices from this same group. We invited constituents of Lesser Slave Lake to make their presentations, and they were able to do so very capably through this member.

Mr. Speaker, it would be wonderful if every time one of us had an issue like this that was of burning concern in our constituency, we could have specific legislation moved forward to address those issues. That would be a utopian environment for all of us, but that's just not practical. That was the conclusion of this committee. We felt that by bringing awareness to this issue in practice through enforcement of the regulations to the ministry and then by continuing to invite this ministry to our committee for the next three years – once, twice, whatever is required – to explain their practices, we were certainly putting them on notice that we cared about this, that we were expecting open and transparent procedures, and that we would be watching. We on the committee all felt, with few exceptions, that that was a reasonable practice and an effective use of government resources.

On that basis I continue to recommend that the bill not proceed and request the concurrence of the Assembly with respect to the report that was tabled on Bill 205.

However, I can't sit down before I make note of the comments by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. To suggest that this decision was based on racism is preposterous and hugely offensive.

3:50

Mr. Saskiw: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: A point of order has been raised by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. Please proceed.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's vitally important in this Legislature that other members don't make false allegations, so I'm here under 23(h), (i), and (j). What happens when someone makes false allegations against another member is that it brings down the reputation amongst all of our members. What was very clear . . . [interjections] Do I speak to him or to you?

The Deputy Speaker: You speak to me, hon. member. There's no one else here.

Mr. Saskiw: Okay. Thank you. I wasn't sure. You know, he was yelling there.

Mr. Speaker, it denigrates the overall reputation of all members. We heard the comments from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. He made it clear, very, very clear, that he never suggested in one aspect whatsoever that any members of the committee were racist or anything like that in any regard, and to suggest that he did so is, quite frankly, outstanding. We in this Legislature would never make those types of allegations. Those types of allegations are very serious.

It is very clear, if you look at Hansard in this particular instance, that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre in no instance whatsoever said that any of the committee members were racist. What he did identify is that this bill may have particular aspects or implications for certain different groups. I know that in my area I have four First Nations reserves; I have two Métis settlements. Of course, this legislation may impact those individuals on a different basis than other individuals. That was what was said in his statement. For this member to suggest that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was in any way indicating that members of the committee were racist is beyond reproach, and I would suggest that you withdraw that comment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll invite the Deputy Government House Leader to respond.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening intently this afternoon, and I think it's without question that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre did mention – the recollection that I have is that he said that it was racist to only go to talk to one group of people that a particular piece of legislation impacted. The Member for Calgary-Varsity, I recall, had mentioned the word "racist" again as coming from that particular member. Now, I don't know what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre's intent was, but I don't find it much different from what the Member for Calgary-Varsity said. In any event, I don't have the Blues in front of me, and I would suggest perhaps that if you were not inclined to throw this point of order out, we take a look at the Blues and look at it at a subsequent juncture for re-examination.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Thank you, hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, briefly.

Mr. Anglin: Briefly, I want to be absolutely clear on this, and the record will make this absolutely clear. I said, "I am not making any allegation . . . whatsoever" about racism. What I did say is that when something inadvertently singles out a certain class of people – and I believe I said: inadvertently – it has the effect of being racist, unfortunately. That doesn't mean that anyone is doing something deliberately. We have these situations that do happen, and that was the point I was trying to make.

Now, the member over there can shake his head, but what happened in that committee meeting was that there was one zone that was affected more than any other zone, and that zone is highly populated by Métis and aboriginal peoples. You can't get around that. What I was trying to say is that when that happens inadvertently, the effect is that it can be racist. That is not thrown out as any type of denigration to the decision or to the intent of the decision, but it is the effect of it. It's different to standing up and saying that I said that the decision was made because of racism. That's not what I was saying. I even used the word "inadvertently," and I said that I was "not making any allegation . . . whatsoever."

An Hon. Member: You're not helping yourself, Joe.

Mr. Anglin: I'm helping myself.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Member for Calgary-Varsity, did you just want to clarify? I don't expect that in any of your words you would have intentionally called on anyone in such a manner. Did you want to just offer a couple of brief comments before you get back into your remarks? Then I'll rule.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very harmful to all of us who are politicians when people extrapolate and make suggestions like the suggestion that was made, that by not consulting in a way that was comfortable for this particular member, we are denying access to consultation to certain categories of people. We were focused on the issues raised by the Member for Lesser Slave Lake for a particular community. We looked at all of the commercial fishermen in that community. That was the focus of our review.

When I heard what was said by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, as the chair of that committee – and he is the co-chair – I found it very misleading and troubling. I think that if my children were listening to this – and I certainly hope they're not – they would come to the conclusion that we as a committee had done something that was discriminatory. That's what I was trying to communicate, and I take offence at that suggestion.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I've listened to arguments both ways. I think we have got a word here that was used, and I think it was used in an attempt to convey a point. I heard arguments from both sides stating that it was not intended to be specific to anyone. I guess what I'm hearing is maybe just a difference in terms of how the term was used. I did not hear – and I don't have the benefit of the Blues either – anything that was directed at any individual by any of the speakers, so I'm going to accept this as just a point of clarification. I don't find a point of order. I would just ask us all to be very careful, particularly when we use language that certainly can have the opportunity to cause hurt in any way, that we be very careful with those words. With that, I find no point of order.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, I invite you to finish your comments, and then we'll continue with the proceedings.

Thank you.

Debate Continued

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to conclude by again thanking the Member for Lesser Slave Lake for her work on behalf of her constituents. She certainly has an undertaking from the full committee to make sure that this question stays on the radar of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

On that basis I request the concurrence of the Assembly with respect to the report on Bill 205, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2012.

Finally, I'd like to make note that we have a Resource Stewardship Committee meeting this evening, and I am sure that we will be very kind to one another.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, the chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship has requested concurrence on the report on Bill 205. Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Some Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: That is carried.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

4:00

Bill 206 Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012

The Chair: I would invite the Member for Calgary-Currie to speak.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move an amendment to Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012.

The Chair: I'd ask the pages to distribute the amendment. If you'd pause for a moment while that's being distributed. For the record, hon. member, we will label this amendment A1.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure to rise and open Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 206, the Tobacco Reduction (Flavoured Tobacco Products) Amendment Act, 2012. I would like to thank my colleagues from both sides of the House for bringing forth their perspectives on this very important topic during second reading. I would also like to acknowledge and thank the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing forward Bill 206 as well as the hon. Member for Calgary-South East for sponsoring Bill 206 during second reading. Others have also had an impact on the development of this bill, and they include the Member for Calgary-Acadia and the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. I thank them as well for their contributions, which have been aimed at protecting the health and well-being of our youth here in Alberta.

Firstly, I would like to quickly review key areas of Bill 206. Bill 206 proposes to enhance the Tobacco Reduction Act by prohibiting the sale of flavoured tobacco products. This amendment will protect our children from the temptation to engage in tobacco use. In my career as a principal I watched over the security and welfare of my students as though they were my own kids, and I will continue to do the same here in this Legislature. The health and welfare of our youth is our responsibility. By prohibiting the sale of flavoured tobacco products – peach, cherry, vanilla, berry, apple, citrus, chocolate, watermelon, which really belong in a package of Jolly Ranchers – when we do this, we will say no to the temptation faced by 14-year-olds in our province that lures them into trying an addictive substance by masking the harshness of tobacco. Fourteen, by the way, is the average age of our youth who begin or first try smoking.

As a province, taking necessary steps to prevent and reduce tobacco use among young Albertans will change our abysmal statistics. One stat in particular shows Alberta as having the highest rate of spit tobacco use in Canada. Most of these products are flavoured. Moreover, in 2011 Alberta experienced a 13 per cent increase in the sale of smokeless tobacco. The top selling? Flavoured products.

To be clear, Bill 206 is about our youth. It is about a bill that has the strength to protect our young people from the harmful effects of tobacco. We know the enormous burden tobacco use has on our health care system. Tobacco use continues to lead the pack as being the primary cause of preventable disease and death in Alberta. It is time we take back the reins and amend the Tobacco Reduction Act to prohibit someone from selling or offering to sell flavoured tobacco products. Mr. Chair, reducing the appeal of cigarettes by getting rid of flavoured tobacco products would help protect the health of our province's children, who may be more inclined to try smoking because of the flavour.

Bill 206 falls in line with many jurisdictions regarding the reduction of youth tobacco use. For instance, the federal government introduced an act to amend the Tobacco Act, which added provision 10(2), excluding the sale of tobacco products that include flavouring agents. Our neighbours to the west in B.C. passed the Tobacco Control Act, which forbids the sale of tobacco products that contain flavouring agents that were intended to modify or mask the unpleasant taste of the product alone.

The inclusion of section 7.4 in Bill 206 would align this legislation with what has already been implemented in federal and provincial jurisdictions and strengthened to prevent continued use of characterized flavours in tobacco products. Again, section 7.4(1)(a), (b), and (c) do just that by saying:

In this section, “flavoured tobacco product” means a tobacco product that

- (a) has a characterizing flavour,
- (b) is represented as being flavoured, or
- (c) is designated under the regulations as a flavoured tobacco product.

Mr. Chair, by amending the Tobacco Reduction Act and adding this provision, the act would be strengthened, making it harder for tobacco companies to target our children. The pith and substance of Bill 206 is about taking action to prevent and reduce tobacco use among youth by prohibiting the sale of flavoured tobacco products. We need this amendment to strengthen the enforcement of this regulation to ensure the protection of Alberta's youth from a market that portrays tobacco as fun, sexy, appealing when in actuality it's enticing a new generation of youth into addiction to tobacco products that have lifelong serious health results.

The preamble of Bill 206 further details the reasons for amending the Tobacco Reduction Act, and I would like to highlight it. The preamble statement reads, “Whereas the popularity of flavoured tobacco among youth is increasing their risk of developing a dangerous and lasting addiction to tobacco products.” This section of the preamble outlines why Bill 206 is being proposed: because our province's youth are at a high risk of developing unhealthy addictions because of how tobacco is being marketed.

Our government has implemented several initiatives aimed at reducing underage smoking, which would help build a safer and healthier Alberta. For instance, in November 2012 Alberta Health released its strategy to prevent and reduce tobacco use entitled Creating Tobacco-free Futures. One statistic that could be attributed to this initiative was a decrease in youth smoking. When the tobacco reduction strategy was introduced in 2002, the rate of smoking in youth aged 15 to 19 dropped from 24 to 17 per cent by 2010. However, while this drop is significant, the 2010 figure pales in comparison to the rate from 2009, which was at 12 per cent.

Again, the inclusion of the preamble statement in Bill 206 is intended to highlight the growing popularity of flavoured tobacco products and the danger they represent to our youth. The subsequent preamble wording contained in Bill 206 reads:

Whereas other jurisdictions have recognized the need to restrict the sale of certain tobacco products that are designed to attract young persons; and

Whereas there is a need in Alberta to curb consumption of tobacco products among youth by restricting the sale of flavoured tobacco.

Mr. Chair, while the first part of the preamble highlighted the popularity of flavoured tobacco use among youth and its risks, the rest of the preamble equally has important points to highlight. The preamble wording points out that similar legislation has been implemented in other jurisdictions in order to restrict the sale of certain tobacco products that appeal to youth. While we value the precedent set in other jurisdictions, it is important to note that this legislation we're passing aligns with previous legislation found in other jurisdictions. The latter part of the preamble outlines the overlying initiative proposed in the legislation by emphasizing the need to reduce underage smoking by restricting the sale of flavoured tobacco.

Mr. Chair, the preamble's wording serves to further stress the necessity of the provisions proposed in Bill 206 such as section 7.4. Depending on what's being proposed, some legislation may not include any preamble at all. However, in the case of Bill 206 the preamble is necessary and serves as an introduction to the bill's overarching proposals to reduce the occurrence of underage smoking and highlight flavoured tobacco's major role in contributing to youth smoking.

4:10

Next, Mr. Chair, I would like to discuss why it is relevant to amend section 8(2) by striking out “7.2 or 7.3” and substituting “7.2, 7.3, or 7.4.” Section 8(2) is the provision that outlines the punishments for individuals who break the law the first, second, or subsequent times. This section must be amended to include section 7.4 in order to apply the same punitive measures to those who sell flavoured tobacco. It is merely a formality that needs to be incorporated for the sake of consistency. Section 8(2) states that a person who contravenes section 6, 7, 7.1, 7.2, or 7.3 is guilty of an offence and liable

- (a) for a first offence, to a fine of not more than $10 000, and
- (b) for a 2nd or subsequent offence, to a fine of not more than $100 000.

Again, it's important to amend section 8(2) by adding 7.4 after 7.3, being the new provision that deals with prohibiting the sale of flavoured tobacco, in order to explicitly outline the monetary consequences of breaking this law.

Mr. Chair, I firmly believe that Bill 206 will have a tremendous effect on our government's commitment to reducing and, hopefully, eradicating the rate of youth smoking here in Alberta.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mrs. Forsyth: I thought it was the Official Opposition first.

The Chair: Hon. member, your House leader indicated that that was the way to go.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on this amendment, the reason being, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, that I have, in fact, a subamendment that I would like to distribute and include on this particular amendment. So if I could just pass the original on.

The Chair: Hon. member, you are proposing a subamendment?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, sir.

The Chair: Okay. We'll label that subamendment SA1 for the record. Would you please have that distributed? We'll pause for a moment, and I'll come back to you.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you.

The Chair: Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, we are, in general, very appreciative of this bill and thank you very much for bringing it forward. We also are appreciative of the amendment that was brought forward just now. Parliamentary Counsel very kindly synthesized your amendment and my amendment and came out with these three other provisions that I think will help to finish the deal on this bill. This would be a great example of co-operation in the House, where we are doing this together and creating something that can categorically change the way this flavoured tobacco is marketed here in the province of Alberta and reduce the incidence of smoking and the incidence of young people taking it up and becoming addicted to smoking as well.

I'm going to go backwards through my amendments a little bit here because subsection (5), I think, is a very important issue, and that is talking about menthol. Menthol is a flavouring of tobacco. There are no two ways about it. It's impossible to differentiate between menthol, let's say, or cherry or any other flavours that are put into tobacco products. As I did research on this, Mr. Chair, I found out that the infusion of menthol into cigarettes is much more insidious than just a marketing ploy or a way by which they try to entice nonsmokers to smoking by adding flavour, candy flavour or whatever.

In fact, there is a medical thing that menthol actually does, which is to open the lung passages to increase the interaction of the smoke, including the nicotine, into the bloodstream. So you're literally adding an agent that makes cigarettes more addictive.

Even further to that, Mr. Chairman – this is all quite a revelation to me; I'm sure it is to many of you as well – elements of menthol are put into almost all cigarettes at different levels to increase this expansion phenomenon, which, as I say, increases the nicotine absorption into the bloodstream and makes the cigarettes more addictive.

So, really, that's what we are aiming at here in the first place, to somehow restrict people's first use of cigarettes and to decrease the addictive components of this practice. Menthol – very interesting – is not just a flavour to make it seem like you're having some sort of candy or food product but is actually a chemical that increases the addictiveness of cigarettes. That, I think, is well worth being a part of Bill 206, and I'm just so happy to be part of this co-operative process by which we can do this.

The other sections of my subamendment, Mr. Chairman, are regarding the prohibition on sales of tobacco products. I really believe that the ability to exempt a class of cigarettes could result in a huge unintended exemption, which underlines the purpose of this act, in general. So with my other two subsections,

(3) The authorization of a flavoured tobacco product by regulation must be made on an individual basis rather than by class, [and]

(4) No person shall advertise or promote the characterizing flavours of a flavoured tobacco product,

I guess we really want to make sure that we are limiting the advertising potential of the cigarettes to be sort of placed in the marketplace, in the shop, as it were, and keep all the tobacco products in one place, behind the counter, behind the walls that we have already legislated here in this House. I see in my constituency, on an anecdotal basis, lots of sales of individual cigarillos and flavourless tobacco and so forth, and it's being sold almost as a different product in a much different way than regular packets of cigarettes are regulated to be sold.

So, Mr. Chair, I really believe that, globally, Bill 206 is a great step in the right direction, and I applaud everyone for doing this. With one part of the amendment which we just saw this afternoon coming from the government side coupled with my subamendments here, we will build something that we can all be proud of and actually reduce smoking rates, increase health outcomes, and put money back in the pockets of people who otherwise would spend it on tobacco.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other speakers? Speaking to the subamendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you, Mr. Chair. To the hon. member. First off, I want to thank him for his proposed amendments here. One question I do have for him, though, is if he could please give a definition of exactly what he believes "made on an individual basis rather than by class" to be and specifically "by class." I'm not sure I understand.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. I think what we're trying to get around here is that we can pick off new products that might be brought out. Obviously, this is a very insidious thing. It's a moving target, and the marketers of tobacco products will shift into new areas and new types of products. I believe this is looking to mitigate against that, to have an open-ended part of perhaps new products that might come out that might not be covered by a class definition of the tobacco products in our regulations.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak on Bill 206 as well as the amendment, Bill 206 being the flavoured tobacco reduction act. The bill, very simply, will prohibit the sale of tobacco products and flavouring agents that are listed in the regulations. This is very broad language, something which I'll speak about in a moment.

Let's look at why this bill is being proposed in the Legislature. Advocates of this bill argue a number of points. We all know them: youth are subjected to irresistible advertising schemes of tobacco companies; flavoured tobacco is destroying the health of our youth; tobacco use is bad; therefore, we must protect our children from such harm.

There are a number of other jurisdictions in Canada and around the world which have established prohibitions on flavoured tobacco products. For example, Saskatchewan, Ontario, and New Brunswick have all passed legislation prohibiting flavoured tobacco products from being sold. But here's the interesting thing. None of these provinces – Saskatchewan, Ontario, and New Brunswick – have allowed these laws to come into force. The reason is because the federal government passed and enacted in 2009 a ban on flavoured tobacco products which is much more effective and targeted than any of the laws these provinces were going to enact.

Now, we hear that youth in Alberta are getting their hands on flavoured tobacco products. I'm curious to know exactly how these youth are getting their hands on the tobacco. Maybe there are MLAs here who know that in Alberta there's no provincial penalty for a retail store selling tobacco to someone underage. Maybe there are MLAs here who know that there isn't even a minimum age in Alberta for purchasing tobacco. Maybe there are MLAs here who know that the federal government does not put a lot of resources into enforcing the federal provisions prohibiting youth access to tobacco.

An example. Let's say that there's a kid who is walking home from school, and he makes a detour to go buy some flavoured tobacco products. He walks into his home, and his mother sees him with these flavoured tobacco products. She asks him: where did you get that? If he says, "From the corner store," under Alberta law there's basically nothing she can do to hold the retailer accountable. That is a shame, that is a problem, and that is what we as legislators should address.

I am fully aware that Alberta has a possession law, where no one under the age of 18 can possess tobacco. Let's examine that law for a moment. While other Canadian provinces are aware of the issue of youth tobacco consumption, they have typically instituted a minimum age for purchasing, not a minimum age for possession. Under current Alberta law police officers can search a youth and, if they find tobacco, can charge that youth with a possession offence, for which they will likely pay a fine.

What if the PCs really cared about the root problem of youth tobacco consumption, youth access to tobacco? This bill today would include a minimum age for purchasing tobacco. This puts the pressure on retailers. This targets them, not kids.

There is a lack of enforcement federally on tobacco consumption among youth, and if the province wants to do something about it . . .

Dr. Brown: Point of order.

Mr. Saskiw: I'll refer to the amendment in a second if you want.

Point of Order Relevance

Dr. Brown: We're talking about the subamendment, if I'm not mistaken, at this juncture, are we not?

The Chair: Yes, we're on the subamendment. So you're suggesting relevance, hon. member?

Dr. Brown: Well, I would ask him if he's speaking to the subamendment.

The Chair: Okay. Hon. member, to the subamendment.

Mr. Saskiw: Yes, I'm speaking to the subamendment.

The Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Saskiw: There's a lack of enforcement federally on tobacco consumption among youth, and if the province wants to do something about it, we need real action, not a bad law, to fill the gap on youth access to tobacco. We need real laws that target tobacco retailers, who currently don't have anything to fear from the provincial government if they sell to youth. I know that there's a lot of criticism of the federal ban on flavoured tobacco products due to the ease with which the tobacco industry bypass the prohibitions with small changes to their product lines. I'm sure the federal government is well aware of these problems and is addressing them in short order. The purpose of their bill has been circumvented in some cases, and they will find a remedy for it. It is not our job, however, to pass a bad law to try to fill the gap. These subamendments, in particular, don't do anything further in that regard.

We need to recognize that the federal government has already established its capacity to legislate in this area. Why is this government not interested in actually trying to fix the problem of youth access to tobacco? Why is this government more concerned with putting a poorly fitting Band-Aid solution on the problem? I'm opposed to children having access to things they shouldn't have, things like alcohol, drugs, vehicles, tobacco, firearms, unsupervised use of prescription medication, and so on. This law attempts to totally ban flavoured tobacco in Alberta and keep it out of the hands of kids, when the real problem is actually youth access. None of these subamendments actually deal with that. We need to know how they are getting their hands on the tobacco now.

Now, there are other jurisdictions which take a different approach and ban all flavoured tobacco products except those listed in regulations, usually menthol and mint products. Again, the technique used to identify these products is the characterizing flavours. I think that was an amendment that the hon. member had put forward, and we were happy to see that.

Let's look at the practical side of things. What kind of consumption of flavoured tobacco is there in Alberta among youth? Let's remember that youth are not typically wealthy, so cheaper products are more appealing. This is the very reason why the federal government prohibits the sale of small or single flavoured tobacco products. It is way cheaper to buy one of those than it is a full pack of cigars or a tin of chew. How many kids are out there consuming flavoured tobacco today? We need to know the demographics. We need to know if there is a difference between different forms of tobacco consumption without assuming all forms should be treated equally. These are questions that need to be answered, and I hope that the subsequent subamendments will deal with those.

Something else we should look at in amendments is the weight factor. Any tobacco product that includes a larger mass of tobacco is going to be expensive. This bill, for example, would prohibit the sale of flavoured tobacco sold in bulk weight. There aren't many kids, to my knowledge, purchasing bulk tobacco products. They don't typically operate that way. Usually, it's a small cigar or snub-type cigarillo. It's cheap. If we were to ban flavoured tobacco products to keep them out of the hands of kids, why don't we include a weight factor in this bill?

While this government claims to be open and progressive, there's a virtual vacuum of cultural sensitivity in these amendments. How often has one government or another created a law without first contemplating the implications for cultural and religious groups. Tobacco use, even flavoured tobacco use, is widespread amongst many cultures and religions, especially among the cultural and religious practices of First Nations and Métis in Alberta. My constituency has a significant number of First Nations and Métis people, and many are very concerned with the government's lack of consultation and care.

Canada is supposed to be inclusive and a safe environment for all, but this government is creating a precedent for making snap decisions on culturally significant issues. I do not see these addressed in the subamendments. Has the government even considered how they will respond to the many immigrant groups and cultural groups in Alberta who use tobacco products as part of their traditional activities? This is just another example of poor planning and irresponsibly meagre cultural awareness.

There are many products adults choose to consume or use every day. Things like alcohol, tobacco, firearms, and vehicles are used responsibly by adults every day. They make choices about how and what they specifically want to consume: a beer or a vodka, a cigar or a cigarette, a rifle or a shotgun, a car or an SUV. Adults who are rational, responsible, intelligent human beings don't for the most part give any of these items to their kids because they know that would probably cause their kids harm. Does it happen once in a while? I'm sure it does. Does it happen with some things more than others? I'm sure it does. Are we also contemplating bans on flavoured alcohol or a ban on brightly coloured firearms or a ban on colourful compact cars? Are kids more attracted to these items than others? Maybe.

There is absolutely no reason why we can't fix the real problem of youth access to things which are dangerous for them to have in their possession. The measures in Bill 206 and these amendments are irresponsible and offensive to the freedom and personal responsibility that we as adult Albertans enjoy in every other capacity of life. We can make these changes without going too far. Going too far, in my opinion, is irresponsible. This government is here to protect the vulnerable and to protect the general health and welfare of the people of Alberta. This government is not here, in my opinion, to dictate to responsible adults what they can and cannot consume simply because this government is either incapable or unwilling to fix the fundamental problems with this legal and regulatory framework when it comes to youth access to flavoured tobacco products.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

4:30

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I wanted to raise just a couple of points on this subamendment. I wanted to thank the Member for Edmonton-Calder for this amendment. For a couple of reasons I'm not going to be supporting it. It talks about under subsection (3) "the authorization of a flavoured tobacco product by regulation." Again, that seems to go against the actual intent of the bill, and that's to create a regulatory framework.

One of the comments that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills had just made was that the federal law was largely ineffective. Why? Because the industry was able to just provide minor tweaks to their product labels, and that is exactly what this framework would ward against. We'd be creating a regulation so that we could respond to that in the event that that does happen in the sale of these products in Alberta.

Subsection (4), to me, seems to be a little bit redundant, saying that "no person shall advertise or promote the characterizing flavours of a . . . tobacco product." Well, Mr. Chair, if we're getting rid of flavours, I guess there's nothing to advertise or promote.

Subsection (5), dealing with menthol: I think, again, that can be dealt with by regulation.

With no disrespect to the Member for Edmonton-Calder, I think it would be in the best interests of this private member's bill to vote this particular subamendment down.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak to the subamendment. First of all, on section (3) I'd ask the Member for Edmonton-Calder: by making it an individual regulatory change that is required to mandate, you know, an individual decision on authorization of flavoured tobacco, would that not in fact entail a more cumbersome process because regulations, of course, have to be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council? It would seem to me much more preferable to have a blanket prohibition in general on the flavoured tobacco products by class rather than having to make an individual decision on each of them and requiring a separate regulatory imposition by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Secondly, on subsection (4), as the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General has just alluded to, I cannot see why we would need a prohibition on advertising and promoting, you know, the flavours of a flavoured tobacco product if you cannot sell it. I mean, who would want to advertise something that is prohibited? It would seem to me completely counterproductive and redundant.

The Chair: Thank you.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. A privilege to speak to this subamendment to the bill prohibiting flavoured tobacco products.

The Chair: Are you speaking to the subamendment, hon. member?

Dr. Swann: To subamendment SA1.

The Chair: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: The subamendment would, I think, make our job a lot easier in terms of identifying individual elements that may not be even created yet and prove to be another attraction. It's very clear that flavourings and aromas are hugely attractive for young people. Colourings, flavourings, aromas have increased the number of young people using tobacco in all forms. This subamendment, I think, would make the job easier in terms of not having to go back and deal with some new chemical that has been identified as a new flavouring, a new aroma, or a new colouring that creates more attraction.

Quite apart from trying to anticipate every possible variation, this subamendment would make it easier to enforce what we're trying to enforce, which is no flavourings, no additives, no colourings, no making these more attractive than the tobacco itself is. Therefore, it definitely should include menthol. There's no question that menthol is the primary ingredient that is helping young people and older people maintain the addiction. It's identified as a very clear contributor to the uptake and the maintenance of tobacco use.

We will be supporting the subamendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are there others to speak to subamendment SA1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to say a few words about this. Having never been a smoker but having watched people really suffer when they have been trying to quit, it's something that really touches my heart in terms of those poor people out there who want to stop smoking and are having trouble.

This bill was actually addressed to our young people. This was really for our young people. It really is an important bill. In terms of this subamendment I think the thoughts towards it are good. I think that his intentions are very good when it comes to (3), that "the authorization . . . must be made on an individual basis," but it actually adds to the government's workload and becomes very cumbersome. Everybody who has the newest flavour will then be approaching the government: please, please, please let ours through. It would be sort of a never-ending thing coming at us, essentially just wasting time. We really do want to stop those flavoured products getting out to our young people, so I think that (3) is well meaning but cumbersome.

Subsection (4), the advertising: I think it's been covered quite well, that as long as it's something that cannot be sold in Alberta, then banning the advertising doesn't really make any difference.

The last one is one where I'm, again, really conflicted, because there are so many people that I know that are just addicted, just totally addicted. They would love to get off tobacco, and they've tried again and again and again to do that. Of those people, some of them do smoke menthol cigarettes. It's just sort of what they do. We would love to be able to help them to quit cigarettes altogether, but banning the menthol that they smoke won't actually help them to quit smoking, as much as I would very much like to be able to help them.

For these reasons, I think that we should reject this subamendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been attempting to sort of look at this subamendment and the amendment and the initial act and the initial proposal, which amends other amendments, and it's been confusing to me.

This is what our subamendment is attempting to do. It's doing three things. First of all, there is a provision in the bill as it currently exists which gives the government the ability to exempt from the prohibition, which would be included in the general regulation authorized under this act. As it's currently written, what could happen is that lobbyists, of which we know there are many, many, many . . .

Dr. Swann: Twenty-four.

Ms Notley: There are at least 24 lobbyists.

. . . could approach the government and say: you know, we know you've got this regulation prohibiting flavoured tobacco, but we'd like you to exempt our particular type of flavoured tobacco from the prohibition.

What this amendment would do is that it would say, if for some reason the government capitulates to any one of these 24 lobbyists, that they do not exempt the tobacco as a class, that they simply exempt it as one individual type, the point being to limit the opportunity for exemptions on the prohibition to be applied going forward. That's really important because as I've said, there are a whole bunch of folks making a lot of money doing nothing but lobbying this government all the time. That's what this is designed to do, to limit the opportunity for exemptions to the prohibition on the sale of flavoured tobacco products. That's what number one is.

Now, number two, the reason that we're putting in this section saying, "No person shall advertise or promote the characterizing flavours of a flavoured tobacco product" is because, the way that this bill is currently written, with its current enabling legislation, it is absolutely foreseeable that some flavoured products will still be allowed to be sold while other flavoured products will be banned. What this amendment attempts to do is that if at some point the government decides to succumb to one of the 24 lobbyists out there and allow for a certain subset of flavoured tobacco to be exempt from the prohibition on sale, no matter what no one should ever be able to advertise this flavoured product. So that's what we're getting to with subset 2 of this amendment. That's the point that we're trying to achieve there.

Then, of course, the third thing, as has been discussed in some detail, is that, notwithstanding the rationale or lack thereof of the most recent member speaking, menthol should be banned, full stop, the end, just like other flavoured tobaccos, because it also appeals more to youth, and it also enhances the opportunity for the addictive chemicals to make it into the bloodstream and to achieve the purpose for which it is designed, which is to enhance addiction.

I speak from much personal experience, having been a pack-a-day smoker for 17 years of my life, starting at 16 with – you guessed it – menthol cigarettes. As much as I still crave cigarettes now, even 15 years after having quit, I will say that I never crave menthol. But that is, nonetheless, how I got into it in the first place, and that's what it was designed to do.

Anyway, the point is that all three components of this subamendment are designed to (a) limit the opportunity for exemptions to the prohibition on flavoured products, (b) to ensure that, notwithstanding any exemptions, advertisement is banned in all cases, and (c) to ensure that menthol in particular is subject to the prohibition on the sale of flavoured products.

That is what we are attempting to do. It is an attempt to strengthen the bill. It is an attempt to tighten to linkage between this bill and the stated objective of this bill, which is to limit the sale and purchase of flavoured products in the province of Alberta because we know that it is one of the singularly most effective ways to get young people to smoke. Given that we have amongst the highest numbers of young smokers in Alberta and we have fewer prohibition mechanisms in place than other provinces and we are not meeting our goals in terms of reducing the number of teenagers who are smoking, that is why I think we can all agree that the objective is a good one. But that objective will be met most effectively by folks on the other side accepting this subamendment, all done in good faith in an attempt to make this act work as effectively as possible.

I hope that explanation clears up some of the confusion that was laid out by a couple of the members opposite, including the current Solicitor General. It read a little bit confusingly, but that's what the actual outcome of this subamendment is.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others?

Seeing none, we'll call the question on subamendment SA1.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to amendment A1. Speaking on amendment A1, the hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Chair, just some very brief comments in response to amendment A1 to Bill 206. First of all, I would like to join others in commending the hon. member sponsoring the bill and the members that preceded her. In the case of this amendment, I think it can best be described as a refinement of something that I think people on all sides of the House had expressed support for when this bill was debated previously, that being an opportunity to establish and maintain a strong regulatory framework to restrict the sale of flavoured tobacco.

As the hon. member who spoke earlier indicated, Mr. Chair, the term "characterizing flavour" presents an opportunity to really close a loophole in what might otherwise be available if, in fact, the bill were to be passed with the original restrictions based on the term "flavoured tobacco." "Characterizing flavour," Mr. Chair, gives us an opportunity to be ahead of the marketplace as new products are developed and marketed, to be able to be responsive to changes in nomenclature that manufacturers might envision in order to get around this bill should it be passed, really to lead the country, if I can say, in the most aggressive legislation possible to identify and to target products as they come to market or, ideally, before they come to market, and to have an impact before those decisions are made by companies and prevent even the most initial exposure of youth across the province to these products, which are very dangerous and which are very enticing, as has been described earlier.

Mr. Chair, that is the intent of the amendment, as has been mentioned, and I certainly support it. It's to strengthen the bill. It is to provide a greater degree of flexibility in the application of the regulatory framework that would be established under Bill 206. I think we've heard a lot of support from all sides of the House for being as aggressive as we possibly can be, and I would urge all members of the House to support amendment A1.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there others? The Member for Little Bow, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to ask the mover of this amendment, the Member for Calgary-Currie, why they wouldn't be doing menthol in it. I'm just going over some statistics from the U.S. that show that that's the highest thing that comes across and the fact that they didn't ban the menthol either, I guess. If we're going to lead the way on it, why wouldn't the bill on this talk about menthol?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to respond.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you very much for the question. While we know that there are statistics that would show the detriment of menthol cigarettes and the enticement that they project out there to our young people, at this point we feel that we can best attend to and deal with this part of the problem through regulations, so that would be the answer there.

The Chair: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess I have to emphasize the same point. We've got 3,400 people dying every year in this province from tobacco. They start, many of them, as children. Menthol is a part of the reason they start, and the fact that you're not including that is a serious, I think, omission, either by accident or deliberately. Having looked at the website for the lobbyists' registry and seeing 24 lobbyists who have met with this government over the last couple of months, I believe that part of the reason it's being exempted is because of the lobbyists, and that's a shame, really.

This government is putting itself forward as wanting to be serious about reducing tobacco uptake in children. That has to include menthol. Thirty-eight per cent of young people use mentholated, menthol-flavoured tobacco products. We have something like 40,000 youth and children using tobacco products in this province. This is a set-up for a huge health care problem in the future, and if we're really serious about this, I hope you'll reconsider this and make very specific, very explicit the commitment to menthol.

I've no problem with the rest of these amendments that you've included here, but without menthol you are weakening this bill to the point where you are, in essence, kowtowing to the industry. People like Hal Danchilla, a long-time Tory who has been lobbying this government on many different things and has been included in your lobbyists' registry and is now lobbying probably in relation to potential lost revenue by tobacco companies who sell mentholated products, are the big winners here. I hope you're going to take this seriously and accept an amendment in relation specifically to menthol.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Cusanelli: I want to thank the member from across the way for his comments, and I think I would add to that, you know, my belief. When we are introducing these amendments here, section 7.4(1)(a) is specifically talking about characterizing flavour. It is my belief that there is definitely an appetite to have a look at all of the flavours, and in my view, if we are looking at, specifically, menthol or adding it into a list, we're going to have to have a list that includes everything on it in order for people not to find a loophole to get around it.

In my view, again, if we are talking about flavoured tobacco products that have characterizing flavours, my belief is that those will include mint, wintergreen, et cetera. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. I noticed that you, again, exempted the term "menthol." Was that deliberate, or are you actually serious about trying to make sure menthol is in the regulations or whatever? There's no guarantee that menthol will be included if the lobbyists are successful.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chair, I just wanted to offer some general comments to this particular amendment. I am going to be supporting this bill. I wanted to just get into a few of the issues that have been raised today. The whole issue of flavoured tobacco came to me in 2009, when I carried a similar bill. Unfortunately, it didn't get to see the light of day because it was low on the actual list.

This bill, Mr. Chair, is not about restricting adult choice. I was actually visited today by three medical students, who talked to me about this and indicated to me that the average age that children start, when they start chewing tobacco, is 10 years old, and it's 16 when they smoke. Of course, the legal age is 18. There's no legal capacity for an individual, even now under the current framework, to purchase these products.

The intent is to prohibit the sale of flavoured tobacco products in our province in order to reduce the rates of youth smoking. I'll give you an example. Section 7.4 of the bill: "No person shall sell or offer to sell a tobacco product that contains a flavouring agent prohibited by the regulations." This does not contain any criminal element, which is clearly in the federal purview.

As well, no person shall sell or offer to sell a tobacco product that contains a characterizing flavour prohibited by the regulations. That's something that the Minister of Health has talked about here, that this creates a regulatory framework. So if, for example, "wintergreen" then becomes "spearmint green" or then becomes "greener green," we need that regulatory framework so that we can make a quick decision on these particular items. Mr. Chair, as I mentioned, the marketing of these products can be creative, and that's why we need this regulatory framework.

Mr. Chair, I am a lifelong nonsmoker, nonchewer, never consumed any tobacco, but I also have had many friends and some people in my family who have had much difficulty trying to quit. I can imagine that when some of these individuals . . . [interjection] I'm not so sure what they're heckling over here, what I'm hearing these days. Maybe he wants to push some tobacco at me – I'm not quite sure – but no; thank you. As an asthmatic I'm going to pass, thank you, Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Of course, a lot of people these days will talk about demonization of businesses. Well, Mr. Chair, we don't want to demonize any business here. In fact, the directors of any company, whether public or private, whether tobacco or any other company, have a fiduciary duty, rather the highest duty at law, to generate the highest amount of profit for their shareholders. That's their duty. But the check on this is when the government can step in and when we see something happening that is not quite right, and that's what flavoured tobacco presents to me today.

Let me just ask you this, Mr. Chair. Appletini: is that a flavour that appeals to an adult? Bubble gum: is that marketed at someone like me, who is 38 years old? Probably not. Cotton candy: is that marketed at someone like the Minister of Health, who is a couple of years older than me? Is that marketed at him? None of this is marketed at adults. This is being marketed at children, and we have the highest duty owed to anyone to protect those who have no legal capacity to choose, those who cannot help themselves.

Mr. Chair, I will conclude my remarks there.

The Chair: Hon. members, I hate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 8(6) at 4:55 p.m. the chair shall interrupt the committee and immediately rise and report without the question being put.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, it is three minutes to 5. I'm wondering if you would seek a motion for the House to call it 5 o'clock, that we would move to the next order of business. I'm just wondering.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I would move that we call it 5 o'clock, and we can proceed with the motion that's on your Order Paper.

[Motion carried]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Capital Region River Valley Park

514. Mr. Xiao moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue its commitment to the creation of a world-class capital region river valley park by working with the city of Edmonton to implement its ribbon of green concept plan, which would connect all of the river valley parks into a single, continuous, protected park.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 514. I'm proposing this motion because I believe that the creation of a world-class river valley park would further boost our already thriving tourism industry in our beautiful province. When one thinks of a world-class, cosmopolitan city, one often thinks of the many attractions a specific place has to offer, those unique sights that differentiate it from other cities.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, New York City, as we all know, is home to the beautiful outdoor oasis known as Central Park, where millions visit year after year to admire and take advantage of one of the world's most famous examples of a green urban space. You know, every time I was in New York, I tried to spare a few hours to enjoy the sights and sounds in that beautiful park. In Paris the Luxembourg Gardens are renowned for their impeccable landscaping and magnificent array of flora, that is surrounded by an assortment of even more impressive modern and classic art pieces. If a city's infrastructure represents a skeleton, one could say that the parks are representative of its heart, helping to bring life to those who inhabit it.

With Motion 514 I urge the government to continue its support in the creation of an innovative capital region river valley park. The government's continued support of this green initiative would promote and foster a collaborative environment and establish a shared sense of pride between the capital region and the surrounding municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's tourism sector is a fruitful and a dynamic industry that generates over $7.8 billion annually in total visitor spending. Moreover, $1.15 billion in tax revenues is generated and infused into our economy, which helps our province employ approximately 139,000 dedicated individuals. Every year millions of tourists visit our province, and who can blame them? In fact, in 2011 over 35 million tourists travelled to Alberta. It is common to hear a multitude of different languages – German, Chinese, French, Spanish, Punjabi, Hindi, Korean, just to name a few – when visiting one of our many stunning provincial parks. Visitors come here to experience an inspiring landscape that is rich with towering mountains, vibrant prairie fields, and crystal clear, gorgeous, blue waters, something that we and millions of Albertans are blessed enough to enjoy with just a few hours' drive.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 514 does not only urge the government to continue implementing such visionary plans but to build on our province's strong tourism sector. Again, I believe supporting the ongoing efforts to create a widely recognizable capital region river valley park is another facet that would help increase the province's already world-renowned profile as a first-rate and dynamic tourist destination.

Not many people know that Edmonton's North Saskatchewan River valley is the largest stretch of urban parkland in North America. The river valley measures an impressive 7,400 hectares and encompasses 22 major parks and over 150 kilometres of trails, which can be enjoyed by Albertans of all ages looking to take in majestic forest landscapes in a metropolitan city.

In 1996 the River Valley Alliance was formed by seven municipalities bordering the capital region's North Saskatchewan River. These municipalities included the town of Devon, Parkland county, Leduc county, Edmonton, Strathcona county, Sturgeon county, and the city of Fort Saskatchewan. In 2008, seeking feedback for this vision, the River Valley Alliance conducted widespread consultations with the public and various key stakeholders. The alliance did this in order to seek out all of the necessary voices that would ensure the creation of a unique park that would be accessible and speak to all Albertans. Shortly after consultations ended, Mr. Speaker, the River Valley Alliance released its plan of action, giving readers background information on the river valley as well as presenting their vision of a unique park.

Mr. Speaker, one of the underlying intentions of Motion 514 is to promote a green space that can be enjoyed by future generations in our province and from around the world. Additionally, by supporting the River Valley Alliance's efforts, our most treasured wildlife can continue to inhabit the many hectares of vegetation and the wetlands that they all call home. In addition to land preservation, parks have a very positive impact on the health and wellness of individuals since urban parks are more easily accessible to those looking to experience the splendour of the outdoors without having to travel too far. Parks also strengthen community spirit by providing an engaging outdoor space that individuals of all ages and all socioeconomic backgrounds can enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the benefits that a world-class capital region river valley park would provide to our people. Our government recognized the importance of this initiative and contributed $50 million to help implement the first phase in 2008 along with an additional $30 million contribution by the government of Canada. In November 2012 the River Valley Alliance began a $90 million capital project, with our government contributing a further $30 million. Thirty million dollars also came from the federal government's building Canada fund, with another $30 million from the participating six municipalities.

This is truly a testament of how much our government believes in the vision of creating a strong natural space while recognizing the potential economic and health benefits that result with this implementation. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I am proposing Motion 514. I believe that this initiative promotes a strong intergovernmental and collaborative approach which will allow future generations to enjoy a natural space that has been matured and maintained by those who came before them.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all hon. members in this House to take great interest in this debate and consider fully the advantages of this initiative proposed by Motion 514. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to say a few words on the motion presented by the Member for Edmonton-McClung. [interjection] I am hoping that I won't put others to sleep while I make this presentation.

I just want to comment that this is a visionary project brought forward by the member. It's been in play for quite some time, since 1990. The formal plan was brought forward in 1992 in the Edmonton area. It was a capital project, and I have some concerns that capital projects, then, require operating capital to continue. Nevertheless, it's a visionary project that needs to be brought forward and discussed in this Assembly. The project preserves Edmonton's nature in the river valley, and as a farmer I take great pride in that. With our ongoing concerns regarding the environment and the future of our communities, it's significant that these types of projects be brought forward.

To that end, I do have some concerns with the jurisdictions involving the riparian areas that are being brought forward. I've seen a map of the potential development of the area. There may be concerns, not unlike what was exhibited this summer, in floodway areas. So I wish to bring awareness of that forward to the Assembly.

River valley access has been controversial, in my understanding, in the Edmonton area. The project was postponed as a result of a gondola being suggested from Jasper Avenue to the river's edge. Now, that may be controversial, and it may be an obstacle that could or could not be overcome by the development. That may only allude to the ongoing operational costs that may follow a significant investment. Some citizens may believe that their money may be spent better with priorities of infrastructure, being sidewalks and roads. That alludes to some of the controversy that comes forward with these types of things.

The concerns, reverting back to the riparian areas and the floodway issues, potentially are of concern to myself because of the potential for significant investments. Like, they talk about boat launches and docks. Some of those may be in areas that could at some unforeseen time be subject to flooding or damage, which would be a negative to that. I'd simply like to express my concerns about ongoing operation costs and see that this is brought forward to the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since becoming an MLA, I've had the opportunity to spend a lot more time in Edmonton than I used to. I think that the ribbon of green project is truly unique, and I wish the city the best in continuing this project. This project preserves nature in Edmonton's river valley system. It's a point of pride for Edmontonians that crosses all political lines. As a temporary resident of this city, seeing all of the greenery is always a welcome sight.

Municipalities should be empowered to spend money allotted to them as they please, which is happening with this particular project. The province should always be a willing and supportive partner to municipalities. If a community can identify what is needed or wanted, they should be given the flexibility to do so. Of course, infrastructure money should always first be directed to core infrastructure and operating services that a community would have.

I would also like to use this time to express my support for a policy change related to the motion made by the hon. member. The Wildrose 10-10 plan would give 10 per cent of provincial revenue directly to municipalities. With budget surpluses, another 10 per cent of each surplus would also be given to the towns, the cities, and the counties. The people on the ground making local decisions know better than the province does when it comes to prioritizing their own community needs, and our 10-10 plan reflects that very viewpoint. I would encourage the member's next motion to be one that supports all worthwhile municipal undertakings by simply supporting the Wildrose 10-10 plan. A little plug there, a big plug.

Assuming this is a project that Edmontonians still want to see, I will support this motion in the hopes that municipalities continue to receive the funding and flexibility they should. We all know the value of beautifying a city, because it beautifies our lives in general. Green spaces are an asset to any community, and the river valley as it currently exists is beautiful. There's no question. It's one of the best in the province. Seeing it made even better: you can't help but support that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today to speak to Motion 514, the goal of which is to support the River Valley Alliance and continued implementation of the ribbon of green concept plan. Ultimately, the aim is to create a world-class capital region river valley park. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung for bringing forward this motion to the House today. In fact, the constituency of Edmonton-McClung is a short canoe ride, a single-track bike ride, or an enjoyable hike along the river valley away from my own. I admire his unwavering dedication to promoting this government commitment to establishing a world-class capital region river valley park.

The river valley in the capital region essentially follows a patchwork of bike trails, parks, bridges, off-leash areas, horse trails, picnic areas. There's a rowing club, a zoo, and an abundance of wildlife that make up the area as part of the Trans Canada Trail. This plan would connect all the river valley parks into a single, continuous protected park. Promoting ongoing efforts to create an integrated river valley park would help raise the capital region's global profile as another large urban park that has done so much in cities such as Vancouver and New York.

Also, there are several benefits attached to helping create green outdoor spaces such as increased exercise, increased tourism, and the preservation of wildlife habitat. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the River Valley Alliance plan for action highlights a number of these benefits. These range from the social to the economic to the environmental. Even better, these benefits that accrue from the plan fall in line with this government's initiative in tourism and in supporting families and communities.

Mr. Speaker, we heard earlier that the River Valley Alliance, or the RVA, was initiated by Mayor Bill Smith and formed in 1996 by seven municipalities bordering the capital region's North Saskatchewan River: the town of Devon, Parkland county, Leduc county, the city of Edmonton, Strathcona county, Sturgeon county, and Fort Saskatchewan. The RVA was incorporated as a not-for-profit company under part 9 of the Companies Act of Alberta on March 5 of 2003 and released its conceptual plan of action in 2008 after extensive public and stakeholder consultations. It has raised more than $80 million to implement this first initiative within the plan. Of that, $50 million is from the Alberta government and $30 million from the government of Canada. This will be supplemented by $30 million of funding from shareholder municipalities. Some projects were completed by 2012, with an additional $90 million allocated to 2012 to 2016 capital projects.

Mr. Speaker, in November 2012 the River Valley Alliance began a $90 million capital project that will improve public access to the North Saskatchewan River at the river valley and add new trail features to existing infrastructure in what is North America's longest metropolitan park system. The capital project's 13 initiatives will add a total of 74 kilometres of new recreational trails across six municipalities, six docks or boat launches, and a new Edmonton footbridge, among others. The RVA's plan would contribute greatly to affirming the capital region's status as truly world-class.

The river valley is potentially one of the region's greatest assets, particularly in terms of attracting tourists to the area. Cities with large, well-maintained, and well-equipped parks invariably mark themselves as a tourist destination. If someone is going to Vancouver, Stanley Park is a must-see. In New York it's Central Park; in London it's Hyde Park. Well, I'm telling you right now that you haven't seen anything until you've been to the river valley and experienced the capital region. There are similar sentiments for many other cities with notable parks. I think the wonders that a park system can do for attracting visitors and developing a good reputation speak for themselves.

Besides encouraging people to visit Alberta's capital region, residents of the seven municipalities made frequent use of these facilities, made memories, and enjoyed on a daily basis the beautiful scenery the river valley has to offer. Whether this is on the valley's numerous running trails or walking paths, you'll often see neighbours, friends, and people going for lunchtime walks.

The suggestion of cutting tourism funding is not the vision we need. This government, the one Albertans elected to build Alberta, supports growing the tourism industry of this province. This motion reflects the recognition of this need and is in line with the government's plan to strengthen Alberta's tourism.

Again, I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing this motion forward. I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to seeing you on the trail.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Sherwood Park.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I, too, would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung for bringing this forward and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for that passionate speech backing the suggestions.

You know, I think we all know and appreciate the world-class river valley that we have to celebrate here in Edmonton. Mr. Speaker, when my wife and I first started spending time here after the election and were looking for a place to stay, one of our discussions as we drove around Edmonton was: let's, obviously, try and get close to the Legislature, but let's try to appreciate all the beauty the city has to offer with the pathways, with the parks, and along the river. She suggested I bring a tent, and I said: that's probably not a bad idea, but I'll look for a condo instead. I'm kidding, and of course it didn't – I'm kind of used to that when you don't have much attention or attention span, for that matter.

I think whatever community you're in will celebrate a good pathway system and have a commitment to it. I love the fact that the province and the city of Edmonton have worked collaboratively in the past and are again going in that direction. I think we can all think that wherever we've been, we've probably seen pathways enhance life for families and for communities. I can think of several examples, having been fortunate enough over the years to travel around the country some in my previous occupation.

You know, Victoria: it's well known that the Galloping Goose trail is one that is used by so many people in Victoria and area. Right now, Mr. Speaker, in Chestermere-Rocky View, thanks to some provincial support, we have a wonderful pathway system being put into place that enables members of the community to walk and enjoy the lake in Chestermere and get around and stay healthy. Calgary, well known, obviously: the pathway system and the parks downtown along the Bow. In fact, what many people don't know is that you can access that trail system from as far out as Chestermere. So they're tremendous in building community and getting people out, and I think they should be encouraged and supported.

The member's motion, specifically:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue its commitment to the creation of a world-class capital region river valley park by working with the city of Edmonton . . .

Again, on that note, I just am appreciative that the groups are working together.

I'm not sure what the overall cost commitment will be at the end of this. I know there's been some controversy throughout it, and obviously we need to establish what our wants and needs are and make responsible decisions. I think that at some point somebody had suggested – and maybe I'd ask the member for clarity on it – a gondola, I believe, that was not very well supported. I think it was sort of akin to the $25 million pedestrian bridge in Calgary that received so much controversy when it was built, people suggesting that maybe it was a little excessive and the money might have been better spent elsewhere. So that doesn't seem to be on the table. I'm happy to hear that.

I think healthy communities are a terrific thing, and we have much to celebrate here in Edmonton. It is a beautiful city. This would only enhance all of what we have to offer. I think that for tourists coming to Edmonton, it's a great chance to get around and see what there is and enjoy it in all of its splendour. I think the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills behind me mentioned the 10-10 plan that we've talked about before from our Wildrose Party, that would see more monies go to municipalities for things like this, so obviously I'd be remiss if I didn't mention that I think that makes perfect sense and that we would love to see that money go to municipalities so they can enhance projects like this. [interjections] I can see that's spurred some debate, and it shouldn't take anything away from the fact, Mr. Speaker, that I stand here in support of what the Member for Edmonton-McClung has brought forward.

I'm just suggesting that going forward, we might look at ways that we can concretely allow communities to plan, long-term planning, so they know what's coming, so they know what money they're going to be getting from the province, and so they can commit that to areas that will enhance tourism, will enhance the city, and will enhance the lives of families and communities. We all want healthier communities.

Again, I thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung for bringing it forward, and anything that's better for the city of Edmonton that's financially responsible we would certainly encourage as a healthier choice. So thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and participate in debate on Motion 514, brought forth by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. I'd like to commend the hon. member for his unwavering dedication to fostering the growth and development of this province's green spaces, which truly enhances the lives of Alberta's families and communities who enjoy these spaces on a daily basis.

Mr. Speaker, before I read Motion 514, I'd like to announce my pride in the municipal sustainability funds that we offer to municipalities on an ongoing basis so they can plan for their budgets.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 514 reads:

be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue its commitment to the creation of a world-class capital region river valley park by working with the city of Edmonton to implement its ribbon of green concept plan, which would connect all of the river valley parks into a single, continuous, protected park.

The ribbon of green concept plan consists of five basic principles: conservation, recreation, development, trails, and education. We're really striving for a balance. Conceptualized in 1990, the plan aimed to bring Edmonton on par with many other urban centres like Vancouver and New York City, home to Stanley Park and Central Park respectively. The ribbon of green concept plan would extend the urban park to include the entire length of the river valley and ravine system. Further, the plan would divide the park into three land-management zones: preservation, conservation, and extensive use.

Mr. Speaker, the plan represents a balance between making the valley accessible for public use and protecting the natural landscape and wildlife areas. If implemented, the green ribbon would further develop five major parks: Big Island, Terwillegar, Twin Brooks, Buena Vista, and Hermitage. The Terwillegar park area, for example, would be developed into a water-based, nature-oriented park, which would create a natural preserve area and establish the area's viable ecology by using existing and restored resources. This area would link to adjacent neighbourhoods via two pedestrian bridges, encouraging residents to explore and enjoy the natural habitat surrounding them. Finally, the plan proposes a continuous trail system, including the construction of eight river crossing bridges and an eventual link to adjacent municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, not only does this plan connect communities within the capital region municipality, but it will eventually encompass communities outside of that. As a matter of fact, as mayor of Strathcona county I was privileged to be a shareholder on the River Valley Alliance, a very dedicated organization of capital region municipalities that support the ribbon of green plan. This is an initiative that could work to build Alberta's park system to compare with other jurisdictions from around the world. When the ribbon of green plan was first thought of in 1990, five basic principles were chosen to represent the initiatives overall concept. Conservation, recreation, development, trails, and education are all things central to the success of the proposed project.

In regard to conservation the plan would ensure that a major portion of the river valley will remain in a natural state and that certain areas of habitat will be highly protected, ensuring the existence of native vegetation and wildlife communities. In order to balance recreational enjoyment of our outdoors with the importance of conservation, the plan would ensure that recreation activities are compatible with the protection of existing natural areas and must require the valley's natural setting.

Trails are also essential to the green ribbon concept plan. I know that when one drives along River Valley Road, no matter the season, there are many people running, biking, and enjoying the shared pathways. I do believe I've seen the hon. Member for Riverview out on the trail passing by in the evenings, in the afternoons, and on the weekends.

Another important aspect of this concept is education. Programs will be incorporated into the plan's concept to increase the awareness of natural and human history as well as encourage an environmentally responsible attitude toward the valley and promote respect for other users.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes we forget that right here in the capital region there are 97 kilometres of biking, hiking, skiing, walking, and snowshoeing trails that run through the city and along the banks and edges of the North Saskatchewan. In the National Post's best of summer in August 2003, Edmonton's river valley was named the longest interlinked recreation area of parkland in North America.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 514 balances respect for the natural habitat while encouraging citizens to partake in and enjoy the pristine river valley right here at our back door. More parks and green space for Albertans to enjoy means an even better quality of life for our active families and communities. In November 2012 our government demonstrated its commitment to the well-being of Albertans, families, and communities when it provided funding to support the River Valley Alliance.

I would again like to acknowledge the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung for bringing forth this motion. I'll look forward to hearing the rest of the debate, and I encourage my colleagues in this House to participate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this motion, and I want to thank the member for bringing this motion forward. I hope that this government would not just make this a promise or just a vision but make it a goal to make this a world-class river valley park system not just on par with something like Central Park but something even better. It has that potential.

Now, I will say that although the town I come from is not part of the capital region plan or anything else, we do come to Edmonton. My family does on a regular basis, and we use the amenities. We use the park system, and we recognize the value. It's not a value just restricted to the capital region. It is an Alberta value, and it can be a Canadian value that is beyond the expectation of what some other cities have done. I think we have the potential to do some great things here.

So I would like to tell the member that not only can I thank him for bringing it forward, but under a Wildrose government, particularly with the 10-10 plan, we would make sure there was stable funding so we could continue the development. The beauty is, as I do know that this government will pass this because the Official Opposition supports it, that a Wildrose government would make sure that this still carries forward into future years, so there will be no interruptions with the development of this world-class park system.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Jeneroux: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to stand here and offer resounding support for my colleague from Edmonton-McClung for this particular motion.

I'm blessed to have in my constituency this natural habitat that is the river valley. It follows along the golf course. There are running paths through it. I've yet to see the Member for Edmonton-Riverview run through there, but I'm sure I will at some point.

I think the key thing I wanted to bring up was how this is going to promote green space for future generations. I'd just like to say that I spent a lot of time as a kid living in the Capilano area, which is now in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and going and running through there and biking through the river valley and also spending a lot of time just playing there with my friends. Those are fond memories that I look back on, and I hope that my girls will be able to go and experience the exact same thing that I did. We were able to go and frolic in the water, if you will. [interjections] Yeah. It's bringing back great memories.

Mr. Jeneroux: That's true, hon. Member for Airdrie. Who doesn't like a good frolic?

Then the other point I just wanted to bring up is the support from the community that this particular motion has had. This all came, from my understanding, from when a number of years ago the city of Edmonton got a proposal to build a gravel pit within the area. I believe it's one of the largest petitions this Legislature has ever seen, the amount of support that came from the community to keep this a natural habitat. I often encourage constituents, when they come to me and say, "This is what's happening in our area," to come up with an alternative. Let's not just say no for the sake of no. Let's say: "We're going to do this in the area. We're going to enhance the area like this." This is exactly what this group did, and they should be commended for that. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung – he'll correct me if I'm wrong – was very instrumental in helping them, assisting them through the process to get it here on the Legislature floor.

In a kind of summation of my comments here, Mr. Speaker, I believe we can protect, we can enhance, and we can preserve this Edmonton river valley. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise in support of Motion 514 and thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung for bringing it.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue its commitment to the creation of a world-class capital region river valley park by working with the city of Edmonton to implement its ribbon of green concept plan, which would connect all of the river valley parks into a single, continuous, protected park.

There is absolutely no doubt how gorgeous the river valley is. There's no doubt about the trees and the scenery and the opportunities for recreation that it offers.

Mr. Speaker, I remember in my university years here playing on a very beautiful municipal golf course down there time and time again. It was tons of fun. Of course, I know that golf is close to your heart from a match we played this summer, that I very much enjoyed.

I want to bring it to Medicine Hat, where I live, and Cypress-Medicine Hat, which I represent. Medicine Hat has miles and miles of trails through the entire city. Through our parks, through our coulees, in between our houses we have many, many greenbelts, finger parks they are called, in several different areas. How popular they make our city; how much they get used. I live close to one, and when I have a chance to walk my dog down there or go through there, there are always countless people using the parks, communicating, socializing, getting exercise, the very things that so much of our society nowadays seems to lack.

In conjunction with what some of the other members of the Assembly have said, how other significant cities have significant attractions like Central Park or Stanley Park in Vancouver, the river valley park here is as gorgeous as it can be. That, coupled with this kind of thing, could make it all the more accessible for all of us, and I rise in support for that reason.

I also, though, resoundingly support what the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills said about our 10-10 plan and the extra flexibility that it will give to all municipalities to put the money where they want, the amount of money that they'll save not having to be shovel ready, not having to fill out application forms and engineering forms and have these extensive people on the payroll, just hoping that they can get some money from a provincial government someday. The 10-10 plan would be automatic: automatically 10 per cent of provincial revenues, automatically 10 per cent of potential surpluses.

An Hon. Member: Automatically $400 million less.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has the floor. Thank you.

Please carry on, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: I feel the need to point out that in this government's capital plan . . . [interjection] Thank you, Member for Airdrie. If I remember the government's capital plan correctly, two years from now I think your capital spending is the same as ours, never mind the debt you're going to leave our kids and our grandkids. So thank you very much, hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very, very much for the opportunity to have the floor.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Dorward: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Please put me on the list of those who love this motion. I'm glad to be able to speak to it. My family has had a long-time association with the North Saskatchewan River, particularly in the Edmonton area.

Mr. Rodney: Did you frolic?

Mr. Dorward: I have never frolicked in the river. Full information there.

I with my brother and father founded a trail called the Waskahegan hiking trail in 1967. In 1968 my brother and I hiked that trail. We hiked about 165 miles of that trail. It starts in the river valley. I've fished in the river for goldeye, and I've been many times in a canoe going down the river.

This whole concept of a trail, Mr. Speaker, is one that's been around for a long time. It was first proposed by an architect, indeed, in 1907, I believe. As an extension of what Peter Lougheed did the year after I got married, which is 39 years ago, the whole trail system expanded, and it certainly makes sense to go all the way from Devon to Fort Saskatchewan.

In my area, in Gold Bar, there's a monument. There's a plaque, and on that plaque it reads the following:

Capital City Recreation Park . . .

On April 26, 1974, Premier Peter Lougheed and the sixteen Edmonton Members of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Alberta announced the approval of the "Capital City Recreation Park" for the City of Edmonton. This unique urban park plan, estimated to cost in excess of 35 million dollars . . .

Now, that's interesting; contrast that with the cost we're faced with today.

. . . was initiated and developed by the Government of Alberta with input from the City of Edmonton.

The main features of this unique Park, a cooperative enterprise between the City of Edmonton and the Alberta government, include:

- A series of new provincial and city parks and recreation areas involving over 3000 acres of land on either side of a 16 kilometer stretch of the North Saskatchewan River, commencing at the High Level Bridge and terminating two kilometers north of the Beverly Bridge and including the Legislature area
- A Natural Resources Science Centre depicting the growth of Alberta's natural resources
- A series of six pedestrian and bicycle river and highway crossings, strategically located along the river and connected to approximately 46 kilometers of foot paths, bicycle trails, observation posts, park bench areas and horticultural displays throughout the 16 kilometer stretch of the river valley
- Several man-made lakes in river parks and the possible creation of a river valley lake by placing a weir across the North Saskatchewan River to permit recreation sports events.
- A "Water Conservation Area" encompassing a minimum 240 meter set-back from each shore-line of the river with appropriate bank protection, terrain and landscape long the river.

This Park is our vision of a good quality of life to be enjoyed by the people of Edmonton and by their children.

Peter Lougheed, Premier.

Then, Mr. Speaker, in 1979 I was blessed to be able to work for a company in Calgary which at the time did a tremendous amount of the initial work in Kananaskis park. Kananaskis park, of course, is world renowned for its attractiveness in terms of individuals being able to go and enjoy the great outdoors, as they will be able to do when, with the help of this motion, the government devotes the resources to the project.

In 1980 I was blessed, being involved in that same company, to be involved in all the tree planting that took place in this very capital city park, so I watched the expansion of the asphalt trail system that was done that year and all of the planting that took place.

I'm very much in favour of pushing this project forward with great expediency to be able to see it become a place where people will come from all over and have it as a central feature, indeed, of our capital city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling

Tabling Cited Documents

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Hon. member, I noticed you quoted extensively from a document. Our rules state that you should table that document, so I'm just cautioning you that in the future I don't think you might want to table your iPad. Just a reminder that if you're going to quote extensively from something, the rules require that you table that typical document. So just a reminder for the future.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of this motion because of the years of experience I've had walking trails and enjoying the scenery here in Edmonton. My hometown, Whitecourt, had a wonderful campground just north of there called Carson-Pegasus. I had a fantastic time there wandering up and down the trails as my family would camp at the Carson-Pegasus. When I moved to Red Deer – for any of you who have been to Red Deer, Red Deer actually has quite an extensive trail network within the city – I would spend hours with my friend Lyle rollerblading up and down the trails there, enjoying the scenery along the river.

You know, here in Edmonton you have the same opportunity. I used to come to regionals here for the Summer Swimming Association. When we were done with the swim meet, what would we do? We would leave the Kinsmen centre, down on the riverbank here, and we would wander around the trails. We'd come across the river. We'd go down through the parkways. You know, it was quite beautiful, and it was quite entrancing. As a child you actually get the opportunity to look around and see what beauty there is within our natural habitats, and they can exist within the city here. That's why motions like Motion 514 are so vitally important to the province and to the city. I mean, it's wonderful that the capital region river valley parkway has been working with the government and, hopefully, will continue to work with the government on this.

Now, you know, I'd like to give a little shout-out here to the Wildrose 10-10 plan as well. I mean, can you imagine a better program, where the province would actually share its revenue on an annual basis so that communities knew what was coming and could plan accordingly so that they didn't have to go cap in hand every year or every couple of years or after every election and wonder: are we going to get this funding for – I don't know – this parkway? They shouldn't have to come cap in hand. We shouldn't have to be worried about whether or not some of the members have been frolicking in the parkway and would actually like to see these projects put forward.

I mean, let's put together a comprehensive plan so that municipalities can proactively plan in the future for more of these types of projects. It's an absolutely wonderful plan that would enhance a municipality's ability to create more of these spaces. They could actually use the dollars when they wanted to use them on the projects they needed to use them on rather than having to come back to you, the government, every single time for a grant.

With the Wildrose 10-10 plan we'd actually give 10 per cent of provincial revenue directly to municipalities. With a budget surplus another 10 per cent of that surplus would be given to towns, cities, and communities so that we could further enhance the lives of people not only here in Edmonton but in Red Deer, in Lacombe, in Ponoka, in Blackfalds, in Medicine Hat, in Fort McMurray.

An Hon. Member: In Altario.

Mr. Fox: In Altario. You know, that's an area of the province we don't hear about very often here in this Legislature, and we should hear about it more. I actually get to travel through Altario fairly often when I'm on my way to Manitoba. There are some very interesting trails and features out that way that maybe don't get the attention that they deserve. You pass through coulees on the way. There are no trails there either.

Maybe we should be putting forward a plan so those counties and municipalities can use funds when they need to and on what they want to, again, rather than coming cap in hand to you, the provincial government, and having to beg for motions like Motion 514 to improve the city for the citizens of Alberta.

You know, the one thing that is nice about this project is that it is preserving nature in Edmonton's river valley system. It is a point of pride for Edmontonians, and it is a point of pride across political lines. I have had the opportunity, since being elected, to wander through some of those trail systems, too. They really are beautiful. To connect them all together is a wonderful project. Out in Lacombe this summer we just connected to the Trans Canada Trail. We had a wonderful ceremony just outside the Lacombe research station. It's a beautiful trail that kind of winds its way through the Lacombe research station and through the park system that's there as well. It connects us with Blackfalds and with Red Deer, and it connects the trail systems in those communities. Within the next two years we're actually going to see it connect to Ponoka as well.

It's wonderful that there are groups of people that are coming together to ask for motions like Motion 514 so that trail systems can be connected and Albertans can enjoy the beauty that exists in nature within the cities here in this province.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am also in favour of the motion brought by my colleague from Edmonton-McClung. I think it's a very forward-looking motion. The Edmonton river valley, obviously, is a beautiful asset for the city of Edmonton and for the whole province.

I think that one thing we don't do enough of is that long-range planning for the future. We have a province right now which has just passed 4 million in population. Two-thirds of that population lives in our two largest cities. It is really imperative for those people that live in urban settings like Calgary and Edmonton that we set aside areas where they can enjoy the environment and the natural areas as well as recreational facilities.

I would like to point out that we had a similar situation in the city of Calgary, where some foresighted individuals in 1980 created Nose Hill park, which is in my riding of Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. It's one of the largest urban parks in all of North America. That area was slated for residential development. It is now used by tens of thousands of people on a weekly basis. It's a tremendous asset for the city of Calgary.

Another one that we created was the Glenbow Ranch, which is right on the urban fringe of the city of Calgary. The government of Alberta had the foresight about seven or eight years ago to set aside that land and for that purpose set $40 million aside to purchase that piece of property.

That's the type of thing that we need to do more of. We have growing cities, large metropolitan areas which need to have those recreational assets. I think this is a very foresighted motion, and I urge all my colleagues to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Stony Plain, or are you calling the question?

Mr. Lemke: I'll call the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. However, hon. members, I have four minutes left before the mover is allowed five minutes to close. If you want to speak to it, you can. If not, I can recognize another member.

Mr. Lemke: I'll speak to it, then.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lemke: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to continue debate on Motion 514, brought forth by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. As my colleagues have previously mentioned, Motion 514 looks for continued support for the creation of a world-class capital region river valley park in Edmonton. Promoting ongoing efforts to create an integrated river valley park could help raise our capital region's global profile. Representing my constituents here at the Legislature, I have had the privilege of being surrounded by the picturesque Edmonton river valley. We really do have access to its paths and bridges almost right at our doorstep.

Mr. Speaker, history shows just how society has valued green spaces and park places. From the early 18th century the importance of beautiful, landscaped gardens and green spaces has informed art, history books, paintings, and various other visual mediums. Travellers would come from across Europe to visit what many considered to be landscape works of art. In fact, many of these green spaces inspired the artwork of world-renowned artists and painters just as the artists' own paintings often inspired the landscaping of other gardens across Europe.

Many of the world's most renowned parks and green spaces exist in Europe today as a result of that. In Barcelona the construction of Park Güell began in 1900. This site was originally prepared by celebrated artist Antonio Gaudi in order to display and showcase his urban planning concerns. The creator's vivid imagination is revealed in the different elements that amaze its visitors. Park Güell has become a destination for new and seasoned travellers from around the world.

Central Park in New York City is another world-renowned green space that has become a destination for the city's residents and visitors alike. After seeing a rapid decline in the care and maintenance of this space, many public and private entities have worked together to return it to its former splendour as America's first and foremost major urban public space. Since beginning its restoration, Central Park has once again become a destination for visitors in a bustling metropolitan centre.

Another world-class park a little closer to home here in Alberta is Stanley Park in Vancouver. As Vancouver's first park, with its ever-blooming gardens, pristine coastal areas, and roughly 500,000 cedar, fir, and hemlock trees, Stanley Park has continued to live up to its green-space designation for over 120 years. Mr. Speaker, Stanley Park has become a must-see tourist destination for those visiting Vancouver. Like our capital region green space, Stanley Park offers a tranquil oasis and a perfect escape right within a busy city centre.

Right here in Edmonton and its surrounding area there are 22 major parks with over 150 kilometres of trails suitable for walks, bike rides, picnics, snowshoeing, cross-country skiing, and more.

The very size of our park is something to rival the likes of even Stanley Park. For this reason, it is important that we take advantage of the expansive green space we have at our doorstep. Promoting a single, integrated, protected parks system and working with the city of Edmonton to implement its ribbon of green concept plan could see Edmonton and all of Alberta come to the forefront of travel destinations for international visitors.

Of course, when considering support for this initiative, it is important that we continue to consult the views of the surrounding municipalities. At the time these plans were initially envisioned, the fiscal environment was quite different. Since then, we have been through one of the worst global economic downturns, and many jurisdictions have yet to recover. That is why we must ensure that all of the members of the River Valley Alliance are still onboard with this project and that their needs and priorities are fully respected. This is especially pertinent given the recent municipal elections, which have seen many changes in councils and boards across the province.

That being said, having an integrated parks system right here in our capital region would increase the province's reputation as a tourist destination across the world, and I will be voting in support of it.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I hesitate to interrupt you, but under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close debate on Motion 514.

Mr. Xiao: I would love to. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 514 proposes to continue supporting the creation of a world-class capital region river valley park. The overarching theme that I would like to highlight with this motion is the spirit of collaboration. The fundamental principle that holds communities together and promotes an unwavering sense of unity is collaboration. Again, the River Valley Alliance involves the co-operative efforts of seven unique and proud municipalities that were brought together in their efforts to create a vibrant and dynamic outdoor space that all Albertans can enjoy.

Motion 514 highlights the intergovernmental efforts that have benefited from the support of all three levels of government: municipal, provincial, and federal. Alberta is blessed to house the largest stretch of city parkland in North America, and I believe that in time it will become one of the world's most recognizable city spaces.

Mr. Speaker, by creating an urban outdoor space that is accessible to everyone, this allows individuals from across our great province to appreciate its treasures. World-class parks are defining characteristics that add to the attractiveness of any cosmopolitan city, cities such as New York, Paris, Barcelona, and also, like my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview mentioned, Hyde Park in London. No one can argue with the health and economic benefits that such outdoor spaces provide to both citizens and tourists alike.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding the debate on Motion 514, I would like to urge all members to take time to go out and enjoy our great river valley, truly a sublime gift from nature. When you do, try not to forget the hard work and effort and the time that has been invested in creating such a wonderful space.

Again, I would like to thank all of my colleagues that have participated in this debate on Motion 514. I urge all members to vote in favour of this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 514 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we had an omission earlier. It's my fault. We did not receive the report from the Committee of the Whole. I would seek your unanimous consent that we receive that report now. Are any opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The words just came to me. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills and reports progress on Bill 206. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the House concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, November 4, 2013

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Before we begin, I've been asked to seek unanimous consent to revert to introductions as we have guests in the gallery.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is indeed my honour and privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some wonderful friends of this community. They keep coming in. As you know, today we celebrated Eid al-Adha, and they are here to join this wonderful Assembly, to see how democracy works and how we celebrate different occasions. As I say your name, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. If I forget somebody's name, please forgive me. I'm going to start with Amer Allam, then Kashif Allam, Nawesh Perwar, Hamiz Khan, Ibram Saheb, Omar Abdullah, Sami Allam, Nushat Ali Akter, Mr. Saed and sister Kishwa Rani, and Shani Allam. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods introduced his Edmonton friends and guests. I would like to introduce my Calgary guests, starting with our senior imam from Calgary, who recited this beautiful sura from the Quran, Jamal Hammoud and his wife, Rola Hammoud; Dr. Talib Muhammed; my brother Ali Amery; and the president of the Muslim Council of Calgary, Mr. Sohail Merhi; accompanied by my legislative assistant, Zack Ziolkowski. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Government Motions

Committee Membership Changes

39. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the following changes to

- (a) the Standing Committee on Families and Communities be approved: that Mr. Allen replace hon. Mr. Fraser, that Mr. Khan replace Mr. Goudreau, that Ms Calahasen replace hon. Ms Jansen;
- (b) the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship be approved: that Mr. Goudreau replace Mr. Allen;
- (c) the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee be approved: that Mr. Luan replace Mr. Allen as chair, that Mr. Dorward replace Mr. Luan as deputy chair, that Ms Kubinec replace Mr. Allen.

Mr. Dorward moved on behalf of Mr. Young that the motion be amended as follows.

- (a) clause (a) is struck out and the following is substituted:

the Standing Committee on Families and Communities be approved: that Mr. Khan replace hon. Mr. Fraser, that Mr. Xiao replace hon. Ms Jansen;

- (b) clause (b) is struck out.

[Adjourned debate on amendment October 29: Mr. Hancock]

Mr. Campbell: Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Government House Leader, I want to move that amendment A1 to Government Motion 39 be amended by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:

- (b) the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship be approved: that Mr. Allen fill the vacant position.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are we distributing that motion now? Okay. If you'd like to go ahead.

Once everybody has a copy of the amendment, then we'll call the question if there are no speakers.

This will be known as subamendment SA1. Are there any members who would like to speak to SA1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of Mr. Young I want to move that Government Motion 39 be amended as follows. Number one, clause (a) is struck out and the following is substituted:

- (a) the Standing Committee on Families and Communities be approved: that Mr. Khan replace hon. Mr. Fraser, that Mr. Xiao replace hon. Ms Jansen.

And, two, that clause (b) is struck out.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

It looks like we've already voted on that. No? It's been moved. Okay. You have a copy of it from last time. Are there any members who wish to speak on that motion?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would ask that we move Government Motion 39 with the changes that have been voted on tonight.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to that?

[Government Motion 39 as amended carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 31

Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that the motion for second reading be amended to read that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be not now read a second time because the Legislative Assembly believes that the bill fails to provide for unbiased, effective, and accountable independent monitoring in a comprehensive manner, which includes consultation with the full range of affected groups.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment October 31: Ms Blakeman speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm very pleased to be able to stand and complete my time in speaking to the referral amendment, which is moved by the hon. leader of the fourth party, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, proposing that all the words after "that" be removed and that the bill be not read a second time because the Legislative Assembly believes that the bill fails to provide for unbiased, effective, and accountable independent monitoring in a comprehensive manner, which includes consultation with the full range of affected groups. That is a reasoned amendment, and that's the one that's still live. Okay.

When I had first started speaking, I'd said that, really, the acceptance of this whole bill is a question of credibility for the government, a measurement of the action that they've taken and trust going forward. I had run through quite a long list, three pages' worth in my notes, of where there had been credibility gaps with the performance of this government in environmental monitoring. I'd mentioned that, you know, we'd had that whole time where the government kept insisting it was the best monitoring program until that was completely disproved, and they had to admit it themselves. Then they started to develop another world-class one, part of which is included in this bill.

Credibility problems. With the RAMP program, with self-monitoring, with the whole concept of voluntary rather than mandatory monitoring, the lack of an accelerated groundwater mapping program, the industry is looking for certainty, and they cannot get it. Problems with the metrics of how, when, and where we measured various things; credibility problems with board appointments, who tended to be overwhelmingly friends of the government and not necessarily people with the qualifications; problems with conflict of interest; credibility around cumulative effects: again, we're still looking to a baseline. An interesting study was produced by Kevin Timoney in July of 2013, where he followed up on infractions on environmental orders and found that the follow-up was abysmal. So credibility problems there.

When we look into action, you know, what kind of action has been taken? Can we say that we really think this government has been active on this? My answer to that is no. They haven't been strong on taking action on the environmental file. I would say that they've been weak or have not taken advantage of opportunities to be vigorous. For example, we've had an extension on the coal-fired power plants in Alberta. They're allowed to operate for longer. There has been no incentive to shut them down faster and to move on to some other kind of fuel for running those power plants. The coal-fired generating plants are our single biggest emission issue under CO<sub>2</sub> at this point. The oil sands are our fastest growing problem, but coal use right now is the biggest problem.

Our carbon price is based on emission intensity, not on actual emissions and change in actual emissions. Someone explained that one to me as being on a diet. If you'd actually lost 10 pounds, well, that's 10 pounds, but if you're going to look at the amount of weight that you've lost as a percentage of your total weight, it looks much more impressive than it actually is. That's what we're doing here. We've had very weak support for alternative energy, and over my time I've heard the most amazing excuses for the lack of support for alternative energy development.

The government keeps talking about the concept of balance, but we don't have a balance right now. We actually have a long way to go to achieve balance between industrial development and the environment. For example, we just appointed as the Alberta regulator a person that used to work for the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. Just a tad biased there. You know, even if we believed it here in Alberta, it sure isn't getting credibility and any kind of traction outside of the province. Again, problems with action not taken and credibility.

Weak, weak action on wildlife protection. I mean, for any kind of a wildlife corridor these animals will look like they're on drugs trying to follow what's possible to get through.

We've had repeatedly reduced funding on things like the water advisory panels, we've had repeated problems with enforcement, and, of course, we've just had our own Auditor General repeating his request that the government be able to show that it has made any progress whatsoever on climate change and meeting its targets because he has not been able to detect any proof of that given what the government is doing. So there's a lack of credibility, a lack of action taken.

Going forward, do we have trust? Well, can we see a larger plan in place with this agency as a piece of that plan? I can see where this agency fits into the plan, but the government has lost credibility with me that I can trust them to move ahead in any kind of vigorous way, that I can trust that they're actually going to reduce emissions, that they're going to work on the coal, you know, do something active and vigorous, muscular action, with coal-fired electricity plants, that any of these many things that I have already noted are actually going to get done.

I've been extremely fortunate to be able to travel outside of the province and outside of the country. Boy, when you do, you sure get a clear look back at the lack of credibility that we have. Where other populations, particularly in the European Common Market, are in their thinking, how they look at things like the development of bike lanes and mass transit and recycling and biomass and what they will accept from their government and how far they push their government to do things, they are light years ahead of us. So I can see why we're having trouble getting people outside of Canada to believe that the government is taking any kind of vigorous action because it's nothing compared to what's going on in other places.

I agree with this reasoned amendment. I think we have a problem here. As I've pointed out, this particular legislation has just about as many flaws as it has good points. I really wanted this to succeed. Don't misunderstand that I'm always looking for the government to fail on this. I want them to succeed. I live in Alberta. I want to have a wealthy province. I want to be doing well. I want to have international trade agreements. I want us to be reaping the benefits of living in a wealthy, wealthy province, to have wonderful schools, fabulous advanced education, amazing funding for arts and culture. I mean, there's so much opportunity in this province; it's just flowing over. I get right ticked off when I see that being jeopardized because of things like this.

You know, saying that we're going to have a panel and then saying that there are no qualifications and no specifications as to who gets appointed to the panel, and then to say that there's going to be a scientific panel but no instructions that the people on the scientific panel have a scientific background: oh, come on; how do you think that's going to read somewhere else or even here? We've raised a number of points already just in debate in second on what is lacking here.

So I support this reasoned amendment. I think we've got a long way to go on this bill. I will bring forward some amendments to strengthen it, and I hope that by working together, we are able to wrestle this bill into something that we can all be proud of and support.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think I will support what the member from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre has brought forward. The first thing that I think we need to do is look at the name of this bill: Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. I just wonder what we're defending or guarding in this case, looking at the legislation itself, because that is what to protect implies, to defend or to guard. It seems more like monitoring when you look through it, and that is good. That is something the government needs to be doing. I certainly do support that because we're getting a bad reputation for what we do here when it comes to monitoring our environment.

I think it's worth pointing out, Madam Speaker, that an Alberta judge has recently accused the Alberta government of bias and gross unfairness in banning environmental groups from participating in a public oil sands hearing. It's been discussed at length in here. So when a bill like this is proposed, people are naturally skeptical when that is the track record in the last little while with the Alberta government. In fact – and I'm referring to OSEC, the Oil Sands Environmental Coalition, that was banned – the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench declared that ban illegal, and then the judge had some pretty scathing things to say about it.

To the member's motion, it does make sense to slow it down, I think, and talk about it at another level to make sure that we've got it right. When we don't want to hear from the other side, we do nothing but create problems for ourselves down the road. I think Bill 28 is a classic example of that. I don't think it's unreasonable to suggest that we do solicit a little more feedback and make sure that the proper stakeholders are consulted and we're able to have the conversations in here that we ought to be having. The judge in this case that I'm referring to, with what the province had to say or did on the environmental file, compared that to the authoritarian regime of Maurice Duplessis in Quebec during the 1950s. There is somebody else here – I forget who it was now – that made reference to this the other night when we were discussing this bill. The judge said: it is difficult to envision a more direct apprehension of bias unless it is the Premier of Quebec telling the Quebec Liquor Commission to revoke a restaurateur's liquor licence because the proprietor is a Jehovah's Witness, as happened in Roncarelli versus Duplessis.

To the member's point, it does warrant revisiting and more time. If that's what a judge fears we're doing with the Alberta environment file, then I think you understand where the member is coming from.

An arm's-length agency is good if it is, indeed, an arm's-length agency. Everybody has great cause to question whether or not that will be the case, in an open and transparent manner, because sometimes the government suggests that's exactly what's going on and we know that it isn't. All we have to do is think of the events of earlier this session when we were talking about Bill 28. Obviously, the government wants you to believe that everybody's been consulted and there is no problem with what they're putting forward. That is not the case, and you have to convince them of it, only to have them backtrack at the end and say: "You know what? We're getting so much feedback from the community that this is what we should have done initially."

That's a frustrating thing for anybody. Whether you've been here, like the member who raised the amendment has, for a couple of terms or whether you're one of the newer members like myself, I think you see that the point of opposition is to raise appropriate dialogue and points that need to be considered, and it is nice when the government will consider them without staying up until 2 in the morning to be convinced.

It is to be independent of government. We have to make sure that this is the case. I would applaud the fact that, reading through the bill, eventually it's going to get to a point where all the information on the projects in Alberta are posted online for all to see. The question that I would have is: is that written in stone, that all of the information on all of the projects will be posted online, or will it be by selection? In other words, if there is something going on that doesn't paint the government in a good light, will that be kept from that website? That would not be the intent if we're going to be open and transparent about it.

Protecting Alberta's Environment Act is one thing; protecting Alberta's environment and the Alberta government's reputation act is an entirely different thing. I'll wait for some more speakers on it tonight, but I applaud the member for bringing an amendment forward. I think it's in the best interest of improving what we're putting forward so that we can be good stewards of the land, develop economically and responsibly, and do what we ought to be doing as the government. We have international partners that expect nothing but the best from us, and we should change the reputation that, unfortunately, the government has been a part of developing for the province of Alberta. I'm hopeful that we are able to do that through this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have 29(2)(a) if there is anybody who would like to comment or question the hon. member.

Seeing none, I'll ask if there are any more members who wish to speak on RA1.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 31 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We'll go back to debate on second reading. Are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 31 in second reading?

Seeing none, would the hon. minister of environment like to close?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: We would appreciate it if we could go to Bill 29, Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, in Committee of the Whole.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 29
Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members who wish to speak to this bill in Committee of the Whole?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 29 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, shall we have the committee rise and report?

Mr. Campbell: Yes. Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration Bill 29. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 29.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Bill 27
Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act

[Adjourned debate October 30: Mr. Hancock]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members who wish to speak on Bill 27? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We can talk about process again, but I think I well indulged everybody on that the other night on what I thought of process. I do appreciate the government listening.

As I understand it, Bill 27 amends the Emergency Management Act to allow regulations to fund and how to fund to mitigate potential flood damages. One of the things in the bill allows for placement or removal of caveats on properties on flood fringes or floodways. I agree with part of that. The only problem I guess I'd caution the government on or like them to look into, at least, is to update the flood mapping so we have current flood mapping for what we're doing on that. In the last three floods I've seen, from 1995, 2005, and last summer, a lot of the rivers have changed direction, flows, everything else, which does change.

8:00

An Hon. Member: They change direction?

Mr. Donovan: Where they're flowing. They're still going in the same direction, I guess. Thank you, Statler. Every once in a while you keep me on the game. I appreciate that. The point is that it's definitely changed the location of the water and where it happens to be going in different years.

The declaration of passing the state of emergency from 14 to 28 days, I think, probably has some merit to it as we ran into that in this last flood. We ran into problems there, so that should do that.

One of the things in this bill that I do like: it gives powers to the municipality to handle the emergencies and the relief. In one of my counties that I represent as MLA, Vulcan county did a spectacular job of being able to help during the flooding around the Wyndham park area when the flood hit. They stepped up; they did lots of road work. Volker Stevin did a great job also of blocking off roads, sitting out there staffing the blockades there. I think people went above and beyond on that. Communication was also good from the county of Vulcan and also the county of Lethbridge, who didn't have as much flooding per se but had the chance of flooding where they were going to open up some dams to let the cubic metres per second get out of a dam.

Luckily, they didn't have to open them up to the state where they were going to do some road damage, which again gets into some things, I guess, which we need to address sometime with Environment, allowing how much flow goes in and out of a water reservoir. I know that right now policy from Alberta Environment states that they cannot let more out of the reservoir than what's coming into the reservoir. I think that at some point we could work on that. Maybe it's a policy change that the minister might want to look at for down the road when we know there's a large flood coming, to be able to let some of the water out earlier. It's just something, I think, that would help out quite a few people.

I think that this bill also cleans up some of the claim mechanisms for the municipalities to be reimbursed after the natural disasters hit. In 2005 or 1995, or I guess both, but in 2005 for sure, Vulcan county had a couple of bridges go out. As well, this last flood had some bridges go out. Some of the challenges are to be able to replace those in a timely fashion. I know that the MD of Willow Creek – and that would have been back in 2005 also, in that flood – had numerous roads where the bridges went out, and being able to get the funding and the okay on that became a challenge for them.

One of the things I do question in this bill is giving it to cabinet to decide where development can be. Some of that worries me a little bit if they haven't seen the exact flow of where water goes and how it may have changed a little bit on high and low marks, with different spots in the rivers washing out compared to other times. I wonder whether that should be a locally made decision or not. Again, I see on the AAMD and C convention that there is talk of whether the Minister of Municipal Affairs is going to open up the MGA again. I think it's been about 19 years since it was last done. This is also going to be modified in the MGA, so I guess making sure that this carried on in the new MGA as it's looked at and redone and with some of the things added to it, I think this could be a good time to also add a couple of other things in the MGA that need to be updated.

I think, in all honesty, this bill has a lot of merit, and I'd probably be supporting it with a couple of things that I'd like added to it. So I'll leave it at that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any who would like to speak to him about that? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to ask the Member for Little Bow: he kind of glossed over the concerns about caveats, and I, too, in Drumheller have some concerns about floodway mapping and caveats, so I was wondering if he could just reiterate a little bit his concerns about those descriptions.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you for the question. My concern is that when you're starting to put that on, some towns have done some mitigating for flooding and have put a caveat on some of the titles. To me, for the towns that have already done the mitigation, it is a challenge in there. In some of the towns with the old flood mapping that has been done – I mean, for instance, in Vulcan county, where the floods went down through Wyndham park there, none of that is mapped still. So I guess I'd be concerned with being able to put the caveat on some of the titles. For instance, the town of Okotoks put quite a bit of money into flood mitigation last time, which proved very good this time, so they've done the right steps to take the caveat off. My opinion as a farmer on it: you'd hate to put a caveat on a title that is on an old flood map.

The biggest thing in my vision of that is to make sure that the flood mapping is up to date before we push through the caveats on the different homes because that could change some different areas, and if the flood mitigation that goes through that they actually do, with the flood symposium that they brought forward in Calgary, which I think has quite a bit of merit, it would change quite a few different things on what would be considered in the flood plain or the flood fringe.

The Acting Speaker: On 29(2)(a).

Ms Blakeman: One of the things that I noted in Bill 27 is that a great deal rides on the definition of floodway, yet the definition of floodway will be decided after the bill is passed under section (3) of the bill, modifying section 693.1(1) of the original MGA. Can you comment on the fact that we're doing something for a definition that we don't have yet?

Secondly, what's your opinion on the caveats being placed or the lack of definitude around neighbourhoods that already exist, communities that already exist in those flood plains? Can you explain why the act is not giving us a better definition of how that's supposed to proceed?

Mr. Donovan: It's like rehearsal for when we become a minister at some point. This is great.

First off, for the floodway and the mapping on that and doing it ahead of time, I give the government that they have to start somewhere on it. My thing is that I'd still like to see new flood maps so the floodway, flood fringe – I guess the question is where the caveats are on that. The parts of town that you asked about, High River for instance, where some developments are considered in the floodway or the flood fringe and whether the caveat is on it: some of that also goes back to the flood mitigation standard or what they're doing. I guess that as a property owner I wouldn't want a caveat put on my house if we've mitigated the damages that could be done the next time by totally diverting the water channel around or making sure that there's proper drainage from there so it couldn't flood again. I'd hate to put a caveat on a title that, to me, has shown that they've done the mitigation that should be done.

I guess I'm not going to say that I know the exact answer to this because depending on which city you're in – I know Calgary has some different challenges where the Elbow goes through. But I'm the most familiar with High River and with different communities in High River. For instance, probably the worst flooding was on the east side of town because there's no way for it to drain. Nobody ever saw the water going over there. So to put a caveat on those houses – they weren't even in the flood fringe or floodway, and it just happened to be the way the water backed into it. It became a basin. It would be pretty hard for anybody to tell that that would have happened until the events did happen. I went to high school in High River. It would have been the last place I would ever have thought of flooding. That's why, I think, people bought out there. They thought they were away from the river. They weren't near the golf course. They weren't along there. I worry a little bit about putting caveats on areas in town that could have got flooded without anybody knowing it was going to happen.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have a number of speakers on Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. The hon. Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta, followed by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

The hon. minister.

Ms Blakeman: There's a minister for recovery?

Mr. Fawcett: That there is.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak to this particular bill, Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, as a minister that has been very much involved in this from about 24 to 48 hours after the floods subsided. I do want to talk briefly about some of the stuff that's in this bill, particularly the policies that this bill is enacting around developments in floodways. I appreciate the last exchange, and I think that's good debate, but I do want to clarify a few things.

First of all, this bill provides regulation-making authority to the minister to restrict development in what's called a floodway. This is very distinct from what is the flood fringe. In fact, so much of what we heard in the aftermath of the flood – we talked about flood plains or flood hazards or all sorts of nomenclature that is good for public debate, but when it comes down to making policy decisions, what's in this particular bill, it actually just clouds the fact. What we do as a province is flood mapping, and I guess you could call the whole thing a sort of flood hazard.

There are two particular areas that we're really concerned about as a province within that flood hazard. One is a floodway and one is the flood fringe. What defines the floodway is that it's a particularly scientific way of looking at what happens during a flood event and how the water reacts. In a floodway, Madam Speaker, what you have is water that flows at a particularly high rate, at a particularly high volume, and there's a channel that it's usually geared towards. The water flows at such a high rate and such a high volume that it is very destructive. It will take out man-made structures, and the reason why we're bringing this forward and why our policy is to restrict any future development in those areas is twofold, and this is something that I wanted to bring up as part of this bill because I'm not sure this is widely understood.

The first thing is the obvious, the financial liability that exists when you have structures that are destroyed during a flood event: a house – we saw many of the pictures of houses floating down the river – other physical structures. Those were typically in the floodway, and like I said, that's typically defined by waters that flow fast enough and strong enough that they'll destroy structures, and that's, you know, certainly financially damaging when you have to repair a whole structure instead of just maybe mopping up, cleaning up, and fixing a bit of drywall. So the financial liability is huge in this particular area, and I think most Albertans understand that.

The second part about the floodway, Madam Speaker, is that when you do have houses or structures move in a flood event, it becomes a public safety issue. We have first responders that are operating, trying to save life and limb, as they like to say, in a flood event, whether it's rescuing people, animals, trying to protect other infrastructure, and what you have is the potential of these structures now floating down the stream at them at a very high rate in the river because the water's flowing that way. This policy doesn't just make sense for limiting future financial liabilities; it's actually a public safety issue as well. That's a piece that actually gets lost in the debate around this particular policy.

The last thing I just want to touch on is that this is based off flood mapping, Madam Speaker, and those decisions we based off the maps that exist today, and there's no doubt that some of those maps need to be changed. One of the things that we need to remember is that those maps are mapped to a 1-in-100-year standard, and that's very important to remember. I know most people are concerned. They're confused. They're saying, "Well, it doesn't make sense. How come I got flooded but I'm not in a floodway or flood fringe?" and vice versa. The big challenge is that obviously, with many of the flood events that happened this past June in this province, much of it was actually over and above the 100-year standard. That's why you would have water in places that might not be mapped. It's over a 1-in-100-year standard.

Finally, Madam Speaker, the one thing about flood mapping that I think everybody should recognize is that in a flood event many, many different things happen, and they're happening on a very fast and rapid basis. It's very hard to predict, scientifically or nonscientifically, things that will happen during this event. Much of it is, frankly, man-made. A great example is Heart Creek in the hamlet of Lac des Arcs in the MD of Bighorn. What had happened was that the creek was flooding and was going one way, and a whole bunch debris came up against a guy's fence, clogged the fence, and redirected it a completely different way. Well, that might have been the natural way the creek wanted to go, but it ended up going a completely different way because of that fence sort of acting like a dam. That's something that is very difficult to predict ahead of time, and it's why some of these things are very unpredictable.

What we need to do is realize that what we're trying to do is not give an exact prediction of what's going to happen during a flood event but create a policy tool for planning. That's what flood mapping is about. It's a tool for planning. It's a tool for allowing us to identify some of these things like restricting development in floodways, those types of things, that are in this bill for us to make sure that we're better prepared for next time and that we look at challenges such as future financial liability and possible public safety issues.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much to this – I'm sorry. I didn't know you were a minister now. I totally missed that. Thank you very much for getting up to say what you said, but I am still curious how we were supposed to know that from what's available in this bill, where in section 693.1(1) it's telling us that those definitions of floodways will come from the Lieutenant Governor in Council, who may make these regulations, and that includes under (d): "defining, or respecting the meaning of, 'floodway' for the purposes of this section and the regulations made under this subsection." How, exactly, were we supposed to understand what you just told us, telling us all that we should understand it, when, in fact, the regulations haven't been made yet but will be made upon the passage of the bill? Do you see what I mean? We've got the cart before the horse here a little bit. So I'm asking how people were supposed to understand that.

Secondly, where you have communities that are already built in 1-in-100-year flood plains, there's total uncertainty for them here. We don't know whether there's going to be a caveat placed on their property. They were already allowed to develop under the blessing of the municipality of the time, so I don't know if it's possible to mitigate at this point. What are they supposed to do? Get higher? I don't know. Are you supposed to prop them up and stick another foundation under them? What's reasonable here? The bill is nothing but uncertain. I can't go back to the people that are asking me this question and answer it for them because there's nothing in the bill that tells me what they're going to do except for things like controlling, regulating or prohibiting any use or development of land that is located in a floodway, undefined, I'll note, within a municipal authority, including, without limitation, regulations specifying the types of developments that are authorized in a floodway.

Okay. Fair enough. What am I supposed to tell these people? They're already there. They were blessed by the then municipality to be there. What are they supposed to do in the future? Do they always have this uncertainty hanging over them that at any point the government can decide to control, regulate, or prohibit because they're already in a flood plain? What are they supposed to do? There's no certainty for them. There's no certainty now, and there's no certainty in the future for them. So could you answer that?

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. I'm glad that this hon. member has got caught up over the last year and a half. It's been that long since I've been an associate minister over here, Madam Speaker.

What I do want to say is that this, to restrict or prohibit development in floodways, in any policy that the government wants to bring in will be specifically in regard to any new or future developments. Those developments in place will be allowed to remain in place. We've been quite clear on what our policy intent is going to be, Madam Speaker, and that is that if you live in a floodway, you certainly will have access to the disaster recovery program for, one, a flood event, and if you are impacted by a flood, you will then have an option to go to the disaster recovery program and get your eligible recovery assistance through the program or work with the government through our floodway buyout program to get you moved out. That's all that this is doing.

Again, I don't know where this member has been, Madam Speaker, for the last – I don't know – four months, but we've been quite clear on these policies. We've been talking about it. We've been trying to make these policies in a timely manner so that people that have been impacted can make a decision. That's always a big challenge. You probably know that it takes a while to, you know, make sure you have all of your i's dotted and your t's crossed when it comes to making sound public policy. In the case of flood recovery that's always a challenge. How do you make sure that all of those details are taken care of while providing timely information to people?

That's something that we've tried to deal with over the last four months, and I believe that through that process – it has been a bit of an iterative process – we've come up with some very strong policies that are very much in line with the Groeneweld report that was done after the 2005 floods. We think that this is the right thing to do. This bill is going to allow us to do that, and it's pretty clear, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: There are four seconds left.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. It's about as clear as mud. Where exactly are these policies written down? I am one of the few people that pays attention in this House.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

The next speaker is the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and following him will be Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, then Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the hon. minister. I know you've been a minister under a different title. You've now got a new title. Maybe you've doubled down. I want to make one comment before I even begin. I would disagree with the comment that the minister made about how much of this being man-made. It's called rain, and none of that is man-made, as much as I know. I will tell you that it's about volume and the speed of volume. The science behind it can actually project quite accurately based on the volume and the speed of the volume what a flood plain would be and what would be damaged or at least how to expand within that flood plain. That's not even new science; that's science that's been around a long time.

Now, the thing that bothers me about this is the definition. That's actually quite incredible. I had to actually go back because for quite a long time a floodway was the channel of the river and always has been, but it looks like we're going to change that now. I don't know why, but we're going to change that. It's going to be a different definition. That's all well and good. You can do that. A flood plain was the high water mark based on the speed and the volume of water coming down, and that could easily be mapped according to how much water was considered and the speed that it came down based on the floodway. So these definitions can possibly change as we add to the flood fringe, and we really don't know what they are just yet.

But I do know one thing. The mapping is not good. It needs to be updated. In the town of Sundre alone the river has moved over a mile from the original flood mapping that had taken place some years past, so now the riverbed has actually moved over a complete mile – and I mean almost exactly a mile – to the channel it once ran through back in 1954. So it changed the whole dynamics.

Now, this act is called the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, but there's nothing in there that talks about spurs, berms, dredging, and dams, some things that are really constructive in how we're going to deal with these floodways and these flood fringes. In the management of future floods these are the tools that we have at our disposal, and they've been proven to work for centuries. It is something that the engineers engineer and we would apply. That would save significantly the amount of damage, whether it's a 100-year or 500-year flood, depending on how we engineer and how we plan for future floods. Now, there's nothing in here that really even leads to that.

The other thing is dealing with the issue of the cost that would be incurred by people who are living in these floodways or flood fringes, as they're also identified. What if you're there now with property? What is the process? Clearly, people are not going to all agree on what this government offers for financial contribution, financial relief, whatever it is, whatever it's called. Some of these investments these people have made are significant. What is the process if the government comes in and says, "Now we're going to throw a caveat onto your title. Oh, by the way, the value of that land, the value of that property just dropped"?

What happens if we now put in the retaining dams or the retaining ponds or retaining lakes, whatever you want to call it, and we change the whole mapping of how we're managing floods going into the future? Do these caveats get removed? Under what conditions do they get removed? This is all part of the process that is empty. It's not here, and there's no mention of how to go about it. Again, there are some real issues here.

There are a number of other things that were never addressed. The hon. Minister of Justice did make mention of this, I believe, last week. In dealing with this type of emergency – the beginning of the bill talks about it when it talks about amending the Emergency Management Act. We've now learned yet again – and I learned when the hon. minister tabled a letter both from himself and from the deputy commissioner – that they didn't seize property. They were just doing search and rescue. Now, that's an interesting argument once again.

We've been around and around with the RCMP on that. There are some RCMP officers that are extremely upset. The RCMP detachment from Rocky Mountain House was dispatched down to High River during that flood. They're quite upset with what went on. We still don't have answers dealing with this. Alberta has some of the most experienced and qualified search and rescue people, who were not employed to do search and rescue. They were standing on the sidelines, waiting to be called, waiting to come in, yet I'm being told now that it was the RCMP that did it. It doesn't make sense. It doesn't make sense under this. The RCMP in one example knocked on the door, found a gentleman, and told him it was a mandatory evacuation. He left with the RCMP. The RCMP actually helped him secure his home. Only when he came back did he find out they kicked in the door. So the whole search and rescue concept doesn't make sense to me, and it certainly doesn't make sense to that gentleman.

There's nothing in the bill talking about these emergency powers. The bill says very little in detail about anything. It's just a "trust me" piece of legislation. But I will say this. Under the Emergency Management Act the RCMP does not have the ability to act on their own. It's not there. It's not in the act. The act specifically states that "if the Minister acquires or utilizes" property – it goes on; blah, blah, blah – in the end the government has to compensate for taking private property.

Now, where that comes from, the typical example given, is that if there's a forest fire and you have a bulldozer there available to be used to help suppress that fire, we'll talk compensation later, but we can take your property and use that to help suppress that fire. It doesn't matter.

The minister still has the ability to have that power, and that minister delegates that power to the RCMP. In order to do that, there needs to be a declaration, which there was in this case, and there needs to be a plan, and the minister has to file the plan. We haven't seen that plan. This bill says nothing to correct what went on down there. It's interesting because Sundre, like High River, is one of those amazingly high-risk areas for flooding. We've known this. We've known this for years. The 2005 flood proved it. Sundre went through another flood in 2010, and we escaped. I shouldn't say we escaped. We didn't have home damages, just a few relative to Calgary and High River. But the fact is that we had significant road damage, we had significant bridge damage, and the whole community was evacuated at one point. We just got lucky. We just got lucky because the amount of rain that we got was just right at its peak before the river started to subside. That's all we got, lucky.

We're still waiting for flood mitigation. We're still waiting for measures, even on the whole recovery, and there's nothing in this bill that shows residents or the community of Sundre that this will help. It's not there. The mayor of that community, the reeve of the county are still struggling with this government to make sure that they do not fall victim this coming spring, which is usually the one that really causes the great consternation, the spring rains and the winter runoff, like any other community that's prone to flooding.

What is disturbing is the way that the search and rescue occurred. When I had a chance to interview and talk to the people who are involved in Alberta Search and Rescue, the first thing I asked them is – for decades, if not even longer, it was a standard practice of anybody doing search and rescue, whether it was police or whether it was Search and Rescue people, that if somebody refused to leave in a mandatory evacuation, you offer to take and save the life of their pet, and if you do that, you have a better chance of having them concede to giving you their pet. So you can save the life of their pet, and then they will follow their pet. That's standard practice.

Ironically or coincidentally or unfortunately, that didn't happen down in High River. It was just the opposite. They told people that they had to leave but to leave their pets behind. So they violated one of the very basic principles of search and rescue on how to get people out of a mandatory evacuation area, and then it went south from there.

The idea that they kicked in doors for search and rescue just doesn't hold water. It doesn't. No pun intended. But the fact is that they kicked in three doors to one home, and the lady said: "The first door got you in. Why did you have to kick in the other two?" It didn't make sense. It didn't make sense at all.

This idea that they were securing weapons. Boy, I tell you, that one is tough to believe. It's tough to believe that they just so-called stumbled upon it, given the testimony in the High River area of what happened.

Now, that didn't happen anywhere else. It didn't happen in Sundre. Sundre was evacuated. We had RCMP on guard there. I know parts of Calgary were evacuated. That's clear. Why it happened the way it happened in High River has never been explained satisfactorily to those people. I have to tell you that when the RCMP approach me saying that they are concerned because they don't like what happened – now, they did their duty. I want to be very clear. I have the greatest respect for the RCMP and the officers and their integrity. They did their duty, but someone well above them did not.

Somebody in a position – and it always comes down to one person. Legislation says it comes down to the minister. We don't know who the one person is who actually made that decision, but we know one thing: the plan was never tabled. We haven't seen the plan, but the law says that the minister has to file a plan. We haven't seen that. Rather than the letters, I would like to see where the plan was made public because the law says it should be made public. I will tell you that the same is approved for the feds.

Now, if you listen to the example given, the minister would have us believe that the RCMP made the decision. But when I asked the RCMP, "Does the RCMP have the authority to tell the army what to do?" they answered, completely honestly that, no, they do not. So the army was there. Who told the army to kick in doors? Somebody else other than the RCMP had to instruct the army. The authority has to come back to somebody.

I tell you this. I understand the laws well enough. The army cannot just sit on an army base one day and say: "Hey, they're having a disaster down in High River. Let's go." They don't. Somebody has to tell them.

There's a process. Under no circumstances in a democratic society – and ours is no different – does the civil authority allow the RCMP or the army to act arbitrarily, even under conditions of war. The Prime Minister is always in charge. In a natural disaster civil authority is always in charge, and it comes back to the minister. Clearly, something is missing. Somebody is passing the buck. It's not addressed in this bill, and it needs to be addressed. That was a tragedy down there. It went south. It is a terrible tragedy that lots of people suffered, and the excuses given are not adding up.

If it was a search and rescue, what I don't understand is: why didn't they just go ask the people with the keys to the homes? They were up the road at the evacuation centre. At least 80 per cent, 90 per cent of the information could have gleaned from the evacuees. Anyone who was missing from that, now you have cause to go on that search. But to save time and labour, just talk to the people who have congregated, who are waiting to get back in. Find out who's who, where the addresses were, and you could have saved a lot of time on the search and rescue. That wasn't done. Again, it doesn't add up.

You know, the RCMP that approached me made note of that. They said that if they were doing a search and rescue – because that's what good police work is. You go to the obvious and make sure you just start checking off those things that are so easily identifiable. There was nothing wrong with going up to the evac centre and saying: "Who lives where? Is there anyone left behind?" That would have given them the majority of the accounted-for residents. Again, that would have narrowed it down to where they really needed to look. They didn't have to go through kicking in 1,800 doors to 1,800 homes.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members who would like to comment or question under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I guess I'll end up tabling this letter. I wrote a letter to the Alberta Property Rights Advocate asking exactly what the member had been talking about, and it came back – my understanding from the people in the area is that the army actually never did do any of the search and rescue stuff. They were there to help, but they never did actually enter any of the buildings. This is right from Deputy Commissioner McGowan. "It should be clear that we did not take operational direction from any elected officials or public service employees to enter in private homes and remove personal property."

I think it needs to be clarified from their side. I have no reason to doubt the Property Rights Advocate on where he got his information. My understanding is that this was done through that. I guess, what's your thought – you had been a previous peace officer at one time in your jurisdiction – on whether you would have done the same thing if it had been put to you as an employee working as a peace officer, if you would have taken the direction from your commander or if you would have sat and had a second sober thought on it?

Mr. Anglin: Well, certainly, any military or paramilitary take their instructions and orders from their commander. They always do. Short of something that's so egregious that it violates their code of conduct, they would do that.

The member is correct in what he stated about the army. But the fact is that the army was there assisting the RCMP, and this testimony does contradict what that letter says. Now, that doesn't say it happened or didn't happen, but we know the army was there. We know they were assisting the RCMP. To say that we're taking property out of homes to secure it is an odd statement considering that that property was in locked homes in a flooded area – a moat, so to speak – guarded by the RCMP and guarded by the army. There was nothing more secure in all of Canada at that moment in time. So it made no sense to break into the homes.

There is a discovery going on right now, which is important. We need those findings. But I will tell you that the testimony coming from the good citizens of High River – many of them leave a lot of questions yet to be answered. They contradict both letters that have been tabled. They contradict what the hon. member just said about the Property Rights Advocate. Clearly, there needs to be a finding.

As I mentioned earlier, the RCMP approached me at Rocky Mountain House, and they were quite concerned because they didn't like what they were doing. They thought something was amiss, and at that time I said – of course, now it is being investigated, which is a good thing. But the fact is that it troubled them to the point that I was approached, and they said: "You guys need to look into this. This isn't right." And you know what? From what I can see, what I hear, and what I'm reading, clearly, there are more questions than there are answers. We have an opportunity in this bill to sort of lay out a little bit how we would deal with these issues, but there's nothing mentioned here. There's nothing mentioned here on how to prevent this from happening again.

When you talk about a flood recovery act, the damage done at High River by people who probably didn't have to do that damage is significant, and that's something that is absolutely avoidable. There's nothing in here about how to avoid it. Let's not forget that the RCMP said originally that they weren't going to pay for this, and the government originally said that they weren't going to pay for the damage, but the legislation clearly says that the minister has to compensate. So that would normally fall right on the government.

Now we've got all these questions. Did someone act outside their jurisdiction? Or if they were inside their jurisdiction, who made the decision to kick in that many doors? It's not logical. It's not logical, what was going on there. They could have done – it's such an easy job, finding all those people in those evac centres and eliminating many of the homes by identifying the people who were there and where their homes were. Was anyone left behind? Was anything left behind? They could have done that easily, and that would have saved them lots of time so they could have concentrated resources on what they could not account for. That's usually the case in any type of disaster zone. I think there was an evac centre in Nanton. There were various evac centres. That information was readily available.

There was a lady that did go public and say: why didn't you just come ask for my keys?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. That's the end of 29(2)(a).

Our next member who wishes to speak is Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, and there are a few points that I would like to make. I mean, the first one is that I think the one thing this government does very well is come up with names for their bills. Unfortunately, that's usually where the good part stops. For example, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act sounds wonderful, but it's thin. It's thin, and it's long overdue. So I'll speak to a few different things on this bill.

First and foremost, this bill, as many others that we've seen in the last 12 months – as opposed to ensuring that there is oversight and an arm's-length body that is making decisions, more and more in these bills cabinet ministers are being granted sweeping powers, sweeping authority to make decisions, which is a real cause for concern. Madam Speaker, again, concentrating too much power in the hands of a few actually works against our democratic process and ensures that should we have, maybe not now but in the future, a minister that decides that they want to wave their wand or run their ministry like a puppet show, well, they've got the authority to do that.

So that's a real cause for concern. It's not only in this bill, Madam Speaker, but in numerous other bills that we've seen. They are bills that are enabling the government to make decisions without consulting Albertans, without consulting experts. And that's very different, I've been told by my colleagues, from many of the bills in the past that were more prescriptive bills, legislation that addressed or dealt with specific issues and concerns, not ones that give carte blanche to the government.

Madam Speaker, this PC government has consistently been using language that, you know, this flood that we saw was unprecedented and one in a thousand years. I have a real cause for concern with that kind of language making it sound like it can't happen again. I mean, the irony here is that we've heard cabinet ministers, either of today or before, make comments about: we've had a natural disaster; we're going to be good now for the next number of years. You would think that any time that a natural disaster occurs, there would be a will to address it and preventative measures to ensure that if it does occur, we mitigate damage and minimize.

We'll walk through at least Alberta's history of floods here in a moment. It really makes one scratch one's head. There were clear indications that a flood like this was going to happen again. The government had reports, had documents from years past that they chose to ignore and to sit on. Honestly, Madam Speaker, what really is causing alarm is: why does it have to take a tragedy for this government get off its laurels and do something about it? Many Albertans are asking this question.

Madam Speaker, it's very dangerous to talk about an event like this one as once in a thousand years or once in a lifetime because it's contrary to reports going back as far as the 1983 flood hazard survey, which the PCs commissioned themselves. Going back even further, in 1973 there was a Montreal engineering report. As well, three years ago there was a hydrology study of the Bow and the Elbow rivers. Again, what we see from all of these reports that are commissioned is that this government has a process which goes: something happens as an incident, a report is commissioned, they sit on the report for years and years, finally release it, and then nothing happens. It's a process that leads to nowhere any time soon or where it needs to go.

Here we are, for example, with this bill, Bill 27, and it leaves out many crucial details, okay? The language is very, very vague, and again the government is asking for this House to approve a bill which gives the minister powers which we don't even know because they aren't defined. There isn't oversight. There isn't a limitation on those powers, such as other bills that were tabled in the last couple of weeks.

A major concern that many members of this house have brought up, Madam Speaker, is the fact that there's a lack of a desire of the government to define or tell us how they're defining floodways or flood fringe. Those crucial points are really what's at the heart of this bill or what should be at the heart of it. Let's keep in mind that this government ignored the 2006 recommendation to institute a continual map maintenance program, and instead they opted for a whenever-appropriate or "when we get around to it" model. That clearly wasn't maintained when appropriate.

Again, High River, for example, is a tragic example of this, and I'll get into that in a moment, Madam Speaker. I actually had a tour with the hon. Member for Highwood through High River after the flood, and I was really shocked to learn that the areas that got hit the hardest were areas that were not designated flood fringe zones. They were zones that never should have seen a drop of water.

Again, the irony of this is trying to pass legislation when we don't have all of the information. The opposition, the Alberta NDP, has been calling for an update on the flood maps for years now, which would have provided this government with more information to be able to mitigate some of the damage. The other thing that we helped bring to Albertans' attention was the fact that this PC government was the only government out of four provinces that failed to access federal dollars for flood mitigation.

You know, the minister says: "Well, the window was really short. There was only a two-month window. The restrictions were too tight." It really shows a lack of competency in this government when the governments of B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba could all figure out how to apply for that funding, and they received federal dollars for flood mitigation. So Albertans are clearly disappointed that there was a pool of money that was left on the table. Was it negligence? Was it incompetence? These are questions that Albertans are asking.

Let's see here. As I've said, Madam Speaker, the government asks for us to trust them, to trust that they are going to do the right thing even though that commitment is, well, basically an empty, empty promise. I mean, as we've seen over and over again, there are promises made by this government and repeatedly broken. You know, it's challenging. It's kind of almost funny that the government says: "No, no, no. This time we're actually going to do something about this. Trust us just one more time even though we've continually fallen down when it comes to the issue of mitigating against floods, of being prepared, of looking forward, of being proactive." I think one of the issues that I'm hearing from folks around the province is the fact that, again, this government has to be dragged kicking and screaming or be pushed by all of the opposition to move on anything that is going to be proactive, preventative.

You know, in the short time that I've been a member in this House, Madam Speaker, I've seen a lot of knee-jerk reactions from this government, I've seen a lot of closing the barn door after the horses have escaped, and I've seen a lot of Band-Aids placed onto gaping wounds in the hopes that it'll stem the problem.

Unfortunately, what we could have and should have is a much more comprehensive bill. We need to look at a few different things, Madam Speaker. Let me just bring up what some of the other folks are saying. There are many experts who have weighed in on the issue of flood mapping and floodways. Let's see here. There are many studies that show that the damage that was sustained this year, 2013, could have been greatly reduced if this government had implemented recommendations from several earlier reports and had more updated flood maps. Again, as I mentioned before, reports done in 1973 by Montreal engineering, in '83 by Alberta Environment, and in 2005 have been used by experts since to argue that a flood of the magnitude that we saw this year was predictable and not that rare. There was also a 2010 report that warned that Calgary would suffer more frequent and more severe floods. The report cost $80,000 and was prepared by Golder Associates consultants in Calgary to guide emergency response planning and flood mapping.

Experts made many other recommendations. John Pomeroy, a Canada research chair in water resources and climate change who also is a professor at the University of Saskatchewan, says that integrated weather and water prediction models between the feds, the province, municipalities, municipal organizations, and even possibly universities need to give better warning but also assist in planning for future flood plains, safer reservoir management, and better forest and agricultural management for a long-term flood and drought mitigation plan and to have that concerted effort.

Let's see here, Madam Speaker. What's interesting is that it appears, yet again, that this PC government is looking out for their friends first and foremost while many Albertans are and have been suffering the consequences of this flood. The government did not restrict development in the flood zones despite the recommendation which came from several reports. They've also backtracked on their initial statement to restrict development, which initially sounded like they were envisioning a total prohibition, which is actually what the experts recommended.

In addition, there are Albertans and many people that feel that the government's response has been politically motivated. There are particular areas, particular groups, that are getting more responsive, more comprehensive relief, while other areas are not. I can tell you that there are many folks in High River who are feeling that way.

We have other experts, like Professor Ed Watt from Queen's, a civil engineer, telling us that we should be keeping the people from the water, not trying to keep the water from the people. Now, in some places, obviously, we can't help it. Obviously we're not going to be uprooting thousands and thousands of people from their homes, so we have to work around that. But what we can do at the very minimum, moving forward, Madam Speaker, is to ensure that no building on floodways will happen. Unfortunately, this piece of legislation stops short of that.

The other thing is that it says that the government gets to decide what happens and where it happens, which, again, is extremely dangerous when you've got a political party with the ability or with the temptation to make decisions that are politically charged and politically motivated as opposed to making decisions that are in the best interest of all Albertans.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any members who wish to comment on or question the hon. member's presentation?

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. I was paying attention, but I kind of missed the very last bit of what the member said, so if he wouldn't mind just completing his thought process for the last section that he was talking about in his remarks.

Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I'll try to be brief, but as my students all knew when I used to teach English, when I'd say that, they'd all laugh and grab a chair.

Again, some big concerns here. It leaves all the power with the government. The concern is that the government has been ignoring previous reports, ignoring calls for mitigation.

You know what? I'm going to try to condense this very simply. We need updated flood maps in order to, first of all, understand how the landscape in Alberta, the weather, climate change have affected floodways. Coming up with legislation before first having an understanding of the landscape is putting the cart before the horse. Again, all opposition parties have been calling for the maps to be updated. All we've heard is excuse after excuse as to why they're not.

Once the maps are updated and consultation – this government does not understand that term although they love to use it – happens with different orders of government but also with different organizations and scientists who know better ideas than any of us in here about how to mitigate and how to move forward, we also need to understand that if we continue to build in places that are very likely to be flooded, then what are we asking for? And I'm talking about new places.

There are a bunch of questions, actually, that I do have for the bill sponsor, and we'll see if I can get through them fairly quickly. Considering that the government is planning to restrict development in floodways and designate where these zones will be, how does the government plan to ensure the maps and the information used to do so are up to date and accurate this time, unlike this past June? How will the minister plan to use existing reports, like those done by the sources I've mentioned in '73, '83, 2005, and 2010, or commission updated reports to assist in forming regulations which will determine flood zones and floodways and the appropriate uses of lands which may be at risk for future flooding?

Experts made several other recommendations for programs and plans to be put in place to better manage water resources, which would allow for better prediction, forecasting, and ongoing management. What other measures will the government pursue to prevent such huge losses besides restricting some development and providing some after-the-fact funding?

Madam Speaker, I think that the intention of this bill is good. I think it needs to be beefed up a little bit; it's a little thin. I think there needs to be more definition. There needs to be a bit of a curb on the powers that are being awarded to the minister.

I'm looking forward to discussion and debate in Committee of the Whole, and hopefully we can improve this bill and move forward and do everything within our power to ensure that we mitigate and prevent as much as possible damage from happening in future floods and future tragedies.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

There are still 58 seconds under Standing Order 29(2)(a). Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I don't see any reason to run the clock with my comments, and if I do, I will expect to be appropriately heckled. I would say, on that note, that with Bill 28, you know, you're getting to learn the process in here. Obviously, we did run the clock at every opportunity because we were passionately opposed to what was taking place.

I think that, in general, with this bill I would say to the associate minister of recovery and reconstruction for southwest Alberta and also to the Member for High River: I saw them everywhere during this crisis. Many of us were everywhere, too. I generally support in principle what's going on here. Obviously, I will leave the critics on this side to go through it with a fine-tooth comb and also check with some of the stakeholders and the people of Redwood Meadows, which was heavily affected, as the minister well knows, in my constituency to see if there are amendments coming forward, and there very well may be.

Anything that better prepares and protects Albertans from what we went through this summer is a good thing. The tales that were told, the heartache that we saw first-hand travelling around, people losing their homes, you know, the history, their memories, stories of heroism: it was remarkable. I firmly believe that's what we're trying to do and what government is trying to do with this bill.

I believe the 2006 flood report has been mentioned several times, and when it is mentioned, it's either "It didn't matter what we would have done; everything would have been the same" from many members of the government, or from many members over here it's: if you would have done what you should have done, none of this would have happened. I would suggest that the reality is somewhere in the middle. There were certainly steps that should have and could have been taken to lessen the load of the flood that we went through. That said, we all acknowledge and ought to recognize that this was an extremely rare event of an unbelievable proportion and amount of water in a record amount of time at the levels that it was flowing. We would have had a mess in places regardless. Would it have been as much? That is up for debate.

I want to mention, Madam Speaker, as I talk about this bill and my tentative, likely, support for it with possible amendments, the story of Redwood Meadows. Madam Speaker, I don't know if you're familiar with where Redwood Meadows is as a community, but just to set the scene for you and anybody that cares to listen, Redwood Meadows is the true good-news story of this flood. Redwood Meadows is a community on the Tsuu T'ina First Nation. It's about 25 K or so just west of Calgary. It would be all of maybe three, four, or five kilometres from Bragg Creek, and somehow that community managed to avoid the utter devastation that just kilometres down the Elbow River was inflicted when it burst its banks in Bragg Creek, where homes literally floated down that river. Somehow in Redwood Meadows they managed to avoid that.

I think their story does need to be told as we look forward to approving and supporting this bill so that they're not in that situation again. If this happens again before what needs to be done is done in Redwood Meadows, they will not have the same luck or grace because the berm was significantly damaged in Redwood Meadows.

The mayor of that community, a man by the name of John Welsh; the fire chief, Chief Rob Evans; the rest of the council of the Tsuu T'ina First Nation; volunteers from the community and outside the community gathered and worked round the clock. They hauled I don't know how many loads of pit run nonstop. I believe they dropped 1,400 or 1,500 of those giant cement blocks on the berm. Somehow they managed to hold the water back. As the fire chief put it to me, at 2 o'clock in the morning they actually bugged out of the community from the fire hall. They went through the streets of the entire town and said: "We've got to go. The berm is breached. We're going to lose the town." So they went to the fire hall, they got all the equipment, they loaded everything up, and they left. By a miracle – somebody came back at 6 a.m. – the work that they had done by working round the clock was just enough, and it held.

Redwood Meadows is a true success story, and I think it can be attributed to all of the work that everybody did. I know there were areas in Calgary where people really worked hard as well. I don't want to take anything away from that. I'm just awfully proud of the people in Redwood Meadows, that came through to save that town.

The reason we have to make sure that this bill goes through, with proper amendments if need be, is so that communities like that aren't at risk again. There are 351 homes in that community. Here's what's happened. The river has changed course on the north end, furthest from Bragg Creek. The river changed course, and now they're vulnerable. If this berm is breached again, they will lose their community. You know, I'll ask the minister to speak to it as we go along. I know this isn't the forum where we can go back and forth a little bit, but I'm sure he's aware of the file.

If in Redwood Meadows that river isn't pushed back to its initial place, to where it normally would have flowed, what's going to happen next time is that they're going to lose the community. It will be a $2 million to $5 million investment probably to fix that berm as opposed to 351 homes and $150 million, $175 million, $200 million literally going down the drain if the work is not done. I guess I'm just passionately speaking for that community as we look at this bill and hoping that we do the proper flood mapping and that the mitigation infrastructure is put in place so that they don't suffer, you know, an even worse fate going ahead.

I said when I started that I wouldn't take all of the allotted time. I think far too often we think we need to speak until the bell rings, and that's not necessarily the case. The main points that I want to make here are that I attended many of those flood sessions with the associate minister, both he and the minister, in many areas that weren't in my riding. I did that because I don't think there was a more important story in the province of Alberta in quite some time.

You know, we're paid to know what's going on and how people are affected by it. I felt it was important to go and see what the government was doing. They had a million questions coming at them, some of them very legitimate, tough questions and some not so much. People were in a very emotional state, as you can appreciate, during those times. In Black Diamond, Turner Valley, Redwood Meadows, Bragg Creek, and High River people that lost their homes were justifiably right to ask tough questions, and those two ministers came and answered most of them from the sessions that I attended.

I'm wrapping by saying, you know – hoping that going forward we establish that the mapping is outdated in Alberta and we do the right thing and update it so that we're not in this situation again, that we put the proper mitigation infrastructure in place so that communities like Redwood Meadows, Bragg Creek, and everyone else that was affected are protected down the road. I think that anything that we can do, again, to protect Albertans and better prepare for a disaster like this: that's why we're here. So I hope that we can work together on it going forward. I'll look forward to supporting the bill, to any amendments that may come from this side of the House and my party once we've had a little more time to look at it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members who wish to speak to Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak in second reading to Bill 27? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: I'll be very brief. Madam Speaker, thank you for the opportunity. I honestly wasn't going to speak to this bill at all because I thought that this was nothing more than a piece of housekeeping that needed to be done because of some items that were found that needed to be cleaned up during recent flooding here. But I think it's important to note just a couple of things. I mean, when we read this, the bill is just talking about amending the Emergency Management Act and the Municipal Government Act in order to clean up the jurisdictions of authority where they belong. I believe that's truly with the municipalities in most cases for response.

Madam Speaker, I can tell you from personal experience that Wood Buffalo was one of the first areas that was hit by flooding early in June, and I was on the ground to deal with it, as was the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, to see the effects and to see some of the devastation. I can honestly say that I have never seen a stronger response or a more appropriate response to any kind of disaster than I saw from this current government, and that is to be commended.

As an example, we had a situation pending where we had the side of a hill about to collapse and cause additional flooding, and it was one quick phone call to the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development that led to a telephone conference about 15 minutes later, and we had the correct and the proper authorities in place very shortly thereafter. That type of response was very helpful. But really where the work happened was in the municipality.

Madam Speaker, I think what happens is that as we get into levels of government, we become less and less nimble, and for us to burden down a bill like this with all kinds of detail is going to make us even less nimble when it comes time to dealing with another potential flood or another emergency.

Flood mapping. I think it's important for people to know that there is GIS data available online for anyone to view at any time, which was last revised on August 9, 2013, and it's actually very accurate data. But really it's the municipalities that are dealing with their own land-use jurisdiction there.

So I would encourage my colleagues to, instead of developing amendments for this act, actually perhaps look at motions to add that type of detail to the regulations. This bill is really only allowing for regulation to be developed to get into that level of detail, and that's really where that conversation belongs. If we continue to burden it down, we will not be able to respond as well as we did in this particular disaster.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members that wish to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members who wish to speak in second reading to Bill 27?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister for Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing that it's about a quarter after 9 and we've made pretty good progress, I would move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:16 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 5, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear Lord, be with us always to oversee our words and our actions and to keep us on the path of providence as we strive to fulfill our duties on behalf of those we serve. For this we pray. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Let us begin the day with introductions of school groups.

Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you the students of the Innisfail middle school. They are here today despite the treacherous roads to come and watch our Legislature at work. There are 90 students here today from Innisfail middle school along with their teachers: Jill Neilson, Tom Stones, Cody Pivert, and a teacher that actually taught me, Mr. John Pierzchalski. I hope you enjoy your time at the Legislature. I ask all of my hon. colleagues to welcome them today.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups? None?

Then let us proceed with our other guests, starting with the Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Campbell: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of inspiring Métis women who have spent the morning at the Legislature working on the establishment of a Métis women's council on economic security. Some of these outstanding women were not able to stay today. To those that are here, please rise when I say your name so you can be recognized. Audrey Poitras, president of the Métis Nation of Alberta Association; Loretta Calliou, secretary, Métis Settlements General Council; Sherry Cunningham, treasurer of the Métis Settlements General Council; Dr. Marie Delorme with the Imagination Group of companies and recent recipient of the 2014 Indspire award in the category of business and commerce; Rachel Venne with the Institute for Advancement of Aboriginal Women; Michelle Dennis with Suncor Energy; Brenda Holder with Mahikan Trails; Hope Henderson with Mount Royal University; Sandra Sutter with the Circle for Aboriginal Relations; and Lisa Haggerty, Hinton Friendship Centre.

I'd also like to recognize some aboriginal staff that have been providing support on the establishment of the councils, including Linda Lindstrand, Kristina Midbo, and Fran Hyndman. I'd ask that the members please give them the customary warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Donna Wilson and Margaret Ward-Jack, the president-elect and director of communications and government relations respectively for the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta. Donna and Margaret are here today to support the tabling of the college's annual report, which will occur today. On behalf of all Albertans I'd like to take this opportunity to say how proud and humbled we are to have such a dedicated nursing workforce here to assist all of us when we're in need. I'd ask Donna and Margaret to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to the entire Legislative Assembly I would like to introduce a group of very hard-working individuals from the Ministry of Enterprise and Advanced Education, today for their first time touring the Alberta Legislature. I will ask them to rise as I'm calling out their names if I may, please. They are Mrs. Krista Semchyshyn, Crystal Lough, Deidre Goral, Nicole Rioux, Maria Ahmad, Malik Khoja, Brianna Aukema, and Paul Uchacz. I would like to thank them for the work that they do day in, day out for Albertans. May they receive your warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the Alberta Liberal opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce a number of concerned citizens: Summer Ebinger, Leonard and June O'Donnell, Fay Schutz, Barb Neill, Liz Hedegaard, Andy Mik, Mandy Kenworthy, Joe Koopmans, and Jetske Koning. They're here from the Anti-Aerodrome Cooperative, a group of concerned citizens opposed to the ongoing development of an airport in Sandhills, Parkland county. When Parkland county sued to prevent this airport, the court's response was that the issue was outside its jurisdiction. This lack of clear oversight means the airport is being developed without proper environmental assessments, community impact evaluation, and adherence to safety standards. I thank the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations for agreeing to meet these good citizens. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly two interns at Alberta Transportation who are taking a tour of the Legislature today as part of their orientation: Ms Caitlyn Pyra and Ms Kelly Foisy. They're here today with Alberta Transportation staff, Mr. Justin Coulombe and Mr. Michael Selig, who have kindly taken the time to educate them on the fun that can be found here in the House. I hope their experience of watching question period entertains and encourages them. I would invite them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. This council works tirelessly to improve the lives of persons with disabilities by engaging the disability community and advising government on issues that affect people with disabilities in Alberta. We've just appointed seven new members of the council, and today we're introducing some amendments to the governing legislation. Council members who were able to join us today are Ms Carmen Wyton, Ms Betty Lou Benson, and Mr. Bryce Clarke, and Bryce today is accompanied by Miriam Jardeleza, an assistant.

As well, we have ministry staff today: Tracy Wyrstiuik, assistant deputy minister, planning and quality assurance; Brenda Lee Doyle, assistant deputy minister of disability services; and Shawn Ewasiuk, who is a director of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. I hope the whole House would join me in giving them the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the Associate Minister of Wellness.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to this Assembly our social work placement student helping out in my constituency office, Evelyn Mupedziswa. Evelyn is originally from Zimbabwe and is a first-year social work student at MacEwan University. She aspires to work with children when finished school, preferably in a neonatal unit. Evelyn is accompanied by Heather Fernhout, my constituency office manager, who has been capably managing all the issues in my office for just a little over a year. I know that Heather is very pleased to be here today with Evelyn and very pleased for her help in our office. I ask the Assembly to join me in giving them our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Wellness, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce three representatives of the Alberta rodeo swap to stop initiative. Their team is a partnership between the Alberta and Northwest Territories Lung Association; McNeil Consumer Healthcare, a division of Johnson & Johnson; the Canadian Cancer Society; Action on Smoking and Health; and Miss Rodeo Canada. These groups have combined their forces at rodeos over the summer months to interact with over 7,000 Albertans and will be on hand this weekend at the CFR to raise awareness of the available resources to quit smoking and chewing tobacco. The initiative includes the distribution of quit programs freely available in the province of Alberta as well as offering up nicotine replacement therapy in exchange for cigarettes, chew, and loose tobacco. Joining us today are Kristin Matthews of the Alberta and Northwest Territories Lung Association; Angeline Webb of the Canadian Cancer Society; and Les Hagen with Action on Smoking and Health. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask our guests to rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly, Jennifer Po, who is a social work student taking a placement in my constituency office. I'm very pleased to have her there, and I know that she will have a long career helping and assisting and advocating for vulnerable Albertans.

I also would like to introduce my constituency manager, Lyndsey Henderson, who is here this afternoon to watch the proceedings. I'd ask them both to rise and receive a very warm and extended greeting from the hon. members.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great friend of this House and of this province. We have here joining us today from the AFPA Brady Whittaker. I want to recognize Brady for the outstanding work he does at AFPA advocating for the forestry industry. In addition to that, he's been doing work providing advice to the Asia Advisory Council. Brady, if you would please rise so we could give you the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to the House three laboratory technologists: Cynthia Duchesneau, Sharon Hebert, and Joan Card. These front-line health workers are concerned that the attempt to privatize the laboratory services is going ahead without proper planning and without including all laboratory staff in the planning. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to the Assembly Alyssa Strohschein. Alyssa is a first-year social work student at MacEwan University and is doing her social work placement in my constituency office. She is passionate about making a difference in the lives of others, especially at-risk youth. She is a volunteer at the Mustard Seed's Personal Assistance Centre, and she is active in student life at MacEwan University, where she is the president of her World University Service of Canada committee. I am very pleased to have Alyssa doing her placement in my office, and I'd now like to ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Fenske: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly three people from the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville: Lana, Carmelita, and Gabriella Santana, who are seated in the members' gallery. Lana has been instrumental in ensuring that our Culture Days in Fort Saskatchewan have grown from a potluck picnic to a very exciting event, and her daughters have followed along in their role as volunteers. They are standing right now in the members' gallery, and I ask that the Assembly join me in welcoming them.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Pacific NorthWest Economic Region

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to lead Alberta's delegation at the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region, known as PNWER. This group brings together legislative, government, and private-sector leaders from throughout Alberta, B.C., Saskatchewan, Yukon, and the Northwest Territories as well as the U.S. states of Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Alaska, and Washington. Our membership in PNWER and my position within it has given Alberta an opportunity to meet with key legislators and policy-makers on important regional issues. Topics of ongoing discussion include trade issues, energy regulation and management, transportation of goods and products, and economic growth in the Pacific Northwest.

PNWER is another example of how this government is seeking to build new opportunities, foster new relationships, and increase market access for Alberta goods. As an organization PNWER seeks to build stronger economic links, improve access, facilitate trade, and defuse potential regional problems through dialogue.

I'm pleased to tell you that Alberta will be playing host to our PNWER colleagues next week. We will host PNWER's annual Economic Leadership Forum and leadership academy in the breathtaking natural beauty of Banff. This forum will provide an opportunity for public- and private-sector leaders to carry out in-depth discussions on subjects affecting our regional economy. Our PNWER partners have been our allies, ensuring that there is a clear understanding of the responsible energy development under way in Alberta and the benefit of an energy sector in North America. I look forward to continuing Alberta's leadership role in this important organization.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Rural Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great regret that I have to stand today and deliver this member's statement. This PC government has run roughshod over our rural ambulance system and is putting Albertans at risk.

In my riding of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills we had a system that worked. Care was provided in a timely, effective way, lives were saved, and our community was better off for it. We always had an ambulance on call 24/7 and a backup just in case. In 2010, however, we were forced to hand over our Kneehill Ambulance Service to AHS on the promise that their new vision for centralized ambulance dispatch would offer better, faster coverage for our community.

Well, we were sold snake oil, Mr. Speaker. Like many communities across Alberta we now find ourselves vulnerable and grossly underserved. Ambulance wait times have skyrocketed, averaging as high as 45 minutes. This government just doesn't get it. In 2007 Kneehill offered medically equipped vehicles to do nonemergency transfers. It worked great. It saved time, money, and freed up EMS resources.

Again in 2010 the province bought our medical units in their plan to centralize emergency services. Under the flex dispatch system we often find ourselves without any ambulance service at all as a handful of units are flexed from region to region on nonemergency interfacility calls. This PC government's continued mismanagement of our health care system is again putting the lives of Albertans at risk. The flex dispatch system is a crime against rural Alberta, and this government has to nerve to say that it's what Albertans expect. They brag about building Alberta, but they sent the demolition crew out on this file. Rural Albertans see the glaring problems with ambulances today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Municipal Elections 2013

Mr. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to commend and praise all of the candidates that bravely put their names forward during the recent municipal elections, held across our province in October. In Grande Prairie alone there were 25 candidates who entered various races: two for mayor, 16 for eight council seats, and seven for five public school seats.

As all members in this House can attest, deciding to serve one's community through public office is something that takes unwavering dedication and commitment; however, it also instills one with a sense of great pride. For several months candidates prepared campaigns, put up countless signs, and knocked on thousands of doors with the hopes of getting their message across on key issues that affect their communities.

Of course, I would like to recognize all of the volunteers who donated their time as well in the effort to support their candidate, helping to engage and compel citizens to exercise their very important right to vote.

The recent municipal election also reminded me of the first time that I ran for public office. I, like the many other candidates who put their names forward, had a calling to serve the public with a vision to help better the lives in my community.

If I could humbly offer one piece of advice to those who have been newly elected, it would be to never forget that we are privileged to serve our communities and that the decisions we make will have profound effects on the lives of others.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for your first main set of questions.

Flood Mitigation

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. High River was one of the most impacted communities in this summer's floods. Everyone in High River knows that the flood maps that the province is using are 20 years out of date and do not reflect any mitigation that has occurred over the last two decades or any of the new mitigation that the province and the town will undertake. Does the minister realize that asking residents to make rushed, life-changing decisions based on outdated maps is unfair, uncaring, and just plain bad policy?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, those maps that exist all across the province are not made willy-nilly or simply by somebody with a pen. They're made based on sound science, with people who have expertise in how these maps get made and the way the water flows. There are occurrences where riverbanks can wash away and some of those maps can be nuanced a bit, but there are no dramatic changes in many of the circumstances where there are communities. The floodway is the floodway, and the flood fringe is still the flood fringe. Mitigation and planning going forward are very important. We continue to work with the communities, all of them, not just High River, to make sure that they have sound planning to secure their future going forward.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, just saying it doesn't make it so. It's a complete mismatch.

There's a community in High River called Beachwood. It sustained flood damage but was one of the first communities to be restored because it had good flood mitigation. The province has declared that Beachwood is in the floodway, and they want it gone. The town and the residents want Beachwood to stay. The first act of the new town council was to vote for money to improve the flood mitigation around Beachwood. Will the minister order updated flood maps that take into account these mitigation steps so that Beachwood does not disappear off the map?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, we have talked about having updated flood maps, and we're working through a process with communities. But the map right now indicates very clearly that that particular community is in the floodway, and it may very well, after we continue to work on the flood maps, prove that the mitigation they did was what caused further flooding downtown. This is not an isolated event. We have to make sure that what we do does not compound a problem in another part of town or for another town downstream. That's why we continue to work with the communities to make sure that we get it right and to make sure that those communities will be prosperous over the long term.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly why they need new maps before they bring in the legislation

Another High River community called Hampton Hills has the opposite problem. The flood maps say that Hampton Hills is safe, but everyone knows that it was flooded for the longest period of time. To ensure that it doesn't flood, the simple solution is to build a berm to protect the community. The government so far has refused to commit to any mitigation plans to protect Hampton Hills. Meanwhile the developer is ready to rebuild the area, but he's being told that he cannot redevelop unless he can prove that the area will not flood again. Will the minister commit to taking steps on mitigation so that Hampton Hills can be rebuilt?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it's amazing how the opposition finds the ability to suck and blow every single day. They want the municipalities to be respected and for us to not interfere. This municipality, her municipality, High River, has imposed a restriction on the developer to make sure that the community is safe. Now the member is suggesting that we should override that municipality's decision. We respect the municipality's decision. We'll continue to work with the community of High River and any others impacted by the flooding to make sure that they have long-term plans. As partners we're going to work to mitigate so that they can continue to grow in the future.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, your second main set of questions.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we need new flood maps and flood mitigation infrastructure first.

Information Requests on Deputy Premier

Ms Smith: The Deputy Premier seems to be having trouble with access to information requests lately. The freedom of information and privacy commissioner reported yesterday that the Deputy Premier bullied, threatened, and intimidated a journalist for having the nerve to file an access to information request on him. He ridiculed him publicly on Twitter and has even called the journalist's boss. This kind of behaviour is absolutely deplorable for someone in his position. To the Deputy Premier: what does he have to say for himself?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm actually glad that this hon. member asked this question because it is time that some of the facts surface. This is a situation where a reporter has FOIPed very personal information, particularly asked for correspondence between myself and my wife, has obtained pictures of my children, and has on Twitter published the licence plate, description of the vehicle that my wife drives, and my home address. That was simply unacceptable, and that's where I and every member should draw the line.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been noted at 1:55.

Mr. Anderson: Control yourself.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, we should all be reminded . . . [interjections] Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. Member for Airdrie and hon. Deputy Premier, if you want to have a chat outside, that's up to you, but in here we have many other people on the list. We'll just let things cool down, and then we'll go on with them.

While I'm up, let me just remind you that the role of question period is to hold the government to account on government policies, government services, government orders, government business, and so on. That is the true nature and purpose of question period. Dare I have to remind you all again?

Now, hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, if you have a question to do with one of the aforementioned items, I encourage you to go ahead with it, and if not, we're going to go to your third main set of questions. First supplementary.

Information Requests on Deputy Premier (continued)

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Premier knows that that is private information that would never be disclosed.

This is what the Information and Privacy Commissioner said in her order. She said that the Deputy Premier's very public threats to this journalist were "disparaging" and "could have had a chilling effect" on others seeking information from the government. To the Premier: how does her Deputy Premier's unprofessional conduct help to raise the bar on transparency and accountability?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, in this country and in this province we have a long-standing tradition that any matters of policy are subject to scrutiny both by opposition and by media, but when personal information relevant to one's residence, relevant to description of vehicles, licence plates, and pictures of children come into play, that is simply unacceptable. Not as a politician but as a parent I have the role to defend my family, and I always will.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we all know that kind of information would be blacked out and not be released.

This is the same minister who refused to control huge spending increases in his own political office while he delivered blindsided cuts to postsecondary institutions, and it's the same minister who dinged taxpayers for an $11,000 office makeover at the same time, complete with a $4,600 table and a special request for walnut finishing. To the Deputy Premier: is the reason that he obstructs information requests and attacks applicants because they reveal just a little bit too much about his out-of-touch priorities?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I wish, Mr. Speaker, that that member did some research. As a matter of fact, this reporter did release on Twitter my address, the description of my wife's vehicle, licence plate, not the pictures of the children. That is what I found very, very inappropriate, and that would be the understatement of the year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Minister of Municipal Affairs

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today you are going to hear ideas; I want you to listen; I want you to talk about what we can do going forward; let's get to work: that's what the Minister of Municipal Affairs said in a prerecorded video to concerned Albertans attending last month's flood symposium. Getting to work on flood mitigation is important, but for this minister there are higher priorities like flying across the country to promote his book and take shots at our energy industry. To the Minister of Book Sales – I'm sorry – I mean, Municipal Affairs: why are book-signings a higher priority to you than the flood symposium?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it's just symptomatic of this opposition and the drive-by smears. I wrote that book because I've been dedicated to building stronger communities for all four terms that I've been in office. Every single proceed from any speech and from the book go – my best friend passed away just about four years ago. His two sons are a little older than mine. Every single dime goes to that trust fund. I do everything I can to help make sure those boys have opportunities since their father passed away. Their accusations are abhorrent.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, the trust fund is admirable; there's no question. But considering that the flood symposium was promoted as experts, community representatives, and Albertans coming together to generate and discuss ideas around flood mitigation, how did this minister find his book tour more important than listening to what those experts had to say?

Mr. Griffiths: Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, it was recorded, so I could watch what was said at that symposium. It was simply a matter of fact that four months ago I had made the commitment to go and speak. There were hundreds of people coming, and I was the keynote speaker. It was a matter of three weeks by the time we got ready and organized for the symposium, and it was simply a matter of a clash of schedules. But I've watched everything online and got all the value out of it and continue to discuss and meet with communities about what we're going to do with mitigation going forward.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, seeing as Alberta's own ethics legislation states that members are expected to arrange their private affairs in a way that promotes public trust and confidence, can the minister tell this House how he thinks he can command the trust of Albertans when he decides to go on a vanity tour across the country instead of being right here on Alberta soil, leading the recovery of the largest disaster in Canadian history? You are the minister responsible. Where are your priorities?

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, you know, asking questions and holding the government to account is a fundamental of the democratic system that makes it all work for all of us, and when you're crossing over a little bit more into what you can perhaps view as attacks on a person's character or on the character of another colleague . . . [interjections]

Hon. members, I have the floor. If you wish to speak out of turn, I will ask you to leave. It's as simple as that. I didn't interrupt you, and I don't expect you to interrupt me. Is that clear? Thank you.

So, please, let us review the questions that we might have on the rest of the order for today and ensure that we're at a level that befits the decorum and civility of this House. I ask that of you in honour of the fine tradition for which this House and all of its proceedings and all of its instruments stand. Surely, we can aspire to something higher.

Let us have an answer if you wish, hon. minister.

Minister of Municipal Affairs (continued)

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was not a vanity tour. I have worked to help communities, anybody that will ask, and I do think that it's not just Alberta that's in for building stronger communities; it's the entire country. I had made the commitment to go, so I followed through on that commitment. I've never met a single, solitary person now except that member who questioned my commitment to helping us get through the largest disaster this province has ever seen. In fact, he could ask my wife and kids, who barely saw me for months because I was in every single community working day and night on that. I'm committed to making sure we get through this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the leader of the Liberal opposition.

Health Care Wait Times

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a positive note I'd like to begin by congratulating the Minister of Health on setting a new record. The AHS first quarterly performance report, essentially a wait times report, is now 65 days late. The previous record was 63 days, when another AHS wait times report was delayed until after the 2012 provincial election. To the Minister of Health: congratulations on your accomplishment. Now could you please tell us how much longer we must wait for the wait times report?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think what the hon. member is referring to is the quarterly performance report that AHS provides. As I've said in answers to previous questions, we are in the process of reviewing the performance indicators for our health care system. The official administrator is working on that with senior staff now within the organization. We'll continue, as we do on a regular basis, to make information available about the very good performance of this health care system to all Albertans.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the deadline for this report was September 1.

As I mentioned, the last time we waited this long for an AHS wait times report was before the last election, and that report was pretty bad. No wonder they didn't want more voters to see it. Now, lo and behold, the Premier's leadership review is coming up, and the wait time report is nowhere to be seen. It must be pretty embarrassing. To the Minister of Health: did the Premier ask you to delay this report until after the leadership review, or did you do it simply on your own initiative?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose it's refreshing to know that the hon. member can count, and it's perhaps not surprising to note that his fascination with conspiracy theories appears to know no bounds. We've said very clearly and we did so again in the organization of the senior management of AHS that we were looking very carefully at performance indicators in our system. We want to make sure that it is not late, that it is something that is provided routinely, and that when the statistics are ready, they will be provided. But I want the hon. member to know that our commitment is to reviewing the indicators to make sure that they're relevant to Albertans, to make sure that they report accurately on performance, and, most importantly, to make sure that the performance of this health system cannot be distorted by the opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, Dr. Eagle used to have that report within seven to 14 days. No conspiracies here, just incompetence.

The reason we need the darn report is because we're heading into flu season here. We need to know where to make adjustments in the system, and that's why these reports are important. The managers and medical professionals need timely access to this information. You would know this, Mr. Speaker, because you got these reports out on time when you were minister. They need to plan to get Albertans the timely access to care they desperately need. To the minister once again: will you please just release the quarterly reports on a quarterly basis on time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member is interested in performance statistics on the health care system, I'd be happy to indulge him on this day or any day in this House. The volumes for hip and knee surgeries during the past three years saw more than 1,800 additional surgeries performed. Hip surgery wait times – and these figures are readily available on the AHS website – went from 39 weeks to 36 weeks, a decrease of 9 per cent. Knee surgery wait times have decreased by 15 per cent. We can turn . . . [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to ask the hon. minister to start right from the beginning. The interjections are uncalled for. I've warned you about this before, and I just don't appreciate them. I wonder what people who are in the rest of the Assembly here think about them as well. You know they don't get picked up on television, they don't get picked up on radio, but they do interrupt the ebb and flow of the House.

Now, hon. minister, you have 10 seconds left to finish your answer.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity. What I'll say and continue to say to hon. members of this House is that our health system is working hard to improve performance. We lead in several areas in health care across Canada. We are also coping with the fastest growing population in the country. We'll continue to bring that good news to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Pipeline Framework Agreement with British Columbia

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, apparently the Premier and her B.C. counterpart have reached an agreement on petroleum pipelines from Alberta to the Pacific. [interjections] Okay. Bully for them. We know this PC government supports the proposed Northern Gateway pipeline, that would export unprocessed bitumen and the jobs that go with them to China. Alberta needs pipelines, but this government plans to use them to export our jobs. To the Premier: will your government commit to prevent unprocessed bitumen from being exported on any new pipelines that are built under this agreement and if not, why not?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is an opposition that would blow out a candle just to prove that it's dark. Today is a phenomenal day for Canada, where we have two Premiers agreeing on economic development, agreeing on principles of their individual provinces, agreeing that what is good for B.C. is good for Alberta and is good for the rest of Canada, agreeing that we can create jobs and get fair market prices for our goods, agreeing that we can build terminals in British Columbia and create jobs, agreeing that we can support the rest of Canada based on our natural resources in the west. How is this bad news?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, exporting jobs is not good news, Mr. Deputy Premier.

The agreement allows British Columbia to negotiate with industry on appropriate economic benefits and confirms that Alberta's royalties are not on the table, but our royalty framework allows oil companies to deduct transportation costs from royalties. Royalties are calculated based on net revenue. B.C.'s share will come out of Alberta's royalties. To the Premier: will she guarantee that costs incurred as a result of B.C.'s share will not be deducted from Alberta's royalties, and how will she do it?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a landmark day for the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia. The framework agreement that's been achieved today, the essence of which is British Columbia joining the Canadian energy strategy, really underlines our Premier's vision for a province that reaches outward as a global energy leader, creating new enterprise, new jobs, new economic activity, and a new future for Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Blah, blah, blah, Mr. Speaker. The question was, "How do you keep B.C. from getting Alberta's royalties?" and he had no answer whatsoever.

We support properly inspected and secure pipelines to get our products to market, but pipelines create very few long-term jobs. The Northern Gateway will only create 217. Upgrading the bitumen here would create thousands of good-paying, permanent jobs. Why does this government support pipelines that shift investment and jobs to the United States and China?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, here's what Albertans supported in the last election. Here's what Albertans realize today. The vision that it takes to recognize the opportunities of receiving access to full market value for our products, defending Alberta's privileges and rights in terms of our ability to develop our energy, keeping our royalty and taxes here: all of these things have been achieved today.

The Speaker: That completes the first five spots, where preambles have been extended. Now let's start with Calgary-Fish Creek. No preambles to supplementaries, please.

Government Accountability

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another Auditor General's report and more news about how this government is failing Albertans. Yesterday the Auditor General said that he can't make recommendations on how to improve accountability as a whole because he doesn't know who to follow up with. He even said that there is an accountability vacuum. This is a shocking statement considering this government keeps telling Albertans that they are raising the bar on accountability. To the Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation: if the Auditor General doesn't know who to report to, then what is this minister going to do to fix it?

Mr. Horner: We're very proud of our commitment to the improved accountability and transparency across this government. In fact, the audit committee, which I co-chair with individuals from the private sector, is directly in touch with the Auditor General. I want to actually quote something from the Auditor General's report for you, Mr. Speaker, and that is on page 6. The Auditor General states:

The fact that none of our auditor's reports on financial statements contained a reservation of opinion means that Albertans can be sure they are receiving high quality information from the government on the province's actual financial performance.

The Auditor General is quite clear that Albertans are getting the right information.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's just one part. Let's ask the Minister of – what's his name again? – Accountability, Transparency and Transformation to see if he can get this question without embarrassing himself. Given the Auditor General's scathing review of the government's lack of accountability does the minister just not want to be accountable to Albertans for what's really going on?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of this government's record on accountability. Under our Premier's leadership we are delivering unprecedented accountability and transparency. Let me give a quote that Michael Smyth, a columnist from the province of British Columbia, said about our record. "The warts-and-all Alberta disclosure system has been operating for a few months now and has been hailed by freedom-of-information advocates as Canada's new gold standard for openness." [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Grey Cup is about three weeks away. Let's save our cheers for them. They really don't belong here in the House, neither from the opposition members nor from the government side. Outbursts like that just aren't needed, not at all.

Supplementary, please.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just love when this minister gets up. Foot, mouth, foot, mouth. It's amazing.

To the Health minister: if you can't assure Albertans about the basics of sterilization of medical devices, food safety, and people simply washing their hands, how do you expect Albertans to be confident in how you're running the health care system?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General was careful in his remarks yesterday to indicate that his findings do not in any way bring into question patient safety and quality of care in our health care system. What he did say – and I agree with him – was that a 66 per cent compliance rate for our hand hygiene policy across the province is unacceptable. We saw some improvement over the last year, about 20 per cent, but there is certainly a long way to go, and I welcome the Auditor General's recommendations about how to increase compliance and accountability on that point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, followed by Little Bow.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to ask a few hard questions that are policy related. This has been a challenging year for postsecondary education in Alberta. Revenue predictions have been reviewed, and postsecondary institutions have had to look inward to re-evaluate their goals and priorities as operating funds have been reduced. My question is to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. How can you explain that today Mount Royal University announced that they are using $85.8 million of government funding to build a brand new library? Where's the money coming from?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, no doubt, this budget was a difficult budget for all postsecondary institutions. I have been very clear that this was a budget of necessity and that it wasn't such for any other reason. In the meantime, as this province is growing by a hundred thousand people every year and we know that our health care system and agriculture and environment and energy economies will develop on knowledge, we have to continue building Alberta, and that means providing our students with spaces that are second to none.

Mr. Luan: To the same minister. In August you and the Premier announced $200 million for the NAIT centre for applied technologies, in October another $142 million for the University of Calgary for their engineering school, and now $85.8 million for Mount Royal. How is this possible under the current budget that we have to live within our means?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I have a phenomenal Finance minister, number one, hon. member. That certainly helps the situation. Also, Mr. Speaker, Albertans understand the difference between an operating budget, which means an every year commitment for the cost of operating schools and salaries and all that, but they also understand that in the meantime you have to build buildings, and those are one-time expenditures. Our Finance minister makes sure that we have these two budgets taken care of, and even though we had a tighter year, shall we say, from a financial perspective, on the operating side we are not losing our focus on infrastructure because we will need this in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Luan: Thank you. So that was one time. Let's see where this one is coming from. This last spring Mount Royal University announced that it had to suspend programs because of budget cuts. Shouldn't we prioritize classroom space, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's cut the preambles down and just go straight to the questions if we could from here on in. We're about 14 minutes behind where we should be at this point. Your last question, then, please.

Mr. Luan: My question is: shouldn't we prioritize classroom space over all those infrastructure projects?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. Easy for you to say. Those are very difficult decisions that schools had to make at the school level. Indeed, they have eliminated some programs. They have done what they could to minimize the impact on students. They have targeted courses that have historically low enrolment. We will do what we can as government to reinvest in advanced education because we know that that is a priority for Albertans, but in the meantime we have to provide Alberta's universities, colleges, and technical schools with the necessary learning space, and libraries would be at the top of that list.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Disaster Recovery for Small Business

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago this government pledged $81 million to fix the parks in southern Alberta due to the flood damage. One of these parks was Wyndham provincial park, near Carseland in my riding. Steve and Karyn Farthing own what was the Parkside store and are feeling that the government has left them out in the fact that they do not get 20 per cent of their income off the store; therefore, they're ineligible for DRP funding. To the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southeast Alberta: would he please explain why this government is investing $81 million into parks but ignoring the amenities and the businesses that make these parks popular?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Member for Little Bow bringing this question. I also appreciate the hard work that he's done over the past three months during this very difficult time, working with my office to support flood victims in his constituency. The DRP program for small businesses is very specific, but I can give this member some good news as well. I understand that today the DRP office was in discussions with the owners of the Parkside store, and under the program there's an opportunity for reassessment, which will be happening for them.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Donovan: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel like somebody is trying to date me. I'm happily married, Minister.

To the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: given that Steve and Karyn both work full-time, would you also be in support of helping them rebuild their store?

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago, as the hon. member points out, I was very proud to announce that this government will be investing $81 million in the reconstruction of the parks that are part of our provincial system, that are one of the great, cherished parts of our overall provincial way of life. That $81 million will be invested in places like Fish Creek provincial park and Kananaskis Country and, indeed, in Wyndham-Carseland provincial park. These spaces are very special to Albertans, they're important to Albertans, and I'm very proud as parks minister to have been able to make that announcement.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

I'll go back to my friend from Lethbridge. Would you like me to help establish a meeting between the two ministers and the Farthings so that we can make sure they get their DRP money they are deserving of?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the federal DRP program has very specific guidelines, and we operate within those guidelines. But we've also created other programs for small business because this government is committed to building small business, rebuilding small business in this province, especially after the flood. We've put together programs that support interest payments that small businesses might have during this difficult time and loan support, working with banks so that small businesses can re-establish themselves. We're going to work both through the DRP process and through other programs that this Premier has put in place to help small business through this difficult time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Leaseholder Compensation for Calgary Land Acquisition

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People in my constituency and all Calgarians are pleased to hear news of the tentative deal to acquire land from the Tsuu T'ina Nation to build the southwest portion of the ring road. I understand that provincial lands will be transferred to the Tsuu T'ina Nation as part of that compensation. My questions are for the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. What provisions are being made to terminate the Crown leases on the lands that are to be transferred to the Tsuu T'ina?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. This certainly is a very important project for Albertans and certainly Calgarians, one we've been working very hard on. We commend the Minister of Transportation and all those who have been involved with this. We know that there will be some impacts for leaseholders, but we are committed to ensuring that fair compensation to those landowners will happen. Current leaseholders will be compensated for their respective leases, and the compensation will be fair.

Dr. Brown: What sort of monetary compensation will be paid to the lessees, and will that compensation be calculated based on their actual losses up to the end of the current 10-year lease period?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we want to make sure that the compensation is fair to those land users that will be affected. The assessments are currently being updated to determine the value of the leases, and negotiations will begin with each of the leaseholders.

Dr. Brown: Will those calculations be based upon the number of years up to the termination of the current lease?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The compensation will be, as it always is, directly negotiated with each of the individual leaseholders, and we are committed, again, to making sure that the compensation is fair and the process is fair in this case and in all cases as we move forward with regard to any of these kinds of negotiations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Hospital-based Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General has once again identified a lack of basic oversight and accountability in the health care system, in this case related to infection prevention programs. Alberta Health Services' own data show no improvement in hospital-acquired infection rates in the last three years. To the minister: when will you meet your commitment to reduce the number of people who get sick from infections when they come into hospitals?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a physician I'm sure the hon. member would agree with me that we, in fact, have some of the lowest rates of infection for specific organisms in our province's hospitals. What the Auditor General said is that we have an opportunity with a provincial delivery system to improve our surveillance and improve our compliance rates with standards that we ourselves set, very aggressive standards that also meet the requirements of national accreditation bodies. I couldn't agree more that in areas like hand hygiene we need to drastically improve performance, and we look to the leadership of physicians and other health professionals to help us do that.

Dr. Swann: Given that we have significant hospital overcrowding, including emergency rooms, increasing the risk of life-threatening infections for already sick people, will you admit your failure to achieve your own goal of 85 per cent occupancy in our major institutions?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we have one of the highest rates of acute-care beds per capita in the country. We also live in a province that is growing by the size of the city of Red Deer every year. I think that Alberta Health Services staff do an amazing job of coping with the challenges of a growing province, a growing population, and a growing health care system. It's very clear from the Auditor General's report that we need to do a better job in terms of monitoring and reporting, on meeting the standards that we ourselves set, but meet those standards we will.

Dr. Swann: Well, the minister likes to comment on the number of acute-care beds; the problem is that they're not staffed, Mr. Minister. Given that hospitals are almost all over one hundred per cent capacity, with people in corridors and crammed into wards, what plans do you have to deal with the surge of patients during the upcoming flu epidemic?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I certainly hope that as a physician the hon. member is encouraging his constituents and all Albertans to get the flu shot this year. As the hon. member knows, we have a less than acceptable rate of immunization in this province. As the hon. member also knows, we have very busy hospitals across the province. They are very well staffed. They are staffed by people who are caring and well-trained individuals committed to the care of their patients. I'd suggest to the hon. member that he might want to stand up once in a while in support of those workers and commend their work to the rest of the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Airdrie.

Athabasca River Containment Pond Spill

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a 60-kilometre-long glob of toxic coal waste floats down the Athabasca, towns are turning off their water intake. Meanwhile the Mackenzie basin waits, with no similar ability to divert the arrival of this massive toxic threat. Yet this PC government still insists on keeping this disaster on the down low with limited public statements and still less up-to-date information. To the minister of environment: why won't you take responsibility, stop trying to hide the issue, and start providing all Albertans with a regular and daily briefing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question so that I can once again reiterate to the House that this ministry was notified of the incident when it happened, about 8 p.m. on October 31. Downstream communities were notified within hours, early on November 1, hon. member, not five days later as inaccurately stated now and before. Each day we have updated that, both ourselves as ESRD and also as the Alberta Energy Regulator. We have made sure that not only have we put notifications out but that we have talked to each one of the communities because number one for us is public health and safety.

Ms Notley: I'm talking about all Albertans.

Now, given that this PC government keeps information about how often dam inspections occur secret, information about how the inspections turn out secret, and information about company emergency response and cleanup secret, why won't the minister come clean on the Obed spill and tell Albertans when this dam was last inspected, what the results of the inspection were, and what the government is going to do to minimize the massive environmental damage that this breach will and has already caused?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we have made sure that all of the testing was happening right away, within the first day of the incident happening. On November 1 we made sure that the samples were taken right away and continue to be taken, with the company as well taking samples. Our job one was to make sure that no communities were withdrawing water until we had samples and health safety done. That has been confirmed.

We took the mayor of Woodlands county and the mayor of Whitecourt – and I'd like to say, Mr. Speaker, a quote from the mayor of Whitecourt: the province and Sherritt Coal have both been very evident in getting all of the departments on board, ensuring that any community downstream were notified; it hasn't had an impact on our community.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, interestingly, not one of those tests has been released publicly yet.

Now, given that adherence to the Canadian dam safety standards are not mandated in Alberta, as they are in many other provinces, and given that the Obed breach is possibly the largest single tailings containment breach in the history of this country, will the minister commit today to reviewing dam safety across the province, releasing the results publicly, and specifically legislating standards in order to protect all Albertans from the cost of its inaction up to now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As soon as the health results were made available, we released those on Monday to make sure that they were released to the public. Our job is to make sure that the health and safety of Albertans is first and foremost. There were no health issues with regard to Albertans, no health issues so far to date that we know of with regard to fish and wildlife. We have made this public. Maybe the hon. member should actually look at the public documents.

2:30 Energy Technology Expenditures

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose strategy for a greener Alberta involves empowering individuals to take personal responsibility for reducing their own environmental footprint. This government's light up Alberta program gave energy retailers an opportunity to pay homeowners, municipalities, and small businesses 15 cents a kilowatt hour to put power back on the grid. Great idea. This provided incentive for folks to install solar panels and windmills in their homes and businesses. To the minister: if you're trying to improve Alberta's reputation with world leaders, why would you axe a program like this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've got many great programs that are happening in Alberta, and that was one of many programs that we're looking at. As well, we're looking at: how do we reduce the amount of GHGs that we have in the province? How do we make sure, through the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corp., that we get the best bang for our buck? We have many projects that are out there. That is one of many, but there are many more. With regard to our carbon capture and storage, that will actually achieve 70 per cent of our reductions. We are making sure that we're doing the small things, but we are focused on the big things that will reduce our emissions.

Mr. Anderson: That program no longer exists, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that this government has chosen to grant Shell Canada over $800 million to pump their industrial emissions underground and given that most folks believe that a successful company like Shell should probably pay to clean up after itself and given that the light up Alberta program costs a mere 1 per cent of what this government spends on carbon capture subsidies, wouldn't it make more fiscal sense to keep the light up Alberta program and dump your $2 billion CCS boondoggle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to answer this question. Perhaps this member might want to talk to others around the world about the importance of CCS to the global economy. We look at Europe and what they're trying to do with regard to CCS. We look at the United States, the President, the amount of money that the President has put forward, a billion dollars. We look at the federal government. Carbon capture and storage is one of the technologies that will be unleashed that will reduce emissions globally. In fact, in Alberta, with the kind of geology that we have, through enhanced oil recovery we will actually see a large return on our investment.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the CCS program has done nothing to open Keystone or Gateway or anything else. It's a failed $2 billion PR disaster.

Mr. Speaker, given that many consumers like my constituent Larry Koper, small energy retailers, municipalities, and small businesses made large investments in energy efficiency upgrades based on the premise that they would be able to recoup their costs through the light up Alberta program, why did you pull the plug on these folks by axing the program without even a lick of consultation? How is that fair to them, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually going to go back to the hon. member's numbers. His numbers are inaccurate with regard to CCS. It's actually $1.4 billion. Those are the kinds of projects, when you look globally, that people are looking to Alberta as a leader. We have spent a lot of time talking, whether it be in the United States, in Canada, in Europe, and in China. When we look at the different discussions with regard to CCS, that is what is going to make sure that we're going to see real reductions, and the globe is looking to us to unleash technology so we can actually share with the entire world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Justice System Delays

Ms Olesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is an old legal principle that justice delayed is justice denied, yet delays in the administration of justice are a problem right across this country. Court cases are dragging on for years, allowing for witnesses to move or recollections to fade. Delays jeopardize justice. There is a report, Injecting a Sense of Urgency, about delivering justice in serious and violent crimes. It identifies delays as the main problem. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. What steps have you taken to apply this report's recommendations to help expedite the effective administration of justice in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The report was an excellent report. It was authored by an ADM in my department – his name is Greg Lepp – and I'd almost even call it the gold standard. It talks about the expansion of court case management offices, something that's happening right now, and also the increased use of direct indictments. The use of direct indictments has already saved 10 weeks of court time in provincial court this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Olesen: Thank you. To the same minister. I recognize the independence of the judiciary and the distinct responsibilities within the court system that limit government capacity to direct change. What levers or additional steps can your ministry apply to influence change to reduce delays within the courts?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, under the Constitution there is a shared responsibility for justice between the provinces and the federal government. I met with federal Justice minister Peter MacKay just this Friday in Calgary, and one of the things that we discussed was the elimination or the curtailment of preliminary inquiries. Disclosures have already happened under the Stinchcombe case since 1991, and preliminary inquiries waste 23.8 weeks of actual time in each case. That's something that we are continuing to push, and it's something that I will push in a couple of weeks in Whitehorse at the federal Justice ministers' meeting.

Ms Olesen: To the same minister: what are the next steps in the implementation of the new approach to delivering justice in Alberta?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a moving target we need to look at, not just every year but every month. This is a continuing priority in our department. I've mentioned preliminary inquiries before, but there are also other items that we're looking at on a continual basis such as small claims court reform or, on the longer term even, traffic court reform that will save delays in other areas of our justice system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by Stony Plain.

Continuing and Long-term Care

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the 2012 election the Premier promised that she would open 1,000 long-term care nursing beds. However, the Minister of Health seems to think that these beds are the same as continuing care or assisted living. Vulnerable Albertans who need long-term care nursing are being forced either into lower levels of care or back into hospitals. With the government now planning to close 2,000 long-term care nursing beds by 2016, where does the Associate Minister of Seniors propose vulnerable Albertans needing 24-hour long-term nursing care go?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. There's no doubt that there are capacity issues across this province. The demographic change that we're feeling today and are about to feel is going to keep pressure on us, and that's why this government is committed to building a thousand new units for seniors each and every year. Whether it's in Rocky Mountain House or whether it's in Okotoks or whether it's in Crossfield or whether it's in Lacombe, your colleagues are proud to stand beside me when we're opening these facilities.

Mrs. Towle: Those are not long-term care beds, Mr. Speaker.

Given that yesterday the Member for Calgary-Glenmore asked the Health minister a question directly about seniors moving into long-term care and the Health minister was not willing or able to answer that question, can the Associate Minister of Seniors stand up in the House and explain the difference between long-term care nursing beds and continuing care beds?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I can, and anytime the member would like a lesson on continuing care, she can come over and visit. The fact of the matter is that appropriate care be given to residents. Whether they're someone with disabilities or are seniors, we need to make sure that they receive the appropriate care in the appropriate place and as close to home as possible.

Mrs. Towle: Mr. Speaker, clearly the Associate Minister of Seniors should know the difference between long-term care nursing beds and continuing care beds. Given that he clearly doesn't, can someone in the government please explain to the House what the difference is between long-term care nursing beds and continuing care beds? They're funded separately. Please explain so that everyone knows what the difference is.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it seems like the student is trying to give the teacher a little bit of a quiz here. I'm going to tell you that any time the member wants to walk in my shoes and come with me to some continuing care facilities, to some long-term care facilities, to some dementia care facilities, she's sure welcome to join me. Your other colleagues sure do, and they're very interested in learning about this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

Rail Transportation Safety

Mr. Lemke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month there was a rail line accident in my constituency. People were forced from their homes and given the uncertainty of this situation were, plainly put, scared: scared for their health, scared for their families, and scared for their homes. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. What is our government doing to ensure that disasters like this do not happen again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This is an important issue and timely right now. I want the hon. member to know that we have been taking action on this.

For example, after the Lac-Mégantic event there already were recommendations that came out, and we have acted on all of those to adjust where appropriate the Alberta standards, Mr. Speaker. We've started taking action, and it hasn't stopped there. We have people on the ground right now looking at the incident that occurred just a couple of days ago.

Mr. Lemke: My first supplemental, Mr. Speaker: will this same minister commit to a process of finding that federal, provincial, and private industries can communicate in a timely manner what is being transported on these lines to ensure the safety of our communities?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like the hon. member to know I have been in touch with my colleagues, the other Transportation ministers. The federal minister has committed to ongoing communication sharing with me and the other provincial Transportation ministers. We won't let up. The railroads would say – and I'm not taking issue with it – that more than 99.997 per cent of the cars get there safely. But as long as collisions happen, as long as Albertans are at risk, and as long as we can take action in partnership with our federal partners and the railroads, we will do so.

Mr. Lemke: Mr. Speaker, my last question for the same minister: what is being done to ensure that companies like CN are being held accountable to our citizens?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm guessing the hon. member is referring to the incident going on right now. As I mentioned in some of my earlier remarks, we have people on the ground. We are investigating what happened there, and if there are shortfalls that need to be addressed, we will be doing that. The hon. member is going to have to be a little more patient because we want to act based on facts and evidence rather than conjecture. I would say to the hon. member that that will be a pretty short time period from now, in my estimation.

Statement by the Speaker

Brevity

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today. For tomorrow could I ask all of you after question 5 to please cut out your preambles? Today we had some who went on quite long with their preambles. I noted some of them. There were others that were very short. I would extend kudos to Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for a very succinct question and to the minister who answered very succinctly as well, as a result of which we had a few more members come on. But 21 questions and answers were still to be asked, and they were left at the altar, so to speak. So, please, let's try to abide by that tomorrow after question 5.

Just before we go back to Members' Statements in a moment, might we have unanimous consent to revert briefly to one introduction? Does anybody object to that?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, your introduction, please.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you some wonderful people visiting us from India. Colonel Harpal Singh Pannu is here with Chifali Pannu. Joining them today are some of my good friends: Pardoma Singh Gill, Arminder Singh Bhatra, and Dajinder Paul.* May I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 25 seconds we will resume Members' Statements, beginning with Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Banff-Cochrane.

Alberta Immigrant Nominee Program

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to raise awareness of the recent changes to our Alberta immigrant nominee program. This is an excellent economic immigration program, jointly operated by the governments of Alberta and Canada. It supports Alberta's economic growth by attracting and retaining work-ready immigrants to our province.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's robust economy creates tremendous demand for skilled workers in many fields. Alberta has the highest growth rate in the country, creating more than 77,000 jobs between August 2012 and August 2013. In order for our province to prosper now and in the future, we need to find the right people with the right skills at the right time to fill those positions.

While our priority is to ensure that Albertans and Canadians are hired first, we still need immigration to address long-term labour needs. Alberta employers have asked us to help address their labour shortages. We listened, and we are taking action.

Over the summer changes to the program were made so that workers who are already living here and contributing to our province will have more opportunities to become permanent residents. Mr. Speaker, these changes will expand the eligible range of occupations, give more people an opportunity to directly apply to the program, and help ensure that we retain workers in occupations that are in high demand. We are helping employers find the workers they need, and we are helping more hard-working newcomers get closer to achieving their dream of becoming a Canadian citizen.

We encourage all members of this House to please share this information with their constituents, some of whom may be eligible for the nomination. I want to mention that some of these changes are temporary, with an application closing date of November 28. Please go online for more information. The website address is AlbertaCanada.com/AINP.

Mr. Speaker, we need good people to help us build Alberta, and that includes Albertans, Canadians, and skilled people from around the world.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Strathmore-Brooks.

South Saskatchewan Regional Plan

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The South Saskatchewan regional plan includes the South Saskatchewan River basin, the Milk River basin, and the Alberta portion of the Cypress Hills. This is an area of 83,764 square kilometres, which represents 12.6 per cent of Alberta's land base. Located within the boundaries are 15 MDs, five cities, 29 towns, 23 villages, two summer villages, and seven First Nations, with a population of 1.6 million people, or 45 per cent of Alberta's population.

The SSRP will utilize a cumulative effects management approach to balance economic development opportunities and social and environmental considerations. It will clearly define desired outcomes and establish monitoring, evaluation, and reporting commitments to assess progress, and, possibly most important, it will provide guidance to provincial and local decision-makers regarding land-use management for the region.

Municipal planning and development decisions will remain the jurisdiction of the local authorities as they always have; however, municipal statutory plans will have to align with the regional plan in order to achieve the desired outcomes of the region. Planning in isolation without due consideration of the impacts of decisions on neighbours and other stakeholders in the region will be a thing of the past.

Mr. Speaker, there are several areas of the draft SSRP that are of interest to the constituents of Banff-Cochrane. Over the next few weeks I will be meeting with stakeholders to ensure that they have an opportunity to provide their input on the plan as all Albertans do. Beginning today through November 28 stakeholder workshops and public information sessions will be held in 21 communities across the planning area on the draft plan, or residents can fill out the workbook online at www.landuse.alberta.ca.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage everyone to engage their constituents to provide input needed to complete this valuable planning process. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Pipeline Safety

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently Canadians were reminded of the crucial importance of pipeline integrity, no thanks to the government's pipeline safety review released this summer. While Albertans know the value of pipeline integrity for economic prosperity and the environment, the report demonstrated the government's utter lack of seriousness in assessing the need to improve pipeline safety with concrete measures to step up our game in enforcement. The report failed to even look at the enforcement of regulations and did not address shortcomings in reporting and monitoring procedures. The report failed to address several available examples of recent spills and did not take any lessons from these mistakes to improve safety going forward.

Albertans were left wondering why the government commissioned the report at all. It's great that the report recognized that we have regulations, but – hold your applause – the existence of regulations was never the question. While the report makes recommendations going forward, it does nothing to address the integrity of our 400,000-and-some kilometres of existing pipelines.

Integrity should be an important idea for the government. Well, let's not look to the government, whose Municipal Affairs minister says one thing to Albertans and then tells another audience that our oil industry sucks the life out of every other aspect of Alberta. That's not integrity.

Neither did the review add to pipeline integrity or offer an honest look into the critical challenges facing our industry. Enforcement is critical for Alberta to prove that it is leading the way in pipeline integrity. Whether it's the east-to-west pipeline, the Keystone XL pipeline, or western pipelines, demonstrating to our customers our steadfast and unwavering dedication to pipeline integrity in the face of ever-expanding production is critical to our economic future.

Our customers want to know that our regulations are being enforced. It's not good enough just to have regulations. Thankfully, the Auditor General has agreed to my request for a review on reporting, monitoring, and enforcement procedures of the Alberta Energy Regulator.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Bill 41

Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce Bill 41, the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013.

If passed, this bill will give the council a more strategic and influential role in government policy and in program development. It is intended to rejuvenate and reinvigorate the council, and it speaks to the value this government places on the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, I offer my sincerest thanks to the council for the great work they do in improving the lives of Albertans with disabilities. It is absolutely humbling to interact with such people, and I eagerly look forward to the coming year. Thank you to the council.

[Motion carried; Bill 41 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Bill 43

Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 43, the Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 43 will renew the legislation and create a new governance model for the Alberta Economic Development Authority. The authority, established in 1994, has been a valuable adviser to the Premier and cabinet on issues affecting the Alberta economy. The proposed amendments to the act will be the first substantive changes to the legislation since its inception.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today the appropriate number of copies of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission annual report 2012-2013 and Charitable Gaming in Review 2012-2013. Over the course of the year the AGLC has met its mandate in ensuring that the province's gaming and liquor industries operate effectively, with integrity, and in a socially responsible manner. During 2012-13 the AGLC saw an increase in gaming and liquor revenue from the previous year. More than $716 million was earned from liquor operations. In addition, almost 1 and a half billion dollars in gaming revenue went into the Alberta lottery fund. This money benefits all Albertans by supporting numerous community initiatives. I'd also note, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta charities raised nearly $330 million through charitable gaming activities in the same period.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table the requisite number of copies of the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta annual report 2011-2012. The college is the professional and regulatory body for over 33,000 registered nurses in Alberta. Its mandate is to protect the public by ensuring that Albertans receive effective, safe, and ethical care by the registered nurses of our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, the first of which is a letter from myself to the Hon. Peter MacKay, the Minister of Justice federally, dated August 26. It talks about the victims of crime, a victims' bill of rights, and some of the things that Alberta would like to see in this victims' bill of rights. I'll pass that to the page.

Secondly, one of my favourite topics, Mr. Speaker, lawyers, is the 2011 annual accountability report from the Law Society of Alberta, which, of course, is a self-governing body.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of annual reports for the Alberta

Foundation for the Arts, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, and the Wild Rose Foundation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, did you have a tabling?

Mr. Dorward: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the wording on a plaque in the Gold Bar area called the Capital City Recreation Park Announcement.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we have one point of order, and I do have the benefit of the Blues. Just before we get into it – I'm interested to hear what the point of order is – I would remind all members that sometimes in this Assembly the cut and thrust of debate results in some bantering across the aisle and that those comments are rarely picked up in Hansard. So we have nothing to go on if that's what the subject of this is.

Let's hear what the point of order is, Airdrie.

Point of Order

Remarks off the Record

Gestures

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise on a point of order which I think is very serious, and I would ask that you hear the argument fully. We do actually have several witnesses to what occurred. I refer to Standing Order 23, particularly (j), the use of "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," and (l), "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly," but specifically (j), as well as O'Brien's House of Commons Procedure and Practice, particularly chapter 3, and I'll get to the specific citations as we go.

The issue in question is that after the Leader of the Official Opposition asked a question of the Deputy Premier, which you have in the Blues, the Deputy Premier stood up and answered that question in a very emotional way. We won't go into the veracity of what was said in his statement. That can be done at a different time. After he sat down, this member, the Deputy Premier, leaned over his desk very clearly to members on this side of the aisle, motioned to the opposition leader in this manner with both hands, saying, quote: bring it on; you want this; bring it on; bring it on, shouting it across the aisle in that way.

Now, I understand that this member was emotional when he was giving his answer. I understand that, but I want to turn to chapter 3, page 82, of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, where it very clearly states:

Thus, the House also claims the right to punish, as a contempt, any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions; obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties; or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House, such as disobedience of its legitimate commands or libels upon itself, its Members, or its officers.

On page 83 it gives an example of that, of what contempt might look like, and one of those things is "assaulting, threatening, obstructing or intimidating a Member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties."

Further, on page 84: "assaulting, threatening or disadvantaging a Member, or a former Member, on account of the Member's conduct in Parliament."

That is clearly a reference that in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, we need to be able to come in here and do our job, speak to these things, and physical intimidation should never be a part of or a response to somebody's conduct in this Legislature. I think we can all agree with that. I think we don't want to devolve into some of these other parliaments that we see around the world where people are physically coming over the boards, so to speak, to engage each other physically. This isn't a hockey game.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm trying to follow your argument in House of Commons under pages 82 and 83, and I believe you're quoting from privilege versus contempt. Are you intending to raise a point of privilege here?

Mr. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be my intention to . . .

The Speaker: I'm not going to get into a discussion with you right this moment, hon. member. I'm simply asking you to clarify because what we're looking for is a point of order with regard to other procedures in the House.

3:00

Mr. Anderson: First of all I also quoted the standing order, and maybe we can proceed on the standing order. But if there's no apology given, I will proceed on a point of privilege tomorrow. Absolutely.

With regard to, "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," Mr. Speaker, I know that this member can be emotional, as can we all be in this Legislature. I would suggest, though, that when we come into this Legislature, we should do so free from being physically intimidated. What happened there was over the line. Everybody on this side – well, most people on this side – saw it. I won't say everybody, of course. There are people that are willing to say it, and certainly the Leader of the Opposition clearly deserves more respect than that.

I would note, too, that this member was obviously very upset with the fact that this dealt with his family, as would any of us be in this situation. But that doesn't change the fact that you cannot lean over the benches and physically motion to the person to come over and say: bring it on; bring it on; you want this; you want this. We can't have that in our Legislature. If that's the case, it's going to continue on and just elevate itself over and over again.

So I'd ask that he apologize for the comment, that he clarify and make sure that he will not do that again, and hopefully we can move on respectfully.

The Speaker: Someone from the government side? The Deputy Premier.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a sense I'm glad that this member raised a point of order or privilege, whatever it is that you deem it to be. This is one of those occasions where I don't have to cite Beauchesne, I don't have to cite our standing orders, but I will simply cite common human decency based on which I imagine you should make this ruling.

Mr. Speaker, this member – and I'm referring to the leader of the Wildrose opposition – is not a new member. She's been here for a while, she's well read on the news, she is very active on Twitter, and I know that research monitors Twitter very carefully. I know and you know that this matter was widely published in mainstream media when the occurrence took place, so there is no way that members of the opposition can say that they were not aware of what the context of this matter was. It was clear. It was published. Everybody knows about it.

In case you don't remember, Mr. Speaker, let me refresh your memory. A reporter from our beloved, taxpayer-funded CBC had decided, based on what he believed were tips given to him, that my wife and I and my wife and my office, in particular, apparently, allegedly, according to him, were having inappropriate exchanges via e-mail. In order to follow up on what exchanges by e-mail I have between my wife and myself or my office may have, he has decided to FOIP any and all exchanges between my office, myself, and my wife. Since my wife and I don't practice e-mailing back and forth with each other, all I believe they found were a couple of calendar entries wondering whether she would be attending an event with me or not and pictures of my children, because they were doing something particularly cute at a moment at home, and she sent me a picture of the children.

Now, that put me in a very difficult position, Mr. Speaker. If you don't release it and you black it all out, then the accusation is that you're hiding something. What was in those pictures? What is it that you blacked out? If you do, you end up releasing pictures of your children, which we had been successful, up until that point in time, in keeping very private. We, unfortunately, having not many choices, have decided to release that information – that is, the office has decided to release that information – even though perhaps it was outside of the scope of FOIP.

While that was happening, Mr. Speaker, that very same reporter had also run checks on motor vehicle registration and land titles and on Twitter started releasing my home address and the whereabouts of my house, the description of the vehicles that we drive, the licence plates of the vehicles that we drive. As a result of that – and that is all well-known information that that member knew about – my personal home had to be re-alarmed, RCMP had to do security checks, my wife had to carry a personal alarm system on her, windows in my vehicles had to be tinted, and schools for my children had to be advised of extra caution and extra release of information strategies just to keep them safe and outside of the scope of someone because, as you know, we expose ourselves in public life to a variety of activities. As a result, CBC has seen the wisdom, and they demanded that their reporter remove that information off Twitter. But you know that once it's out, it's out, and you can't put that back in the bag.

This member knew that, and she had the audacity to raise that and question my transparency and my office's willingness to release information. Mr. Speaker, I would never interfere in the release of information, as we haven't in this case. As a matter of fact, we went beyond that point, and we released information that was outside of FOIP so as not to leave ourselves open to questioning what perhaps could have been in the stuff that was blacked out. But this member had the audacity to go there.

So I will not apologize for saying, "Bring it on; bring it on; you want to go, let's go; if you want to go down that path, let's go," because no member in this House should expose his family or children to this kind of garbage. While this was happening – and you know, Mr. Speaker, not everything is caught on cameras – the Leader of the Opposition was smirking away and having a jolly good time because she knew, she knew, that this was going to aggravate me. That's what it was really all about.

We are in public service, Mr. Speaker. You can accuse me of anything you want – I chose to run for office – but you leave families alone.

The Speaker: I'll recognize one more speaker from the Alberta Liberals on this point. Please, briefly.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a contemporary problem for us because we have so much electronic information that comes and goes now. I will admit that I have not read Twitter and the other things that are available. My problem with this is how we balance being open and accountable, elected politicians with someone seeking very personal information.

In Canada we're pretty lucky. The media doesn't interfere in our lives too much. But what we have in this House is a threat against – there are two threats here, maybe that's the best way to put it. One is the threat against the Deputy Premier's family, which is unacceptable under any circumstances, but the second is the threat, verbal and by gesture, that was made in this House to another member. Neither are acceptable, and I urge the Speaker to carefully consider whether excusing the member for using a gesture, which is a threat and is forbidden in every parliamentary book I can find . . .

An Hon. Member: Especially to a woman.

Ms Blakeman: Well, whether that threat is to a woman or a man, in this day and age I hope that wouldn't matter quite so much, but it still does matter, certainly, as far as weight and how much damage a particular assault can do to someone.

Please, Mr. Speaker, keep in mind that although this member was unquestionably provoked, this reaction should not be allowed in this House to anyone, by anyone. I understand the grief this has caused him – no question – but you cannot allow a member to threaten a member in this House verbally or with a gesture or right-out assault.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have two more requests for commenting, and I'm going to honour them if they are exceptionally brief. I'll begin with Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, then the Minister of Justice, and I hope that will conclude it. Please be brief, or I will have to interrupt you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I will keep my comments brief. I can appreciate where the Deputy Premier is coming from – as a mom I would not want to be in that position – and I can also appreciate that having personal information on Twitter about any one of us has got to be something that's very aggravating. However, the question that was posed to the government had nothing to do with personal information. It had to do with a FOIP request and his response to that in terms of bullying and intimidation of the journalist by going through his boss. I want to make that very, very clear.

We can't assume to know what the Leader of the Official Opposition may or may not have known previous to asking the question. The question was a legitimate question on the role of the Deputy Premier and how they deal with FOIP, the access to FOIP and the information that comes from FOIP, and his actions that he took once the FOIP was received. I am completely sympathetic to his position, and I'm completely sympathetic to his emotional response.

The other part I just wanted to say really quickly – and the hon. member from the Liberal side didn't go there – is that there's a reason why women don't go into politics. At no point in time should anyone in this House – anyone – feel . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

I don't mind hearing one good defence or one good allegation substantiated, if you like, by one member from each party, but then we get into an all-afternoon discussion on this. I have two more members over here now. I'm just going to have to stop it right here. I did say the hon. minister would have a brief comment.

Now, hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, I assume you have concluded your remarks or you're about to.

Mrs. Towle: Not really, no, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'll give you another 30 seconds, and that will be it, okay? This is not a discussion with the chair. I just indicated earlier that I would recognize you if you were brief, and I'm going to recognize the Minister of Justice to be equally brief, and that's it. I'm well aware of what was said. I have the Blues right here, and I will rule on it momentarily. So, please, wrap up your comments in 30 seconds.

Mrs. Towle: I was just going to finish my sentence, Mr. Speaker. All I was saying is that we would not tolerate this kind of behaviour on the school ground. We shouldn't tolerate it in here. I'm just asking you to use that in your decision-making as well.

The Speaker: Hon. member, that's a very interesting comment you just made. I may have to use it in future rulings. Very, very well said. Thank you for that. I'm glad I let you go on.

The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will endeavour to be very brief. One of the things from your past rulings that you've talked about is a reference to Beauchesne's and the fact that the Speaker has the authority to accept two varying versions of the same group of facts. [interjections] I sit here, and I honestly didn't see – again, I'm going to ignore the boos over on that side. I can hardly even hear myself. I would suggest that this is a matter that, depending on where you were sitting, you may have had different items. I don't suggest that the Member for Airdrie has made any fallacious items, but at the same time I don't think that the Deputy Premier has either.

The Speaker: All right. I think we've had ample opportunity for people from at least three different parties to clarify their views on this matter. Let me indicate what I have before me and upon which I have to make a ruling here momentarily. At approximately 1:53 this afternoon, right near the beginning of question period, the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition rose and asked the following question with a preamble, according to the Blues:

The Deputy Premier seems to be having trouble with access to information requests lately. The freedom of information and privacy commissioner reported yesterday that the Deputy Premier bullied, threatened, and intimidated a journalist for having the nerve to file an access to information request on him. He ridiculed him publicly on Twitter and has even called the journalist's boss. This kind of behaviour is absolutely deplorable for someone in his position. To the Deputy Premier: what does he have to say for himself?

That's the end of that first question and preamble.

The Deputy Premier then rose and said:

Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm actually glad that this hon. member asked this question because it is time that some of the facts surface. This is a situation where a reporter has FOIPed very personal information, particularly asked for correspondence between myself and my wife, has obtained pictures of my children, and has on Twitter published the licence plate, description of the vehicle that my wife drives, and my home address. That was simply unacceptable, and that's where I and every member should draw the line.

Immediately thereafter, according to the Blues, the Member for Airdrie rose on a point of order. Now, having heard the arguments from Airdrie in particular, it doesn't appear that the point of order was necessarily specific to anything that was said and recorded in Hansard. Rather, it was to do with some subsequent discussion across the aisle that perhaps he and the Deputy Premier had or perhaps something that happened between the Deputy Premier and the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

I'll start with the issue of the gestures. Hon. members will know that seldom does a debate of any kind go on in this House, particularly during question period, where gestures of some form or another are not evident. Now, sometimes those gestures get picked up on television. They certainly don't get picked up on radio or in the newspaper. Shaking fingers, shrugging shoulders, throwing your hands up in the air are all gestures.

Now, if I were to rise every time I saw one of these gestures, you can appreciate that I would be on my feet a lot more than I already am. However, one must draw the line where gestures might seem to be or appear to be of a threatening nature, as Airdrie just pointed out. I did not see that specific gesture, but I want to turn to part 2 of what is also not recorded in Hansard, and that was a comment that I heard made. I did not hear the Deputy Premier say, "Bring it on; bring it on" or whatever it is alleged that he said, and neither does Hansard, according to the Blues, illustrate it. But I did hear I believe it was Airdrie asking someone to step out and to discuss this matter. That might have been an inappropriate thing to have said, but it's not on Hansard either, okay? [interjections]

Now, please, hon. members, don't argue with me. I have fairly good ears for the first few rows, okay? I'm just telling you now that neither the gestures that we saw or heard, if they, in fact, occurred, nor the statements that were made are appropriate behaviour for this House. Neither one. There is a point of difference, and I can appreciate that this was an emotionally charged item.

Now, after the Deputy Premier offered his explanation, we ought to accept that as being how he saw the situation since he was personally involved in it. None of the rest of us were. There's a long-standing tradition in this House where we accept the view of another member. We accept it. We may not like it. We may not agree with it. We can even rise and challenge it if we so wish, but our first duty is to accept another member at his or her word.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre stated an interesting thing in this regard as well. I don't have her exact quote, but I wrote down as quickly as I could: how do you balance accountability with legitimate requests for information? I believe she meant about government business, policies, and programs, and then she went on to comment further. That's a very good question, but I think we should all draw the line when it comes to issues to do with our personal lives, issues to do with our families, issues to do with our children.

Those of you who know some of the members in this House know that we're talking about children who in some cases can't even speak yet for themselves. They are that young. So you have to put yourself into the position of how you would feel if someone were to raise that kind of a personal attack or whatever it might seem to be on you or your family members. I think we would all agree on that.

Seeking information in the first part of the question is all good. After it has been clarified, you probably should take note at that point and realize that there's a time to sort of stop, if the answer has been given and you are taking someone at their word, or to go back and do more research and come back with a new approach the next day. Sometimes the 24-hour rule is very good to follow. There are ample examples in the books of tradition that guide us, and I've cited them before – I'm not going to take the time to cite them again – where references are made as to what is appropriate and inappropriate, words to be used and actions to be seen in our Houses.

I'll conclude just by referencing a couple of points here in this respect which I think are relevant. In my form of Beauchesne's, sixth edition, on page 143 it indicates the following under article 486:

Remarks which do not appear on the public record and are therefore private conversations not heard by the Chair do not invite the intervention of the Speaker, although Members have apologized for hurtful remarks uttered in such circumstances.

Now, I heard some comments. I didn't hear the entire conversation, okay? So let that be one reminder.

Secondly, with respect to unparliamentary language, from House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 618 let me quote this:

If the Speaker did not hear the word(s) in question, or if there is a dispute as to what words were actually used, the Chair may set the matter aside pending a review of the record and, if necessary, return to the House at a later time with a ruling. The Speaker has also ruled that if the Chair did not hear the offensive word or phrase and if the offensive language was not recorded in the Debates, the Chair cannot be expected to rule in the absence of a reliable record.

We have no reliable record of the gestures or of the entire conversation that may have been part and parcel of those gestures, but I will accept both sides of the discussion in this respect as clarifications on this matter.

I would put a request before you as well to please, please remember that there's a fine line that always occurs when you're talking about the integrity of another member and you bring into it issues of personality or issues that are personal about him or her and their family members. Please remember that, hon. members, so that we can move forward at a much higher level of discussion and debate going forward.

That concludes this matter. There is no point of order.

We will now continue.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 35

Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the wise words that you provided us with this afternoon.

I am pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 35, the Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2013.

Bill 35 makes several amendments to the act that are needed to help government carry out its day-to-day business and continue to effectively manage the capital projects which we have undertaken. More specifically, an amendment is required to clarify which parts of the supply votes are eligible for capital carry-over to the following fiscal year. There are also a number of other minor changes to other parts of the act, and I'll get to those other amendments in a minute. For now I would like to focus on the capital carry-over provisions.

As you know, all appropriations are the responsibility of the Legislative Assembly. The Legislative Assembly has delegated limited authority to Treasury Board to address smaller issues related to these appropriations, including the capital carry-over. Each year government allocates a certain amount of money to each capital project. Many of these projects take several years to complete. Sometimes there are factors that can change the pace at which that money is spent such as construction delays or reprofiling, so we need the capacity to carry over the funding to the next fiscal year. This capital carry-over is a long-standing and valuable fiscal tool that enables efficient management of government capital projects. By eliminating the need to go back to the Legislature for approval to carry over funds that have already been voted in, the capital carry-over ensures approved projects are not further delayed by the processing of a ministry's funding approval.

Why do we need an amendment? Budget 2013 changed the supply vote names and structure. The current definition of a capital carry-over in the act does not correspond to the structure and wording in the 2013-14 capital supply votes. The amended definition makes it clear that Treasury Board retains the power it had before to carry over capital investments in 2014-15 and in future years.

Second, under the new supply vote structure capital grants to other bodies are now part of that capital vote. The amendment makes it clear that capital grants to a third party such as a university or a municipality cannot be carried forward. Only money for government-owned capital projects can be carried forward.

Moving on to the other proposed amendments I mentioned earlier, these will make a number of technical and administrative changes to help government carry out its day-to-day business. They include aligning references related to the debt-servicing limit between the Financial Administration Act and the Fiscal Management Act. For example, the Fiscal Management Act repealed section 62 of the Financial Administration Act, but section 64 of the FAA still references section 62.

Clarifying the government's authority to issue uncertified securities as part of its borrowing program, section 65(1). Uncertificated securities are registered and tracked in an electronic book, but no paper record is issued. This reduces transaction costs and increases efficiency. Using this form of security will not impact the accounting and reporting of Alberta's borrowing activities, and the clarification applies only to securities issued by the government. Legal counsel has advised that this is something government can do already but recommended an amendment to make it clear.

Providing needed flexibility related to self-insurance coverage and services provided by the government's risk management fund. This amendment provides needed flexibility to the minister in entering into agreements and making arrangements for the provision of coverage and services. This eliminates the need for an individual participant such as a public official to sign an agreement when doing so would be impractical or otherwise undesirable. For example, public officials funded through a government department could be covered by the risk management fund under the department's risk management agreement rather than under a separate agreement for each official.

Four, clarifying the restrictions on incorporating provincial corporations. The current provisions in sections 80(1) and (2) pose technical difficulties due to the timing of when a corporation becomes a provincial corporation. The amendments will clarify the necessity of obtaining Lieutenant Governor in Council approval before turning a corporation into a provincial corporation.

Fifth, permitting tailored government oversight of borrowing by provincial corporations such as the Alberta Capital Finance Authority or postsecondary institutions. Section 81(1) relates to provincial corporations that issue debt securities. This section says that only the Minister of Finance may negotiate and determine the loan terms. The amended section allows provincial corporations who have the power to borrow to directly negotiate loan terms where the Minister of Finance considers it appropriate and subject to direction or conditions imposed by the minister. For example, where a postsecondary institution requires modest short-term financing, it may be appropriate to allow the institution to participate in negotiating the loan.

As you can see, the proposed changes are housekeeping in nature, technical and administrative changes that serve to provide clarity, improve the day-to-day operation of government, and continue to effectively manage our government capital projects. I do recommend moving these administrative changes forward so that government can continue those operations in a more efficient manner, and I ask all members of the Legislature to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 35.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 40

Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 40, Settlement of International Investment Disputes Act.

If passed, this act will support the implementation of the convention on the settlement of investment disputes between states and the nationals of other states. The convention is an international treaty that establishes the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes, or ICSID, and Bill 40 will implement the ICSID convention in Alberta. The ICSID is an organization devoted to the resolution of international investment disputes between states and the nationals of other states through arbitration and conciliation.

Canada signed the ICSID convention on December 15, 2006, and announced formally on November 1 that it had ratified the convention, and it will come into force on December 1. Provinces and territories have been encouraged to pass their own legislation implementing the ICSID convention within their jurisdictions to ensure the comprehensive implementation of the convention across Canada.

When the ICSID convention comes into force in Alberta, investors abroad in any of the 150 countries that have already ratified the ICSID may have recourse to ICSID to resolve disputes raised with the country in which they are doing business. The ICSID convention itself as a procedure is not involved with any substantive policy change or new obligation regarding foreign investors. Rather, it provides the rules and infrastructure for the foreign investor to address the case of a breach in a trade or investment agreement.

3:30

As part of building Alberta, we have worked hard to promote Alberta abroad and facilitate the free flow of international investment to Alberta and to help Alberta businesses succeed overseas. Promoting fair trade rules and equal treatment for our businesses must go hand in hand with efficient dispute resolution mechanisms that allow our investors to pursue a fair treatment of compensation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 40.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 27

Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased today to rise to speak to Bill 27 at Committee of the Whole. Of course, Bill 27 is an act that was put forward by the Minister of Municipal Affairs on the flood recovery and reconstruction. We see that as this Premier is heading on to her very important date of November 22, in advance of that she decided to make a whole bunch of new ministerial positions. I believe we have the highest ratio in Alberta in terms of ministerial positions to MLAs, and part of that she justified as a result of Bill 27 and the need to have some reconstruction in the flood-ravaged zones.

Madam Chair, I believe that the devil is in the details in this bill. I know that a few of our members spoke up in second reading and gave their cautious approval in terms of the overall intent of this legislation, but in Committee of the Whole our job is to go through the nitty-gritty details and ensure that any unintended consequences of the legislation are adequately addressed through debate here in the Legislature or through substantive legislative amendments that we put forward. I know that many of my other caucus members want to speak to this bill and go through it at least generally. Eventually we'll go through some of our amendments at a later point, but I think at this stage we will start the discussion process in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: I think there were some directions included in the previous speaker's comments, but I'm not in his caucus, so I'm not taking his direction. Sorry. I have a number of amendments that I have prepared to try and amend this bill. Just let me say at the beginning that I and my caucus don't have any objection to trying to increase flood mitigation attempts or legislation that would enable that. I have no interest in trying to stop the government from trying to help with disaster relief – and, please, don't anyone over there try and cast it as this because it's not – but there are some things that I have concerns about in the bill.

The primary one, Madam Chair, is the unfettered, enormous scope of power that is allocated to the minister. As I said when I first spoke to this bill, it is almost on the level of the War Measures Act. I mean, almost any power is allocated here. I listened carefully to the member for Calgary-Klein, who is now the Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta. My goodness. I know he was some offended by the fact that I hadn't quite cottoned on to his new ministry, but to tell you the truth, he hadn't really risen off the page and done anything that I would take notice of, so I apologize for offending him by not knowing that he was now an hon. minister.

In his talking he went on quite a bit about, "Well, what do you mean? We gave all people all kinds of information," and I questioned him again because it seemed to me that what he was saying was that we did press releases and we did media releases. Indeed, the member has been kind enough to send me over – I'm not sure how to describe this – a chunk, a wad, a mittful, no, not quite, a third of a mittful of their press releases, in which he is saying that policies that have been announced on floodways and flood fringes are covered. I almost wrote him a note back saying, "Really? This is how you communicate vital policy during a time of emergency, with press releases?" Are people still getting their Calgary Herald delivery when they're homeless? Is it being delivered somewhere that they can pick it up? Are they walking around with their televisions getting the television report about this? I was taken aback that this seemed to be the only way that they were getting information across.

Now, as I went through this, there are some very good back-grounders that were attached that go into a level of detail that I would expect to see from a government policy that is affecting so many people. It's written down where they go, what they need to have, and all of that, but the press releases themselves I don't feel are an adequate way of getting information across, particularly if they're the sole way of getting information across because for the most part they were, well, government media releases, Madam Chair, and this government has not been shy about talking about the fact that their media releases are now politicized, that they have press secretaries on staff that make these political messages. That's what in these.

I am surprised if this is the only thing. Perhaps I'm mistaken, and there was something else. I don't live in southern Alberta. Maybe there was another way of getting that information across. I just wanted to follow up and put that on the record.

We have an act that is trying to deal with moving forward on how to do it better next time, which I'm encouraged by. I believe that we should be trying to do that. The government has been pummelled enough with the fact that they ignored not one but two reports previous to the floods actually happening this summer, which did give them some fairly straightforward direction on things they needed to do. Very few of the recommendations were taken up.

I think this is another place where politics head-butts with policy. Once you've done the flood and moved on, you know, everybody's attention has moved away from it. It's a little harder to convince people, to convince Treasury Board that they need to be plowing fairly large amounts of money into flood mitigation after the 2005 or the 2010 floods in southern Alberta. I understand that. Still, when we look back on it, I'm sure that if you asked those homeowners now that lost homes or pets or farm stock, they would say, "You should've spent the money; you should've been firmer about getting this done" so that they didn't have the losses that they did. That is a criticism that I continue to level against the government. I continue to be alarmed by the amount of power that's been claimed in this legislation.

The first amendment that I would like to put on the floor – and I recognize that other members just want to speak generally, but perhaps you can do that through my amendment, and I'll just get this on the floor – in particular is around the use of the land in the floodways in what I see as a very ad hoc manner. That amendment would be here. I will pass it to a page, making sure I leave the signed copy on the front. I occasionally have a habit of not doing that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we will pause for a moment while we distribute the copies of the amendment.

We'll just wait one moment for the front row.

Okay. I think that the majority of them have a copy now. Would you like to proceed, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The pages as usual are doing a marvellous job of getting the amendments out. Thank you for the help.

This is where it always gets a bit crazy for people following along at home because you have the amending bill, and then that's amending the original legislation. So you end up with two sets of numbers you're playing around with here. This amendment is amending section 2(3), which in itself is amending the proposed section 693.1(1), which is an insert section that is talking about development in floodways.

As you know from my previous remarks, Madam Chair, I had a lot of problems with the fact that "floodway" was not clearly defined. You've heard a number of people here speak about how the flood maps were not up to date. The flood itself has changed the course of the river. It actually changed the courses of rivers or creeks while the flooding was going on. I've heard from people, my own constituents, who were saying: well, where do we get that definitive definition of floodway? It caused quite a bit of consternation for people.

What I have done here is propose that we strike out clause (c), which is the clause that says – sorry. Let me go back to the top. "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations." Once again, that's cabinet. It happens off in some special room that we don't get to see. But the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations, and section (c) says, "modifying or suspending the application or operation of any provision of this Act for the purposes of giving effect to this section."

That's a very wide scope, and that's a heck of a lot of power. I am proposing that that section be struck out of this amending act, Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. I think we need to curb the enthusiasm of what various ministers and governments and cabinets may wish to do in the future. That is what we're trying to do with this bill, look to the future and at what can be done now to make next time less harmful or to stop a next time.

I know that others can go in detail into the problems with that definition of floodway and the flood maps and how up to date they are and a number of other things, and I will let them do that, but I do hope that I can get support from everyone here for this amendment, which would be amendment A1.

Thank you, everyone, for bearing with me on this. I ask for your support of the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A1.

Are there any others who wish to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll continue with the debate in Committee of the Whole. Are there any other members who wish to speak?

I'll recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Good afternoon to everybody. It's my opportunity here at this time to speak to Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, and we have a few points to raise with regard to the bill itself. We are proposing amendments to this, and hopefully they'll be coming forward shortly.

Just a few things. I want to go back in time a little bit for myself. For those members that may not be aware, I have lived along the Bow River all of my life on our property just south of Calgary, and I've seen an awful lot of flooding in my time and experienced various states of flooding from the late '50s right through until the current day. Every year it's a different situation that we're faced with and a different impact in a different location, as we all know. Certainly, there's been an awful lot of talk in the past few months since we had the most recent event, especially in southern Alberta, where I'm from, regarding flooding and the damages that are caused by flooding and what we can do to protect homeowners' interests and so on.

This act seems to be an act that they are going to try to push through to, I guess, put into legislation what they were trying to do this summer with caveats and so on and so forth. Many of these solutions are things that a lot of people probably wouldn't be that much against, I suppose, but certainly there are some things, I think, that need quite a bit of review.

It seems that this bill, particularly, Bill 27, has got an awful lot of power grab by the minister in what is written here. Many of these things may or may not be warranted, in our view. Many of the powers granted seem to include what the mitigation measures done should be and how they should be reimbursed for those measures. It seems to talk about powers granted for the filing of caveats on floodway properties that have received DRP and conditional caveats on flood fringes. It talks a lot about determining what is a floodway and what development can be allowed in a floodway and what cannot. It talks about exempting certain municipalities from floodway regulations. Yet they are basing a lot of this type of legislation that they want to put through, as we've heard earlier today from the member from the glorious riding of Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Fabulous.

Mr. Stier: Fabulous.

They're basing the actions they intend to take on faulty maps. They're not taking future mitigation into account. Therefore, communities and individuals might be treated very unfairly if regulations are adopted before sorting that out. I can't tell you how often I've seen that very situation, where flooding has taken place, gravel deposits are laid everywhere, the new flood event comes along the following year, and like a billiard table, Oldman River comes along and knocks the heck out of another area.

So how can we base what we are going to be doing in terms of mitigation? How can we base what we're doing in terms of these caveats that are being proposed without having the actual data for what the current situation is in any location along one of these stream beds? Well, we can't. We have to have the correct data. There are just no two ways about it.

Certainly, we need to look at what is contained in this new bill and look particularly in terms of items under 693.1(1), as an example, development in floodways, and review what is in there and try to understand how we can take some of the actions that are listed there without having flood data.

Certainly, I know, after looking at the information that was displayed at the flood symposium, that some areas certainly have had a relook, and they have flown some lidar aircraft over and tried to get some more data, but certainly we need to ensure that if we're going to get the data, we can make use of it. It doesn't mention anything about recent mapping in here, and I think that's something we need to do.

As well, I'd like to talk a little bit about some of the sweeping power that the minister seems to want to have here, to override the MGA entirely if there appears to be an emergency. In 615.1, on page 2, it talks about how they're going to give sweeping power there. Municipalities can have parts of the MGA modified, municipalities can be exempted from parts of the MGA, and municipalities can be given powers beyond the MGA. We have to be looking at that and wondering: why is all of that necessary? How and in what situation will it be necessary?

As well, there's a proposal to extend the provincial control of the local state of emergency from 14 to 28 days; 28 days would still not make that much of a difference in places like High River. We're reviewing this and looking at perhaps suggesting modifications to that. Who is going to make those decisions, and why not let the local authority decide if that is what it needs? So we certainly have some comments that we are going to raise about that.

Bill 27 adds powers to the cabinet and the minister with respect to defining floodways; controlling, regulating, and prohibiting development in floodways; exempting municipalities from the definition; and forcing municipalities to amend their land-use bylaws because of all this. It also lengthens the state of the emergency period and provides a framework for funding reimbursement.

So we're just thinking that these powers, giving the government that kind of control, using old maps, and not taking future mitigation into account is just not the way that we should be looking at this.

I would, therefore, like to now consider the balance of my little presentation if I could here, ladies and gentlemen. Allowing the cabinet to designate what is and isn't a floodway and looking at that without considering or getting input from the local municipality and the emergency personnel there, again, doesn't seem to be the way to go. We need to ensure that they are involved in all steps. This perceived unrestricted power that the minister is going to have seems to be an awful lot of power without a lot of forethought.

We're going to be having a couple of other speakers on this, I think, in the next few moments. With that, I'm going to be concluding my remarks, Madam Chairman, giving up my time at this moment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'd like to recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. The next amendment to this bill I'd like to put on the floor has already been sent to the table.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll recognize this as amendment A2, and we'll pause for a moment while we distribute the copies of the amendment to the members.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. This second amendment that I'm doing is actually attempting to modify the same section. On page 3 of the bill section 2(3) is modifying and actually inserting a new section, 693.1(1), and under that (d): "defining, or respecting the meaning of, 'floodway' for the purposes of this section and the regulations made under this subsection."

Now, this was the one I found very odd because a floodway is not defined in the definition section, which is what I would usually expect to see in a bill. Following the preamble in a bill, generally speaking, you get the definitions so everyone is clear on what you're talking about when you see those words used in the rest of the bill, and that didn't happen in this amending bill.

Then you get to this part, section 2(3), which is inserting this whole new piece in which they say that they are going to define it under regs, and I just found the timing of this really odd because we're supposed to pass a bill in which the definition that we need to understand what's being talked about in the bill is going to come later under regulations, and we don't know when or who's doing them or when we're going to see them or anything. I think this also creates a great deal of uncertainty for people that are already living in homes with floodways. Now, I know that in other parts, it does say that this will not affect people that are already in certain flood plains. Given the uncertainty around the definitions and the timing around this, I think it's more important that we pull this out of regs. We should have a very clear definition of this before. I'm very unhappy with the ad hoc nature of it. I think there should be an agreed-upon definition, perhaps as part of this bill.

I'm sure the government can bring in government amendments in the same way that they have gone to the effort of defining disaster and emergency in the front section. There you have it. Right in the very beginning of this bill, the first couple of sections, they define disaster, and they define emergency. They really should have defined floodway in there and not left it for later in the bill to be done under regs in a very ad hoc way, because it really allows them to change what they're doing and change it more than once.

That's what I've done with this particular amendment, and I would ask for the support of the House on this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that wish to speak on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Madam Chairwoman. I'd like to speak to this amendment from the member from fabulous Edmonton-Centre. In the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler we had a different situation this year with the nonevent of the flood that took place in Drumheller. Because there had been mitigation that took place, as a result of that mitigation the events of the flooding of this season in Drumheller were not as, if I could use the bold word, sexy in relation to the media's reporting on the nonevent in Drumheller.

My concern is that the floodway mapping and the flood-fringe mapping are not necessarily accurate as a result of some of the mitigation that takes place. We had heard a member opposite talk about the issues of a simple fence being put in the way of the flood waters or a berm being put in the way of the flood waters, and as the water rises in an irregular occurrence like we had this summer, the floodway can be changed or significantly altered. This is an ongoing situation that needs to be addressed and rectified so that accurate mapping is done.

I have concerns that maybe in the past process of the floodway mapping it may have been someone using a Crayola crayon for designating that floodway. Now, the members opposite and the government say that this was done with great accuracy, but the people on the ground, the people in the areas feel that that was not accurate. My counterpart in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-

Sundre made mention that the river channel had actually changed itself by one mile, so that's a significant change to the flood pattern of the river. Therefore, there needs to be accurate mapping to accurately designate the floodway.

I will relinquish my position here to others who may wish to speak on this matter.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak on this occasion to the amendment on Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act. The amendment proposes deleting clause (d): "Defining, or respecting the meaning of, 'floodway' for the purposes of this section and the regulations made under this subsection." We all know that to have effective legislation, its intent needs to be clear, including the definitions of the terms that we use. This doesn't seem to be the case.

We applaud the government's efforts to hurry up and get proper legislation in as a result of the problems that have been created because of the flood. There have been tragic problems, as it turns out, and we're very concerned about them, of course. It's often the case that government tends to react. There is a Latin phrase, post bellum auxilium, which was used in ancient times to describe politicians and generals who would hear warnings of danger and refuse to provide troops, and then upon hearing that their posts had been attacked and overrun by the enemy, they would angrily and publicly gather troops and send them. The troops would arrive at empty battlefields too late to do anything, which should have been obvious since the politicians didn't even send them to the battles until they were over.

We're concerned about actions that are reactions to things that could have been prevented in the first place. We had ample warning because the government in its previous iterations in 2006 had the foresight to say: let's analyze what's happened and see what can be done to prevent it and see what needs to be done now to rectify this. Some of that rectification hasn't happened, unfortunately. Much of it remains undone to this day. As a result, we see the very expensive remediation efforts that are required. Every time an event occurs, then we try to hurry up and put things in place to correct what's already happened rather than prevent what may happen in the future. That's what makes events surprising. They keep relying on experts' best attempts to predict and forecast, but they're reacting after the fact.

Nassim Nicholas Taleb wrote that intelligence analysts and economists fail to forecast most major world change because these events are unpredictable. Well, I submit that the weather also can be unpredictable and that probabilities are not scientifically measurable. This is one of the real weaknesses of most modern governments, and it seems to be true of our own. Governments focus on prediction. Then when they are surprised, they blame the experts for not forecasting effectively, and they rally to create regulations and policies designed to anticipate and prevent events that have already happened. What they don't do is create what Taleb calls real resilience, or the ability to withstand surprises.

We act like we're surprised in a community that has had a history of the river overflowing its banks. We knew it could be done. This wasn't new ground. We weren't being asked to reinvent the wheel. There were things that could be done and should have been done but weren't done, and now we're reaping the consequence of that as taxpayers in Alberta.

This legislation needs to occur, but we want to make sure that it's done in the right way, and this amendment that has been proposed and those that will be coming forward fit in precisely with what the opposition's job is, which is to oppose inappropriate legislation, to propose amendments that will strengthen the legislation, and help it achieve its stated purpose. This doesn't seem to be complete in terms of doing that. I hope that we will consider these amendments and the strength that they will bring to the bill, the real meaning that they will provide the bill, and help it achieve its desired purpose.

With that, I will sit down and give up the floor to someone else.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A2 at this time? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Chairman. It's my pleasure to speak here at length a little bit longer on some of the facts that I missed earlier when I was speaking with respect to the flooding situation this summer. Also, I have an amendment that I'm going to be entering into the fray as well.

Ladies and gentlemen and members, I just wanted to talk a little bit more about what has happened in the past few months that brings us here today with the situation that we're in, where we're looking over a new act and amendments to the Emergency Management Act and the MGA to finally respond to the flooding difficulties we've had over the past number of years and decades.

I can tell you, from my own perspective, that in my riding I had flooding in the communities of Turner Valley, Black Diamond, Millarville, Priddis, all the areas up in the north. We had more flooding than we've ever seen in some of those areas, as a matter of fact. We've had an awful lot of flooding in my regions further to the south, including the Crowsnest Pass and down into Fort Macleod and to some of the other regions in the deep south off the Oldman reservoir. It certainly affected us all in a very dramatic way in the south of the province.

Nonetheless, we're going to be looking at an amendment here, Madam Chairman, and I'm going to be talking about that.

4:10

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, excuse me. I hate to interrupt, but we are speaking on amendment A2, so we have to finish the discussion on A2.

Mr. Stier: My apologies. I thought we were finished.

The Deputy Chair: That's okay. Do you have anything else you'd like to say about A2?

Mr. Stier: No. I'm fine. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who would like to speak on amendment A2 to Bill 27?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Now we're back to Committee of the Whole on Bill 27.

You'd like to speak in Committee of the Whole, hon. member? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chairman. My apologies for my earlier faults.

Anyway, I would like to introduce an amendment myself with respect to this act, and I have sufficient copies here. I'll have these ready for the page.

The Deputy Chair: This will be known as amendment A3, and we'll pause for a moment while we have the copies distributed to the members.

Hon. member, if you would like to proceed with amendment A3.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chairman. What we've got here is an amendment to section 1(2) on page 1 of the act. It's regarding the Emergency Management Act, and I'll just read that if I may: to move that Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, be amended in section 1(2) in the proposed clause (c.1)(i) by adding "which must be based on flood fringe and floodway area maps updated after the most recent flood event" after "reimbursement of costs."

Once again, we're back into our arguments that we've been providing throughout the summer on this matter, and we're talking about how the decisions for mitigation and for planning in the future, for reimbursements for damage, et cetera, et cetera, must be based on up-to-date mapping. There was a lot of talk in the past few months about whether this mapping is up to date and necessary and so on and so forth, and I can tell you, as I alluded to earlier, having lived along a river all of my life, rivers change almost every year to some degree or another. This is a very, very, very crucial part of this planning matter, and this amendment will, I think, address that very situation.

It's critical that we have these new maps so we can establish the new floodways and the flood-fringe areas. How can we do otherwise? The change in the rivers and the flows in the landscape are changing these on an annual basis, and it's just critical that we have this. There are man-made developments, often as not, along bridges, berms, et cetera, that have to be taken into account, and these things are altered every year. Whether there's been armouring along the banks and so on and so forth in the past, these have to be taken into account.

We're just not confident that the floodway information that they have currently in most of these areas is adequate at this time. We think that we need to have factored into this equation some of the most up-to-date and reliable information we can so we can ensure that if someone has property in a floodway or a flood fringe, they are not going to be judged inappropriately in their situations. We have had, as I've said, in some of these towns in my area a dramatic amount of change and a dramatic amount of damage. Of course, in the city of Calgary we had enormous amounts of damage.

Madam Chairman, with that, I'd like to have members speak to this. I'm looking for support as much as possible if we can. I think this is the right way to go and the only way to go to ensure that we're treating people fairly and we have the good data that we need to do so.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to support this amendment today that the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod is referencing here. It can't be said enough times how important it is to have the flood maps actually correct before we start going through this process. The Minister of Municipal Affairs, you know, stated today that he's working hard to do that. It seemed that he was willing to have that discussion about how important those flood maps really are. But we know that if we start right now by discussing what a flood fringe is, a flood zone, what that looks like, then we're starting off in the wrong place.

We're starting off in a place of error rather than starting off in a place where it's correct.

The reality of it is that so many of our areas were affected dramatically by this flood. As we know, this was one in a hundred years or one in a thousand years. I mean, it was just so dramatic and so, so devastating to so many areas. We also know that it has changed paths. We heard the Leader of the Official Opposition and Member for Highwood today talk about how Hampton Hills was not in a floodway or a flood zone at all but was one of the areas that was completely flooded for a very long time. We also know that the area of Beachwood, which she referenced, was flooded but for a different reason. Again, the municipality is trying to work with them to bring it back to normal.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. Hon. members, the noise level is getting a little greater than it should be. Can you please have respect for the person speaking? If you have to have a louder conversation, could you take it outside? Thanks very much.

Please continue.

Mrs. Towle: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think also that what is important about this amendment is that it reads:

Mr. Stier to move that Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, be amended in section 1(2) in the proposed clause (c.1)(i) by adding "which must be based on flood fringe and floodway area maps updated after the most recent flood event" after "reimbursement of costs."

That's important because we need to talk about those costs and the reality of them, and we need to make sure that we're doing everything in our power to make sure that those flood maps are accurate, they're appropriate, and they're actually reflective of exactly what has happened. And we need to make sure that it happens after – after – the reimbursement of costs.

I look forward to hearing from other members in the House with regard to this amendment or even members from the government side and how they feel about the amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, it's my privilege to speak to help us create the best possible legislation that will serve our constituents in these affected areas and areas that haven't yet been affected but that may in the future suffer the impacts that the flooded areas this past summer endured. We certainly don't want that to happen. I can't imagine that anybody would dispute the critical nature of having accurate data about the floodways, the flood plains, and appropriate, current, and up-to-date flood mapping. We can't make good decisions without that, and we're talking about making very important decisions, decisions that will impact many, many lives and many people's investments. It's incumbent upon us in this Legislature as MLAs to make the best possible decisions.

To do that, we need to see that this legislation is complete and it's accurate and includes clauses that will require the effort and expense to get it right the first time. As we can see from the costs that we're now facing to do it over again, it would have been cheaper to do it right the first time. I think that there's a proverb from the Middle East that talks about building not on sandy soil but on solid rock, on a good foundation. Well, it's the same for legislation. The decisions that will flow out of this legislation will only be as good as the foundation principles that we enshrine right now into the legislation.

I believe that the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has brought up a very valid point, that we must insist that the appropriate floodway mapping exists and is being used to make critical and important decisions that will have a serious influence and impact on many decisions going forward, not just where we build or where we invest or where we can remain but perhaps even used to of course prevent future costly events that will result in loss of property or, perhaps even as has occurred in the recent past, the tragic loss of five lives.

I'm sure that people, particularly young children but many people, are fragile emotionally when they lose their valuables. Many memories were lost in this flood. Many photos and other things that are keepsakes, reminders, memorabilia from special events that have occurred in their lives were lost. Naturally, the government wants to help avoid this tragedy, but again we can't knee-jerk in our haste to do this. We need to make sure that we take the time to soberly do the right things.

I hope that you will give very serious consideration to the benefit that this amendment, this friendly amendment, brings; the impact and the benefit that it will have on the investments that people make; the decisions about where to live that they will make; and their ability to preserve the value of their investments and preserve their quality of life. This is an important amendment. It's not frivolous. It's not presented to extend debate. It's made with the sincerest belief that it will strengthen the government's attempt to create good legislation that will serve us for many years into the future. Again, that must be done, must be based on sound science, on the soundest of accuracy, the updated nature, the current nature, the accuracy of the flood mapping.

With that, I'll allow other people to express their support for this.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to my colleagues. I'm pleased to stand and speak in support of this amendment. It seems to me that we're putting the horse before the cart here. How we can possibly move forward without current, up-to-date mapping and defined areas is hard to fathom, actually.

If I could, I would like to just go back to the 2005 flood event that happened and a report that came out in 2006 regarding that event. I believe there were 18 points in that report, and I think that 15 of those points – I'm pretty sure the number was 15 – were specifically related to flood mapping, and absolutely nothing was done until now. We still don't have current, up-to-date flood mapping so that we can make the kinds of decisions that are going to affect many, many homeowners.

I think what needs to be stated here, and it hasn't been yet, is that we're talking about the average Albertan's biggest investment they will ever make in their life: their home. And we're messing with that, folks. We're messing with it severely. We need to be very, very careful how this is handled. To even think of putting caveats on homes when we don't have any current flood mapping is absurd, in my opinion. It's not fair to those people who have been displaced and hurt enough in this latest incident.

I found the mitigation meeting in Calgary to be very interesting. To be honest, kudos to those who put those ideas forward on mitigation. They're very well done. They make a lot of sense. Some of them are a little over the top like the tunnel under the city of Calgary. But, hey, engineers say that it can be done and it will work, so let's just get off our butts and do it. Let's make this happen.

After that event I spoke with – I hope I get this right – the associate minister of recovery and reconstruction for High River. I think he's going to have to get a bigger business card. My concern with this mitigation information that we received at that meeting was that it made so much sense that now people are going to step back and say: "Well, gee. If they do all this, maybe I can rebuild where I am, and I'll be all right after that. Or do I take the money and run?" Now, those people are going to have to make that decision, or at least make an application by November 30. My question would be: what's the hurry? If we're going to put these mitigation measures in place, why are we pushing these people to make decisions that could be life-altering for them? I think we really need to rethink that November 30 date.

To get back to this particular amendment, it makes a lot of sense. Again, let's take a step back. Let's look at what we're doing. Let's make the right decisions at the right time for these people who have been displaced and are at their wits' end right now.

With that, I'll pass off to one of my colleagues or someone else. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Pedersen: Madam Chair, I appreciate the opportunity to stand and speak in favour of this amendment. Being from Medicine Hat, obviously floods in Alberta always tend to have a huge impact on us in the south, especially when we're the last major city that sits on the South Saskatchewan River. It doesn't really matter which part of the foothills or the Rockies in the southern part of Alberta the water falls or if the moisture comes from snow; we get the accumulated effect of all that water coming down the river. So it's important that we actually do look at what is a floodway and what that definition looks like after the most recent flood events took place.

It's also important to know that Medicine Hat, because we're last, has been faced with a number of floods over the past number of years. We don't have the luxury of waiting, and it's a bit of a quandary for us. We do know that we need to have some mitigation efforts done upstream because whatever happens upstream is going to have an effect on what happens to the water flow downstream. Again, because we can't wait, we have to take measures into our own hands.

There are some things that have been mentioned in and around Medicine Hat and at the flood symposium. One of those things is dam management and water management through those companies, whether they be private companies, large corporations, or something owned by a landowner. There has to be some co-ordination between all of these people to show that there is a concerted and cumulative effect of people working together for the safety of those downstream. I think that's one of the things that we all have to understand. What happens above, you know, in the upstream areas, has an impact downstream. We need to be aware that what we do could have a negative impact downstream. We're definitely evidence of that.

4:30

Dam management is one of the things that has been mentioned quite heavily in Medicine Hat. We have concerns that maybe there is not a whole lot of communication between all dam owners and operators, so hopefully that's part and parcel of deciding, you know, how we move forward here.

Also, off-site storage. When you're talking about controlling water, identifying floodways and how you're going to move forward with that, there are huge opportunities to work along the South Saskatchewan River itself to divert water into off-site storage. What would happen is that water would be diverted from the river and go into these off-site storage areas. As that allows water to exit from the river, it reduces the volume and the speed of flow. Then as the water level and flow reduce in the river, there would be a reverse flow back from the off-site storage, allowing it to flow back into the river. You'd have this easing effect which would help reduce the damaging effects that would actually impact Medicine Hat.

There are other areas that you can work with as well with diversion tactics. There are opportunities to actually divert water to other areas. Sometimes maybe that would be taking water into areas that would flood easily. It might take a little bit of groundwork and engineering, but in terms of identifying what floodway and flood fringe are, you would find low spots, you would find areas that are easily manipulated through groundwork, and you could use the natural topography of the area around the river to actually reduce the effects of water coming downstream. That's an important fact as well.

In Medicine Hat I know that there has been quite a bit of debate amongst locals as well as city council members past and those currently elected to the new council. Again, because we are the last major city, we get the water flow that comes down through all of the rivers and tributaries in the upstream area, and if mitigation isn't done upstream, if floodways and flood fringes aren't properly identified upstream, it doesn't matter; the water comes to us anyway. So we're dealt the tough decision: do we actually take action now to protect ourselves before mitigation is done upstream? It's to the point now that after many, many floods after many, many years we do have to.

Every time we get flooded, the damage seems to be worse, the cost of recovery seems to be greater, and it's a huge inconvenience for individuals. We had to displace about 20 per cent of our city during this last flood. It impacted about 3,000 homes and 10,000 people. If we had some mitigation efforts in place, we might have been able to reduce that or even eliminate the need to have people evacuate and, you know, upset their homes and their lives and cause upheaval.

So we're looking at doing berms and dikes, and the discussion around that in the floodway is: do you do permanent, or do you do temporary? We've had proposals on both, and that is going to be one of the decisions that our city council is going to have to undertake. Where do they want to put their money? Do they want to go permanent? Do they want to go temporary, something that's going to be removable? Or can they build something permanent into the infrastructure around the river? They can do walking pathways. They can set it up for infrastructure so that you can actually develop it commercially. You could do cafeterias and coffee shops. So there are opportunities to take this infrastructure and turn it into, actually, a bit of a money-making venture.

The problem that we face in Medicine Hat is waiting for these decisions to be made on: what is a floodway and a flood plain and a flood fringe? We do not have the ability to wait much longer. That's where we're going to be headed, down that path, in Medicine Hat with some tough council decisions. It is imperative that we have this good groundwork done so that we know what we're dealing with upstream the next time we have a flood.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw on amendment A3.

Mr. Wilson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise in support of this amendment. I believe that this amendment really is a critical piece to this bill. Quite frankly, I'm a little surprised that the government hasn't offered a single reaction, positive or otherwise, to this amendment.

You know, we're talking about the largest natural disaster in Canadian history. We're talking about putting caveats on homes, and we're doing it in a way that seems to be, to use some of the words that have been used in question period by our colleagues across, willy-nilly with the flood maps. Some of them haven't been updated in 20 years. Everyone who recognizes the science around the engineering of flood maps knows that a flood map will change or a river will change after a flood event, yet we're asking people to accept the consequences of flood maps that are decades old, that weren't updated after '97, that weren't updated after 2005, and that haven't been updated after this most recent event. It defies logic, Madam Chair, that we would be asking Albertans to consent to these laws as they are currently written, without understanding that we're going to be dealing with maps that are changing.

Moving forward, if we have another flood event, one would think, one would hope that we would be in a position where we could turn to Alberta taxpayers and say: we're going to update the maps again before we come around and tell you whether or not you're now going to be in a floodway or a flood fringe or if you're going to be covered or if you're not or if this is a one-time-only deal for you. It doesn't make much sense.

This amendment will ensure that decisions are based on current flood mapping. Again, we see not even a response coming from the government side around this. I would ask the members opposite to just merely consider that you were one of the individuals who owned property along these flood fringes and these floodways and that these maps hadn't been updated and you were being told one way or the other that if you were going to receive DRP funding, that this would be your one-and-only chance and that you would have a caveat placed on your land title based on a map that may or may not even be accurate anymore. Does that not seem just a tad ridiculous to anyone opposite?

This is a pretty big deal for most people. One would think that, if anything, anything at all, you'd just want to get it right. Apparently, that doesn't seem to be the case. We just want to get it passed. I don't know really what to say, Madam Chair. I kind of throw up my hands. We don't even have anyone from Municipal Affairs who seems to want to even address this. You know, I congratulate the side opposite for being passionate and caring about bills that are important to Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else that wishes to speak on amendment A3?

Mr. Mason: I'm happy to speak to amendment A3. A3 is very simple. It says that you have to have up-to-date flood maps. That means updating them after every flood. Courses of rivers change. Banks erode. You know, the situation changes. I think that had this been done before, which was recommended in 2006 in the report of a former member of the House, George Groeneveld, after similar floods, we would have had to pay far less in terms of compensation – obviously, you can't prevent these kinds of floods from happening even if you spend billions of dollars on flood mitigation with dams and weirs and bypasses and giant sewers and all of that engineering approach to this – and we would have had far less suffering on the part of people.

I was on a tour of High River a few weeks ago. I was there on the day that it flooded as well, although I obviously didn't stay very long. I was amazed at how much damage is still there to be cleaned up and that hundreds of people are still living in what you would have to call a camp at the old magnesium plant just outside of town.

There were good recommendations in former Member Groeneveld's report: that there should be updated maps, that they should be made accessible to the public, and that limitations on development in flood plains should be imposed. The government, of course, ignored all of those things. They have some flood maps, but they're only updating them very slowly, and nothing changed in terms of the rate of updating after that report. Basically, they ignored the report, and I think that Albertans have paid a price and the public treasury has paid a price.

I think this is an excellent amendment. Frankly, it's common sense. It requires the government to do its job. Maybe the government doesn't want to be required to do its job, but I think Albertans would like the government to do its job. Based on recent experience I think that the government would be wise to do its job and to pass an amendment to a bill that requires it to do its job; otherwise, what are they doing there? I think it's as simple as that, Madam Chair.

I would urge all of my colleagues to support this excellent amendment, that I think just makes very, very good sense. I wish that this amendment, or this change to the act, had been in place before the last flood because I think a lot of people would have suffered a lot less financially and emotionally as well.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. You actually looked in the other direction. That was pretty good. It threw me right off. I rise in support of this amendment. What I don't understand – I get the sense that the government is not supportive; I haven't heard anyone support it. The amendment requires that we base this on the flood fringe and floodway area maps updated after the most recent flood, and that's significant.

Now, a member just mentioned briefly to me that a floodway doesn't change much, but I can tell you, depending on your definition of floodway, that on the upriver side of Sundre the floodway has actually moved over a mile. So I can tell you that has changed a lot and that that has significantly changed the way the next flood is going to happen. It's significant in many aspects. What's missing here are not just the communities. We seem to be focused on the communities because, of course, that's where the damage would be calculated. But we have to be looking at the flood mapping upriver in a preventative way.

I'm going to give an example. Without any documentation to prove otherwise, we know that there is logging going on up in the mountains, particularly just outside of the Banff national park area. Those are the headwaters of the Red Deer River. Now, what we know about that logging is that it is significant up in that high country. The last flood – actually, it was the second-to-last flood, which was barely a year ago, so it would have been the 2012 flood in Sundre. The speed and volume of the water that came down in such a short period of time was what caused that pipe to break. It actually gouged out a new channel, deep enough to compromise an existing pipeline, and as many members would remember, we had an oil leak into the Red Deer River.

Now, what we know about that is that the runoff is normally absorbed into the forest or into the watershed. With the watershed disturbed, that water goes into the river faster; it goes into the channels faster. This is not science. This is straight physics in many ways. But with the volume of water that came down the Red Deer River, the speed at which the river rose and settled was significant. It was a record pace, and it caused a tremendous amount of damage.

So if we're mapping and we make accurate maps, we can better deal with the situation. What this is actually saying is that we're going to require that the mapping be accurate. That's a very simple way to describe this amendment. In other words, we're going to require that we use updated maps. That's logical. That makes sense. I haven't heard anything from the other side about why this would be a bad amendment. What is bad about having accurate flood maps? What is bad about updating the flood maps? We have to update them continuously.

One part of flood mitigation is the maintenance of flood mitigation, which is that we will need to dredge channels, we will need to construct berms, and we will need to construct spurs. That's all part of flood mitigation. The flood mitigation measures that we want to undertake may not necessarily happen right at the community level. It might be more beneficial, if we had accurate mapping, to put that flood mitigation further upriver. That might have the better cost-effectiveness of putting flood mitigation procedures in, and they might actually be more effective in preventing floods.

Of course, as you've heard from some of the people who have a lot of expertise in real estate, the whole concept of putting on caveats needs to be based on accurate flood mapping data. What happens if there is no caveat now, but then we discover there's going to be because we didn't have accurate flood mapping and things changed? How does compensation take place then for the investor, the homeowner, the property owner, whatever person that is investing or buying? There's nothing really listed out here for how we're going to deal with these issues, particularly if it's the direct result of inaccurate mapping. That's the key. That's the clue, that it would be the direct result of inaccurate mapping. So it seems logical that we would require accurate flood mapping. It only seems to make sense.

I can't see a downside in amending Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, to make sure that we have accurate mapping, that it is required by statute, by law, that we do this, that we implement it. It gives, I guess, some credibility to the whole process when we require that.

So I definitely support the motion. We want the whole flood mitigation process to work, and the foundation for it to work has to be based on accurate mapping. No matter what argument you make on this bill, it all circles back to having accurate mapping. And that mapping is never permanent; it always has to be updated.

I'll be quite honest. If I'm going to be critical of the amendment: maybe not every flood because sometimes that doesn't necessarily cause a map to need to be updated. Just a high-water season can create a situation where you'd need to update the maps. There are other circumstances that happen, particularly when you get into what I call these flood plains. Actually, west of Sundre you might as well call it a gravel delta. It's extremely wide. One tree drops, and the channel of the river changes, and it grinds out a new channel without a flood even taking place.

Clearly, there are situations where the whole flood plain is now altered. We have situations where man-made alterations take place with the extraction of gravel. We have a lot of gravel pits in our area. Once they start in this process, if all of a sudden the river moves over, boom, you now have a change in your flood mapping, and you did this without a flood. You did this without a flood. It changed the actual channel. It doesn't take long for a river to carve another channel. If you don't believe that, I will take anyone up the Red Deer River and show you how it happens, because the signs are over the place.

We know this exists. What it tells us is that the accuracy of the mapping is absolutely critical to getting the job done right. That's all it is. It's absolutely critical.

With that, I support this motion, and I'd ask members to at least keep an open mind and support this motion and vote for it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, again I want to echo the thoughts of my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I would just implore that, if no one else, at least the Member for Calgary-Bow has something to say about this; at least the Member for Banff-Cochrane must have something to say about this; at least the members from Fort McMurray must have something to say about this. This directly impacts your constituents. They voted to put you here so that you would be their voice. You have an opportunity to use it. Allow me to challenge you to do just that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Casey: Thank you, Madam Chairman. By the way, I was standing when you jumped up. Just so you know that it was you that cut me off so that I couldn't speak. Anyway, that's fine. I accept your apology.

I really won't take a lot of time here. I won't bother to give you my version of armchair expert. I think we've heard enough of that this afternoon anyway. What I will talk to is the amendment. I know it's out of character, but I will talk to the amendment. First of all, this applies to all of Alberta, not just southern Alberta, not just the affected areas. What is the most recent flood event that we're going to base our mapping on? The one in Fort McMurray? The one next year that's somewhere else? I mean, it's a ridiculous amendment. The most recent flood event. What is that? It's like saying: the most recent time that the wind blew. Where?

The next part is under (2)(c.1)(i), that talks about "prescribing or describing the measures to be taken to reduce or mitigate potential flood hazards." Okay. That's all it's talking to, a regulation that enables you to prescribe and describe measures to be taken to reduce mitigation potential. So if you want to do something around floodways and floodway mapping, this is absolutely the wrong place to do it.

The second part here under (ii) talks to "governing the procedures applicable to and the proof required for the reimbursement of costs." In fact, if you were going to propose an amendment like this, that's where it should be.

To me the amendment is worded wrong, and it's being recommended to be put in the wrong place. Therefore, I won't support it because it has no basis for support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is the right place for this amendment, and it actually makes sense. I'm not sure there's a wrong place for this amendment, to be perfectly honest. The idea of accurate mapping applies everywhere across the bill. I'm not sure there's any bad spot to require accurate mapping.

But I will tell you that where it talks about prescribing and describing measures to be taken, that's the key. Measures to be taken based upon what? Accurate mapping. You can actually put "accurate mapping" or "updated mapping" in a number of different places in the bill, and it works absolutely fantastic in that sense on the applicability of getting the job done. That's absolutely essential, I think, to any type of flood mitigation process. As I stated earlier, understanding how to deal with or actually putting into effect what you want to do to mitigate future floods, to mitigate flood damage has to rely upon accurate data at all times. The problem with rivers is that they are a living ecosystem that does change. That does change.

It changes in the hon. member's riding. The community that he comes from has grown so fast and so quick. I remember going through that community – it seems like not too long ago – and just watching the buildings go up and how fast it grew. That changed that whole – just that one little microcosm of that river. Of course, we did see the damage from that because when that river came through this time, it washed out the backyards. Now it did tremendous damage. Those photos are readily available to show all of that. They were all part of this massive 2013 flood.

Clearly, dealing with rivers is not a simple task. I don't want to leave that interpretation out here. It can be complicated, and it can be tremendously expensive, but it still all comes back to accurate mapping.

As I said earlier, it may not be based on just the last flood because a flood by definition is not necessarily just high water, and a flood by definition is not the spring runoff. Anyone who understands rivers knows that you get this one simple – and Sundre is a perfect example, with the Red Deer River. I understand that river well, so I can use that as the example. One tree causes a natural dam, changes the direction of the flow, the direction of the current, which begins to carve a new channel. You have to understand that. And I call it a gravel delta for no other reason than it's about 20 miles wide. It's not one mile wide or a hundred yards wide. That river over the centuries has moved considerably and over just the last two years has moved over a mile.

Now, the difference over the centuries is that now we have millions and millions if not billions of dollars of capital and real estate investments and businesses that are now within range of these natural rivers. Without accurate mapping, how do we accurately deal with the problems at hand and put the proper flood mitigation measures in?

One of the things that I've been involved with in my community of Sundre is that we know we need berms and spurs. We, or at least a good part of the community, would like a dam somewhere where there is a place where we could retain water in a high runoff time. That is something that is not unanimous by any stretch of the imagination. There are others that do not want that. They don't want dams. But the fact is that it is part of the flood mitigation process.

The other thing is that they need maintenance. At different places along the river, as the gravel fills up the floodway or channel, you need to dredge that. That has to be dredged on a regular basis, whether it's once a year, twice a year, once every five years, whatever the science behind it dictates. It has to be done, and that would be a part of your mapping because your mapping would also take into consideration the quantity of water and the speed of the flow, and that's significant.

Again, I would ask members to support this motion. This is a good spot, and there are multiple spots that require accurate mapping. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just wanted to say a few words. Essentially, there are two kinds of mitigation. There is the mitigation that is done to a house as it's being rebuilt. Now, this kind of mitigation is the kind of mitigation that you need done right away. The reason you need it done right away is because people are otherwise holding up their plans for their house, for their rebuilding, for what they would be doing with the whole decision-making in their private life. So it's really important that we move fast on this piece of it.

We could wait two years, three years to remap all of the rivers in southern Alberta, and we would be holding up these people in terms of how they mitigate their house. To have to wait for the new maps each time to be able to rebuild people's lives is just not reasonable. It just won't work. So that's why it's important that we move forward with the old maps.

On the other hand, there are also major mitigation projects. Those mitigation projects are ones that will be based on solid, recent research, recent analysis of the whole river. Those projects are projects that can be based upon the whole river and where that river has changed or might change in the future. So that kind of decision-making can be made over a little bit longer term, but to be able to stop – to stop – all of this rebuilding of people's homes while we wait for the rivers to be remapped is just not what the people, at least in my constituency, would like.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Madam Chair, may I move, with the House's consent, that if there is a division, we shorten the bells to one minute?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member has moved that we shorten the time between the bells to one minute.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, I just want to respond to my hon. colleagues across, and I appreciate them standing up and at least having their voice. I may not necessarily agree with what they said, but I do respect them for having the courage to stand up and speak for their constituents.

I disagree with what the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow suggested, that by updating the flood maps, we would be withholding or stopping or delaying any of the rebuilding that's currently going on. I think that's, quite frankly, a rather erroneous assertion. What this is about is making sure that the constituents that are in Calgary-Bow along the Bow River are being asked whether or not they want a caveat placed on their title if they accept disaster relief funding or that, at least, if they're going to have to make that choice by the end of November, they do it based on up-to-date, correct information based on the most recent flood.

To the Member for Banff-Cochrane: I have a couple of suggestions. One, this government has no problem defining things in regulation, so if you want a definition for a flood event, throw it in regulation. If you want to talk about what a flood event means, perhaps go knock on some doors in Cochrane, and when a creek comes ripping through their backyard, see if that qualifies as a flood event or not. I would suggest that your constituents in both Cochrane and Exshaw would strongly agree that that is, in fact, a flood event and that perhaps if they're being asked to make a similar choice as to whether or not they're going to accept funding, they would like to at least have the proper maps.

But if you don't believe that that's the way that this should be done, then that's great. I invite you to stand up and, you know, vote against this amendment. It'll be yourselves that will have to defend it to the constituents that you represent. That's the way this works. Again, I appreciate you having the courage to stand up and speak to your convictions or what you at least believe that your constituents want, and I thank you for at least engaging in the debate, which is more than I can say for anyone else, including members who are actually associate ministers of this file.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Allen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and I'd like to start by thanking the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw for acknowledging to the Legislative Assembly the importance of my riding of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Perhaps because he was absent last night, he may have just missed that I did stand up and speak to this bill.

Regarding this particular amendment, I appreciate the member bringing this amendment forward. I can understand the premise around what he's trying to achieve here; however, I'm still a big believer that this particular bill is a housekeeping bill which is intended to bring amendments to both the emergency act and the Municipal Government Act, and the place for these types of amendments and place for detail is going to be in the regulations themselves.

I believe that to bring this down as far as having a flood fringe based on most recent flood events – I'm no expert in flood mapping or what water levels are or even municipal land development itself, Madam Chair, but I am aware that they have two major terms, and they are the 40-year flood event and a 100-year flood event. This year's in Fort McMurray was determined to be a 100-year flood event. Our municipality in their development standards does have levels established in the flood zone that determine what is a 40-year and what is a 100-year.

I still believe that for us to have detail that is across the board, throughout the province, would be inappropriate. Leave that type of jurisdiction where it belongs, and that is with the municipalities and the emergency management folks that work for future floods. Future floods cannot always necessarily be based on what a recent flood was. I don't believe we'll have another flood like that for another 100 years.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just wanted to make sure that we didn't leave with that little piece of misinformation out there. November 30 is the time when people have to get their application in for the first time.

Mr. Wilson: They have to make a decision.

Ms DeLong: No, they don't have to make a decision. That is not true. They have to get that first application in and that application – even after they get a cheque, they are still not committed. They can even cash that cheque, and they are still not committed. They still have time to even cash that cheque and then pay the government back. The decision for actually doing this is way out there, okay? I know that there is some pressure on that November 30 for people to get their application in, and that is pretty scary for them because they think that they have to make that decision, but they don't. All they have to do is get that application in, and then they can decide after that. Once, finally, the DRP has responded to them and they've gotten all of the information, at that point they can make that decision, or still they can even put it off. But that decision point for them is not November 30. They've just got to get that application in. It doesn't even have to be complete. They don't have to have all of their insurance and all of that in. They've just got to get it in.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just wanted to respond very briefly to some of the comments I heard from the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, specifically that the amendment was not worthy of support because you can never decide what a flood event is. Well, Madam Chair, I think that doesn't make any sense to me. There obviously has to be a practical interpretation put on the wording if this becomes part of legislation as there has to be for all legislation. I can just off the top of my head provide a definition, and that is: any flood event that actually changes the floodable area, that changes the map needs to be mapped promptly.

We didn't have good maps for this flood, and many people bought homes and invested in areas that were very, very much in the way of flooding because of it, because things had changed. What the hon. member is saying, as I interpret it, is that we just don't have any reason to update our maps. That flies completely in the face of the disaster that we've just gone through. We need to update our maps whenever the flooding area is changed as a result of a natural event.

I think the implication of what he's suggesting is that we can continue to do what we've done. I mean, nobody has compelled the government to update flood maps, so they haven't updated flood maps. I'd like to ask the hon. member: how's that working for your constituents so far?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Don't sound so excited. First off, I just want to take an opportunity to correct an earlier statement as I was addressing the Member for Banff-Cochrane. It was the town of Canmore that I was referring to, not Cochrane, that had the river racing through their backyards.

To the Member for Calgary-Bow: again, I appreciate your comments about the November 30 deadline. I would challenge you, then, on a comment that you made earlier, which was that this had to be done right away because we have deadlines and we can't stop the process. If DRP has to receive just an application by November 30 and then they're going to make decisions after the fact, wouldn't it be nice for your constituents to just have accurate flood maps when their decision point had to come, when that had to be made?

I see that you're not paying attention, and I don't much expect a response, but I just do believe that it would be incumbent upon this government to ensure that those flood maps are correct because they are asking hundreds . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the last reference you made is not acceptable. Please refrain . . .

Mr. Wilson: Oh. I withdraw. I am sorry if saying that she wasn't paying attention is inappropriate. I'm happy to withdraw that comment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. [interjections]

Hon. members, the Member for Calgary-Shaw has the floor. He withdrew his comment.

You may proceed.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you. Again, I was not meaning to offend the precedents of this House. That was not my intention. I do apologize.

I would just like to, again, ask the member if she would respond. What was the rush that you were referring to earlier around getting this legislation passed if the application has to be in by November 30 and then decision points are following after? Why not have those accurate flood maps for the time in which the decision needs to be made?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else that wishes to speak?

Ms DeLong: I just wanted to let you know that doing the flood mapping is actually a major effort, okay? Essentially, you've got to take data points all the way across the river, and you've got to do it for hundreds of miles. It's major work that needs to be done, and it's not something that can be done in essentially a few months in regard to mitigating people's houses.

The other thing is that we need to always be working forward rather than back, and whatever is the real state right now is what people are making their decisions on when it comes to buying a new house or building a new house. Those kinds of decisions are based on: from here forward.

Now, anybody who is buying a house in Alberta now knows that there has been a flood, that the rivers have moved, so there is some sort of sensitivity out in the public right now to this. They do know that the rivers need to be remapped, and, yes, it does need to be done as soon as possible. You won't get any argument from me in terms of getting it done, but in terms of getting the money out to the people and their being able to make those decisions as to how they're going to move forward with their lives, that's got to be based on data that's already there. It's got to be based on the maps that are already there, rather than the new maps that will be developed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Final question. Member for Calgary-Bow, if you accept that the data is currently wrong, based on your last statement that the rivers and the floodways have changed, why are you suggesting that we do not remap these floodways?

Ms DeLong: It isn't that the maps were wrong; it's that the rivers change, okay? The rivers change. The thing is that those flood lines were pretty well exactly right. It's only my part of the river that I know. For that part of the river those maps were pretty well exactly right, within inches. Okay? This flood event was not a hundred-year flood. Simply that. It was not a hundred-year flood. It was much more than a hundred-year flood. Yes, it did flood, and yes, there was a floodway, but the bottom line is that we just need to move ahead. We don't need to move back to find out what the map used to be. All we need to do is move ahead. So we use the current data; we move ahead with the current data. In the meantime, yes – absolutely yes – those rivers need to be re-evaluated and redrawn. They have changed. We are very aware of that. We are working on that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mr. Anderson: So what you're saying is that the maps that are currently in existence right now were not wrong. It's just that the flooded river changed. Therefore, we need to go forward with the information that we have at our disposal and create new maps that reflect that change. Is that what's being said here?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thought I made myself clear when I spoke earlier, but clearly everybody has their own point of view.

I must counsel and encourage that this isn't Jonestown. Don't drink the Kool-Aid. It isn't Reverend Jones that's telling you to do that. You've got to listen and think independently. You've got to realize that we're operating from a paradigm that does not reflect reality. Who here would go on a trip with an outdated map? Who here would take a map and say, "I have to get somewhere with this map, but I'm in Calgary and I'm trying to use a map of Edmonton." You won't get there. We're arguing from a paradigm that makes absolutely no sense at all. You can't make decisions going forward with an old map that's going to lead you back the same old way. Keep doing the same things and expect different results: that's one definition of insanity. I know that you're not insane. I know that you're bright people.

Mr. Denis: Thanks for that.

Mr. Bikman: Well, I had to let you know that I realize it, evidence occasionally to the contrary and all too frequently, I might add.

This is a chance to do the right thing, to start from the right point, to build what needs to be done. "Mitigate" is the right word. We want to reduce the expense going forward of having this happen again. The fact that it has happened again several times without the proper steps being taken is an indication that we ain't learning from the past, so we're repeating it. Don't let us repeat that. Have the courage to stand. Represent your constituents. Represent the taxpayers of Alberta by seeing that this is done properly. We have the opportunity. Seize the day. Carpe diem. Let's do the right thing.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. The first point I want to make to the hon. member from Calgary is that this is not just Calgary. This applies provincially. I will say that the community of Sundre since 2005 has had three 100-year floods. This idea that it's a hundred-year flood seems to have lost its significance if we're having three hundred-year floods in a five-year period. That doesn't make sense.

Clearly, there are some issues here, but it doesn't take away from the fact that accurate mapping is absolutely essential. To say that in one area it didn't change but by an inch but I can show that in another area it's changed by more than a mile – and that's mapped locally – that's significant. Where else has it changed, particularly in the headwaters? We can't just focus on where people want to put their homes because what happens in the headwaters is going to affect what's going to happen downriver. As the members for Medicine-Hat and Drumheller-Stettler have already said, they're further downriver. It is all about the entire basin, from the headwaters right to where it leaves the province, heading either to the Arctic or – well, it's always to the Arctic, I guess, on my side of the province.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A3 to Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act? The hon. Member for Little Bow. [interjections]

Mr. Donovan: I know. It was so close.

Thank you, Madam Chair. When I went to the flood symposium, this did come up. From my years on municipal council it was always considered a 1-in-100-year flood or a 1-in-300-year flood. Then it was brought up there that it's a 1 per cent chance in 100 times. Could somebody on that side confirm that that's maybe the new lingo we should use? Instead of 1 in 100 years, it should be a 1 per cent chance in 100 times. I think that needs to be clarified because everybody keeps tying it to 1 in 100 years or 1 in 300 years. That's just something I wouldn't mind having clarified from that side if anybody over there happened to have the correct answer.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A3?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A3 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:22 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

For the motion:

Anderson	Mason	Stier
Anglin	Notley	Strankman
Bikman	Pedersen	Towle
Blakeman	Rowe	Wilson
Donovan	Saskiw

Against the motion:

Allen	Fraser	Oberle
Amery	Fritz	Olesen
Bhardwaj	Horne	Pastoor
Bhullar	Horner	Quadri
Brown	Jansen	Quest

Denis	Lukaszuk	Xiao
Dorward	McQueen
Totals:	For – 14	Against – 38

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. At this point I'd move to adjourn debate on Bill 27.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: Shall progress on Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, be reported when the committee rises? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 31

Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister for Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I certainly appreciate the opportunity to rise in Committee of the Whole on Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. I had the opportunity to listen throughout second reading debate with much interest and have appreciated the supportive comments and questions from many in the House.

Madam Chair, Bill 31 has also received support other than in the House from some of Alberta's environmental experts. For example, Dr. Schindler recently commented that he is optimistic that this legislation will work and happy to certainly see it moving forward. Dr. Howard Tennant, chair of the Environmental Monitoring Management Board, has also been quoted as saying: "The agency is the right step forward towards ensuring that science-based and science-led monitoring of the environment – air, land, water and bio-diversity is taking place."

We know how essential it is, Madam Chair, to have an arm's-length environmental monitoring agency to ensure that this important work remains open, transparent, and based on science and facts. That's what Albertans have told us, and that's why we have worked hard to get this done right.

I am pleased to rise and address some of the questions and concerns that have arisen regarding the legislation during second reading. Many comments regarding Bill 31 have touched on social licence. Social licence is an extremely important factor in the sustainable development of our province's resources because it's about the trust of the people of Alberta. In fact, it's one of the reasons that we are establishing this arm's-length, science-based monitoring agency. It's an honest effort to be open and transparent with Albertans, and I emphasize again that this agency will be based on science. This is why this agency will be arm's length, because this government values science in its environmental monitoring and decision-making.

However, the Alberta environmental monitoring, evaluation, and reporting agency, AEMERA, is far from this government's only means of monitoring the effect of development on Alberta's landscape. Enhanced environmental monitoring of the oil sands area has already begun with the joint oil sands monitoring program, where industry has been paying up to $50 million per year since 2012. In addition, we have launched a web-based data portal to support the joint plan. The portal provides members of the scientific community, stakeholders, and the public timely access to data and information collected from the joint oil sands monitoring program.

Another topic that was brought up by several members opposite was the supposed lack of information regarding how the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act will, for instance, reduce pollution levels. Madam Chair, this is not the intent of this legislation. This act's sole purpose is the establishment of an arm's-length monitoring agency. Data and information collected by the agency will be used to enable the development of evidence-based policy that will protect our environment, and that same data will be available to the public or any group that wants to use it.

Contrary to some of the comments made during second reading, AEMERA will be open and transparent. AEMERA will use water and technology platforms and concepts to share data and information with Albertans. It will provide data and information that is unbiased by government. Everything will be released, even if it means that government hasn't met an outcome or needs to take action. AEMERA will regularly and openly provide data and information through a variety of mechanisms in a variety of formats. Mechanisms could include AEMERA's website and published reports. The data and information could include streamlining near real-time data, specific data sets, and information bulletins, to name a few, and these will be made publicly available.

AEMERA is far from the government's first or only program monitoring our environment. Extensive monitoring already exists in Alberta, but this new agency will enhance the way it is done by making it integrated and co-ordinated, accessible and transparent, and under scientific oversight. In the past monitoring occurred in isolation. The new system will integrate monitoring of air, land, water, and biodiversity so that interactions can be better understood. Monitoring will also be integrated spatially so that the effects within a region can be determined. This is an improvement and an enhancement of our existing monitoring programs, and it will be an extremely beneficial addition to Alberta's efforts to develop resources in a sustainable and environmentally responsible manner.

This legislation does not define goals or targets because this legislation is about establishing an agency that provides data and information. This legislation will enable Alberta's integrated resource management system, or IRMS, which is about ensuring that we understand the impact that growth has on our communities, our environment, and on each other as a whole. This environmental monitoring system is the foundation of our integrated resource management framework. As a participant of the IRMS, AEMERA will monitor according to the outcomes established for the IRMS. Enforcement will continue to be under the purview of the Alberta Energy Regulator and ESRD. ESRD and the regulator will make use of the credible data and information provided by AEMERA, and all parties will work cooperatively to ensure the protection of Alberta's environment.

Another question raised in second reading was funding. While funding was not specifically addressed in AEMERA's legislation, recent amendments to EPEA in the spring session allowed the minister of the day to establish environmental monitoring programs and assess fees for their support. A regulation is being developed that will establish a monitoring program, the joint oil sands monitoring program agreed to with Environment Canada, and allow assessment of fees for its support. This will collect the $50 million that the oil sands industry agreed to pay to support regional ambient environmental monitoring. The monitoring activities will be funded by industry, but industry is not doing the collection of data, evaluation, or reporting. This will all be done by the agency.

As well, government currently invests millions of dollars in environmental monitoring in Alberta. This annual investment will be transferred to AEMERA to support ongoing monitoring, evaluation, and reporting across Alberta. As regional plans are developed and additional ambient environmental monitoring needs are identified, it may be appropriate to establish monitoring programs for other regions of the province and potentially assess fees for their support.

Concerns were also raised regarding the involvement of aboriginal communities in this legislation. We are committed to engaging with aboriginal communities regarding how they want to participate with us on environmental monitoring initiatives. Their participation will be an important part of the success of this initiative. Our desired long-term outcome is a strategic working relationship between the monitoring agency and First Nations and Métis organizations, from which monitoring plans can be strengthened by both involving aboriginal communities and applying their traditional knowledge. There are three main objectives to the relationships: to create awareness and understanding of monitoring programs amongst aboriginal groups, to achieve informed participation on monitoring advisory committees, and to integrate aboriginal priorities and concerns, including traditional knowledge, into monitoring programs.

Finally, I want to address the most commonly raised question by members with regard to the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act: who will be on the agency's board? Opposition members are concerned that there will be political bias in these appointments, so I want to be clear about the criteria that I as Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development will use in determining AEMERA's board. Considerations will include a solid understanding of environmental issues in Alberta within an international context; familiarity with the work and recommendations of the Alberta environmental monitoring program and the Alberta Environmental Monitoring Working Group; expertise in environmental science; commitment to continuous improvement; organizational governance; financial management; resource development; communications; aboriginal and community engagement in and implementation of community-based TEK programs; appropriate geographic representation; provincial and regional diversity; and certainly previous board experience.

I also want to be clear about who will not be considered and why. Often legislation establishing provincial corporations is silent on criteria that might make someone not eligible to be a member of a board of directors. It is often left to the discretion of those initially establishing the corporation and then to subsequent boards to define the criteria. However, in the spirit of this legislation, we want to be as transparent as possible. In order to clearly establish the arm's-length nature of this organization, it is important to include clauses that prevent public servants and elected officials from being appointed to the board.

I also want to be clear about the makeup of the science advisory panel. The science advisory panel will be made up of recognized environmental science experts who have made major impacts in the field of their expertise. The scope of their work is to critically review the scientific basis and components of the monitoring system for which AEMERA is responsible.

Madam Chair, establishing the agency is another step by this government to assure future generations from here and around the world that Alberta will continue to enjoy its natural resources for work, for development, and for enjoyment. This is yet another step that this government has taken and that our Premier has taken to demonstrate to Albertans and to the world that we are committed to environmental stewardship and responsible resource development.

I certainly appreciate the questions that have been raised during second reading, and I look forward to more debate as we move into Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and my thanks to the deputy House leader, the Minister of Justice, and also to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for allowing me to queue-jump, so to speak.

I do have an amendment, which is at the table. If I could ask that that be passed out, and while that's happening, I'll address a few of the comments that the minister just made.

First, I'd like to thank her for actually coming into the Assembly and addressing the concerns that were raised. That's not always common practice, and I do appreciate her doing that. There are a number of things that she mentioned that, in fact, aren't in the bill, so as we start to address the amendments that are coming, I'll ask her to keep in mind that, in large part, that's why the amendments are coming. Although she says that she will use certain criteria to appoint people to the board and to the science board, nothing holds the current minister or any successive ministers to doing that. It's not in the legislation. She can change her mind, and anybody else isn't held to it. I am going to bring forward an amendment – and the chairperson will signal me when appropriate – that is essentially setting out criteria to ensure that the people on the science board are scientists.

One other thing I would like to address is the money. Now, we're not allowed to do amendments that cause the government to spend money, so you won't see any of those amendments, but it is a question for us. We've been told repeatedly that the $50 million coming from the industry is for the oil sands sector. In response to my question during the briefing I was told that the money that is currently being used for SRD monitoring – that would be $51,272,000 under environmental monitoring – would be used for monitoring in the rest of the province. I've just heard the minister say something different, so I look forward to clarification on that.

Now, may I proceed with the amendment?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, please proceed with the amendment. This is known as amendment A1 to Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Essentially, this is amending section 18 of the bill, which appears on page 8, around the science advisory panel. As it stands now, all that the legislation says, therefore all that the government is obligated to do, is that the agency would "appoint a Science Advisory Panel, consisting of not more than 8 members" and that the science panel's mandate is to "review the scientific basis" and that the agency may set expenses. That's not good enough for me. I think it's really important that we have scientists on a science panel.

My amendment is adding to section 18 by saying:

(4) The Science Advisory Panel shall be composed of members qualified in the field of environmental science, designated by the board of directors, taking into account the scientific experience required by the Science Advisory Panel to assist the Agency in its areas of activity.

More than that, I think it's really important – and I ask it of every committee that I sit on – that anyone is able to find out how a committee or a panel arrived at its decision. Therefore, any documents and, in fact, the advice itself or the recommendations should appear on public websites, so the second part of the amendment says:

(5) The advice of the Science Advisory Panel shall be published immediately on the Agency's public website.

The wording for the first section I took directly out of the EU environmental monitoring committee and the wording for setting it up, which uses that same language about being qualified in the field and that they will bring the scientific experience that will be required by the board to fulfill its mandate. It's very careful wording that has been chosen there, and I think it will serve the government well.

It's very hard for me to sell this bill to anyone in the community when they say, "Well, who's on the science panel?" and you say, "Oh, any old person." That's what it says. It just has to be eight people. Now, I understand that the minister has said that she's going to make sure that they actually have a science background. Good for her, but once again it has to be in the legislation. She can change her mind. Her successors can change their minds or never adhere to it. It needs to be in the legislation that scientists are on the science advisory panel. I don't think I can put that any more plainly or strongly.

I shared my amendments with the minister and with the Government House Leader last week, so this is no surprise to her. I did ask that it be taken to caucus and asked for caucus's support. I don't do that very often, so I hope it was worth the effort to do so.

I will let others speak to this, but this is one of the major tenets that is missing from this bill, and if it's to be credible, they must take scientists onto the science advisory panel.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A1 to Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others who wish to speak to Bill 31 in Committee of the Whole? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. The hon. minister made a couple of comments, and I hope we're going to get to address a lot of that. In the context that the comments were made, they're good comments, but they're not supported by what's in the legislation.

What we'd like to do is actually get this into the legislation and sort of formalize it so that the legislation effects what we just heard from the hon. minister.

The first thing I want to deal with is the whole issue of this arm's-length agency. But before I get to my first amendment, I just want to point out one thing. The minister made a good comment that this is about monitoring, not protecting the environment. I would suggest to you, then, that it's titled wrong. It says, "Protecting Alberta's Environment Act." It should be "Monitoring Alberta's Environment Act" because there's nothing in here dealing with increasing the protection although having good scientific data is a good thing. I don't think anyone here would argue with that unless we want to go back to the floodway argument real quick. The fact of the matter is that this is not a protection act. It is a monitoring act.

With that, I do want to address the subject of arm's length. Madam Chairman, I'd like to bring forth my first amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. We'll pause for a moment while we distribute that amendment to all other members. This will be known as amendment A2 to Bill 31.

Hon. member, we can now continue.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you very much. Madam Chair, the minister in that eloquent speech talked about an arm's-length agency. What I'm moving here is that the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act be amended in section 4 by striking out "in consultation with the Minister." Now, far be it from me not to want to consult with the minister, but the language here and where it's located is in, actually, a very bad spot, or it's not a very good spot. I don't want to say that it's a bad spot. It's just not a good spot. What we want is to keep this agency at arm's length.

Section 4 talks about the agency reporting "at a frequency determined by the Agency" and, the section says, "in consultation with the Minister." What we would like it to say is: at a frequency determined by the agency, the agency shall report to the public on the condition of the environment in Alberta. In other words, we want to remove the politics.

Now, far be it that this government may interfere when a report actually comes forward to the public – we don't want to get into the pipeline report or the report on wait times – but what we want is independence of this agency to issue their reports when they want to issue their reports without any interference politically. I'm not making an allegation that anyone has ever been accused of interfering politically although I suspect the record might support that going back some length of time. It may be even more than the length of this government to the previous government. But if we truly want an arm's-length agency to operate independent of the ministry, they need that flexibility not to be influenced by the minister when these reports come forward.

I would have to say that this does not prevent the minister from being informed, and it does not prevent the consultation with the ministry itself, but what it does do is that it allows this agency to . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it is now 6 o'clock, and pursuant to Standing Order 4(4) the committee stands recessed until 7:30 p.m.

Thank you.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 31 Protecting Alberta's Environment Act

The Deputy Chair: We have under consideration Bill 31, amendment A2.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, please.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment to section 4: the whole purpose of the amendment is to remove the illusion of independence and create the substantive existence of independence, which is that the agency on its own merits will decide the frequency and shall report to the public on the condition of the environment. That's important. We're at a juncture right now. Does the ministry really want to project and make real that this agency is independent and not just an arm of the minister or under the jurisdiction in the sense that it takes direction from the ministry?

The purpose of the bill is to provide an independent agency that has some credibility in monitoring the environment. To make that happen, then, the actual ministry cannot have even a perceived control over the agency. They must be able to act independently. Throughout the bill in various parts we're going to make amendments to make sure that we create the actual existence of independence and not just have the illusion or the hollow words that the agency will be independent.

This amendment is designed, first, to address the issue of reporting and make the issue of reporting a function of the new agency that's created, and they will make their determination. Now, the most important part about removing "in consultation with the Minister": that does not say that they cannot consult with the minister. That would not be true. That's not a good interpretation. It does not prevent consulting with the minister; it just removes the legislative mandate. The minister still will be able to consult. The ministry will still be able to engage in conversation, but it just will not have a legislative mandate on the agency to consult with the minister before it actually issues a report on the environment to the public. That's significant.

Again, what this amendment does is that it creates the actual independence of the agency to act on its own accord and to do so in good faith. That is actually listed in the behaviour of the board as they're appointed, so that's not going to be the issue. I just want to make that clear because I get a concern sometimes that people read into something more than what's there. In this case, just removing the mandate that the agency must consult with the minister first before it issues a scientific report is not necessary. They're welcome to consult, but it should not be a legislative mandate.

I ask and I encourage all members to support this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A2 to Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. Are we voting on this amendment?

The Deputy Chair: No. This is on amendment A2 to Bill 31.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'll wait.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: The deep south, y'all.

The Deputy Chair: The deep south.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in support of this little amendment.

Mr. Anglin: Little? It's a big amendment.

Mr. Bikman: Well, a very important amendment, small in size but huge in importance. Thank you for that clarification, hon. member, hon. heckler.

Perception is reality, like it or not. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar isn't a pirate but looks like a pirate, so some people might think he's a pirate. He's got a surplus of hair, but he won't sell me any. Anyway, it's important that we perceive things as they really are.

An Hon. Member: Argh.

Mr. Bikman: Argh. Yeah. There you go.

I think it's all right to set a frame of reference that might require the agency, AEMERA, to report but not to consult in the sense that they're getting direction. I'm not sure if that's what was intended, but I think there's a danger that it could be perceived that way. I know – I assume I know – I believe that part of the reason for this is that we will be perceived globally, internationally, and even domestically as doing all that we can to protect our environment.

It's important that things be measured. A wise man, Tom Monson, once said: "When performance is measured, performance improves. When performance is measured and reported, the rate of [improvement] accelerates." So it's important that this information will be reported in a timely manner because, again, this is, in essence, feedback to those who perhaps are emitting greenhouse gases or other pollutants that we're concerned about in protecting our environment.

The goal, I think, would be for this agency to report things in a timely manner so that the information could be used to course-correct, to change behaviour. For feedback to be useful, it needs to be focused – in other words, as specific as possible – and timely. I think that it's important that we monitor if the purpose is to convince our trading partners or those we want to trade with that we are in fact doing all that we can or all that we should be doing to protect our environment, to reduce our carbon footprint. We want to make sure that the impression is accurate. By cleaning up some of the language such as this, that same purpose, to get the information to the minister and her department in a timely manner, could be done without requiring them to consult in the sense that it means that there is maybe the perception that they're being directed, that they can't proceed until they've consulted.

I think that's the intent of our amendment. I believe it's a worthwhile amendment because we're talking, again, about how we're going to be perceived by our global trading partners. That's critical. We need access to those markets. We have had good news today about the possibility of being able to create another outlet for our landlocked resources to the west coast. It's critical to get into that market as soon as we can.

At one of the committees that I sit on, the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, we've been receiving a lot of information from knowledgeable players in this field about the importance of being able to get to market soon. Of course, we want to get to as many markets as we can. That's why we're looking to all the coasts and with Keystone or something like that to the U.S. We need access to the markets. The benefit to us is huge. The more resources we can get to market, the more revenue the providers make, the more royalties that we get, the more taxes that are paid by the companies generating and the people that are working for those companies. So this exercise is an important exercise.

I think it's equally important that we do all we can to make sure that the perception is accurate, that it, in fact, is an arm's-length agency. Calling something an arm's-length agency doesn't make it so. It isn't just the name or just the statement as made in 2(2): "the Agency is not an agent of the Crown." But the Crown appoints everybody that's on it, and the Crown requires that the agency consult with the minister.

There's a mixed message there. I think we want to be very clear with our trading partners and potential partners that we are, in fact, serious about measuring and monitoring the impact that our industries, our energy providers have on the environment and that we are going to provide that information free of meddling and intervention. We don't want that report to be interfered with in any way. We want it to come the way that it should be, exactly stating the facts, so that our customers can say that Alberta is in fact leading the pack, like we all like to claim, in terms of controlling greenhouse gases and controlling other pollutants.

I'm certainly in favour of the bill in general but with the friendly amendments that we're offering, not to make your life more difficult and not to delay the process but to help ensure that it accomplishes what we all agree we need to, which is the most unfettered access we can possibly have to the global markets.

Thank you.

7:40

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, I'm feeling lucky. I've got a buck five in my pocket, and I'd like to move for unanimous consent for one-minute bells the rest of the evening.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General has moved for one-minute bells. Unanimous consent is required.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: We will have one minute in between the bells. Thank you.

Anyone else who would like to speak to amendment A2 to Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment to Bill 31, and I'm pleased that we have so many amendments to Bill 31. I find it to be so incredibly, deeply flawed that it's a litmus test, I think, of the strength or weakness of the legislation. I've seen lots come through here over the years, and when you see probably 16 amendments, that is a clear indication that there are some serious problems with Bill 31. You know, I spoke about this before in second reading, and the biggest global problem with this bill is the fact that it's running everything through the ministry and making choices about the committees and the scientists and the stakeholders through the ministry.

I guess that's the way things are and the way things will be, but I think that we can mitigate the problems associated with that by some of these amendments, putting specific provisions in to include certain groups and to include the integrity and the independence of scientists that might participate in this whole thing.

This is the first amendment I'm looking at here. By striking out "in consultation with the Minister," I guess this is a shot, I see, at this idea of reducing the power of the ministry to be able to modify and to sort of make constructions on these committees and to have a greater degree of independence. Certainly, I am happy to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak on amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm going to send this amendment to the table.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll pause for a moment while we distribute the copies of the amendment. This amendment will be known as A3.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, we can get started now. Thank you. This is A3.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm really quite thrilled to be able to move this amendment because I didn't think I was going to get here. I was trying to do something that's hard to do right now just given the various laws that we have. Part of what was concerning me in this act, aside from there being no designation about who was appointed to the board, is the fact that there are no scientists appointed to the scientific advisory panel, and to my great and everlasting disappointment my hon. colleagues opposite voted that down. Boo, hiss. [interjections] It's true. It's true.

In section 21 it talks about the board. They always have funny names, and they all start with A; AEMERA, they're calling it. It can make bylaws respecting, of course, the business and affairs of the agency, calling board meetings and things. They can make a bylaw, but they have to provide it to the minister. Then the one I truly love, section 21(3), appearing on page 9 of the act: "The board shall, by bylaw, establish a code of conduct, including conflict of interest guidelines, to apply to directors, officers and employees of the Agency." You gotta love that. No conflict of interest there. They're going to write their own conflict-of-interest bylaws. Hmm. No.

I guess I'm still sitting on the Conflicts of Interest Act review committee. I've learned a lot about senior officials. It's one thing for MLAs to be covered under conflict-of-interest legislation, but senior officials are the group that we try and capture under that because they're the other group that is in a position of great influence. They can use that expertise and move on and parlay that into another job, which would be speaking to the need for a cooling-off period. One could argue that they're also in a position where they could be influencing changes that would benefit themselves. Let me be clear here, Madam Chair. I'm not talking about anybody in particular here. I'm just saying that this is the way it's laid out right now.

We're very uneven in the application of the current Conflicts of Interest Act. If you work for the government in certain areas and you're covered under the Public Service Act, then you are covered by what's called APAGA, which is the new legislation for agencies, boards, and commissions, but if you work for one of the 300 and some-odd agencies, boards, and commissions, you're not covered if you are unpaid or a director or even the paid CEO, with a few exceptions.

There is an order in council – cue the music; dun dun dun – which applies to nine agencies and follows from what is commonly called the Fowler memo. Hang in there, everybody. I will get there. This will all make sense to you. The Fowler memo was written by a former member of this Chamber, who essentially said, “You know, there are some senior officials who should be covered under the legislation” and made some suggestions about what they should be covered for. That Fowler memo has been used and applied to certain groups but not to other groups, so we have great inconsistency between the public servants, agencies, boards, and commissions which are directly enabled or created or report back to or are funded by the government and then these special ones under the OC.

I think there are some recommendations coming from the committee that is trying to smooth out, sand out some of the bumps in that particular road, but when I looked at this legislation for Bill 31, the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, and saw that there was an expectation that this agency was going to create its own conflict-of-interest legislation, I thought perhaps I could be helpful.

Here's what I'm proposing, Madam Chair. There are three parts, really, to good conflict-of-interest legislation. You have someone, the way I define it, that is in a position where they do have influence to change public policy. Their control or their area of influence is quite wide, and they're dealing with a whack of money. This particular agency has got $50 million that it's dealing with right now and might, depending on how this actually works out, have more than that, which would cover the monitoring for the rest of Alberta, so they qualify under my criteria.

What you really need to have are conflict-of-interest guidelines that cover mandatory disclosure – what they have shares in, that sort of thing – and a cooling-off period so that, especially, they can't go back and forth, they can't take that insider knowledge gained from being a senior official and go and sell it on the open marketplace. That's a betrayal of some of the things that we're all trying to work on here.

The last thing is difficult to capture because it's about not influencing changes in legislation that are going to benefit your private interests or those of the people immediately about you. That's what I've included in this clause. What I'm saying is to strike out the entire clause that exists now under the subheading Bylaws and Code of Conduct. We've got 21(1): “The board may make bylaws respecting” blah, blah, blah. Then when we get down to (3), I'm suggesting that we strike what's there and instead implement this:

(3) The board shall, by bylaw, establish a code of conduct, including conflict of interest guidelines, which must contain provisions concerning disclosure requirements, cooling-off periods and improper influence, to apply to directors, officers and employees of the Agency.

That covers everybody that's going to be associated with the agency. I'm letting it slide that they're writing their own conflict-of-interest legislation because I sense that I'm not going to win that one. But it does say that you need to have these three parts included in it.

I'm not getting down to too much nitty-gritty detail here because I know that makes my hon. colleagues opposite just grind their teeth, and that's not good for you. I'm always worried about their health.

I'm giving them enough that they know they need to do something. They could surprise me and make me proud by really getting some very strong conflict-of-interest legislation in those three areas. That would be delightful. But overall I think this is a necessary piece of credibility for this agency so that it's very clear to the people that are appointed – they haven't been yet, I hope – that this is what's expected out of them, and it lays that out very clearly.

I've done an enormous amount of work on this, as has, I think, every member of Parliamentary Counsel and then some who has been helping me to try and find a way through this. Of course, the difficulty was that I couldn't reference that order in council that does include those special nine agencies that are set aside. I've come at this a couple of different ways. I think this is the one that's going to work, and it's going to make everybody over there happy. It's going to make me happy. It would be a great night.

I am asking for the support of the members. This was one of the amendments that I did pass on to the Government House Leader and the minister. Although it looks a lot different now than when you last saw it, the conflict of interest is still in there. I do ask support from my hon. colleagues opposite and, of course, the ones that are surrounding me.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be brief. This is the gold standard of amendments. Unfortunately, if it doesn't get passed, gold will drop about 3 or 4 per cent, so it's important that it does pass. This government talks quite a bit about integrity and about issues of credibility. When you read this amendment at face value, what it says is that “the board shall, by bylaw, establish a code of conduct,” and then it goes on to give what I think is a lot of credibility to the code of conduct of this proposed agency. Common sense says that this or something equivalent to this should appear in the legislation, and I would hope that the members would support it.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's no surprise that I support this. This House leader has been an example of parliamentary procedure. I hope her recent study on conflict of interest, especially, will be taken seriously by all sides of the House. The face validity, I guess we'd call it, of an agency establishing its own rules of conflict of interest flies in the face of what this Legislature is about. If we're serious about credibility and public accountability, I think it behooves us to go the extra mile and ensure that this body follows the same standards of conflict of interest that every other part of the Legislature follows. This is the gold standard, right? What we follow in this Legislature . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt you, but could you stand in front of your desk, please? The reason is because of the camera lenses.

Dr. Swann: I see. Sorry.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We want to get a good shot of you.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. As I was saying, one of the big challenges I think this government has is public credibility on the environment. This would be another step towards really ensuring that you're going the extra mile in terms of conflict of interest and ensuring that they follow the same standards in this agency as the rest of government.

So in the interests of both the credibility of the bill, the credibility of the agency, and the credibility of this august Legislature it behooves us to recognize the need for the standard and not to leave this kind of important policy-making or bylaw to the agency itself. I think we want to follow the existing criteria. It makes sense for all of us to take the highest, the best, the most objectively valid approach to conflicts of interest, so I fully support this.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair. I, too, am speaking in support of this amendment. Quite frankly, I'm surprised that these provisions, as very eloquently expressed in this amendment, are not there in their entirety in this bill because these are standard practices that we put into lots of other positions and jobs. You know, I'm on the officer's committee for hiring, and they're standard things that we would include and expect to be included for any important boards or committees or individual positions that are surrounding this Legislature. Quite frankly, this seems like it's just a matter of due course, and I'm glad that the Member for Edmonton-Centre actually noticed the absence of this and has included this amendment for all of us to enrich Bill 31.

Thank you.

8:00

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in support of this amendment to Bill 31. It should be quite evident and quite clear at the onset the value that this amendment adds to Bill 31, but on behalf of some of the members of the House I'll just go into a little bit of detail as to why this amendment does in fact strengthen the bill as it's currently written. First and foremost, there need to be conflicts of interest guidelines which will help this board to govern and provide them with a frame and terms. The concern with the way the bill is currently written is that the board themselves will determine their own conflicts of interest guidelines, which is extremely problematic in that it would be like allowing one team to make up the rules for themselves. That clearly has some problems.

As well, this amendment lays out disclosure requirements, which are extremely important, again. Too often, Madam Chair, we hear from the other side of the House about how they are accountable and transparent, and really their actions do not follow their words.

Mr. Eggen: Not even a little bit.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you. Yeah. Not even a little bit, not even an ounce. This amendment will lay out some of the parameters so that at least we will have some accountability. The public will be able to have a little more faith in this board.

I think it's extremely important that we do have cooling-off periods, as this amendment calls for. Too often we see around the world improper influence being exerted. I shouldn't even say "around the world." We have many examples even within our home province of people who were in positions of power moving into positions of lobbying or positions of being able to directly influence. There needs to be a cooling-off period to ensure that that type of influence is at least mitigated somewhat.

I think that this is a very reasonable amendment. I thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for bringing this forward, and I strongly urge the members of the Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak to amendment A3, Bill 31?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to Bill 31. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to offer an amendment at this point on section 4.

The Deputy Chair: This will be known as amendment A4. We'll pause while we distribute copies to the members.

Hon. member, you can proceed.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm moving that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended by renumbering section 4 as 4(1) and adding the following after subsection (1): “(2) The supporting data for an Agency report under subsection (1) shall be made available to the public.”

8:10

According to the minister's eloquent words earlier this afternoon, the whole idea of a scientific board issuing a report will not have validity without the raw data being available to actually have other scientists look at the report and verify that the data supports the final report. That's critical in any scientific study, and nowhere in the act does it lay out that that is a mandate for this agency. I don't know any other way that scientists or doctors even in the medical field but particularly scientists get validity other than by making sure that the raw data that they collect, that they use to formulate their report, that they use for their findings is available to any other scientist so they can verify that what the report actually says is true.

From where I sit over here, looking at this bill, we want to give this bill credibility. We want to give the agency credibility. Just issuing a report, any report, without the supporting data: there's no credibility there. So this is absolutely essential to the functioning of this board. The minister has said that this agency is going to be at arm's length, and it's going to be comprised of scientists. This is going to be based on science. There needs to be a mandate to make sure that the raw data is available to verify the science. Without that that undermines the credibility of the board.

I would ask the members on the other side to support this or at least show where there's a mandate here to make that data available. It has to be available. It can never be withheld. That was, I think, just a missed opportunity when the bill was first drafted. This is now the opportunity to put it into the bill to make sure the agency knows that whenever it does issue a report, supporting data has to be available publicly.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to stand and speak in support of this amendment. I think it's very important, as the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said, to have the data along with the report. If we get the reporting, which it says it will do, make the report public, that's great. They can get the final results, but they should also have the opportunity to see how those final results are obtained. That way that leaves out any discretion of how they came up with those results. If it's, you know, open and transparent, if people want to look at all the information to come up with conclusions, they can.

It's the same as us when we submit our expenses, when we submit our hosting receipts and meal receipts. You have to have those receipts. That's the data. We can't just send in our final result of what the bill is; we have to show the data. This goes along the same lines. You need to show the data, how you came up with the final numbers. I think this just will enhance the public's reception of this bill, and I urge you to support it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's an important amendment. It may seem like a fairly simple point; nevertheless, a report is processed data, interpreted and, quite frankly, able to be based on assumptions that may not be obvious to the readers. I think it's critical that the raw data be available so that other scientists can verify the conclusions that have been reached through AEMERA's analysis of the data because there's more than one way to look at things. As we all know, many a statistician has drowned in a river with a mean depth of three feet.

An Hon. Member: Say that again?

Mr. Bikman: Again? Many a statistician has drowned in a river with a mean depth of three feet. Likewise, when three statisticians went deer hunting, one shot and missed the buck 10 centimetres to the left, the second statistician shot and missed the buck 10 centimetres to the right, and the third statistician exclaimed: we got him. The average, right? You don't get that one?

Nevertheless, the point I'm trying to make is obvious to all of you, I know. It's how you interpret the data. If your assumptions are inaccurate or incomplete, then you're not able to interpret it correctly.

Mr. Anglin: We're eating venison tonight.

Mr. Bikman: Yeah. That the statisticians shot. Don't eat at our house.

We do need to make this raw data available. It truly will make this agency, AEMERA, more likely to be perceived as arm's length so that customers and other people who want to analyze how well we're doing can in fact look at the raw data and draw their own conclusions based upon their own template, not the template that we have designed or that the agency has designed to show us in the most favourable light.

We want to be shown in a favourable light, but we want that light to be able to stand up under scrutiny, and the data needs to be available so that that scrutiny can take place, I submit to you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to briefly also throw my support behind this amendment. It's, again, quite a surprise to us. I think we were deliberating as to whether we would have a similar amendment to this, and we deferred to the Official Opposition on this particular point.

It's part of this whole giving some appearance that we are using some independent scientific process here to build these committees when, in fact, there are lots of ways and means by which the data and the information can be massaged and obfuscated so that the desired result might come through. We don't want this environment act to be viewed as to be skewed somehow or to be a charade or to not be producing accurate information. The basic thing that scientists have done is present and share data and have papers that allow for a second or third opinion on issues. So if you're not including the full data, then immediately alarm bells go off in the scientific community, and you are somehow diminishing the validity of not just the individual report but the committee as a whole.

With this whole attack on science that we've seen from the federal Harper government, I just, again, see so many parallels between the process that goes on in Ottawa with that federal Conservative government. If we can just learn from their mistakes and do the opposite, we would probably be so much better off. Instead, this PC government is moving towards more of that centralized, secretive control that will only serve to diminish our capacity to sell our product and to have a reasonable environmental board here in the province of Alberta.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair, I just wanted to add one additional thought, actually a question that I hope the minister or perhaps someone else can answer because I think it's relevant: why wouldn't we make the raw data available? I think that serious scientists and people who are legitimately concerned with the results of how well we're doing will ask themselves: why isn't the raw data available?

They'll likely conclude – or we'll remove the possibility of them concluding this if we provide it – that the only reason may be that the data has been manipulated or the data has been interpreted with a template that isn't universally accepted. Maybe it's going to show an unfavourable result. Somebody might interpret it in a way that doesn't favour us, that makes us look like we're not doing our job properly. It may not be the slant that we want, so we're afraid to let the data out there. And if it's ever discovered that, in fact, we have done something like that with the data, then we'll lose our credibility that we've worked so hard through this act and through the creation of AEMERA to establish.

I think that agreeing with this amendment – and it's a fairly simple change to make; I don't think it'll require a whole lot of rewriting – would establish how serious we are. It would give an even stronger appearance of this actually not just appearing to be but really being an arm's-length agency. Minister, I hope you will consider that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Madam Chair. If I could direct people to page 2 of the act, agency purposes, section 3(1)(a) and (b) for sure.

3(1) The purposes of the Agency are

- (a) to obtain credible and relevant scientific data and other information regarding the condition of the environment in Alberta,
- (b) to ensure the data and other information are available and reported to the public in an open and transparent manner.

It's already here under the purposes of the agency.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. minister.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. Unfortunately, I can't agree with the minister. It says to ensure that the data... [interjections] I do apologize for my disagreement. I usually do apologize before I insult. Forgive me for forgetting to apologize first.

Anyways, I do disagree with the idea: to ensure that the data. If you look at the amendment, it specifically says, "the supporting data." That's really important scientifically, that the supporting data be there. I did look at that. I want you to know that. Data is data, and you can obscure it by giving any data or not giving the proper data, but supporting data then supports the report, and that's why the amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there any other member who wishes to speak to amendment A4 on Bill 31? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Further to that, there's a distinction between the place that the minister pointed out and this amendment. This amendment allows us to see a much wider picture of what the data is. You can still process the data within the terms of this bill on page 2 and exclude certain things, right? You know, all we want to do is make sure that there's a way by which it looks like this is fail-safe and that nothing is being hidden away somehow. I mean, this afternoon this same minister goes on about reducing greenhouse gases when we know that we don't reduce greenhouse gases, Madam Chair, in this province. It's all about intensity targets, and it's just pure obfuscation. It's not entirely true the way that she puts these things.

If you put the full data out there for everybody to see, then people can come to their own conclusions, and that's fine. But if you choose to narrow that scope, then it only serves the opposite effect of what this bill is intended to do.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Dorward: Madam Chair, I can't support this amendment because this would mean that only supporting data for a decision would be in the report whereas the word "data" would include all data.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would wish to speak to amendment A4 on Bill 31?

Mr. Anglin: Madam Chair, I'm going to have to disagree with the member. For one, you can go back to section 3(1)(b) and ensure that data is released, and there's nothing in the amendment that prohibits releasing more data or anything else. What it says is, "the supporting data" relevant to the report. You still have the section that says data and allows for all data to be released, but what's important is that it gives credibility to whatever report is issued, that scientists who want to verify what the agency is stating have access to the supporting data that is relevant to the report.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of this amendment. I think it's a reasonable amendment. It's ensuring that that raw data is being made available. I think that there's a significant amount of concern on this side of the House that the data and the information that is going to be made public through the board is not the original data or data that can be verified, and therefore it can be skewed, it can be tampered with. In order to prevent that, I believe that's one of the reasons the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre brought forward this amendment. Through this amendment it provides more credibility to the data that's going to be released.

I think the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has a very narrow interpretation of this amendment. Again, there's never a limit on the amount of information. You know, my frustration with the government, Madam Chair, is that they talk about transparency and are the most opaque government, I think, in the country.

An Hon. Member: The gold standard.

Mr. Bilous: Yeah. The gold standard of double – yeah.

My question is for the minister. By not including supporting data, it begs the questions: what are you trying to hide? What are you afraid of? Or why do you want a mechanism to be able to skew or interpret or alter information? I think accepting this amendment will just lend more credibility to the bill and show that this government is not just providing lip service to working with other members within this House but actual action to back up their words.

I encourage all members of the House to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to ask the Minister of ESRD a couple of questions regarding this. If I read this section 3(1) and if I understand her argument correctly, she's arguing that the purposes of the agency are to obtain credible and relevant scientific data relating to the condition of the environment and "to ensure the data and other information are available and reported to the public in an open and transparent manner." If I understand the minister correctly, she's saying that the amendment is essentially redundant. If I'm correct in that assumption, I'd like to get a clarification on that.

We're talking in one instance about the purposes of the agency. In the other one, we're talking about the report that's given to the public on the condition of the environment. Even if it is redundant, I mean, I fail to see what the difficulty is. If we're talking about openness and transparency of the scientific data that are backing up the report to the public, I guess I'd like a little bit of an explanation as to why we don't accept this if it's redundant in any event. If we're going to give the background to the report to the public on the condition of the environment and allow the scientific data to be open and transparent to the public and to other scientists who wish to analyze it and maybe second-guess whether or not the condition of good, excellent, fair, poor, or whatever the report says is accurate, then, you know, I'd like to hear why we wouldn't accept this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak to amendment A4?

Mr. Bikman: If I may, just one other point. It somewhat addresses the issue just raised by the hon. member from Calgary. I can't remember where but Calgary, anyway. You can hide a polar bear in a blizzard. It's an old trick, and I'm not suggesting that anybody is trying to be tricky. But, again, to reduce the perception of the potential for something to be hidden in a blizzard of data when only certain aspects of that data were relevant to the report – the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who is an accountant, knows that pro forma statements are only as good as the assumptions that they're based on, used to prepare them, and everybody wants to see what those assumptions are. So I think it's helpful to be able to say: this is the specific data that was used to produce this report revealing this information. I think that's a reasonable request. It isn't necessarily redundant, because all of the data will not necessarily be used or given the same weight in the preparation of the report, and those who are scientists can verify or challenge that, but that's my humble opinion.

Thanks.

8:30

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else? You must be in your seat before I can recognize you, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: My wife tells me that I'm still teachable, so on my third time I'll be back here.

I wanted to add my support to this, too. I don't think the government could lose anything on this. Any scientific reports worth their salt have the conclusions, and then you go back into the report and you can see what the conclusions are based on. It's just standard practice in scientific reporting, and it's adds to the credibility and the ease with which people can draw conclusions or question conclusions if they can connect the conclusions directly with the data.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back in Committee of the Whole on Bill 31. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to make another amendment, and I have the requisite copies right here.

The Deputy Chair: We will call this A5, and we'll pause for a moment while we distribute copies to members in the House.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm moving that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended by striking out section 4 and substituting the following: "The Agency shall report to the public on the condition of the environment in Alberta a minimum of 4 times per fiscal year." What I'm trying to do here is to have some sort of flow of information that is fairly reliable. It doesn't make any other imposition upon this scientific agency, but what we need to do is get at least a quarterly report from the agency on the condition of the environment. This is a monitoring agency. I realize the act said, "at a frequency determined by the Agency," but that's not necessarily sufficient if we're trying to give some sort of consistency and credibility, particularly to the international markets.

The biggest thing that our international markets want to see from us: are we making progress? That's important. So dealing with the environment is no different than – I'm going to make the correlation to a company reporting its quarterly reports or its annual report. The fact of the matter is that you have to have consistent flow of information to give some sort of credibility to what this agency is all about. Without that, what we could end up doing – and I'm not going to suggest that they will do it, but what I'm saying is that it is a possibility that if the data that the agency was collecting was somehow not complimentary to what's happening in our environment, it may not release a report. It may withhold that information until some later date, and we've seen that from this government, where reports were held back. We don't want the agency to fall into that trap.

This is fairly subjective in terms of: we pick quarterly, four times a year. I would easily take a friendly amendment that said two times a year as long as the other side was willing to pass it, but what we want to do is make sure there is consistent flow of information. Without that, it does basically weigh heavily on the integrity and the credibility of this board.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

8:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak on amendment A5, Bill 31? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Chair. As my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has stated, the importance of being transparent in the eyes of our trading partners cannot be overstated. Like it or not, we have a bit of a black eye in the whole area of the environment and the attacks on our oil sands and so on. This is a golden opportunity that I see where we can be transparent and open and show the world that indeed we care about the environment and we're doing our best to protect it.

Although I have some concerns about the whole agency and creating another bureaucracy, I think that in this case it's probably a good idea as long as we do it right. Let's be open about it. Let's be transparent and accountable, as our AT and T minister purports to be. Let's show the world we can do this by passing this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Hale: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes, I'd like to rise and speak in favour of this amendment. As the member who presented it stated, it does say "a frequency determined by the Agency." This just gives it more of a guideline. If they wish to do it sooner, that's great, but at least if we have a determined time for when they need to present their reports, then it gives substantial backing to our industry, to the people who are concerned with the environment. It just adds some substance to this agency.

If we look at how some of the reports are presented, a lot of them say they'll have them out by the first of this month, and, you know, it takes months and months, and then we have to ask questions and write letters. If it's legislated that they have to have it out by this certain time, then they have to have it out. It's going to give a little bit more depth to this bill and show to our neighbours and our customers and the people of Alberta that the environment is in good shape and that we're doing everything possible and that the agency is doing everything possible to show that. We're not hiding anything. If we have nothing to hide, then let's produce these reports and show how good we're doing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. We know that global customers, prospective customers, governments will look at these reports as an indication of how well Alberta is actually doing, as a way of justifying their confidence in us as an environmentally friendly source of energy. I'm sure that if they receive those reports on a regular basis, every three to six months, they'll be able to feel like they are being kept in the loop, and it'll make it easier for them to monitor what we're monitoring and see just how good a job we're doing. They'll see the effort that we're putting forth. They'll also be able to see the results on a regular basis.

The information in the reports, of course, needs to be specific and not general. That same Tom Monson that I quoted earlier also said, "When we deal in generalities, we [rarely] succeed. When we deal in specifics, we . . . rarely have a failure." So I think it's important that we be as specific as we can, reporting on those impacts that are important to our customers, the jurisdictions that our customers might be in, or the customers and governments themselves.

It needs to be consistent. Methodology needs to be transparent and obvious and universally acceptable and recognized as relevant, as an accurate indication of how we're doing, and not just sort of percentages against whatever but actual information that will allow them to justify to their own environmental advocacy groups that, in fact, they are buying oil or energy from a very, very forward-thinking, innovative, and perhaps even world-class leader in controlling or eliminating or reducing those things that are harmful to our environment and to the atmosphere.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for putting this amendment forward. What I see this amendment doing is creating a pattern, a schedule by which people can expect information to be coming out. Just like when we get a report from the Auditor General or other agencies, we'd know that it's expected, and we could see the incidents that might be taking place in the province in regard to environmental concerns fitting into that schedule. So that we don't lose track of the progress, let's say, that a more sophisticated or a more complicated study or probe might entail, we can get updates and additions to the file that everybody can follow, and we can be suitably exposed to that information.

So this is a great idea. I think, again, it's almost like a matter of course. I think that other businesses certainly do quarterly reports: banks and governments and every other thing. That natural pattern that we're used to seeing for reporting, then, would fit in perfectly with this environment committee reporting on a quarterly basis. What a great idea, hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. It's awesome.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. One thing I want to point out that I missed earlier is that we know that to support our industry, which is to support our economy, one of the caveats that President Obama has put on for approval of the Keystone pipeline is the reduction of greenhouse gases. That's no secret to anyone in this room. What else is probably not a secret to anyone in this room is that the United States and China now have a memorandum of understanding. They're going to set protocols for the reduction of greenhouse gases. By hook or by crook our industries know that they have to meet those standards if they want to access those markets. And they will. That's what I meant by "by hook or by crook." They've got to meet the demands of their own customers.

Having a scheduled, set reporting period, you know, dealing with our air quality monitoring in particular, is a real aid to that whole process. Our industry can say, aside from what they're saying, that we have an independent agency created by the government, and you can follow these quarterly reports and see the data and see how we are making improvements not just on our environmental monitoring but on actual physical improvements to our environment. That's the key. The key is to show credible data in support of our industry. When we do it in support of our industry, it also meets what the public wants to do in the first place. It's good for the environment.

What we really need here is some sort of consistency in reporting, and that's what this amendment does. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. Again, it's not making any broad, sweeping changes to the bill. It's just putting in some predictability as far as information sharing. I think that outlining exactly when this agency will be disclosing information means that concerned Albertans, our business community, our local community, our environmental community, and the international community will know exactly what's going on within this department and what's going on within the province.

It also provides a record or the ability to have benchmarks. You know, I believe that, with the pressure of the Alberta NDP as we continue to push for tougher environmental standards and ensuring that those are not only imposed but that they are actually enforced, this will improve and increase Alberta's access to our international markets. I mean, the reality is that the world wants to improve. It's not just our record, but we're talking about being more sustainable, being global stewards. Also, the world wants to see that we're doing everything within our power, when we are talking about developing our natural resources, to do that in a way where we're leaving the least amount of impact on the environment.

I do honestly believe that reporting regularly demonstrates true transparency and, again, allows the world, that is watching, to take a look at what we're doing here. It shows that we have nothing to hide and will encourage, I believe, investment and smart, sustainable practices.

I will encourage the members on the other side of the House to support this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any more who wish to speak on amendment A5, Bill 31?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move back to the bill in Committee of the Whole. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have another amendment that I would like to introduce.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

We'll call this A6 and pause for a moment while we distribute it to other members in the Legislature.

The hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm not going to speak very long on this amendment. This is a very simple amendment. When the Wildrose becomes government, we don't want any candidate or any former MLA from the Wildrose to think that they can be on this agency within three years of having been elected. It's just that simple. It's sort of a catch-all to keep politics out of this agency and to keep it arm's length.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on amendment A6, Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act.

Mr. Bikman: Vote no for legislative nepotism.

The Deputy Chair: Is there anyone else wishing to speak on amendment A6? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be brief as well. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. There's legislation like this in other jurisdictions, and it's a way to keep boards or agencies like this arm's length from direct government influence. It's a very small tweak to the current legislation, but I think it lends credibility to this bill.

I encourage all members to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak on amendment A6?

Mr. Oberle: Madam Chair, I just have to say that if it's the intention of the Wildrose to attract lesser qualified candidates to be MLAs to sit in this Legislature, they're well on track. The fact of the matter is that we're trying to attract talent to our boards and commissions and our Legislative Assembly.

Now, in the case where a member previously sat in this Assembly, if they were a member of the government, there's already a Conflicts of Interest Act which prevents their involvement for some period of time afterwards. But you can't restrict people's employment following that period unless you're willing to compensate them for the fact that they no longer can be employed.

What is wrong with having a member of this Legislature, who understands the intent of the legislation and who is qualified to sit on a board, sit on a board, providing that there is no conflict of interest? How could there be a conflict of interest when they're already past the cooling-off period in the Conflicts of Interest Act? It's a ridiculous amendment, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Anglin: No, the prevention of nepotism is not ridiculous. It's not ridiculous at all. And it's not denying anyone any employment. Yes, there is a cooling-off period, but we have an agency being proposed that the minister has said is going to be arm's length and is going to be independent. Now, it doesn't prevent any former MLA from actually being appointed to the board, but it does set out a little wider cooling-off period for that as far as the three years. That's all it was intended to do. It was to keep the political interference out of it.

You know, to be quite honest, this is more about the perception of the credibility of the agency. It's all well and good, but when you look at the makeup, what can comprise the board, what can comprise the scientific panels, I have to tell you that if you start stacking that with former MLAs – you can do that because I know you're going to vote this amendment down – you may call it credible, but you will lose that credibility out there in the scientific world, you will lose that credibility in the commercial world, and you will have political interference that you will have to deal with. The whole idea is to keep that independence.

It's not about denying anyone a job. Lord knows that the government has been able to provide a lot of jobs, and this agency hasn't even been created yet. The idea that there are no jobs in Alberta for former MLAs, that just doesn't exist. There's a lot going on. The fact is that in some cases, I believe, the cooling-off period for the MLAs wasn't even observed.

So this is just to make sure that for this independent agency it is there in legislation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I really admire and respect a great deal the associate minister who just addressed this point about legislative nepotism. I think, though, that it's arrogance to think that only MLAs on either side of the floor, quite frankly, are not bright enough or capable enough to find gainful employment in the private sector or in some other area. We're talking about one agency. I think that the rule would be a good rule if it were implemented for all departments and agencies within the government, but I don't have great hopes of that. I don't have a lot of hope, you know, of you Kool-Aid drinkers seeing this clearly anyway.

The fact is that there are a lot of bright people out there. We don't have a corner on intelligence or capability amongst the 87 of us by any stretch of the imagination. No matter how highly you think of yourself, there are people who are much brighter than most of us on either side of the House. Certainly, I don't have any doubt that any of us in here who have earned the right to be here would have any problem making a decent living out in the real world.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. The hon. member on the other side has left me no choice but to get up and challenge his thinking. His point as far as stopping or prohibiting members from going to boards and that we're not going to attract the highest quality of people to sit on boards is an insult to Albertans. I believe I am the 337th Albertan to get elected to this Legislature in a province with a population of 4 million. We're talking about a cooling-off period of three years. It's absolutely absurd.

At the moment – I could be wrong – I believe the Conflicts of Interest Act deems one year as a cooling-off period for MLAs transitioning into positions that can directly influence and lobby the government. This amendment is only talking about a three-year cooling-off period. I think it not only lends credibility to this bill, but it's laughable to think that there aren't other brilliant minds who can't be appointed or elected to these agencies and that somehow we're losing out by delaying members who leave this career and transition back to the private sector, having them hold off for a couple of years.

This amendment is reasonable. Again, I find it quite far reaching that the member from the other side of the House is blowing this out of proportion, saying that these agencies are going to be limited and that we aren't going to find the highest quality of people if we force past MLAs or MLAs who have left this position of public office for three years.

I encourage members from this side to rethink their position. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: I just wanted to thank the last speaker, Madam Chair, for attempting inadequately and incorrectly to make my point for me. My point was that there have been many, many great minds over the years that have sat in this Chamber and it's a loss to Albertans to let them go out the door and not utilize them in other ways. Second of all, of the many great minds that are out there, why would we discourage them from wanting to seek a chair in this Chamber? In so doing, they know that they're going to be excluded from other considerations after the fact. It's silliness. It's absolute silliness. A race to the bottom is what it is.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, the noise level has risen once again, and it's difficult to hear the members who have the floor speak. Please be careful with your level of noise.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. To call the amendment ridiculous or silly and then clap and say that somehow you are guaranteed a job upon leaving this Assembly, I just can't agree with that.

The fact is that there is supposed to be a cooling-off period, regardless. It is already in other legislation. Unfortunately, there are exemptions that are given, and if I remember correctly, the former agriculture minister got one of those exemptions. So we're not trying to deny anybody anything. What we're trying to do is maintain the independence. And if you tell me that the 87 members of this Assembly are actually crucial to the functioning of this brand new agency that's going to be created when this passes, I just don't buy that. [interjection] Have you got a point of order?

Mr. Oberle: No. Attracting your attention.

Mr. Anglin: Oh, okay.

We are important in making policy, but this agency will run whether anyone in this Assembly gets a job on day 1 or the third year. So having a cooling-off period creates that window where we try to eliminate the perception of any political connection. That's all it does. That's why we have the cooling-off period. What this does is remove the possibility of the exemption.

The hon. member said earlier: we want good science. There's no question about it. Now, if somebody is so qualified they have to make the decision between being an MLA or a scientist working for this agency, so be it. Good on them. Let them decide. There's opportunity there for them, and maybe somebody will someday. The fact of the matter is that we've got to keep the political influence at arm's length, and that's what this is about. It's not about putting any penalty on any individual. It's not to penalize an MLA by saying: you cannot work here. What it's saying is that we're going to keep that arm's length from politics. That little three-year window is arbitrary in a way, but it's not overpunitive at all.

The fact of the matter is that somebody that qualified and that much in demand is not going to have a difficult time working in that scientific community. There are lots of opportunities. This is a great province.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Chair, I never said anything about the current 87 members in this Chamber, nor did I say anything about anybody wanting to be guaranteed a job. What I'm saying is that it is in our interests, in the interests of Albertans that we find a way to make sure that the best people get appointed to this and that in so doing, we protect Albertans from a potential conflict of interest. Now in the case of a government member, that's already written into the Conflicts of Interest Act. There are other conflicts of interest to consider, and that will be taken care of in the conflict-of-interest guidelines that this commission is going to be required to write as soon as they get started.

Now, all of these things are captured in legislation and policy. I don't see what the issue is. Again, the fact of the matter is that, never mind the 87 members in this Chamber today, there have been many, many, many great minds that have gone through this Chamber, and it would not be in the best interests of Albertans to subsequently lose them. Furthermore, Madam Chair, it's kind of laughable to think that anybody would leave this Chamber and three years from now magically be nonpolitical. That's absolutely ridiculous.

It's a poorly worded amendment, silly, and it is not in the best interests of Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Anglin: We have gone through a number of insults to the amendment, Madam Chair, but let's be honest. We're not disparaging anybody's qualifications, and it's not ridiculous in the sense that we do have a conflict-of-interest provision that we already deal with. We know that. We also know that certain ministers have gotten exemptions to that. We know that. Now, what we're trying to do here is make that agency what this minister says it's going to be, which is separate and independent and not influenced by the politics. It's going to be influenced by the credibility of the science. It doesn't disparage or prevent any person who is qualified from working.

Now, if they are that qualified and they work in the industry, it's tough to say that they may go teach for a few years or work in the private sector for a few years. People with this type of qualification do move from scientific community to scientific community within their field of study. To say that it's going to prevent any single mind – there are certain privileges that are lost when you become an MLA, and those privileges are all of those conflicts-of-interest provisions that we adhere to. The cabinet ministers themselves are held to a higher level than your ordinary MLAs because they're actually running the government. So we know these things as MLAs. We accept those when we run for office, and when we get elected we accept that. By putting this there on the creation of the agency, then it's visible to everybody that ever runs for office. If they have a desire to be in the agency, they have to know that that cooling-off period is not going to be exempted, that they have a three-year period there that requires cooling off.

You're absolutely right. It doesn't mean that they won't be political, and that's not what anyone is saying. That's not what the existing law does. The existing law that requires the cooling-off period doesn't say that it's going to be absolutely nonpolitical, but you create the separation so that there's not that perception and there's not that influence. Everyone here knows that as we go through election after election, people who were here years before may remain friends, but they may also lose that political connection that they once had because people do retire and people do move on. That's part of the process.

I want to quite honestly tell the member that it's not ridiculous; it's not silly. It's something the government has tried to do already in its conflicts-of-interest laws, and without the exemption – it is right here in this amendment, and it's consistent.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there any other member who would like to speak to amendment A6 to Bill 31?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Moving on in Committee of the Whole, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have another amendment that I would like to submit.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. This amendment will be known as A7. We'll pause until the members have a copy of the amendment.

Hon. member, you may continue.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm bringing forth an amendment that states that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended in section 14 by striking out "If the Minister considers it necessary" and substituting "Upon the Agency's request." Again, we are back to the perception and the credibility of an independent agency. Now, this doesn't stop the ministry from providing necessary resources at no cost to the agency. It doesn't do that at all. What it does is make that decision strictly the agency's decision and not the minister's decision. That's the independence. We think this has credit. Oh, I see the member's going to get up again. I'll get the last word in, or we'll be here all night.

The fact is that this is about the independence of the agency. If you want to give that perception that the agency is independent, then you cannot have the minister impose something on the agency, particularly if the agency doesn't want it. Clearly, what we're trying to do here with the government employees is that should the agency request, the minister can honour that request. I have to tell you quite honestly that nobody's going to get appointed to this board that's not going to be working with the minister. You know that. That's just not going to happen. [interjection] Do you want a guarantee on that? I'll write another amendment. We'll put it in legislation.

The fact is that that's how it works. The ministry will be appointing the boards. We're going to have these committees, and we're going to have qualified people. It only makes sense. But the fact is that we have to make sure that there's no infringement upon the agency's independence. I'm sure that whoever is the CEO or whoever is the board chair, whatever the title is of the director, if they need these resources from the ministry, they would probably be more than happy to make the request, but it will be their decision. It will never be the perception that the minister ever imposed at all anything on the agency as far as employees or resources, and that would give it a little bit more credibility and the perception of a whole lot more independence in the perception of the public.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there any other member who would like to speak on amendment A7?

Mr. Oberle: I get, Madam Chair, that the hon. member is trying to clearly define the independence of this particular agency, and I actually agree with him on the importance of that. However, it is not the habit of governments anywhere to empower outside agencies with spending authority on the budget. This is a budget that the minister would have to approve, so their work plan and their staff would have to be approved by the minister. Short of that, you're going to have to go to outside elected boards like a school board or something like that and give them independent authority to spend money. But even at that, the government still establishes the budget for that agency. It's just a simple fact of the matter of how governments work. We're not going to assign our spending authority, that we vote every year, to outside agencies. That's just simply not how governments run.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. That's not what this amendment is about. What this amendment is about in section 14 is government employees, and what it states quite specifically is "if the Minister considers it necessary." Those are the key words right there. It gives the power directly to the minister: "If the Minister considers it necessary, the Minister may provide to the agency at no cost." What it gives is the perception that the minister could impose this upon the agency. It opens up the allegation that the minister is doing something. All we're doing is changing that to "upon the Agency's request."

Now, I'm sure that if the minister is talking to whomever is in charge and resources are required, they would probably make the request. I don't see them allowing the agency to fail in any degree. It's contrary to logic. What we want to give here is the perception of independence. We don't want the minister to ever be accused of imposing something on the agency, and that's what it says: "If the minister considers it necessary." It could be viewed in the public that the minister is pulling the strings, but if the agency makes the request, it's independent.

Perception of independence is just as important as the physical independence, and the big criteria of this – and the minister has said this – is that this is going to be an independent agency. That's the key word, "independent." Not only does it have to be independent; it has to have the perception of being independent. I'm not sure how changing this word would affect the operation. If the hon. member can say that this would negatively affect the operation in dealing with government employees, I would concede, but I just don't see where that is there. I will tell you quite honestly that it doesn't change. It's at no cost. We're not talking about a budgetary thing here at all for the agency. It is something that the minister will consider themselves, and regardless of whether the minister considered it necessary or the agency requested it, it probably wouldn't change a thing on how they operate together.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: The question is about the spending authority of this Legislature and of the minister. Now, I'm pretty sure that the minister doesn't have a fleet of employees sitting around doing nothing, waiting for a request from an independent agency that she or any other minister can supply to them at no cost. In fact, if that hon. member can tell me where to get some of these no-cost employees, I'd like to get me some because I could use a few in my own department. The fact of the matter is that employees cost money, and you're asking this Legislature to give authority to an external body to spend public money without approval of this Legislature. That's illegal, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Okay. Madam Chair, I didn't write the legislation. The legislation says: "at no cost." I'm just reading it. It says: "If the Minister considers it necessary, the Minister may provide to the Agency at no cost." I'm not changing that. Now, I'm not even insinuating that it doesn't cost to run that ministry. That ministry has a budget, and all ministries have a budget. The employees of the ministries get paid, and they have severance packages, depending on who they are, and they get retirement benefits and medical and all that stuff. It all costs, and to operate this agency is going to cost money. That's not the point.

I can't conceive that the agency would refuse to request from the minister, should they need to make that request, to get employees. I just don't see that happening. It's an option available to the agency. Why wouldn't they do what they needed to do? That only makes sense to me.

What we're trying to do here is take exactly what is written there and make sure that there is independence for the agency and that it's the perception of independence. Either way this is worded, one way or the other, I doubt that if the minister needed to provide employees to this agency and the agency requested, unless the hon. member gets up and says, "I will refuse to," – but, then, that's her option anyway. I mean, she could refuse to anyway. It just says: if she considers it necessary. There's no mandate that she has to do it. I mean, clearly, that would go right on her shoulders and not on the legislation. It is wide open.

But what it does do is that it keeps the independence of the agency so that the minister or the ministry cannot impose upon this agency. They would have to request it, and I don't see where that upsets the function or the budget or how things operate. It's just the way the protocol would be on who would request it versus who would demand that it be necessary.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak on amendment A7?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move on in Committee of the Whole on Bill 31. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment I would like to introduce to the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: This amendment will be known as A8, and we'll pause while we distribute copies to the rest of the members.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm proposing this amendment and move that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended by striking out section 14. What I want to do is save this ministry money. To force this ministry to give something at no cost, in my view, would be absolutely ridiculous. Now, this isn't going to help the budget, Minister – I'm sorry – because it's going to be funded somewhere. Oh, maybe not. We don't know how it's going to be funded after 2015.

Mrs. McQueen: We do.

Mr. Anglin: We do? Okay. It's not in the legislation, though.

If it's not funded through the government, it will even save possibly the minister of Treasury some funds, too. We're not going to give this stuff away for free. Let the agency go out and get their employees. They're out there, and they're qualified.

Let's strike this section down and have some accountability. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who would like to speak on amendment A8?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We move back into Committee of the Whole on Bill 31. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment I'd like to introduce to the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: This will be known as amendment A9. We will pause for a moment while we distribute copies.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to move that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended by striking out section 15 and substituting the following:

Public Service Act

15 The Public Service Act applies to the Agency, its Chief Executive Officer and employees.

The Public Service Act actually does quite a bit in the sense of the code of conduct, postemployment limitations, restrictions. One of the things that came up is that in the previous section, which we weren't able to amend or strike out, clearly if the minister considers it necessary, employees could quickly shift over from the Department of ESRD to this new agency. What we have here is that the Public Service Act is not going to apply. What we're asking is that there be some consistency and that the Public Service Act apply with regard to all its provisions to the employees that will be employed by the agency.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak to amendment A9?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment I'd like to introduce to the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: This amendment will be known as A10. We'll stop for a minute or so while we distribute copies to the other members.

Hon. member, you may proceed on amendment A10.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to move that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended in section 15 as follows: (a) by adding "Subject to subsection (2)" before "The Public Service Act"; (b) by renumbering it as section 15(1) and adding after subsection (1), "(2) A code of conduct and ethics pursuant to section 23(1) of the Public Service Act shall apply to the directors, Chief Executive Officer and employees of the Agency." The Public Service Act is not going to apply. It's clear; that just got voted down. But if you look at section 23(1), it is talking about respecting postemployment, respecting ethics and code of conduct. Quite honestly, we need some consistency. There's nothing in this legislation that gives guidance. It just says that they're going to make it up as they go.

What I don't understand is that within the Public Service Act having a code of conduct and ethics is extremely important to the credibility of the board, and to just leave it wide open to me is not consistent with what we want this board to be. It has to be defined in legislation, and the Public Service Act's section 23(1) is a great starting point to have that and to do that.

With that, I would hope that the members would support at least a code of conduct and ethics portion of the bill to be inserted in this bill so there's some consistency, particularly when the employees who are already under the guidance of the Public Service Act might possibly be moved over and be working for this new agency. So I would ask the other members on the other side to consider this and to approve this amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members who wish to speak on amendment A10?

Seeing none – the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Seeing one. Thank you, Madam Chair.

I wish to speak to my hon. colleague's amendment to the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. He mentioned consistency. I think consistency is important: consistency of work experience, consistency of expectations on the part of those employees who may come, who may in fact be transferring. If they have in fact – although we don't know how this is actually going to happen – been terminated and offered an opportunity to work in the new agency, they will already know what the expectations are with regard to ethics and the code of conduct and so on. So I think it makes some sense.

Having spoken recently with a member, an employee, of ESRD, I know that this is of some concern to them. There is some uncertainty about current vacancies that are being temporarily filled within the agency and some uncertainty about what that implies and some nervousness, I think, about that. Of course, that affects morale. As we know, nature abhors a vacuum. That's not just a physics law, but it's also an information law. In the absence of information to the contrary human nature generally leads us to believe the worst. That's why the lack of accurate information delivered in a timely manner demoralizes and undermines esprit de corps.

I think that the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is doing a service to the minister and to the agency that will be created. I think it will help the agency function at a higher level. This is a wheel that's already been invented, this code of conduct and so on. We can adapt that over and use it as an established tool with a proven track record of success, so I encourage support of this little amendment.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A10, Bill 31? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I try to learn something new every day, so I'm curious to know. This amendment talks about how the "code of conduct and ethics pursuant to section 23(1) of the Public Service Act shall apply to the directors, Chief Executive Officer and employees of the Agency." Does that code of conduct and ethics apply generally anyway, or is this something that we need to add on? This is new to me, right? Doesn't that code of conduct usually follow people in the public service anyway even if it's an agency or a board? I don't know.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A10? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Yeah. I have a few more thoughts on the relevance of this amendment. I think that it will allow the agency to function right out of the blocks. It will save and spare some additional effort on a part of the ministry currently in terms of establishing and writing the guidelines, the handbook if you will, because they can pluck this section out and perhaps some others as well to supplement what has to be unique about this agency to make it truly arm's length. But it'll make it, I think, function at a higher level sooner. So I think there is some benefit from having an amendment like this that will help facilitate that.

We know that the agency will be seeking people that are ethical. In fact, I would hope that the agency uses as a standard in terms of seeking employees these six characteristics, which have proven highly effective in a number of areas over the years.

The number one thing that we look for in an employee should be integrity. We need honourable, reliable, dependable people to work for us in any business or agency and certainly within an agency like this. Integrity would be critical because integrity will lead to the credibility that we're seeking. This code will help that happen.

The second thing to look for after integrity will be motivation. We want people working in this agency who are self-starters, who have initiative, who won't wait to be told specific things to do but will look for things to do once their specific assignment is done. They'll stay actively engaged and involved, and that will build morale within this new agency because they will be perceived as colleagues looking out for one another and having each other's backs.

The third thing that I would hope that this agency would look for in prospective employees is capacity: the capacity to learn, the capacity to work well with one another, the capacity to engage in effective teamwork.

The fourth thing would be understanding: understanding the role of this agency, the role that the agency plays within the global environment, the purpose of the agency in helping to promote the credibility of the province as environmentally friendly.

The fifth thing, then, would be knowledge, the formal education, perhaps, that has been gained or the informal education that has been gained.

The final thing, then, would be experience. Often employers look for experience first and motivation next, but the last thing I'd want in an employee or to have employed in an agency that I had some role in helping create would be somebody that was experienced but dishonest and highly motivated. That's the last thing we want.

So integrity is number one, and that order of those six things, Minister, is very important to look for and consider. I submit that to some degree at least the amendment will help that happen or supplement it happening, I would hope.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A10, Bill 31? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. I've got my question clarified a little bit more. So if we don't include the Public Service Act explicitly in Bill 31 in the creation of these new agencies, then does the Public Service Act not apply to that? That's what I want to know. I'm not sure.

Thank you.

9:40

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Correct. The Public Service Act does not apply. Section 15 says that. But what does apply for this is the Public Agencies Governance Act, which also requires that they develop a code of conduct.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A10, Bill 31?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're moving back into Committee of the Whole. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment I would like to introduce to the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: Once again we'll pause for a few moments while we distribute that, and it will be known as amendment A11.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended as follows: (a) section 12 is amended by adding after clause (b), "(c) prescribing the professional qualifications required for members of the Science Advisory Panel." Then (b) section 18 is amended by adding the following after subsection (1): "(1.1) members of the Science Advisory Panel must meet the professional qualifications prescribed in the regulations."

What this does is just give some direction in legislation as to the qualifications of who's going to be put on there, that this should be stipulated for the candidates to apply for the agency, and it directs the agency to prescribe in regulation these qualifications. It's pretty self-explanatory, and the whole purpose is that it gives guidance via the legislation so that the panel – I keep calling it the agency – makes the regulations so that we get the type of people that we want on this agency.

There is nothing in the legislation that stipulates anything about qualifications and gives direction on setting any standards for qualifications. This amendment doesn't set the standard. It just says that they must do it, and that's logical. They should set some sort of standard for who's going to be sitting on these panels.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A11? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise at the command of my whip – and I'm happy to do so – to speak to Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, and the amendments. I think it's critical that we identify ahead of time what the requirements and qualifications will be for people who might apply or that we might even consider inviting to apply or consider appointing, whatever the process actually ends up being, so that the public knows, again, our customers, the customers' governments know that these are the qualifications of these scientists or these advisers on the science panel. I think it's important. This would be part of a job description, I suspect, and I hope also that the minister will include at some point in those job descriptions very clear expectations that are mutually agreed upon, what Dr. Covey called mutually agreed upon desired results, those clear expectations in that performance agreement. Spell it out that the candidate would agree that it's reasonable to expect these kinds of results, not just effort but results, and the agency itself could then say: these are the things that we expect.

Once that agreement takes place, then you identify the guidelines; for example, the work needs to be done in a legal, moral, and ethical way. You could define those terms. The third thing would be what the resources are that would be available to you, whether it's the expense account or the budget that you'll have to perform the desired results, to achieve those. I think that's critical that that be agreed upon and prepared in advance so that candidates know exactly what they're getting into and how they're going to be able to do it. The idea that the agency may be able to call upon the minister, which was defeated a little bit earlier, to request certain additional support from the ministry would be in the form of identifying resources that would be available, perhaps even the minister herself if time allowed, for example.

The fourth thing, then, would be – don't smile, Minister. You throw me off my game here. The wink really did it. Explain that to your husband and my wife. Now I'm getting red. Sorry. The fourth thing would be, then, the accountability. That's what I was going for. How will you account for the job that you're doing, and then, ultimately, what are the consequences? If you reach 40 per cent of your targets, what will your bonus be for the year? Things like that. It's good to have those things out front.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to comment on amendment A11, Bill 31?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Moving back to the bill.

Mr. Anglin: Madam Chair, I rise for my last amendment. [interjections] I knew that would get applause.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause one more time, hon. member, while we distribute the amendment. It will be known as A12.

Hon. member, you may continue on amendment A12.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am moving that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended in section 20(1) as follows: (a) by striking out “, criminal” and (b) by striking out “a criminal or” and substituting “an.”

Now, I've seen a number of different indemnification clauses, as probably many in here have. There is nothing wrong and there's everything right about an indemnification clause. They are part of nonprofit organizations, corporate boards, you name it. It's all there. I'm sure members can probably show me one somewhere – but I'm really not interested – but I have never seen one where we have indemnified criminal activity, and I don't understand where criminal activity can happen in good faith. I've just never seen an example.

I suppose that if somebody is very poor and hungry and they steal, they steal in good faith, but that's still a crime under the Criminal Code. It makes sense that we indemnify these employees, the board members, the agency from civil and administrative action. That's what we do, but we never condone criminal activity. Criminal activity is criminal activity, and it should never happen. I just don't understand how we can condone this by saying that criminal action or criminal activity would somehow be compensated for under this indemnification clause. That, to me, is not logical.

Now, that's not to say that some private company shouldn't indemnify criminal activity for their corporate board. That's their business. Let them do that, but this is not good for this government. It's not good for Albertans. The fact that somebody could be found guilty or be involved in a criminal activity and have an indemnification clause that protects them and compensates them doesn't make sense. That doesn't make sense to me.

An Hon. Member: What makes sense?

Mr. Anglin: Well, what makes sense is civil and administrative. That's logical. Criminal activity is not logical – it's not – under any circumstances. I don't even know how this is going to co-ordinate with the Criminal Code, to tell you the truth. I'll let the Minister of Justice figure that one out for me, and I'm happy to hear from him. The fact is that if someone is found guilty of criminal activity, they should suffer the consequences under the Criminal Code as it applies. End of story.

Nothing should discredit this board. Nothing should discredit this agency. Criminal activity is unacceptable under any category. This goes to credibility, this goes to reputation, and this should not be allowed. I will tell you that we are going to do a standing vote on this one because I want to see who on the other side supports criminal activity being indemnified. That's what it is. If you vote against this amendment, what you're voting for is to indemnify criminal activity, and that's not logical. That makes no sense.

You can wave your hand at me, hon. member, but the fact is that I only want to remove the criminal indemnification. I'm not asking to remove anything else. If you read the section, it is quite specific. It is just common sense, and it's respectful of all Albertans that we do not indemnify criminal activity. It's just something that we don't want to do as a government. It's something we don't want to do as a Legislature, that holds ourselves up to a higher standard. We don't do that, and we shouldn't do it for the agency. It's just that simple.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on amendment A12.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wish to speak to this amendment to Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act. I certainly agree with it and support it. I suspect that almost anyone who would read this section would be shocked, stunned, perhaps surprised.

Now, I'm not a lawyer, but I stayed in a Holiday Inn Express last night. I don't think – and some here are lawyers – that ignorance of the law is an acceptable excuse. I think that this is sort of implying that if you did something that turned out to be criminal but you didn't know it was illegal, then somehow you're off the hook. Well, I think you have an obligation, especially given the high-quality employees and appointees that we expect to attract, particularly if they're former MLAs, that they would certainly know that, right?

If there were mitigating circumstances, those would be argued in a court of law, but I think that the courts need to be able to have jurisdiction here, and no one should ever be excluded from due process for criminal actions knowledgeably committed or ignorantly committed. By "ignorantly" I don't mean the rude sense but just the lack of knowledge sense.

So I would hope that we would all agree that this, however well intentioned and paternalistically protective we wanted it to be, is nevertheless inappropriate and has no place in an act of this government or this Legislature. So I implore you to support the removal of these words.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill on amendment A12.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would argue against this amendment. The amendment is not required. It's not necessary. If you look at the wording of it – I mean, a criminal act requires not only an actus reus, a guilty act, but it also requires a guilty mind. If you look at the qualifications within that subsection, it says that you're defending that individual if that person acted honestly, in good faith and with a view to the best interests of the Agency and, in the case of a criminal or administrative action or proceeding that is enforced by monetary penalty, if the person had reasonable grounds for believing that the conduct that is the subject of the action or proceeding was lawful.

Well, all of those things would necessarily exempt one from being convicted of a criminal offence anyway because there is no mens rea.

There is no problem with the act as it's written. There's enough exemption in there, and there's specificity in there providing the qualifications that you have to be acting honestly and in good faith and with a view to the best interests of the agency, so why wouldn't you want to have somebody defended and have them indemnified in those instances?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: It's an interesting interpretation – and I will always defer to the better legal minds in here – but I will tell you that there have been a number of indemnification clauses that are out there. There is the perception, there is the reality, and I can't for the life of me figure out how you have a criminal action or a criminal proceeding when a person – I don't understand the whole criminal aspect that is in good faith. I've never understood that. I can understand the civil, and I can understand the administrative, but I cannot understand how you get involved in a criminal action or a criminal activity in good faith because that is not logical to me.

I know lawyers can spin a lot, and that's good – there are lawyers on the other side – but the fact is that we don't want to be involved in criminal activity or have the allegations of criminal activity.

An Hon. Member: Go to law school.

Mr. Anglin: Go to law school? I know, I know. I just enjoy this one so much.

The fact is that if it didn't matter, why is it there? The fact is that we don't want to condone any type of criminal activity. I'm not saying anyone is condoning it. But we want to make this perception that if there is a crime or there's a criminal action, it is not covered by the board.

By the way, there are many boards and many commissions out there where all of these other actions are covered, but criminal actions are not. It's clear when you read how they're protected. So what we're doing here is we are covering both civil and administrative, and we are covering criminal. The indemnification for criminal, in my view, is something that just won't sell to the public.

10:00

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to amendment A12, Bill 31? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have to stand in support of this amendment. I can't think of anything that would discredit this agency more than to have an action like this take place. I can't get my head around the thought process that would even allow this to be in the bill. As has been stated – and I'm not a lawyer either – a criminal action is a criminal action. If we're going to put credible people into these positions, I can't imagine that any of them would do this. The fact that it's in here, to me, means that they're going to be protected if they do. As I said, I can't imagine anything that would discredit this agency more than to actually stand behind criminal activity and excuse someone for doing it. It goes back to accountability and transparency and all the rest of it and the perception that we're trying to do the right thing in this province.

I urge you to support this. It's just not right, in my mind. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A12?

Dr. Brown: Very briefly, Madam Chair, just in response to the hon. member. What I'm saying is that there are enough restrictions and fences put around it that the circumstances under which you would be indemnified for your costs or your defence in a criminal proceeding are such that you would have to be acting within those parameters that are laid out there; that is, honestly and in good faith and with the best interests of the agency in mind. You would have to believe that the conduct that was the subject of the action was lawful. I mean, in those circumstances, you're not going to get convicted of any criminal offence. So you're not indemnifying somebody who's going to be blatantly committing a criminal offence. It's quite the opposite. If you fall within those parameters, by definition you're not a criminal.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Anglin: I have the greatest respect for the hon. member except that one issue I have with this is that a very, very strong case is not a guarantee that it's going to be successful, and very weak legal cases have won. If you're dealing with a jury, it might even get more suspect than dealing with just a judge. Maybe not, but the fact is that you don't know the outcome. To say that it wouldn't happen – I won't surmise or project what type of criminal activities could take place that would be subject to a criminal charge and a possible court date for any agency member or board member, but the fact is that crazier things have happened.

If the protection is there that it would never be a criminal activity, then we don't need the word "criminal" in there in the first place. To prevent any kind of aberration, to cover any kind of charges, legal costs, or costs dealing with criminal proceedings: if we don't have the indemnification for the criminal activity or proceedings, then we will not be compensating for that. It's just that simple.

Now, I understand exactly where you're coming from. You're going through all the language, saying that it could never happen given all the other provisions in the act. What I'm saying is that there isn't any real guarantee. I may not have been through law school, but I've seen some crazy things come out of the court system. It's just the way it works. If it's not in this legislation, then they cannot be indemnified for criminal activity.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A12, Bill 31? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Bikman: Thank you. Just briefly, Madam Chair, not that I suspect that anything I'm likely to say is going to persuade anyone who has made up their mind on this already to change their mind, but for my own benefit: isn't it the job of the court to determine mens rea? Isn't that why you appeal to the court? Isn't that part of their job? What's to stop somebody from claiming, "Well, I thought this was legal"? Again, ignorance is no excuse, but the court then would decide that. If this provision is to save the agency money, I think it's penny-wise and pound-foolish because it may undermine credibility.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members?

Dr. Brown: Well, just very briefly in response to the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, that is exactly what the provision says. You can only be indemnified for those particular instances of prosecution if you fall within those parameters: if you acted honestly, if you acted in good faith with a view to the best interests, and if your conduct, the subject of the action, you believed was lawful, you had reasonable grounds for believing it was lawful. Those are the only circumstances where you could be indemnified. Quite frankly, you should be indemnified if you're on a public body and somebody makes a malicious prosecution against you and you fall within those parameters. You should be indemnified.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll go back to the bill. Are there any members who wish to speak to Bill 31 in Committee of the Whole? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. On behalf of Edmonton-Centre I have an amendment to Bill 31. I can circulate it before I discuss it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

We'll pause a moment once again so that we can pass out copies of the amendment. This amendment will be known as A13.

Hon. member, you may proceed with amendment A13 on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Dr. Swann: That's correct. Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment would amend section 3(2) by striking out clause (d) and substituting the following:

- (d) make environmental monitoring data and related evaluations and assessments publicly available as soon as possible.

Again, I think the intent here is clear. It's a desire to ensure that the public gets access to information as quickly as it's available, that there's no sense of withholding or trying to influence reports, and there's a clear commitment to transparency and accountability. As others have said before, I think there's been a history here of withholding reports that are not flattering, and it has undermined to some extent the credibility and the trust in the department and in the ministry.

This is an opportunity to simply be much more forthright and clear and to commit to the public of Alberta and all interest groups ready transparency, openness, accountability, and a willingness to go the extra mile in terms of assuring all stakeholders of the reputation of Alberta's industry, the reputation of our stewardship, and our international credibility, that we have to regain and sustain. This is just one more measure, I guess, to go the extra mile and build that reputation and that clarity around integrity that can be without question.

I don't think it's much. It's just a few words, but it adds that sense of accountability and transparency.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A13? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair. Certainly, I concur that this is an amendment that, I guess, reinforces what we were talking about earlier this evening. Maybe it's approaching it in a slightly different way to ensure that the monitoring data and related evaluations and assessments are made publicly available. We've tried the four-times-a-year route, we've tried the full-data route, publications, and if anything, this is even a more modest proposal that could seek to give us the information that we need to ensure independence and transparency.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A13? The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in support of this motion. This seems like a very reasonable amendment to the current bill, again, you know, ensuring that reports, information and monitoring data, aren't sat on for periods of weeks, months, or years. Unfortunately, due to this government's actions they have a habit of sitting on reports for sometimes years. I mean, there are numerous examples. The first that comes to mind is the flood report from 2006, which was released last year, in 2012.

I think it's critical, again, not just from the environmental side and point of view but as well from the side of industry and investment or attracting investment, that this data is made public as soon as it's received and not for whatever reason, whether political or not political, kept from the public's attention. The bill as it currently reads gives the government that leeway, which, in my view, is too much authority or power to decide that they're not going to release data or information for an extended period of time. This amendment has the public's interest in mind, their best interest in mind, and really does fit with the spirit of transparency and openness.

I strongly urge the minister and the members on the other side to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A13 to Bill 31?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A13 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will move back to the bill, Bill 31, in Committee of the Whole. Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 31 in Committee of the Whole? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise with great interest to propose an amendment, that I will distribute forthwith, and then we'll have a chat about it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

This amendment will be known as A14, and we'll be pausing till we distribute it to the other members.

Hon. member, you are moving amendment A14 on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. You may proceed.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to contribute to this amendment. Like I said earlier this evening, you can judge the soundness of a bill based on the number of amendments that you see coming forward. We certainly don't put these forward in any way besides in the spirit of co-operation to make a bill function to the best of its capacity. In this case, since we're dealing with such an urgent issue, creating a regulatory board on the environment here in the province of Alberta, I can't think of anything more important and more relevant. Certainly, one of these amendments is bound to strike a chord in the hearts of the members across the way. I know, certainly, that this could be the one.

The legitimacy, Madam Chair, and the authority of the Alberta environmental monitoring, evaluation, and reporting agency is completely dependent on it being a scientific agency at arm's length and independent from the government. Unfortunately, section 12, regulations, as currently worded here significantly undermines the independence of this agency. Clause (b) allows the cabinet to impose "limits on the powers, duties and functions of the Agency."

This amendment, a most reasonable amendment, will strike out clause (b). Cabinet will still be able to clarify and expand the powers, duties, and functions of the agency, so certainly separation of the responsibility of cabinet is not being undermined here. However, to ensure independence, this act must not have a provision that would allow cabinet to limit the power of the agency in any way. These are the two things that we're dealing with here.

If this bill was to pass without accepting this amendment, we as Alberta New Democrats think this clause – and we ran this through lots of different people around the province: eminent scientists, legislators – would severely limit the agency and the employees from fulfilling the duties of a truly independent environmental monitoring agency. Proper environmental monitoring has to tell the true story. It must provide the real facts to Albertans about what's happening in the environment. Under no circumstances should those powers and those duties be limited, nor should the government be able to threaten to limit that scope of authority.

Furthermore, Alberta's international credibility requires that our environmental monitoring agencies are perceived to be fully independent. This provision undermines the agency before it's even getting started, and if at some point for some reason this agency's powers, duties, and functions need to be limited, the government should be required to come back to this very Legislature to present the case and receive approval from this Assembly.

Madam Chair, as you can see, this particular amendment is simple, elegant in its construction, and really gets to the heart of the problem with Bill 31 that we humbly seek to rectify here through this amendment. We urge everybody to support it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that wish to speak to amendment A14 to Bill 31? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my honour to rise this evening and speak in favour of this amendment, that my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has put forward. You know, as we've seen in numerous other pieces or bills that are tabled in this House of late, this government is intent on expanding the powers of the minister and the cabinet as opposed to limiting them within a specific capacity or putting parameters around them. I know for a fact that the current minister of SRD is very reasonable and wouldn't abuse her powers. However, the concern is that future ministers may not be as reasonable or as practical and may abuse their positions of authority.

This amendment speaks directly to that. It's first of all striking out the clause where cabinet will be able to clarify. But more concerned am I with the fact that cabinet, as it stands, can expand the powers, duties, and functions of the agency. That authority or ability should be debated in this House, with all parties present, as opposed to only the minister enacting that or providing that kind of sweeping power.

Madam Chair, we need to ensure that there are limitations on what the agency can do and not just from the point of view of, again, the minister being able to run roughshod over, potentially, what the public or Albertans want. We're talking about ensuring that Alberta Environment has legitimacy in its monitoring and evaluation and that this agency is a scientific agency that is, in fact, arm's length from the government.

Madam Chair, if this bill were to pass through the House without this amendment, you know, the clause that I was talking about there would in fact limit the ability of agency employees in fulfilling the duties of a truly independent environmental monitoring agency, which is of significant concern for the Alberta NDP. Proper environmental monitoring has to be able to tell its story, true facts, and be uninhibited in any way, shape, or form. Again, if we want this board to be independent and effective, then the government should not be in a position where it can step in and at times make potentially arbitrary decisions or threaten the scope of this board.

You know, for those reasons, Madam Chair, I will encourage members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wish to speak to amendment A14?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A14 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will go back to the bill in Committee of the Whole. Are there any other members who would like to comment on Bill 31 in Committee of the Whole? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair. In the spirit of not giving up, I have another amendment that I would like to put forward for consideration by all members of the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: This amendment will be known as A15. We will pause for a minute or so while we distribute copies to all members in the Legislature.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, I understand that you are moving amendment A15 to Bill 31 on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, indeed, I am. I'm very proud to do so. This particular amendment that I have here is for section 4, striking out "At a frequency determined by the Agency in consultation with the Minister," and substituting "At a minimum of 6 month intervals, with consideration made to advancing public access,".

Okay. Again, this is the transparency strand that we've been following here this whole evening. Currently, section 4, on reporting, states, "At a frequency determined by the Agency." The problem with the current wording, in my view, Madam Chair, is that the minister and the agency have no guidelines as to when they should report to the public. It is entirely at their discretion. The minister should not be responsible for deciding when an arm's-length, independent agency issues its reports. Simple as that. It's the first principle of creating an agency that is perceived to be functioning with independence and with integrity. Albertans need to receive these reports at the same time as the minister receives them.

This amendment that I have here is very simple as well. It changes section 4 to read as follows: "6 month intervals, with consideration made to advancing public access, the Agency shall report to the public on the condition of the environment in Alberta." Simple and, I think, what is expected by the public anyway. We're finally getting a place where we can actually enshrine it into law. Albertans deserve to know that at a minimum of twice per year the Alberta environmental monitoring, evaluation, and reporting agency will in fact report to Albertans on the condition of the environment here in this province. It establishes clear timelines. Just as government departments like Alberta Health Services and the Auditor General report on scheduled bases, so must the Alberta environmental monitoring, evaluation, and reporting agency. Simple as that.

By accepting this amendment, the Assembly would be strengthening the independence of this public body and would be giving us something that we can expect, put into our calendars, to get the information that we need on a timely, regular basis.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A15? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment quite simply just ensures that we're including the public and informing them at the same time as the minister is being informed. This fits in very nicely with strengthening and protecting the public interest. You know, it seems a little over the top that it is, in fact, the minister that gets to decide what is an arm's-length, independent agency as far as when it reports to the public. You know, I can appreciate that the agency will report to the minister, but there should be within this legislation defined timelines and parameters on when this agency reports to the public.

Again, Albertans deserve to know the state of the environment within our province and should be informed at the same time as the minister. I mean, again, this not only fits with transparency and accountability, but it always makes me beg the question: if the minister is receiving information before the public, why is that? What information possibly could be withheld or construed or changed or interpreted? Whereas, information being given simultaneously to the minister and to the public shows a true spirit and, one might say, a gold standard of transparency. [interjection] I appreciate the fact that there are a couple of members on the other side that agree. Therefore, I look forward to seeing them vote in favour of this amendment to live up to a standard.

Really, Madam Chair, what this amendment is doing is just ensuring that at a minimum of twice a year the Alberta environmental monitoring, evaluation, and reporting agency will report to Albertans. It gives a clear, public, defined timeline similar to other government departments which have that timeline. AHS, for example, the Auditor General: all report and must report at specific, defined intervals, so that's what we're asking for here, again, a very reasonable amendment. We feel that this will strengthen the independence of this new body.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A15 lost]

10:40

The Deputy Chair: We're back to the bill, Bill 31.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I have an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: This will be known as amendment A16. We'll stop until the members receive a copy of the amendment.

Hon. member, I understand that you're moving amendment A16 on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Bilous: That is correct, Madam Chair, and with your indulgence I'd like to read out this amendment. Ms Notley moves that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended in section 5 (a) in subsection (1) by adding "on the recommendation of the Legislative Assembly" after "the Lieutenant Governor in Council"; (b) in subsection 5 by striking out "The" and substituting "On the recommendation of the Legislative Assembly, the"; and (c) by adding the following after subsection (10):

(11) The Board of Directors shall be comprised of a minimum of at least one representative from each of the following communities:

- (i) the Aboriginal community,
- (ii) the landowners community,
- (iii) the scientific community,
- (iv) the industrial community, and
- (v) the non-profit environmental community.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'll just remind you that you did read out the amendment, and you used the name of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Bilous: Ah. Thank you, Madam Chair. Forgive me.

This amendment is quite straightforward, but I want to highlight the significance that it will have. First of all, as opposed to the bill the way it's currently written, where cabinet has the power to select this committee and appoint – and it often does – their own friends, we're looking for some real accountability, and we're looking to ensure that there is proper representation from the different communities that make up our great province.

You know, first and foremost, Madam Chair, there needs to be a representative – honestly, even only making it a minimum of one does not necessarily do the aboriginal community justice. There should be, in my view, several. However, in this amendment we're advocating for a minimum of at least one member from the aboriginal community to have a seat at the table, to have a voice directly on this agency, having input. As well, to be able to bring different perspectives to the table I think is absolutely crucial. Too often members of the aboriginal community are underrepresented on boards and agencies like this one. This should have been written into the bill in its current draft, but it seems that, as usual, the aboriginal community was not at the forefront or on the mind of the government when they wrote this legislation as it currently sits. One could make an argument that that's the same for landowners within this province, who again will be significantly impacted by decisions made by this agency.

To provide more credibility and legitimacy to this bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has included a representative from the scientific community. One would think that at the onset of this bill that would be a no-brainer. However, I don't like to make any assumptions when it comes to this government's appointments to agencies and boards. So ensuring that there is a member from the scientific community and from the industrial community as well and the nonprofit environmental community so that we have all of the different sides being represented on this agency – I think that each of these five that I've outlined has a significant stake in the decisions that this agency is going to be making. They should have a voice at the table when it comes to environmental monitoring. We need to ensure, Madam Chair, that their views and opinions are represented through their voice at the table. This will also benefit the credibility of the AEMERA in the eyes of these different communities and of all Albertans.

Again, keeping in mind, Madam Chair, that we're not only trying to protect and be stewards of the environment for Albertans and Canadians but acknowledging the fact that there is an interconnectedness between people all over the world, the government, I'm sure, would at least acknowledge that many investments that come to Alberta are international. This would provide more legitimacy for the board and to potential international investors, especially ensuring as well that those groups have a voice here.

I'd like to remind the members of this House that the government is doing this already with Bill 30, for instance, where there's one co-chair for each of the new family and community engagement councils. One will be a member of First Nations and Métis communities. I do acknowledge and applaud the government for ensuring that there is a voice there at the table. It only then follows that it's logical that this agency ensures that there is a diversity, that there are representatives from those different communities who are significant stakeholders in the decisions that this environmental monitoring agency will make.

I mean, at the end of the day, Madam Chair, it's the right thing to do. Members of this Legislative Assembly should have input into who sits on this agency that is responsible for the monitoring and protection of our environment. It should not be left to one minister to decide who sits at the table and is going to make decisions on behalf of all Albertans. Again, you know, it is extremely important, in my view, that we have members from landowners, our aboriginal communities, the scientific community, our industrial community, which I'm sure they would appreciate, as well as from the nonprofit environmental community, who focus exclusively on issues related to the environment and, therefore, have and are experts as well.

I'll encourage all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment and show that these groups are important, are a priority, and that the minister is acting in good faith. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on amendment A16? The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I'll be brief. I think these are eminently sensible recommendations. They can just strengthen the bill. They can strengthen public support for what we are trying to do. I mean, this whole bill is entirely about trying to build a sense of confidence and clarity and accountability with the public, with stakeholders, with the international community. This is only going to enhance that, especially by being more clear about having scientists on the panel and having aboriginal communities which are primarily affected by oil sands development. It's a step in the right direction, and it would help, I think, not only within the communities that are affected but also the general public, who has lost some confidence, having seen this government forced to develop this new body, this new agency, by scientific reports, by the Royal Society of Canada, by a number of expert panels.

We need to do all we can to create a sense of confidence and independence in this body and show that we are getting the kind of representation from all these stakeholders that, I think, would encourage people to believe that we are stepping in the right direction after some of the negative press we've had in the last few years on the oil sands.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair. I just wanted to make a couple of comments very quickly. I know that the minister, in presenting this bill, at some point said that of course this panel would have scientists and other representation, but, you know, it's very important to enshrine. Maybe this same minister won't be here forever, so it's better to put it in law, right? Fair enough. We just have to think about the next one that's coming down the line – right? – that might not include a member from an aboriginal community, a landowners' community, scientific community, industrial community, and nonprofit environmental community as well.

We've seen some of these people and groups already being excluded from the environmental assessment hearings, and I think that we just need to make sure that this legislative body includes each of these groups into the law. That way they won't find that they hit a closed door when an assessment or an evaluation is taking place somewhere down the road. I can remember running across these closed doors from time to time when I was an MLA previously, and it doesn't serve anyone, really, in any positive way. I remember when they were planning to build those high-tension power lines on the west side of highway 2, and they chose to start to close the hearings to the general public. It only served to throw gasoline on the fire that eventually resulted in the whole thing breaking down.

So we know that it's best to be inclusive and to enshrine that inclusivity within the sections of this Bill 31. I think everyone's interests would be served well, and I would be much more proud to support this bill if we managed to pop this amendment in.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm not going to repeat what some of the members previously said. I agree in principle with much of what they said, in particular the makeup of this board of directors. Given the significance of the aboriginal communities downriver of the Athabasca River and the history of how it has affected their quality of life, it just seems to make sense that we certainly look to make the diversity of this board paramount. In particular, the aboriginal community, in my view, absolutely needs to be represented. Certainly, in the aboriginal communities we can find more than a few – more than a few – qualified members to represent their needs and their interests. The other part of that argument is that they have a vested interest in the operation of this agency and a vested interest that is derived from their communities.

So I stand in support of the amendment of the hon. member, and I would hope that the government would give some heavyweight consideration to the makeup of the board and put at least one representative representing various factions, various stakeholders so that there is that diversification to the makeup of the board.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: We are on amendment A16. Are there any other members who wish to speak to this amendment to Bill 31?

[Motion on amendment A16 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll go back to the bill in Committee of the Whole. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to move an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: This amendment will be known as amendment A17, and we'll wait until members receive a copy of this amendment.

Hon. member, I'll just clarify that you are moving amendment A17 on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Bilous: That is correct, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: I would move on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended in section 3(1)(b) by adding "as soon as practicable" after "transparent manner."

This amendment, Madam Chair, speaks to, again, ensuring that data and other information is available as soon as possible – practicable, that's an interesting word – as soon as it is practical and diligent or prudent to do so to ensure that information is communicated in an open and transparent manner. I think it's important to note that, you know, an environmental monitoring agency is only as good as the information that they are able to collect and, second of all, the transparency with which that information is made public and made available to all Albertans.

You know, in order to fulfill the definition of transparency, or to honour that, information needs to be made public or transparent in a timely manner. The example of this, Madam Chair, is releasing information years later and then saying: "Look how transparent we are. We've given this information." Well, I mean, it's so after the fact that, especially when it comes to environmental monitoring, the situation surely has already changed, and therefore the information is no longer timely nor relevant.

Transparency dictates that information is passed in as close to real time as possible. Again, it begs the question that, you know, for governments that withhold information, Albertans want to know: why is that? If you look at history, secretive governments release information when it suits their purposes. We're talking about serving all Albertans and, I mean, one could argue, our citizens globally and internationally as well.

This amendment is really designed to help ensure that monitoring data is released in the public interest, and if members on the other side want to open that debate on what is the public interest, I'd be happy to. But I think most Albertans know that the public interest is what's in their best interest as all Albertans, again, acknowledging that the environment doesn't just belong to the people who live immediately around that area but acknowledging that, you know, what happens in one part of the world does affect everyone globally.

This amendment is really giving scientists, the public the accessibility to this information and data within a reasonable, a practicable time frame, and it also works to prevent the government from taking in this information, putting on their own little spin, and then sending it back out again.

I'd like the members to recall, you know, with the Obed mine tailings release into the Athabasca River that that information on this incident has not been forthcoming from this government. In fact, Madam Chair, I believe it was today that the NDP caucus called for the minister to release further information about the inspections of the mine, and the government and the minister have been reluctant to do so.

We believe that information that affects the health and safety and well-being of Albertans as well as our fish and wildlife must be released as soon as the government is aware. That will increase the level of trust that Albertans have in the government, in knowing that the government is acting in a timely manner and with their best interests in mind.

You know, that example clearly has caused alarm to many Albertans – well, caused concern – caused them to lose faith that the government is acting on their behalf and in their best interest. This amendment, on the one hand, will make it more difficult for the government to keep Albertans in the dark when it comes to environmental data, but we can look at it on the positive side as well in that it will ensure that information does get to the public in a timely manner and live up to the spirit of transparency.

I'll urge all members of the Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak on amendment A17 on Bill 31?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A17 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to the bill, Bill 31, in Committee of the Whole. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. I have just one last desperate but hopeful attempt to make some small, modest amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you moving this on your behalf?

Mr. Eggen: On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

11:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much. We'll just wait a minute here until we distribute copies to the other members.

Hon. member, you may proceed with amendment A18 on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm bringing this forward on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, to move that Bill 31, Protecting Alberta's Environment Act, be amended in section 26 by striking out "shall report the results of the review to the Executive Council" and substituting "shall report the results of the review to the Legislative Assembly."

I believe that the minister should be reviewing the agency's operations, mandate, and performance every five years. That's, I think, a reasonable thing that we can totally agree on. However, because this agency is an independent, arm's-length agency, or at least it's supposed to be, I think it's really important – no, it's crucial – that the results of this review shall be shared with the entire Assembly just like we do with other agencies, boards, and committees.

We already have the process in place. It's not like we have to build something new. It's something that we all come to expect. In concert with the regular reporting scheduled, this would just serve to put the environment front and centre for us to think about and would create that due process that would make us feel safe and secure about environmental monitoring. I think it's entirely inappropriate that the minister just reports to cabinet and that we don't see what those results are. Again, these are layers of nontransparency which lead to an overall sort of opaque and then eventual blackout of information that we just really, really need.

I think, Madam Chair, that this has been the theme of the evening that's drawing to a close here now. Perhaps this amendment can be the one place where we can synthesize these various strands of debate in Committee of the Whole for Bill 31 and at least find one place where we can create better transparency. What better place to rally around than to have the results reported to the Legislative Assembly? Because that's exactly where we are here right now, in the Assembly, and we all would, I'm sure, enjoy the information, the edification that these reports would give to us. It would give us a chance to report back to our constituents on that information. The information would be put as a matter of public record. The debate would be captured in the Hansard. All of the mechanisms that we've come to build a democracy around take place right here in this room.

Having the Protecting Alberta's Environment Act and the agency that we will forthwith create with this act report to the Assembly just seems, since this is the place where it will be born, eminently reasonable, Madam Chair, and I just couldn't believe that people wouldn't vote for this unanimously. It would just fill our hearts with such happiness, and when we all go home tonight, we will know that we've done the right thing. You'll have a good, sound sleep, and you'll wake up in the morning and feel good about what you've done for democracy and for Alberta's environment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A18, Bill 31?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A18 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back to the bill. Are there any other members who wish to speak on this bill?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 31 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this point I would move that the committee rise and report on Bill 31 and progress on Bill 27.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Jablonski in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 31. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 29

Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move third reading of Bill 29, Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members who would like to speak on Bill 29 in third reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just have an amendment to suggest to improve this bill. I'll circulate it.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, we're in third reading of Bill 29, Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013. There are no amendments allowed in third reading.

Dr. Swann: I missed my opportunity. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members who would like to speak to Bill 29, Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2013?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given the lateness of the hour I would move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:20 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 6, 2013

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Gracious Lord and Holy Creator, may your spirit flood our open hearts. May your wisdom nourish our hungry minds. May your words feed our caring souls as we look after those who sent us here. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of International and Inter-governmental Relations.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly His Excellency Nicolas Lloreda Ricaurte, ambassador of the Republic of Colombia to Canada. I'm happy to inform the House that Alberta's relationship with Colombia continues to grow and flourish. In fact, Colombia inaugurated a new consul general in Calgary yesterday. We export nearly $140 million per year to Colombia, making it our 13th-largest export market. We also import Colombian products such as iron and steel products; electrical; machinery; flowers, especially roses; and ceramics. Like Alberta, Colombia's largest export commodity is oil and gas. These energy ties lead to the sharing of people, knowledge, and opportunities. It's a key component of our building Alberta plan to open new markets and strengthen relationships. I would ask that our honoured guest in the Speaker's gallery – he's already risen – receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues. Today throughout Alberta many families are participating in the take your kids to work program. I'm very pleased to be participating in that today. There are many upsides to this. The downside is that the parent actually has to show up at work in order to do that. I'm pleased today to introduce our son Eamon Hughes, who is in grade 9 in the Springbank community high school. He's joined today by his mother, the very talented, clever, determined, hard-working, long-suffering, and wise Denise Savage-Hughes.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of school groups and others, over 20. So we'll tighten up our introductions from here on in, please.

School groups. Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, you're first.

Ms Kubinec: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of this Assembly the Covenant Canadian Reformed School from the Neerlandia area in my constituency, actually the very closest school to our farm. We have their teacher, Mrs. Jessica Vandersluijs. We have parents Maria Hamoen, Katrina Barendregt, Christina Kippers, Alja Helmus, and Darlene Steenberg. Please rise and join me in welcoming this wonderful group.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly among the best and brightest young people in our country, the students of Meadowlark Christian school. They're here with their teacher, Michael Krogen, and parent helpers Michelle Nelson and Janice Kornelsen. These students are here today to watch democracy in action and to learn what actually goes on in this Chamber. I asked them how they would describe themselves. These are the words they used: awesome, trustworthy, dependable, we've got swag. And their special skills? They can speak fluent Vulcan. May they live long and prosper. I would ask them to please rise and ask all members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 23 students from the Millarville community school today. The teachers and adult volunteers with the group are Serena Sanders, Brenda Kruggel, Keith Grusing, Jill Goplen, Shelley Smith, and Russ Fisher. I would ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I understand your guests have not yet arrived.

Mr. Mason: I think at 2 o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, sir.

Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Saskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 20 grades 4 to 6 students from Vilna school. The teachers with these students today are Cole Landers, Gloria Sirant, and Kristin Homeniuk, whose father-in-law happens to be a well-known and well-respected Two Hills county resident. It is great that they're here today. They want to let all of the members know that Vilna is an awesome school. I would ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there other school groups?

Seeing none, let us move on with other guests. The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a constituent of mine from Edmonton-Whitemud – a wonderful place, I might say – Ken Aberg, senior member of Advocis Canada. I understand the group will be introduced later. Ken is here today as part of Advocis's annual Legislature day and is seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that Ken rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Mr. J. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise with a couple of introductions today. The first one is Patty Ditttrick, president of the Public School Boards' Association. She has served for many years and is finishing up her term as president, just a few more days here now, as she didn't run again. Mary Lynne Campbell is executive director of the Public School Boards' Association. I'd ask Patty and Mary Lynne to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is Marcus Walter and Viktoria Bradley, who are here today as part of the 19th annual bring your child to work day, which, of course, provides kids in grade 9 the opportunity to come with their parents to work. Accompanying them today is Michael Walter, Marcus's father, who is an assistant deputy minister for strategic services in Alberta Education and from a long line of family that has served this province well, including his father, former Chief Judge Ernie Walter. I'd ask those three to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three flood heroes. The first is the president of the Canadian Volunteer Fire Services Association, Troy Mutch, who represents hundreds of volunteer firefighters who served in the southern Alberta floods. He is also a volunteer firefighter himself. Troy co-ordinated the Tide Loads of Hope, which completed 2,400 loads of laundry for High Riverites; the Duracell Power Forward program, which distributed 35,000 packages of batteries; $1 million worth of Proctor & Gamble cleaning products; and 25,000 gift cards. He is a High River hero.

I would also like to introduce the Salvation Army's divisional director of disaster services for Alberta and the Northwest Territories, Major Roy Langer. Through ongoing flood relief efforts in Alberta the Salvation Army has served more than 10,000 people with food, water, and emotional care. Major Roy was among the first NGO representatives in High River in the last month, and he personally helped over 150 front-line workers in High River heal from their experiences through the critical incident stress management program, including me and my constituency staff. He is also a High River hero.

My last introduction is the president of Search and Rescue Alberta, Daryl Black. Daryl is also a member of Canada Task Force 2, through which he was able to help respond to the High River floods, and he also serves his local Edmonton search and rescue group. Search and Rescue is 100 per cent volunteer organized and run. Many of those volunteers served in southern Alberta and in the floods. They and Daryl are flood heroes.

I would ask Troy, Roy, and Daryl to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, followed by the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my sincere pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this year's Alberta 4-H Hall of Fame inductee, Mr. Clinton Ziegler. Mr. Ziegler began his association with 4-H more than 50 years ago, and he's been a leader and volunteer at the district, regional, and provincial levels since that time. He's served on numerous boards and committees in his community of Vegreville, from Boy Scouts to the Wheat Pool to the rural fire association. He's joined here today by his wife, Lorriane; his son Sheldon; daughter Fronde and son-in-law Chris; son Nathan, daughter-in-law Tiffany; and grandchildren Molsen, Tezra, Revon, Corbyn and Avery. They're joined by Colleen Prefontaine from the 4-H Council of Alberta. They're in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and that members give them the warm reception of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of folks who are no strangers to this Assembly. They have been here before, and that's Advocis, the Financial Advisors Association of Canada. Among them is a long-time friend and supporter of mine, Mr. Duane Gibb from St. Albert, with Gibb Financial. Professional financial advisers and planners are critical to the economy. They help consumers make sound financial decisions that ultimately lead to greater financial stability and independence. Advocis works with decision-makers and the public, stressing the value of financial advice and striving for an environment in which we all can save for our future. Financial literacy is important.

They are hosting a reception for members this evening at the Royal Glenora Club. I hope you will attend. Our guests are seated in both galleries today, and as we welcome them to Edmonton, I would ask all members of Advocis to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by Edmonton-South West.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two of those guests, Emily Douglas and Carolyn Sale. Emily and Carolyn are part of the Coalition for Action on Post-Secondary Education, which last week dropped off over a thousand handwritten messages from concerned students and staff at the U of A. As a result of their work, they are coincidentally here on the day the minister announced putting $50 million back in, or to put it another way: one-third of the mistake has been fixed. It's not enough for the thousands of students, professors, and programs that have been lost, but I have no doubt that Emily and Carolyn will continue their good work to make sure that this mistake will be completely remedied. Please join me in asking Emily and Carolyn to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

As well, like the Minister of Energy, I, too, have been participating in drag your kid to work day, so my son is also here, also in grade 9, and also observing these proceedings with great interest. I would ask that Ethan Notley stand and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Jeneroux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Iqbal Amiri. He is here today with Advocis, but I wanted to introduce him in his capacity with the Ismaili community. He is a passionate volunteer, and he assisted as a project manager for Prince Hussain and his wife's visit and, more recently, on the Rays of Light exhibition celebrating 50 years of the Aga Khan photographic exhibition here in Edmonton. He's a very successful president and CEO of Amiri Wealth Management and also a very proud constituent of Edmonton-South West. I'd ask him to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ms Kennedy-Glans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly external members of the results-based budgeting panel focused on economic development programs in agriculture, transportation, aboriginal, and workplace development. I'd invite them to stand as they are named: Martin Kennedy, vice-president, external affairs for Capital Power; Marcel Latouche, president and CEO of the Institute for Public Sector Accountability; and Don Wilson, executive director of the Alberta Motor Transport Association. Please help me to welcome these gentlemen to our Assembly.

Mr. Dorward: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all of the Assembly three tireless workers in my community of Gold Bar and surrounding communities. They are all members of the South East Community Leagues Association, which I'll do a member's statement on later. I'm pleased to be able to have with me Bob Gerlock, Bob Hutchison, and Dave Liles. Unfortunately, Lori Jeffery-Heaney, who does tireless work as well in our community, was unable to be here. Gentlemen, please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have two sets of introductions, please. First, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two very special guests. Mr. Li Feng, who is a former consul with the consulate general of China in Calgary and has been instrumental not only during my last mission to Asia but ever since in helping connect and promote Alberta in the Jiangsu area. He is currently serving as the vice-chair of the Suzhou Foreign Affairs Institute, where he is working vigorously to create educational, cultural, and trade exchanges between China and Alberta as well as the rest of Canada. Please stand.

Also, I'd like to introduce Dr. Xinxin Fang, who is a special adviser of Chinese language and culture to Alberta Education. Both have contributed significantly to promoting Alberta's international relations, especially education development and exchange opportunities. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

It's again my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Dr. Manfred Zeuch, who currently serves as the vice-president international at Concordia University College of Alberta. Dr. Zeuch was raised in Brazil but has lived around the world and is fluent in five languages. Dr. Zeuch is currently leading Concordia's internationalization strategy and through his work is helping to provide Alberta students with important international learning experiences. In the last few years Concordia has done a fantastic job creating a web of international partnerships in more than a dozen countries. He's currently seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like to ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have two introductions left. Let's squeeze them in quickly. Edmonton-Calder, you go first, and Calgary-Currie, you go second.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and to the Assembly Peter Lee. Peter is the director of the Castle-Crown Wilderness Coalition, and the coalition's main goal is the establishment, restoration, and maintenance of environmental protection in the Castle area. Peter is here today to encourage this government to show leadership and create a provincial wildland park in the Castle wilderness area. I would ask him to stand and receive the warm welcome of everyone here today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Ms Cusanelli: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last but certainly not least, I am very pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a friend and active member of our community in Calgary, Mrs. Robyn Moser. Robyn serves on her PC Fish Creek board and is a member of the Alberta Real Estate Association Political Action Committee as well as the Calgary Real Estate Board Political Action Committee. May we please all give her a warm welcome here in our House.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, your first main set of questions.

Emergency Management Planning

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, earlier today I introduced three heroes of the High River flood. They accomplished wonderful things during the flood. Indeed, the only reason they did not accomplish more was because of cumbersome bureaucratic processes in government. The Alberta Emergency Management Agency is supposed to develop a plan that directs an integrated approach to emergency management. It has supposedly been working on this for years, and it was supposed to be released on the website in late 2012. To the Premier: can we expect the Alberta emergency plan to be in place before the next disaster?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been waiting for this. I can't believe that the hon. member just made the allegation that she did, that in light of the worst natural disaster in Canada's history, where we were able to respond as Albertans, as a government, as community leaders, and as citizens in less than 10 hours, she doesn't think that's good enough. I think that is an insult to the public servants, the community leaders, the volunteers, and the people that worked their hearts out to make sure that Albertans are safe. I'll tell you, we should celebrate the heroes of High River and Calgary and Alberta, and that's what we'll do.

Ms Smith: I know the Premier thinks she did it perfectly, but I can assure you that not everyone else did.

One of the guests I introduced is with Search and Rescue. These wonderful people are among the best-trained and most capable first responders, yet in High River they were not called in to provide their specialized assistance. Now, I would assume that the Premier is as dissatisfied as I am with existing protocols for calling in specialized resources like search and rescue. To the Premier: will those protocols be improved when we finally see the yet-to-be-released Alberta emergency plan?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the day that Albertans realized that this flood was going to be the worst disaster in our history, in Canada's history, Alberta Emergency Management went into immediate operation. I remember that one of the first questions I was asked was: when are we going to call in the army? It speaks to the magnitude of what we were dealing with on that Thursday afternoon. What I'll say is that the people who came together in those very difficult circumstances did the best that they possibly could, including the people who were introduced today in the gallery. It's important for us to know that we will always strive to do better, but we did well as a province.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're not criticizing the people. We are asking questions about the management response.

In August the Wildrose caucus put together a report calling for an inquiry into the handling of the flood, which raised 54 important questions where there are no answers. This minister rejected an inquiry. Now, it's almost five months since the floods, and all of the questions in our report remain unanswered. Doesn't the Premier care about understanding what worked and what didn't work in the floods so that we can get it better the next time?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member called for an inquiry, which would cost millions of dollars and take years. That's what an inquiry does. After every incident we have an emergency response in this province, we do a review to analyze what went well and what didn't, but we weren't about to do one in the midst of managing the emergency. We all have questions about what went well and what . . . [interjections]

Mr. Anderson: Aw, give it up. Unbelievable.

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Speaker: Excuse me? I have asked for no interjections, hon. Member for Airdrie, and if you wish, we could take this to the next step. If you want to take this to the next step, I'll be happy to do that with you, sir. Otherwise, please don't interject. Your leader has asked a very good question, and we're waiting for a very good answer. The second row as well, I've been hearing you interject, and I've heard a few members over here interject. Let's remember that we have a number of young people here who are looking to you all as role models for a good, high standard of debate and decorum. Let's provide it today if nowhere else.

The hon. minister.

Emergency Management Planning (continued)

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that when we do that review in the fall or early in the new year, we're going to find out, contrary to the leader's questions, that we had a great response from the water rescue unit in Strathcona and other teams. We'll also find out why the hon. leader was kicked out of the emergency centre in High River.

Ms Smith: I'm looking forward to hearing the answer to that myself, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Pipeline Framework Agreement with British Columbia

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, after the on-again, off-again, on-again meeting between this Premier and Premier Clark there emerged an announcement of progress on a west coast pipeline. [interjections] On the surface this . . .

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Conduct

The Speaker: You know, somebody made an interesting comment here yesterday. I believe it was someone from the Wildrose caucus who said something about not acting like undisciplined children in a playground. I would like to remind you that I said yesterday that I might have to use that somewhere going down the line. So let's cut the outbursts. Government caucus members, let's cut the outbursts over here. And let's get on with what question period is all about: solid questions; hopefully, solid answers. Let's try that.

Please start again, hon. leader.

Pipeline Framework Agreement with British Columbia (continued)

Ms Smith: I'll just continue, Mr. Speaker.

On the surface, this would appear to be good news for our economy. However, there remain some significant issues which are still unresolved, particularly how B.C. will gain extra economic benefit from this pipeline. To the Premier: could she clarify what is being considered in providing B.C. with extra economic benefits?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, what we did yesterday was incredibly exciting for British Columbia and for Alberta. Today the differential on a barrel of oil is $41. What we were able to agree to yesterday ensures that we're making progress to build a pipeline so that that $41 comes back to the government of Alberta as revenue. As the British Columbia government moves forward and discusses with industry what the options might be, we will all know what they are, and then we'll know what's on the table.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, media are reporting that this update came about because the Premier's communication staffer, while apparently drowning his sorrows in a bar, managed to restart these failed negotiations. It is worrying to Albertans that this project, that is so essential to our economic future, hinged on a random encounter in a bar. Can the Premier assure Albertans that future negotiations on this project will be managed in a more professional and less haphazard way?

Ms Redford: You know what, Mr. Speaker? I had the opportunity to meet with Premier Clark yesterday to talk about exactly what we need to do as Premiers, and that is to come to an agreement to allow us to build forward. You know, I know that the Leader of the Opposition takes a black-and-white view of the world. As a result of that, it might be difficult for her to understand that in negotiations there are times when you talk, and there are times that you step away from the table. Most importantly, we came back to the table yesterday, and we got an agreement that's going to continue to build Alberta and bring revenue to this province.

Ms Smith: That being said, Mr. Speaker, Albertans still need to know which way the government is heading in providing additional economic benefits for B.C. With everything on the table from B.C. taking an ownership stake in the pipeline, special fees, a side agreement with Ottawa as options, this will be setting a significant precedent for future pipeline development. Could the Premier indicate, at least, which options are being discussed, or will her director of communications be working that out in a bar as well?

Ms Redford: You know, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. Leader of the Opposition exactly missed the point. When we sat down with British Columbia, we said that whatever British Columbia decided to do on a go-forward basis needed to be discussed with industry, not with the government of Alberta. Our interest was to ensure that we protected Alberta's assets and that we got the best possible price for our assets. That's what we did. I am very certain that as we move forward, the hon. Leader of the Opposition will have lots of time to question the Premier of B.C. as to whether or not she thinks she's made appropriate proposals.

The Speaker: The hon. leader. Third main set of questions.

Washington Meetings

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is once again heading to Washington next week to pitch the Keystone XL pipeline. Keystone is a critical project for Alberta's economic prosperity, and we applaud the Premier's efforts to convince Americans that Keystone serves their interests, too. My questions are to the Premier. Can she tell us, specifically, the names of the high-ranking Senators, congressional committee chairs, State Department undersecretaries, and senior White House officials that she will be meeting with next week to make the case for Keystone?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of meetings that are currently in the works, and we're working with the Canadian embassy to make sure that we're meeting key decision-makers. I will have the opportunity next week to meet with Senator Heitkamp, from North Dakota, who's been a strong ally, who's bringing together a group of people, senior Democratic leaders, to talk about our record on the oil sands and about Keystone and why it's important for us to be partners. As I'm sure the hon. leader would know since she went on a field trip to Washington last year, it does take time to develop some of these meetings. I'll tell you that as we move forward, we will be very transparent, very open, and very proud of the meetings that we have that advance Alberta's agenda.

Ms Smith: As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the official itinerary for the Premier's Washington trip next week is a little thin. It names no names other than Canada's U.S. ambassador and a Senator she's met with before and is otherwise entirely absent of specific meeting details, objectives, and measurable outcomes. This concerns us because the last time that she was there, her most publicized meeting was a speech to a room full of interns, hardly the high-level meetings that we need. To the Premier: how can Alberta taxpayers be assured that they are getting good value for this trip given the low-level nature of some of her past meetings in Washington?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I now recall that the first time I went to Washington as Premier, the hon. Leader of the Opposition criticized the trip because I didn't have a chance to meet with the President of the United States, which, to me, actually showed what she understood about Washington politics. As we move forward, the most important thing that we can do in this critical time in Washington is to make sure, before we start boasting about meetings that we might be having, that they're secure and our interlocutors are prepared to meet with us. Her characterization of the last trip, of course, isn't appropriate or actually realistic or even true. As we move forward, we will ensure that we continue to report on progress, and we'll continue to make progress.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans want to see the Premier promote Alberta to the world, but they expect to see results. Increasingly, the Premier's international trips seem to be less about getting things done and more about getting the Premier's picture taken. Albertans want and deserve to see measurable progress on Keystone, not simply more Washington photo ops for the Premier's Facebook page. Meetings with think tanks and interns just don't cut it. To the Premier. When Ralph Klein was in her chair, he met with the vice-president twice. Why is it that she can't seem to get the attention of the real DC decision-makers?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, this simply speaks to the fact that the Leader of the Opposition doesn't understand how Washington works. We are working in conjunction with our Minister of Foreign Affairs, with the Canadian ambassador, with the Prime Minister, and with our representative in Washington to make sure that we're having meetings with people that are involved in this decision-making process. I'll tell you that the most unhelpful thing that we could do is to have a meeting, walk out, have a press conference, and jeopardize their position in the process. I'm really disappointed to see that the Leader of the Opposition is taking such an unsophisticated approach to a project that is critical to our being able to go that way.

Privately Operated Seniors' Housing

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Parkland Institute released a report this morning called From Bad to Worse: Elder Care in Alberta. I'll table that report shortly. It turns out that one of the best ways to make a fortune is to run a private, for-profit assisted living facility. The average rate of return on investment: 9.14 per cent, way better than the stock market but at the cost of inferior care for our seniors and terrible working conditions for our staff. To the Premier: what's more important to you, stellar returns for your private buddies or dignity and comfort for our seniors?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the most important thing for this government is to ensure that Alberta seniors, who are vibrant members of our community, have choices with respect to where they want to live. Let's be very clear. Alberta's seniors have told us that they want to have that choice. Now, that's about accommodation. Health care for seniors is publicly funded, and we're committed to doing more of that. We'll continue to do it. We have the best record in the country from the fact that we have put additional supports of 33 per cent in place since 2009 and that for low-income seniors we brought in special-needs assistance programs, which have added $27 million this year alone to low-income seniors.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, all evidence clearly indicates that publicly funded and publicly delivered long-term care is key to providing dignity and comfort and world-class care to our seniors. The Premier once recognized this. In her leadership she talked about publicly funded and publicly delivered care, not privately delivered. In the election she promised to increase long-term care spaces by a thousand in five years. That's long-term care, not continuing care. To the Premier. You promised more long-term care, more publicly funded care, yet your minister is cutting long-term care by making it all privately delivered. Who's running the show here?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, what the evidence indicates is that one of the best places to be a senior in this country is, in fact, Alberta. I challenge that hon. member to deny the fact that the broadest possible range of services for seniors living at home, independently in the community, and seniors who need facility-based care is anywhere other than the province of Alberta. Most provinces can't achieve a 33 per cent increase in home care over three years. Most provinces cannot achieve the building of a thousand additional living spaces, living spaces that accommodate all levels of care, not just long-term care, not just supportive living, and services that we're proud of.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, that's not what the Parkland report says, and there's a difference between long-term care and continuing care.

Interestingly enough, today's findings reinforce Dr. John Cowell's Health Quality Council report from 2012. His report found that staffing levels and care were best at public facilities and worst at private, for-profit facilities. Today's report says that staffing is sometimes so low that seniors are put in diapers because staff don't have enough time to take them to the bathroom, and it can take up to two hours to answer the call bell. To the Premier. The man hired to administer the health system said something very different than what you say and what this minister says. Why should we believe you and your minister instead of Dr. John Cowell?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is very well known for non sequiturs and trying to draw connections between things that simply don't connect. The fact of the matter is that quality is the common denominator among all services that are provided in this province, whether they're not-for-profit, private providers or public providers. For this hon. member to stand in this House and deny the facts that the hon. Premier has presented, that I presented, that the Associate Minister of Seniors has presented is simply, we can only conclude, a desire to undermine public confidence in services for seniors, a failure to recognize the efforts of front-line staff, and a complete . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democrat opposition.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Before the election this government promised a 2 per cent increase to postsecondary institutions. Instead, they delivered a 7 per cent cut. There's been an announcement today of $50 million that is going back into the budget after $147 million was cut. This comes after thousands of positions have been cut by postsecondary institutions, hundreds of programs have been cut, and countless students have gone elsewhere. My question is to the Premier. Why did you cut $147 million out of postsecondary education then add $50 million back after all the damage has been done?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased today that the Deputy Premier could work with presidents over the past six months culminating in today and leading to a 2.6 per cent reinvestment in postsecondary education, and we thank the work that our postsecondary leaders have done to ensure that we are streamlining and having a very effective postsecondary system. I think it's incredibly disingenuous of the hon. member to talk about systems that have been damaged or destroyed. What we know from our dialogue with presidents and leaders is that we now have a system that is responsive to student enrolment programs to ensure that we're supporting students, addressing their demands, and that's what we did today.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the Premier is delusional. This government couldn't run a lemonade stand.

When this government introduced massive cuts to universities, colleges, and technical institutions, they changed the lives of thousands of students and potential students for the worse and forever. Why doesn't this government care enough about the lives of these young people to do the budget right in the first place?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that this Premier is very responsible. She made a very difficult decision with this government that had to be made at a time when we were in financial restraint, but she also keeps her promise. The promise to all postsecondary institutions was that when the first available time arises where we can reinvest, which is what all Albertans want to do, reinvest in advanced education, we will. Today was the first available opportunity. Promise made; promise delivered.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I think the Deputy Premier just threw the Premier under the bus. I don't know.

This government promised predictable year-to-year funding, and they failed to deliver that. What is the government prepared to do to guarantee that it's going to keep its promises next year and the year after?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member knows more about buses than I do, but I have to tell you this about advanced education. We know that this economy in this province is going to grow based on a knowledge-based economy, and we know that education is a priority for Albertans. This government reflects that. But we also know that we have to make responsible, fiscally prudent decisions. So when the first opportunity arises to reinvest, we will, and we hope that we can continue that in the future.

2:10

The Speaker: Hon. members, that's it. The first five leaders' questions have occurred, and no preambles are now accepted after that. I asked you this yesterday. If you're up on the slate, please check and see, because I will shorten your preambles if they exist.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Wood Buffalo Seniors' Housing

Mr. Allen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just this past week Fort McMurray was granted status as a port of entry. This is very exciting news for the citizens of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. Another collaboration between the municipality, provincial government, and the federal agency CMHC is happening in my constituency. It's a proposed seniors' village and aging-in-place facility, the site known as Willow Square. This facility has been held up because of a French language clause which increases costs to the project. Can the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs please advise on the status of the land transfer from the federal government?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to thank this member and the member next to me from Fort McMurray for the hard work they've done on this particular file, and congratulations on the port of entry. That is incredible for the whole province. We are working with our federal counterparts at CMHC to come to an agreement on this piece of property that would allow for the seniors' facility to be built. There are some current obligations in this agreement from the federal government that we're simply uncomfortable with, so we're going to continue to work with the municipality and CMHC to resolve these issues immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allen: Thank you. To the same minister: has there been any response from the federal government or, specifically, from CMHC to the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin's excellent suggestion of September 17 to have land transferred directly to the municipality?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. That is a really good question. In fact, there are three different options on the table, Mr. Speaker, and that is one of the options. These members have worked closely with their municipality to come up with options that could be successful. We're looking at whether the land could be transferred to the municipality or leased on a long-term lease that would allow the project to go forward as well. So there are a number of great opportunities, and I think we can resolve this very quickly.

Mr. Allen: Again to the same minister: would bodies such as growth management boards be a helpful tool in negotiations and influencing outside bodies such as CMHC on what would be beneficial to citizens and perhaps be another negotiating tool to help push collaborations like this forward?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. Growth management bodies are something we've been talking about a lot in the last week or two, Mr. Speaker. Growth management bodies are another tool that will be there for municipalities that want to work together with other municipalities and with other levels of government. This would allow us as regions or as groups of municipalities to come together on important issues like building Alberta, building seniors' housing, and building relationships and the economy. So, yes, these types of boards could be extremely helpful in regions working together.

Thank you.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, there is a book by conservative author Peter Schweizer. It's called Do as I Say (Not as I Do): Profiles in Liberal Hypocrisy. I think the advanced education minister ought to have a copy. This week we find out that while he was slashing his department's budget and forcing postsecondary institutions to do the same, he was loading up on the luxuries, brand new matching furniture for his political office in Edmonton. He even tried to say that it wasn't for him but for his staff, and we found out it was for him. To the minister. You are clearly sending the wrong signal. Do you not see the hypocrisy in what you have done?

Mr. Lukaszuk: It's interesting that this individual would rise on this point. Number one, he only made one appointment to my office and didn't show up. If he actually showed up to my office more often and discussed advanced education, he would get more factual answers on what is actually going on in postsecondary education.

Second of all, Mr. Speaker, I have been perfectly clear. The furniture has been put into the office. We merged two ministries into one. We have put additional staff in that office. Yes, some of the furniture was for me but the majority wasn't. We have nothing to apologize for. Governance goes on. It simply was necessary to do so, just as, I'm sure, his staff have furniture in their office.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, I realize the minister is quite sensitive. Perhaps I'll bring him a little bowl of milk tomorrow.

The Speaker: No preamble either.

Mr. McAllister: Considering this minister's short-sighted and paternalistic approach to his file was already driving away professors from the province and postsecondary students reducing spots [interjections], how will he justify this self-serving disrespect . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've asked for no preambles, please, and I meant it. So I'm asking you to shorten yours.

Government members, please cut the interjections. We've tried very hard to elevate everything on all sides of the House. Let's make sure we continue that way.

Mr. Anderson: Point of clarification.

The Speaker: Point of clarification.

Mr. Anderson: At the beginning of our questions that's not a preamble, correct?

The Speaker: It would be a wonderful thing if I would have heard it, hon. member.

Chestermere-Rocky View, would you like to start your question again, please?

No interjections, please.

Mr. McAllister: Mr. Speaker, thank you. There are times, I admit, we all get lengthy in the preamble. I assure you this is not one of them.

Considering that this minister's short-sighted and paternalistic approach to his file was already driving professors out of the province and shrinking the number of spaces available to students, how will he justify this self-serving, disrespectful decision to students, to faculty, and to taxpayers when he sits down at the table with them?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as you know – and I know you know very well – during the estimates for this budget, as a matter of fact, this member is on the record advocating for further spending cuts to my ministry, so I find it rather hypocritical for him to be rising on this particular point.

Let me also tell you, Mr. Speaker, that today's investment of $50 million in advanced education was to address critical volume growth, student growth in our schools, and that's exactly what we have done, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. McAllister: I did advocate for more cuts, Mr. Speaker, to his own ministry and his own office.

There's a difference between wants and needs, and given that Alberta families have to make tough decisions concerning these two things, given that responsible businesses have to make tough decisions concerning this, does the minister recognize that in his role he should be setting a high standard and not a poor example?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of everyone that works in my office. They are nothing but dedicated to advanced education and putting in extreme work hours. I'm very, very proud of the entire ministry and all civil servants in our ministry.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, if this member would care to write me the first memo, the first letter, or actually show up in my office to discuss advanced education as he is the official critic for advanced education, I would always welcome him with open arms.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While we continually marvel at the accomplishments and hard work of Alberta students, this past year has been a very challenging one financially for those in postsecondary institutions that are supporting them. Today we learned of the Treasury Board granting an additional $50 million to postsecondary institutions. My question is to the Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education. Certainly, long-term funding is difficult, but we shouldn't be talking such a short term. There were cuts just a few months ago, so why are we spending it now?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, what responsible governments do is respond to the situation at hand. Every Albertan knows and all members of this House know that our Treasurer and our cabinet and our government were faced with a very difficult financial decision at the beginning of this fiscal year, having a $6 billion gap because of the differential. By the way, that is why the Premier is working so hard in British Columbia and in Washington to fix that.

Responsible governments, Mr. Speaker, adjust their spending as their revenues diminish, and that's exactly what we have done.

Mr. Young: To the same minister. Students and faculty at the University of Alberta, in my constituency, have raised a number of concerns about programs and access. What new funding will the university receive?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, today we are responding to enrolment growth. This province is growing by a hundred thousand people every year, and we attract a lot of young people that we want to engage in postsecondary education. A lot of adults return to school and readjust their careers. Today the $50 million will be pro-rated among 20 postsecondary institutions, and as universities and their presidents have agreed, they will be addressing those dollars towards enrolment in their schools.

Mr. Young: To the same minister: given that the school year has already started, how will this new money be used on campus?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will not be micromanaging campuses. We have very capable chairs, boards, presidents, and administrators. I can tell you, as I said earlier, that it will be applied towards enrolment growth and no other expenditures. Some schools may have somewhat overenrolled. They will be using that towards offsetting those costs. A new semester begins in January in many institutions. They will be able to bring on additional students in January. They will make those critical decisions at a campus level, and that's where the decision should lie.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

2:20 Highway Maintenance Contracts

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So far this winter central Albertans have been enduring poor highway maintenance. Highways like the QE II, 12, 21, and 50 are not being properly maintained, and this is jeopardizing their safety. Obtained documents show that companies contracted to do maintenance on these highways have failed to meet their obligations. Last year alone: 75 financial penalties to only five companies. To the Minister of Transportation: why is this government letting highway maintenance companies get away with putting Albertans at risk over and over?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member raises a question that's, you know, a concern to many Albertans out there who travel on Alberta's highways on a day-to-day basis. Many of my constituents obviously want to make sure that our highways are maintained and in the proper shape that they should be by the contractors we use. That's why our Minister of Transportation has a pretty healthy budget from this Legislature, one that the party across the way would like to cut. They advocated for a cut of about one-third of our capital budget during the last budget discussions. We disagree with that. We think the minister should continue working with his department and try to make sure that these contractors do as good a job as they possibly can.

Mr. Barnes: Again, Mr. Speaker, we just wanted to cut administration costs in the minister's office.

Given that over five years 303 penalties have been issued, totalling almost $1.7 million in fines, and given that two-thirds of these penalties have gone to one company, Carillion, what is the government going to do to crack down on the persistent failure of these companies to live up to their obligations?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think the member just emphasized that the minister is doing his job and his administration is doing its job. If they're doing oversight of these companies and they're issuing penalties and they're holding them to account and they're on top of them, you would see these kinds of things happening, and you are. I'm not sure how the minister is expected to cut his administration and come up with the $1.623 billion worth of cuts that this party across the way has suggested that we take out of our capital budget.

Mr. Barnes: I understand the Education office increased 32 per cent.

This government doesn't take road safety seriously as it appears that these companies put the fines into their business plans. Given that Carillion has received almost 200 penalties for its failure to live up to its contractual obligations, will this government take immediate and decisive action to ensure that these frequent offenders do not take on new contracts with the Alberta government until they can prove that they can meet the requirements of the old contracts?

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this government is on top of our contractors all the time, and I think the evidence that the member has brought forward is speaking to that. Obviously, we tender contracts on a regular basis that are open through, you know, the New West Partnership and others to all kinds of jurisdictions and all kinds of vendors, so that's another way that contractors are held accountable. These things come up on a regular basis, and they'll continue to come up. The minister will continue to look at the contracts, and he may be able to give the member a more detailed answer when he returns.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, seniors' care in Alberta is bad, and it's getting worse. The conclusions of an independent University of Alberta report today: reduced RNs, rushed care, and neglect are now common and are the worst in the for-profit settings. Overstressed staff put seniors at risk, and when problems happen, the safest thing, of course, is to call EMS, adding to overcrowded ERs and compounding problems in our system. To the minister: when will you face up to these penny-wise, pound-foolish decisions?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Premier in answers to previous questions talked about how Alberta is leading in adding seniors' services across the province, both for those living in the community and those who are living in facilities. I will say with respect to the hon. member's comments that we are aware that the system is complex to navigate for many people, not only for individuals themselves seeking placement but for family members who are trying to assist a mother, a father, or other relative. As I said before, we're looking at that question, but we stand by the fact that Albertans want choice. We're delivering choice, and we'll continue to deliver those options.

Dr. Swann: We're not talking about complexity, Mr. Minister. We're talking about quality.

Can you be surprised that EMS is overstretched? EMS response times to life-threatening events continue to be unacceptable 50 per cent of the time even to the EMS workers themselves.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I think what the hon. member is talking about is ideology. I think the problem with this discussion is that the foundation of this health care system is focused on quality standards that apply to all providers: not-for-profit, private, and public providers. We will continue to offer choice within the system. We will continue to do things like adding 33 per cent more funding over a three-year period for home care, and we'll continue to meet the challenges of being the fastest growing province in the country with a hundred thousand people coming here each year.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the domino effect, according to the Workers' Compensation Board, is that paramedics are injured four times the rate of other health workers. Over the last 12 months the rate of days lost doubled for EMS workers. What can you say about that?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is now switching the topic to emergency medical services and specifically paramedics, I can tell him that we have the benefit of a member in our caucus who, in fact, is a paramedic, who has been of great assistance to me and to my colleagues in understanding the issues that paramedics face in a system that has growing demands owing to population growth and aging and other issues. We work closely with both individual paramedics – the head of EMS at Alberta Health Services is himself a paramedic – and we have close links to the Health Sciences Association of Alberta. We'll continue to support paramedics in our health system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Livingstone-Macleod.

For-profit Long-term Care for Seniors

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's seniors are suffering due to neglect by this PC government. A comprehensive report released today by the Parkland Institute confirms what Albertans already suspected, that private care facilities distribute less hours of direct care and less regulation of standards at considerably more cost to both the public purse and to an individual's pocket. To the Minister of Health: why has your government handed so much of seniors' long-term care over to private industry when you know the result is less direct care, higher expenses, and considerably less regulation?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member wants me to answer a question based on his ideology. The foundation, the tradition of providing health care in this province is based on partnership. It's based on partnership with public-sector workers. It's based in its most historical roots with partnerships with not-for-profit organizations, and it is also based on solid partnerships with private providers. The hon. member's interest in ideology is all good and well. This government is interested in quality and in identifying and enforcing common standards for all providers. We're going to continue to do that.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that seniors who require long-term care are being increasingly diverted to assisted living facilities and given that this off-loading puts more pressure on seniors and their families to pay out of pocket for the treatment that they need, isn't this just another way to shake Albertans down to pay for essential medical services, thus weakening public health and leaving us exposed to private, two-tiered, American-style health care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the hon. member, if he's still stuck in the 1980s and '90s and that's the foundation for his discussion about health care in something as serious as seniors' issues, that's up to him. The fact is that this is the only jurisdiction in Canada that is building 1,000 spaces a year that accommodate all levels of care. Increasingly, they are supporting people who are entering end-of-life care. The issue around staffing is something that we've discussed in this House before. We design our facilities so that we can adjust staffing levels to meet the needs of residents, not to meet the requirements of someone's particular ideology.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this PC government's obsession with privatized, long-term care and assisted living is somehow stuck in the 19th century, I would venture to say, and has led to insecurity, lower standards, and a massive rip-off to seniors when they are at their most vulnerable, why won't the minister commit today to improving staffing levels at seniors' care facilities by phasing out inferior, for-profit delivery of seniors' care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the way to improve staffing levels in seniors' care or in any other part of the health system is to add more staff, and there is no province in this country that is doing more and has to do more to keep up with the need to increase staff in the health care system by the very nature of our growth. The province is growing by the size of the city of Red Deer on an annual basis. Our health care system continues to grow faster than any other in the country. It remains the best-funded system in this country and, in fact, is ahead of many developed countries. This is a government that is on top of growth in health care in 2013.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Emergency Medical Services (continued)

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health's heavy-handed approach to ambulance dispatch just doesn't make sense. EMS workers are complaining that they are forced to leave entire regions of our province empty and without ambulances to flex from region to region on nonemergency interfacility transfers. Currently Calgary has 28 interfacility transfer units, and EMS workers tell me they often find those units underutilized. To the Minister of Health: enlighten me. Why does Calgary have 28 interfacility units and rural southern Alberta has none?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the obvious answer would seem to be that there are proportionately more people in Calgary who require interfacility transfers on a daily basis than in smaller communities across the province. The hon. member has asked a number of questions with respect to ground ambulance services in rural Alberta, and if there is a specific issue with respect to a municipality in his constituency, I'd be more than pleased to look into it directly. However, in order to do so, I would require that information to be provided to my office.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will do that.

Given that recently a teenager in Claresholm was seriously injured in a high school football game and lay on the field for more than 45 minutes before an ambulance arrived due to this interfacility transfer mess and given that a 45-minute wait for an ambulance is now average in certain parts of southern Alberta, is the minister prepared to sit down and rethink this whole thing, or is he going to just let his pride get in the way of patient care again?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'd be very interested to see support for the claim the hon. made about people waiting an average of 45 minutes in southern Alberta. That does not marry up with any data that I have available to me. But what I will tell this hon. member is that we made a decision as a government several years ago that EMS is in fact part of the health care system. Now, as I said earlier, if there are particular issues in a municipality that the hon. member would like me to look into, I'd be pleased to do that. But make no mistake: the demand for interfacility transfers is continuing to grow. I have asked Alberta Health Services to look at other options to make sure that units dedicated for that purpose can serve that purpose can serve . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to hearing about that.

Given that in the Calgary region an Amber Alert is called when wait times exceed just a few minutes whereas chiefly because of interfacility transfer problems associated with the flex system patients in rural areas are waiting up to and over 45 minutes, can the minister explain what kind of category of alert that is? Is it plaid?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'm really not sure I even understand the point of that question, and it's not surprising that I don't understand the point because it's unclear so often. The government is working very hard to keep up with the demand for emergency medical services across the province. That's why we engaged the Health Quality Council to conduct a thorough review of this, an evidence-based review. We've accepted the recommendations some time ago, we began implementing them some time ago, and they will continue to deliver benefits to Albertans in terms of timely service and a higher quality of care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Health Care Accessibility

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents have asked these questions. Albertans sometimes wait a long time to see a doctor, and this wait can be even longer if they're looking for a second opinion. Access, in my opinion, is a problem. My question is to the Minister of Health. What is the minister doing to address this that will help to alleviate Albertans' health concerns and certainly their fears?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. There are several things that the government is doing in this regard, but first and foremost is a principle that we adopted in October 2011. That is the principle that every Albertan should have a home in the health care system in or near their home community. That means access to a family doctor who can arrange for referrals to specialists. It means access to other professionals like nurse practitioners and dietitians and pharmacists. That opportunity has seen a great expansion in primary health care in the province. It's seen the centralization of wait-lists in some areas and protocols around referral.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: can we expect that AHS will start looking at other ways to meet these wait time lapses?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, they already have begun that work. The hon. member, I believe, is referring to the wait time between referral from a family doctor to a specialist. In that regard we've begun to see the centralization of some wait-lists in the province. Hip and knee surgeries are the best examples, where we've seen a very significant decrease in the wait time because patients are triaged and assessed at central locations across Alberta. We've seen initiatives like here in Edmonton at a primary care network where people are screened for orthopaedic surgery prior to seeing the specialist. The result is that over 80 per cent of those patients have been taken out of the waiting line.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Again to the same minister: what can be done to speed up tests to confirm a diagnosis, in particular for cancer, and to be able to get that second opinion?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, all urgent cases that require diagnostic imaging or some other sort of specialized assessment are dealt with immediately. What I can tell the hon. member is that the example I gave in the last question with respect to centralizing assessment and referral for hip and knee surgeries is something that can be applied and that we are applying to other high-demand elective procedures. What we find, therefore, is that we have an opportunity to do two things: we take people out of the queue who don't need to be there, and we get those who do need specialized assessment and treatment to care much, much sooner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bioenergy Grant Program

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the third time now the Auditor General has outlined the growing boondoggle of the biogrant program: $124 million has been spent, and the grant recipients are not accounting for the money they received. There is no proof that the program is actually reducing greenhouse gas emissions. With the world looking to us for leadership, this type of mismanagement only serves to hurt our credibility in long-term economic interest. How can the minister claim this program is working when there is no proof or accountability?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. This is a program that has actually invested in rural Alberta, has helped ensure that there are jobs in rural Alberta, and has helped ensure that we diversify our sources of energy in this province. Yes, the Auditor General has drawn to the attention of the government and to this minister and to, I presume, previous ministers certain shortfalls, and we've taken that advice. I always take the advice of the Auditor General, and we've taken steps to ensure that there is proper accountability.

Mr. Anglin: The fall over the cliff is not a short fall.

Given that the Auditor General's report clearly states that the government has no means of telling whether or not this biogrant boondoggle is accomplishing any of its targets or greenhouse gas reductions, doesn't this government care it is handing out hard-earned taxpayer dollars with no idea of how they are actually being spent?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is, I believe, expanding on the Auditor General's comments and report in ways that might not reflect what he actually said. I would say that it's quite clear that there are measures in place to ensure that there's accountability for this and that they are meeting the original objective of the program, which is to ensure that there's a diversity of biofuels available in this province.

Mr. Anglin: That cliff just got higher.

Given that the companies are not complying with the program and given that the Auditor General has highlighted this problem for the last three years, when will this government finally do its job and implement the Auditor General's recommendations?

Mr. Hughes: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell the House that since this program came under my responsibility, we've taken steps to ensure that there is full accountability, full responsibility, and that the appropriate steps of oversight are taken.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Travel Insurance for Seniors

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents tell me there is a gap in policies related to travel insurance for seniors. During family emergencies, for example, a private insurance premium for necessary travel often adds a tremendous financial burden at a time of emotional stress. Seniors should be able to travel without the anxiety of financial hardship as a result of medical emergencies abroad. My question is to the Minister of Health. I don't think we have enough time to answer the question, but what is the government doing to help aid seniors who are experiencing a medical emergency or incur other related medical expenses while they're travelling abroad?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member should know that insured physician services received outside Canada are paid at the lesser of the amount claimed and the rate that an Alberta physician would be paid for the same service. For that reason we advise seniors and we, in fact, advise all Albertans to purchase supplementary travel insurance while they are travelling outside the country in order that other costs which may not be covered by the Alberta plan can be covered for them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that illnesses while travelling in foreign countries can often be sudden and unrelated to any pre-existing health condition, especially with regard to our seniors, why are seniors' emergency-, hospital-, and medical-related expenses incurred outside of Alberta not covered by Alberta Blue Cross in the seniors' travel insurance plan?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I explained earlier, in general our health system will only pay for out-of-country physician services at rates that would be paid to an Alberta physician. The Blue Cross coverage for seniors plan does not provide supplementary coverage for out-of-country services. Again, we advise that all Albertans who are travelling outside the country make sure that they have supplementary insurance in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quadri: Thank you. Finally, I would like to ask the same minister if the government will consider creating a program with a defined set of criteria and parameters that will make travel insurance more accessible to those seniors who need it.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would think that would be very, very unlikely for the simple reason that we are focused on expanding the range of services that we provide within Alberta to Alberta residents. There are many recent examples of enhancements. In 2012, for example, chiropractic coverage was raised to $200 per person per year on the seniors' plan. Emergency travel insurance, as I said, is not being contemplated at this time as part of the plan. We'll continue to focus on the services that we need to provided here at home.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we commence the afternoon proceedings, starting with Members' Statements, please be reminded we are running a bit late. The hon. Government House Leader wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm mindful of the clock, and in order to ensure that we get through Members' Statements and the other Routine, I would ask that we give unanimous consent to extend the clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Let us go on with private members and their statements, beginning with Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Battle of Ortona, Italy

Mr. Fox: Each November 11 we reflect on service, sacrifice, and selflessness. Honouring the men and women who serve the rest of us in the military is a privilege. We enjoy the nation that we have today because of their actions on our behalf.

When we participate in Remembrance Day events, when we wear a poppy, we're usually thinking about Canada's participation in some major conflict like the Great War or World War II or we're reminded of one of the recent conflicts like in Afghanistan, Iraq, or Bosnia or one of Canada's many peacekeeping missions. Last year I focused my Remembrance Day remarks on the Korean conflict and the heroism of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. Let me now focus on the 70th anniversary of the Battle of Ortona in World War II and the efforts of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment.

Around Christmas 1943 the western Allied troops got their first unpleasant introduction to house-to-house fighting as Canadian troops attempted to take the Italian port city of Ortona against fierce German resistance. The fighting was so fierce that the Associated Press ran a headline: miniature Stalingrad in hapless Ortona. The machine gun fire was so intense that the Canadians developed a new tactic, mouse-holing. It involved using weapons to blow holes in the walls between the buildings so that you go house to house without having to enter the machine gun paths in the streets below. After eight days of fighting, the Canadians took Ortona.

One thousand three hundred and seventy-five Canadians died fighting in and around the city, almost one-quarter of all the Canadian deaths in the entire Italian campaign. Ordinary Canadian men, many of them from Edmonton, who left civilian life behind because they were needed, had come together as a fighting unit and defeated two of Germany's finest divisions. They put up a sign at the entrance of Ortona. It said: this is Ortona, a west Canadian town. In many ways we are here because they were there. We must never forget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Private Health Care Services

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The months after this government's broken-promise budget have shown that the PCs cannot be trusted to stand up for public health care. They plotted to take $180 million out of seniors' drug coverage, making Alberta seniors pay more for their prescriptions. They subjected home-care recipients and their families to chaos by suddenly ending contracts with nonprofits and co-operatives in favour of huge for-profit providers, who didn't and couldn't get the job done. And they have a new plan now to privatize lab services here in Edmonton to the tune of $3 billion. On all of these major, sudden, and ill-conceived plans the New Democrats have stood with Alberta families and stood up for public health care.

In some cases this PC government has been forced to back down. They've shelved restructuring the seniors' drug plan. They were forced to reverse as well some of the worst decisions in home care. Now, Mr. Speaker, they've created a confusing mess around their plan to privatize lab services. First, the CEO of Alberta Health Services said that they are putting the changes on hold so that they can consult, and then the Health minister says that they're going full steam ahead. One day the Premier says that it isn't, but the next day she is forced to admit that it is. Most importantly, they're misleading Albertans about the reasons for these changes.

The truth of the matter is this. This PC government has never stood up for public health care, and it never will. They stick firmly to their conservative agenda, which is to cut services and to privatize. They stand up for their wealthy donors and back the plans for the lobbyists who are pushing for privatization. It leaves the Alberta New Democrats and workers to stand up for better health care, and Alberta families can trust that we will always be there.

Thank you.

National 4-H Month

Ms Fenske: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize National 4-H Month. We wear these green ribbons to celebrate the tremendous positive influence this program has on our youth and our communities. This year also marks 4-H Canada's 100th anniversary. Alberta has had 4-H as an integral part of its communities since 1917. Over the years the world we live in has changed, but the simple vision that started 4-H has endured the test of time, making it one of the most recognized and successful youth mentorship programs.

The 4-H motto is Learn to Do by Doing. Mr. Speaker, 4-H members take part in activities that suit their interests, increase their knowledge, and develop their life skills. While the program helps strengthen our connection with agriculture, it has evolved beyond the farm-related activities we are most familiar with to include everything from computers and performing arts to photography and public speaking. Many young people graduate from 4-H and go on to provide strong leadership in their communities, in business, and their country, bolstered by the skills they learned as members of this long-standing organization.

At the heart of the 4-H program's success are the dedicated community volunteers who share their time and their knowledge with our youth, people like Clinton Ziegler, who was introduced here today, this year's 4-H Hall of Fame inductee, who began his association with 4-H more than 50 years ago. The sense of community and interest of many in supporting our youth is why this program continues to thrive. And 4-H members pledge their heads to clearer thinking, their hearts to greater loyalty, their hands to larger service, and their health to better living for their club, their community, and their country. This pledge outlines values I think we can all believe in.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

International Market Development

Mr. Khan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize today the innovative Alberta entrepreneurs who are helping to grow and diversify our economy by promoting their products and services on the world stage. In September I had the privilege of attending an informative and enlightening seminar in my constituency co-hosted, I'll note, by the St. Albert and district chamber of commerce. It was one of 18 information sessions the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has held in the past six months all across Alberta to promote international market access. These seminars were designed to provide businesses with a clear understanding of the services and resources our government offers to help them become successful exporters in international markets. More than 30 participants attended the St. Albert event, including businesses and representatives from local governments and regional economic groups. Overall, upward of 400 people participated in the seminars during two market access tours.

Mr. Speaker, opening new markets is a key part of our building Alberta plan. The government has long understood the importance of working internationally to advance Alberta's interests. We know of the failed and discredited firewall approach of the opposition. We know that it has been hidden but certainly not forgotten. It would be devastating to Alberta's future. Let's not forget that that $90 billion export sector is the backbone of our economy.

In a global economy promoting our competitiveness in the international markets is critical to building Alberta. We will continue to build partnerships to grow Alberta businesses by expanding their international market access.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Airdrie.

South East Community Leagues Association

Mr. Dorward: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely proud to rise today to speak about an initiative that over the last 20 years has aimed to promote and foster co-operation amongst several communities in my community. The South East Community Leagues Association, or SECLA, was formed in 1992 by Edmonton city council as a way to implement and help establish viable, community-driven redevelopment plans due to an absence of an area structure plan in our area.

The association was incorporated in 2001 with the original seven leagues and now includes 11 leagues. In its 21 years the association has worked to provide outstanding support and service and has become an unwavering voice for the communities of southeast Edmonton.

Since 2001 the association has accomplished much, Mr. Speaker, for its 11 member community leagues such as being involved in the city's transportation master plan and Holyrood and Strathearn apartment redevelopments. Other notable endeavours include hosting several volunteer appreciation events in order to thank those whose efforts have created a vibrant and inclusive community in my area.

Recently construction began on the Fulton ravine south park development project, which you can see immediately north of Capilano mall – you may have driven past it, Mr. Speaker – and which, when fully completed, will boast extensive trails, inviting picnic sites, gorgeous landscaping, and a skateboard park that will be enjoyed by the young or the young at heart.

I would like to acknowledge and thank the Minister of Culture for her faith and trust in this project. The government dollars in this grant project have been multiplied many times by these individuals.

The South East Community Leagues Association is a prime example of what can be accomplished when community leagues work together to partner to create something that's greater than each individual community league. That's why I wanted to highlight the great work that they've done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, or ADHD, is one of the most common disorders in Canada. ADHD impacts people from all walks of life and backgrounds. It affects more than a million Canadian men, women, boys, and girls of all ages. It is a real condition, often the result of a chemical imbalance that can be complex to diagnose and impacts most areas of an individual's life. In most cases it does not go away. It affects kids at school, students at college, employees at work, and parents at home.

The impairing effects of ADHD also increase costs to health care, education, labour, social services, and the justice system. It impedes the attainment of human and social capital, resulting in increased socioeconomic costs for Canada and Alberta. These costs are further fuelled by the continued underdiagnosis and undertreatment of ADHD. A shocking 90 per cent of adults with the condition remain untreated.

One of my sons has been diagnosed with autism, and his development has been absolutely amazing. That's because thanks to increased awareness, training, and funding for early autism intervention, it is now a very manageable condition that children are able to grow through to adulthood and enjoy the joys of career, independence, and family. Just a few decades ago that was not the case. Health and education professionals didn't understand autism, and millions of children suffered as a result.

Just as autism was formerly misunderstood, misdiagnosed, and mistreated for decades, ADHD still is. I'd like to thank parents and teachers like Airdrie's Bert Church's Tracey Sweetapple for her amazing advocacy on ADHD. It is through people like her that I hope we can not only raise awareness about ADHD but urge governments to invest in better training and treatment for our teachers and health professionals so that these beautiful and gifted children and adults can get the help they need to not only survive in life but flourish.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just before we go on to Introduction of Bills, could we have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I have the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Professor Steven Ming Li and Professor Alan Zhenhua Hao, visiting from China. Professor Li teaches at the humanities and international exchange program within the Faculty of Public Relations at the Shanghai polytechnic university. Associate Professor Hao teaches digital technology at Shanghai Jianqiao University. The professors are accompanied today by their hosts, Dolaine and Dennis Koch from Edmonton. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that all guests rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Very quickly I'd also like to introduce Lorne Zalasky, who was acknowledged earlier today collectively with Advocis. I think that this tireless member of the Glenora community needs to be specifically recognized not only for his prowess as a minor soccer coach. What a great guy to meet on the street. I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Merci, M. le Président. Je suis très heureuse de pouvoir me lever devant cette Assemblée et de vous présenter des représentants importants du gouvernement de l'Alberta et de la communauté francophone de l'Alberta. Je demanderais à nos invités de bien vouloir se lever lorsque je les présente, en commençant avec Mme Cindie LeBlanc, une personne de confiance dans mon ministère qui est à la tête du Secrétariat francophone.

En plus de Cindie, je suis honorée de vous présenter Dolorèse Nolette, qui tire sa révérence de son poste comme présidente de l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta, ou l'ACFA. Elle appréciera pouvoir se concentrer davantage sur ses fonctions comme directrice générale du Réseau d'adaptation scolaire, un service appuyé par le ministère de l'Éducation, qui s'assure que les enfants et les jeunes dans toutes les régions de la province ont accès aux ressources dont ils ont besoin pour réussir à l'école et dans leur communauté.

Se joignant à Cindie et Dolorèse se trouve Jean Johnson, le nouveau président de l'ACFA. M. Johnson est aussi le directeur général du Quartier francophone, une zone de revitalisation des affaires ici à Edmonton qui célèbre cette semaine son premier anniversaire.

Je vous remercie de vous être joints à nous aujourd'hui et pour tout votre travail avec le ministère de la Culture et le Secrétariat francophone. Je demanderais à mes collègues de vous montrer l'accueil chaleureux de notre Assemblée.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also very pleased to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly important representatives from the Alberta government and Alberta's francophone community. If you would kindly rise after I call your names. I will begin with Ms Cindie LeBlanc, a trusted advisor with my ministry, who leads the Francophone Secretariat.

In addition to Cindie, I am very honoured to introduce you to Dolorèse Nolette, who has recently retired from her position as president of the ACFA, the French Canadian Association of Alberta. She will now be able to focus full time on her responsibilities as executive director of the francophone educational consulting service, a program funded by Alberta Education to ensure francophone children and youth have access to the supports they need to be successful in school and in their communities.

Together with Cindie and Dolorèse today is Jean Johnson, the incoming president of the ACFA. Mr. Johnson is also the executive director of the French Quarter business revitalization zone here in Edmonton, which is celebrating its one-year anniversary this week.

I want to thank you for joining us today and for all your work with Alberta Culture and the Francophone Secretariat. I would ask that my colleagues show them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [As submitted]

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: Let us proceed with Introduction of Bills with the Minister of Energy, please.

Bill 34

Building New Petroleum Markets Act

Mr. Hughes: Merci, M. le Président. I request leave to introduce Bill 34, Building New Petroleum Markets Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Bill 37

Statutes Repeal Act

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce Bill 37, Statutes Repeal Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

3:00

Mr. Speaker, many talk about making our laws simpler or reducing unneeded regulation. This bill does just this. This act will repeal a group of 24 pieces or provisions in legislation that are unnecessary or obsolete. I'll give a few of them: for example, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act; the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Credit) Amendment Act, 2001; the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act; the Crop Liens Priorities Act; the Health Facilities Review Committee Act; the Hospitals Amendment Act; the Masters and Servants Act; the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act; the Partnership Amendment Act; and the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act.

Mr. Speaker, the act also sets up a mechanism for reviewing and repealing legislation that has been sitting unproclaimed for five years. The proposed mechanism and proposed repeals will promote the health of our legislative system by reducing red tape and helping to eliminate legislative confusion and duplication.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 39

Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce Bill 39, the Enhancing Consumer Protection in Auto Insurance Act.

This act amends the Alberta Insurance Act, specifically as it pertains to our automobile insurance system. I am confident that these amendments will enhance Alberta's consumer interests through increased oversight in the rate-setting process and increase competition by moving to a more responsive file-and-approve system on a company-by-company basis.

Alberta has a robust and successful auto insurance system, and these changes will help to strengthen it further and improve its efficiency. We are also making other housekeeping changes to the Insurance Act to ensure plain language and consistency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a report, From Bad To Worse: Residential Elder Care in Alberta, that the third-party leader mentioned in question period. I'm tabling five copies of those.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, and I think they're mandatory reading for all members of this House. The first is by the Institute for Catastrophic Loss Reduction, Making Flood Insurable for Canadian Homeowners.

The second is entitled Flood Insurance. It's by Nina Paklina of the OECD. It describes what Europe did after their major flooding in 2002 to make mandatory flood insurance available for all homeowners.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there someone to table on behalf of Edmonton-Centre? Not yet? Thank you.

Let's go on to Calgary-Bow, followed by the Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta I'm pleased to rise today to table the requisite number of copies of the Seniors Advisory Council annual report 2012-2013.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Accountability, Transparency and Transformation, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Scott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table an article that I mentioned yesterday in question period, which is Michael Smyth: B.C.'s Politicians Should Climb Aboard the Public Disclosure Bandwagon. That's the same article that describes our region, Alberta, as the "new gold standard for openness."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table another letter I've received expressing concerns about the deep cuts to postsecondary education that are happening in Alberta. This one is from Michelle Paterok. Michelle is a student at the U of A, and her letter raises some important questions for the minister of advanced education about what kind of society we are aspiring to be and what values this PC government is reflecting by implementing these budget cuts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the associate minister for persons with disabilities.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite copies for the Parkland Institute's report that they put out today called From Bad to Worse: Residential Elder Care in Alberta. The report highlights growing problems in health care for seniors and how the private delivery model is not working for seniors here in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the minister responsible for the Workers' Compensation Board it is my honour today to rise and table a document that presents a 10-year overview of performance. Despite the fact that insured workers have risen by 38 per cent in that period, claims are down 3 per cent, lost-time claims down 27 per cent, decisions appealed to the commission down 27 per cent, Ombudsman inquiries down 58 per cent, and MLA inquiries down 58 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, it's a story of remarkable performance. I urge MLAs to read it, and I offer my congratulations to Guy Kerr, president and CEO of the Workers' Compensation Board, indeed to all of the staff at the board for an incredible performance.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing no others, allow me to please table with you the requisite number of copies of the 2012-2013 annual report of the Child and Youth Advocate, that is prepared pursuant to section 21 of the Child and Youth Advocate Act.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Pension Plan Act the Members of the Legislative Assembly pension plan annual report for the year ended March 31, 2013, and pursuant to the provincial judges and masters in chambers registered and unregistered pension plans regulation the provincial judges and masters in chambers registered and unregistered pension plans annual report for the year ended March 31, 2012.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was a point of order, I believe, raised during question period today. Was it withdrawn? Oh, it was just a clarification? Thank you.

I think that concludes our Routine for today, and we can move on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 41

Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to rise and move second reading of Bill 41, the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Amendment Act, 2013.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities works to improve the lives of Albertans with disabilities by engaging the community and advising government on issues that affect persons with disabilities in our province. The council represents people from across Alberta and is inclusive with respect to age and type of disability. However, the legislation that governed the council was enacted in 1988 and has not been amended since that time. The council was initially created in a social context of low public awareness about disabilities, very limited community access for persons with disabilities, and a lack of independent advocacy bodies.

Mr. Speaker, the act needs to be updated to reflect our modern reality, a reality that is, thankfully, more inclusive of persons with disabilities, with a large and complex network of services, service providers, and advocacy groups. We are broadening the scope of the council to give it a role in working more closely with the community and providing strategic advice to government on today's issues that affect persons with disabilities.

There are several significant new roles for the council under the amendments, Mr. Speaker. The council can advise government on the development of policies, programs, and initiatives and their implementation. The council can review government departments' business plans and advise on any impacts on persons with disabilities. The council may advise government on aligning its policies and programs with the UN convention on the rights of persons with disabilities. In providing advice to government, the council can also work to identify innovative opportunities to improve sustainability of service, and the council will also support the relationship between the government and the community service providers. These amendments will give this council a more strategic and influential role than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's social policy framework guides us towards a new era in social services. We are moving away from traditional government silos towards programs and services that work together to achieve the best possible results for the people that they support. When it comes to disability supports, the Premier's council is in a unique position to help us with that.

While the council's secretariat is part of my department and I sit on the council as the deputy chair, the council members themselves are not affiliated with any particular ministry or program area. Especially with these new amendments, they will have a broader crossministry mandate. This positions them very well to offer us advice on how to take an integrated approach that considers the needs of Albertans with a wide range of disabilities, and especially as they become more experienced in this new role, Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that the council members will have a good perspective on what is happening across government in terms of initiatives that affect persons with disabilities. Furthermore, the results-based budgeting review of disability services identified that the Premier's council should have a more effective role in helping government to address opportunities and barriers for persons with disabilities.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we are currently working on a number of initiatives to improve disability services in Alberta, including the employment first initiative and the creation of an employment advisory council and the recently announced Bill 30, which will dissolve the regional persons with developmental disabilities boards and the child and family services authorities to form new family and community engagement councils in 2014. I think there will be some great opportunities for the Premier's council to work with these new councils, and I've already spoken to them about this possibility.

So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that we have a lot of excellent reasons for amending the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Act to give this council a stronger role. We have also recently recruited seven new members to the Premier's council, bringing the total to 14 members. I'm very pleased that we were able to both increase the size of the council and to renew their legislation this year so that we can move forward with a strong council and a strong mandate.

In this current environment, where there is so much work going on in the areas of social policy, employment, and program restructuring, I think there is a tremendous opportunity for the Premier's council to make a positive difference in the lives of Albertans with disabilities. I'm very much looking forward to working with this council once these new legislative amendments pass, and I think we're going to have a really exciting year.

I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to do this.

I now move that we adjourn debate on Bill 41.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 43

Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise today on behalf of the Deputy Premier and Minister of Enterprise and Advanced Education to move second reading of Bill 43, the Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act, 2013.

Simply put, Bill 43 is the next logical step for our province as the hon. Premier's vision for building Alberta's prosperity becomes reality. AEDA has become one of the government's most dependable, enduring, and trusted partners for the past two decades, and it's contributed tremendously to Alberta's growth and development. As we move forward, the Premier and her government are establishing a new role for the Alberta Economic Development Authority which will better support Alberta's efforts to diversify our economy, access and expand markets, and prosper on the global stage.

The AEDA Amendment Act includes a renewed governance structure and will make AEDA an even more efficient and effective organization. A smaller and more focused 12-member board will enable AEDA to better serve the Premier, cabinet, and Albertans.

I'm also pleased to see that the refreshed and re-energized AEDA will incorporate the functions of the Competitiveness Council. This will streamline the number of economic agencies and increase their alignment with GOA priorities. It will also ensure greater client focus and improve the effectiveness and efficiency within the economic development community.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Economic Development Authority Amendment Act supports this government's plan to build Alberta and help to ensure our future prosperity. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I now move to adjourn debate on Bill 43.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 30

Building Families and Communities Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and move second reading of Bill 30, the Building Families and Communities Act.

Much of the quality of life that we enjoy in Alberta today has been built by freeing and directing the latent energy of our natural resources. The energy of sun and water provided us with the agricultural foundation upon which Alberta was built. Gas and oil have helped create much of our current prosperity. And today we embark upon a plan for a different kind of energy. This is the energy of our families, our not-for-profit sectors, our diverse communities, the energy of individual Albertans who have the opportunities to succeed. For energy to be put to work effectively in building Alberta's future, we must collaborate and co-operate. We must move in the same direction, and that's what this act will enable families and communities to do.

The why of this act, Mr. Speaker, is every bit as important as the how. This act follows from the extensive discussions with Albertans that created Alberta's social policy framework. Albertans made it clear that they wanted day-to-day decisions about social programs made in the communities that are affected by those decisions. In essence, it's absolutely necessary, to deal with social issues in our society, that those issues are owned by the communities, that we work together as individuals, communities, and governments to deal with those problems. A one-size-fits-all approach does not meet their needs and their aspirations. Albertans made it clear that they want government to recognize that just as no two individuals are exactly alike, no two communities are exactly the same. Each community has unique social needs and unique social challenges, and communities should have the ability to address those challenges in ways that are keeping with their realities.

Albertans also told government that they want to be partners in the process of developing social policies and programs and supports. They wanted the family and community voice to be heard and to be effective. They told government that they wanted assurance that the programs and services were achieving their intended outcomes. While the social policy framework was being developed, our PDD and CFSA boards were also hard at work evaluating how we could provide the best governance model to get those results for Albertans. A year ago I asked them to come together to look at what that governance model should look like, to serve Albertans under the Human Services ministry.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that two years ago the Premier had this vision of putting together into one ministry many of the agencies and programs that serve people, that help individual Albertans overcome difficulties, whether they're sporadic or chronic, help them to achieve the success that they need, to achieve what they need to help contribute back to our communities and our economy.

It was a great idea because we're working much better together, but now we need to look at our regional service delivery model. We need to look at our governance model to say how we can provide the right kind of governance so that Albertans in their communities can have their voices heard in the development of social policy, whether it's delivered locally by not-for-profit agencies, by local government, or by the provincial government. As part of the recommendations that they brought forward, the PDD and CFSA boards recommended that we change the board governance structure. So as part of the act current child and family service authority boards and persons with developmental disabilities boards will be disestablished. These changes are not taken lightly and follow from extensive discussions with both the boards and external stakeholders.

These boards serve some of the most vulnerable Albertans. Government can assure those who are served by the boards and their families and caregivers that there will be no disruption or reduction in services or programs as a result of this change. Their needs will continue to be met. This act is not about meeting budget targets; it is about serving people better. We have a growing province. We need to make the most effective use of our resources. We need to help Albertans achieve their outcomes.

It's about creating consistency and equity across the province and enabling all Albertans to be able to take advantage of the opportunities this province has to offer. We want to ensure that social-based services are effective, efficient, and accessible to all those that need them and that they're responsive and flexible when it comes to meeting the diverse and constantly changing needs of Albertans.

As part of achieving these goals, Mr. Speaker, this act calls for the creation of family and community engagement councils. Membership on the council will be about engaging the community in the continued discussion of social policy. We'll have an open recruitment process. The selection of council members will be based on their ability to engage their community in these discussions.

Just as no two communities are the same, no two regions of the province are the same, so all of the councils will not necessarily look exactly the same in terms of size, and regional boundaries are not enshrined in the legislation. That gives us flexibility in terms of how the regions are established. It will allow us to modify regional areas if experience shows us that it's necessary to do so.

Membership on the councils is intended to be reflective of the diversity of the communities in which they function. It's worth noting that the legislation calls, for example, for aboriginal representation to ensure First Nations and Métis concerns and ideas will be thoroughly and properly addressed. In fact, it continues the aboriginal co-chair model that is currently in place with the CFSA authorities.

I can advise the House that I have met in September and October of this year with Treaty 6, Treaty 7, and Treaty 8 representatives as well as having meetings with the Metis Settlements General Council and the Métis Nation of Alberta to ensure that they understand that their voice will be very important both working with these new regional councils and in terms of direct discussion and access with the minister as we go forward. I've made a commitment to continue to engage First Nations and Métis representatives.

The councils that the act will create will work with and for communities to help them identify and discuss their social policy needs as well as opportunities and challenges and solutions, but these councils will not work in isolation. They will extend their reach and effectiveness by collaborating with a wide range of community partners. We anticipate that the regions will be aligned, for example, with the health advisory council regions, because community health is an extremely important issue and the social determinants of health are very much our baseline; with the health advisory council regions' school boards, because Human Services works very closely with Health and with Education; aboriginal agencies; municipalities; social service agencies; and the private sector. Their mandate will be to engage with communities on strategic policy directions related to social-policy-based programs and services.

In essence, their role will be to monitor the social health of the community and the effectiveness of social-based programs and services. In that regard, they will advise, report on, and make recommendations to their communities and to the Minister of Human Services.

As I've said many times, Alberta is facing societal issues that require societal response. When it comes to social issues, the command and control approach does not work. Experience has clearly shown that government cannot legislate away social problems or social issues. We certainly cannot buy our way out of them. It's also been shown that the best way to resolve tough social issues is through the involvement and collaboration of Albertans, their families, communities, the private sector, and their governments, working together, Mr. Speaker, bringing that energy together to create the kind of community we want to have, to create the kind of society that we can be proud of.

The Building Families and Communities Act is about creating that partnership, it's about using our combined energy to drive change forward, it's about investing in our families and communities, and, Mr. Speaker, it's about building a better Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand and rise to speak to this important bill, a bill that affects a large number of very vulnerable, very crucial people in our society, persons with disabilities and, indeed, those children in care. I commend the minister for looking at this file and, with the massive changes in his own ministry, the amalgamation of so much under one roof, having the foresight to review all of the ways in which we can improve both the efficiency of the way we're spending dollars on vulnerable people and also the organizational structure and the feedback loops and evaluation mechanisms to make good decisions, not just today in a rigid way but to have a process for ongoing reassessment and evaluation and improvements that necessarily have to be part and parcel of the work that we're doing for these most vulnerable of our citizens.

I appreciated hearing some of the comments about returning to the communities. What we heard during a lot of the consultations and the furor this past summer from the PDD community was that these arbitrary, top-down decisions that were looking very, very dramatic, looking very much like the usual government top-down decisions, and that would have very substantive impacts on people's quality of life, their ability to get out, and their ability to maximize their contributions to their own and their communities' lives obviously backfired.

The government, in spite of perhaps some of the values that the framework established, seemed to have forgotten that there needed to be a lot more connection to the grassroots. There needed to be a lot better connection to those who are caregivers and the PDD community itself. They've taken a step back, and I think we applaud that. There's no question that this was going to be a disaster in the making, in reality, by the anxiety and disruption that it was creating in some of these families and individuals themselves. So I think the minister has taken a good step there, and this new act, I think, has some good elements to it.

Again, the danger here is a government that is out of touch with the grassroots community, a government that hasn't really been listening very well to the concerns and issues in the communities and is now certainly rearranging the management of this service to people with disabilities but isn't necessarily any better connected with communities. It will take many months through these family and community engagement councils to establish some bona fide and trusted relationships with the decision-makers at the top in government.

Some of the concerns that we have on this side relate directly to this decision-making power at the top and the disconnect with the grassroots and the community people. These have been raised consistently by the PDD community themselves. With the new amendment act that was announced even today with the Premier's council for PDD, again a question arises as to: how is that council going to relate to the new community councils? Who's going to have the most influence? Who trumps whom? Whom are we going to listen to at the government level? Well, it's pretty clear that the Premier's council is going to have a tremendous amount of influence. Many at the grassroots don't feel that their councils will have nearly the influence, and they are much closer to the real world of PDD.

I want to raise that flag for the minister, to make sure that we give due influence to those who are saying that we have not had the influence of the grassroots and that has created the problems over the last decade with a lack of responsiveness, a lack of timely reassessments. These folks are changing every day in terms of their capacities and their abilities and their needs. If we don't have a timely and responsive way to reassess needs and reassess the supports that are there for people, if we're listening to different levels of organizations throughout the province, especially at higher levels of organization like the Premier's council, and not listening to the people at the grassroots, we're going to get into exactly the same problems that we've been facing, where people at the bottom feel totally disconnected with the services, not respected, and are fighting for their day-to-day well-being and quality of life.

Again, I appreciate the minister talking about the importance of looking at opportunities and barriers for people. These are people who are on the margins of our society, struggling to keep alive, to keep any quality of life, to keep a sense of self-esteem. We do need to have an ongoing, dynamic relationship with these folks and their caregivers through our service providers and through the government decisions that are made at various levels that translate into what resources they're given and what capacity they have, then, to address their opportunities and their barriers. I hope that the minister will hear that loud and clear.

I appreciate, again, the minister's sensitivity to aboriginal issues. These are, again, the marginalized of the marginal, and if we don't include them in a very meaningful way and listen to their input and address some of the outstanding and extraordinary challenges they face, whether it's on-reserve or in the urban setting, some of our First Nations communities, we are going to deal with many more problems in our hospitals, in our criminal justice system, in our addictions services. We must do a better job of hearing them, understanding them and their needs, and responding in a timely way to those needs.

Mr. Speaker, we'll have a few recommendations, amendments to make as we go along, but I think the minister is in good conscience making the necessary changes that needed to be made at the governance level. He's put in place some of the basic principles and frameworks that I think we can all hold the results accountable to.

Again, I would simply want to reassert the need to have influence at the grassroots level on these councils, or we will once again begin a progressive divide between what is really happening at the grassroots and the decisions that are being made at higher levels, which may be based on efficiencies at that level, may be based on budgets, may be based on many different things but not on the needs and not on the values and not on the quality of life for these folks that we should be doing our utmost to improve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, there's a long-standing tradition in the House where we usually recognize the opposition critic right after the mover of a bill at the various stages, and at that particular moment, when the Government House Leader moved his bill, I looked around quickly, and the man who was standing on his feet was from Calgary-Mountain View, so I recognized him. However, in deference to the situation and to the official critic, who is from Calgary-Shaw, I will allow you your full 20 minutes, should you need it. I ask the House to please accept my oversight in that regard.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. Member for Calgary-Mountain View as well, thank you. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 30. I think it's a very important piece of legislation, and I thank the minister for his comments earlier.

Overall, based on the legislation tabled so far, it's actually kind of refreshing to see a bill that I'm generally in support of.

Ms Calahasen: No.

Mr. Wilson: Yeah. I know. Isn't that unbelievable? It's actually quite exciting that, you know, we walk in here and have a cautiously optimistic tone as we enter this phase of debate on legislation.

An Hon. Member: So far.

Mr. Wilson: So far. It's refreshing. Almost.

Ms Calahasen: Come on. Anything before the "but" is pleasant.

Mr. Wilson: I appreciate your comments, Member for Lesser Slave Lake. Unfortunately, I can't quite hear them.

I would just like to make some comments around the actual bill itself. I noticed that this minister in particular is quite fond of the preambles, and I do appreciate that in the bill. I see much of what is in the preamble to the Building Families and Communities Act is directly pulled from the social policy framework, and I do understand why that would be the case; for example,

Whereas all Albertans share the opportunity and responsibility to contribute to and benefit from Alberta's prosperity and quality of life;

Whereas achieving desired quality of life outcomes requires the involvement and collaboration of Albertans and their families, communities, the private sector and their governments.

Straight from the final report of the social policy framework. Duly noted. Again, I can understand why the minister would want that in there.

One thing I find interesting, though, Mr. Speaker. What's noticeably absent from the preamble is where the accountability lies. One of the principles of the social policy framework was accountability, and it was noted as a guiding principle. I do note that the word "accountability" is in the fourth section of the preamble. But it's rather interesting that as you go further into the bill and you look at some of the amendments that are being made to the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Act, it's been amended in the removal of just one section of the preamble that places the accountability – and I will read the section that is being struck from this act as an amendment:

Whereas statutory programs, resources and services are best provided to adults with developmental disabilities in a manner that acknowledges responsibility to the community and accountability to the Government through the Minister.

So it's quite odd that this would be struck in a bill that is essentially taking away community governance and sucking all of that up into the ministry, that we're taking out a line that specifically says that the accountability rests with the minister and the government. For me that's a little bit counterintuitive, Mr. Speaker, and in light of the case that I spoke of earlier this week with Betty Anne Gagnon, one would like to think that the minister would want to do everything to ensure that he is accountable and that a disaster, a tragedy of that magnitude never happens again. So I really do encourage the minister in helping me to understand this move, and I'm sure we'll have that discussion later on as we move forward through the debate of this bill.

Talking about the dissolving of the PDD boards, I think this is a very wise move, certainly something that we can be in support of. If you reflect back on the KPMG report that was commissioned by the minister at the time, some of the reporting that we got back from that was that there are "no formal provincial standards or guidelines to establish what an appropriate level of funding that the PDD Program should cover for either service delivery expenditure or administration." That's found on page 6. Even though each region has similar needs, the cost to administer the program between the six boards varies, the time to manage intake varies, the caseloads for co-ordinators vary, and the levels of capability with the program and service provider network vary. There's very little consistency.

Again, that's why I say that we are supportive of this. We want to see some consistency in the system. I think that the clients that this network serves deserve it as do the families and the service providers providing that. There is no constant messaging. Clients cannot accurately find out what services are available or access them in a consistent way throughout the province, another problem that this will hopefully solve. The program is not formula driven. It relies on staff making difficult decisions about funding and support.

The report also noted that there's a complex delivery system, with many stakeholders, multiple reporting relationships. There is a lack of comprehensive information on the PDD programs. Individuals and families told the auditors from KPMG that they have a difficult time finding out what services are available across the province and accessing those.

That report had a series of recommendations, the majority of which were accepted by this government. Notably, two were not, and the two that were not are actually being corrected in this act. Those two were to "dissolve the six (6) Community Boards and create one organization under the direct authority of the government" – so now we can check that off; we seem to be there – and to "establish an Advisory Council to provide for community governance."

You know, it's interesting how we saw this in a report, and we have another example of the government believing that they know best and dismissing independent reviews or opposition criticism and putting blinders on. Now, it's good to see, a little bit late but better than never, that they've come around on that.

An Hon. Member: We cajoled them.

I think that the end result of that is that you're starting to reform the system as a basis from that report, but you've poorly communicated the approach. That's something that we saw quite clearly this spring when the associate minister for persons with developmental disabilities went on what we like to call his apology tour.

You know, I was at a number of those town halls that the minister hosted, and we heard quite clearly that there was a disconnect between the families and the PDD boards in each region regardless of where you were across the province. The attempt to standardize the system, the SIS assessments, the rollout with that wasn't communicated very well. It created a lot of confusion and fear amongst that community. This transition that this apparently was always going to be part of, that was so poorly communicated, was the result of weekly protests.

There is some backtracking that we've noticed. They've gone back and looked at reassessing where those cuts were going to take place and how they were going to take place. I would like to, you know, give the minister credit. The minister for persons with developmental disabilities, Mr. Speaker, listened at those events. He responded. He genuinely looked like he cared and wanted families to leave those meetings feeling better than they did when they walked in the doors. For that I would like to thank him. This act is a step in the right direction, and I'm hoping that we can somewhat turn the page on some of what we saw this spring.

The dissolving of the CFSA authorities is another interesting element. I'm not entirely sure how that's going to play out in terms of how these councils will function. I think that's one of those areas where it's going to be a wait-and-see scenario, and it really comes down to what I believe is trust. I do believe that the minister and the minister's team trust the people on the front lines that are working within that system. They are great people. They are incredibly passionate about the work that they do. They have to be in order to work in that field. At this point in time I believe that through regulation or other ways, the minister will always keep the children and the families that are impacted on this side of this ministry top of mind.

The move to these new councils, Mr. Speaker, is in theory a good idea and, as I stated earlier, cautiously optimistic. It does certainly seem to have the support of the community. There's not a single stakeholder or service provider that's directly involved in the PDD system that has come out saying that this is not a good idea. I think that they, too, had been asking for it for a number of years because even, for example, organizations that operated in different regions throughout the province had different regulations and guidelines and funding models. It was a system that was broken, and I think everyone recognizes that. I'm very pleased to see this moving forward in the direction that it is now.

The intention to identify social policy issues and the way in which these councils are going to be somewhat of a conduit of information between the community and the minister to advise, report, and make recommendations to the community, to inform the minister on strategic policy directions: it all sounds a little smoke and mirrors. It sounds like a really good idea in theory. How it's going to actually work and what benefit that's going to provide directly to either the minister or the communities in question remains to be seen. We do need to allow this process to play out, but part of me feels – and this is possibly because I'm innately cynical on this side of the floor – that this is a bit of a smokescreen to just be able to say that the government is out: we're listening and we're being part of the community.

That being said, we recognize that this move, regardless of how the councils are applied, will standardize the services and the delivery of those services across this province. That's something that I know I'm very happy to see, I believe everyone I've spoken with about this is very happy to see, and is something that we all recognize the various boards were quite terrible at doing.

Now, we have long supported the idea of local decision-making, so again, some trepidation around how these communities fit into a decision-making role because all of that authority has been taken up into the minister's office. Again, these are advisory councils. They're not actually making decisions. The PDD had an incredibly complex delivery system. The KPMG report stated, "We could not explain why there should be different operating models." These councils can be a great addition to understanding our social system if they're used properly, or they could be a major failure. Again, we need to go through the process, find out how it works, and see how it works. I hope that there will be appropriate measures in place to be able to measure the outcomes, which is another word we hear this minister use all too often.

The PDD boards and CFSAs were operating at a more regional, local level. This may be lost in the transition or trade-off to departmental control. I worry that there is a chance that this may end up being a bit of an AHS-like bureaucratic system, where we just put everything up into a central system in Edmonton and it balloons and it doesn't stop. I'm hoping that the minister will be open to some dialogue and potential amendments around controlling that.

Now, I do passionately agree with the designation of an aboriginal co-chair and continuing that model from the CFSAs. The cheeky side of me would maybe suggest, you know, what race is the other co-chair going to be, but I do believe that it is . . .

Ms Calahasen: Oh, that is cheeky. That's terrible. I take exception to that.

Mr. Wilson: It was an attempt. I really do think that this is a fantastic idea.

The Speaker: Hon. member, just continue speaking through the chair. Lesser Slave Lake, you'll have your chance, I'm sure.

Calgary-Shaw, please proceed.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I passionately agree that we continue this model.

I'm actually going to be putting forward an amendment to – I would like to discuss this with the minister as well – increase the frequency of the number of times that the aboriginal co-chairs meet. I believe that the unique scenarios and the unique social challenges that that community has – it's fantastic that they're going to be mandated to meet at least once per year. I think that that could be more productive and we could get more work done more quickly if that was happening at least on a biannual basis. I look forward to, again, having that discussion with the minister at the appropriate time.

There are concerns that I have about what seems to be a line in the act about IQ requirements. We heard the associate minister talk quite often about how having the arbitrary intelligence – I'm looking for the exact wording, Minister. I will find it for you if you like. But it seems odd to me that we would keep this specific part of the act intact after all that we heard the associate minister speak to in the spring when we were talking about an arbitrary IQ of 70. Why would we have this cutoff that if you have an IQ higher than 70, you're unable to require or have services? I see the minister is looking at the bill. I hope that perhaps I've misread that or that that clause does not specifically speak to that. But we will cover that, I'm sure, in Committee of the Whole.

Now, in closing, Mr. Speaker, this government has tied its horse to the social policy framework. I think that most people who are in the social sector, the nonprofit side of our province – we recognize it on this side of the floor without question – are able to do things that government can't do in a more effective and more efficient manner right on the ground level. They're very supportive of the outcomes of the social policy framework. I think this bill is a step in the direction that that framework called for and what the over 7,000 individuals that participated in the discussion called for.

I'm hopeful that the minister is open to amendments. I'm more than happy to share them with him prior to getting to the committee phase. I do look forward to a fulsome debate on this very important bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Standing Order 29(2)(a) should be available here because we've now had three speakers. Are you rising to speak on 29(2)(a)? No.

Let's proceed, then, with Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 30, the Building Families and Communities Act, put forward by the hon. Minister of Human Services. As the government has witnessed over the last number of months, the PDD portfolio has had its challenges, and making changes to the services or the structure of the ministry needs to be done in full consultation with clients, family members, caregivers, service providers, and all other stakeholders. Not doing so ends up in what we witnessed all across the province this past spring and summer, a huge outcry and push-back when cuts to front-line service care were announced in this year's budget.

What is evident is that at this time it appears that government has done a better job of reaching out, of consulting, of communicating, and perhaps – just perhaps – even listening to those at the ground level and on the front lines. I stand today to thank everyone who participated in any and all PDD events and rallies here at the Legislature and around the province to bring the attention that was due to the government. It was a job well done and noticed.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The information I have been able to gather from the Medicine Hat area is that this appears to be an improvement as the existing PDD legislation no longer suits the needs of the system. When PDD was originally organized into each of the six regions, they were fairly autonomous, having their own infrastructure and policies. Each regional board was part of the hiring process for their PDD CEO, with the support of the government, but without a clear overarching goal with measurables and deliverables each region began operating differently.

To try and compensate, new processes and policies were brought in by the PDD Provincial Board throughout the province, having the effect of diminishing the role of the PDD boards to little more than an advisory panel. The outcome of these changes is that the PDD boards have basically become another layer of ineffective bureaucracy as they have had no authority to develop regional policies and/or services for the last three to four years.

Mr. Speaker, the concerns around replacing the current boards with the advisory councils are: will their regional input have the ability to actually create action, or will it only be lip service in a one-way dialogue? How will people be appointed to these councils? Will staff from the regional boards be part of the new councils? Will the positions be paid, or will they be volunteers? If the government is bent on ruling by decree from a centralized position of power in PDD, as they have with other ministries, then what purpose is there in any type of local representation that has no ability to propose change and then be empowered to enact change?

This will be the litmus test for this bill and this government. As the government knows, they have blown this relationship already once this year. They cannot afford to do it a second time. There are major concerns around how government in PDD continues to expand its number of employees in the belief that Big Brother knows best whereas most parents or guardians want adequate government support but less bureaucratic interference. Around this issue PDD is trying to insert itself into the role of service provider, but since PDD is also the fund provider based upon a standardized assessment tool and the monitoring of outcomes, they must be careful not to be conflicting in their interests.

Mr. Speaker, the idea of creating employment councils might sound positive and constructive to the masses, but the work our local service providers have engaged in is already seeing success. Placing 85 out of 100 clients, as an example of one local agency, by building relationships with employers and employees is a clear success. If other areas in the province are not seeing successes, possibly the government could look at the opportunities allowed through the Medicine Hat operations, utilizing or adapting what is already showing excellent results rather than trying to reinvent the wheel.

With the government stating that up to 60 per cent of individuals with developmental disabilities could handle some sort of employment, the solution may already exist in some of the best-in-class service providers already exceeding these numbers such as those in Medicine Hat. Please don't overlook service agencies that are leading and exceeding these government goals. Please talk to them and learn from them, and please implement the positive results already occurring on a daily basis rather than interfering with their record of great work and great results.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, there is an opportunity to create improvement in services and support with this bill. Please do not use this bill to create more layers of government bureaucracy that will eat up valuable resources and keep those resources from getting to the front-line service providers who interact with their clients on a daily basis. If the outcome of this legislation does not improve the client's life in any way, shape, or form, then there is no need for change for the sake of change just to make the government look busy.

In saying that, I do look forward to supporting this bill with some proposed amendments from my colleague from Calgary-Shaw to help strengthen this bill into legislation that really respects and reacts to the needs of the client.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and speak to second reading of Bill 30, the Building Families and Communities Act. Before I get into some of the positives that I see in this bill – because I do see this bill as a step in the right direction – I think it's important to reflect and recall what happened this spring and summer when the PDD community was quite outraged at the government's handling of this portfolio and how families and people with developmental disabilities were treated.

To start, the government introduced two pieces of legislation today related to persons with developmental disabilities, Bill 30 and Bill 41. Now, this is their response to the confusion and mistrust that was created this spring. When the March budget was released, it was clear that the government wanted to cut $42 million in community services to persons with developmental disabilities. Now, that created much confusion and havoc, and I attended numerous rallies that were held here on the steps of the Legislature. Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona emceed several of those, which saw thousands of families, service providers, organizations, volunteers, and persons with developmental disabilities show up at the Legislature in order to voice their outrage at the fact that so many millions of dollars were cut and supports were going to be literally knocked out from under them. There were tears. There was outrage. There was frustration. There was confusion.

Again, appreciate the fact that for many of these adults with developmental disabilities, not understanding how this cut was going to affect their caregivers or their service providers outraged their families, who didn't know what would happen to their children, to their families. It was a mess that was created by this government in a conscious decision to cut a significant amount of dollars, millions of dollars, from a budget that works with some of the most vulnerable Albertans, Mr. Speaker. That caused an outrage.

I think it's important to note that I honestly believe, Mr. Speaker, that that's the reason we are here today, where the government has recognized its short-sighted budget cuts and folly by tabling a bill that attempts to address some of the very confusion and chaos that they created. I think there are some good ways to encourage work within the community, and again there are also ways that aren't so positive and that create that confusion. Dumping a surprise funding cut on the backs of service providers quite clearly falls into the category of a bad way to deal with budget cuts.

Again, many service providers were quite taken by surprise and frustrated because these folks do their jobs because they care and they choose to. This is a career and a choice that comes from the heart. This isn't one that's motivated by dollars. Nobody gets into working with adults with developmental disabilities to make it rich. They're there because they care and they want to give back to their community. So the move that took place this spring in the budget was one that was not only cold and callous but sent a message to many service providers that they weren't respected and that their jobs were not important enough. I personally spoke with several service providers and families who have family members that have been affected by developmental disabilities, and they were quite outraged, Mr. Speaker.

I'm happy to see that the government is trying to take a step in the right direction. This legislation that's in front of us, I'd like to point out, Mr. Speaker, was recommended by the Alberta NDP years ago. This legislation does address an issue but in some ways doesn't get to the heart of the matter. The challenge that we're facing is that this PC government still wants to make cuts to the persons with developmental disabilities program, which, I must add, is still cause for concern within that community to this day.

Again, many of the cuts were delayed, but there is no certainty as to what will happen in the near future. I mean, part of the concern is that the Associate Minister of Services for Persons with Disabilities has only committed temporarily to pulling back as far as cutting less deep into this area and that changes are going to be made slowly. But there's still a concern on exactly what those changes will bring and how they will affect and impact persons with developmental disabilities and their families.

The Alberta NDP will have some amendments to try to improve this bill, to get some clarity. Again, there are concerns with the way the government has to be forced to listen to people. I truly believe, Mr. Speaker, that had agencies, organizations, families, the Alberta NDP – and I'll also recognize members from the other opposition parties who were in attendance at these rallies – not forced the government to listen to persons with developmental disabilities, their families, and service providers, I truly believe that this bill would not be sitting in front of us. So, you know, on the one hand, kudos to all opposition parties, but the sad reality of it is that it shouldn't have to come to a public outcry.

We saw another example of that today with postsecondary cuts, where what the government needs to appreciate and understand is that the confusion and the frustration that is caused when budget cuts are first introduced doesn't suddenly disappear months later when either the cuts are lessened or, magically, some money has been found. They've already significantly impacted service providers and their families and created and caused stress and problems.

A couple of concerns I'd like to highlight with respect to this bill. Section 2(3) does not actually require the minister to appoint members who are persons with developmental disabilities or who have extensive experience in the PDD community. There is a concern that there could be members appointed who don't represent the community or come from the community or have enough experience or background to ensure that those folks are represented. That's one of my concerns. Having said that, I do want to acknowledge one of the successes that I see in this bill, and I have no problems with giving the Minister of Human Services credit for this. I'm very appreciative that one of the co-chairs must be aboriginal. I think that that is a very important step. I think it's very important that we have diversity on these boards and representation. I will be the first person to acknowledge this and to thank the minister and express my appreciation for that.

Another concern that I have is that the current bill eliminates the articulation in the act of the role of the minister, which is currently section 9 of the act. I think it's important that a minister's powers are expressly described or defined within legislation.

My third concern is that at the moment the bill allows the minister to establish appeals panels and processes by regulation. Now, the PDD appeals process is quite problematic and quite confusing, and I'm not sure if this bill goes far enough to cut through some of that tape and give an opportunity to folks who do need to appeal. I know, for example, there's a lot of confusion around appealing the SIS assessments, which is the supports intensity scale. These undefined changes will most certainly cause further uncertainty amongst individuals, families, guardians, and service providers. I truly hope that the minister is open to amendments that will be put forward by the Alberta NDP in order to improve and strengthen this bill and to ensure that we are bringing forward the best possible legislation.

The other concern I have, Mr. Speaker, is that there is no provision within the bill as it currently reads that there will be meaningful consultation. Again, I've often stood up in this House and spoken about consultation, which I think is crucial when we're discussing legislation that is going to affect Albertans. The very Albertans that are directly affected by this legislation should be consulted through a variety of means. At the moment it is possible – and I look forward to hearing the minister's response to this – that there may be the intention for consultation, but there's no provision or guarantee within the current bill as it sits.

A question that I will have for the minister is about how the government has talked about how they'll continue to look for ways to improve work and volunteer rates among persons with developmental disabilities. That's something that we certainly support where appropriate.

Some questions that come to mind. Will this government commit to putting the brakes on community access funding cuts over the long term, funding which helps ensure that people with developmental disabilities can participate in this capacity? Will that commitment come with a clear position that it won't take families and service providers rallying outside the Legislature to be heard as, I believe, it did for us to get here today? And even with a greater workforce participation rate this government needs to make a commitment that community access will not be slashed just for the sake of making cuts and that this government will not continue to place the burden of budget cuts on the backs of some of the most vulnerable Albertans.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I do think that this bill is a step in the right direction. I look forward to the discussion that will be coming and the amendments that we'll be putting forward in order to strengthen this bill and ensure that we are putting forward the best legislation and taking care of the most vulnerable Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions to the hon. member.

Seeing none, I'll look for other speakers. The Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to help to reinforce and elaborate on some of the comments that my colleague had just mentioned in regard to Bill 30. Again, the Alberta New Democrats are generally, globally, quite pleased to see this as a synthesis of many concerns that the PDD community had been expressing over these last few months and in some cases years. We will be working carefully to make sure that with some small modifications Bill 30 does come to pass here during this session.

As we know, this bill proposes to dissolve both the persons with developmental disabilities board and child and family services authorities. I think this is a reasonable evolution of this authority here across the province. A director will now establish assessments for disabilities and decide on the provision of services with full powers of delegation to the staff.

As well, this idea that councils are expected to work with the communities to find social policy issues and to work with a variety of groups and service providers to come up with solutions for the community, to engage the larger community, to inform the minister, and, finally, essentially split the role of PDD boards into the director and then family and community engagement councils: I think that this is a direct reflection, as I said, of what was being widely criticized previously in regard to PDD boards. We're talking about a significant amount of people and some of our very most vulnerable people, Mr. Speaker, more than 10,000 Albertans.

I think that if we can just look back in history a little bit, the beginning of this was from that 2011 report from KPMG that did recommend dissolving the boards. Finally, more than two years later, we see it come to pass. I think, having said that, this idea of making the $42 million in proposed cuts to the PDD community-based programs really was the blow that helped to precipitate, finally, Bill 30 now coming to the table. It's unfortunate that we sometimes have to have so many negative things happen to finally produce something positive.

The government did back down on these cuts in the end, but not without quite a lot of distress, not just amongst PDD recipients but also amongst workers as well. There was originally meant to be, just to remind everyone, a 15 per cent increase to wages this year. In fact, we had quite the opposite happen, much to the chagrin and I think the overall weakening of the PDD community across the province, by not paying the workers an adequate wage.

A couple of things that I would like to ask about, specifically, around the KPMG report. I'm just curious to know what's really changed since the government's response to the 2011 report that originally suggested removing the PDD boards. The original response didn't suggest that the government was going to do the consulting before evaluating this recommendation. Instead, it was a straight-out rejection. Why wasn't that recommendation fully considered and consulted on at the time? I just always am curious to know what the political considerations are. Why did we have to wait so long, basically?

Another thing that I was very curious to know when Bill 30 came forward here was why this bill removes the requirement for notice of the right to appeal a decision from starting the clock on the appeal process. Clearly, this makes sense, to ensure that individuals are aware of their right to appeal. These are some things that I see coming across my desk in my constituency, and I just want clarification on that because it causes a lot of problems. Under the previous bill you'd have to be told that you had a right to appeal before the appeal window would start running. With this one the clock starts running once you've been notified of the decision. I realize this might sound a little bit obscure, but for the people that actually do require an appeal, this change is very significant to their benefits.

Going forward, I hope that we can find Bill 30, Building Families and Communities Act, enshrined during this session and that we build something that everyone can be proud of and use moving forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other speakers?

The hon. Minister of Human Services to close debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five minutes, but I did pick up a few things that were asked. The relationship between the Premier's council and the regional councils I think is an important question. It's important for people to know and understand that the regional engagement councils are just that. They're about engaging the public. It sort of answers the question that came from New Democratic members as well with respect to consultation. The full mandate of these councils is to engage their communities in discussions of social policy issues in their areas and to work with the Health Quality Council, with the school boards, and with the FCSS boards to have that robust conversation, to keep that conversation going and alive.

One of the problems we've had, I think, in the past is that people have left social policy discussion to a small group of people in the community and abdicated that to them to take care of. These councils' full role and mandate will be that engagement process, to keep social policy at the forefront of discussion in our communities and have a good understanding in our communities about what the community solution is and then what our roles and responsibilities are in achieving those solutions each as individuals, communities, not-for-profit organizations, and governments. So the role is there, the consultation role.

The role of the Premier's council on persons with disabilities is slightly different. It's, first of all, got a provincial mandate, and it's to look at government policies, government business plans across the board to make sure that the status of persons with disabilities is taken into account in those policies. It's not about an engagement process so much as about keeping on top of the latest developments world-wide with respect to persons with disabilities and the UN charter on persons with disabilities and to take a look at government legislation and policies as they come forward, to look at business plans to make sure that we're in tune and attuned to those requirements. So the specific role continues for the Premier's council with more of a mandated role of continued consultation and discussion for the regional councils.

There was a question raised about removing the preamble piece in the PDD act about accountability resting with government. Well, of course, the reason why that preamble was in the PDD act was because there were board-governed operating authorities. So it had to be clear in that act that notwithstanding that there were board-governed operating authorities, responsibility and accountability still rested with government. If you don't have the board-governed authorities, accountability is clearly with government. You don't actually need to put it in the act. It's there. There is no intervening authority that you can say that we delegated it to or sent it to.

So it's just a question of – really, the amendments to the PDD act were only doing two things. One was restructuring to take away the board-governed aspects of it and amending sections that deal with that, and then, secondly, making the appeal process more aligned with other appeal processes and more robust, allowing for administrative reviews, allowing for mediation and arbitration, and then making for a better appeal process.

So those are really the only two. There are other things, as the Official Opposition critic pointed out, with respect to the regulation-making authority that was carried forward. All that was done in the regulation-making authority section, again, was removing the references to boards.

There may be other work down the road relative to the issues that he raised relative to who and how people are determined, whether they're in PDD and those sorts of things, but we were not attempting to do that here, so the rest of those regulations are just a bring-forward. But there is work to be done in terms of what the parameters are relative to people getting PDD, how we ensure that PDD is available, for example, to persons on-reserve. All of those issues still remain to be done. There's lots of work happening, but this was not an attempt to fix those particular issues.

The role of the minister. Again, that comes back to exactly what I was saying before. When there was a board in place, it would need to be clearly defined what the role of the board was and what the minister's was. Without a board in place you don't need to set out what the role of the minister is because, of course, the responsibility is clearly, fully vested in the minister and in the government, so you don't need to make that distinction.

I mentioned the appeal mechanism.

I do want to say, with respect to the comments made about community access, that we have made it clear and the associate minister has made it perfectly clear through the summer that in working with persons with developmental disabilities, one of the things we're trying to ensure is that there's a clear communication between the PDD division and the families and individuals, that we're working with them to ensure that they get the service they need from the appropriate service provider. That's very important work.

The budget issue is not the driving force here. There is not a budget issue – I shouldn't say that there's not a budget issue. There's always a budget issue, but that's not what we're trying to do here. We're not attempting to balance a budget in this particular piece. What we're trying to do is to ensure that people get the right services, that they get access to help, assistance in getting employment if that's what they want, to being in the right kind of activity for their development. That is continuing to be the work that we're doing. That work goes on and goes forward.

With those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I hope I was responsive to the questions that were raised. I'd be more than happy to deal with other questions as they come up in committee. I would encourage the House to vote for this bill in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 27

Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act

The Chair: We have dealt with amendment A3, and we are now back on the bill. Speakers on the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to table an amendment.

The Chair: Would you just have that circulated, hon. member? Please send me the original. We'll maybe just pause for a moment till that gets distributed.

Hon. member, did you send the original? These seem to be copies that I've got.

Mr. Rowe: I have the original.

The Chair: You need to send me the original. Keep a copy for yourself. Thank you.

For the record, then, hon. members, this will be amendment A4. Proceed, hon. member.

4:20

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment is to strike out section 1(3) and substitute the following:

- (3) Section 18(4) is struck out and the following is substituted:
  - (4) Upon receipt of a formal request to extend the state of emergency from a local authority, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may renew the declaration for 14-day intervals to a maximum of 98 days.
  - (4.1) Unless continued by a request under subsection (4) or by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly, an order under subsection (1) expires at the earlier of the following:
    - (a) at the end of 14 days, but if the order is in respect of a pandemic influenza, at the end of 90 days;
    - (b) when the order is terminated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

This is a fairly straightforward amendment. It puts a little more power back into the hands of the municipality and lets more of the decision-making happen at that level. They're the best people who can make the determination on whether they need the period extended or not.

I would strongly urge acceptance of this amendment. It doesn't alter the structure of the bill, which I for the most part will support. I'm asking for your support for this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others speaking to the amendment? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to speak to this amendment because I believe that it allows more power to be mandated with the local municipality. They are the people that are on the ground and are well aware of what the local conditions are. It's been apparent in the recent situation in Drumheller, where the community was not specifically affected by flooding similar to other municipalities throughout the province, that different conditions and attributes apply to those areas that have mitigation. It's an interesting situation. In the town of Drumheller in the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler we were not afflicted by the emergency measures similar to those that were in other areas like Sundre, High River, et cetera.

It's my feeling that this amendment is well worth while, and I would urge members from the government to give it due consideration.

The Chair: Are there others on the amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in support of this amendment. I think this is a great amendment. This is one that puts forward the idea that the people that know best, the form of government that knows best is the one that is closest to the people. In this case, it's the municipal governments, the ones that are closest to the people. It gives them the opportunity to ask for the extension at 14-day intervals to a maximum of 98 days so that we don't have to rely on something coming back up to Edmonton and having to be deliberated here in the Legislature. We'll actually be able to have that petition come from the local authority and extend the state of emergency and extend them the help that they need when they need it.

I think this is a great amendment to this bill. I think it's something that you really should give good consideration to. I do urge this government to have a close look at this amendment and to pass this amendment. This is a great addition to your piece of legislation, and it will go a long way in helping municipalities deal with emergencies like the flooding that we had over the summer.

With that, I would like to thank the Legislature for the opportunity to stand and speak to this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm interested in this amendment, but I'm a bit troubled by the confusion that it causes for me. Maybe the hon. member who moved it can clarify it. I think he's mixing up local emergencies with provincial emergencies. The section that was being amended, section 18(4)(a), changing the 14 days to 28 days, deals with provincial states of emergency, of which there's only actually been one, I think, ever declared in this province, and that was this summer.

That's the one where a provincial state of emergency requires us to come back to the Legislature after 14 days to request an extension. The 14 days is too short. You need about three days to recall the Legislature properly even in an emergency. You could do it faster than that, but to give people notice to get back and that sort of thing, the 14 days was too short. Now, a provincial state of emergency actually puts some significant powers in place. The question is: well, if not 14 days, what's appropriate? That's when we went to the 28 days. We want to be able to say that the Legislature has authority to determine whether you still need that provincial state of emergency.

But, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member, that has nothing to do with local states of emergency. Local states of emergency don't come to the Legislature for renewal. If this is the local authority, the local authority would not be coming to the Legislature asking for renewal of their state of emergency. In fact, what happened this summer is that the provincial state of emergency was put in place with respect to the specific situation in High River because additional authorities were needed beyond what the local state of emergency could accomplish. Then when it expired, it went back to the local state of emergency, and the local state of emergency stayed in place for a period of time.

I think there's some confusion in your amendment. If that's the case, certainly I would encourage people not to adopt this amendment simply because it does confuse the issue between local states of emergency and provincial states of emergency. Section 1(3), which amends section 18(4)(a), is about provincial states of emergency.

Mr. Rowe: If I could just respond to that, Mr. Chair, basically all we're asking is: rather than 28 days, make it 98 days. We know that 28 days was not sufficient in the High River circumstance because that went on for three or four months. We're just asking that we don't have to go through all that heavy process to extend it for that period of time in the future. It could be cut off at 14 days, but if the municipality says, "Hey, look, we can't handle this yet" even after 30 days, 28, 56, or whatever – it makes the process simpler. That is our intent.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others on amendment A4?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the main bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment.

The Chair: Okay. Same process. Please circulate. We'll pause for a moment. Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: It's on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The Chair: So your amendment is on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona? Thank you.

For the record, hon. members, this will be amendment A5.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. With your indulgence I'll read out the amendment that I'm putting forward on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. She moves that Bill 27, Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, be amended in section 2(2), in the proposed section 615.1(3), by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:

- (b) specify a date on which the order or any provision of it expires, such date not to exceed 3 months from the date the order takes effect.

Now, Mr. Chair, in the event of an emergency or disaster the section allows the Minister of Municipal Affairs to modify the application or to exempt a municipality from any provision of the MGA, the Municipal Government Act, as well as provide the municipal authority with specified authority. What we're asking through this amendment is that we need to have clearly defined and legislated time frames on how long such an order can be in place. The way the bill is currently written, ministers could theoretically extend these orders as long as they want.

With this amendment we're respecting that municipalities need to be able to return to governance of their own affairs. Emergencies and disasters, as we've seen, require speedy responses, and it's understandable that the provincial government may need to co-ordinate these efforts, and doing so may for a short period of time or a period of time require the suspension of some municipal authority.

But at the same time, Mr. Chair, we can't allow the powers of the minister to continue on indefinitely, which is the way the legislation is currently written. I can appreciate that that may not be the spirit or the intent of the legislation. However, as all legislators in this Chamber recognize, we need to be very careful and precise with the language that we use and how it can be interpreted and will be interpreted for decades to come. Therefore, there needs to be a limit on the minister's ability to suspend local governance, and there should be a focus, once the emergency aspects have been dealt with, on shifting to empower municipalities and helping them through the rebuilding process.

I think this amendment is quite straightforward. I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this amendment. Really, it comes back to restoring municipal powers or the ability for municipalities to get back to what they were elected to do, which is, well, to get on with municipal governance and whatever that entails. This will give a specified, laid-out time frame on how long the provision continues. Again, we are calling for three months, which seems like a reasonable amount of time.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

The Chair: Other speakers on the amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. It's not a complicated amendment. I think it tries to achieve what the previous amendment might have failed to achieve, which is to just cap the date when the authority is deemed to expire. Now, it still allows for the minister to set a date any time prior to that three months, prior to that 90 days. But what it does is that it just lays out in a very linear fashion that regardless of when the minister takes the authority, he or she has a cap on where that authority will end.

That's an extremely important aspect of any type of legislation. Where does the authority begin? Where does authority end? The authority begins under section 615.1(2): "Where it appears to the Minister . . . the Minister may." That's where the minister gets the authority, and if this amendment is adopted, we show where that authority ends. It allows the local authorities to make their decisions, plan to retake their jurisdictional responsibilities, and it doesn't prevent a continuation of the disaster response. So it just gives some more legitimacy, in the sense of transparency, to how the authorities are going to not just be declared but where those authorities will be terminated and turned back to local municipal authorities. It just caps that at that 90 days.

Now, if the hon. members across the way are not inclined to support this amendment, I'd like to hear where they would like to cap that so we can bring the proper authorities back to the table and make these decisions. The number, three months, 90 days, is arbitrary, but clearly it seems to me that there needs to be a point in legislation where the local municipalities have some sort of idea, some sort of expectation of where the declaration is going to basically terminate and the authority will revert back to the municipal authorities.

With that, I hope that my members and certainly the members across the aisle would support this amendment. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others speaking to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: We're back to the bill. Speaking to the bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment that I would like to put forward in regard to Bill 27 on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The Chair: Please proceed. We'll distribute the amendment and just pause for a moment. Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Chair, can I just tell everybody that it's two pages?

The Chair: It's a two-page amendment.

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I just want to let the members know that they shouldn't be intimidated by this two-page amendment – there were several elements that needed to be covered here – and the essence of it is just to have a good, solid definition of what a floodway is. I think that speaks to the essence and the central idea of Bill 27, so it's worth while.

The Chair: For the record, hon. member, this will be A6.

Mr. Eggen: A6. Okay. Amendment A6 is amending section 2(3) by striking out proposed section 693.1 and substituting the following:

Development in floodways

693.1(1) In consultation with municipal authorities and experts, including, but not limited to, engineers, hydrologists, geologists, meteorologists and climate scientists, the Minister must, at a minimum interval of every 5 years or after each disaster, as defined by this Act, whichever is earlier, develop the following:

- (a) comprehensive maps of floodways and flood zones, and
- (b) detailed reports of risk assessments and climate conditions as they relate to water management.

(2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council, on the advice of the Minister who has consulted with the appropriate municipal authorities, may make regulations that provide for the following:

- (a) controlling, regulating or prohibiting any use or development of land that is located in a floodway within a municipal authority, including, without limitation, regulations specifying the types of developments that are authorized in a floodway;
- (b) exempting a municipal authority or class of municipal authorities from the application of all or part of this section or the regulations made under this subsection, or both;
- (c) modifying or suspending the application or operation of any provision of this Act for the purposes of giving effect to this section;
- (d) defining, or respecting the meaning of, "floodway" for the purposes of this section and the regulations made under this subsection, which must take into account any maps and reports prepared pursuant to section 693.1(1).

(3) Unless the contrary is expressed in regulations made under subsection (2), those regulations

- (a) operate despite any statutory plan, land use bylaw or other regulations under this Part, and
- (b) are binding on any subdivision authority, development authority and subdivision and development appeal board and the Municipal Government Board.

(4) If a municipal authority is affected by a regulation made under subsection (2), the municipal authority must amend any relevant statutory plan and its land use bylaw to conform with the regulation.

Finally,

(5) Section 692 does not apply to an amendment pursuant to subsection (4).

Yes, it's quite a long and elaborate section that we're replacing here, but this amendment does ensure that we have a good definition of what a floodway or a flood zone actually is. We've seen that this can't be left to discretion or to the whim of the minister or even to reports that have been tabled years before, that would have saved millions of dollars of destruction during June of this year if we had followed the plan that was laid out back in 2010. People need to know, then they need to be able to make decisions about where to buy property and whether to repair existing property, and they will not be able to do so unless they have clear direction as to where the government-deemed floodways and flood zones lie.

We need to have a government that is, in general, transparent and accountable in defining floodways because we've had a very poor record on protecting Albertans on this issue in the past. We simply can't trust this government given their track record on flood prevention and mitigation prior to June 2013, so you need to lay it out in the law. Even if you have the best of intentions and you have the most transparent and benevolent government and all of those things, you still need to lay these things out in law. That's what we do. We put the process in place for future generations to interpret this as well.

Furthermore, Mr. Chair, we need to have maps drawn up that are independent and that use scientific advice. We're dealing with real estate here, we're dealing with the very land that defines the province, and you simply need to make it crystal clear what areas could be affected now and in the future by floodways in order for this bill to work.

I submit to you, Mr. Chair, and to all of us here today that this is a very, very essential amendment to Bill 27. Thanks a lot.

The Chair: Are there others to the amendment? The hon. associate minister for reconstruction.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. While I think the intention of this amendment is very honourable, I actually don't think it's very practical for many different reasons. One of the reasons, as I mentioned in second reading of this bill, is that the flood maps are a planning tool to allow us to do long-term planning around mitigation, around where we want to develop our communities and our cities and our towns and municipalities. The problem with doing this every five years is that, first of all, it becomes, very obviously, resource intensive, and the other problem is that if you're doing it every five years, you would be doing so, I would assume, with the intention that it would be changing every five years. Certainly, it could, but the case is, you know, that we want to provide long-term stability for communities around these policies so they can develop.

The last thing. I could tell you from many of the meetings that I've been to over the last four months in flood-affected communities that the concern – you know, yes, there are some concerns with current flood maps – is that if they're not in a flood-mapped area, will they soon be? Is the anticipation that the map is going to keep flipping back and forth? One year they're in a floodway; five years later they're not; the next year they're not. It doesn't provide stability for the type of investment that we want people to make in our communities, the development.

I think what we want to do is make sure that we get the flood maps right, and we want to put them in place, and then we want to build and plan our communities around that. I think that this amendment provides, frankly, a heck of a lot of instability for communities, and that's really what I'm concerned about with this amendment.

The Chair: Thank you.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in support of the amendment, and I'm going to disagree with the hon. associate minister. It does just the opposite. It provides the stability.

Now, here's the deal. You do not have to expend all the resources if nothing has changed. If nothing has changed, if you look at it and the flood maps are accurate, they're accurate, and you don't have to do anything else to it. But if you do not look at it, you don't know to remap or to re-examine. That's what's really important.

If you tell me that nothing changes, please come to Sundre and come with me to check what that river does even out of the flood season, when it changes channel and can move over a mile.

That flood mapping has to take place. In order to build, it is important to understand how that whole ecosystem is working. That is really imperative. What we have, particularly in my area – a lot of what we've been talking about is High River and Calgary, and justifiably so, because that's where we suffered the major damage in 2013. But we suffered a lot of damage in Sundre at that time. Plus, just last year we suffered a lot of damage in Sundre and, of course, back in 2005.

Without accurate flood mapping we cannot make good decisions. We have to have accurate flood mapping, that has to be kept up to date. What this proposes to do is to set out a manner in which we keep these up to date. But if you tell me that we have to absolutely remap everything again – if you look at it, you don't have to redo it. You don't have to reinvent the wheel. Basically, you have to verify the data as it exists and verify that it's accurate. You've now redone this.

By looking at your mapping and double-checking, you may have to update just a small portion. You may not have to update any. You still and you're supposed to have these experts already here anyway – we do have these within the government – who are supposed to be looking at this stuff on a regular basis, and they do. I know because I'm working with some bureaucrats now on some issues, particularly with flood-related issues, in the Sundre area. The problem we have, particularly coming from the 2005 flood, is that we don't eight years later have accurate mapping. It's not there anymore. If this passes, then that is an issue that can now be resolved.

We need continual mapping. This is something that has to be dynamic. It cannot be static. These river systems are always changing. However small, however large, they are forever changing. Particularly, as we develop, we will influence, whatever the influence is going to be, depending upon the development.

There are many different things we can do to change the mitigation and the flooding of these rivers when we apply mitigation procedures or methodologies to control flooding. It's one of those issues that, based on particularly the whole caveat system, which we haven't even gotten into yet – if we put in the proper dredging procedures, whether that has to take place annually or whether that has to take place every three years, depending on the river system you're dealing with, depending on where you are in the river system and dealing with that, if you're putting in spurs, if you're putting in berms, if you use a dam to create a floodway to hold water back, then those are the all the tools that are available to the ministry, to this government, to use. If the government makes the choice to use that, that will change the system. You have to take that into consideration.

What we've been looking for here consistently – and we'll consistently continue to try to look for it – is accurate mapping. It is absolutely essential. The key is to get much of the work done now, as soon as possible, and as accurate as possible and then keep it up to date. That's what this – you can read both pages, but in essence what this is saying is that we want to keep it up to date. To keep it up to date, it's not that difficult. I suppose it would be difficult if we had the 500- or 1,000-year flood next spring. That would be a terrible thing. I'm not anticipating that, and I hope no one else is, but that would change things dynamically. The fact of the matter is that if we get our mapping up to date, to keep it up to date on a continuous basis, on an ongoing basis, would easily fall within this five-year time frame that the hon. member has offered up.

Some of the rivers in particular – I would probably say safely all of the rivers – at various points along the rivers have very little opportunity to change. The Red Deer River, which is the one that goes through Sundre, is a perfect example. You get down towards that Drumheller area: the width of where the river can flood into is actually quite small compared to my area just on the upriver side of Sundre, where the plain itself is probably 20 to 30 miles wide. That river can change dramatically in a very short period of time without having a flood, just by having a high water runoff and having the river carve a new channel. So these are all the things that need to be taken into consideration.

Most of the focus here in this Assembly so far has been on property, and justifiably so, for many reasons, but the fact is that flood mapping is not isolated just to the communities. You have to look at the whole river basin without doing it scientifically. We may be able to do all the mitigation measures necessary up in the headwaters to hold back water, to prevent massive flooding – and that's much like what they've done on the Mississippi with the corps of engineers – without having to do a lot of mitigations downriver, because we're controlling the flow. Again, it all comes down to, really, two pieces of data, the quantity of water and the speed at which it travels. That's it. It may sound simple, but it is actually quite complex when you try to do the planning, and you have to plan based on accurate data.

By the way, the flood mapping – and I think some of the members tend to think that we're just talking about maps. We're not. It's talking about data. We measure this stuff so that data is available. Our data for the actual flow of the river, the height that the river rises to, and the speed that it rises: we have that data, we track that data in real time, and we know how these rivers behave. We just have to translate that into accurate mapping so that we can come up with how we want to manage development anywhere along that river basin that may be affected by flooding in any future flood.

To project is not that difficult. I suppose economists will use statistical data to say, you know, "The 100-year flood versus the 500-year flood," but really what they want to look at is the amount of water and the speed of the water and say: "Based on if we had this amount and it travelled at this speed, what would it look like downriver? If we had X amount of water versus this speed, what would it look like?" They can model that fairly well, and depending on the development and the mitigation measures, we would be able to have a mapping system of what was fairly accurate on the floodways and the flood plains and the flood fringes that we have not actually identified yet in definition very well. We will. At least, that's what the minister is telling us we're going to. But it's not in legislation.

The key is accurate flood mapping, and accurate flood mapping is more than just the map of the river and describing where the flood plain is. It's all the supporting data that goes with it, that accurate data that's available to us, knowing how fast a river crests. We have records of 2005 – that I know; I've looked at those records – and 2010 on how fast, how many cubes of water came down, the time frame it came down in, where it peaked, where it subsided, how fast it subsided. Those are the things that make flood mapping accurate. That's the data that actually helps us project.

If we're going to put caveats on people's property, give us some sort of probability. It all does come down to that. Where you draw that line is going to be significant. Where you draw the line where you're going to compensate people for loss, where you draw that line where you're not going to compensate people cannot be arbitrary. It's got to be scientific. It's got to be based on accurate data because there's going to be a tremendous amount of investment that's affected by it.

Where I would disagree with the member is: this idea of mapping is not something that is repetitive from the ground up every time. Once you have accurate mapping, you have to constantly update and adjust. You have to look at the maps once they're created. Five years may be too long, in my view, but it may be just right. This is arbitrary in the sense that they picked five years. You absolutely need to make sure that if it's the Red Deer basin, if it's the Blindman River – name any river basin you want. Clearly, if you're looking at one of our major seven river basins, that could be significant if you're going to do the entire basin, but I don't think you have to. At some point we put the entire basin together. Certainly, any creek, any river that flows into the main tributary might have to be adjusted, depending on what happened during the runoff in the spring, depending on what happened in a flash flood from a massive thunderstorm.

These things happen, and they alter the mapping. They alter what's going to happen to the system. If we keep track of that, then the mitigation measures can cost us less in the future because we can actually act on the changing data to make sure it doesn't cause more damage or force us to expand the flood plain further, which would affect more properties, more investments.

When you get down, particularly into the Calgary area, the Lethbridge area, and places like that, you have bigger communities than I'm dealing with in my constituency, but I will tell you that the human tragedy is no less whether it's one or whether it's 1,000. If you're the one, the human tragedy is no less when that flood hits.

Again, it's paramount that everything comes back, comes full circle, to accurate mapping. Now, if the members across the aisle will not support this, what I would ask is: how do we ensure that accurate mapping is always available? That's key. That's key to disaster management.

I'm going to give you an example, and it's based on a dam in the Little Bow constituency. Hopefully, maybe the Minister of ESRD will get up and correct me if I'm wrong, but we were told that with the water flowing into the retaining lake, pond, whatever you want to call it, behind the dam, they would only allow the same amount of water to flow out. That might be prudent in a time of nonemergency, but in a time of emergency, I would argue, there might be times – and this has been done in the past in other jurisdictions – that you release as much water out of the dams prior to an event because you see the weather patterns coming.

We know the spring runoff is coming, and we make sure there's room behind those dams to retain as much water as possible to keep the actual flow and volume of the river, particularly in those areas – every river has the rapids, they have the runs, and they have the shallows. You want to make sure that the run of the river doesn't rise too fast, that the volume doesn't rise too fast. If you manage your flow rates using the dams – we already have dams in place – that management system works differently than when we're actually in an emergency. If we allow that to happen, we can actually reduce the area where we need to have caveats. That's significant when we are looking at putting caveats on titles. If we create a system where we can retain as much water as the watershed allows by creating these systems to hold back water and if we manage it properly by dredging, putting in spurs, and putting in berms, we may find that we do not have to compensate many of the investors. We may find we will need very little in the form of caveats because we can manage the floodways and we can manage the ecosystem so that we can protect not just human lives, but we can protect investments, and we can protect the property. We could save the government money in dealing with natural disasters, and that's key.

There's a benefit all around by doing accurate mapping, and I think that seems to have been missed. When you look at the billions of dollars in damage that has occurred as a result of this flood, had we had certain measures in place – one of the models that I've not seen and I would hope the government would ask for at some point is: what could we have done had we instituted or implemented the measures from the former report? Would we have prevented some of the damage?

Now, I can't speak for Calgary. I haven't looked at that at any great level, but I have looked at the High River situation, and certainly there were areas there where we could have taken preventive measures in advance, which would have significantly reduced the amount of damage. The residents there know that; the people involved know that. I'm not asking anyone to have a crystal ball, but accurate mapping allows us to do the projections properly. Accurate mapping allows us to plan properly. That will give us what I call the most effective tool to implement flood mitigation measures.

I disagree with the hon. associate minister on that assumption. This is absolutely paramount to what we want to do on flood mitigation, to reduce the costs to this government. Yes, it will cost money to do the initial update of the flood mapping, and it will always be an ongoing process to keep the flood mapping up to date. It is, I think, at this point in history for this province, at a population of 4 million people, a fact of life that we're now going to have to deal with this issue in all our river basins because our population is not decreasing; it is increasing. Unfortunately, people like living next to rivers and lakes and everything else. They seem to put a higher value on that property even though they get flooded out. It's just the way it works. It is part of not only our recreational system and our parks system – I mean, we have some of the most incredible parks – but it's part of what we value, what we call the Alberta advantage.

Without proper mapping we can't make informed decisions. We're guessing, and we don't want to guess. We want to be as accurate as possible. The benefits of accurate flood mapping go beyond just protecting property. It actually does a great service by putting in mitigation measures when these scientists, when these geologists, when these hydrologists see a situation that could be affected based on the projections they've done in the past. When they update these projections, they have a better look at the basin. Just by putting out those proper recommendations that such and such takes place, we can prevent massive flooding. I think we would want to do that.

Again, given the overall cost of what this 2013 flood has so far totalled, the cost of flood mapping is almost insignificant if it would help us prevent multibillion-dollar damage due to flooding. There is a system in place where we actually have the ability – it didn't happen, that I know of, in this flood – that we're monitoring the rivers, and we know what's coming because we have a general idea of what the runoff is going to be, what the rainfall is planned to be, so we can get information out quickly to evacuate where it's probable that we're going to need to evacuate and to be ahead of the curve on our emergency management measures. There are all these side benefits to doing proper flood mapping to protect property.

With that, I disagree with the hon. associate minister, and I would ask the members to support this or offer up another solution for how we can have accurate mapping to base all of this on. With that, Mr. Chair, I would ask the members to support this.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-McCall on amendment A6.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I was listening to my friend from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, and he literally covered everything I wanted to say. You know, this amendment will go a long way to bringing stability. Had we had the flood maps updated, we probably wouldn't have gone through the disaster we've been through, because the flood maps are 20 years or older. This amendment will go a long way so that we will have the flood maps updated.

We had a flood in 2005, and in 2013 we had another one. Had we been updating our maps every five years, we probably could have mitigated lots of damage, you know, created in the 2013 flood. Had the recommendations from the 2006 flood mitigation report been implemented, that could have probably gone a long way to mitigate the flood losses, too. If we keep on updating our flood maps, even with all the billions that it's cost us, it will probably not cost us as much or be equal to the cost of the damage.

I know lots of damage has been done. I was trying to bring a delegation from India during that time to come and visit us here. It's not only the property damage, it's not only the lives lost, but it has cost us lots of money in tourism.

I'd ask all members to support this amendment. If you accept it, this will help us a long way towards mitigating future flood losses.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I do want to thank the Member for Calgary-Klein for getting up and engaging in conversation. I'd like to address some of his comments. I think what's necessary is that a baseline is created. There are many reports from other areas across the country that demonstrate the value and importance of flood mapping in order to have a much better understanding of floodways, flood zones, and flood risks.

As opposed to the Member for Calgary-Klein, who is saying that this is going to provide instability for folks by reviewing the flood maps every five years, I don't think there's necessarily going to be extreme changes every five years. What we want to do is just ensure that we don't do the flood mapping once and then forget about it. I mean, the reality is that floodways do change depending on the development. It's not just spurs, berms, and dams, but the development of municipalities, of industrial sites can alter the direction and flow of water.

We're talking about developing a comprehensive water management strategy that doesn't just deal with issues of flooding, although that is included. We're talking about having our fingers on the pulse as far as river systems go and being able to respond. I actually think that reviewing the flood maps every five years would provide more stability for folks. Again, I do honestly believe that they aren't going to necessarily change so significantly every five years unless there is a major disaster. I mean, this disaster that we saw in June, I think, has significantly altered our floodways and waterways, so now would be the time, after the disaster is taken care of, obviously, to look at mapping and remapping. I'm convinced that that expense would be fairly minimal once that baseline is first established.

I think what's really important about this amendment as well is that the first sentence talks about "in consultation with municipal authorities and experts" and lists them. Again – at least I'll speak for the Alberta NDP – we value and feel that the first priority is consultation with others and with other orders of government. It's significant to work with them as opposed to coming in and imposing different decisions on them.

We need to have defined floodways. Honestly, I know that there are members on the other side of the House that have downplayed the importance of it. By putting this into the bill and legislating it, it ensures that once this government does flood mapping, we're not going to wait another 15, 20 years or more to get the maps updated. This puts in a process so that all Albertans can be assured that this will be reviewed and changed if needed. I honestly feel that this isn't going to create new maps from scratch every five years.

The other thing, too, is that we need to have maps that are absolutely independent, based on scientific advice and the best advice that's available.

Again, I appreciate the associate minister's concerns. Hopefully, in my comments I've addressed his concerns, and he'll see that this actually creates stability for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise in favour of this amendment. I agree with the statement that the associate minister made when he opened his comments. We need long-term planning. My question to him back is: how on earth can you do long-term planning when you don't have proper flood maps? You can't do long-term planning on development, on residential property or commercial property, or anything else unless you know what's going to happen with that mapping.

As the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow said quite rightly yesterday, these darn rivers just don't want to follow the flood maps. They're ignorant. They just don't know how to do that. Until we can train the rivers to follow the existing flood maps, we've got to do new flood maps. And training the rivers is not such a humorous statement. We can do that. It's called mitigation. It's called berms. It's called dredging. It's called storage ponds and so on. But without flood maps, again, we can't do that.

I believe that we've seen the results of not keeping our maps current. Of the 18 recommendations that were in the 2006 flood report, I believe 15 of them, as I said just the other day, dealt with flood mapping, and absolutely nothing has been done since 2006 on the flood maps. Here we are in 2013 with Canada's biggest natural disaster from flooding. How much of the damage that was done this spring could have been avoided if we had gotten proper flood mapping and prevented development in those areas that were at risk?

To again put the cart before the horse – let's do the proper flood mapping. Then we can do the proper long-term planning. We can order municipalities – and I love the opening statement here: "In consultation with municipal authorities and experts, including . . . engineers, hydrologists, geologists, meteorologists and climate scientists," everybody, to get this right. Let's do it right this time.

I can't emphasize enough that we've got to do the flood mapping, folks. These two pages. That's all that is. You boil it all down, and it's: let's just do the proper flood mapping and try to prevent as much of this as we can in the future. With that, I'll pass it off to my colleagues.

Thank you.

Mr. Fawcett: I'll just be very brief. What's heartening is that I think, frankly, all of us are on the same page. We do want to have accurate flood mapping so that we can create long-term mitigation plans for many of our communities. That's really what we're talking about here.

I get the assumption that some members over on the other side somehow think that I and the associate minister over here just one night took a pencil and drew some lines on maps. While you might think that, it's furthest from the truth. There are experts in the Ministry of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, many of which are named in this piece of legislation, that do this flood mapping. We could sit in this Legislature all day and debate whether those maps are accurate or not accurate.

I can stand up here and honestly say, Mr. Chairman, that I'm not an expert in this – I'm not somebody that you want drawing these flood maps – and I would suggest that probably many of us in this Legislature are not. I think some of us, you know, can be perplexed by why certain flood maps said one thing and you had an event that looked completely different. I know that when I go to communities, it's sometimes hard to explain. In second reading I talked about the plausibility of why some of those things might happen.

The last thing I just want to say is that the challenge with flood maps – and I very much agree – is that, you know, the river is constantly changing. That's really at the crux of what we're talking about here. The river does constantly change. If tomorrow we were to flood map an area, the next day that map is a little bit inaccurate because overnight the river has decided to do what it wants to do. Again, what I want to say is that the flood maps aren't the be-all and end-all when it comes to this. It's a planning tool. It's to give us a guideline to create long-term planning.

The worst thing that we could do, frankly, is to go out and constantly be changing this on landowners and communities. I can tell you – and I know that this has come up in some of the meetings that I've been to – that landowners constantly would have their property going in and out of the floodway, particularly if we're putting restrictions on floodway development. I know as a landowner that I'd be frustrated, and I know many across the way that care passionately about property rights would probably say the same thing. That type of instability for landowners is not something that we want to purvey here in the province of Alberta, Mr. Chairman.

Again, I think, as I said at the outset, the intent is laudable on this, but we need to be very careful. Like I said, is it one year? Should we review it every year? What we have is a process in place where, if there are significant events, the Ministry of ESRD does go out and do the remapping. We have since, as a result of the flood, put additional resources into it and prioritized areas where there have been significant changes in the watercourse to do that flood mapping. We know we need to do that to plan our future mitigation. They're constantly updating those maps. I believe 70 per cent of sort of the habitable areas along rivers in this province have been flood mapped, and we'll continue to make progress on that, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and good evening to everyone. It's good to see you all again. In response to the associate minister's recent comments, I'd just like to take a couple of moments if I could to add to this.

First of all, I'd like to say that I do support this amendment, and I do support much of what has been said on both sides of the House, in fact, regarding flood mapping. It does have to be done. I believe the associate minister was concerned at one time about costs and so on and so forth. I'd just like to bring to the discussion a couple of things that I've noticed on that that may be of use here.

First of all, I'd like to journey us back in time to 2006, to a former member of the Legislature and Member for Highwood, who had put together the flood study at that time. I'd like to take a moment just to outline for you, in case you aren't aware, what the first two points were in that plan. I think it's important because it relates to what we're talking about.

The very first recommendation was:

We recommend that Alberta Environment coordinate the completion of flood risk maps for the identified urban flood risk areas in the province.

He went on to say:

Alberta signed a cost-sharing agreement with the federal government to map flood risk areas . . . in 1989. This agreement was terminated before all the identified communities could be [done].

They recognized that in 2006, I think, and they realized that they had to do more. They actually tried to, in case you haven't looked recently – and I don't blame you if you haven't; it's been too busy on this one. They had thought that a budget of over 2 and a half million dollars, roughly, could possibly address most of this. Over five years: that was what was said. It would look to me as if the five-year increment was something that was recognized before. It was recognized to obtain the baseline data, that that could be considered as a number possibly to address it.

The second thing I'd like to add into it if I could is the second recommendation, in fact. It says:

We recommend that Alberta Environment develop a map maintenance program to ensure that the flood risk maps are updated when appropriate.

Assuming that one is done at 2 and a half million dollars and we've got some baseline data, then they recognized that there could be situations that might arise – and I'm reading again – where an existing flood risk map no longer adequately represents the flood risk for a location. This may result from changes in the river or immediate area, updating a rural flood risk map or errors in the original study. [The maps] should also be reviewed regularly particularly after extreme flood events when public and municipal government interest is high.

Again, we see where in 2006, when the study was put together and the plan was implemented, there was recognition of exactly what we've experienced several years later.

If you have a chance over there to look at those two points, folks, they had actually put together $50,000 annually – $50,000 annually, Minister – only to maintain these baseline maps and the baseline data. So we have a cost. Although you had worried about that earlier in the conversation, those costs at 2 and a half mil plus $50,000 annually they estimated could work in maintaining the database and upgrading it and looking after details that they needed. We can add in a few per cent for inflation, I suppose, since that time, but it would seem to me, as compared to what costs we have looked into in the past four months, when you and I were out in the field together and so on, these are minimal costs. If they are even out a few per cent, it's still not bad.

I think that the idea that has been presented by the hon. member here to my left has merit. It should be something that we can do. Perhaps if you wish to suggest a subamendment to this amendment, to change a time frame, I don't see a problem with that – I would support you on that, by the way – but I see nothing wrong with going with what they have here. They haven't changed that much of this, by the way, from the original. They've just put in the time factor and a couple of changes in the preambles and so on.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to get that conversation in. I'm going to yield my time for the moment, but I do support this bill, and I hope that that has been of use tonight, for what it was worth.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mr. McAllister: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I said initially, when I spoke to this bill, that I would support it, you know – and that would be depending on some of the amendments that come forward from our critics and, I guess, everybody in the Legislature – and I still feel that way. To the associate minister across: I still feel we've got to do all we can to support this bill and get it through. There can't be anything more important right now than flood recovery and reconstruction so that we don't get into this situation again.

I want to speak to this amendment specifically if I could for a minute, Mr. Chair, and tell you why I like at least a portion of this. As the member who brought the amendment forward said and to revisit it for those that have lost where we were:

693.1(1) In consultation with municipal authorities and experts, including, but not limited to, engineers . . . et cetera, et cetera, et cetera,

. . . the Minister must, at a minimum interval of every 5 years or after each disaster, as defined by this Act, whichever is earlier, develop the following:

I'll go through (a) and (b).

- (a) comprehensive maps of floodways and flood zones, and
- (b) detailed reports of risk assessments and climate conditions as they relate to water management.

The idea of trying to develop flood mitigation before we have proper maps is nonsensical. We have communities that are using maps that are 20 years old in some areas. I talked to a fly fisherman, a guy that has called the Black Diamond-Turner Valley area home his entire life, on a night when the province held one of their information sessions. Actually, it was the territory of the minister who spoke previously. He wasn't there that evening, but the other minister, the Member for Calgary-South East, was there on his behalf and spoke and listened to some of these stories. This gentleman from Turner Valley was just pointing out that he's on that river, you know, all year every year and that it hasn't changed just a little bit in the last little while, that it has changed remarkably. This is somebody who's on it every day. His point, as he raised it to me that evening, is very good. As we go through the recovery process and develop the proper mitigation infrastructure, we had better have the proper mapping in place before we do it. I think we're all on the same side with that.

I'm looking at this, seeing "every 5 years," and saying: you know, maybe it makes sense. Maybe five years isn't the timeline, but I bet this minister is open minded enough to find a way for a subamendment, to debate the timeline if you like but revisit it so that we don't wind up in the situation again where someday something happens and we see that our maps are 20 years old. That's a major problem.

I mean, even Dora the Explorer knows you need an appropriate map, Mr. Chair. I don't think Dora goes anywhere without the map. It's like, in this case, Swiper has taken the maps. This is the situation that we're in. You know, a little levity never hurts. It seems to me like we're all saying the same thing, and we all want what's best for Alberta, but we had better make sure that we have the proper maps before we do anything, before we determine what the mitigation infrastructure is.

Redwood Meadows is another classic case of why I would support this. I have stood on the berm and walked the berm at Redwood Meadows half a dozen times in the last few months. What a wonderful success story that community is, that they managed to keep the water out. But the river has changed easily – easily – the width of this room, probably times two. If you stand on the berm and see where it was and where it is now, there's no way that they're not going to run into some serious problems next time around if the infrastructure doesn't reflect where that river is now. Really, what Redwood needs – and I hope the minister will be open to this, and we can discuss it another time – is to push that river back where it was before it's too late, because if it happens again, they're in big trouble.

The point I'm trying to make is that these rivers change substantially, particularly after the high water flow that we had this year and that we have had in other years. Even when they don't flood, they change.

I would suggest that we support this amendment, and if we don't, I would certainly be open to supporting an amendment or a subamendment from the minister on what he thinks is reasonable so that we make sure, going forward, we're using the appropriate data so that we can protect our communities and rebuild them for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm waving to you, too. Very nice.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Fox: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise today to speak to this amendment put forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. It's an interesting amendment, and I'm going to read it out for the Legislature here.

Development in floodways

693.1(1) In consultation with municipal authorities and experts, including, but not limited to, engineers, hydrologists, geologists, meteorologists and climate scientists, the Minister must, at a minimal interval of every 5 years or after each disaster, as defined by this Act, whichever is earlier, develop the following:

- (a) comprehensive maps of floodways and flood zones, and
- (b) detailed reports of risk assessments and climate conditions as they relate to water management.

Now, this is interesting. I kind of like this. In fact, I've seen something similar to it before. I think it was in the 2006 Groeneveld report. What it reads here:

Municipal participation is a key element in a flood mitigation strategy. Municipalities are the front line in delivering many important aspects of flood mitigation because they are ultimately responsible for approving development in their communities. In addition, municipal governments often have [an] idea of potential flood mitigation measures that are appropriate for their local areas and the relative costs of such proposals . . . failure to communicate and equip municipalities with the resources that they need to make responsible decisions has been a major downfall of many flood mitigation programs.

5:30

So here we are with an amendment that specifically adds municipal participation into the consultation of developing the maps around floodways. Mapping these floodways is important. I mean, when we look at our neighbours to the east and to the west, specifically around the Assiniboine River, the Red River, and the Fraser River, do you think that their flood mitigation strategies were done without up-to-date flood mapping? I can tell you that it probably wasn't done that way. Even way back when Duff Roblin did the ditch around Winnipeg, I guarantee you that there was a lot of mapping done to make sure that they were picking the right points to pull water out of the Red River and then put it back in north of Lockport.

It's astounding that we're not going to update these maps and that we're not going to put it in legislation. Not to belabour the point, but in recommendation 1, as my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod pointed out, we recommend that Alberta Environment coordinate the completion of flood risk maps for the identified urban flood risk areas in the province.

It goes on to say:

It is important to know the areas of the province that are at risk from flooding so the extent of risk can be determined. Accurate mapping that defines the extent of flood risk areas forms the foundation of the Flood Risk Management Action Plan. Once the flood risk area is identified, steps can be taken to protect existing and future development. Failure to act on the information may expose local governments to liability from affected landowners.

It probably would have been nice for them to have some updated maps prior to this flood so that they could have built some mitigation around it and reduced the costs that are now being incurred.

Alberta signed a cost-sharing agreement with the federal government to map flood risk areas in the province in 1989. This agreement was terminated before all the identified communities could be mapped.

So there are still communities out there who don't even have maps.

As of 2006, there are 36 communities . . .

Like I said, 36 communities.

. . . that require flood risk studies. This recommendation refers to new studies and does not address map maintenance issues.

Even back in 2006 they knew that there were map maintenance issues. So what's happened since 2006? I don't think there's really been much for updates on those maps. I can tell you that I have family that has property along the Red Deer River. That river has changed course a couple of times just in the few years that I've been visiting it.

Well, it does say here that map maintenance issues will be dealt with in recommendation 2. Now, when they did look for community response, ninety-nine out of 100 responses either supported or strongly supported this recommendation. Flood risk mapping was recognized as an essential planning tool. There were questions about terminology and other issues related to flood risk maps indicating a need for ongoing education for local governments. There were also several communities and locations that suggested to be added to the list.

What did it say back then, in 2006? The budget required was $2.5 million over five years. Now, correct me if I'm wrong, but this was at a time when I think we were running budget surpluses here in the province, back when we could actually pay for this without borrowing for it. But, you know, if debt is hope, back then I guess we were a little bit hopeless.

I'm going to move on to recommendation 2 because it also deals with the first part of this amendment. It deals with

- (a) the comprehensive maps of floodways and flood zones, and
- (b) the detailed reports of risk assessments and climate conditions as they relate to water management.

So what was recommendation 2 in this document that was put out by the Alberta government – albeit six years late, but it was put out by the Alberta government – on flood mitigation? Recommendation 2:

We recommend that Alberta Environment develop a map maintenance program to ensure that the flood risk maps are updated when appropriate.

Situations may arise where an existing flood risk map no longer adequately represents the flood risk for a location. This may result from changes in the river or immediate area, updating a rural flood risk map or errors in the original study.

I talked about the Red Deer River. Just in the few years that I've been visiting it, I have seen it change course. In fact, when I go fishing in it, I'm always looking for where the deep holes have moved to so I can try and catch some goldeye.

Back to this report here.

Flood risk maps should also be reviewed regularly particularly after extreme flood events when public and municipal government interest is high.

Do we have some interest in this? Well, at least my friends over here on the opposition side have some interest in this. I don't understand why the government doesn't. Maybe if we go back to our communities and ask for some response from them, they might give us some direction on this one.

What did it say here in this report about the resources required? Well, back in 2006 this was one full-time employee from Alberta Environment, and it says: "an estimated budget of $50,000 annually." Fifty thousand dollars annually: that's not very much. In fact, it's less than one of the Premier's trips to China. We could actually update our maps for less than one trip to China per year. That's amazing. I can't understand why we wouldn't want to put this in a piece of legislation, why we wouldn't want to continue to update these maps, because it does provide some long-term planning ability for local municipal governments, and it's done very cheaply. I mean, that's one full-time employee per year. Now, I'm not sure what that would cost today. I'm not sure how far those salaries have risen at Alberta Environment, but I would assume that it's still probably close to that dollar figure. Again, I think this is rather cheap.

When I flip the page again, what is recommendation 3? This one deals with flood mapping, too. Amazing. This was visionary in 2006, and it sat on the shelves for six years. Can you believe it? Six years. Six years. We could have been working on some of this stuff six years ago. Well, I guess we can add this to one of the reasons why I was looking to get elected. It's time we actually addressed some of these issues and that they be heard in the Legislature and that we get some of these reports out on a timely basis so that we can mitigate damages prior to them happening rather than having to now look at flood mitigation again, in 2006 terms, after the last major flood. I mean, we've done nothing for flood mitigation over the last few – well, I shouldn't say we. The government has done nothing for flood mitigation over the last six years.

We even had the Canadian economic action plan. I'm sure we could go back and with a quick Google search find a number of key mitigation programs that were put forth in other jurisdictions here in this country, again probably along some of the major floodways, which would be the Assiniboine River, the Red River, the Fraser River. In fact, I think that in 2011 they did use some of the Canadian action plan dollars to address some of the flood mitigation projects that they needed to do. So we had access to federal dollars at those times, and, well, we didn't use them for flood mitigation, I can tell you that.

Back to the recommendations here. Recommendation 3 is still dealing with the first half of this amendment to this proposed legislation.

We recommend that Alberta Environment identify priority rural flood risk areas that require flood risk mapping and develop a program to prepare the maps.

It is recognized that rural flood risk mapping is a concern. Gee, it was a concern in 2006. Wow. Six years ago. There was a concern six years ago, it was actually identified by this PC government, and they didn't even act on their own report in the last six years. Amazing.

Anyway, it goes on:

There is intensive development occurring in rural areas that may be subject to flooding. It is also clear that rural flood-risk mapping cannot be to the same standard as the urban mapping . . .

They do identify some of the issues that the associate minister across the way did identify about the dollar figures, so that does correlate.

. . . as it would be prohibitively expensive to provide studies for large areas. A rural flood-risk mapping program was envisioned to be one whereby existing information such as aerial flood photos and high-water marks would be used to delineate a map.

They actually had a solution for this back in 2006, so we actually wouldn't have to spend a whole lot of money on this.

There would be no division of the flood risk area as occurs in the current flood risk maps. Also, mapping would be based on an historic flood event rather than a theoretical event. Areas identified as requiring flood-risk mapping, but not having any flood information would not be mapped until such information was available.

We are saying that, yes, it would take a flood. Hopefully, there was some aerial photography done during this last flood so, you know, we can update those maps.

In 2000, about 50 rural areas were identified as requiring flood-risk mapping, but only 25 had any existing information on flooding that could be used. Undoubtedly there would be more areas requesting mapping if the list were to be updated.

Now, when we kind of move down the page here, it shows the community response in this report. The community response, what it says here, is:

There was strong support for this recommendation with no significant reservations about the lower level of accuracy.

So even in those communities they understood that, yes, you did have to trade off the kind of mapping that an urban area would get, but they were amicable to that situation. They did understand the limitations of the budget on those matters.

What were the resources required in 2006 to do this? It reads here that an FTE position . . .

That would be a full-time position.

. . . is required for designing a rural flood risk program. Until the technical aspects of a rural flood risk program are defined, it is difficult to estimate the required resources; however initial estimates suggest that this program could exceed $1,000,000.

A million dollars back in 2006 to start developing some of these maps and strategies. Again, back in 2006 where were we? We were in a budget surplus. Wow. A million dollars, not very much money. We could have actually done some of the work and understood what was going to happen so that we could maybe notify some of these property owners back then that they needed to get out of their homes prior to the flood.

Now, that did happen, but it didn't happen as quickly as it could, and we didn't actually know where in some of these communities the water was going to end up. But when you look at historical mapping or if you'd have had some of this historical mapping, you might have actually been able to get out there and notify. Maybe some of these houses in rural areas wouldn't have been built where they were built had they had access to some of this stuff. [interjection] My friend from Calgary-McCall pointed out that in some cases they didn't even know the flood was coming. [interjection] In Sunnyside. Thank you, my friend. I mean, that's kind of egregious – isn't it? – that they didn't even know the flood waters were coming. [interjection] You had to phone them?

The Chair: Hon. member, through the chair.

Mr. Fox: I'm sorry, Mr. Chair. My friend over here was giving me a little bit of information about what was going on in his riding.

When we move on to recommendation 5, we're still talking about the collection of mapping information. You know, this is another good recommendation that was put out six years ago. Six years ago. Hopefully, some of this stuff was actually done. Let's read this one.

We recommend that Alberta Environment continue to collect high-water elevation, aerial photography and other appropriate data whenever a significant flood occurs.

Hopefully, they did do this. Now, let's hope that some of this translates into a map. That would be recommendations 1, 2, and 3. Hopefully, that full-time employee, that would cost us less than a junket trip to China, will actually get some of this work done.

We can continue on here. It says here that Alberta Environment should continue to explore and evaluate other methods of collecting flood data such as satellite imagery.

Well, I hope that they've started utilizing satellite imagery for some of this, as this recommendation states. But, I mean, there's been nothing from the government on this to tell us what they've actually been doing in relation to this. Let's just hope... [interjection] Oh, is that debt? Yeah. I'm trying to find the right word here because if hope is debt...

Mr. Rowe: Wish.

Mr. Fox: Okay. I wish that the government is getting this done. We'll put this on the wish list.

Mr. Rowe: Fair enough.

Mr. Fox: Okay.

During flood events, Alberta Environment collects high-water marks and aerial flood photography to document the extent of flooding. This information can be used for future flood risk studies and to review existing studies.

So I am wishing – hope just doesn't carry the same weight that it used to because debt is hope. I mean, I don't know. With the mortgage on my home I guess I'm trying to pay that thing down until I have no hope. Just an interesting quote. I still can't quite wrap my head around "debt equals hope." We'll continue in that vein.

When they put this recommendation out to the communities that were consulted in this flood report by the members that took part in this in 2006, it said that there was unanimous support, especially in the absence of a flood risk map. Oh, but there are those communities that don't have access to a flood risk map because it doesn't exist. Six years ago it didn't exist. Well, I guess that's something that still hasn't been done. Maybe before the next flood we'll have a flood risk map for those areas, but I don't really see anything in Bill 27, the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act, that actually addresses developing maps for those 36 communities that still don't have flood risk maps.

Resources required. Well, this is interesting. It says: "Alberta Environment collects flood data as a part of its mandate and will continue to do so. This information will be made available to local authorities." So maybe had this report not sat on the shelf somewhere for six years gathering dust, that information would be out to the local municipalities now. We might actually have some flood mitigation maps for those 36 communities.

You know, for the members listening here, I think it might be interesting to know which 36 communities it is because they aren't identified in this report. I'd hate to think that to find out which communities it is, I'd have to FOIP it. I mean, I'm going to ask that that information just be made available. I really shouldn't have to go through the Associate Minister of AT and T to try and get information that, really, all Albertans should just have in hand so that they know whether or not they live in a community that actually has this information. I mean, I would sure like to know if a community that I'm about to buy a home in is on a flood plain or a floodway or if there's any hazard of having my assets flooded out because the government just didn't want to make that information available to me as a homebuyer. I mean, I feel for those homebuyers there.

This is stuff that really does drill down to accountability and transparency. Heck, if we had that information easily, without having to file FOIPs for it, boy, that would be transformative. It really would. You know, maybe that'll come out in the FOIP review – maybe – that we'll go back to the original intention of that legislation, which is that FOIP was to be the last resort, not the only way to get information out of our government.

You know, it's interesting as an opposition member to look at people's faces when I tell them that the only way for me to get information in most cases, well, pretty well in all cases, from this government is through a FOIP request. They think that we should actually have access to this information and that they as Albertans should have access to a lot of this information without having to pay $25 to go through FOIP.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much. I'd like to go back to some comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein, I believe it was. In my constituency of Drumheller-Stettler they basically took their own initiative, and they did do mitigation in the community and above it at the Dickson dam. Mitigation also was done many years prior to that. In the case of Drumheller the same minister that's bringing this legislation forward – and I do have concerns that this legislation may turn into some form of recyclable legislation, not unlike Bill 28 that's following this. It gives me some concern that there's no more sincerity to legislation, that it won't stand beyond 36 hours.

With that, to the Member for Calgary-Klein: this same minister did make a special designation because of what did not happen in Drumheller as a result of the flood mitigation and the mapping – unfortunately, I might want to again use that word "mapping" – that was done by the community. The community had their own set of mapping standards that were brought forward by the Groeneveld report, and the community then went out and hired a secondary contractor to get a second opinion on the levels that were used. They spent considerable sums of money and went forward and did mitigation in the community.

As a result of that, in 2005 they didn't receive any significant damage, and this year, 2013, Drumheller was not on the map. As a result, the minister made a special recommendation that the communities, including Fort McMurray, not necessarily be included in the flood mapping area to the same extent as those other areas throughout the province. So the mapping and the judicious use of that is significant.

Now, how this mapping will be obtained and brought forward on an ongoing basis will be a living thing, not unlike the maintenance that we do annually to our highways. Every year we know that the maintenance to our highways is something that's significant and that changes every year. We'll get a different snowfall this year as opposed to last year. Each year is different.

I think that the management of these facilities is significant. The management of the living thing called a river and the river body and the floodways is significant. Even with the minister's special designation for the community of Drumheller the real estate agents and the people that live there have been complaining to me that they don't know what the direct designation for that community is going to be and how that's going to affect their property values. It's simply not amenable or friendly to the value of their property.

We need some form of standard. If that was developed over time, based off mapping – and the minister has made a designation of that. To me, it would appear just by his simple actions that he recognizes that there's something different that needs to be done. The communities of Drumheller and Fort McMurray are responsive to that.

With that, I think it's imperative that the members opposite give this amendment some consideration. It's a significant amendment, a significant piece of legislation that will continue throughout the years in this province. It's something that needs to be done in a proactive and professional manner. It's something that needs to be done. I'd like to say that I support the amendment to this legislation. I also support the legislation, but it needs small amendments. It needs to be adjusted for timeliness such that it maybe won't see a situation of retraction by the government.

With that, I'd like to relinquish my position and allow other members who may wish to speak to the amendment.

The Chair: I'll recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to supplement some of the remarks that I made earlier and also add to the remarks that were just made by the adjoining members here, who I think did a fabulous job of speaking to this amendment.

You know, when you look at the situation we've got here this week in dealing with this, we have a disaster that was a national tragedy, and we have amendments to two acts, one being the MGA, the Municipal Government Act, and we have amendments to the Emergency Management Act. Both of those documents are significant documents, but the act and the amendment are only a very few pages long. It was a huge, enormous thing that happened this year, yet in the Municipal Government Act in section 551 there are only about four clauses regarding emergencies. When you look through the act, no matter where you look, you can't find a mention of flooding virtually anywhere that I can see. I've scanned it over the years for various reasons, including when I was on council in 2005, when we had a flood in High River, and I see nothing there as a guide.

So we come to this amendment act, Bill 27, after having such an enormous disaster happen across Alberta, particularly in southern Alberta, and we have a very minor document amending both of those acts but only to a very minor extent. After the bell rings here in a few moments, we're probably going to be adjourning, and I just want you to know right now that we have some amendments to bring forward ourselves here in support of this and tied to this. It will include some of the things that I feel are missing in these two acts that we're talking about right now, the MGA and the Emergency Management Act, to try to address some of the stuff that we feel is missing. But I think we could probably go on and on and on with a whole pile of different things.

First of all, we're going to be looking at some definitions, just to let you know. We need definitions. I went to the flood symposium earlier this year and I've gone to some of the other meetings that have been held throughout the area. I've been in receipt of many of the forms and documents that we've had throughout those meetings. Thankfully, the Minister of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development and also the associate minister of southern Alberta disaster recovery – I can't remember the exact words – included in those meetings an awful lot of good material that really is more substantive and more important than what we see in this. It seems to be a little bit lacking. It seems to me that the reverse should be happening.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to let everybody know that I hope you can come back after the break we're going to have here in a few minutes. We have some great amendments, I think, that will tie to this amendment we have and will carry on with this same line of thought. Hopefully, we can get down to the meat of this and make some good legislation that will help Albertans with the changes that we're going to propose.

With that, I only have just a couple of minutes to go, Mr. Chairman. I hope that the members here will be able to return, as I said. I look forward to seeing you afterwards.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, you've got a couple of minutes before we need to rise.

Mr. Fox: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm trying to remember where I left off, but I think it was something in the vein of access to information, you know, access to flood maps that don't exist. Sitting here, I was thinking for a minute that it's kind of interesting. Maybe if somebody filed a FOIP request for this information and you had to actually compile it, we might actually get it. Although I hate to think what the photocopy document access fee that you usually get charged when you do a FOIP request would be on that since they'd actually have to create them. According to that report we were reading from, probably about $300 million. Maybe the government is just waiting for some nice property developer to step up and do a FOIP request on this and pay for it so that they actually get the flood mapping information that the developers so desperately need, that our municipal governments so desperately need, and, really, that Albertans so desperately need.

We actually need to know where the floodways are. We need to know where the flood plains are. We need to know which developments are going to be underwater, where we should and shouldn't be developing. The municipalities need to know this. The developers need to know this. When Albertans go to actually purchase a home, they need to know whether or not they're buying on a flood plain or in a floodway or if they're actually going to be touched by water, if they're in a backwater area.

In the case of Hampton Hills in High River, apparently, according to these current maps, they weren't in a floodway. They weren't even on a flood plain. So I guess that goes back to – what was it? – recommendation 2, that said that we needed to update our flood maps so that municipalities would actually know where to . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but it's 6 o'clock, and pursuant to Standing Order 4(4) the committee stands recessed until 7:30 p.m.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta*7:30 p.m.*Wednesday, November 6, 2013*Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the Committee of the Whole back to order.

Bill 27
Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act

The Chair: We are dealing with amendment A6. I believe the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka was speaking, but I'm willing to recognize another speaker. I'll recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the members coming back tonight. I have a few things I'd like to get off my chest in the next little while, before I open the amendment. I'd like to start out with a brief bit about what happened this summer.

The Chair: Hon. member, I'm hoping you will speak to amendment A6 because we are on amendment A6. I'm hoping your remarks will speak to amendment A6 in some fashion.

Mr. Stier: Thank you for correcting me. That was not my purpose, so I'm done.

The Chair: If you'd like to come back later on, we'll recognize another speaker, hon. member.

Are there other speakers to amendment A6? If not, I'll call the question.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: We'll come back to the bill, and I'll recognize the Member for Livingstone-Macleod on the bill.

If I could ask hon. members to just keep the side conversations down, please, so that the member who has the floor can be heard, certainly by the chair. Thank you.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman. To the Assembly, I have taken some time to go over Bill 27, as was discussed earlier, and I found, as you might recall in my earlier preamble today, that it seems a little bit insufficient to be looking at only four, five, or six pages of information as a result of what happened this summer. I think we have to keep in mind what is at stake here for a lot of individuals in southern Alberta particularly and through the city of Calgary, High River, Turner Valley, Black Diamond, Fort Macleod, Blairmore. All these areas had some devastating things occur. I think it's crucial, if we're going to try to impose such regulations and new rules upon them, that we have a flood recovery and reconstruction act that is going to be structured to . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, please. The side conversations are distracting our main speaker. Thank you.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. I think it's important that the Flood Recovery and Reconstruction Act have the appropriate clauses and sections in it and the detail so that when these different kinds of mitigation procedures and some of these recovery situations befall them, there are enough rules and guidelines to give them a fair opportunity to review their own situations, make the decisions upon which they may be going in the future, and understand what these kinds of dramatic things like caveats and so on might do to their financial investment in their properties and so on.

When I looked at the documents that were presented throughout the summertime and at most of those meetings and I heard from residents who were faced with difficulties in making decisions and when I attended the public announcements regarding the purchasing of properties and the buyouts and all those kinds of things, I realized that these people were faced with almost a lifetime decision that they were going to have to make: should they liquidate their properties? Now, in many cases it's not only just a residential property. It could be a commercial property. It could be a property that they are deriving an income from. It could be any number of these things. These sorts of decisions are not easily made, and they do have consequences.

Particularly in High River, if I may go there, you have situations where you have people who have had the occasion to move in from the country and retire in that small town, take what monies they have left, only to find that their new dream home is a disaster and that they could be faced with a significant loss in their investment even if they chose a buyout.

It seems to me that if we're going to put together a bill, it should have all the details there to help protect them but also to help them deal with the decision-making and perhaps deal with the settlement negotiations. Also, too, perhaps later on if they have difficulties with that, if they need to follow some sort of an appeal process or some sort of a mechanism to guarantee their property rights, at least there'll be some rules that will have some sort of binding ability on the decisions that are made.

With that, when I look through the Emergency Management Act, which this bill is supposed to be amending, I found that there weren't any clear definitions for flood risk; there weren't any clear definitions for floodway. Although those are known within the different ministries and they are stated in some of the ministry websites, they aren't included in this act. Further, they aren't included in the Emergency Management Act. Third, they're not included in the Municipal Government Act either.

So it seems strange to me how people would make use of this act to base decisions upon. Whether they're being judged by officials or they're the residents themselves, it seems to me that this act is missing clear definitions. How can you talk about putting caveats on titles? How can you talk about changing the status of a piece of land to be in a floodway or flood risk? How can you talk about accurate flood mapping, and how can you talk about accurate database management if you do not know what the definitions are?

With that, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to this act, and I'll hand the copies out.

The Chair: You'll have those distributed, pause for a moment, and then I'll let you speak to it. Thank you.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Chairman, it's a two-page document, and the second page has the original signature.

The Chair: Hon. member, for the record this will be amendment A7.

Mr. Stier: Thank you.

The Chair: You may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Hon. members, while we're waiting for that to be distributed, I'd just like to draw your attention to the act that we're discussing tonight, Bill 27. This refers to page 1, and it refers to section 6 under subsection (2). What we're doing here with this is that after the section that you see on page 1, we're adding in the definitions from the second page of this amendment, where we've included the definition of flood fringe and floodway.

Following that, we're also adding a second section in 2(3), and it's on the last page.

- (1.1) For the purposes of this section and the regulations made under subsection (1), "floodway" means the portion of the flood hazard area where the flows are deepest, fastest and most destructive, and may include the main channel of a stream.

What we've done here is that we've actually added into both these sections an actual definition tied to these sections so we know what a flood fringe is and what a floodway is.

The reason I've put both those in there is that when we look at the section that precedes that – if you look at the first page of the amendment, it's item (c.2) – they're talking about "respecting the filing and removal of caveats against titles to land in a flood fringe or floodway," and we needed to establish that for everyone that's going to be involved, whether it's here in this House or authorities later on. Whether that might mean a land agent or a realtor or a homeowner or anyone involved in these caveat processes, we need to have it clearly established, in my mind, as to how they would differentiate between a floodway and a flood fringe and a property, therefore, that might or might not fit into either one of these categories.

I think this is extremely important. As we know, so many people this year have been waiting and waiting and trying to get a decision made for themselves. After they've made their application for the DRP funding, they still don't know whether they should cash that cheque or not. You may or may not have followed how all this works, but if you're in a DRP situation and you've applied for the funding – you need to have that done, by the way, by the end of November – you may still be uncertain at this time whether you're going to proceed all the way.

One of the crucial things that I can tell you is that in a lot of towns like Black Diamond, as an example, there are a lot of people who believe that they are in the floodway, yet the old maps say that they are not in the floodway. This is a real problem. This is why we're hammering on this business of having accurate flood mapping in this discussion that we're having about this bill. It means life or death for someone to be on one side of the line or the other in many respects. They may be in a floodway, or they may not be in a floodway, and we need to get the data to establish that. Once we do have that data, at least these definitions added to this bill would be a way to be able to judge the situation with more clarity for all those involved either now or further down the road.

Mr. Chairman, I have, I suspect, a lot of folks that want to talk about this amendment. I think it is worthwhile. I would really urge the government members to please give this some solid consideration and think about passing this amendment. I think that it is something that would add to what you already have. It's not being critical of what you have. It is only to supplement what you have now and make it better. I would urge you to support this, and I'm here to answer any questions that may come up. I hope that someone else may want to step up to address this issue should they care to.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to make the point that as long as the flood fringe and the floodway are actually put on the maps – okay? – which is what we had last time, then the floodway is whatever the floodway was on the official maps. The flood fringes are the ones that are on the maps as the flood fringes currently. If we try to mess around with that, if we try to say, "Oh, well, there was fast-flowing water here, so this is a floodway," we could get into a mess that would last for years, and those people, those constituents of ours who are waiting for DRP funding, would be just off in the wind. So what we need to do is make sure that whatever is on the maps for the flood fringe or the floodway is the way that you go with it, which is what we have done. I just wanted to make that point.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Pedersen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just in reply to the hon. member over there, one of the maps that DRP actually brought to Medicine Hat on one of the original sessions was dated 1991, and that was the most current map that they were using. This was from government. When the member is talking about what is the most current designation for floodway and flood fringe, back in 1991 – we had a flood in '95, we had a flood in 2006, we had a flood in 2010, and we had another flood in 2013. Things do change, member. If that's the most recent map we're using, it's not good enough.

That's what we're trying to talk about here. A floodway is probably easier to determine because it is more of that deeper running water, but flood fringe will change with the flow and the volume of the water. Flood fringe will change. That's the problem that we have here. We have people that were not affected in the floodway – they weren't affected at all – but flood fringe people were, and I think that's one of the things that we're trying to get across. Flood fringe is probably more important, in my mind, than floodway.

In that regard, I agree with the member bringing this amendment forward, and I think that it is critical that we establish what the definitions are and exactly what those areas are for each flood area. This is what we're going to be talking about going forward when any DRP is involved. Once you access that program, it's going to be because you have been designated either in a flood fringe or a floodway. But if that is changing on different flood circumstances, depending on how serious the event is, you could have an expanding flood fringe. There's no doubt about it. I think that's what we have to be cautious about.

In saying that, I am standing in support of this, and I hope other members will have a closer look at it. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others? The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm just rising to request unanimous consent of the House that all bells this evening on any divisions be on a one-minute basis.

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General has made a motion that any bells tonight be one minute.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: I'll recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to seek some clarification from the hon. associate minister of recovery and reconstruction for the southwest. Is that correct? Yeah. I heard him engaging in the discussion. I, unfortunately, was not here over the debate for the last amendment. I'm wondering if he could perhaps clarify what it was that he was saying while the last member was speaking so that I can understand the associate minister's take on this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, we're going to give the associate minister another opportunity at it. There's no question about it. He can get up at any time and speak to this amendment.

I want to go back to the idea of definition. The definition of a floodway or a flood fringe isn't what's on the map, in a drawing. You have to define it first before you map it. It is absolutely imperative that it be defined. There are two separate distinctions scientifically between floodway, flood plain, and flood fringe. What we need to have in the legislation is the definition so we can map it because when they do change – and, particularly, the floodway does change – and you have to update your maps, you know what you're supposed to be updating. You just can't say – it's confusing – that it is what it is on the map without having a definition. That doesn't follow any sequence of logic.

We need a definition. We need to identify it. It has been common knowledge going way back that a floodway is where the channel of the river – in this case this act's definition is actually consistent with that. It talks about the flow and the depth, the majority of that flow and depth, which would be the main channel. There needs to be that precise a reference so there's some accuracy to the maps, particularly when updating the maps, which we've not come to any sort of solution here yet tonight on, what would be an appropriate time to update maps. But the fact is that if we have consistency in the definition, then we will certainly have consistency in updating and making current the maps. So we need definition first. You just can't draw roads on a map and say that there's a road there when the physical road is somewhere else or you don't have a definition of what a road is.

I understand what the member was – no; I don't understand what the member was saying. We need definitions. It is something that we have brought up. I think multiple members have brought up in this Assembly, Mr. Chair, the definition of a floodway, the definition of flood fringe and even flood plain so that there's clarity and consistency.

We have seven major river basins, and within those river basins we have numerous tributaries that feed into those basins. Each one unto itself will be mapped at some point in time. The consistency in the integration of that mapping can only be achieved if we have definitions of what the floodway is, what the flood plain is, what the flood fringe is, and only then will the mapping actually work. Without that it doesn't work. It's technical in nature. It may even be refined. If the members offer up something that would change that to make that more clear, I'm sure that on this side of the House we would support that. We're just looking for clarity in the definition.

Sure. If the member wants to stand back up and offer some sort of clarification, that's great. Certainly the associate minister is being invited to stand up and offer some clarity on some previous comments dealing with mapping and the definition. That pertains directly to this motion, and hopefully we can get that clarification and their support of this motion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be relatively brief. I, too, again want to speak to this amendment. I think it's significant to legislation that needs improvement. It's long-term legislation. I also want to allow the members opposite my understanding of this potential amendment in relation to the unstory of Drumheller during the last flood events. It has to do with their respecting the filing and the removal of caveats against land in a flood fringe or floodway. It's still not completely determined in the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler and the community of Drumheller, the potentiality of the inclusion of caveats on properties that are in a floodway. The floodway has not significantly changed, but the minister has made some special designation for that community in regard to that as a result of the mitigation that was done over years past, including the Dickson dam and the berms and everything that was included in the community.

So I think that this is a significant addition to legislation. I advise the members opposite to give it some serious consideration.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll perhaps be a bit more direct with my question to either of the associate ministers if I may. I'm wondering what their aversion is to including these two definitions into either the Emergency Management Act or the MGA. What are you opposed to? The words are used in the act, yet there's no definition. If you can find me a definition in either of those two acts, I'd be happy to see where that is, and perhaps we would not need this amendment. Considering there isn't a definition that we can find, if you could perhaps clarify why we don't need one.

The Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southeast Alberta.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Quite simply, if these members want the definition, they can go onto the flood recovery website. There's a frequently asked questions document. Those definitions are clearly labelled in there. As far as the member's rationale as to how this is going to provide clarity to those people that are trying to make decisions, again, the intent is good, but this amendment provides very little value to the overall intent of the legislation, and that is to allow the minister to be able to make certain regulations in this either restricting or limiting development in floodways, which is consistent with the policy that came out in the weeks shortly after the flood. That's clearly what this is going to do.

What I find very interesting is that they want to define the definition in this amendment, and in the previous amendment, that they supported, they talked about involving "engineers, hydrologists, geologists, meteorologists and climate scientists." Well, I think that the purpose of allowing the definition not to be in legislation but in regulation or part of government policy is that over time if those experts decide that they want to make those changes as part of their mapping methodology, those changes could be made. I think, again, this amendment provides very little value to the overall intent of the bill.

The Chair: Thank you.

For the record that was the hon. Associate Minister for Regional Recovery and Reconstruction for Southwest Alberta.

Back to the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Wilson: You're not the only one confused by the titles, Mr. Chairman.

I will just perhaps ask the associate minister if he cares to comment on why terms like "by-election" or "chief administrative officer" or "council" or "councillor" or "elector" or "enactment" or "parcel of land" or "owner" or "market value," even "minister," "municipality," "tax" are all defined in the MGA. I'm sure you could probably google all of those as well, but, you know, we needed to define those here. So why not take the definitions that currently exist on the ESRD website and place them into this act? There are clear precedents for definitions that may not be necessary, but they're in there as it is now.

The Chair: Thank you.

Back to the minister.

Mr. Fawcett: I would assume that the hon. member is suggesting that we define every word in the act, then.

Mr. Wilson: That's not what I'm suggesting; I'm speaking to the amendment which suggests two very key titles. [interjections] I'm sorry?

The Chair: One speaker at a time, please.

Mr. Wilson: I appreciate the feedback from the other side very much, and I will continue to guide myself accordingly. I have yet to hear a good reason why putting these into the act is not something that you are into doing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Well, thank you very much. I mean, our minister did make a very good point there, that the definition is very much a scientific definition. Those maps which come out actually have the floodway and the flood fringe very specifically on the map. The legislation actually refers to the map, so it is not necessary for us to actually define the floodway since it is very much over on the scientific side. That scientific definition can change according to what the purpose of that floodway is and the purpose of the flood fringe. So it's not necessary to put that definition in there because we're referring to the map which actually defines the floodway and defines the flood fringe.

Thank you very much. I hope that that satisfies your concern in terms of why that definition isn't in there.

Now, the other thing that I think we really need to talk about in terms of this is that if we start messing around with what the floodway definition is and the flood fringe definition is, you end up in a grey area. You know, you've got the map over here that says such and such, which is what we are referring to. Okay? If we then add the floodway definition and the flood fringe definition, then we're all into a grey area. Again, that grey area hurts our constituents. Our constituents need the DRP to be able to move as quickly as possible. As long as there is a grey area there, then that money is not going to flow as quickly.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I hope this clarifies things enough that the opposition can understand. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Anglin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The whole purpose of the whole way you remove a grey area is to put a definition in. Once you have a definition – the meaning of the word is to define – you remove the grey out of this misunderstanding of what the actual literal meaning is. So I'm not sure what the hon. member was getting at between grey area and a definition, grey area being somehow more exact than having a definition. I didn't quite understand that. I didn't quite follow the logic behind it, so I'm going to have to disagree with the hon. member.

If this minister wants to use the scientific definition, I will agree. Absolutely, let's put the scientific definition into the act so we know what we're talking about. Why should it belong in there? That's the important point. The hon. minister made some comment that he doesn't want the definition of every word, and that's true of any legislation. You don't need to pull the Bill Clinton: the definition of "is" is what? I don't know. The fact is that we're going to put caveats on people's titles who are going to be in a flood fringe or a floodway. By goodness, I think we ought to know what the definition is so we know whose title we're putting these caveats on, who is going to be directly and adversely affected. Having a definition would actually support this legislation.

If the hon. member doesn't like this definition and prefers the scientific definition, then so be it. Let's put in the scientific definition of what a floodway is. Let's put in the scientific definition of what a flood fringe is and what a flood plain is. That makes the legislation now very clear, and the mapping then can take place with some sort of accuracy and consistency. Without a definition one flood plain map versus another flood plain map or even the update might not follow the same protocol, and now we've got a real mess on our hands. That's not just a grey area; that inconsistency is problematic. In order to avoid all that, we need definitions so we can construct maps that are not just logical but are accurate.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I've listened to this debate. Actually, when I spoke I believe in second reading, I too commented on the fact that there was no definition of floodway or of flood fringe in the act. The act appears to me to be relatively useless without those definitions included in it.

What we have just gone through is a process where by not having updated maps, not having a clear definition of what a floodway or a flood fringe is, and the fact that we had development going in different directions on an ad hoc basis because we hadn't developed clear and cogent plans or ideas around which areas we were going to develop in, which areas were going to be supported by flood maps and flood-proofing and the like, by ignoring the problems for many, many, many, many, many years, we've found ourselves in a place of being in a grey area just in this last flood. You see that in how many people feel they were dealt with in an arbitrary fashion. Because of the maps' outdatedness and the location of their homes relative to the riverways, floodways, flood fringe and the like, the process really had no rhyme or reason to it.

Might I point out now, Mr. Chair, that, you know – let's face it here – downtown Calgary is essentially built on a floodway? I'll use the definition. If we would have had the precipitation that came down in the 1929 flood, the entire downtown of Calgary would have been submerged under water and had significant portions of damage to it. Okay? That's from the 1929 flood, which was three times the volume of this flood here that happened just this last summer.

If we look at this, how we're going about this is a haphazard manner of dealing with what we're actually trying to clear up. What we're trying to clear up is where we're going to develop, who's going to be covered, and what the process is going to be. I don't think what we have before us goes toward any measure other than letting the minister decide in an ad hoc fashion where we're going to develop, where we're going to build: "I'll make one-off deals with this community, one-off deals with that community. We'll try to piece something together if and when this happens again, and leave ourselves enough flexibility to try to manage it."

But that's what we did this time, and it hasn't worked that spectacularly either for families and communities or for the public purse. I think by having some of these definitions included, we can do a better job of people understanding their rights and responsibilities in terms of when this natural disaster will happen. Despite whatever mitigation proposals are out there and the like, in my view, this is going to happen again. It could happen next year or the year after, and we can't continue to sit here and twiddle our thumbs and not get busy on doing some of the things that other jurisdictions have gone down.

I'll put in a plug right here again that some of this grey area can be cleared up by instituting mandatory flood insurance. Having that fully in place would allow us to do risk-adjusted premiums depending on where people live. That would also protect families and communities wherever they are in this great province as well as protect the public purse. That inevitably will happen when a flooding occurs.

Without definitions and without any clarity in this bill, when a disaster strikes here in Alberta, say 15 or 20 years from now, the legislation you're currently proposing is not going to tie the hands of some future government. They are going to be forced to act when their citizens are in jeopardy, in peril, when they need help. No government's hands should be tied when that happens. So that government is going to be forced to act, to assist, and it is their obligation to do so. But by not having any appropriate fences or appropriate mechanisms put around what we're doing here – one of those examples is on the definition front – we're simply creating the same situation that we had here in this flooding, the effect of an ad hoc reaction to a crisis and seemingly making things up on the fly, which I think even members opposite, on the other side of the House, will fully admit.

That's what we went through, government policy on the fly that hadn't been developed in advance, had no consistent application, had no rhyme or reason to it. They just tried to do the best they could. I will admit that if you don't have those firm plans in place – I think this government did a pretty good job of doing the best they could given that they hadn't done anything in a long while in actually preparing for a disaster.

What we're trying to do with this legislation is have some form and fashion, rhyme or reason, to what is going to happen the next time this happens. What's going to happen to caveats and the like? What is the development process going to be in every community going forward? Leaving it up to the minister in some backroom to decide willy-nilly or whatever may make sense at the time with no consistent application to me is just not good enough.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I think this amendment has merit.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. An interesting bunch of exchanges on a matter that I thought would have been fairly simple, quite frankly.
